A GRAVE INDICTMENT.

Some few months ago a great effort at a religious revival was made in the city of Chicago, in which a banker, presumably a man of means as well as ability, named Duke M. Farson, was an active participant. He was a man of rather radical views and of a somewhat enthusiastic temperament. After the revival had progressed for a while, Duke M. Farson was rather turned down by those having the affair in charge and he became disgruntled because his methods were not adopted and withdrew, carrying with him some others. The result was the setting up of a rival revival and movement by Mr. Farson and his associates. A paper was started called the Burning Bush, the imprint of which states that it is "a journal devoted to the interests of the sanctified life. Published weekly by the Metropolitan Church Association of Chicago, Illinois, U. S. A."

By what right Messrs. Farson and his associates assume the position of being the center of metropolitan ecclesiastical authority it is difficult to determine; but from the advertisement and the tone of the paper itself it is not hard to see that they do so assume. In the issue of the Burning Bush for December 24, 1903, we note that Duke M. Farson and Edwin L. Harvey are the editors of this journal, which from its name one might suppose was intended to be a medium of light to reflect the illuminating grace of that Spirit which burned in the bush but consumed it not. We give below a specimen of the sort of light which this Burning Bush is shedding on the darkness of its metropolitan diocese, taken from the Christmas number, date given above:

Wanted.—One mild-mannered under-sized donkey, broken to saddle. Apply stage door Studebaker theater, Friday, four o'clock in the afternoon.

Following this real or suppositious advertisement, the place where found not cited in the Bush, and taking it for a text, occurs the following screed, which, as it is not signed, nor a name given at the top, gives the idea that the editors are responsible for it:

The above advertisement suggested the article which follows: If every play-house except Methodist theaters quit in Chicago, and short-skirted dancers were out of a job elsewhere, the opera-loving and theater-going folks could still be entertained by Methodists. The principal theaters owned by or built with Methodist money are the "Studebaker Theater" and the "Bush Temple." We never could see how the Methodist Episcopal

PRESIDENT E. R. DEWSNUP, of Graceland College, returned on New Year's Day from Chicago, where he had been spending some time in conference with the authorities of the University of Chicago, and looking up some matters in connection with a special subject in political economy. He reports being well received by both University authorities and railroad officials whom he met in studying his special subject, that of railroad transport.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

General Conference could accept Clem Stuebaker's hospitality, and use his theater and then consistently vote against cancelling the theatrical clause in the discipline. Wesley's followers have degenerated. We will not attempt to enumerate all the saloon buildings owned by Methodists. For twenty years or a little less the most prominent corner in one section of our city was occupied as a saloon. The owner presented his church letter to the Methodist Episcopal pastor who took him in, a profane, sinful man. The pastor was soon made a Rock River elder. Another pastor falls into sin, his wife leaves him on that account, and the bishop tells the boys that if they will pass his character he will transfer the erring brother. He is passed, a two thousand dollar charge is vacated and the brother made presiding elder of an adjoining conference.

The writer of this article has reason to believe the Chicago Methodist preachers would pass the Devil's character if he would vacate a similar charge and agree to transfer to Wisconsin or California. Another brother gets too free in his attentions and is made a presiding elder in an adjoining State. Another sues a leading Methodist Episcopal pastor for several thousand dollars and they shut him off by making him a presiding elder. A man brought a law suit and collected ten thousand dollars damages. The "brethren" soon made an elder out of him. The pastor of one of Chicago's largest Methodist Episcopal churches was a confirmed drunkard for years. A presiding elder of Chicago is found to be a Sodomite and is excused, but allowed to keep his parchment. A Rock River preacher is found in a frightful plight, but is excused and continued. Another elder turns over his work largely to his under preachers, gets into sin, pursues questionable habits and life, gets sick and drops into hell.

The great preachers are mostly Free Masons. I was asking a prominent Mason in Illinois about a certain Methodist Episcopal bishop who was also a Mason. I said, "Why do you fellows carry such a devil on your (lodge) roll of membership?" He said, "Well, we are ashamed of him; I suppose we keep him for the same reason the Methodists do." One of the most prominent married Methodist officials was seen flirting in a Chicago park and cultivating lady company which he had no right to do.

A sister seeking salvation confesses to awful sin on the part of one of the leading Methodist Episcopal pastors. What is the trouble? Why, God has left Chicago Methodism and old Babylon is fallen. Solution: get saved, flee, get out, "remember Lot's wife" and never look back. Get sanctified, get into a holiness church and keep saved. Amen.

A bishop had better send a dog with the hydrophobia to a charge than an adulterous pastor to a flock. To know these facts as Merrill and other bishops do, and then place these devils in charge of Churches, will make a hot hell in eternity. A bishop's secret emblem will not be in hell five minutes before it is consumed, while his soul will writhe, and his resurrected body burn in the fire, having been so constructed as to be indestructible. To unload an unholy pastor on an unsuspecting flock, to damn youth and blight homes, is a crime against civilization. Put their pictures in the rogues' gallery and their bodies in stripes? No; take them to Jesus and let them get cleansed. "Were there not ten cleansed? Where are the nine?" True holiness will take any one out of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

We have had donkey socials, kissing socials, negro socials, lawn fetes, cake walks, and everything on the rummage sale and bazaar line; we know of no revivals breaking out, no souls being saved. Dearth, death and blight are everywhere, sin is rampant here, and I expect that this is simply a picture of Methodism everywhere. Our missionaries report London as much worse.

We have no means of knowing whether the foregoing asserted facts concerning the Methodist Episcopal Church are true or not; but, if they are true, it must be that many if not all of them, were within the knowledge of Mr. Farson and his associates while yet they were in fellowship with the Church which they now so rashly charge with winking at and condoning iniquity. It therefore occurs to us that it would have been more consistent if Mr. Farson had stayed with the good men and women in the Church, formulated charges against those whom he knew to be guilty and had them brought to judgment and condemnation, and thus have helped to cleanse the sanctuary; rather than to have gone out and started a co-religious movement which may in time shelter wrongdoers of a similar type.

It is a misfortune for a man to be overcome in weakness and commit a fault. If he discover and confess his fault Deacon Farson, as well as the Methodist Episcopal Church, must accept confession and extend clemency and pardon, so far as humanity can go, leaving the final arbitrament and disposition of the culprit to the Great Judge. Suppose that the pastor of one of the large churches in Chicago had been a drunkard for years. If he finally saw the folly of his course and forsook the habit, how can Duke Farson say that he was a confirmed drunkard and refuse him credit and human absolution? One of the writers of the New Testament Scriptures, in writing concerning the membership of the body writes thus: "And if any man sin we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous."<sup>1</sup> Again, another writer in the same Scriptures writes in this way: "If a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted."<sup>2</sup>

Does Duke Farson arraign the whole Methodist Episcopal Church, because in dealing with those overtaken in a fault, the local churches or congregations and their bishop have essayed to restore, rather than to arraign and condemn? And will Bishop Merrill quietly submit to the stringent charge that he and his associate bishops in office knew of the evil things asserted by this "accuser of the (Methodist Episcopal) brethren," and have officially glazed over the wrong-doing complained of, without contradiction or explanation?

If Deacon Farson would not put the pictures of the men whom he accuses of wrong-doing in such bitter terms in the "rogues' gallery and their bodies in stripes," (penitentiary, we suppose,) but would "take them to Jesus and get them cleansed," why should he object to the Methodist Episcopal Church keeping them in the fold in which it is supposed by those already in it they are being taken to Jesus? Will taking such characters out of the Methodist Episcopal Church into the Metropolitan Church Association, alone, change their sin spots and evil stripes and make them desirable citizens in a holiness camp-meeting? Is there diviner power in the Metropolitan Church Association as an ecclesiastical organization than in the religious movement started by John Wesley, and of which the Methodist Episcopal Church is supposed to be the latest and most modern development? If so, whence did it come?

We are not sure that we understand what the writer meant when he wrote, "True holiness will take any one out of the Methodist Episcopal Church." If it was intended to be understood that those aspiring to and obtaining "true holiness" will not stay in the Methodist Episcopal Church, but will "come out of it," it may be very pertinently inquired, will "true holiness" take those who so come out into the Metropolitan Association? Is that what was intended to be said, we wonder?

If Deacon Farson could not effect a reformation in the Methodist Episcopal Church while still a member of it, by insisting upon and aiding in the renovating processes through which evil spirits should be exorcised and cast out, and evil-minded or wholly worldly-minded men be made to see holiness and loving it become truly holy, reasoning from observation and experience we are quite sure the efforts of himself and coworkers, as shown in the Burning Bush, will neither cleanse nor reform.

One who goes outside of the house of which he is an inmate to effect a cleaning of the inside will not succeed in his effort. He may throw the mud and slime of denunciation and abuse at those within, may bespatter and bedaub the outward appearance of the home from which he went out, or was expelled for cause, but the inmates who choose to remain within will not be affected thereby.

We are of the opinion that if the number for Christmas, 1903, is a fair specimen of the journal and its spirit, the Burning Bush, instead of being a type of the bush that Moses saw which burned but was not consumed, will be burned up by its own baleful fire and the place which once knew it will know it no more forever.

THINGS FIND THEIR LEVEL SOON OR LATE. BAYS
IN GOOD COMPANY.

CONCERT AND LECTURE.

On next Monday evening, December 21, Bays and McVey, now engaged in a revival meeting, will give an entertainment at the Christian church in this city, to begin at eight o'clock in the evening, doors open at seven.

The program will consist of plantation melodies, jubilee songs, etc., etc., by Professor McVey, of Concordia, Kansas, the most popular colored jubilee concert singer and soloist in the West. This will be followed by Mr. Bays' popular lecture on Mormonism, entitled: "Reminiscences and Experiences," or "Mormonism as I have seen it."

The entertainment will close with some of Mr. McVey's choicest numbers. The public is cordially invited to participate in this feast of Fact and Fun. Come, "laugh and grow fat." Admission fifteen and twenty-five cents.—Woodward, Iowa, Enterprise, December 11, 1903.

"MORMONS" IN NEW MEXICO.

The following is from the Round Table column of the Chicago Tribune for December 31, 1903:

CHICAGO, December 28.—[Editor of the Tribune.]—You published in your Sunday issue a map which is being sent out by the Women's Home mission, which is intended to represent the octopus of Mormonism with its hideous body in Utah, and its tentacles reaching in every direction into the adjoining States and Territories, one of its arms being made to enfold a large part of the territory of New Mexico. I sympathize with woman's cause against Mormonism, but this map does grave injustice to the people of the territory of New Mexico. I have been connected with the public affairs of New Mexico for many years, and emphatically state and can abundantly prove by almost every living witness there that comparatively speaking there are no Mormons in the territory of New Mexico, and polygamy, the evil at which the Woman's mission is, I think, aiming, is absolutely unknown among those who are there. Of course, in a country filled with magnificent mountain chains and with its parts largely separated each from the other, and small communities removed from railroads, it is impossible to speak accurately as to the actual number of members of such faith, but the census of 1890 stated, I think, that there were in the neighborhood of one thousand, an insignificant number of the total population; and, certain it is, that there has never been a public official, member of the legislature, or officer filling any other position of trust in the country who was a Mormon. This charge of Mormonism against New Mexico largely arose at the last session of Congress, when politicians opposed to the admission thereof as a State used it freely.

There is not a community of Americans in the United States where polygamy is more abhorred than in New Mexico.

W. A. H.

The writer of this letter has practiced law for twenty years in New Mexico, and his position as an attorney and as a man of affairs entitles his statement to consideration.

From the indorsement given the writer of the above one would almost be inclined to accept the statement as correct, and we hope it is. It is not a pleasant thing to believe that the dominant Church in one of the sovereign States of the Union has been and is now acting in bad faith toward the people and the general government. It is far preferable to believe that the officers and members of the "Mormons" settling in New Mexico are not only sober and industrious, but are living in accord with the marital rules of the Mexican government, the laws of the state. It is beyond question that the people of the United States believe that when Utah was taken into the Union, it was with the understanding that the practice of polygamy was to cease. Everybody outside of Utah, and all the Gentile population of Utah, understood the provision in the enabling act prohibiting polygamy to mean that both marrying more wives than one and the living with more than one woman as wives were prohibited. There was subsequent evasion of this understanding by the claim that further polygamous marriages only were prohibited, that is, that there were to be no more polygamous marriages contracted in Utah as a State, and that the prohibition did not affect polygamous marriages already existing. It was seemingly held that the phrase polygamy or polygamous marriage was not to be construed to mean the practice of living with two or more wives or husbands at the same time, as the meaning of the word is given in the dictionaries of the day, the common understanding of the word.

Evidently the fear entertained by many that under cover of this restricted rendition of the word there would be a disregard of the common understanding of the phrase and polygamous marriages would be contracted in New Mexico and other places outside of Utah and the parties so married live in the "practice of polygamy." It is this that gave rise to the stories in circulation to the prejudice of the Mormon settlers in New Mexico. We hope the gentleman is correct in his conclusions, and that the fears of the women of the Republic and those who sympathize with them as they assert, are groundless, being without foundation in fact.

THE HOLY SCRIPTURES.

The translation and correction of the Scriptures by Joseph Smith, the Seer, as put before the Church and the world, was faithfully done by those to whom the work of publishing it was intrusted.

We quote from the Preface in the book the following:

This work is given to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints and to the public in pursuance of the commandment of God.

As concerning the manner of translation and correction, it is evident, from the manuscripts and the testimony of those who were conversant with the facts, that it was done by direct revelation from God.

It was begun in June, 1830, and was finished July 2, 1833.

Joseph Smith was born in December, 1805, and was, at the finishing of the manuscripts of this work, in the twenty-eighth year of his age.

The manuscripts, at his death, in 1844, were left in the hands of his widow, where they remained until the spring of 1866, when they were delivered to William Marks, I. L. Rogers, and William W. Blair, a committee appointed by the annual conference of April, 1866, to procure them for publication; and were, by them, delivered to the Committee of Publication, consisting of Joseph Smith, Israel L. Rogers, and Ebenezer Robinson, and are now presented as they came into our hands.

Whatever may have been the work done by the Seer as stated in the history as to its commencement and its finish, it was given as the manuscripts intrusted to and kept by the wife of the Seer and by her delivered to the committee for publication stated it. The committee neither added to nor took from it in any form whatever. They did the duty imposed upon them as they are prepared to give an account in the day of judgment.

Any statement, affirmation, charge, or insinuation made by any one, either friendly or unfriendly to the Reorganized Church, that there was any tampering with the text, altering or changing in word or meaning of any portion of the manuscript is untrue; no such tampering, changing, or altering the text or meaning having been done by any one connected with the work. No more conscientious work has ever been done by any of the men connected with the latter-day work during all the years of its existence, than was performed by the Committee of Publication.

Those who cast aspersion on the work of that committee, or who assert that the text of the Inspired Scriptures as left by Joseph Smith has been mutilated and changed to suit the notions of the leaders of the Reorganized Church; for the reason that the published work condemns certain doctrines and practices of those who make this assertion of mutilation, will not by such assertion get rid of the condemnation found in the word, but will have to meet it together with the falsehoods they may circulate in regard to it, at the great day of accounts. It is a terrible thing to fall into the hands of an offended God. "Neither liars nor sorcerers will enter" into the heaven of heavens where God and Christ are.

On Monday, the 4th, a telephone message reached Lamoni to the effect that the capitol at Des Moines was burning, and that there was little prospects of saving the building. The evening Des Moines papers which reached Lamoni Tuesday morning brought the news that the building had been damaged by fire to the amount of about one half a million dollars. It was good news to learn that the building had not been totally destroyed, as previously reported, but sad news to know that so much damage had been done to one of the most beautiful State capitols in the country. Iowans have always taken great pride in their magnificent state-house, and to know that it was being destroyed by fire was indeed hard. In the state-house was the large State Library of seven hundred thousand volumes, and it is hoped now that it has escaped with slight losses.

A LESSON BY HORROR.

Since the world has stood mankind has been taught its most useful lessons by adversity or disaster rather than by prosperity. It was the death of Abel that taught man the value and force of the command, "Thou shalt not kill." It took the famine for bread, the thirst for water, to teach Israel under Moses to value the quails and manna, and the waters from the rock. It required the perishing of many to fasten the faith of the mass upon the brazen serpent and the power of God manifested by and through it.

It has taken the death of the Man of Galilee on the cross to make the cross the emblem of the universal love of God for man.

The world learns to mend the old and improve upon the new by failure and disaster. When iron and steel took the place of wood in the construction of vessels in ocean traffic, losses of life and property taught the lesson for water-tight compartments so that when accident stove a hole in a hull the whole vessel was not exposed to loss and her load of human freight to death by drowning. Lesson after lesson for lessening the danger in railway traffic has been taught by dreadful accidents from nearly every possible cause, and horrible penalties paid in loss of property and life. Safety to the traveling public has been enhanced and more certainly guaranteed by these failures with loss attending them. So, also, in regard to public buildings, churches, halls, theaters, meeting-houses, school buildings, hotels, buildings for stores, offices, and other uses in the occupation of which life is endangered by the accident of fire.

A late and dreadful occurrence from which valuable lessons will be taught was that of a fire on the stage of the Iroquois Theater in the city of Chicago. This building is one of the latest built and most modern in construction in the United States. Money was not spared to make it beautiful and attractive to the theater-going public. It was registered to seat seven hundred and forty patrons. On Wednesday afternoon, December 30, 1903, while the whole city and country were alive in preparation for and anticipation of the change from the old to the new year, and holiday cheer being everywhere engaged in and enjoyed, two thousand persons were attending an afternoon performance of a spectacular play called "Mr. Bluebeard," we suppose a sort of presentation of the tale of horror told in the Arabian Nights tales, along with Ali Baba, or the Forty Thieves, and other fantastical stories.

By an oversight in construction, and carelessness in handling the stage apparatus, the frayed edge of a hanging curtain caught fire from a defective electric light; a fire of the stage fittings was kindled, a panic ensued, and the result was that over five hundred and eighty persons, mostly women and children, were burned, trampled, crushed, smothered, and beaten to death within the lapse of fifteen minutes of time.

Besides the faulty construction of the stage setting, the exits required by law were found to be shut and fastened, so that hundreds were crushed and smothered at the very doors where there should have been safety.

An investigation is on foot in Chicago and other cities, and it is expected that some one will be punished for criminal carelessness amounting to manslaughter, for which heavy penalty is liable to be inflicted.

The Saints everywhere should take this lesson to account and make the public buildings they build and are using as the law directs: good ventilation, proper exits, and all doors opening outward. The laws of Iowa, Illinois, Missouri, and we suppose others require these things. We ought for our own safety, if not to comply with the law, see to this, and at once make our houses safe. Bishop Vinson Knight used to say, "The Lord helps those best who help themselves."

The death of the five hundred and eighty victims of the Iroquois Theater fire took desolation to scores of families, where the whole family—mother and children—were lost to the father; and the visitation of death and sorrow into over a thousand homes, nearly all over the United States.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

J. C. Foss wrote from Santa Cruz, California, December 22, telling of his visits to various parts of California. He is going over some ground formerly gone over by Brn. J. and A. H. Smith, W. W. Blair, etc., and finds they are cherished in memory and well spoken of. Bro. Foss' daughter's health has greatly improved since going to California.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

By letter from Bro. William H. Greenwood, of Sheffield, England, we learn of the death to this life of Bro. Simon Holmes, Sr., of Clay Cross, one of the veterans in the work in that part. Well it may be said of such spirits as his, They never die. We join his family in sympathy in their bereavement.

Almost six thousand miles of railway were constructed in the United States last year, almost two thirds of which were added to systems west of the Mississippi. Oklahoma leads with six hundred and sixty-three miles, Louisiana, Texas, Indian Territory, Arkansas, Missouri, Pennsylvania, and Iowa following in order. New England is credited with twenty-three miles. In the Eastern States electric road construction is taking the place of railroad extension and serve the people quite as well as the steam roads. The total railroad mileage in the United States, including Alaska, is two hundred nine thousand eight hundred and fifty-five miles. Canada reports eight hundred and eight miles of track laid on twenty-four lines and Mexico reports three hundred and forty-one miles on twelve lines.

The closing month of last year was one in which there occurred many fatal accidents in the United States. Some of the worst railroad wrecks of the year occurred in that month, more than one hundred lives being destroyed in five wrecks alone. In the year 1903 four thousand and ninety persons were killed on United States railways, and more than fifty-one hundred seriously injured. A terrible record, indeed! The horrible holocaust at the Iroquois Theater, Chicago, on the closing days of the year came as a bloody climax to the record of a month noted for disasters.

The workers in the HERALD Office bindery are pleased because a new power paper-cutter has been placed at their service. It is a Sheridan new model and is improved up to date and gives promise of doing fine work when it has been in service long enough to get "limbered up."

Original Articles.

THE PRESIDENT OR CHIEF OFFICER IN THE CHURCH IN THE TIME OF THE APOSTLES. JAMES OR PETER, WHICH?—A REPLY.

BY G. T. GRIFFITHS.

Recently there appeared in the HERALD a continued article under the above caption, by Bro. W. H. Kelley, in which he criticises the position taken in the appendix to "Exegesis of the Priesthood;" viz.: That Peter, James, and John constituted the presidency of the church just subsequent to the ascension of Christ.

I am grateful for the opportunity thus made for bringing my position more widely before the public than Exegesis of the Priesthood has had time to do; it having been published in the fall of 1902, while "Presidency and Priesthood" has been published and widely read since 1890.

Regarding the subject as one that would not, in any way, affect our salvation; and not desiring to retard the sale of the brother's book by a discussion of the subject through the columns of the HERALD, I remained silent for many years, or up to the time of the publication of my recent work, Exegesis of the Priesthood. Imagine my surprise when I read the plea, "It is eminently proper that Presidency and Priesthood should be heard in reply." It is evident from the brother's hurried defense that the leaven infused by my appendix is working charmingly. It has worked out the two supposed counselors, Jude and Silas, entirely, as the brother made no attempt in his recent articles to retain them. And judging from his flurry the brother is enabled to read the handwriting on the wall, the interpretation of which is as follows, "Thy long-cherished theory that James, the Lord's brother, was the president of the church has been weighed in the balance (God's word) and found wanting."

On page 1030 of HERALD for November 4, 1903, he frankly states that there is no Bible text that makes a clear statement in favor of either position. We agree with him in that there is not a single Bible text indicating that James was the president of the church; but on the other hand shall be pleased to call attention to an ample supply of scriptural evidence that Peter, James, and John constituted the presidency.

There has been much objection urged against the following quotation from Millennial Star for 1855, pages 310, 311:

He (Adam) is the head, and was told to multiply. The keys were first given to him and by him to others. He will have to give an account of his stewardship, and they to him. The priesthood is everlasting. The Savior, Moses, and Elias, gave the keys to Peter, James, and John, on the mount when they were transfigured before him. The priesthood is everlasting—without beginning of days or end of years; without father, mother, etc.

Of course, we expected the author of Presidency and Priesthood to object to this statement, for it clearly shows his position to be untrue. One reason he assigns for not believing the statement is that there was no shorthand reporter to take it down, hence Joseph Smith was not reported properly. How about the many, many statements found in our Church books purporting to have been given by the angels to Joseph Smith and others? Should we disbelieve them because of the absence of stenographers? Were the acts and teachings of the apostles taken down by such reporters?

A second reason for not believing the statement is that "since the death of the Prophet Joseph, the history has been carefully revised under the strict inspection of President Brigham Young, and approved by him." Therefore Bro. Kelley arrives at the conclusion that all historical matter contained in their Church publications is unreliable and can not be accepted as authentic. However, the compilers and writers of our church history seem to hold different views, for the first and second volumes of the Church History are compiled almost entirely from historical matter taken from Times and Seasons and Millennial Star.

Again he objects on the grounds that the law provides that "every president of the high priesthood is to be ordained by the direction of a high council or general conference." He asks, "Was there a general conference or high council called upon the Mount?" May I not ask to be informed what high council or general conference authorized the ordaining of James, the Lord's brother, to the presidency?

The admission is made that Jesus said to Peter, "I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven," in Matthew 16: 19, but he says further that Jesus evidently intended that the other members of the twelve should share in this authority as well as Peter, although Peter was the one named in the address. There is one point that many have overlooked that we wish to call special attention to, viz., in the statement made by Christ to Peter, "I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom," etc., the reader should bear in mind that at the time Jesus gave utterance to the above language Peter was one of the twelve and was equal in authority to the rest of the apostles. But Christ at this time made Peter a special promise,—that he would give him authority or keys which he at that time and as a member of the twelve did not possess. He uses the language, "I will," not "I have," or "I do." The word "will" signifies future time. This promise is parallel to the one made to Joseph Smith at the time the Aaronic priesthood was conferred upon him and Oliver Cowdery, and which afterward had its fulfillment when Peter, James, and John conferred upon him the keys of the kingdom. The fact that Peter, in connection with James and John, could give the keys to Joseph Smith is conclusive proof that Jesus fulfilled his promise subsequent to the time of making it. Read the word of the Lord on this point wherein God states plainly that he did give the keys of the kingdom of heaven unto Peter, James, and John:

And also with Peter, and James, and John, whom I have sent unto you, by whom I have ordained you and confirmed you to be apostles and especial witnesses of my name, and bear the keys of your ministry; and of the same things which I revealed unto them [Peter, James, and John]; unto whom I have committed the keys of my kingdom, and a dispensation of the gospel for the last times; and for the fullness of times.—Doctrine and Covenants 26: 3.

Again the statement made by the messenger who conferred the Aaronic priesthood upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery sustains the above:

The messenger who visited us on this occasion, and conferred this priesthood upon us, said that his name was John, the same that is called John the Baptist in the New Testament, and that he acted under the direction of Peter, James, and John, who held the keys of the priesthood of Melchisedec, which priesthood he said should in due time be conferred on us, and that I should be called the first elder, and he [Oliver] the second.—Supplement, Millennial Star, vol. 14, p. 15.

In addition to this I will quote Joseph Smith's statement in Doctrine and Covenants, and which is in harmony with the above:

The voice of Peter, James, and John, in the wilderness between Harmony, Susquehanna County, and Colesville, Broome County, on the Susquehanna River, declaring themselves as possessing the keys of the kingdom, and of the dispensation of the fullness of times.—Section 110: 20.

Now, dear reader, please notice the fact herein stated by Peter, James, and John to Joseph and Oliver, that they (Peter, James, and John) possessed the keys of the kingdom and not the keys as pertaining to the twelve. The same words were used on this occasion by these individuals as was used by the Savior to Peter as is recorded in Matthew 16: 19: "I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom." The statement in Matthew gives the promise of the bestowal of keys while the latter-day statement made by Peter, James, and John to Joseph and Oliver was that they did possess them. In the face of these plain, simple truths as revealed to us in these latter days, some prefer to take the statements of men who are unreliable as is evidenced by the inharmony existing in their claims on the subject of presidency. What did the term, "keys of the kingdom," imply in the case of Joseph Smith? Whatever the term implied in his case would be the same in the other, being exactly alike in both. The Lord says that he gave unto Joseph Smith the keys of the kingdom, in Doctrine and Covenants 80: 1, wherein he called Frederick G. Williams to be a counselor to Joseph Smith, Jr.: "Unto whom [Joseph Smith, not the twelve] I have given the keys of the kingdom, which belongeth always unto the presidency of the high priesthood." Notice that F. G. Williams was called to be a counselor to the president of the high priesthood, and not to the twelve. Hence the claim that the twelve is included in this presidency is illogical.

I now quote some passages in Doctrine and Covenants which prove that the twelve are not included in the presidency referred to in the above; also to show that the position taken in which the twelve are included in the presidency, is inconsistent, as the presidency of three has rights, keys, or authority that the twelve do not possess under the law:

The twelve are a traveling presiding high council, to officiate in the name of the Lord under the direction of the presidency of the church, agreeably to the institution of heaven.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 12.

Nowhere are the twelve given any authority to to direct the presidency.

The presidency of three perform the following duties not devolving upon the twelve:

1. They are equal in holding keys of this last kingdom, also the keys of the school of the prophets. (Section 81: 3-5.)

2. They have a right to officiate in all offices of the Church. (Section 104: 4.)

3. To receive revelations for the Church. (Section 107: 39.)

4. They have the burden and care of the Church placed upon them. (Section 122: 2.)

5. The purchasing of land and locating of Saints in Zion, in connection with the Bishop. (Section 48: 2.)

6. They decide appeals. (Section 99: 14.)

7. They call and ordain bishops. (Section 68: 2; 104: 8.)

8. The standing ministry are under the presidency. (Section 122: 8.)

9. All tracts are to be placed before the presidency for examination. (Section 125: 11.)

10. They are to try all general officers of the Church. (Section 126: 11.)

The rights, privileges, and authority belonging to Joseph Smith because of being in possession of the keys of the kingdom, would also be the rights, privileges, and authority of Peter, by virtue of him being in possession of the same keys of the kingdom.

Let us now examine the merits of the question by finding out the authority Joseph Smith held that others did not have under the laws of the Church.

First. He presides over the Melchisedec priesthood. (Section 104: 31.)

Second. He presides over the Church. (Section 104: 42.)

Third. He presides over the High Council. (Section 99: 6.)

Fourth. He is a seer, revelator, translator, and prophet to the Church. (Section 104: 42.)

Fifth. To be like unto Moses, to receive revelations and commandments to the Church. (Section 27: 2; 43: 1; 87: 2; 19: 2; 99: 10.)

If Joseph Smith, by virtue of holding these keys of the kingdom, had all this authority, as given above, not held by others, Peter would in like manner hold this same special authority because of being in possession of these same keys, that is, the keys of the kingdom.

We are asked to believe that Peter answered for the rest of the apostles in Matthew 16:17-19, wherein Peter declares, "Thou art the Christ," etc. Had this been the case our Savior would not have been so partial as to single out the spokesman, Peter, and commend him as he did when he said, "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona." If Peter had spoken for all, would not Jesus have said, "Blessed art thou, my twelve apostles"? From the argument which has been presented by some it would appear that the president of the quorum always answers for all the members of the quorum over which he presides. It is evident that the president of the twelve did not answer for all the quorum in the early church, especially during the controversies over circumcision and other subjects causing such divisions among Paul and others of them. It is also evident that the president of the Quorum of Twelve does not answer for his brethren of the quorum in our day. For instance, the claim that James, the Lord's brother, was the president of the ancient church, and many other things. Moreover, the president of the quorum of apostles has no more authority or keys than any other member of the Quorum of Twelve outside of quorum sessions; and his occupancy of this position is only because of being chosen by his brethren to preside over its sessions. He has no power to direct the labors of any of its members, for this directing authority is wholly in the hands of the president of the Church and his two counselors who hold the keys of the kingdom. Hence, Thomas B. Marsh held no greater keys than any member of the quorum of apostles to-day, as the president of the quorum is subject to the direction of the presidency of the Church the same as the other members. The only added keys or authority that he could possibly hold is to preside over his brethren in quorum sessions. There is quite a difference between presiding over a quorum of twelve men and presiding over the church of God on earth. There isn't a semblance of a parallel.

We now desire to call the reader's attention to some of the historical statements which have been used by our brother. According to his quotations he would have us believe that James was not only president of the church, but also the general bishop. I wonder if he could not find one that made him the presiding patriarch, also.

One of the first quotations given is found in Eusebius' History, page 37, and reads as follows;

Peter, James, and John, after the ascension of our Savior, though they had been preferred by our Lord, did not contend for the honor, but chose James the Just as bishop of Jerusalem.

Let us analyze this statement. In the first place Clement here says that Peter, James, and John had been preferred by our Lord, which, without doubt, sustains the position I take, that they were chosen as the presidency of the church, in preference to the rest of the brethren; and, second, they did not contend for the honor of the bishopric, but chose James as bishop, not president of the church. It would hardly be supposed that those who had been preferred by our Lord and set apart by him to preside over the Melchisedec order of the priesthood and to have care of spiritual things, would contend for the honor of being the bishop whose calling is to minister in temporal affairs. We think Bro. Kelley's position is weakened and ours strengthened by Clement.

We are surprised that Bro. Kelley did not quote the foot-notes on page 36 of 'Eusebius' History. However, it will be apparent to the reader why he left it out when he reads the following quotation therefrom:

That this James [meaning James, the Lord's brother] was not the son of the B. Virgin, nor yet of Joseph by one Escha, a former wife; but of Mary, the wife of Cleophas [or Alphæus], sister to the B. Virgin may thus be made appear; we read, John 19: 25, that there stood by the cross of Christ—his mother, and his mother's sister, Mary, the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene: in the rest of the Evangelists we find at the same place, (Matthew 27: 56,) Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James and Joses; and again at the sepulchre, (Matthew 28: 1,) Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary. Wherefore that other Mary, by the conjunction of these testimonies, appeareth to be the sister of the B. Virgin, to be the wife of Cleophas, and the mother of James and Joses; and consequently James and Joses, the brethren of the Lord, were not the sons of Mary his mother, nor of Joseph by a former wife, but of the other Mary, and therefore called his brethren, according to the language of the Jews, (See Genesis 13: 8; 12: 5; 19: 12,) because that other Mary was the sister of his mother.—Eusebius, pp. 36, 37.

See also Bishop Pearson on the creeds, page 176, Eusebius.

We now quote from one of the great scholars of the age, William Smith, LL. D., classical examiner in the University of London and editor of the Dictionaries of Greek and Roman Antiquities, as follows:

Mary, the wife of Cleopas, or Alphæus, had four sons: James the less, Joses, Simon, and Judas, who are termed brethren of Jesus Christ, his cousins.—Germans.

Mary, mother of Jesus. Her later days were made comfortable by the express dictation of the Savior, who committed her to the keeping of John, the beloved disciple.—Prominent men and women of the New Testament, pp. 3, 4.

Though my statement may be "absurd" wherein I contend that it was James, the son of Alphæus, that continued on down after the death of James, the son of Zebedee, yet I have failed to see anything presented to prove to the contrary. In 1 Corinthians 15: 7 it is stated that "after that he [Christ] was seen of James." Some would have us believe that this is James, the son of Joseph; but where is the proof in support of it? Now let us examine this a little from a biblical and historical standpoint and see what is the correct position.

In Matthew 10: 2, 3 we find that Jesus called two by the name of James to the apostleship, viz., James, the son of Zebedee, and James, the son of Alphæus. And in Presidency and Priesthood the writer accounts for the death of James, the son of Zebedee, and then makes the claim that the "other James" was "beyond question" James, the Lord's brother. The reader will now see clearly that to support this position it would be necessary to account for the death, or expulsion from the quorum of twelve, of James, the son of Alphæus, "beyond question." This point has been ignored, for the reason that the accounting of the death of one, without making a similar account of the other, proves nothing. The assertion is made on page 1055 of HERALD for November 11, 1903, that "James, the Lord's brother, did not belong to the quorum of apostles at any time." Paul says, "But other of the apostles saw I none, save James, the Lord's brother." This is the only time in referring to the Apostle James that he was designated as being "the Lord's brother," in Holy Writ. He is there ranked as an apostle and not as president of the church. Now, if James had been either the bishop or president of the church, as Bro. Kelley claims, would Paul have referred to him in the same manner as the "other apostle"? It looks hardly reasonable.

James, the son of Zebedee, was slain by Herod, 44 A. D. Bro. Kelley claims that James, the Lord's brother, was not converted until after the Savior's resurrection, but here we have James, the son of Zebedee, and John, his brother, associated with Peter. There these were given particular prominence up to this date. They were also made particularly prominent by Christ during his ministry, as is evidenced by the following:

And after six days Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John, his brother, and bringeth them up into a high mountain apart, and was transfigured before them: and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light. And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with them.—Matthew 17: 1-3.

And when he came into the house, he suffered no man to go in, save Peter, and James, and John, and the father and the mother of the maiden.—Luke 8: 51.

And he took with him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, and began to be sorrowful and very heavy. Then saith he unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death: tarry ye here, and watch with me.—Matthew 26: 37, 38.

Where in the Bible, or in latter-day revelation do we find James, the Lord's brother, Jude, and Silas associated together in any sense whatever—nowhere save in Presidency and Priesthood. At the time James, the son of Zebedee, was slain, they took Peter also and put him in prison. On Peter's deliverance from the prison by the angel:

But he [Peter] beckoning unto them with the hand to hold their peace, declared unto them how the Lord had brought him out of the prison. And he said, Go shew these things unto James, and to the brethren.—Acts 12: 17.

It is evident that the James here referred to is none other than James, the son of Alphæus, who was called to the apostleship by Christ in Matthew 10. Neither does the Bible, nor do historians give an account of his death or expulsion from the quorum. This, however, must be done before the point can be settled "beyond question." It is evident that after the death of James, the son of Zebedee, that James, the son of Alphæus, succeeded him and became a counselor to Peter in the presidency, as he presided in connection with him in Jerusalem in the year 52 A. D. (Acts 15: 13.) It is possible that this James, besides being a counselor to Peter in the presidency of the church, might have acted in the capacity of bishop in Jerusalem. This position finds a parallel in our day in the case of Bro. E. L. Kelley who, while being Bishop of the Church, acted as counselor to the President for five years. Thus he occupied the same position as James, the son of Alphæus. It is contended by some of the historians quoted by Bro. Kelley that James presided over the church in Jerusalem, the headquarters. There is no argument in this either. We have another parallel in our day. Alexander H. Smith while occupying as counselor to the President of the Church, acted as president of the Church in Lamoni, the headquarters and seat of the presidency. Will that prove in the future that A. H. Smith was the president of the Church? Not by any means.

Again, the claim is made that James was converted and made the president of the church immediately after the ascension of Christ.

The following incident of history recorded in Acts 10 shows conclusively that he was not the president in 41 A. D., seven years subsequent to the ascension of Christ. The fact that God sent an angel to Cornelius directing him to send for Peter, and also shows Peter, in a vision, that the Gentile people are acceptable in God's sight, and the fact that the work here required of Peter was to extend the work of the Lord unto the Gentiles is ample evidence that the Lord recognized Peter as the head of the church. According to the order established in the latter-day dispensation as given in Doctrine and Covenants 104: 12, "the twelve are a traveling, presiding high council, to officiate in the name of the Lord, under the direction of the presidency of the church, agreeably to the institution of heaven, to build up the church and regulate all the affairs of the same, in all nations; first unto the Gentiles, and secondly unto the Jews." The only difference in the commission in that day and the present is this: They were to go first to the Jews, and secondly, to the Gentiles; we are to go first to the Gentiles, and secondly to the Jews. Please notice that the Lord makes it emphatic that the order is that the twelve are to go unto all nations "under the direction of the presidency."

Now, if as contended, James was the president of the church, is it not singular that the Lord would violate his own order and utterly ignore James under whose direction the apostles labored, if he was president, and give his direction to Peter by an angel to perform such important service as the extending of the gospel to the Gentiles? Would the presidency or church to-day sanction such procedure? Suppose the president of the quorum of apostles of to-day would proceed to Jerusalem for the purpose of extending the work to the Jews without authority or direction from the presidency, would not the presidency immediately recall him? While an apostle's commission authorizes him to go into all the world it also confines his service to the direction of the presidency. Was not the opening of the work among the Gentiles of former days as important as the extending of the gospel to the Jews in the future will be? It is evident, in view of the relationship existing between the presidency and twelve, that when the time arrives for the extending of the work to the Jews, the Lord will reveal it to the president of the church and he will direct the twelve in carrying out the commands of God. Hence, we conclude from the above facts that Peter was chief apostle or president, and not James, the Lord's brother. Seven years have elapsed since the ascension of Christ and still Peter is recognized as the head.

(To be concluded.)

SIGHTS AND SOUNDS OF A GREAT CITY.—No. 1.

THE MORGUE.

"One more unfortunate
Weary of breath,
Rashly importunate,
Gone to her death;

"Take her up tenderly,
Lift her with care,
Fashioned so slenderly,
Young and so fair;

"Touch her not scornfully,
Think of her mournfully,
Gently and humanly;
Not of the stains of her;
All that remains of her
Now is pure womanly.

"Make no deep scrutiny,
Into her mutiny,
Rash and undutiful;
Past all dishonor,
Death has left on her
Only the beautiful.

"Who was her father?
Who was her mother?
Had she a sister?
Had she a brother?
Or, was there a dearer one
Still—and a nearer one
Yet, than all other?

"Alas for the rarity,
Of Christian charity,
Under the sun.

O, it was pitiful!
Near a whole city full,
Home she had none."

In the rear of Cook County Hospital, passing through long corridors, on either side, through open doors, where the sick, the maimed, the dying, the homeless and friendless,—but for charity's outstretched hand,—are to be seen, we come to the public dead-house of the great city of Chicago. We are now standing in the place where death holds continuous and awful court, when gruesome sights and scenes shock the unaccustomed sensibilities and compel sobriety and a change in thought and reflections, which the roar and bustle of the streets never impel.

Here, in cases with low temperature and chemical aids, under cover of glass, but fully exposed to our view to-day, are thirty-five bodies, poor clay, untenanted, and from which the spirit was driven by disease, accident, and suicide.

Here, as in no other place in this city of over two million inhabitants, is the work of the common leveler of all earthly estates to be seen making his most potent emphasis.

Some are known, some unidentified.

Here is the body of a murderer and suicide. He killed his wife and cut his own throat yesterday!

Here is the body of an old soldier who fell dead on the street—unknown, however.

Here, a babe, three months old, child of an unfortunate girl, the attendant says.

Another girl, victim of alcoholism.

Another woman, found starved to death.

Another young girl, shot herself; another, poison, and another drowned, so the record reads.

Suicides are frequent, and Hood's "Bridge of Sighs" finds frequent and sorrowful life and death emphasis in the morgue records and statistics of the coroner of Cook County.

Is it "better to go to the house of mourning than to go to the house of feasting"? We think so; "for," says the wise man, "that is the end of all men; and the living will lay it to heart." "Sorrow," many times, "is better than laughter." It sobers the careless, thoughtless, and reckless. A visit to the "dead-house" while living, might prevent some one from being carried there after life has fled. It stimulates sober, earnest inquiry and thought,—it "is the end of all men," says Solomon.

Yes, to man, "the natural man," it is the "end;" but to the soul hungry for life and opportunity, the old question for ever presses for solution, "If a man die, shall he live again?" Is this the end of identity, of memory, or of self? Will he live? Does he, can he, live, after the morgue, the coffin, and the casket, with a changed name or title? Not as man; for we know his end, his fleshly end. We have seen it to-day, and we shall all soon lie as still, as helpless, and as cold as they,—our machinery worn out or destroyed. But where are we? Where shall we be? Clay? Dust? Or something other which has so far eluded the grasp of our five senses and yet holds its materially intangible but most potent force over that which we know is not body or flesh or animate dust? Our affections, our reason, our sense of the right arrangement of things that provides insurance against physical decay, the—shall we say—the incidents of time or of eternity?

“Is man the insect of a leaf?
With life as idle as 'tis brief?
That wakes beneath the morning skies,
At noon is old, at evening dies?
Or, is the soul indeed divine—
Full unoplied 'gainst death and time?”

If sane, sober, and what so many of us know or believe to be honest, men have not been deceived or borne false testimony, angels, superior beings, with powers not possessed by man, have been seen and conversed with, and have delivered wondrous messages of truths of which the world for ages had been dispossessed. The passage from other spheres has been made, and the chasm of centuries bridged in our day.

More than this: Whatever failings as men they may have had, their witness does not stand unsupported and alone. They have fulfilled, not invented, prophecy of ancient days and times. They have vindicated not themselves only, but God and his prophets, who for centuries have advertised the fulfillment of their predictions at the hands of such men,—and under such conditions and collateral proof, as to form a “cloud of witnesses” as we may not here mention, but by which the true “gospel” assumes new and beautiful meanings and significances; even the gospel that reveals God’s righteous plans and decrees, as against the dark background of human creeds. A gospel of appeal to the highest powers of test of which man is capable: his reason, his love of right, and of opportunity which the fleshly life does not furnish.

From the presence of the dead form of the

“One more unfortunate

Rashly importunate,
Gone to her death;
Owning her weakness
Her evil behavior,
And leaving with meekness,
Her sins to her Savior,” whose gospel of possibilities for the magdalen has been so gloriously unfolded to us in his doctrine of a just and merciful, as well as an eternal judgment, we pass out into the world of humanity under the sense of feeling that He who “careth for the sparrows” and fixes by law a rule for habitation and life for the least of his creatures, has, hidden behind the veil, the provisions for us of the “power of an endless life.”

ARSENIC IN HEN'S EGGS.

Since M. Armand Gauthier established the fact that arsenic forms one of the elements of living organisms, the attention of scientists has been directed toward this question. Among the new researches are those of M. Gabriel Bertrand, and in a paper lately presented to the Academie des Sciences, he brings out the following facts: Following his previous work upon the presence of arsenic in the organism, he thinks it logical to admit that this element, like sulphur, carbon, and phosphorus, is a constant element in the living cell. Instead of being localized in certain tissues, as Gauthier supposes, it exists, on the contrary, in all tissues. If this conclusion is true, and if arsenic is an element which is necessary to maintain existence, it should be found in the organism at all periods of life, in the cells of the embryo as well as those of the adult. It should therefore be found in the bird’s egg, where the embryo is obliged to accomplish all its development without taking from the outside the smallest part of the arsenic which is needed. Accordingly he looked for arsenic in the hen’s egg, and succeeded in finding it, of course in very minute quantities. The eggs were obtained from chickens raised at Paris in an inclosed space and fed since they were hatched upon wheat and debris of vegetables. Four parts of the eggs were observed separately—the shell, the shell membrane, white, and yolk. The matter was first dried and then attacked by a mixture of nitric and sulphuric acids, which were perfectly pure and did not show a trace of arsenic. To detect the arsenic he employed the usual method of projecting a hydrogen flame against a porcelain plate, and found that all the parts of the egg contained appreciable quantities of the element, but the yolk is by far the richest. Of one two hundredths milligramme which he finds on an average in a single egg, one half or two thirds is contained in the yolk. The white has a much less proportion. In spite of its small weight, the membrane contains about the same quantity and sometimes more than the white. With certain eggs it was sufficient to treat fifteen one hundredths gramme of membrane (the amount contained in one egg) to obtain a clear arsenic ring. These results, which differ from those which have been obtained hitherto, have only been made possible by an especially sensitive method which he uses. They confirm the existence and the probable role of arsenic in all living cells, and scientists may be confident in drawing the conclusions which follow from such an important fact.—Scientific American, December 5, 1903.

Life's Battles.

Life's battles thou must fight all single-handed,
No friend, however dear, can bear thy pain.
No other soul can ever bear thy burdens,
No other hand for thee the prize may gain.

Lonely we journey through this vale of sorrow,
No heart, in full, respondeth to our own;
Each one alone must meet his own to-morrow,
Each one must tread the weary way alone.

Ah! weary heart! why art thou sad and lonely?
Why this vain longing for an answering sigh?
Thy griefs, thy longings, trials and temptations
Are known and felt by him who reigns on high.

MOORHEAD, IOWA.

Dear Sister Walker:—I am happy to be able to inclose an order for three dollars and fifty cents, as birth offerings for the inclosed list of names, fourteen in all, twenty-five cents for each name. I headed the list with my own baby and profited by your suggestion in Hope that we follow Sr. Nicholson's example. I am pleased at being able to get so much, and only wish I could have reached more. All seemed more than willing to give. The main difficulty I met with was that few could give items of blessings, even if only a few months back. I was surprised at this, as I myself kept account of that as much as of the births. I only hope that more will embrace the idea of getting up lists that the good work of publication may go on unhindered. My heart is still in this work and while with the care of five little ones I can not do what I once could to help roll the work along, yet I rejoice to see other workers raised up to fill the ranks. I am glad to see the Sunshine work introduced; I am trying to introduce it among my own little ones, and when I succeed, will try to spread the good work. May God bless and sustain you in your declining years that you may yet accomplish much for the work, is the prayer of an unseen sister.

Yours in Christ,

CORA B. COHRT.

Building Character.

If I would be true, I must be true to both friend and foe. If I am not true to both, there is a dreadfully weak spot in my character. You tell me, then, that character is no stronger than its weakest point, and I close my eyes almost in despair. But something away down deep in my soul seems to whisper of hope, and I determine to try again,—try as I have never tried before. Will I succeed? One tells me that it is human to err; that the error was not meant to do harm and therefore not a sin. And another says that the disposition to do wrong has come to us through long lines of ancestry, and has been so strengthened by each succeeding one that it is hardly possible that we may ever become the embodiment of truth in this world. And, as my mind seems to enter the whirlpool of perplexity, I remember some words of the poet and instantly my soul is flooded with a new light:

“There is nothing we can not overcome;
Say not thy evil instinct is inherited,
Or that some trait inborn makes
Thy whole life forlorn,
And calls down punishment that is not merited.

“Back of thy parents and grandparents lies
The Great Eternal Will! That too is thine
Inheritance,—strong, beautiful, divine,
Sure lever of success for one who tries.”

I feel new strength of faith that shall help to guide me, and I make another effort to strengthen the weak points in my character. I may not be able to hide the scars, but if I shall succeed in making the weak places strong, I will leave them hoping that others may be helped to avoid the same mistakes.

Whatever our sins or mistakes, we would do well to remember that there is an influence for good in this busy world of ours, and while it does not follow us about with a showy label on its back, yet it is here and we have only to recognize it, show an appreciation of it by cultivating its use, and we will be able to so fortify ourselves that there will be little room for the evil influence we so often talk about. When I become impatient, or yield to a temptation to repeat a bit of gossip or refuse or fail to do or say what would bring happiness or comfort to another, I neglect to use this influence for good and thus it weakens, and I may not find it quite so easy next time.

It is usually quite hard for most of us to acknowledge we are wrong the first time; but with each succeeding time it becomes easier, and finally we would feel very uncomfortable if we did not so acknowledge. We must not become discouraged, but must build up the good and evil will diminish in proportion. Do not try to build with a long face, but laugh. Laughing makes the task grow lighter and is catching. It throws out ripples about us that affect our surroundings like the ripples sent out by dropping a pebble in water.

When we build character, we are not only shaping our own, but we will find it reflected in the characters of those about us. We need not look about to discover some wonderfully heroic deed to begin with. The safe foundation is built up of the little things. If we learn to be patient with the little annoyances that occur in our everyday lives, we will have no trouble in governing our tempers through the heavier trials. How many times we mothers have worked patiently for hours in making the home clean and tidy, setting an example of neatness and order for our children, only to allow some trivial annoyance to upset us and cause a small thunder-storm within, giving them an example of our uncontrolled passion and frightening the sunshine out of everything about us! And we have felt that all the good we had done for days past had been overshadowed by this moment of passion that had crept in through a weak spot in our character. Had we at that moment used as much earnestness in prayer for strength to remedy the wrong, we should have kept the sunshine and fortified ourselves against another attack of temper. Many a mother who has shown wonderful patience through physical suffering, has lost her mental balance because the family was late to dinner or because the children came in on her spotless floor with muddy feet.

When we can stand serene and calm through these petty annoyances, we will be able to bear the larger ones nobly, and we shall feel that we have started a firm foundation for the building of character. We will not only benefit ourselves, but we will be able to start our children aright. Do not consider yourself a crawling worm of the dust, but remember God made man in his own image and breathed into him the breath of life. Then find and make use of the true and beautiful. Surely God's influence in the world is stronger than that of evil. So let us hold to the good and lose selfishness, and each step forward will become easier.

“Refinement is more a spirit than an accomplishment. All the books of etiquette that have been written can not make a person refined. True refinement springs from a gentle, unselfish heart. Without a refined spirit a refined life is impossible.”

“The clouds have a silver lining,

And though he's hidden, still the sun is shining;
Courage! instead of tears and vain repining,
Just bide a wee and dinna fret.”

Normal Course.

THE two following brief articles are from the report of the Iowa State Sunday-school Convention of 1902 in the Sunday-School Helper. The training of teachers is a question to which we must give earnest attention in the near future. The need thereof has been felt for a long time. How shall we do it? The international people have their normal course and several of our workers have taken the course and received their certificates therefore. Shall we adopt a similar plan? Why not?

THE NORMAL CLASS.

Mrs. L. L. Whiting, of Rock Rapids, who has taught a class through the four years course, said in part: "Is it not necessary that we have trained, conscientious, consecrated teachers who will not only be anxious, but be capable of teaching the Bible, that the immortal soul may be saved for the Lord, without the after-time of fears and doubts, induced by a half-way knowledge of the word of God? To make the normal class 'go' there must be consecration to God and his work. To make the class enjoy the lesson the teacher must enjoy it. Never put your hand to the plough and turn back. Talk normal work to those about you until they are enthused. The class teacher need not be a normal graduate. Let him study ahead of the class as he teaches and it will not be long until he passes the examination. Give to the work time, strength, intellect, all the gifts God has given; work hard, hope much, pray more."

DEVIL'S SUNDAY-SCHOOL

was the first subject of the address by Willis Brown, of Chicago. He held the attention of the large audience and pleased them with his peculiar manner and forcible thought: "The cigarette is a worse enemy than the saloon. Ninety per cent of our boys in the reform schools were cigarette smokers. The habit is spreading to a large extent among the children of the public schools. There is no agency to-day so destructive to the moral and physical life as this insignificant, white robed plaything of death. The Rock Island railway, Swift Packing Company, Montgomery Ward & Company, and other large firms allow no cigarette smokers in their employ."

Doctor L. Bremer, late physician at Saint Vincent's Institute for the Insane at St. Louis, puts it thus: "Basing my assertion on the experience gained in private practice, and this public work, I will broadly state that the boy who smokes at seven will drink at fourteen, take to morphine at twenty-five, and wind up with cocaine and other narcotics at thirty." Girls smoke as well as boys. The only remedy is to awaken popular sentiment against it. This the anti-cigarette league is doing; three hundred thousand boys and girls have already signed the pledge.

Departed.

It is with a deep feeling of sorrow that we note the demise on December 12, 1903, of our esteemed and beloved Sr. May Gunsolley, wife of Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, our worthy first assistant superintendent. So much has been said of this sad occurrence that more would seem almost but to repeat the story. But our continued acquaintance with her from childhood and our association with Bro. Gunsolley in the work of the Sunday-school association after spending our college days with both of them as classmates and with Bro. Gunsolley as roommate, seems to make it fall with peculiar severity. And to look at it with the natural eye or to view it from our selfish standpoint her death looks untimely and hard to bear, and we feel as though God had dealt severely with us. But God's ways are wise, though we do not always see the wisdom therein. He is just and kind though we are prone to think at times he is severe. We will trust him and love him though the reasons for the conditions be hid from us and though the burdens are heavy to bear. We sympathize with Bro. Gunsolley and the children who are deprived of the wife and mother, and with Bro. and Sr. Fisher who have parted with their only daughter, and the brothers who have lost their only sister. May God comfort them, for he alone can comfort or fill the aching void. We sorrow and sympathize as best we can, but our sorrow and sympathy are feeble. None can fully appreciate the situation who have not themselves been placed in like position. Words can not express the feelings that are wrought by the realization of the facts. We are sure that the entire association as well as all others who knew the sister will extend to Bro. Gunsolley and the others of the bereaved ones their heartfelt sympathy and prayers for their comfort and strength. Also for the recovery of little Marjorie who has been so long afflicted with paralysis of the lower limbs.

"Breathe low, thou gentle winds,
Breathe soft and low.
The beautiful lies dead,
The joy of life is fled,
And my lone heart is wed
Henceforth to woe.

"Breathe low, thou gentle winds,
Breathe soft and low.
Affection's sweetest token
Is lost for e'er and broken;
The last kind word is spoken,
'Why didst thou die?'"

An Experience Meeting.

Dear Teachers: Did you ever have an "experience meeting" in your Sunday-school? If not, you might find it profitable to have one of the kind a Sunday-school in a New England city has once a month at the close of the school. Only the teachers and officers stay to this meeting, and it is a real experience meeting. It opens with a brief prayer by the superintendent or one of the teachers, and then the teachers and officers are free to "speak out in meetin'," and state their troubles, their joys, their hindrances—anything that pertains to their work as teachers in the school. The utmost liberty of speech is allowed. Questions are asked and answered. Grievances—of which, fortunately, there are few—are aired. Joyful as well as sorrowful experiences are related, and it is a kind of an "open confession" meeting, and some of it at least is "good for the soul."

One can readily see how a meeting of this kind might be made of real value and helpfulness to both teachers and officers. An exchange of thought and of actual experience is helpful to those engaged in the same kind of work and striving for the same end. The experience meeting to which I refer is supposed to last half an hour, but I am told that at the last meeting no one left the room for a full hour, so interested were those present in discussing certain things brought out in the meeting. I have also been told that not a particle of acrimony or of uncharitableness has ever been developed at any of these experience meetings. They are harmonious and helpful, as all such meetings should be. An experience meeting might be a good thing for you to have in your school, particularly if you do not have a teachers' meeting. It is always a good thing for the teachers and officers of a school to meet occasionally in an informal way and discuss questions having to do with the weal or woe of the school.—A Superintendent, in the New Century Teachers' Monthly.

Letter Department.

PORTLAND, Oregon, December 16, 1903.

President Joseph Smith: I am pleased to be able to give you some information regarding one of your old-time friends. You probably remember D. C. Miller who lived in, or near, Nauvoo from 1847 to 1858. Well, I have seen and visited with him. He found out that I was located here and that I was a representative of the Church over which his friend of youthful days presided, through some of the papers. He called to see me one day while I was out in the city "rounding up" some more Saints and friends to the cause. However, Roxanna was in, and, because of having been in Nauvoo a number of times, she was able to make his visit more interesting than I could have done, not having seen the city. He visited with her for about two hours, recounting his early experiences in a most interesting manner, telling of how well he knew you as a boy, and of how he was personally acquainted with so many of the leading men of the Church of that day and who subsequently took leading parts in the Utah contingency and in our own church. He also told that his father-in-law took the bodies of Joseph and Hyrum Smith from Carthage to Nauvoo just after the martyrdom, that polygamy belonged wholly to Brigham Young and his following and that the Church neither taught nor practiced it up to the time of your father's death, and that the Nauvoo temple, which he visited many times and finally saw burn, was never completed.

When he finished his visit with Mrs. Anderson he left his address with a request that I call on him. Accordingly I walked over to his very pleasant home at 317 Eugene Street a few days ago and had a delightful conversation with him. Mr. Miller is a man seventy-five years old, bright, intelligent, and of very strong memory. He belongs to the Presbyterian Church, but has nothing but good things to say of our church or of the work up to the gloomy days of 1844. He looks upon Mormons as apostates from the faith of the original church. He is cordial in demeanor and is all around an exceedingly interesting character. He was deeply interested in your history and in hearing of the condition of the work. I am sure he would be pleased to hear from you.

The work here in Portland is in an encouraging condition and we feel anxious to see it move on.

Hoping that this may be of interest to you and praying for the speedy advancement of truth, I am

Your brother in Christ,

Editors Herald: I left Kaitangata September 28, for the southernmost city in the world, Invercargill, with twelve thousand inhabitants. Rented a small cottage, at three shillings per week. Bro. R. W. Hall, whom I ordained an elder September 27, joined me a week later.

We soon had four hundred tracts distributed. Would talk with those who would talk with us; to those who would not, we gave heed to the admonition of Apostle Paul, "From such turn away." To be sure we found that class far more numerous than the other. One kind old lady and her married daughter administered to our necessities in the way of some eatables and milk, which was O. K. for Bro. R. W., as he had his upper teeth extracted and could not eat hard food, and was somewhat unwell for a day and night; during which time we rented a hall in one of the suburbs, three miles distant. I cleaned the hall, filled the lamps, and went from house to house and invited the people to come. I then walked over to fill the appointment, and how many do you think greeted me? We paid the rent ourselves.

We spoke on the street one Sunday evening in the heart of the city, the result of which will be known on judgment day. That same evening and night, four young men were drowned while amusing themselves in a boat with dogs out in the bay. Three were of the same family. The fifth one being an expert, barely saved his life by swimming to the beach, where he lay unconscious till ten or eleven o'clock in the evening. The boat sank. Sad indeed for the parents of those young men.

While in the city we succeeded in finding Bro. and Sr. Cale, whom Bro. Rennie baptized nine years ago. Being a priest he wrote to Bro. Dixon to come and confirm them. They have never been confirmed, but trust they will be in the near future, as we labored with them some to this end. Bro. Rennie did a good work, as they are good people.

We labored hard and faithfully in tract work in that city for one month, and lived the same way. If Bro. and Sr. Cale are confirmed, we will feel amply paid for all of our time, work, and expense while in that city.

Believing our work to be done there for the present, we packed and moved to the town of Mataura, where we put a tract in nearly every house, and spoke several times on the street. The little Christian preacher came out two evenings to oppose us; but gained nothing for himself or his church. The truth can not be put down; it may be smothered over for a season, or covered up, but it is sure to burn out in time.

Deeming it wisdom not to continue longer there, I concluded to work my way on to Auckland, calling at Christ Church on the way, Bro. R. W. to go to Kaitangata to look after the interest of the work there, and to return to Invercargill to confirm Bro. and Sr. Cale, and have his new teeth put in. It is quite possible his time can be spent as profitably in and around Kaitangata as elsewhere, and it is very necessary to look after the work where it is started.

D. E. TUCKER.

ATTLEBORO, Massachusetts, December 14.

Dear Herald: There are some in the field who are interested in the work in this place and will be glad to know of our advancement. We have finished our new chapel and every one pronounces it good, and we are proud of it in the sense that it has been accomplished by the aid of our heavenly Father.

One remarkable thing about our building is that the building committee desired that God would take charge of its completion and we be only instruments in his hands, and we can testify that he has taken us at our desires and not one of us claims any honor, only that we have been instruments in his hands, and we are satisfied with the outcome of divine guidance and cheerfully recommend it to all Saints. Another thing is that the committee was not experienced in building, but we did our best and prayed to our kind Father who said through his Son, "Ask and you shall receive." The consequence was that after we gave the plans to the contractor we had to make only a small change, and there were lots of suggested changes which we gave due consideration. The chapel is twenty-eight by forty feet, and I think it perfect. We intend sometime to fix up the basement for Sunday-school. If we were to build it over again we could not improve on it.

The Saints, as a rule, are poor in Attleboro, but they are willing to work and things have come to test our faith. Things have looked very black at times, but He has not forsaken and has raised up friends both in and out of the Church. One brother sent us fifty dollars towards our furnace, and an outsider gave us five dollars. Others have brought what we least expected, and some have collected where we did not have courage, and have passed the envelopes around the shops and asked others to give.

We have not paid all our bills and have a mortgage of twelve hundred dollars on the chapel; but we are sure that as our kind Father has worked for us, he will help us in the future if we keep faithful. We do not fear the debt; all we fear is that we may become careless and indifferent. Who can truthfully say this is not the work of God? This ought to be a living testimony to us in Attleboro and encourage us to be more faithful, so we may receive more blessings at his hands and not be like forgetful Israel, but to work for the things needful and implore our heavenly Father to aid and assist us and we will be sure of success.

Our worthy district president, Bishop Bullard, deserves credit for his assistance to us. He is quite a man when you look him over and makes a good president. I think he can collect money as well as any one and so he makes a good bishop. They say he is a shoemaker, and I know he can paint as he did some for us in our new chapel. And we know he can upholster, as he covered our doors in the chapel; and he is a good peddler, too. I do not know whether he can do any tinkering, as we do our own in Attleboro, and the other branches will have to try him on that trade and let us know.

We had our opening of our new chapel on Sunday, December 6, Bro. Bullard in charge. He and Bro. Robley were the speakers to four congregations. Bro. George Gates organized our Sunday-school as a district school. Bro. George Smith held forth during the week for four nights and Sunday, the 13th, to fair audiences. He takes well with Saints in Attleboro and our prayer is that God will bless him physically and spiritually, and we hope to see him do lots of good in this vicinity.

We are glad of the news of the work being onward and upward and we hope to be in line. We need the prayers of the Saints. I remain your ever well-wishing brother,

JOHN SIDDALL.

DEEPCREEK, Washington, December 11.

Editors Herald: Since I last wrote I have visited the following places: Seattle, Tacoma, Castlerock, Sara, Roslyn, Ellensburg, and Spokane, and have been very busy all the time. I have been treated very kindly by the Saints and friends, and have been blessed in my efforts to present the word, for which I feel to thank God. I have baptized but four this conference year so far; but I believe I have made many warm friends to the cause and I believe some will come into the kingdom soon if properly instructed.

The Saints at Tacoma are working hard for a church building and they are so few in number they need all the assistance they can get. Tacoma is a nice city and lots of good can be accomplished there if we can only get a foothold. I was pleased with Sr. Van Eaton's letter in the HERALD a few weeks ago. That's right, sister, go on and God will bless you.

I next visited Roslyn and held forth for about a week; found some good Saints and nearly all were willing to work. Bro. H. P. Hanson is president of the branch, and he is a worthy man and worker for the cause.

I came thence to Ellensburg and held meetings at my brother's schoolhouse over two Sundays, having good interest and fine liberty the last Sunday while there. Two outsiders assisted in our music, a lady by the name of Wilson at the organ and a Mr. Fred Carr who played the horn, which gave us fine music and singing.

On the night before, I was invited out to Mr. Sanford Hayes' to a family gathering. The young folks enjoyed themselves the fore part of the night, and about eleven o'clock they wanted the writer to preach for them while a couple of ladies made ready the refreshments, to which I responded. There was about fifty-five present, and I occupied about three quarters of an hour with good liberty, and all seemed to enjoy it. I should have continued in that vicinity longer if the roads had not been almost impassable.

I arrived at Spokane December 5, and was permitted to preach twice on Sunday in Bro. Bell's house, as the Saints had to sell their church on account of not owning the lot; but they have secured a lot and are working for a building. Help will be thankfully received and will be money well spent. The Saints seem to be in much better condition, which makes the missionary thank God. There is room for improvement, however, everywhere.

I met Elder D. E. Powell at Spokane and was very glad to meet him once more. He is a faithful worker and a good partner. We came to this place yesterday and will commence meetings to-night at what is known as the Deepcreek Branch. I do not know how long we will remain, but we will as long as wisdom directs.

I received a letter from Bro. Van Eaton, at Tacoma, stating that Elder J. W. Roberts had gone home sick. He did not state the trouble. I hope he is not serious. Bro. Roberts is a good man and will long be remembered by Saints and friends in the state of Washington. We are sorry to lose any of our missionary force as there is so much to do here. We can not fill all the calls for preaching. I hope that every child of God will thrust in his sickle and work with his might.

Your servant,

N. V. SHELDON.

TRYON, Nebraska, December 11, 1903.

Editors Herald: How I have missed the weekly visits of the HERALD for two months! I will order it again to-day, as I have decided to give up my eastern trip for the winter.

All is well with the Saints in the sand-hills. We have no preaching at present, but our Sunday-school is getting along nicely. The Saints have been liberal and we have not wanted for funds. We have had plenty and send a Christmas offering of over six dollars, I think, which does fairly well for so few. The Saints here are no hindrance to the Church; they are industrious and honest, and are as happy in their rural homes as the king in his palace. The houses are mostly sod, many from choice; but the weary traveler can find a night's lodging in any of them without money and without price, which can not be said for all parts of free America.

This county (McPherson) is pretty well represented by Latter Day Saints. The county superintendent, the deputy postmaster at Tryon, and the deputy county clerk are members.

This is a good stock country and is well improved as such. People live as near together as they can.

We will have two Christmas trees, one at Tryon and one at our schoolhouse in South Tryon. One old gentleman says the Latter Day Saints are going to take this country and he seems to find no fault with them.

I ask all you who know the value of prayer to pray for us here that we may ever be humble and teachable.

MINERVA JOHNSON.

BLOOMINGTON, Idaho, December 10, 1903.

Editors Herald: Since I last wrote you, I have visited various places in the Rocky Mountain Mission, including Rich and Cache Counties in Utah, Oneida, Cassia, Lincoln, Blaine, Bingham, Bannock, and Bear Lake Counties in Idaho, and performing such labor as circumstances and conditions permitted or demanded. I did some street preaching with others of the force; also attended the Idaho District conference and Sunday-school convention held at Hagerman. From there I went to Silvercreek Valley, in Blaine County, Idaho, where I found one member, Sr. Larsen.

I also called on a Mr. Smith, an apostle of the church calling themselves the "Followers of Christ," with whom I tarried over night, and was treated very kindly and learned something concerning their doctrine. They keep no records, and are not incorporated in any of the States, and really have no organization. They claim to have apostles, seventies, elders, etc., yet do not seem to understand the duties of these various officers. For instance, none but elders can lay on hands for healing the sick. Their apostles can not unless they have been ordained elders. They claim sixty members in Silvercreek Valley; but because of no church records being kept, they do not know the total number of followers. They have members in Idaho, Oregon, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Indiana.

One peculiar feature of their doctrine is, they believe that Mark 16: 18 is a positive command to all true believers in the gospel of Christ. That is, "they shall take up serpents" is construed to mean that they must take up serpents, and it is as much a duty as to partake of the sacrament. I was told that two of the followers found a rattlesnake (last summer) and tried to obey the command of God. One of them picked up the snake but dropped it before it had time to bite him. The other was not so fortunate, for he was bitten on the thumb or finger and nearly lost his life. They greet each other with a holy kiss, men and women kissing each other promiscuously. They also believe in feet-washing for both men and women, washing each other's feet promiscuously, and giving as a reason that Paul commanded or sanctioned it in 1 Timothy 5: 10, where we read of widows having washed the feet of the Saints.

They are a kind-hearted people, noted for hospitality, and I believe they are desirous of living by every word of God; but the man who attempts to convert them will have to be well acquainted with the Bible, for the Followers are great Bible readers, and quote more scripture than any sect I have ever encountered. If any brother or sister can furnish me a history of the Followers, written by those who have a knowledge of the facts connected with their origin as a religious body, they would confer a favor that would be appreciated.

The Saints I visited in Silvercreek, Little Wood River, and Lost River valleys, are trying to live their religion, and may God assist them in their isolated condition. At Blackfoot is the Grove City Branch, presided over by Elder Hyrum Grimmitt. They are doing as well as their scattered condition and lack of a house to worship in will allow. They have a Sunday-school which materially assists to keep up the spiritual condition of the Saints, both old and young. At Soda Springs there are a few Saints, most of them living in the country. Some of them I have never seen, but hope to visit in the near future. Old Bro. James Bowman, of Soda Springs, who used to preside over the old Soda Springs Branch, is dead. I have not the items of his death at hand, but will send them soon. Of late I have labored at Alton and vicinity. Also visited Dingle and Montpelier. Came here on the 8th inst. Preached here last night in the Mormon church to a fair-sized audience of apparently interested people. I expect to occupy to-night and then go to Dingle. Can only get a house to preach in for one or two nights each week, in Mormon communities, for they usually occupy them every night but Friday night, and quite often the houses are used then for dances. So you will perceive that if our labors are judged by the number of sermons some of us will be counted as unprofitable servants.

In gospel bonds,

A. J. LAYLAND.

THURMAN, Iowa, December 20.

Editors Herald: Work in this district is moving onward. Many good Saints are striving to do all the good they can in all the ways they can, laboring for the reward of the righteous and in hope of eternal life. For the past year I have been laboring in McPaul and vicinity, and have just closed a series of meetings there. Bro. D. R. Chambers kindly rendered valuable assistance, delivering nineteen most able sermons while I assisted. Bro. Chambers being somewhat indisposed for a few days, Bro. M. M. Turpin came to our assistance and preached four evenings at McPaul and two at Thurman church, which we appreciated very much. The song service was excellent. The young members of the Church and friends of our people assisted along those lines in a manner most commendable.

As a result of our labors Bro. Chambers had the pleasure of leading into the waters of baptism four precious souls, one a member of the Disciple or Christian Church and two of Baptist persuasion, while one was from the honorable men of the earth.

On December 14 Bro. Chambers bade us adieu and went to spend Christmas with loved ones at home. He will be greatly missed from this locality, having endeared himself to all by his godly walk and fearless integrity. It is the wish of many that he and others who have been laboring with us the past year may be returned to us again.

Your brother in Christ,

J. C. MOORE.

ZENITH, Illinois, December 21, 1903.

Editors Herald: Bro. F. M. Slover and I have been holding meeting at the Saints' church, Bro. Slover baptizing four before I began to assist him. After I joined him we preached some two weeks and organized a Sunday-school. The Baptists have been worshipping at our church there and through our preaching they got stirred up and have concluded to send for one of their able preachers, Elder Throgmartain, of Duquoin, Illinois, and have him explain baptism.

I wish to say to the several Sunday-schools in the Southern Illinois District that I trust you will do all you can to make your schools a success. The winter months are now on, so of course we will have cold and mud; but we are not very brave if we allow such to keep us at home. Remember we now have a district organization and we want every Sunday-school represented at the district convention in February. Now, Saints, do not forget this.

C. J. SPURLOCK.

BERKLEY, Virginia, December 13, 1903.

Editors Herald: I have been home but a short time and have been too busy to write. I feel thankful to God for being so kind to us. My husband is captain of a three-mast schooner which generally carries lumber from this place.

On the 22d of last August I took my two youngest children and went aboard, expecting to return in thirty days or six weeks; but last fall was very stormy and we were delayed. The hand of God was over us for we were never caught out in a storm. When my husband would see a storm coming he would make haste to some good harbor. We were nine days in College Point, our first place to anchor. Some vessels were lost in almost every case.

We first took lumber to Neponsit, a suburb of Boston. We met the Boston Saints, and I was so impressed with their way of getting their Christmas offering. Each Sunday-school class has a bank, and every Sunday it is passed around. Then before Christmas they have a bank-breaking day, and, said a sister, "We get our offering easy. We never miss the money, for we have a whole year to collect it." From Neponsit we went to Stonington, Maine, for a cargo of granite. Stonington is blessed with a church, but no minister. I saw what I shall always thank God for. My husband, having lived there up to eight years ago, was acquainted extensively and took me to see Bro. Chacy Deman. I asked if he had faith to be healed. He said, "Yes, but I do not want to get well; I know there is a crown of righteousness for me, and to die is gain." His face shone like that of an angel. It seemed sad, yet good, to see a Saint so willing to die.

We took the granite to New York, which was my home for eight years before I was married last spring. There we attended the funeral of Bro. Elliott, who had been suddenly killed. God knows best when to call his saints. That our lives were spared does not mean we were any better than our dear brother. I knew him as an excellent Saint.

We arrived home on my daughter's eighteenth birthday, November 18. She, my husband, and myself are the only Saints in the family. I have seven stepchildren; the oldest a man of twenty-four, a father of two small children. His mother died the day after he was born, and he was raised by his grandmother, and knows little of the gospel. The second child is a boy of twenty, and while he is not inclined to be religious, he has been a good son to me. He has never so much as frowned at me.

I try to get good advice from the Mothers' Home Column, for I feel the need of it. I am weak, and while I want to do what is right, I feel temptations are strong and one who tries to keep in that straight and narrow way has to be so careful. We are isolated and know of no Saints near us. Bro. U. W. Greene said something about sending us a minister, and we hope he will. Ever praying for God's work, I am

Your sister in the faith,
MRS. GEORGIA A. KNOWLTON.

GRINNELL, Iowa, December 20, 1903.

Dear Herald: You have been an ever welcome visitor at our home for many years, and your coming is always anxiously awaited as you bring encouraging words from those who have gone forth to proclaim the gospel. The sermons are instructive, and we often find therein thoughts that bring to our hearts much comfort and cheer.

Soon we are to enter a season of festivities, a time that should be sacred to every one, a time that is long looked for by many to join loved ones once more. What a happy time it should be to old and young! But there is another kind of a festivity I wish to tell you about and that is the real feast of the gospel. About two weeks ago Bro. J. F. Mintun came to hold a three-week series of meetings which we enjoyed so much, for in them was given such gentle instructions and the gospel plan was made so plain. Time went all too soon, but we must not be selfish. Others, no doubt, needed strengthening as well as we.

From here Bro. Mintun went to Oskaloosa for a series of meetings. And as we reflect upon the instruction given, we can only say, Come again, Bro. Mintun, when convenient.

Perhaps the HERALD has thought the Grinnell Branch not alive in the work. Not so. We are striving in weakness to do all we can, though at times it seems little. To impress upon you that we are working slowly but surely, I will give you our regular Sunday services as they have stood for several years: Prayer service at ten; Sunday-school at half past ten in the morning; Religio at six and preaching at seven in the evening. Now that we have obtained use of the Adventist church we feel encouraged and will press on with renewed energy.

As Bro. Roth's health has not permitted him to be out in the field this winter, he is preaching for us evenings, which greatly assists the local force. Some seem interested and express a desire to learn.

Now then, ye missionaries, when traveling this way, give us a call.

And, kind HERALD, we wish you many years of prosperity that you may do much good, also a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Your sister,
MRS. S. A. RUSSELL.

DES MOINES, Iowa, December 26, 1903.

Dear Herald: Allow us to tell you of the goings and comings here in our city and to wish your many thousand readers a joyful New Year, and that the new year of 1904 may be made up of three hundred and sixty-five [six.—ED.] happy days.

Bro. H. A. McCoy spent a few days in the city last week and while here conducted the funeral service of Grandfather Parmenter, the aged father of Bro. J. N. Parmenter. The interment took place at Adelphi, on the 17th inst., the funeral service being conducted there. Bro. McCoy went from here to Madison County and with Bro. F. A. Smith organized the St. Charles Branch on the 20th inst., with nineteen members. He is spending his Christmas and laboring in that vicinity.

Bro. F. A. Smith spent four days in the city this week, speaking at the church on the evenings of the 22d and 23d. On Thursday the funeral service of Mrs. Sophia Johnson, the aged mother of Bro. George W. Johnson, was held at the church, Bro. Smith conducting the service. He went from here home to spend Christmas with loved ones.

Bro. J. F. Mintun came in Thursday from Oskaloosa and spent Christmas in the city, going to Runnels on Saturday and will hold a series of meetings there. Bro. M. H. Cook is also at home from his mission work in Eastern Iowa to spend the holidays.

At a business-meeting of the branch held the 21st inst. steps were taken towards the erection of a new church in the city. A soliciting committee of five, of which the branch president is chairman, was appointed and they will begin their work at once. We believe that the time has come when the Saints in Des Moines will make a united and successful effort to erect a house of worship suitable to the increasing demands of the Church here.

The Christmas entertainment given by the Sunday-school was held on Christmas Eve. The church was filled beyond seating capacity. The younger members of the school furnished the entertainment for the evening, and this was followed by the distribution of presents. The evening was fully enjoyed by all and many were made happy by the receiving of gifts, and many were very happy in giving in a way that made others happy.

The year 1903 is past. Let the good that has been done be cherished and remembered, and the evil and the mistakes be forgotten, with only a hope that all things may improve. The year 1904 is before us. Let us go forward, and "forgetting those things which are behind, and looking forward unto the things which are before, press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

A. A. REAMS.

BURNHAM, Missouri, December 12, 1903.

Dear Herald: I am surprised at Canada. Quite frequently we see letters "from over the border" touching upon the subject of liberty, independence, freedom, the Stars and Stripes, etc., but last of all we read from the pen of Bro. F. R. Tubb the sad calamity of his hair turning white in one night's time and his neighbors turning gray as a badger, all because of reading a little clause in the HERALD, stating that the Holy Ghost is not a personage. While I do not believe in using hair dyes and "restoratives," certainly Canada would be a splendid place for salesmen of these articles to establish themselves. But I admire Canada for her courageous spirit in speaking out when things do not go to suit.

If I understand Bro. Tubb's position with reference to this Holy Ghost problem, he recognizes the Holy Ghost as a personage, and from this Holy Ghost personage emanates the Spirit which can be poured out upon the people and materialize in the different forms of the dove, fire, men, etc., as already cited by both of us. (Joel 2: 28; Acts 2: 2; Matthew 3: 16.) It is an old adage that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." Now, Bro. Tubb, in order to prevent your hair from falling out, do not take God's word in a literal sense unless it is intended that way. For instance, the "lake of fire" is referred to as a place of punishment. Of course this is not literal fire, for Christ refers to the same place as a place of "outer darkness." Therefore, when we come to the Holy Ghost problem, shall we conclude it is a personage simply because the personal pronouns "he" and "himself" are used? Brother, didn't you feel quite strange when you read the following: "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God."—Romans 8: 16. The pronoun itself is not personal, yet it refers to the Holy Ghost, the Comforter. It performs the same office work as outlined in John 16: 7-13; 15: 26; 14: 15-17, 26. Thus I have shown that the Spirit, Holy Ghost, the Comforter, etc., are the one and selfsame thing.

The brother declares the personal spirit has a name, Ruach Jehovah, meaning Spirit of God or Holy Ghost. This does not favor the brother's position. The Hebrew ruach means spirit, and can be poured out, shed forth. The other word, Jehovah, refers to the personality of God, showing clearly that the Spirit emanates from God, as an influence of power.

I think that in my article in the HERALD for September 2, any ordinary mind can readily see my position. Bro. Tubb reminds me of the old man who wanted to get married. But it was thought that he couldn't see well enough, and so his sight was tested in this way: One of the neighbors had a large barn seventy feet square about a quarter of a mile away. On top of this barn was placed a woman. They asked the old gentleman if he could see the barn. He replied, "No, but I can see that woman very distinctly." It was the woman he was looking for. So it may be with Bro. Tubb with reference to the Holy Spirit, as he says, "What has become of the third person named in Matthew 28: 19."

Now to show conclusively that this Holy Ghost is not a person, please read the following: "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you."—John 14: 16-18.

From this teaching we gather the following thoughts: God and Christ were united in the one purpose of sending the Comforter, harmonizing with the thought of its being the influence of power emanating from God and Christ. Yet this Comforter is referred to as the "Spirit of truth." Not much personage in this? But Bro. Tubb may say this refers to the divine afflatus and not to the personal spirit which he has fixed up. But this dodge can not be taken, for Christ uses the pronoun "he" and "him" as in the seventeenth verse: "But ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." Christ did not mean that this spirit was a personage, but its office work would be similar to that of directing, "overseeing," etc. Hence it is referred to in a personal manner. Now it may be that Bro. Tubb has the real personal Spirit within. If so, we may soon expect him to be completely bald. Down here in Southern Missouri it is nothing unusual to hear men praying for the Holy Ghost to come right down through the roof, knocking off the shingles if necessary. So if the Holy Ghost is a personal entity, we need not be surprised if Bro. Tubb loses all his hair.

Please read the seventeenth chapter of John. Not a word is said about the Holy Ghost. Why not, if it is a personage? This entire chapter makes my position stronger. It shows that because of this complete union between God and Christ, this influence, the Holy Ghost, emanates from them to the Saints. The eleventh verse reads: "Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are." The twenty-first verse: "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." In this prayer Christ only requested to be restored to the glory he once had with the Father. Yes, God made all things through his Son. (Colossians 1: 16.)

When we come down to the record of man's creation, God said: "Let us make man in our image." He was speaking to Christ undoubtedly. God and Christ were thoroughly united in this work. Hence the Holy Spirit was present, or the power and influence emanating from them. "And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters."—Genesis 1: 2.

The Lord also speaks through the Palmyra Seer, showing that the Holy Spirit is present in the works of creation, as the influence of power: "Wherefore I now send upon you another Comforter, even upon you, my friends, that it [not a personal pronoun] may abide in your hearts, even the Holy Spirit of promise, which other Comforter is the same that I promised unto my disciples, as is recorded in the testimony of John." I have already shown that John did not understand the Holy Ghost to be a personage, yet he uses the personal pronouns. "This Comforter is the promise which I give unto you of eternal life, even the glory of the celestial kingdom. . . . And the light which now shineth, which giveth you light, is through him who enlighteneth your eyes, which is the same light that quickeneth your understandings; which light proceedeth forth from the presence of God, to fill the immensity of space. The light which is in all things; which giveth life to all things; which is the law by which all things are governed; even the power of God who sitteth upon his throne, who is in the bosom of eternity, who is in the midst of all things."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 1-3.

From the foregoing we gather the following thoughts:

1. A description of the Holy Ghost is given and it can come upon them and abide in their hearts.
2. The Comforter is the promise of eternal life, representing the glory of God.
3. This light and power comes to the disciples through Jesus Christ.
4. It comes from the presence of God.
5. This Spirit can fill the immensity of space.

Thus my position is sustained. What scripture has the brother adduced to prove the Holy Spirit to be a personage? Only one, Matthew 28: 19. Simply because a thing is named is no evidence that it is a personality. Ethan Allen demanded the surrender of the British troops "in the name of the great Jehovah and the Continental Congress." "In the name of" means by the authority.

I also would like to inquire, Where in my article have I declared the Spirit to be God and yet not God, a gift and yet not a gift, as the brother declared? And as far as the Campbellites being divided upon this subject it is certainly true, and can be proven, but I will not essay the task in this letter.

Now, in conclusion let me say that I am a little dubious about loaning my HERALD with Bro. Tubb's exegesis of the Holy Ghost, for fear they will bring it back and say, "Well, Bro. Baker, I thought you people were different from the entire religious world, but I see you are like all the rest of the sectarians."

I am grateful for the brother's criticism, admire his frankness, and certainly hope that truth, and truth only, may be evolved. With kind regards to the beloved of God, I remain,

Yours truly,

A. M. BAKER.

ALDRIDGE, Montana.

Dear Herald: This is Christmas morning and the children are happy because of the good things Santa Claus has brought them. I am glad for the children. We parents would do well to teach our children that true happiness depends largely on our ability to make others happy and that the donor must be prompted by love. The Lord said it is more blessed to give than to receive and that God loves a cheerful giver. We are warned against covetousness. Man is more or less selfish. Some give to be seen of men; some to receive honor and praise in this life, others to receive in return. This class, the selfish man, is on dangerous ground, and except he repents he will surely fall. A true child of God gives for the good it will do the recipient.

We are blessed with all we have of the Lord and he gives us opportunity to manifest our love towards each other by imparting of our earthly means for the good and needs of others. We should use wisdom in selecting our gifts. They should be useful as well as ornamental. We must watch lest we rob Peter to give Paul, that is, we should meet our obligations to the Lord first in paying our tithes and offerings.

The more I study God's word the more I am confirmed that God's way is the only safe way. I love my wife and children. I labor late and early when it is required to provide for them, and I rejoice in so doing. It is not a burden, but a pleasure to do so. Why? Because God has implanted within me what we call love. I say I love this latter-day work; I go to church when some big preacher comes around, and praise him. "O, it was an excellent sermon;" but some thoughtful brother approaches me and says, "Brother B. ought to get a little to help take him on his mission. What can you give?" And I say, "I don't know; I am not able to give anything, but put me down for twenty-five cents," and that not with a will, but for shame because I have praised the preacher. Do I love the work when I act in that way? If it took my all to prove my love for my wife and children, will it not take my all to prove my love to God?

Brothers and sisters, let us be consistent and prove to the world and to each other by our good works in paying tithes and offerings, so that the poor will be supplied and the elders sent to all the world, knowing that the Bishop will have sufficient means to support their families. It is hard to leave loved ones and go among strangers, but when they know their families will be taken care of by the Bishop, a great burden is taken off their minds. This is one way we can bear one another's burdens.

The Lord prayed that we should be one. Now, when I got married my wife and I became one. My interest was hers; I labored for her and she labored for me. We always tried to please each other. When we were blessed with children, we were all one—the interest of one was the interest of all. Should not the children of His kingdom be one in the same sense—all working together for the salvation of man and the perfecting of ourselves? Our obedience to the first principles is a stepping-stone for greater work. When I was married our work commenced; so also with those who come into the kingdom. Their work is to overcome evil with good, submit their whole lives to the law of God, and cleanse ourselves from all unrighteousness. And as we are taught that God is love, love must be the motive in all our undertakings and our burden will become light, our labors a pleasure, and our reward sure.

Yours in bonds,
E. E. WILLIAMS.

Editors Herald: During the past year Bro. I. N. Roberts has been with us a few times and has delivered some excellent sermons and good advice, intended to better our condition spiritually. He has endeared himself to many—and we hope for his return.

We are shut in to-day by rain, and heavy thunder rolls overhead, which bespeaks the great power of the God in whom we place our trust.

As opportunity offers I am trying to build up the kingdom. Sometimes I get almost discouraged, but I do not give up and I ask the Saints to pray for me that I may yet go forward in discharge of my duty; for it is the desire of my heart to become an instrument for good in the hands of God.

A few Sundays ago, while holding prayer-meeting in a private house, there were some present not of the Church. After meeting one lady came to me and wanted me to hold a meeting at her house, and so I announced meeting to be held at her house. A good crowd gathered and God verified his promises to us by sending his Spirit upon us, and the result was that some took part for the first time, and the Spirit spoke through one sister that fasting and prayer should be had for those asking the Saints to pray for them. The Spirit was manifest in a way which melted all to tears and all seemed to take courage. So the next Sunday I appointed a meeting in a schoolhouse near by and a day of fasting and prayer. A bad day kept many from coming but a number were there and some not of the Church took part; so God does not leave us without encouragement when we put forth an effort.

Let us turn a new leaf as the old year rolls by, that we may be better prepared to live nearer the pattern laid down by Him who suffered and died upon the cross for the love he had for the human family.

Your brother in Christ,

Editors Herald: A gold coin lost in the byways and trampled upon by the multitude does not lose its value though it may be worn considerable. Just so with a Latter Day Saint. The promise they receive from God is everlasting and the blessing always to be remembered.

My wife still believes in the doctrine of the Holiness Church and is against the latter-day work. She says we do not live up to the Bible. I wonder if they do? I think that Church is under a hypnotic influence. They claim to be the true church, but they have twisted the scriptures unmercifully to bring it to suit their man-made church. Christ taught his disciples to preach baptism for the remission of sins. They say a person has to be saved before he is baptized, as baptism is not a saving ordinance. "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us."—1 Peter 3: 21. Again, Ananias commanded Paul to be baptized to wash away his sins.

If the Bible is right concerning this then their doctrine is wrong. I think we ought to follow the teachings of Christ rather than man, and I hope my wife will soon see the truth and obey it. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints in her behalf, and I hope the day will come when all will say, "Blessed is the Lord who has sent his angel with the everlasting gospel to be preached unto all the world for a witness."

Editors Herald: In HERALD of October 7, 1903, a sister writes from Winterset, Iowa, over the signature of "Sister F." Please send me her name so I can look her up. She perhaps does not know there are Saints all around Winterset and a branch at St. Charles.

C. J. PETERS.

TORONTO, Ontario, December 23, 1903.

Editors Herald: I am much pleased with the care taken to present my recent astronomical article in your columns, viz., "Saturn and his rings."

Considering the nature of the subject there are remarkably few typographical errors or inaccuracies, and these in the most difficult portion, namely the "Table of the Elements of Saturn's Satellites," where I expected typographical errors, there are none at all! This speaks well indeed.

However, the one or two which occur are of a character that, to prevent erroneous conclusions upon your many readers' minds, had better be corrected while yet the subject of the essay dwells freshly upon their memories.

In the first place, you have it in one portion that Jupiter's distance from the sun is just four hundred and nineteen millions of miles, and in a later portion, four hundred and seventy-nine millions. The latter is correct, the distance being between four hundred and seventy-nine and four hundred and eighty millions of miles.

Regarding the planet Neptune's distance, also, an error has crept in; as in one place you have it as no less than two "trillion seven hundred and sixty-nine billions of miles." This should be two billion seven hundred and sixty-nine millions of miles.

Of course, my English and Canadian readers will understand that between the American nomenclature and ours (meaning the English) there is a difference in the enumerative tables when we get beyond the million mark. Thus we should read the following figures: 2,769,000,000 miles, as two thousand seven hundred and sixty-nine millions of miles, just as it was written in my manuscript, but I have since learned that the American enumeration speaks of a "thousand millions" as "one billion" while ours does not reach the billion mark till we have got to a million millions. Thus we should write two billions seven hundred and sixty-nine millions of miles in the following figures: 2,769,000,000,000.

In making this allowance and explanation, your figures are correct; but I do not, of course, pretend that science asserts the absolute accuracy of such indescribable, nay, unthinkable, distances; for instance, Proctor calls it two billion, seven hundred and sixty-nine million miles, while Professor L. Newcomb, whom I have followed in certain other parts of my essay, considers it two billion, seven hundred and seventy millions of miles—a very small discrepancy, indeed, when such unfathomable spaces are under enumeration.

You have also misprinted "Huggens" for "Huygens," on page 1180. This correction is important, as there is a modern professor of astronomy by the name of Sir William Huggins, the existing president of the Royal Astronomical Society, London, England.

You have also spelled "Olgol," instead of "Algol." This I think, concludes the corrections; but I will add that of Saturn's satellites, the faintest, "Hyperion" (the next outside of Titan), was discovered by Bond, of Cambridge, Massachusetts; and two days later, by Lassell, of Liverpool, England. This was in 1848.

Thanks for your kind, courteous attention and promptitude.

F. R. TUBB.

BUNGAY, Illinois, December 26, 1903.

Editors Herald: I am still trying to advance the angel's message among my fellow men and I desire to continue faithful and be permitted to enter into rest with the pure and good of all ages. While the voice of the Spirit through John upon Patmos in the following words: "Write, blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth," are very comforting, indeed, yet I am further admonished that those who entered into that grand condition and made their robes white in the blood of the Lamb are they who came out of great tribulation.

It seems the people of God in all ages have had their trials and I suppose the words, "We must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God," are as true now as they were when written. With all of this before us we can comprehend more fully the words seen in Doctrine and Covenants, 42: 12: "And it shall come to pass that those that die in me shall not taste of death, for it shall be sweet unto them; and they that die not in me, woe unto them, for their death is bitter." Physical death to the true Saint is a happy change of conditions, and for that reason Paul says, "I have a desire to depart and to be with Christ which is far better;" yet for the church it was more needful for him to remain at home in the body.

In all of my work during the past year the most encouraging features have been the power and influence of the Holy Spirit working in the inner man to a much greater degree than before. It came as a mighty witness in answer to prayer, and my cup of joy has been full.

In August I began a four-day debate in the town of Bellair, with W. G. Roberts, a Campbellite, on general Church questions with a written agreement that the debate was to continue four days, and Mr. Roberts had it so published in their Church papers for weeks beforehand. Two days was to have been devoted to each question, our Church to come first. And after I affirmed our Church to be in harmony with the New Testament in organization, doctrine, and practice, for two days, according to our agreement, Mr. Roberts left the fight, concluding that a good run was better than a bad stand. The people were greatly interested and insisted that he stay. All could see that he was afraid to have Campbellism tested by the New Testament. He left us strong in the faith and with a firm conviction that our cause would stand the test against the foe.

The sermons and letters in our Church papers have been very comforting and instructive and I do not see how Saints can afford to be without them. None can be fully alive to the interests of the Church who live without these periodicals. I have been a reader of the HERALD ever since I came into the Church and I have taken the Ensign since nearly its first publication. I have been astonished to see some of our people pay so little attention to these papers, even when they have a good opportunity to borrow them. Through this means we can keep in touch with the progress of the work in all parts of the world. And as the space in the HERALD is so precious I am admonished not to occupy too much, but to give way to abler writers. I close with a prayer for Zion and the success of her children in every land.

Yours in gospel bonds,

F. M. SLOVER.

CHICAGO, Illinois, January 1, 1904.

Editors Herald: "The saddest city in the world to-day in Chicago."

It was our fortune, or misfortune, to be a witness of the terrible work of the tornado in the city of St. Louis several years ago. But the horror that paralyzes this city and makes the New Year's greeting almost a mockery, does not possess the relieving feature that attended the St. Louis disaster—a wholesale tragedy which no human foresight or care could have sensibly mitigated. Element and agency of powers beyond man's control swept without warning hundreds of lives and millions of property on to ruin and to death. But the awful tale and fact of the Iroquois Theater horror is rendered more unspeakably horrible and shorn of consolation by the fact that it might and could and should have been so easily prevented. But human greed for money leaves men, and theater managers especially in this case, without thought or care for the possibilities of woe that have fallen upon a thousand homes to-day. The house was jammed, aisles filled in violation of law, exit doors locked because of a trifling cost of watchmen to guard them, and the stage fire-proof curtain, known to be not in good working order,—which alone, if remedied, would have saved nearly, if not all, the lives so criminally sacrificed. A stage fire on Monday last at this same theater should have moved to every precaution.

Every morgue in the city is full to overflowing, and all the mimicry and simulation of the playhouse and the stage that has ever been seen, is overshadowed by the awful realism of tragedy enacted in hospital and deadhouse in this day of Chicago's awful visitation, when husbands, fathers, wives, daughters, sons, and friends are rushing from place to place searching for the remnant of clay that so recently held so much of life and joy for them. A truce has been ordered by the hearse drivers' union for ten days on the war and strike for wages and privilege, in order that the dead may be buried.

To-morrow (Saturday) has been appointed by Mayor Harrison as a day of mourning for this city, all unnecessary business to be suspended.

And the lesson, costly and woeful as it is, and for hundreds bereaved, must so remain for life! How much will it be worth to the public or to us?

The theater, sparingly attended perhaps for a few days, will soon be filled with the seekers of pleasure and amusement, and the masses will soon relieve themselves of temporary gloom in the whirl of money getting, fashion worship, and sensual pleasures.

"In the last days perilous times shall come." What is it that shall make them so?

For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous,—"lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." Saint Paul prophesied—but God knew and we know—that the forecast was correct. Yes, indeed, is it not true that the love of God that manifests itself in the keeping of his commandments, is almost in eclipse? "As it was in the day of Noah." Are we not nearing the time of the end? Christian nations arming and preparing for war and conquest—not against savage and minor tribes or ignorant and insignificant people, but against other Christian nations, unless Japan—heathen Japan—more civilized, better governed, more Christian than Christian(?) Russia may be noted as a present exception. Are we as Saints living in the way of insurance against the physical and moral and spiritual disaster that threatens the world to-day?

M. H. BOND.

Extracts from Letters.

Lester Wildermuth, of Necedah, Wisconsin, wrote December 28: "As a rule we believe this work is making progress here. The Saints are trying to build a church. The chairman of our soliciting committee received twenty-five dollars from Honorable J. W. Babcock, congressman from this district, for the new church. One brother has donated two acres of timber to be used according to direction of building committee, and another brother has donated two acres of potatoes, so we are confident that the church will be secured and free from debt. We have a live Sunday-school and Religio. The literature committee has purchased a supply of tracts for distribution. May God prosper his work everywhere."

Bro. Thorburn writing from Glasgow, Scotland, December 15: "All are well in Glasgow. Things are moving here about as usual. It has rained nearly every day since Brn. Smith and Evans were here and they know it dampened the ground a little while they were here."

J. F. Wellman wrote from Peoria, Illinois, January 2, telling that his daughter had ordered the HERALD for him and expressing his appreciation. He wrote: "It is the most valuable Christmas present I have had yet. I thank the lord for his great blessing, for I now have a preacher in the house."

There were born to them twelve children, four of whom are living: Sr. Rhoda Kenyon, Mrs. Emily Kesterson, Thomas Carlton, and Charles Carlton, all of Pike County, Illinois. She always bore a strong testimony to the truth of the work. Funeral by Elder W. A. Guthrie.

DOBSON.—Elder Eli T. Dobson, son of Thomas and Sarah K. Dobson, died at Lamoni, December 28, 1903, leaving a wife, three children, an aged mother, one brother, and four sisters to mourn. He obeyed the gospel April 17, 1871; was ordained an elder on March 15, 1873. For a livelihood he followed school-teaching and book-keeping, being successful in both. His sickness was long and painful, but his departure was peaceful and quiet. He married Miss Emma Louisa McKim March 31, 1878. Had he lived but one day more his age would have been forty-seven. Services were held in the Saints' church, at Lamoni, Iowa, on December 29, by Elder J. R. Lambert, assisted by J. W. Wight. He rests in peace.

GEHRKE.—Hannah Brown was born February 18, 1859, at Ridgeway, Ontario, and came to Nebraska with her parents in 1862; united with the Church about 1878; married John Gehrke December 24, 1880, died December 22, 1903, and was buried from her home near Irvington, December 26; sermon by Elder James Huff. She leaves a husband, several children, brothers, and sisters to mourn.

GARLAND.—Samuel Garland was born in Kingswood, Gloucestershire, England, in 1812; was married to Susanna Shaw, September 2, 1850, at Kingsford, Staffordshire, England. To them were born nine children, of which three, with the wife, survive; Samuel Jr., of Kewanee, Robert, of Lamoni, and Sarah Jane, of New York City. He came to America in the early 60's and has since lived in Kewanee; joined the Church August 6, 1870, being baptized by Elder J. S. Patterson; was ordained an elder September 7, 1870, by Elder Thomas France. He died December 17, 1903, of apoplexy and general debility. Funeral by Elder F. G. Pitt, Sunday, December 20, 1903, from the Saints' church.

HOLMES.—At Clay Cross, Derbyshire, England, December 4, 1903, Bro. Simon Holmes, Sr., passed peacefully away after an illness of ten days. He was born December 30, 1835, at Ibstock, Leicestershire, England; came to Clay Cross forty years ago; was baptized into the Church August 26, 1877, by Elder T. H. Pointon; confirmed by Elders T. H. Pointon and J. Hill; and ordained an elder July 4, 1886, by Elder John Hill. Bro. Simon met with an accident thirty-five years ago in Pen Lane coal mine, which rendered him unable to walk, he could get about in his carriage. He preached to friends and neighbors, was a well-known figure for miles around, and bore faithful testimony to the angel's message. Funeral services were held in the Saints' chapel, by Elder W. H. Greenwood, assisted by Elder Charles Cousins. Many people attended, and followed to the graveside, notwithstanding bad weather. Memorial service was held December 13, by Elder Greenwood. Our chapel was filled, many friends were present, and all appeared to be satisfied with what they saw and heard. Bro. Simon left a widow and five sons to mourn.

The North American Review in its January number provides for its readers a collection of articles of the greatest interest, in several of which it deals, with its accustomed authority, with current questions of the first magnitude. William Henry Hudson, who for several years was the private secretary of Herbert Spencer, contributes a most interesting character study of that great philosopher. Arnold White discusses "The Jewish Question: How to Solve It." Horace White gives his opinion as to what may be expected of "The School of Journalism." Thomas Nelson Page treats, with grim frankness, of "Lynching of Negroes: Its Cause and Prevention." Goldwin Smith concludes his brilliant review of "Morely's Life of Gladstone." Thomas Barclay writes of "Two Treaties of Arbitration," suggesting the negotiation of a treaty, similar to the Anglo-French arbitration treaty, between Great Britain and the United States. Lawrence Gilman gives his view of "Parsifal" and its significance." Churton Collins, the distinguished English critic, begins a series of studies of the "Poetry and Poets of America." Annie Nathan Meyer challenges the correctness of "Woman's Assumption of Sex Superiority." Brigadier-General W. H. Carter reviews "Mr. Roots Services in the War Department." Francisco Escobar, a prominent Colombian, considers "The President's Message and the Isthmian Canal," severely criticising some of the statements made by Mr. Roosevelt to Congress. The number closes with the first part of Mr. W. D. Howells's new novel, "The Son of Royal Langbrith."

Editor's Summary.

The first number of the Forum for the New Year opens with an estimate by Henry Litchfield West of the present situation in "American Politics," the principal topic considered being the candidates and issues at the Presidential election. A. Maurice Low follows with a similar review of "Foreign Affairs," including Russia's action in the Far East, the Panama revolution, and Mr. Chamberlain's propaganda. "Finance" is dealt with by Alexander D. Noyes, who discusses the conflicting trade opinions of East and West, and draws the lessons of the recent startling events on the stock markets. Several notable advances of the past quarter in "Applied Science" are described and explained by Henry Harrison Suplee. The greater part of Herbert W. Horwill's "Literature" article is a criticism of Morley's

"Life of Gladstone," but the most important recent fiction is also noted. Henry Tyrrell writes on the present condition of "The Drama" in the United States, and Professor A. D. F. Hamlin on "Architecture." There are two educational papers, one by Ossion H. Lang on "The Educational Outlook" and the by Doctor J. M. Rice on the results of his recent inquiries into the methods and results of the teaching of language. The magazine is completed by special articles on "The Russo-Japanese Imbroglia," by Muhammad Barakatullah, and on "International Chess Tournaments," by Emil Kemeny.

The Far Eastern Situation—Delay Means Peace.

Although the English people are evidently in great sympathy with Japan, they are much afraid of being involved through their treaty of alliance, and have been doing all in their power to prevent a war between Japan and Russia. The French, in like manner, fearing to be drawn into war through their alliance with Russia, have been quietly taking counsel with the English in the interest of peace. While every month that passes makes it less likely that there will be a war, it must also be said that delay is constantly strengthening Russia's position as against Japan, and that if the Japanese hope to retain or achieve any great position in Korea, they must act with audacity and promptness. As for the so-called "Korean Empire," it is not destined to keep a separate position for many years longer. If peace should be maintained, Korea will become Russian. If war occurs, Korea will even then become Russian in the end, unless the Japanese boldly declare a policy of Korean annexation, in which case there is a very fair chance indeed that Korea would, while keeping her distinctive characteristics, become a part of the Japanese Empire.—From "The Progress of the World," in the American Monthly Reviews of Reviews for January.

The Russo-Japanese Imbroglia.

Are the two combatants ready for the conflict if it comes off now? What is their relative military, naval, and financial strength on the spot, and what will be the possible effect of this war upon the combatants, as well as on the world at large?

There is no doubt that both Russia and Japan have been preparing for this eventuality for several years. It is a matter of common knowledge that Russia has at present in Chinese waters a powerful fleet, almost equal to the Japanese fleet in tonnage, speed, armament of ships, and armor. She has also been storing Welsh coal, like Japan, for six years. As to the Russian army on the spot, ever since Port Arthur was snatched from the victorious Japanese, Russian troopships and transports have been landing men, arms, and supplies in Chinese territory; and the Siberian Railway as soon as completed also began to pour its swarm of soldiers into the Orient. Russia has thus collected, as report goes, four hundred thousand troops in the Far East, to oppose which the Mikado has five hundred thousand trained soldiers ready to be mobilized at any moment. In regard to the possible effects of the war upon the rival nations, to begin with, the navies of both countries will be crippled, if at least one of them is not completely wiped out of existence. The clock of their progress will be set back at least a quarter of a century; for it is difficult to believe that Russia, under the present circumstances, can conquer the island empire and dictate terms at Tokio, or vice versa. Japan possesses a decided advantage over her opponent in having the base of operations and supply close by, while Russia will have to bring everything from across the continent—a necessity which will tell heavily upon her sinews of war. She will no longer remain a dominant power, as she is now, in reference to world politics. If she should not come off best in the fight, it may be that this war will turn out the beginning of the end of the Russian Empire in the Far East, for an active anti-foreign agitation is going on within China itself, under the auspices of the famous San-ho-hui, or Society of Triple Harmony, from which emanated the Boxers who figured so prominently during the events of 1900. The following extract from its circular inviting members to attend the meeting to be convened on the twenty-fifth day of the Second Moon is rather suggestive: "In these days the hearts of all people are ill at ease because foreigners are everywhere seizing our inheritance. . . . We are ground down in the dust. When shall we be delivered?"

So it is possible that before the conclusion of the Japanese contest, Russia may have to try conclusions with the Boxers of the Land of the Morning Calm. Her reverse in the East would also give an impetus to revolutionary societies to make matters warm for her at home. The general effect of the war upon Russia would be similar to that of the South African war upon England, if not worse, so that both these countries would be on a par for some time to come in the necessity for improving their condition. Politically, Germany would then become the first Power in the world, and the commercial supremacy would be shared between Germany and the United States. France, the ally of Russia, would be of little avail to her in the Orient, for the people of the republic would not allow their Government to participate in a conflict in the Far East while Germany remained neutral.—Mahammad Barakatullah in the January-March Forum.

Alfred Russel Wallace, author of "Man's Place in the Universe," was known previous to the publication of his new epoch making book chiefly as the codiscoverer with Darwin of the theory of natural selection. The story of how these two great minds separately produced the same important theory is little enough known to be worth retelling.

Darwin and Wallace had met only casually, and had had no important exchange of opinions. In 1842, Darwin had written a sketch of his theory on the origin of species, which he had read and discussed with his friend, Sir Charles Lyell, who had warned him if he did not publish it at once, some one would forestall him. Darwin could not be persuaded to do so, for he wanted to collect more evidence in support of his theory. In 1858, Mr. Wallace was living on one of the Molucca Islands. He was suffering from intermittent fever. In the intervals of attacks his thoughts turned to the possible mode of origin of new species, and to the "positive checks" to increase of population, etc., explained by Malthus in his "Essay on Population." Suddenly the idea came to him that in the case of wild animals those checks would act with much more severity, and in a minute the whole principle of the "survival of the fittest" dawned upon him. Impressed deeply with the importance of his theory, he wrote his idea out in full and sent it by next post to Mr. Darwin. On its receipt Darwin wrote to Lyell, "Your words have come true; I never saw a more striking coincidence. If Mr. Wallace had my sketch written in 1842, he could not have made a better short extract." Darwin wished to have Wallace's paper printed at once, but on the advice of his friends, he allowed extracts from his own paper to be printed jointly with Wallace's in 1858. —McClure's Gazette.

Training a horse.

The horse is a logical and therefore a teachable animal, says Country Life in America. Once convince him that a locomotive or any other object of terror is not really dangerous, and he will never shy at it again. Every year accidents occur because the harness breaks or the vehicle upsets, and the horse runs away. But such accidents are unnecessary. Any horse can, with a little pains, be taught to hold back a carriage by his hind quarters as well as by the breeching. To have wheels come off, and straps and other things hitting his legs, should be a part of every colt's education.

Editorial.

ON THE OPEN VISION.—1 SAMUEL 3:1.

In the Temple Review for December 18, 1903, kindly sent us by Bro. W. E. LaRue, of Philadelphia, is a sermon preached by Russell H. Conwell, in the Baptist Temple, Philadelphia, Sunday forenoon, December 13, 1903. This sermon was upon the text above given, chief stress being laid on the closing sentence, "There was no open vision." The preacher took the ground that at the time the text referred to men were in the dark, under a shadow, because of their evil-doing the Spirit of revelation being withheld. He carries the idea down through the history, and finds in the political affairs of the United States a similar condition of things; notably the struggle between the fanatical South and equally fanatical North on the subject of African slavery. He also cites what is now going on in the case of Reed Smoot, senator from Utah. Of it he said:

They are trying now to manufacture political clouds that the people may not know how to move. I think one of the questions now being agitated should have the direct opposition of the Baptist Church, although by our opposition we may set ourselves in opposition to the doctrines taught by many people. I refer to the effort now being made to persecute the Mormon Senator, Reed Smoot. I think that is a direct case of religious persecution, and the Baptist churches, believing in the toleration of religious opinion, although never in the toleration of crime, ought to take a firm stand in a matter of this kind. They say that Mr. Smoot is a Mormon and consequently should not have a seat in the United States Senate. But suppose he were a Presbyterian, and we did not believe in his religious views, would we have a right to say that he should not be admitted to the Senate? Suppose that he were a Mohammedan, where they believe that a man should have four wives, or as many more as he can keep, would we have a right to say that because of his religious belief he should not be allowed to go to the Senate? Whatever personal ideas Senator Smoot may have about a man's right to keep two wives has nothing to do with his political right to take a seat in the United States Senate. But if he should keep two wives, and thereby offend against our law and make himself a criminal, he should be shut out. But we have no right to ostracize a man because of his religious opinions. It would not surprise me at all if there were men in the city of Philadelphia, and men holding public office, who believe it would be right for a man to have two wives. But they do not have two wives, and therefore they are not to be debarred from public office. If he taught men to break the law, if he were a traitor, or an architect [anarchist], or a polygamist, the case would be one touching our political welfare. But while he behaves like a gentleman, conducts himself lawfully, it is religious persecution of the mediæval type to punish him for his opinion.

Or suppose Senator Smoot were a Shaker? The Shakers do not believe in marrying at all. If we all believed as they believe there would be no nation, and the generation would cease with us because they do not believe in marrying and bearing children. Does any one mean to say that they have no right to a seat in the legislature of New York, where they have often been, simply because they do not believe in marrying? Separation of church and state require a man's religious belief shall not deprive him of a right to hold political positions in our country so long as a man does nothing inconsistent with our laws. The Baptists, who believe in universal toleration in matters of religious opinion, must now stand true to their principles, and while we dislike Mormonism, while we hate its teachings, yet we believe that the political arm of the State has no right to interfere and say that a Mormon, because he is merely a Mormon in opinion, has no right to hold a seat in the United States Senate.

The time was when they would not allow a Quaker to hold a public position because he was a Quaker. But that was persecution. What a man believes has nothing to do with this question. And all this persecution of law-abiding Mormons will multiply them and establish them in great States. Such unreasonable persecution will react against Christianity and make the Mormons stronger than ever. I do not like the Mormon Church, and they are not the only churches which teach error. They are hateful to me, and I would argue against them and preach against them. But it is unwise for Christians to attempt to persecute the Mormons and cloud the political sky, for it will only result in bringing liberty and Christianity into contempt.

The views expressed by Reverend Conwell as given above are sound; and, coming from a Baptist pulpit, are a refreshing reminder that all the denominational ministry have not fallen into the meshes of the prevailing religious fad "fighting the Mormons." The terms "liberty and Christianity" have long since passed into a travesty upon the true meaning of the words, when employed by or applied to the attitude of those misnamed Christians who have been persecuting believers in the angel's message and the advocates of the New Covenant.

NOT AGAINST LABOR UNIONS.

Not long since we noticed a newspaper report to the effect that the "Mormon" Church in Utah had taken ground of open opposition to labor unions and had urged the young men needing work to take the place of the striking miners in the coal mines of Utah and neighborhood. We thought at the time this was a mistake, as it seemed to us improbable that the Church would take official action in the labor controversy in the West, though we could not see why men wanting employment might not accept in mines where men were wanted whether they belonged to the unions, or not.

In the Deseret News for January 4, 1904, there is a specific denial of the newspaper report by Presidents Joseph F. Smith, John R. Winder, and Anthon H. Lund, of the Utah Church. The editor of the News, summing up the matter, states as follows:

The views entertained on the question of labor organizations by leading men in the "Mormon" Church have been many times expressed in these columns. There is no need to recapitulate them to-day, for our readers will recognize, in the following digest and summary of the rulings of appellate courts in this country in cases that have come before them, the very same views that have appeared editorially in the Deseret News. Vice-chancellor Pitney, of New Jersey, has epitomized those judgments as follows:

"First.—That all sorts of laborers may lawfully combine and form unions for their mutual benefit, and that they may use all lawful means to promote their own interests, being careful in so doing not to infringe on the rights of others.

"Second.—One lawful means to that end is the refusal to work on terms offered by the employer.

"Third.—An unlawful means is to hinder or prevent others from working for an employer under such terms as they shall see fit.

"Fourth.—One means of such hindering and preventing is in various ways to render it either difficult or uncomfortable for such willing workmen to work. This is an unlawful means.

"Fifth.—Another unlawful means in common use, to hinder or prevent willing employees from working and to compel employers to accede to terms which they would not otherwise adopt, is the boycott in its various forms."

Labor union men, "Them's our sentiments!"

Labor, the toil of the hands and the body, is the average man's capital. This capital he is entitled to use in any way he may elect, or opportunity afford, to his best advantage. He has the legal right to do this either singly, or in association with others of like mind or like necessity. No other one has legal right to interfere with him, to prevent him from using his capital in lawful pursuits to his own benefit, the advancement of his own interests unto successful prosperity.

This is the whole question briefly stated. It follows, then, that whatever right or privilege belongs to one, the average man, must necessarily belong to every other man whose capital is his labor. This must be understood and conceded by all. These courts instituted to aid humanity in the conservation of their rights must, and from what appears above do take cognizance of these principles, facts applied in the common every-day lives of men. Hence the correctness and just applicability of the vice-chancellor's judgment that men in using "all lawful means to promote their own interests" must be "careful in so doing not to infringe on the rights of others."

QUERY AND REPLY.

Will you kindly explain through the HERALD what is meant by the passages in the Church History, volume 1, page 260, from line 7 to end of paragraph? Who was the man called and appointed that was smitten by the shaft of death? What was his transgression? Who is the one "mighty and strong, holding the scepter of power," etc.? Or has this prophecy, or revelation, or any part of it, yet been fulfilled?

Perhaps we can give no better reply to the foregoing query than to repeat the resolution adopted by the committees of conference between the Church of Christ, (Hedrickites,) of Independence, Missouri, and the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in a report to their respective representative bodies, the one from which we quote being that of the committee of the Reorganized Church to the April session of conference for 1900, and dated April 9, of that year, found on pages 180 to 183, of the minutes for that year: "Resolved that we indorse the revelation found in a letter from Joseph Smith the Seer to W. W. Phelps concerning the one mighty and strong, dated November 27, 1832." This was subsequently followed by a resolution of the committee for the Reorganized Church, presented to a joint session of the two committees, no action being had by the two committees in joint session.

"Whereas, we have received no divine communication authorizing particular interpretation of the revelation before us; and as the Reorganized Church has never taken action upon the matter, Resolved, that we leave it an open question, to be decided as God may develop his purposes among us, while we acknowledge the leading features in it to be prominently characteristic of Jesus Christ."

No action of conference was had upon this report. The committee had been appointed by the President in the interim pending the sitting of conference. This action of the President appointing said committee was approved, the report ordered spread upon the minutes without further action.

This left the possible interpretation to be put upon the revelation yet to be formulated if it should at any time become necessary, or in case any further light should be thrown upon it by additional revelation. Individuals may have held and expressed views as to the "one mighty and strong;" and also, the man who should put forth "his hand to steady the ark of God." But these views have been conjectural, requiring tissues of affirmation, argument, and reasoning to give support to them. None of them has been accepted as conclusive, hence the questions supposed to be involved are left for solution and settlement when better knowledge obtains. Each view advanced must remain an individual opinion until such settlement, if needed, is effected.

MARQUIS DE FONTENAY ON DOCKING.

In the Chicago Tribune for December 31, the Marquis de Fontenay in his daily letter speaks of the custom of docking horses' tails. His remarks are of interest to all who are concerned in the prevention of cruelty to animals. We reproduce the following from his letter:

In view of President Roosevelt's announcement that no horses with docked tails will be admitted to the stables of the White House, and the vigorous crusade which the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has inaugurated against this form of equine mayhem, it may be of interest to state that in Europe there is no more strenuous opponent of the practice in the Old World than the Duke of Portland, who as master of horse to King Edward is the principal dignitary of the latter's household and in supreme control of the stables of the British sovereign. There are few better sportsmen in the United Kingdom than this peer, who maintains one of the finest racing studs in Europe, has twice carried off the blue ribbon of the turf by winning the Derby, and who, although he never bets, figures at the end of nearly every year as the biggest winner of stakes, every penny of which is employed by the Duchess in building almshouses.

The Duchess holds views quite as pronounced as his own on the subject of docking, and throughout the season may be seen driving about London magnificent horses with undocked tails and free from all bearing reins.

With regard to the latter the Duke in his capacity as master of the horse issues each year at the beginning of the London season a strongly worded appeal in the Times, and other great metropolitan daily newspapers, protesting against the use of tight bearing reins for carriage horses. His demand has the approval of all sensible people, who cordially agree with him when he declares that ill applied and tight bearing reins give a vulgar and ridiculous appearance to turnouts that may in other respects be faultless. Carriage horses are hard worked enough in all conscience during the London season, and a tight bearing rein adds a hundred fold to their labors and to their distress.

There are no equipages in England that are more finely turned out than those of King Edward, thanks to the Duke of Portland. Yet none of the horses of the sovereign, nor those of the Duke himself, are ever seen with anything but the loosest kind of bearing rein, in spite of which they carry their heads magnificently. The same may be said about the horses of the Earl of Lonsdale, a past-master in everything relating to driving, hunting, and equine appointments. Emperor William holds analogous views on the subject of bearing reins and of docking tails, as does also the ruler of Austria-Hungary, while in Russia such forms of cruelty to horses is virtually unknown.

The Duke of Portland has already caused the prosecution and fine of several well known personages in London for the abuse of the bearing rein, Colonel Adrian Hope being among the number, but it is not until the managers of the great horse shows on both sides of the Atlantic take a leaf out of the book of the kennel authorities in England in the matter of ear clipping, and announce that no nag with a docked tail will be eligible for a prize, that a definite end will be put to this stupid practice, which dates from the most artificial epoch of the eighteenth century.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

I. N. Roberts, in reporting for the third quarter of the conference year, reports twenty-five baptisms by the missionaries in the Southeastern Mission. He reports that some of the men are doing very little work, while others are doing well. He thinks the work is advancing in a local way, though slowly. He has visited nearly all the branches in his field, and has been greatly blessed in laboring with them. He has opened up several new places. A debate is pending, and will be held near Broadhead, Kentucky, January 26. Bro. W. H. Kelley (Indiana) will represent us, and Mr. Davis of the Church of Christ, will defend his cause. With all his other labors, Bro. Roberts has, with one exception, preached more sermons than any other man in his field. The exception is Bro. W. R. Smith.

Bro. J. M. Stubbart wrote from Alva, Wyoming, December 30, 1903, saying the work there was in rather poor condition. His visit and stay had strengthened the Saints to a degree. Expected to get opening at Hulett, ten miles west of Alva.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. J. W. Salter, Eldorado, Kansas, desires to become acquainted with Saints living in Butler, McPherson, or adjoining counties in Kansas. He desires association with Saints.

According to the Chicago Tribune statistics, the number of suicides each year has increased steadily for several years past. In 1903 over eighty-five hundred persons took their own lives. This nearly equals the record of murders and homicides. Over eighty-nine hundred persons met death by crime and violence, while only one hundred and twenty-three persons were killed legally. It would appear that only a very small percentage of murders are avenged by executions.

Over six and one-half millions of dollars were appropriated in 1903 by embezzlers and defaulters,—a bad record. But optimists and believers in the improvement in the general morals of mankind, turn from the above record with some consolation to the statistics which show that in 1903 nearly seventy-seven millions of dollars were dispensed in donations and bequests by philanthropists and benefactors.

Of the one hundred and four lynchings in the United States in 1903 as reported by the Chicago Tribune, eighty-two were in the South, twelve in the North. Eighty-six of the persons lynched were negroes, seventeen whites, and one chinaman. One hundred and two were men, two were women. These figures show clearly the existence of racial trouble in the South. We fear the Southerners are not nearly so patient with colored breakers of the law as they are with white criminals. Only a spark is necessary to kindle deadly fires where race troubles keep the people on a continued strain. Lynch law is bad, and the race problem is difficult.

Mrs. Weed, who has been traveling through the country lecturing against "Mormonism" in general, and polygamy in particular, lectured in Burlington, Iowa, January 5. In the Hawk-Eye for January 9, Bro. Elbert Smith occupies nearly a column in objecting to certain parts of Mrs. Weed's lecture. His article is terse and logical. We trust the Hawk-Eye readers have a better understanding of the position of the Reorganized Church. Such lecturers as Mrs. Weed seem loath to make any distinction between the Utah religionists and the Reorganized Church, though the latter, as has been clearly shown in court, represents the original church as organized in 1830, by Joseph Smith. The original Latter Day Saint Church was in doctrine and practice opposed to polygamy and concomittant evils, and so is the Reorganized Church. The latter has long waged bitter war against the doctrine and practice of polygamy, and, as stated by Bro. Elbert in the Hawk-Eye, sent their men to Utah to "preach against it in its stronghold while yet Brigham Young lived and menaced the lives of those who opposed him." And he adds: "It meant more to lecture against it there and then than it does here and now. There was less money in it and more danger."

One of the HERALD staff was called upon to join in marriage two of Lamoni's young people. On January 6, Mr. D. J. Walker, a local druggist, and Miss Grace Horner, daughter of Doctor J. B. Horner, were married by Fred'k M. Smith, at the Horner residence. Only relatives of the contracting parties were present. The HERALD extends congratulations.

Bro. J. B. Hatcher has presented the Church Library and Graceland College Library each with copies of volume one of "Patagonia Expeditions," which is a report of the Princeton University expeditions to Patagonia from 1896 to 1899 and of which Bro. Hatcher's son, J. B., was in charge, and is a narrative of the expeditions and geography of Southern Patagonia by "J. B. Hatcher, Carnegie Museum, Pittsburgh." It bears the imprint of "The New Era Printing Company, Lancaster, Pennsylvania," and is certainly a splendid example of the "art beautiful." It is edited by William B. Scott, Blair Professor of Geology and Paleontology, Princeton University, and in his preface he speaks of the author as follows: "The great enterprise of a scientific exploration of Patagonia, which was planned by Mr. J. B. Hatcher, resulted in a remarkable success, because of the indomitable determination in the face of most discouraging obstacles, which was displayed by him and by . . . his assistants. One must read between the lines to understand how great these difficulties were and how often they seemed to be insurmountable. Only the greatest courage, in union with long experience and unusual skill, could have achieved such distinguished success." Additional volumes are to follow. We thank Bro. Hatcher for this addition to our libraries and hope to be able to complete the set.

At the regular business meeting of the Lamoni Branch, January 5, the following new officers were chosen: Lorenzo Hayer, presiding priest, and Daniel Anderson, presiding deacon.

A number of the Lamoni brethren of the general missionary force were at home during the holiday season, but have been going out one by one since the first of the year. Bro. Heman C. Smith, our historian, has utilized his visit home by doing office work. Bro. C. Scott, who has been laboring in Western Iowa, is looking well, and says he is enjoying his returned good health.

THE PRESIDENT OR CHIEF OFFICER IN THE CHURCH IN THE TIME OF THE APOSTLES. JAMES OR PETER, WHICH?—A REPLY.

BY G. T. GRIFFITHS.

(Concluded from last week.)

Strong emphasis has been placed on the statement found in Matthew 13: 55, 56:

Is not his mother called Mary? and his brethren, James, and Joses, and Simon, and Judas? And his sisters, are they not all with us?

The argument is made because the term "brethren" is used. The men named here were the brothers of Christ, sons of Joseph and Mary. We quote from Greswell's works, volume 2, page 119, under subject of "Brethren called cousins among the Jews:"

We are at liberty, then, to assume that the name of adelphos among the Jews may be applied indifferently to the relation of brother, or to the relation of cousin.

The same writer claims that the Scriptures maintain this position and cites Genesis 26 in proof thereof:

In the twenty-sixth chapter, seventh verse, by Isaac she is called his sister, doubtless because she was his cousin. See also chapter 29, verse 15.—Ibid., vol. 2, p. 119.

This position is also maintained by Lardner, volume 6, page 186:

That those who were called our Lord's brethren in the gospel, were his cousins or kinsmen, sons of Mary, his mother's sister, [is] an opinion embraced by Augustine, and by the majority of the Romanists and Protestants. [Not all Catholics, brother.]

See, also, "The Literary History of the New Testament," page 158.

Wilson's Emphatic Diaglot sustains the above. "James, the less," an apostle and kinsman of our Lord. (Galatians 1: 19.) He was the son of Cleopas, or Alphæus, and Mary, the sister of Mary, the mother of Jesus; consequently cousin to Jesus Christ, according to the flesh, and generally esteemed as the writer of the epistle that bears his name.—Appendix, p. 22.

It has been repeated that Jerome was the first advocate of the theory that James was the son of Alphæus, and not the Lord's brother. I quote from the Appendix to Exegesis of the Priesthood on page 150:

Hegisippian, so called after Hegesippus, a Hebrew Christian, born about A. D. 100, represents Joseph and Cleopas (or Alpheus) as brothers. Joseph's wife, St. Mary, and Cleopas' wife, Mary were therefore sisters-in-law. James, Joses, Jude, and Simon were the children of Cleopas and Mary, nephews and nieces of Joseph, and first cousins of our Lord.—Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, III, 20, 32.

The Hieronymian hypothesis, so-called, and warmly advocated by St. Jerome, A. D. 382, represents James, Joses, Jude, Simon, and their sisters to be the children of Mary, sister of St. Mary, and therefore nephews and nieces of St. Mary, and first cousins of our Lord on the maternal side.—Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, IV, 22.

The incident recorded in John 19: 25-27, corroborates the historical evidence adduced above:

Now there stood by the cross of Jesus his mother, and his mother's sister, Mary the wife of Cleopas, and Mary Magdalen,

When Jesus therefore saw his mother, and the disciple standing by, whom he loved, he saith unto his mother, Woman, behold thy son! Then saith he to the disciple, Behold thy mother! And from that hour that disciple took her unto his own house.

It is not disputed that the beloved disciple here referred to was John, the son of Zebedee and brother of James, the son of Zebedee. Here, Bro. Kelley, is another son of Mary and Joseph according to the tenacious way in which you cling to the meaning of the term, "thy brethren." Jesus calls John her (Mary's) son, and her, his mother.

Question.—Is it in harmony with human nature for a son to give his mother over to the care and keeping of an outside party, and is it in harmony with a mother's feelings to suffer herself to be placed in the keeping of an outside person when she had sons and daughters of her own? The reason assigned by the opposition is that her sons were unbelievers at the time in question; and in the next breath we are told that he was converted and made president of the church immediately after the resurrection—the long period of three days—and succeeded Christ in the holding of the keys of the presidency. This, however, is not in harmony with the law, which provides that the successor must be appointed through the incumbent of this office:

But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift [to preside and be God's mouthpiece] except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead; and this shall be a law unto you.—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 2.

If Christ failed to appoint his successor previous to his crucifixion, the church on earth was without a visible head for several days.

It is hardly probable that Jesus would go to one who was a disbeliever and convert him and make him president of the church within a few days' time when he had many who had been so closely associated with him for years, and who were fully qualified to occupy such a position. Paul with all his ability and earnestness, and who was converted in 34 A. D., continued in the ministry until 44 A. D., before being chosen as one of the apostles.

Again, if James was to be the successor of Christ in so short a time, do you not suppose that Jesus knew something about it, and that he would have made temporary provision for his mother until the unbelieving James was converted? Then, again, what about Jude, his brother, whom all concede was an apostle? And some historians claim that Thaddeus, mentioned in Matthew 10, was this Jude, thus constituting one of the first quorum of twelve. If this be a fact, as most all historians agree, then the statement that his brethren were all disbelievers until after his crucifixion is incorrect, and therefore there was another brother amply fitted to care for the mother.

The eminent historian Lardner and other promiment writers take the same view of this matter as we have held out:

Upon the cross he (Christ) committed his mother to the guardianship of John, the son of Zebedee; which is adduced by ancient writers that she was not only a widow, but had no children of her own. And certainly, had James been her son, or even a step-son, it can scarcely be supposed that our Lord would have transferred the charge of protecting his mother to another apostle who sustained no such relation. There is no room then, no doubt, that the son of Alphæus and our Lord's kinsman were the same.

See Lardner, volume 6, page 184, and "Literary History of the New Testament," page 186.

See also what Smith's Bible Dictionary says on this subject:

The four brothers and their sisters were always found living and moving about with the "Virgin Mary." If they were the children of Cleopas, the Virgin Mary was their aunt. Her own husband would appear, without doubt, to have died between A. D. 8 and A. D. 26. Nor have we any reason for believing Cleopas to have been living during our Lord's ministry. . . . What difficulty is there in supposing that the two sisters should have lived together, more so as one of them had but one son, and he was oft taken from her by his ministerial duties, and would it not be most natural that two families of first cousins, thus living together, should be properly looked upon as one family, and spoken of as brothers and sisters instead of cousins? It is noticeable that St. Mary is nowhere called the mother of the four brothers.—Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, vol. 2, p. 1203. Hackett and Abbot.

Doctor Mill holds the same view as the above. See Doctor Mill's account of our Lord's Brethren Vindicated, page 236.

This opinion is maintained by the author of the Oxford Teachers' Bible, Subject index, page 23; but some would make it appear that it must not be accepted as authentic because of it being in sympathy with Catholicism. However, on page 1080 of recent HERALD, attention is called to a statement made by the Reverend T. K. Cheyne, M. A., D. D., Oriol Professor of Holy Scriptures, Oxford. This scholar seems to be in sympathy with the idea, so it is all right and wholly reliable, even though others of the same institution, who are not of similar opinions, are condemned, and it is contended that they are in sympathy with Catholicism.

I have used a considerable amount of historical matter simply to show that our most eminent writers differ widely and that we can not depend on what they write, but must look to the Scriptures for authentic support of our ideas.

James was not president by right of lineage. The effort to refute my position on lineage is far-fetched. It seemed to be a hard nut to crack. Attempt is made to get around it by references in Book of Mormon history where brother succeeded brother. This is not in conflict with my position. I have made the assertion that such a course of procedure is proper in case of death or disqualification by reason of transgression on the part of the one in line of succession.

It is argued that it should be James, the Lord's brother, on account of lineage, and Doctrine and Covenants 104: 18, 19, and 83: 2 is quoted to support the theory.

The order of this priesthood was confirmed to be handed down from father to son, and rightly belongs to the literal descendants of the chosen seed, to whom the promises were made. This order was instituted in the days of Adam, and came down by lineage, in the following manner: From Adam to Seth, etc.

This statement refutes the argument of the author of Presidency and Priesthood, for the positive assertion is that it should go from father to son and not from brother to brother. Again it was said by the Creator, "That her [the woman's] seed should bruise the serpent's head," and not the seed of the man. Therefore Christ was not of the seed of Joseph, but of Mary, his mother. For it is written, "Behold, a virgin shall conceive and bear a son."—Isaiah 7: 14. And we are told in Matthew 1: 25 that "he [Joseph] knew her not until she had brought forth her first-born son: and called his name Jesus." Hence Joseph was not related to Jesus by blood, but by marriage only—as foster-father. The order being from father to son, and James, not being the son of Jesus, but of Joseph, his only right would be through his father, Joseph, and not through Christ. Hence there is not a semblance of right to presidency by right of lineage for James.

Even though it should be proven that James was the son of Joseph and Mary (which proof is still wanting) he would not then have a right by lineage to the presidency. There is nowhere to be found a promise that this right might descend from mother to son. It is from father to son and Joseph was not Christ's father, and hence the Book of Mormon incidents are not parallels.

Peter appears as chief apostle previous to the death of Christ and seemingly as the president of the church subsequent to the death of Christ.

I herewith submit the following incidents in support of the above statement: He is first called to the apostleship (Matthew 10: 1), and second, he is first named and is spokesman at the time of the transfiguration. Third, he is first named where he, James, and John accompanied Jesus into the house where the dead maiden was raised to life. (Luke 8: 31.) Fourth, he was first named at the time they accompanied Jesus into the garden of Gethsemane. (Matthew 26: 37.) Fifth, he was chief speaker in the matter of choosing an apostle to succeed Judas. (Acts 1.) Sixth, he was chief speaker on the day of Pentecost. (Acts 2.) Seventh, the multitude recognized Peter as the foremost of the apostles when they directed their question, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" to Peter and the rest of the apostles. Eighth, Peter was chief in pronouncing judgment upon Ananias and Sapphira. (Acts 15: 1-10.) Ninth, Peter denounced the sorcerer, Simon. (Acts 8.) Tenth,

Peter was the first unto whom Christ appeared after the resurrection. (Luke 24:34; Corinthians 15:5.) Eleventh, Peter received a knowledge of the Father and of Christ, and Christ here makes him the promise, "I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom." (Matthew 16:16.)

We are asked to believe that the keys herein referred to simply gave the authority he exercised as president of the twelve. He will find it to be quite a task to get the people to believe that the terms "quorum" and "kingdom" are synonymous. The term "kingdom" implies the whole church, including the quorum of the twelve as well as many others. Do the keys of the kingdom received by Joseph Smith apply only to the Quorum of Twelve, and the work done by the members of said quorum?

Twelfth, having appeared unto his disciples the third time, Christ still recognized Peter as being chief and foremost among the brethren, as is found in John 21:15, 16. Jesus at this time asks him three separate times if he loved him. Peter answered each time in the affirmative, "Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee." Christ responded, "Feed my lambs," "Feed my sheep." This language could not have been addressed to the quorum as a whole, for Christ here singled out Peter and in their presence gave him a charge. The sheep and lambs herein referred to undoubtedly meant the membership of the church of God, also called the sheepfold. It can not be that the lambs and sheep meant the quorum of apostles, but it is evident to the unbiased thinker that Christ here instilled upon Peter's mind, in the presence of his brethren, that the watchcare, guidance, and presidency of the entire church devolved upon him. The command, "Feed my lambs," "Feed my sheep," could mean nothing less, and in purview of this charge Peter writes to the "scattered saints," called strangers, and endeavored to feed them as the Savior had commanded him. (See 1 Peter 1.) Again, in his second letter, he addresses "all those who have obtained like precious faith with us," thus obeying the injunction, "Feed my sheep." (2 Peter 1:1.) It is plain to be seen that his charge was not only over the quorum of the twelve, but to the whole church, either congregated together or scattered abroad.

Again, it is urged that "at the conference held at Jerusalem in which appeared the chief authorities of the church, James is presented as the conspicuous character, leader, and president of this august assembly," and that part of the fifteenth chapter of Acts is quoted in support of the assertion which relates to James; and does not give the context which points out that part which Peter performed in that "august assembly," (Acts 15:5-11,) as follows:

But there rose up certain of the sect of the Pharisees which believed, saying, That it was needful to circumcise them, and to command them to keep the law of Moses. And the apostles and elders came together for to consider of this matter. And when had there been much disputing, Peter rose up, and said unto them, Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe. And God, which knoweth the hearts, bear them witness, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us; and put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith. Now, therefore, why tempt ye God to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear? But we believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved, even as they.

This shows conclusively that after much disputing on the part of the brethren, Peter was the first to rise and render his decision as presiding officer, and when Peter finished (verse 12) the multitude became silent. They were now willing to hear Barnabas and Paul give their testimony tending to confirm Peter's decision. When those worthy characters had finished speaking James arose and also confirmed Peter's decision by citing the following scripture from the thirteenth to eighteenth verse:

And after they had held their peace, James answered, saying, Men and brethren, hearken unto me: Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name. And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written, After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up: that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things. Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world.

And in verse 19, James also confirms the decision in the following language:

Wherefore my sentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are turned to God.

We now give the rendering of Wilson's Emphatic Diaglot, verse 19:

Therefore I (krino) judge that we should not trouble those, etc., etc.

In the 28th verse we glean the fact that the Holy Ghost assisted Peter, James, and the other apostles and elders, in making their decision. Peter first arising and referring to the time when God by his mouth opened up the gospel to the Gentiles, putting no difference between them and us. Paul and Barnabas then arose and confirmed this by stating also that God gave the Gentiles without circumcision the Holy Ghost, and then James arose and cited some scripture, and also confirmed the decision already made by Peter and suggested to write letters to the Gentiles. The assembly even went further than this, for we find they selected men to accompany Barnabas and Paul, who were to deliver this decision to the Gentiles by word of mouth.

Again, according to this position, that Peter was the chief officer or president of the twelve, and as it was a special conference of the apostles and elders at Jerusalem and not of the church in general, Paul and Barnabas did not seek the decision of the first presidency of the church; hence no man could render a decision in that case, as it was appealed to a special conference of the apostles and elders collectively. The argument adduced in support of this position that James was the president by reason of the decision he rendered, will not stand the test of argument. Suppose that at one of our general conferences Joseph Smith and his associate counselors were presiding, and suppose further, that there was a discussion wherein the President was interested and he should vacate the chair to take part in the discussion, would not the next in authority be chairman in the meantime, and would it not be his duty to render a decision if an appeal was made? In case he rendered such a decision, would that argue that he was president of the church because he rendered the decision? Peter took part in the discussion before that assembly, and hence that made James the president of the meeting until that question was decided, as Peter was involved in the question before the body. Hence no argument in favor of James being the president of the church by reason of his decision rendered on the occasion in question materializes.

Another point in favor of Peter being the president: The matter under consideration had been referred to the apostles and elders for decision, and Peter being, as it is claimed, president of the quorum of the twelve, that fact alone made him the president of that assembly, should their contention be well taken. They thus defeat their own argument.

SUMMARY.

1. The objections to the statement of Joseph Smith as found in Millennial Star are not well founded. "No shorthand reporters" and "no high council or general conference," etc., militate against his own position.
2. The leaven in the Appendix has worked out two of the counselors, Jude and Silas.
3. Kelley's position on this subject is weighed in the balance of God's word and found wanting.
4. Keys of the kingdom promised to Peter by Christ.
5. Peter, James, and John declare that they are in possession of the keys of the kingdom.
6. Peter, James, and John gave these keys of the kingdom to Joseph Smith, thus making him and his counselors their successors in the holding of the keys of the kingdom.
7. Whatever the term "keys of the kingdom" meant in connection with Joseph Smith, would also apply to Peter while in possession of the same keys. Both held the "keys of the kingdom."
8. The Presidency proper (the President and his two counselors) hold greater keys or authority than the second presidency, or Quorum of Apostles,

9. The President of the Church has authority that is not held by any other officer or man in the Church.

10. The president of the Quorum of Twelve is equal in authority to his brethren in the Quorum except in presiding over his brethren in quorum capacity.

11. Historical evidence is unreliable, as writers of equal eminence are in direct conflict.

12. We have shown that while there is no Bible evidence favoring the theory that James was the president of the church (as is frankly admitted), that there is ample proof substantiating the claim of Peter occupying the office of president of the church.

13. Mary had no sons save Jesus, otherwise he would have intrusted her to their care instead of placing her in the care of an outside party, John, the son of Zebedee.

14. James, the son of Alphæus, continued as an apostle from the time of choosing the first twelve until after Christ's crucifixion and on down at least until A. D. 58 when he is referred to by Paul in Galatians 1: 19.

15. James may have acted as bishop in Jerusalem and counselor to Peter simultaneously, the same as E. L. Kelley acted as Bishop and counselor to Joseph Smith from 1897 to 1902; and, furthermore, he may have been president of the church in Jerusalem while acting as counselor to the president, just as A. H. Smith presided for some time in Lamoni during the time he was a counselor to the President of the Church—two parallels that may easily have been.

16. Peter did not answer for all the quorum of apostles in that day, any more than the president of the Quorum of Twelve answers for his brethren in our day.

17. Peter was recognized to be at the head, seven years subsequent to the crucifixion of Christ, in being directed through an angel to extend the gospel to the Gentiles.

18. Jerome was not the inventor of the theory that Peter was at the head of the church, but it was advanced by Hegesippian about two hundred years previously.

19. Position taken by the author of Presidency and Priesthood, that James was converted and placed at the head of the church in so short a time, is proven to be inconsistent.

20. The position that James had a right to the presidency through the law of lineage is wholly refuted.

21. Peter is shown to be foremost among the apostles during the lifetime of Christ and at the head of the church subsequent to his death.

22. The position argued that James was the president of the church at the time of the Jerusalem council is refuted.

A QUESTION OF INSPIRATION.

The anniversary of the birthday of the Prophet Joseph is well worthy of remembrance; for the work he was called upon to perform, and which he accomplished during a brief career, is of the most stupendous importance to mankind, whether it is accepted or rejected.

One of the great missions with which he was charged, was to give to the world in modern vernacular part of the record of God's dealings with his children on this continent in ancient times. He did so through the same power that led men in former ages to declare the will of God. He brought to light the Book of Mormon, so long preserved for this age and generation.

That such a work was needed, the present condition of the "Christian" world proves. It appears as if "higher criticism" would soon reduce the Bible to myth, and faith to superstition. The Book of Mormon is therefore highly needed as another witness. And as such it came to the world, though most unexpectedly.

Ever since the appearance of the Book of Mormon, critics who hope to discover some excuse for not accepting the truth, have objected to it on the ground of defects in spelling and grammar. The claim that the book was written by inspiration originally, and translated by the Prophet Joseph by the power of God, has been ridiculed, and denied on that ground. And this has been done, strange to say, not by the ignorant multitudes, but by persons who claim to be well informed, and who therefore must know, that imperfections are not lacking in the New Testament, for instance, which they, however, accept as the word of God. It is unfair to reject the Book of Mormon on grounds that are not, by believers, urged against the Bible.

It is not claimed that the inspiration which was granted to the founder of the Church in this age is higher than, or of a different kind to, that by which holy prophets of old were led to speak or write. With regard to the authors of the Bible, it is admitted that their personal peculiarities were not laid aside while under the influence of the Spirit. Their writings display different degrees of education and learning. Habits of thought and expression are peculiar to the various authors. The Gospel of John could never be ascribed to Paul. The expressions of the two are so different. The human element shines through everywhere. Even in the matter of quotations from the Scriptures, they avail themselves of what they knew best. Sometimes they quoted from the original Hebrew, and sometimes from the Septuagint. Sometimes their memory as to the verbatim text seems to have failed them. To quote one familiar example, as an illustration of this: Three evangelists relate the story of the storm that threatened the disciples in the boat with death on the Sea of Galilee, and they all mention that the disciples went to Jesus and aroused him from his sleep. But in quoting what was said on that occasion, they all differ. Matthew says: "And his disciples came to him, and awoke him, saying, 'Lord save us, we perish.'" Mark says: "And they awake him and say unto him: 'Master, carest thou not that we perish?'" Luke's version is: "And they came to him, and awoke him, saying, 'Master, Master, we perish.'" "

That shows plainly that each writer, though inspired, made use of his own faculties in expressing the ideas that were present in his mind. Sometimes the quotations are so free as to render it difficult to trace them to the original source. The language of most of the New Testament writers was not classical. They were Galileans. Some of them, we presume, had learnt the to them foreign tongue in which the New Testament was written at an advanced age. They spoke and wrote, even under inspiration, as well as they could, and no better. All this is well known to scholars who criticise the Book of Mormon for imperfections of grammar. Inspiration does not place pen, ink, and paper before the man who is inspired. It does not guide his hand to form letters according to the rules of perfect penmanship. Nor does it teach him to spell according to the latest adopted rules, or to form sentences that are infallible in the light of the newest grammar. Through inspiration truth is presented to the mind of the one under its influence; but the expression of that truth in language, necessarily rests with the instrument chosen. The divine artist may play upon the instrument and produce the music intended, but this is different according to the nature of the instrument. A flute will not give the same kind of music as the trombone, though operated upon by the same artist. Whether the prophet is spoken to audibly by the divine messenger, or the truth is conveyed to him by inward suggestion, or by dreams and visions does not matter. The expression of that truth in human language is a human process, and must necessarily be so, if it is to be understood by other human beings.—Deseret Evening News for December 23, 1903.

MEXICO IS POLYGAMY'S NEW ZION.

Many progressive Mormons deprecate the election of any man under suspicion of polygamy to Congress. It is bad politics, they say; let the members do as they please in their private lives, but realize that they are citizens and property holders as well. A still more liberal class drift away from the Church entirely, and the orthodox point to them as the horrible example of "Americanization" which will engulf Utah if the Church does not assert itself.

The very orthodox see only one way of escape. They must flee to a new Zion, as their forebears did. It is give up nothing or all. They see the "Gentiles" pouring into Utah, building railroads, developing mines, erecting factories, and crowding into the background the men who, spurred on by religion, founded the State. They feel that their sons are in daily touch with contamination. In one sense they welcome the agitation over the seating of Reed Smoot in the Senate, because, like every other agitation of its kind, it arouses the faithful to a realization that in Mexico lie their hope and their refuge.

The Edmunds-Tucker Act of 1886 sent the first Mormon pilgrims across the Southern border. They now have a dozen colonies in the states of Chihuahua and Sonora in Mexico, where altogether they own three hundred and fifty thousand acres of land. The experience of Colonia Juarez, one of the colonies, shows that the spirit of the old pioneers is not wanting to-day. When the emigrants went to the valley of the Piedros Verdes River, one thousand feet below the surrounding Sierra Madre Mountains, they found arid land utterly barren, save for an occasional clump of cactus. They began digging ditches to convey the water from the river to the land. Roving Apaches plundered and murdered, but the settlers were undaunted. Vegetation began to flourish. As the colony prospered, greater irrigation works, including reservoirs to store the flood waters, were undertaken.

Now verdure stretches across the picturesque valley. Midst the trees nestle dwellings, stores, a meeting-house, and an academy of adobe, brick, or frame. A grist-mill, furniture factory, and other manufacturing establishments are in busy operation. Clear water ripples in narrow artificial channels along the streets, allaying the thirst of the tall poplars or cottonwoods that line the highways, and the stretches of grass, the flowers and shrubbery, peach, apricot, plum, and pear trees, and gardens about the dwellings.

There are no tobacco shops, no saloons, no disreputable resorts, no jail. The lives of the adults are filled with the daily toil of household, farm, and garden, store and factory, and with the frequent gatherings at the meeting-house to foster and vent their religious enthusiasm. The numerous children go to school, where they are taught the common and academic branches, and Mormonism unrestrained. The plural families dwell together in security. The rule of the Church is as absolute as it was in the days when Brigham Young was supreme in its councils.

Yet the head of these colonies, A. W. Ivins, is himself a monogamist. With religious enthusiasm he combines the qualities of the Western promoter. He is the diplomatist who deals with the Mexican Government. Diaz wants population and prosperity. So long as the polygamy is not ostentatious, no objection is raised. The second and succeeding wives and children have no standing in law, but plural marriages are tacitly permitted and continually contracted. Ivins' admirers prophesy that in twenty-five years the Mormons will own practically all of Northern Mexico. The Church helps the emigrants to secure railroad transportation, gets duties and taxes remitted, obtains credit if needed, and tides its followers over the hard places until they become firmly established and self-supporting in their new home.—Collier's for December 12, 1903.

NEW GROUP OF CLIFF-DWELLER RUINS.

Captain Cecil A. Dean has the following interesting article in the Denver Post on his recent discoveries of a new group of cliff-dweller ruins near Dolores, Colorado.

The extreme southwest part of Colorado consists of what may be termed a great plateau, having an average elevation of about five thousand feet above sea-level. In its few and narrow valleys where running water is found, the cottonwood and box-elder attain great size, but the greater area is covered with a dense growth of piñon and cedar.

Where water can be introduced the naturally sandy soil yields abundantly of all kinds of grain and fruit common to that altitude, but such area at present is quite limited, yet there is abundant evidence that this region was once thickly inhabited by a race who perished in the long ago; who had no beasts of burden, nor the use of metals, yet by their skill and industry accomplished much that excites our wonder and admiration.

In the more than one hundred thousand square miles in the great Southwest, where we find the ruins of their many towns and isolated dwellings, perhaps no portion was more densely populated than are the mesas lying adjacent of McElmo and Hoven-weep canyons.

About twenty-five miles west of Dolores Station, where the wagon road skirts the head of the latter canyon at Yellow Jacket Springs, and on the west side of the canyon, which here is not over one hundred feet in depth, may be seen a typical group of these mesa ruins. They were made of stone, which was brought up from the canyon, and now, where undisturbed, present only great rows and heaps of fallen walls, but if moved the lower portions of walls in place will be exposed. The principal ruin has a frontage of about six hundred feet and an average width of over one hundred feet. Another ruin, nearly as extensive, is found about one fourth of a mile toward the east, and at a like distance toward the north on the summit of a small hill is a mass of fallen walls that cover about one half acre on its slope and summit.

SANDSTONE CANYON.

The many depressions among the ruins denote the site of rooms; the quantity of stone would readily afford material for houses of three stories, and have given shelter to quite three thousand inhabitants. From these ruins the mesa extends unbroken for about five miles toward the north and west, till Sandstone Canyon is reached, and over this now densely covered sage-brush surface, at frequent intervals, we observe the fallen walls, fragments of pottery and the worn out metates or corn-grinding stones of those who lived some distance from the communal pueblos. No stone, loose or in exposed ledges, occurs on this extensive area, and the miles of distance they were carried by human labor prove that the builders were not a migratory people, but made permanent homes, and were tillers of the soil, yet there are no traces of old irrigating ditches, nor is water now available for irrigation. The light rainfalls of the present time afford moisture for only a sparse growth of grass, and when these many people lived from soil-culture the climate was one of striking contrast to that of the present.

The separate stones used by these old builders seldom exceed one hundred pounds in weight, but I noticed one singular exception. At the southeast corner of the larger ruin may be seen in a vertical position a block of sand rock which is eight feet in height by one and nearly two feet in size on its undressed face. Excavations made to its base, which is two feet below the surface, gave no clue as to the reason for its placement, and unless used for some ceremonial purpose, it is difficult to imagine why a stone weighing more than a ton should have been transported by hand-power one fourth of a mile from the brink of the canyon.

TYPICAL ROOMS.

Extending down the canyon and only on its west side, we find many cliff-houses wherever the projecting sandstone formed a natural roof. The front walls have usually fallen from the ledge on which they were built, but the partition walls generally remain in place. The rooms are very small—usually not more than eight feet in length, by five or six in depth, and the height depending on the distance to the overhanging rock. Sometimes only a single room will be built on a now almost inaccessible shelf, or a tier of ten or more cell-like rooms will be found, built on some covered shelf so near the edge that not more than one foot of natural rock floor extends from the base perhaps more than one hundred feet; yet in these rooms the smoke-stained walls and roof, articles of stone, bone, and pottery frequently found, give proof of long, continued occupation. Where the outer wall still stands we see the entrance to the room was made through a small rectangular opening, seldom exceeding fifteen inches in width by twenty in height.

Here the dense sand rock slab which forms the base of the opening, has been worn smooth, its once sharp edges even worn away by contact with the bodies of those who secured ingress and egress in a nearly horizontal position. These cliff-houses vary in places of from one hundred feet above the base of the canyon to an elevation of six or eight hundred feet along its precipitous sides. Usually they contain only a bed of sand, which, during a long period of time, has accumulated from particles which have fallen from the rock roof, and covers the floor to a depth of several inches, but one cliff ruin which we examined yielded many articles of great interest to the archæologist.

A MASS OF RELICS.

No exterior or partition walls were found in place above the present surface, but excavations made uncovered the natural rock floor to a depth of four feet, and exposed to that height cross or partition walls, once forming rooms, and varying from seven to ten feet in depth, or till the contour of the rock face was reached.

This great mass of debris was composed of soil, fragments of pottery, broken animal bones, charcoal and ashes, and the natural accumulations of a long-used and unswept room. A number of stone axes and other stone implements were found at different levels, and at an intersecting angle, formed by a cross-wall meeting the front or outer wall, at a depth of three feet from the surface, we found six pitchers and jars which had been protected from injury by a heavy coating of clay plaster. In one of the jars I found a number of stone and bone beads and a stone spear-head four inches in length. In another room we unearthed ten bowls, one within the other, but all were broken into many pieces by the weight of covering material. Other articles of pottery and four bone awls were found in other rooms at different levels in a more or less perfect condition, and their numerous utensils, together with the great accumulation of debris in the several rooms, would denote a very long period of time in which this cliff ruin was occupied.

About ten miles southwest from the great mass of ruins at the head of the canyon we find another group apparently of the same age, and built by the same people, yet having some features different from any other ruins that I have examined. The line of fallen walls extends five hundred and forty feet along the extreme verge of the mesa, and great masses of the walls have fallen over the cliff, here about eighty feet in vertical height.

THREE HUNDRED ROOMS.

Portions of the building were so high that the loose stones, now lying on the rock floor, form irregular heaps quite ten feet above the base of the walls which they protect, the outlines of more than three hundred rooms can be determined, and the mass of material, once in place, is so great that we may believe this ruin originally contained more than one thousand rooms. Midway and also at the east end of the line of fallen walls are found the remains of two round towers, portions of which are yet standing to a height of fourteen feet and the walls of which are two feet in thickness at their broken summits. Extending for several miles toward the north and west the surface is covered with a thick growth of cedar and piñon, and here in the forest we meet with isolated ruins among which trees are growing which have attained a diameter of over two feet. Four years ago I cut down a large cedar, growing in a like ruin west of the La Plata, and a careful count of the rings of annular growth proved that eight hundred and sixty-four years was the age of the tree; yet we can not know how many centuries passed during which the house had been inhabited, nor how long the interval between its last use, its gradual destruction, and the present time.

Like the area adjacent to the ruins first described, deep soil covers the horizontal, stratified rock, and no loose stones here could have been procured with which to build these habitations. Opposite to the round tower ruins the Hoven-weep canyon is one thousand six hundred feet in depth, yet the tens of thousands tons of rock used in their construction were procured from its greatly broken surface, and that nearest available supply was doubtless the reason for the margin of the canyon having been selected as a site for this great communal habitation.

HUGE BLOCKS OF STONE.

Immediately south of the central tower and about three hundred feet distant from the margin of the exposed strata, may be seen a huge block of stone, which has become detached from its original place, and in its present position presents a nearly horizontal surface. It has an exposed thickness of eleven feet, is elliptical in shape and measures fifty-eight by thirty-one feet in length and width. Its upper surface is embraced within the walls of a house, which contained eighteen rooms, should the partition walls of the first story, now in place, have been carried as high as are portions of the exterior walls, which are sixteen feet in height. Circular openings in these walls denote where beams were used to insure floors for at least three stories, and all walls now standing are quite two feet in thickness. Until excavated the lower rooms were filled to a depth of about five feet of material that had fallen from rooms above. We found a few stone implements, articles of broken pottery, portions of two charred skeletons, much charcoal, and other evidences to warrant the belief that this building had been destroyed by fire, and at a time when it was inhabited.

The largest and central room is nearly circular in form, and presents a most unusual feature of their architecture. Beginning with a base of only four inches, the builders gradually widened the thickness of a wall to more than two feet at a height of six feet; it being made secure by use of many binding-stones passing into the adjoining walls, which were built at the same time. We may assume that it was used as a council chamber, and in its construction the builders sought to perpetuate in stone the form of the dwellings used by their ancestors in that far off time when an oval-shaped roof afforded shelter during their migrations.—Deseret Evening News, November 21, 1903.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Look backward! From thy lofty height survey
Thy years of toil, of peaceful victories won!
Of dreams made real, largest hopes outrun!
Look forward! Brighter than earth's morning ray Streams the pure light of heaven's unsetting sun!

To the Column.

Dear Readers:—Christmas work is now mingling itself with other needful work, so that I will not have any time to give to correspondents this mail, but take this way of letting you all know that we are well. Have been having a long spell of bad weather which is still threatening, and how glad I am that there are no white missionaries at the Paumotus to suffer its consequences.

Last Thursday night we were all afloat. Here, with the heavy rains a few days before, the wind blew almost a gale. Two big rurau trees in the missionary yard were blown down. The Saints at Tiona were working hard all the week notwithstanding the rain, to complete their niau feast-house, before Sunday, for it was the day on which both branches were to meet at Tiona for sacrament. And I think they prayed often for a favorable day and manifested their faith by their steady works of preparations, though the rain continued till Saturday. And the Saints here were looking forward with great anticipation; for there was to be a grand feast as a house-warming, besides the unusual program for the day.

On Saturday morning the sun shone faintly, but became stronger as the day wore on, so by the aid of a gentle breeze the mud was all dried up by Sunday morning, and before seven o'clock the little village of Taronā was deserted, save Temakiu, who stood guard.

At eight o'clock the feast-house was dedicated and the first preaching service was held in it. There were benches all around the sides for the men, but the sisters enjoyed the luxury of sitting down on the clean niau matting, for it is very tiresome to many of them to sit on benches during the services.

At the close of the preaching there was a matutu in the feast-house that occupied the time till a few minutes before ten, when all repaired to the church for the service. Before service commenced there were three branch officers ordained. Then Joseph preached a good sermon, i. e., I saw that he was enjoying it, and the people were giving good attention, but I did not catch much of it. Immediately after meeting was over, and before any left the house, there was another matutu of about two hours; then a short intermission before the sacrament meeting, in which three children were blessed, and a good meeting enjoyed. Then Sunday was over with them and the Sunday garments quickly gave place to pareus and working clothes by those who were at home, and a lively passing to and fro ensued in making ready for the feast, the most elaborate that we have seen in either of those two villages except at conference times.

A small table was set at the upper end of the house for us, but their food was spread down on a thick layer of banana leaves. Three or four men were the waiters, and such huge pans of poe as were brought in! and great handfuls of the sticky stuff dropped down in front of each one. There were four kinds of poe, baked pies, fresh meat, several kinds of fish, and some salads, and two five-gallon oil-cans of cold water for their drink. They do not put food on the table, or on the matting and let each one eat from it as they want, but put a portion before each one, and that is theirs; what they do not eat, they gather up and take with them.

Besides the two branches, there were many visitors present, among whom were Elia and wife from Amanu; Hotu, and one or two others from Manihi; two from Arutua, and several from Makatea, and other places also were represented.

So it was a day to be remembered, and the day was fair until we got half way home, when the full clouds could withhold no longer, and again the heavy rain descended. To-day a heavy sea is rolling in from the north, which brings the creek up to high water mark every ten minutes all the afternoon.

We are glad to learn that the Arutua Saints are getting quite a number of pearls. One brother, Parapu —, is here at Taronu, who said he had sold fourteen hundred dollars worth and came down to get a boat built, and had paid for it in advance.

Personally, I am as busy as I can be in making preparation for our Christmas tree, and I feel more cheerful and joyous in that work than at any previous time here. We expect many English-speaking friends to be in attendance.

I am so thankful to say that I am not lonesome since our coworkers have left. I was anticipating being very lonesome for a while at least, for Sr. Gilbert had been right near us in Taronu for two months, and we had been together so much. I knew how dimly lonesome I was when Bro. and Sr. Case left. We were not left all alone in the mission when Bro. and Sr. Peterson left, so did not feel it so much, though Lillie and I had spent our last week together in a very jolly and pleasant way; therefore I was feeling blue one day before Laura left, when suddenly a feeling came over me that seemed to raise me up, made me feel taller, clearer, and better, and the unspoken words, "You shall not be lonesome; your work will be your company, and you shall have joy in it," came plainly to me and took all feeling of dreariness away.

Heretofore, I was always lonesome on Sunday afternoons, after all the services were over; but since that assurance was given, I have not had one lonesome Sunday, although the program for the day is changed, there being now a priesthood meeting in the afternoon instead of prayer meeting which takes Joseph from me, so that I am all alone. But not having much time to read during the week of late, I take HERALDS and Ensigns and drop into my hammock and enjoy the hour.

Later.—Mail arrived yesterday. Good news from loved ones of our own family, and many others, that cheers us and imparts renewed courage to take up our own little crosses in life and press forward with more zeal, while we sympathize with and pray for those whose crosses are far greater.

To Sr. D. A. Anderson I will say, Your letter rekindled the missionary spirit within me, and forgetting that our day was far spent, there came a longing in my heart for just such a position as is yours, where honest hearts desired and appreciated the gospel, and where one has the use of their mother tongue to make it known.

I find that my caution in regard to mail-matter did not read as I intended. There should be nothing in rolls of magazines or newspapers that constitute a parcel. That apart from what might be enclosed in an envelope, should be sent as a parcel. So far as I know, the laws governing the post-office departments are the same here as elsewhere, but the officers are more rigid about any infringement upon those laws. Again, remember, dear Saints, that a double-weight letter, with a two-cent stamp affixed, costs us eighteen cents of French money when it gets here,—eight cents more than the first cost would have been, and French money is very scarce.

A happy Christmas to all.

Work in the Field.

After leaving the Saints at Theodore, Alabama, we went across the country with Bro. J. L. Booker to the Three Rivers, Mississippi, Branch, where we occupied two evenings in line of Sunday-school improvement. Considerable real, live interest seemed to be manifested by some and we are hopeful that good was accomplished. They assured us that some changes would be made with a view to improvement of their school.

In this section of the country are some conditions to contend with not found in all places. A very large proportion of the Saints are dependent upon public work for their support, and that is chiefly lumbering. They are here one week and somewhere else the next. Attendance is necessarily very irregular and the personnel of the schools constantly changing. This makes improvement very difficult. Further than this there are so many that see no necessity of improvement or work of any kind, for that matter, that it is not only hard for the few faithful ones to keep the work alive, but it is discouraging in the extreme. But other than the difficulty of a constantly changing school, the conditions are most propitious for good work.

The weather and roads are always favorable and we see little to prevent making a success if the proper effort were put forth by all or any fair proportion of the Saints. It makes it quite difficult for the few faithful ones to carry on the work as they see it should be done. But they are earnestly trying and to some extent succeeding. Under the circumstances they have done well. May they be blessed.

Our next stop was at Bay Minette, Alabama, where a week ago we failed in our appointment owing to a wreck on the railroad delaying our train for about seven hours. We arrived just in time, but owing to the uncertainty of our arrival, the house was not opened up. They have a nice large chapel here, well seated and otherwise comfortable, and a branch of about eighty members, but no Sunday-school. They had one once, but it lapsed. There are enough Saints in easy access to the church to make a nice school, and we hope that the school may be revived or reorganized and carried on as we are sure it can be.

There is too much to be gained by both the individuals and the branch to afford to let it pass. It is needed by the children and the adults. It is needed by the Saint and the sinner. It is needed by all.

It will build up the branch work, and where there is no school, it is almost certain to need much building. A live school assures a live branch if there is a branch at all. And a live branch will have a live school. They go hand in hand and that is as it should be.

We occupied two evenings and worked hard; but to no avail. We can see no results whatever from the effort. We wish that there might be, but we have no faith that there will be. We did the best we could and leave the results with Him that knoweth the hearts of men. Some day, we hope, the Saints there will awaken to the fact that upon them rests a sacred responsibility. There is a duty they must perform if they would gain the reward that is laid up for the righteous and faithful. Some day, we hope, they will lay hold of the work in no uncertain way and move it on to completion and perfection, that many honest souls in their midst may be helped to see the light of truth and, with them, have reason to rejoice over a work well done. May the good Lord take care of his own.

The General Conventions.

As the new year dawns upon us, we are made aware that there are but three short months till the General Conventions of both the Sunday-school Association and the Religio are upon us. The conference year will have closed and a new one to begin. We will, perhaps, look over the results of the year's work with mingled feelings of joy and regrets,—joyous for the good we may have accomplished and the blessings we may have received, and regretting that we have neglected awaiting opportunities or have not done what we might have done. We can always look back and see many mistakes. Some of them we could not avoid, but many of them could have been foreseen and avoided by using due diligence and earnestness in that phase of our work. And the things we do not do often cause us more remorse that the mistakes we make when trying to do what we may find to be done. Hence a concluding thought: It is better to try even though we frequently blunder, than to hesitate to perform a duty through fear of mistake. It is many times better to try and blunder than entirely to neglect our obligations to others.

Will our reports bring any of these conditions to mind? Will we find the footings of our accounts satisfactory to ourselves? These are questions that it is well to keep in mind throughout the year. They may stimulate us to more and better efforts. There are few persons but would like to do better than they do. Begin now to make your report.

As all may be aware, the next General Conference and the General Convention will be held in the temple at Kirtland, Ohio, in April, 1904. This will be an excellent chance for our Eastern and Canadian brethren and sisters to attend, a privilege many of them have never enjoyed. We suggest that you begin now to plan to attend. It will be one of "the days of your lifetime," a profit to you as a church worker, and also to your school and district. One could scarcely attend one of these general gatherings and not have his understanding of the work broadened, his estimation of it heightened, and his love for it greatly increased. You will return to your homes fondly cherishing the new acquaintances you will form, and with your heart full of love and enthusiasm for the work to a degree you probably have not had before. We shall indeed be pleased to meet you there.

It is very probable that the work will open with Religio business on Saturday afternoon, April 2, the Sunday-school Convention, Monday afternoon, April 4, closing with a night session Tuesday. General Conference will assemble at ten o'clock on the 6th. Watch further notices for definite announcements concerning time, railroad rates, board, etc. All will be given as soon as the arrangements are completed.

Letter Department.

VALENTINE, Nebraska, January 1, 1904.

Editors Herald: This is a town of about eleven hundred inhabitants and there has been only one sermon preached here and that was by Bro. Gamet. We got the Presbyterian church for him and a lady of that Church volunteered to play the organ and lead the singing. I have heard several speak in praise of his sermon. I believe good could be done here if the people could hear.

I am many times strengthened by reading letters and sermons in HERALD and Ensign. I go to church once in awhile, but it don't satisfy and I always hear something to take exceptions to. My desire is to live a worthy Saint and to this end I humbly ask your prayers.

JULIA C. SHEPARD.

GOOSE CREEK, West Virginia, December 12, 1903.

Editors Herald: During the late General Conference I received from Elder O. J. Tary, of Wheeling, West Virginia, propositions for debate with one Ira C. Moore, of the Church of Christ, that read as follows: First: "The Church with which I, O. J. Tary, stand identified, known by me and my brethren as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is in fact the church of Christ in doctrine, faith, and practice, as left perfected by the apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ." Second: "Joseph Smith, the reputed prophet and author of the Book of Mormon, was an imposter, and the Book of Mormon is a fraud." Third: "The Church with which I, Ira C. Moore, stand identified, known by me and my brethren as the Church of Christ, is in fact the church of Christ in doctrine, faith, and practice, as left perfected by the apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ."

Bro. Tary, being an employee of the post-office in Wheeling, did not have the time to enter upon a discussion and requested that I furnish a defender of the faith. Elder S. W. L. Scott was selected, and feeling he had some right to say what he should defend, he changed the first proposition so that the closing part would read: "and is in harmony with the Scriptures in faith, in doctrine, practice, and organization." And in the second proposition changed "author" to "translator." On returning the propositions I insisted that if the debate took place in Wheeling before our congregation, "that he first debate before his own congregation" in Barriekville.

Mr. Moore has never replied to this, to date. Subsequently he challenged Bro. Godby to debate the same propositions as had been submitted to Bro. Tary. Bro. Godby accepted and agreed to meet him in Washburn. Ere the time arrived he was transferred to Virginia and wrote me saying: "You will have to furnish a man to meet him." Bro. R. M. Elvin being available he agreed to care for our interests. Mr. Moore wrote, November 13, that he was willing and would "try to give Mr. Elvin more notoriety than he cared for." Being in that part of the State I thought perhaps Bro. Elvin would need help in caring for that "notoriety," so joined him enroute to the field of battle. Bro. J. F. Goodrich was on hand to act as moderator, and Mr. Dara Moore represented his brother in the same capacity. Two sessions per day, one at ten o'clock in the forenoon, the other at half past six in the evening, were agreed upon.

On the evening of November 26, the conflict opened. Bro. Elvin opened in a speech of one hour defining the points mentioned in propositions,—showing organization, doctrine, faith, and practice of the primitive church; that an apostasy was clearly mentioned in the Scriptures. He quoted copiously from history, especially from leading men of the Christian Church. He then quoted prophecies showing there was to be a restoration of the gospel in the last days, and among all the reformers not one claimed angel ministry until Mr. Smith.

Mr. Moore accepted the scripture showing apostasy of the Church, but claimed the "truth never has apostatized;" it has power when found by any one and believed, to make a Christian of one. The truth had not changed because the people apostatized. He claimed that the "new covenant" of Jeremiah 31: 31-34, was fulfilled in Christ. The days of "these kings," in Daniel 2: 44; 7: 23-24, means at the time Jesus was crucified.

Bro. Elvin next quoted abundantly from the Bible to show that all the officers claimed were in the New Testament church, and that the "practice" of the two churches was the same. Mr. Moore was guilty of several blunders along here. "Apostle E. L. Kelley wrote Presidency and Priesthood." He quotes from D. H. Bays' Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism, page 82, Kelley's "detector for true or false coin." He was a "careful student of the Book of Mormon" and it "does not teach the laying on of hands;" "does not mention these officers." The Church was organized April 6, 1830, with but six members and the highest officers were elders "till 1835."

Bro. Elvin called attention to the fact that not one man has ever appeared upon the platform who has not resorted to falsehood and misrepresentation. Bays in quoting from Presidency and Priesthood, page 49, 50, leaves out words, and in one place, eight lines; in another, four lines; changes the punctuation and garbles the text. He read from preface to "Truth Defended" to show that Mr. Bays was a confessed infidel. He reminded him that E. L. Kelley was not an apostle, and did not write the book claimed. Bro. Elvin read from Book of Mormon to show that the laying on of hands was taught, first for giving the Holy Ghost, Moroni 2: 1; second, ordaining, Alma 4: 1; Moroni 3: 1; third, blessing, Nephi 8: 5; fourth, healing, Book of Mormon 4: 7. He then quoted, to show that officers were mentioned in the Book of Mormon, similar to those in the New Testament church.

Mr. Moore introduced a syllogism like this: 1. "Any church claiming to be the church of Christ that does not have a chief apostle and high priest with two associate counselors, a quorum of twelve apostles, seventy elders, other elders, bishops, priests, teachers, deacons, high priests, and evangelists in it as living beings now, is not the church of Christ. 2. But the church that was 'regularly ordained' April 6, 1830, with only six members, had no other officers in it than two elders for five years after it started. 3. Therefore it was not the church of Christ, and its claim to being such is a false one." Bro. Elvin showed the fallacy of such argument: 1. It was based upon a falsehood. 2. There had been seventy-two baptized before that date. 3. Several ordinations occurred that day, and scores of men were set apart during the first five years.

Bro. Elvin used one hundred and fifty-six quotations from the Bible, showing the harmony of the Reorganized Church with that of the New Testament.

I now present the "deadly parallel" that was shown:

5. Monogamy in marriage.

Not a point was successfully refuted by Mr. Moore, and the Church came from under the fire, "clear as the moon and fair as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners."

On the second proposition Bro. Elvin gave the Bible rule for detecting false prophets: Deuteronomy 13: 1-3; 18: 21, 22; 1 John 4: 1-3. Then quoted Book of Mormon, page 3, to show the object of "the book, that it is for the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ."

Leslie's Method with the Deists, pages 3 and 4, was introduced as containing a proper rule to govern in this investigation: "(1) To lay down such marks, as to the truth of matters of fact in general, that, where they all meet, such matters of fact can not be false; and (2) To show that they all do meet in the matters of fact of Moses and of Christ; and do not meet in those reputed of Mahomet and of the heathen deities, nor can possibly meet in any impostor whatsoever. (3) The marks are these: (a) That the fact be such as men's outward senses can judge of. (b) That it be performed publicly, in the presence of witnesses. (c) That there be public monuments and actions kept up in memory of it. (d) That such monuments and actions shall be established and commence at the time of the fact."

The two first of these marks make it impossible for any false fact to be imposed upon men at the time when it was said to be done, because every man's senses would contradict it. In harmony with this rule, he showed that three and eight witnesses saw and handled the plates of the Book of Mormon; that the general annual conference commemorates the organization of the Church on April 6, 1830. The Kirtland Temple is a standing monument of the events in church history.

An array of prophecies was introduced. (Doctrine and Covenants 1: 4.) How did Joseph Smith know he would have a church, and that the gospel should be taught before kings and rulers by the weak and simple? (1 Corinthians 1: 26-29.) The same kind of men called by Jesus in his day, have been called in this. Doctrine and Covenants 85: 25 was next introduced. Facts for the Times, page 137, was quoted to show the alarming increase of earthquakes; page 145, cyclones; page 146, storms, lightnings, waterspouts; page 148, tidal waves. Joseph Smith prophesied they should come, and they have. The revelation of December 25, 1832, on the rebellion, was then presented and its literal fulfillment shown. The statement of the angel that "your name shall be had for good and evil among all nations," was explained. Mr. Moore never referred to these prophecies, and no effort was made to destroy the effect of them.

The "knowledge which these records contain shall go to all nations" was shown to be a true revelation, and "many shall receive it" was another link in the chain of evidence showing Joseph Smith to have been a true prophet of God. Book of Mormon, page 103: "The blood of the Saints shall cry from the ground" and the Haun's Mill massacre held the attention of the audience and brought from Mr. Moore the statement that "he did not approve of the terrible persecution in Missouri, or even the way they used them in West Virginia," thus admitting the force of the prophecy.

The attack of Mr. Moore consisted in trying to show that revelation ended with the New Testament, therefore the Book of Mormon could not be true. The conflict waxed warm, but it was clearly shown that "prophets" were yet to stand on the earth and prophesy. Revelation 11: 1-12; Ezekiel 37: 15-24; and Isaiah 29, bore the brunt of the battle for some time.

Mr. Moore claimed the fulfillment of Isaiah was recorded in 2 Kings 24, 25; but "the words of the book which men deliver to one that is learned" and "the book is delivered to him that is not learned" proved "a marvelous work, and a wonder" that the sophistry of Mr. Moore could not remove. The visit of Martin Harris to Professor Anthon and his statement concerning the interview, came in for an airing, and again the Doctrine and Dogmas of Mormonism was shown to be dishonest in its presentation of the case. Nephi states "the language of my father, which consists of the learning of the Jews, and the language of the Egyptians."

A beautiful chart having the Book of Mormon characters with the ancient Hebrew and Egyptian in the "deadly parallel" settled the matter.

There is another instance where they have to resort to falsehood and misrepresentation in order to make a case against the Book of Mormon. The last testimony of the three witnesses, who died as they had lived, certifying to the fact that they saw the angel with the plates, and heard the voice of God commanding them to bear record of it, had its effect upon the audience. No attempt was made to destroy the testimony of the witnesses.

I must give Mr. Moore credit for being very gentlemanly in his speeches. There was no ill feeling manifest on either side, and the splendid spirit of the disputants was noticeable in the audience. My heart was filled with rejoicing because of the able defense of the work, and I felt like singing,

"We thank thee, O God, for a prophet,
To guide us in these latter days."

On the last proposition Mr. Moore said "the church was set up on Pentecost at nine o'clock in the morning." "There was no authority in the officers, it was in the word." He had no authority to preach and baptize. The New Testament was his authority. He had no church. He was one of the church. Apostolic office ended when they wrote the last "will" of Jesus Christ. However, they need organization now, so have bishops, overseers, elders, evangelists, deacons, to carry on the work. They had the "will." It had not been lost, and they "do it" and "it makes us the church, the called-out ones."

Bro. Elvin showed the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ to be the preaching of John. (Mark 1: 1-5.) Jesus was to build the church and every time a man is added to the church, the building is going on. The church was built upon the rock of revealed truth that Jesus is the Christ. (Matthew 16: 13-18; Luke 6: 47-49.)

If the church began on Pentecost, then Christ was not in the church, nor were the twelve apostles in the church. Jesus was a member of, and preaching in, the church. He was baptized into the church (John 3: 22, 23, 26); gave gifts unto the church: apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry. (Ephesians 4: 8-13.)

If the Christian Church can work with dead apostles, they can work with dead evangelists, bishops, elders, overseers, and deacons. Mr. Campbell was baptized June 2, 1812, by a Mr. Luse, a Baptist. His "restoration of primitive Christianity was to produce a mighty revolution." They were "built on the Bible alone." It soon became necessary to add to the "Bible alone" the Christian System, a "Manual of Devotion," "Ministers' Manual," containing prayers, outlines of sermons, etc., for special occasions. In their reorganization of the Church, they left out the baptism of the Holy Spirit, the leading officers, apostles, prophets, etc.; have no use for the laying on of hands for blessing, healing, confirming, and as they had nothing to impart, it wasn't necessary for ordination. A bottle of corn salve appeared to be their only gift, with an, "I dare you to drink it, sir!" Bro. Elvin asked if he knew of any quotation in the Bible to make him swallow poison? Mr. Moore had placed himself in the class with those who said, "Come down from the cross, and we will believe," and in the language of the Master said: "Get thee behind me, Satan."

Mr. Moore's utter failure to identify his Church as being in harmony with the New Testament in organization, doctrine, faith, and practice, was patent to all unprejudiced minds. Their refusal to permit us to occupy the church one half the time on Sunday, did not gain them any friends. Bro. Elvin entered the debate with perfect confidence, and the presence of the Spirit constantly witnessed that God was caring for his work. We left Washburn with the good will of the people, and many invitations to return and preach.

With thankful hearts we render praise unto God, from whom all blessings flow. In the conflict, BURLINGTON, Iowa, January 1, 1904.

Editors Herald: In reading the Burlington Hawk-Eye, among the "chief events" I find, "March 26, interesting skin-grafting at the Burlington hospital" mentioned. As my mind looks over the past year, which was a very stormy one in my life, the heavens seem to brighten somewhat at the end, and the coming year is hopeful. I remember also the sympathy manifested in Lamoni, as much as every other place, and especially among the ministry; and not only Saints, but other very numerous friends, and the many prayers offered up for the boy. It becomes my duty to let them know the outcome of the case, for many are inquiring.

On August 26, 1902, my boy, working in a basket factory, fell into a vat of boiling water, and in trying to get himself out, he rolled around and so scalded the whole body, from ankle to neck, that very little hope was had for him for a number of days and weeks. On the third day I received a vision which told me and my wife that he would recover, which was so distinct that we had full confidence in it, however hopeless other people were.

Bro. McKiernan administered, but progress of healing was very slow; at least we thought so. After a while proud flesh set in, and it would heal no more, while we prayed continually. But we thought it necessary to work also.

Doctor Sherman, who came here from Lamoni, was recommended to me by Bro. Fred A. Smith, who at that time was at our house. The Doctor recommended skin-grafting, and at first fifty-six people gave their skin to the boy, but with little success. After that my daughter Lulu gave herself up to take the skin off both limbs to give to the boy; but even this was not successful; for the condition of the boy was very poorly.

Taking him home for rest and strength for two weeks, he improved wonderfully in body. Then the Doctor, in his never-ending hope and courage, took him again and put skin all over his body, and was successful in doing so, and the boy was covered with skin in a short time.

He is now improving and we are hopeful that he will yet be useful, to the glory of God to whom we feel thankful. Much credit belongs to Doctor Sherman for his untiring efforts, and for the good Spirit which made him instrumental in performing good. May the Lord bless all the people who assisted in this good work, here and everywhere, by their prayers or by sacrifice, for the Spirit of the Lord worketh in all. To him be the glory.

The branch here is in a very hopeful condition under the care of Bro. Elbert Smith. We have put in a furnace lately, and also gas-lighting arrangements. Congregations are growing.

I remain, obliged to God and humanity,

Editors Herald: All goes fairly well in the old Gallands Grove District at present. What is hardest for us is so many of the Saints moving to Missouri and leaving some of the branches weak or practically broken up. We are still pressing on and doing what we can to make more Saints, to go to Missouri if they want to and are ready; also to care for the remnants that are left.

From Over the Border.

Editors Herald: Months have come and sped fleetly since I addressed you under the above heading, now perhaps familiar to not a few, not for their excellency, but because they are equally interested in the prosperity of the only true Church in all the world. Yes, those months have gone into the dream-land, carrying with them a precious freight of opportunities, some improved, bringing great changes, lifting some nearer to God, and pushing others farther away. Formerly they found me in Huron County, Ontario, where I put in one eventful year, an epoch to me; now in Manitoba, over one thousand miles northwest, on the rural prairie, smiled upon by the same Sol, pursued by the same God who ever keeps in speaking distance and with whom I strive to keep on speaking terms.

This is Christmas morning. It was thirty degrees below zero last night. This morning the windows are beautifully coated. Oceans of candies and nuts are within tempting reach, but I know it is better to go on in the same even way, my every-day mode of living. It is my hope that those I left behind are no less merry than myself. I am thankful for plenty, and that I have a good home and am so well provided for in this lone west; thankful that I have a disposition this morning that inclines me to God. He is as near me here as in Ontario, or in the branches where I have been. Happy am I that I am a Saint, a defender of the right, disposed only to do right.

I landed in Winnipeg, November 16, stayed near there for a couple of weeks where I had daily visions of wolves and prairie-chickens, a novelty to me. Thence I came near eighty miles farther west, to Trehern, where I am at the home of Bro. and Sr. Wilson late from Cleveland. Here also is Sr. Leabo, of Portland, Oregon, Sr. Wilson's mother, most ripe in years, and an old-time Saint, baptized in Nauvoo by Joseph the Seer. She is a sister of Elder Albert Haws, who wrote "Sabbatarian Theories," and who is now dead. What an interesting history she has! How much she has seen! What an eventful life! Her father was Peter Haws whose name occurs in the Doctrine and Covenants, was an elder in the early Church, a friend of Joseph, a man of wealth and a liberal contributor to the smarting poverty and needs of his brethren in those memorable days. Sr. Leabo says they lived across the street from Hyrum at the time of the martyrdom; that before his departure, Joseph came in to say a last farewell, kissing the children, herself with the rest. She was then nine years old. She tells of the tide of grief that swept over Nauvoo, the pall that rose from Carthage to settle vapor-like upon their once happy city, the prowling mobs, the evacuation in the winter, the crossing of the ice, the cold encampment, the usurpation of Brigham, the exodus across the plains, and the introduction of polygamy. After a brief sojourn in Utah they, disgusted with the corrupting changes, left the place and Brigham far behind, moving elsewhere to and fro as sheep without a shepherd and scattered by the wolf of polygamy. For years Sr. Leabo lived in Oregon, where she learned of the Reorganization and was rebaptized at Kirtland with Bro. and Sr. Wilson less than two years ago. Wasn't I pleased this morning when she handed me five dollars and said, "This is your Christmas present?"

These three are the only Saints for many miles. Bro. Wilson has a half section of land here, is an auctioneer and draws a royalty from a patent of his executed in Cleveland. He will hold the priesthood if faithful, is a good reasoner, and a deliberate mind. Sr. Wilson who was educated in a western academy, yet less than thirty years of age, is in language full as the fullest, talks easily, glibly, and with the pathos of her recitations will draw tears from a stone. They had done much, paved the way ere I came by handing out tracts and literature; yet no more than they ought to do, no more than all Saints ought to do. Wasn't I pleased this morning when I sat down to the breakfast table and found beside my plate a Christmas box containing a pair of felt shoes,—more, too.

I have been preaching nightly to interested audiences ranging from about nine to forty-seven, average about sixteen I should say. Never have I had greater liberty, more power, neither have I ever felt nearer to God. Obstacles do arise, but the fragrance of elysian fields yonder, of those Eden savannas, is stronger than the odor of opposition, of temptation, of difficulty, and displaces their stench.

We have about one hundred members in Manitoba and the territories. Already I have had admission into the columns of two papers, one a Winnipeg daily, the other the town paper here. It is great out this way for foreigners and settlements of foreigners. There are settlements of Mennonites, Mormons, Doukhobors. If possible I want to visit the two latter peoples in time to come. If so I will report to the papers.

My collaborer, J. L. Mortimer, is far northward. What he is accomplishing I know not, but I know he is not the one who will be idle. I rather expect him to join me here in two or three weeks whence we will move westward enroute for Alberta.

A peculiarity of these western lands is that no rats are to be found, though many mice. Prices are generally higher than in Ontario on everything but vegetables and flour. Potatoes are abundant. People think no more of giving you a dollar than fifty cents east. Nothing can be bought for less than five cents in Trehern, which is on the Canadian Pacific Railroad and has a population of about one thousand. My appetite is greatly increased since coming here and they have everything that is common east.

Farther west the shrubbery is less, more prairie-like. It would be regrettable to exchange these comforts and warm hearts for cold, flinty ones, these dear faces of smiles for scowls, their liberality for stinginess and denial, their sympathy for hate. However, as I have always found friends wherever I have gone so I will again, always, always so long as I am on the watch-tower of duty. The task is stupendous. There's much to be done; all can work, and room enough for all to march without infringement on each other's lines. So let us all press ahead, onward, "on to the victory" as saith the Seer of choice, the prophet of the latter days.

So many pass away into the oblivion of mystery without hearing a sound, much less a sermon, much less the fullness of the gladsome restoration that I think strongly now and anon that there is either going on, or is to be, a great work on the other shore. Now, with tongues and dreams and visions as through a smoked glass, we darkly behold and faintly see the dramas acted on these mystic stages, those scenes over which the stoutest brains have stumbled, but we rest assured much is kept back, wrapped in mystery, in the shroud of reservation, behind a curtain to be drawn when we will realize our expectations and behold what we expected not. With all that is written I have my awe of death, the awful passage, the change of changes, that lays prostrate alike on common level the tyrant and the serf, the patriarch and the bud of fragrance prattling from its mother's knees.

God will no doubt have everything the best we can conceive—better. Nevertheless we long for some particular things,—the retention of our individualities and a recollection of the individualities of others. Of all that is to be seen, to be sensed, I can think of nothing that will give me more joy than to behold all those faces upon which I have looked in earth life and learned to love. How nice it is to think upon these things. We falter if we lose sight of the prize at the end of the race. Pray for us in this field, brethren. My permanent address is Selkirk, Ontario.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

TREHERN, Manitoba.

BEEVILLE, Texas, December 31, 1903.

Editors Herald: As I reflect upon the past I feel sad. The old year is breathing its last, another day will dawn, and thus will begin another year. In my declining years I feel sad because with those years my record for good seems also to grow feeble and dim. Then I look out in imaginations as the new year dawns, my hopes brighten, my aspirations are raised, and I feel like I can renew my energies and with the birth of the coming year resolve to make a better record than I have in the old. With the help of the Holy Spirit that has been promised, and diligence on my part, I believe I can do this, and I press on for the mark of our high calling in Christ Jesus.

Often I have nearly fainted in the wonderful work of the angel message to man; have often found myself doubting and as often found my refuge in the Scriptures. When skepticism returns to me and that demon troubles my rest and disturbs my peace and confidence in God, I then bow myself in prayer to that God who has promised to give to all men liberally. I turn the leaves of the prophetic records and view the history of what has come after and observe how literally history corresponds with what those men of God told, and seems to me that I can never doubt again. But sometimes the Devil seems to know the way to my weakness on every occasion, or, in other words, there is a devil for every purpose. When I feel strong then I am weak.

The truth is, dear Saints, this work is a warfare, and if we win we must fight. We have a valiant General, who has conquered death, hell, and the grave, and if we follow him we will wear the crown. There have many gone on to victory. Let us imitate their courage and virtues. Let us never furl the flag until the war is ended and our names are written upon the pages of the just.

Beloved brethren and friends, as I near the end, my hope grows brighter in the great promises of God, while this earth's toils and pleasures fade away, grow dim, and are lost to sight, and the charity of God is still extended, yes, I see his hand still stretched out. His arm is not shortened and he is still willing to seek and save those who love and serve him.

I left home in Sweetwater, Texas, over five months ago and have done what my strength would allow in the mission,—not as much as I wanted, but the time is not to be recalled. I have traveled and preached some in Bandera County. Returning to San Antonio, I was caught in the quarantine for over one month. Had the pleasure of associating with Saints and responded to their desire in the way of preaching and other duties as called upon by their presiding elder, J. P. Neal. Left them seemingly in good spirits, and made my way to Beeville, where my daughter, Mrs. W. H. Ferguson, and family were anxiously awaiting my arrival after the long siege of quarantine throughout Western Texas against the yellow fever. I, too, was glad when the end came. It is here as with the rest of my family, they do more for me than I am worthy to receive. Indeed, it has been the same with the Saints and friends in all my travels since leaving my home, for which I am very grateful to them and my heavenly father.

I will soon return to San Antonio, stopping there for a day or two; then to Cleburne, stopping at Austin, the capital of the great state of Texas, preaching as opportunities and my strength will allow. Our missionaries pass through that great city every year, and if, since 1846 or 1847, when my father preached there, a Latter Day Saint minister has ever preached in that city, I do not know of it. It may be that H. C. Smith preached there some years ago.

The Home for Confederate Soldiers is in Austin, and as my lot was cast with them in the four years of the Rebellion, I have hoped for the opportunity of preaching to them. There are some who were associated with me in the wildest career of my life. I want to see them, anyhow, as we were shoulder to shoulder where we could all but see into the cannon's mouth amid the dying groans of our comrades and the shouts of the enemy, with the dead strewn around us. Whether the cause was just or unjust is not the question now. I want to meet them all on the other shore. Great and noble men were in the Southern ranks. This is no less true of the Northern men.

I know from experience that the love of God will bind men's hearts together that have once been engaged in deadly strife. Is not this the true fellowship of Christ, that we love one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath loved us?

I shall go from Austin to Cleburne where I hope to preach. I wish to reach home by the middle of February, and will perhaps remain in that country a few months. I hope to be continued in the work in April, as I feel that woe is me if I preach not this gospel of the kingdom.

Yours in the faith,

TEMPLE, Ohio, December 31, 1903.

Editors Herald: Since May 16 I have tried to be at the post of duty as "temple attendant." During the year there have been over fourteen hundred visitors. Many who came with much prejudice in their minds against us as a people, went away with less if it was safe to judge from their acts and words.

I have learned that not all the people in the world know the distinction between the "Reorganization" and the Utah order. I have made it a special point to state the main points of difference as plainly as possible. This position has been a school to me; while I have tried to instruct others I have been instructed, for many talented people have visited the Temple.

I was somewhat timid when first taking holding of the peculiar work here as attendant, doubting my ability to be adequate for the duties as such; but timidity has left me on that line and I would just as lieve see President Roosevelt and his Cabinet come as anybody else. I find that human beings are about all of the same material—flesh and blood; and here we are brought face to face with all classes nearly, high, low, rich, and poor, Jews and Gentiles. Many say our faith or doctrine is grand, but seem sorry that we are called "Mormons," however, that is one of the inevitables.

Since the Temple Branch has been organized, the meetings have as a rule been from good to excellent. I feel keenly the responsibility of presiding, as conditions have been and still are peculiar here. We believe the time will come when there will be a branch of renown raised up in this place. The Spirit so indicates.

Brn. John H. Lake, U. W. Greene, and E. P. Schmidt are at home enjoying holidays. Bro. Lake has given us two good sermons of late, and Bro. Schmidt one. We wish to use them when at home, for when they are away the work falls on the local talent and branch officers.

The Sabbath-school is moving along nicely under the zealous care of Superintendent Melly Russell and her assistant, Janie Powell. The Christmas Eve exercises by the Sunday-school were pleasant indeed, though many were prevented from attending because of a measles epidemic and bad weather. The barrel-breaking resulted in a twenty-six dollar Christmas offering.

Recently the Religio was reorganized and it starts off encouragingly. We trust the interest may not wane. The writer is president; assistant, Sr. Ella R. Devore, who is now with us, and as willing as ever to lend a helping hands along these lines.

The past year's history has been one of wonderful detail. Possibly 1904 will be equally as prominent with wonders. Time moves on and God is moving his work. We are all gaining by experience, for progress is born of experience, and I feel confident the Church is building carefully, and that the work will abide.

Severe winter has been in control here about Kirtland for near two months, snowing more or less nearly every day for about six weeks.

Wishing you all a Happy New Year, I remain,
Your brother in hope,
L. R. DEVORE.

BALDKNOB, Arkansas, January 1, 1904.

Editors Herald: Ever since I have reached the years of accountability I have tried to live right, but am not satisfied to stand still. I have made a new covenant with my heavenly Father at the beginning of this new year, with his help to make a far better record than ever before, as we are commanded in Matthew 5: 48: "Be ye therefore perfect even as your Father in heaven is perfect." I realize my imperfections and the necessity of trying to become more perfect even if I never reach the stage of perfection, and surely it is not impossible for any one to become perfect or we would not be so commanded. So I hope to become as near perfect as possible, not only for my own self-interest, but that others may be benefited thereby.

We have no meetings now, but intend to organize a Sunday-school in the spring and we hope and pray it will be a success. Bro. D. R. Baldwin and Bro. H. O. Smith were with us in the fall; had some fine preaching. No new additions to our branch, but surely some of the seed sown will find lodgment in good soil. Several expressed themselves as being well pleased with the preaching.

Bro. H. O. preached the funeral sermon of Sr. Camilla Gay, who left a family of three and many friends to mourn. She was a sister-in-law of mine and a niece of my husband. Her little girls are in my care at present. They have both been blessed; the oldest one, Gladys, was healed of paralysis in her right arm through administration by Bro. Ward over two years ago. May God bless the little ones.

Dear Saints, I will relate our experience in paying tithing. We do not advise any to wait till they are able to pay tithing. We paid five dollars as our first tithing and it did not seem that we were able to spare it as we were not entirely out of debt. But we paid it willingly and the next year we were more able to pay ten dollars than we were the five, and this year we were still more able to pay fifteen dollars than we were to pay the ten last year. It seems that when we began to pay our tithing we began to prosper and we hope to be able to pay twenty dollars at least next year and just as much more as we are able and to continue until we have paid all we owe on our home and stock.

We take the HERALD and Ensign and give them to others to read when we are through with them.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion,
Your sister in bonds,
BEULAH JOHNSON.

PROVIDENCE, Rhode Island.

Editors Herald: Providence Sunday-school is progressive these days. It recently held its first annual "bank breaking" for the Christmas offering, and realized about one hundred and sixty dollars. Bro. M. Gondolf's class was at the head of the list with forty-three dollars and fifty cents; Sr. Althina Joy's class second with thirty-six dollars; Bro. Daniel Joy's class third with twenty-eight dollars and Sr. Georgia Goff's class fourth with twenty-four dollars and sixty-five cents. The other seven classes had small amounts ranging from five dollars and forty-four cents to one dollar and forty-one cents.

Bro. Ed. Fox, Sr. Ada Sanford, and Sr. Georgia Goff had the bank-breaking program in charge. Sr. Ada read an original poem which was catchy and full of mirthful wit. Sr. Laura Fraser gave a nice selection at the piano.

Christmas tree and concert of the local school was held December 25 at five o'clock in the afternoon, Superintendent J. D. Suttill in charge, assisted by Bro. Otis Toombs. Bro. Adolf Leckney had the well-rendered musical program in charge and Sr. Laura Fraser assisted at the organ.

ARTHUR B. PIERCE.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, January 5, 1904.

Editors Herald: Our winter has come at last, or so it seems when one looks out this morning. Snow is lying about six inches deep in our streets,—the deepest we've had this winter. It is just what we need, and coming so silently, without a particle of wind, is not disagreeable. Thus far our winter has been very fine.

Patti, the great Patti, sang at the Tabernacle here last night. Did we hear her? No, prices were too high for us to indulge. The morning paper (Herald) says that it was Patti's ghost, and those who went to see and honor Patti for what she had been were not disappointed, but those who expected of her the same performance that she gave forty years ago were disappointed. In fact, the Herald characterizes it as "a pathetic incident, a funeral." Well, if we could officiate in our own funeral to the tune of tens of thousands of dollars each funeral, I don't know but we would be willing to indulge even in such events.

Well, what of Reed Smoot? Will he retain his seat? is often asked of us here. We are of the opinion that he should so do. Certainly there should be no personal fight made on him because he is a Mormon. That the Mormon people have broken the faith under which Utah was granted statehood, there can be no successful denial; but if they have, and anything is done about it, it should be in the disciplining of the body and not Reed Smoot. Of course, this would mean a hardship upon many constructively innocent members, but that is always the case when a body permits blind leaders to lead them into trouble. It seems to us that a people who openly avow a belief in a principle that logically leads to lawbreaking, and who uphold their leaders in such lawbreaking ought not to complain if the government under whose laws they hold their citizenship should refuse to permit them to exercise the right of franchise until they were converted to the moral standard recognized by those laws.

By the way, and while we are upon this subject, there is a statement or two often made here by that people, that are amusing to us. They tell us that polygamy will heal the nations of their social leprosy, and that under its regime here there were no seductions, but that since polygamous marriages have been prohibited by the nation, that they are suffering from this evil. That their fair daughters are betrayed and they are caused to mourn, etc. (That "etc." stands for a lot of lamentation along this same line.) Well, the amusing part comes in when we consider the claims in their bearing upon the case.

First, How can polygamy heal the nations when by their own declarations it is not for the nations, but only for the faithful few who obtain to the priesthood of the Mormon Church? Answer to the above conundrum can only be found in the fond hope expressed by one of their early leaders who declared that under this system the time would come when they (the Mormons) would have all the women and the world would have none. That, we presume, would solve the problem.

The second declaration and lament is even more amusing to one upon the outside than is the first. To this we ask, Why should polygamy be a protection to the virtue of the fair daughters of Mormonism? Is it because they are of such a character that their only safety from self is to be found in the marriage relation; or is it because the men who would be found as the husbands of many wives, are the ones who entice these fair maidens into a sin which the law calls adultery? Surely some of the passages always used by these men to prove that God sanctions polygamous marriages, would bear us out in this last conclusion: "If a man find a damsel that is a virgin, which is not betrothed and lay hold on her, and lie with her, and they be found, [italics mine,] . . . she shall be his wife; . . . he may not put her away."—Deuteronomy 25: 5. "And if a man entice a maid that is not betrothed, . . . he shall surely endow her to be his wife."—Exodus 22: 16. These and similar quotations are to be found in a book compiled by these people and published and "dedicated . . . to the especial use of the elders who are laboring in the ministry" of their Church.

O, Brother Editor! why can not they see that in these provisions made by Moses to protect womankind from being thrown on the world as common prostitutes, there is not a divine sanction to the crime committed, but only an effort to protect the innocent party against whom the crime has been committed? If only the "law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus" could reach these people and free them from this law of "sin and death"! How happy would we be for such a deliverance for "Israel in bondage"!

It was in line with this thought, and in following the advice of the wise man to "Answer a fool according to his folly," that when one high in authority in this Mormon Church made the above lamentation in our ears, we said to him, "The only difference between the then and now is that then you could cover up the seduction or betrayal of a maiden by a polygamous marriage, but now you are not permitted to do so."

Well, our Richfield discussion was a triumph for the cause of truth. Elders Hansen and Swenson were enabled by the help of the Spirit to carry every point. At least that is the way it looked to us. And to quote Elder I. J. Stewart (one of the principals for the Mormon Church), "The first night they knocked Bishop and me completely off of our pins. We were confounded. We did not know how to answer." And so little satisfied was this brother with his effort at denying the integrity of the Reorganization, that he begged for an extra half hour at the close of the first night; and then, when the affirmation of their Church was taken up, he never mentioned his church organization or doctrine,—put in his entire time ridiculing the Reorganization. And after the close of this proposition, when Elders Hansen and Swenson had refuted their claims and Elder Hansen in a masterly manner had summed up the evidence and conclusions to be drawn therefrom, they had to call upon Elder Andrew Jensen, church historian, to fix up their fences.

First they proposed that he—with us—be granted fifteen minutes each to speak upon the proposition, but when Bro. Jensen refused to say a word if we were to reply, they closed the discussion and meeting, and then called for "Bro. Jensen." Of course he responded, for now we could have no recourse, as it was in their building. Of course we challenged him to a public discussion with us, and of course he refused, and thus ended our Richfield discussion.

Brother Editor, we are more confident than ever of the strength of our position, and the declaration of a time coming when there will only be safety in Zion takes on a new signification to us. In the great and final conflict when error must be overthrown and truth triumphant, "Upon Zion will be a defense" and in Zion shall be found safety.

We were called to Plain City, Sunday last, January 3, to preach the funeral sermon of Edward Coy, a thirteen-year-old son of Bro. William H. and Sr. Eliza Coy. He was a good boy and the hearts of his parents and relatives are sore. We preached in Ogden chapel at night to a small audience of Saints and friends.

Salt Lake Mission Branch held a business-meeting and election of officers last night and the officers for the year are for president, Elder John Hall; presiding priest, Bro. James Conyers; presiding teacher, Bro. Kinghorn; presiding deacon, Bro. Erric Wallian; secretary, Sr. P. Higgins; treasurer, J. D. Wilson; organist, Sr. P. Higgins.

The ordinations of Bro. James Conyers to the office of priest and of Bro. Herman Wallian teacher and Bro. Erric Wallian deacon, were ordered and provided for and will be attended to at our forenoon meeting next Sunday.

The general health of the Saints here is quite good this winter, except for some who by reason of advanced age are more subject to the ills attendant upon the rigors of the winter months. Among them are Brn. Pettit and Barrows and Sr. Walker, who are confined to their rooms.

Holidays are past and we expect to move out again in the campaign of preaching. We have been resting during the holidays, that is, only doing what came our way. We enjoyed the Christmas exercises of the Sunday-school here and also a social on New Year's night given by the Religians. At present Elders Hansen and Swenson are in the city and the Saints are enjoying their association and ministrations. May this find HERALD force enjoying the New Year and may the work which we love have a triumphant season is my prayer.

LEOTI, Kansas, December 27, 1903.

Editors Herald: As I finished Bro. George H. Hilliard's sermon at Dow City, Iowa, how forcibly were my prayers answered again, as so many times before! How grand and sublime it is! This time I wanted a sermon with all of the parts of the gospel set forth, so I can give to the Methodist Episcopal minister here when he comes to see me. I always pray for them to preach pure gospel sermons, and they always do pretty well to pave the way for the full light.

How I long to have it preached in its fullness here, but my means are too limited to defray expenses, and so the HERALD and Leaves are my only preachers. Some Ensigns and Patriots were sent a long time ago. Many thanks for them. If some one would buy trimming, crochet work, or flowers, I will send some to them to help defray the expenses of tracts, Leaves, or on the Graceland debt. Who will buy and give me a chance to help? My means are limited. I love this gospel, and often ask what I can do to help all to hear.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. R. T. Walters wrote from Pana, Illinois, January 4: "I have just organized a branch here with thirty members. Two years ago last summer there was but one member here, and we were preaching from a dooryard, afterwards securing school grounds for grove-meetings. Most of the thirty were added by baptism."

L. H. Bertz, Cortland, Nebraska: "I hope some of the missionaries will come to this place and give us a few good gospel sermons. I am the only Saint here, but I will give an elder a place to stop. Hoping the work may prosper, and praying I may so live that I shall be one of those who will be found worthy."

Bro. J. F. Burton wrote from Papeete, Tahiti, December 16, 1903, that he and many of the natives there were expecting that Bro. J. W. Wight would stop there on his way from Australia to the United States. From the tone of Bro. Burton's letter we judge they were quite confident that Bro. Wight would make them a visit. He did not, however, but came directly to San Francisco, thence home. So the preparations to receive Bro. Wight were in vain. After speaking of these preparations, Bro. Burton wrote: "Emma is as busy as she can be, preparing for the Christmas tree. She expects several English speaking people to be present on Christmas Eve. While all this is going on the printer keeps steadily at work on the Doctrine and Covenants, and has as far as the seventy-fifth section printed, and expects to finish the printing by the last of January. I shall feel much relieved when it is done, and I shall be free to travel in the Tuamotus, and visit the branches up there. All things in Church matters here are moving along as usual."

Sr. W. S. Gunter wrote from Swedeburg, Nebraska, January 4, renewing for HERALD and Ensign. She wrote: "I should not like to be without the Church papers. They are very helpful. I loan them whenever I can find any one who wants to read them."

The Bishopric.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENTS.

The Saints and friends of Des Moines, Iowa, District, will please take notice that Bro. William Nirk, Bishop's agent of said district, has resigned the office of Bishop's agent in and for the same and upon the recommendation of Bro. Nirk and the missionary in charge, Frederick A. Smith, Bro. Wardell Christy has been appointed agent of the Bishopric beginning January 1, 1904. Bro. Christy's address is, Box 4, Dallas Center, Iowa.

We also take pleasure in recommending Bro. Christy to the Saints and friends of the district and are glad that he will be able in his work to reach all parts of the district and advise with the Saints with reference to their part of the labor connected with the gospel work. Every one in the district should do his or her part in aiding the cause, whether much or little, that all may be benefited and the work of Christ magnified.

Bro. William Nirk has served as agent faithfully and well in the office in the district for a number of years and it is only on account of his inability to travel in the district and give more attention to the work that he has asked that he be released from the office. The Bishopric extends special thanks to Bro. Nirk for his faithful and competent work in the past.

Respectfully submitted,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

LAMONI, Iowa, January 8, 1904.

In the districting of Oregon for the purpose of labor under the authority of Elder G. T. Griffiths, missionary in charge, that State has been divided into two districts: the District of Portland and the District of Southwestern Oregon. For the Portland District, Bro. S. B. Hartshorn, of Condon, Oregon, has been duly appointed Bishop's agent to act for the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in and for said district in place of Bro. N. T. Chapman, formerly agent for Oregon. Bro. Hartshorn's commission will extend from January 1, 1904.

We cheerfully recommend Bro. Hartshorn to the confidence of the Saints and friends of the Portland, Oregon, District. We are also sorry to lose the services of Bro. N. T. Chapman in this dividing up of districts as he was performing a good work in the office of agent for the Bishopric.

We trust Bro. Chapman will continue to aid financially in his part of the field, however, and the Lord will continue to bless his labors. His work has been fully appreciated by the Bishop in the past.

We have not as yet received the full name of the agent of the Southwestern Oregon District, which comprises the counties of Coos, Curry, Josephine, Jackson, and Douglas, nor his address. The address of S. B. Hartshorn is Condon, Oregon. We hope and trust the Saints of Oregon will remember these agents and see that their districts are represented on the financial and industrial side of the church work for the year.

In behalf of the Bishopric, I am,

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

Notices.

We propose to form a company to manufacture brick for paving, sidewalks, and building purposes, for the Saints and the market in general. Every Saint who is interested, and whose heart is in the building up of Zion ten dollars' worth, is hereby solicited to send at once his or her name and address, plainly written, to the address below, as being willing to put ten dollars into this business and become one of this company. The object is to manufacture bricks that the Saints may have brick at a reasonable price to build their homes; also to sell in the general market. This will give employment to quite a number of our people and will prevent the combination of manufacturers overcharging us for this commodity. Every brother or sister who will put ten dollars into this business will be helping his neighbor to secure a home, and at the same time make something for himself. We believe there are Saints enough throughout the world who are interested in the welfare of their brethren—and incidentally in themselves—that it will not be necessary for any man to put more than ten dollars each into the business, thus giving an interest in the business to a great number. As the Spirit prompts so do in this matter. To show that this is a business move in the right direction, and that the Saints here see the necessity of our people going into business for themselves, we publish the names of a few of our people here who are interested ten dollars' worth. Bro. A. Morgan, who is promoting this business, says that all he has to do is to find a Saint who is interested in his brother's welfare and explain that this is to help the Saints get homes, in this, one of the gathering places and they immediately say, "I will subscribe the amount if you are going to do this." Bro. Hilliard says, "Yes, this is a move in the right direction; I will put ten dollars into that kind of work." George H. Hulmes does likewise, also W. H. Garrett and the following business-men, contractors, mechanics, and laborers of this city. Bishop G. H. Hilliard, Elder G. H. Hulmes, Elder W. H. Garrett, Elder Alfred White, W. D. Roberts, contractor, William Crick, Thomas Crick, Joseph Crick, foundrymen, J. E. Haines, plumber, Henry Resch, C. A. Resch, Clifton Resch, carpenters, W. S. Loar, real estate, D. W. Loar, moulder, Elder Henry Kemp, A. L. Yingling, manager planing mill, W. H. Mills, department store, B. C. Smith, grocer, H. O. Skinner, blacksmith, B. Farrell, stone mason and contractor.

MR. A. MORGAN.

Yule-Tide.

The annual season of gift-making for 1903 has gone into the unrecalled past. What did you send as a gift or donation to Graceland College?

There came into my hands to aid this laudable Church institution, a lonely five dollar bill.

Will the friends of education, the Saints who take delight in the success and advancement of this church of Christ, please to be advised that I am neither dead, nor gone out of business. There is still time and opportunity for honorable emendation of any past mistake, or neglect, as the door by which your donation for Graceland may enter, still stands ajar! Come! yea, come one and all, and you shall not be greeted with: Too late! it is too late!!

The day of grace hath been greatly prolonged—the dial of decision hath been turned backward that the thoughtless, indifferent, and unwise may join the procession of God's helpers.

Herewith I invite you to contribute, and take part in assisting in the grand work of upbuilding the growing good and usefulness of Graceland.

Still on duty,

Box 224, LAMONI, Iowa.

LOWE.—B. F. Lowe died at his home in Pawnee, Missouri, December 31, 1903. He was born in Davis County, Illinois, in 1860; was married to Miss Mattie Halloway in 1898. He was of the Catholic faith. He leaves a wife, two children, two brothers, and a host of relatives and friends who are sadly bereft. Funeral services in charge of Elder Joseph Snively. Interment at the Lone Rock Cemetery.

CHRISTY.—Mary Ann Christy, at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, December 31, 1903, aged 87 years. Sr. Christy united with the Church in the later years of her life and died in the faith. She was a quiet, modest old lady that everyone loved and respected very much. For over twenty years in her aged and infirm condition she had a comfortable and pleasant home with her children, Bro. and Sr. O. T. Christy. A daughter and two sons survive her. Funeral service January 3, by Elder W. E. LaRue.

To the Cosmopolitan for January Herbert S. Stone contributes an illustrated article on "The Oldest Republic in the World." How few citizens of our Republic know its name or a single fact about it. The life in San Marino is by no means strenuous or even active, but the Republic has endured longer than any other in the world, perhaps because of this very fact.

The January number of the North American Review contains the first of a series of three articles by the distinguished English critic, Churton Collins, on the "Poetry and Poets of America." Mr. Collins acknowledges frankly that the English people have not done justice to the poetry of America. English critics have always regarded American poetry with the sort of contemptuous indifference with which the Greek critics looked upon the poetry of the Romans. But he contends that the Americans themselves are partly responsible for the English attitude toward their poetry, inasmuch as they have been prone to give prominence to what is essentially mediocre and inferior, sometimes by indiscreet and absurd eulogy, and sometimes by associating it in anthologies and critiques with what is excellent. In this first article, Mr. Collins deals eloquently and sympathetically with the influences that retarded the growth of literature in colonial days. He reviews cursorily the early makers of American verse, and he considers at some length, with discriminating admiration, the genius and work of William Cullen Bryant, whom he characterizes as America's "first poet of classical rank." Of the New England Puritans, the descendants of the Pilgrims, Mr. Collins says: "Thus was produced, partly from what was inherited from their forefathers, and partly from what was the result of the long probation and discipline of those iron times, a race of men the like of which this world has never seen. Indelible is the impression which they have made on all who have contributed, and on all which has been contributed, either in politics or in literature, to the glory of America. We trace their lineaments in every great statesman and in every great soldier who has succeeded them in the Western World, whether from the South or from the North. Their purity, their earnestness, their simplicity, the noble ardor of their love of liberty, their God-fearing spirit and profound sense of man's religious and moral responsibilities, permeate, or if they do not permeate, at least color, almost every characteristic contribution either in verse or prose to American literature. Even where their theology had ceased to appeal, and the light had faded out of Puritan orthodoxy, Puritan ethics and the Puritan temper still prevailed. Franklin, Emerson and Hawthorne were as essentially the offspring of these men as William Bradford and Thomas Hooker were their representatives. When poetry woke, and it was long before it woke, it was their soul which suffused it. Their soul has suffused it ever since."

Enjoying Fright.

Occasionally there is a horse who actually enjoys being afraid, says Country Life in America. He feels like the schoolboy scampering past a graveyard on a frosty night in autumn. Students of the forest tell us that a fleet animal, such as the deer, likes to be pursued, trusting in his speed and deriving pleasure from its exercise. It is an exhilaration for any animal, man included, to be thrown upon his own resources. The boxer feels it; so does the strong swimmer battling with the breakers and the canoeist threading his way through rapids where a mistake would be fatal. Thus, also, a high-bred horse will often prick up his ears and quicken his gait, half in fear, half in pleasure, when he sees the smoke of a locomotive rising above the trees or hears the roar of an approaching train.

Herbert Spencer's Work.

There were also certain defects of method in Spencer's way of working. Much as he prized induction, his inductions were comparatively few, and these few were rapidly made, were brilliant, commanding, suggestive, but not thorough. His formula was imposed on the greater part of the facts with which he dealt; it was not developed from them. Much of his work was outlined in principle before the evidence for the result was in hand. This led to a selection of evidence and consequent inadequacy. We speak of the patient Darwin, but we can hardly speak of the patient Spencer. Darwin's rejection of hypothesis after hypothesis until gradually, from an immense collection of facts, his truth appeared, finds no parallel in the work of Spencer. Huxley was acquainted at first hand with the greater part of the facts on which he built. But Spencer's facts were largely borrowed, and thus carried over into his results any error that lurked in their sources. Such inadequacies were bound to affect his philosophy, and eventually send the student of the philosophy and science of evolution to more thorough investigators.

It is doubtless true, therefore, that the significance of Spencer's work will ultimately be found to reside, not in any great material addition to philosophy or science, but in the fact that he, more than any other man in modern times, made the idea of evolution current and commonplace; that he sought to break down the barriers between philosophy and science, making both deal with a concretely real world, and holding up to men's minds the ideal of a completely unified world and a completely unified system of knowledge.—From "Herbert Spencer," by Professor Frederick J. E. Woodbridge, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for January.

The Vitals of a City.

Of all the thousands who daily walk the streets of New York, looking admiringly at the towering buildings, few know that the vitals of the city are beneath their feet, and that life throbs far below the pavement in the thrust of a hundred thousand piston rods, in churning engines, in the hum of ventilating fans, the buzz of dynamos and the choked roar of the furnaces. And yet, buried fifty feet or more beneath the sidewalk, far below the tidewater of the rivers on either side, bulked in by coffer-dams of steel and rock, are mechanical plants which represent the acme of engineering achievement. A great steamship has no greater proportion of its bulk concealed below the water line than the modern "sky-scraper" has beneath the line of the asphalt.

The foundations of the great fifteen or more story structures of lower New York are sunk beneath the level of the bottom of the East and North Rivers. Nothing but bed-rock is firm enough to support their giant proportions. Then, built around the sunken caissons and within coffer-dams of steel and concrete, are three, four and five stories of the building lower than the street.—The World's Work.

The Voices of Women.

See the American woman among those of foreign countries and note instantly that though she is gloriously victorious in feature, figure, clothes, even often in complexion, her voice is sadly lacking in modulation, softness, and fineness! Among the more musical voices of her foreign sisters the American woman's is high, penetrating, and often strident.

It is probable that climatic causes have something to do with this harshness of utterance—for our men have bad voices, too—but it is certain that the quality of voice is dependent upon other things than atmosphere, and that if she will, the American woman may do much to remedy this defect.

The first move is to face the fact that our voices are bad, a thing which very few of us think about. Then we must set about training them. There are, of course, many physical rules to follow, which are vastly helpful, and which may be learned from a competent teacher of voice-culture. But let us concern ourselves here chiefly with the mental attitude of the speaker, which means so much.

As Americans we have the pernicious habit of throwing ourselves wholly at people. We endeavor always to keep ourselves at the highest pitch, in order to impress the people with whom we come in contact. This is frequently unconscious, but none the less it is present. We are not satisfied to go our ways quietly, earnestly, attempting to live up to the best that is in us; but we must impress others with our presence, and often we do this only by giving up some of the deeper pleasures and living rather at the surface of things. It seems certain that the quality of our voices is due, partly at least, to this attitude of mind. Our life is pitched high; so are our voices; we live at an unpleasant rate; our voices are unpleasantly harsh and sounding. It would be very beneficial to the American woman if she would endeavor after serene habits of thought. She needs to be more reposeful, more disinterested, to live less tensely, to cultivate a calmer and less militant attitude toward the world. Then, thinking always of her tone, of her expression, she can do much to render her voice mellow, rich, golden, even, as are the voices we hear in our imagination from the beautiful women of the world.—January Woman's Home Companion.

South America is but little known to the people of the United States. Common interests should unite the bonds of friendship between those of the North and of the South. The first step toward closer ties is a knowledge of the evolution and building up of the South American states. But aside from this fact, the story of the overthrow of the wonderful Inca Empire by Pizarro and his little band of desperadoes is one of the most thrilling and fabulous tales of adventure in all history. "The Dramatic History of South America," by Cyrus Townsend Brady, in the January Cosmopolitan, proves over again the old law that "They that take the sword shall perish by the sword."

DOCTOR DOWIE, IS HE A PROPHET?

Was not the former Elijah a little mistaken when he thought that he was the only prophet on earth? I think that Elijah of to-day is making the same error, with this exception, that the Bible Elijah was a real prophet while there is room for serious doubt as to J. A. Dowie's claim. If the original Elijah was of the opinion that he was the only prophet on earth at the time he was living, acting for Israel, and withstanding the prophets of Baal, he probably referred in thought to those of his line only. This modern Elijah, Dowie, may do the same thing, and in that he may be correct, for he is certainly a unique character, the only one of his kind.

We give elsewhere an extract from a sermon by Doctor Dowie referring to the latter-day work in rather uncomplimentary terms; but, as his knowledge of the Church is only what he has gathered from what has come to him from the Utah people, we can readily see that he has not been accurately informed. For instance, he states what he can not know when he attributes the authorship of the alleged revelation on plural marriage to Joseph Smith. A prophet knows what he hears and sees within his own lines of observation and experience, the same as other men; and besides this what he receives by revelation. Moses did not arrogate to himself the sole possession of prophetic gifts, for though he was the leader of Israel chosen of God, he was willing men in the camp should prophesy, under the strong desire that "all the Lord's people" might be prophets. If Doctor Dowie is a prophet, there were prophets before him and must be prophets after him; although there has been none like him before him, and will be none like him after him. If he is called away from earth before the completion of his various schemes in Zion City building, he either must himself provide for his successor by his prophetic gift, or another must be sent to carry on his work. Which will it be?

Doctor Dowie has gone from his city beyond Chicago, for a tour of the world, starting from Chicago, January 1, with the intention of returning June 1. In his absence things will be managed by those he leaves in charge. Will they be able to carry the work on as the Doctor himself would? Is the one left to finally determine in case questions arise for settle-

In discussing the advisability of prayer at the opening of meetings of the convention which framed the Articles of Confederation, in 1787, Franklin said, "In the beginning of the contest with Britain, when we were sensible of danger, we had daily prayers in this room for divine protection. Our prayers, sir, were heard, and they were graciously answered. . . . And have we now forgotten that powerful Friend, or do we imagine we no longer need its assistance? I have lived, sir, a long time, and the longer I live the more convincing proofs I see of this truth, that God governs in the affairs of men. And, if a sparrow can not fall to the ground without his notice, is it probable that an empire can rise without his aid?"—Educational Report.

ment, prepared as the Doctor claims he is, to judge by virtue of the prophetic calling? Doctor Dowie was so intimately identified with every enterprise at Zion City, each being subject so much to his personality that it was and is his, that it will be difficult for others to carry it on as he would.

All these come up for thought. Six months soon pass in a busy man's life. It is not a long period in the life of the world and the things of its care; but many things may and do occur to make or to mar men's designs in even so brief a term. And who may know what may or will take place having a bearing on the career of this man? He made a conspicuous failure in his invasion of New York City, with a retinue of nearly four thousand of his followers, at an expense to the general treasury of some three hundred thousand dollars, with no results accruing. If the movement was dictated by a prophetic power through the "overseer," the prophet was deceived; and the rule given in the old Scriptures was, if the things spoken by the prophet come not to pass, then the prophet hath spoken presumptuously. The injunction following is, "Thou shalt not be afraid of him."

Doctor Dowie confidently predicted the conquest of New York, and doubtless expected that he would gather both converts and wealth. His predictions and expectations both failed. Who was in fault, the spirit of the prophet, or the prophet himself? The leader established himself and his immediate servants in a fashionable and expensive hotel. He had his carriages, one for dry, one for wet weather, carried at the public expense from Chicago to New York, and rode to and from the meeting-room in state. His followers, "the host of Zion City," boarded wherever they could, here and there, the bulk of them caring for themselves in the buildings of Madison Square Garden. Many of them were made sick and more grew discontented and were pleased when the tocsin of retreat was sounded, and the return to the West was an accomplished fact.

Doctor Dowie has done some good. He has some excellent ideas on diet and personal living, and if he had access to the world's money would make it fly in carrying his views into execution; especially if he could continue to receive the royalty of five per cent on the gross amount of collections and donations as his personal perquisite. The only chariot Elijah had, so far as the record goes, was the funereal fiery chariot which bore him to the skies. The Elijah, the Waukegan restorer, is making sure of his rides here, so we can afford to wait the issue. He who has an excess of good things in this life may lack in the life to come. We await the issue which soon or late will prove Doctor Dowie to be, or not to be, a prophet.

FRANKLIN'S CREED.

A few days before Benjamin Franklin died he was asked to give his creed, and he thus answered the inquiry as to his religious opinions:

Here is my creed. I believe in one God, the Creator of the universe. That he governs it by his providence. That he ought to be worshiped. That the most acceptable service we render him is doing good to his other children. That the soul of man is immortal, and will be treated with justice in another life respecting its conduct in this. These I take to be the fundamental points in all sound religion, and I regard them as you do in whatever sect I meet with them.

As to Jesus of Nazareth, my opinion of whom you particularly desire, I think his system of morals and his religion, as he left them to us, the best the world ever saw, or is likely to see; but I apprehend it has received various corrupting changes, and I have, with most of the present dissenters in England, some doubts as to his divinity; though it is a question I do not dogmatize upon, having never studied it, and I think it needless to busy myself with it now, when I expect soon an opportunity of knowing the truth with less trouble. I see no harm, however, in its being believed, if that belief has the good consequence, as probably it has, of making his doctrines more respected and more observed; especially as I do not perceive that the Supreme takes it amiss by distinguishing the unbelievers in his government of the world with any peculiar marks of his displeasure.

I shall only add, respecting myself, that, having experienced the goodness of that Being in conducting me prosperously through a long life, I have no doubt of its continuance in the next, though without the smallest conceit of meriting such goodness.

I have ever let others enjoy their religious sentiments, without reflecting on them for those that appeared to me unsupportable or even absurd. All sects here, and we have a great variety, have experienced my good will in assisting them with subscriptions for the building their new places of worship; and, as I have never opposed any of their doctrines, I hope to go out of the world in peace with them all.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Peter Arthur Flinn, of Tower, Indiana, asks: Is it against the rules of the Church to baptize persons that belong to secret orders?

No. The Church has made no rule discriminating against secret societies, so far as concerns baptisms.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

W. H. Kelley, of the Rocky Mountain Mission, reports thirteen baptisms by the missionaries. Some of the men have been laboring against adverse conditions, but the work done makes a creditable showing after all. Bro. Pender was to hold debate at Clifton, Idaho, January 5 to 7, with a Brighamite elder.

J. M. Stubbart, in charge of Colorado Mission, reports fourteen baptisms for the past quarter and one Sunday-school organized. Prospects are good for a branch organization at Durango, where there are fifteen members, and regular meetings have been kept up for several months by W. B. Farley.

F. A. Smith, of the Iowa Mission, reports two branches in the quarter, at Viola, Iowa, and St.

Charles, Iowa. He says the missionary force in his field has been quite active and the work has been pushed at several new points, and some of the older places have been aroused. A splendid interest has been aroused in the Little Sioux District, and there have been more baptisms there than in any other district in the mission. A debate is expected at Little Sioux, with a representative of the Advents. Bro. C. Scott will represent us. He reports the work in the Dakotas and Minnesota in good shape and progressing nicely. Bro. Fred reports a hearty cooperation upon the part of the missionaries, and on the whole the quarter has been an active one. Some of the local conditions are not so good as they should be, but a better understanding of what is demanded of the local priesthood will better those conditions.

H. O. Smith, of the Southwestern Mission, reports the work done the past quarter not so good as he could wish, but attributes it to the fact that the quarter was at a time of the year unpropitious for missionary work. He writes: "One debate has been held with Collins of the Christian or Campbellite Church, with excellent results. Also one with Nichols, of the same denomination. Other debates are pending, but will not take place until next summer probably." He reports twenty baptisms by the missionaries in the quarter. As is the case in many fields, the minister in charge of the mission heads the list as to numbers of times preached.

I. N. White reports forty-three baptisms in the quarter, and two branches organized, one at Cameron which now has twenty members, and one at Pana, Illinois, of about twenty-four members. He expected to organize a branch at "Old Far West" on the 18th inst. He writes: "The work is lagging some in many of the branches both in the Far West and Spring River districts, because of the lack of energetic workers in the branches." All other districts he reported working nicely.

G. T. Griffiths, Oregon Mission, reports seventeen baptisms for the quarter, two branches and three districts organized. On January 9 he organized a branch at Sagle, Idaho, and prospects are that a branch will soon be organized at Laconner, and one at Rosetta, Idaho. Special conference will be held at Seattle, Washington, January 30 and 31, to organize a district including the branches at Seattle, Tacoma, Castle Rock, Roslyn, and two or three branches in British Columbia, and possibly Laconner, Washington.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The holiday number of Paradise of the Pacific has reached us and has been carefully inspected. It shows the same care in the choice of material and the same excellence in its presentation that have always characterized this magazine from the land of perennial summer.

It will be pleasant news to those of our readers who have been watching the progress of the great dam across the Nile River in Egypt known as the Assouan Dam, one of the greatest engineering undertakings of modern times, that it is proving to be a great success. The cost of the dam is stated to be twelve million five hundred thousand dollars, and the estimated value in improved Nile land reaches to double this cost, or twenty-five million dollars. This speaks well for the wisdom of the conception of the wonderful enterprise.

A statistician, Jack London, estimates that one fifth of the inhabitants of Great Britain "chronically" did not get enough to eat. What he meant by "chronically," we imagine to be that this estimated number of people did not as a rule have the necessary amount of food for daily consumption. One hundred and fifteen thousand people in London alone received aid from the authorities during Christmas week. The Spectator newspaper states that "The tide of pauperism is steadily rising."

The Chicago Tribune for January 14, 1904, remarks, "England is sicker than it knows. It is suffering from national tuberculosis. Let it look for a remedy before it is too late."

The following gives a good idea of the increase in immigration from abroad: "Of unusual interest as showing how the population of this country is increased annually by immigration from abroad are the figures just made public by the federal authorities. They show the number of arrivals at this port is at least 75 per cent of the aggregate of the number of new comers. Transatlantic steamships brought to this country by way of New York in the year 1903, 804,235 persons, of whom 67,719 were first cabin passengers, 93,557 second cabin, and 642,959 came in the steerage. The figures the previous year, as compiled by William C. Moore, landing agent, show 714,124 arrivals, of whom 139,848 came in first and second cabins, and 574,276 in the steerage. This means more than 1,000,000 new comers added to the population during the year just ended, for if the rates of other years were kept up 200,000 persons made their first appearance in other cities. The figures showing the countries from which various foreigners came during the last six months have not yet been prepared. The report shows that during the first six months of 1903 immigrants coming from Italy (including Sicily and Sardinia) numbered 152,777, Austria-Hungary contributed 132,736, Russia and Finland 78,904, Sweden 26,150, Germany 23,646, Ireland 21,012, Norway 16,435, England 16,201, and all Europe a total of 511,416. From all Asia 13,670 came, and from other parts of the world about 8,000. —Chicago Tribune.

Negotiations for discussion between Bro. Heman C. Smith, for the Reorganized Church, and Elder W. B. F. Treat, of Indianapolis, Indiana, for the Christian or Disciple Church, have been brought abruptly to an end. The last letter of Bro. Smith to Reverend Treat, dated January 7, was returned on the 13th with the following indorsement on the back of the last sheet:

"Reverend Smith: The Reverend Treat was stricken while in the south part of the State, last Saturday, dying Tuesday, the 6th [5th, Ed.] His burial occurred Thursday.

Respectfully,

"L. F. TREAT."

This letter of Bro. Smith's was sent in an envelope bearing Indianapolis postmark, "January 11, 10 p. m. 1904."

This will have this effect: If discussion is desired by the Church which Reverend Treat represented, it will devolve on them to renew negotiations and provide some other man to represent them.

We regret the death of Reverend Treat, and offer our sympathy to his family in their loss.

Harper & Brothers, the New York publishers, have issued one hundred and ten editions of General Lew Wallace's book, "Ben Hur."

There is news from Ophir, Kentucky, to Bishop Kelley that Bro. J. W. Metcalf had baptized five at that place, a Mr. N. M. Cantrill, and wife, and three others. A number beside these will obey soon. Bro. Metcalf ordained Bro. Cantrill an elder, which secures a representative man to look after the work at that point. Bro. Metcalf is quite confident that Bro. Cantrill will be able to defend the faith and will be aided by the Spirit to do so.

When one thinks of Turkey he usually thinks also of the barbarism so often displayed in recent years by its inhabitants. We usually hear of them slaughtering Armenians or Greeks. Their social life, too, one generally associates with polygamy. Recently there has appeared a book, "Turkish Life in Town and Country," in which the "unspeakable Turk," according to Miss Garnett, the author, seems a little more human than we are wont to believe. In reviewing this work Miss Jeannette L. Gilder has this to say of social life in that country:

"It is surprising to find that though a Mohammedan is legally entitled to marry four wives and be the owner of as many female slaves as he can afford to keep, a Turkish household is by no means, as is generally believed, composed of a large number of women all of whom stand in wifely relations to their lord and master. As a matter of fact, at the present day, Miss Garnett tells us, among the Turks of the laboring class one wife is the rule, and among those of the wealthier classes more than one is the rare exception; for, besides social opinion and other considerations which make a plurality of wives undesirable, there is also the grave question of expense. A second wife means an extra suite of apartments, an extra slave or train of slaves, according to her rank, and many other expenses that outweigh the ambition for a large outfit of wives. Two wives, according to Miss Garnett, seem to be the extreme limit nowadays, and only once during her long residence in different parts of the country had she the opportunity of visiting a harem containing more than one. Divorce is easy in Turkey, but its consequences are hard; that is, they are considered hard by the Turk, for if he divorce his wife he is obliged to pay her the sum stipulated in the settlement, and also incur the odium attaching to such a course of action. For this reason he hesitates; also because the prophet says 'The curse of Allah rests on him who capriciously repudiates his wife.'"

On the evening of January 16 Professor T. H. Macbride, of the State University of Iowa, delivered a lecture in Lamoni which is calculated to do much good. His subject was "The City Beautiful," and the lecture was profusely illustrated by stereopticon views. The lecture had a definite object; it was not calculated merely to entertain. The lecturer proved himself a man with an idea,—an idea which he has followed for years; and his work is telling. It may be long till he shall see his labors bearing fruit as plentifully as he would like; but the seeds are sown, and though the fruitage may be slow in coming, come it surely will.

We are glad to say that while we can not present our readers with the lecture presented by Professor Macbride to his Lamoni audience, we have an article by him which we will publish next week, which contains the idea, and which can not but prove interesting and instructive to our readers. Mr. Macbride's work in behalf of Iowa parks will ultimately prove of untold value to the State. We were glad to have him with us, and trust Lamoni citizens were benefited by his labors.

Patriarch A. H. Smith and his secretary are once more in Lamoni, after making a visit to Central Illinois. Both appear to be in good health.

Our business manager and his wife on Thursday last celebrated their "tin wedding." Friends and relatives gathered at his home; at the noon hour the relatives, and in the evening the choir. The many pieces of tinware given them bespeak somewhat the esteem in which they are held.

NOTES OF THE BISHOPRIC.

The reports to the Bishop's office from the counselors, bishops, and Bishop's agents, for 1904, have been forwarded the most promptly and are found to be in better shape than any former year.

Of the seventy-six districts and missions of the Church, reports from sixty-seven are already in hand, and of the number not yet arrived are the far away districts of Australia and the Society Islands. Three hundred and eleven elders' reports have thus far been received. An alphabetical list of all having reports in will appear in the HERALD soon. Please keep watch and see if your name is recorded there.

There has been received to date to complete repairs on the Kirtland Temple, offerings amounting to five hundred and seventy dollars and eighty-one cents. This is about half enough for the work of the needed repairs. It shows how well the Saints have been interested in the matter of repairs, however, for but little has been said or done touching this fund. The fund should be completed at once, as the inside work of the repairs upon the Temple should be made prior to April first next. Offerings for this purpose should be made direct to this office or to any Bishop's agent, who will report the offerings at once.

Do not be slack in your offerings for Kirtland Temple repairs.

Receipts to January 1, 1904, Graceland College debt account, since April 1, 1903, amount to $5,062.40. Of this amount $3,455.46 are the collections of Bro. Joseph Luff, the balance on subscription lists sent direct to the Bishop's office and through agents. On November 9 last, the amount of twenty-five thousand dollars having been reached, according to the terms of the subscriptions taken beginning in April, 1900, due call was made for payment of the balance of the unpaid subscription. We are thankful for the ready manner in which so many have fulfilled their obligations in meeting these. But we are informed by Bro. Luff that another misunderstanding has obtained by calling for the subscriptions, which is, that no more is needed to pay the debt. If all this had been paid within the first six months of the call this would have been true. But how is it, brethren, when you pay your debts; does not the obligation exist until all is paid, including the interest? By a moment's thought you will see then that to discharge the duty we must raise the balance.

It is not good financiering nor just that we should throw away subscriptions already taken at time and expense of the Bishopric and take other subscriptions at further expense to pay the debt. The only proper thing is to collect subscriptions had and obtain further to meet the balance. Let it be fully understood then, first, that all old subscriptions are due and payable; second, that sufficient subscriptions must be taken yet to clear the debt. Can any one object to this? Please let us hear from you all, and give to Bro. Joseph Luff a faithful hearing of the matter; it is necessary that all help to perform this work.

LAMONI, Iowa, January 18, 1904.

THE ELEVENTH HOUR DISPENSATION.

SERMON BY R. C. EVANS, IN LEEDS, ENGLAND, SUNDAY, AUGUST 2, 1903.

Reported by Joseph D. Howell.

Permit me to draw your attention to the fourteenth chapter of Zechariah and a part of the seventh verse, where you will read these words: "But it shall be one day which shall be known to the Lord, not day, nor night: but it shall come to pass, that at evening time it shall be light."

Notwithstanding the wondrous responsibility that rests upon me this morning as an ambassador for Christ, I feel pleased that I have the opportunity of addressing you in defense of the truth that makes men free. Like one of other days I feel to say, "Necessity is laid upon me; woe is me if I preach not the gospel."

One of the most pleasing thoughts that pervades my mind is, that God is an unchangeable being. In the darkest hour of human experience, when we are compelled to walk the thorn-clad path of duty, there is this thought inspiring and begetting within us hope, brightening and cheering us as we pass along the line of life, that notwithstanding we may be the victims of misplaced confidence; notwithstanding we may be estranged from those who formerly looked with kindness and tenderness upon us; notwithstanding we may be surrounded by vacillating, fickle-minded, changing humanity, this thought, I remark, impels us on—"I am the Lord; I change not." (Malachi 3:6.) Take away the hope that finds birth in the unchangeability of God, and every fond aspiration and anticipation that has gladdened our souls withers as the fragile flower battered by the wintry breezes.

This sentiment of the unchangeability of God runs through the entire record called the Bible. The New Testament introduces him to us as the Old Testament left him with us—Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever. (Hebrews 13:8.) We are strengthened by the statement of the unchangeability of God in that that is written: "Whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it."—Ecclesiastes 3:14. If this be true—and Christians who believe in God and properly understand him know it is true—then we are brought to this conclusion: that whatsoever God required in the past, that he still requires of humanity. If we can find out what pleased God in the dead years of the silent past we have discovered what will please him now. If we learn what was required of his children in the dear dead years of the long ago, we have found for a certainty that which he requires of his children now.

This text of scripture, "It shall come to pass, that at evening time in shall be light," indicates to us that there is one great day of God's probation for men, Jesus while here spoke of his time, and denominated it the dinner-time. We are told further on in the New Testament scripture that there will be a period at the closing of the day called the supper-time. Jesus speaking of that day calls it a day of twelve hours. "Are there not twelve hours in the day?" "Work while the day lasts."

In the chapter that I read for your hearing—the twentieth chapter of Matthew—we are told that the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man who is an householder who went out very early in the morning to hire laborers into his vineyard. The kingdom of heaven, then, has something to do with this great day referred to here, and you will notice that this chapter agrees with what Jesus said, that the day has twelve hours. I know there are a great many people who interpret this chapter in a different manner to which we understand it, and it is but fair that both sides should be heard; therefore I will briefly give you its popular interpretation. We are told that the "very early in the morning" has reference to the conversion of children; that the "third hour" refers to the conversion of those of more mature years; the "sixth hour" refers to the conversion of those in middle life; the "ninth hour" refers to the conversion of men in the aged time of life, and the "eleventh hour" has special reference to the conversion of men on their death-bed or upon the gallows. I find some difficulty in believing that, because it contradicts all scripture that has gone before and that follows after. I know that in opposing this interpretation I am perhaps attacking a cherished ideal, but I am reminded that the gardener has not only the duty of sowing the seed to perform in order to produce a crop, but he must look after the weeds, and so the Lord has said, "Every plant that my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up," and it is my business not only to sow the seed, but to uproot the weeds of priestcraft, superstition, and idolatry.

If it be true that the popular interpretation is the correct sense of this parable, then the gospel is not "the power of God unto salvation," because the man with the black cap upon his brow, and with his hands pinioned behind him, and with his feet strapped together, and with a rope around his neck, can not obey the gospel as taught in the New Testament.

Again, this precludes the possibility of the formation of the Christian character. The Bible from one lid to the other teaches what Paul expresses in the sixth chapter of Galatians: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." It is a Bible teaching—perhaps the most prominent of them all—that man is to be rewarded according to the deeds done in the body; therefore, for these and many other reasons that might be cited, had we the time, we can not believe that when a man, stained and scarred with criminality from his youth, deals the last blow to his victim, and he ascends the gallows to pay the penalty for his crime, we can not believe that when he meets the great God before the tribunal bar of justice, he will not be rewarded according to the deeds done in the body. How, without the development of the Christian character, and without having embraced the gospel privileges under which he may be brought unto Christ, by which the atoning blood of the Master can be made efficacious to him,—how, I ask, can that man be saved in the celestial glory? This doctrine that teaches that a man stained and scarred with crime can be pardoned and prepared for celestial glory after he ascends the gallows, is equal to offering a premium on crime, and is hurtful to the morals of our country. There is scarcely a criminal that pays the last debt upon the gallows, but what is informed that he may be saved by merely believing and confessing that Jesus is the Christ. If this doctrine be true, then the Devil is saved without a doubt, for he believes that Jesus is the Christ, and not only believes it, but he has so testified before throngs of people: "I know who thou art, thou Jesus of Nazareth, Son of the Most High." No man can give a grander profession of faith in the divinity of Jesus Christ than that, and this statement is repeated eleven times in the New Testament by devils. Devils not only believe that Jesus is the Christ, but at times they have prayed to him, and their prayers have been answered. You may think that this is rather far-fetched. I draw your attention to the time when Jesus was met by two possessed of the Devil. The devils recognizing the superiority of Jesus Christ, he suffered them not to speak because they knew him. At another time, knowing him, they prayed, "Jesus, thou Son of God . . . if thou cast us out, permit us to enter into the swine," and the prayer was answered. They were cast out from the human body, and entered into the swine. Now they not only believed in Jesus, not only confessed that he was the Christ, not only prayed and had their prayers answered, but they have acknowledged the gospel to be the power of God unto salvation, and have acknowledged the priesthood and the right and authority to preach it as given to men. In proof of this I cite you to the experience of Paul as reported in the Acts of the Apostles, when the damsel possessed of the evil spirit met Paul and the Devil said to the people, "These men are the servants of the most high God." Was not that an acknowledgment of their priesthood and right to represent God? But he did not stop there. "These men are the servants of the most high God, which show unto us the way of salvation." Is not that an acknowledgment that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation? (See Matthew 4:1-11; 8:28-32; Mark 1:23, 24; 3:11, 12; Acts 19:13-17; 16:16-19; James 2:19.) Here we have devils believing, confessing, and praying, having their prayers answered, and confessing the gospel to be the divine plan for the amelioration of the condition of men, and an acknowledgment of the priesthood and their knowledge that Jesus was the Son of God. And so James, backing up all this experience as recorded in the gospel, says: "Thou believest that there is one God; thou doest well; the devils also believe and tremble, but wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead . . . for as the body without the Spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead."

If all this be true, where is there any ground for the doctrine of this eleventh-hour salvation being a genuine fact as interpreted by the critics of this generation? Just think of it! The authorities of our land according to its law apprehends a murderer, and it finds him guilty of the awful crime of taking human life. The verdict rendered shows that he is unfit for the association of men and women in this country, and when he is prepared to go to the next, the parson approaches, and tries to make people believe that because this man has done one of several things that the Devil has already done—that is, professing belief in Jesus Christ—that therefore in a moment he will change that black cap for a golden crown; that he will step from that gallows into the effulgent glory of God, and that his spirit from that dark hole into which it is hurled, will go marching into the celestial life with the people of God. Think of it! Not fit to dwell upon the earth—prepared for heaven! Not fit to associate with humanity—now gone to be the companion of angels! He leaves the earth with his hands tied behind his back, the rope around his neck, and a gurgling noise in this throat as he struggles for just another breath; but in a moment those manacled hands are untied to play upon a harp with a thousand strings,—a new and a freed man singing the songs of Moses and the Lamb! No wonder we have such little faith on the earth, and that infidelity of every shape stalks through the land!

From these and many other considerations which could be cited, I can not believe that the interpretation as given by the critics of this parable is correct, and I must therefore give you what I believe to be the correct interpretation. We have cited a few passages of scripture this morning to prove the unchangeability of God. If he is unchangeable then he must have made unchangeable the plan by which he has designed to save humanity, and that plan has not changed since the time it went into operation to redeem Adam, nor will it change until the last soul that is redeemed is brought back into the presence of its God, and the last enemy, which is death, is destroyed. I am met on the threshold of this statement with the argument that humanity is changing in its likes and dislikes. And so one of your London preachers (I got into trouble the other day for not giving his name, and now perhaps I shall get into trouble for giving it. I refer to the late Charles Spurgeon) said there is a constant change of fashion in the hats and clothes which men wear, and in the machinery which they invent which tends to improvement, such as is witnessed in the change from the crude Howe to the present finished sewing-machine of Wheeler and Wilson. He says that time has made some wonderful improvements, and that what is true of other things, is equally true with regard to religion. God is not going to be behind man, but he will always inspire his servants to be equal to the occasion, and so adapt matters to the improved intellectuality of humanity. These are not the actual words, but the idea is conveyed. We admit that perfection was not attained when men first invented machinery and other things, but time and experience have enabled them to improve and improve, and the improvements are still going on; but will you tell me that that is the way with our heavenly Father? That he started in the twilight of the past when he did not know much, and that by experience the Divinity has developed intellectually? Will you tell me that Divinity has improved by reason of the experience that religious thought brought in upon him? That would move God out of the universe. Again, if he has changed, then the change has made him either better or worse. Which is it? If better, then he is better now than he used to be; and that proves that at one time he was not so good as he is now. Does not that move God out of the universe?

Well, suppose you admit that he was always as good as he is now, but that he has found out by experience that the methods he adopted in the dark past were not just the thing and that he has improved upon them—that would move him out of the universe, for it would prove development intellectually. Would you take that position? "I am the Lord; I change not." God knew the necessities of man in the beginning; he knew just what it would take to save him, and he adopted the divine system called the gospel for the purpose from the time of Adam, and man will never know any other plan that will be efficacious.

I know that our belief that Jesus was known away back there in those old days is opposed and ridiculed, but do you not know that we are supported in this doctrine, not by the Bible alone, but by the best historians of other centuries? Now, lest I forget this, I am going to read some history from Irenæus in support of this position, and you will see why I do it as I pass on:

The scripture is full of the Son of God's appearing, sometimes to talk and eat with Abraham, at other times to instruct Noah about the measures of the ark, at another time to seek Adam, at another time to bring down judgment upon Sodom, then again to direct Jacob in the way, and again to converse with Moses out of the bush.

Our Christ conversed with Moses out of the bush in the appearance of fire.—Justin Martyr.

Tertullian says:

It was the Son who judged man from the beginning; destroying that lofty tower and confounding their language, punishing the whole world with flood of waters and raining fire and brimstone upon Sodom, for he always descended to hold converse with man from Adam even to the patriarchs and prophets, in visions and dreams always preparing his way from the beginning.—Watson's Theological Institute, vol. 1, pp. 563-565.

So the Latter Day Saints are not far astray when they claim that from the beginning God's plan for man's redemption has been the same. Jesus Christ is the redeemer of all men, and further, it is expressly declared that there is no other name to be known of men through which salvation may be obtained but by Jesus. (Acts 4:12.) If Adam could be saved without Jesus, so can we; but the record declares that he was "The lamb slain from before the foundation of the world." And so we now come to this parable and will try to give you the interpretation of it.

"The kingdom of heaven is likened unto an householder who went out very early in the morning to hire laborers to work in his vineyard." Here is the church of God—the kingdom of God—and the vineyard is the great mission field, and the laborers are those that work therein. He went out early in the morning. Mark, he did not say the first hour, but "early in the morning." Adam could not have salvation until he fell. Had he kept the law that was given to govern and control him he would have remained in the condition in which God had placed him; but having sinned he needed a savior. Having refused to comply with the law, he became guilty under the law, and there came the need for his salvation, and so the great plan of human redemption through Jesus Christ was presented to him very early in the morning of the world's great day of probation.

We pass on from Adam's time, and we find that people became very, very wicked, and in process of time their wickedness was so great that the cup of their iniquity being full, the Lord destroyed the world by a flood.

There came another dispensation in Abraham.

Some have thought that the third hour opened with Noah; but Noah, I believe, was the closing scene of the first dispensation of all that was left that was good. Angels had appeared to Adam, and now God sends his angels who present the great gospel plan to Abraham in the third hour of the world's great day.

It is not necessary for me to make a long argument here that Abraham obeyed the gospel. The Bible says he is "the father of the faithful;" that "he believed God" "that unto Abraham was the gospel preached." You will find this recorded in Paul's letter to the Galatians, third chapter. Perhaps some of you would make out that it was not the gospel of Jesus Christ that Abraham obeyed, that he did not know anything about Christ; but Jesus is my witness on this point, for he said, "Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day, and before Abraham was I am." "If ye were the children of Abraham you would do the works of Abraham." Abraham and the prophets are to be in the kingdom of God. (Luke 13:28.) They must be born again,—obey the gospel, for Jesus said, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3:5. Think of this. That is what he taught as he went about through the villages preaching the gospel of the kingdom which demanded that the people who obeyed it should do the works which Abraham did, to whom, the Bible says, the gospel was preached. I pass by the third hour.

You will remember that after Abraham came Isaac and then Jacob, and that Jacob was the father of twelve sons. You will remember the history of one of them, Joseph, and how subsequently Israel was placed under the shackles of Egyptian bondage, and how that after years had rolled by, God remembered his covenant with Abraham, and how the "sixth hour" of the world's great day was ushered in by the angel's visit to Moses in the burning bush. It is plainly stated that Moses preached unto Israel the commandments and covenants and ordinances of God. Furthermore he said they all drank of that spiritual Rock, which Rock was Christ, and Moses knew Christ so well that he preferred to follow him rather than to enjoy the pleasures of Egypt and become practically the heir apparent to the throne. All Israel became stiffnecked, rebellious, and would not obey the gospel conditions; then God added what is denominated "The Law of Moses," which was merely a schoolmaster to bring them to Christ.

It was a kind of kindergarten school, which is an institution to which we send our smaller children in Canada and the United States (and I suppose you do the same here), where the little ones are taught to make paper and wooden affairs long before they are able to learn the alphabet.

Thus, then, was it intended that the Hebrews should gradually be taught the divine mind by the type and shadows of the law until by and by they would be prepared to receive the gospel. The law of Moses was never intended to save them, but the Bible says "it was the law of sin and the law of death" and comers thereto could not be made perfect, and above all things it was added because of transgression, and was only to continue until the coming of the promised seed. You may say, "Here is an instance where God's mind changed when the law of Moses was done away with." No, it did not change; the law of Moses was done away with when it had completed its purpose. After this great apostasy we follow them down for many, many years when they were bound by priestcraft, superstition, and idolatry, but in the ninth hour of the world's great day angels again made their appearance, visited Zacharias and Elizabeth, and John the Baptist came. Angels appeared to Mary and to Joseph, and Jesus came. Angels appeared to Jesus, and the gospel again was presented for the consideration of the world. Jesus preached the beautiful plan of salvation and inspired by the Holy Ghost, the apostles went forth teaching all things that he had commanded them. But there came a time, as Jesus had foretold in the days of John the Baptist, when the kingdom of heaven suffered violence and the violent took it by force, (Matthew 11: 12,) it began to suffer from its very inception in the days when John the Baptist came preaching in the wilderness, and it continued to suffer during Paul's time, when it had reached a fearful condition of apostasy; and Paul, writing to the Thessalonians, said, "The mystery of iniquity doth already work." And so we see every moment of time the picture became darker and darker until John, taking up the remnants of it, says, "The time came when they were drunken with the blood of the saints," and, as Daniel had prophesied, they were destroying the mighty and holy people.

Dark and hopeless were those days of apostasy, and yet we have one branch of Christianity telling us that there never has been a complete apostasy. An archbishop some years ago stated in reference to the remark made by Jesus, as recorded in Matthew 16, "Upon this rock I will build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it," and from that he argued that if there was an apostasy, Jesus Christ was a false prophet.

Let us examine that for a moment as I can only give the matter a brief examination. I will first open the door and you can peep in and examine the apartment at your leisure. Jesus Christ had something to do with hell as well as the earth, and the record says that God is going to give him the heathen for his inheritance. What will he do with the millions that have not heard of Jesus in this probation? I will give you some quotations from the Old Testament which you will have to hunt up for yourselves as it is nearly time to close: Isaiah 14:12-18; 24:21-23; 42:6, 7; 49:8, 9; 61:1; Ezekiel 26:36, 37, and the ninth and twelfth chapters of Zechariah,—where we learn that many of the dead nations that have gone down to the pit will be kept there as prisoners of hope. Prisoners of hope! Hope? I never thought that there was any hope when you got to hell. Well, that is what it says, that they are "prisoners of hope," and Ezekiel says they are to be visited after many days. Visited by whom? Zechariah says they are to be visited by one who should shed his blood to seal the covenant, and coming down to the New Testament we are told in the tenth chapter of Hebrews that Jesus Christ was the one who shed his blood to seal the covenant. Then the prisoners of hope were visited by no less a personage than the immaculate Son of God. The New Testament says that he that ascended is the same Jesus that descended, that he might fulfill all things. That is found in the fourth chapter of Ephesians.

Now we come to Peter. He tells us in the third chapter of his first epistle that Christ once suffered for sin, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit by which he went and preached unto the spirits in prison of those who were disobedient in the old days of Noah. Why did he go and preach to them? To tell them that there was no hope for them? Did he go there and tantalize them and say like the old woman, "I told you so"? No, he did not go there to tantalize them, but he went there to present them with the everlasting truth—the great fountain of all truth—that Jesus was the Christ. Now that truth had to be presented in hell and the very next chapter says that he is to be the judge of the quick and the dead, that for this cause was the gospel preached to them that are dead, that they may be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the Spirit. The Devil did not want that truth presented to them, but the Psalmist knew Jesus would conquer and so we read in the twenty-fourth Psalm: "Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in. Who is this King of glory? The Lord strong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battle." Here is the fulfillment of the promise that the gates of hell should not prevail against the great truth that Jesus was the Christ and that truth had to be announced in hell that they might live according to God in the spirit and be judged according to men in the flesh.

The Archbishop was mistaken—Jesus did not refer to the apostasy of the church on the earth, but referred to the great fact of the gospel being preached to the spirits in hell.

I pass that by and go to the Christian world. If there has been no apostasy why, I ask, have we got a protestant church? The very fact that we have a protestant religion is proof that there has been an apostasy. Wycliffe (the modern star of the reformation, who gave us our first English Bible), Luther and Calvin, Knox, Wesley, Latimer, and Redley, and all the rest of the reformers, are all considered heterodox by Catholics, and that is true if there has been no apostasy. If, however, there has been an apostasy, these men did right in their efforts to reform and God blessed them in their work, but, mark you, these very men never professed to restore the everlasting gospel, for the eleventh hour had not yet dawned.

The Church of England Homily, appointed to be read in the land in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, reads as follows: "Laity and clergy, learned and unlearned, all ages, sexes, and degrees of men, women, and children of the whole Christendom have been at once buried in the most abominable idolatry and that for the space of eight hundred years and more."

If that is only half true it shows that the whole of Christendom was steeped in abominable idolatry for four hundred years and if it is only a quarter true it shows the same condition for over two hundred years, so that the whole Protestant world bears witness to the fact that there has been an apostasy. And now comes the time for the eleventh hour—the last dispensation—when the gospel should again be preached in all the world. Jesus Christ is my first witness as to this eleventh hour. He says, after viewing the apostasy in the dark days through that splendid gift of prophecy that awakens hope within our hearts, “This gospel shall be preached in all the world for a witness, and then shall the end come.”

Mark you that just before the end of the day, in the eleventh hour, this gospel of the kingdom is again to be preached in all the world for a witness. That is a prophetic statement made by the stainless One himself, and then John, taking up the story, says in the fourteenth chapter of Revelation, “I saw another angel.” Another angel? Yes, “another angel . . . having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people,”—the same angel message of peace, light, hope, and salvation that came to Abraham and to Moses. The same old gospel, mark you, the only one that God had anything to do with, the only one that bears the stamp of divinity upon it; the only one that Christ ever indorsed; and John says it is to be preached to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people.

To prove that the statements made in the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew and in the fourteenth chapter of Revelation refer to the same epoch in the world's history, I cite you to the words “and then shall the end come.” The hour—the last hour—is now upon us, and did this angel come? I ask, did the angel appear to Wycliffe, to Luther, to Calvin, to Knox, to Wesley, or any of the reformers? They never even claimed it. What, then, did they claim? I am going to show you, friends, that these very men looked forward to the time when this gospel would be restored again in its ancient form. I am going to be careful and read actual writings, so that if you are good Methodists or good Baptists or good Disciples and you believe the statements of the founders of your churches, Alexander Campbell, John Wesley, and Roger Williams, then you will believe that the gospel is to be restored in the eleventh hour, prior to the coming of Jesus, as in the New Testament days, and that they looked forward for its restoration.

Here is what Alexander Campbell says in his History of the Disciples, page 36: “The primitive gospel in its effulgence and power is yet to shine out in its original splendor to regenerate the world.”

John Wesley in his Seventy-first Sermon, volume 2, says: “The day is coming . . . the time is at hand when he will fulfill his glorious promise and will arise to maintain his own cause and set up his kingdom.”

Here he says that the day is coming, and that the time is at hand when God will perform his great work and set up his kingdom. The very hymn of Charles Wesley stands by the statement of his brother John:

“Previous to that dreadful day
Which shall thy foes consume,
Jesus Christ prepare thy way,
Let the last prophet come.”

He knew that a prophet had to come; he knew that as John the Baptist prepared the way for his divine Master, so it would be in the days of the second coming of the Son of man—another prophet would arise to prepare the way by preaching the gospel.

Jesus once inquired, “When the Son of Man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?” There had to be a people to receive him when he came, and in order that that people might be prepared for the time of his coming an angel was to be sent with the message to point men to Christ through his chosen prophet.

One more:

“Almighty God of love,
Set up the attracting sign,—”

Yes, there was to be an attracting sign. What was it? What was to be the greatest sign of the second coming of Jesus Christ, and that this gospel of the kingdom was to be again preached unto all the world before the end should come? It was that God would again raise up a prophet to warn the people:

“Almighty God of love,
Set up the attracting sign,
And summon whom thou dost approve
For messengers divine.”

He knew that in the former days Jesus had said to his disciples, “I have chosen you,” and he knew that in the last days Christ would do the same thing and would pass by men who made their ministry a profession. They were to be chosen, and so he says:

“And summon whom thou dost approve
For messengers divine.
From favored Abraham's seed
The new apostles choose.”

He knew that if the everlasting gospel was to be set up there would have to be new apostles to preach

“The soul reviving news.”

I can not dwell so long on Wesley, so we go to the founder of the Baptist Church:

In the poor small span of my life I desired to have been a diligent and constant observer, and have been myself in many ways engaged in city, in country, in court, in schools and universities, in churches in old and New England, and yet can not in the holy presence of God bring in the results of a satisfactory discovery, that neither the begetting ministry of apostles or messengers to the nations, or the feeding or nourishing ministry of pastors and teachers, according to the first institution of the Lord Jesus, is yet restored and extant. These imperfections in the church in its revived condition could be removed by a new apostolic ministry alone.—Hireling Ministry, by Roger Williams.

If any member of the Baptist Church desires more proof that Mr. Williams believed in a complete apostasy, and that he looked for a restoration, I submit the following:

"He (Roger Williams) conceived that the apostasy of anti-christ hath so far corrupted all, that there can be no recovery out of that apostasy till Christ should send forth new apostles to plant churches anew."—Struggles and Triumphs of Religious Liberty, p. 239, and Knowles' History, p. 172.

Luther perceived that the ancient and primitive church of the apostles must on the one hand be restored in opposition to the papacy by which it had been so long oppressed.—D'Aubigne's History of Reformation, vol. 3, p. 80.

Now we are told that the followers of Alexander Campbell do not believe in present day revelation. Yet Campbell makes this statement:

The practical result of all creeds, reformations, improvements, and expectations and longings of society warrant the conclusion that some new revelation, or some new development of the revelations of God must be made before the hopes and expectations of all true Christians can be realized, or Christianity can not save and reform the nations of this world. We want this old gospel back and sustained by the ancient order of things.—Alexander Campbell, Christian System, p. 234.

I have shown that we have reached the eleventh hour and that the greatest modern reformers have looked forward to the time when God would send again inspired men of his own choice in the persons of apostles, prophets, and inspired teachers; that the church was to be reorganized and that "the expectations and longings of society warrant the conclusion that some new revelation . . . must be made before the hopes and expectations of all true Christians can be realized." We believe that that time has come and that God in his infinite mercy has restored the everlasting gospel by angel hands when he appeared to Joseph Smith, the prophet, in the year 1820, and afterwards time and again, by angel hands, until under the instruction of this mighty messenger of divinity, the church was organized with apostles, prophets, and teachers, and is now going forth among the nations preaching, as Jesus said they would, this gospel of the kingdom as a witness before the end comes. We are nearing the end. We are in the twilight of the great day, in the gloom of dissatisfaction, but presently in this groping in the darkness of idolatry and supposition, the promise of my text is beginning to be fulfilled: "It shall come to pass that at evening time it shall be light." Oh, may God help us to see the light and walk in its effulgence is my earnest prayer.

Man is, in truth, a bundle of habits. Every virtue and every vice, every modification of word, thought, and deed, can and does become a habit; nor is there a quality or function of the body or mind, that is not influenced by this great law of human nature.—Paley.

THE PERSONALITY AND DIVINITY OF THE HOLY GHOST.

I have recently, in consequence of a closer and more prolonged scrutiny of the Holy Scriptures, been simply overwhelmed at the very unexpected strength of my position that the Holy Ghost is a distinct spirit entity, or personage, rather than simply an influence or emanation from the Father and the Son. Passage upon passage and text upon text are arrayed in a powerful and unbroken phalanx, proving not only that the Holy Ghost (Ruach Jehovah) is a real and distinct personage or spirit tabernacle, but that he is invested with precisely those attributes of deity which are predicated both of God the Father, and of the Son of God, even our Lord Jesus Christ.

Firstly, however, to clear the ground somewhat, so to speak and to avoid any possible future misunderstanding upon this point, let me say that I fully believe that there is a spirit or afflatus, signified by the Greek substantive pneuma, i. e., wind or "spirit," which is "shed forth," "poured forth," or "breathed" by either or all of the sacred personages composing or comprising the Godhead as in Isaiah 44:3; Joel 2:28, 29; Ezekiel 39:29; Zechariah 12:10, 11; Ephesians 4:8; Acts 2:3, 17; 11:15-17; 10:44-47; 2:33; John 3:5, 8; Mark 1:8-10; John 20:22, and in many other portions of Holy Writ.

I am even willing to concede that this sacred spirit (pneuma or afflatus) is diffused not only by the Father and the Son, but is also the invariable accompaniment surrounding the presence of Heaven's angels, archangels, or, indeed, any angelic messenger sent from the presence-throne or presence-chamber of the King of kings or the Eternal One, to the mortal inhabitants of this sin-blighted earth. I need go no farther to demonstrate this point than to recite the grand and soul-stirring language of Joseph Smith and of Oliver Cowdery when John the Baptist appeared and said unto them, "Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of the Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which bears the keys of the ministration of angels," etc. Every HERALD reader is surely well conversant with their heart-stirring words when filled with that heavenly afflatus which accompanied and pervaded the person of this angelic messenger; and they said, "Who would not bow the knee in humble reverence and worship at such a time?" or language to the same effect and purpose. Similarly when the angelic ministrant appeared to David Whitmer and said to him, "Blessed is the Lord, and he that keepeth his commandments." Similarly, also, but in a much more marked degree, when the angel appeared to Daniel, and the Spirit of God pervading his being was so powerful that Daniel, it is said, "fell at his feet as one dead," till he was miraculously revived by a live coal from off the heavenly altar. (Daniel 10:8-12. See also Isaiah 6:5-7; Revelation 19:10; 22:8.)

tering before Jehovah, when the angel, or rather archangel, Gabriel, appeared to him, announcing the approaching miraculous birth of a son to him and to his age-stricken partner in life, Elizabeth. (Luke 1: 5-12, 18-20, 22. See also Judges 6: 22 and 13: 22; also Luke 2: 9.) All this I fully and cheerfully concede, in the numerous similar passages of scripture relating and referring to the Spirit or pneuma. But when the contention is made that because there is a Spirit of God spoken of repeatedly in the Bible as being "shed forth," "poured out," etc., etc., therefore there is not, and can be no spirit personage or entity, it is then that I utterly fail to see the logic of the position.

I will now give scriptural proofs for believing in the distinct and unquestionable personality of the Holy Spirit, and will afterwards present them with the added proofs referred to at the beginning of this article. When Nephi was upon the mountain the Holy Ghost visited him and showed to him great and marvelous things; and though in the form of a man, Nephi declares that he "knew it was the Spirit of the Lord." (1 Nephi 3: 12.) The Spirit of God, true to the character and description which Christ gives him in John 16: 13, 14, did not "speak of himself" at all, not even informing Nephi who he was; but "talking of the things of Jesus," i. e., his birth and life, resurrection and glory, and showing them to Nephi, thus "glorifying" Christ, as our Lord and Master, in the very manner in which that same divine Lord and Master declared that the Spirit of God would and will do. (John 16: 14.) In John 16: 13-15 we find the following language: "Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth; for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak; and he will show you things to come. He shall glorify me; for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you. All things that the Father hath are mine: therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shall shew it unto you."

In one verse of each of the two preceding chapters our Lord dwells upon the same glorious theme, viz., the promise of the Holy Ghost; for in John 14: 16, 17 he says, "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another comforter, that he may abide with you for ever: even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in [or among] you." This word "in" is the same as in Luke 17: 21 where Christ says, "The kingdom of God is within you," the original Greek word signifying "amongst" you.

Thus are we face to face with the significant fact that in the short space of five almost contiguous verses, where our Lord Jesus Christ is alluding to the coming of the Holy Ghost, he not only rigidly avoids using the impersonal pronoun "it" (it shall not speak of itself, etc.,) which would have been the only proper word to have used if the Holy Spirit is simply an influence or afflatus; but Christ in these five short verses employs the personal pronoun no less than sixteen times. Surely so very striking a coincidence removes the subject for ever from the realms of chance or uncertainty, and impresses the fact by its very reiteration (God's method of teaching) so powerfully and conclusively upon the mind as to almost force one to the conclusion that He who "spake as never man spake," intended thereby expressly to guard his faithful disciples against any uncertainty of mind or thought as to the really true personality and constitution of the promised comforter, "even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive." (John 14: 17.)

Again, further on in the same chapter (viz., John 14: 26), the Lord dilates upon that same blessed hope and prospect in store for his disciples, and, strange to say, with the very same studied use of the personal pronoun and the same evidently intentional avoidance of the impersonal pronoun; for he says to them, "These things have I spoken unto you, being yet present with you. But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." Surely if the other apostles were to declare with unanimous voice that the Holy Ghost was merely the spirit or essence, so to speak, derived from or emanating from the Father and the Son, these solemn words from the Lord Jesus Christ himself should carry more weight and contain more conviction than the words of them all put together.

Not one, however, of Christ's apostles, or of the sacred writers, entertained the least doubt or uncertainty as to the proper name and personality of the Holy Ghost, the "Lord and giver of life," for the venerable apostle Peter expressly declares in Acts 11: 12 unto the assembled multitudes, that the Spirit bade him to go with the men (sent from Cornelius), and that he "nothing doubting" obeyed the call, knowing that the Holy Ghost had the same right to command as the Father and the Son. The students of the Scriptures will at once think of a number of scriptural quotations to the same effect and purport; as for example, Acts 16: 6-10:

Now when they had gone throughout Phrygia and the region of Galatia, and were forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia, after they were come to Mysia, they essayed to go into Bithynia: but the Spirit suffered them not. And they passing by Mysia came down to Troas. And a vision appeared to Paul in the night; there stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us. And after he had seen the vision, immediately we endeavored to go into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us for to preach the gospel unto them.

Here the words Lord and Spirit are used synonymously; the passage in the Septuagint version being rendered thus: "Gathering assuredly that the Lord the Spirit had called us also to preach the gospel unto them." The testimonies of similar power and import are, indeed, so cogent and so numerous that I might easily and readily furnish your readers with proof upon proof, testimony upon testimony, that the disciples and apostles of our Lord did, without a solitary exception, direct and shape their ministerial labors and exertions with the strictest regard to the appointments and dictations of the Holy Ghost; and did, in the most unqualified and unmistakable manner, receive and consider all such commands and directions as equal in power, in scope, and in authority to a direct commandment from either the Father or the Son.

One other such proof. We read in Acts 13: 1-4:

Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers; as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Luceus of Cyrene, and Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the Tetrarch, and Saul. As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul, for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away. So they, being sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed unto Seleucia; and from thence they sailed to Cyprus.

Here, as in the many similar passages which might be adduced there is neither question nor quibble as to the authority and divinity and power of the personage who gave the call, and who "sent them forth." No inquiring as to whether the eternal Father sanctioned or his Son indorsed the call. No. They, "being sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed unto Seleucia." Surely an evident, nay, self-evident and indubitable, demonstration that the disciples and apostles of our blessed Lord considered the power, presence, and personality of the Holy Ghost equal to that of either God the Father or the Son.

I now revert to the main proposition (or problem) by a closer criticism and examination of Matthew 28: 19, 20: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen."

Here three things are obvious. First, That the repentant believers are to be baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; three separate and distinct names, yet but one baptism, which to me seems calculated to typify and emphasize Saint John's solemn assertion in 1 John 5: 7 that "these three are one." Second, The conclusion is forced upon one by the solemn and pointed juxtaposition of the three names, that they certainly represent three distinct and separate entities, i. e., personages of Spirit or tabernacle. Third, Unless the Savior explicitly intended to mislead and mystify his followers (a most improbable supposition), he would not have so distinctly and pointedly introduced the name of the Holy Ghost into this connection, knowing that all those who should thereafter read, hear, or learn of this statement, would, at once and by the very obvious grammatical construction of the language, conclude that if the Father and the Son are truly and in fact personages at all, then must also the third individual of the trio or trinity be as equally and as indubitably a personage as well.

I have thought both anxiously and deeply over this proposition and can see positively no loophole of escape according to the rules of logic. Saint Paul catches the same idea and impression, and brings the same august names into the very same juxtaposition in his benediction to the Corinthian branch or church saying unto them, in his beautiful and magnificent peroration: "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all, Amen."—2 Corinthians 13: 14.

If, then, the Holy Ghost is not as distinctively a personage as either God the Father or God the Son, then the propinquity of a third name, supposing there is really no third personage, is not only misplaced, but positively misleading, not only in this reference of Saint Paul's, but in the still more solemn and weighty allusion by our blessed Lord himself, in the august baptismal formula: "Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost (or "Ruach Jehovah," also rendered "Ruach ha Elohim," Spirit of the Lord or the Lord the Spirit.)

I have been repeatedly struck with the extremely solemn manner in which our Lord Jesus Christ speaks of the name and the important solemnity of the Holy Ghost, positively in a sense placing it above his own name, as witness the following portentous pronouncement: "Verily, I say unto you, All sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, and blasphemies wherewith soever they shall blaspheme: but he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation."—Mark 3: 28, 29. (See also Matthew 12: 31, 32; Luke 12: 10; 1 John 5: 16.)

Here the solemn appellation of the Holy Ghost is "Ruach ha Elohim," the same august name as in Genesis 1: 3: "And God said, Let there be light; and there was light. And God [Elohim] saw the light, that it was good." Again, well I am reminded of a solemn and holy interpretation of unknown tongues which was given by the then president of the Hackney Branch, London, England, very shortly after my entrance into this Church, the mystical body of Christ as Paul says in Ephesians 5: 32. The words have so frequently proved a source of divine help and consolation to me while in the midst of trial or temptation, that I can not refrain from introducing them here:

"Let there be light, Elohim said;
 And through the universe there spread
     Life-giving light:
 And if for wisdom children ask,
 To grant it be the Spirit's task,
     And banish night.
 Let not your hearts be troubled, ye that mourn.
 Rejoice, rejoice; for lo, 'tis now the dawn,
 And wisdom, which your God alone can give,
 According to your faith shall ye receive."

Those sweet and solemn words were spoken, or rather sung, in an unknown tongue more than twenty years ago; yet the solemn sweetness and savor of them are with me still. Truly God's words are "meat indeed."

WHAT IS SLEEP?

That the most familiar states are often the least easily explained is illustrated by the number and variety of the physiologic theories of sleep. These have multiplied of late both in number and ingenuity, though they are so far apart as to seem at first sight quite irreconcilable. But in an article in Popular Science (August) Doctor Percy G. Stiles, of Bellevue Hospital Medical College, shows that a certain number of principal hypotheses may be reconciled to some degree; that, at any rate, their elements may be utilized to construct a composite theory. Of the theories mentioned by Doctor Stiles, some are chemical, some purely physiologic, and some histologic or dependent on microscopic structure. Says the writer:

"Fatigue at bottom is a chemical phenomenon, and so the theories of the first class are chemical. When a muscle has been stimulated until it exhibits the well-known signs of fatigue, there are two possible inferences—either this means exhaustion of fuel substances or an accumulation of poisonous waste. Analogous views have been supported in regard to the chemical changes that lead to sleep. We have had an exhaustion theory advanced by Pflüger and an accumulation theory offered by Preyer."

The former of these theories supposes that sleep is a depression of activity, due to the exhaustion of the "intramolecular" oxygen stored up in the muscular cells, while, according to the latter, it is a state of coma, due to poisoning by waste products which are not fully removed as formed during the activities of the day. Still another theory—that of Howell—rests on the undoubted fact that in sleep the amount of blood in the brain is reduced. His theory supposes that this ebb-tide of blood from the brain is the immediate cause of sleep through exhaustion of the vasomotor center. This important nerve-center does constant work during the waking hours. Says the writer:

"The center is subject to the play of afferent impulses from all parts of the body. It is reflexly spurred to action by every sensory impression through eye or ear. It is called to respond in an appropriate manner to every change of posture or other muscular movement. It does not escape the effects of psychic processes, emotional states. Nothing is more natural than to suppose that the nerve-cells of the center become fatigued by this unceasing activity. After the hours that we habitually number in a period of waking it responds less and less readily to the demands made upon it. It begins to lose its grip, so to speak, on the superficial and, perhaps, the splanchnic vessels. The blood supply to the brain tends to become less and the pressure in its arteries to be reduced. The subjective consequences is drowsiness."

Now what is the condition of the brain-cell during sleep, however this condition may be caused? Oddly enough we may choose between two hypotheses quite opposite in character. Says Doctor Stiles:

"The first, which has attracted the greater notice, is that of Duval. He has suggested that consciousness depends on the contact of cell-processes in the brain whereby effects are propagated from neuron to neuron. . . . The brain must lose its individuality by the breaking of connections between its structural elements. If we could suppose that every synapse in the central nervous system might be snapped, and impassable gaps open between the cells wherever one had been wont to influence another, there must be an end of consciousness, for, in utter isolation, these cells could no longer combine their activities into one whole, such as forms the physical basis of psychic life. A much more local disruption of connection, limited perhaps to the cortex, might be sufficient to explain the subjective condition in sleep. At any rate, Duval's view is that the cortical cells are capable of retracting or extending their processes so as to sever and resume their relation with neighboring elements. Experimental evidence in support of this theory is naturally slight. Wiedersheim has described ameboid movements on the part of cells in the nervous system of a small transparent crab. Of course it is only in such lower forms that the living cells can readily be brought under the microscope. Duval himself suddenly beheaded dogs that were awake and others in anesthesia, and made histological preparations from the brains. He believed he could distinguish the sleeping brain by the more contracted and isolated appearance of its cells.

"The second histological theory of sleep, which has been said to be quite opposed to the first, is that of the Italian neurologist Lugaro. Both demand the capability of ameboid movement on the part of the cells. But while Duval supposes that in sleep the cells have broken their contacts, Lugaro supposes that they have made new contacts with great freedom. At first thought this view seems unreasonable. A multiplicity of contacts and added pathways in the brain might be supposed to imply a richer and keener consciousness. But this would be true only to a certain point. When the indiscriminate combination had gone a step farther mental confusion might be expected, then fantastic associations and a meaningless mosaic of memories—practically a state of dreaming. Let the cells commingle their impulses still more freely and consciousness will be lost, for the diffusion of energy in the brain will result in a lessened intensity of flow in the principal channels. If each cell scatters its communications in every possible direction, no definite effect in consciousness is to be looked for. According to Duval, the cells which are affected in sleep can not discharge; according to Lugaro, they may do so, but the resulting impulses are utterly dissipated in a maze of by-ways. Waking, according to Duval, is the resumption of intercourse among these cells; according to Lugaro, it is the restriction of intercourse to habitual and purposeful channels."

There is no reason, Doctor Stiles thinks, why we may not reconcile these two points of view. It may be that many paths are interrupted in sleep, while others are opened. In the hypnotic state many paths must be blocked, including those by which the will of the subject habitually asserts itself, while others, especially those making connections between the auditory and motor areas, transmit impulses with extraordinary efficiency. In fact, we may construct a reasonable theory of sleep by making use of all those that have been mentioned. Says the writer:

"We may suppose, in the first place, that the alternation of day and night through the ages has impressed its rhythm upon the race, so that it is hard for the individual to break from the habitual course in which activity is associated with light and rest with darkness. In other words, the amount of the metabolism tends to keep above a mean for some hours and then to fall below it. The excess of destructive processes over those which are recuperative during the waking hours results in general and local fatigue, a condition into which may enter both the depletion of intramolecular oxygen and the accumulation of toxic waste-products. While this progressive loss of condition affects the body as a whole, the nervous system is subject to its own peculiar drains. It is very probably the hard-worked vasomotor center which proves to be the vulnerable spot. With its release of the blood-vessels in certain areas from its reënforcing influence comes the cerebral anemia. Then, we may suppose, the nerve-cells become less active than in the brain which has its full supply of blood, that they cease to send impulses over the usual routes, either because gaps have opened or because such impulses as do arise are permitted to stray and be scattered, producing no effect in consciousness or one which is quite bizarre and meaningless.

"Such an outline as this is a composite scheme in which the conditions emphasized by Pflüger and Preyer are given recognition as fundamental causes of sleep; Howell's idea is accepted as explaining well its onset, its varying depth, and the awakening; while the pictures sketched by Duval and Lugaro are combined to represent the intimate state of the slumbering brain."—The Literary Digest for October 3, 1903.

MILLIONAIRES' GIFTS IN 1903.

Another year draws to its close and the millionaire philanthropists practically have ended their annual effort to give away their earnings and diminish their principal. Mr. Carnegie is the most conspicuous figure in the group, not only because he gives far more than any other, but because he is the one who discovered that it would be a disgrace to die rich, and this set the others to thinking. The library is still a hobby with him, and this year he has given $5,595,500 for library buildings in ninety-six cities and towns in this country. He began giving away libraries in 1900. Since that time he has given 323 in the United States, at a cost of $21,722,500. In addition to these he has given this year $350,000 for a library in Toronto, $100,000 for libraries in England, and $125,000 for a library in Barbados. He has given to colleges and other institutions in this country and abroad $1,357,000; to churches, $34,500; to The Hague Court of Arbitration, $1,750,000; for scientific research in Scotland, $5,000,000; for phonetic reform, $10,000; for the New York botanical garden, $2,000; to the town of Dunfermline, Scotland, $2,500,000; to the New York Engineers' Union Home, $1,000,000; for a pension fund for disabled workmen in the Carnegie Steel Works, $4,000,000. This makes a total of $25,824,500. He has not touched his principal. He has not given away this year's income, which, in round numbers, is $26,000,000. He must give away $50 every minute to dispose of his income alone. Then think of his huge principal!

It would be rash to say that Mr. J. D. Rockefeller, Sr., is haunted with fears of disgrace if he should be found dying with money in his coffers. His income, probably, is larger than Mr. Carnegie's, yet while the latter has given away $25,824,500, Mr. Rockefeller has given away but $3,044,597, and more than one half of this to the University of Chicago. His other donations include $173,500 to religious bodies, $282,000 to colleges, and $66,666 to the Nebraska State university, which that institution finally declined to accept on high moral grounds, notwithstanding the tempting array of sixes; and $30,000 to charity.

Mr. Henry Phipps, another philanthropic millionaire, has given away $1,835,000, of which $1,500,000 is for a noble purpose, a free hospital for consumptives. Doctor D. K. Pearsons has kept his "lever" pretty busily at work, but he has only given $200,- 000 to five little colleges and $50,000 to charity. The doctor, however, may make a better record in 1904, for he has over $300,000 of pledges to clear up in June, and after that he proposes to start in afresh, for he is determined that when he goes there will be none of his money left for any one to scramble over. And what has J. Pierpont Morgan given? Just $10,000 to the American Archaeological school in Rome, whose a dozen or so pupils are watching the forum excavations.

These five men, who are the principal millionaire philanthropists, combined have given away about $31,000,000 during the year. As they are elderly men, and life is uncertain and time is short, they must expedite their benefactions if they do not intend to make their exit until they have given back all they have received. And yet their $31,000,000 will do great good in many ways.—Chicago Tribune for December 28, 1903.

COMMUNION OF THE LORD'S SUPPER.

There is no doubt, and never has been a shadow of doubt upon my mind, that Jehovah has established Zion and Zion City in these latter days, and destined us to do the latter-day work.

A CHURCH WHOSE COUNTERFEIT IS PROVED BY ITS OWN SO-CALLED REVELATIONS.

If the church of the so-called Latter Day Saints were indeed the Zion of the consummation of all things and of the restoration, the Christian Catholic Church in Zion would have no right to exist. But that church has been smeared by the horrible sin which has made the name of Mormon to be synonymous with that of adultery.

If that church has now received a revelation that plural marriage is no longer of God, then it could never have received a revelation that plural marriage was of God, because God does not change like that. God is not a man that he should lie, nor the son of man that he should repent.

If God gave a revelation to Joseph Smith that plural marriage was divine, and gave another revelation to President Woodruff that it was no longer divine, then it is perfectly clear that either President Woodruff was not led by God, or that Joseph Smith was not.

If, as the Mormons of to-day hold, plural marriage is no longer right, then it was never right; and that church has proved its own imposture and apostasy by the contradictory nature of its teaching on that point alone. But there has been no spiritual power in that church. I will not say that there are not Christians there, for under every form of church government, and without any form of church government, men find God.

But if this is not Zion, then there is no Zion anywhere.

IF I AM NOT GOD'S PROPHET, THERE IS NONE ON GOD'S EARTH THAT IS.

But God has called me and I have obeyed. He has founded Zion, and all the powers of hell can not destroy it. (Amen.)—Leaves of Healing, December 12, 1903.

NATURE AS A PUZZLE MAKER.

(The Washington Post, New York.)

Nature sometimes does things with the evident intention of just puzzling people.

Some of the little problems, for the solution of which no prize is offered, are scattered along the Atlantic coast in out-of-the-way places, and are only heard of now and then when some one calls attention to the fact that an answer to the conundrum is still awaited.

One example is afforded by the "singing sands of Pascagoula." Pascagoula lies on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico, in the southern part of Mexico.

The warm waters of the gulf wash gently up on a smooth and shining beach, which looks like any other smooth and shining beach in that region. But the sands of Pascagoula beach have properties which the sands of other beaches do not possess—they are tuneful and can sing.

At odd intervals, when the tide is out, the moon shining, and the lazy swell of the summer seas breaks gently on the shore, a strange, sweet melody rises from the beach, and all the grains of sand seem, like the morning stars, to sing together.

The music is not lively, nor yet is it very mournful—just a pleasant, dreamy sound of singing, which wells up from the beach and steals along the shore.

There have been various guesses at the cause of this phenomenon, but, so far, no one has been able to give a wholly satisfactory answer to this charming little conundrum propounded by nature.

A more gruesome riddle is offered by the palatine light, which has been celebrated in verse by Whittier. Of late years the light, which used to be seen at intervals off the coast of Block Island, has not been observed, or, if observed, it has not been reported.

Native Block Islanders who see the light are chary of speaking about it to strangers, for fear of being laughed at. But there are well-authenticated instances of the palatine light having been seen not so very long ago, and any night the passengers on a Fall River steamer may chance to see it glowing beneath the bluffs of Block Island.

The story is that a ship laden with immigrants from the palatinate of the Rhine was decoyed on the rocks by false lights and then set on fire by the wreckers, and that the palatine light is the phantom of the old ship, come back to burn again as a perpetual reminder to the people of Block Island of the sins of their ancestors.

So the legend says; and the people who do not believe in phantom ships have sought in vain for some more reasonable explanation of the phenomenon.

The light is usually described as consisting of three pyramidal flames, which seem to be hovering over the surface of the water, though one account by an eyewitness compares the light with that of a fire seen through the window of a house at a distance.

The light, according to the best accounts, appears either just before or just after a northeast storm. There seems to be no doubt that the palatine light is a real thing, and nature is still inviting answers to the riddle of it.

A third puzzle of the sort, which may be mentioned, and which still awaits solving, is a rather boisterous one. Nature has been uttering it ever since the white man came to the Connecticut valley, and nobody knows how long before.

It is known as the moodous noises, and consists of a series of groanings and quakings, accompanied by the rattling of chains and sounds like the discharge of fire-arms.

All these amazing noises issue from a peaceful-looking hill near East Hadden, Connecticut. The hill is like any other New England hill, and no one has ever been able to discover why or how, every two or three years, it "takes on" so and disturbs the country for miles around.—World Wide, December 5, 1903.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Children's Evenings.

Love of home is the best safeguard that a mother can bequeath to her children. When they feel that it is always a delightful place in which to spend an evening, that it is there their best manners and highest standards of morality are wanted, then home takes on the sacredness of a sanctuary in the children's minds. Such a home the young father and young mother should build in their ideals. Fortunate it is that ideals have a happy influence of constantly drawing us nearer to them. There are ideal homes all over the land and as two or three are conspicuous in every neighborhood, lessons may be learned from them.

As soon as the fall school term opens and the days are shorter the long play hours out of doors after supper must be discontinued. Unless children have something definite to amuse them they are restless and worry until bedtime. Boys and girls in their 'teens have lessons to be learned and though school work may be a pleasure, one hour devoted to quiet study will accomplish more than an entire evening spent in trifling over the lessons with the attention wandering between family fun and the actual acquisition of knowledge. Children under seven go to bed at sundown, but what of the restless sprites of eight, nine, and ten years who are in fine trim for a frolic just after dinner.

This is the golden opportunity for fathers, mothers, and children to become acquainted in a social way. During the day mother is the censor of duty and father the high chief justice in the last court of discipline; now discipline may be relaxed and all work for enjoyment on terms of equality. In many families this hour of frolic is kept sacred and when the curfew sounds at eight or half past eight, the little ones trot off cheerfully to bed and the elders settle for quiet study and reading.

A number of amusements may be suggested for the hour when the family are together. In some households the mother has a list of games which receives new additions from time to time as she hears of something or invents a fresh occupation. When at a loss what to do she refers to her list. As children are mercurial in their likes and dislikes and often a season of unrest prevails, sometimes the plan for the evening must be dropped as soon as begun and another scheme substituted more in keeping with the spirit of the times. Tact is a valuable element in the successful control of children.

When all are in the reading humor, the father or one of the older children may read an interesting story, stopping now and then to provoke discussion, and opinions are asked from even the youngest. What do you think of the hero's conduct? What would you have done under like circumstances? Or as a game where every one may take part the titles of stories may be suggested by the children themselves, such as "Stolen by Gypsies," "Adventures of a tramp," "Trials of a rat," "What the canary bird thought." These titles are shaken up in a hat with blanks and the first drawing a title begins the story, talking for five minutes. His neighbor continues and so on until it is brought to a conclusion. As every narrator tries to excel in wild adventures, the story is full of interest and at the same time has an educative purpose in inducing an intelligible story of connected English.

Another game training imaginative power, requires a question supposing a situation from every one engaged. What would you do if the house were on fire, or you drifted from shore in an open boat, or you were left without money in a strange city, or you were arrested for some other person? The questions are drawn and answered in order of the numbers. A game called "Forty questions" is excellent for developing reasoning power and I have yet to meet the children that are tired of it. A committee leaves the room and decides on some object. It may be the North Cape, or an apple on King Oscar's table, or the bow on the left slipper of Shakespeare in Lincoln Park. The victim questioned may answer yes or no. The usual procedure is to determine to what kingdom he belongs. Is it animal, vegetable, or mineral? Is it in this hemisphere? Is it within a mile? etc. Instead of the number of questions being limited to forty, a time-limit may be assigned and the family party take sides and have the pleasant excitement of rivalry.

Patented games of various sorts and those of authors, quotations, beasts, birds, animals and historical events are both valuable and entertaining. Then, of course, there are the more active games of "Blind man's buff," "Drop the handkerchief," "Musical chairs," "Pinning the tail on the donkey" and guessing and forfeits. Self-control and fairness in playing are lessons learned in family games outside the mere fun in it. It does not hurt the dignity of either father or mother to join in the romping. The children love them all the better when they realize that they are human and only children of larger growth and broader experience.

Game evenings should alternate with more serious work. Alphabets of quotations, that is, each quotation beginning with a letter of the alphabet in proper order, may be made from the Bible, Shakespeare, Longfellow, Lowell, or any of the poets. I have known children of ten to hunt through Homer and Dante for treasures of thought, usually doing so for the sake of having something different from their neighbors, though Longfellow or the simple traditional proverbs are much nearer their grasp.

Scrap-books may be filled with pictures of famous men, of European scenes, famous buildings, American scenes, war chronicles, from English history and celebrated works of art. Magazines and illustrated weeklies are so plenty in these days and every household has a surplus stock. Childless people are only too glad to give them away. Even the four-year-old could make a scrap-book of animals. The illustration of books interests children of reading years. Boys of eleven have illustrated Ivanhoe by cutting landscapes and groups from magazines, fitting passages in the book. Where the child is enthusiastic over it, a cheap edition of the work should be purchased and the scrap pictures mounted on water-color paper or thin parchment, inserted at the proper places and the volume resewed and rebound with a decorative cover by the young bookmaker himself. Undertakings like these may extend over the whole year and be put away when the interest flags and brought out at odd intervals. Shorter poems like the "Village Blacksmith," or stories such as "Æsop's Fables" have a pictorial quality and are not as great an undertaking as a novel. Many a child would undertake the illustration of a short story when a longer one would seem stupendous.

Every work of this nature has the advantage of enlisting the interest and occupying the hands as well as the head. Away from home the young worker is constantly on the alert to add to his stock of pictures or quotations and he calls upon his friends to help him. Elder children may be encouraged to get up little plays. Those still in the grammar school have dramatized the "Ancient Mariner," scenes from "Church's Homer," "Masque of Pandora," "Courtship of Miles Standish," and scenes from Shakespeare. If the memorizing of parts is to be a stumbling-block, let them be read. The interested members will memorize anyway and the idle ones not be driven from the game.

Very often boys show a decided bent for making collections and this may be turned to good account by devoting set evenings to classifying and labeling leaves of native trees, common weeds, botanical specimens or collections of insects, stones, coins or stamps. In every neighborhood is a teacher or some one interested in natural science who is willing to give suggestions and advice concerning the classification of specimens.

In an altogether different line are sewing evenings where father, mother, boys, and girls mend and darn. Guests are drawn into the contest. The children may compete for a box of home-made fudges and thus give zest to the hour. Such an evening occurring once in two weeks is fun for all concerned and not often enough for the children to find out that they were working and that the boys were learning a valuable lesson in looking after their own clothes. Inspection evening, when father inspects the bureau-drawers and closets, awarding prizes and certificates of honor to the most orderly, may be made an occasion. The family log-book is another interesting scheme. Daily, every member of the family makes an entry of some event or some pleasure and, if nothing can be thought of, a quotation may be written. The baby just learning to walk may have her scribe and add her mark.

Then there are study courses and reading courses well worth following. Their influence all over the country can not be over-estimated. Thus, by varying the evenings' amusements and using tact to suit occasion, a family interest may be kept alive. Children without brothers and sisters should be invited to join the circle. Malcontents should be treated with diplomacy and, when the choice comes between exile and fun with the others, they usually come to terms.

Boys and girls of school age, still in the high school, should not be permitted to become society men and women and should be allowed very few evenings away from home. When there, their greatest pleasure should be in company with brothers and sisters in the family circle. Success in this world and true nobility of character depend upon ability to love one's neighbor as one's self. Boys and girls on good terms with their own families are usually unselfish and have learned to give as well as take.—Lena M. McCauley, in the Interior.

Letter Department.

MANCHESTER, England, December 28, 1903.

Dear Herald: Can I intrude on your space for one issue, and for the first time in the letter department? I have a friend who is in delicate health, living at 78 South James Street, Kansas City, Kansas, whom I am very anxious some of our elders or missionaries should call on. Will our missionary in charge please notice? Ask for Mr. Victor Dennett. He will be very pleased to see any of our ministers, as he is much interested in the work.

I also wish for the address of any member of the Church residing at Johannesburg, South Africa. I am under the impression I saw a report of one of our elders preaching there some time ago. Will some one give me the desired information, as I have a brother there to whom I should like to introduce the gospel.

I can not refrain from mentioning that our little branch (South Salford) has lost one of its rarest flowers in our beloved Sr. Annie Shaw, who departed for her heavenly home on the 2d inst., aged twenty-five years. Tears filled the eyes and sorrow the hearts of the members of the branch when news was conveyed to them of her death. Some were present when she passed away. On the Sunday previous it happened to be my privilege to speak at our evening service, she being there, and I shall never forget her earnest, inquiring face as she eagerly listened to every word that was said. During the course of my remarks I referred to Mrs. Browning's death scene when, as her eyes closed to the light here and opened to the greater light beyond, she exclaimed, "It is beautiful, it is beautiful!" Little did I think that before many hours would pass away, our dear sister would see this beautiful light for herself. All who knew her mourn. She was a Saint not only in name, but in deed, and her influence on those she came in contact with will never fade. May those she has left emulate her life and character.

John Ruskin has said, "The man who is willing to sacrifice not only his present, but his future, not only his lower pleasures, but his higher enjoyments, to hasten the coming of the kingdom of God and the reign of righteousness, has reached the summit of true civilization." Such a one was our sister and long will she be remembered in the hearts of those who witnessed her gentle nature and beautiful life.

LEAVENWORTH, Indiana.

Editors Herald: This has been a pleasant year to me. I have been doing all the work I could; my weakness is great. Southern Indiana people are hard to reach. They will attend Saints' meetings, but very few will accept the angel's message. The people say the doctrine is sound, but is not very popular, and they like man-made theories better than they do the gospel that the Saints present.

I have been holding a series of meetings in my own branch. Interest good and one intelligent young man, David Matherty, and others are talking about joining when the weather gets warm. They think it is too cold now.

The schoolhouses are closed against Saints in Southern Indiana, and that has hindered our work very much. The Saints have favor in the eyes of the people. In many places in Southern Indiana and elsewhere I have been turned out of schoolhouses this winter.

The missionary was at our place, the Leavenworth Branch, and held a series of meetings from December 12 to 17. The preaching was good. Come again, Bro. Jenkins.

The people take hold of this latter-day gospel very slowly. They seem to be afraid of it. The gospel will save men from their sins if they receive it. It will make them clean. We must be pure before we can enter the kingdom of heaven. There seems to be a stupor among the Saints, that is, some of the members have no spiritual life. The Lord will remember Zion.

Your brother in bonds,
P. A. FLINN.

DES MOINES, Iowa, January 11, 1904.

Dear Herald: Our district conference is called to meet at Runnells, February 27, 28. There has been no gathering together of the Saints of the district since the August reunion at Rhodes, and it is hoped that at the coming conference there will be a large attendance. The Sunday-school and Religio organizations will hold conventions on the 26th and the workers in these departments should aim to be present.

The new year in our city opened with a disastrous fire in our State building, the damage reaching a quarter of a million dollars. The magnificent structure cost three million dollars and was one of the finest capitol buildings in the West.

The Church is moving onward and the Saints are coming to a higher standard. One by one the indifferent ones of the past are coming to a normal spiritual condition, and more of the younger ones are expressing a desire to be active workers. The Sunday-school officers of the past term were continued in their work, and it is pleasing to all to note the growth in this work during the past year. This department of church work has reached out and broadened its work until every Latter Day Saint family in the city has felt the influence and ministering hand of the Sabbath-school. At Christmas-time each family, and especially the aged and the more isolated ones, were remembered. A Senior Quarterly is ordered for each family and placed in the home and Saints are thus offered the privilege of the Sunday-school lessons and much good has resulted.

The Religio with its new officers is moving forward and more families are being interested in the work. The Ladies' Aid Society, which was inactive during the summer, has taken up active work again.

The one question of interest now before the Saints of this city is the erection of a new church. The needs of the work in the city demand a more convenient house of worship and the Saints are united and ready to put forth the efforts to have a new church. A soliciting committee of five have been appointed and they have organized and we feel assured will not fail in their duty. The subscription paper stipulates a building not to exceed three thousand dollars in cost, and provides for a building committee of five selected by the Church here and the Presiding Bishop of the Church. The subscriptions already offered show the earnestness with which the Saints are going to share in this work. We feel assured that the year 1904 will see a new Latter Day Saint church erected in this city, and to this end the Saints will labor.

Allow us, dear HERALD, to repeat the announcement of our regular service and the location of the church for the benefit of Saints who may be coming to the city, or passing through here. The church is located at East Sixteenth and Des Moines Streets.

Sunday services: Sunday-school at ten and preaching at eleven o'clock in the morning. Religio at six o'clock in the evening and preaching at half past seven. Prayer-meeting is held Wednesday evenings.

A. A. REAMS.

ZENITH, Illinois, January 7, 1904.

Editors Herald: As the old year has passed and the new year has come in I thought I would write a few lines for the first time to the HERALD. I am well pleased with the new First Primary lessons now being published in the Quarterly. They are a great help to me and are so much easier for the little tots to understand. In the review lesson of last quarter was Joseph's dream about the sheaves. I prepared the little sheaves and took them to the class. The little ones delighted in setting them up and in having them bow to Joseph's sheaf. Then I told them about Joseph and his brothers. I have a nice little class in which I take delight.

We take the HERALD and Autumn Leaves and delight in reading them. Bro. Spurlock has preached some splendid sermons here since Christmas.

Your humble sister,
LUCY HOOVER.

CHESLEY, Idaho.

Editors Herald: I write to you because I am interested in the salvation of our souls. I am not a Latter Day Saint (except in heart), but I have a desire to be. We live here near Culdac, Idaho, in Nez Perces County, and we wish to know where the nearest branch of Saints is and would like the address of some of them. My mother once belonged to the Church and so we children can never feel justified in joining any other denomination, as we desire to be members of what we believe to be the true church established by our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and reestablished by his true prophet, Joseph Smith.

There are a number of us here who desire to lead Christian lives, but we are as a sheep without a shepherd. Please answer soon and oblige.

Yours respectfully,
ZELPHA ZIGLER.

CHESLEY, Idaho.

Mr. Joseph Smith: I have made up my mind to be baptized as soon as possible and ask your prayers till then. Sending you my blessing I am,

Very truly yours,
STEPHEN DRAZEY.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, January 12, 1904.

Editors Herald: I am still living and am in the faith, trying to do what I can for this grand, noble work which has brought so much peace and joy to my soul and through which eternal life has been begotten within me.

I have taken pleasure in laboring in this stake and have made many acquaintances, with whom I enjoyed a portion of the good Spirit of promise, filling my soul with the love of God for them and all mankind. I have been blessed with a goodly degree of the Spirit of God in preaching, and in my work as an evangelical minister. God has, to my joy and satisfaction, come to my help wonderfully in this line of work. To him be all the praise and glory for ever, for he knows my weakness as well as my inability to labor in any way for the advancement of this work independent of help from him.

I truly desire to work with an eye single to the glory of God, as I am fully persuaded I can not labor successfully in any other way. My work has been received in all the branches where I have been, and the good Saints have kindly administered to my wants. The authorities of this stake have treated me with great respect; they surely are men of God in the right place, and laboring with pleasure and integrity of heart and soul for the final redemption of Zion. As a people we are certainly growing in "grace and in the knowledge of the truth."

Now to the dear Saints of the Fremont and other districts among whom I have labored so many years, Be of good cheer and still trust in the God of your fathers, who has been so mindful of you with all "the host of Israel," to permit us to be on the earth in this the "greatest of all the dispensations of his mercy to man."

Let us hold on to the faith and endure to the end, and gain the prize. May God be with you all, shall be my continual prayer until the final victory is won.

In gospel bonds,

HENRY KEMP.

From the Tri-Cities.

Dear Herald: Some ex-missionary, temporary sojourner, or one who has left because of changes in occupation, may ask the question, "How are the Saints of the Tri-cities?" We are all here like a "pegged-down fishing match" and intend to stay until we go of our own accord or are commanded to "move on." We have not faith to move very large mountains, but there is no immediate danger of any deserting and going over to the "enemy." We are trying to get our feet firmly fixed so that we will not slip; yes, and we find some flowers and many thorns along the narrow path of duty. If we find one thing to discourage there are two to encourage; if there is one thing to make sad, there are more to make glad. There may be some who can see spots on the sun, but more that see hope written on the silver lining of the storm-burdened clouds.

Now that we have got through scolding the Bishop and any one else that wanted a college at Lamoni, the debt about paid, and he still lives and is ready for another "thorn in the flesh," suppose we go in debt for twenty-five thousand dollars' worth of tracts and other reading matter. If we can not do that, suppose we make an organized effort in tract distribution, to be managed by the Bishop through the districts and branches. The beginning should be a booklet written by one who has special ability as a writer and comes within the instruction of a recent revelation to be "brief," one that will be general in its contents and tell of the rise of the Church, and not so much about the Brighamites that when a person reads it they know more about them than about ourselves. Those on special subjects could follow afterward. They should be issued in lots of several thousand suitable for districts, and on the back should be a complete Church, Sunday-school, and Religio directory, the places and times of meeting, names of officers of branches and districts and missionaries.

A fund, to be perpetual, should be started to receive regular contributions in such a way as to make it convenient for branches and scattered members to contribute; the money to be sent to the Bishop, and he to have the tracts published. A list of names could be furnished and sent to the HERALD or Ensign offices and by this means reduce the cost of sending them out. When the names were in possession of either office the first tract could be followed by several others at short intervals. A special edition of both papers could occasionally be sent to the same address. This would not interfere with elders or others in giving them out if they so desired. In this way an entire district would soon know of our faith and also of the places of meetings. As we do the work now we lose a great amount of money and time, and there are a great many tracts issued by individuals, thereby increasing the cost. We need to do the work with a system and much more good will be done.

Since coming to these cities I have given out and sent through the mail, tracts and papers to exceed one thousand in number. I do not know of any special good it has done, but it is as much a command as it is to preach, and I am content to leave it with Him who gave the command.

Sometimes Saints deplore the fact that it is so hard to get people to come to meetings and still harder to get them interested when they do come, and many reasons are assigned as the cause. Some think it is on account of poor singing; another that the preacher is not up to date, or that it is not a desirable community, or that the members are spiritually dead. When some one has made a satisfactory solution of the question and a remedy has been found that never fails, there are many of the ministry that will be willing to try it.

A little of my experience in this matter might give some light on the subject. I have put tracts in envelopes with an invitation to attend services, and went to the people's homes; have stood on the street corner, and when people were going home have handed them out. The notices are always in the papers. Pleasant places to meet in two cities. When H. C. and F. A. Smith were here we had several hundred cards, an invitation to special services on Sunday, and distributed them. Not one came because of what was said in the papers, or on the cards. Question: Did people stay away on account of the preacher, poor music, or unpleasant quarters? How could they have done so when they knew nothing about any of them, not being present to find out? Solve it, ye wise ones, and then let us know.

EDWARD RANNIE.

DAVENPORT, Iowa, January 2, 1904.

GALLANDS GROVE, Iowa, January 11, 1904.

Editors Herald: In reading the letters in the HERALD to-night I was reminded I had not seen a letter from this part of the vineyard for a long time.

Bro. D. M. Rudd, of Dow City, is holding a series of meetings here; has been preaching more than two weeks with fair attendance. He has given some very good instructions by which the Saints ought to profit. I have not been able to attend very many sessions on account of family duties, but it was by no means for lack of faith, for I am ever desirous to see this great work roll on. I am satisfied we are living in the last days, when Christ will soon come in glory to those who have faithfully kept his commandments, and I want to be among those who will receive the plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

I ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints that I may be blessed by seeing my family all united in the kingdom of God.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

ELLEN A. PENNELL.

KEMMERER, Wyoming, January 12, 1904.

Editors Herald: I spent New Year's day at home with my family, and on the 2d I went to Montpelier, Idaho, intending to visit portions of Bear Lake County, but my mind seemed drawn eastward instead, and so I came to Cokeville, Wyoming, thinking to labor there for a while. Upon arriving there, I felt impressed to go to Kemmerer, so I boarded the next train and have been laboring here and at Frontier and Diamondville to date. Preached in Kemmerer two nights in the Mormon meeting-house, but could not get houses in Frontier and Diamondville.

Have been very busy since coming here in visiting and talking to people in their homes and trying to get them interested in the gospel, and I believe I have succeeded in making friends to the cause. I also took a few orders for Church publications.

I expect to leave here in a few days for points in Idaho, and if not directed otherwise will labor a while in Bear Lake County. May God direct his servants in all their labors of love and good will to mankind.

A. J. LAYLAND.

LOUISVILLE, Kentucky, January 15, 1904.

Editors Herald: I will jot you a few lines to inform you of a visit I made to a Mormon branch up in Morgan County to preach to them on the differences between the two Churches. The results were that I baptized five of the best members of the branch, one of them an elder and one a priest, and another elder was going to be baptized, but his wife and two daughters prevailed on him to wait until they could get ready. He said he did not want to keep the Utah Book of Doctrine and Covenants in his house any longer, so I got it from him.

There are ten more that have renounced the Brighamite Church and say they will join our Church. Their branch is broken up now by reason of their hearing the truth.

I ordained one Mr. N. M. Cantrill to the office of elder. He is a fine man and can refute any of the Utah elders when it comes to the law, for he is a very intelligent man and has informed himself, and will do the Church good in that part of the country where a good work can be done when the weather opens up in the spring. I hope to be able to do much good in the Master's cause.

Your brother in the one faith,

1819 Ninth Street.

J. W. METCALF.

STOCKPORT, England, January 4, 1904.

Dear Herald: With your kind permission I should like to introduce myself to my brothers and sisters, and say how glad I am that ever the Latter Day work found me, and made my life worth the living. It certainly was not a welcome visitor at first, for I had just become actively engaged in earnest work in the Congregational Sunday-school in which I had been brought up, and when the evidence began to strike at the root of my faith, I was soon off to my pastor. I am grateful that I had the courage to continue investigating to prove if there really was any truth in this claim of the restored gospel, while at the same time I was corresponding and conversing with my pastor, seeing if he could really prove it false. Thanks to the wise leading of Bro. George Baty, I was soon able to see beyond "faith without works," and I was baptized after about five months diligent study. I shall be one year old on the 26th of this month, and as yet I have had no reason to regret the step I have taken, even though they do look on me as a crank at home, because our old chapel was not good enough for me, and because I offered my resignation as teacher, though I continued several months in that capacity after I had given up my membership in the chapel. And even now I retain charge of the library and help in the Band of Hope, which is indeed a blessing, for it keeps me in touch with the people there, and may be the means of bringing some to a saving knowledge of the truth, and I am able to give them a tract and an invitation to discuss, if they open a conversation with me.

Our little branch in Stockport is very much alive. We have had two recent baptisms, bringing our membership list up to twelve. We have also very good interest among a few, and, as soon as the water loses its wetness for them, they, I feel sure, will be on our side.

I can testify to the truth of the work and to the gracious help of the Holy Spirit, which has enabled me to conduct myself in a manner more pleasing to our heavenly Father. I pray that the barriers which at present stand in front of the latter-day work may soon be removed, and that this gospel may come to the notice of all, that all they who have a desire to serve God may see how they may do it aright, and become not hearers only, but doers of the word. I would encourage the Saints everywhere to continue faithful and hopeful for we, above any other people in the world, have much to be thankful for.

I am yours in the faith,

WILLIAM WORTH.

Extracts from Letters.

W. W. Shoemaker, of Mound Valley, Kansas, recently wrote: "May God bless the dear HERALD and its readers!"

Bro. D. E. Tucker, writing from Aukland, December 3, 1903: "The gospel must be lived as well as preached. We can preach a sermon in an hour, but if we live it one hour only it does not count much. Held meeting at the Green Height Schoolhouse last Sunday, to an audience of sixteen. I spoke one and one half hours on laying on of hands. Good interest. Of their own free will they left four shillings six pence on the table at the close. One gentleman who claims to be an infidel, and his two grown daughters, were present. They were pleased. He has been twice. His daughters are school-teachers. He attends no other meetings. Bro. G. Green sent me two pounds which I received yesterday. It came without my asking, but did not come amiss."

Bro. William C. Feagins, of Leap, Oregon, writes as follows: "This country is very rough and mountainous. The land that can be farmed is very productive, yielding from twenty-five to fifty bushels of wheat per acre; also all small grain yields well. There are some rich mines near, and also beautiful marble and granite. The most beautiful trees are the pine and tamarack; some of the latter are over three hundred feet high. Some of this timber-land can be homesteaded, and will be good land when cleared. Fruit-trees seem to do well, except peaches, and they are free from insects and worms. Plenty of snow, yet it is not as cold as Nebraska, there being scarcely any winds. The climate is healthful, and lumber is worth only seven dollars per thousand at the mills. The people are generally rough (profane), but are sociable and clever. None of our ministry have labored here, but the Brighamites have preached here some of late years. I am desirous that the people should hear the true gospel, and will take care of any of the ministry who come this way."

Oklahoma.—Conference of the Oklahoma District convened at the church at Redmoon, January 2, W. P. Pickering president, H. F. Durfey secretary. Petition from Freedom, Woodward County Saints for branch organization was read, and on motion was referred to missionary in charge. Moved that the district adopt the blank form of reports printed by the Church. Bro. H. Case reported that on examination, the district buggy was turned over to Bro. Montague for $5 due him. Officers elected: S. J. Hinkle president; James Yates vice-president, H. F. Durfey secretary. H. O. Smith, W. M. Aylor, W. P. Pickering, Hubert Case, S. S. Smith, I. H. Blakesley, S. J. Hinkle, R. M. Maloney, and H. F. Durfey were chosen delegates to General Conference with power to appoint others that may be present from the district and to cast the full vote of the district. A court of elders was appointed consisting of S. J. Hinkle, H. C. Hughs, and T. J. Smith to adjust difficulties existing in the district. A vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Tackett for offering a church site and other kindness. Also a vote of thanks was tendered J. W. Hancock for church site. Adjourned to meet in the vicinity of Richmond, Woodward County, at the call of the president.

Spokane, Washington.—A special conference convened at Spokane, Washington, at 2 p. m., December 26, 1903, called by Elder G. T. Griffiths, missionary in charge. Bro. Griffiths recommended the ordination of G. W. Winegar as an elder, and it was so moved and adopted that he be ordained. He was then set apart to that office under the hands of G. T. Griffiths, D. E. Powell, Arthur Allen, and N. V. Sheldon. Following this the assembly organized the Spokane District, under the advice and counsel of Bro. Griffiths. The following officers were chosen: G. W. Winegar president, O. L. Ferguson secretary, and J. M. Puckett Bishop's agent and treasurer. President Griffiths appointed Arthur Smith, D. E. Powell, and ——— Turnbull, as committee on boundary lines, and on their recommendation the following boundaries were selected: On the north British Columbia, east through Idaho to the western line of Montana, and on that line as far south in Idaho as the southern line of Washington, and west along the northern line of Oregon to the Columbia River, the district to include the east half of Colville County, and all in Washington east of the western line of Stevens, Lincoln, Adams, Franklin, and Walla Walla Counties, and the counties of Kootenai, Shoshone, Latah, Nez Perces, and Umatilla in Idaho. Evan Richards was chosen to the office of teacher and was ordained by Brn. Griffiths, Powell, Sheldon, and Allen. Spokane Branch reported a membership of 45, and Deep Creek Branch reported 15. A report from Elder S. D. Condit, of Idaho, was read. Total membership present at conference 27, including one apostle, one of the seventy, three elders, two priests, one deacon. By motion it was ordered that the first regular session of conference assemble with the Spokane Branch on the last Saturday and Sunday in February, and that it meet every three months thereafter. Having obtained a hall there was preaching on Sunday morning, afternoon, and evening, by Brn. Griffiths, Sheldon, and Allen. Social service in the morning before preaching. The spirit of peace and brotherly love prevailed throughout the conference, and all felt that it was good "to be a Saint in latter days."

Historian's Statement.

In answer to inquiry as to the extent that the writers and compilers of Church History depended upon publications issued by the Church in Utah for historical matter, we say that we did not, as a rule, record important events upon such authority alone. Though we sometimes quoted from such publications, it was not until the events related were verified by reference to other authority. We did not always verify all the details, but became satisfied that the leading events happened as recorded.

We tried to keep in view the resolution of the General Conference of 1893, which says:

"Resolved, that in our judgment much of the Church History contained in the Millennial Star, and also in Times and Seasons is of extremely doubtful character, and can not be safely relied upon; therefore it should not be employed as authority in matters affecting the government of the Church."—Conference Minutes, p. 72.

We also kept in view a resolution passed by the Joint Council, held in April, 1894, which reads as follows:

"Resolved that it is the opinion of this council that there is nothing in the resolution of April, 1893, on church history, that should in any way interfere with the preparation and publication of an authentic church history by the Church.

"Resolved, further, that it is the opinion of this council that church history, both ancient and modern, may be freely used as a means of information, for what the same may be worth."—Doctrine and Covenants 123: 7, 8.

We thought we were safe in using it for what we esteemed it to be worth under the above resolution; but were careful not to take those publications as conclusive until we had examined all sources of information within our reach and verified the statements. Our caution was well taken as is apparent from evidence since coming to light. Elder Charles W. Wandell, who died in Australia, March 14, 1875, while commenting upon the history of Joseph Smith as published in the Deseret News in 1855, makes the following statement:

"I notice these interpolations because having been employed (myself) in the historian's office at Nauvoo by Doctor Richards, and employed, too, in 1845, in compiling this very autobiography, I know that after Joseph's death his memoir was 'doctored' to suit the new order of things, and this, too, by the direct order of Brigham Young to Doctor Richards and systematically by Richards."—Church History, vol. 4, p. 97.

This is admitted by the Utah Church in their preface to volume one of their church history published in 1902, pages five and six:

"The history of Joseph Smith is now before the world, and we are satisfied that a history more correct in its details than this was never published. To have it strictly correct, the greatest possible pains have been taken by the historians and clerks engaged in the work. They were eye and ear witnesses of nearly all the transactions recorded in this history, most of which were reported as they transpired, and, where they were not personally present, they have had access to those who were. Moreover, since the death of the Prophet Joseph, the history has been carefully revised under the strict inspection of President Brigham Young, and approved by him. We, therefore, hereby bear our testimony to all the world, unto whom these words shall come, that the history of Joseph Smith is true, and is one of the most authentic histories ever written."

As indications of our caution in using said publications we cite you to the following:

"In the early part of the year 1835 some very important events transpired in the church at Kirtland. The organization of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, and of the quorum of Seventy as auxiliaries to them in their work, is of very great importance in the history of the Church. The events of the first two or three months of 1835 are given quite fully in the history of Joseph Smith as published in the Millennial Star, volume 15. We will give our readers the benefit of this account copied from that journal:

"We think, however, that it is our duty to record the fact that the Messenger and Advocate, published monthly during the same period of time, at Kirtland, Ohio, by F. G. Williams and Company, and edited by Oliver Cowdery, makes no mention of these events. It is strange that a church periodical published at the same place, and edited by one of the principal actors, should not have mentioned events of so much importance.

"There is no question but that such quorums were organized about that time, and from corroborative testimony we think they were organized at the place and dates given in this account; though as it was not published until nearly nine years after the death of Joseph Smith, we think it possible that the details were enlarged upon; nor can we vouch for the absolute correctness of all the teachings here recorded, though in the main we think them correct."—History, vol. 1, p. 537.

"There had been a remarkable increase of Seventies since the death of Joseph Smith. We do not know just how many there were at his death, but certainly they did not exceed the 'seven times seventy' provided for in the law. We have seen account of but two quorums. What authority was had for more than seven quorums, of seventy each, is not clear. The Utah people cite an alleged statement of Joseph Smith's found in Millennial Star, volume 15, page 261, (see History, vol. 1, p. 561,) which in addition to the provision found in the law adds: 'And even until there are one hundred and forty and four thousand thus set apart for the ministry.' But as they did not publish this statement until April, 1853, long after they ventured beyond the limits, and as this additional provision is not found in the law, others claim it to be without authority."—Church History, vol. 3, p. 121.

Died.

JOHNSON.—William H. Johnson, father of Bro. George W. Johnson, in Des Moines, Iowa, January 8, at the age of 91 years, 5 months, and 3 days. Twelve children bade adieu to father, and since it had been only sixteen days since they laid their mother to rest it made it extremely lonely and sad. Funeral service was held at the Saints' chapel in Des Moines, the sermon being preached by Elder J. F. Mintun. The chapel was not of sufficient size to accommodate those who desired to pay their respects to the deceased and the mourning relatives.

McDONALD.—Walter S., two months old son of Bro. William J. and Sr. Mabel McDonald, died January 2 of whooping cough.

EVANS.—Sr. Ellen Evans was born February 16, 1839, at Manchester, England, emigrated to America in 1860; was baptized September, 1874, and was married to Mr. Evans in 1889. He died last July, and our sister departed this life January 6, 1904, the immediate cause of death being a fall, December 24, 1903, fracturing the skull. Funeral services at the late residence, the 8th, and sermon by Elder Robt. M. Elvin, from John 11: 25, to an attentive audience of Saints and friends. Her son, Bro. William C. George, and his three daughters and son, are the kin who mourn, all present at the funeral service. Interment in Southside Cemetery.

CRANDALL.—Ellen Hawkins Crandall was born in Illinois, April 11, 1838, and died December 31, 1903. She was married to Ozonder Crandall in 1856. To this union fourteen children were born, eight of whom with her husband mourn their loss. Sr. Crandall was baptized September 11, 1897, by Elder H. O. Smith, at Woodbine. She was universally loved, and was always spoken of by old and young by that loving title, "Aunt Ellen." Her funeral was from the house, January 2, and remains were taken to the Panama Cemetery, service being in charge of Elder R. Wight.

STAFFORD.—At Lamoni, Iowa, January 10, 1904, of general debility, James John Stafford. He was born on the Isle of Guernsey, England, August 23, 1833; baptized August 23, 1868, at Columbus, Nebraska, by G. W. Galley. He renewed his covenant in August, 1870, baptized by President Joseph Smith; was ordained the same date by Joseph Smith and Mark H. Forscutt. He married Sr. Fannie Bowers July 5, 1875. He served many years as sailor, studied medicine, and for a time was an assistant surgeon in the British navy; he practiced medicine in later life. He leaves a wife, but no other known relatives. Funeral in charge of J. W. Wight; sermon by Joseph Smith.

COVERT.—Daniel C. Covert was born at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, June 28, 1820; died December 28, 1903, being 83 years,

6 months of age. He was a resident of Missouri for a number of years, making his home for the past twenty years with his eldest daughter, Mrs. D. Wheatley, of Dumas. His death came as a great shock to his friends, because of his apparent good health, until Monday morning as he sat at breakfast with other members of the family, he was stricken with a severe neuralgic pain in the region of his heart. Although medical aid was summoned, and everything possible done to relieve his sufferings, the angel of death visited our home at 2.30 p. m. and wafted his spirit to the better land, where suffering is unknown. He was a faithful member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. He is survived by three sons and five daughters. Funeral services were conducted by Elder F. M. McDonald, of Montrose, interment at Meeks Cemetery on Wednesday.

"An aged man stood where the world-ways met

The incoming tide of Eternity's years,

His step had grown slow and his eyes were wet

With the dew of humanity's tears;

But his heart was strong and his hope secure,

And he sang with a confidence steady and sure:

"O, the beautiful lights, on the other shore,

Out on my pathway are shining so bright;

The beautiful lights that now beckon me o'er,

They do not seem far from me here to-night."

Recent statistics have shown that Germany heads the list as a reading nation, and Russia is falling to zero. In 1893, 23,607 books were published in Germany, as compared with 8,082 in Russia. In regard to newspapers, the inhabitants of the United States are catered to by 22,000 journals, while Russia, with a population of 130,000,000 has only 800. The figures are easily accounted for by the censorship. In Germany the actual number of professional writers is estimated at 12,000, of which number 400 are poets. In behalf of France the assertion is made that she provides the international literature, inasmuch as half the copies of French novels printed are exported, while two thirds of her historic and scientific works also cross the frontier. —Scientific American, September 5, 1903.

Men's Wives.

"This place is perfect," Charles Kingsley once wrote to his wife from the seaside, "but it seems a dream and imperfect without you. I never before felt the loneliness of being without the beloved being whose every look and word and motion are the keystones of my life. People talk of love ending at the altar—Fools!"

Within a few days of his death, having escaped from his sick room, he sat for a few blissful moments by the bedside of his wife, who was also lying seriously ill. Taking her hand tenderly in his he said, in a hushed voice: "Don't speak, darling. This is heaven."

John Bright spoke of his wife as "the sunshine and solace of his days." When she died he said: "It seems to me as though the world was plunged in darkness and that no ray of light could ever reach me again this side of the tomb." It was Cobden who shook him at last from the lethargy and despair which were paralyzing his splendid energies. "There are thousands of homes in England at this moment," he said, "where wives, mothers, and children are dying of hunger. Now, when the first paroxysm of your grief is past, I would advise you to come with me and we will never rest until the corn law is repealed."

Dean Stanley said: "If I were to epitomize my wife's qualities I couldn't do it better than in the words of a cabman who drove us on our honeymoon. 'Your wife,' he said to me, 'is the best woman in England'—and I quite agree with him."

"Why should you pity me?" Mr. Faweett, the blind Postmaster-general, remarked to a friend who had expressed sympathy with him in his affliction. "My wife is all the eyes I want, and no man ever looked out on the world through eyes more sweet or true."

No man ever relied more completely on his wife's guidance and counsel than John Keble, the poet of the "Christian Year." She was, as he often declared, his "conscience, memory and common sense."

Dr. Pusey declared that the very sight and smell of the verbena affected him to tears, for it was a sprig of verbena he offered to Miss Barber when he asked her to marry him—"the most sacred and blissful moment" of his life

Dr. Wordsworth, late Bishop of Lincoln, said that his wedded life had been "as near perfection as was possible this side of Eden."—Tit-Bits.

STEELE once said to Alexander Pope: "The only difference between our churches in their opinions of the certainty of their doctrines, is that the Church of Rome is infallible and the Church of England is never in the wrong. But though so many private persons think almost as highly of their own infallibility as they do of their sect, few express it as naturally as a certain French lady, who in a dispute with her sister said: 'I do not know how it happens, sister, but I meet with nobody but myself that is always right.'"

THE business of ascertaining the rules of absolute rectitude is the most important part of the science of ethics. Indeed without this study, the best dispositions of the heart, whether relating to ourselves or to others, may be in a great measure useless.—Valpy.

THE STATEMENT OF PRESIDENT WILLIAM MARKS.

To those who have so tenaciously misunderstood, misapplied, and misrepresented the statement of President William Marks, in HERALD, volume 1, number 1, we offer a similar chance to misconstrue a statement by the same man upon a different occasion, under different circumstances, and published in a different journal:

Having been chosen and ordained chief Evangelical Teacher of the Schools of Faith in Jehovah's Presbytery of Zion, it becomes my duty to say something by way of encouragement, and also by way of instruction to those who are placed under my care, and supervision, and first, by way of encouragement let me state what I know in reference to the work in which we are engaged, in order to do this I must of necessity refer to my experience in the church. I was a member of the Church, some ten years before the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. I was appointed president of the stake in Kirtland, Ohio, in 1837, and continued in that office at Kirtland until the fall of 1838, when I was called by revelation to Far West, Missouri; but before I arrived there, the Saints were ordered to leave the State; and when the Stake was organized at Nauvoo in the fall of 1839, I was appointed president thereof and continued in that office up to the death of Joseph the prophet. I always believed the work was of divine origin, and that Joseph Smith was called of God to establish the Church among the Gentiles.

During my administration in the Church I saw and heard of many things that was practiced, and taught that I did not believe to be of God; but I continued to do and teach such principles as were plainly revealed, as the law of the Church, for I thought that pure and holy principles only would have a tendency to benefit mankind. Therefore when the doctrine of polygamy was introduced into the Church as a principle of exaltation, I took a decided stand against it; which stand rendered me quite unpopular, with many of the leading ones of the Church. I was also witness of the introduction (secretly,) of a kingly form of government, in which Joseph suffered himself to be ordained a king, to reign over the house of Israel forever; which I could not conceive to be in accordance with the laws of the Church, but I did not oppose this move, thinking it none of my business.

Joseph, however, became convinced before his death that he had done wrong; for about three weeks before his death, I met him one morning in the street, and he said to me, Bro. Marks, I have something to communicate to you, we retired to a by-place, and sat down together, when he said: "We are a ruined people." I asked, how so? he said: "This doctrine of polygamy, or Spiritual-wife system, that has been taught and practiced among us, will prove our destruction and overthrow. I have been deceived," said he, "in reference to its practice; it is wrong; it is a curse to mankind, and we shall have to leave the United States soon, unless it can be put down, and its practice stopped in the Church. Now," said he, "Bro. Marks, you have not received this doctrine, and how glad I am. I want you to go into the high council, and I will have charges preferred against all who practice this doctrine, and I want you to try them by the laws of the Church, and cut them off, if they will not repent, and cease the practice of this doctrine; and" said he, "I will go into the stand, and preach against it, with all my might, and in this way we may rid the Church of this damnable heresy."

But before this plan could be put into execution, the mob began to gather, and our attention, necessarily, was directed to them.

I again met Joseph when he was about to start for Carthage. He said to me, "Bro. Marks, I have become convinced since I last saw you, that it is my duty to go to Carthage, and deliver myself up as a lamb to the slaughter."

I mentioned the circumstances of these conversations with Joseph, to many of the brethren, immediately after his death; but the only effect it had was to raise a report that Bro. Marks, was about to apostatize: and my statement of the conversation in reference to the practice of polygamy, was pronounced false by the Twelve, and disbelieved; but I now testify that the above statements are verily true, and correct.

When I found that there was no chance to rid the church of that abominable sin, as I viewed it, I made my arrangements to leave Nauvoo, and I did so firmly believing that the plans and designs of the great Jehovah, in inspiring Joseph to bring forth the book of Mormon, would yet be carried out in his own time, and in his own way.—Zion's Harbinger, and Baneemy's Organ, volume 3, number 7, July, 1853, pages 52, 53.

This is in accord with what was stated in HERALD, volume 1, number 1, pages 22, 23; except that in the latter named the word "practice" does not appear, the word "transgression" appearing to be used in its stead. The one in HERALD reading that President Marks was to "go into the High Council," of which he was the presiding officer, and Joseph Smith was to "prefer charges against those in transgression;" the one in the Harbinger, reading that the prophet speaking in regard to polygamy or spiritual wifery, should have said, "I have been deceived in reference to its practice; it is wrong; it is a curse to mankind, and we shall have to leave the United States soon, unless it can be put down, and its practice stopped in the Church." . . . "I want you to go into the High Council, and I will have charges preferred against all who practice this doctrine, and I want you to try them by the laws of the Church, and cut them off, if they will not repent, and cease the practice of this doctrine; and I will go into the stand, and preach against it, with all my might, and in this way we may rid the Church of this damnable heresy."

This statement was made in 1853, some six years before the date of the statement made in the HERALD, and is far more explicit, and shows that the nature of the "transgression" referred to in the HERALD was the practice of "polygamy or spiritual wifery."

Joseph Smith has been called a "charlatan," a "knave," a "lazy youth," a "mountebank," a "villain," and other hard names, but we have never seen it in print that he was called a "fool," a man lacking common sense; on the contrary, he has been called "cunning," "crafty," "shrewd," and "wily fellow," though an ignorant man, so far as education is concerned. It is quite inconsistent to believe that a man of any degree of shrewdness and ordinary intelligence, no matter how much of a fraud and a rogue he might be, should have so far forgotten the element of safety of reputation and the principle of self-preservation of person and personal liberty, as to have assailed in a public manner a doctrine, dogma, and practice of which he was known to be the human originator; and to propose a wholesale charge against all who were guilty of the practice referred to, before a competent high court of the Church, that they might be brought to trial and cut off the Church, if they were found guilty of practices not in accordance with the law of the Church. The instruction to President Marks was that those who were so charged should be tried "by the laws of the Church." There is no mistaking this language. It is clear, definite, and to the purpose. If Joseph Smith was himself guilty of the practice, as it has been alleged he was, he would have disregarded the commonest rules of safety if he had done as he stated he would do, declaim against the doctrine and denounce the practice from the pulpit, and proceed in the courts of the Church against those who were in such practice. If it be granted that he was himself guilty such pulpit denunciation and such court procedure would have been foolish, irrational, and a moral suicide.

BE GOOD.

To be good is the duty and should be the pleasure of every Saint. We know that the Master once said, "None is good, save one, that is God." But he also said, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." If it was within the power of those to whom the Master addressed the command to be perfect, it was surely within their power to be good; for goodness is in a sort perfection.

But leaving perfection out of sight for the time being, strive to be good. Trying to be good brings us into contact with the elements of wrong and evil tendencies within our natures which should be overcome and cast out, that we fail not of our reward—eternal life. If we try honestly to be rid of these ill-conditioned things the effort makes us stronger and happier, and we become better as a consequence. And, as no one becomes suddenly and wholly bad, so no one becomes suddenly and wholly good; it is an increase in growth in the one case, a decrease and vicious lack of growth in the other.

It is a proverb of modern times that "some men are born to greatness, some men achieve greatness, and some men have greatness thrust upon them." All are born equally good, and if environments and conditions were equal at the start and could be continued so, all would be alike good; but from birth to manhood, thence on to death, conditions are changing, environments are continually varying; and while with some the seeds of good talent in all are fostered and develop into good thoughts and good deeds resulting to the benefit of man and the honor of God, with others those seeds of good having no fostering care finally lose the germ of life, and the soul is endangered or lost altogether.

Under such conditions it is the duty of those trying to be good to help others while helping themselves.

ATTACKED BY THE "LIMA NEWS."

Recently there appeared in the News, of Lima, Ohio, an article under the caption "Mormonism is Struggling for Foothold in Lima," in which the writer tells of the work of some of our elders in Lima. The News says:

It is true the proselytes in this city at present claim to represent the "Reorganized" Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints, but with polygamy for its foundation stone, plurality of wives for its chief principle, can the so-called "Reorganized" Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints be vastly different to-day, in its innermost, its secret teachings given forth only after the convert has become imbued with the elementary principles of its faith and fallen a prey to the teachings of these "elders," from the damnable organization known forty years ago as the Mormon Church, the organization of Brigham Young and the accredited, aye, proven cohorts of the savage Indians in the horrible Mountain Meadow Massacre, when men, women, and children journeying to new homes in the far West were set upon by this cruel horde of redskins and far worse white men, and slaughtered for no other cause than that they were considered interlopers, and not of the faith of the church of the Latter Day Saints, otherwise the Mormon Church, the church of Brigham Young?

The excerpt shows pretty clearly the character of the attack, and the maliciousness of the writer.

In the News for January 5 Bro. James E. Kelley had an article in reply, in which he, in a very pointed way corrects the errors made by the writer in issue for January 1. Replying to the passage we have quoted, Bro. Kelley says:

The assertions that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has "polygamy for its corner stone, plurality of wives for its chief principle," and "secret teachings," is rank falsehood, displaying on the part of the informant, either an extraordinary amount of ignorance or a large possession of willful maliciousness.

Again he says:

To slander a man or destroy his name is considered about the meanest thing a person can do. How about trying to do the same thing to a whole class of people, numbering thousands? And that by classifying them, before the public, as an institution with doctrines that strike at the very vitals of our social life and morality.

Bro. Kelley closes by stating he stands ready to defend publicly his faith. His article can not fail to do good, and will offset to some extent at least, the injury caused by the attack to which he replies.

We have another installment of Bro. Bond's "Sights and Sounds of a Great City," which will appear next week. He writes of the "Iroquois Theater Fire."

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

Bro. Joseph Luff reports four baptisms in the California Mission in last quarter by missionaries. The branches in San Francisco and Oakland are reported as advancing spiritually, and are considered in the best condition spiritually in the history of the work there.

Bro. Peter Anderson, in charge of the Scandinavian Mission, reports eleven baptisms for the quarter. He wrote from Christiania, Norway, January 11: "The field is widening and opportunities for work are becoming more numerous, had we the men and means to occupy. I have lately made an opening at Frederikshavn, Denmark. The work has been resumed at Christiania, Norway, and prospects good."

Daniel MacGregor, of the Canada Mission, reports twenty-two baptisms for the quarter. The number of sermons reported as being preached by the various missionaries indicate a goodly activity on the part of some. Local conditions may have mitigated against others making a better showing.

Under date of January 23, Bro. I. N. White wrote from Kingston, Missouri, that the Far West Branch was not organized on the 18th instant, as had been expected. A meeting was held then, but conditions were not favorable, so another meeting was held on the 21st, and the branch was organized with fourteen members. The meeting was harmonious and very satisfactory to those present. Fred Shumate was chosen presiding elder, Samuel H. Simmons presiding priest, Elgo L. Atkinson teacher, and George L. Swenson deacon, the latter two being ordained by Bro. White and W. W. Smith. Bro. White wrote: "The church (through the Saints) owns about eleven hundred acres of ground in and around 'old Far West,' and the Saints now there seem content to abide and make an effort to build up one of the old 'waste places' of Zion by living pure and faithful lives." We are indeed glad to know a branch has been established at old Far West, and we hope the Saints there, by their diligence and right living, will gradually broaden the circle of their influence until once again the hills of Far West shall be dotted by the homes of Latter Day Saints. When we visited that historic spot last fall, we felt the time would not be long till a branch would be organized there; and we feel that even yet the work there has just begun. May the Saints of Far West be alive to the interests of the cause.

Bro. J. W. Rushton, in charge of the English Mission, reports sixteen baptisms for the quarter by the missionaries. He thinks the work is in fair condition and in several places there is an increase of spiritual activity. Financially the condition is still embarrassing and trying; but the missionaries and their families are, says Bro. Rushton, "bearing with becoming resignation whatever inconvenience accrues therefrom, trusting for brighter times."

Bro. Heman C. Smith in making quarterly report says there were fifty-six baptisms by the missionaries in his field, a "falling off of over one half, but there is always a falling off in the winter season." Bro. Heman at present is doing some office work "preparatory to taking the field until General Conference." He wrote: "Reports from the field where I have oversight show for the three months ending December 31, a fair share of work done considering the circumstances. Reports from the more northernly portions of the field are to the effect that the weather has been severe during the latter part of the quarter, and snow deep, which has hindered some."

On January 9 Bro. James E. Kelley wrote to Bishop Kelley from Lima, Ohio, telling somewhat of the work there. Two young people, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Paden, had asked for baptism, and he thought others would follow closely. He had asked for the use of the font in the Baptist church, but was refused. He was expecting to hold some meetings in the court house, and hoped for good results.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The Normal Eyte, published in the interest of the Iowa State Normal School at Cedar Falls, reaches our desk. It is full of school news and seems to have an able corps of editors. There is also a great deal of advertising displayed, which speaks well for its management. Don Campbell, whose home is in Pleasanton, Iowa, and who is acquainted in Lamoni, is editor-in-chief.

The Detroit Free Press for January 10 contained an article under the caption "Mormon Church Growing in Detroit," in which the work of the Reorganized Church in Detroit is spoken of. The article is accompanied by a cut of our church building and a portrait of Bro. G. M. Shippy. The distinctive differences between us and the Utah people are pointed out.

Bro. I. M. Lane and E. A. Smith both appeared in the Gazette, of Burlington, Iowa, issue of January 12, correcting some of the mistakes made by Mrs. Weed in her lecture there on January 5. Bro. Smith also had a well-written article in the Burlington Journal for January 16, on the same subject.

For a week Southern Iowa has been literally in the icy grasp of Boreas. Tuesday night, January 19, it began to rain, the water froze, and Wednesday morning every bush, every tree was covered, glistening and sparkling, with ice. Many limbs of trees and in some instances whole trees failed to withstand the strain and to-day lie broken and twisted. Each succeeding day people thought would bring an end to the storm, and each day it grew colder until this morning, when this goes to press, the thermometers registered as low as twenty-two degrees below zero. Some snow has fallen and drifted and a good strong breeze has added to the suffering of travelers. Telephone and electric lighting systems in many Iowa cities and towns have been wrecked by the weight of ice and will have to be rebuilt. Lamoni will likely be without telephone service until spring because of damage to pole lines. But the sun is now shining and we hope the end of the ice storm is near at hand.

In the Scientific American for January 16, 1904, a list of officers of the American Association for the Advancement of Science is given. Iowans should take pride in the fact that the State University of Iowa furnishes two officers; viz., Professor T. H. Macbride, president of Section on Botany, and Professor L. G. Weld, secretary of Mathematical and Astronomical Section.

Sr. Jeanette Young, of Quincy, Illinois, wishes to know the whereabouts of her uncle John Whitehead, last seen by her at Springfield, Illinois, about three years ago. Any one knowing the address write to J. M. De Lancy, Cottage 3, Soldiers Home, Quincy, Illinois.

Bro. L. H. Davis, Kingsley, Iowa, says any of the Saints or elders will be welcomed gladly at his home. Missionaries in that field, please take note.

Attention is called to the notice of the Church Secretary in this issue, concerning reduced railroad rates to General Conference. Since said notice was put in type rates have also been obtained from the Western Passenger Association. All interested are thus given early notice of the reduced rate that they may be making their preparations to attend. The rates cover such dates as to permit attendance at the Religio and Sunday-school conventions as well as the conference. Full particulars will be given in due time, in the regular notices of the Secretary. They are not inserted now for the reason that many forget them if published earlier than February or March.

At the Bishop's office we learn that the Christmas offering fund, which is contributed to by readers of the Hope, has passed the two-thousand dollar mark, which was the ambition of the contributors this year. This will be good news to the Hopes.

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL.

For reasons not far to seek, life in the city has ever possessed and holds to-day a supreme fascination for all mankind. Say what we will of the glories of the rural landscape, the free air, the verdant fields, the blossoming trees and the wild healthfulness and vigor of life in the open, quote Cowper as we may to the effect that "God made the country while man was in town," nevertheless the drift of humanity is to the city, and we shall not prevent it now nor in the future. I say the reasons are not far to seek. In the first place we inherit the tendency. Of old the city was the only place where men might be safe. Perhaps at first only a shepherd's byke, then his lowly wall, as men made greater progress the forming town was still a place of safety; becoming at length the fort, the tower, the fenced city, a place of refuge to which all people fled in time of trouble; to enter was life, to stay without was ruin. As the city became a nation, or as the number who passed under the scepter of a single sovereign enlarged, the capital came to include a wider and wider area. Rome seems to have had at least four walls, one outside the other. In time of danger the country was simply abandoned; people took their valuables and crowded into the town until the overflowing catastrophe spent itself or had passed completely by; and this during thousands and thousands of years of human story, away down almost to the memory of our own times; no wonder we still find stirring in us an impulse that bids us to the town; we have been trained to it in all generations; it matches the homing of the pigeons, the migration of the birds when they fly before the oncoming storms of our northern winters.

But this is only the first idea of the attractiveness of the city. Another follows close beside it. If safety made the city the only resort of those who fled for life, so also was it the natural depository of accumulated wealth. Where wealth is, there it may be bartered and exchanged, and walls and forts made possible the commerce of the centuries gone by. The mounds of Babylon and Troy, nor less those of Thebes and Carthage, are mute witnesses of the origin of commercial empire. The tides of commerce set toward the city; ever have done so and always will; so that, as it seems to me, the trend of enlightened men to habitation in the city is inevitable, fast bound by every tradition to the very destiny of the race. But the safety of person and property has never wholly satisfied the ambitions of humanity. Men long ago loved beauty, and in the most ancient cities some æsthetic taste and spirit no doubt sought expression. Beauty sought the city:

"Earth proudly wears the Parthenon, the brightest gem upon her zone,
And morning opens with haste her lids to gaze upon the pyramids."

The cities of old were decorated in an artistic way with a splendor that has made them for ever famous. But the æsthetic development of the ancient city, the old-world city, was in all cases conditioned by the circumstance of safety. Athens, the type of them all, the most splendid and glorious of them all, was simply an artistic, a sculptured, fort—where the treasures of wealth and learning and art and faith were gathered upon the Acropolis out of harm's way; in groves of columnar marble, in piles of snowy symmetry, the culmination of human genius in the realm of constructive art.

Now it is needless to say that splendid as the picture is, the most glorious ancient city is not the ideal of our modern city beautiful. The dominant idea of modern life is freedom, liberty, nowhere better symbolized than in the falling walls of the old-time city of Europe and the wall-less cities of this our happier land. Walls are gone or are going; here in America they never were built. No smallest restriction is here any more; safety, in almost heedless abandon; commerce in security almost absolute; beauty untrameled may reach undreamed of empire. The Acropolis in ancient Athens is an area equal to some three or four of our city blocks; the Acropolis was covered with splendor, but elsewhere in that city of three hundred thousand people, was no beauty, save here and there a temple; the streets were narrow and crooked, the houses were low, and dark, and cold. Our modern city shall be open to all the winds of heaven, its highways shall run to the ends of the world, and the keys of its freedom evermore lie in the way of the poorest comer. Art it shall not lack, but that art shall not be limited to marble. Nothing that belongs to human life or human need shall be too cheap for its touch, or lack the evidence of its gracious ministry. The streets, the hills, the homes of men, nor less the temples, the schools and buildings consecrated wholly to public use, these shall be the plastic material on which the spirit of art shall find employ. Nor is this all; the art that shall make beautiful the ideal city that is yet to be, will supplement science, and be supplemented by it; so that to the construction of our city beautiful, to-day and to-morrow, we have at last as elements of assured success factors which no age before has ever known—science and art and freedom—from such a trinity what may we not expect? The first shall bring health, the second beauty, the third enthusiasm and public pride and perennial energy and life.

But it is time we approached our subject somewhat more concretely. What shall the ideal city of the future be, and what are some of the characteristics which we may reasonably hope to win? In the first place it will be, I think, universally agreed, that the city beautiful will be a clean city. To look at some of our American cities to-day it might seem that if the city that we seek is to be known by its cleanliness, we may as well give up our dream at once. Filth is so well-nigh universal and we have become so habituated to it that even to talk of cleanliness provokes a smile. And yet, the thing is possible, and the established fact draws near. Paving, drainage, and efficient city management are here, in large measure the conditions of our new Utopia. Streets properly paved and kept in repair, streets properly drained, rightly swept by night and by day, will be clean. There are two principal sources of filth in our American cities; the first is the unpaved part of the city and country; the second is the soot. Much of the filth of the streets of our towns comes from districts unpaved. The wheels of vehicles bringing burdens over the country roads deliver to our city pavement a burden of clay and mud that is not their own. But the extension of pavement to the country will almost wholly remedy this; even if the rural trolley-car does not long before, permanently retire the farmer's wagon or at least limit its service to short journeys about the farm. Apart from this extraneous defilement there is no reason why the streets of the city, once they are paved, may not be just as clean as your own coach-road. It is simply a question of housekeeping. The thing is perfectly feasible. Think what a difference it would make if the streets of our cities were only once clean. No mud in winter; no dust in summer! I venture to say that the actual damage done in one summer in such a city as Des Moines or any Iowa city by dust alone would go far toward paving the outlying streets whence the dust in large measure comes.

The second source of disorder, the sooty flue of the factory or heating-plant or the water-works, is much more difficult to manage. Showers of soot all winter long, sometimes year in and year out, defile every city from side to side and smear and streak and ruin all our noblest architecture. The mud- nuisance can and will be abated; the smoke- nuisance must be. Why men are willing to spend thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars in our palatial business structures; stone in beauty of form and tint; brick in all soft and richest hues; only to see the proudest splendors of our modern constructive art disfigured in a twelve-month, to the effacement of all color, the obliteration of all beauty, save only such as may linger in memory or be prompted by suggestion as of a ruin—is more than I for a moment can understand. The beautiful library building of Davenport, not yet finished, looks to-day as old as Westminster Abbey and no history to save it, either inside or out. In every city you may note the same disfigurement from the same promoting cause. In our ideal city there will be no smoke- nuisance, to be sure. Nor can I think this reform remote. When we reflect that in our present wasteful consumption of fuel ninety per cent of it is lost, it is certainly not too much to hope that another decade will develop methods of combustion that will perfectly utilize the soot and for ever do away with its defilement,—when it once pays to get rid of soot we shall do it beyond doubt.

But the cleanliness of a city reaches farther. We may not speak of moral cleanliness here, for it is physical cleanliness only I discuss; but no city is clean no matter what its streets, if its people or any fraction of them live in dirt and squalor. The cleanness of our ideal city must involve the homes of its people, its laboring people, its poor people. True, in that city which is to be, the number of the last-named class should be small; but nevertheless we shall have the city I describe, long before men shall have for ever abandoned those habits that lead to poverty, or acquired those elements of character that make for universal competence. Unless we can devise some plan by which the homes of all our people are clean, the back-yard as clean as the front-yard, our labor is vain, our preaching is vain; our faith also is vain. The trolley wire is our great coadjutor here. The congested district is no longer an absolute necessity. The factories and shops more and more betake themselves to the country, and once the people realize that life is possible, not to say preferable, elsewhere than in cellar and tenement-house, conditions will change. But in Iowa there are hundreds of towns that have no congested district; the ugliness and disorder that they show result from mere negligence, from ignorance, from carelessness, from lack of suitable administration. It must be admitted, too, that our climate is somewhat against the cleanliness we seek. It is difficult to clean streets in winter. Still with good paving and good control, who doubts that matters may not one day be vastly better than they are? "Spring cleaning" ought to go on all the year round. The gehenna of the ancient city, not the metaphor, but the furnace, should be revived, as indeed it has been, and the waste of the city so consumed.

But in close sequence with the purity and cleanliness of the city comes another quality that shall of course, not fail in our ideal; I mean the special contribution of pure art—the ideal city must be artistic. I have in mind a splendid picture where the canvas is the eternal hills and vales, the fair shapings of the natural world; where the colors are summoned by the sunlight and vary, not only with the seasons, but with the passing hours, where the theme of the picture is the industry, the convenience, and happiness, and joy of enlightened men. Who shall not glory in a picture vast and beautiful as that? What artist may not rejoice in such a triumphant masterpiece as that? And yet in the construction of such a picture we as builders of these newer modern cities are all of us privileged evermore to share.

In the attainment of the artistic city, just as in the making of a great picture, two factors will ever be dominant and predominant. The artist must first have his plan, his concept, and then his color; and so the city, first well planned, then, well planted. By the terms of the first condition the cities of old could not possibly be beautiful. Planned to meet the necessities of the time, beauty was for ever excluded, or localized as we have seen. In order to add to the beauty of the city Louis Napoleon and Baron Haussman did not hesitate to plough with boulevards every quarter of the old Paris; and we well know the result. For fifty years Paris has been the Mecca of all such as worship beauty; has been, notwithstanding all misfortunes, the model of other European cities, to say the least. Even the arc-de-triomphe became the arc d'etoile, the place de triomphe, the place d'etoile, the plaza of the star, because of the broad avenues that radiate out in every direction from that wonderful memorial not only the Champs Elysees, and the avenue of the Bois de Boulogne, but the avenue de l'Armee and half a dozen others, reaching all parts of the city, so that for thousands of the people of Paris day by day the vista of the street is closed by glimpse of that beautiful monument, the monument of Victory. Washington was laid out on much the same principle; circle after circle gives opportunity for radiating boulevards which, without any doubt, will one day make Washington the finest and most beautiful city in all this world.

Not only that; but Washington will also be the most convenient city in the whole world. The men who planned it seem to have been almost inspired; indeed they dreamed and wrought far wiser than they knew. Who could have imagined that those hills and swamps by the Potomac should one day be trodden by the representatives of one hundred million people—that the poor republic whose capital was not yet even marked on the maps of the world, should one day surpass in wealth and power and purpose, all that men had ever imagined in the long history of the race, and be able to build and adorn with a prodigality more than imperial, absolutely unstinted, albeit to its citizens absolutely unknown and unfelt?

The proper direction of a street is from your point of departure to your point of arrival. It is needless to say that only the boulevard—or radiating—plan of the city comes anywhere near accomplishing this in the greater number of cases. Montgomery Street, San Francisco, goes from the ferry-landing straight to the heart of the town, and that one avenue is the convenience of thousands and thousands of San Francisco people. But most American cities have no such avenue. Our cities have all been laid out on the plan suggested by William Penn, and while a great improvement on the cities of Europe with which the Quaker statesman was familiar, because the streets are wide and straight, nevertheless the city of Philadelphia, even, can be improved, and will be.

The fact is, that from an artistic point of view, as well as from the standpoint of convenience, the only city in the United States that is thoroughly planned is the city of Washington. Does anybody fancy that the capitol of our own State, magnificent building that it is, would have been set down on four small city blocks, surrounded by private property on every side in a gridiron of narrow streets, had the slightest artistic spirit possessed those who laid the plans for a future capital city? Think what a capital city we might have, and, I believe, one day will have, if Locust Street, instead of being a narrow business thoroughfare, choked up with poles and stunted trees, were a broad avenue, one hundred and fifty to two hundred feet wide, sloping directly from the river up to that beautiful capitol with its golden dome burning in the evening light! What palatial residences might appropriately find place along a highway such as that, with capacious lawns making wider yet the path of beauty, opening still more the vista, making it more and more worthy the splendid architecture which would then close in the view more and more worthy of the splendid people who should throng the street to admire. Let any proudest citizen of this most fortunate commonwealth enter Des Moines from the east; or let him in his ambition to visit the state-house leave the railway train at the station called East Des Moines—what must be his impression of Iowa and its capital? Does any man imagine that such a view of the capitol of Iowa is destined to be permanent? It is as if one were compelled to view, from the highway, some magnificent country-seat athwart unkept yards, and piles of rubbish, and sheds and stables of low degree. Will the state of Iowa for ever be content to spend two and one half millions for a capitol, worthy of its prosperous people, yea and a half million now and again for simple decoration, and yet allow all visitors coming from either east or west to behold the result of all that expenditure of patriotism and art and money, rising amid a scene of ugliness and squalor, worthy only of the feudal ages? Is Iowa then so poor that she can not right this blunder? Is she so careless that she will allow her people to become habituated to such out-worn medieval form? I, for one, do not believe it. One of these days the State will own all the lands and streets to the Rock Island tracks—it will clear away every building to the south and southwest; and, planning the entire slope as Iowa Park, will lay out radiant avenues so that from the river until the train passes the hills to the east the fortunate traveler, whether citizen or the stranger within our gates, will indeed behold the capitol, rising majestic over a sea of verdure, while avenue after avenue in shining breadth shall open to the gaze of men those fine facades, the pride of this whole State, the fit emblem of its wealth and power, the triumph of architecture, not only in Iowa, but in all the middle West. When that day comes, Locust Avenue will stretch westward double its present width, on to where, by an equal bridge, with promenades and parapets, it spans a river whose banks are bound in terraced beauty, by wall and turf, and rudeness and crudeness and all disorder shall have disappeared for ever. The Soldiers' Monument, now standing like some gigantic sample before a marble-cutter's door, its dignity all lost by the proximity and majesty of the nobler pile, will then grace some site peculiarly its own, where its fair proportions may at least have opportunity to tell the patriotic fervor which bade the column rise.

It is sometimes related that the mistakes of men are permanent; some of them surely are; but these earlier and pardonable faults of constructive skill in the history of this commonwealth are by no means so to be esteemed. Some mistakes are so patent as by their very egregiousness to hasten the day of their correcting. The wealth, the future wealth of Iowa, has not yet been even thought of by the most enthusiastic dreamer. All the resources of the immediate future are at the disposal of our successors to make the seat of our empire glorious; they will do it; never for a moment fear. If the city of London can to-day afford to buy an avenue from the Strand to High Holborn, right in the center of that ancient city, surely we may do as we please in our prairie towns in answer to the behests of present adornment, and the convenience, not of the present only, but of the unborn thousands who in tireless procession shall move up and down the streets and avenues of our devising in the centuries yet to follow.

But it requires something more than planning to make a beautiful city. Of course a badly-planned city can never attain highest beauty. The result, as has been said, must be a picture, and the picture must have all the colors of nature; in other words, the modern city claims not commercial supremacy only, but something of the freedom and glory of the natural world. Now the energetic, strenuous citizen is wont to remark, "What the town needs is more railroads and less blue-grass." This is not exactly as I should put it. Even the railroads are not averse to blue-grass. Notice the effort making along all the railway lines to adorn their holdings not with grass only, but even with flowers and ornamental plants of every description. True it is, that where the drudgery of the commercial world goes on, the natural opportunity for blue-grass, or any other plant, is small; but that fact has no significance with regard to parts of the city where the people live; where the toilers of the community gather in humble homes about the great factories; where the clerks and stenographers in hundreds find refuge at the close of every weary day. The true sentiment should be, with apologies to the immortal Daniel, "Railroads and blue-grass, one and inseparable, now and for ever." No, the true spirit of decorative art as here applied, the true spirit of landscape architecture, is common sense,—a rare gift, I admit, and one by no means duly prized. Nobody wishes to plant a row of trees down the middle of Fourth Street any more than rows of telephone poles on every other street; not the less can common sense see why vegetation in all its forms may not be summoned to hide the naked deformity of rock and field, especially when such deformity is occasioned by the vandalism or the carelessness of man. Nor can there be any reason why blue-grass and flowers may not fill the center of wide streets, unused of commerce save when the lonesome grocer's boy and the snail-paced milk-man stop to exchange greetings on a summer morning, or the flitting street-car passes now and then along its lonely way. Some city streets, like the plaza at Versailles or Dresden, are quite as much a desert as any most barren section of Sahara. There are even cities with not a tree nor a flower nor a blade of grass within their corporate limits; but it is a matter of dire and sad natural necessity. No sane people elect or prefer such a situation as that. Butte City, Montana, a place of fifty thousand people, has, I am told, not a green growing plant within its borders; but not even the Anaconda copper mines, nor the hills from which men dig silver, nor the example of Senator Clark with his vaunted millions, nor even the society of gifted authors, as Miss McLean, can reconcile enlightened people to contented residence in such a city as that.

Of course, the city beautiful will have parks. There will be not only open squares, in the city proper, even where the railroads are, breathing-places where the workman may eat his luncheon beneath God's open sky with some little of Nature's cleanness and purity still about him, but the broad avenues will lead somewhere; outside, they must terminate in fair fields; agriculture of the highest type where native beauty is the annual and perennial harvest. Surely where we have given millions of Iowa acres to the plough, where field ranks against field the tasseled corn, we may yet return to Nature a few acres, a few hundred acres, in the vicinage of our towns and cities in order that creation's miracle-play, in bird and bud and blossom, in the leaping chorus of prodigal profusion, may yet come back to us with each recurring spring with all its pristine freshness of immortal hope and youth.

Fortunately for us, by the very circumstances of the case, we have in the neighborhood of nearly every city of Iowa, the elements of park-construction; we have generally the broad river valley; the heights which overlook its winding channel; the rough sculpture of valleyside and river-bank; perchance the rocky wall and cliff with tiny stream or trickling spring; we have all these elements of park-creation; and, besides, Nature has already taught us how to use all these features of the natural landscape to our noble purpose. Once they were all of them planted, and that in the highest style of art. Oaks were marshaled on the hillsides; elms stood in gothic splendor along the river and evermore bathed their root-tips in the stream; thickets of wild plum and thorn brodered the forest edge, home of the painted warblers; wild vines and creepers covered the face of the cliff and scaur where scraggy pines and cedars peered from the treacherous summit, while farther back the open mead gave the necessary verdure, in its season starred with flowers. Now, of course, much of all this wild beauty has been destroyed; but, if we simply give Nature a chance much of it will come back to us again. Besides, most of the region we shall use for parks is unfit for agriculture or even residence; except here and there a level field, what we want are these wild banks of the river, these rock-walled ledges, these deep defiles, with now and then a road that leads to the edge of some commanding height, or some far-sweeping ridge. All this we can have within a mile or two of nearly every city in Iowa, have at small expense; and, by giving Nature a chance, the picture of splendor will shine again to the wonder and joy of men. There is an old saying: "Nothing for nothing, and not much for a dollar;" in the world of Nature that is not true; such is her beneficence that she always gives much for nothing, and millions for a dollar! You begin to see now to what I am coming. The beautiful city will be a happy city. Its cleanness and its fairness will be for the joy of men. What is it that for ever breeds discontent and rebellion and strikes among the thousands of our fellow citizens? Surely not ignorance, wholly; but the all too patent inequality in the enjoyment of the common gifts of our common Mother Earth. The laborer who lives in grime and filth is shut out from the enjoyment of those gifts of Nature, from those visions of her face, which are the portion of the poorest savage! Doubtless inequalities in the possession of wealth will always obtain among the children of time; but is there any reason on this account why vast numbers of our fellows should be condemned to ugliness and filth and all consequent vice and degradation? Says William Morris:

"For surely there is no square mile of earth's inhabitable surface that is not beautiful in its own way, if we men will only abstain from willfully destroying that beauty; and it is this reasonable share in the beauty of earth that I claim as the right of every man who will earn it by due labor; a decent house with decent surroundings for every honest and industrious family; that is the claim which I make of you in the name of art. It is such an exorbitant claim to make of civilization; of a civilization that is too apt to boast in after-dinner speeches; too apt to thrust her blessings on far-off peoples at the cannon's mouth before she has improved the quality of those blessings so far that they are worth having at any price, even the smallest?"

Do you answer William Morris by saying that the city is built; we can do nothing now? Unless the city were built you could do nothing. It is because you have the city, that the splendid possibility is yours. The city beautiful may not exist in the limitless waste of the desert; it will come where there are people, the highest and most enlightened kind of people; where there is wealth, wealth of gold, and wealth of energy, and wealth of purpose, and wealth of love and plenty of it; where there is commerce and science and power; where Nature is generous, not lavish, but ready; where the oak rears his Norman column of majesty and strength; where the pine sifts the sunlight of summer nor less the snows of winter; where grass covers the dark ground with the glorious enamel dim with early dew or mottled with the barred sunshine of the evening sky—only such a city in such a land may realize the hopes of art. The mill-owner can help bring it, by brightening the place of his industry; whitewash and geraniums would transform the factory world; he may help it by looking to the dwellings of those who toil, and demanding that they be healthful and clean; every householder can aid the cause by making clean his own fore-ground, the hinter-ground as well; the city government can forward it by maintaining a park-commission divorced from politics, in office to serve the community, to plan great things, to think great thoughts for men, to love the republic and plan for the majesty of future years.

The whole people can aid it by never forgetting, by entering upon it in the spirit of pride and high intent. Pericles did not make Athens; every Greek, every freeman contributed to make Athens, through four hundred years. Our fathers have made mistakes, but we can correct them and, depend upon it, our children will correct ours.

The fact is, the creation of the city beautiful will constitute at once the triumph and the test of our future art. "The love of beauty is good taste, but to create beauty is a fine art." It is the function of the artist not to create Nature but to invite us to its contemplation, but nothing that he can do is Nature. Nature is always better than his best. Go stand before that marvelous woman and her child that men name the Sistine Madonna. Supremely wonderful! The eyes speak forth after five hundred years, in very brilliancy the joy of motherhood. The child in exuberant health would leap strong and splendid from the canvas. But did Rafael himself stand beside us as we gaze he would doubtless say: "You call that marvelous; there is no light in those eyes to match that that shines and beams in the eyes of your own wife or friend entranced with the dewy gladness of a similar joy: that child Divine—there is no life in that painted form like unto that which beats and throbs and springs in the little fellow that clings to your own shoulders, or vaults in his mother's arms before the cotter's door!" You admire the landscapes of the Dutch masters and wonder at their skies, their glowing lights, and deepening shadows; but let once Ruysdael speak and he will say: "There are no shadows like the shadows of the evening; there are no lights like the glory of the morning; no landscape painted by artist's brush can match that spread along the glowing hills; no arch like that which springs in blue above our heads; no music like that of God's choristers from every leafy grove in opening spring; no incense-cloud like that white island that floats above the meadow on a summer day; no perfumed offering like the odors that go up day and night from the flower-starred meadows of God's garden; all Nature is art, and in our return to Nature is our safety and our health." It is the old, old story; we neglect the gifts of the gods and amuse ourselves with the toys of our own creating. In the future masterpiece of future art in the city of to-morrow for which I plead, all the forces of Nature will be on our side; in high and noble sense we shall be coworkers together with her, to build among men the habitation of man's delight, the city beautiful.

The city, then, is still to be the destiny of our race. More and more, as the ages pass, shall men dwell in cities; but it will be because the city has gone to country and given to all its children all the advantage with none of the disadvantages which so far mar our rural life. The trolley and its successors will bring the transformation in due time. Is it without significance that in the Scripture man's life begins in a park and ends in a city? The whole pilgrimage of human life is of those who seek a city. Saint John's beautiful city was described from the structures that he knew; were he to describe the heavenly city now, his imagery might take another form, its colors a different hue; a thousand years from now, no doubt it were different still; nevertheless that city which has filled the horizon of all the Christian centuries has in it the elements of the terrestrial city beautiful; the artistic foundations of gathered wealth, the fleckless gates and streets, the rivers of waters, the unflinching trees. Saint John's vision shall doubtless never fail from the eyes and faith and hopes of men; but let us never meanwhile forget that our feet are still upon the earth; and so long as the terrestrial city shall be the ideal home of the race, so long, for the sake of the poor, for the sake of the toiler, for the sake of the little children, for the sake of weary men and women who carry earth's burdens and do earth's work,—so long must that city be beautiful, if it is to be at the same time sane and free.

IN REPLY TO "INQUIRER."

Editors Saints' Herald: In the issue of your paper of December 30, 1903, the question is asked, "Through what prophet did the Lord give Emma Hale to Joseph Smith as his wife?"

There are at least two women who declare that they were sealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith as his wives for time and for eternity, in the presence of Emma Hale Smith, who gave her consent to their marriage. Under these conditions, and according to the law of the "alleged" revelation your correspondent mentioned, it would be most natural to suppose that Emma Hale Smith was first married "by a prophet of the Lord" to her husband before other women were.

Suppose it were stated positively that Patriarch Hyrum Smith performed the ceremony of sealing Emma Hale Smith to the Prophet Joseph, for time and for eternity, will you dispute the statement?

Most respectfully,

ANOTHER INQUIRER.

The above in reply to "Inquirer," is referred to me for examination and comment. It is quite unfortunate, but the foregoing is not a reply to the question asked. Emma Hale was the wife of Joseph Smith for sixteen years prior to the date of the questioned revelation and twenty-five years before any publication of it. Four sons were born to this union in marriage before the alleged date of the revelation. When did the Lord give Emma Hale to be Joseph Smith's wife, before the birth of these sons, or after? And by or through what prophet was the gift made? The revelation in question provided for but one on the earth at the same time holding the authority.

A supposition is not in order. Emma, the wife of Joseph Smith, avers that she did not at any time give consent to an invasion of her rights as a wife, such as is stated by "Another Inquirer." Her statement is natural, and good, for the reason that it affirms what was lawful according to the law of God and the law of the land. Any other action would have been unlawful.

THE ORIGIN OF THE CHRISTMAS TREE.

The actual origin of the use of Christmas trees for decorative purposes dates from before the Christian era, when the Romans made use of pine-trees in their festivities at certain times of the year. The pine-trees were laden with little earthenware images sacred to the gods. This, however, was done for the sake of religion—not for amusement. It was among the Goths, some of the Germans, and the Scandinavians that trees were first adorned at Christmas time for the express purpose of delighting children.

These people celebrated the advent of the winter solstice very elaborately, and the chief item of their program was the erection in every house of a tree decorated with burning tapers. The tree used for this purpose was then, as now, the fir-tree—probably because of its abundance and convenient shape.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

ARGUMENT VERSUS CALUMNY.

There seems to be a combined effort among the enemies of the latter-day work organized for its overthrow; but the means by which they seek to accomplish this and the degradation to which humanity descends in combating the work of God prove their weakness.

In the unholy warfare of the "anti-Mormon" people we have an exact duplicate in the arguments and persecution employed by the anti-Christians when Christianity was in its infancy. Should those "antis" look through the dark pages of the sanguinary persecutions of the early Christians and what they then suffered at the hands of their enemies, they would see their twin brother.

Lies, misrepresentation, and calumny have ever been the stock in trade of the opponents of righteousness always accompanied with an open confession of their inability to meet and successfully controvert their opponents. When argument against the doctrine of Jesus Christ failed to accomplish their evil purpose, falsehoods and calumny were resorted to. When they failed to stop the spread of his doctrine, murder was then resorted to, but in this direful thing they were defeated, for "the blood of the martyr is the seed of the church."

In the tenth volume of "Ante-Nicene Fathers" is an account of the distressing persecution and lying rumors to which the early Christians were subjected by their "antis." There was nothing too base and shameful with which to malign those humble Christians. Here is what Justin Martyr says:

"Is there any other matter, my friends, in which we are blamed, than this, that we live not after the law and are not circumcised in the flesh as your forefathers were, and do not observe sabbaths as you do? Are our lives and customs also slandered among you? And I ask this: have you also believed concerning us, that we eat men; and that after the feast, having extinguished the lights, we engage in promiscuous concubinage? Or do you condemn us in this alone, that we adhere to such tenets, and believe in an opinion, untrue, as you think?"

"This is what we are amazed at," said Trypho, "but those things about which the multitude speak are not worthy of belief; for they are most repugnant to human nature."—Justin's dialogue with Trypho, vol. 1, p. 199.

The above sets forth the popular opinion of the doctrine of the Christians, but noble Trypho was not willing to believe such sickening rumors about them. I presume our modern "antis" would accept such with smiling relish against the Latter Day Saints.

The following is an excellent defense of Justin in behalf of his persecuted brethren:

Do you, then, since you are called pious and philosophers, guardians of justice and lovers of learning, give good heed, and hearken to my address; and if you are indeed such, it will be manifested. For we have come, not to flatter you by this writing, nor please you by our address, but to beg that you pass judgment, after an accurate and searching investigation, not flattered by prejudice or by a desire of pleasing superstitious men, nor induced by irrational impulse or evil rumors which have long been prevalent, to give a decision which will prove to be against yourself. . . .

But lest any one think that this is an unreasonable and reckless utterance, we demand that the charges against the Christians be investigated, and that, if these be substantiated, they be punished as they desire; [or rather, indeed, we ourselves will punish them.] But if no one can convict us of anything, true reason forbids you, for the sake of wicked rumor, to wrong blameless men, and indeed rather yourselves, who think fit to direct affairs, not by judgment, but by passion. And every sober-minded person will declare this to be the only fair and equitable adjustment, namely, that the subjects render an unexceptional account of their own life and doctrine; and that, on the other hand, the rulers should give their decision in obedience, not to violence and tyranny, but to piety and philosophy.—Ibid., p. 163.

Those early Christians did not object to an honorable investigation of their doctrine, but instead of this their enemies, like our own of to-day, judged and condemned them on false and groundless rumors.

The following shows they were persecuted for the name they bore:

By the mere application of a name, nothing is decided, either good or evil, apart from the action implied in the name; and indeed, so far at least as one may judge from the name we are accused of we are most excellent people. But as we do not think it just to beg to be acquitted on account of the name, if we be convicted as evil-doers, so, on the other hand, if we be found to have committed no offence, either in the matter of thus naming ourselves, or our conduct as citizens, it is your part very earnestly to guard against incurring just punishment, by unjustly punishing those who are not convicted. For from a name neither praise nor punishment could reasonably spring, unless something excellent or base in action be proved. And those among yourselves who are accused you do not punish before they are convicted; but in our case you receive the name as proof against us, and this although, so far as the name goes, you ought rather to punish our accusers. For we are accused of being Christians. And to hate what is excellent (Christian) is unjust.

Hence we are called atheists. And we confess that we are atheists, so far as the gods of this sort are concerned, but not with respect to the most true God.—Justin's address to Emperor Antoninus Pius Augustus Caesar, vol. 1, pp. 163, 164.

Latter Day Saints know how to sympathize with those early Christians, for how often are we maligned for no other reason than that the name "Mormon" is applied to us.

But how unjust it is, to form a judgment on things unknown and unexamined, as you do! Believe us ourselves when penitent, for we also were the same as you, and formerly while yet blind and obtuse, thought the same things as you, to-wit, that the Christians worshiped monsters, devoured infants, mingled in incestuous banquets. And we did not perceive that such fables as these were always set afloat by those (newsmongers), and were never either inquired into nor proven.—The Octavius of Minucius Felix, vol. 4, p. 190.

Minucius, like many in these days, believed lying rumors instead of trying to prove them true or false, but unlike many of our unscrupulous persecutors of to-day, he finally examined into those "fables" and learned they were "set afloat" by the "newsmongers," and confessed that it was while he was "blind and obtuse" that he believed those silly rumors about the true followers of Christ. All such stories are started by those who are entirely ignorant of the teachings and practice of the saints of God. Joseph Smith truly understood the situation when making the celebrated speech at the capital city before senators and congressmen, when he said, "The sin of the world is ignorance."

These, and such as these infamous things, we are not at liberty even to hear; it is even disgraceful with any more words to defend ourselves from such charges. For you pretend that those things are done by chaste and modest persons, which we should not believe to be done at all, unless you proved that they were true concerning yourselves. For in that you attribute to our religion the worship of a criminal and his cross. You wander far from the neighborhood of the truth, in thinking either that a criminal deserved, or that an earthly being was able, to be believed God.—Ibid., p. 191.

According to the above the early saints were charged with adoring a criminal. The chosen instrument of this dispensation is classed as the same. But if they called Jesus Christ such hard names, it is not strange that his followers will be called the same thing. The same writer continues his account of the calumnies made against the saints:

And now I should wish to meet him who says or believes that we are initiated by the slaughter and blood of an infant. Think you that it can be possible for so tender, so little a body to receive those fatal wounds; for any one to shed, pour forth, and drain that new blood of a youngling, and of a man scarcely come into existence?—Ibid., pp. 191, 192.

Just such sickening and unreasonable stories as are here related about the former-day saints, many in these days are wont to believe and relish about the Saints of the last days.

Origen, the scholarly defender of the early Christians, gives a lengthy treatise of the unholy warfare urged against the people of God. Any one guilty of persecuting another simply for opinion sake, and with a spark of manly principle or professed adoration for the man, Christ, should blush with shame on reading this:

And since, in imitation of a rhetorician training a pupil, he introduces a Jew, who enters into a personal discussion with Jesus, and speaks in a very childish manner, altogether unworthy of the gray hairs of a philosopher, let me endeavor, to the best of my ability, to examine his statements, and show that he does not maintain, throughout the discussion, the consistency due to the character of a Jew, for he represents him disputing with Jesus, and confuting him, as he thinks, on many points; and in the first place, he accuses him of having "invented his birth from a virgin," and upbraids him with being "born in a certain Jewish village of a poor woman of the country, who gained her subsistence by spinning, and who was turned out of doors by her husband, a carpenter by trade, because she was convicted of adultery; that after being driven away by her husband, and wandering about for a time, she disgracefully gave birth to Jesus, an illegitimate child, who having hired himself out as a servant in Egypt on account of his poverty, and having there acquired some miraculous powers, on which the Egyptians greatly pride themselves, returned to his own country, highly elated on account of them, and by means of these proclaimed himself a God."—Origen's answer to Celsus, vol. 4, p. 408.

De Fuga tersely tells where persecution emanates: If, because injustice is not from God, but from the Devil, and persecution consists of injustice (for what more unjust than that the bishops of the true God, and all the followers of the truth, should be dealt with after the manner of the vilest criminals?) persecution therefore seems to proceed from the Devil, by whom the injustice which constitutes persecution is perpetrated, we ought to know, as you have neither persecution without the injustice of the Devil, nor the trial of faith without persecution; that the injustice necessary for the trial of faith does not give a warrant for persecution.—De Fuga on persecution, vol. 4, p. 117.

The following is so closely allied to the methods employed by the "anti-Mormon" combine that one is almost led to believe it is the old association revived, differing only in phraseology to suit the personalities; viz., "lazy Joe," "sheep-thief," "money-digger," "peep-stone Joe," "dreamy and visionary," etc., and laying every crime at the doors of the Saints from petty larceny to treason:

And now, as wickeder things advance more fruitfully, and abandoned manners creep on day by day, those abominable shrines of an impious assembly are maturing themselves throughout the whole world. Assuredly this confederacy ought to be rooted out and execrated. They know one another by secret marks and insignia, and they love one another almost before they know one another. Everywhere also there is mingled among them a certain religion of lust, and they call one another promiscuously brothers and sisters, that even a not unusual debauchery may by the intervention of that sacred name become incestuous: it is thus that their vain and senseless superstition glories in crimes. . . . Now the story about the initiation of young novices is as much to be detested as it is well known. An infant covered over with meal, that it may deceive the unwary, is placed before him who is to be stained with their rites: this infant is slain by the young people, who have been urged on as if to harmless blows on the surface of the meal, with dark and secret wounds. Thirstily—O horror!—they lick up its blood; eagerly they divide its limbs. By this victim they are pledged together; with this consciousness of wickedness they are covenanted to mutual silence. Such sacred rights as these are more foul than any sacrileges. And of their banqueting it is well known all men speak of it everywhere; even the speech of our Cirtensian testifies to it. On a solemn day they assemble at the feast with all their children, sisters, mothers, people of every sex and of every age. There, after much feasting, when the fellowship has grown warm, and the fervor of incestuous lust has grown hot with drunkenness, . . . the light being overturned and extinguished, in the shameless darkness, the connections of abominable lust involve them in the uncertainty of fate. Although not all in fact, yet in consciousness all are alike incestuous, since by the desire of all of them everything is sought for which can happen in the act of each individual.—The Octavius of Minucius Felix, vol. 4, pp. 177, 178.

This anti-Christian circulated those unthinkable abominable falsehoods about the early saints upon baseless rumor set afloat by the enemies of the cross. These were accepted by many who loved a lie more than the truth. From the animus manifested by some of the modern "antis" they must have graduated from the same school. Such sickening and silly stories as were circulated on the saints of God as above related, the Christians of to-day regard as an insult to one's intelligence to believe or give the least countenance, but many of the same individuals will studiously search from one end of the earth to the other, and relate such stories with all the gravity of a

Celsus was the leader among the "antis" of his day. To the false and unreasonable quibble of those fellows was the famous reply of Origen directed. In this fight against the Christians, he does not even dignify them by calling it an argument, but calls it "calumnies." Hear him:

After the matter of the diagram, he brings forward certain monstrous statements, in the form of questions and answers, regarding what is called by ecclesiastical writers the "seal," statements which did not arise from imperfect information; such as that "he who impresses the seal is called father, and he who is sealed is called young man and son;" and who answers, "I have been anointed with white ointment from the tree of life,"—things which we never heard to have occurred even among the heretics. In the next place, he determines even the number mentioned by those who deliver over the seal, as that "of seven angels, who attach themselves to both sides of the soul of the dying body, the one party being named angels of light, the others 'archontics,'" and he asserts that the "ruler of those named 'archontics' is termed the 'accursed god.'" . . . He appears to me, indeed, to have acted like those Jews who, when Christianity began to be first preached, scattered abroad false reports of the gospel, such as that "Christians offered up an infant in sacrifice, and partook of its flesh." . . . These calumnies have long exercised, although unreasonably, an influence over the minds of very many, leading those who are aliens to the gospel to believe that the Christians are men of such a character; and even at the present day they mislead some, and prevent them from entering even into the simple intercourse of conversation with those who are Christians.—Ibid., vol. 4, p. 585.

Back in those early ages the saints had to defend themselves against the silly rumors of "sealing." Only they were accused of sealing men to men, while the Saints in these days are accused of sealing men to women. By reason of those baseless falsehoods many, says Origen, refused to enter into a simple intercourse of conversation. The same is true, in many instances, of the Saints of the present day. Simply because of our belief we have been ostracized from society and our children made subjects of ridicule.

The following is some of the wild and dreamless nonsense the early Christians had to meet and to which Arnobius made his masterful reply:

Since I have found some who deem themselves very wise in their opinions, acting as if they were inspired, and announcing with all the authority of an oracle, that from the time when the Christian people began to exist in the world the universe has gone to ruin, that the human race has been visited with ills of many kinds, that even the very gods, abandoning their accustomed charge, in virtue of which they were wont in former days to regard with interest our affairs, have been driven from the regions of earth,—I have resolved, so far as my capacity and my humble power of language will allow, to oppose public prejudice, and to refute calumnious accusations; lest, on the one hand, those persons should imagine that they are declaring some weighty matter, when they are merely retailing vulgar rumors.—Arnobius against the heathen, vol. 6, p. 413.

It will doubtless be noticed that all the charges made against the saints, were simply a base fabrication of false rumors.

As to the evils following the introduction of the Christian philosophy the same polemic continues:

Since this is so, and since no strange influence has suddenly manifested itself to break the continuous course of events by interrupting their success, what is the ground of the allegations, that a plague was brought upon the earth after the Christian religion came into the world, and after it revealed the mysteries of hidden truth? But pestilences, say my opponents, and droughts, wars, famines, locusts, mice, and hailstones, and other hurtful things, by which the property of man is assailed, the gods bring upon us, incensed as they are by your wrongdoings and by your transgressions.—Ibid., p. 414.

Being unable to meet the argument of those humble disciples by fair and manly controversy, and not unlike our opponents of to-day, they refused to meet them "on the grounds of reason," and resorted to scandal and vilification:

Cruelty, combined with innocence, is unheard of, nor is it worthy of the condition of victorious enemies. What is the so powerful cause of this fury? Doubtless, because they can not contend on the ground of reason, they urge forward their cause by means of violence; and, with the subject not understood, they condemn those as most pernicious persons who have declined to make a stand respecting the fact of their innocence. Nor do they deem it sufficient that those whom they unreasonably hate should die by a speedy and simple death; but they lacerate them with refined tortures, that they may satisfy their hatred, which is not produced by any fault, but by the truth, which is hateful to those who live wickedly, because they take it ill that there are some whom their deeds can not please. They desire in every way to destroy these, that they may be able to sin without restraint in the absence of any witness.—The epitome of the divine institutes, vol. 7, p. 243.

Much more could be extracted from this valuable work relative to the sufferings of those early saints, but this will suffice. The most prominent feature in all this unholy hatred is that all reasoning, principle, and justice were abandoned, and lies, false rumors, and vituperation made the chief weapon. When such unfair means are resorted to, no more outspoken confession can be made of the weakness of their cause. Those early saints always stood ready to defend their doctrine in an honorable way, and offered to give a reason for all the falsehoods circulated about them; but their enemies chose rather to hide behind a refuge of lies, realizing that a fair and open investigation meant a loss to them and offering as an excuse that the saints were too low and wicked to engage even in a simple conversation. This cowardly subterfuge the elders of the Reorganized Church oftentimes have to meet. Those who are disposed to persecute and calumniate another for simply following the honest dictates of conscience, we invite to take a look into the great mirror of past history, whether sacred or profane, and behold the kind of company they are in; and those not of that company will be despised. "Because ye are not of the world the world will hate you."—Christ. "All those who live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution."—Paul. "Yet if any man suffer as a Christian [Mormon], let him not be ashamed."—Peter. "Marvel not my brethren, if the world hate you."—John.

These inspired utterances, taken in connection with the fact that we are everywhere spoken evil against and are able and willing to prove for righteousness' sake is much to encourage us amid the din and battle of life.

Now then, ye "anti-Mormons," remember, when you are persecuting and circulating false rumors about the Latter Day Saints, you are simply joining hands with the anti-Christians of former days in their wretched work of hate and malice, as well as fulfilling prophecy which will come down upon you with unmingled vengeance when the secrets of men's hearts shall be revealed. Such methods as you have employed in the past, and presumed will continue to use, never have nor never will prevent the spread of the truth; but, instead, has the effect of binding us closer together and inspiring a determination to continue the fight with greater zeal and courage than ever.

The fight is on, brethren, and let us arm ourselves for the conflict, not by condescending to the dastardly work of our opponents; but let us meet lies with truth, calumny with argument, ridicule with reason, rancor with meekness, buffoonery with the spirit of love. By this means the honest and truth-loving ones will see who is right, and we are better off without those who prefer to feast on the spewings of sectarian hatred.

I have found those excerpts very helpful in meeting the abuse and calumnies of our enemies, and submit them with the view of helping others. Praying God's blessing to attend,

F. J. EBELING.

NEW SAYINGS OF JESUS.

(The Daily Telegraph, London.)

A paper of remarkable interest was read at the last meeting of the Egypt Exploration Fund, held in the rooms of the Royal Society, under the presidency of Sir John Evans, F. R. S. Doctor B. P. Grenfell, who has been engaged in Egyptian excavations since 1894, rendered an account of the works at Oxyrhynchus, conducted by Doctor Hunt and himself. For four winters they had, he said, devoted themselves to the Ptolemaic cemeteries in the Fayoum, and succeeded in obtaining a large number of Ptolemaic texts. In March, 1902, a fortunate chance led to their finding a rich necropolis at Hibeh, about one hundred miles south of Cairo. They were equally fortunate at Oxyrhynchus. The bulk of the documents they unearthed belonged to the third century after Christ, and some of the theological fragments of the fourth century, by which time Christianity had become general, were of exceptional interest. The first of these formed part of a collection of the sayings of Jesus, similar in style to the so-called Logoi discovered by them in 1897. As in that papyrus, the separate sayings were introduced by the words, "Jesus saith," and were for the most part new, though one of the uncanonical sayings was in part known to have occurred in the gospel according to the Hebrews. The new sayings were not so well preserved as the previous ones, the ends of lines being lost throughout. They had, however, this advantage, that the introduction to the collection was given, stating that these were the sayings which Jesus spoke to Thomas, and perhaps another disciple. The first saying was that one of which part was already known to have occurred in the gospel according to the Hebrews, and was one of the most remarkable of the uncanonical sayings ascribed to our Lord. It was as follows:

"Let not him that seeketh cease from his search until he find, and when he finds he shall wonder; wondering he shall reach the kingdom [i. e., the kingdom of heaven], and when he reaches the kingdom he shall have rest."

The kingdom of heaven was also the subject of the second saying, which was much the longest and most important. The kernel of it was that most remarkable and profoundly mystical saying recorded by Saint Luke alone of the Evangelists, "The kingdom of God is within you," but the saying in the papyrus appeared in quite different surroundings from those attributed to it by Saint Luke and extended far into another region. Those sayings, when they come to be published in June, 1904, would, no doubt, be widely discussed, and the opinions of critics were likely to be nearly as diverse as their views about the Logoi discovered in 1897. These sayings were of enormous interest on account of the variations which they disclosed from accepted texts. One variant was of great value. The verse in Luke 11:52 said, "Woe unto you, lawyers! for ye have taken away [or ye have hidden] the key of knowledge; ye entered not in yourselves, and them that were entering in ye hindered." The papyrus has it thus:

"Ye have hidden the key of knowledge, ye entered not in yourselves, and to them that were entering in ye did not open."

The internal evidence was such that the two papyri could not be explained by any other hypothesis than that they were fragments of different manuscripts of the same collection of sayings. Stated briefly, the authors did not regard the sayings as extracts either from the Gospel according to the Hebrews, which seemed not to have possessed the Johannine characteristics which marked both series of sayings, or from the Gospel of Thomas, which, so far as could be judged from the scanty information concerning it, appeared to have been mainly a gospel of the childhood; or from any other of the known uncanonical gospels of the early second century. They preferred to regard the sayings as what they maintained the Logoi of 1897 to be, and what the introduction to the new fragment stated them in so many words to be—namely, a collection of sayings as such, not dependent on the canonical gospels, a collection which they now know was traditionally connected with Saint Thomas. Another third-century fragment found last winter came from a noncanonical gospel, parallel in form to the Synoptists. It contained, first, part of a discourse of our Lord which was closely related to certain passages in the Sermon on the Mount in Saint Matthew and to parallels in Saint Luke; and, secondly, part of a conversation between Christ and his disciples. This presented a striking resemblance to a well-known story recorded both in the Gospel to the Egyptians and in the uncanonical gospel used side by side with the canonical gospels by the author of the Second Epistle of Clement, a Christian homily written in about the middle of the second century. It consisted of an answer to a question, which was put in the gospel according to the Egyptians into the mouth of Salome, in the gospel quoted by Clement into that of some unnamed, in the papyrus into the mouth of the disciples. The question, with some varieties of form between the three, was this: "When will Christ's kingdom be realized?" The answer, as recorded in the Gospel according to the Egyptians, was, "when ye shall trample on the garment of shame, when the two shall be one and the male as the female, neither male nor female." From this the papyrus differed somewhat, and incidently showed that the interpretation which had generally been given to "when ye shall trample on the garment of shame" was incorrect. This had usually been considered to be equivalent to "when ye shall put off the body"—i. e., "when ye die;" but the papyrus showed that the real point lay in the mystical allusion to the third chapter of Genesis, and that the phrase meant "when ye return to the state of innocence which existed before the fall," being thus closely parallel to the following clause, "when the two shall be one."

Biblical scholars have always assumed that there were many sayings of Christ current unreported in the Gospels. The remarkable passage which forms the last verse of Saint John's Gospel implies as much. Saint Paul, in Acts 20:35, actually recalls one such saying which is not elsewhere to be found, "To remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive."—World Wide, December 5, 1903.

To be misunderstood by those one loves is the cross and bitterness of life. It is the cruelest trial of self-devotion; it is what must oftenest have wrung the heart of the Son of Man and if God could suffer, it is the wound we should be for ever inflicting on him.—Selected.

Woman's Way.

Smile a little, smile a little,
As you go along.
Not alone when life is pleasant,
But when things go wrong.
Care delights to see you frown,
Loves to hear you sigh;
Turn a smiling face upon her,
Quick the dame will fly.

Smile a little, smile a little,
All along the road;
Every life must have its burden,
Every heart its load,
Why sit down in gloom and darkness,
With your grief to sup?
As you drink Fate's bitter tonic,
Smile across the cup.

Smile upon the troubled pilgrims
Whom you pass and meet;
Frowns are thorns and smiles are blossoms
Oft for weary feet.
Do not make the way seem harder
By a sullen face.
Smile a little, smile a little,
Brighten up the place.

Smile upon your undone labor;
Not for one who grieves
O'er his task waits wealth or glory;
He who smiles achieves.
Though you meet with loss and sorrow
In the passing years.
Smile a little, smile a little,
Even through your tears.

Discipline in the Home.

When nature, after countless ages of only physical progression in the process of evolution, began to make physical variations, what we call intelligence had its birth and man became a possibility. When, through the production of helpless, dependent offspring and through the lengthening of the period of infancy, mother care and love became necessary to the preservation of the race, intelligent man was introduced to a moral world. As we trace this germ of morality from mother love to father love, spreading to family relations, extending to those of the clan and the nation and finally embracing the whole world in the sentiment of the brotherhood of man, we may well exclaim that God's best gift to mankind was the mother.

The savage mother had but a brief period with her child, as he early adapted himself to the simple environment of that primitive time and became independent; but the modern mother, having to deal with problems of a prolonged infancy and of the complex conditions of a highly civilized life, finds it by no means a simple matter to establish the discipline of her home.

The use which parents consider should be made of the lengthened period of infancy will determine to a great extent the form of discipline to be adopted. If the parents look upon childhood as a somehow necessary state of existence, which is to be lived through in the easiest possible manner, with the peace of the household (especially the older members) as the paramount consideration, that form of government which makes the domestic machinery run smoothest will be adopted. If, on the other hand, the parents look upon childhood as of great importance in the preparation for life's activities, as an opportunity for developing that which will work for the greatest good to the individual, to the state, and to God, a very different form of discipline will be adopted.

There are three forms of state government to-day,—the autocratic, democratic, and republican. Some families have what may be called an autocratic government,—a paternal autocratic government, founded upon an absolute disregard of the individual rights of the child, having unalterable laws, designed chiefly to make the domestic machinery run smoothly, without a thought for the development of the child's own personality, but designed to furnish him with ready-made rules of conduct, thus fitting him for life's duties. The frequent result of such government is the weakening or destruction of the child's will. Such repression causes anarchy and rebellion. When the parental restraint is removed, children so trained sometimes show a recklessness and an indulgence of evil emotions and desires which cause one to wonder how children of such good parents can go so far astray.

On the other hand, there is a modern autocratic family government which is of quite the opposite nature. In this, the children are absolute rulers and there is due subjection on the part of the parents, affording a pitiful spectacle of unjust, unwise government, producing insolent, disrespectful, and selfish children.

The democratic form of home government has been adopted quite widely of late years by thinking mothers. In such a family the life of each individual is so far exalted above the life of the family that there will soon be no home, only a sort of headquarters from which each may start out each day to his separate duties and pleasures, without a thought or a care regarding the other members of the family. Under this discipline, or lack of discipline, the children are considered to be on an equal footing with the parents, so that the spirit of criticism, which is at once the bane and the blessing of this age, is unduly fostered until all reverence for age, for superior ability or station, and even regard for the simple courtesies of life, are becoming unknown to the children of to-day. Again, with such parents, if the child is doing something that he ought not to do, they just turn his attention to something else that is right. It certainly is wise at times to turn the child's attention to other things and thus hinder him from deserving punishment, but if that is too frequently resorted to, self-restraint and self-control will be negative quantities in his character. With this form of government there can be no thought of unquestioning obedience; it is the child's right to have a reason given for every request. He must be guided entirely by love, and the words obedience and obey are discarded from the home vocabulary.

To illustrate, a certain child of such a home was asked by a caller to announce her presence to the mother. The child, with that contrary spirit which is exhibited by even the best of children at times, replied that she wouldn't. The father overhearing the conversation, took the child one side, remonstrated, argued with her, but she repeatedly refused to comply with the visitor's request. What was then left for the father to do, if consistent in his belief in the nonenforcement of obedience, but to retire from the field vanquished and allow the visitor to do the same? Which was what happened.

There can be no equality between parents and children. Years of character building and experience must place the parents upon a higher plane of development than the children. Let the child never forget that he owes his life, his sustenance, all that pertains to his well-being to his parents. He can never repay their labor, love, thoughtful care, and willing sacrifices. Only the highest love, honor, respect, and obedience can, with justice, be shown to parents by their children.

But there is still another form of state government, the republican, in which the head of the government is obeyed, not through fear, but from a knowledge of his absolute justice, of the reasonableness of the command, or from love and respect without knowledge of the cause for the command. A parent corresponding to such a ruler issues few commands and sees that they are obeyed. Taking time for thought, he is just in his decisions. Desiring to give the child the benefit of his wider experience, he enters into the closest possible sympathy with the child's thoughts and deeds, his hopes and disappointments, his joys and sorrows.

Such a mother formulates a system of discipline; does not use one method to-day, another to-morrow. She studies the development of the race and the history of the civilization. She knows the laws of life, physical and mental, and watches the development of the various instincts to encourage or discourage them. She learns that the children of to-day come into the world with inherited tendencies which enable them in a short time to surpass the development attained by the adult savage of primitive times. She learns that the inherited instincts have their time of growth and of death, and that she may either nourish them into habits or check their growth and hasten their death. She finds that among these instincts there are some which have lost their value to the race and should be discouraged. For example, there comes a period in the child's life when destruction of life, cruelty to insects and torture of animals are a delight; when the fly is dissected alive and the bird is robbed of its young. By calling attention to the mother bird's cry of distress and by the suggestion that it would be exceedingly unpleasant to have one's arms and legs amputated in such a rough manner, the mother may at once discourage cruelty and encourage sympathy for distress and protection for the weak and helpless. This instinct of protection, the caring, tending instinct, is manifested in the extreme love and care bestowed upon dolls and pets, and no one hesitates to encourage it, knowing that upon its development depends largely the growth of altruistic sentiments. That the hunting and fighting instincts belong to those debatable ones which some think should be indulged and allowed to wear themselves out, as it were, and others think should be absolutely repressed, is understood by many a mother who has questioned what to do when her son has begged for a gun, or when he has come home bleeding and torn, yet triumphant, from a fight in which he has avenged his own or a weaker comrade's wrongs. Surely the feelings of rivalry, of competition, of love of conquest and of unwillingness to be beaten which accompany these instincts, later contribute toward success in life's struggle, whether the life be a martial, an industrial, a commercial, or a strictly intellectual one.

Through the instinct of imitation the child becomes best adapted to his environment. It is because of this instinct that the use of what is termed suggestion is of such value. The child naturally and readily does what it sees done; it absorbs and imitates the good and the bad with which it is surrounded. It is, therefore, of supreme importance that the environment be good, that the parents become what they wish their children to be.

Accordingly, the ideal parent in seeking to establish certain cardinal virtues in the child's character should first make them a component part of his own character. These virtues form the framework for a noble, upright life. They are:

First. Filial love and obedience. The ideal mother studies the laws of moral development and knows that the child before the age of twelve or thirteen can only understand right and wrong from concrete examples and in the light of former experience, since abstract reasoning only comes after the complete development of the nervous system. Therefore, an outside authority of parent, or nurse, or teacher, or Bible is necessary to the moral development of the child. The mother, by her love, self-control, justice and unvariableness, can arouse such respect, admiration and love in the child that he will take delight in obedience, and will have an abiding respect for law and order, and a true religious spirit of reverence.

Second. Perfect honesty and love of truth. Scientific investigation has shown that a child apparently tells lies for several reasons: from a vivid imagination, from a playing with words, from confused, weak perceptions or a lack of perspective, any of which causes are remedied by time; but when the cause of the lie is found in fear or in the weakening of self-control caused by overindulgence, the parent is directly to blame. When love of approbation or love of "showing off" is back of the lie, care must be taken to discourage it. When a child lies selfishly to avoid doing something, or cheats to excel in games or pass an examination, the case is more serious, and unless checked at the start will develop an unscrupulous, grasping disposition. The lie that is told to protect some one else must be dealt with carefully, for it comes from an unwritten code of honor and should it be condemned absolutely the child would have an absurd sense of injustice. Be absolutely truthful and honest yourself with the children and before them.

Third. Regard for the rights and happiness of others. There are many generations of selfishness, of thought only for the individual and not for society from which the child naturally inherits his belief in the supremacy of his own rights and desires. These inherited tendencies can not be overcome easily; but working upon the principle that those whom we benefit we love, the child can finally be taught the beauties of unselfishness, of courtesy, of generosity of kindness, of charity in thought and deed.

Fourth. Self-respect. This must be encouraged so that there may be no neglect of individual rights and personal needs.

Fifth. Self-control and self-reliance, or cultivation of the will. This is the very foundation of success and happiness. At first the parent's will must necessarily control the undeveloped child, but gradually with the growth of the child's understanding the will of the parent should recede more and more into the background, leaving the child greater freedom to develop his own individuality.

Sixth. High ideals, with purity of thought and deed. Create in the child the highest possible ideals of life. Fill his mind so full of good and noble thoughts that the evil which may surround him will glance off and leave him unharmed. This can be done only by being yourself pure in thought and noble in aspiration.

There are various departments in the family government as in state government, all of which are concerned in one's scheme of discipline.

There is the department of health, including rules and regulations concerning food, clothing, cleanliness, sleep, and exercise. The correct management of this department has more moral influence than is commonly supposed, for upon its wise administration depends the child's preparation for those life activities which Spencer places first in importance, those which directly minister to self-preservation.

There is the department of amusement, including the all-important management of play, one of the greatest factors in the development of character. Consideration must be given to toys, games, playmates, athletics, and parties, likewise to the development of the æsthetic nature and the regulation of dancing, reading, picture-seeing, theater-going and musical culture.

In the department of instruction that which we call intellectual is delegated largely to the schools; but the mother should have an understanding of what is needed by the child. There should be a closer relation between the school and the home. Religious instruction, training the use and handling of money, development of habits of order, of industry, and of charity are left largely to the home. The mother is responsible for the good manners of her household, and through domestic instruction she may well cultivate such qualities as perseverance, concentration, patience, and unselfishness.

Finally, there is the judicial department. The subject of punishment and reward, censure and praise, is deserving of more study than is commonly given it. Punishments should never be given arbitrarily and should be few in number. There are hundreds of little backslidings which the wise mother never sees, which at most are faults of the day. Constant nagging defeats the purpose of punishment. Let not the mother in an angry spirit take it out on the child. She should investigate the nature of the wrong-doing, putting herself so far as possible in the child's position and tracing his emotions. She should try to discover whether the nature of the act was understood by the little immature mind, which may not yet have developed a sense of time, of proportion, of space, of relations; whether the deed was done with an understanding of the consequences to himself and others or in thoughtlessness, or from an overflow of animal spirits. She should see if he has understood the wording of the law which had been broken, and then not be obstinate, but forgive his faults and try him again, if possible; if not, inflict a punishment which shall have some relation to the wrong done, shall follow as effect upon cause, shall be inevitable.

Just as the child learns the existence of physical law, so may he come to an understanding of moral law. In babyhood he is constantly running up against physical law and paying the penalty. Thus he collides with a chair and finds that two bodies can not occupy the same space at the same time. He soon learns to respect nature's law through the penalty exacted. As the emotions of fear, anger, curiosity, etc., appear he again finds himself in collision with law. This time it may be a moral law, perhaps the one that he has no right to take some one's else property, certainly not to destroy it. He in his innocence appropriates everything to himself, but he must suffer some penalty for such wrong-doing. A sorry look on the mother's face, or gentle spat of the little hands that did the mischief, is usually sufficient penalty to help him know that he is doing what he should not.

As the child advances in years and reason, as his motives and desires and temptations become more complex, the problem of appropriate punishment becomes more difficult, but the reason for giving any punishment at all should never be lost sight of. It is not because the parent is bigger and stronger than the child; it is not to work off disagreeable feelings; it is to teach the child to understand and respect moral law.

With this object in mind it is frequently better to reward a good act, thus placing the emphasis upon the good instead of the bad. Parents are far too apt to pay no heed to good deeds done, the temptations overcome, the kind thought shown. A word of commendation, a sympathetic look, an unexpected gift, is often more benefit than all the whippings in the world.

Now neither parents, nor children, nor the civilization in which we live is ideal, therefore we can not expect to exalt all the good tendencies of the child or overcome all the evil ones. Parents are sometimes unjust in their decisions and harsh in their treatment of children. Society is in many ways corrupt and debased. But we can all study to know what would be ideal and work toward the goal, secure in the consciousness that we are looking toward the right and are fulfilling to the best of our ability the noblest mission which God has given any one to fulfill.—Mary L. Lockwood in American Motherhood.

Letter Department.

PATTERSON, Iowa, January 21, 1904.

Editors Herald: On New Year's day the writer, accompanied by Bro. Bernt Johnson, left for our field of labor, after a short stay at home over Christmas, St. Charles being the objective point. Bro. Jesse Roberts met us at the depot and conveyed us to his home a mile and a half from town, where they had announced meeting for the same evening. Being somewhat afflicted with a severe cold I succeeded in persuading Bro. Johnson to occupy, and thus we commenced the year in the good cause.

On Sunday I spoke to the Saints at the schoolhouse and on Tuesday we wended our way into new territory, trying to open up in new fields. After considerable travel and labor we succeeded in securing a union church building on the condition that we furnish our own light and fuel. This we thought we might be able to do by taking up collections. We so thought and congratulated ourselves on that thought that we had succeeded wonderfully well thus far; but our next effort, that of trying to get a place to stop, was not so successful. After canvassing the whole neighborhood and making inquiries, we were finally compelled to abandon the project of holding meetings there and could scarcely find a place to stop over night, and had to pay for the same. Finding that plan rather expensive and one which our salaries would not warrant us in continuing, we left for other parts.

Remembering that Bro. L. Finney lived only a few miles away, we stopped with him for dinner next day and he seemed anxious to have us try at Patterson. Hence we set to work and secured the Christian church building, which they have not used since a year ago last July, and by a little work in cleaning and fixing up, and securing an organ belonging to the church, we were ready for meetings and commenced January 9. A young lady volunteered to play the organ and with an average attendance of about seventy-five we are continuing the services. A goodly percentage of the attendants manifest a good deal of interest, and one family has offered us a standing invitation to stop with them whenever we want to.

Patterson is a small town on the Rock Island Railway, and finding that there was a regular appointment out for Sunday evening, we dispensed with our services, thinking best not to run any opposition. So we attended the Epworth League in the evening in the Methodist Episcopal church, and for some reason there was to be no preaching as previously announced, and so the writer was called upon, rather unexpectedly, to speak after the close of the League. The Lord blessed me in the effort. There were present about two hundred, many of whom had been too prejudiced to attend our services at the Christian church.

I spoke from the nineteenth Psalm, on God's perfect law, as that which converts the soul, in contradistinction to the ten-commandment law given by Moses, which could not reach the hearts of men; and hence Christ taught them a higher law when he said, "It is said by them of old time, Thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not commit adultery," etc., "but I say unto you, whosoever is angry with his brother," "and he that looketh on a woman to lust after her," etc., "and this is the new and better covenant" which he would put in their hearts and write in their minds. Hence being led by this higher law prompted by the Spirit, we would have no use for the ten-commandment law which says, "Thou shalt not kill, nor commit adultery," etc., because, being prompted by love toward God and our fellow men, we would live above that law, and love thus becomes the fulfilling of the law.

I was pleased with the courtesy extended as well as the privilege to tell the gospel story to those who otherwise would not come out to hear because of prejudice.

Mother, Earth is wrapped in a sheet of ice several inches thick in this part and it is dangerous to venture out, especially in the evening. So last night we could not reach our appointment, but hope this will not last long, as it makes one feel very restive all over.

The gospel seed sown while near Milo this fall seems to have taken effect with some. I received a letter a few days ago from a family residing there, nonmembers, who attended a series of eighteen meetings, the first they had ever heard in the way of preaching of the gospel. It says: "We have not been to meeting since you were here; would be awfully glad to have you come back."

My colaborer, Bro. Johnson, is doing very well for a beginner and by practice and perseverance will make a useful man.

Yours in bonds,

S. K. SORENSEN.

HAYERHILL, Massachusetts, January 17, 1904.

Dear Herald: For about two years I have read the HERALD and I feel that I have been blessed greatly in so doing. There are only a few members in our branch and we ofttimes get discouraged and it is very strengthening to read the encouraging letters from the Saints. There is quite a lot of prejudice here, although not so much as there is in some places.

We have a little hall to ourselves and it is clean and warm. We have some very spiritual meetings. Brn. Bullard and Sheehy visit us once in a while and stir us up to activity. We are looking forward to the time when some of our members will be called to the eldership. We now have a deacon, a teacher, and a priest.

The Sunday-school and Religio work is advancing. I feel that the study of the Book of Mormon is a grand thing and the Quarterlies help lots in understanding the lessons. The Good Literature Committee have distributed quite a number of tracts and other church literature to the residents near the hall and we are hoping to get the work before the public in that way. Three new members have been added within the last three weeks.

My prayer is that this grand work may advance until it will cover the whole earth.

Your sister in the faith,

EMMA S. THAYER.

SOUTH HAVEN, Kansas, January 15, 1904.

Dear Herald: This beautiful day, when all nature shines with radiant glory, I will try to write a few lines to the Saints, as I get lonesome, it never having been my privilege to live near the Saints, and having no one to talk to of the truth. The people here are very good neighbors, but they are opposed to our faith. I get discouraged sometimes. If my husband belonged to the Church what a pleasure it would be. I try the best I can to teach my children the truth with the help of the Savior; but if it were not for the promise of a life beyond where there is no more sickness, pain, or death, I am afraid I would fail. The Lord knows my great trials and temptations and if it had not been for his great blessings to me it seems I could not have stood. I was taught by my father and mother when I was little to pray and be faithful and the Lord would keep me from danger.

I have three bright, religiously inclined children, and if I can set before them the example I desire, what a different world this will be. I love my family and it makes my heart ache to see that my husband can not understand or will not listen to the truth. But the time is not far distant when every "knee shall bow and every tongue confess." The dear Lord will not always strive with man.

It has been fourteen years since I left home and took the responsibilities of house-keeping, and in this time I have heard two sermons, one ten years ago at Lone Rock, Missouri, when Bro. C. H. Jones spoke, and this last winter when my father, I. P. Baggerly, spoke several times, though I was there but once. Is it any wonder, dear Saints, that I would get hungry to hear the precious words? My mother sent me some Ensigns, and I was glad to get them. I enjoyed the sermons and letters.

My father was in this section this fall; held meetings at Wichita and had a very good time, and came to visit me a few days. He got very sick of malarial fever and was hardly able to ride when he went out in the field of labor. I never saw him look so bad and he still continues in bad health. Pray for him, Saints, that he may be able to do the will of the Lord.

I realize what the servants of the Lord have to withstand. They go into all parts of the world and leave their homes and dear ones and try so hard to get people to listen to the glorious gospel for their own salvation. May the Lord bless each and every one of the ministers that are sent to preach this glorious work. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may be able to set the example of a true Latter Day Saint before the world.

MRS. EMMA BUTLER.

TORONTO, Ontario, January 11, 1904.

Dear Herald: In your issue of the 6th inst. I notice an attempted reply on the part of Bro. A. M. Baker to F. R. Tubb's answer to an assertion by the brother, in a former issue, that the Holy Ghost is not a person. I say attempted, as I fail to see that his essay at all covered the ground he intended. I am pleased with the jocular spirit that pervades his article, as well as his admiration of the courageous spirit that animates Canadians in their speaking out "when things do not go to suit." All right, dear brother, we may not agree on all things, but I think we understand each other as Yankees and Canucks.

Now then to the question in debate. I sincerely trust no one will conclude that I have taken up the cudgels for Elder Tubb on account of any idea I may have as to his inability to make a proper and effective reply. Far be it from me to entertain any such a thought. I know Elder Tubb is eminently fitted to do all justice to the subject, but the question is one that has been much discussed, and another one in the arena of polemics may adduce something that may throw some ray of light on the matter, however small the reflection may be.

I have before me Buck's Theological Dictionary, the "corrected edition," published in Philadelphia by Crissy & Markley, Goldsmith's Hall, Library Street.

On page 170 is the subject, "Holy Ghost, the third person in the Trinity." In the first place, what do we understand by the word "person"? Webster defines it as "the bodily form of a human being," consisting of body and soul. We apply the word to living beings only, possessed of a rational nature; the body when dead is not called a person. It is applied alike to a man, woman, or child. Locke gives it, "A person is a thinking, intelligent being."

Buck says: "The Holy Ghost is a real and distinct person in the Godhead. 1. Personal powers of rational understanding and will are ascribed to him, 1 Corinthians 2: 10, 11; 12: 11; Ephesians 4: 3. 2. He is joined with the other two divine persons, as the object of worship and fountain of blessings, Matthew 28: 19; 2 Corinthians 13: 14; 1 John 5: 7. 3. In the Greek, a masculine article or epithet is joined to his name, pneuma, which is naturally of the neuter gender, John 14: 26; 15: 26; 16: 13; Ephesians 1: 13. 4. He appeared under the emblem of a dove, and of cloven tongues of fire. Matthew 3; Acts 2. 5. Personal offices of an intercessor belong to him, Romans 8: 26. 6. He is represented as performing a multitude of personal acts; as teaching, speaking, witnessing, etc., Mark 13: 11; Acts 20: 23; Romans 8: 15, 16; 1 Corinthians 6: 19; Acts 15: 28; 16: 6, 7."

Permit me to give an extract from Orson Pratt's "Absurdities of Immaterialism," page 30: "The Godhead may be further illustrated by a council, consisting of three men—all possessing equal wisdom, knowledge, and truth, together with equal qualifications in every other respect. Each person would be a separate distinct person or substance from the other two, and yet the three would form but one council. Each alone possesses, by supposition, the same wisdom and truth that the three united or the one council possesses. The union of the three men in one council would not increase the knowledge or wisdom of either. Each man would be one part of the council when reference is made to his person; but the wisdom and truth of each man would be the whole wisdom and truth of the council, and not a part. If it were possible to divide truth, and other qualities of a similar nature into fractions, so that the Father should have the third part of truth, the third part of wisdom, the third part of knowledge, the third part of love, while the Son and the Holy Spirit possessed the other two thirds of these qualities or affections, then neither of these persons could make 'one God,' 'but only a part of a God.' But because the divisibility of wisdom, truth, or love is impossible, the whole of these qualities dwell in the Father—the whole dwells in the Son—the whole is possessed by the Holy Spirit. 'The Holy Spirit is one part of the Godhead' in essence; but the whole of God in wisdom, truth, and other similar qualities. If a truth could become three truths, distinct from each other, by dwelling in three persons or substances, then there would be three Gods instead of one. But as it is, the Trinity is three in essence, but one in truth and other similar principles. The oneness of the Godhead, as described in the Scriptures, never was intended to apply to the essence, but only to the perfections and other attributes."

What are we to understand by the word "substance"? The root of the word, is to stand. Webster says: "In a general sense, being; something existing by itself, that which really is, or exists; equally applicable to matter or spirit. Thus the soul of man is called an immaterial substance, a cogitative substance, a substance endued with thought."

Notice that Pratt says, in part "the Holy Spirit is one part of the Godhead in essence." Let us see Webster as to the meaning of the word "essence." He says: "That which constitutes the particular nature of a being or substance, or of a genius, and which distinguishes it from all others."

Does Bro. Baker wish us to understand that the Holy Spirit was not known till Christ had finished his work on earth and had ascended to his Father? He quotes John 14: 16-18, and then remarks: "From this teaching we gather the following thoughts: God and Christ were united in the one purpose of sending the Comforter, harmonizing with the thought of its being the influence of power emanating from God and Christ. Yet this Comforter is referred to as the 'Spirit of truth.'" My dear brother, wherever God has had a people, in any age of the world, the "Spirit of truth" has been with them. The Spirit of God fills the immensity of space, and is the sustaining force and power in nature. (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 2, 3.)

From Doctrine and Covenants we gather that the Holy Spirit strives with men, but will not always do so. (Section 1: 5.) In section 17: 5, latter part of paragraph, we read that "the Holy Ghost, which beareth record of the Father, and of the Son, which Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are one God, infinite and eternal, without end." Surely no one will deny intelligence to the Holy Ghost. In section 12: 4 the Spirit giveth utterance, and in section 10: 6 we are commanded to put our trust in "that Spirit which leadeth to do good: yea, to do justly, to walk humbly, to judge righteously, and this is my Spirit," and can be appealed to (paragraph 9). It will teach the peaceable things of the kingdom (section 35: 1). In section 63: 14, we are told that Sidney Rigdon, by folly, "grieved the Spirit," and his work was rejected.

In Dr. Hook's Church Dictionary, article "Holy Ghost," he says: "The third person of the adorable Trinity is of one substance, majesty, and glory, with the Father and the Son, very and eternal God!" You may say this is sectarian doctrine, but has our Church an accepted and understood position on the subject? Are we instructed by a "verily thus saith the Lord" that it is "the influence of power emanating from God and Christ," and not a divine person? If so, I have not seen nor heard of it.

Nevertheless, I am open to conviction, and if Bro. Baker can adduce sufficient testimony to prove his position, I will be more than pleased to acknowledge the same, as it is truth we want. So far, however, I fail to see that he has supported his claim by the argument presented.

I have not exhausted the scriptural evidences that support the proposition that the Holy Ghost is a divine personage in the Godhead, nor the opinions of eminent men. Of one thing all may be assured, that if the word is ever spoken to us, ex cathedra, in opposition to the divine personality of the Holy Spirit, I shall only be too happy to accept the same as the word of Him who alone has the right and authority to speak; and we have one at our head who stands in the prophetic line as the representative, on earth, of Him who is our Prophet, Priest, and King. He is the medium through which such will come, if it must, and to his mandate, when given by "verily thus saith the Lord," and passed by the quorums successively and successfully, I, and all true Latter Day Saints will bow.

Yours for truth,
A. E. MORTIMER.

ALBION, Idaho, January 14, 1904.

Editors Herald: Over a year has passed away, I believe, since I intruded on your patience, but if I keep silent too long you may conclude we are all dead. It is presumed we have something to say of general interest, or we are only imposing on the patience of the Saints, if we escape the waste basket. "The same old story I have listened to from the time I came into the Church," is what we sometimes hear after listening to some elder do his best to wake up Saints to duty, sinners to obedience, and I might say his hearers to a sense of their duty.

When I read the HERALD and Ensign as they come along on their weekly calls, I feel much the same as when standing on a main thoroughfare in our big cities watching the ebb and flow of humanity. All seem intent on "getting there" as soon as possible. What a busy world! I always say, and there is no room for the idler in the Church, or in the world.

The matron in the girls' dormitory for our State Normal School, told me we are all in the whirl, and we only get left in the rear if we try to resist or check the common whirl. This was said in a chat concerning the prestige the students gave to the midnight revelries held in our town to raise funds for Odd-fellows, Masons, Woodmen of the World, etc., and sending a committee to request the Normal faculty to suspend rules and allow students to attend. "When in Rome, do as Romans do," is the old excuse for sowing wild oats and all kinds of noxious weeds. Foreseeing this condition in the world, the gathering of the Saints was designed to be a counter-whirl in which all Saints are expected to take an active part.

The world seems to have the jolliest crowd, as Mr. M—— told Bro. Anthony once when he was advising about church services anent the dance-hall.

After all is said about this continual see-saw play of the Church and the world, "the kingdom is to be like ten virgins," so the Spirit of truth said; and if half the virgins are wise, though their lamps need trimming badly, and no oil to spare, we have great need to ask ourselves about our lamps. We try to discern the signs of the present time (exact time), and while we do this, are we prepared for the Master's coming? If half the virgins are accepted it is exceedingly sweet consolation.

Saints do not wish to be counted idlers,—at least, "that's me." I do not know of any Saints, even among the most active and successful, who feel satisfied with their efforts—always sanguine of what they do, it being the best they can do.

How often have I heard members of the Church say, "We are doing the best we can do." How often in HERALD and Ensign I see the same statement made! And I think, brother or sister, I would like to ask you a few questions.

I have been made glad in reading letters from elders in North Idaho where I have been. Laborers are sorely needed there. Every member, wherever located, is on duty, is a missionary for good or evil in the prestige their influence exerts.

I noticed lately an account of some Mormon elders in New York with hypnotic eyes—young elders, I suppose, among the daughters of Adam. Without doubt young men are best in love or war. It would be so nice if some one with the hypnotic power of the gospel could break the drowsy stupor of these parts, for spiritual sleep is the most deadly.

Every issue of the HERALD seems full of good things, notwithstanding I have written nothing for a whole year for it. The world can and will whirl along just the same without me or any other man. Sad to think of, but it's a fact.

Editors Herald: I just closed a series of meetings at Wil-dersville, Lexington, and West Port, Tennessee. I put in twenty-five days in these three new places, and am billed here for January 20, and will be here for a few days. Then away again further into Tennessee to a place where the people want me to come. I received a new call for preaching to-day, and have all I can do. Pray for me.

OPHIR, Kentucky, January 14, 1904.

Editors Herald: I take this method of informing your many readers of my true situation regarding this great latter-day work. I have been a member of the Utah Church for about six years, and I must confess that I believed with all my heart that the representatives of the Utah Church were the true successors of the Prophet Joseph, until some time ago, when I began to investigate the claims of the Reorganized Church. And upon my investigation, I became very much interested in their doctrine; and through the infinite wisdom of God I got up a correspondence with Elders Snow and Metcalf, of the Reorganized Church, and later the good Lord sent Elder J. W. Metcalf, of Louisville, to visit our branch of the Utah Church.

Paul like, he did not shun to declare the whole counsel of God. So he portrayed before the people the gospel as believed by the Reorganized Church and reasoned from the law and the testimony by the power of the Holy Ghost with such convincing force, that it left an everlasting impression upon my mind.

So I began to call upon the Lord with all my heart to show me the right and acceptable way, and one night when Elder Metcalf was at my house I prayed earnestly unto the Lord to reveal unto me which one of the two contending factions was acceptable in his sight, and while in this state of mind and while I was calling upon the Lord with all my heart, I had a dream or vision in which the Lord represented the two churches before me by two roads running down the creek I now live on. And it appeared to me in the dream or vision that the two roads representing the two churches at the beginning were very close together, starting almost from the same point; but in just a few steps from the starting-point they began to widen out and get farther apart until they were quite a distance from each other. The road that represented the Utah Church was the most crooked road I ever was permitted to look upon, running in and out and with a woman traveling in it; and the road representing the Reorganized Church was just as straight as a line and appeared to have a rock bottom.

While I was looking upon the two roads and contemplating what to do, I saw in front of me in the road representing the Reorganized Church, Elder J. W. Metcalf just as plain as I ever saw any one in my life, and I heard him say, "Come this way; this is the right way," just as distinctly as I ever heard any one speak. So I commenced to follow Elder Metcalf and we traveled on toward the schoolhouse where I thought we were going to hold meeting, and while on our way we met quite a crowd of people coming; but when we met they all turned around and went back with us.

In a few days after this vision I was baptized by Elder Metcalf, as also my wife, my nephew, Joseph C. Cantrill, T. M. Dyer, and Isaac Skaggs, all members of the Utah Church, and many more are ready to accept it. So I am truly thankful unto my heavenly Father for sending one of his true servants unto me, and for granting me the glorious privilege of accepting the true gospel of Jesus Christ in its purity unmixed or soiled by the precepts or doctrines of men. Hoping all the Saints will remember me in their prayers, I am

Your brother in Christ,
N. M. CANTRILL.

Editors Herald: Having been called home and quarantined because of scarlet fever, I take this means of notifying your readers that I am not on duty and can not send out mail, but all business will receive my prompt attention as soon as possible. MALAD CITY, Idaho, January 15, 1904.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I have written to your columns, but I have been doing all that lay in my power for the spread of the gospel.

I arrived at Malad on the 23d ult., just in time to spend Christmas with home folks, which of course was greatly appreciated. Mrs. Fannie Pender and J. A. Condit had a real nice and entertaining program arranged for the occasion, which proved to be a grand success, after which Santa Claus, wife, and two children appeared on the scene and distributed presents for all.

On the 27th ult., we accompanied a little band of Saints to the water's edge where the ice had been cut, and after singing a hymn and returning thanks to our heavenly Father, Bro. W. S. Pender immersed two precious souls beneath the cold waves. In the confirmation service that afternoon a lady (not a member) arose and said she knew the Lord was in the work performed by the Reorganized Church, and she hoped to become a member some day and asked the Saints to pray for her.

I also had the pleasure of attending a discussion between Elder W. S. Pender and Professor J. M. Larson, of the Utah faith, which was held at Clifton, Idaho, on the 5th, 6th, and 7th. Subject, first night, was "gathering;" second night, "temple-building and baptism for the dead;" third night, "presidency." Good feeling prevailed throughout, and some warm friends gained to the cause.

The bishop expressed friendship towards Elder Pender, and also the manner in which he conducted himself during the discussion; but said he was obliged to announce, owing to those in authority over him, that the doors of his church would hereafter be closed against Elder Pender, as long as he was bishop. However we left an appointment at the Dayton Schoolhouse, about five miles distant, for the Monday and Tuesday following.

When we returned to fill the appointments we were pleased to greet a fair-sized audience. Elder Pender spoke the first evening. The writer announced he would continue the next evening and we had the house so crowded that we could not seat all. We left several investigating, also an appointment for next week. So the good work goes on.

On the evening of the 8th Elder Pender and the writer were called to administer to a son and a daughter of David M. Jones, not members, who were suffering from severe attacks of pneumonia, and both of them were instantly relieved. The boy, who had not taken any nourishment for days, wanted to be dressed immediately after the administration, and, declaring he was well, ate a hearty supper a short time after.

So the work seems to be moving and there are better prospects for the spread of the gospel here than the writer has ever before seen.

Trusting our new year will be one of success, I remain in the conflict,
J. E. VANDERWOOD.

TRINIDAD, Colorado, January 17, 1904.

Editors Herald: I have been following the Kelley-Griffiths discussion. It puts me in mind of the German and the politicians. One of the latter made a grand speech and the German exclaimed, "Ach, he's gotim!" After the other one was through, he exclaimed, "Mine gracious, he's gotim, too!" So it seems to me; I think the brethren should settle the matter between themselves and then give the HERALD readers the benefit of the decision.

JOHN W. KENT.

BAY MINETTE, Alabama, January 17, 1904.

Editors Herald: I will begin the year by writing a letter to the HERALD. I love to read the letters from others.

I was eighteen years old on the 16th of this month, and have been in the Church about nine years. I have been afflicted for many years, having lost the use of my right arm. I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may be healed. My eyes also are afflicted. Bro. W. J. Booker has administered to me and they are better, for which I thank the Lord.

I like to go to school, but we have lived so far from one that I have not attended very much. We now have a new schoolhouse near and we are going to have preaching and Sunday-school. Saints, pray for us that we may build up in the faith and be worthy of blessings. May God bless all is my prayer.

Yours for truth,
JOANNA BANKESTER.

ELLISTON, Montana, January 17, 1904.

Editors Herald: Elliston is a small town twenty-eight miles west of Helena on the Northern Pacific Railroad, and the population is not very religiously inclined. There is not a church building here. The Presbyterians hold meeting in the schoolhouse, and they also have a Sunday-school.

Brn. Allen and Stead were here last summer and had a very small turnout. They also held meetings about five miles from here and my wife and a Mrs. Smelcher and Miss Davis were baptized. We have since been to Deer Lodge twice to meetings, a distance of twenty-six miles over mountain roads.

I was in Spokane, Washington, last Wednesday; came back on Friday. While there I had quite a talk with a young lady by the name of Dolly Bruns on religious matters, and gave her the tract, "What we believe." She seemed to be pleased with the talk and asked me to send her more tracts. On the way home I got in conversation with a half-breed from the Flathead reservation. We got to talking about his forefathers and I went back with him to Lehi. He got considerably interested and asked me to get him a Book of Mormon and Inspired Translation of the Bible. He is pretty wealthy. I think he told me that he, his father, and brother had fifteen hundred head of cattle and good homes. That may be a good place to start the gospel among the Flatheads.

Ever praying for the welfare of the cause,
Your brother in Christ,
G. A. SPRAGG.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. A. M. Chase under date of January 16, writes from Salt Lake City, Utah: "One baptized here this week. Bro. Swenson is doing a good work among Swedish people here."

Bro. J. A. Tanner writes from Bevier, Missouri: "I am here to attend the funeral of Sr. Sarah Morgan, sister to Bro. William Lewis of St. Joseph."

Bro. and Sr. Arie Roothoff were baptized into the Reorganized Church on the 4th of December, last, by Bro. Kemp of the Enfield Branch, North London, and confirmed by Bro. T. J. Sheldon, missionary to London. Bro. Arie Roothoff writing from North London, England, of late, says: "The language in which this letter is written is Hollandish, or so-called Dutch. We are only eighteen months in England and we thank God in the name of his son for the goodness he has bestowed upon us in bringing us to his church. I have been for several years a member in the Utah Church, which is the more reason to rejoice, that God has given me sufficient light to see their apostasy."

Religians of Little Sioux District will convene in Logan, Iowa, Thursday, February 4, 1904, at 7 p. m. Come with the Holy Spirit for guidance. George H. Sherer, president, Mrs. Nellie E. Ballantyne, Secretary.

Franklin found religion in the world and he concluded that it is a necessary element in promoting and securing the general welfare. It should be observed because necessary; but, unlike Emerson, he would not have produced a system of religion had there been none in the world until his time. Having admitted by force of his own self-experimentation the necessity of religion in society, he deduced its usefulness to the public, and this giving occasion for another indulgence in comparison, he at once concluded that "the Christian religion above all others, ancient or modern, was the most excellent." Had Franklin been born in India, he probably would have advocated the religion of Buddha.—Educational Report.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

We sometimes get questions in a bunch; here is one:

1. Where is it taught that tithing is one tenth of what you possess, and of what you make above a living after?
2. Where is it taught that baptism remits sins?
3. Is abstinence from food fasting?
4. Baptism by proxy, where is it taught?
5. Where is it taught that a priest can bless the emblems?
6. Where is it taught that in partaking of the sacrament one gets a forgiveness of sins?
7. Can any one have eternal life that commits adultery after he comes into the Church?

In answer:

1. Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9, 10; 106: 1, 2. In connection, Genesis 14: 17-24. Webster's definition of the tenth.
2. Mark 1: 4; Luke 3: 3; John 3: 5; Acts 2: 38; Doctrine and Covenants 32: 2; 83: 12; 18: 4; 83: 10.
3. Abstaining from food is fasting; but fasting in a gospel sense is something more. It is abstaining from food with some definite object in view.
4. Not as yet teaching the doctrine, we cite no authorities in its support.
5. Doctrine and Covenants, 17: 10, 11, 22; Book of Moroni, chapter 4.
6. It is a matter of belief with some elders that the sacrament is "the Lord's supper," or in semblance of it. We know of no text specifically teaching that in the act of partaking of the sacrament there is remission of sins, but it is safe to believe that as the ordinance is intended as a means of receiving spiritual strength it is also a token of remembrance through which if it be partaken of worthily a remission of sins is retained by it in connection with the other duties attaching to membership in the Church.
7. The Church is commanded not to forgive a member who commits adultery the second time. A first offence may be forgiven, if the offender is penitent; but the second offence is not to be forgiven. We believe from this that the Lord reserves to himself the right to fix the punishment for this sin; and the scriptures teach that adulterers and whoremongers are to be cast out, thus losing the right to eternal life.

February.

The laggard sun, on frosty morn,
 Throws long beams through the stubble corn.
 Against the sunset, naked trees
 Weave magic bredes and tracteries.
 From woodman's ax the splinter bounds;
 The flicker's cheery tapping sounds;
 Ice thaws, and in the quickening flood
 Are vague, fond hopes of leaf and bud,
 When, lo! like fleck of living sky—
 Full-songed, a bluebird sweet flits by!
 —By Sara Andrew Shafer, in the Outlook.

SAINTS IN MISSOURI.

In his last report, January 23, Bro. I. N. White states: "The Church (through the Saints) now owns about eleven hundred acres of land in and around 'Old Far West,' and seem contented to abide and make an effort to 'build up (one of) the old waste places of Zion,' by living pure and faithful lives."

Brn. White and W. W. Smith commenced a protracted effort at Kingston on the evening of the twenty-second; and would go from there to Richmond on the twenty-ninth to start the work there. We wonder what our brethren of the Church of Christ ("Whitmerites") are doing about Richmond? There was a little flock of the Reorganized Church some two or three miles away from Richmond a few years ago. We hope Brn. White and Smith will stir things up down there, now that the centerpiece of the Whitmer movement (the manuscript of the Book of Mormon) is removed from there.

In 1864 there was some difference of opinion between some of the elders as to whether the Saints should settle in Missouri or not. It was held by some that none should move into the State until a new command in the shape of "To your tents O, Israel," should be given, as it was the intention of the Lord to sweep that land with the besom of his wrath, until it should be depopulated and be a waste ready for a new set of inhabitants. Others, and we were among them, were of the opinion that the scourge of the Civil War, in the course of which contending armies fought each other to and fro over Jackson and adjacent counties, would be calculated to sufficiently change the character of the inhabitants by the passing on of the old and the incoming of the new, to warrant those who proposed to become permanent citizens and behave themselves as good men should in the belief that they would be permitted to gather into the "regions round about" and live and worship according to the requirements of their religion; provided those requirements did not involve them in disregarding the rights of others, or breaking the laws of the State.

We had occasion to give brethren advice in regard to moving into Missouri in 1864 and thereafter, and we always told them that if it was their intention to go there for the purpose of making a home, they were at liberty to do so; and if they would occupy in quietude and peace, minding their own business and letting the business of others alone, dealing honestly with all men, attending to their religious duties at home, and in public when opportunity offered, they could do so in safety and might plant their hearthstone, erect their rooftree and stay till Gabriel should blow his horn, and the end of all things human should come if they should live that long.

Considerable comment at times has been made on paragraph 6 of section 64, Doctrine and Covenants, and those who have been much opposed to the work have attempted to make capital out of it to condemn the work, especially to make light of the revelations to the Church given through the Seer:

Behold, it is said in my laws, or forbidden, to get in debt to thine enemies; but, behold, it is not said at any time, that the Lord should not take when he please, and pay as seemeth him good: wherefore, as ye are agents, and ye are on the Lord's errand; and whatever ye do according to the will of the Lord, is the Lord's business, and he hath set you to provide for his saints in these last days, that they may obtain an inheritance in the land of Zion, and, behold, I, the Lord, declare unto you, and my words are sure and shall not fail, that they shall obtain it; but all things must come to pass in their time; wherefore be not weary in well-doing, for ye are laying the foundation of a great work. And out of small things proceedeth that which is great.

Those who have so used this paragraph have constantly asserted that it sanctioned stealing, robbing, spoliation of the Gentiles, deception, and fraud—any way to get goods and moneys. Every one forgot to mention the peculiarly plain saving clause, "whatever ye do according to the will of the Lord, is the Lord's business." Or, if they have had sense enough to notice the clause, each of them has utterly ignored it and misconstrued the whole paragraph. To make it effective as against the inspiration of the Seer, or to support the charge that it authorized dishonest practices, those men who charge must show by other revelations in the Book of Covenants, the Book of Mormon, or the Bible, that it is the will of God that men should steal, and that he has so revealed it to be his will; for, the things which those men were to do as "agents" and "on the Lord's errand," were to be in accordance with the "will of the Lord," and not otherwise.

We have cited this paragraph in this connection to call attention to the abundance of teaching in each of the three books named forbidding theft, robbery, deceit, and fraud of every kind among his people and on the "promised land," for God will not suffer his people to pollute their inheritances.

No matter by whom practiced, nor for what purpose, double-dealings, deceit, lying, injuring others in property, reputation, or person, is not sanctioned nor commanded by the word of God as anciently or modernly revealed, and will not be permitted to prosper. And those who settle in the "regions round about" must live in pursuit of eternal happiness in the light of the declaration made by the Prophet Joseph Smith quoting the words of another. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous; "if there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things."

Time has verified to some extent the advice we gave forty years ago. Many have settled in the parts once occupied by the Saints as citizens. In most of the localities where they have moved in the population occupying at the time the Saints were driven out has largely changed, the old giving place to the younger, the restless and uneasy, half-lawless element has drifted out and on, and their places filled by the more conservative and law-abiding from the North and East. And in all cases where our people have behaved as lawful citizens should they are not disturbed, but are accounted as good citizens and neighbors. We make no inquiry as to the political preferences of those who seek advice in regard to moving into Missouri, or elsewhere; nor do we offer a word of advice in political affairs, other than is couched in the words "seek to put good men in office;" and to see to it that no intoxicating liquors are sold as beverages by votes of Latter Day Saints. Sober parentage results in sober posterity, and that is what the country everywhere is in need of. As no drunkard can inherit the kingdom of God, so no drunkard can be a representative of the angel's message, the latter-day work, and the people of the Saints of the most high God.

ANOTHER FRAUD.

We have been handed a few letters between brethren in regard to a young man who has been imposing on Saints by claiming membership in the Church, securing lodging and borrowing money as a brother and then disappearing. Here are the letters:

TO BRO. C. A. PARKIN, SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

Dear Brother: I write you to make inquiry concerning a stranger who came to my house about the 10th of October, claiming to be a brother in the Church and that his home was in San Francisco. He gave his name as A. J. Weis, and stated that he was a Jew by birth, had met with such opposition from his father that he was expelled from home penniless, or nearly so, though his father was well-to-do. He said he had intrusted his savings amounting to about one thousand dollars in his father's care for safe-keeping. This his father refused to give him unless he would "give up his insanity," meaning his faith in Christ and the restored gospel. According to his story, Bro. Fred Blair first interested him in the gospel, and he was later baptized by you. He stated his occupation was that of expert stenographer and typewriter in newspaper work; that he had a cousin in Cincinnati, Ohio, working for the Cincinnati Enquirer, and that through his help he expected to have work almost as soon as he could reach Cincinnati. He had come as far as St. Louis, Missouri, and there at the Saints' meeting he met Bro. L——, of Pittsburg, with whom I am acquainted, who being a railroad employee got him through to Pittsburg. From there he came down to Wheeling.

He stated that through the courtesy of a newspaper man in the city here he could get to Cincinnati on half-fare by going that night. I let him have the money (four dollars) with the promise from him to return it within (he thought) ten days. He gave me the address at which he said mail would reach him. After waiting more than a month I wrote him at the address given, but the letter had been opened by A. J. Weis (or H. J. Weis) at some other street number and then returned to me. Now I am anxious to know whether this is a worthy brother or whether he is an imposter. I do not care so much for the four dollars if he is worthy of help; but if he is going about playing upon the credulity of the Saints it is time that they be warned against him. He told such a straight story and seemed familiar with so many men in the Church and with its workings, besides professing such a strong faith in it, that I could not at the time doubt his statements. I still hope to hear that he is not an imposter, but he should have written me before this, even if he was not able to return the money. I shall be pleased to hear from you regarding this person, if you know him. Wishing you success in the work of the Master, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

O. J. TARY.

WHEELING, West Virginia, December 6, 1903.

REPLY.

Dear Brother: The party you refer to is unknown to me. I have heard of a similar person, but I do not know who he is. I never baptized him. He is a fraud.

If I were you I would write the HERALD and Ensign to warn the Saints of him. I think he must be the same party who has used my name before to people, passing himself as a Saint.

Trusting this will be sufficient to satisfy you and put you on your guard against frauds, I am, Yours in bonds,

CHAS. A. PARKIN.

SAN FRANCISCO, California, December 11, 1903.

TO BRO. F. B. BLAIR, LAMONI, IOWA.

Dear Brother: The inclosed letters will explain themselves. You will doubtless remember if in your missionary labors in California you interested a young man answering the description of this one. I am not afraid of again being imposed on by this man, but the manner of his greeting and his pathetic story of opposition from his father, together with his familiarity with the Church and leading men in it, make him such a one as the Saints at large should be warned against. You may give the letter, with any statement you may wish to make, to the editors of the HERALD. If they think the case one to which they should call attention through the HERALD they can do so.

Your brother in Christ,

O. J. TARY.

WHEELING, West Virginia, January 20, 1904.

Bro. Blair does not remember such a party as is described in the foregoing, and hence it is quite evident that Bro. Tary has been imposed upon by one of the many rascals and parasites who are abroad in the land.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

Bro. F. M. Sheehy reports things in his part of the Eastern Mission as moving along about as usual. "All things considered," he writes, "we have nothing to complain of that is serious."

Bro. U. W. Greene reports that the work in the western part of the Eastern Mission in the past quarter has been remarkable for the number of new openings. He says: "Brn. Kelley, Beckley, Schmidt, Scott, and Carlisle have been diligently at work in Western Ohio; Brn. Etzenhouser, Beatty, and Long in Southern Ohio; Brn. Williams, Durand, and Jeffers in West Virginia; Brn. Ebeling, Baldwin, Craig, Becker, and Porter in Western Pennsylvania. All are trying to honor the law which says: 'The Twelve and seventy administering as those prosecuting the work of preaching with the warning voice, . . . pushing their ministry into other fields until the world is warned.' The leadings of the Spirit are along these lines and we have so counseled." Bro. Greene then mentions the work of a number of other missionaries. He thinks the branches in the Kirtland District are taking on new spiritual life. The organization of the Temple Branch has resulted in good. Bro. Devore has taken about fourteen hundred visitors through the Temple during the year. Prospects are good for the organization of two new branches in the Pittsburg District. "We look over the past year," writes Bro. Greene, "with a degree of satisfaction. One year ago there were perplexing conditions confronting us. They have been fairly met, and in every instance the work has been left in better condition. To-day we approach the future with increased confidence in the work and its ultimate triumph." The missionaries have baptized fifty-one in the quarter, organized two Sunday-schools, and made thirty-five new openings.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Doctor Arthur D. Bevan, of Chicago, startles the members of his profession by making the following statement: "Drug treatment is useless in cases of pneumonia. The medical profession, so far as medicines are concerned, can be of no assistance in the fight against this disease. The sooner the profession will acknowledge this to the public and set to work to discover some specific to save pneumonia patients, the better for all concerned." Pneumonia has taken the place of consumption as the "captain of the men of death," and is a disease of the aged—of impaired vitality. "The resisting vitality of the patient is the sole thing that determines whether he is to live or not," says Doctor Bevan. With this reserve strength lies his safety and without it physicians avail nothing. "Fresh air, a good nurse, nourishment, and stimulants will assist the resisting powers of a patient."

Gradually the speed of man's racing machines has been increasing. A mile a minute speed has long ceased to be sensational, and a mile has been run in thirty-two seconds by a New York Central train. Automobile record smashing demands attention at present, records being broken weekly. The latest performance was that of W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., at Hotel Ormond, Florida, when he drove his machine on a straight course along the beach, a mile in thirty-nine seconds. And the end is not yet.

Elder I. N. White, Independence, Missouri, an apostle of the "Josephite" church of the kingdom of Mormondom writes that he is ready to [have] a round with Bro. Thomas Popplewell at Colfax, Iowa. Bro. Popplewell will no doubt accomodate him there or elsewhere. Both men are trained polemics and experienced in debate.—The Mountaineer.

No paper in the United States, of a general character, has kept closer in touch with the development of the automobile than has the Scientific American; hence it is no surprise to see that enterprising journal devoting one of its splendid special numbers to the automobile. The regular issue of the Scientific American for January 30 is an "Automobile number," and is well illustrated with half-tones depicting various types of automobiles.

The following from the Deseret News for January 9, 1904, appeared over the signature of J. M. Lauritzen, stake clerk: "Some of our Josephite brethren have been laboring in our midst, and not content with preaching what they claim to be the gospel, they challenged our elders to debate with them, and the challenge was finally accepted by Bishop A. C. Young and Elder I. J. Stewart. The debate commenced on Wednesday following our conference and lasted four nights. The debate had not proceeded far before it became apparent that our friend took more delight in tearing down than building up—in finding fault with our faith than in teaching us theirs; hence the debate was a failure as far as giving our people any new light upon the Josephite faith. During the last session Elder Andrew Jenson happened in, and when the discussion had been closed and the meeting dismissed the audience unanimously requested him to speak. He successfully maintained that the Church had never for a moment ceased to exist since its organization in 1830, and this being a fact the Reorganized Church had no foundation whatever on which to stand."

In this issue we reproduce a very sensible editorial from the Electrical Review, which contains information which should be known by the general public. Many of us have seen the frightened faces of street-car passengers when fuses have been blown or a circuit-breaker operate with a crack or explosion, and some of us may have seen more or less serious results follow the fright. If the riding public better understood the functions of fuses or circuit-breakers there would be less of fright or panic.

The first forty-two pages of the February number of the Open Court are devoted by the editor to an answer to the question, "Who wrote Shakespeare?" The article is profusely illustrated by facsimile reproductions of documentary evidences on which the arguments of the author are based. Near the close of the article are these words: "An identification of the poet Shakespeare with Lord Bacon is fantastical and without the slightest support, except so far as negative evidence is concerned. An identification of the poet with the owner of New Place is an assumption of doubtful value." Students of Shakespeare can not but find the article by Doctor Paul Carus interesting.

FOUR CLASSES OF MEN.

It is evident that God's definition of property rights is quite different to that of the world. It seems quite generally understood in the world that what a man gets by means lawful, or at least not too openly unlawful, is his to have and to hold. He may get it as he pleases and he may do with it as seems to him good,—all the way from hoarding to squandering.

God's definition is found in Psalm 24:1: "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof: the world, and they that dwell therein." Man, then, as taught in later revelations, is but a steward, even over that which he calls his own.

"For it is expedient that I, the Lord, should make every man accountable, as stewards over earthly blessings, which I have made and prepared for my creatures."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

It is well for us to get this fact firmly fixed in our minds. All that is God's, to be used as he directs. We may work and earn money and call it ours; but whence came the force that earned the money? We are the capital that God has invested, and our earnings are his increase to use as he pleases. He wills that we use what we need. Food and raiment and shelter and education he gives us, that our lives may be prolonged and our mental and physical strength sustained. We are supposed to use that prolonged life and sustained strength in advancing the cause of God. Anything more than is required to sustain life and mental and physical well-being of ourselves and those dependent on us should be placed, as God may direct, where it, too, will be of use in building up his cause. It is his, as he has said, and he does not believe in idle capital. Any one who has not yet accepted this definition of stewardship, as opposed to ownership, is not in condition to obey the financial law of God. A disregard of that definition has brought great misery into the world and has prevented that condition of equality wherein all labor honestly to increase the products of the world that all may have what they need of "the fullness thereof." So to-day we have at least four classes or conditions of men; all of whom are destined to come willingly or unwillingly under the regulations of the law. First we might notice the

DISHONESTLY SUCCESSFUL.

This, perhaps, is a contradiction of terms, because dishonest success, in the end, is failure. That is what we want to discover. What shall be the end of some who to-day are considered successful and happy? They will learn sometime that the widow's sigh and the tears of the orphan and the blood of humanity are a heavy debt.

There are and have been many men in this class,

We find them all the way from the Pharaoh of the oppression, driving the ill-fed Hebrews to labor for his enriching, down to the present Pharaohs who put up the price of oil or flour or meat and make a million men toil overtime in their service,—the Pharisee, devouring widow's houses, the dishonest merchant, the land agent lying about an acre lot to a hard-working old couple.

The law applies itself to each man in this class as follows: "As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not; so he that getteth riches, and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at the end shall be a fool."—Jeremiah 17: 11.

"He hath swallowed down riches, and he shall vomit them up again . . . that which he labored for shall he restore, . . . according to his substance shall the restitution be, and he shall not rejoice therein. Because he hath oppressed and hath forsaken the poor; because he hath violently taken away an house which he builded not."—Job 20: 15-19.

"Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth."—James 5: 1-5.

What a significant statement, "Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you." Idleness breeds rust. Their gold and silver, dishonestly gotten, has been hoarded in idleness and has rusted while God and the poor had need of it. Therefore it shall be a bitter witness at the end, eating their flesh like fire.

THE LAZY MAN.

There is another class of men who are not successful, not because of conscientious scruples but because of idleness. They are always anxious for a more even distribution of the world's goods; but it is not God's intention to compel any man to divide with them. Their case is disposed of very quickly in the law: "Thou shalt not be idle; for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12.

Sometimes a swarm of bees will tolerate a few drones in the hive for a time; but when winter draws near and economy becomes necessary, some chilly evening the workers stand in the entrance to the hive and the drones are shut out. The frost does the rest. So will it be in Zion. The food and shelter will be for the workers. The able-bodied idlers will be shut out in the cold and friendless world. For it is not meet they shall "eat the bread" or "wear the garments of the laborer."

THE UNFORTUNATE.

There is another class who are not successful because of misfortune; because of disability or adverse surroundings,—the poor.

Some must go without the necessities of life so long as the first named class accumulate so much more than they need and the second class consume and do not create. The burden falls on the weak and unfortunate. It is not God's purpose that this shall continue. The poor are near to his heart: "For the needy shall not always be forgotten: the expectation of the poor shall not perish forever."—Psalm 9: 18.

"If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8.

"And the storehouse shall be kept by the consecrations of the church, that widows and orphans shall be provided for, as also the poor."—Doctrine and Covenants 82: 2.

The first two classes named will be ruled out of Zion, under the law, as we have seen; so the care of the poor must of necessity devolve on the kindness of the fourth class,

THE HONESTLY SUCCESSFUL.

They must gather to Zion and they must remain in Zion with the intent to bear willingly this burden. God has clearly outlined his method for securing equality. It is by striking a balance between the fortunate and the unfortunate.

"It is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine; but it must needs be done in mine own way; and, behold, this is the way, that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my saints: that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low; for the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

"If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me, and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8.

Are the parties of the fourth class ready to take up their burden? Their best answer will be to open communication with the Bishop. We have heard it said that there are no rich in the Church. Perhaps not, when judged by worldly standards. Yet when we come to look at riches as God looks at them we are satisfied that there are many rich. Paul, "having food and raiment," was content therewith. It is evident from reading God's word that one is well-to-do who has that, which we have stipulated,—shelter, food, raiment, the means to nurture his mind, and enough to maintain himself in the business or trade that supports his family. If he has ten dollars that may be spared without injury to any of these rights, he is rich to the extent of that amount.

That amount is God's. He has told the man what to do with it. Now, after being told, if he still keeps it, does he not pass out of the fourth class into the first? Is he any more honestly wealthy? Is it not as bad to withhold from God what he wishes to use for the poor as it is to rob the poor in the first instance?

There is a great beauty in the law touching this class, if we will but see it. It is the same that applies to the minister. He is consecrated to God's service. True, a part of his time and thought must be devoted to himself, the needs of body and mind, and to his family. Even that is in the service, because he is sustaining his strength for future usefulness. All the balance of his time and thought are spent in active service. Now in the case of the man who can earn money, a portion of his money must be devoted to sustaining himself and family. Should not the balance be used in the active service of the Master? That would be a complete consecration.

So we see that no class of men are exempt from the law of God. To some it will bring honor; to others dishonor.

THE IROQUOIS THEATER FIRE.

"All things that we ordain Festival,
Turn from their office to black Funeral;
Our instruments to melancholy bells;
Our Wedding cheer to a sad Burial feast;
Our solemn Hymns to sullen Dirges change;
Our bridal flowers serve for a buried corse,
And all things change them to the contrary."

"Death is a fearful thing.

To die, and go we know not where."

—Shakespeare.

"Neither the sun nor Death can be looked at steadily."

—La Rochefoucauld.

But yet the people of Chicago have been forced to this terrible ordeal,—to look into faces or upon mutilated forms where death in its awful and unexpected onslaught seized six hundred victims, without warning or preparation, at the Iroquois Theater on the afternoon of December 30,—the thing indescribable that has happened to so many, many households and homes forever destroyed.

My first communication, I had thought, might be succeeded by something less somber or sad. But although HERALD readers have, no doubt, become more or less acquainted through the secular or daily papers concerning the awful disaster that has overtaken and that still enshrouds the city of Chicago with its pall and is still a common and every-day theme to be heard everywhere, we have thought that some notes taken from close range and personal observation might be of interest.

After considerable trouble and routine work we succeeded in obtaining from Cheif O'Neal a permit, and to-day we visited the interior ruin of the Iroquois Theater,—the ill-fated playhouse never to be forgotten by Chicago people. A thorough inspection as we saw it to-day, added to information from officers, guards, and police inspectors, and photographers, inspectors after evidence presumably for coroner's council at the city hall, we were forced to the conclusion that criminal, murderous recklessness and indifference as regards provision for the safety of the public, must be laid at the door not only of the managers of the house and of the play, but of Chicago city officers whose duty it is to see that the law is recognized and obeyed as regards fire prevention in all public buildings.

The doors or places of exit in cases of emergency or necessity in the upper balconies were closed and barred and unattended, and there scores and hundreds threw themselves in their frantic and fruitless efforts to escape. Places were shown us where scores of bodies were found piled together in every conceivable shape, some with clothing almost torn off, and in a number of cases entirely stripped in their awful and desperate fight with death. In places where bodies were found forms are still to be seen silhouetted against a wall, or over plush seats, where they were suffocated by smoke and gas. The stage and the charred and blackened appointments, the trappings and all are ruin and reminder of the awful scenes transacted and witnessed within the walls of that magnificent and murderous death-trap.

Officer Williams, father of Sr. Grace Williams, who was present and assisted in caring for the dead and the dying, detailed something of the awful scenes which he was forced to witness,—scenes which compelled many officers and fireman to retire from the place and the awful task of pulling apart the dead heaps of men, women, and children, lying, standing, sitting with arms outstretched and open eyes, staring, stark, and dead,—and who could only be located as they were stumbled over or disclosed by the dim light of lanterns and such meager and poor temporary illumination as succeeded the horrible darkness that fell upon the panic-stricken crowd soon after the fire had extinguished or cut off the lights of the house. Hands, fingers, and pieces of charred flesh have been among the gruesome finds in the ruins up to a comparatively recent date.

In the rooms on Dearborn Street which we were privileged to visit, there were and still are to be witnessed sights probably unlike anything that was ever seen and, it is to be hoped by myself at least, never will be again,—something, neither a junk-shop, fur or jewelry store, but a combination of all of these and more. A case or two full of opera glasses, sealskin coats and cloaks, watches, diamonds, rings, hats, shoes, boots, clothing, and packages and hand portables of every description. Relatives and friends are to be seen there, at any or all times, frequently recognizing garments or belongings of loved ones lost in the fire,—“a continual tragedy,” “a constant funeral,” as one of the attendant officers told me, and one to which I was a witness. Twenty-seven hundred pieces or articles had been proven and delivered, I was told, and fourteen hundred yet remained and seemed to fill the rooms.

And the lesson, and what of it? Is there any consolation left in it? Poor consolation indeed for such men as Mr. Hall, an attorney, whom I met at this place. He is the promoter and at the head of the memorial movement, and his entire family—wife, children, and the nurse—perished in the fire, and their bodies now lie in a cemetery at Albany, New York. And he is but one among many, many men, women, and children whose lives have been wrecked by the disaster.

Public sentiment has been awakened as perhaps it could never have been save for some such terrible lesson as the people of Chicago have been forced to furnish, and it will compel attention and will not only force provisions for safety hereafter for the people of Chicago who attend places of amusement, entertainment, or even churches for worship, or congregations of peoples of any sort, but in all the world, carelessness and criminal neglect to provide against danger of fire and panic will of necessity become largely or better insured against. So that, on the whole, or in the aggregate, there may be hoped that something of compensation may come.

The closing of all theaters and of nearly if not quite all places of entertainment or amusement for an indefinite time, as well as many churches and most of the halls, is an indication of the feeling and fear that have been excited.

Business of nearly all kinds has met with a serious check, and the Holy-day crowds that thronged the streets and crowded the stores to suffocation on the day of the disaster was in strong contrast to the diminished numbers to be seen to-day on the street or in the market.

And lastly comes the moral, if it has one to us as a church or a people. No Latter Day Saint, so far as known, has suffered immediately or by personal loss of relative or friend. Whether because of luck, good fortune, or the principle that does not permit theater attendance, it is, however, a fact.

There may be and certainly are worse things, sins or offenses against gospel law and propriety, than that of an attendance upon a stage representation; but I think it is entirely safe and true to say that frequent attendance upon these places of entertainment have a demoralizing effect upon those who claim to be followers of Christ. The evil is so intermingled with what might be harmless, that one not observant or who is disqualified as judge in the matter by such frequent attendance as to bring about an infatuation for the theater, would be unwilling to affirm that it would not be entirely safe to eschew the common playhouse altogether. On the other hand, if spiritual duties, church attendance, and gospel interest are forced to give way to an inordinate love of entertainment and amusement its devotees will likely at the judgment day, if not now, be found designated as "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." That this evil among others was referred to prophetically by Saint Paul, and is making times "perilous" in these "last days," not only in Chicago but everywhere, is undoubtedly true.

Were it even true that men and women in Chicago had been, or are, or were, lovers of God as much as they are and were "lovers of pleasure," there might have been, there would have been far less loss of life in the Iroquois Theater, if any at all. But the house was packed and jammed with lovers of the sensational if not questionable spectacle, and the "lovers of self" and "covetous" men who failed to protect those whose money filled their cash-box, who were away from places which required their watchcare, thinking and caring only for the receipts at the box-office, completed the dual force that Paul describes in his second letter to Timothy (3:4), and that brought to Chicago "peril," disaster, mourning, and death.

To eschew "pleasure" of a legitimate and safe sort, from a physical, moral, and spiritual point of view, is a thing to combat as unhealthful and against not only gospel privilege, but commandment (Doctrine and Covenants 119:6), and while we may not safely say, perhaps, that those who denounce theaters as prohibitive to any Latter Day Saint are "straining at a gnat," yet there is danger of our "swallowing a camel" in our ignorance of other laws which, if understood and obeyed as the governing rule of our life, would save us not only from physical, but from moral and spiritual hindrances to gospel growth and development.

A man or woman may be free from the guilt or offense of ever being seen in a theater, who may yet be a long way from heaven through neglect or failure to watch the avenues or manifold sources of "peril" to the soul's highest interests in other infractions of law written or unwritten in the letter of verbal commandment, and which not only retard the growth of the individual, but of the church of God as well.

To "live by every word that" has proceeded "forth from the mouth of God," is more than most of us have attained to, and when we do get to that point there will be other tests for us by way of enlightening us upon questions relating to our progress in the divine life, of which we are all, or most of us, either innocently or willfully ignorant.

WAS CHRIST BORN AT JERUSALEM?

The opponents to the Book of Mormon think they have positive evidence against the book when they find such statements in it: "He shall be born of Mary at Jerusalem."—Alma 5:2. The language quoted refers to Christ, and as the Bible says he was born in Bethlehem, the "city of David," they conclude at once that the Book of Mormon contradicts the Bible.

The difficulty lies simply in the fact they do not comprehend the thought of the writer, and yet there is no good reason why they should not; for if they would take enough of the language of the writer in consideration it would explain itself. The writer says: "Behold he shall be born of Mary at Jerusalem, which is the land of our forefathers." The Book of Mormon writers were thousands of miles from Jerusalem, and as that city was the place of the temple and seat of Jewish worship and the principal object of attraction in their fatherland, they referred to the land of their forefathers as Jerusalem. So whatever transpired in that whole land, to them, was at Jerusalem.

Bethlehem was, properly speaking, "at Jerusalem." It was not in Jerusalem, but at, close by. The Book of Mormon does not say Christ was born in, but at, Jerusalem. Bethlehem, or the "city of David," or Zion, was one of the forts or strongholds of Jerusalem, hence was at Jerusalem. (See 2 Samuel 5: 7-9.)

In speaking of the burial of Amaziah the writer says: "They brought him on horses: and he was buried at Jerusalem with his fathers in the city of David."—2 Kings 14:20. So Bible writers did not hesitate to say that the city of David was at Jerusalem.

Another objection urged is that the writer of the Book of Ether says that the brother of Jared prayed to the Lord and the Lord did not confound the language of him and his friends, while the Bible says the Lord did "confound the language of all the earth."—Genesis 11:9.

This language does not necessarily imply that the language of every man and woman and child was different and changed from the original, but that there became so many different languages that confusion reigned over all. The language of the whole earth may be said to be in confusion or "confounded" to-day, yet different nations may and do speak the same language.

If all must mean every one in all cases, let our opponents harmonize this language with the subsequent history of the Jews: "Then went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river Jordan."—Mark 1:4. If we must use this literally, then the Lord must have been baptized of John, but if "all" meant all the people, every man, woman, and child, what about the "Pharisees and lawyers" who "rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him"? (Luke 7:30.)

ONE FACT WORTH MORE THAN TEN THOUSAND THEORIES.

Of late I have been wondering, after reading certain articles in the HERALD, whether I am in the faith or not. After nearly twenty-four years in the Church and nearly fourteen years of active missionary work at home and abroad, I am surprised that the very things I in connection with my associates have been opposing throughout the Church are now advanced by Latter Day Saints as truths. I refer to the "personality of the Holy Ghost" and "Peter as successor in church presidency." Had some one told me that he had heard an elder in the Latter Day Saints Church declare that the Holy Ghost was a person, I would have contradicted him at once. Had some one told me that he had heard an elder of the Reorganization claim that "Peter was the successor to Jesus in the presidency of the church," I would have told him that he was mistaken, that the man was a representative of the Utah Church. I do not question the honesty of the brethren who hold to those theories; I simply express my very great surprise.

And with my surprise I begin to wonder if we are not about to enter an era like one in the early church, when they suffered worldly wisdom, manifest in theories, to draw them away from the facts of the gospel. I sincerely hope we may be preserved from such, and that the experiences of those in other ages may teach us the one important lesson of abiding in the facts of the gospel. It is a fact that the Holy Ghost can not be in two places at the same time—can not be omnipresent, if it is a person. No amount of theory or play upon words can destroy that fact. For years Latter Day Saints have proven that God the Father is not personally omnipresent, for being a person he could not be in two places at the same time. The same is true of the Son of God. We have shown that the Holy Ghost is omnipresent and therefore not a person, and that fact yet remains true. Those to my mind are the facts of scripture. The Bible, as also the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, clearly shows (as the advocates of the opposite theory will doubtless admit) that the Holy Ghost is the great power of God by which he moves and acts, not only in creating, but in sustaining and directing. By that means he hears our prayers and answers our supplications. Personally I have felt the presence of the Holy Ghost when another has been speaking in tongues and in prophecy, which would be an utter impossibility if the Holy Ghost were a person. Fact with me is worth more than ten thousand theories. Often when declaring the word of God when I have been sufficiently humble, the Holy Ghost has enlightened and enlivened my whole being and the congregation has at such times enjoyed a portion of the same blessing. Then shall I believe that the Holy Ghost is only in one place at a time? All the argument from imperfect human language imperfectly translated from other imperfect languages is not to be compared with personal knowledge. Arguments based on pronouns will not set aside the facts of God as we have realized them. Let us as Latter Day Saints tie to facts rather than to theory. The world has been deluged with theories and theories and theories, religious, scientific, politic, and domestic, much of which no doubt we will have to unlearn in the great millennium. We better accept nothing that can not be fully demonstrated as a fact. For years we as a church have advocated a doctrine in contradistinction to the Episcopal theory of the "trinity" and now we are called to oppose the other extreme based upon human arrangement of language and opinions of sectarian writers void of the inspiration of the Almighty.

From the very incipency of the Reorganization we have pointed to the law favoring lineal priesthood as against the Utah idea. Must we now accept the other theory? Theory will hardly convince us that the Lord would accept Peter as president of the church when "James the Lord's brother" was worthy of a place and did hold a place in the first presidency. We are hardly ready yet, that is, I am not, to concede the point to the Brighamites and say we were wrong in the matter of lineal priesthood. That law being a fact all theories opposed to it are wrong, whether applied now or in the days of James the Lord's brother.

I want to chronicle my solemn protest and my candid opposition to the theory of the "personality of the Holy Ghost" and also the theory of "Peter the successor in the church presidency." I shall keep my eye on these matters and you may hear from me again if some one else does not express my sentiments first.

J. W. PETERSON.

Among the books promised in the near future is that entitled "Tolstoy the Man," which Professor Steiner, of Grinnell College, has in preparation, and which will bear the imprint of the Outlook Company. Professor Steiner is an acknowledged authority on all Slav and Russian topics, and has known Tolstoy for seventeen years. Last year he spent several months at Yasnaya Polyana, where the great Russian lives, and other places closely identified with Tolstoy's personal history. He has lived and talked with Tolstoy's peasants; met the author personally; lived in the Tolstoy circle in Moscow; so that his grasp of the subject is unusually comprehensive. The book will contain much new information about what may be easily called the most interesting literary man of modern Europe. The illustrations in the book will be from original paintings by Pasternak, the brilliant Russian artist and personal friend of Tolstoy.

AN ATTACK UPON CHRISTIANITY IN THE NAME OF SCIENCE.

In Germany there is generally at least one leading problem to vex the church at large. The Babel-Bibel controversy has dropped out of public prominence. Haeckel's "Riddle of the Universe" and Harnack's "Essence of Christianity" have lost their vivid interest. The new problem is one presented in an official address delivered by Professor Ladenburg, of the University of Breslau. The Professor spoke in his capacity as president of the National Society of Naturalists at the seventy-fifth convention of that body, held in Cassel, and his arguments lead to the conclusion that the researches of natural science have undone all the glories of Christian theology. The address is published in the Berlin Reichsbote, and may be summarized as follows:

"Since the days of Columbus and Copernicus, of Kepler and Newton, no greater and more radical changes have been made in the thoughts of men than those effected by researches of the natural scientists in our own generation. The whole conception of creation, of its author, and of men, as developed from biblical premises, has been shown to be the fantastic work of imagination. The church has instinctively felt that the whole trend of scientific research is fatal to its philosophy, and for this reason is on principle opposed to independent investigation. The Roman Catholic Church burned at the stake a Giordano Bruno and imprisoned a Galileo for their scientific opinions, and the Protestant Church with its sterile dogmatism, has been equally hostile to the advance of science. Yet, notwithstanding all this, the natural sciences have step by step undermined the fundamental assumptions of theology. It is now almost an axiom that a miracle never did take place and never will take place. The supernatural is purely the product of a vivid imagination. Even if there is a God, he is not above his laws in nature. It is high time that we radically changed the whole character of modern culture and education, based as they are on biblical premises. The study of the dead languages and of a subjective philosophy must give way to an investigation of the living truths of nature. Popular education must be established on the basis of knowledge of the laws of nature. Modern biology, and especially the Darwinian theory, have entirely changed the old views that man is the center of creation, and that all things exist only for him. It is now even possible to trace back men and animals to a common ancestor, and it is accordingly just as rational to claim immortality for the latter as for the former. How ridiculous that the soul of a genius, who in his later years had entered upon his second childhood and whose soul was accordingly not worth preserving, should be regarded as immortal! And mankind can only progress by setting aside all ideas of the supernatural. The charge is frequently made against the natural sciences that they have robbed men of their ideals, and in the place of immortality and the hope of heaven, given only factories and the social evils. This charge is false; for just in proportion as men give up faith in the beyond will they labor for the good things of this earth. It is this aspect of things that awakens the feeling of fraternal love and coöperation among men, as is seen by the phenomenal blessings that resulted from the French Revolution. The keynote of modern thought must be the realization of the highest good that the earth affords."

This address has been discussed by all the leading periodicals of Germany. The convention that listened to it greeted it with vigorous applause, and the conservative papers can not suppress their amazement that in such a representative gathering there was not found one man who had the courage to protest in the name of Christianity against these radical utterances. The first reply of note has been published by Doctor A. Greve, of Sundershausen, in a special pamphlet. He argues (1) that what Ladenburg has put forward is nothing new, but in substance has been taught already by Haeckel and other Darwinians and materialists, and that the statements are merely words, with no proof back of them; (2) that the propositions are exceedingly superficial, and throughout demonstrate that the speaker is ignorant of leading theological and philosophical problems; (3) that the glorification of the Revolution of 1789 shows that these sentiments are the outcome of a blind hostility to Christianity and not the result of close and exact scholarly investigation.

The Leipzig Kirchenzeitung draws attention to the antecedents of this champion of radicalism. Ladenburg was born a Jew, and as such became a university professor in Kiel, and then in Breslau; but only a few years ago came to Leipzig for the special purpose of becoming a convert to Christianity and joining the Reformed Church. This journal says further:

"Such an attack is only to be compared in kind with those that the Apostle Paul was compelled to meet when former Jews considered it their privilege to utter their contemptuous criticisms of all that is cardinal truth in Christianity. Even in the circles of the natural scientists this attack has aroused a sharp protest. At the forty-seventh convention of the National Philological Association, held in Halle, Professor Doctor Cauer declared that such views only showed how superficially work is done by many representatives of the natural sciences, and that a book like Haeckel's 'Riddle of the Universe' is a childish production even from the standpoint of purely secular research."—Literary Digest, December 5, 1903.

APPLIED SCIENCE AND SOCIAL CONTROL.

(Michael E. Sadler, M. A., in St. George, the organ of the English Ruskin Societies, slightly abridged.)

If we look up from our own special work, whatever that may be, and watch what is now going forward on a great scale in the chief countries of the Western World, we can hardly fail to discern three striking facts which need to be taken into account in any forecast of the future.

The first fact is the immense advance which has been made by applied science. We feel the same impressive advance of applied science in Germany. There, even more than here, an older order of controlling ideas stands in abrupt contrast to the new. Before our eyes there take place those changes in social structure which are the inevitable result of developments in applied science. The aristocracy of land has to surrender much of its former influence to the aristocracy of manufacture and of trade. But the advance of applied science reveals itself to our minds with far more striking force in the United States of America than in any part of the Old World. The air seems to thrill with electric energy. The very children in the schools grow up with a new conception of power and of the possibilities of its application to swift movement and quick production. As you stand on the deck of one of those steam water-beetles which ply across the Hudson River, with the salt air on your lips and the quick pulse of New York in your blood, you see on either hand the outward and visible signs of the new scientific order of things. Nearly a thousand miles to the west you find yourself in the vortex of Chicago, and what Chicago meant to an American who had time to brood over its masterful and half-malign significance is well said in a novel named "The Pit." As far again from Chicago to the South, astride of the great railway along which the new industrial ideas are pouring into the once supine and stagnant regions of the old "regime," you find the city of Atlanta, whirring with energy, and a radiating center of potent life. Far to the northwest, with the magical aid of applied science, Canada is rising in the flush of confident strength to a great career of industrial activity and commercial power. This, then, is the first great fact of our time—the victorious advance of applied science.

Secondly, even while we watch and try to measure the meaning of this wonderful change, are we not conscious of an undertone—of a deepening conviction that more must be done, and done on a more comprehensive scale than hitherto, for social reform? For the mass of men there is, let us be thankful for it, greater material comfort than heretofore. But is there not too, even as an outcome of that greater comfort and of the new hopes and of the new sense of capacity which have at last had a chance to grow, an instinctive sense that more could be done, and should be done, to apply the new resources of science to the remodeling of some of the conditions alike of urban and of village life? That surely is the note which, as we listen, we hear in ever louder tones through the hubbub of things. Can not applied science, which has done so much for commerce and industry, help us to solve some of the problems of home-making, of physical training, of leisure, of childhood? Men are beginning to ask whether they can not, with the help of applied science, secure happier conditions for their work and realize some civic ideals hitherto beyond their reach. "There is a growing sense of individuality, but at the same time of the need for stern, though loving, discipline in the treatment of the industrially incompetent and morally unfit.

Thirdly, we feel on our minds the pressure of another necessity—the need for strict and foreseeing economy in the use of our public resources if we are to find the means for the defense and improvement of our national and imperial life.

From these three things—the advance of applied science, the deepening sense of the urgency of social reform, and the conviction that the national purse is very far indeed from being bottomless—there seems likely to spring a resultant demand for the timely, skillful, and therefore economical employment of scientific measures for social betterment. May we not look for this demand in three chief directions—(1) slum reform for the saving of the children; (2) factory reform, for the transplanting of industrial communities into surroundings where home life can be sweeter, and leisure be healthier, and social unity become more practicable because attempted with its diverse necessary elements on a smaller scale; and (3) village reform, for the quickening of intellectual interests and of social independence in our rural life, with a view to a revival, under the new conditions, of agriculture and country pursuits.

So great and far-reaching are the changes of which I have spoken that their influence can be traced even in that very desire for self-realization which lies behind so much of the deeper feeling of our time.

Men feel instinctively that, though character and individuality never had such power as they may have to-day, the old kind of individualism is out of date. Under the new conditions individuality must express itself in and through coöperation. It must have numbers behind it. It must act in concert. It must be, so to speak, at the head of a regiment of like-thinking people. And in submitting itself to coöperation, it learns. It finds that the problem was deeper and more complex than at first appeared. It loses its life in corporate effort, and finds that in losing it has gained it anew. This is the heart of individual devotion and self-sacrifice which animates collective effort and finds therein the fullest self-realization. Thus what at first sight seemed a contradiction, is not really so. There is a deepening sense of individuality, and yet a greater disposition to move in masses. The mass movement is necessary in order to get the momentum which individual leadership may use. Is not this the key to some of the political tendencies of our time? People seem to long for strong men with executive power. This state of mind is noticeable in Europe, but far more evident in the United States, where there is less of that thick-set tradition and usage which in older countries hide for a time what is forming under the surface.

The drift of things in American municipal organization is to give, for a fixed period, extraordinary power to a popularly elected mayor. We know how much his magnetic personality and strenuous devotion to public duty have endeared President Roosevelt to millions of his fellow citizens. There are no signs, I think, of any lessening in men's minds of the care for liberty and of the opportunity for independent choice in the grave business of life. But there is a greater readiness to look below the form of government to the reality and substance of it, and to try experiments in new kinds of effective democracy. As one studies what is now being done and felt in some of the great American cities, one is led to conjecture that perhaps one form of democratic government in the future may be autocracy on short tenure—autocracy based on popular election, or on some not less effective though informal kind of popular choice, and checked by the constant influence of public opinion, operating through the press, through discussion, or through subtle but potent changes in the political atmosphere.—World Wide, December 5, 1903.

THE FUNCTION OF THE FUSE ON AN ELECTRIC CAR.

One sees occasionally in the daily press an account of the blowing of the fuse on an electric car. This is described as a more or less serious accident to the car which caused, or very nearly caused a panic among the passengers. Now, the greatest danger to the passengers lies in the possibility of some unexpected happening causing a panic. It is therefore most desirable that every one should know what may be expected to happen occasionally on a car, and that all should realize that the happening is not necessarily an indication of danger.

If a steam engine is overloaded it will stop and refuse to work, although the full pressure of steam may remain upon the piston, and not cause any damage. On the other hand, a motor when overloaded tries its best to do the work thrown upon it. If it can not run at full speed it will run at whatever speed it can. As the speed decreases the current through the motor increases and the motor adjusts itself to that speed at which the turning effort is sufficient to cause rotation and do the work. If the effort demanded of the motor is so great that the current which passes through it when standing still is not sufficient to cause rotation, the motor will, of course, not turn, but the current will continue to flow unless interrupted by a suitable mechanism.

The current which will flow through a motor when it is standing still is in almost all cases far in excess of that which the motor is designed to carry; and, indeed, in a well-designed motor a current dangerous for the motor will be reached before the motor has been stalled. The effect of this heavy current on the motor, if allowed to continue, is to heat the windings to a dangerous degree and destroy the insulation, possibly setting it on fire; and it is to prevent this occurrence, whether due to careless handling of the car or to unexpected causes, that the fuses are used. A fuse is simply a short wire of such size that it will be melted by a current which, if allowed to flow through the motor for any time, will damage it. When a fuse blows, then, it simply means that one of the safety devices on the car has operated to prevent damage to the motor. The melting of the fuse opens the circuit and cuts off the current from the motor. To protect the car the fuse is enclosed in a fire-proof box.

There is another device for accomplishing this purpose, which is known as the circuit-breaker. This is a switch controlled by an electro-magnet, which opens whenever the current reaches a certain dangerous value. This mechanism is now generally installed upon electric cars in addition to the fuse. It is often placed on the roof of the platform over the motor-man's head, where it is easily reached and it is set to operate at a higher current value than the fuse, because the circuit-breaker acts almost instantaneously, while it takes a little time for the fuse to be melted. Now, a motor can stand for a second or two a current which would destroy it if applied for a longer period. The circuit breaker, then, takes care of heavy overloads and the fuse protects the motor against those smaller currents which are dangerous if applied for a considerable time.

When a fuse blows there is generally a volatilization of the metal of the fuse and a slight explosion. These explosions usually cause a report and some smoke. When the circuit-breaker is opened it draws an electric arc in breaking the circuit, and as in this arc, a considerable amount of energy is dissipated in heating the air, there may be here also something of an explosion; but in neither case is there any danger to the passengers when the apparatus is properly installed. The fuse and the circuit-breaker are safety devices, the operation of which indicates, not that there is danger to those on the car, but that danger to the motors has been averted.—Electrical Review, October 31, 1903.

THE FIRST STRUGGLE OF THE CLIFF-DWELLERS.

What boy's imagination is not fired by tales of the Cliff-dwellers, that mysterious people who appeared, ages ago, in countless numbers, in the now arid Southwest, and established themselves there, building immense dwellings of a style that causes them even now to be termed palaces, constructed miles upon miles of irrigating ditches, and then vanished, leaving not a sign to show how or where or when they went?

Scientific men who have studied the ruins of their houses tell us that they had under cultivation in the Southwest enough of the splendidly rich soil to support a population of thirty millions, which is more than one third of the present population of the United States to-day. They had an architecture and an art, had domestic animals, and, altogether, were if anything, in advance of even the Aztecs, in point of civilization. Yet they were blotted out of existence, no man can say how, though many have ventured guesses.

The best explanation, which may be accepted until a better one is offered, is that they were driven away by the Apache Indians, who descended upon them and harrassed them day and night, year after year, until they gave up the fight and retreated to the far South. Probably it was not by prowess that their foes triumphed, but by cunning. The entire Southwest has always been a thirsty land in which no farmers could live except by the aid of irrigation. One foe could ruin a ditch which it would take a hundred men to repair. Do this at a critical moment for the crops, and hunger and thirst would compel the husbandmen to retreat.

Recently, the officers of the United States Geological Survey have had reason to believe that they have found the place where this struggle with relentless foes was begun. Following the lines of the old canals, far away in Southwestern Colorado, and surveying for sites for the reservoir system recently adopted by Uncle Sam, these officers came upon a group of ruins different from any found before. While all the others are built high up on the sides of almost inaccessible cliffs, reached only by steps cut in the sandstone walls, these were built out in the open. Yet they were undoubtedly the work of the same hands.

There was a reason for this difference. In the region of the real cliff-dwellings, a hundred miles to the south, the whole country consists of soft rock, covered by a layer of hard sandstone. The canyons cut deeply down through both, and the cliff-dwellings are built in caves hollowed out in the softer rock, and roofed by the harder sandstone. But in the newly found region—Ruin Canyon, as it has been fitly named—this hard sandstone is lacking, so that any cave dug in the hillside would sooner or later fall in upon itself. The Dwellers were therefore compelled to give up their usual style of construction and erect their homes upon the level.

Once established there, the extreme fertility of the soil must have led them to fortify themselves when necessity for defense arose and to try to remain. Their fortresses, though flimsy enough in these days of gunpowder, were nevertheless formidable against foes armed only with bows and arrows, and could hardly have been carried by assault. Yet, if the Dwellers contented themselves with resistance merely, the result was of course inevitable. No race can afford to shut itself up behind stone walls, no matter how strong, and permit its crops to be destroyed by its enemies. Starvation and thirst will aid the attacking forces, and these are enemies that can not long be resisted.

That the end, here as elsewhere, probably came by flight, and not by destruction, is rendered probable by the condition of the ruins. The buildings are badly damaged, and the entire area around them is literally sowed with arrow-heads. . . .

Here, it is believed, the struggle began, which ended only with the destruction of the Cliff-dwellers as a nation. This is the only spot where dwellings are found in the open, arguing an unusual sense of security at the time they were built. It is the most northerly settlement yet discovered, and therefore the most likely to be the first attacked by a foe from the north.—Crittendon Marriott in Young People's Weekly.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Worth While.

'Tis easy enough to be pleasant,
When life flows along like a song;
But the man worth while is the one who will smile
When everything goes dead wrong.
For the test of the heart is trouble,
And it always comes with the years,
And the smile that is worth the praise of earth
Is the smile that comes through tears.

It is easy enough to be prudent,
When nothing tempts you to stray;
When without or within no voice of sin
Is luring your soul away.
But it's only a negative virtue
Until it is tried by fire,
And the life that is worth the honor of earth
Is the one that resists desire.

By the cynic, the sad, the fallen,
Who had no strength for the strife
The world's highway is encumbered to-day
That make up the item of life.
But the virtue that conquers passion
And the sorrow that hides in a smile,
It is these that are worth the homage of earth
For we find them once in a while.

Example Better Than Precept.

I wonder if all parents realize the great responsibility there is resting upon them in setting a good example before their children? If father and mother do right there is little fear of their children going very far in the wrong way. But without this good example they may expect opposite results, and who could they blame but themselves?

Children are very observing and watch their parents more closely than others, and what they see them do they feel justified in doing, and it is useless to talk to them without we practice what we preach. A child can not respect a parent if he finds him unworthy, any more than he can other men and women. How often we hear young men while speaking of their parents call them the "old man" and the "old woman"! Why is this? It is because they feel no respect for them. When I hear a young man speak in this way I know what has been the example set before him.

I remember when a child my mother said to me, "What you hear me say you may say," and one day I heard her say a word I knew she would not allow her children to say—not a very bad word but an idle word. I thought, Now I can say it, too, for she told me I might say what I heard her say. So one day while at play something bothered me and I said the same word, and she reproved me for it, and I said, Well, I heard you say it, and you told me I might say what I heard you say. I shall never forget the look that dear mother gave me, and she said, "I did very wrong and will try never to say the naughty word again," and I never heard her.

The Bible says to train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it. They may forget sometimes in their youth, but will come back to their early training.

Do not quarrel or dispute with each other. If it must be, let it be when they are not near. Do not talk about or backbite your neighbors or in other ways gossip before them, for how can you chide them if you hear them do the same? I believe that most gossipers learn this terrible habit at home.

PAULINA RUBY.

Dear Home Column: I have thought many times that I would write a few lines, but it seems a difficult matter. Although we do not know each other personally, we have all the same love and interest at heart and the same story to tell of God's great mercy and goodness. While I write this I feel that our heavenly Father has blessed me in many ways. We live away from a branch and seldom see the Saints, myself and husband being the only Saints in this place, and sometimes we get discouraged. We have had much good preaching, but the people do not seem to care to hear.

My sister died November 11, of typhoid fever. She was sick eight weeks. It seems so sad to give up one so young (only twenty-three years) and she will be missed so much! There is much trouble in this world.

I will write a dream I had six weeks before my sister's death: I dreamed I was sick and one of our neighbors came in and told me to look at the sun. I looked. The sun was very bright and a rod about three feet long extended from the sun with a large ball on the end. The ball turned at full speed and each turn formed a photo frame which grew larger each time until it formed a life size picture of a young girl dressed in white with golden hair combed as my sister always wore hers. She died six weeks after and I was too sick to attend the funeral. I think my dream was a warning to me.

May we all receive the great blessing that is at the end of the race for those who love God and keep his commandments.

Your sister,

Notice.

To those who have so kindly offered us the use of their copies of "Footsteps of Jesus," we wish to say that one of our little friends, Bertha Anderson, of Lamoni, has furnished us with one copy and Bro. J. L. Terry, of Millersburg, Illinois, with another. Two copies are all we need; but we very sincerely thank all who have tendered us theirs.

The "Footsteps of Jesus" being out of print, it is our intention to reproduce it in connection with "The Gospel Story" which was run through the Hope some two years ago. This volume will be number five of the Birth Offering Series and we will have more to say to the mothers about it soon.

Work in the Sunny South.

Our last stop for work in the South was at the Lone Star school near Harp, Alabama. We were carefully provided for by our faithful and willing Bro. and Sr. McPherson during our stay there. It has so often been said, "There is no place like home," and it is true. But some have the happy faculty of making their homes real "homes" to the missionary, so much so that we are loath to leave when the time for parting comes. Our stay there was short, but we learned to love them for their kindness and earnestness and hope that time and distance may not prevent our being able to meet with them again at some time not too far in the future.

This is the home school of our Bro. E. N. McCall, superintendent of the Alabama District, who, notwithstanding he had "married him a wife" since I parted with him only a few weeks before, was trying to make the school all that it could be made. He is one of the few that are always ready to make use of all that is offered that is practical. And while there a few changes in the workings of the school were made for its improvement, others to be made later on. We regret that Bro. McCall will leave the State soon and necessitate a change in the officers. He is needed in the school and in the district. But some one will be found to fill his place and the work will move on. We wish Bro. Emmett and his "fair young bride" a long, peaceful, useful, and prosperous life. They were soon to leave for Williford, Arkansas, where they expect to make their home.

We were with the school Saturday evening and Sunday, and on Monday took train again enroute for the North, thus closing a tour of nearly six weeks with the three districts in the South.

WHAT DID WE ACCOMPLISH?

Just what we may have been able to accomplish in the districts of the South we shall probably never know, for it is impossible always to judge accurately from outward appearances. Appearances will deceive us either way, for at times we have thought we had succeeded in working up a splendid interest and considerable enthusiasm for the work and it seemed all would go on with renewed determination to make the best of all they had, but as soon as we were gone all would lapse into a state of listlessness, little if any better than they were before. While on the other hand we have seen them less expressive about their appreciation and less demonstrative about their desires and determinations, and where it might seem, almost, that only a small amount of interest was being taken, yet, when left to themselves, they seemed determined to make use of every idea or suggestion that they had received as fast as they could reach them. And they are the ones that make the substantial progress in their work, not because they did not make any particular demonstration of interest or show of appreciation, but because they made use of what they were given.

is a very common remark heard by the faint-hearted or the half-hearted worker. In fact that thought does more mischief than any other one thing I know of. With many it is honest conviction and with others it is only a “scapegoat.” But we are always best pleased when opportunity is afforded to give actually a practical demonstration of the working of the various changes we recommend. This frequently occurs and then it is that the most good is done. The skeptical are convinced and the “scapegoats” removed.

In the Alabama District they have a district association running very well and the work of the schools shows the effects of its influence. Their present superintendent, Bro. E. N. McCall, has removed from the district, but the assistant superintendent, Sr. Bertha Harper, is abundantly able to carry the work along. Not only is she able to do so, but willing to put forth any necessary effort for good.

The Florida District has no district organization, and prior to our visit they had no schools. They have since organized two schools and possibly a third one. We hope to see them continue their schools well for a while and then form a district association. And though they have many odds to contend with, they may be able to accomplish much of good for the cause.

The Mobile District has an association presided over by Bro. F. P. Scarecliff. They have some good schools and some that are weak, but taking all in all they are doing some good. In this district we often found some imprints of the hands of Bro. C. I. Carpenter who worked several years in this section. He is held in good esteem there and whatever he said was to them all right. I only wish for their sakes that he could have remained with them and had his entire time or as much thereof as was necessary for the building up of the work of the young there, for with the young lies the hope of the South.

We went south as a matter of duty, not knowing whether we could accomplish anything. It seems impossible to judge from reports in all cases. In sections where we actually thought of not going, there we did our best work. We have learned that we do not know. We follow the dictations of the director of all things where He sees fit to guide, and otherwise as wisdom or circumstances may direct. At times we are satisfied and at other times we are much disappointed. There is a tremendous work yet to be done in the South, and they are making some progress. But the conditions are not what we would like them to be or what they would like to see them. But we hope that all influences for good will move together in time to shape the conditions there as we would like to see them. We have many noble Saints there, both young and old, and we would like to see them, as all others, come fully up to the plane God expects us to occupy. We would like to see them enjoying all the blessings intended for those that live up to the full light of the gospel. We would delight to see the younger element, those whose lives of usefulness are before them yet, taking hold with a determination to bless both themselves and others by improving themselves and others, and entering upon an uninterrupted life of usefulness. We wish you all well and trust you will continue the good work well begun. We hope to visit you soon again, but till then, “God be with you.”

Variety Needed.

“All sunshine makes a desert,” it has been said. This leads us to the thought that a change, a variety, is necessary to our well-being, even though the change in itself may possibly be not a pleasing one. Anything long continued becomes monotonous and tiresome, no matter how pleasing it was at the first. When it has been a long time cloudy, we long to see the sunshine, but when we have been in the scorching rays of the sun for a long time, we are delighted to see a cloud appear and cut off the intensity of the rays. We are always pleased with variety.

If the order or kind of exercises in our church or Sunday-school, Religio, or other meetings, were more varied, if something different were frequently had, the life of the work would be increased and the interest in it would grow more intense, and the number of interested and earnest workers would increase. There would be fewer dropping out as they are constantly doing, and the work would seem less irksome to many. We are very prone to drift into a set form for all our work. The end of the year finds us doing exactly what we started the year with. We sing the same old songs, we pray the same prayer, and we preach the same sermons. We bear the same testimony and in the same way. And to some extent the monotony of the case is disgusting and discouraging to both self and others.

Seek a variety. A certain Chicago merchant, referring to a change they had just made in the name of a brand of meat, said, “The new is better than the old if it's only just as good.” It is better in that it possesses the element of freshness, of variety.

Seek to add variety to your program of work, and it will help to solve some of the problems of lost interest, lost attendance, discouraged and tired workers, and will add a degree of pleasantness, progress, and success to your efforts.

Letter Department.

HEBER CITY, Utah, January 23, 1904.

Editors Herald: I arrived in this place on the 19th inst., but thus far have been unable to do much, partly because of stormy and unfavorable weather, and partly because no house for meetings has been obtainable, until Bishop Rashband will grant me the use of the meeting-house for next Monday evening. In this field we must be thankful for small favors, as we seldom can obtain a public building for a series of meetings. I find a few friends to the cause in this city, but as a whole the outlook for an ingathering in this field is not promising.

Last fall Bro. Swenson and the writer made a trip further south in the State, through Sanpete and Sevier Counties. We preached at Thistle, Clinton, Mount Pleasant, Manti, Richfield, Elsinore, Joseph City, Monroe, Glenwood, and Annabella. At most places we had good audiences and met with fair treatment. We were especially well received by Andrew and Thomas Ross at Joseph City, who are relatives of Bro. R. K. Ross, of Mound City, Missouri. They told us that a few years ago when Bro. R. K. was here on a visit an agreement was made that they would treat each other's missionaries right, and I am glad to report, that we found Andrew and Thomas with their families ready to fulfill their part of the contract. I wish that all our people who have opportunities would seek to bring about such friendship, as it would materially help the work here. At Elsinore the missionary always finds a home and resting-place with Bro. Lorensen and family, together with substantial help in various ways. The same is true at the home of Bro. Joseph J. Jensen at Richfield, where also Bro. M. Ross and others make the elders feel at home.

At the last named place we held a four night discussion with Bishop A. G. Young and Elder I. J. Stewart, but as this has been reported, I will only add that the conflict tended to confirm me in the safety of our position. I am glad to say that upon this tour we met with fairer treatment and had less trouble in obtaining houses to preach in than has been my experience in former years. I think the leading men are coming to the conclusion that the Reorganization is not of so little importance that the people can be constantly kept in the dark in regard to its work and claims, but that they are beginning to see that the issue must be met sooner or later.

I see that Senator Smoot in his reply to charges preferred against him asserts that polygamy is no longer taught by any of his church authorities. This sounds a little amusing to us who constantly meet with defenders of that system, and we have several times lately heard it advocated from the pulpit as a most holy and elevating doctrine. Bishop A. G. Young, speaking in the stake conference at Richfield a short time since, spoke of polygamy as only suppressed for the present, and assured the people that the way would soon be open for its unhindered practice again. In the discussion he defended both polygamy, blood atonement, and the Adam-god doctrine.

Trusting in the ultimate triumph of truth and righteousness,
I am,
Yours in bonds,

H. N. HANSEN.

ASHLAND, Nebraska, January 26, 1904.

Editors Herald: I am comforted through the angel's message at times amid the cares of life and the deprivations of this world's goods. It seems the people of God in all ages have had their trials and I suppose the words "we must" through "much tribulation" enter into the kingdom of God, are as true now as they were when written.

The HERALD is a very welcome visitor with me. Many hours have I perused its pages, long hours by lamplight, and I have given it to others that are not of the faith to read, and I often wonder why there are not more skeptics when they hear so many different gospels preached and not any two alike. If they would only stop to think that one is possibly true, and that not all can be true. I often ask the question of people, if our latter-day prophet could have controlled the elements causing the former and latter rains in Palestine which are coming, do they not think that he will do to depend on? And I also refer them to many other things which are being literally fulfilled. May the Lord enlighten their minds, is my constant prayer.

CLAYTON BARGAR.

WATERLOO, Iowa, January 23, 1904.

Editors Herald: The Waterloo Branch is still trying to do all it can with Sunday-school, Religio, and prayer-meetings, and once in a while preaching, Bro. McKiernan having been here lately, but now in Oelwein. Why did not elder J. F. Mintun call on some of us while he was waiting six and one half hours here? He would have found Bro. and Sr. Goodrich across the street from the Great Western Depot on the east side, at 215 East Sixth Street. Tell him to call next time. Wishing you success, I am,

W. W. BEAL.

WILDERSVILLE, Tennessee.

Dear Herald: How many times have I been comforted and encouraged to press on by reading your pages. I have many trials, but God is my comfort and he helps me, and my heart is filled with loving trust in him. Saints, pray for me that I may have strength to be found always doing my part without murmuring or complaining.

SARAH E. RUSH.

SKIDMORE, Missouri, January 23, 1904.

Editors Herald: I came to this field the 11th day of last September, and can say my experience thus far in old Nodaway District has been a blessing. The Saints have been good and kind to me, and above all, the Lord has been near and that to bless. Bro. Vaughn and I labored together until near Christmas when we had to separate because of the demand for labor in this field.

I have just closed one of the best little meetings I ever held at Bilby's headquarters. He is the largest ranchman in the world.

I had good crowds and fine interest and never enjoyed such light and power in all my preaching. If I ever was blessed with the power of reason it was at this place. The Bilbys have attended, missing but two nights. More than once have I seen the Lord fill their poor hungering souls with light and power. How wonderful it was! How could we refrain from singing, "Hosanna to the Lord in the highest"?

Bro. Will Roach and family live near here, and the meetings did their souls good. We were all blessed together.

I preached about five weeks here, but had to close last Wednesday night because of dreadful weather and measles. I will start meeting again just as soon as the measles are stopped and people are able to go to church. Many are anxious for it to go right ahead and I may preach at Quipman, on Ed Bilby's place, next week.

This is the first preaching that was ever done in this part, which is surely a ripe field. May God still bless the honest ones in this part, and may they bless his name in time to come.

With a desire for Zion's triumph, I am

SCRANTON, Pennsylvania, January 25, 1904.

Editors Herald: I came to this place the latter part of last week. We have a small branch here in charge of Elder Tallie T. Jones. They hold regular meetings in a hall centrally located. Brn. David and George Morris have lately come here from Wales and will add two more families to the little band. Bro. David Morris has been elected as priest of the branch and Bro. William F. Hawkins teacher. If they had a deacon, the branch organization would be complete. It has been annexed to the Philadelphia District and we hope to see it grow until it becomes a large branch. They were to have a missionary, but for some reason there was none sent.

Brethren who have labored here know something of the peculiar conditions prevailing. The Devil has succeeded in capturing some of those "called to be Saints" through the curse of liquor. The liquor traffic is one of the greatest enemies of righteousness of our times. I believe the Church while dealing patiently and considerately with the liquor evil should always maintain a firm aversion to it. "Be not addicted to strong drink in any form" is the watchword for the faithful. Drunkards and adulterers should be given plainly to understand that they must either forsake their sin or get out of the Church. In many instances the Church law has been dishonored by too much forbearance on the part of those whose duty it is to "see that my law is kept." In other words we are inclined to be too slow and easy with transgressors. The branch teacher, whoever he may be, is one of the important officers in the Church. He should live right himself, keep his eyes open and mouth shut as much as possible, and "see that there is no iniquity in the Church" by promptly prosecuting those guilty of wrong-doing.

Our district conference is to meet February 13 at Philadelphia, and we hope and trust it will be a profitable one. Philadelphia Saints feel that they have been somewhat slighted by the general church officers, and we hope we may be favored there with their presence in the near future. I never have met better Saints anywhere than those at Philadelphia, and I am glad that my association with them has only endeared them more and more to me. Truly I have found "brotherly love" there.

The Church work in all its departments is alive, and we hope it may be kept alive by the untiring efforts and energy of those who have the interests of the cause at heart. Our folks can not say too much in praise of our incomparable Sunday-school Quarterlies. They can not be beat. I believe the Quarterly is one of the most potential factors at work at this time in educating our people in the practical features of our religion.

May the Lord bless all his people and the honest in heart is my prayer.

Editors Herald: Last Sunday (the 24th inst.) when we started for the church the thermometer indicated ten degrees below zero and still kept going down till it arrived at fifteen degrees below and then acted as if it felt hurt because not allowed to cast anchor at the bottom. There was a good crowd out considering the atmospheric condition and the Lord seemed to recognize the sacrifice his people had made by coming so far in such bitterly cold weather, and dispensed a generous portion of his Spirit throughout the entire day.

About a dozen of us took lunches and stayed at the hall till after night meeting and as the Willing Workers have a gas-range, dishes, and table, we had a very palatable meal and spent the rest of the time visiting and singing and enjoyed ourselves as none but Saints can. Wish you had been with us as of old, Bro. and Sr. J. M. Terry.

Bro. Jerome Wildermuth was with us and gave the Sunday-school a very interesting talk from his chart: "One faith, one Lord, one baptism," and then preached a good sermon in the afternoon.

In the evening Bro. Bond delivered an instructive discourse in his own peculiar style, and then, the meeting over, out from the brotherly love and good fellowship into the bitterly cold night, waiting on windy corners for street-cars, slapping hands, rubbing noses and ears to keep them from freezing, and eventually boarding a chilly car which had every appearance of being Jack Frost's own private carriage, we finally arrived at home, and, after getting warm, cleared off the table, washed the dishes (which the nonmembers had left), prepared breakfast for those who must go to work early, and finally got to bed at a very late hour. Really to attend the meetings, through the week as well as on Sundays, in the city, in connection with our daily labor, leads one a very strenuous life.

But it is all in the cause of the Master and we all accept the situation cheerfully, I believe, as I hear no complaints, and are glad of the privilege to worship God in almost any circumstance.

Yours in the liberty of the gospel,

CELESTIA HORTON SANDERSON.

DES MOINES, Iowa, January 30, 1904.

Dear Herald: You are, indeed, a welcome visitor to many homes in this city each week, and the good tidings you bring is cheering at all times. Recently we chanced to see you as you were in the early part of 1860, and about the same time we were reading volume three of the Church History, and noted especially what the historian had to say of the different changes that had come in your life and the progress and development you have made. An issue of 1904, placed beside that of 1860, tells of great progress. Our mind goes back to that memorable conference of April, 1860, when your senior editor entered in to occupy the place of his worthy father. The Church at that time with its very few members coming forward to assert its place in the face of an unfriendly and scornful world, and to build up a name that had been tarnished by those who had once been of the faith. What a change has forty-four years made! And during most of that period the name of our honored President has appeared as your editor.

But it is not of this that we purpose to write. Your pages of January 13 brought a notice to the Saints of our Des Moines District, which we were looking for yet regretted to see. That notice was in regard to the resignation of our Bishop's agent, our beloved and honored brother, Elder W. C. Nirk. Age and failing health necessitated him giving up the work and he had continued for some time past only on the earnest pleadings of our people. Now that he is released we feel that we have parted from him in an official capacity and some reference to him and his lifework may not be out of place.

William C. Nirk was born in Germany in 1837, and at the time he was baptized into the Church, January 14, 1868, he was living on a well-improved farm in the north part of Jasper County, Iowa. It was about 1865 that the Reorganized Church sent a missionary to Fort Des Moines, and among the early missionaries in this part of Iowa was Elder Gordon E. Deuel, who received our brother into the Church, baptizing and confirming him, and three days later, ordaining him an elder. Bro. Nirk can thus be said to be the father of our district. He continued to reside on his farm until about fifteen years ago, when he removed to Rhodes, where he has since resided. A family of four daughters and three sons have grown to manhood and womanhood and have gone out from the parental home, and our brother and his loving companion are spending the evening of life in their own lovely home.

Bro. Nirk was first ordained an elder and later a high priest. Residing in our district thirty-six years since the priesthood was conferred upon him, he has done much missionary work. He has visited every part of the district, and for many years was personally acquainted with every Saint in our territory. All knew him only to love, honor, and respect him. Possessing a name and character above the reproach of men when he entered the Church, the gospel and the Christ-spirit added to the many virtues of his life. His life has been one worthy of imitation. Successful in all his undertakings, faithful to every promise, earnest in the discharge of duty, a character almost perfect. During the past years he has done much labor in the master's cause. There was no burden so heavy, no task so hard, no trial so great as to swerve him from the path of duty. He will certainly have many sheaves to bear with him in the great harvest of life. All these years he has gone to and fro over the district, leaving home and loved ones. His entrance into the homes of the Saints was mingled with joy and sadness, joy on his arrival, and sadness that his stay must all too soon end. His coming brought sunshine and peace to the home and he always departed with a "God bless you," and "Peace be with you." He has ever been ready to rejoice with God's people in their hour of triumph, and cite them on to higher joys and greater heights. He ever had a cheering word and a sweet smile for the downcast Saint, and a few words of fatherly kindness from him would bring a ray of light even in the darkest hour.

Many of us have sat and listened to him as he occupied the sacred stand, and we have realized that at times he was but the mouthpiece of the Comforter. We have sat as it were at his feet, and were enraptured as he related the glories of the gospel and his wonderful experiences and blessings, and we drank in his words of advice, exhortation, and encouragement. Criticise, did he? If so, it was in kindly exhortation, and did not even savor of rebuke or chastisement. His life-work so prepared him that he ever had a sympathetic chord for every heart. We have seen him strong and steadfast when strength was needed. When the agents of Satan were throwing eggs at him, because he preached Christ and him crucified, he murmured not, and only said, "God has a people in this part of the vineyard."

For years he was our district president and when ill health unfitted him to fill the office we have seen him with tears in his eyes asking to be released, but when the Saints unitedly asked him to continue the work, he could not refuse. Then upon giving up the district presidency he continued the work of Bishop's agent and only relinquishes this when age and physical strength indicate that his life-work is drawing to a close.

He has ever been a man of great faith, and richly endowed with the Spirit of God. The audible voice of our Savior has greeted his ears, and glorious visions in prophetic views have been presented to him. Many infirm ones have realized that he was an intercessor between them and God, and many children have received blessings under his hands. He has many times ministered in the hour of death, and his words on such occasions have caused us to fully believe "there is no death."

We regret that his official work seems almost or entirely finished, but we hope for him many years of life in which we may be privileged to clasp his hand, and still listen to his kind words. A name, a character, and a life worthy of the profession he has made, he is certainly now able to say, "I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith, I have finished my course, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness," and when the hour of departure comes he will certainly be able to say, "The moment of this mortal ending is the triumphal arch and the eternal gateway into the fair fields of immortality."

The world has been made better by our brother having lived in it, and may grace, mercy, and peace be with him and his loved companion during the evening of such a well spent life.

A. A. REAMS.

WEYMOUTH, Kentucky, January 7, 1904.

Editors Herald: We have moved from Kentucky to Tennessee, but only a short distance. Our aim was to move to Zion's land, but for various reasons we changed our mind. We desire to be there, but we could not see wisdom in going now under the circumstances. We are commanded to have all things prepared beforehand which no doubt means more than many of us, at first thought, might suppose. We hope to move to Zion in order every way.

We live in a good country, among people composed of the various sects, and we notice that when any of the Saints get into distress and severe need or sick, the outsiders are just as good as can be to assist us. Surely they will reap a great reward.

Saints, let us be very careful how we speak of our fellow brothers because of their peculiar faith in God, lest we are found no better than the Pharisees. It has been quite a while since we heard a sermon and we are getting very anxious to hear a few good gospel sermons. We sincerely hope that Bro. T. C. Kelley will be sent to the Southeastern Mission at our next conference. We also hope earnestly that Bro. C. L. Snow will be reassigned to his old home mission, Kentucky and Tennessee, as he has done much to establish the work in this mission. All of our ministers are zealous and good men, but some are more so than others. May God bless all.

Editors Herald: When a little child about six years old, I had a dream, not once, but many times; night after night that dream would come. It was so terrible that I would wake up covered with cold sweat before the dream was finished. I never dreamed it clear through but once, and I never dreamed it again. I have thought of it a hundred times and wondered what it meant. I was no believer in dreams, and always thought those rather lacking in sound sense who did; but this was so remarkable that I could not help thinking about it and feeling that perhaps "there are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamed of in our philosophy." As I grew older, I could see that the dream was a type of my life. I felt in my dream just as I felt in actual experience of some things that came into my life.

I dreamed that I was in an underground labyrinth of corridors, in gloomy, semidarkness. There was no sunlight, but still I could see where I was going. I was fleeing in terror and horror unspeakable from a secret evil power which continually pursued me to take my life. Just what this power was I did not know; except that it was secret and was an evil power.

As I flew along the main corridor, I would come to a fork, and would take the wrong way, for all ways looked alike, till I would come up against a stone wall. Invariably these branch corridors were walled across the end. Then with an increase of terror I would hasten back into the main corridor, lest the evil power should be gone ahead of me and be lying in wait. This happened many times, and I would then, as I said before, become so overcome with fright and horror, that I would awake covered with a cold sweat.

At last I did not wake up; but dreamed the dream through to the end. It began to get lighter and I soon saw a door set across the end of the corridor. The door was open about an inch, and I could see it was light beyond. I was afraid to go through, lest the evil power be lurking beyond. So I lingered about half an hour, and thinking the only way to know if there was evil beyond the door was to go through, I touched the door and was very much surprised to find it opened so easily; for it looked very strong. I went through and looked around to find who had opened the door, but I was alone, in an exceedingly beautiful country. It was as level as the house floor and was covered with short, thick grass, with not a weed in it. But the best part to me, after the gloom of the labyrinth, was the light, —it was such a pleasant light, I can convey no idea of its cheerful effect and pleasantness.

At last, I felt sure there was none of the evil power there, and went back to tell the others what a beautiful country I had found, and how much pleasanter it was than the gloomy underground labyrinth where they were. There were four young people whom I particularly wished to go into the pleasant land I had found; but the evil power hid them from me. At last the little girl rose up and cast off a garment which the evil power had put upon her, put her hand in mine, and with her I went through the door for all time. Strange as it may seem, I had lost all fear of the evil power as long as I remained in sight of the light which came through the door. As we went through the door, a great company sprang right up out of the ground and crowded around, congratulating us that we had escaped the perils of the labyrinth. There were some there who have now been dead thirty years, and none of them to my knowledge ever belonged to any church. There was one, a dear friend, a member of the Evangelical Society, who did not come to congratulate me. I felt hurt about it and wondered where she was, but she did not come although I thought she would have been the first to rejoice over my escape.

When the rejoicing was over the people began to go away to their homes. I took the little girl's hand and also turned to walk away, feeling very lonely, and thinking: I have no home in this land. As I did so a young man stepped out of the crowd, and placing himself beside the little girl, said to me: "I have built you a house. The heat and burden of the day is gone, the twilight will be long in this land, and the evening will be more pleasant than all the rest of the day. Come with me." And I walked away with him on the outside of the labyrinth, in the direction from which I had come.

A few years ago Elder Payne of the Latter Day Saints' Church preached here. The first sermon was upon the "evil power." I had always heard it preached that the Devil has no power; so when one asked me, "What do you think of that?" I thought of my dream and said, It is just what the Bible says. One night he preached on the millennial reign, as you understand it. I had never heard this doctrine, and again thought of my dream, and sat and listened, awe-stricken. I said to myself, I will investigate these doctrines, and if I find no evil in them, I will join this church. Just seven and one half days from that time I know I was converted. I wish to state a few more facts, and then ask a question, which is troubling me somewhat. 1. A day in prophecy stands for a year, and parts of a day for corresponding parts of a year. (Revelation 9: 15.) 2. If a dream is repeated it means its fulfillment is near at hand. (Genesis 41: 32.) That part which is dreamed but once is more remote. 3. If a part of a dream comes to pass it is sealed, so to speak, or made sure that it is of God; and that the remainder will come to pass. (Deuteronomy 13: 1-3; 18: 22; Daniel 12: 9.) 4. The resurrection is used by Christ as a type of conversion. (John 5: 21, 24-26; Romans 6: 4.) 5. "I am the door," says Christ. Again, "I have set before you an open door." (John 10: 9; Revelation 3: 7, 8.)

This dream has come true thus far. I am standing to-day where I was when I went back into the labyrinth and am becoming discouraged and fearful of losing sight of the light which came through the door. Jesus said, "I am the light of the world."—John 8:12. The next that is to happen is the little girl taking my hand and going through the door the last time and for all time. As a part of the dream is in symbol, I see no reason to say a part is literal; therefore I do not understand that which is yet to come. Does this resurrection mean a literal rising, or does it mean a great revival of God's work here? If the latter, why were people who were not church members chosen to represent this, since they are dead? If conversion is meant, why were not the real living persons who will be converted shown? Is there any instance in the Bible which would give authority to the belief that since the first part came to pass in seven and a half days, the remainder will come to pass in seven and a half years?

I think it worthy of note that the people I saw looked just as they did years after when I knew them as grown up people, although at that time, if they were living at all, they must have been small children. The young man bore a singular resemblance to one who, many years after, was connected with me in such a way as to entitle him to be regarded as a fit type of the Great Physician.

Yours in hope of an answer which will make these things clear to me.
M. E. REED.

Editors Herald: I have felt edified in perusing your columns many times. Those who have endeavored to entertain the HERALD readers, have not written in vain. A faithfully borne testimony in meeting has its weight; bread cast upon the waters feeds something hungering for food.

Some are talented in preaching the gospel, some in singing, some in rendering music sweet to the ear, some in painting, some in accumulating wealth, some have patient spirits to wait upon the afflicted, and in various ways we fill our mission in life and help to make life enduring. Why should we fear to make an effort in what we feel is right if we are true brothers and sisters in trying to serve God? How quickly the world rewards willing and trusty workers! God's wisdom is higher and more far-seeing than man's; he rewards us all along the journey of life for striving to cultivate the talent he has given to us. It will take us all to make a perfect body, it will require all our best talents to make the Bride equal to the Bridegroom, even Christ, whose second advent to the earth is near at hand. May we be ready. With kindest wishes for the ensuing year, I remain

Your sister in the gospel,
MARY M. GREEN.

XENIA, Illinois, January 21, 1904.

Dear Herald: It is with the greatest of pleasure I read your columns, which contain many gospel truths. I enjoy reading letters from the brothers and sisters. They cheer and encourage me to press forward to the prize that is given to the faithful at the end of the race. My greatest desire is to live faithful in this life, that I may enjoy the life which is to come, eternal life, there to meet dear ones in glory. What a happy meeting that will be, when Christ will reach forth his hand and bid us "Welcome home!" I long to meet my Savior, first of all, and be permitted to enjoy the heavenly music.

This life is only a preparatory state, and life is short, and whether we be prepared or not will not prevent the coming of Christ. We learn by studying the word of God that we are living in the last days when false Christs will arise and show great signs and wonders; that if it were possible they would deceive the very elect. When we hear of wars and rumors of wars, earthquakes, famines, pestilences, and see the signs in the heavens above, and men's hearts failing them for fear of the things coming upon the earth, then we learn the parable of the fig-tree, when her branches are tender and put forth leaves,

"ye know that summer is near." So when we see these things coming to pass upon the earth, "know ye that the time is nigh, even at the door." Jesus informs us that this generation shall not pass away till all things be fulfilled. We as Latter Day Saints need to be preparing for that great and notable day when Christ will come the second time without sin unto salvation.

Our Sunday-school and Religio are progressing nicely. As teacher in Sunday-school I feel the great responsibility resting upon me. My prayer is that God will direct me aright in teaching the children.

Editors Herald: The work here is in good condition and we now have a good, active branch. We have a small unpretentious house to worship in and we expect to build a larger and more commodious house when we can raise sufficient means. And we would like to ask the Saints to help us in our effort. Any desiring to assist us can send donations to me at 922 Walnut Street, or to Sarah E. Boydston, secretary, this city, and they will be given credit, the list to be published in church papers.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. Alvin Knisley writes from Trehern, Manitoba, January 23: "I have just baptized and confirmed five, four adults. Have been attacked through both press and pulpit most venomously; still the work rolls. Have preached over forty sermons—busy every day."

A. Sutton, Harrisburg, Nebraska, writes: "I can not do without the HERALD, as it is the only preacher I have, and I am the only Saint in this part of the world. If any of the elders ever pass through here, they will find a home with me."

The February World's Work presents a variety of timely and striking articles. In "One Trust and What Became of It" Henry Wysham Lanier tells the story of the rise and fall of the notorious Shipbuilding Trust with many pictures. "The Panama Canal and the Mississippi Valley," by Charles M. Harvey, shows how the building of the Canal will change trade currents and establish new seats of Empire. Ezra S. Brudno, himself a distinguished emigrant, gives in "The Emigrant Jews at Home," which is illustrated, a first hand explanation of the character and condition of the dwellers in the Russian Pale. A superbly illustrated article is "The Work of Augustus Saint Gaudens," an admirable appreciation of our most eminent sculptor, by Charles H. Caffin, a noted art critic. In "Perfect Feeding of the Human Body" Isaac F. Marcossou writes of the art of right eating and the remarkable experiment of Mr. Horace Fletcher in economic nutrition. Miss A. M. Shaw, in "The Public Schools of a Boss-Ridden City," shows Philadelphia schools in political thralldom. "South America and Our Responsibility," by W. M. Ivins, Jr., is a compact statement of the economic, social, and political conditions in South America, with special reference to our future relations with the continent. Arthur Goodrich tells in "Providing the World with Power" of the marvelous increase in the use of electricity. A new era in the use of soil is shown by Professor B. T. Galloway in "The Profits of Field and Orchard;" "Lumbering by Machinery" by K. Smith and "The Work of the Wireless Telegraph Man" by Winthrop Packard are illustrated articles that deal with interesting phases of contemporary activity. Sereno S. Pratt tells the inside story of the antagonism of great financial interests toward Mr. Roosevelt in "The President and Wall Street," and in "The President and the People" a symposium of significant views is presented. Alfred Mosely, head of the Mosely Commission, gives an interesting "British View of American Schools." The editorial portraits include Augustus Saint-Gaudens, Admiral Alexieff, Richard Olney and General S. C. Armstrong. The departments of The March of Events and Among the World's Workers complete a notable number.

CHANGE OF FIELD.

Bro. J. B. Lentz, who has been at work in the Eastern Mission, was called home by the fatal sickness of his father who passed to the other side January 21. The time being short until the beginning of the conference year it has been thought proper that Bro. Lentz does not return to his field in the East prior to the April session. He will therefore labor in Iowa, as may be arranged between Bro. F. A. Smith and himself for the remainder of the conference year.

JOSEPH SMITH, for Presidency.

LAMONI, Iowa, January 29, 1904.

The Bishopric.

Southwestern Oregon District.—The Saints of the Southwestern Oregon District please take notice that in accordance with the recommendation of the Southwestern Oregon District Conference and the missionary in charge, Bro. G. T. Griffiths, Bro. William Smith, of Gravelford, Oregon, has been duly appointed to act as Bishop's agent for the Reorganized Church in and for said district and is authorized to receive and receipt for offerings in the interest of the Church and the Church work generally, in and for the district and territory of said Southwestern Oregon, and perform all acts usually falling upon Bishop's agents within the confines of their districts.

Witness my hand, this 28th day of January, 1904.

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

Northern Wisconsin District.—Saints and friends of the Northern Wisconsin District will please take notice that upon the resignation of A. V. Closson, Bishop's agent in and for Northern Wisconsin District and by the approval of Bro. Closson and also Heman C. Smith, missionary in charge, Lester Wildermuth, of Necedah, Wisconsin, has been duly appointed Bishop's agent in and for the territory of Northern Wisconsin. Bro. A. V. Closson, having moved from the state of Wisconsin, desires to be relieved of the work of Bishop's agent that he may give his time more fully to missionary labor. The thanks of the Bishopric are extended to Bro. Closson for his past worthy services in the district as agent. The Bishopric also asks the Saints and friends to remember the new agent, Bro. Lester Wildermuth, and his address, R. F. D. 2, Necedah, Wisconsin, and not forget that if we are truly children of the Master, we must be "laborers together with him" for the progress of his work. Every one in the district who wishes to discharge his duty should place his name and offerings with the agent and help to forward on the gospel work. We trust that no one shall be lacking in duty in this, for should they, they will certainly not be commended in the time when the accounts are rendered. In the interest of the gospel work and proclamation of truth everywhere, I am, in behalf of the Bishopric,

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

LAMONI, Iowa, January 30, 1904.

Church Secretary.

DELEGATE CREDENTIALS TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Delegate credential blanks, provided for by action of General Conference, have been sent to presidents, or secretaries, of the various districts, also to officers of branches not in districts. Said officers of districts and branches are requested to forward credentials of delegates appointed to represent their districts or branches in the coming General Conference to the Church Secretary as soon as possible, that a complete roll of delegates may be prepared, as provided for by resolution of General Conference, to facilitate prompt organization and work of that body. Credentials of delegates appointed at fall or winter conferences should be forwarded without delay, and those yet to be appointed, immediately after appointment. It is desired that all credentials be in hand as early in the month of March as possible.

One certificate for each delegation, with number of members in district or branch, and names of its delegates, signed by the president and secretary of district or branch appointing, with name of district or branch and place and date of holding of conference or business-meeting, is sufficient. Separate individual credentials are not necessary. Please insert total membership in all cases.

Any failing to receive blanks will be supplied on application to the undersigned.

The rules governing "representation" and the restrictions of delegate voting provide as follows:

"Each district shall be entitled to one delegate for every twenty-five members of said district, and one vote in conference for each delegate to which they may be entitled. [Scattered members in districts, including those enrolled on records of disorganized branches, who are not recorded as members of other districts, may be included in the enumeration of membership.]

"The delegates present at conference from any one district shall be entitled to cast a full vote of the district of which they are delegates, unless otherwise instructed by their district conference;

"Provided, that in case of a disagreement of views among the members of said delegation (the full delegation not being present), they shall be entitled to cast only their individual votes as said delegates.

"No one delegate shall be entitled to cast, as representative in the same conference, more than twenty votes.

"Each regularly organized branch of the church not included in an organized district, shall be entitled to one delegate, who shall have the same privileges as delegates of districts." However, the President at the General Conference has ruled "that a branch of more than twenty-five members is entitled to one delegate for each twenty-five of its membership, the same as a district."

For further information concerning representation, choice, and instruction of delegates, etc., see Book of rules, chapter 16.

R. S. SALYARDS, Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, January 30, 1904.

ENROLLMENTS IN QUORUMS.

Elders, priests, teachers, and deacons who desire to be enrolled in quorums should send in applications to the undersigned, in harmony with rules adopted by the General Conference. Blanks containing instructions will be forwarded on request. Those making applications, if previously enrolled, or ordained to other offices, should state what quorums they have been members of. The Secretary can not enroll any one; quorum officers obtain applications from him, said applications being subject to action of the quorums. Reports of quorums to the General Conferences are supposed to include names of members lost or added. All applications should be in hand not later than March 31, that reports may be made up for the Conference. The number enrolled depends largely upon there being enough members of the quorums present to act in their behalf; however, it is well that all not enrolled should make application.

R. S. SALYARDS, Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, February 1, 1904.

Inez spent the holidays with relatives in this city, and January 4, while dressing to return home, her clothing caught fire from the gas. She was removed to the hospital and all that science, kindness, and prayer was capable of was done to ease her pain, and save her life, but the pale reaper called, and she went hence, at the age of 17 years, 7 months, 14 days, of the faith, but not baptized. Funeral the 21st at the home of her grandfather; Elder Jacob Reese in charge of and sermon by Elder Robert M. Elvin from 1 Corinthians 15: 26.

Scarecliff and A. H. Parsons, before a large audience of Saints and friends. From the beginning he said he would die, and, though desirous of living, was not afraid of death. He was quite a regular attendant at church services, and seemed much in earnest in the work.

MORGAN.—At Bevier, Missouri, January 20, 1904, Sr. Sarah Ann Morgan. She was the widow of J. W. Morgan (deceased) and the sister of Bro. #### British View of American Schools.

To the February World's Work Alfred Mosely head of the Mosely Commission of thirty English Educational experts, which recently completed an investigation of the American schools contributes "A British View of American Schools." It is the only published expression of the results of his inquiry. He says, the most striking facts I gathered are these:

"That the people of the United States spend a marvelous amount of money on their public schools, endowing education more lavishly than any other people in the world.

"They do not spend enough. The salaries to teachers are not sufficient for the service the country desires and should have.

"One especially notable manifestation of enthusiasm I found in New York, Boston, and other large cities. On the East Side in New York and at the North End in Boston the schools in the poorer districts are kept open at night to give the children of the crowded tenements a clean and comfortable place to study their morrow's lessons, with some one to help them on difficult points. The children resort to these evening study rooms in surprising numbers, and the teachers help them patiently and encouragingly.

"As a whole, the Middle West is more intense in matters of education than the other parts of the country. The schools of the Middle West are newer than the eastern schools and more modern, because they have no traditions to get rid of. There is an even greater thirst for knowledge there than elsewhere, and money is spent to advantage. The schools of Indianapolis are among the best in the country.

"In brief, I might sum up my impressions of American education by a single personal note. I have placed my two sons in the Hopkins Grammar School at New Haven to prepare for Yale."

Preacher's Story Revives Memories.

The announcement that Doctor W. S. Rainsford is to write a life story has called up memories of the early days of his work in connection with historic St. George's Church. One enthusiast, who is something of an antiquarian as regards the city's history, has just called attention to the first St. George's Church when it was in the lower part of the city. It stood in 1811 in Beekman Street, close by Cliff, a district now given up entirely to business purposes, but the energetic searcher has found the site and found, too, that a building there still bears the name of St. George's Building, to recall the church of old. One interesting memory that clings to the earlier St. George's is the fact that Washington Irving was baptized there, he having been born close by on Golden Hill. Doctor Rainsford will tell of the later history of the church in his book, which will bear the title of "A Preacher's Story of His Work," and will be published shortly by the Outlook Company.

Ohio is the great maple syrup-producing State. In 1900 Ohio produced nearly half of the maple syrup product of the United States, or nearly 1,000,000 gallons.—Country Life in America.

Lent.

The season of Lent is a season set apart by a certain portion of the Christian church for prayer and fasting; but whether we do or do not belong to this portion, the idea of Lent is not without a lesson. Our age is a rapid one; we move forward with great strides toward an unusual material prosperity. Nor are we unmindful of what progress we would like to make in a higher way, and our great movements for good are often on as magnificent a scale as our more material advances. We are strenuous even in our charities and our religion. But being good on a big scale is not all that is necessary. We need some quiet and reflection as well; we need time for thought on the conduct of things. Now and again it is good for a warrior in the battle to stop for rest and to count his strength; now and again it is well for a runner to pause and take account of his road, to refresh himself in a shady place for new running. So for everybody a season when we are less active in endeavor, but more thoughtful, is a season to be welcomed and encouraged. We will do well as a nation and as individuals to take opportunity to relax from the "great handicap for sixpenny pieces" and do a little meditating. As we reflect, we may wonder whether or not so much of this scurry after money is worth while. We may wonder if so much doing and so little of real living is the best way to take things. It is not probable that we shall be able to overturn the modern spirit or to regenerate the world; it is quite probable that we will all be compelled in one fashion or another to keep in the swirl; but pausing for a little while will do us no harm. The withdrawal into ourselves will enable us to get a little better acquainted with our own natures; we will see things more sanely, be the better able to estimate values, to distinguish the real from the specious. Action is great, but it is not everything; reflection counts, too.—February Woman's Home Companion.

The Korean People.

The people of Korea are not Japanese and they are not Chinese. They are Mongolian, and have a polysyllabic language with a phonetic alphabet. They have a recorded history, of disputed authenticity, which claims for them a continuous existence as a Korean people of about five thousand years, the earlier part of which, of course, is shrouded in the mists of tradition and fable. As early as three centuries ago, the Koreans had made great progress in the arts. They built ships two hundred feet long and covered them with plates of iron, the iron being hammered into small plates and fastened by small spikes driven into the wood. They made woven fabrics, and were very skillful in metal work, in the fashioning of jewels, and in the manufacture of pottery. They were far in advance of their Japanese neighbors, to whom they have taught the arts of metal-working, pottery-making, and silk-weaving. Three centuries ago, Japan overran the country and devastated it, transferred whole colonies of artisans to Japan, and broke down for ever the military power of Korea. Korea has produced but little literature. Korean students have been largely devoted to Chinese authors. The native literature consists largely of descriptions of scenery and folk-lore.

The people of Korea may be described generally as robust, amiable, industrious, pleasure-loving, and given rather to the arts of peace than the ardors of war. They are agricultural rather than commercial. They are kindly and generous. They have no national religion, and never have had. Confucianism, so far as regards the worship of ancestors, the reverence for parents, and the dignity of family, has a stronger hold than any other form of religion. Buddhism has always had a languishing existence among them. There is a widespread belief among the people in witches, in spirits, and in devils. There are relics of fetishism. The costumes of the men and the women do not differ widely from those in use thousands of years ago. The universal costume is cotton cloth, bleached and unbleached. In winter, this is padded with short staple cotton which grows in Korea and is carded into pads for the purpose of quilting the clothing of the people. Their headgear is remarkably varied in form. They have a different form or a different kind of hat for almost every station in life. All the unmarried men in Korea are called boys, and wear their hair in braids down their backs. Marriage may take place at any age from twelve upward, and when a boy is married he is a man. The women of Korea have no legal status. A man may have one wife, and her children are his legitimate heirs; but a Korean may have as many concubines as he may have the ability or the disposition to support.—From "Korea as the Prize of War," by J. Sloat Fassett, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for February.

It takes from one to five years to grow "Dutch" bulbs of marketable size, says Country Life in America. Gladioli make good bulbs one year from planting, while tulips take two or three years, and hyacinths three to five years.

The Necessity of Mystery in Revealed Religion.

The Reverend George Searle, C. S. P., author of "Plain Facts for Fair Minds," contributes to the January Catholic World a very interesting and valuable article for Catholics and non-Catholics, on a question that ever needs explanation—that of mystery in revealed religion:

"Many people find great difficulty in accepting the dogmas of religion, because some of these dogmas are mysterious or incomprehensible. This difficulty, evidently, is found conspicuously in the teaching of the Church with regard to the Holy Trinity and the Real Presence of Christ in the Blessed Sacrament.

"The actual dogma is that there are three Persons, with an absolute unity of nature. The difficulty with the objector is, that he forms an idea of the terms 'person' and 'nature' which really confounds the two. His ideas of these matters are not clear. If you tell him that space exists in three dimensions, length, breadth, and thickness, he has no difficulty; for his ideas on these subjects are, or at any rate seem to him, clear.

"The difficulty as to the Real Presence arises from a similar cause. The objector takes for granted that the presence of a physical substance anywhere is entirely a matter of geometry. He regards it as necessarily extended, and having a definite shape. He may perhaps never have thought of the presence of the soul in the body, which his own consciousness must make at any rate extremely probable to him. The same consciousness tells him that his soul is individual or indivisible, and yet that it exists in every part his body.

"Yes, this is the trouble; our minds are not content with obscurity, but insist on understanding all about every subject presented to them; or at any rate that no subject shall present insuperable difficulties. Individually, we may acknowledge that some matters are beyond our own understanding, as no doubt is the case for most people with regard to the higher mathematics; but we feel sure that some minds understand them clearly, and that perhaps we ourselves could, if we would be willing to go through the necessary study.

"And yet even here, if we would make that study, we would find that there are limits which it would appear that no human mind will ever pass in this world. We see, for instance, that space of more than three dimensions is what may be called an algebraical possibility; we can deduce formulas and conclusions with regard to it very similar to those which we obtain with regard to the space with which we are familiar. But when we try to realize what it would be like, to imagine it, we fail entirely. We see then that the apparent completeness of our notion of actual space is a matter of experience; that it comes from our physical senses, and that if we had been absolutely deprived from the beginning of every one of those senses, or even of those of sight or touch, our notion of three-dimensional space would probably be no better than that of the four-dimensional. We can not be sure that the latter is an actual impossibility; but it certainly seems that if we lived in it we should have to get by experience entirely new sensations to obtain a knowledge of it like that which we have of the space with which we are familiar, and that at present such a knowledge is hopeless.

"Also it seems quite plain that the existence of the mysterious or incomprehensible in what claims to be a revelation, instead of being an argument against it, should be one in its favor. If there were nothing in it hard to be understood, it would seem to come from a source no higher than ourselves."

Secret of Success.

Leslie M. Shaw, Secretary of the Treasury, in a recent address to students, admirably epitomized the secret of success:

"If you take my advice, you will never work for hire. If you work for hire you will never rise. If you work for hire life will have little else for you but drudgery, and eight hours per day—ten hours per day, at the most—is all that you can stand and keep your health. But if you work for the accomplishment of the thing you are employed to do, you can work sixteen or eighteen hours a day, and life will be full of sunshine and song. God implanted in the human mind the desire to do things."

In other words, if we love our work we have taken a long stride toward success.

The immortal things accomplished in this world have been wrought for the things themselves. The emoluments, the praise and the glory that follow striking achievement in many illustrious instances were regarded lightly, as the incidents and not the objects of lifelong endeavor. The late Herbert Spencer was so absorbed in his philosophical speculations that he never learned how to make money, discarded academic honors, and doubtless lamented the brevity of life, which set metes and bounds to his delightful toil.

With the most of us satisfaction is to be found in the things we do, rather than in great rewards or in the plaudits of the world. Usually a fair measure of the success which, in the popular conception, means wealth or public honors follows as the result of devotion to the appointed duty. Certain it is that nothing can be hoped for the man who does not find his work congenial and a pleasure in itself. This is true whether we are searching for new stars in the skies or are engaged in the humblest mundane duty. "The best artist is not the man who fixes his eye on posterity, but the one who loves the practice of his heart."

It is likely that many of the exploits on the conspicuous arenas, on the battlefield, on men-of-war, in listening senates, were essayed because the actors had their minds on the work to be done rather than upon what men should say of the performance after it was done. One who has closely analyzed human motives says that success attained in any pursuit is often explainable only on the theory that the man likes to do what is required of him at the moment. "I suspect that this is the reason why Lord Beaconsfield and Mr. Gladstone have debated so much in the House of Commons, and why Burnaby rode to Khiva."

Aside from morality and correct living and the love of wife, family and kindred there is nothing in which a rational man should have more interest than in his work. We can predict failures for him who labors merely for hire and salary. We can not expect notable progress or praiseworthy distinction.—Philadelphia Record.

RESENTMENT.

"Resist not evil."

This sentence formed the central thought of the now celebrated Russian Count Tolstoi's book called "My Religion." It is a part of the Saviour's Sermon on the Mount, and occurs in the contrast drawn between the ethical teaching of the old law and the spirit of the gospel as taught by Jesus and exemplified in his life. What preceded it was this:

Ye have heard that it hath been said, an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth: but I say unto you, Resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if a man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also. And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain.—Matthew 5: 38-41.

The last two verses above quoted are much improved in the Inspired Version, reading thus:

And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have it, and if he sue thee again, let him have thy cloak also, and whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him a mile; and whosoever shall compel thee to go with him twain, thou shalt go with him twain.

The evident intention of the Savior was to teach his disciples the consequences of following the spirit of resistance, or resentment, rather than that of conciliation and compromise, the "soft answer turneth away wrath" policy, as he based his after-teaching quoted above on the precedent, "Resist not evil" instead of upon the vengeful retaliation of exacting "an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth" principle. For this reason we say that the rendition of verses forty and forty-one in the Inspired Version is the better; for if the intention of Jesus was to teach submission to aggression which could not be turned away except by resistance, or conflict, he would not have told his hearers to force a cloak upon one who sued and took away a coat; nor to force one's company upon a man who wanted only a mile; that would have been counter aggressiveness, a sort of personal revenge; whereas, if compelled to go one mile with a man, consenting to go cheerfully when resistance would result in conflict would be to disarm the aggressor and put him to shame if he was capable of feeling shame. Consenting to go two miles under similar conditions would be the same thing as going the one; to suffer a man to take one's coat in a suit at law, without rancor or resentment, would be in harmony with "Resist not evil;" but to force one's

A SPLENDID new tract has just been issued from the pen of Elder H. O. Smith, entitled "Why I believe the Book of Mormon." Price twenty cents a dozen, one dollar and fifty cents per one hundred.

THE Mexican cotton-boll weevil has become so grave a pest in the Southwest that an extra session of the Louisiana Legislature was held last month to take measures to stay its ravages, while Congress has just appropriated the sum of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars to be expended by the United States Department of Agriculture for a like purpose. Entomologist Howard, writing in the Review of Reviews for February, describes the insect and shows what preventive measures are practicable in the cotton-belt.

self on a man for two miles when he only exacted one would not be resisting evil, but would be of the same sort of wrong-doing as the compelling a man to go a mile. It is in effect: If a man sue thee at the law and take thy coat, do not resist unto evil result, let it go; then if his debt be not satisfied and he sue thee again let him have thy cloak. This is virtually saying, If thou art unfortunate in thy business and become indebted, and thy creditor sue thee at the law, turn thy goods over to the officer that the demand of thy creditor may be satisfied and thy debt be paid. Do not presume upon thy folly in getting into debt, nor upon thy poverty to contend against the enforcement of the claim held against thee.

Resistance is the usual first resolve under aggression of wrong; and, if the impulse is yielded to it results in adding loss of time, and often misery to self and others; and if it be a legal wrong, peace of mind and costs in money in many cases follow. Of course it is possible that there may be instances where to yield might involve the rights of others as well as one's own, when resistance to wrong would itself be wrong; but this is not in the text, for in that it is the personal right alone that is being considered, "If a man sue thee."

We believe that there is no command in the Bible authorizing a man to smite another on the right cheek, or indeed on either cheek; nor is there any directing a man to sue his neighbor at the law and take away either coat or cloak; hence, believers in the mission of Jesus and his words ought not to resort to the law for redress of private wrongs, nor at all, except in such cases as the courts must necessarily take cognizance of, to the intent and purpose that the edicts of justice may be enforced, as the Church has no power to put any man in jeopardy of life, person, or property, the withdrawing fellowship from unworthy or unruly persons being the only final remedy, after persistent, kindly labor and remonstrance.

The spirit of resentment if allowed to rule in the disposition and habits of a man unfits him for the consideration of what is done to his apparent or real injury. It magnifies the wrong done, distorts the mental vision, and the injury is increased proportionately and to such an extent that the man is quite disqualified for entertaining the admonition of common prudence, and charity, which "thinketh no evil," is altogether forgotten.

We should be able to so judge men and conditions that what men may do toward us should be seen with the possible motive of good, or the love of right that good men think themselves to be endowed with, and by parity of reasoning should invest others with, "loving our neighbor as ourselves." Men can not successfully be and act in accordance with this if cherishing the spirit of resentment or acting under its influence.

It is enjoined upon us as followers of Jesus to "forgive all men." Of course, if men do nothing to us for which they would be blameworthy and reparation or restoration could be justly demanded, there would be no call or room for our forgiveness; and hence, no merit would attach to us for forgiving. But, if wrong is done us, to a greater or less degree of injury, and we forego the application of a legal remedy and the possible punishment of the wrongdoer, forestalling such resort to legal action by our forgiveness, then are we entitled to reap the benefit of the sweets of forgiveness of our trespasses "as we forgive those who trespass against us." No such result can come to us if the spirit of resentment controls our minds.

To have a spirit keenly sensitive to harm, insult, injury, and to suffer these silently, impassively, uncomplainingly, and forgivingly, is to be good and Christlike. Can we afford to be like him?

ANOTHER CHURCH GONE WRONG.

Some six or seven years ago, one Doctor J. E. Roberts left the ranks of the Evangelical ministry of which he was at the time a "bright and shining light," and set up a new church, calling it "The World's Church." It was thought by many that a fit successor to Honorable R. G. Ingersoll had been found. But the Journal of Kansas City, where the phenomenon occurred, now has it thus:

The Church of This World has suspended business and its founder and pastor, Doctor J. E. Roberts, has left Kansas City and returned to his farm near Grant, Michigan. Doctor Roberts' leaving was signalized by no demonstration on the part of his congregation, and the word has gone forth that not again will the congregation assemble until Doctor Roberts returns, a date that is indefinite.—News item in issue of January 29, 1904.

DOCTOR ROBERTS RETIRES TO HIS FARM.

It looks as if the Church of This World has finally collapsed. Its pastor, Doctor J. E. Roberts, has retired to his farm near Grant, Michigan, and his congregation is to hold no more services—not now, anyway.

The main reason assigned for the Church of This World's dissolution—or suspension of animation, as the case may be—is the ill health of Doctor Roberts. It is suspected, however, that it is due more largely to some other causes. The signs that the end was approaching have been visible for some time. When Doctor Roberts apostatized from Christianity and set up a rival institution of his own, he became somewhat of a fad locally. His bold avowals of his disbelief in most of the current teachings of religion, his eloquent apostrophes to Nature, and his sarcastic attacks upon the sacred books and the time-honored dogmas and creeds of Christianity, attracted to his meetings large crowds of curious and interested people. His popularity and following rivaled, if they did not exceed, those of any orthodox preacher in the city. It was not long, however, until the public curiosity and interest began to wane. They have lately sunk so low as to become plainly disheartening to the eloquent expounder of the religion without a revealed God. This, as well as his ill health, may have had some influence in retiring him from the lime-light of the theaters where his sermons have been preached, to the peace and quiet of his Michigan farm.

What caused Doctor Roberts to lose his grip? Various things. The suspicion crept into the minds not only of the community generally, but into those of his once most devoted followers, that he was not wholly sincere and disinterested. Sunday is a day expressly set aside for the worship of the God of Christianity. Why did Doctor Roberts, who denied the truth of Christianity and the existence of its God, choose Sunday as the day for his meetings? "Church" is a word universally applied to organizations of Christians. Why did Doctor Roberts call his institution a "church"? The public deliverances of Christian ministers are called sermons. Why did Doctor Roberts call his public addresses "sermons"? These questions and others similar to them were repeatedly asked, and they were not answered to the satisfaction of anybody but certain Christians, who contented themselves with saying that Doctor Roberts was borrowing the livery of heaven to serve the Devil in. Doctor Roberts may be as honest and sincere as any man, but the belief got generally abroad that he was not, and the belief hurt his cause almost as much as the certainty would have done.

The form of organization of the Church of This World and the principles on which it was founded also made its permanency impossible. Its regular attendants were among the best and most cultured people in Kansas City, but mere morality and culture have never constituted a foundation broad enough and deep enough to establish a permanent, expanding, and fruitful institution of any kind upon and they never will. Common interests, common aims, common passions, common sympathies, common longings for a better life in this world and a happier one in another world are the cement that binds men permanently together. It is because the members of the various Christian denominations are held together by all these ties that the church membership has grown in strength and numbers. Because the members of the Church of This World were held together by few or none of them, its early decline was assured from the day of its inception.—Editorial in Kansas City Journal, January 30, 1904.

It is to us but another illustration of the text "Whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken: but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder."—Matthew 21: 44.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The first issue of the Mormon Point of View reaches our office. It is a small periodical in magazine form and is published by "N. L. Nelson, Professor of English, Brigham Young University," at Provo, Utah. It seems from his editorial, "Why this magazine is needed," that his idea borders on university extension work. He says: "My present work throws me into direct contact—so far as the views above outlined are concerned—with fewer than one hundred young people each year. I desire to increase this class to ten thousand. In short, I would bring the Brigham Young University, as far as my 'philosophy of the gospel' work is concerned, into the home of every Latter-day Saint." "The merit of this journal . . . must be in quality; and in suggesting this, I beg the reader not to think I am throwing a bouquet at myself, but rather that I am paying a tribute to the grandeur of our religion as it unfolds along advanced lines." In the leading article, "The ministers and the Mormons," is found this language: "This religion, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, was the one and only religion in all the world denied representation in the World's Congress of Religions during the late Chicago Fair." This is not a true statement, as the Reorganized Church was denied representation after it had been promised them. The "Spalding Story" is quite thoroughly canvassed by Mr. Nelson, and we wonder if the Utah faction ever was known publicly to give the Reorganization credit for having first brought out and published the "Manuscript Found."

The discussion advertised to take place at Broadhead, Kentucky, last month between W. H. Kelley of New Albany, Indiana, for the Latter Day Saints, and J. T. Davis of the Disciple or Campbellite Church, was declared off on account of a clean back-out on the part of Mr. Davis after the parties had met to enter upon the work of the discussion.

Mr. Davis refused to debate the propositions which both had agreed to prior to the fixing of the time for the discussion and to which the names of both parties had been duly signed. Not only this, but the proposition was drawn by Mr. Davis himself, which he refused to discuss.

Elders W. H. Kelley and J. W. Metcalf were present to carry out the work undertaken by them. A goodly crowd had gathered at the meeting-place to listen to the contest, and when the time arrived, Elder Kelley went into the stand, read the proposition with name of Mr. Davis duly signed, and stated that he was ready to go on with the discussion as per agreement, when Mr. Davis and his associate ministers present betook themselves to their heels and refused to enter into a discussion of the propositions to which both parties had agreed. They desired to substitute new propositions, which Elder Kelley would not accept, knowing that the proposed substitution was but a trick to defeat the discussion. He held them to the work already agreed to and hence forced them to a clean back-out.

This took place near Broadhead, Kentucky, surroundings of which are noted on account of the terrible feuds that have taken place within the borders of Kentucky.

Bro. F. Haworth forwards illustrated post cards from Broken Hill, New South Wales, with holiday greetings, and wishes "the HERALD office greater success than hitherto."

Bro. Frederick M. Smith left his editorial desk February 4, for the purpose of attending a reunion of the Smith Family Association, to be held in Salt Lake City, Utah, February 9. He will represent the family resident outside of the valleys of the mountains at this social function.

"THE RESURRECTION."

SERMON BY T. J. SHELDON, AT ENFIELD, ENGLAND, NOVEMBER 2, 1903.

(Reported by Dover E. Judd.)

There is a statement in the prophecies of Daniel relative to the resurrection of the dead. Daniel indicates the thought that there shall be a resurrection of the dead of all men small and great. He says:

And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people: and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time: and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. And they that be wise shall shine in the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever.—Daniel 12: 3.

Now some, we find, shall rise from the dead, and many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, some to shame and everlasting contempt. The brief statement that Daniel has made upon the subject indicates that while men shall rise from the dead there will be a difference in their condition; for some shall have everlasting life, some shame and everlasting contempt. What do we mean when we talk about everlasting life? Do some of the preachers understand what is meant by that term when they use it? Life is just the opposite of death. Life is not comprehended in the statement of existence. A thing may exist without life. Perhaps it is a paradoxical thought that a thing may live without life; yet it is true; that is, it may have a physical life and yet not be living.

Jesus said, "I am come that they may have life; and that they might have it more abundantly." Life means progress, development, and drawing nearer and nearer to God. Death is the opposite of that. Death is the cessation of progress and development. When progress and development cease, shame and everlasting contempt enter in. And some shall awake—the condition will be everlasting life for those who have progressed and developed. Some shall have the opposite of that; they will be held by certain limitations while the righteous shall not be hindered by the same limitations at all. Again, life means uniting everlasting or eternal life, as we can see the term implies, with God. When the soul or spirit is united with God that spirit has eternal or everlasting life. When a spirit is parted from God death then ensues. This spiritual death is the worst of all deaths. Jesus, when making the statement that he came that we might have life, and that we might have it more abundantly, presented the grand truth that he was "the life"; and he says, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." We gather, then, that those who will awaken to everlasting life will simply be raised to a condition and into the sphere in which they may enjoy and more perfectly develop that which they have received here through obedience to the Gospel of Jesus. I can not apprehend that time, I can not bring my mind to think that there will ever come a time when man has placed himself under gospel influences, and received the spirit of the gospel, that is, the Spirit of God, and gone so far that he can go no farther. I do not realize that men can be so limited.

I find a statement in the fourth chapter of Ephesians that bears out this thought, and to this I now direct your attention. Paul says: "But speaking the truth in love may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love." I wish to call your attention to the second chapter of Colossians, nineteenth verse: "And not holding the Head, from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, but knit together, increaseth with the increase of God." To this thought I want to direct your attention: To make increase with the increase of God. It will not be accepted by many that such a thing is possible that man may go by development and progress and become more and more wise. But one of the poets said:

"Truth strengthened by the strength of thought
Pours inexhaustible supplies;
Whence sagest teachers may be taught,
And wisdom's self becomes more wise."

Well, now, man makes progress here; and the gospel law is taught by which man makes progress, and the more man lives in harmony with the gospel law, the more progress he will make. David says: "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple." If the law of the Lord is perfect it will be a step to develop man all it is possible for him to be developed. When we remember that God has put his Holy Spirit in man, and when man possesses the gospel that he received at God's hand, we then see that man is capable of more than we can comprehend.

"According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue: whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust."—2 Peter 1: 3, 4. Here Peter says that we are partakers of the divine nature. If we have been made partakers of the divine nature and permit that nature to develop within us then that power is divine, and if it is divine it is illimitable.

When I represent the statement that in the resurrection some shall arise to everlasting life, and we remember that life means uniting with God and that implies progress and development, we gather the thought at once that everlasting life means everlasting attainment—all the time attaining something. They are not limited because they are believers of the perfect law, and the perfect law will produce perfect results and hence man can develop because he has the divine nature implanted in him when he becomes obedient to the gospel.

Let us look at some of the scriptures which indicate the difference in the condition of the people. I find a statement made in the prophecies of Isaiah explaining how these differences will be recognized:

Thus saith God the Lord, he that created the heavens, and stretched them out; he that spread forth the earth, and that which cometh out of it; he that giveth breath unto the people upon it, and spirit to them that walk therein: I the Lord have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles; to open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison house.—Isaiah 42: 5-7.

Thus saith the Lord, In an acceptable time have I heard thee, and in a day of salvation have I helped thee: and I will preserve thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, to establish the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages; that thou mayest say to the prisoners, Go forth; to them that are in darkness, Shew yourselves. They shall feed in the ways [notice what will be their condition], and their pasture shall be in all high places. They shall not hunger nor thirst; neither shall the heat nor sun smite them: for he that hath mercy on them shall lead them, even by the springs of water shall he guide them. And I will make all my mountains a way, and my highways shall be exalted. Behold, these shall come from afar: and, lo, these from the north and from the west; and these from the land of Sinim.—Isaiah 49: 8-12.

Here it states that the Lord is to bring out the prisoners from the prison; to bring out those who are in darkness—to bring them out of the prison house, and here in the forty-ninth chapter we find a language that is very similar and points to the same thing. And having brought them out of the prison house, he will establish them upon the earth so that they shall inherit the desolate heritages. Why? Because God has had mercy upon them, so the prophet states. Jesus Christ the chosen of God was going to bring the people out of hell after they had been punished for their sins, not before. Go to the ninth chapter of the prophecies of Zechariah, ninth verse. Here is a prophecy referring to Christ—he points out this to us: “Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy King cometh unto thee: he is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass.” There is no doubt that this prophecy refers to Christ. Jesus himself indorsed this, for we read that he sent two of his disciples into the village of Bethphage for the ass and the colt as it was written of him. And if Jesus acknowledged this part of the prophecy, surely he will acknowledge the other part wherein he says: “And I will cut off the chariot from Ephriam, and the horse from Jerusalem, and the battle bow shall be cut off: and he shall speak peace unto the heathen: and his dominion shall be from sea even to sea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth. As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water. Turn you to the stronghold, ye prisoners of hope: even to-day do I declare that I will render double unto thee.”—Verses 10-12.

In the Gospel of Luke you will find corroborative evidence for the position which I have taken. There we read about two men who both died—the rich man and Lazarus. Lazarus was carried by the angels into Abraham’s bosom, while the rich man went to hell. In hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeing Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom, cried for a little water to cool his tongue, but Abraham said between them was fixed a great gulf. There was no water in hell, if there had been the rich man would not have wanted some brought to him from other places. Zechariah, speaking on behalf of the Lord, says: “As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water,” as I have previously quoted. Says one, “I have you there, for between the rich man and Lazarus there is a great gulf fixed: ‘Besides all this there is a great gulf fixed: so that they which would pass from hence to you can not; neither can they pass to us, that would come from thence.’” What is this gulf? Come with me to Isaiah, fifty-ninth chapter, verses one and two, wherein he says: “Behold, the Lord’s hand is not shortened, that it can not save; neither his ear heavy that it can not hear: but your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear.” What have we here? We have a statement that sin and iniquity have separated God from them, and sin is the only thing that will keep men from God. Then sin is separation of man from God. There are two ways to get rid of sin. One way is to have those sins remitted, and the other way is to pay the penalty of suffering for them. The individuals who go to hell are not forgiven for their sins; they do not seek forgiveness in time, and have to suffer therefor. Christ taught that after a man was cast into the prison house he should not come out from thence until he had paid the uttermost farthing; or, as Isaiah puts it, “Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned: for she hath received at the Lord’s hand double for all her sins.” Now if she hath received of the Lord’s hand double for all her sins, there is nothing held against her, and she is counted free. Does this not corroborate Zechariah’s statement: "Turn you to the stronghold, ye prisoners of hope: even to-day do I declare that I will render double unto thee"? God will punish them double for their sins;—once for sinning against their fellow men, and again for breaking his law. It will, as no doubt you will see, be double punishment. After they have been punished doubly for their sins, what becomes of them? "They shall feed in the ways, and their pasture shall be in all high places. They shall not hunger nor thirst: neither shall the heat nor the sun smite them: for he that hath mercy on them shall lead them, even by the springs of water shall he guide them." They shall inhabit places in the earth, but there is not a word said about them going to the celestial city. And when they see the mercy and justice of God, methinks they will be ashamed of themselves to think that they have not served him, to think they have not repented and been obedient to the gospel and lived in accordance with the divine law. It "shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment" than for them. "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." They shall have shame and everlasting contempt when they might have been in the eternal or celestial city where God and Christ are, but they would not. We might gather much more from the Old Testament if time permitted it, but we will now turn to the New Testament.

In the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew we read the parable of the sheep and the goats. We have, however, more than two classes of people. To begin with there is Christ the great King, the angels that are with him, after which comes the brethren of Christ, followed by the sheep and the goats:

When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit down upon the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats: and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me. Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink? When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee? Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee? And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.—Matthew 25:31-40.

What becomes of the goats?—"Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it not unto me."

Every angel, in the meaning of the term, is a just man made perfect, who worked out his salvation with fear and trembling. The spirit shall again live in the body previously inhabited, resurrected, and made perfect by the glorious power of the celestial kingdom.

The goats were sent to a place of torment, prepared for the Devil and his angels; the sheep were rewarded and went to inhabit the kingdom that had been prepared from the foundation of the world. But not so with the brethren of Christ. It does not say anything about them going there, for God has something better for them, which we find recorded in the fourteenth chapter of John. It reads thus: "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."—Verses 1-3. Evidently the place which was to be the eternal abode of the brethren of Christ was not prepared while he was upon the earth or he would not have made this statement. The place for the redeemed was not to be with the brethren, for that was prepared from the foundation of the world; while the disobedient were to inherit the desolate heritages, where in his mercy he shall lead them, even by the springs of water shall he guide them.

For corroborative evidence as to where the children of God are going we can turn to the last chapter of Revelation and the fourteenth verse: "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." And in the preceding chapter we read: "He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son."—Revelation 21:7. The righteous, then, have a right to the celestial city and to be called "sons of God." "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death [of course not, for they have everlasting life], neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."—Revelation 21:4. They are going to dwell in the celestial city, the New Jerusalem, where no sun is needed to give light, for the glory of God dwells there. "And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it: and the Kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it. And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there." Who are the kings of the earth? They must be the followers of Jesus who have been faithful, who have triumphed and overcome. "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." Those who have been obedient to the gospel of Christ and have lived according to their religion, shall be made kings and priests unto God, Christ tells us in the parable of the talents. To one he gave one talent, to another two, and to another he gave five. The man to whom he gave five talents gained another five, making ten talents in all; the one to whom he gave two gained another two, thus making four; while the one to whom he gave one talent went and digged in the earth and hid his Lord's money, therefore gaining nothing and hence was cast into outer darkness because he was an unprofitable servant. Well, to the man who has ten talents the Lord says he will give authority over ten cities, and to the other authority over five cities. What is the meaning of having authority over cities? It means ruling, or, in other words, being kings over them. Then here is the reward: and the kings of the earth shall bring their glory into the city where Jesus is monarch. He is King over his servants—who in their turn are kings, and thus we see Jesus is King of kings and Lord of lords.

Thus we have the city. Those dwelling outside the city are in the light of the city; and the further they get away from the city, the less light they get. Or, as Paul beautifully puts it in the fifteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians: "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars; for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead."—Verses 41, 42.

May God grant that we may so live and so keep his commandments that we may be worthy of the celestial glory, entering into his kingdom, and enjoying these blessings with him, having a right to the tree of life.

"DROWNING MEN CATCH AT STRAWS."

For more than seventy years the world, religious and irreligious, has been moving earth and, it would seem, the nether regions, to find evidence that Joseph Smith was a false prophet. They searched the Scriptures to find it, but the sacred record afforded them no aid. They charged that he got his inspiration for the Book of Mormon from the "Spalding Romance," but that failed them because there was no resemblance between the two. "Spalding's Romance" was a silly, idiotic affair, while the Book of Mormon is a deeply religious work, the precepts it teaches are in perfect accord with the divine teachings in the Bible, and its history shows the dealings of God with his people on this Western Continent, thereby proving that God is the same in all ages, and that his love is not confined to one people, but all are the subjects of his love and care. But these facts are ignored by these "anti-Mormon leagues" and "associations," and every device that human or infernal cunning could suggest has been resorted to by them, but all in vain. They are now confessing their utter failure thus far by their organizing at this late day into anti-Mormon associations, thinking that by their united efforts they can so trim and shape their false charges that they may have the appearance of consistency though they lack the great essential, truth.

Their last resort is to try to fasten the odious and God-forbidden doctrine and practice of polygamy upon Joseph Smith, and in this they seek aid from that faction which departed from the original faith and practice of the Church that demands, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7. Upon any true point of doctrine these antis would not accept the testimonies of the polygamous faction. This huge falsehood was concocted because Brigham Young knew that he could not foist the abomination upon the church without using the name of the martyred Seer, and these antis gladly avail themselves of this rotten straw in order to save their craft by the destruction of what they are pleased to term Mormonism. For more than fifty years the Reorganized Church has challenged the Utah faction to produce evidence that children were born unto Joseph Smith, from the practice of polygamy. No people in the world would be more glad to furnish such evidence, either dead or alive, than would the polygamists; but they have never produced them, for the best of all reasons—that there never were any such evidences. Emma Hale Smith bore five sons unto him, which is abundant proof that he was a proper man, and had there been any such relation between him and other women there would have been fruits of the same, especially if he had half as many wives as his enemies attribute to him.

But if it were possible for these men to establish their claim, that he was a polygamist, would that be evidence that God had not called him to be his servant? If so, it would be evidence that no man who had been contaminated by that evil had ever been called of God, for God is unchangeable and with him there is no respect of persons. We offer no apology for polygamy, be it practised by whomsoever it may be, when we refer to Abraham, "The friend of God," to Jacob who wrestled with God and prevailed, and said, "I have seen God face to face;" to David, the prophet king, the man after God's own heart—"the sweet singer of Israel;" to the divinely inspired Solomon to whom "the Lord God hearkened and appeared to him in a dream by night, and said, Ask what I shall give thee;" and to Gideon to whom the angel of the Lord appeared. Did this wicked practice in this thing prove that God had never favored them by his presence and honored them by a divine mission? If it did the hope of humanity is lost, for both the Old and New Testaments testify to the divinity of their calling, and if they were not so called those documents are a huge falsehood and humanity has no foundation for hope in God.

The fact that those men practised the abomination is only an evidence that they were weak human beings, and in an evil hour they yielded to the lusts of the flesh; but when they forsook their evils, God in his mercy forgave and continued them in his love, so long as they continued to do his will. Those men were not given as perfect examples of purity and patterns of perfection for humanity to follow. Only one man has been given to the world to be a perfect pattern of righteousness in all things, and that is the man Christ Jesus. His example we may safely follow; but we are not warranted in rejecting the truths that God has revealed through any man, however liable to error he may be; hence, while we reject the evils of those men referred to, we honor them for the good they manifested, and in doing so we honor God who sent them.

In a recent number of the Arena we have specimens of the logic of John T. Bridwell. He tries hard to show that Joseph Smith changed the early revelations as they were found in the Book of Commandments, and professes to give one instance from the Book of Commandments. He says: "Many startling changes had occurred in the 'word of the Lord to my servant Joseph.' For instance, the expression, 'I will consecrate the riches of the Gentiles unto my people,' becomes, 'For I will consecrate the riches of those who embrace my gospel among the Gentiles to the poor of my people.'" It is not very uncommon for printers to blunder, and certainly it is the privilege of an author to see that the blunder is corrected. Years ago, I compared the "Book of Commandments" with the book of Doctrine and Covenants and I saw some changes; but, to the best of my recollection, those changes were not contradictory of any principle taught in those books, but simply changes of phraseology. I have not a "Book of Commandments" now, so I can not speak with certainty.

His next point is that Parley P. Pratt, in the Voice of Warning, had misrepresented Boudinot, author of "A Star in the West." "Doctor Boudinot says, in the passage quoted, 'that the book which the white people have was once theirs,'" but Bridwell makes Pratt to say, "It is said among their principal or beloved men, that they have it handed down from their ancestors that such a book as the white people have was once theirs." I hold in my hand the third edition of the Voice of Warning, published by Pratt in Manchester, England, in 1841, and I find that Pratt does not change the text, but quotes the words which Bridwell says Boudinot uses. Pratt does not use the phraseology, "such a book as," that Bridwell attributes to him. But in the revised version of the Voice of Warning, published by the Reorganized Church in 1893, on page 81, the words that Bridwell attributes to Pratt are found. Be it understood that the language is not Pratt's, nor was Joseph Smith, Jr., responsible for it; but the words "such a book as" do not change the sense of Boudinot's version. The Standard Dictionary defines "such:" "Of that kind, of the same or like kind." The Bible is claimed to be a divine or sacred record. The same claim is made for the Book of Mormon, and if Pratt had used the phrase, "such a book," he would have meant simply that it was a book of like character as that which the white people have. Every edition of the Voice of Warning, published by Pratt, which I have read, has been verbatim, in the exact words of that of the first edition published in 1837. The preface to the edition of 1841, now before me, makes no claim to be a revision; but the one published by the Reorganized Church claims to be a "revision" of the original work, and in that Mr. Bridwell finds what he tries to make out to be a misrepresentation, which, in fact, is no misrepresentation, but simply a change of words without a change of the sense. But truly "drowning men catch at straws."

Bridwell's entire article is a batch of sneers and unworthy of the name of argument. He has found out to his confusion that Latter Day Saints are reading men, thinking men, men who can weigh a reason, and if he is to convince them that they have accepted a delusion, sneers will not weigh very heavy with them. Nor must he bring the false statements of avowed enemies to the cause, but bring facts, facts that will not shun the light of day. Upon the false statements of avowed enemies on the one hand, and the lying testimonies of people whose lusts have led them to pervert the right way of the Lord on the other, and in order that their perversions may have some semblance of truth, they have forged the name of Joseph Smith and, eight years after his death, appended it to their bogus revelation, because by no other name could they have hoped to palm the abomination upon the people; upon this kind of testimony Bridwell and his confreres rush to the conclusion that polygamy was an original doctrine of the church, taught and practiced by Joseph Smith.

By such testimony as that Jesus Christ was condemned to death, and it is a notable fact that by such testimony, his people in every age have been condemned, and the course which these anti-Mormon leagues and associations are pursuing proves that this age is no exception to the former ages. But truth can afford to wait, and those who love it may rest assured that it will ultimately prevail.

CHARLES DERRY.

Mr. Editor: Permit me in the interest of truth to add another item which I had overlooked in my article, "Drowning men catch at straws."

Bridwell in his article in the Arena, "Origin of American polygamy," charges P. P. Pratt with misrepresenting Boudinot, by quoting him as follows: "There is a tradition related by an aged indian of the Stockbridge tribe that their fathers were once in possession of a 'Sacred Book' which was handed down from generation to generation and at last hid in the earth," etc. Pratt does not give this as a quotation from Boudinot; he does not even intimate that that was Boudinot's statement. He gives it purely as a tradition related by an aged indian of the Stockbridge tribe. But I am sorry to say that the revised version of the Voice of Warning of 1893, by the Reorganized Church, does contain the blunder of inserting that statement as a quotation from Boudinot, as represented by Bridwell. (See revised version of "A Voice of Warning," 1893, p. 82.) In Parson's Text Book, page 34, is a quotation from "View of the Hebrews," page 67," quoted from "Josiah Priest's Antiquities of America," page 67," as follows: "Doctor West of Stockbridge relates, that an old indian informed him, that his fathers in this country, had not long since been in the possession of a book, which they had for a long time carried with them, but having lost the knowledge of reading it, they buried it with an Indian chief." I think our writers can not be too careful in quoting other authors; we can not afford to misrepresent any more than we can afford to be misrepresented. I am satisfied that the error was an oversight and not willful and should be corrected in future editions. C. D.

A SEASON WITH THE SPIRITUALISTS.

Sunday, October 25, 1903, I spent in the city of Buffalo at the home of Bro. William Brothers, who lives in Carmine Place, and who, with his companion in like faith, and Annie, always accords a welcome to the passing ministry, and any Saints who may be disposed to call. Isolated they are, being some miles from branches or Saint congregations; but they are not forgetful of the work, its demands, its promises and rewards.

Our people are frequently chilled by the snows of separation from church privileges, but upon these noble stalwarts it does not seem to have produced that dire effect, for I observed a commendable constancy in attention to all duties within reach and a spirituality that would credit any Saint surrounded with all that might tend to promote spiritual welfare, and to increase their lustre.

Early Sunday afternoon and before the brother had to mount his object of duty—for he is a motor-man—we had a little Sunday-school exercise, using the Quarterly and quite conforming to the usual curriculum. We realized the divine presence, felt acknowledged, encouraged, cheered. The brother then went on duty and I went to a spiritualist meeting which I shall endeavor to describe.

The meeting was indeed a departure, and for uniqueness I dare say it impressed me something like the first Latter Day Saint meeting did Fanny Stenhouse, which she describes so rapturously in her "Tell It All." There could have been no listener or observer more eager than I to learn all that was to be learned, and to take note of all that was said and done, for I have for many years believed that spiritualism was a revival of what existed in Bible times, and to which the ancients frequently resorted to learn something of the past, present, and future of their individualities.

It may not be proper to speak of the nonexistence of spiritualism during the Dark Ages, the apostasy, or the long reign of "antichrist." There is no reasonable doubt but what these occult forces have found their avenues of manifestation to a greater or less extent from Christ to the present, as well as in all times preceding; only it may not have existed in the completeness that it has since 1848 when the Fox women made their appearance with their astonishing disclosures. And this may be due to the nonexistence of the true church—the genuine power. During the period of apostasy there have been manifestations more or less from both sources. To honest ignorance appeared angel messengers of light; heavenly visions were granted to the persecuted, those who suffered for what they believed to be right. Also the power of the enemy was there and he made a lesser struggle to blot out the faintest spark that radiated on the sons of men. He feared. But it is not to be believed that the adversary would have the same inclination to work when he had everything pretty well in his own hands, when the condition of things existing was the result of his own efforts only a short time before.

The meeting was opened with the singing of singular hymns, but without prayer. No prayer would be offered, of course, because these people only recognize God as the principle of good and the Devil as the principle of evil, neither having any personality. A reading of some length was given, not from the Bible, but from some book which made me think of Dickens, though I do not know that it was from him. After this the clairvoyant moved toward the stand with the remark that he would see what he could do for them. On the stand was a number of papers with questions, or initials of parties, placed there as they entered and who desired of him some light respecting themselves or some matter that had been a source of trouble to them in the past. There were also some portraits submitted. He began to examine all one by one.

As he picked up a paper I could discern a change in his visage. For some moments he was speechless, his eyes partly or entirely closed, and apparently waiting for the "guides," as he termed them, to give him the necessary information. Presently he saw something and began to speak in reference to the party whose paper he held in his hand. Whether his utterances were always the result of what he saw or whether they were sometimes the result of an extraneous force by which he was actuated, inspired, I did not learn; it would seem that he was moved by both, had both at his command.

One thing of which I was convinced beyond a reasonable doubt was that whatever his character may have been or the character of his "guides," he was really in communication with some agency invisible at the time to me, and which had the power to convey to him information and did convey to him information that he could have acquired in no other way. When he would raise a paper from the stand and giving the initials he would say, "Whose is this?" some one would raise his hand or respond, "Mine." Then in communication with something I saw not, he would direct his remarks to the last one to respond. To one young lady he said, "You have been contemplating going off on a visit." She said, "Yes," "Well," he said, "whether or not it is any consolation to you, I will tell you right now that you are not going." To another lady he said, "You've lost something." She acknowledged she had lost a little dog. He said, "I see him, he is shut up. He has been gone about three weeks and is to return to you in about one month from the time he went away, which will be up in another week."

These things were largely prophetic, a matter of the future, their truthfulness or untruthfulness to be revealed by time. But all his statements were not characteristic in this way. To total strangers he made the most positive declarations, sometimes in reference to things of the past and which, if he was only guessing or presuming, would leave him fatally open and expose him ignominiously as an imposter in the first meeting. For a time I cherished an idea, at least during the fore part of the meeting, that he was acquainted with all the parties besides myself and that he spoke according to what he had previously learned of their personalities from themselves. My mind was altogether disabused of this suspicion when, toward the close of the exercise and after he had finished the papers, he addressed himself to me. You may ask, Can it be possible? the infinite presumption of the man! Well, what did he say? Why, he said, "Young man, I am constrained to say to you that your situation in life for the future is well planned in your mind, well decided on. You have no uncertainty as to what you will follow up in time to come." Nothing could have been truer, for I expect always to be in the missionary work and am fully resigned to die with the harness on. He said, "You are soon to experience a change." I asked, As to location? He said, "Yes; you are to take a long journey, and you are going where your surroundings and everything will be a big contrast and much different to what you have been accustomed to in the past." Nothing could have been truer, for I was then in Buffalo largely to ascertain railway rates, the prices of tickets, and to see how cheaply I could reach Winnipeg. I was appointed there at our late district conference and I expect between now and spring to be in Alberta and to behold for the first time the lordly Rockies towering to the skies. I asked again, In what direction am I to journey? A momentary pause; then he said, "West." He told me some other things I will not take space to recount, things I knew too well and which he could have learned only from God or the Devil. All this together with all that I saw and heard there dispelled every doubt from my mind as to the realities of spiritualism.

After the meeting I had friendly interviews with the leader and some female members of his congregation. The name of the former was Doctor Matthews. He was a very respectful and attentive listener to all I had to say, was very reserved and in private capacity seemed more inclined to acquire than to impart. He said he had a mission in Salt Lake City once when there was much discontent among many of the Mormon Church, in consequence of which many fell in with his band. The ladies agreed to investigate our philosophy and more than one of them invited me to their homes. Two of them were mediums themselves. One professed that she saw a spirit behind me as we conversed.

Now who has the audacity to say that they all lied? Certainly they knew whether they saw what they asserted. To say that they were deceived presents a still greater difficulty in that it requires us to believe that they were controlled by some extraordinary agency the immediate influence of which led to their deception. Wide-awake, sane people in the enjoyment of all their faculties—if they could be deceived in those solemn affirmations then how are we to have any certainty in any eternal thing? Even the discovery of some instances among spiritualists wherein their claims, or some particular one, amounted only to a pretense and its publication to the world as such, would not by any means invalidate the testimonies of all others. Our people will readily see this, for there have been numbers of cases found to be merely pretenses among us. They claim to speak in tongues. Tongues have been given among us which were detected to be of the Devil—by his power—and is it then improbable that he would thus manifest himself through them?

I should not be loath to admit that most if not all those seers of spiritualism are deceived in this definite sense, that their apparitions are not what they ascribe them to be. But as to the reality of their seeing something I can not grant that there is any deception about it. Soon as that is demonstrated I should ask for something way beyond what I have ever experienced yet in connection with this latter-day work. Immediately would I be thrown into a most painful uncertainty, for why will not eyes do for spiritualists what they do for any one else? Are we to believe that these external organs, eyes and ears, have been given us to deceive the brain, to manipulate falsehoods, to mislead?

Spiritualism to-day is the antithesis of Latter Day Saintism. It is the embodiment of the opposing element. It is the earthly headquarters of the prince of darkness, the capital of his dominions. Statesmen, capitalists, men in all classes and stations in life are its supporters, its devotees, worshipers at its shrines, the eager recipients of what it has to bestow. This is in harmony with Revelation where John intimates that even kings are to bow to its scepter, to be led by its influences.

To deny that any one now has communication with the Devil is to deny that his power is operative, that whether it ever was or will be it is not now. This will not do. The numerous testimonies and instances are a complete refutation. If spiritualism is true,—that it is, real,—infidelity is not. The reality of spiritualism establishes the existence of immorality and of consciousness hereafter.

We regard the "guides" of the mediums as fallen angels instead of the departed or those who "passed over." It was one of those guides who impersonated Samuel at the instance of the witch of Endor and told him things all of which came to pass exactly as prophesied. How far these fallen spirits, demons, may see into the future we know not—surely not as far as God. But they nevertheless have some power in this direction which is acknowledged by the Bible where it is said: "If there arise among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a sign or a wonder, and the sign or the wonder come to pass, whereof he spake unto thee, saying, Let us go after other gods; . . . thou shalt not hearken unto that prophet."—Deuteronomy 13: 1, 2. "The sign or wonder come to pass." This is an admission that they may come to pass.

Spiritualism has had its apostates as well as any other "ism." Hatch was one. He had a long experience with it, practised it for many years until he became convinced of its evil nature, whence he left it and wrote against them. But it is remarkable that he never denied that it was endowed with the wonderful possibilities I have treated in the preceding portion of this production. On the other hand he staunchly affirmed and continued to affirm their existence. He became convinced that the "guides" were evil instead of good because they gave permission to do things and countenanced conduct that was revolting to his honorable sense of right, God or no God. One of those women over in Buffalo told me that the reception of the manifestations shown that day was not dependent on the purity of the life of the one who received them; that one might receive all I witnessed and at the same time be addicted to or steeped in the very dye of the very blackest crime. They deny the resurrection, deny God, deny the Devil, deny the Bible, deny the marriage covenant, and, in a sense, "forbid to marry." In fact spiritualism may be the remotest condition from this work that may be reached with reference to societies which set up claims counter to our own.

Spiritualism may be in its infancy in respect to the extent of the manifestation of its power. "He knows that he hath but a short time," saith the Revelator. As that time draws to its conclusion it is to be believed that he will exert himself more and more, more desperately than before. There are to be "great signs and wonders insomuch that if it were possible they would deceive even the very elect."

It is something we must not tamper with. It is a crater whose mouth we must not approach too close, the unsafest precipice, a Niagara that dazzles and draws. I should approach it only to find out its character, what it is. I should taste it to ascertain its flavor; then without swallowing any of it I should turn and speed away. He who lingers at its fount may quench his thirst with its impure waters and fall on Gilboa. It made snakes of wood, converted waters into blood, made the frogs come up in abundance, and he who lives will see no less in time to come. Righteousness that will not uncurtain the heavens to let in the resplendency of divine light needed upon a poor soul is meagre indeed; it had better wait and improve.

The number of demons is indefinite. "A third part of the hosts of heaven" may be ten thousand or it may be countless myriads numberless unto man. There may be a limited number low enough to occasion the "prince" a vexation sometimes to find an ambassador for every port; and the number may be so great that two or more could be dispatched to the haunt of every one of the sons and daughters of men.

Of this exceeding throng, one it seems is their prince, their chief, their captain. By virtue of what circumstance he attained that position is not altogether clear. Was it by election after his fall or by occupation before? It is apparent that the affirmative of the latter is correct. Strange that he would rebel against one whom he knew could overpower him and whom he must have known had more strength than he had unless he posed on a very high altitude, higher than others of the "morning stars."

According to Job, first and second chapters, Satan for a time had power to move the Sabeans and Chaldeans to deeds of trespassing, power to make fire come down and devour sheep and herdsmen, power to control the elements. The stock were plundered, fire came down, the house tumbled, all at his instance. Then he had power given him to afflict Job.

Catholics have had their miracles and miracle-mongers during the Middle Ages. Hume gives some instances the truth of which he denied only because he believed a miracle to be a scientific impossibility. Providing they were not scientifically impossible he allows that the testimony was sufficient to prove their genuineness. John Wesley also allows that miracles have been wrought within the church of Rome. He who denies these things is not abreast the times. The evidence is overwhelming. We come in contact with many who ask for signs, who make their faith contingent upon the phenomenal, who promise belief upon condition that they see something. Paul foresaw this and he says that "God shall send them strong delusion that they may believe a lie who believe not the truth but have pleasure in unrighteousness." This strong delusion he said was to be "lying signs and wonders." The very class that urge these conditions upon us are the ones whom spiritualists like to meet; they demand what the latter have on tap.

If I may be permitted to add a few words testimonially I should say that I have had some experience with these spirits myself. By seeing, hearing, and feeling, the three senses, I know that such intelligences are moving about and influencing the actions and conduct of mortal beings when the latter frequently mistake their indispositions for weakness of body, physical infirmity, visible surroundings.

SOME PRESS COMMENTS ON "MORMONISM."

(Compiled by R. C. K. and F. M. S.)

It is not generally known that there are two distinct Mormon churches in this country. One of these churches is known as the Utah Mormons, and they believe in polygamy. The other is called the Josephite Mormons, or Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, and they repudiate polygamy. Both of these churches came from Joe Smith, the fraudulent deceiver, and are equally unscriptural, but the latter church is not quite so corrupt as the Utah contingent. —American Baptist Flag, July 23, 1903.

Wednesday's Keokuk Constitution-Democrat contained a two-column article about the "Mormons in Nauvoo," taken from the Ottumwa, Iowa, Courier. Parts of the article are taken from an article appearing in the Independent several years ago, and this part of the article is correct, while the rest of the article is full of mistakes and incongruities—even absurdities. These are a few statements: "Nauvoo is now a little village of one thousand. . . . As the town now stands it is more asleep than awake. . . . The Mormons were good road builders. The roadways are still in good condition. . . . In the outer edge of town is the little Mormon cemetery where lie Mormons dead and the victims of the Meadow Grove massacre. Emma Smith, first wife of Joseph Smith, is buried here." The article abounds with similar misstatements. If the writer would investigate she would find that Nauvoo is very much alive, a place of fifteen hundred inhabitants, and has other interests besides a "winery." —Nauvoo Independent, July 4, 1903.

Alfred Stafford, of Chagrin Falls, Ohio, who was a schoolmate of Joseph Smith, the Mormon prophet, when the latter was a resident of the Buckeye State, is still living at the age of eighty-eight years. He and his wife celebrated the sixty-second anniversary of their marriage on the 1st inst.—Kansas City Journal, September 11, 1903.

The restoration hosts will assuredly crusade to Utah in 1904. From Chicago and the neighboring States they will move three thousand or four thousand strong. In the West Zion has many followers and they will be expected to join the army.

The founder of Zion City anticipates a decidedly lively campaign against the serried ranks of Mormonism. He thinks that the trend of affairs will be anything but dull. No secret has been made by Doctor Dowie of his longing to contrive a conversion of the Mormons, and the deeds that they hope to do in the Utah stronghold are constantly being discussed by the citizens of Zion.

After the iniquity of Chicago and New York, Doctor Dowie, it is understood, believes Salt Lake City to be the worst of remaining wicked American cities. —Chicago Record-Herald.

William E. Curtis, the Chicago Record-Herald's noted correspondent, writing from Davenport, Iowa, among other things says: "In 1846 the hegira of Brigham Young and his Mormon followers from Nauvoo, Illinois, began, after Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum had been taken from the Carthage jail, where they were imprisoned, and killed by a mob. The Mormons left Kirtland, Ohio, in 1834, and went to Jackson County, Missouri. They were driven from there to Clay County in 1838 and then went to Nauvoo, on the banks of the Mississippi, below Ft. Madison, Iowa, which, it was claimed, was revealed in advance by the Lord to Joseph Smith in a dream. It has been frequently pronounced by experienced engineers to be the finest natural site for a city in the entire Mississippi Valley. After the Mormons were driven out the temple which they had erected at a cost of one million dollars was destroyed, and not one relic of the Mormon occupation remains to-day. Nauvoo is a pleasant little town, with vineyards and wine cellars, occupied by peaceful and happy people." —The Nauvoo Independent, August 22, 1903.

The self-styled Elijah [Alexander Dowie], in his latest project, furnishes another evidence of his aim to emulate Brigham Young and other followers of Joseph Smith, founder of Mormonism. Dowie has been a careful student of the boy who won thousands of converts by pretending to have divine revelations through the angel Moroni, and after inciting civil war, was lynched in a cell at Nauvoo, Illinois. This modern Elijah has adopted Smith's banking and industrial schemes.

Smith died leaving two million dollars. Dowie is reputed to be worth five million dollars. 'Smith's followers built Salt Lake City. Dowie built Zion City, a settlement with ten thousand containing imposing "administration buildings," "hospices," tabernacles and dwellings. He is now successfully operating hotels, "colleges," publishing houses, banks and other institutions in Chicago. Dowie's growth and accomplishment has comparatively far exceeded that of Smith and Brigham Young.

Smith was ruined through his immoral conduct. Dowie's domestic life and moral character are without reproach. Dowie is evidently following the methods of Smith and of Young, but avoiding their mistakes. The Mormon tabernacle as compared with Dowie's proposed structure is an insignificant pile; the Mormon temple, however, which cost six million dollars, surpasses anything in the immediate contemplation of "Elijah." It is Dowie's ambition in later years to erect a temple that will cause the Mormon temple to also pale into insignificance.—Daily Times Index, San Bernardino, California, August 26, 1903.

ZION HAS NO AFFINITY WITH MORMONISM.

Zion has no affinity with the false Zion that has sent forth a false gospel, false prophets, and a false religion under the guise of truth to curse the world. There were many good people deceived by them because the Mormons had, and, I think still have, the capacity of misquoting scripture in order to sustain their position.

Let me remind you that when our Lord was tempted, in each instance, he turned the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, upon the enemy.

In the last temptation the Devil thought that he would try the sword of the Spirit, too. So he set the Son of God upon a pinnacle of the temple, and said: "If thou art the Son of God, cast thyself down: for it is written, he shall give his angels charge concerning thee: and on their hands they shall bear thee up, lest haply thou dash thy foot against a stone." That was quite smart of the Devil, but he forgot that the word of God was not a one-edged sword, but a two-edged sword, and the Christ turned the other edge of the sword and with it overcame the Devil; for he said: "Again it is written, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God."

When these false systems that have cursed America and the world come, they come with many things in their favor. The Mormons taught what the word of God distinctly teaches: that the apostolic, prophetic, and teaching offices are perpetual in the Church, according to 1 Corinthians 12: 28. They taught the perpetual organization of the Church and the gifts of the Spirit as the twelfth chapter of 1 Corinthians teaches it. They taught tithing as God's word has taught it from the far-distant age of Melchisedec, king of Salem, and high priest of God, when Abraham paid tithes to him.

The "Word of Wisdom," of Joseph Smith, contains some excellent provisions for the good of the people.

But with it all came the damning lust; that which enticed, under Mohammed, the tribes of the Koreish to forsake their God and enlist under his banner, namely, that they would have women galore while they lived, and that when they died there would be a host of houris with whom they should dwell in a paradise of damning lust, eating and drinking, and be forever happy, with the happiness of a filthy brute whose highest aspirations never rise higher than its belly. This was the prize that Mohammed offered, and this is the prize that Mohammedism still offers. This was the prize that Joseph Smith and Brigham Young offered. This is the prize, despite all they say, that still underlies Mohammedism and Mormonism, and which, by the grace of God, we hope to do something in smashing.

I want them to understand in New York that the suggestion that in founding the City of Zion I received inspiration and help from Mormonism is false, malignant, and diabolical. I never had any understanding with the Mormon authorities at any time, and I think that it is a base insult; because all of good that Joseph Smith or Brigham Young ever knew, I knew apart from them or any of their followers. I will not be likened unto them; not for a moment! I am their superior mentally, morally, spiritually, intellectually, and every other way, and I will not be likened to these wicked men. [Applause.] I have nothing in common with them, and never have had. If we go to Salt Lake City next year I will let them know that, over the length and breadth of Utah. I am not sure yet that I shall go. . . . But whether I go there or not, you would better believe that all the world will be on tiptoe to see where Zion Restoration Host go next year. [Laughter.]—Leaves of Healing, September 12, 1903.

In August, 1860, a rumored return of the Mormons to Nauvoo under leadership of Joseph Smith, Jr., caused a meeting of citizens of the county to take action. Resolutions were passed protesting against location of Mormons at Nauvoo and that they would not be permitted by the people of the county to return. Copy of resolutions were sent to Joseph Smith, Jr. Meeting also held at Hamilton, passed similar resolutions and stating that Mormons would be kept out "peaceably if we can, forcibly if we must."—Carthage Republican.

A Norse Love-Song.

Breezes low
To and fro
Over the Northern sea;
Sweet and low
Through the snow
Thirma is calling for me.
Now strong her voice through the darkening distance—
Now madly resonant—baffling resistance!
Wails with the wind, rises fierce in its pleading!
Thalkeld is coming, nor elements heeding.
While thou, sweet, art calling—calling!

Breezes low
To and fro
Over the Northern sea;
And I know
Sweet and low,
Thirma is calling for me.
Wind-riven rocks rib the coast of the ocean—
Thor's mighty hand guides the sea's wild commotion—
Viking shades plunder 'mid lightning and thunder—
Grim terrors ride on the flood and the tide,
And Thirma is waiting—waiting!

Back! Move back,
Death-strewn track!
Think not to frighten me!
Naught appals
When Thirma calls—
Demons or raging sea!
Back, all ye elements—back, nor prevent me!
Love hath its mightiest armament sent me!
On through your menacing terrors I'll go—
On to the land of the midnight and snow—
For Thirma is calling—calling!—Denver Times.

The Spices in God's Garden.

The true believer's heart is the "King's garden." It is described in the "Canticles" as a "garden inclosed." The orientals were accustomed to fence in their gardens with hedges of prickly shrubs. Sometimes a stone wall was built, as in the case of the hallowed inclosure around Gethsemane. Outside the garden was often a barren waste. So is the believer's heart kept apart from a world lying in wickedness. "Come out and be ye separate," saith the Lord Almighty.

What are the products of this heart-garden? The singer of Solomon's song tells us that they are "pleasant fruits, with all trees of frankincense and myrrh and aloes, with all the chief spices." These spices are the graces of a Christian's soul. As spices were not native to the oriental garden, but were planted there and required careful cultivation, so the fragrant graces of Christian character are not natural to the human heart. They do not spring spontaneously in any man before conversion. They are the blessed and beautiful results of regeneration. What a vast deal of watching and watering do they require! What constant need there is of that remarkable prayer: "Awake, O north wind, and come, thou south! Blow upon my garden, that the spices thereof may flow out!"

Look at the meaning of this prayer a moment. Its root is found in the fact that, as delicious odors may lie latent in a spice-tree, so graces may lie unexercised and undeveloped in a Christian's heart. There is many a plant of profession; but from the cumberer of the ground there breathes forth no fragrance of holy affections or of godly deeds.

As long as any member of Christ's church lives a hollow life of mere profession; as long as he aims to please himself and not his Savior; as long as he is grasping and self-seeking and self-indulgent and covetous and a lover of pleasure more than a lover of God; so long the professed cinnamon-bush is not a whit better than the Canada thistle.

But even in genuine Christians there are latent graces which require to be drawn forth. And this prayer is for the coming of a "north wind" and of a "south wind," that the fragrance of the soul's spices may flow out. Anything rather than a scentless, formal, fruitless religion.

Let the north wind come, even though it be a cutting wind of conviction! Christians need to be convicted of sin as much as impenitent sinners. The most powerful revivals in churches are those which bring professing Christians to repentance and tears and to the cutting off of "right hand" sins. Awake! O north wind of conviction and blow upon our dull, odorless hearts, that the spices of penitence may flow out.

Sometimes God sends severe blasts of trial upon his children to develop their graces. Just as torches burn most brightly when swung violently to and fro; just as the juniper plant smells sweetest when flung into the flames; so the richest qualities of a Christian often come out under the north wind of suffering and adversity. Bruised hearts often emit the fragrance that God loveth to smell. Almost every true believer's experience contains the record of trials which were sent for the purpose of shaking the spice-tree.

"Who bears a cross prays oft and well;
Bruised herbs send forth the sweetest smell;
Were plants ne'er tossed by stormy wind,
The fragrant spices who would find?"

Trials are of no profit unless improved. We need the Spirit's work at no time more than in our hours of trial. A graceless heart is none the better after affliction. The same wind blows on the thistle-bush and on the spice-tree; but it is only one of them which gives out rich odors. Awake, O north wind, and come thou south? Blow upon my heart, that the perfumes of sweet graces may flow out!

There are two winds mentioned in this beautiful prayer. God may send either or both, as seemeth him good. He may send the north wind of conviction to bring us to repentance, or he may send the south wind of love to melt us into gratitude and holy joy. If we often require the sharp blasts of trial to develop our graces, do we not also need the warm south breezes of his mercy? Do we not need the new sense of Christ's presence in our hearts and the joys of the Holy Ghost? Do we not need to be melted, yea, to be overpowered by the love of Jesus?—Doctor Theodore L. Cuyler.

Sympathy Necessary in the Home.

The powers of wise appreciation of woman should be cultivated to include more than the children in the home. The brother or husband or father, who fights the battle of life, may need the helpfulness of sympathy and proper appreciation more than imagined. No man boldly asks for it; that is beneath his sense of pride; but he needs it and welcomes it. The wife who gives it ungrudgingly by entering into the difficulties of her husband's toil and worry proves a more important factor in his development and ultimate success than she might be if she labored side by side with him at his desk, in the shop or in the field. Woman's mission in life is to encourage and sympathize; to show forth her steady confidence in the ultimate success of those she loves; to share with husband, father, or brother the troubles and difficulties that constantly beset all in the struggle for existence; in short, to appreciate the spirit of every effort put forth in the right cause by giving praise where needed and blame, it may be, when demanded. Discouragement has been the rock on which men have failed.

Many men have succeeded simply because their wives have appreciated their worth, realized the peculiar weak and strong qualities in them and have then steadfastly encouraged them to continuous effort. They were not allowed to fail, because they were told that they possessed qualities that would in the end win. The world often fails to appreciate the value of a man because it has no time to stop and discriminate, but the wife or mother who thus fails falls short of her highest gift, her greatest opportunity.

The power of wise discrimination and appreciation is something that needs the training and development of years to make of the highest benefit. In some women it is born with them; they inherit it from past generations; they had at the beginning good taste, wisdom, and well-balanced reasoning faculties. In most, however, it is produced by the effort to look upon the pleasant side of life and to discriminate closely between good and bad. We exercise our powers of observation, and without trying to be harshly critical we separate that which deserves praise from that which needs condemnation. It is the spirit put in any work more than the work itself that counts. The loving hands of the child that have made a simple gift for us confer far more pleasure than another gift of a skilled artisan.

-Sympathetic appreciation of another's work in life makes the home a happy and successful one. It is in reality an asset of great pecuniary value. It may encourage a man to the performance of works that he would never dream of doing otherwise; it steadies the heart and nerves to be encouraged and stimulated. Half the reward comes sometimes from the expressed appreciation of one we love. This sympathetic attitude of the woman in the home must develop along with those other qualities of affection and love which go to make every happy home circle an ideal place for mutual appreciation.

In the wider circle this attitude of mind and spirit must influence others to greater effort. In church or society work and in the endless little functions of modern life, the sympathetic appreciation of one's aim counts for much. It will often be the great factor to stimulate others to successful effort in lines of useful and charitable industry. Some women possess this faculty of wise appreciation to such an extent that they make enterprises successful simply through their advice and direction without doing any of the actual work. Their presence and words stimulate others to do the work and they merely act as leaders.—The Ledger Monthly.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL SOCIALS.

Dear Teachers: Do you ever have socials in your Sunday-school? I suspect that some teachers who have had experience with socials will say "No," and then add mentally if not openly, "and I am glad of it."

I am ready to admit that the Sunday-school social does often degenerate into rather a noisy and wearisome affair. What we call the "animal spirits" of the children seem to rise to high tide at a Sunday-school social, and they do make a great deal of unnecessary noise. They have a good time, if their teachers and the other elders of the school do not. After all, why not let them race around the vestry and jump over the backs of the settees and have a good time if they will? I suspect that many of us who so severely deprecate performances of this kind did the very same thing when we went to church and Sunday-school socials in our childhood. But then, it is not at all necessary to have this extreme degree of boisterousness in order that the children may be happy. It is possible to keep the boys and girls within proper bounds and to at the same time give them a merry evening. There are amusing games that can be played without ear-piercing noise and wild racing hither and thither, and if all the older teachers and officers unite in an effort to have a jolly and yet reasonably quiet social it can be brought to pass. Little folks under ten or twelve years of age are better off at home and in bed than attending evening affairs of any kind excepting on very special occasions, and the evening social is not one of those occasions.

Older boys and girls can be kept in subjection by a tactful and good-natured committee appointed for that express purpose. We had a social in our Sunday-school the other evening that was a very enjoyable affair. Even the grown-ups said that they enjoyed it. This is a church and Sunday-school composed almost entirely of poor people who have very few social pleasures excepting such as the church and Sunday-school can give them, therefore we have a social of some kind as often as once or twice a month. We have a committee appointed to take charge of the Sunday-school socials and to see to it that a program of games, recitations and music is arranged, with intervals of five or ten minutes for conversation between the numbers on the program. At the last social we had a number of questions written on slips of paper and numbered with the same number at each end of the slip. Then the strips of paper on which the questions were written were cut in the middle and all the questions were well mixed. Then each of the young people drew one of the slips and hunted about until the person holding the other half of the question was found, when the question was discussed for ten minutes, and the slips were all mixed and again drawn and matched. This is an amusing game, and one that will interest young people. The Sunday-school social can be made to add a good deal to the pleasure of boys and girls who have few social pleasures. If some simple refreshments can be served, all the better.

A SUPERINTENDENT.

SOCIAL EVENINGS.

Dear Friends of the Round Table: Having been a Sunday-school teacher for twenty-eight years—twenty-one of which have been given to Bible class work, the members of which have held monthly class socials—I surely ought to be able to say something on the subject of "social evenings with the class."

The Bible class, referred to above, is composed entirely of young men, and the socials held by them are largely attended and prove very enjoyable.

The merriest evenings have been those in which the entertainment provided has been of such a character as to allow the meeting and greeting of each person with every other individual present.

A "Proverb Social" serves this purpose well. Make out a long list of familiar proverbs. Write half of one of these proverbs on a slip of paper, and the remaining half on another slip. Commence the first half of the proverb with a capital letter, and the second half always with a "small" letter. Pin these slips on the curtains, in the picture frames, etc., in all the different rooms. Each guest takes a slip commencing with a capital letter, and is not allowed to "drop" the same or take another new slip until he has found the mate of the first one held. Having been successful, another capital-lettered slip is taken, and the search continued. At the close of the contest, the person holding the largest number of these mated slips is, of course, the winner, and can be awarded a prize or not as is thought best.

Another pleasant diversion is to have ready slips of paper on which have been written the names of prominent Bible characters. As each guest arrives one of these is pinned at the back of the neck, there to remain until, by questioning his neighbors, he is able to tell who this individual is. No question can be asked except such as may be answered by "yes" or "no."

Many persons do not know that, by carefully dropping penny nails, one at a time, into a glass full of water, the surprising number of nearly two hundred may be dropped in before a drop of water will overflow. Care must be taken, however, in filling the glass, not to wet the outside edges of the same; therefore, at the last, fill up the glass by adding the water with a spoon, as the outside of the glass must be perfectly dry. It is interesting to have young people guess at the number of nails which can be so put in before an overflow will occur, as they generally come wide of the mark. The floor must not be jarred while the nails are being dropped in the glass.

If time and space would allow, I should be glad to speak of other, and perhaps far better ways, of passing a social evening, for, during these many years past, we have tried many novel ways for entertaining; among them being an auction party, an informal musical, an excursion train, a passing party, etc. I should be glad to exchange ideas with any of you who are trying to make the social life helpful to the spiritual. Through the columns of the Round Table over a year ago I became acquainted with a Bible class teacher in Los Angeles, California, and the exchange of letters has been helpful to us both, I am sure. I should be glad to receive a personal letter from one or more of the "workers," and exchange ideas as to how to entertain my class in a social way.

Questions and Answers.

1. Q.—Should there be a general review of the lesson at every session at the close of class work? A.—Yes. The objects of a review being to make clear any obscure point, to correct possible errors, and to make impressive the teaching points of the lesson, as well as to stimulate both teacher and scholar to more and better work, it would naturally follow that this would be needed every session.

2. Q.—Who should conduct the review? A.—The superintendent, or any competent person whom the superintendent may appoint.

3. Q.—Do you think it well to have it conducted often by the teachers or not? A.—This might depend very largely upon the circumstances. If the teachers were all fairly competent to conduct a general review, and if the superintendent were not competent, it might be well to have the teachers pressed into this service very "often." But the constant change in the person of the one to conduct review does not always augur well for the review. We like the idea of pressing the several workers into the service occasionally and think it will be for the best interest of the work in general to do so, but we would not allow the changes to be made too often.

4. Q.—Are the review questions in the Quarterly intended for use in the class or in the general review? A.—It is not intended that these questions should be used verbatim or adhered to strictly by any one. The teacher or the superintendent who confines his work to the questions in the Quarterly exclusively or strictly, or who does not vary his work from the printed form, becomes a slave to the work and will not accomplish the good that he would accomplish if he would break over the printed form and ask questions in his own language, or give directions not found in the Quarterly. The questions are very good and to the point, but we must not get into a rut in our work and remain there. We must have some originality and variety in our work or we will become monotonous or tedious in our work and lose the interest of our class. Ask the questions if you can do no better or till you can do otherwise; but try little by little to get out of the stereotyped form of teaching into which we are too liable to fall.

5. Q.—How would you treat the lessons in the teachers' meeting? Is there any better way than simply to ask the questions and discuss them? What attention should be given the different grades of Quarterly in the teachers' meeting? A.—From the fact that at almost every teachers' meeting there will be some one who has not studied the lesson, it will be necessary to go through it from the beginning. In the study of the lesson it will be found advantageous to study the lesson in the Primary Quarterly first. Then take the other grades and study the lesson in detail. Briefly review the previous lesson. Read carefully the introduction and outline of the lesson. Read the lesson text. Then study it verse by verse in connection with the comments in the Quarterly, side references, etc. Note the golden text and its application. Also memory verse. Canvas the review questions. Decide upon the "central truth" or "truths." Consult on any other pertinent points.

Parley P. Pratt and the "Voice of Warning."

Editors Herald: I wrote you some time ago about the question of Parley P. Pratt being guilty of manufacturing evidence in his quotations from Elias Boudinot in the Voice of Warning. This charge was first made (within my knowledge) by Elder John T. Bridwell, general secretary of the National Anti-Mormon Missionary Association, in a debate with Elder J. F. McDowell held at McArthur, Ohio, and repeated at Creola, Ohio, in January, 1902. He then placed himself in type in the Arena for May, 1903, reiterating and repeating the assertion and making a specious argument from his "discovery" (?) and challenging the correctness of his position being overthrown.

Your correspondent took the position that only the sentence at the top of page 82, our edition of Voice of Warning, ending with the words "in which it differs from most other languages," was all that Pratt intended as a quotation from Boudinot; that the remainder of the quotation in regard to the Stockbridge Indian's relation of a sacred book being hid in the earth was Pratt's own language drawn from a source not given, and that the quotation marks were by a printer's error set down seven lines too far and thereby put Pratt's own words into Boudinot's mouth.

I wrote a letter to the historian of the Salt Lake Church and asked for information in regard to the matter, and through the kindness of Elder B. H. Roberts, assistant historian, I secured a copy of the 1854 edition of the Voice of Warning and the information that every edition published by the Salt Lake people had it correct, thus exonerating Pratt from forgery or manufacturing evidence. Elder Roberts also sent me a manuscript which he had sent to the Arena Publishing Company straightening out the matter; but with the usual unfairness shown anything that savors of Mormonism the manuscript was rejected, thus leaving the false charge standing without a refutation.

As an organization we have always favored turning on the light of truth. Even though we lose a point it is more than replaced by the consciousness that we have the truth which is always more valuable than gold. So in this matter, we must admit that in our editions the typographical errors crept in; but we may still rejoice that the early Church is exonerated from the charge of manufacturing evidence to support its claims.

But the question may arise, Where did Pratt get his data for his "sacred book" statement? After a year's rummaging of old musty books on kindred subjects I found the following in a book published by Reverend Ethan Smith, Poultney, Vermont, second edition 1824, entitled "A View of the Hebrews," on page 223: "Reverend Doctor West of Stockbridge gave the following information: An old Indian informed him that his fathers in this country had not long since had a book which they had for a long time preserved and having lost the knowledge of reading it, they concluded it would be of no further use to them; and they buried it with an Indian chief."

Thus nearly every material allegation of Pratt is provided for and the National Anti-Mormon Missionary Association has one more prop knocked from under its already shaky foundation. I called upon Elder Bridwell and asked him to give me some acknowledgment of his erroneous deductions, but he flatly refused on the grounds that he had based his argument on our book and if our book was wrong we must stand the result.

CREOLA, Ohio.

A. B. KIRKENDALL.

SPRINGFIELD, Missouri, January 25, 1904.

Editors Herald: Having been silent for years, I trust that it will not be considered an intrusion upon the fair pages of our church organ, should I write of a few things that have come under my observation, in the way of news.

First of all I wish to make mention of the public debate here in the Saints' church between Elder H. Sparling and the Reverend O. M. Thomason of the so-called Church of Christ, Christian Church, Campbellite, or what not, for I note that the Christian Standard, and the Firm Foundation do not agree either on name or organization. However, according to the Christian Standard these congregations differ on the question of missionary organization, etc.; but this does not put them (Church of Christ and Christian Church) in separate organizations, says the writer, J. A. Lord. The discussion began January 11 and continued twelve nights. Each affirmed his respective church for six nights, Elder Sparling taking the lead, and with the exception of one or two stormy nights the house was overcrowded and standing room was at a premium, some being turned away.

Reverend Thomason entered into the debate in a mild form, stating that he wanted to act fair toward his opponent and not use any books not indorsed by Elder Sparling. But as the debate progressed he began the usual mud-slinging.

At the close Reverend Thomason arose and said his opponent was not fair or gentlemanly in a discussion and he could not shake hands with him as a friend or as a Christian, and that it would be the last time that he would enter into a discussion with any one, save the one that had framed the propositions, and that I. N. White would not get him into that kind of a trap again. Elder Sparling stated that notwithstanding the fact that his opponent had grossly misrepresented our faith, yet he entertained no hardness against him, as he had possibly used the best argument he had at his command, and that he could freely shake hands with Reverend Thomason, and walked over and extended his right hand, which Thomason refused.

No one was lost as far as we know, but all left strong in the faith. As for myself, I entertain no hardness against Reverend Thomason, nor his people, who are generally good, law-abiding citizens, and he, like Paul of old, is fighting the truth and knows it not. If he be truly honest, the eyes of his understanding may yet be opened, and in time he may become a defender of what he now tries to tear down.

But now a few words about the Beaver Branch and our needs. A renewed effort is now being put forth to build a church house, which is now badly needed, as quite a number of Saints have moved in during the past year, four families the past two months, swelling the membership, when letters are received, to about fifty-five. On January 4 the branch met, the old committee, J. C. Chrestensen and J. E. Swegart, were continued, Bro. Benjamin Pearson was added and appointed treasurer; one acre of land was promised by Bro. Geo. G. Chrestensen for a church site, and the work will begin as soon as possible. But the Saints are generally poor in this world's goods, as is well known, hence if any one in or out of the church feels disposed to help us financially or otherwise in the erection of a church, with a free pulpit and an open bible, it will be thankfully received, and receipted for. Send all moneys to Benjamin Pearson, Beaver, Douglas County, Missouri. Money orders should be made on either Ava or Seymour, Missouri, as Beaver is not a money order office; but be sure to send the order to Bro. Pearson at Beaver, or any of the committee, if so desired by the giver. No doubt the church would have been built ere this, but for the drouth of three years ago, which brought everything to a standstill. If unable to help us just at present, write and tell us when you can and will. We must have a house of worship, as private houses are getting too small and many do not want to attend in private houses. Where there is a will there must assuredly be a way, so by the help of God we are going to try, try again, praying and working for success.

Yours in gospel bonds,
1928 Vernon Avenue.

J. C. CHRESTENSEN.

DES MOINES, Iowa, February 5, 1904.

Dear Herald: We mentioned in a former letter the movement of the Saints in this city to secure a larger and more commodious house of worship. The desired end has been accomplished much sooner than was expected and another house of worship is now in possession of the church here.

When it became known in the city that the Latter Day Saints were going to have a new church building an offer of another church property was placed before our people. The Methodist Protestant people had vacated their church property, and the man in possession of the same offered it to the Saints. A committee of two was appointed to act for the Church, and they completed the transaction by which we came into possession of the church above referred to, our old church going in as part of the purchase price. The Saints here now have possession of the new church building and will occupy it for service about April 1. In the meantime some needed repairs will be made.

The new church is located at East Fourteenth and Lyon Streets, three blocks from the old church. It is two blocks from the Walker Street car line, two blocks from the East Grand Avenue car line, two blocks from the fair grounds car line, and two blocks from the Interurban line. The building is a frame structure with an audience-room of a seating capacity of near four hundred, and one lecture-room, furnace heat, and a three-room cottage on the church lot belongs to the church.

The church when ready for occupancy by our people will be a neat and comfortable house of worship, adequate for the needs of the church at the present time, and we believe that this solution of the question of a church building in the city will meet with the general approval of all. The financial part of the question will be met cheerfully by the Saints, and the church as a body unitedly looks forward in happy anticipation of occupying the new building.

STEUBENVILLE, Ohio, January 23, 1904.

Editors Herald: In looking over the index of HERALD for 1903, I do not see a single letter from me during the year, hence I resolve not to let this year go by without contributing something to your estimable paper. However, during the eventful year just for ever closed, I have not been idle; but on the contrary it has been the most active year of my ministerial life. My health has improved very much since last spring, greatly encouraging me to redouble my diligence in the blessed cause of soul-saving. My afflictions at times seemed almost unbearable, but they have proven to me this one grand fact: that in all things we must put ourselves entirely in the hands of God. Learn to be more trustful, cultivate that child-like confidence, and let our faith in the promises of the gospel be uncompromising. Too often we suffer the extremities of man before we seek the opportunities of God. If God, Christ, and the hope of the Saints are all we claim for them, what have we to fear, or why should we doubt or falter upon the threshold of duty? What meaning there is in the admonition of the Master, "Have faith in God," and "With faith all things are possible"! The study of faith is unlimited, the power of faith is boundless. How apt we are to descant upon the faith of the dear dead past with all its wondrous achievements, bask in the dim shadows of historical monuments, but when it comes to applying it to present demands, it has disappeared with its sweet songs like the melody of the robin as soon as night hangs its mantle of darkness over the earth.

"Shall I find faith on the earth?" is a cogent question propounded by the Savior. Judging from the growing infidelity, mad rush for wealth, the mysterious works of necromancy, and "vain philosophy of men," it will be at a very low ebb.

With all our optimistic proclivities, endeavoring to look on the bright side of all things, I see nothing but tumult, disaster, bloodshed, and death on all sides. In the midst of it all how thankful we should be to God for the glorious deliverance he has made possible for his Saints. Are we preparing to enter with honors, or are we going to suffer ourselves to fall in the march like rebellious Israel, or, worse still, to sleep upon our opportunities and be rejected as those of more recent times? The Church is about to make mighty advancements toward the accomplishment of the marvelous things foretold by the prophets of old, confirmed by the prophets of to-day, and adored by the saints of all ages. Are we ready to keep our places in this great march, or will we go just far enough to view the promised land and then be shut out? "He that endureth to the end shall be saved."

How often have I been impressed with the importance of the times in which we now live, and more especially since last August! At that time I was called to Kirtland on church business. While there I occupied the old sacred stand, the same desk from which the martyrs of blessed memory proclaimed the joyful news of Zion's redemption. The hallowed influence so characteristic of this divinely erected structure was perceptibly felt. In the audience was Bishop Kelley, who at that time received satisfactory evidence to take immediate steps to restore the veils of the Temple, and that, too, before the convening of the General Conference. From the stand in the afternoon meeting he declared his intentions, adding that if he failed it would be because the Saints did not come to his aid. Have we done anything toward this important undertaking? I know some in these parts who have done considerable. I was made glad last evening while talking over this matter to hear a brother say he had five dollars or more for this purpose.

The Lord has declared the waste places of Zion must be built up. Is Kirtland not one of them, and the complete restoration of the Temple essential? "Remember Lot's wife." In the old organization Kirtland was a stake, and to me it will not be strange to see it again a stake, and that soon, too, that the Saints of the East might have a place of safety when anarchy and the great pending conflict between capital and labor shall almost depopulate the earth, and the many other perils spoken of in prophecy just prior to the end. A mere glance at the unsettled state of the political, religious, and industrial world urged to frenzy by the insatiable greed for wealth, reveals the wisdom and goodness of God in having a place or places for the protection of his people. The serious question for us to decide is, Are we contributing to secure us an entitled right in the harbor of rest? These are but hints, but to the wise are sufficient.

The work in these parts is gradually gaining ground. A number of new openings have been made, and with very few exceptions, followed with baptisms, and good prospects for further ingathering. The brethren have been faithfully discharging their duty. During conference year about forty baptisms have been reported in this part of the mission, aside from some by the local brethren, of which I have no record.

We have effected a good opening at Monongahela City, Pennsylvania, through the untiring efforts of Bro. and Sr. Beam. Sr. Beam has interested her neighbors, and secured places to preach in their homes, while Bro. Beam has labored and cheerfully supplied the recurring needs of the outer man. Scores of families have thrown open their doors and invited us to preach, which we have been doing most all winter. As a result two have been baptized so far, Bro. and Sr. Lamer, of excellent reputation and influence among their neighbors. Numbers of others are waiting a more favorable opportunity. Yet, Brother Editor, I heartily coincide with your editorial on sticking to a place until we raise up a congregation or preach ourselves out of one.

I find house to house work the best way of interesting people in the gospel. You can talk more direct to the question and mostly to those who are specially interested. With street preaching in the summer and private house preaching in the winter there is no need to be idle. I will tell you the scheme Sr. Beam employed, and one which any can use with fruitful results if they will: She took out an agency for a Bible and went from house to house canvassing, which invariably led to a conversation on religion—the only purpose in selling the Bible. And before the conversation would be closed they would be sufficiently interested to grant a request for preaching in their house and thus it goes from one to another, contagion-like, until the entire city will likely hear from us. Why can not others do this, and help the elders greatly in their work? Much of our time is taken up in securing places to preach, but when places are already secured, the help and benefit can hardly be appreciated.

I recently returned from Southern Ohio, where I went with my family to my wife's people. They will remain there for the winter, after an absence of over four years. The meeting can only be realized by those of similar experience. How the corroding influences of time have left their grim traces along the way of mortal travel. Faces that once greeted us with a cheerful smile, hands that once ministered so willingly to our needs, were not there to give us the saintly welcome. Great heroes die and are soon forgotten, but kind deeds of the humblest live for ever.

The four years spent at Conneautville, Pennsylvania, have brought forth their share of experience, some pleasant, some otherwise. The pleasant ones we shall always cherish, the others we shall try to profit by.

No institution on earth affords better opportunity for the study of human character, in all its attributes, than this latter day work. The divine reflector is turned upon us in all its penetrating force. While man can not, or will not, always see the actuating motive in the course of others, there is unfading consolation in the fact that the One before whom we must stand and render account for every thought, deed, and action, has a far different way of determining the worth of man.

While in Southern Ohio I met and had a very pleasant but brief association with Bro. Etzenhouser, who is assiduously engaged, by precept and example, in maintaining the exalted standard to which the Saints are to ascend.

The hour came to separate from loved ones, to be away likely till after the General Conference, and then I passed through an experience for the first time and one of which I have heard others speak. A sweet little boy of four years, just beginning to realize a father's love, clinging to my hand and pitifully begging me not to leave him, and would not be put off with anything but the assurance I would soon return, while the angelic smiles of another of ten months indicated perfect content with or without a father's care. Soothing the oft-repeated solicitations the best I could with the feeling that they were in good hands, I stepped into the buggy of Bro. Isaac Woods, who is always on hand to cheerfully make the drive of sixteen miles with the missionary. I consoled myself with the comforting thought that the sacrifice is all for the dear Lord who has done so much for me, and the blessed time when we shall dwell with the redeemed, when "peace, like a river, shall flow."

Reaching Columbus, the capital of the State, I wended my way to the pleasant home of Bro. French and mother. Found Bro. Harry suffering with pneumonia; administered to him, and he got better. He has done much to lend a good influence to the work there. I met with them in their prayer-meeting and felt blessed, and called on Bro. J. E. Matthews, found him out of the city, but had a pleasant visit with Sr. Matthews and did justice to a good supper. Coming by Cambridge I stopped off and spent a day with the Byesville Saints of past pleasant association. I find them still clinging on to their old habit of letting a dollar or two slip through their fingers into the missionary's hand—not a bad habit, Saints, and I am perfectly willing to let it go unrebuked. Had not time to call on all, but they are still remembered.

With Bro. Becker, one of the missionaries for this district who resides there, we boarded train for Wheeling, West Virginia, where I met with the Saints on Sunday, enjoying the peaceful Spirit to a marked degree, awakening within my soul many pleasant experiences of bygone years. The spot where you were buried with your Redeemer in baptism, the place where you first raised your feeble voice to thank your God for his redeeming love, the pulpit from which you made your first attempt to declare the sweet message of life, are all places of sacred memory. After the social service I baptized a sister in the waters of the Ohio.

I have noticed in several issues of the HERALD recently where special mention was made of the missionary in charge having preached more sermons than any of the missionaries under him. In the last HERALD I note this: "As is the case in many fields, the minister in charge of the mission heads the list as to number of times preached." Mr. Editor, please do not think I am posing as a critic or in the least finding fault, but let me offer a word for the lesser fellows. This is commendable and reflects credit on the earnestness and faithfulness of our superiors, but do you not think it might be interpreted by some not acquainted with field operations to mean that some of us are not as diligent as we should be? Just a word of explanation and I think all will be able to see the reason for my query and why the minister in charge reports the greatest number of sermons. First, those in charge of missions are usually of uncommon prominence in the Church and their preaching is mostly in demand. Of this we make no complaint. Second, they attend most all the conferences throughout their respective missions, and are most always the principal speakers. This is as it should be. Perhaps several of the traveling elders are present, but time or wisdom, or both, do not offer to them the same opportunity. Third, their work calls them among the branches the major part of the time, where appointments have gone on ahead—perhaps to begin a series of meetings on the evening of their arrival, while the elder or seventy, if he is honoring his calling, is out among entire strangers to the faith, having no one to secure a place or even make an announcement, and very probably spending several days or a week in getting a place to preach. I have on several occasions spent an entire week in securing a place to preach, and after preaching my first sermon, would be informed I could no longer have the building. Elder R. Baldwin and myself spent two weeks one time in going from place to place in trying to get places to preach. This is a common occurrence among the elders. Just last week two of the traveling elders waited a week in getting the privilege to occupy; went to the schoolhouse, only to meet the directors who had promised them the use of the building, and be informed that during the day they had concluded not to let them use the building, and then had not even the privilege of explaining to the public. Fourth, when the ordinary minister is holding tent services or any other series of meetings, and our minister in charge drops in, it is for respect due him as well as the people to have him occupy most of the time, and this we are always glad to do, especially with our minister in charge here; we never get tired of him. And last, but not least, in many cases the ministers travel two by two, as the Lord directs, and thus the honors are divided between them, while the minister in charge travels mostly alone. For the last four years

I have had a traveling mate. Had one of us been by himself he might have had as many sermons to report as the minister in charge. Please have mercy on the little fellow.

I am here holding meetings nightly at the home of Sr. Edwards, and have the assistance of Brn. Reese Jenkins, Adolphus and John Edwards, and the singing of their wives and Srs. Annie and Joseph Edwards. They are Welsh, which explains their singing ability. The three first named are elders; they hold regular services, and have not failed to let their neighbors know of the faith. There are fifteen Saints here, whom we hope to see organized into a branch ere long.

Please pardon this long letter. It may not be appreciated, but I have thought to make up for lost time.

Cheerfully in the conflict,

F. J. EBELING.

Editors Herald: It may be interesting to some of your readers to learn how the work is progressing in the southwestern part of Colorado and in New Mexico. There has been very little work performed in this section of the country for some time.

About thirty miles east of Durango, Colorado, I baptized five, and four of them were heads of families. I organized a Sunday-school and made arrangements for prayer-meetings every Sunday evening, and left the Saints feeling well in the work. I expect to return and do more work there on my way to the Denver conference to be held the first of March. The work in Durango is in good condition under the care of Bro. W. B. Farley. While laboring there this winter I baptized eight, a Sunday-school has been organized with an attendance of about thirty, and the prospects are good for a branch to be organized in the near future, as there are fifteen members there at present and several members are living in the country. There has never been any branch organization in this part of the district, but we hope for one in the near future.

I spent about a week at Flora Vista, New Mexico, where the Methodists and Presbyterians each have a church building; but we are not allowed to tell the gospel story in either. I held a few services in Bro. A. Crandal's house, but only a few came out to hear.

At present I am holding forth in the Adventist church at this place, and notwithstanding the Methodists and Presbyterians are holding a big revival, I have preached two evenings and have had a very good hearing. I expect to continue as long as wisdom directs.

During this conference year I have baptized twenty-five and expect to trouble the water again before the year is ended. It has not been all sunshine, but we have moved forward feeling that in working for the Master we were laying up treasures in heaven.

Bro. and Sr. Crouch are the only members we have here and they are on the shady side of life, he being eighty-three and she sixty-seven. Their home is always open to the missionary and he is made welcome. They enjoy reading the HERALD and gave me five dollars to send to you so that the good news may still keep up its weekly visit.

J. T. CURTIS.

BERRYDALE, Florida, January 26, 1904.

Editors Herald: As it has been quite a while since I have seen any thing from this part of the field I thought a few words at present would not be out of place. Our missionary in charge, Bro. I. N. Roberts, left this part of his mission about the tenth of December, and wending his way through the mission, stopping at different places, is now at the home of his boyhood days in Virginia. I trust that his visit to his old home will be pleasant to him and profitable to the Church in getting the work planted in that vicinity.

The work is moving along reasonably well in this part of the vineyard, so far as I know. The Sunday-school organized at this place by Bro. T. A. Hougas, is progressing nicely and I hope it will continue and that it may be a power for good among the young and rising generation.

I have been talking Religio to the Saints here, but can not say that conditions are ripe for such an organization yet. There are so many of the men engaged in public works that it makes it hard to keep an interest in any kind of religious work. I would be glad to see all the Saints take an interest in the Sunday-school and Religio work and push it to the front where it should be. This part of the work has been badly neglected in this mission, and I trust that Bro. Hougas' visit to the "Sunny South" will have its desired effect in years to come. I think he accomplished good wherever he went and left many warm friends who speak of him and his work often. May the Lord bless him in his work and may he again be permitted to visit this part of the field at no distant day. I find many warm hearted Saints in the South where ever I have been, who seem to want to do what they can for the advancement of this work.

I appreciate the kindness of all who have administered to my needs and wants. May the Lord bless his Saints and enable them to come up higher and live nearer to him, is the prayer of your brother,
W. R. SMITH.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. Richard Ferris writing from Oakland, California, to Bishop Kelley, January 28: "The Saints in San Francisco baptized seven last Sunday (24), and are making efforts to build a church. The Saints in Oakland and Berkeley are moving along quietly. . . . Bro. Alpheus Haws just returned from a visit to Utah. He labored with the people there telling them that he was in the meeting when the Martyr led his son Joseph forward, saying, Here is your leader and prophet, and that he had heard Brigham say that, 'Little Joseph would lead the church.' That his father refused to let Brigham baptize him at Salt Lake, telling him that he would not be baptized into Brigham's organization and out of the church."

We remember Peter Haws, the father of Alpheus and Albert, quite well. We also remember seeing Peter Haws and George Miller, after they made their stand against the "iniquity" that "came in like a flood." Whatever they may have become after the departure from Nauvoo, we did not know, but we had some reason to believe that their opposition to Brigham Young's rule was sincere.

Bro. Alvin Knisley writes from Treherne, Manitoba, date not given; but with postmark of February 2: "I have just baptized and confirmed three more this Sunday afternoon and five last Sunday. The three are Mrs. Graham, aged seventy-one, a Disciple formerly, a Mr. Graham, and a Mr. Sorenson. Others are near and I rather expect a number more by Sunday next. I have calls for preaching from different localities."

Sr. Polly Morris of Lebanon, Oregon, writes: "There are four or five members living here. We only hear preaching occasionally. People here are more or less prejudiced and it is seldom we can obtain a house to preach in. I hope the elders will continue to call on us, for we will try to assist the work as much as possible. There is something for us all to do in this great latter day work. We have been handing out our HERALDS and Ensigns and tracts to the people who will receive them. What the results will be time will tell."

Sr. Annie Fetter writes from Hampton, Nebraska: "We are isolated Saints and if any of the elders come through this way our home is open to them. Hampton is on the Burlington Railroad between Lincoln and Grand Island."

Elder W. A. Smith wrote from Logan, Iowa, January 30: "I am holding meetings at the above place with fair attendance and good attention. Expect to baptize some to-morrow. Bro. G. H. Hilliard was with us two nights this week and gave us two good sermons. The prospects are bright in this district."

Miscellaneous Department.

Section 20. Eighth line, after the word "proposition," read, "couched in such words as will express if assented to by the requisite number, the judgment or will of the assembly," instead of the present reading; also in line fifteen, after the word "not," insert the word "express" and strike out the words "or may be modified so as to be made to express."

Insert after subdivision 5, page 20, the words "the presiding officer may read while seated, but should rise to state a motion or put a question to the assembly."

Insert after the word "receive" in subdivision 12, page 21, the words "and announce" and strike out the three last words.

On page 22, strike out all of subdivision 19.

Page 24, change division a to read, "It is the privilege of the secretary to have one or more assistants or clerks who may be chosen by vote of the assembly," instead of the present reading.

Section 24, page 25, beginning in middle of tenth line, read, "On the other hand, it is the duty of every one to so conduct himself, in debate and in his general deportment in the assembly, as not to obstruct any other member in the enjoyment of his equal rights," instead of the present reading; and in the fifteenth line, insert the word "the" before the word "members."

Page 30, top line, insert between the words "and" and "to" the words "is permitted."

Section 46, page 37, transpose the word "regularly" to end of clause and amend by adding to section the following: "The presiding officer is not obliged to present any communication or petition sent to him by persons not members of the body over which he presides. If he were, then outsiders would possess one of the attributes of membership. The only way outsiders can reach the assembly is through one of its members."

Page 42, subdivision 1, fifth line, for the words "previous question," read, "motion to lie on the table."

Section 55, pages 44 and 45. Page 44, beginning with the word "shall" in the sixth line from the bottom of the page and ending with the word "question," tenth line on page 45, strike out, and insert the following: "Shall the vote now be taken?"

Page 46, strike out all between the words "the" in the third line and "it" in the fifth line and insert the following: "vote now be taken, or Mr. 'A' demands the previous question. As many as are in favor of ordering the previous question will say aye; as many as are opposed will say no."

Section 56, page 46, amend by adding after the word "discontinuance" the following: "As an affirmative vote on a motion for indefinite postponement may decide the main question, the motion is at once debatable and opens the main question for discussion. The motion can not be amended."

Section 57, page 46, amend by adding at the close "The motion to lie on the table, or to lay the matter upon the table, has become to be considered a means of disposing of a question without taking a vote upon it and so becomes equivalent to a motion to indefinitely postpone. In the United States House of Representatives an affirmative vote on the motion to lay upon the table defeats the proposition, and deliberative bodies, especially in the United States, generally construe the effect of an affirmative vote on this motion to be a final disposition of it."

Section 59. Strike out all after the word "assembly" in the tenth line and insert the following: "But owing to the fact stated that deliberative bodies now quite generally construe an affirmative vote on the matter to lie on the table to be a final disposition, thus removing it for ever from before the body, it is better to provide for the foregoing contingency by definite postponement."

Page 50, second line from top, strike out the words "into separate parts" and in the third line, strike out the word "severally" and insert "separately."

He may also yield for a motion to adjourn, or take a recess, or for the rising of the committee of the whole, without losing his right to resume the floor if either motion is denied. Or if the motion carries, he has a right to the floor at the next session when the subject is resumed before the assembly or committee. The one who has the floor and yields under the foregoing conditions has a right to resume, because the motions are indifferent, simply affecting the sitting of the body. But he has no right to yield to the mover of another kind of motion; if he yields he must do so for all purposes," instead of present reading.

Page 86, subdivision e, third line from bottom, strike out the words "as it were."

STAKES.

The Organizations of Stakes are formed under the direct command of the Lord. (Doctrine and Covenants 117: 10; 125: 10.)

They are for the purpose of bringing the Saints nearer together in their work and the more complete systematizing and honoring of the law of Christ in spiritual and temporal duties, than is found provided for in branch and district organizations. They are defined in the law to be "for the curtains, or the strength of Zion."

The Organization of a Stake consists of a stake presidency composed of three high priests ordained and set apart for this purpose; a high council known as the stake high council, composed of twelve high priests duly ordained to act as members of the council, presided over by the stake presidency; a stake bishopric consisting of a bishop and two counselors who have been duly ordained to their respective positions; and a secretary and recorder.

The Duties of the Stake Presidency are to preside over the branch in "the city of the stake" or seat of organization; have immediate charge and oversight of the general spiritual work in the stake, subject to the advice and direction of the general church officers who have general control of the work everywhere by virtue of their office, or special appointment, and look after the welfare and discipline of the members within the confines of the stake generally.

The High Council of a Stake is the highest judicial body of the stake, and besides its work of an advisory board, in both spiritual and temporal matters of the work within the stake, it also has jurisdiction as an appellate court, within the stake, to which appeals may be taken from the findings of the stake bishop's court, where matters have not been settled by that court "to the satisfaction of the parties."

The Stake Bishop is the chief financial officer within the stake having immediate charge and oversight of the stake finances, subject to the advice and direction of the Presiding Bishop and trustee of the Church; he is also a judicial officer, the stake bishop's court having both original and appellate jurisdiction of cases of a local character within the stake. Appeals from the action or decision of a stake bishop's court are made to the high council of the stake, and in case of failure of settlement or dissatisfaction by either party with the decision of said council, appeal may be had to the High Council of the Church.

The Duties of the Recorder and Secretary of a Stake are common to those of like officers in branch and district organizations.

An Organized Stake may contain within its territory a number of branches which are duly organized according to the general rules governing the establishment and organization of branches of the Church in organized territory, and the duties of branch officers within organized stakes are parallel with those of like officers in other branches and districts of the Church.

Change of Officers in a Stake. Upon the resignation, removal from office, or failure to sustain by the stake conference of either the president or the bishop of a stake, the general officers of the Church, whose duty it is to organize and set in order stakes, shall direct in the selection and ordination of the officer to fill such vacancy.

Rules. The general parliamentary practice set out in the Rules of Order and Debate for the conduct of business, and guidance of officers and assemblies generally in the Church, shall be the order and guide in the transaction of business within a stake so far as applicable.

GENERAL PROVISION FOR AMENDMENTS AND CHANGE BY THE CONFERENCE.

1. At any time during the examination and discussion of any clause or rule proposed herein by the conference, any member of the general conference shall have the right to propose a change, either by amendment or substitution of other matter, for such clause or rule.

2. On account of it having been impracticable for committee-man Elder F. M. Sheehy to meet with the other members of the committee to consider these proposed amendments by reason of his work in the Eastern Mission field, the committee gives further notice that it may after a session and consideration of the matters by the full committee, prior to the sitting of the General Conference, at Kirtland, propose and offer for its consideration further amendments or corrections.

On behalf of the committee,

F. M. SMITH.

E. L. KELLEY.

CHURCH REJECTED—WHEN?

"At what time was the Church rejected with its dead; was it before or after the death of Joseph Smith the Prophet? Is the Church still rejected? If not, when and by what method was it again received? Are the dead still rejected? If not, when were they again received?"

We are not aware that specific date or time, or any one specific act has been fixed upon as the time and the event when and why the Church was rejected. The elements of mischief by which the rejection was made possible and justifiable were sown as early as in 1843, and culminated ten years later when the so-called revelation on celestial marriage was forced upon the people, after the practice of plural marriage or polygamy had been carried on secretly for a number of years by some, and many involved in such practice.

The "mystery of iniquity" had already begun its paralyzing and evil work; and the withdrawing of the protecting power of the Lord from the chief shepherds, Joseph and Hyrum Smith, suffered them to be led "as a lamb to the slaughter," marked the increase of displeasure against the Church, as a body, not as individuals. Thenceforward the course of events progressed with more or less rapidity, until the final adoption of the so-called revelation, August 29, 1852.

By an official act of a number of the men who were members of the Church at the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in conference assembled in June, 1852, before that fatal August 29, the act of reorganization within the line of safety was begun. This action of conference was foreseen, fostered, and accomplished by the Holy Spirit, and under its direction, by revelation in tongues, interpretation, prophecy, dreams, and visions.

Some of these men had sought to find the Church in the movements made by ambitious men, other than the church in the valleys of the mountains, and had listened to the leaders of these movements in hope to discover the true fold, but the hope was vain. At length, despairing of reaching their aim by human wisdom and so-called living oracles, they sought the Lord, and by him they were directed to the written word. This was like the action of the same revealing One, who on the occasion of his being tempted by the Devil resisted him in precisely the same way: "It is written."

In the struggle for supremacy in leadership new devices were presented and strange claims were asserted, one of the claimants (and he the most dangerous and successful of all) went so far as to say in effect, that the Church no longer needed to walk by the written word, that the need for the governing of the Church by the written word was past; and that the Church was at that time and thenceforward to walk and be governed by the "living oracles," the priesthood, or those holding the priesthood, especially those claiming to hold the presidential and apostolic offices.

Baptizing for the dead was a permissive rite; or to write more plainly, the Church was permitted by the Lord to baptize for the dead under certain rules. By terms stated in the revelations this permissive rite could be performed and would be acceptable if performed in the river while the time given the Church in which the temple should be built was passing. After the completion of the temple, baptisms for the dead were to be performed in it. But if the temple was not completed within the limit of time the privilege to baptize for the dead was to expire and the Church be "rejected with its dead."

Work continued to be done on the temple until the fall of 1845, possibly until the summer of 1846; but the building was never finished; and whatever ordinances were performed in it took place in rooms not wholly finished. The north stairway, the second or upper auditorium and attic were entirely incomplete. The basement and the first or lower auditorium were in a manner complete; but whether finished in accordance with plans and specifications we can not state, for we never saw these. It was rumored at the time that the plans for the finishing had been changed, but the truth of these rumors is not known to us.

It is a fact, however, that in October, 1848, the Temple was destroyed by fire, the entire woodwork inside being burned out, leaving the walls standing to the level of the eaves on all four sides. Later the walls fell at different intervals until only the southwest corner of the front in which was the stair tower was left, and finally this was thrown down by official order to avoid possible injury to incautious persons. The ultimate result was that not one stone was left upon another as placed by the workmen when the walls were erected; the only exception being the walls of the well which was intended to supply the font in the basement. This well was in use the last knowledge we had of the place. It seems, then, that the privilege to baptize for the dead being a permissive one, and its continuation conditioned upon a contingent event which did not transpire, the privilege must have lapsed by expiration, or limitation. And, if subsequently it was to be engaged in and enjoyed by the same people, it must be restored again by revelation and command, and could not be assumed as being held over by sufferance. We do not know of any revelation or command authoritatively promulgated renewing the privilege.

It is certain, however, that the rejection of the Church as an organized body, existing in quorum organization at the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, did not affect those members who had been duly inducted into the Church who remained true to the covenant they entered into, "the new and everlasting covenant" which the Lord stated in a revelation given March 7, 1831, that he had sent into the world, in the following strong language: "And even so I have sent mine everlasting covenant into the world, to be a light to the world, and to be a standard for my people and for the Gentiles to seek to it, and to be a messenger before my face to prepare the way before me."—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 2.

This is repeated in section 49, paragraph 2: "Wherefore, I say unto you, that I have sent unto you mine everlasting covenant, even that which was from the beginning."

That there needed not to be doubts in the minds of the membership what the nature of this everlasting covenant was, and is, the Lord revealed again: "And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon, and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written."—Doctrine and Covenants 83 (Utah 84): 8.

The individuals who kept this covenant were accepted of him and were not rejected, nor their standing before God put in jeopardy by the departure of others from the faith. Whatever the office in the priesthood each held under the ordinations ordered by the call of God and vote of the Church would remain valid. They could as elders, priests, teachers, etc., pursue the duties of warning, expounding, and inviting all to come to Christ, and by command of God could build up the Church from any single branch, which, like themselves, had not bowed the knee to Baal, or departed from the faith of the Church as found in the standard works of the body at the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. There were such branches.

The Reorganized Church, of which the HERALD is the official journal, in 1860 adopted as a rule of safe procedure that all baptisms performed prior to June 27, 1844, must be considered as valid; those performed after that date, to be accepted, must be shown to have been performed by some one who held authority in the time of Joseph and Hyrum and to have not been in transgression at the time the baptism was performed, or must have been indorsed by the reception of the Spirit and its certification at the time application to be received on original baptism is made. This practically puts the rejection at the date of the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith; though no action to the effect of settling this date has been had by the Church.

The church, using the word to mean the church rejected, has not been again received.

SECTION SIXTY-FOUR, PARAGRAPH SIX.

Basing an inquiry on what we wrote in the HERALD for February 3, in regard to section 64, paragraph 6, a brother wishes to know what those men referred to as being on the Lord's errand might do to aid in building up and establishing the Lord's work. It appears that we stated what the revelation did not mean, and the brother seeking after truth wants to know what it does mean.

Questions are sometimes answered by a process of elimination. So, in answering this one we first eliminate from the things which those agents might do those which were contrary to God's will; among them lying, theft, robbery either public or private, these having been specifically named that the church should not do them. (See section 42: 6, 7.)

Section 64 was given in Kirtland, September, 1831, after the law in section 42, which was in February. It was given to the elders, and does not apply to Joseph Smith, on their way to Missouri, or in that State any more than to others of the elders in Kirtland, or elsewhere. Indeed, from the closing part of paragraph 4, it may be safely thought that it had reference to those remaining in Ohio, for the word was:

"I willeth not that my servant Frederick G. Williams should sell his farm, for I, the Lord, willeth to retain a stronghold in the land of Kirtland, for the space of five years, in the which I will not overthrow the wicked, that thereby I may save some; and after that day, I, the Lord, will not hold any guilty that shall go with an open heart, up to the land of Zion; for I, the Lord requireth the hearts of the children of men."

After this follows the teaching on tithing "until the coming of the Son of Man." Further it was stated that it was not wisdom that Newel K. Whitney and Sidney Gilbert should sell their store until the residue of the Church should go into the land of Zion. This again confines the teaching of paragraph 6 as applicable to Kirtland as to Missouri. We know of no clause in the law other than paragraph 6, in which the Saints were forbidden to get in debt to their enemies. But, as such prohibition is mentioned in this connection, it is a fair presumption that in carrying on the affairs intrusted to them in their business capacities they might pursue the common procedure of buying and selling lands in Zion, or elsewhere, wares, merchandise, even borrowing money, if such was deemed essential to their success, leaving the ordering of affairs outside the realms of their control to Him who can "take and repay" at his will. Therefore, whatever those men, his servants, on the Lord's errand at Kirtland, in Ohio, or Independence, Missouri, found it necessary to do in legitimate, honorable business ways they were at liberty to do. We understand that the men referred to as business agents did set about the securing of moneys by tithing, consecration and loans with which lands were bought, resold, and Saints settled on them all within the scope of the opportunities, resources and capabilities of the men engaged in the affairs. No other honest inference can be drawn from the revelation; and those who have attempted to charge Joseph Smith with the intentional effort to defraud by theft and robbery to be perpetrated on the inhabitants of Missouri, and to take shelter for such acts, under this clause, thereby making the Lord a party to fraud, deceit, and wickedness, do violence to the text and forget the fact that the revelation itself provides that whatever was done was to be in accord with his will.

DOCTOR BRIGGS AND HERESY.

Whatever the heresy of the Reverend Charles Briggs may be in other respects, he seems to be sound upon the question of ordination as considered between the Catholic Church and her many daughters and step-daughters, for, if any of them has authority to set men apart for holy orders such authority must have been derived directly or indirectly, through channels more or less obscure and tortuous, from the primitive Roman Catholic Church. This Reverend Briggs ingeniously admits when he says:

I am quite ready to accept ordination by the Pope of Rome. I believe that my Presbyterian ordination was valid, and that it was a humiliation which the Protestant Episcopal Church ought not to have put upon me when it required me to start as a layman, or even to be confirmed, in order that I might enter into the ministry of one of the two churches to which I now belong. I am convinced that if the unity of Christians depends upon the ministers of all the bodies submitting to ordination by Roman Catholic Bishops, almost all of them would submit. I would for one. Protestants do not regard the ordination of their ministers as a sacrament and a sacrifice. I wish they did, in the same sense that Rome so regards it.

The tendency now to make the way to heaven easy, and to clothe every man, whatever his views on ecclesiasticism, with authority to minister in Christ's name, has so cheapened the sacerdotal robe that it is about time for the aggregation of so-called ministers to "stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest to your souls."

But, will they continue to say, "We will not walk therein"? (Jeremiah 6: 16.)

COINCIDENT.

Bro. Henry A. Stebbins, Church Recorder, laid on our desk a copy of the National Magazine for February, an up-to-date work, published in Boston and London. This copy has for its picture frontispiece a characteristic representation of the Western Continent of North and South America, the body of the great eagle at the Isthmus of Panama facing eastward, the left wing stretched to the north and the right wing extended to the south and east, following the contour of the coast lines very closely and clearly. It is called "Coming events cast their shadows before." The description under it is as follows:

"The above is Captain Arthur McGray's idea of one of the coming events—when the American eagle will supply his need of another wing by taking the southern half of the Western Hemisphere for that purpose. And Canada, too, will sometime, perhaps, just naturally come under the eagle's wing—and be glad to get there."

As this picture is in a magazine having one office at Number 10 Norfolk Street, Strand, London, England, and one at 41 West First Street, Boston, Massachusetts, United States of America, and thus having a sort of international interest and reputation, we hope our English and Canadian readers will not take our notice of this picture as a "slam" on Canada, or an effort to exploit America, for it is neither. It is only a sort of coincident having a language reference to "the land shadowing with wings." (Isaiah 18: 1.)

 EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The American Prohibition Year Book for 1904, published at 92 LaSalle Street, Chicago, Illinois, is meeting with popular favor. It is having a good sale in all parts of the country and is being sent to foreign lands. This publication is now in its fourth year. It appears annually. It is standard authority on the liquor question. Its one hundred pages are full of the best facts and statistics. Its departments in addition to the almanac, are total abstinence, criminalology, cost of the drink traffic, legislation, results of legislation, election figures, and organizations. Every phase of the drink question is covered. This book is just the thing for those entering village no license or county option campaigns. Pastors use it in preparing temperance sermons and it is also popular with Sunday-school workers and young people's societies, as well as temperance workers. Price: cloth thirty-five cents post paid, paper cover, fifteen cents post paid.

We quote the following from this book: "For every dollar we receive from the liquor business we lose $16.50. This is the kind of economy for which the license parties stand. The loss from the saloon business is about as follows: Loss from drunkenness is estimated at 50 per cent of the cost of liquor; loss to sober men, 5 per cent; loss in pauperism, 1 per cent; loss in insanity and disability, 2.5 per cent; in sickness, 14 per cent; labor of liquor-makers, 40 per cent; total, 145.5 per cent. Thus the indirect cost foots up about 145.5 per cent of the direct cost. The direct cost in 1900 was $1,172,493,000. This gives as the actual cost of the nation's liquor business for 1900 the enormous sum of $2,804,958,000. The revenue from the traffic for the same year amounted to $170,000,000, or just one dollar out of every sixteen dollars and fifty cents of the cost. If this is not business stupidity will not some one tell us what it is? In 1900 the city of Boston received $1,000,000 from the liquor business, but it paid $22,000,000 to maintain courts, police, hospitals, and to sustain its paupers. Why do we practice such financial folly? In our attempts to remedy the saloon ill by the license we get the worst of the bargain."

Elder I. N. Roberts, Missionary in charge of the Southeastern Mission, is at the present time at his old home in Rileyville, Page County, Virginia, where he is having excellent attention and talking to the people on Sundays and doing missionary work generally throughout the week. He reports having a very pleasant reception from his old friends.

George W. D. Millikin, Colchester, Illinois, in sending in ten-dollar offering for himself and Mrs. Florence Newland on the 8th instant, for repair of the Kirtland Temple, makes this suggestive statement: "Our mother, aunts, and uncles labored to build; we their children, will help keep in repair."

The Saints everywhere ought to keep in mind the lesson that the more they help to build up and sustain the Lord's work in their time, the more interest their children will feel in the same, and according to the scriptural statement, this continues down to the third and fourth generation. No one should be found lacking, then, in his or her efforts to lay up treasures in the kingdom of God.

Bro. J. W. Whitley, now resident at Dyer Post-office, Douglas County, Washington, aged 84 years, writes to the office under date of February 13, that he would be pleased if an elder would visit the neighborhood where he lives. He is now alone in the world, and feeble, but would like still to be useful in helping the work. He was baptized by Bro. J. C. Clapp, many years ago. Washington and Oregon laborers will please take note of him.

All interested in securing reduced railroad rates to the General Conference and Conventions should read carefully the notices from the Church Secretary in this and next issue of the HERALD.

A PEOPLE PREPARED FOR THE LORD.

"And many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God. And he shall go before him [Christ] in the Spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord."—Luke 1: 16, 17.

The foregoing indicates that, according to the message of Gabriel, John, the child of promise, would do such a work among the Israelites that many of them would accept the Messiah when he would be personated, and would be in possession of knowledge even to salvation.

"To give knowledge of Salvation unto his people by the remission of their sins."—Luke 1: 77. It is clearly evident that John's teaching, and the rite he administered, brought to the people a knowledge of salvation and a remission of their sins, thereby preparing a people for the Lord.

"Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins."—Matthew 3: 5, 6. Matthew, Mark, and Luke are united in saying that great numbers of people accepted the baptism of John as a command of God; even the Pharisees did not deny the divinity of his baptism. Taking the evidence from the writers mentioned we are safe in saying that John had quite a following of disciples previous to the Lord coming to do the work expected of him.

I am often asked, when preaching baptism for the remission of sins, if I could give proof where Peter, Andrew, Matthew, Mary Magdalene, and others were baptized. I was in company with a brother once, who took the position that the thief on the cross must have been a baptized believer, and did well on circumstantial evidence, as it was generally admitted; but one gentleman asked him if he could tell what river or pool he was baptized in. We can readily see that if the New Testament satisfied the demands of some people it would contain much of needless information. For instance, suppose it contained in a straight course, only the names of the three thousand added to the church at Pentecost; what an overflow of names we should have, apart from who baptized them, what river or pool baptized in, etc.

Notwithstanding the evidence that John had prepared for the Lord a baptized and repenting people, whose sins had been remitted, there is an impression abroad with lots of people that when Jesus called his disciples, saying, "Follow me and I will make you fishers of men," it was the first time he saw them and they him, and they readily followed him not knowing who he was, or who supposed to be; received their ordination as apostles at once, without any consideration on his (Christ's) part or theirs. But we have on record the incident previous to their ordination, of Jesus teaching the people from Simon's ship, then the draught of fishes. The conversation that took place between Peter and Jesus shows that Peter had a strict regard for him then, regardless of all the waste labors of the previous night: "And Simon answering said unto him, Master, we have toiled all the night, and have taken nothing: nevertheless at thy word I will let down the net."—Luke 5: 5. James and John, the sons of Zebedee, were there.

Jesus had disciples before he had apostles: "And when it was day he called unto him his disciples: and of them he chose twelve, whom also he named apostles."—Luke 6: 13. Who were they? I will introduce another evidence and ask you to believe that they were of those people John had prepared for the Lord: "Again the next day after, John stood and two of his disciples; and looking upon Jesus as he walked, he saith, Behold the Lamb of God! And the two disciples heard him speak, and they followed Jesus."—John 1: 35-37. Why was this? It is self-convincing that John had done what the angel predicted he would, and prepared his disciples to follow the Lamb. "Behold the Lamb of God!" was a password to them that this was the Christ of God.

These two that followed the Master—Andrew and Peter. Chaining themselves to these we find Philip going to Nathaniel and saying, "We have found him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write," etc. Then after the revelation that Jesus gave to Nathaniel, who also had in him the hope of a redeemer, his mind being hitherto prepared, though somewhat surprised, he exclaims, "Rabbi, thou art the Son of God; thou art the king of Israel."—John 1: 49.

There is not only proof of a people prepared, repentant, and baptized, when Jesus began his ministry, but here and there we read of the expectations among the people of the coming of Messiah; and though the Jews always believed in and expected one to come, yet we must admit that a great revival of that hope, through the forerunner, had been circulated far and near. The woman of Samaria said unto him, "I know that Messiah cometh which is called Christ: when he is come he will tell us all things." The blind men shouted, "Jesus, thou son of David," and the multitudes ran before him saying, "Hosanna to the Son of David: blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord," all evidencing that John had indeed made a stir among the people in his references to the Messiah.

Now to suggest or even hint that Jesus would commission any one to call upon others, or to tell the world to have faith in God, themselves not having faith in him; or to repent, if they themselves were impenitent, would be inconsistent. Much less would he authorize them thus, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." To ask for the proof of Matthew's or James' baptism in the way people do, with all their claims of reverence for the Savior, his honesty and fidelity to God, is enough to make one suspect their honesty.

In conclusion let me say: When the claim is made that the thief on the cross, Mary Magdalene, or any other persons—yes, the twelve or the seventies—are in heaven and were never baptized, it is putting it mildly to say that such assertions are groundless and tend to destroy the truthfulness of the words of the Savior; or it suggests that Jesus has trifled with men's salvation, leaving it an open question as far as baptism is concerned. But it is not so; no, far from it. We have the Master on record in the previous quotation—his commission to his ministry. And very strong is the language found in John 3:5: "Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of God."

With such plain language, who shall desire to deceive their fellows and endanger their salvation?

THOMAS JONES.

THE THREE NEPHITES.

When the Savior appeared on this continent, he chose twelve men to preach the gospel. Of this number (all had been ordained apostles) he granted unto three permission to tarry until he came with the hosts of heaven, to reign upon this earth for a thousand years.

These three are spoken of as "The Three Nephites." A change was wrought upon their bodies, so they should not taste of death. They preached the gospel to the Nephites for two hundred and ninety-two years, and then departed. "The Lord did take away his beloved disciples . . . because of the iniquity of the people."—Book of Mormon, p. 483, small edition.

So these apostles were taken away but were to appear again before the coming of the Lord.

If these men are to walk upon the earth in our day, what will be their mission? How many can answer immediately? We turn to the Book of Mormon and read: "For ye have desired that ye might bring the souls of men unto me, while the world shall stand."—Page 474. "They did go forth among all the people of Nephi and did preach the gospel of Christ."—Page 475.

Let us consider for a moment the words of the Savior to his disciples on the other shore, in regard to his work in the latter days. "And again this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come."—Matthew 24:32. This scripture seems to stagger some. The gospel has been preached since 1830—seventy-three years, and but few of the nations have heard it! It is the last time—the end is near.

How can the ministers of this Church accomplish the enormous task spoken of by the Savior in the few years that remain before the end? This question has been answered in different ways. To relate any of the theories advanced would be unwise, as we are sure of the fulfillment of the Savior's words whether we send messengers to every nation or not.

The three Nephites will preach the gospel to every nation and people under the shining sun before the end shall come: "And it shall come to pass when the Lord seeth fit in his wisdom, that they shall minister unto all the scattered tribes of Israel, and unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, and shall bring out of them unto Jesus many souls."—Book of Mormon p. 475. These are the words of Mormon concerning the three Nephites. But will they have power to accomplish such a wonderful work? "And also because of the convincing power of God, which is in them . . . therefore great and marvelous works shall be wrought by them."—Page 475. Should we not pray that miserable fiends and devils will not hinder them in their work? No, they hardly need our prayers. "They are as the angels of God."—Page 475. Also on page 476: "Satan could have no power over them. . . . He could not tempt them."

If these Nephites will preach here in America, shall we know them? "Behold they will be among the Gentiles, and the Gentiles knoweth them not. They will also be among the Jews, and the Jews shall know them not."—Page 475.

That the gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, not one Saint should doubt. Let us lift up our heads and rejoice that the sweet sound of the gospel has reached our ears, and may our feet be swift to carry the tidings to those in Babylon.

So by not steering clear, or sailing around God's words, but having our barks in the light of divine truth, we shall be carried by the breeze from heaven safely into the harbor of rest. May our spiritual man be looking upward, and with arms outstretched, saying, "Come Lord Jesus, come!"

IS THE SPIRIT OF MAN IMMORTAL?

The following is a synopsis of a private discussion I have had of late with a well-learned gentleman in our town. Believing the points on both sides will interest all lovers of truth, we give his argument first, then our position. The subject is one I have never talked on before and do not consider myself able to defend our claims on this question.

My opponent argues that there is no such thing as an immortal spirit, or inner man; that the word spirit when referred to in the Scriptures does not at any place refer to a spiritual man; that it refers to breath, wind, disposition, etc., and that the word spirit is taken from the Hebrew word ruach and always means wind, or breath, and that the word spirit when taken from the Greek word pneuma means breath and wind. He quotes from Young's Concordance to prove this. Now, while I do not count myself able to handle that question from an educational standpoint, I have given scriptural quotations which, if accepted as they read, will prove beyond all question that man is dual, and that there is a spirit in man independent of the breath—something that preëxisted—something that exists even when the outer man is laid away in the grave. My opponent quotes 1 Timothy 6:16, which reads: "Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen, nor can see." This is certainly a wrong translation, for it positively contradicts other plain passages that testify that holy men have seen God. I offered him the Inspired Translation on it, which reads: "Whom no man hath seen, nor can see, unto whom no man can approach, only he who hath the light and hope of immortality dwelling in him."

Now then, against his reasoning, education, and seeming scriptural support, to prove that there is something in man that is immortal, that preëxisted, that lives on after death, that can not be annihilated, I offer the following: Christ preëxisted, "And now, O Father, glorify thou me . . . with the glory I had with thee before the world was."—John 17:5. "I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: again, I leave the world, and go to the Father."—John 16:28.

This is sufficient to prove that Christ existed with God before dwelling in the flesh. Now then, did we exist? We answer yes. Paul says: "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same."—Hebrews 2:14. Here we notice that we were all called children before we dwelt in the flesh.

Jeremiah preëxisted: "Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; . . . and I ordained thee to be a prophet unto the nations."—Jeremiah 1:5. John the Baptist preëxisted: "There was a man sent from God whose name was John. The same came [into the world] for a witness."—John 1:6, 7. Again: "When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy."—Job 38:7. Again in Genesis 1:27, man was created, that is, the spiritual part of man, for in the next chapter there was not yet a man (in the flesh) to till the ground. God then made the outer man out of the dust and "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul," that is, the spirit of man was then clothed with this earthly house of clay, as Paul calls it, or as Job says, "Thou hast clothed me [the inner man] with skin and flesh, and hast fenced me with bones and sinews."—Job 10:11. What could be plainer?

Job says further: "But there is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding."—32:8. Again, Zechariah 12:1: "The Lord, which stretcheth forth the heavens, and layeth the foundation of the earth, and formeth the spirit of man within him." How strong! "With my spirit within me will I seek thee early."—Isaiah 26:9. "And her spirit came again and she arose."—Luke 8:54.

"There is no man that hath power over the spirit to retain the spirit."—Ecclesiastes 8:8.

"Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return to God who gave it."—Ecclesiastes 12:7.

Stephen called upon God, saying, "Lord Jesus receive my spirit"—not breath.

Hear Paul on the question as to whether man is dual; he ought to be good authority: "But though our outward man perish [that is the clay, the body] yet the inward man [the spirit] is renewed day by day."—2 Corinthians 4:16. "For we know [no guess work] that, if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands."—2 Corinthians 5:1. This house not made with hands is not wind or breath surely. Jesus said to the thief, "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise."—Luke 23:43. Now neither Jesus' body nor the thief's body went that day to paradise, but it was the spirit,—the inner man, the real man.

Now what do these plain scriptures prove? They prove that both Christ and man preëxisted, that man is dual, that man lives on after death. I admitted that the word spirit is used figuratively at times, but that does not prove that it is always used as a figurative expression. That is equally true of many other words such as fire or water, but because these words are used occasionally figuratively we must not conclude that they are never to be understood literally. Why, if that would be allowed we might explain away the entire meaning of God's word. Where, then, will we draw the line? When it speaks of literal, let it be literal; when it speaks of the figurative, let it be that way.

But for one to hide behind education and assert that the word spirit never has any reference to the spiritual part of man, or the inner man, from the fact that some learned professor says the word spirit in the original means breath or wind, I question his interpretation of the Greek, from the fact that if that was an established tradition it would overthrow the entire tenor of God's word. We are reminded here of what Paul said. What if some did not believe? Would their unbelief make the word of God of no effect? I would like to hear from one of our educated men on the spirit as taken from the Hebrew and Greek.

LOOK AND LIVE.

But whose looketh into the perfect law of liberty, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deeds.—James 1: 25.

Like the children of Israel, who, when they were bitten by the poisonous serpents, were commanded to look upon the brazen serpent and be healed, even so we are commanded to look into the perfect law of liberty and live.

But, dear reader, can we be saved merely by looking? Ah no! "He being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work," he is the one who shall be "blessed in his deeds." So we see there is work for all of us who look into the law of liberty.

"If ye fulfill the royal law according to the Scripture, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, ye do well."—James 2: 8. From this we learn that if our neighbor is in need of aid or assistance we are to be just as ready to help him as if it was for our own good. We may be ever so zealous in our religion; we may have spiritual gifts and ministering of angels, but if we have not charity, we are nothing.

Paul says: "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing."—1 Corinthians 13: 1-3.

Here is a grand lesson; if we will dwell upon it a little while we can comprehend more fully the beauty and meaning of "charity." Our mind and thoughts are the dwelling-place of charity, so if we do the outward deeds grudgingly, our efforts are vain.

But we should not boast of our good deeds nor do them merely because we expect to get a blessing, for if that is the feeling we have, I am quite sure we will be disappointed, for "the Lord loveth a cheerful giver."

We should be very careful not only to have our actions pure, but our every word. "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying that it may minister grace unto the hearers."—Ephesians 4: 29.

Again, "Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient: but rather giving of thanks."—Chapter 5: 4.

I would exhort all Saints to consider these things and lay aside all light-mindedness and delve into the richness of the gospel where we will find pearls of great price redounding to the glory of Him who has "called us out of darkness into the glorious light of his dear Son."

But let us do all things with a willing hand and a cheerful heart, for "pure religion and undefiled before God the Father is this: To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."—James 1: 27.

Dear reader, let us put on the whole gospel armor, remembering Paul's injunction: "Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit."—Ephesians 6: 14-18.

If we will but put on this armor, we shall be able to "fight the good fight of faith," overcome all the trials that come upon us, elude the wiles of Satan, and rise triumphant to reign with Christ a thousand years. Then we will dwell in happiness and be perfected by the help of our King—who shall reign over all the earth.

P. T. PLUMB.

A PLEA FOR RIGHT LIVING.

I give not unto you that you shall live after the manner of the world.—Doctrine and Covenants 92: 3.

This statement of our Savior to Joseph Smith should be very significant to every Saint. Living as we are in a scattered condition among the world, where there are ten or more of them to one of us, it is sometimes quite hard for us to live not as they live—that is, in sin and rebellion against God. Ancient Israel wanted to live after the manner of the world, hence they desired a king. But this desire was not brought about suddenly—it was the culmination of the trend toward the manners and customs of the Gentile nations. No doubt Israel observed the amusements, the dress, and other things belonging to the Gentile nations and gradually took up their way of living long before they desired a king. Are we following ancient Israel in these things, or are we keeping ourselves unspotted from the vices of the world? I ask this question first of those Saints who are isolated from branch privileges. Are you raising your children up just like your neighbor who does not belong to the Church raises his? Do your children go to the same parties his do—dress just as fine, read the same kind of books, and have as little reverence for God and his word as those of your neighbor? In building your houses, do you build very costly ones, as though you never expected to leave them and go to Zion?

Now a word to the branches: Are you living after the manner of the world? How about your worship; is it formal, or spiritual? And how about your Church festivals, or do you have such? If so, for what purpose, and how are they conducted? It is true the world does things sometimes which the Saints may do and not displease the Lord; but we must be very careful to distinguish between the good and the bad. Let us shun the very appearance of evil. The world does not keep the Word of Wisdom. Do we? The world does look somewhat after their poor. How much more are we doing for ours than they for theirs?

And this language of Christ stating that we are not to live after the manner of the world is doubtless applicable to us missionaries also. Are we preaching for money or to save souls? Are we laboring with all our might, mind, and strength to win souls to Christ, or are we sitting at ease in Zion and living after the manner of the world?

If any or all have cause to repent, let us do it and that willingly, for the "willing and obedient" shall eat the good of the land in these last days.

SOME PRESS COMMENTS ON "MORMONISM."

BOSTON IS DECLARED TO BE A STRONGHOLD OF MORMONISM.

"Boston is one of the strongholds of Mormonism. Their victims are the weak-minded, dissolute, unsatisfied bigots, in fact the scum which other religious sects cast off. They want not brains, but brawn, creatures whom they can mould according to their will to aid in their nefarious schemes."—Doctor Hamilton.

The spreading of the Mormon doctrine and its menacing effect upon the whole country, particularly the Western States, was the keynote of the address by Reverend Doctor Franklin Hamilton of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, Temple Place, at the closing session of the National Reform Association last evening.

"Slowly but surely this doctrine, which is a blow at the foundations of our civilization, is gaining power until it can now boast that the five States adjacent to Utah will now take a hand in blocking all legislation against polygamy.

"The Mormon doctrine has not changed in spite of all legislation. Polygamy is practiced, although not openly, and the blasphemous doctrines are being spread over the world by shrewd and crafty leaders.

"Statistics will show how the doctrine is being insidiously spread over the world. In 1897, with about one thousand missionaries, the Mormon converts numbered sixty-three thousand, thirteen thousand more than were made by four hundred thousand missionaries of all the Protestant sects.

"The sect was founded by a drunken, dissolute peddler, a fugitive from justice, Joseph Smith, who afterwards became a murderer, practically immune from punishment by the federal authorities.

"Upon this foundation the sect has flourished, and is now sending its ministers over the country, drawing weak men and women to Utah, by false promises, and then ruining their lives. Their doctrine is not liberty, but license, and with their profanation of God's holy word for these evil purposes, they will soon sap the life-blood of the flourishing Western States.

"Their desire is to rule the United States, and unless some legislation is made to stop the unlawful practices of the sect, which are against the first principles of modern civilization, we will soon find that we have a power to deal with which will not be overcome without a desperate struggle."

After Doctor Hamilton's address it was unanimously voted by the association to forward to Congress a petition against seating Reed Smoot, the newly-elected senator from Utah.—Boston Daily Advertiser, November 18, 1903.

MORMONIZED BOSTON.

Reverend Franklin Hamilton rather startles us by calling Boston a stronghold of Mormonism. We have heard Boston called many things in our day, but never that before, we believe.

Doctor Hamilton quotes no figures and gives no facts. We know none ourselves, and the religious census has not yet been compiled. Consequently the assertion is impossible either of proof or disproof.

Still, counting them up on our fingers, we can not recall that we have ever met a Boston Mormon in religion, regardless of what some misguided men of our acquaintance may be in practice.

In fact, it seems to us rather shooting in the air to fire away at Mormons when there are so many other things locally that are really important.

Mormonism will die a natural death just as soon as something better than Mormonism is presented to the Mormons.

That is the key to the whole situation. Show the world by works the something better, and reformation becomes as natural as living.—Editorial in Boston Evening News, November 19, 1903.

MORMONISM STRUGGLING FOR FOOTHOLD IN LIMA.

For some time past one or more so-called "Elders," agents, organizers, or missionaries of the so-called Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, have been known to be working assiduously in this city in an effort to arouse a sentiment favorable to their cause and effect the conversion of our people to their so-called faith. So far it is believed that their efforts have been confined to the South Side, to the homes of the working people, the mechanics and artisans of the great industries which are the life and energy, the bone and sinew of the city.

The constitution of the United States guarantees to all her citizens worship God or deny Him, as his judgment dictates.

But, the laws of the Union and of the separate States thereof prohibit bigamy, polygamy, or plural wifehood, and it was upon the doctrine of polygamy that the Mormon church was founded. It was this feature of the doctrine of this so-called church that gave its strength among the lustful men who gave it birth and nourished it into power and importance, built it up to an organization of wealth, built its temples and gave it a foothold which, eventually, the whole power of the highest courts of the nation have found it exceedingly difficult to dislodge.

It is true, the proselytes in this city at present claim to represent the "Reorganized" Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints, but, with polygamy for its foundation stone, plurality of wives for its chief principle, can the so-called "Reorganized" Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints be vastly different to-day, in its innermost, its secret teachings, given forth only after the convert has become imbued with the elementary principles of its faith and fallen a prey to the teaching of these "Elders," from the damnable organization known forty years ago as the Mormon Church, the organization of Brigham Young and the accredited, aye, proven cohorts of the savage Indians in the horrible Mountain Meadow Massacre, when men, women and children journeying to new homes in the Far West were set upon by this cruel horde of redskins and far worse white men, and slaughtered for no other cause than that they were considered interlopers, and not of the faith of the Church of the Latter Day Saints, otherwise the Mormon Church, the Church of Brigham Young?

"Can the leopard change his spots," the black man the color of his skin, the church of the Latter Day Saints its standing among civilized, refined people?

Never!

Once the "Mormon" church with its teaching of polygamy, pretended to have been abandoned and possibly has been only because prohibited the highest courts of the land forbade longer the practice, and apparently given up only after a long and bitter struggle against the supreme power of the nation, it remains the "Mormon" church of Brigham Young and all the renovation it can be given by the courts of the land, all the cleansing it can be given in the bath house of the law applied by the sheriffs, United States marshals, the military and public opinion; all the subterfuge to which resort can be made in the matter of tacking to its title the alluring and misleading word "Reorganized," does not remove it one step from the period of Brigham Young or the massacre at Mountain Meadow.

It was not a church of God then.

Can it be now?

There is no law by which these so-called "Elders," these agents of the memory of Brigham Young may be driven from the city of Lima; no statute to be invoked to aid in guarding the homes of our people against the dangers of this so-called religion.

But there is a power, the minds of the people properly applied to the situation, which is capable of removing them from our midst in a manner which, while lawful, can be forceful and such that will impress upon these agents of immorality and Mormonism the fact that their presence here will not be tolerated, either now or hereafter.

It is up to the strongminded fathers and brothers of the city to take such action within the pale of the law as will guarantee to them the protection of their wives, mothers, sisters and sweethearts from the encroachment of these "Mormon" elders, these agents of a Church which was founded upon the doctrine of lust, bigamy, and illegitimate children.—Lima (Ohio) News, January 1, 1904.

Joseph Smith soon left New York and went to Kirtland, Ohio. Afterwards he went to Missouri, and there, about twelve hundred Mormons gathered, and began to build houses, and to found the "New Jerusalem." They remained there for about four years, but were broken up by the State government. They then went to Illinois. Smith was murdered, and Brigham Young succeeded him as the prophet and head of the Mormonites. They were again compelled to move their headquarters through persecution, and marched across the country until they reached the state of Utah, where they now have their headquarters and the sacred temple. In process of time they made some changes regarding the church and gave it another name. They now call themselves, "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints." Another branch call themselves, "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." But it still remains a deception. It does not have its origin in the Word of God. The "Book of Mormon" is in no sense the Word of God. The Mormon church was founded in 1830, but Jesus built his church about 33. So we find that the Mormon church was built a period of 1797 years after Jesus had built his own, hence, that much too late.—Gospel Trumpet, January 7, 1904.

I am sometimes puzzled by perplexing questions; but there is one thing that never puzzles me; there is no question in my mind as to my own calling. There is no doubt, and never has been a shadow of doubt upon my mind, that Jehovah has established Zion and Zion City in these latter days, and destined us to do the latter-day work. If the church of the so-called Latter Day Saints were indeed the Zion of the consummation of all things and of the Restoration, the Christian Catholic Church in Zion would have no right to exist. But that church has been smeared by the horrible sin which has made the name of Mormon to be synonymous with that of adultery. If that church has now received a revelation that plural marriage is no longer of God, then it could never have received a revelation that plural marriage was of God, because God does not change like that. God is not a man that he should lie, nor the son of man that he should repent. If God gave a revelation to Joseph Smith that plural marriage was divine, and gave another revelation to President Woodruff that it was no longer divine, then it is perfectly clear that either President Woodruff was not led by God, or that Joseph Smith was not. If, as the Mormons of to-day hold, plural marriage is no longer right, then it was never right; and that church has proved its own imposture and apostasy by the contradictory nature of its teaching on that point alone. But there has been no spiritual power in that church. I will not say that there are not Christians there, for under every form of church government, and without any form of church government, men find God.

But if this is not Zion, then there is no Zion anywhere. If I am not God's prophet, there is none on God's earth that is. But God has called me and I have obeyed. He has founded Zion, and all the powers of hell can not destroy it. (Amen.)—Dowie in Leaves of Healing, December 12, 1903.

DOCTOR ABBOTT'S CONCEPT OF LIFE AFTER DEATH.

"The universe is God's house. This world is not the only habitat of the living. In his house are many rooms. Death is only pushing aside the portieres and passing from one room to another." In this figure, says Doctor Lyman Abbott, is found the key to the Christian faith respecting death and immortality. He continues (in his new book, "The Other Room"):

"No philosophy is adequate to solve the mystery of life; none is large enough to include all its contracting phenomena. He who teaches us to speak to our Father who is in heaven as though he were at our side, also compares him to a householder who has gone into a far country and left his estate in the charge of his servants. Both teachings find their confirmation in Christian experience. Sometimes God seems to be an absentee God whom we can not reach. Sometimes he seems 'closer than breathing' and 'nearer than hands and feet.' He comes and goes through the open door, now seen, now unseen, but never distant. My father was the head of a school in Boston years ago. After the opening exercises he would often go out of the school-room, leaving the hundred girls without teacher or monitor, absolutely free, absolutely unwatched, with neither promise of reward nor fear of penalty to preserve order, for he would test the girls and see what kind they were, that he might make true girls out of them.

So sometimes God seems to leave us a little while without the vision of his presence, with neither penalty nor reward apparent before us, that he may both test and see what manner of children we are, and that he may make out of us children of God who follow righteousness and eschew evil not because we are watched, but because we are learning to love righteousness and hate evil. At these times he has but gone into the other room, unseen, but not far distant. At other times he is in the midst of us. He who says, 'Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world,' also says, 'It is expedient for you that I go away.' Sometimes we talk with him, and our hearts burn within us while the strange converse goes on. He appears to us as we sit at the table with him, and he blesses and breaks and gives the bread of communion to us; then vanishes. This appearing and disappearing Christ, this strange entrance which he makes into our life at unexpected times and places, should suffice to teach us that the other room is not far away; that, seen or unseen, he is always close at hand."

Where Christ is are those who are banished from our sight, Doctor Abbot maintains. He develops this thought as follows: "'To depart, and to be with Christ, which is far better,' is Paul's definition of dying: but if Christ is with his church, and Paul is with Christ, Paul is with the church. If your mother, your child, your friend, is with Christ, and Christ is with you, your mother, your child, your friend, is with you. 'This day,' says Christ upon the cross to the penitent thief, 'thou shalt be with me in paradise.' Yet Christ, rising from the dead, appeared to his disciples upon the earth. If he was with his disciples, and the penitent thief was with him, then neither he nor the penitent thief was in 'a happy land far, far away.' Paradise is not a distant country; it is only the other room."

In concluding, Doctor Abbot calls attention to what he regards as the kernel of truth in the doctrine of spiritualism: "All popular errors have in them some measure of truth. It is the truth not the error that makes them popular. I am not a spiritualist. There are many reasons why I am not. The spiritualistic mediums have too often proven arrant impostors; against fraudulent pretense by the spirits themselves, if spirits there are, there is no protection; the method of their communicating and the subject-matter of their communications are alike repellant to common sense and to refined feeling; 'by their fruits ye shall know them,' and spiritualism has no fruit of public service and little of enduring comfort to show: for these reasons I am not a spiritualist. But spiritualism would never have had the power which it once possessed and is now losing, had it not borne witness to the truth which the church of Christ has often ignored, and sometimes denied, that death is not cessation of life but transition, and that the dead are not dead, but living, are not even departed, but living near at hand, having only stepped across the threshold into the other room.

"The dream of poets that our unseen friends are friends still, and minister to us in services which we but dimly recognize, in counsels which strangely guide us, though we know not whence they come, is more than a dream. Poets also see. Their witness to the invisible realities is not to be discarded. Their prophesying we are not able to despise; and with rare exceptions they have always believed and taught us to believe:

"Far off thou art, but ever nigh;
I have thee still, and I rejoice;
I prosper, circled with thy voice;
I shall not lose thee though I die."

COLLEGE PRESIDENTS' VIEWS OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

In view of the great interest aroused in religious circles by the recent attacks of Cardinal Gibbons and others upon our public school system (see the Literary Digest, October 17, and November 7), the New York Outlook was led to request from the college presidents of the country an authoritative answer to the question: Is any difference noticeable in the moral character of young men who come from the public schools and that of those who come from the denominational, church, and other private schools? Nineteen presidents responded, and their testimony is almost unanimous that the morale of public school boys is quite as high as that of boys from other schools.

President Jacob Gould Schurman, of Cornell University, gives figures to show that the public schools actually produce a larger percentage of church members than the private schools:

"At the beginning of each year the University Christian Association is in the habit of asking each member of the freshman class to state his or her religious affiliations, and they have informed me that of the present freshmen class five hundred and seventy-four have reported on the question, of which number three hundred and sixty-three have stated that they are members of some recognized church. On consulting the University records we find that of these five hundred and seventy-four students four hundred and fifty-six came to us from the public schools, while the remaining one hundred and eighteen pursued their preparatory studies in private or in denominational schools; and by checking up these two lists by means of the data which the Christian Association has furnished us, we find that of the four hundred and fifty-six from the public schools, two hundred and ninety-seven, or sixty-five per cent, declare themselves to be church members, while of the one hundred and eighteen from the private and denominational schools only sixty-six, or fifty-six per cent, make such declaration, the remaining students in each category answering the questions in the negative.

"The fact that practically two thirds of our freshmen who come from the public schools are church-members is a conclusive refutation of the allegation that the public schools are breeding an irreligious, immoral, and anarchical class of citizens.

"I do not believe the American people will ever consent to vote public moneys for denominational schools. But I see no reason why voluntary arrangements should not be made by the clergy of the respective localities for the systematic religious instruction of children in the public schools under such conditions of time and place as the school authorities might permit, the attendance of pupils at such instruction, of course, to be wholly optional."

President Charles W. Elliot, of Harvard University, says: "We observe that the students who come from public schools can not be distinguished from the students from other sources on any moral grounds." Similarly, President Arthur T. Hadley, of Yale University, observes: "We feel justified in saying that we have not noticed any adverse effect of the public schools upon the moral character of our students—taking the public-school pupils as a body, on the one hand, and comparing them with those of private, church, or denominational schools, on the other. We get a good class of boys from both kinds of institutions."

President David S. Jordan, of Stanford University, writes:

"We do not find in general the moral character of students coming from church or denominational schools is superior to that of students coming from the public schools. On the average, the character of graduates from the public schools is rather higher, but that is in part or wholly due to the fact that idle sons of wealthy parents are often sent to church schools because of their supposed greater rigidity of discipline. . . . With all their defects and limitations, our public schools, from the primary school to the state university, are sending out a body of sturdy, self-reliant, clean young people, who have in the main the essentials of sound life. The fact that they are self-reliant and do their own thinking is one reason for the attacks made on the schools. We do not often find a church school whose product is intellectually or morally above the average of public schools of the same grade."

The concurrent testimony of these college presidents is "a splendid vindication of the high moral character of our public schools," in the opinion of the Christian Intelligencer (New York). And the Boston Congregationalist comments:

"As seven of these nineteen presidents are Congregationalists, and all the others, we believe, are members of Christian churches, they will not be suspected of special pleading in behalf of public schools. While it is made evident that some sections of the country, especially the South, place greater emphasis on Christian teaching than others, it seems clear that in most States the public schools stand for Christian principles and inculcate them in their pupils. If it were not for the opposition of Roman Catholics, this teaching would in many places be more positive."—The Literary Digest, January 2, 1904.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

In the Dark Days.

Through lanes of the faded heather,
O'er graves of the withered leaves,
In the face of the autumn weather,
From the fields of the absent sheaves,
I pass to the darkening winter,
And have not fear nor pain,
For the life of the world abideth,
And the spring will come again.

Dear heart that is growing weary,
Let not thy faith decay;
Some days of the year are dreary,
But the fogs will pass away.
Ever the sun shines somewhere,
Over the land and sea;
Be strong in thy faith and courage—
There are summers yet for thee.

From the Islands.

Dear Readers of the Column: Perhaps it will be interesting, to some of you at least, to learn of our extraordinary prayer-meeting of this morning, and what led up to it. To make that known to you, I must commence with the events of last evening. Early in the evening the deacon, Moeava, came to the open window and informed us that we would be visited by the priest and teachers that evening in their official call. Now we had not been included in those official visits at any previous occasions since we came to the islands. The branch officers had thought that it was not in their line of duty to call upon their missionary and inquire into his manner of life, and manifested reluctance when Joseph informed them that it was. But when he related the words that "Bro. Joseph" was reported to have said upon a similar occasion, that "there certainly were some benefits to be derived from those official visits," and that he and his "family wanted them as well as the other members of the branch," that satisfied them; therefore we were notified of their coming.

When Moeava had gone, we laid aside our occupation, arranged the table and chairs to make the room look pleasant and inviting; turned down the glare of the lights, and drawing our rockers near together, as we do when we want to talk a little, sat down to await their coming. And not having been visited by branch officers for over twenty years, our thoughts naturally turned to the time and place when we were similarly visited in the Newport Branch when it was at the zenith of its spiritual power. And we conversed pleasantly upon those glorious times and of Elder D. S. Mills, his faith and power with God. And close upon these thoughts, came that of the law of tithing,—for we have always believed that it was because of a failure on the part of that branch to heed the words of the Lord as delivered to us at that time that those blessings were lost. This word was, that the time had come for that branch to enter into and observe the law of tithing. If they would do so, their blessings should continue and be even greater, and they should also obtain their land. Otherwise, they should lose their land and be scattered to the four winds. The sequel was that we all failed, lost, and were scattered east, west, north, and south. Joseph here repeated to me that these were among the last words of Elder Mills to him when he was near death: "Tell the brethren to keep the law of tithing, for they know not how much there is in it."

Just here the branch officers entered, walking very slowly with low bowed heads, thus manifesting their great embarrassment. It was difficult for them to ask the questions that they did of the members of the branch, said they felt very much like children. But the Spirit of the Lord was present also, and we all partook of its hallowed influence. And while Joseph answered their questions (unheard by me of course), my thoughts still dwelt on the duty and known and unknown advantages of the law of tithing and of how much more this people would be blessed if they would observe that law as it is written instead of giving a few dollars, or even a great many dollars, here and there as they feel disposed, and call it tithing. Then a ray of light rested upon that thought, and showed it to me as a reality; how it was treating our heavenly Father like a child when men take it upon themselves to give what they choose and in the way they choose, when he to whom we owe all things has so plainly stated the portion that was due to him and the method of imparting that portion. And it seemed as if I could see that the Father so regarded it. And yet in his great compassion and tender mercy he bore with it, and blessed the giver, but not as if he purposed in his heart to keep the law in the Lord's way; for the steadfast purpose of the heart was far greater, than the amount given.

These were not new thoughts, but simply came with more force and a clearer light on points that are sometimes overlooked. But my words will not convey that force, or that clearer light that transforms thoughts and words into a living reality, and shows oftentimes that those things which seem to be most simple are of vast importance. I hope I shall not forget that glimpse of strength and beauty that radiates from heartfelt service of God in a legitimate manner, that is, to make it the aim to follow the pattern given of God. We know not, indeed, how much there is in observing the law of tithing. It certainly is a part of the plan of salvation that Christ has wrought out for us, for he says all his works are spiritual. Therefore it pertains to our spiritual life, and we know not but the free and full compliance therewith, may be as "earnest money" for the ransom Christ paid for us. At least we learn that it was given of God as a preparation against the day of vengeance and burning. (Church History, page 259.) It is also associated with and pertains to the fullness of the gospel. Right here comes the thought, Have Saints who become a law unto themselves in paying, or not paying their tithing, have they received the fullness of the gospel or only the proclamation of it? But I have digressed. Suffice it to say that those thoughts were still with me when we met in the church at eight o'clock in the morning, for our Sunday morning prayer-meeting.

The congregation was much larger than usual, and a good spirit pervaded even at the opening. It was the thought to encourage the branch officers in their work, that led me to speak of the evidences of the Spirit accompanying them in their visit with us, that I related the things that were shown to me. When I got beyond my depth in native, I spoke in English, and Joseph translated to them. The Spirit witnessed to what was said. Joseph spoke immediately afterwards on the same subject, and it became the theme of the meeting. There was no time for singing afterwards; both men and women arose to their feet as fast as they could, sometimes two at a time, and all spoke on the same subject, all spoke feelingly, some with quivering lips and tearful eyes. Two became so overcome with emotion that they could not say more and sat down.

Now I could see, but could not hear, and since they are so matter-of-fact in their manner of speaking I was at a loss to know the cause of so much emotion, for we had never witnessed such before among the natives. Tears will spring to their eyes quickly in sympathy for another who may be weeping, or touched with a feeling of emotion, but it is a rare thing indeed for a native to manifest such in his own speaking. As I looked upon them, I thought how long they had been spiritually sleeping! How little of the real spirit of the gospel they had as yet grasped! And it seemed, too, that the awakening time had come, the time for them to comply with tithing as a law and not as a matter of choice; that they must take their part in the onward march of the work, if they would keep pace with the Church, and I did not know that in my silence, I was partaking of the same Spirit by which they were speaking, until after we came home, and Joseph rehearsed some of their words to me. Among them was this: that they believed the time had come for them to keep the law of tithing, to wake up to their duty. Another said her spirit had been sleeping, but now she seemed to be waking up.

Another thought came to me with an unusual degree of plainness. I found myself mentally repeating those words, "I the Lord am bound when ye do what I say. But when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise."—Doctrine and Covenants 18: 3. This statement seemed to cover much ground and seemed to speak in defense of God, or as an explanation as to the cause of failure many times on the part of Saints to receive. And if Saints everywhere who do not the things that God has said, did but remember these words, they would more often justify God, rather than question and stumble when they receive not the things they most earnestly pray for. Truly all can plead the Father's loving kindness, his leniency, and compassion, and who in his condescending love, grants his children much that evidently his word does not bind him to do.

How glorious will be the day when the Saints as a body will feel the right to plead the promises of God! Then there will be no doubts or fears, for his promises are sure. It is disobedience that makes the trouble.

Joseph's forenoon sermon was right in line with the subject of the prayer-meeting, and was listened to with eager attention, while he showed that tithing and consecration constituted a part of the fullness of the gospel.

During the time Bro. and Sr. Peterson were here in the mission, the Saints of Arutua received some strong testimonies concerning their duty in regard to tithing, and some were thoroughly aroused to its necessity; but it was never so here in Papeete. Therefore Joseph calls this our day of revival. May it be the dawning of better things. Should there be a question in the mind of any who may read this, as to why the Spirit lit up those thoughts in my mind, seeing I was not qualified or commissioned to teach tithing, I have this to say in my defence: The Lord is impartial, and knowing as he does that my affliction debars me from much that others can obtain by their hearing, he permits me to receive by the light of the Spirit, not by revelation, but by illuminating the thoughts that I am at the time dwelling upon, and this time it was tithing.

The International Uniform Lessons.

A brother asks, "What was done by the last International Sunday-school Convention in reference to the uniform lesson system?" The questions which involved the consideration of the uniform lessons system were the consideration of a petition for a two-year beginner's course and one for an advanced course. The discussion of these questions naturally involved the merits of the present uniform system, for if that system be in itself complete and sufficient, there could be no need for either a beginner's course or an advanced course. The primary workers had previously secured the sanction of the International Convention at Atlanta, Georgia, and there had been prepared and used a one-year beginner's course; but the convention of primary workers which met just previous to the International Convention at Denver, Colorado, petitioned for a two-year course instead of a one-year course. Other workers had petitioned for an advanced course, holding that the exodus from the Sunday-school of young men and young women just at a certain age was due to the lack of an advanced course, a course embracing study beyond and more difficult than the present system provided. These petitions were both sent to the committee on resolutions, which considered them and reported unfavorably upon them. The consideration of this report gave the convention opportunity to speak upon the question. It was discussed by expert workers of both America and England. The discussion was interesting and able. The following paragraphs from the Sunday School Times' report of the matter will show the trend of the discussion and the salient points made:

"The president asked permission to give the first place in this discussion to one whose name was loved and honored, Mr. F. F. Belsey of London, an English member of the Lesson Committee. Mr. Belsey spoke for the large English constituency. 'We beg most earnestly,' said he, 'that you will do nothing to imperil the grand uniformity of the International lesson system.' He hoped no 'advanced course' would be issued, pointing out that it would make impossible the classes now often held in England where adults study the uniform lesson a week ahead, and can thus be called on as teachers. He showed how it would split up teachers' meetings, and do away with pastors' use of the lesson topics for prayer-meetings. Those and other strong reasons were advanced for holding to uniformity.

"Dr. Blackall made a vigorous plea for an advanced course. Progress is the watchword. He felt that there was an unmistakable demand for such a course; that the failure to supply it, thus failing to give growing young men and women the Bible study they crave, was a cause of exodus from the Sunday-school; that the uniform system results in too many 'helps' to the study of the lesson; that many of the most progressive educators sniff at the present courses of lessons. 'Uniformity in variety in accordance with true educational principles' was what he urged.

"It would be impossible to attempt even to summarize here all the addresses and discussions that followed. They were illuminative, and in excellent spirit. They are worthy of permanent preservation in the official verbatim report, and they will repay careful study when thus published. Here are some of the pros and cons: 'We shall honor the men of '72 not so much by standing still and admiring them, as by catching their spirit and moving forward' (Hazard). 'Let periods of the Bible be completed in our lessons' (Fraser). 'The largest gathering of primary workers ever assembled want a two-year beginner's course' (Mrs. M. B. Mitchell). 'We are told that educators sniff at this system. They sniff at their own systems. . . . For the little ones who can not read, I believe in a beginner's course; for those who can read, in the uniform lesson. What we need is not graded lessons, but graded teaching' (Neely). 'Give us supplemental lessons for grading purposes, but don't take away the uniform lessons' (W. C. Hall). 'There is no general demand in England for a graded system of lessons. The uniform lesson is growing in popularity among us, and there are thousands of schools still to be won to its adoption' (Frank Johnson). 'We've heard the voices of some of the most prominent experts, and I ask you, Were they all agreed? . . . I wish I could believe that the exodus at a certain age from Sunday-school is because the lessons are not difficult enough' (Potts).

"The conclusion of this matter was reached in the action taken the morning of the last day of the convention. There had been ample deliberation, full and free discussion. The convention had heard all sides ably presented. Its action faithfully reflects the feeling of the Sunday-school world as to the wisest plan to pursue for the present. The resolution as to the lessons will be found in the paragraph on resolutions."

The final action of the convention was to adopt the two year beginner's course which should, however, be marked "optional" and not "International," but the advanced course was turned down by a heavy majority. If we could judge anything by the popular applause of the speakers and the results of the votes, we would think that the masses of the International Sunday-school workers were quite well satisfied with the present uniform system and quite averse to doing anything that would in time tend to destroy the system.

Concerning Libraries.

Following this we publish a circular letter and blank report sent out by Sr. Ethel I. Skank, Henderson, Iowa, to the members of the several schools of her district. She is the district librarian and this is one of the methods she is employing to interest the patrons of the district in library work and reading. And it seems that she is certainly going at it in a practical way, for it reaches to the individual and appeals to him directly and not in a general way. It is calculated to interest the patrons in the library movement in the Sunday-school and the home and in the reading of good books. It is also intended to stimulate a gentle rivalry between schools in getting the reports, in which must in turn stimulate the reading of a book. It will be well for district librarians to note carefully this plan of work and see if they could not advantageously employ some such method of work. We regret that some district librarians are doing absolutely nothing that can be discerned, though, fortunately, many others are doing the best they can in one way or another. Whatever way you go at it, try to make your work practical and reach the individual.

Strenuous Life at Independence.

The Saints have lately been making advancement here in many ways that tend to indicate a progressive people. They are more alive in the work than usual; and among the younger ones are those who are advanced in knowledge concerning the history, doctrine, literature, and government of the Church.

With an increased membership, now more than thirteen hundred, the ambition to plant suitable homes, and to utilize and beautify, and to help establish and perfect the work here are all apparent. Here and there are neat cottages, especially in the west environs, some with comely pillared porches, and with up-to-date appointments within. A few houses built over anew are made more desirable, and in nearly all parts of the city are newly-paved streets, granitoid walks, and carefully-sodded lawns and terraces.

The clerk in looking over the record of 1903 is reminded of the regretful break in church association caused by the death of a few of our number. Five of our brethren and sisters were taken away in the prime of life, also five little buds of promise were transplanted that they might unfold in a more congenial place. There were others, who, aged, tired, and worn, bravely bore the trials and shared the fortunes incident to the earlier days of the Church here, and at last peacefully passed away; these were Srs. Engle and Tignor, and Brn. Parker, Etzenhouser, James, Bailey, Mayo, and Hayward. May they rest in peace! Sr. Hannah Slye, very weak and weary, is patiently waiting to join them; let us pray for her.

Last year thirty-five young people and seven adults were received by baptism, and fifty-five by letter; ten removed to other branches. Sixteen infant sons and ten daughters were brought in, and, reclining in priestly arms, like the little Prince of years long ago, received their first church blessing. Ten couples made wise decisions, and now walk under the yoke together. Such is the record.

Some of us used to take delight with our mothers in listening to the stirring words of the "come-outers" of our day; but now, a little further down the stream of time, a greater than Emerson or Parker, King or Ellis, has come among us in the person of the Latter Day Saint elder with his restored gospel message and literature. From these we can learn truths that connect with the highest of thrones and with the records of God's ancients on both Eastern and Western Continents.

During the latter part of the year we have heard excellent discourses from apostles and elders, among them, White and Luff, Hulmes, Garrett, Smith, Erwin, Peak, Pitt, Hilliard, May,

Scott, Parsons, and Kemp. Exceptional church privileges are ours, and rare opportunities for doing good. Time and space fail me to only mention the interests of some of the brethren such as the Saints' Cemetery Fund, Church Improvement Fund, pledge card project, Mercantile and Coöperative Company's work, also Bro. Carson's burial fund which is for the benefit of all, et al.

These are strenuous times with all of us; even some of the sisters haven't time to stay at home. While a few remain indoors, they read to their children, teach by precept and example, and urge on step by step, by prayer and song and admonition to ways of simplicity and uprightness. The mothers' teachings point out the little follies incident to dress and diet, etc., and the rebellious her soft pleadings melt to repentance and the Spirit's presence she woos bringing peace and happiness.

Other mothers also have important duties to perform and are laden with cares and offices in church work. They are pushing their way, for they are workers of Sunday-school, Religio, Willing Helpers, Prayer Union, Daughters of Zion, Gleaners, Hawthornes, and Home Classes, and with their attendant committees, soliciting and visiting, collecting and distributing, all are hustling to close the home door and gather with their followers to the place of meeting. But the procession is only half "over," for there are the twenty-two sopranos, ten tenors, ten bassos, and seven altos, with their four officers,—all "sweet singers of Israel," with their four or five weekly gatherings,—three for choir service and two for concert practice.

We hesitate to tell of far less worthy activities, in the line of pleasure seeking, at this momentous time when hearts almost stop their beating at the hearing of the appalling news of the day, when so many human hopes are crushed, and homes made desolate. Prophets have foretold these signs and in the words of Bishop May in a late discourse we say, "We are indeed living in the last dispensation, glorious to the Saints, which shall continue till the coming of Christ and on throughout the endless ages of eternity." Yet in view of these awful visitations, with souls lighted up with the Spirit and with the hope of immortality abiding within them, how placid the undisturbed life of the Saints, though amid afflictions and many cares! How serene the short probation, although not unmixd with losses and infirmities of age! To know we are a portion of God's people is precious, but to realize the promises fulfilled in us is far more so.

That we may all inherit a fullness of joy is our prayer.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

The Poet's Vision.

Dear Herald: As a fitting close or rather climax to my recent astronomical articles in your valued columns, permit me to transcribe for your readers the concluding paragraphs of Sir R. A. Proctor's monumental work, "The Expanse of Heaven," and if any of your readers have ever perused a more striking and sublime confirmation and commentary corroborating the language of the humble prophet of the nineteenth century, I can only say it has never been my good fortune to read it!

The prophet says upon page 215 of the recent edition of the Doctrine and Covenants: "The light which is in all things; which giveth light to all things; which is the law by which all things are governed; even the power of God who sitteth upon his throne, who is in the bosom of eternity, who is in the midst of all things." And, again, at the close of page 217: "All kingdoms have a law given: and there are many kingdoms; for there is no space in the which there is no kingdom; and there is no kingdom in which there is no space, either a greater kingdom or a lesser kingdom. And unto every kingdom is given a law; and unto every law there are certain bounds also, and conditions."

In this solemn and sublime phraseology one is irresistibly reminded of the learned and venerable Apostle Paul's magnificent exordium, or rather peroration, of his epistle to the Roman church: "How great is the depth of the knowledge and the wisdom of our heavenly Father!"—Romans 11:33, septuagint version. Any one who has heard this magnificent chorus from Mendelssohn's sublime oratorio of "St. Paul," accompanied by the great two hundred and fifty thousand dollar pipe organ at the Crystal Palace, London, England, together with Sir August Mann's massed brass and string bands of seven hundred and ninety-eight performers,—with a volume of over three thousand trained voices of the enormous choir in the center transept,—would never forget the majesty of that sight and sound while life lasts or memory endures!

Let me now transcribe the concluding sentences from that stupendous work by Sir R. A. Proctor, one of the first astronomers and mathematicians of the time, nay, of the age itself. He says:

"After penetrating, by means of the telescope, to depths exceeding millions of times the distance of the sun (inconceivable though that distance is), we find ourselves still surrounded by the same mysteries as when we started. Around us and before us there are still the infinite star depths; and the only certain lesson we can learn, or be said to have learned, is that those depths are, and must for ever remain simply unfathomable!

"Truly, the German poet Richter has spoken well in those wonderful words which our own poet De Quincy, though but a prose poet, has so nobly and so magnificently translated, his splendid vision aptly expresses the utter feebleness of man's highest and noblest conceptions in the presence of the infinitudes of creation, the infinite wonders of Him 'whose wisdom is unsearchable, and his ways past finding out' this is the vision: 'God called up from dreams a man into the vestibule of heaven, saying, 'Come thou thither, and behold the glory of my house.' And to the angels which stood around his throne he said, 'Take him, strip from him his robes of flesh; cleanse his vision, and put a new breath into his nostrils; only touch not with any change his human heart, the heart that weeps and trembles.'" It was done; and with a mighty angel for his guide, the man stood ready for his infinite voyage; and from the terraces of heaven, without sound or farewell at once they wheeled into infinite and endless space.

"Sometimes with the solemn flight of angel wings they passed through saharas of darkness, through wildernesses of death, that divided the worlds of life; sometimes they swept over frontiers that were quickening under prophetic motions from the eternal God. Then from a distance which is counted only in heaven, light dawned for a time through a shapeless film; by unutterable pace the light swept to them, they by unutterable pace to the light. In a moment the rushing of planets was upon them; in a moment the blazing of suns was around them.

"Then came eternities of twilight, that revealed but were not revealed. On the right hand and on the left towered mighty constellations, that by self-repetitions and answers from afar, that by counter positions, built up triumphal gates, whose architraves, whose archways, horizontal, upright, rested, rose, at altitude, by spans that seemed ghostly from infinitude. Without measure were the architraves, past number were the archways, beyond memory the gates! Within were stairs that scaled the eternities around; above was below, and below was above, to the man stripped of gravitating body; depth was swallowed up in height insurmountable; height was swallowed up in depth unfathomable!

"Suddenly, as thus they rode from infinite to infinite, suddenly, as thus they tilted over abysmal worlds, a cry arose that systems more mysterious, that worlds more billowy, other heights and other depths, were coming, were nearing, were at hand!

"Then the man sighed and stopped, shuddered and wept. His overlaid heart found vent and uttered itself in tears, and he said, "Angel, I will go no farther; for the spirit of man acheth with this infinity. Insufferable is the glory of God. Let me lie down in the grave, and hide me from the persecution of the infinite, for end I see there is none."

"And from all the listening stars that shone around issued a choral voice: "The man speaketh truly; and there is none that ever yet we heard of!" "End is there none?" the angel solemnly demanded; "is there indeed no end? And is this the sorrow that fills space?"

"But no voice answered, that he might answer it himself. Then the angel threw up his glorious hands toward the heaven of heavens, saying, "End is there none to the universe of God. Lo, also, there is no beginning."'"—Pages 303-305.

Can word portray or language frame a more golden, glorious, nay, glaring, testimony to the absolute veracity of the once despised prophet of Nauvoo who wrote: "And it came to pass that Moses called upon God, saying, Tell me, I pray thee, why these things are so, and by what thou madest them? And, behold, the glory of God was upon Moses, so that Moses stood in the presence of God, and he talked with Moses, face to face: and the Lord God said unto Moses, For mine own purpose have I made these things. Here is wisdom, and it remaineth in me. And by the word of my power have I created them, which is mine Only Begotten Son, who is full of grace and truth. And worlds without number have I created; and I also created them for mine own purpose, and by the Son I created them, which is mine Only Begotten."—Doctrine and Covenants 22:7.

To the hundreds, nay, perhaps thousands of your readers as yet unjoined to the Latter Day Saints' Church of our adorable Redeemer, I have but this one word to add: How long halt ye between two opinions? If God be God, follow him, but if Baal, then follow him! When the profoundest astronomers and mathematicians, whether willingly or unwillingly, consciously or unconsciously, testify with unanimous voice to the same sublime things that were spoken seventy years ago by the humble and unlearned farmer's son of Nauvoo, who was neither an astronomer nor the son of an astronomer, nor ever in his life entered the walls of an astronomical observatory, what greater evidence can you desire, nay, what grander token can you receive, that he was, and is, and ever shall be, a prophet of the Highest? "What went ye out for to see? A prophet? Nay verily I say unto you, a prophet, and more than a prophet! For to him did the God of heaven and earth speak face to face, as a man speaketh unto his own friend." The Maker of uncounted millions of suns inspired his mind, and the Architect of the universe enlightened his understanding! Surely he has not said in vain, "I, the Lord, dwell in the heaven of heavens, and the earth is my footstool. For all these things hath mine hand made; but to this man will I look, even to him that is poor, and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word."

F. R. TUBB.

METUCHEN, New Jersey, January 26, 1904.

Editors Herald: It is now more than five years since we contributed a few thoughts to your columns; during this time I have passed through many experiences—some pleasant and others hard to bear. I take comfort in the thought that all things work together for good to those that love the Lord.

I was born and cradled in the work at Brooklyn, and for the first time in thirteen years I find myself permanently isolated from the Saints. For nearly three years I have been trying to make arrangements to emigrate to South Africa, but everything failed. I could not satisfactorily arrange it. Our presiding elder told me not to go. "If you do, you will have to come back again, having failed in your object," and quite unexpectedly I find myself located here and building a desirable home for permanent residence. I have realized unlooked-for favors from those from whom I did not expect them; and have received the Holy Spirit's approval in selecting this place for a home. What the outcome will be I do not know. Perhaps the work will be established here, when I am fully settled. Of this I have no evidence.

This small town with its five thousand inhabitants has six or seven churches. I am attending the Presbyterian church, and taking part in their social services. The pastor called on us with a view of getting us as members. We told him we were Latter Day Saints. He located us by saying, "Oh, you are Mormons, then." As usual he was not posted and had never seen a Book of Mormon; so I loaned him mine and a HERALD to read up.

I am thankful for this glorious gospel, for truly it is of God. We have felt the invigorating power of the divine Spirit coursing and burning through our veins, illuminating our mind and when necessary loosening our naturally stammering tongue.

Beautiful, picturesque visions have been opened to our view; the voice of the Spirit heard in instruction, and spiritual dreams enjoyed. We have seen the power of love light up and make angelic the features of Brn. Kelley, Bond, Sheehy, Potts, Squire, and others when preaching the restored gospel. We have seen many remarkable cases of God's blessing in the Brooklyn Branch. One brother took by mistake enough poison to kill a horse and was instantly relieved with the laying on of hands. A young sister fell from the third story to the stone steps leading to the cellar, and after being administered to, the only discomfort was a discolored eye. There are many other cases too numerous to mention, and yet with the many blessings the Saints enjoy, we become careless and cold at times.

The following prophecy, sang by a brother just after I joined the work, had a marked effect on my mind. It was given after a sermon on prophecy, September 21, 1891:

"Rejoice; O ye faithful, for thus saith the Lord;
I soon now am coming, fulfilling my word,
And the powers of Satan then have an end,
While all that have loved me shall welcome their friend.

"But some of my people are careless and cold;
O, warn them that truth is more precious than gold;
Return! O return; and your covenants keep,
Then in glory with me you shall wake, if you sleep.

"But be wary, lest careless and cold you shall keep,
For what a man soweth that, too, he shall reap,
Corruption if careless, and death from the cold,
For unfaithful ones never shall enter the fold."

When these verses were sung, Bro. George Baty, now an elder laboring in England, was called to the priesthood, as also Bro. George Box. And if they had been heeded by the Brooklyn Saints what a different history could have been written.

When the Patriarch, Bro. Alexander Smith, was at Brooklyn, he preached the whole hour from Doctrine and Covenants. I beheld his person encircled with a luminous light, extending about three feet each side and above him. Just before the conclusion of the sermon, I turned to Bro. Guilfooy sitting behind me. I said, Do you see anything in particular? He said, "Why, yes. Bro. Smith is encircled with light; I was just going to speak to you about it."

When our worthy brother, President Smith, was at Brooklyn on his return from England, I beheld this same manifestation. His whole person was encircled with beautiful light. When Bro. Sheehy stood alongside of him part of the light was obscured where he stood, while Bro. Smith's person was brilliant. Bro. Sheehy being natural, looked dark in contrast. Not understanding this at the time, I asked Bro. Sheehy if there was anything the matter with him. He said he "was all right." This comforting testimony comes to us: Bro. Joseph is a man of God. He is in the right place as head of the Church,

The above seems quite an array of testimony, yet there are years between some of them. Some came when life seemed hardly desirable.

This thought comes to us as memory brings back a few of those past blessings: Should not the principle of cohesion apply here? Then numerous experiences, like particles of matter, form a solidity that can not be broken or dissolved.

We were glad to note the article on the personality of the Holy Spirit. Our mind has been occupied a good deal on this matter; am satisfied light is yet to come in reference to the Holy Spirit.

We listened to a sermon by the Presbyterian pastor. His subject was "Jesus Christ as an expert." Some of the things he said were, there were the eye experts, the ear experts, and of the various sciences, etc., and wound up by saying, "The pastors were the experts in curing and saving souls." His definition of an expert was, one who could do a certain thing better than any body else. As we contemplate on this matter, we draw our own conclusions.

Myself and family were edified in listening for an hour to the son of a nobleman, ruler of the richest province in Macedonia. He was converted from the Greek Church to the Protestant faith. He had to leave the county; his father threatened to kill him on sight. As we listened to the terrible condition of the poor in that country, who are heavily taxed and oppressed by the Turk, we felt that the Egyptian darkness of the Dark Ages hangs like a pall over Macedonia and surrounding country. The Greek Church controls the people, body and soul. The poor are kept in ignorance and superstition. They have to work hard from sunrise to sunset for ten cents a day. The churches having no seats, the people have to stand from three to five hours listening to a service not a word of which do they understand, until they are weary and sometimes exhausted. The country is centuries behind the times, and they have no improvements whatever. Yet those people were once favored in the sight of heaven. Paul was sent there through a vision. When will the latter-day Pauls be sent there with the same gospel that former-day Paul taught?

One of the points he brought out strongly was, the Christians of that country were not killed and persecuted by the Turks for their faith; that was a great mistake. The brigands and bandits descended from their mountain strongholds and made frequent depredations and violated the governing laws. The Turkish armies not being able to follow the real offenders to their strongholds, killed those whom they could. Some of those happened to be Protestant converts. I would like to mention other points, but space forbids, and my letter is lengthy.

I am thankful for the great hope that has come into our life, and trust to be ever found faithful. Praying for the welfare of the Church and looking for its ultimate triumph, I am,

Your brother,

JAMES COCKS.

HITEMAN, Iowa, February 2, 1904.

Editors Herald: The Saints in Hiteman are still alive and show more interest in the work than for some time, for which we feel thankful and very much encouraged. The branch has been in a bad condition, almost dead, but a few faithful sisters keep up the Sunday-school and prayer-meeting, trusting in the Master's promise that he will meet with two or three, and we know that he will never forget nor forsake the children that trust in his word.

Some months ago Bro. W. H. Kephart came to labor with us and through the efforts of that noble brother much good has been done in the Hiteman Branch. Several have been added to our number and more are ready and waiting his return to be baptized. We have a young people's prayer-meeting and all take part. Through Bro. Kephart's kind, Christian manner he made many friends not only among the Saints but among those outside of the Church. Pray for us that we may live faithful and true Latter Day Saints.

Your sister in gospel bonds,
ELLA WHITE.

SHINNSTON, West Virginia, January 28, 1904.

Editor Herald: I see in the Watchman that H. R. Harder and J. L. Goodrich are in Calhoun County, this State, and as there are a few Saints in this place, we would like to have them visit us. Our nearest branch is in Clarksburg, West Virginia.

I would like for L. R. Devore and Sr. Devore to write me. We are few in this place, but still in the faith, and if the elders will visit us I will furnish a place in which to hold meetings. Saints, remember us in your prayers.

Your sister in the faith,

E. J. LEESON.

FAIRFIELD, Nebraska, February 1, 1904.

Dear Herald: We are holding a series of meetings at this place and have very good interest. Brn. James and John Teeters were holding forth when I arrived, and yesterday three precious souls were buried with Christ in baptism and more are to follow soon.

There are twenty-nine Saints living around Fairfield and we hope in the near future to organize a branch, for we feel that a branch and a Sunday-school are just what is needed here for their spiritual growth.

In gospel bonds,

W. M. SELF.

Campaign Year.

For some reason people are easily excited when talking on politics. This being a campaign year we as Saints should be careful and avoid heated conversations on political subjects. Peter informs the Saints that they are to be ensamples to the flock and not lords over God's heritage. How about it, brethren of the priesthood? Do we rule in an arbitrary way over the flock, or do we rule in kindness as the law directs? Heated conversation on any subject, whether on politics or religion, in campaign year or at any other time is not profitable to us. True we should be interested in governmental affairs and try to see that good men are put in office, but let us avoid extremes in these as in all other things.

C. J. SPURLOCK.

LOGAN, Iowa, February 4, 1904.

Editors Herald: I have been here over three weeks. There is a noble band of Saints here and they have assisted in our meetings nobly. We have had fair attendance and good interest, and last Sunday I baptized five more into the church of Jesus Christ, and others are near the door of the kingdom. This makes eighty-nine that I have baptized this conference year.

There is a good interest in this district. More calls for labor than we can possibly fill. Bro. D. C. Hutchings has been holding meetings about five miles north of here at Biglers Grove. He has had splendid attendance and good attention. The prospect for the work looks good; we haven't very many laborers; but they are earnest workers.

Let us keep the campfires blazing.

W. A. SMITH.

ST. JOSEPH, Missouri.

Dear Herald: It may be good news to some of your readers that have manifested a deep interest in my spiritual welfare to learn that I am still in the faith, and I believe in the spirit of the work and am doing what I can for the advancement and support of the same.

Judging from letters received and personal remarks made some have concluded that when I asked to be released from General Conference appointment that a mistake was made; some quoting the saying of Christ, "He that taketh hold of the gospel plow and looketh back is not fit for the kingdom of God." Question: When did I take hold of the gospel plow? Was it when in company with Bro. T. J. Pierce, October 1, 1901, I accepted the appointment to labor in Wales, or was it February, 1865, when I entered the Church or kingdom by baptism, and was ordained as one of the standing or local ministry? Did I not have hold of the gospel plow from February, 1865, to October, 1901? If so, have I not now? A word of explanation why I have asked to be released from conference appointment and why I now labor locally, self-supporting.

First, the demand on the Bishopric was more than could be cared for, and there were in the missionary field those who ought to be supported for they are the traveling ministry by virtue of their calling and appointment. I have reference to the Twelve and Seventy. (See Doctrine and Covenants 104: 12-16; 120: 8.) Those two quorums are expected to devote their time in the missionary field, not in branches, and should be supported. (See section 122: 8.) The standing ministry, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons are not under obligations to travel in the world; their calling is in branches and districts. (See section 103: 1; 120: 2; 122: 9.)

Second, I do not believe that it is in harmony with the law of the Church to appoint any one of the standing ministry to labor locally and to support him with the church funds. Why should the high priest who may be in charge of a branch in towns or cities be supported any more than the priest who is required in the law to visit the house of each member? (Section 17: 10.) Surely, if the priest can labor with his hands to support his family and visit the house of each member, the high priest or elder ought to. In Book of Mormon, Alma 1:2-6, we learn that Alma condemned the idea of supporting the priests and teachers. He called it priestcraft. We learn that the priests left their labor to impart the word of God to the people, and that the people left their labors to go and hear the word of God, and that the priests after imparting the word would return to their labors. The preacher was no better than the hearers; they were all on equal terms.

Paul in his day when located in any one place for months, or years, worked with his hands and preached every Sabbath. He frequently mentions that he had labored with his hands to support himself, so that he might not be a burden to the Saints. In my judgment, it would be wise and in harmony with Paul and the Book of Mormon, if many who are now in charge of the work in cities would also labor with their hands and support their families so that those who are in distant fields laboring would be supported.

I confess that I was very much grieved when I learned that two of the missionaries in Wales, and one in Scotland had to leave the ministry for the lack of support. I asked, Why not say to those at home laboring where there was much local help, Go to work, support your families, so we can keep the men in distant fields? I hope that the way may soon open so that the work in Wales and Scotland can again have help. Although there were not many added to the Church in Wales, the two years I was there, I know that we have warm friends not a few, and that if proper support is given they will yet come in. I must say that I found more God-fearing men and women in Wales than in all my travels in this country, and I have spent forty-seven years here, and have been in more than half the States. One may ask, If that is true, why do so few take hold of the work? It is easy to answer. Brighamism has killed the name Saint, and when once the good people there learn the facts the work will yet grow. I do hope that yet I may be spared to spend some of my days among that people and have the privilege of seeing many I know are interested come in. I do want to have the Church put in her true light in that land, where once thousands received the truth with joy. God bless all that are there laboring to that end, and send more to help. Well, I have departed from my subject and will say no more about Wales.

My third reason for doing what I have is that in this city of St. Joseph we have a branch of nearly six hundred members, including two seventies, two high priests, thirteen elders, seventeen priests, seven teachers, and four deacons. I thought that casting my lot with the local help we could care for the work and support ourselves, so to-day I labor with my hands, attend prayer-meetings, and preach once, sometimes twice, on Sunday.

It may not be popular for ministers to work and support their families, but I believe it is all right and pleasing with the Lord when we can do so. Why should you or I be placed in charge of the work here and take charge of all meetings, do all the preaching, and be supported, when my brethren, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons labor with their hands and attend as many of the services as I do; besides laboring in branch work? Is there equality in this? Again I ask, Why should not the one in charge of the work here labor with his hands as well as his coworkers? Are we not all workers together with God? Why should the president not work as well as the priest, teacher, or deacon who has charge of the house of worship? Well, says one, is there not work enough for one man to devote all his time in a branch of six hundred? If so, why should he not be supported so he will be free to do church work?

Yes, he can attend Sunday-school, take charge, if the school wishes; he can then preach at eleven o'clock in the forenoon; take charge of Saints' meeting, and preach again in the evening; then he can visit the Saints' homes, not in the day time when the men folks are all at work; best to go when all are home so that he can talk with all, and he may have the priest or teacher go with him. They can not go in the day for they must work. He can spend the day in reading and studying, take out tracts to the neighbors, take charge of Wednesday night prayer-meeting; also attend the Religio. He can find plenty to do. If he does all this what need of all the other officers? Why not do away with all the others, as he and family are supported with church funds? Oh, no, we need them too, for if they and the members are not present at all meetings he would not be needed! Then why should he not labor, as they do, for the support of family and be equal with the collaborators and save the Church the sum of thirty to forty dollars per month, which is so much needed to carry on the work in new fields where there is no local help? In other words, why not do as they did in the Book of Mormon times? In my judgment something must be done in order that the families of those called to go into the world may be provided. Let all that can do local work; try to be self-supporting, and let those supported by the Church see to it that they are not spending too much time at home and causing some to withhold their tithes and offerings.

In conclusion, I believe that the laborer is worthy of his hire, but why pay one and not the other? Let the high priest and all others in charge of local work do as Paul did and many others in our day have done—work with their own hands. Yes, both handle the saw, pick, and shovel, stand behind the counter, plow, or do anything that your hands find to do that is honorable. Read and study in your spare moments and you will be blessed in the pulpit; speak by the power of the Spirit and you will rejoice in the good work. Do not think that honest work will disqualify you for church work; it did not with others; it is part of our religion.

WILLIAM LEWIS.

St. CHARLES, Iowa, February 3, 1904.

Editors Herald: Since my last communication. I have closed the protracted services at Patterson and had good attendance and order and a good degree of interest manifested throughout, and the last meetings were the best attended. Many are investigating and others wondering and desponding.

I mentioned in my last that I was invited to speak in the Methodist Episcopal church one Sunday evening by the Epworth League, and did so, but the following Sunday their pastor appeared in the pulpit and upbraided them for extending such invitation to a "Mormon," in language strong enough to arouse their ire and righteous indignation, which has been plainly manifested in terms unmistakable from every source, and instead of taking his advise not to go and hear us, they came out better than before and paid better attention; thus God made the wrath of men to praise him. Bro. Johnson was present at the meeting and ask the privilege of making a few statements, but was refused. This added fuel to the fire already kindled, and the probability is he will lose about half of his congregation, or as many as he was about five weeks in "converting" just before we came in there.

We closed last Sunday evening after holding twenty-three meetings, and many invitations were extended to return; and the church is open for us any time. Shall likely return in five or six weeks.

Bro. Johnson went to Altoona last week in search of new fields, and I just received a card to-day stating that he has secured the Christian church at Sandyville for two or three weeks and wants me to come at once, but I can not leave until Saturday. To satisfy some who had attended the meetings at Patterson I promised to come into their neighborhood also and hold some meetings, but am sorry that I can not stay more than one evening, on account of going to Sandyville. I find where we can only secure a hearing, and people not too prejudiced to come and hear, that the gospel appeals to the reason of men whether they see fit to accept it or not.

May the Lord bless his work and his workers for the sake of the honest of heart.

In bonds,
S. K. SORENSEN.

Died.

TOWNS.—Mattie S., of Rosalie, Texas, December 23, 1903; was born in Texas, October 16, 1862; was married to J. E. Towns April 29, 1879. Was baptized into the Church July 30, 1899, by E. A. Erwin, confirmed by Ellis Short and H. O. Smith, and her whole desire was to live the gospel and tell it to others. She lived a noble life; was a loving wife, kind mother, and a noble Saint. God, in her last moments, blessed her with a beautiful vision, giving her assurance of a part in the first resurrection. She leaves a husband and seven children to mourn, and was laid to rest in the Dene Cemetery.

CLAPPER.—Barbara Forney was born August 4, 1811, at Little Cove, Pennsylvania. Died at her home near Thurman, Saturday, January 23, 1904, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon. During the year 1820 her family moved from Pennsylvania to Stark County, Ohio. While there she united with the Methodist Church, but not feeling satisfied with this faith, united with the then newly organized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The exact date of her baptism could not be learned, but is thought to have been in 1833. To this covenant made over seventy years ago she has continued faithful until her death. She was united in marriage to Jacob Clapper in 1832 at Nauvoo; unto them one child, Henry W., was born. Funeral at the Saints' church near Thurman, Iowa, January 25, 1904, sermon by D. R. Chambers, assisted by C. W. Forney.

KUYKENDALL.—Fern LaJune Kuykendall was born June 24, 1893. She was the only child of Russell and Ella Kuykendall and was a sweet child; very affectionate and kind. Her actions would have caused one to think she was older than her years,—she was so ladylike in all her ways. She was religiously inclined and could hardly wait until eight years of age to be baptized. Fern became a member of the Church in August, 1901, and since that time has shown by her daily actions that she was a little Saint. She was taken sick with scarlet fever on the 20th of November. A few weeks later was taken with whooping cough and the two were more than the frail little body could stand. Toward the end of her illness she realized that she was going to die and told her mamma so, but said, "Mamma, I am not afraid to die, for I will be an angel. But don't tell papa,—it will make him feel so bad! I would rather stay with you and Papa. If I die I want Bro. Chambers to preach my funeral." Her last request was, "Papa and mamma, I want you to so live that we can all meet again." Little Fern was released from her sufferings at her home in Glenwood, Iowa, on the morning of January 20, 1904, being 10 years, 6 months, and 27 days old. Funeral services were held at the Saints' church near Thurman, January 23, 1904; sermon by Elder D. R. Chambers of Magnolia, Iowa, assisted by C. M. Roberts. At the conclusion of the services she was laid to rest in the Thurman Cemetery.

HALEN.—Lucy A. Ruby was born October 30, 1847, in Michigan and came to Nebraska with her parents when only 12 years old, and was baptized into the Church October 13, 1878, at Omaha by W. M. Rumel. She was married to Augustus Halen, and died February 8, 1904. Buried from the Saints' church at Omaha, February 10; sermon by James Huff, assisted by J. S. Strain.

WEST.—Alberta West, the daughter of L. F. and F. E. West, died at the home of her parents in Santa Rosa County, Florida, January 6, 1904, aged 20 years. She was baptized by Bro. G. H. Hilliard in September, 1895. For nine years she had been a great sufferer from rheumatism, for four years being completely helpless. She was the embodiment of patience and resignation, always uncomplaining; was idolized by the family and much loved by a host of friends. In the early dawn of the day mentioned she quietly fell asleep in Jesus and the next day was laid to rest to await the rising of the just.

TROOK.—Born at Union, Nebraska, James William Trook, January 4, 1900; died January 23, 1904. Funeral at Mt. Hope church, January 25, by Elder J. B. Gouldsmith.

SOUTHWICK.—Sr. Lauria E., of East Delavan, Wisconsin, died January 26, 1904. Lauria E. Sherman was born July 10, 1833, at Silver Creek, New York; came to Carthage, Illinois, in November, 1844, and with her parents resided there about a year. Then came to Southern Wisconsin, which has since been her home. She was married to Henry Southwick February 3, 1858; united with the Church at the age of twelve years and remained an earnest, faithful member to the end, dying in the hope of a glorious resurrection. Funeral was held at the Saints' church at East Delavan; sermon by Elder J. T. Hackett.

In the February number of the North American Review, Mr. E. F. Loud who for many years was chairman of the Post-office and Post Roads Committee in the House of Representatives, discusses certain criticisms that have been levelled against the postal service of the United States. It has been held by a number of people that the postal service does not do for the people what it might do, and that it ought to add to its present functions a parcels post, a postal telegraph, a postal savings-bank, and that the rate of railway-mail pay should be revised. Mr. Loud takes up these suggestions in detail and examines them. As to the parcels post, Mr. Loud calls attention to the fact that its adoption would involve the organization of an entirely new branch of business, the providing of large and expensive warehouses in the great cities of the country, the ownership and use of vast drayage and wagon systems. This can not be desirable. The cheap transmission of goods to the people is an object worth seeking, but it should be developed through the natural laws of commerce. The advocates of the parcels post claim that the system has worked well in England, France, and Germany; but in these countries the conditions, geographical and social, are wholly different from ours, and as to expense, it has been found in England, the only country that has attempted to measure the cost, that it is conducted at a considerable loss. The same thing is true regarding the cost of the postal telegraph. When the British government took control of the telegraph, the business was profitable; but conducted by government officials, it showed a deficit in the third year, and the total deficit for the whole period since then has amounted to more than fifty-three million dollars. Mr. Loud also enumerates the objections to the establishment of postal savings-banks, laying emphasis on the difficulty that would be found in fixing upon the rate of interest to be paid to depositors. Once a rate were determined upon, no change would be practicable, even if the rate of interest earned by money in general should fall considerably below the postal interest rate. Mr. Loud also shows that criticisms on the rate of railway-mail pay are not well founded. Dealing with the postal savings-banks, Mr. Loud says:

"The postal savings-bank would mean a large perpetual national debt; and to adopt the system would necessitate the purchase of the whole amount of outstanding bonds, which amount, no one contends, would be sufficient to cover the amount that would be deposited. This course would inevitably increase the price of the securities and lower the rate of interest. There is no man so wise that he can tell what the rate of interest will be five or ten years hence. Twenty years ago four per cent looked so small that it would have attracted few depositors; yet, once adopted, it could not be reduced. The citizen whose opinion is worth considering seeks the most of life; using his judgement, he always seeks the bank that pays the highest rate of interest; the less he has, the more income he naturally wants for a dollar. The Government is not constituted to manage a successful banking business, it must work by the written statutory law so safely guarded as to surround it with insurmountable restraint. A banking business requires quick perception and at times action in many of the details of the business; no successful business institution can wait years for legislation to determine whether the rate of interest should be raised or lowered, or whether securities should be bought or sold. Some discretion must be lodged somewhere, but it can not be safely lodged in legislative acts to be carried out by men who have no financial interests in their actions."

"A Day in Zarahemla in 200 A. D.," by Julia N. Dutton, in February Autumn Leaves, is a very unique and readable little story, dealing with Book of Mormon life.

IN THE TABERNACLE, SALT LAKE CITY.

Bro. Fred'k M. Smith, who visited Salt Lake City, Utah, for the purpose of attending the Smith family reunion, February 9, attended the services in the Tabernacle on Sunday the 14th, and was the first speaker on the program, being followed by Charles Penrose, editor of the Deseret News. Bro. Fred M. is the first elder of the Reorganization to speak in the Tabernacle. We give below what he said on the occasion as reported in the News for February 15:

Frederick M. Smith, the oldest living son of "young Joseph," counselor to his father as president of the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and associate editor of the SAINTS' HERALD, published at Lamoni, Iowa, was introduced to the congregation as the first speaker. He began by assuring his hearers that it was with peculiar feelings that he stood before them to represent a religious belief that in some respects was markedly different to that believed in by his auditors. Said he, "I might spend the time so kindly given me in discussing these differences, but I doubt that that would do any good—it might do some harm. But there are common grounds on which we stand and these, perhaps, may be discussed before you with profit. Whether time, the great arbiter, shall soften the differences that exist between us, only the great Creator can tell. But in the divinity of Joseph Smith's mission I believe with you, and in this particular we stand on common ground, ready and willing at all times to defend the position which we occupy."

The speaker then referred to the creed of the Latter Day Saints and said if there was one word or set of words that comprised that creed, it was found in the words, "all truth." On this hypothesis the speaker proceeded to discuss "Mormonism," using as his text-book the Lamoni edition of the Doctrine and Covenants. He spoke of Joseph Smith's first vision and the answer to his prayer that all the sects of the day were wrong. While the answer received was no doubt a surprise to the boy prophet, he could do naught but listen to the voice of God and act according to the instructions given him.

The love of God, said the speaker, is seen in all the works of creation. If Latter Day Saintism stands for anything it stands for improvement. Paul said, "By the things natural do we understand the things that are spiritual." A similar truth was expressed by Emerson, the great American sage.

Referring to the Doctrine and Covenants, Mr. Smith said it contained and comprehended the great principle of continuous revelation. He then read quite copiously from different sections of the book concerning the need of training and educating little children, and of teaching one another the doctrine of the kingdom. Said he, "What is good for the ministry is also good for the laity. Can you conceive of anything educational not encompassed in these statements? Here faith and self-improvement are linked together. All we do, all we say, and all we hope to accomplish, should be with the idea of the upbuilding of Zion and the glorification of God. The Saints should not con-

WHEREVER there is a foreign population there will be found a demand for herbs. A French chef is sometimes greatly at a loss here in America for the finer herbes he can buy in ready-made bunches at any market in France. It is on these that he depends for his most subtle effects. One has only to glance through a French cook-book to see what an important part they play in French cookery, and this is equally true of the Italian and Spanish cuisine.—Country Life in America.

fine their researches to the standard works of the Church, but should study all good books and accept truth wherever found. We are told that Christ is the Great Exemplar. Ten eleventhths of his life were spent in acquiring knowledge and this was consummated in the other eleventh—his crucifixion upon the cross. Why then should we murmur if our entire lives are spent in preparation? The written word is necessary to measure all things that come to us. Christ said, whenever met by the questions of men, "It is written." He also said, "Search the Scriptures." And Paul, as if to accentuate the teachings of the Great Master, declared, "Though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached, let him be accursed." By this we have a standard and it will not be possible to go astray if we base our belief on the word of God. In the Book of Mormon we have pearls of great price; in the Doctrine and Covenants gems of great worth; and in the Bible words of priceless value. But they have to be sought out. Individual enterprise is necessary. It needs self-effort to bring forth these priceless jewels."

In conclusion the speaker said: "Whether or not our differences shall ever be modified, only the great God can say. But of this I am assured, that the work established by the Prophet Joseph Smith shall triumph in the end. Whether it be this people or the people which are despised by many, and I fear also by this people, that will build the great temple of God, I can not say. I have given up everything of a worldly nature to strengthen and support this work, and with the help of God I shall continue to use my best efforts toward its advancement. I thank you.

APPEALS FOR AID TO CHARITIES.

We are frequently appealed to to give room in the HERALD for articles written in behalf of some of the organized public charities of the State, and appealing in strong and stirring terms for money aid to support them. We feel strongly tempted at times to give these articles insertion in the HERALD, and if the paper was large enough, or had a large advertising list, as many of the religious journals reaching our table as exchanges have, we would feel at liberty to do it. But we have neither the big paper nor the large advertising list, and so we are admonished to think first, of our lack of space and financial support, and second, of the need of support for our own enterprises, the tract fund, the Saints Home, and Graceland; for all of which the charity of the Saints is appealed to for aid.

Referring to the Orphan's Home Finding Association, of Iowa, U. B. Smith, of Ottumwa, Iowa, superintendent, we are reminded that the Saints need and ought to have an institution like a sanitarium in which some of our sick might find a temporary home, while receiving such administration, treatment, and nursing as are compatible with our faith and the necessities of each case. At present anything of the sort needed by our people must be had at the hands of those not of our faith.

We may not need an orphan asylum at the present, but it is consistent that we by thought, presentment, and admonition be preparing for that and other institutions of the sort against the time of need. A gathered or a gathering people must not be taken unawares.

SUBJECTS OF FIRST RESSURECTION— DO THEY DIE AGAIN?

"Will they of the terrestrial Kingdom who come forth in the first resurrection be resurrected to immortality, or will they be subject to death again in the flesh?"

That those who attain to the first resurrection do not die again is stated in Revelation 20: 6: "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." So also teaches the vision, Doctrine and Covenants 76: 5. See also 2 Thessalonians 4: 17.

Our understanding of the matter is that all who attain to the first resurrection do not die again, but remain in association in the presence of the Lord.

"Is it the doctrine of the Church that in the end of the world, after the wicked have been resurrected, God will again destroy their bodies and totally annihilate them?"

We are not aware that the Church has adopted any theory in regard to the peculiar phases of the dealing with the wicked after the resurrection for the judgment further than may be found in Revelation, chapters twenty and twenty-one; which seem to warrant the conclusion that when in the judgment a man is found to be righteous, he will remain righteous and will receive a righteous reward; he who is found to be unjust, will remain unjust and must take the penalty whatever that may be; he who is filthy, must continue in his filth, and suffer the consequences. Wickedness to be punished; holiness to be rewarded. To this agree other scriptures and revelations ancient and modern. In the sense of being scriptural it may be said to be the doctrine of the Church.

It is the belief of many that all born into the world will have an opportunity to obey the gospel, receive salvation and so escape condemnation of any sort in the judgement, and that even after the loss of the first resurrection and the endurance of the thousand years' sleep of some there will still be a chance for relief from the finality of the second death which must result in entire banishment from where God and Christ are "worlds without end." Just what that second death is is not so clearly revealed, further than that "death and hell were cast into the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone," and that this is the second death. If the ministration of Christ has finally redeemed all, then none will suffer this supreme penalty; but, if at the ending of probation there should be any who still refuse the offer of mercy through Christ, these must be of those of whom it has been written "and whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire."

Modern revelation has informed us that of the bitterness and horror of the second death "no one knows; neither was it revealed, neither is, neither will be revealed unto man except to them who are made partakers thereof."

The description of this class is given as follows:

Having denied the Holy Spirit, after having received it, and having denied the only begotten Son of the Father; having crucified him unto themselves, and put him to an open shame: these are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power, yea verily the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the sufferings of his wrath.

We have no justifying warrant in teaching men that, no matter what they may believe, say, or do, they will not be made to feel the power of an offended God, whose indignation shall be roused against their evil deeds to inflict upon them the penalty of their wrongdoing. To teach men that no matter what they do, they will all ultimately be saved where God and Christ are would be to make a mock of the gospel, despise the mercy manifest in Christ, and put a premium upon the committing of sin.

It is our duty to teach men to live right, and to obey the counsel of God through his son; which if they do, there is no need of a knowledge of just what the second death may be. Nor, indeed, is there necessity for any man to know, for if righteous, entitled to the first resurrection, he will neither deserve the second death, nor have either fear or knowledge of it even.

For these reasons and others like them we can not answer the question regarding the annihilation of the wicked. Though it is hardly compatible to believe that men shall suffer and be conscious in a condition of annihilation, and as punishment is for reclamation, not for revenge, men must remain in a state of consciousness if the effects of repentance and reclamation are to take place in them and for them. And so we leave it as God has left it.

PRAYER-MEETINGS.

In places where prayer-meetings are held among the Saints where a branch organization has not been perfected, the rule regarding who should preside would be, the one present holding the highest office in the priesthood should take charge. In case no officer should be present the one to take charge should be appointed by a motion and vote of those present. If there should be an elder in the locality, he would be privileged to suggest some one of the laity to take charge from time to time, if it was known that neither he nor any other officer would be present; but he would not be authorized to appoint any one to take charge permanently without the consent of the Saints was obtained to such appointment; he could not authoritatively put any one in charge. If a branch organization was effected, the presiding officer could name another officer to have temporary charge, he could not properly appoint a lay member; though he could suggest who might be a suitable person to take charge when no officer should be present. The Saints who may at any time be assembled for prayer and find that no officer is present to take charge, may select one of their own number present to lead, so that their assembling may not be lost to them.

IMMORTALITY OF ANIMALS.

The foregoing caption is from an editorial notice of a book issued by George W. Jacobs & Company which was handed us by Bro. J. R. Lambert, with a marginal suggestion of Doctrine and Covenants 28:6, to which we add Genesis, chapters one and two, Inspired Version, for comparison and reflection. Surely, Saints need to be kind and considerate in their treatment of what God has created. We give the notice below from Chicago Evening Post for February 17, 1904:

Doctor Buckner has written a sincere and very earnest book on "The Immortality of Animals." The motive of the book is not to put forth a curious speculation, but to promote kindness and prevent cruelty. He believes that God has a design in creating one planet as well as another, and one animal as well as another, and that his infinitely attentive care is over all. We are morally bound, he claims, to respect the feeling and rights of animals as descendants from the same Creator, even as we do those of our human associates.

His theory has for it both a biblical and a philosophical basis. Agassiz, our greatest American scientist, is quoted as saying: "Most of the arguments of philosophy in favor of the immortality of man apply equally to the permanency of the immortal principle in other living beings. May I not add that a future life in which man should be deprived of that great source of enjoyment and intellectual and moral improvement which result from the contemplation of the harmonies of an organic world would involve a lamentable loss; and may we not look to a spiritual concert of the combined worlds and all their inhabitants in the presence of their Creator as the highest conception of paradise? In some incomprehensible way God Almighty has created these beings, and I can not doubt of their immortality any more than I doubt of my own." Many other famous people are quoted to the same effect.

King Edward VII, in an address before the Royal Society to prevent cruelty to animals, spoke of the fact that the "conductors of our educational establishments will more and more recognize that it is one of their great duties to imbue the mind of the young with the consciousness that, besides showing kindness and gentleness to their fellow creatures, they ought also to show kindness and gentleness to the brute creation, to which we owe so much."

A BROTHER and elder, writing under date of February 19, says: "I close this conference year with almost perfect satisfaction. God has been indeed with me and greatly blessed my efforts, for which I praise him with all my heart; nearly everywhere that I have gone I was well received and many received the word gladly and some obeyed and are rejoicing in the truth."

"THE CHURCH OF CHRIST AS IT WAS LEFT COMPLETED AND PERFECTED BY THE APOSTLES OF CHRIST."

BY ELDER ISAAC M. SMITH.

The above heading, to my mind, conveys a very peculiar idea: the idea that the apostles of Christ, at their death, left the church of Christ in a "perfected" condition. And the strangeness of this idea increases when we remember that the word "perfected" means "finished, completed." To say, therefore, that the apostles left the church of Christ in a "perfected" condition, when they died, is to say that the church of Christ was then finished, completed. We frequently hear of, and sometimes meet, ministers who affirm that they are now representing a church which is identical in its organization, ordinances, teaching, faith, and practice, with the church of Christ as it was left "perfected by the apostles of Christ." These ministers as a rule are not willing to affirm that the church which they represent is identical with the church of Christ as it was "established" by Christ and his apostles, but "as it was left perfected by the apostles," that is, as it was left finished and completed by the apostles.

This naturally leads one to ask, Did Christ partially build an imperfect, unfinished, incomplete church, and then leave his apostles to finish building that church, to complete and perfect it? And if he did, then what is the difference between this unfinished, incomplete, imperfect church as it was established and the finished, completed, perfected church as it was left by the apostles? What advantages has this finished, completed, perfected church over the unfinished, incomplete, imperfect church as Christ established it? Those ministers who claim to represent a church which is identical with the church of Christ as left perfected by his apostles, also claim that the church was established or set up on the day of Pentecost. And as they claim the church was born on that day, I shall begin there, on the day of Pentecost, and examine it—first the unfinished, incomplete, imperfect church, and then the same church in its finished, completed, perfected condition.

On the day of Pentecost, while the disciples of Christ were assembled together, "There came a sound from heaven. . . . And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance."—Acts 2: 2-4.

When men and women asked what they should do, after being convinced that Jesus is the Christ, they were told to "repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins," and they were promised that if they would do so, "ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Verse 38.) Three thousand souls were added to the church at that time by baptism, and the church "continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers. And fear came upon every soul: and many wonders and signs were done by the apostles. And all that believed were together, and had all things common. And sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need."—Ibid., verses 42-45.

A little later on, when a lame man applied to Peter and John for help, and they had no money to give, Peter said to him, "In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk."—Acts 3: 6. And the man was immediately made whole and began to leap and praise God. For this the apostles were put in prison, but were finally released and, after their release, they prayed: "And when they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together; and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the word of God with boldness. And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul; neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common. And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and great grace was upon them all. Neither was there any among them that lacked: for as many as were possessors of lands or houses, sold them and brought the prices of the things that were sold, and laid them down at the apostles' feet: and distribution was made unto every man as he had need."—Acts 4: 31-35. And when Ananias and Sapphira attempted to take advantage of this law by deception they were struck dead by the power of God. (See Acts 5: 5-10.)

"And by the hands of the apostles were many signs and wonders wrought among the people; . . . insomuch that they brought forth the sick into the street, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them. There came also a multitude out of the cities round about unto Jerusalem, bringing sick folks, and them which were vexed with unclean spirits; and they were healed every one."—Ibid., verses 12, 15, 16. And when the apostles were shut up in prison, "The angel of the Lord by night opened the prison doors, and brought them forth, and said, Go, stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words of this life." (Ibid., verses 19, 20.)

When the church had grown larger, seven men "full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom" (Acts 6: 3) were appointed to look after the temporal affairs of the church, and one of these seven, Stephen by name, "did great wonders and miracles among the people." (Ibid., 6: 8.) Another one, Philip, went to the city of Samaria "and preached Christ unto them;" and the people of Samaria "gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did. For unclean spirits, crying with a loud voice, came out of many that were possessed with them: and many taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed." (Acts 8:6, 7.) A great number believed and were baptized; and then Peter and John came and "prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost." (Verse 15.) "Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost." (Verse 17.) After this, "the angel of the Lord spake unto Philip" (verse 26) and sent him on another mission of love, to one who was seeking for truth and light, that is, to meet the eunuch. Philip preached Christ to this man and, when he was convinced, "they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him." (Verse 38.) And after baptizing him they came "up out of the water" (verse 39).

About this time, Saul of Tarsus was making a bitter fight against the church, and while on his way to Damascus he was struck blind by the power and glory of God, and fell to the earth; then the Lord spake to him and told him, among other things, to "arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do." (Acts 9:6.) After Saul had been in the city for three days, fasting and praying, the Lord spake to one Ananias, "in a vision" (verse 10), and sent him to Saul: "And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost. And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales: and he received sight forthwith, and arose and was baptized." (Verses 17, 18.)

Now, they tell us that this church was born on the day of Pentecost, A. D. 33; the last event in its history to which I have referred, occurred in A. D. 35; and this would make the church two years old. It is quite young,—a babe of two summers. But you will have noticed from the brief history of its life as given above, that it is a remarkably beautiful child, and that it is surprisingly healthy, vigorous, active, and strong. I am quite sure you will fall in love with it, if you will only take time to become thoroughly acquainted with it. You have noticed, no doubt:

1. When this child was born, it could speak in tongues; and, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, those uneducated Galileans were able to declare "the wonderful works of God" in the language of the Parthians, Medes, Persians, and many other nationalities, to the amazement of those who were present. (See Acts 2: 1-12.)

2. When men and women asked of this church the way of life and salvation, they were told to repent and be baptized "for the remission of sins;" and they were told that, if they would do so, "ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (See Acts 2: 37, 38.)

3. This promise of "the gift of the Holy Ghost" was not confined to those present on the day of Pentecost; but it was extended to their children and "to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." (Verse 39.)

4. This infant church "continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine." (Verse 42.)

5. They "had all things common." (Verse 44.)

6. "Neither was there any among them that lacked." (Acts 4: 34.)

7. For they brought all their means and "laid them down at the apostles' feet: and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need." (Ibid., 4: 35.) They "parted them to all men, as every man had need." (Acts 2: 45.)

8. When Ananias and Sapphira made a pretense of complying with this law (it was the law, for the church "continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine") and kept back part of their means, the power and the enlightening influence of the Holy Spirit were so great in this infant church that their hypocrisy was revealed, and they were struck dead by the power of God for attempting to make a mock of this holy and righteous law. (See Acts 5: 1-10.)

9. "When the number of the disciples was multiplied" (Acts 6: 1) to that extent that the apostles were not able to look after the distribution of the temporal means of the church, seven men, "full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom," were appointed by the apostles and the church to look after "this business." (Acts 6: 3-6.)

10. At this time, while the church "continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine," they were "all filled with the Holy Ghost." (Acts 2: 4 and 4: 31.)

11. They were all of "one heart and of one soul," so much so that no one among them said "that aught of the things which he possessed was his own." (Acts 4: 32.)

12. And "great grace was upon them all." (Acts 4: 33.)

13. "They spake the word of God with boldness" (Acts 4: 31), "went everywhere preaching the word" (Acts 3: 4), "and preached Christ unto them" (verse 5), "and they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship" (Acts 2: 42).

14. And, in continuing "steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine," they "went down both into the water" (Acts 8: 38) to baptize, and then came "up out of the water" (verse 39).

15. And after men and women were baptized, "Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost." (Acts 8: 17.)

16. The Spirit was "given to them that obey him," and was a witness of the resurrection of Christ, and of his being exalted to be "a prince and a Savior." (Acts 5: 32.)

17. "Many wonders and signs were done by the apostles." (Acts 2: 43.) To the lame man it was said: "In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk" (Acts 3:6), and he did so. They even "brought forth the sick into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them." (Acts 5:15.) And they brought from the cities and villages, near to Jerusalem, a multitude of "sick folks, and them which were vexed with unclean spirits, and they were healed every one." (Verse 16.) Every one.

18. These signs and wonders were done "by the hands" of others besides the apostles: Ananias laid "his hand" on Saul, and "he received sight forthwith." (Acts 9:18.) Stephen, one of the "seven," was "full of faith and power," and "did great wonders and miracles among the people." (Acts 6:8.) And Philip, another one of the "seven," did miracles at Samaria, "For unclean spirits, crying with a loud voice, came out of many that were possessed with them: and many taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed." (Acts 8:7.)

19. The angels were at work in this church: The angel of the Lord "opened the prison doors" and set the apostles at liberty; he told the apostles where to go and preach (Acts 5:19, 20); and the angel of the Lord also directed Philip, telling him where to go (Acts 8:26).

20. The Holy Spirit was in the church, and was working. Besides bearing witness to the saints of our Savior's resurrection and exaltation (Acts 5:32), giving them utterance to speak in "other tongues" (Acts 2:4), and giving them wisdom to confound their opposers (Acts 6:10), it told Philip what to do when he saw the eunuch (Acts 8:29) and, after he had baptized the eunuch, "the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more" (Acts 8:39).

21. Christ himself was in this infant church, and was directing and giving instruction from time to time: "And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." (Acts 2:47.) The Lord spoke to Ananias, "in a vision" (Acts 9:10),—after having first appeared to Saul of Tarsus—and sent him to preach the gospel to Saul, and restore to him his eyesight.

22. And then, laboring under the immediate and personal direction of the angels, the Holy Spirit, and Christ himself, we have the twelve apostles and other inspired men like Stephen, Philip, and Ananias, "all filled with the Holy Ghost," "full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom," "full of faith and power," going everywhere and preaching the word of God with "great power."

Reader, are you not in love with this infant church? Of course you are; you could not help loving it, it is so beautiful, so grand. But we are gravely told that this church, as we have just seen it, was only a babe, gumbered with a lot of useless paraphernalia classed under the head of "childish things," which it must "put away" as it grows in years and becomes more fully developed and "perfected;" and that, when it got to be fully grown and had put away all those "childish things," it became a real, finished, completed, "perfected" church, just as the Lord designed it should be. I like this church as we have just seen it; and, for my part, I would be perfectly satisfied with it as it appears in its infancy. But as some men insist that it was finished, completed, "perfected," later on in its life, I shall ask the reader to go with me while we carefully examine its autobiography.

No important changes occur in this church, so far as its history shows, for the next sixteen years; but, in A. D. 51, when the church was eighteen years old, I notice a marked change in regard to unity and oneness. At this time "certain men which came down from Judea taught the brethren, and said, Except ye be circumcised and keep the law of Moses ye can not be saved" (Acts 15:1); and I notice, further, that "Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and disputation with them" (verse 2); but I can not see why a church with "dissension and disputation" in it is any more nearly "perfected" than it was when they were "all of one heart and one soul."

When this matter was referred to a conference of "the apostles and elders" (Acts 15:6) at Jerusalem, I see there was "much disputing" (verse 7) over it there; but it was finally decided that those who had been teaching this doctrine to the Gentiles "have troubled you with words, subverting your souls" (verse 24). There was inspiration in the church yet, and inspired men in it; but the church was no longer of "one heart and of one soul," neither were they any longer "all filled with the Holy Ghost;" there was a spirit of "dissension and disputation" in the church now. And this spirit of contention seems to have reached some of those in high authority in the church, for we are told in the same chapter that when a difference of opinion occurred between Paul and Barnabas, "the contention was so sharp between them, that they departed assunder one from the other." (Acts 15:39.) They were surely not of "one heart and of one soul," at that time, not even these two apostles.

In A. D. 59 Paul wrote a letter to the "church of God which is at Corinth," and in it he tells the saints that "there are contentions among you," and that "every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ" (1 Corinthians 1:12); says he could not speak unto them "as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal" (1 Corinthians 3:1): "For ye are yet carnal; for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men?" (Verse 3.) "Now some are puffed up, as though I would not come to you." (1 Corinthians 4:18.) "It is reported commonly that there is fornication among you, and such fornication as is not so much as named among the Gentiles, that one should have his father's wife. And ye are puffed up." (1 Corinthians 5:1, 2.) "But brother goeth to law with brother, and that before the unbelievers." (1 Corinthians 6:6.) "Nay, ye do wrong, and defraud, and that your brethren." (Verse 8.)

In attempting to partake of the Lord's supper, he says that some would eat before others and that "one is hungry, and another is drunken." (1 Corinthians 11:21.) They do not eat worthily, "not discerning the Lord's body," and "For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep." (Verse 30.) (No longer healed "every one," as in the infant church at Jerusalem.) "For some have not the knowledge of God: I speak this to your shame." (1 Corinthians 15:34.) True, the apostle says, in his second letter to the Corinthians, that the saints had repented; but, further on, he says: "For I fear, lest, when I come, I shall not find you such as I would, . . . lest there be debates, envyings, wraths, strifes, backbitings, whisperings, swellings, tumults. And lest . . . I shall bewail many which have sinned already, and have not repented of the uncleanness and fornication and lasciviousness which they have committed." (2 Corinthians 12:20, 21.)

To the Galatian saints Paul says: "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel." (Galatians 1:6.) "O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth?" (Galatians 3:1.) "Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years. I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain." (Galatians 4:10, 11.)

And to the Thessalonians: "For we hear that there are some which walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busybodies." (2 Thessalonians 3:11.) He also tells Timothy to "charge them that are rich in this world," etc. (1 Timothy 6:17.) (There were no such distinctions as "rich" and "poor" in the infant church: "they had all things common.") "This thou knowest, that all they which are in Asia be turned away from me." (2 Timothy 1:15.) And to Titus he says that "there are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, . . . who subvert whole houses." (Titus 1:10, 11.) And in his Hebrew letter, "Ye are dull of hearing" and "ye have need that we teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat." (Hebrews 5:11, 12.) James says: "But ye have despised the poor." (James 2:6.) "From whence came wars and fightings among you? Ye lust, and have not: ye kill, and desire to have, and can not obtain: ye fight and war, and yet ye have not, because ye ask not. Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts. Ye adulterers and adulteresses."—James 4:1-4.

When the apostle John wrote unto the seven churches in Asia, writing unto them "the revelation of Jesus Christ," he said to the church at Ephesus: "Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do thy first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent."—Revelation 2:4, 5. And to the church at Pergamos: "But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, . . . So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, which thing I hate. Repent; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against them with the sword of my wrath."—Verses 14-16. And to Thyatira: "Notwithstanding I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest that woman Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants, to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols."—Verse 20. And unto Sardis: "I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead. Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect."—Revelation 3:1, 2. And to the Laodiceans: "I know thy works, that thou art neither cold or hot: I would that thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth. Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked."—Verses 15-17.

(To be concluded.)

THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN.

Wherefore, may the kingdom of God go forth, that the kingdom of heaven may come.—Doctrine and Covenants, Revelation October, 1831.

We often hear the statement made, that the kingdom of God and the kingdom of heaven are one and the same thing; that they are only different words, both meaning the church. But we take exception to this. We believe the kingdom of God is the church militant, on earth, and that the kingdom of heaven is the church triumphant in heaven. They are two distinct and separate things, although they are to a great extent but one. They are one in purpose, one in object, one in desire and intention, and in the end will be but one; and yet they are two in work, in degree, and in location, the one striving for perfection, the other already possessing it. They are two—yet only one. Let us illustrate: "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isaiah 8:20. There are two things spoken of, the law and the testimony; they are two, yet if we follow them to the termination we find they are one.

Again we have this repeated: "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple."—Psalm 19:7. Here are the same two things, which carried to the limit are one.

We have read of man that he has two eyes, but the seeing is one. He has two lungs, but the breathing is one. He has two nostrils, but the smelling is one. He has two ears, but the hearing is one.

But let us consider man in the creation: "God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them."—Genesis 1:27.

There we have man spoken of as one, and then the male and female man spoken of as two. They are the two halves of the man. They are two yet but one. This claim is verified in the following: "Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh."—Genesis 2:24.

When two persons are united in marriage, they become one. They are one, but yet they are two—two separate and distinct persons—yet they are one.

Again, we read of the two priesthoods, the Melchisedec and the Aaronic. They are two—and yet there is only one priesthood of God. It is the two divisions of the one. There are two, and yet there is only one.

To extend further this idea, we read of God the Father and his Son Jesus Christ; they are two separate and distinct individuals, and yet they are one. They are so united and so attuned to each other that they are one in thought, one in desire, one in action, and one in wisdom and knowledge. They are so perfect that they are one in all things, and yet they are two.

It is in this sense that the kingdom of God and the kingdom of heaven are one and the same, and yet two different things. We believe that the former means the church on earth, and the latter the church in heaven. This will apply in most cases in the Bible, but there are some few cases where it does not seem to apply, but time may make them plain; as it also may in regard to Jesus being called the "Son of man." We believe he was the Son of God, not the Son of man in any sense. Yet there are places in the Bible where he is so called.

But let us examine the kingdom of God. "Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel."—Mark 1:14, 15. The "kingdom of God" that was at hand, was the church about to be organized, and "the gospel of the kingdom" was the good news of the kingdom—or church. Jesus was just taking the first steps in organizing the church, so he said to the people, "The kingdom of God is at hand." And later when instructing his disciples concerning the things of this world, he said, "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matthew 6:33. That is, seek first the church and the gospel, through which the righteousness of God is revealed, and then all these other things should be added unto them. Again: "And when he was demanded of the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, the kingdom of God cometh not with observation: neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you."—Luke 17:20, 21. (The marginal reading says "among you.") The church had now been established, and was among the people. It was within their reach, and could easily be found. This was not the kingdom of heaven, but the kingdom of God, the church!

On another occasion when talking with the Pharisees, Jesus said, "But if I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you."—Matthew 12:28. The church was already there, and his works were an evidence of that fact.

Again: "The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man [who seeketh truth, Inspired Translation] presseth into it."—Luke 16:16. Jesus here tells the Pharisees that since John the people were being taught that the church was once more upon the earth, and salvation was to be found within it.

To his disciples he said, "Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God: but unto them that are without, all these things are done in parables.—Mark 4:11. These disciples—including the twelve apostles—were in the kingdom of God, the church, and they were entitled to know the mystery of it, and Jesus then proceeds to explain to them the parable of the sower—which is the work of the church in preaching the gospel, and also its effect upon the people.

We are all supposed to be familiar with the conversation between Jesus and Nicodemus, when they were considering the plan of salvation. Jesus said to him, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3:5. The Savior was telling him how to enter the church—not the kingdom of heaven. It was the life-work of Jesus to establish the church and teach mankind his duty therein, show him how to enter and what he must do to be saved. When he chose his twelve disciples, he "gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases. And he sent them to preach the kingdom of God." (Luke 9:1, 2.) And when the multitude gathered at Bethsaida Jesus "spake unto them of the kingdom of God." (Verse 11.) All this was the preaching and teaching of the church, the work being done on the earth preparatory for that which is to come. A little later, Jesus chose seventy elders, and sent them out with the same commission he had given the twelve, and wherever they went they were told to heal the sick and to say to the people: "The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you."—Luke 10:9. But if the people would not receive them, they were told to shake the dust off their feet, as a testimony against them, and say: "Notwithstanding, be ye sure of this, that the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you."—Verse 11. In both these instances it was the church. These men were the commissioned officers of it, and were sent out to present it to the people and expound its doctrines, and to show them that they must enter this particular church, which was the kingdom of God, or they could not be saved. The kingdom of heaven did not come near these people at all.

This reasoning clears up one text of the scripture that has troubled many people. It is found in Mark 9:1: "And he [Jesus] said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that there be some of them that stand here, which shall not taste of death, till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power." The kingdom of heaven has not come with power yet, and all those who were there that day have died—with the possible exception of John—and when Jesus used the words "some" and "they" he meant more than one; he meant a number of them, and they lived to see the prophecy fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, when the power was given to the church, when the kingdom of God came in power to the people, the Holy Ghost was given, and the saints received the seal of their adoption. If these conclusions are not correct, why did our Savior teach the members of the church to pray: "Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven"?—Matthew 6:9, 10. "The kingdom of God" had already come, and they were members of it. But they are taught to pray for another kingdom—the kingdom of heaven—to come; and when that comes, God's will is to be done on earth as angels do it in heaven. That has never yet been accomplished, but we still pray for its coming, looking forward with hope to the time "when that which is perfect" will come.

Let us now consider a few things concerning the kingdom of heaven. Jesus says: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 7:21. Then this is something entirely different from the "kingdom of God"—the church; for Jesus said (Luke 16:16) that all men press into or enter it. It is one thing to enter the church, but it is another thing to enter the kingdom of heaven, and not all who enter the church will be able to enter that holy kingdom. But who will be able to enter there? "He that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." What is it to do the Father's will? It is to do as our Savior did; for he came to do His will. It is to repent, believe the gospel, be baptized, and thus enter into the church, and then do good as we go about, trying day by day to become more godlike, and to live as becometh saints. Have the hands of those in authority lain upon our heads, that we may receive the Holy Ghost, and then act so that it may remain with us all through life. Retain this spirit with us, and then we will enter into the kingdom of heaven in the life to come.

Peter tells us how we may enter. He says: "Add to your faith virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. . . . For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."—2 Peter 1:15-11. This will be when the kingdom of heaven comes, and God's will is done on earth, as it is now done in heaven. "Not every one who sayeth unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven," but any one can enter into the church. Its doors are wide open to all. Come saint, come sinner, enter in and partake of the things of the kingdom of God. It is free to all, and none are denied admission. It is a reformatory society, and one of its duties is to lift up the fallen, to take those who are sinners, and make them saints; show those who are transgressors the folly of their ways, and teach the careless how to serve God. And if a member transgress and fall we are not to cast him out, but to labor with him, and still try to reform and save him. Here we see there is a difference in the class of people entering the two kingdoms. Any one can enter the first, but only certain ones can enter the second.

But let us read a little further in Matthew's account: "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? And in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you [you never knew me, Inspired Translation]: depart from me, ye that work iniquity."—Matthew 7:22, 23. Who is it that prophesies and works miracles in Christ's name? It is the members of the church—the kingdom of God. Who is it that cast out devils in his name? It is the ministry, the elders. Then it is possible for a person to become a member of the kingdom of God and become an officer in that kingdom, hold the priesthood, perform miracles and cast out devils in the name of the Lord, and still be a worker of iniquity, and not be permitted to enter into the kingdom of heaven,—for they never lived in a way and manner to obtain the knowledge that Jesus was the Christ. They did not cease to do evil—they did not add to their faith the Christian graces. They did not go on to perfection; although they may have held the authority to act in the name of God. Yet when the trying time comes they may hear the unwelcome words, “Depart from me, ye that work iniquity.”

Not all who are members of the church are saints. Being a member of the church, is no criterion to go by, in judging a man. Some use their religion as a cloak to cover up their hypocrisy, some use it that they may the better impose upon others. We know to our sorrow that there have been bad men high in authority in the church—“the kingdom of God”—and we may also rest assured that it will be a very difficult task for them ever to enter into “the kingdom of heaven.”

We find a peculiar statement of our Savior in Matthew 5: 20: “Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.” Did you ever realize whom he was speaking to? He was addressing the members of “the kingdom of God”—the church. In verse 13, he says to them, “Ye are the salt of the earth;” and in the next verse, adds, “Ye are the light of the world.” Regardless of that he tells them that unless their righteousness exceeds that of the scribes and Pharisees they shall “in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.” Well might the question be asked, “Who then can be saved?” and the answer can well be given, “He who feareth God and worketh righteousness” superior to that of the scribes! Well might Paul have a fear that possibly he might become a castaway. It is a question in regard to all of us as to whether we may enter the kingdom of heaven or not, no matter what our standing in the kingdom of God. But our heavenly Father gives his Holy Spirit of promise to those who continue to do his will to the best of their ability, and by their retaining that Spirit they may know each day where they stand, and know if they are in a saved condition.

Jesus, speaking with his disciples about the kingdom of heaven, said to them, “Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven.”—Matthew 18: 3. Again let me repeat, they were already members of “the kingdom of God.” Verse 17 tells us the church was there and they were members of it. Paul was a member of the “kingdom of God.” He enjoyed all the gifts and blessings of it, as much as any other man, if not more. He spoke in tongues more than others. He had visions and revelations, possibly more than others, and had seen angels and even Jesus appeared to him; after his resurrection. Many miracles were performed by him, and yet with all the power of God that was with him, he knew that it was only a very small part of what he might enjoy in the life to come. He knew there was another kingdom coming that was far superior to the one he was a member of, and that it must give way to the grander one. He says, “For we know in part, and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away.”—1 Corinthians 13: 9, 10.

With all the light and understanding he had of the things of God, and while comparing our condition here, now, with what it will be when the “kingdom of heaven” comes, he said, “For now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known.”—Verse 12.

Again in looking forward to that happy time he says, “Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him.”—1 Corinthians 2: 9. Who are they that love him? They who keep his commandments; they who hear the sayings of Jesus “and doeth them;” they who obey the ordinances and come into the church; they who are members of the “kingdom of God.” It is for them that the great things of the “kingdom of heaven” are prepared.

In the “kingdom of heaven” will be found all that is good, blissful, and pure! For “no unclean, unhallowed thing shall ever enter there.” But the “kingdom of God,” the church, will continue on until the end, about as it is now, taking in the good and the bad, for, “at the end of the world: the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just.” (Matthew 13: 49.) They are to continue together—the wheat and the tares—until the coming of the Savior is near; and then he “shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity.” (Verse 41.)

Iniquity will be in the “kingdom of God” right up to that time, and it will be the work of the angels to gather out all the doers of iniquity. The church must sorrowfully bear with transgressors and evil-doers the best it can until that time of relief comes. It is our duty now to preach the gospel, the good news of the kingdom of God set up on the earth, and to do all we can to gather the people of God into the kingdom. We must help publish the glad tidings, and carry on the work of the church, for we must help to have “the kingdom of God go forth, that the kingdom of heaven may come.” (Doctrine and Covenants, October 1831.) The world is indulgent to the impetuous, because they appear strong; and it is most severe to those who hesitate, because hesitation is taken for a sign of weakness.—Craigie.

HOW SHALL WE RECEIVE THE VISITING OFFICERS OF THE CHURCH?

Who are the officers authorized by the Church to visit our homes? We gather from Doctrine and Covenants 17:10 that they are the elders and priests, and we ask, For what purpose do these men visit? Turning to the same passage we find that their duty is to exhort members to pray vocally and in secret, to attend to all family duties, to see that the family altar is maintained and that the children are taught the Scriptures and to pray, and various other things which they find necessary to teach as they go from house to house. They should, to my understanding, when opportunity offers, read and expound the word of God to the family, pray with them and let them pray, which will encourage them to pray in public.

We have now found out who will visit our homes and what their duty is when visiting. Now, how shall we receive these men? We should receive them in a similar manner as we would receive Jesus, for we read in Matthew 25:40: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me," which means that we should be careful how we receive them, for they come in the place of the great Teacher.

With this thought in mind, we should be very willing to listen to their counsel and advice and never at any time take upon ourselves the right to teach them, for we should remember their mission is to teach us and for this purpose God has placed them in the Church.

We see, then, that we should receive them as sent of God, for he has chosen them to be his servants. When these officers come we should do all we can to assist them, for I believe they can visit and yet not do their duty. For instance, we can pour all our trials and troubles and experiences into their ears until it is time for them to leave, in which case we do ourselves no good and give no chance for the officers to give us counsel and timely advice which would help us and give us fresh courage to battle against the things we come in contact with. Now an ideal visit is something after this style: When the officers enter our home, the head of the house will see that the family is gathered into one room, the table being furnished with a Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, so that they are ready for use.

Having done this, we have done our part and can look to the visiting officers to do their duty, which they will readily enter upon if they are striving to fulfill their duty and calling. And I believe at the close of such a visit all will feel that the ministers have been directed by the Holy Spirit, and strength, consolation, and encouragement will be imparted to all present.

THE LOCATION OF SINAI AND THE DATE OF THE EXODUS.

The savants of the Imperial Royal Academy in Vienna recently spent a whole session on the questions of the date of the Exodus and the location of Mount Sinai. The details of the meeting are reported in the Munich Allgemeine Zeitung (No. 134), from which we condense as follows:

The oldest Christian tradition (which, however, does not antedate the third century) with reference to Mount Sinai identified the sacred mountain with Jebel Serbal; but from the sixth century on the claim was generally accepted that it is the same as Jebel Musa, some forty-five kilometers [twenty-eight miles] to the eastward of Serbal. But Sayce has come to the conclusion that the so-called Sinaitic peninsula can not have been the place of the giving of the Law, but that this must be sought for on the eastern side of the gulf of Akaba; and this for the very good reason that the west side of the Sinaitic peninsula, at the period of the Exodus, was an Egyptian province. At this place there were rich copper and malachite mines, which were worked in the interests of the Egyptian kings, under the protection of Egyptian soldiers. Had the children of Israel gone into the province of Mafka, they would simply have returned to another portion of the Egyptian empire. If they wanted to escape the hand of Pharaoh, they were compelled to pass over into the domain of the Edomites. This would force the Israelites farther east than the peninsula of Sinai.

Two years ago Doctor Edward Mahler, in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society (1901) made an effort to determine exactly the date of the Exodus, and his conclusions are now seemingly confirmed. Down to 1896 no Egyptian inscriptions had been found containing the name of the Israelites; but in that year Professor Flinders Petrie found one containing these words: "Israel is in despair: its fruits are no more." In the mention of other nations on these inscriptions, the determinative for country is found, while in the case of Israel there is nothing but the determinative for "men" or for "tribe." From this we can conclude that at this time Israel had no fixed habitation, but was wandering in the desert. Marempthah can accordingly not have been the Pharaoh of the Exodus, as has been often supposed, and Mahler makes a determined effort to prove that it was Rameses II. The Pharaoh "who knew nothing of Joseph" was Amosis, the founder of the eighteenth dynasty. The new king, called also Aahmes I. and Nebpethi Ra, according to astronomical tablets, entered upon his reign in the year 1575 B. C. Accordingly the date of the Exodus would be 1575 minus 240 years of oppression, or 1335 B. C. This was the time when Rameses II was on the throne, namely 1347-1280, which date agrees with the conclusions found in the new "Dictionary of Egyptian Archæology." If the Exodus took place in 1335, then Moses, who at that time was eighty years of age, was born in 1415, which was the twenty-fifth year of Amenophis III, of whom it is known that his wife, Thi, was of neither Egyptian nor royal origin. She was of foreign birth, and this can readily explain the story of the deliverance of Moses by the daughter of the foreign queen. Moses is, notwithstanding the etymology is Hebrew, an Egyptian word, being derived from "mes" which signifies "child" the same word being found in Amosis, Thatmosis, and other proper names.

Other considerations also point to the conclusion that it was not Maremptah but Rameses II who was the historic Pharaoh. The former's son and heir, Seti II, was called the crown prince during the lifetime of his father; but Maremptah, the son of Rameses II, was only fourteen years of age when he ascended the throne. This agrees with the biblical chronology, according to which the crown prince did not attain to power and the throne, inasmuch as the first-born of Pharaoh was slain, and accordingly a younger son must have ascended the throne. That Israel, in accordance with the inscription on the Maremptah steel, written sixty years after the Exodus, or 1275, still had no fixed abode, is also in agreement with biblical statements. An old rabbinical tradition declares that the Exodus took place on a Thursday. Mahler has computed that the 15th of Nisan, 1335, or the 27th of March, 1335, according to our chronology, was actually a Thursday. Further, the political conditions in Egypt are in perfect agreement with these conclusions, as Rameses II contended in vain for years against the Hittites in Syria. It is this fact that doubtless aroused the desire for liberty in the Israelites, and Exodus 12:38 reports that not only the Israelites threw off the Egyptian yoke, but that other peoples also participated in the Exodus. And we can readily imagine who these were, although they are not mentioned by name. They were doubtless these "island inhabitants" who had been called in by Seti, the predecessor of Rameses II, the Shardana, the Shalkulasa, and others, who we now know to have been the bearers of the Mycean type of civilization. We have accordingly good reasons for believing that the date of the Exodus was Thursday, the 27th of March, 1335 B. C.—The Literary Digest, August 8, 1903.

HELPED BY SIMPLE HABITS.

Benjamin Franklin, who is famed for his discovery that lightning is electricity, and who introduced the American colonial postal system, and who furthermore as will be remembered, served America at the court of France as minister plenipotentiary, was one of the leaders of early modern times in the study of nature and nature's laws, and not the least in domestic science. His first maxim was: "Eat not to dullness; drink not to elevation." Even in his youth his mind was filled with schemes for self-regulation and guidance, and he set before him the task of acquiring the habitude of certain cardinal virtues based upon simple living and habits of thought. His constant effort was to better the condition of mankind, and his methods were intensely practical, says the London Catering World.

Since the early times, simplicity of preaching, teaching, and eating has been the great factor in the world's advancement. The great mass of mankind do not understand, nor care for, abstruse reasoning.

The record of the life of Abraham Lincoln is traced back to that time when he was seen sitting on a rail fence in one of America's small western villages with a law book in one hand and a piece of maize bread in the other. Abraham Lincoln was a man of simple habits, and his greatness was to no small extent dependent upon that early simplicity and goodness which gave strength to conscience, mind, and body.

Frederick the Great fostered above all agriculture and the cultivation of fruits and vegetables. His endeavor to benefit his people was based upon the natural laws pertaining to their health and simple happiness. He recognized the fact, ever since clear to the mind of the leaders of the Germans, that the body is the basis and must be simple and completely nourished in order to perfect the soldier, statesman or the peasant.

Bismarck's great work had for its basis the recognition of the simple laws of nature. He followed them, and, as a result, there came about a new manhood and new womanhood, first in Prussia and later in the empire. Bismarck's natural and acquired astuteness taught him, as a similar perception and reasoning had taught Frederick the Great, that political economy, rural economy, and domestic economy are, as sciences, closely interlinked and interdependent in their relations to the state.

While in France as United States minister Thomas Jefferson wrote respecting the education of a daughter who was with him in Paris: "Of domestic economy she can learn nothing here, yet she must learn it some where, as it is of more solid value than anything else." To his friend Peter Carr he said: "A strong body makes a strong mind." Jefferson practiced his preaching by subsisting mainly upon simple natural foods, and he labored zealously all through his busy life for the upbuilding of an American system of education which should teach men how to live in accordance with the laws of nature. He died at the age of eighty-four, and he had not lost a tooth, nor was one of them defective.

It will be recollected that the laws of Moses are replete with instructions regarding the care of the body in sanitation and in diet, as well as in fasting and religious duties. It is due to these laws that the health of the Jews when in reasonable conditions is so universally superior to that of the average of other peoples.—Selected.

LUNAR SUPERSTITIONS.

In his recently published book on the moon, Professor W. H. Pickering presents an interesting account of the superstitions in which the moon plays an important part.

Probably even in prehistoric times men have noticed the face of the "man in the moon." Plutarch noticed it and even wrote a whole book on the face. But besides this, many other objects are supposed to be visible. The dark markings on the surface are likened by the Chinese to a monkey pounding rice. In India, they are said to resemble a rabbit. To the Persians, they seem like our own oceans and continents reflecting as in a mirror.

The size of the moon, as seen by different persons, varies from that of a cart wheel to that of a silver dollar. To many it seems about a foot in diameter, from which Professor Young concludes that to the average man the distance of the surface of the sky is about one hundred and ten feet. It is certain that artists usually represent the moon much too large in size in their paintings. Occasionally they represent it in evening scenes with the horns turned downward instead of upward, whereas they must always point away from the sun. The true angular size of the moon is about half a degree, so that it can always be concealed behind a lead pencil held at arm's length.

From the earliest times it has been a source of speculation why it is that the sun and moon when rising or setting, appear to most persons from two to three times the diameter that they have when near the meridian. As a matter of fact, the sun is slightly and the moon measurably smaller when near the horizon, because they are further off than when overhead. The true explanation, according to Professor Pickering, is twofold. Human estimates of angular dimensions are dependent not merely on the various dimensions themselves, but also on extraneous circumstances. The case is analogous to our estimates of weight, which are dependent primarily on the real weight of the object, but secondly upon its bulk. Thus a pound of lead feels much heavier than a pound of feathers. One circumstance affecting our estimates of angular dimensions is the linear dimensions of the object itself. Alhazen, who died nine hundred years ago, showed that if we hold the hand at arm's length and notice what space it apparently covers on a distant wall, and then move the hand well to one side, so that it is in front of some very near object, we shall find that it will appear to us decidedly smaller than the part of the wall which it previously covered. An analogous effect causes the full moon, when rising or setting, to appear larger than when it is well up in the sky. On the horizon, we can compare it with trees and houses and see how large it really is. Overhead we have no scale of comparison. The same optical illusion, however, is noticed at sea, so that we must cast about for some additional explanation. Clausius, about three hundred years ago, showed that our estimates of size depend largely upon the altitude of the object under consideration. When we pass under an archway or under the limb of a tree, we know that we are nearer the object than we are when we see it at a lower altitude. At the same time, it appears just as large to the average person angularly as it does when we are several feet further away. We are in fact all our lives, as we walk about, used to seeing objects rapidly lifting from their angular positions, yet not appearing as we pass them any larger than they do when we are slightly more distant from them. Thus we always unconsciously make some compensation in our minds for the real changes in angular size that actually occur. If now, the limb of the tree that we pass under, instead of really growing angularly smaller at the low altitude than it was when overhead, should remain of the same angular size, in all positions, we should say that it looked larger at the low altitude. This is exactly what happens in the case of the heavenly bodies. Unlike all terrestrial objects, they are practically of the same real angular dimensions when on the horizon as they are in the zenith. Involuntarily we apply to them the same compensation that we are expected to apply to terrestrial objects, and are then naturally surprised to see that they appear larger at the lower altitude.

The majority of the superstitions relating to the moon relate to the weather. Besides, we have the superstition that sleeping in the moonlight, especially if the moon be full, induces insanity. Witness our word "lunacy," in which the belief is expressed. Farmers believe that the moon exercises a certain influence over vegetation, and that beans should be planted when the moon is light and potatoes when it is dark. Many believe that a change in the weather will come at about the time that there is a change in the moon. Professor Pickering points out that since the moon changes every seven and a half days, every change in the weather must come within four days of a change in the moon, and that changes will necessarily come within two days of a lunar change. This superstition must not be confused with the real, but ill-defined, seven-day period of the weather, which is a genuine phenomenon and holds true to a certain extent. Thus if one Sunday is stormy there is a probability that the several Sundays following may also be stormy. This phenomenon is probably due to terrestrial causes and has nothing whatever to do with the moon.

Some people believe that if the horns of the new moon will hold water, it will be a dry month; that if they are so tipped that the water will run out, it will be rainy. Nearly as many people hold the reverse view. Both views are wrong. The line joining the moon's horns is always perpendicular to the direction of the sun and, therefore, depends merely upon the place of the moon in its orbit.

It has been said that thunder-storms are influenced by the moon. Nearly twelve thousand observations collected by Hazen in the United States in the year 1884 show a preponderance of thirty-three per cent in the first half of the lunar month. The greatest number of thunder-storms come between the new moon and the first quarter; the least number between full moon and the last quarter. This is, perhaps, the only satisfactory evidence that we have that the weather is at all influenced by the moon. Even in this case the effect is so slight that it has only a theoretical interest.—Scientific American, January 16, 1904.

Love and Service.

To love—ah, child: Thou, too, shalt know
What 'tis to love, and though in coming years
The knowledge will be fraught with many tears,
Still, in thy heart the flowers of spring will grow.
It is not when the hopes of youth first, glow,
Nor when our radiant souls, untouched by fears,
First hear love's harp-strings sweep across our ears,
That we know love or feel its great winds blow.

They who would love must serve and understand
That love's reward lies in the loving, not
The being loved; the heart of love is there,
Its lesson taught at best by one dear hand;
Ask only how to love . . . to heal one lot
By service, tears, should make a lifetime fair.

The Love Cure.

The windows of the great house were darkened, the door-bell muffled and the pavement in front strewn with rushes, while the physician's carriage waited long outside.

In the hushed chamber Mrs. Allison lay still with closed eyes. Doctor and nurse bent over her in anxious ministrations, but the expression on her wan features never altered and, beyond a faint monosyllable elicited with difficulty in reply to a question, no words came from the pallid lips. The watches exchanged significant glances.

"I will be back in an hour," said the doctor, glancing at his watch.

As he stepped into the hall, a waiting figure came forward to him.

"How is she now, doctor?"

The doctor shook his head.

"Shall we go into the next room, Mr. Allison?" said he. "I will speak with freedom there."

The two men sat facing each other, Mr. Allison grasping the arms of the chair as if to steady himself. The lines of his strong, masterful face were drawn and drops stood on his forehead.

"May I venture to ask you a delicate question, Mr. Allison?" said the physician. "Can it be that some secret grief or anxiety is preying upon your wife's mind?"

"Secret grief—anxiety? Certainly not! My dear doctor, how could you imagine such a thing?"

"I beg pardon, Mr. Allison. It occurred to me only as the remotest possibility. The facts of the case are these: The force of Mrs. Allison's disease is broken and she is absolutely without fever. Yet she shows no signs of rallying. On the contrary, she constantly grows weaker. It is impossible to arouse her. There seems to be not only no physical response to the remedies employed, but she apparently lacks even the slightest interest in anything, including her recovery. Unless this condition be speedily changed—which appears altogether unlikely—I can no longer offer any hope. The patient is evidently drifting away from us while we stand powerless to hold her back."

Mr. Allison groaned aloud and laid his face in his hands. The physician arose and, after a few sympathetic expressions, left him alone.

Meanwhile in the sick-room the nurse busied herself with conscientious care about her charge. There was no perceptible movement in the outlines of the quiet form lying upon the bed and the skilled watcher had no suspicion that behind the shut eyelids and apathetic features mind and spirit were still active.

"It isn't so hard to die, after all," ran the slow current of the sick woman's thought. "It is easier than to live. One grows tired, somehow, after so many years. It seems sweet just to stop trying and—let go. I have accomplished so little of all I meant to do, but—the Lord understands!"

"The children will miss me for awhile—poor dears!—but sorrow is not natural to young people. I'm not necessary to them as I was when they were little. It would have been dreadful to leave my babies, but now it is different. Helen has her lover—Roger is a good man and they will be going into a home of their own before long. And Dorothy—so beautiful and such a favorite—her friends must comfort her. And the boys—somehow they seem to have grown away from me a bit. I oughtn't to mind it. It must be so, I suppose, as boys grow into men. It will be harder for their father, but he is so driven at the office—especially since he went into politics—that he can't have time to mourn as he would have mourned years ago when we were first married. How happy we were—so long—so long ago—in the little house on Carlton street, where Helen was born! Henry has been a rising man. Any woman might have been proud to be his wife. Somehow I've hardly kept pace with him, but I've loved him—loved him!"

The air of the room had grown heavy and the nurse had set the door ajar. A sound of suppressed voices reached her ear and she glanced anxiously toward the bed, but the sick woman showed no signs of consciousness.

"I need not close the door," she said to herself. "She hears nothing."

Once more skill and training were at fault. That which in the nurse's ears was only an indistinct murmur, to the nerve sense sharpened by illness, slowly separated itself into words which made their way to the consciousness awake and alert in the weak frame, as if spoken along some visible telephone line of the spirit.

"Oh, Helen!" Could it be Dorothy's voice so broken and sobbing? "No hope! Did the doctor say that?"

"None, unless her condition will change—those were his very words, father told me." The words dropped drearily, like the trickling of water in a cave.

"But she was better yesterday!" That was Rob, the handsome young collegian who had been summoned home when his mother's illness began to cause apprehension.

"So it seemed. But she does not rally—she takes no notice."

"But she can't be going—to die—and leave us! She wouldn't do such a thing—mother!"

The tones of the sixteen-year-old Rupert were smitten through with incredulous horror.

"I really don't understand it," answered the older sister. "She is 'drifting away,' the doctor says. Oh, Dorothy! Oh, boys!" she said, in a low, intense voice, "we haven't any of us looked after mother as we ought. We have always been so used to having her do for us. I have been miserably selfish since—since I had Roger. I didn't mean it, but I see it all now."

"You haven't been one half so selfish as I," sobbed Dorothy. "Here have I been rushing here and there evening after evening, and she sitting by herself! I must have been out of my mind! As if all the parties and concerts in the world were worth as much to me as mamma's little finger!"

"And I've been so careless about her regularly." There was a break in Rob's voice. "There was always something going on out of study hours and I didn't realize. It was so easy to think mother wouldn't mind. And now—why, girls, I never could go back to college at all if there weren't to be any more letters from mother!"

"I haven't kissed her good night for ever so long," said Rupert. "I got a fool notion that is was babyish. I always used to think I couldn't go to bed without it. I wonder if she missed it. I've seen her look at me sometimes when I started up-stairs. What sort of a place would this be without mother? I could never stand it—never! I should want to run or drown myself!"

The door of the sick-room opened a little wider and Mr. Allison entered noiselessly.

"Is there any chance?" he said.

"Apparently none, Mr. Allison. She lies all the time like this. One hardly knows whether it be sleep or stupor."

"How long—" the strong man, choking, left the question unfinished.

"It is hard to say," answered the nurse, pitifully. "But she has lost within the last twenty-four hours."

The husband knelt at the foot of the bed, behind a screen which had been placed to shade the sick woman's face from the light, and rested his head upon the coverlet.

"My little Nellie!" he moaned, as if unconscious of any other presence in the room. "My rose of girls—my bride!—the mother of my children—the heart of my heart—spare her yet to me, O God! that I may have time to teach her how much dearer she is to me than money or lands or honors! Take her not—" "Mr. Allison!"

It was the nurse who touched him. There was a quiver of suppressed excitement in her voice. He rose to his feet. His wife's eyes were open—the pallid features illuminated. One wasted hand moved feebly toward him across the white counterpane. He fell again on his knees and pressed the thin fingers to his lips.

"Henry, darling,"—the faint, thrilling voice seemed to come from very far away—"don't grieve—any more! I am going to get well!" Long afterwards the doctor and the nurse would sometimes recall together the unexpected recovery of Mrs. Allison.

"It was no cure of mine," the doctor would say. "Medicine had nothing to do with it. She was as nearly gone as she could possibly be without actually ceasing to breathe, when she simply made up her mind to live! A marvelous case!"

Not so marvelous, perhaps, good physician! Only a righting for once of the disordered sequence of this topsyturvey world!

If the words of love and appreciation which beat so vainly at the closed bars of the coffin-lid were spoken often in living ears, how many other weary feet might turn again from "the valley of the shadow!"—Advance.

Blessed is the man who has the gift of making friends, for it is one of God's best gifts. It involves many things, but above all, the power of going out of ones self and seeing and appreciating whatever is noble and loving in another.—Thomas Hughes.

Letter Department.

PHILADELPHIA, Pennsylvania, February 6, 1904.

Editors Herald: In the Missionary Review for November, 1903, I noticed an article by Reverend John D. Nutting, secretary of the Utah Gospel Mission, located at Cleveland, Ohio. The object of this Mission is an effort "in behalf of the Mormon people; against the Mormon system." The suggestive title of the article referred to is, "Difficulties of work among the Mormons." I read it with interest as I am always eager to read anything on the "Mormon question." Thinking it would be well to inform this gentleman of the positions taken by the Reorganized Church, I wrote him a friendly letter and also sent a few tracts. After some delay he replied, also inclosing several of their tracts against Mormonism, so-called. His letter is as follows:

February 2, 1904.

"ELDER W. E. LARUE,

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

"Dear Sir: Yours of November 10 reached me in Cleveland under great stress of work preparing to come away, and I have not found time to reply until now. I am shut in by illness to-day and will send a note briefly. I think I mailed you our literature before. I am fairly well acquainted with the 'Josephite' branch of Mormonism. My wife's parents were born in or near Kirtland and her father lived there through the whole history of Mormonism until last August. I have made the only systematized statement of Mormon belief ever constructed, and in doing so was greatly struck with the fact that the whole fabric in Utah was simply a development of what was in Kirtland and Nauvoo.

"My father Morely, an old farmer, at a Thanksgiving dinner in Kirtland a few years ago, in accounting for the difference between western and eastern Mormons, stretched out his arms in front of him and said, 'The sideboards of Christian society count for a great deal—a great deal.' Excuse me if I speak plainly. I do not wish to give offense unnecessarily: but even the seeds of polygamy were sprouting in Kirtland, and if not actually practiced there by the 'Prophet' and others, it certainly was in Nauvoo, and plentifully in Winter Quarters.

"Father Morley's uncle, formerly a deacon in the Congregational Church at Kirtland, and a good, true man, had at least four extra women before they started for Utah at all. Joseph Smith planned the Rocky Mountain exodus and Brigham Young carried it out, for the purpose of getting out where they would not be molested in 'living their religion.' The doctrine of many gods and continuous revelation to a priesthood which alone holds the true gospel will produce all Utah has or ever has had if given the right opportunity in its times.

"There is no truth in either of these, no matter how sincerely they may be held, west or east; and I recognize the great sincerity of many in both flanks of Mormonism. You will probably be surprised when I say that I was surprised at the similitude between your letter and the arguments and notions with which we are met in Utah at almost every house. Take your doctrine of apostacy, for instance; it is the same and stated in almost the same phrases. You both hold the awful doctrine that for seventeen hundred years from about the Apostle John's time until Joseph Smith's, there was no church on earth. 'The gospel was lost from the earth', as you say, 'and must be restored.' If you will look in the dictionary you will find that the 'gospel' means the 'good news' and tidings which Christ brought and proclaimed through himself, and the early disciples. Every word of that was written in the New Testament and we have it, and the ages back of us have had it all the time; it has never been lost a moment, and Joseph Smith did not bring an atom of it back. The Romish Church became corrupted, of course, but it was by means of holding the very same doctrine of continuous revelation, which is your cornerstone, through which [that] they made the voice of church officials equal or superior to that of the Bible. Those officials added to the word whatever they chose, just as Joseph Smith and all the rest have done, and just as any such doctrine and priesthood will always make men do. There is only our safety. What the corrupted church needed was to get back to the original, undefiled truth in the Bible, not to get a new prophet and set of present revelations. This the church in its many families has been seeking to do since Luther's time; with the result that there was probably never so good an understanding of the real 'gospel' of Christ as now.

"I am perfectly willing to acknowledge that there are many estimable people in your faith, likewise in Utah. Some people would be 'good' as men go, anyway; but even they would be much better if they appreciated the real truth. I have no doubt that everywhere the sincere soul who follows after God as best he knows is spiritually blessed of him; but would be more blessed if having the truth too. The whole question is simply one of fact between Mormonism of whatever variety and Christianity. I am pretty familiar with these facts, and if I were a business man I would not invest a penny on any such slimy showing of fact as Mormonism can make for itself. The whole system, my brother pilgrim to eternity, is just a deception of the Evil One with which to delude souls and keep them in his power and weaken the appeal of true Christianity to the souls of men. Christian Science is another such one; Satan's chief plans now-a-days, is to get people to take something 'just as good' as Christianity and easier for the carnal, sinful heart. Let me warn you in time of the awful responsibility of accepting such a system for one's self and especially of trying to induce others to accept it. Had I the time and strength I should like to discuss in print as you suggest; but I can not. With earnest prayers that you may see the truth and accept it,

"Very truly,

"JOHN D. NUTTING.

"P. S.—If you care to do so you are welcome to publish this in HERALD, sending me copies."

One commendable thing in our Church is that we do not fear to have our cause criticised nor do we cover up or try to keep these criticisms from the notice of our people. For this reason we give the HERALD readers the opportunity to receive the benefits of the above letter. The issue as stated by this man is, "The whole question is simply one of fact between Mormonism of whatever variety and Christianity." From this it will appear that in this man's opinion, so long as we are Latter Day Saints, we are not Christians. For us to become Christian we must become identified with one of the "many families," such as the Congregational, Presbyterian, Campbellite, Methodist, Baptist, etc., who have failed but are trying to "get back to the original, undefiled truth in the Bible." We claim that we have already got there. In the face of opposition we have constantly and persistently affirmed that nothing can take the place of, or is "just as good" as, the truths of the Bible. There is no moral truth which we reject, and we affirm that our faith stands in complete harmony with all known truth whether found in the Bible or elsewhere. Our creed is "All Truth." A Christian is one who follows Christ and keeps his commandments. We have no other Savior than Jesus Christ and we try to keep his commandments. The judgement will reveal who are Christians and who are not.

Our friend says, "The whole system . . . is just a deception of the Evil One with which to delude souls." And again, "Let me warn you in time of the awful responsibility of accepting such a system for one's self and especially of trying to induce others to accept it." Personally I can say I have never been disappointed or felt that I was deluded or deceived in any way by my faith. If I turn out to be an evil man it will not be because of my faith. It will be wholly my own fault. My faith enjoins everything that is good and ennobling in the attainment of character. For me to leave it would be for me to forsake my most earnest and honest convictions of what is right. I once heard Apostle W. H. Kelley, one of our oldest and most experienced ministers, say, "I never had one whom I had been instrumental in converting to this work come to me afterwards and tell me he had been disappointed and deceived." I can say the same thing. Latter Day Saints are satisfied with their faith and as a rule the assurance and evidence are so great that they are not troubled about being deceived. However, we are willing to have it compared with other faiths and allow those interested to act upon their own convictions.

It is a strange and astounding thing to us that these would-be exemplars of Christian principles should be so dishonest and unjust, after all that we have said and done, as to represent us before the public as being "just the same" as the Mormons of Utah. Why not give us the credit due us for taking a firm and immovable stand against polygamy, Adam-god worship, blood-atonement, also other evils in Utah? Why represent us as believing and practicing the very things to which we are unalterably opposed? Can we suffer such injustice without protest? Those who are guilty of it are either ignorant of facts or else willfully malicious in their methods of opposition. The same ungodly methods of opposition which followed Christ and his ministry in the primitive age, are now being put forth by those whose crafts are endangered by the preaching of the restored gospel. The angel's message has thus far easily withstood the heavy opposition brought to bear against it, from without; if the success of our opponents is to be reckoned by the members they have taken from our ranks they have made a most complete failure. The only success possible for them is, that they may keep some of the people so prejudiced that they will not hear for themselves. Our cause will win wherever we can get the ears of the people. Meanwhile those who have taken in hand the task of destroying our faith will find they have a job which will last them a life time.

Editors Herald: On the 13th inst., I quit my farm work for four days, and went on a business and pleasure trip twenty-eight miles down in the Sacramento Valley. I called to see some of my friends at Clay and Conley's and in the neighborhood of Bruceville; was very kindly received and entertained at every place and kept over nights. I distributed tracts, HERALDS, and Ensigns, and was filled with joy to find some of my old friends believing in "true religion," which they had heard only by reading tracts and papers from me. I will continue to keep them supplied. I had a good time, except it was cold riding in the fog which was so thick at times I could not see more than one hundred yards.

Yours in Christ,

Dear Herald: I have been a reader of your columns for many, many years, and you always find a welcome at our humble home. When we first heard about the HERALD it was printed in Cincinnati and edited by Isaac Sheen. Father Corless sent for it at once, and since we came into the Church we have taken it continually. It comes, as always, laden with good news from the missionary field. It was always a delight for me to hear what success our elders were having in their fields of labor and toiling to present the beautiful gospel restored in our day.

It was indeed to me "good news from a far country," and I gladly accepted it, and was glad to know that God was near and interested in his children, as in days of old. To me, dear Saints, this has been one of the greatest evidences of this latter-day work.

It was forty years last Sunday, January 31, since Sr. George Corless and I were baptized. I think we were the first ones baptized into the Reorganized Church in this part of the country.

Several others came into the Church that winter and next spring. Bro. Oliver Bailey baptized us and I think that day he preached his first sermon. Brn. S. V. Bailey and O. J. Bailey were sent here from the conference that fall. Two families, Father Corless and his brother, who belonged to the old church, lived here, and had told us of the gospel before, and we only waited for an opportunity to receive it. It has been our life, our meat, and our all. We have tried in our weakness to live out its principles in our lives, and I can assure you, dear Saints, that we are not yet weary in trying to live that we may enjoy the blessings of our kind Father.

In this trying day we feel it is our only safeguard. He has never forsaken us in times of need and never will if we are prayerful and humble. We feel so safe when we live right, for our surroundings are so different, so many more things to lead us away, than there were years ago; so we have to watch as well as pray.

We have meetings at our house every Sunday now during the cold weather; preaching sometimes, if not, prayer-meeting, and God is with us by his Spirit. Religio meetings at the different houses. We wish to be remembered to all the Saints we have met so many years, and we always remember them in their trials. I could mention many—they are our Father's family.

I hope we may all so live that we may meet in that beautiful world where sorrows never come and tears will be wiped from all faces. We are having a cold and severe winter here; have not had such a one for years. Paper said last night seventy days of sleighing; to zero and below most of the time.

Yours in remembrance,

ANN E. CORLESS.

EAGLE GROVE, Iowa, February 12, 1904.

Dear Herald Readers: After my labors were concluded at Grinnell, which have been written of by another, I occupied at Oskaloosa and Beacon, where I found great need of spiritual instruction being given, and when given was apparently much appreciated. Here, as well as at Grinnell, I found a warm welcome, and was very kindly treated by Saints and friends, and left a few near the kingdom and the Saints cheered. I was much assisted by Bro. S. F. Cushman.

At Oskaloosa I met Elders Sorensen and Fairchild of the Brighamite Church, with whom I held a conversation, when Elder Fairchild said it was considered by him and the church he represented a crime to teach polygamy; that the United States government had made that which previously was a virtue a crime; and the Manifesto had annulled that part of the revelation on celestial marriage relating to polygamy, but the rest of that revelation was still in full force. I asked him why, if the Manifesto had made void that part of the revelation on celestial marriage, the church did not publish it in the Doctrine and Covenants, as issued by them? His answer was, "I can not tell, but it has been published."

They had been visiting some of the Saints and to them and others of the neighbors they had been advocating the virtues and divinity of polygamy, but he explained to me that he had only done so at their request, and to show how it was that God had commanded its practice, but that they did not wish those with whom they had conversed to think that they were advocating a belief in that principle now. They failed, however, to make that explanation to those with whom they conversed.

They claimed in the conversation that whatever the Presidency and Twelve decided upon was the voice of the Church, but criticised the claims we made concerning the necessity of a reorganization of the church, claiming that they only reorganized the Presidency. I asked, In this reorganization of the Presidency, was not the Twelve disorganized as a quorum, and did not this necessitate a reorganization of that quorum? To this they could make no reply. Then said I, Is this not proof that there was a necessity for the reorganization of the Church, since you have decided that the Presidency and Twelve constituted the authority of the Church? And if the Presidency and Twelve would instruct you to do that which was contrary to the written word, would you do it? They said, "Yes we would." The reader can draw his own conclusion how far-reaching this answer is, and to what extremes this principle would lead any organization or individual. This would at least place with those two quorums in their estimation the right to instruct the Church these elders represent, to disobey the Manifesto, which is not printed in their Doctrine and Covenants as a law to the church, and to obey the revelation on polygamy, which still stands published as a law to that people; and it looks like such a future was anticipated by them.

My next effort was at Runnells, after stopping on the way to enjoy Christmas Eve entertainment at Des Moines, at which time I was remembered with the rest of the children with some very practical help. Much illness prevented as large an attendance here as would otherwise have been, yet at some of the services the church was quite well filled with interested listeners. Bro. W. Christy was with me here the last week and rendered valuable assistance. During our services much good was brought about by securing a greater unity among the Saints, and intensifying the interest of others, so that it was concluded best to continue the effort in the near future.

I came to Eagle Grove on January 20, in a snow storm, and for that reason did not begin services at the Head Grove church till next evening. We continued till the 7th inst., being assisted by Bro. W. Christy, who is very effectually representing the Bishopric in this district. Several expressed themselves as much benefited by the services, and the Spirit of God was present at many of the services, especially at the social services, bearing witness that he was pleased and desired a continued advancement of the work here. Material help was rendered with great liberality in every way to aid us in our efforts. A brighter future for the work here seems to be very near. The Sunday-school was revived by Bro. Christy, who is district superintendent and who in this line of work is doing very effective service. The work here has suffered from various causes, and some have felt like laying down the armor, or seeking relief from active participation in the conflict; but it is to the credit of the Saints that they are willing to renew the conflict, and were quite punctual at the services although it was very cold weather during all our stay.

Held three services here at Eagle Grove this week with good results, although no very large audiences greeted us.

Throughout all this section of country the iniquitous doings of N. A. Baker have had their effects, and it is only by the upright characters and righteousness of the Saints that the work is being redeemed from this sad blight.

The many brethren who have preceded me in the work here are remembered and are spoken of quite highly, and some inquired about by those not associated with the Church.

The missionary force in this mission has been somewhat hindered in their work by reason of sleet and cold, but so far as I know all have done what they could.

Brn. Eli Hayer and Robertson dropped in for a few days and did good. Bro. Robertson went to Milo for a few days, and Bro. Hayer was called home by telegram, on account of sickness there. This is Bro. Hayer's old home, and of him I hear no evil, but a good report of his devotedness under very adverse circumstances. Bro. J. F. McDowell has rendered assistance at Rhodes, Runnells, and Des Moines.

Work in the branches is in a better condition than for a long time, and those of the local priesthood are generally working with renewed zeal and a better understanding of duty. The Des Moines Saints have now secured a commodious place of worship, and the work is moving steadily forward there.

Several marvelous manifestations of divine guidance, and help have been witnessed during the services referred to. And Zion's Praises are generally considered very good.

Hopefully and trustingly.

J. F. MINTUN.

WEYBURN, Assiniboia, N. W. T., Canada,
February 4, 1904.

Editors Herald: This is a new and prosperous country and is settled by a very generous-hearted people with an inquiring mind for the gospel truth. At present there are no elders in this country, but I have been corresponding with Bro. J. L. Mortimer. He and his colaborer have have too busy to reach us yet.

We are in need of more elders in Canada. My wife and myself have been doing all we can to make a good opening here. We have distributed two large bundles of tracts. All who have read the epitome of faith say there is nothing but what they can indorse; it is all Bible truth. So from the sentiment of the community we can have a good hearing. Several are anxious for the elders to get here, and have had one schoolhouse offered to us to preach in without asking for it. I also have some money to defray expenses at town which was sent us by Bro. and Sr. Brantwait—a donation of several Saints in their neighborhood.

A few of us are striving to serve God by doing what little we are at liberty to do, hoping that in the near future we can do more for the establishing of the truth in this land. We will be pleased to locate any of the Saints desiring to come to this country for settlement. We have had some fireside talks, trying to show the need of the former gospel being restored, and we think we have done some good. Have been visited by two Methodist ministers and had quite a good talk. The first said he could indorse our doctrine and was glad to receive tracts, and the other said he would want to investigate farther before he would give his opinion.

We have had some very severe winter weather for three weeks past, and quite a blizzard on the second of this month. It has cleared off now and promises fine weather for a time. This is a very healthy country and is settling up very fast. Some of the people live in sod houses, some in fine stone houses, and some in very good frame houses; but the poor class is respected and honored as much as the wealthy. I will gladly help any of the elders to get an opening when they come and will help in every way I can.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

WILLIAM C. TOOVEY.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, February 16, 1904.

Editors Herald: The wise man has said, "As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country." In line with this saying I want to say to your readers that we have some good news from our field of labor.

Being called to go to Sagle, Idaho, this winter, we arranged and made the trip the latter part of January. We did not know, when we agreed to go, that Bro. Griffiths and Allen had both or either of them been there this winter, or we might not have gone until later in the season. Still, although they (the people of Sagle) speak only good things of the brethren who have lately been there, they seemed still to be hungry for more of the bread of life. I will not worry you with details, only to say that when we arrived there the evening of the 24th, we found a hearty welcome and fully seventy-five were at the schoolhouse awaiting us. We found, also, that the Saints and friends who were trying to use our Hymnals (a new thing for them, as they are only lately organized into a branch), had arranged for a half hour song service for each night of our stay; this to be from seven o'clock to half past. Thus they hoped to learn to "sing with the spirit and sing with the understanding." Well, we have not done much singing of late, as our season's campaign of street work had somewhat "knocked us out," but we did the best we could and were surprised to see that our rest had so far restored our voice that we had no trouble to fill the appointments.

Commencing the evening of the 24th and continuing until the evening of the 4th of February, we preached twelve times, held our song services as announced, met with the Saints in one Sunday-school and one sacrament service, also met with the Methodist Sunday-school once, blessed five children, and baptized and confirmed eight, and met in one priesthood meeting. We feel that the Saints were strengthened and that prejudice was overcome to quite a goodly degree. The Saints remembered our needs in a substantial manner, so that we were made to feel that their interest in the cause is of that character that makes them coworkers with God.

Right here we wish to say that the record left there by our men who have labored there is good, and we are glad to labor where such a record is made for the truth. The Sagle branch under the presidency of Bro. W. Powell is making headway, and we hope for good reports from there in the future.

We left Sagle the morning of the 5th of February, Mr. Cyrus Turnbull taking his saddle horses and bringing us across the country fifteen miles to the town of Hope. Did I say across the country? Well, the last three miles was by boat across the Pend Oreille. Mr. C. Turnbull was our host a good share of the time while there, and right royally does he treat "ye missionary." May the Master reward him.

At Hope we found Sr. Hester George, also the families of Mr. Solomon Ferguson and his son Del. We enjoyed a visit of three hours with them and then took the train for Bozeman, arriving there in time to enjoy the Montana District conference which met there on the 6th and 7th. We had never before the pleasure of meeting the Saints there and enjoyed our stay very much.

While in Kootenai County, Idaho, we had received a letter from President Dewsnup, of Graceland, which placed upon us the responsibility of appointing district representatives for that college in this mission. While at Bozeman we appointed Bro. Thomas Reese to act in that capacity in Montana. We think we were directed not only by the counsel of our brethren there (Stead and Allen), but also by the Spirit.

From Bozeman we ran up to Helena to look after some scattered sheep and returned to this point via Butte, where we had to lay over twenty-four hours on account of a delayed train, and this time we spent visiting the Saints there; reached home on the 11th.

Here good news was waiting, for F. M. Smith was in the city and that meant a visit and counsel with him, as well as other good things that we will tell you of before we close.

Nor was this all: Bro. Swen Swenson was at work preaching at Sandy and the very next day after our return, baptized six, all from the Mormon faith, and yesterday (the 15th) he baptized two more. We feel like singing,

"Good news, good news, yes, shout the glad tidings o'er all the earth, Good news, good news, good news of a Savior's birth."

Well, we not only enjoyed our visit with Bro. Fred M. Smith, but enjoyed listening to him as the principal speaker in "The Tabernacle" in the afternoon of the 14th inst., as well as at our chapel in the evening. We believe that this is the first time one of our men has been privileged to occupy in the Tabernacle here, and we hope that it is an omen of "good things yet to come." We will not report Bro. Fred's work here, we leave that for him; but we will say that we think his visit will be fruitful of good to the cause.

There is one thing that we wish to mention concerning our stay in Bozeman. Although we only stayed with them two days, doing what we could for the cause in that time, they, seeing that our coat (yes, and trousers) was not as new as it was once (about three years ago), presented us with the needful to purchase a new suit. We felt, when bidding them good-by, that we were more indebted to them for ministrations than they were to us.

In Butte we were very pleased to have a visit with Bro. Levi Atkinson, of Lamoni, Iowa. We found him working beyond his physical strength in the mines, weary in body, but strong in the faith and his interest in the cause as bright as ever. We also visited Sr. Toward and family (the daughter of Bro. Atkinson), and Srs. Shrader, Lund, and Dempster. We think that good work could be done in Butte if we only had the force sufficient so that one might be placed there for a period of time.

The weather here is quite warm now and snow mostly gone. We do not expect to be able to meet the brethren at Kirtland this spring, much as we desire to do so.

Praying that they may have a profitable time, and for the advancement of Zion's cause, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

132 Quince Street.

Editors Herald: Eighteen years ago yesterday I walked into the icy waters with Elder E. C. Brand to be baptized, and as I take a retrospective view of work done during those years I know that the gospel has brightened my days, cheered my heart, and enabled me to make the lives of some others happier. I earnestly desire to continue in the Master's cause all my life.

About a month ago our three children and the writer fell victims to scarlet fever and have just been set free from quarantine.

The conference year now drawing to a close has been the most satisfactory one I have experienced in missionary work. The presence and power of the Holy Spirit has cheered the heart, and given renewed courage to press faithfully onward, and to trust more explicitly in the Lord.

By request of Bishop Kelley and his esteemed agent, A. M. Fyrando, of the Little Sioux, Iowa, District, I visited and preached on the law pertaining to temporalities in the eleven branches of that district. Branch officers and members alike showed me kind treatment and I will not soon forget my labors among them.

Our district conference closed its work at Dow City last night. The business sessions were peaceful, the preaching instructive, and the social services inspiring and comforting, the gifts of unknown tongues, interpretation of tongues, prophecy, and other manifestations of the Spirit being enjoyed. One man was baptized.

Elders F. A. Smith, J. W. Wight, C. E. Butterworth, J. M. Baker, J. F. McDowell, F. E. Cohrt, D. M. Rudd, and T. F. Jones of the general ministry, were present.

Your brother in Christ,

Editors Herald: Among the press of work, can you, for a few minutes, bear with me, one of the least of Christ's little ones, while I tell you of the joy and comfort I have with the HERALD? It has been sent to me for nearly two years through the kindness of my youngest son and his wife who live at 247 Irving Avenue, Brooklyn, New York, to whom I inclose this letter that she may post it from that place; for I have written from here, years ago, and I do not think they ever reached you.

I have been here over ten years, and have not seen a Saint; lately, I have found out where they meet, but it is miles away and I can not walk many yards. I am seventy-four years of age and weak with lung trouble. So I send these papers to you, lest my name be lost from the general record, and when you are praying for isolated Saints, debarred from church privileges, remember me, so I can know that I am within the family circle. Even now, I know there are a few who have not forgotten me; I feel the soothing influence, the wireless telegraphy of kindred Spirits. I have followed the brethren in their travels in the British Isles. I read with delight the letters in the HERALD. My grief is, that I can do nothing now to help when there is so much need. When I had anything I thought no sacrifice too great; but my day is done. Still, dear Saints, I am ever with you. Farewell, till we meet on the other shore.

JULIA EDWARDS.

REED CITY, Michigan, February 5, 1904.

Dear Herald: I am glad to say I am in the faith, and believe the faith is in me, and that I am ever striving for the advancement of this work we all love so well.

Just at the present time we are in the midst of some very heavy snow storms, and not being able to accomplish much abroad, I am at home with my family.

I believe this winter has already been the coldest I have ever seen, and it looks as though the end is not near. We have had good sleighing since Thanksgiving, and at times it has been very cold; the mercury has stood about zero and as far as thirty degrees below, and only once do I remember that it has been warm enough to thaw, and then only a very little. The snow is very deep, trains are delayed many hours, and sometimes for days; I just read in the paper that no mail had reached Harbor Beach for sixteen days. At a funeral a few days ago the men had to shovel the snow away to get the horses and hearse out of the snow, and the hearse turned over two or three times going to and coming from the cemetery. Almost every one seems to be healthy, some having colds and similar afflictions. It is pretty hard to do missionary work under these conditions, especially in rural districts.

All of the missionaries in Northern and Eastern Michigan Districts are doing all they reasonably can under existing circumstances. Nearly all the Saints are alive to the work and are trying to live according to the law of God, both in a financial as well as in a spiritual sense, and, as any one might expect, are being blessed accordingly.

I am informed that Joseph Musser is on the war-path again, and is lecturing against the Church. I think likely (as he is not very fond of work) that he thinks he may earn for himself an easier living by lecturing against us than he can at common day-labor. It seems strange that people of other denominations claiming to be religious will open their church doors and receive him with open arms, as it were, knowing, as they do, his character. Some years ago while Mr. Musser was lecturing against us some ministers of other denominations thought he would be just the man to upset the faith of the Saints, and hence employed him in different localities; but being followed up by our men, who in some instances replied to him, it militated against them. We have nothing to fear from his lectures, as the class of people attending them would be very little if any use to any church.

I met Elder Brown, of the Disciple faith, with whom we discussed at Shabbona. He informed me that he had united with the Anti-Mormon League and had become one of the board, and talked as though he was anxious to have another discussion in the near future. I asked what he expected to gain by these discussions. Said I, We met and discussed the faith of the Latter Day Saints over three years ago, and parted with the understanding that we discuss the faith of the Disciples in the near future. Right after that debate we baptized ten or twelve persons, and two years later we again entered into discussion, first discussing the faith of the Saints over again, and then entering into an investigation of the Disciples' faith, during which time and immediately after, my moderator, Bro. Davis, baptized twelve or fourteen more, making about twenty-five persons all told. What do you expect to gain? A name for debating? The gain in membership has clearly been on our side. He replied that he wanted the people to know what Latter Day Saints believed. I told him that we had been preaching that all the time and there was nothing the Disciples taught in harmony with the Bible, and as taught by the apostles and prophets, that the Saints do not teach and practice; besides preaching Bible principles left out by them. Elder Brown seemed very anxious that I challenge him to discuss in some other place; I replied that I scarcely ever challenged any one to discuss on religious principles, but that if I was challenged I would not take a back seat. He then said, "Then I challenge you to meet me again." Elder Brown also challenged Elder Beckley to meet him in discussion at the Fork Branch. It is altogether likely that either Elder Beckley or myself will meet him the latter part of February or the first of March. On the whole I do not think we have lost any ground in any of our discussions in Michigan, but in many places where they have been carried on properly, they have been productive of much good to the Church, because many who have attended were by them convinced of the truthfulness of the gospel who would not attend ordinary meetings.

When I first came to Michigan, about a quarter of a century ago, there were only about forty members in what is now known as the Eastern and Northern Michigan districts, and although we have met with much opposition from lecturers, etc., our membership has increased so rapidly that we were compelled to divide into two districts with a membership of from fifteen hundred to two thousand each. Regarding their lectures and debating we have nothing to fear; but the freeze out argument is the worst I ever met, viz: After traveling several miles, procuring a hall, extensively advertising the meeting, and at the appointed time not a soul being out to hear.

I am satisfied that the work in Michigan is advancing; many faithful and noble men have been raised up and are doing a grand work as ministers for Christ, who are supplying the demand in Michigan and some of whom are filling calls in other fields. May the blessings of our heavenly Father be upon his ministers and Saints everywhere, is the prayer of

J. J. CORNISH.

LEE, Oregon, February 8, 1904.

Editors Herald: I attended meetings at Pleasant Hill last Sunday where they have organized a branch. We had Sacrament meeting, Sunday-school, and testimony meeting in the morning, after which we had a basket dinner served in front of the schoolhouse in the bright, warm sunshine. After dinner Bro. Still of Bandon gave us a nice talk. The meetings were well attended and all took part in the work. There were seventeen Saints and several friends present. The Saints are earnestly pressing forward, doing all in their power to advance the work, and I believe if they do the best they can the Lord will do the rest.

There are only three Saints here at Lee at present, but I believe there will be more in the near future. If we only had an elder to preach the Gospel for us occasionally, I think it would help here so much. We have not had a Latter Day Saint sermon since Bro. Holt and Bro. and Sr. Anderson left us last September. How we did miss them, and do miss them still! I am glad to-day that I am a Saint; happy that I have a disposition that inclines me to God. I trust I may ever live nearer Christ and try to do his will.

Your sister in Christ,

MAUDE MAST.

SPRINGFIELD, Nebraska, February 15, 1904.

Editors Herald: We are in need of an elder; would like to have one come as soon as possible as two of our daughters wish to be baptized, and we think two others might come also. We would like to have this attended to as soon as possible, as one of our daughters expects to go to Colorado, to start the 1st of March, and wish this could be referred to Bro. Fred A. Smith or C. H. Porter—not that we wish to be understood as having a preference; but those brethren have been with us lately and would understand where and how to come. Bro. Smith was here January 31, and preached our daughter's funeral sermon. Hoping some elder will be here soon, I am,

Your sister in bonds,

General Conference.

KIRTLAND, Ohio, February 15, 1904.

Editors Herald: Until after the close of the General Conference I shall necessarily be in Kirtland, Ohio, or vicinity, and have arranged for my mail to come to lock box 526, Willoughby, Ohio. Kirtland is now on a rural free delivery line, and but one mail a day; hence I prefer the Willoughby office. All mail sent to Lamoni office will be duly forwarded, but letters sent to Willoughby will reach me sooner.

For the present I am assisting Saints and friends here to arrange for the General Conference. Have thus far met with the readiest response from all to do what they could and in due time arrangements will be completed for the conference. Whether we expect to be in attendance or not, all Saints should look with anxiety to this annual business gathering of the Church, for the spirit and work obtaining at the conference follow and impress to a great extent the laborer thereafter in every missionary field throughout the world. How great the necessity, then, for every member, whether absent or in attendance, to perform some humble part, which shall be in divine harmony with every other pure and unselfish effort, to make the gathering such as the Lord would have it. If in all of these efforts we shall work as commanded, "with an eye single to the glory of God," the results shall be for great good. But to do this, we must put away all selfishness; every unholy ambition; for ever dispelling every spirit of self-exaltation; exercising humbleness of soul—in love preferring one another. Men and women like this will help to mold the work of the conference "to the glory of God," whether present or absent, and no man should desire glory from the work of God.

Let us all stand in "holy places" then. Perilous times are at hand. The only hope of safety is the gospel hope. Shall we be true to the trust God has committed to us?

There ought to be fifty thousand prayers from the Saints each day for the special progress of the Lord's work. There ought to be ten thousand special offerings sent in before the time of the meeting of the Twelve on the 23d of March to give assurance for the work the ensuing year. There ought not to be an idler nor an indifferent member in the entire body. The Lord help that we may have it so!

Confident in the triumph of Zion's cause, I am hastily,

WILLOUGHBY, Ohio, Lock Box 526.

SNOVER, Michigan, February 9, 1904.

Editors Herald: I have been holding meetings here (a new opening) with the best of interest; began December 19, and have had a crowded house all through the cold and stormy weather. Sunday night, February 7, the Free Methodist preacher lectured against us. He tried to prove that Joseph Smith was a sheep-thief and everything bad. When I demanded what history he found evidence in he refused to tell me; but the congregation took it up and forced him to do so, and he said it was Musser's History. I replied on the following Monday night and told the people about Mr. Musser. The town is in an uproar, and I expect there will be a branch organized there next spring.

I love to defend the angel's message and the Lord is with his people here and I have made lots of friends for the cause. I ever wish to remain a defender of the faith.

Your brother in Christ,

O. J. HAWN.

A Converted Jew?

Editors Herald: The Saints are hereby notified to beware of a young man, presumably a Jew, who is traveling from State to State, visiting the different branches of the Church, posing as a converted Jew; he is a genuine fraud, and a shrewd one at that. The first that we have any knowledge of him, he appeared in the Castle Rock Branch, Washington, under the name of Stein and imposed upon the Saints there, as I have learned from Elder Samuel Crum, president of the Castle Rock Branch. From thence he wended his way to California, stopping at Sacramento. He got assistance from the Saints there to pay his way as far as the San Jose Branch. Bro. A. B. Phillips will doubtless remember him. Arriving here in San Jose he presented himself as a converted Jew and a member of the Reorganization, partaking of the sacrament, bearing testimony in the meeting, and returning thanks at meals.

He claimed to be a member of the Castle Rock Branch, and said he was converted and baptized by Elder Crum who was also a converted Jew. He gave his name as M. E. Feldman, and told a pathetic story of his having been disinherited and expelled from home by his father, who was the principal merchant of Castle Rock, and worth one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. He claimed also that his father held one thousand dollars of his own earnings and would not give it to him, claiming that he was insane.

He is familiar with the workings of the Church and the leading men in it. He represented himself as being a stenographer and news reporter, and was trying to get to San Louis Obispo, where he had a cousin living, and a job awaiting him at seventy-five dollars per month.

He represented to us that he had conferred with the newspaper men here, and if he could raise four dollars, they would get him through to his destination. His story was so plausible and pitiful, that one of the Saints took pity on him and loaned him five dollars upon the promise that he would return the same in a few days. He gave the name and address of his cousin as E. S. Feldman, 314 Mission Street, San Louis Obispo. We wrote to this address, but the letter was returned; so we heard nothing more from him till we read the notice sent in by O. J. Terry, when we immediately recognized him as not the converted Jew, but the wandering Jew and a fraud. Bro. O. J., how will you trade accounts? Yours in the conflict,

C. W. HAWKINS, President San Jose Branch.

SAN JOSE, California, February 9, 1904.

HIGBEE, Missouri, February 15, 1904.

Editors Herald: Bro. Luff was with us, at our conference, in the interest of Graceland and the instruction we received from him seemed to be just what the Saints were waiting and wishing for. I was pleased to be able to hand Bro. Luff twenty-cents for the college; this was for Willie May Chapman. She took some orders for flower and vegetable seeds and that represents a part of her work; the balance will be divided between the Home and the Kirtland Temple. She is twelve years old and wants her name on the records as being a helper in these different parts of God's cause.

Your brother,

WM. CHAPMAN.

LINCOLN, Nebraska, February 8, 1904.

Dear Herald: You are a most welcome visitor in my home every week. I can hardly wait your coming to read the encouraging letters from the dear brothers and sisters who are pressing forward in the gospel work as faithful workers. It makes me think of how weak I am. I have many trials and temptations and things look very black sometimes and I get discouraged. I then think of what is promised if we prove faithful. The dear Lord knows best in all things always. How much good it would do me to hear a Latter Day Saint sermon! I have not heard one for so long. Sr. Hubbard told me that some of the elders were here last summer. If any come this way again I want them to come and see me. I will make them a welcome home as long as they stay. I ask the prayers of the Saints for my husband as he is an unbeliever, and that I may prove faithful and do my duty that he may in time become a Saint. If any of the Saints who take the Autumn Leaves would be so kind as to let me have them when they have read them, I would be very glad. May the Lord be with all his people and all the honest in heart is my prayer.

MRS. IDA SUTHERLAND.

420 South Twenty-first Street.

COOKES POINT, Texas, February 5, 1904.

Editors Herald: Our conference is past; had a very good one, good turnout and interest from first to last. The missionary force of Texas Central District was all in attendance, Brn. Bryan, Harp, and the writer did the preaching. Brn. John Harp, H. O. Smith, and E. W. Nunley were elected delegates to General Conference. According to the reports from the branches the work seems to be about normal. There seems to be an increase in the interest on the outside. Bro. Harp has made some new openings in the eastern part of the State. We hope for the better in these parts next year.

When we read the reports of some of the missionaries in the North and see they have preached and baptized so many and then see the many pats they get on the shoulder for it and then look at our little reports and nobody to say anything to encourage us sometimes we get discouraged. I wish all the Church knew how hard it is to get a chance to preach in Texas. Much time has to be used in trying to get to preach here. In the North a man can get to preach very handy as a rule, and can get to preach easier than a man can here.

I saw in the HERALD a few weeks ago a note from the Editor stating that those in charge of missions preached more sermons, as a rule, than those under their charge. That is easily accounted for. As a rule they go from district to district and from branch to branch and from reunion to reunion and do most of the preaching at every place and those under their charge have to go among the outside world to preach where they can get the chance and often some time intervenes between the times they can get the chance to preach. It is this way in Texas outside of branches.

I am glad that there is an all-seeing eye that is taking cognizance of all we do, no matter what men say about our work. I would rather have the approbation of the Master than to be patted upon the shoulder by all the Church and the world too. You may think I am a little bit jealous. It may be so, but I know I am a little bit sick. I am still in the conflict until it is over.

I am yours for the right.

E. W. NUNLEY.

DAVENPORT, Iowa, February 8, 1904.

Editors Herald: I have this day returned from Kewanee, where the district conference was held. It was a pleasant and profitable session. A spirit of harmony prevailed in the business sessions. The preaching and prayer services were spiritual and edifying; it was a time of refreshing from the Lord. The Sunday-school and Religio work was well represented and showed much improvement.

EDWARD RANNIE.

Materlinck and the Flowers.

When Maurice Materlinck, dramatist, poet, and critic, wrote "The Life of the Bee," some surprise was expressed that he should have such a strong and fine love of nature and so intimate a knowledge of her workings. Now he writes with equal delicacy and interest of "Old Fashioned Flowers." We quote from his article on that subject in the Outlook (February Magazine Number):

"Can we conceive what humanity would be if it did not know the flowers? If these did not exist, if they had all been hidden from our gaze, as are probably a thousand no less fairy sights which are all around us but invisible to our eyes, would our character, our faculties, our sense of the beautiful, our aptitude for happiness, be quite the same? All of a delightful sense would sleep forever at the bottom of our harder and more desert hearts and in our imagination stripped of worshipful images. The infinite world of colors and shades would have been but incompletely revealed to us by a few rents in the sky. The miraculous harmonies of light at play, ceaselessly inventing new gayeties, reveling in itself, would be unknown to us, for the flowers first broke up the prism and made the most subtle portion of our sight. And the magic garden of perfumes: who would have opened its gate to us?

"The whole vocabulary, all the impressions of love, are impregnate with their breath, nourished with their smile. When we love, all the flowers that we have seen and smelt seem to hasten within us to people with their known charms the consciousness of a sentiment whose happiness, but for them, would have no more form than the horizons of the sea or sky. They have accumulated within us, since our childhood, and even before it, in the soul of our fathers, an immense treasure, the nearest to our joys, upon which we draw each time that we wish to make more real the clement minutes of our life. They have created and spread in our world of sentiment the fragrant atmosphere in which love delights.

"That is why I love, above all, the simplest, the commonest, the oldest, and the most antiquated; those which have a long human past behind them, a long array of kind and consoling actions; those which have lived with us for hundreds of years and which form part of ourselves, since they reflect something of their grace and their joy of life in the soul of our ancestors."

REDUCED RAILROAD RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Western Passenger Association.—The Western Passenger Association, the territory of which is from Cheyenne, Wyoming, and east to Chicago, including all points in Colorado, has granted a rate of one and one third fare, round trip, certificate plan, to General Conference and Auxiliary Conventions, Willoughby, Ohio. Passengers pay full fare on going trip, tickets for which may be obtained from April 1 to 7. Certificates corresponding to every ticket purchased, and showing payment of full fare to destination, must be obtained, which when signed and stamped by the Church Secretary and the Joint Agent, will entitle holders thereof to return tickets at one third regular fare, provided one hundred certificates are obtained. The Joint Agent of the Central Association will be present on Monday and Tuesday, April 11 and 12, and all must obtain their certificates from him on said dates; he will charge a fee of twenty-five cents for validating each person's certificates.

Return tickets may be purchased from date of Joint Agent's attendance up to and including April 23, and are limited to continuous passage over same route as going trip. Going tickets are limited or unlimited, according to rules of roads selling them. Persons may buy through tickets to Willoughby, Ohio, the rail point nearest to Kirtland—two miles distant and reached by stage, or may buy tickets to Chicago and there repurchase to Willoughby, Ohio, according to the ability or inability of agents to sell through tickets. Do not fail to obtain a separate certificate with every ticket purchased. Take notice, that "no certificate will be honored which was issued to cover the sale of more than one single trip ticket.

"Ministers or others who travel on clerical or half fare permits or commutation tickets of any description, or children traveling on half fare tickets, are not entitled to the reduction."

List of roads in said territory: Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fe; Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern (from Pana to Beardstown inclusive certificates will be of Central Association form); Chicago and Alton; Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy; Chicago and Northwestern; Chicago Great Western; Chicago, Wilwaukee, and St. Paul; Chicago, Peoria, and St. Louis; Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Omaha; Frisco System; Great Northern (from Aberdeen, Huron, Sioux Falls, Watertown, and Yankton, South Dakota; Appleton, Duluth, Granite Falls, Hutchinson, Marshall, and Pipestone, Minnesota; and West Superior, Wisconsin); Hannibal and St. Joseph; St. Louis, Keokuk, and Northwestern; Kansas City, St. Joseph, and Council Bluffs; Chicago, Burlington, and Kansas City; Keokuk and Western; Illinois Central; Iowa Central; Minneapolis and St. Louis; Jacksonville and St. Louis; Missouri, Kansas, and Texas; Missouri Pacific; Northern Pacific (from Duluth, Minnesota; Ashland, Superior, West Superior, and Grantsburg, Wisconsin); Quincy, Omaha, and Kansas City; Rock Island System; Wabash; Wisconsin Central; Burlington and Missouri River; Colorado Midland; Colorado and Southern; Denver and Rio Grande; Florence and Cripple Creek; Midland Terminal; Leavenworth, Kansas, and Western; St. Joseph and Grand Island; Union Pacific.

Southwestern Passenger Association.—Rates have been granted by the Southwestern Passenger Association, covering the following territory: Southern Missouri, Indian Territory, Oklahoma, and Texas. Instructions given in Western Passenger Association notice, preceding, also govern the reduction in rate, which is on the certificate plan.

Persons residing in Arkansas and Louisiana who wish to avail themselves of the reduced rate should buy regular local tickets to Missouri or Texas points, and from those points obtain rates and certificates. Careful inquiry concerning application of reduction to territory, should be made, and certificates obtained, to prevent loss of rate.

Trans-Continental Association.—The following from the Chairman is self-explanatory: "Delegates may avail themselves of the regular nine-months' rate which is in effect from Pacific Coast points daily, to Missouri River points, Sioux City, Council Bluffs, Omaha, St. Joseph, etc., and which approximates two cents per mile in each direction, or about one fare and one third for the round trip.

"The nine months rate does not apply to intermediate or interior points, but only to what are known as the eastern gateways of the Association, such as those named. Should it happen that your delegates apply at a station on Pacific Coast from which the nine months rate is not in effect, which may be the case at very small, unimportant stations, the agent will cheerfully ascertain and advise them the nearest point to his station from which such rate does apply. He will also advise your delegates as to the eastern points to which it will be most advantageous for them to purchase nine months' tickets in re-buying to place of meeting.

"Please note that our lines sell only from the states of California, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, and west of and including Mission Junction, British Columbia, including also what are known as Kootenay common points—Nelson, Rossland, Sandon, and Grand Forks, British Columbia.

Any coming from the foregoing territory should be careful to obtain lowest rate to one of said Missouri River points—or to Cheyenne, Wyoming, or a Colorado point—and there purchase tickets east on the certificate plan to place of meeting, or to Chicago, and there repurchase to Willoughby, Ohio. Careful reading of other notices, and due inquiry of railroad agents, will determine the best course to pursue in obtaining lowest rates.

Delegates residing in Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Utah, Arizona, New Mexico, and North Dakota west of Bismark, from which said nine months rate does not apply, are cautioned to note instructions carefully, lest they buy through tickets to place of meeting and lose the reduced rate returning, which is granted only in territory covered by rate on certificate plan and to certificate holders; see notices covering Western and Central Associations. As the nine months rate does not apply in said States to Missouri River points, persons should purchase local tickets to nearest points in Western Association territory, and there repurchase to eastern destination on certificate plan.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, February 16, 1904.

Kirtland Temple.

Many of the Saints are at present contemplating a visit next April to Kirtland, and thereby to satisfy a longing desire to see the Temple—one of the monumental evidences of our church organization.

I would respectfully say to the membership of the Pittsburg District, that the Temple needs some repairs, so that it shall be in readiness and comfortable at the coming General Conference. The Bishop needs financial assistance at once. Those who can aid in this laudable work, will please send their offering direct to E. L. Kelley, Box 18, Lamoni, Iowa, stating the object of your remittance. He will promptly receipt for the same.

ROBT. M. ELVIN, District President.

Notice to Second Quorum of Elders.

Dear Brethren: Another conference year is near its close, and we call upon each member to send in a report of labors performed. I have sent a blank report and a circular letter to each member; please fill out the report and forward to me not later than March 25, so as to get our report ready for General Conference.

F. C. WARNKY, Secretary.

2422 Wabash Avenue, KANSAS CITY, Missouri.

Aftermath.

Some years ago the Church provided for the lifting of the Graceland College debt. A donation of twenty-five thousand dollars was asked for, with a provision: that until the full amount was subscribed, the Bishop was not to make a call for it.

During the time since the adoption of the aforesaid measure, the Bishopric and the trustees of the College kept patiently and faithfully at work to obtain the required subscription, and finally the amount was subscribed. But be it understood, the twenty-five thousand dollars has not all been paid in yet, and still more, perhaps some of it will never be paid. As is usual among so great a number, there be some who were able at the time of making the promise, or thought they would be, who now, through adverse circumstances, are not able to meet their obligation. Some have answered the call of the pale reaper, and departed without making the necessary provision of meeting their agreement. And yet there be another class of subscribers—those who have changed their mind since obligating themselves to aid in the payment of this debt. It is to be hoped that there are precious few of them.

Another thing must be taken into consideration: as the debt was not promptly paid, at the time the subscription was requested, the debt has continued to grow, by reason of the interest thereon, and needed improvements to keep up the institution to fulfill the object of its creation.

There should be no slacking of interest or energy upon the part of the supporters and friends of higher education for our young people; we are still in need of means to complete the payment of the debt, to meet running expense, and to improve and advance the College in its usefulness.

Shall we have a hearty response from many?

For Graceland,
ROBT. M. ELVIN.

Box 224, LAMONI, Iowa.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

In the Deseret News, for February 20, 1904, the report of Bro. F. M. Smith's discourse delivered in the Tabernacle in Salt Lake City, on the afternoon of Sunday, February 14, is given in full, and on the opposite page a photogravure of the speaker is presented, which is a very good picture of the man.

On page 26 of the same issue of the News under the caption of "Another point of view to the Mormon point of view," is found an article signed by Andrew B. Christenson. From this we quote as follows:

The partial failure of "Mormonism" in the missionary field as well as at home can be found in the fact that those who have accepted it have not strictly kept the commandments of the Lord. Our actions and lives have too frequently contradicted our claims, and thus we have become stumbling-blocks to the people, and to the extent of our neglect and wrong-doings have not enjoyed the Spirit and power of God as we should have done. Many of us have been too selfish and narrow-minded to obey the instructions of our brethren who have been placed over us. We have been jealous of one another and we have found fault with our neighbors. We have neglected our prayers and we have ceased to be humble and to depend upon our heavenly Father for light and wisdom and intelligence. This is why we have failed and we shall no doubt continue to fail inasmuch and as far as we do not mend our ways and live better lives.

As to our financial failures, they did not come so much from a lack of knowledge and timely instruction as they did from a want of obedience and honesty on the part of the people. From the earliest days of the Church they have been advised and instructed to be industrious and frugal, to deal honestly with all men, to pay their debts, to live within the limits of their means, to dispose of their products when the prices were not the lowest, not to sell their property and property facilities to their enemies, to organize companies and combines among themselves for investment and for the development of our own natural resources, to build factories and become as much as possible self-sustaining and independent of the outside world; all of which is as sound from a sociological and economic point of view as any code of doctrines on these subjects that are taught in the schools of to-day or advocated by the world's greatest thinkers in science and practice. These simple principles would have saved and made wealth for the people had they been heeded. Our company stores as also other company enterprises went down to a very great measure from a lack of unity and individual honesty on the part of the people, and through an undue use of the credit system. The last one named will alone drive to the wall any store or commercial enterprise that makes a use of it to any very great extent. We have sinned against instruction and knowledge in these cases as in most others and the results are not only just but inevitable.

ture of Miss Stella Jenson, of Brigham City, Utah, studying music in Boston, who has lately been giving the "Hub" some ideas about the Mormons. From these we quote:

"One phase of the Mormon belief is that every individual has literally to work out his own salvation. We believe hell to be a matter of conscience, and that to do a wrong act results in such natural suffering—such a hell—that fire and brimstone is too weak a symbol to portray it.

"Music is a great feature in a Mormon home as is all that goes to make home a happy place, where all reforms, if there are any, are quietly effected.

"No, polygamy is a subject upon which I am not posted. We simply do not hear of it or talk of it out there. It is dead and buried and is altogether a thing of the past."

Of these items we gather that some of the observant among the Utah people see failures in their ministerial work and point out as the reason for such failure the alleged fact that the people had not kept the law and commands of God, practically a departure from such commands. Also that some of the younger portions of the people are satisfied that polygamy is a thing of the past. Miss Jenson evidently does not know all that is going on in Utah, or even at Brigham City. However, such things are straws which show the direction of the public mind.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

If Bro. B attends a district conference, away from the branch where he lives, and, while at the conference, is called and ordained to the office of priest, without the vote of the branch where he lives, is his ordination legal, if authorized by the missionary in charge and by the conference?

Yes, unless it should be discovered that Bro. B was not in good standing in the branch to which he belonged, or that his name had been presented to the branch and the branch had voted against the ordination before the sitting of the conference at which ordination took place. It is better in such cases to refer the proposed ordination to the branch for approval and provide for the ordination subject to such approval, or as is done in the Lamoni district and stake, refer it to the officers of district and branch for inquiry.

Rules of Order, Section 176:1, Articles of Representation, provides how delegates to the General Conference are chosen. How about those who are otherwise named as delegates, and how about those otherwise designated obtaining the "Certificate," provided for in Section 178? Are we drifting away from our own adopted law, in permitting a delegate, or delegates to add to their number? Is there any provision made by the Church for selecting of delegates, other than that published in the Articles of Representation? Is laxity or indifference to the observance of rule or law an evidence of innovation and apostasy?

There is no provision that we are aware of that authorizes branch or district to delegate the right to those appointed to represent district or branch who may be at the general session to select delegates to fill the quota of delegates to which district or branch is entitled out of other attendants at the session. We think it improper for branch or district to direct as above questions indicate. However, it would not be evidence of apostasy, should it occur. Apostasy may grow out of laxity and indifference to law, but it is not likely to occur in this instance.

WAR IN THE FAR EAST.

Apprehensions of a conflict of arms among the nations of the earth have been long entertained by Latter Day Saints and much speculation has been indulged in as to how and when and among what nations this would commence. We have avoided any speculation upon the topic, as indications of war and disturbance have been prevalent for many years, especially in regard to Bulgaria, Macedonia, Montenegro, and Turkey, involving Russia and Great Britain as a consequence, and possibly Germany; but these indications have passed away through the exertions of able diplomatists of the world and the war cloud would dissipate. But now for two weeks and more actual war has been going on between Japan and Russia, and so far what is known as the Island Kingdom has the advantage. It appears that Russia has but few available seaports, Vladivostok and Port Arthur, including Dalny in the far East. These are all invested by Japanese war ships, and each attack of the Japanese upon Port Arthur has resulted in disabling some of the Russian war vessels, until at present both Vladivostok and Port Arthur are said to be closely invested.

Lieutenant-general Carl Stoessel, who is in command of the garrison at Port Arthur on the part of the Russians, has issued an order directing that the port shall be defended unto death; that the garrison is surrounded on three sides by the sea and no escape for the garrison in that direction without encountering the Japanese war ships, and that the Japanese army is investing on the fourth or land side, so that there is no escape except in fighting and in winning a victory, which according to experts is not likely they can accomplish.

Russia seems to be hampered by the long distance intervening between the home government and the scene of conflict and depending on only one line of railroad, the Siberian Railway being but a single line, is inadequate to carry the vast army and its supplies, which are absolutely essential to the carrying on of the war. The conflict is to be in the province of Manchuria, which the Russians agreed to evacuate at the close of the Chinese insurrection in 1902, but so far has failed to keep her promise, and in the little kingdom of Corea. Manchuria is in the ostensible possession of the Russians, which possession is disputed by the Japanese, and Corea is in possession of Japan and supposed to be a close ally of Japan.

It is feared that Germany may become an ally of Russia in case of complications, and Great Britain an ally of Japan, though some apparently astute statesmen are of the opinion that an alliance may be formed between England and France as against Russia in case Germany takes up the cudgel on the part of Russia. These complications seem to hinge upon the possible alliance between China and Japan, which from the fact of both the Japanese and the Chinese being of what is called the yellow race, would seem to be most natural.

The opening of ports in Manchuria to the commerce of the world seems to offer an opportunity for trouble between the United States and Russia, notwithstanding the long existing friendship between these two nations; for Russia seems to maintain her hold upon Manchuria entire and objects to the opening of these ports under existing circumstances. It would appear that Japan is asking for the privilege of using the island of Guam as a landing point for a submarine cable provided the United States will consent. Russia protests that if the United States allows it she will consider it an act in breach of neutrality law. It is not yet determined whether the United States will grant such privilege, though it is thought by some that it would not be a breach of neutrality law. The situation is open to grave apprehension and the United States is waiting to see what the developments in the far East will be.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

Bro. J. M. Baker on February 22 wrote from Sioux City, Iowa, that the work there had in some ways made wonderful advancement—had advanced in a general way. He does not expect to be at General Conference, but assures us his prayers will be for the Conference.

James E. Kelley was at Uniopolis, Ohio, the forepart of February. He wrote from there telling of some of his experiences at Lima. He baptized some. They were refused the use of church fonts and the Young Men's Christian Association plunge, so used the lake by cutting through ice over a foot thick. He was at the time he wrote enjoying good meetings at Uniopolis, and had many friends. He and Bro. Beckley expected to hold meetings in the Lima courthouse in the latter part of February and fore part of March. He feels his faith in this great work growing brighter and stronger.

By a letter written to R. S. Salyards by Bro. D. E. Tucker, we learn that the latter is still in Auckland, New Zealand, battling for the cause. The little Sunday-school at Kaitangata is progressing, with an average attendance of twelve. Bro. Hall is superintendent. Bro. Hall has been assisting Bro. Tucker in distributing tracts, and they have seen some good results follow their work. They seem to be in hopes of being able to build a chapel in Kaitangata soon. "All things considered," says Bro. Tucker, "the light is beginning to dawn a little in the North Island."

Bro. W. S. Taylor wrote from Sherwin Junction, Kansas, February 22, that the Columbus Branch was building a church house, and thought it would help the cause there. Bro. Henry Smart had been there holding meetings, and had had good audiences. Brn. J. A. and J. V. Davis had also been there holding meetings.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

We call attention to the advertisement, "Warn Your Neighbor," elsewhere found in this issue. It is timely and pertinent. We never had a more promising demand for tracts setting forth our views on doctrine and Church polity than is now being made. We ought to be able to scatter them in showers where they will do good.

Bro. Paul M. Hanson has an excellent article correcting some gross misstatements concerning Joseph Smith, the Martyr, and the history of the Church, in the Clarence and Richmond Examiner, published at Grafton, New South Wales, Australia, in its issue for December 15, 1903. It was laid on our desk by Bro. J. W. Wight.

Bro. Phineas Cadwell, formerly a resident of Logan, Iowa, but of late years located at Burlington, Kansas, near his son William C., has passed into the beyond. He was stricken by paralysis sometime ago, from which attack he sank until he died. Card in memoriam, received from Logan, Iowa, reads, "Honorable Phineas Cadwell, born April 17, 1824, died February 26, 1904. Services February 28, at two o'clock in the afternoon, at Latter Day Saints' chapel. Burial Silver Prairie Cemetery."

Bro. Cadwell's life was a long and useful one. He was for many years a staunch defender of the work in Harrison and adjoining counties in Western Iowa. To us he was ever an honorable and upright man.

E. R. Dewsnup, our worthy president of Graceland College, left Lamoni on Saturday, February 27, to be gone for some time. He expected to visit Omaha, St. Louis, and Chicago, on college matters, and will then go direct to England, to complete some special work in some English university. He will return in time for the fall work. President Dewsnup has been hard at work in the interests of Graceland, and his efficient work is telling for good. The catalogues have been printed and will soon be ready for distribution. We trust the Saints will give Bro. Dewsnup heartly support in his efforts to make Graceland one of the best schools in the land and a powerful factor for good in the Church.

We give below a letter from one of our sisters in the Hawaiian Islands, but now in Washington, D. C.:

Dear Brothers and Sisters in Christ: I think you will all be surprised to hear from me. I am one of your Hawaiian sisters in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. I left my home and came to Washington, D. C., with the prince and princess. We will be here till the last week of June.

When I was in San Francisco I inquired for our church; went to Oakland twice. That was the last time I heard the teaching of our gospel. In the last week of October, 1903, we left San Francisco and came to Salt Lake City; then to Pueblo, Colorado. We stayed in St. Louis for four days. I looked around but did not find our church.

We stayed in Columbus, Ohio, for a week and then came to Washington. Here I have been around to look for my church, but I can not find it. I see so many, but not mine. Dear brothers and sisters, will you be so kind as to send me Zion's Ensign and SAINTS' HERALD, and let me know the price of them?

I am ever so glad to meet any of my sisters and brothers in Christ. I am away from my church sisters, but my prayer is, if we meet not in this world, we will meet in the next world.

I hope my letter will arrive to you all; I will write to you again. May God bless you all.

Your Hawaiian sister,

MRS. MARIA N. SCOTT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., 1522 K. Street, N. W.

We often receive correspondence which has been written on both sides of the sheet. To use this necessitates it being copied or else great inconvenience being endured in the composing-room. Those writing for publication should remember the rule to write on one side only; and those writing on both sides should not be surprised if their communications drop into the spacious waste basket. Unless there be special merit in the communication we are not likely to go to the trouble of copying it. Remember to write on one side of the paper only, when writing for publication. This is a universal rule.

We recently read a correspondence between one of our brethren and a minister of another church. The latter closed one of his letters in these words: "May the God of Jacob and Isaac be with you to the end. I would not ask the God of Joe Smith to be with you, for I do not want such a god to be with my friends!" The expression is quite characteristic of the spirit of many opponents of this work.

Our rustling business manager was in Chicago last week purchasing a folding machine. Bro. Blair has, by his wise purchases, greatly enhanced the efficiency of the HERALD plant. We are glad to see it, and trust the good work may go on. The more efficient machinery we have the more cheaply we can produce, and, the debt once removed, it will result in reducing prices and increasing the amount of literature we can distribute.

The Board of Auditors, Brn. A. Carmichael, F. A. Russell, and Charles Fry, are at work on the books of the HERALD Office and the Bishop's office.

Brn. Heman C. Smith and Henry Southwick left Lamoni on Saturday, February 27, for Chicago to attend the conference of the Northeastern Illinois District. Bro. Smith will not return till after General Conference.

Bro. Fred M. Smith, of the HERALD staff, returned Saturday from his trip to Utah. He reports having had a pleasant trip. No doubt he will later tell us of it. He visited the Saints at Ogden and Provo, Utah, and Colorado Springs and Denver, Colorado.

The Lamoni Stake held its conference in Lamoni on Saturday and Sunday last. A goodly representation was present, and the business was done quietly. Ninety-seven delegates were elected to General Conference. Next conference will be held in Centerville.

A number of the missionaries are at home in Lamoni, preparing for General Conference. Among them we note Brn. J. D. Stead, D. A. Anderson, W. H. Kephart, J. M. Stubbart, John Harp, Eli Hayer, E. A. Stedman, and J. W. Peterson.

Bro. J. O. Hower, of Blaine, Whatcom County, Washington, would be glad to have any of the elders stop there. He would be glad to have his little son, born February 15, blessed. He says they will do all they can to get a place for an elder to preach. Missionaries in Washington take note.

Alvin Knisley, writing from Treherne, Manitoba, under date of February 17, says: "I have baptized twelve here already and expect more in a few days."

On February 15 Bro. N. C. Enge wrote from Kristianssand, Norway: "I baptized a fine man yesterday. I hope to induct my sister into the kingdom before leaving here. We are all well. We intend to leave Liverpool March 15 on the Saxonia; or March 22 on the Lucania."

"THE CHURCH OF CHRIST AS IT WAS LEFT COMPLETED AND PERFECTED BY THE APOSTLES OF CHRIST."

BY ELDER ISAAC M. SMITH.

(Concluded.)

Please note, as shown in the first section of this article, that this church which was so beautiful, so pure, and so powerful in its infancy, from A. D. 33 to A. D. 35, has changed very much between the years A. D. 35 and A. D. 96; and among those changes we note the following:

There was in the church now, at different places, "dissension and disputation;" "much disputing;" "contentions;" "envying, and strife, and divisions;" some saying "I am of Paul, and I of Apollos, and I of Cephas;" some who were "carnal, and walk as men;" some who were "puffed up;" some living in "fornication;" some "drunken;" "wars and fightings among you;" "brother goeth to law with brother;" "ye do wrong, and defraud, and that your brethren;" there were "rich" and "poor" among them now; "ye oppress the poor;" some who taught that it was necessary to be "circumcised and keep the law of Moses." There were "many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers" in the church, "teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake;" the Hebrew saints were "dull of hearing," and had need that some one should teach them again "that which be the first principles of the oracles of God;" the Galatian saints did "observe days, and months, and times, and years," and were "removed from him who called you into the grace of Christ." Paul said that "all they which are in Asia be turned away from me;" John says the Ephesian saints "hast left thy first love," and that they have "fallen;" he says the church in Pergamos has some who "hold the doctrine of Balaam," and others who "hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans" (polygamy); at Thyatira he says they allow "that woman Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and seduce my servants to commit fornication;" at Sardis, "thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead;" at Laodicea they are "lukewarm," and are "wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked," notwithstanding she claims that she is "rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing." At Corinth "some have not the knowledge of God," and "many are weak and sickly among you;" at Thessalonica there are "some who walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busybodies;" and James says to those whom he addresses that "ye lust," "ye kill," "ye fight and war," "ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lust," and finally bursts out with "Ye adulterers and adulteresses."

Reader, can you believe that the church from A. D. 51 to A. D. 96, is more nearly "perfected" and better able to stand alone than it was from the day of Pentecost, A. D. 33, to the conversion of Saul of Tarsus, A. D. 35? If not, then why claim that "that which is perfect is come," about this time, or a little later, and that those officers and gifts, which Christ placed in the church "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, and for the edifying of the body of Christ," now became unnecessary? Does not the church in which there are contentions, divisions, strifes, wars, and fightings, need the help of inspired apostles and prophets as much as the church did when they were "all of one heart and of one soul"?

Was the church more nearly finished, completed, "perfected," and better prepared to have removed from it all inspired officers, all direct inspiration from God, when it had within it those who were holding and teaching the doctrine of Baalam and the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, than it was when they all "continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine" and "spake the word of God with boldness"?

Is there less necessity for inspiration in the church when the saints are going "to law one with another" than there was when "neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own"? Is the church better prepared to do without apostles and prophets when they "oppress the poor" than when "distribution was made to every man as he had need"?

I confess that I can not see in the church, at this time, A. D. 96, the completeness and perfection that existed there in A. D. 33 to 35; hence I can not see why we should conclude that Christ and his apostles "left" the church finished, completed, "perfected," shortly after this. It is clear to my mind, however, that Christ "left" the church, later on; but not because it was "perfected." John Wesley assigns a much better reason than that: "This was the real cause why the gifts of the Holy Spirit were no longer to be found in the Christian church; because the Christians were turned heathen again, and had only a dead form left."—Sermon 94, vol. 2.

Again, in another sermon, Mr. Wesley says: "We have been apt to imagine that the primitive church was all excellence and perfection; and such, without doubt, it was on the day of Pentecost; but how soon did the fine gold become dim; how soon was the wine mixed with water; how little time before the Christians were scarcely to be distinguished from the heathens; and if so bad in the first century, we can not suppose it to have been any better in the second; undoubtedly it grew worse and worse."—Sermon 66. Again in this same sermon on Mystery of Iniquity, Mr. Wesley says: "When James wrote his epistle, the tares had produced a plentiful harvest. (See chapters 2, 3, 4, and 5.) There was envy, strife, confusion, and every evil work; whoso reads with attention, will be inclined to believe that the tares had well-nigh choked the wheat, even at this early period, and that among most of them, no more than the form of godliness (if so much) was left."

These utterances of Mr. Wesley are in line and in harmony with the teaching of the New Testament, as we have just seen, and clearly show us what the condition of the church was, when it was "left" by both Christ and his apostles; full of corruption and wickedness, its members "turned heathens again," and "only a dead form left." The church had not all reached this condition at the end of the first century, when the New Testament was finished, that is, when the last books we have in the New Testament were written and given to the church. O no, not so bad as that; there were still apostles in the church, then, and the church still received direct communication from heaven, had angelic ministrations, and was shown what was coming to pass in the future, hence had prophets. John, who wrote the book of Revelation, was an apostle and a prophet; some parts of that book are direct revelations from God to the churches in Asia; some parts of it are prophetic, pointing out what shall come to pass even down to the end of time; and it was nearly all given to John by an angel. No, neither Christ nor his apostles had "left" the church, at that time; even though it was in a much worse condition than it was from A. D. 33 to A. D. 35. Neither are those ministers willing to affirm that the church which they represent is like the church of Christ, even at that late date. No, if it were, they would have to have some one in their church, an apostle, to receive the word of the Lord for them, direct from heaven, as John did for the churches in Asia at that time; some one through whom the Lord could speak and reprove them, and warn them, as he reprov'd and warned those churches in Asia, through the Apostle John. No, their church is like the church was when Christ and his apostles "left" it; not like the church was when Christ and his apostles were in it. There was too much God in that church, even at the end of the first century, to suit those ministers.

But Paul said, in his day, that "the mystery of iniquity doth already work," just as we have seen it did work in most all the churches; and it continued to work, more and more, until those who bore the name Christians had "turned heathens again." The apostles and other inspired men in the church all died, or were killed; the gifts of tongues, prophecy, healing, and revelation continued to decrease until they finally ceased altogether; wickedness reigned on every hand and the church ceased to respect and follow the teachings of the lowly Nazarene; they heaped to themselves teachers, instead of waiting for the Lord to call by revelation, as he did in the infant church, and those teachers taught for doctrine the precepts of men; and finally, when the church became so corrupt that it was an unholy temple, Christ "left" it, taking with him his apostles, and also all authority and power to officiate in his name. Then there was no gift of tongues left in the church, no prophecy, no healing the sick, no making the blind to see and the lame to walk, no commanding unclean spirits in the name of Jesus and compelling them to leave earthly or human tabernacles; no laying on of hands for the Holy Spirit, no direct revelation from God, and no angels visiting and delivering men from prison and telling them where to go and labor for the Lord; the members of the church no longer had all things common, they no longer gave to every man as he had need, they were no longer of one heart and of one soul, they are no longer all filled with the Holy Ghost, and the ministers no longer spake the word of God with boldness, and with great power testified and bore witness to the resurrection of Christ.

We are told that all these "childish things" have been "put away" by this finished, completed, "perfected" church, and that it is no longer an infant church, now, but is full grown and able to stand and walk alone. Well, if this is now a "perfected" church, after being stripped of the gifts, the glory, the blessings, the authority, and the power of God, which had been placed in it by our Savior, then I shall continue to pray for the Lord to deliver me from a "perfected" church. The infant church, with all the gifts and powers, all the authority and ordinances, all the light and inspiration, of the Holy Spirit, and all the angelic ministrations and guidance, which were given to it just after its birth, is good enough for me. These may be "childish things," but, as we are commanded to "repent and become as little children," we shall certainly need all such "childish things" in our conflict with sin and its author. The "childish things" of God are far above the wisdom and power of man; just as "the foolishness of God is wiser than men; and the weakness of God is stronger than men."

Jesus said: "I will build my church."—Matthew 16:18. Paul said: "And now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it has pleased him."—1 Corinthians 12:18. "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues."—1 Corinthians 12:28. These were all "set" in the infant church, as we have already seen. And, if this church is imperfect, incomplete, and unfinished, it is certainly not imperfect in its organization and in its workings; these are perfect.

Were the apostles, then, put in the church to finish, complete, perfect the building of the church, the house of God? No, they were put in the church to help perfect the saints, work in the ministry, and edify the body of Christ. Paul said: "I have planted, Apollos watered: but God gave the increase."—1 Corinthians 3:6. The apostles, and other ministers, could plant and water—work in the ministry—but the Lord himself is the builder; he gives the increase. Hence it is that “the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved” (Acts 2:47), and “translated us into the kingdom of his dear son” (Colossians 1:13). It was the Lord who “gave the increase,” “added to the church,” and “translated us into the kingdom;” hence the Lord was the builder and the finisher of his church: “I will build my church.” And Peter says of those so called out and added to the church: “Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house.”—1 Peter 2:5. Every member in the church of Christ is, or should be, a lively stone; and the Lord continues to add those “lively stones” to the building so long as he is recognized as the builder; and, as he continues to add “lively stones” to the building, he continues to “build up a spiritual house,” his church. Hence the church never was “perfected,” finished, completed; never will be and never can be until he shall “gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in him.” (Ephesians 1:10.)

Of course the organization and the law of the church were perfect, and so may the body of an infant be perfectly organized; but the church as a building, as “the house of God,” was not perfected and finished, neither will it be nor can it be until the builder, Christ, has placed the last “lively stone” in this building in its proper place. But when Christ shall have placed the last “lively stone” in the “spiritual house” in its proper place, and shall have gathered together “in one, all things in Christ,” then the church will be “perfected,” the building completed, finished. And then Christ will cease to build, and will turn the kingdom over to other hands; then “he shall deliver up the kingdom to God, even the Father.” (1 Corinthians 15:24.)

But the church which was established by our Savior was never “perfected,” finished, completed, by his apostles. The church of Christ is not finished, completed yet; he is still building, still adding to the church such as shall be saved. He used living apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers, to plant, water, and work in the ministry, then, and he uses the same now. The law of the church was perfect; its organization, ordinances, faith, and doctrine, were perfect when it was born; it needed no perfecting, along these lines. The law of his church is perfect now; but “the house of God” is not yet finished, not yet completed. Jesus said: “Upon this rock I will build my church.” He began to build it, and he will finish and complete it—perfect it.

But when his church is “perfected,” it will be a very different church from the one which was left by the apostles of Christ at their death; it will be “a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing.” There will be no contentions, envy-ings, strifes, divisions, wars, fightings, lusts, fornication, doctrine of Baalam, doctrine of the Nicolaitans, etc., in the church of Christ when it becomes “perfected;” finished, completed. All of the above abominations, and many others, as we have just learned, were in the church as it was left by the apostles of Christ at their death.

So I say again: I believe that Christ himself “left” the church, and that he took from the church all that he had placed in it, such as apostles, prophets, the gift of healing, power to cast out devils, angelic ministrations, heavenly visions, tongues, interpretations of tongues, direct inspiration, etc.; but it was because they would “not endure sound doctrine;” because they rebelled against the Lord and his goodness, and because they heaped to themselves teachers who turned away their ears from the truth and turned them unto fables and doctrines of men. It reminds one of the following: “But Jeshurun waxed fat, and kicked: thou art waxen fat, thou art grown thick, thou art covered with fatness; then he forsook God which made him, and lightly esteemed the rock of his salvation. . . . Of the rock that begat thee thou art unmindful, and hast forgotten God that formed thee. And when the Lord saw it, he abhorred them, because of the provoking of his sons, and of his daughters. And he said, I will hide my face from them, I will see what their end shall be: for they are a very froward generation, children in whom is no faith.”—Deuteronomy 32:15–20.

So it was with Israel, and so it was with the church; and, as the Lord abhorred Israel and hid his face from them, so he abhorred the church and hid his face from it, when it forgot the Lord “that formed thee,” and “lightly esteemed the Rock of his salvation.” And the man who goes about teaching the people that the church of Christ, in its organization, ordinances, teaching, faith, and doctrine, from A. D. 33 to A. D. 35, was imperfect and incomplete, and that it was perfected and completed at the death of the apostles, in its organization, ordinances, teaching, faith, and doctrine, has strange ideas of perfection and completeness, to say the least.

The church, while its members are “all of one heart and of one soul,” is incomplete and imperfect; but the same church, when it has contentions, strifes, and divisions in it, is completed and perfected!

The church, while its members were “all filled with the Holy Ghost,” was incomplete and imperfect; but the same church, when some of its members have “left thy first love,” “some have not the knowledge of God,” some are “lukewarm,” some are “dead,” and others “ready to die,” is completed and perfected!

The church of Christ, while it “continued steadfast in the apostles’ doctrine and fellowship,” was incomplete and imperfect; but the same church when some of its members “hold the doctrine of Baalam,” some “hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans,” and others hold that you "must be circumcised and keep the law of Moses," is completed and perfected!

The church of Christ, while they "had all things common," when they divided to every man "as he had need," there was not "any among them that lacked," and when "neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own," was incomplete and imperfect; but that same church, when "brother goeth to law with brother," when "ye do wrong and defraud, and that your brethren," when "ye despise the poor," and when "ye kill and desire to have . . . that ye may consume it upon your lusts," is completed and perfected!

The church of Christ, while its members were able "to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance," and, in languages which they had never learned, declare "the wonderful works of God," was incomplete and imperfect; but that same church, when the power to speak "the wonderful works of God" with other tongues, "as the Spirit gave them utterance," is taken from it, is completed and perfected!

The church of Christ, while it had the power within it to heal the sick, make the lame to walk, the deaf to hear, and the blind to see, is incomplete and imperfect; but the same church, when that power is taken from it, is completed and perfected!

The church of Christ, while it had authority and power to command and compel devils and unclean spirits to leave those who were being vexed and tormented by them, was incomplete and imperfect; but that same church, when that authority and power were taken from it, was completed and perfected!

The church of Christ, when its ministers were "full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom," "full of the Holy Ghost and power," and when they were inspired by the Holy Spirit was incomplete and imperfect; but that same church, when its ministers had no Holy Spirit only what they received "through the word," and when they had to teach their opinion and their understanding of what those inspired apostles had written, was completed and perfected!

The church of Christ, while its leading ministers had authority to lay on hands for the bestowal of the Holy Spirit upon those who had been baptized, and also for the healing of the sick, was incomplete and imperfect; but that same church, when all those holding that authority, and the authority itself, were taken out of it, is completed and perfected!

O no, reader, that can not be true. The Lord's idea of a completed and perfected church is altogether different from that. When the Lord established his church, he organized it, and he organized it perfectly, too; it needed no changes. He gave to his church a perfect law, a perfect system of faith, a perfect doctrine, and perfect ordinances; these needed no changes, either. And that church was in better condition in its infancy, while "they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship," while "they were all filled with the Holy Ghost," and while they were "all of one heart and of one soul," than it ever was at any subsequent time in its history. And it was in better condition simply because it was more nearly in harmony with that perfect law which the Lord gave it; because "they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine," the doctrine of Christ.

I would to God that the church of Christ was in that same condition to-day: "all of one heart and of one soul," and "all filled with the Holy Ghost." Yes, reader, when men and women sincerely "repent and become as little children," they will admire and love that infant church, with all its "childish things."

POSITIVE RELIGION.—REFLECTIONS BY ONE OF THE LAITY.

In the immediate past there has been a great deal of discussion indulged in by the ministry on various topics, and we thought that it might be fitting and proper that a few remarks from the laity should also be forthcoming. Much has already been advanced regarding who was president of the church in the time of the apostles, also whether the Holy Spirit is a personage or an influence. Do not begin to think that you are going to read of a new theory, or of some additional evidence on the subjects; O no! we would simply present the query: What material difference does it make to the HERALD readers, which of the theories is right? One brother suggested a short time since that the disputants get together and decide between themselves which is correct, and give the HERALD readers the benefit of their decision; but we wish to say with all due respect for the brethren, that they certainly might devote their time and energy to a more useful purpose than in trying to convince one another of something that is not entirely clear from what accounts have been handed down to us. If it were a doctrinal point in question, one affecting their procedure as ministers, it would be very well to be agreed upon it; if unable to decide themselves, an appeal could be made to the Presidency, and, in case the Presidency had no light upon the subject, it could be left alone until the Lord reveals his will concerning it. In all events it is highly essential for God's people to be one and the sooner that such contentions cease, the sooner the possibility of such oneness will be reached. We sincerely hope that the brethren will devote their abilities in the promotion of the welfare of Zion that she may be more fully established and prepared to meet the conditions that are awaiting her.

It is also apparent that an organized crusade is being made upon secret societies, and while we do not wish to take up their defense, it occurs to us that those who are engaged in this warfare against them have overlooked one of the fundamental laws of self-preservation. When our Disciple friends some time ago organized the anti-Mormon society, we must confess that we felt a little uneasy, thinking that perhaps their united efforts would have a bad effect upon us; but as time has gone on since their organization we have failed to note any serious effects at least. What is it that develops the muscles of the blacksmith or the athlete? Resistance; and as with men so with the associations of men; give them opposition and the natural sequence is, resistance and the attendant developments.

Our "anti" friends also evidently overlooked this principle when they thought that by organization they could more easily accomplish our downfall; their attack upon us only enables us to be better prepared to resist those who oppose us.

Permit us here to state a thought regarding debate. Whenever the cause might be injured by unjust assaults upon it, it may be very well to stand ready to defend it in discussion, but it appears to us that even some of our ministers get into the course pursued by our Disciple opponents,—that of going around with a chip on the shoulder, seeking an encounter. In his reply to the committee representing the anti-secret society organization, Bro. G. H. Hulmes very aptly says that it is of paramount importance to reach the ears of all people with the restored gospel, respectfully declining to engage in partisan warfare, or inviting enmity whereby the gospel message may be hindered from at least a hearing by all. And why should it not be first of all important to preach the gospel from a positive standpoint, seeing that the negative law was nullified or rather superceded by the gospel of Christ?

Why should we go about waging warfare against something without either necessity or command to impel us? Why not use the time, money, and energy spent in this onslaught, in disseminating the gospel of peace? and as advanced by Bro. Hulmes in his reply, allow "its acceptance to lead men and women in the narrow way of God's righteousness, thereby enabling them to avoid evil in every form." A little pamphlet entitled "Secret Societies" came to our notice, and while, as we have before stated, we wish to avoid contention, yet there is one statement therein that deserves a passing notice at least. That is the statement that when he saw members of the Church wearing charms, rings, buttons, pins, badges, etc., he lost confidence in them. Regarding this statement, not arguing either for or against the practice of wearing these emblems, we simply say that it seems like using a rigorous criterion to apply to one's fidelity. Would it not be more charitable to determine whether a brother was worthy of confidence or not by his conduct, if he kept the rules of the kingdom of God, demonstrating in his walk as well as by his conversation that he really believed what he professed? It is just possible that some of those who antagonize secret societies may have omitted some small duty of their own toward God and their brethren, so may we be careful in ascertaining that our own vision is unobscured before we try to pull out the mote from our brother's eye.

We know brethren who are poor in this world's goods, yet rich in faith toward God and in love for their fellow men, keeping the law of God as best they know how, and who unite with some fraternal and beneficiary society for the sake of the protection it affords their families in case death or disability should overtake them. Some tell us that the Church will, in such case, take care of your families; but how can the Church do it so long as so many of its members fail to keep the law concerning tithing and consecration? It has been our painful lot to see Saints become public wards and inmates of the poorhouse, and why? The Lord says there is enough and to spare, for each one upon the earth. Does it not then become the ministers and all interested in the upbuilding of Zion, to lay aside all that which will hinder the progress of this glorious cause? Whenever the time shall come that all the Saints are living according to the law of the celestial kingdom, there will be no occasion for these petty contentions about which we have briefly referred; neither any necessity for church members to seek outside of the Church for pecuniary protection in case of death or disability. May we not strengthen secret societies by our opposing them, but rather let us labor so wisely and well for the upbuilding of Zion that we shall be able to present to the world something far superior to what they now have, and the result, to our mind, will be far greater than by pursuing the plan of antagonism toward them. It is of prime importance for us, as a religious body, to present to the world a better and a higher standard than they already have, and if we do not succeed in doing so, it is because we have failed to understand or have neglected to put into practice the gospel plan as revealed to us; for the practical application in our lives of the gospel of Jesus Christ will certainly make us what we should be, a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Let us heed the command to learn each our duty and do it, leaving the consequence with God.

WHO SHALL BE SAVED?

Then said one unto him, Lord, are there few that be saved?
—Luke 13: 23.

To view the question of salvation from the human point of view and from the divine standpoint might be suggestive of apparently conflicting opinions.

There can be no question but that to be saved is the universal desire of the race, consequently universal salvation is an idea easy to obtain; but while this is true in its general application, yet those individuals who are so earnestly advocating that philosophy, were they permitted to exercise the power to save to the fullest extent, would no doubt be among the first to discover that full and indiscriminate salvation would be altogether impracticable, and this discovery would force them to a change of opinion and, we believe, to the adoption of that view of the question as represented from the divine standpoint.

To properly consider and discuss the question of salvation it is necessary first that we thoroughly understand what salvation is, and if salvation is of God, then there can be no better source to go to that we may obtain this understanding than to the word of God; hence we turn to his word, the Bible.

We believe it is apparent to the unbiased Bible student that there runs through the Old Testament a vein of revealed truth which in every point of doctrine corresponds with the gospel as taught and practiced by the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ when he walked and talked with men here on earth, and while it is apparent and equally true that from time to time there were certain laws enacted necessary for the control and government of humanity, yet it is also apparent that these laws were to a certain extent only temporary laws, enacted to meet temporary conditions, and only designed by the great lawgiver to remain in force while these conditions lasted and then to pass out by the law of limitation. This was true of the Mosaic covenant, of which the Apostle Paul says: "It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made;" and in reference to this promise he says it was made or given to Abraham four hundred and thirty years before the Mosaic covenant or law was enacted; and when we turn back to the account given of that promise or covenant made with Abraham, we learn that God said to him: "And I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee." Paul says of this covenant: "And it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator."

This leads us to the conclusion that this Abrahamic covenant could have been none other than the gospel covenant, for that alone was the only everlasting covenant that God ever made, and Jesus Christ was only the "Mediator" of the gospel covenant and it was indeed ordained by angels.

Peter is on record as having said in Acts 4:12 as follows: "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."

When we put these statements together and attach their full value to each of them as we believe we should, we believe we can again affirm that we see this vein of revealed truth running through the Old Testament which in every particular corresponds with the gospel as being the one and only law which

God ever gave as the means of salvation for mankind, and that this law is the "perfect law of the Lord which will convert the soul," which if obeyed will bring perfection to its subjects and fit them to enjoy salvation in its highest and most complete sense; hence we believe it is apparent in the Bible from Genesis to Revelation that this vein of revealed truth represents the gospel of God, represented on earth by Jesus Christ, which must be taught, believed, obeyed, and lived to the end of the earth-life to secure salvation in its highest, fullest, and most complete sense.

The question used as a text or heading to this article suggests the thought that he who asked had by some means become possessed of the idea that but few would be saved, and it is evident that he had obtained the idea from the teachings of the Master, and when we consider some things which he said and compare, or rather contrast, them with the human character as we see it manifest to-day, (and we consider his character a fair type of the human character in any age of the world, for his natural character has changed little if any in the passing years,) then we believe that Jesus understood and taught it would be comparatively few that would attain to those exalted spiritual conditions that would to them assure salvation in its fullest and complete sense of that term.

Jesus says: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven: but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." And again: "Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." And again he says: "Fear not, little flock: for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Shall we say that all these expressions are ambiguous, or meaningless? If not, then we must accept them and accredit to them the significance which they carry with them, which is to the effect that the word distinctly teaches a special salvation to the few who by their faith in, and their obedience to, a special law, secure this salvation.

This view of the situation places man before us in what we believe to be his true character, i. e., that of an independent being so far as the exercise of his powers of choice are concerned, makes him his own agent and to a certain extent responsible, to himself and for himself. We do not understand that this view of the matter in any way detracts from the power or majesty of God, but on the other hand is only another evidence of his superior wisdom in bestowing upon man his free agency and to a certain extent entering into a partnership with him, in that he enacts the law and sets it before the man and then gives him the right and power of choice and says, Accept and live, or reject and suffer the consequences.

We hold that this method of dealing is apparent in all the past history of God's doings with the human family, and if that history is at all reliable it proves to us that in the past it has been but a comparatively small number that have fully accepted and obeyed the commands of God. Some wise man has said: "By the past and present we may to a certain extent forecast the future," hence we would conclude that, with this history of the past before us and these present existing conditions as they are so apparent in the world to-day, so far as obedience to the commands of God are concerned, it will indeed be few that will be saved.

It is not, however, compatible with the Bible representation of God, who is a God of love, a God of mercy, and a God of justice, to believe that because the entire human family does not comply with all of his commands, or in other words does not obey the gospel law in every particular, it will be wholly and eternally lost. This idea is repulsive to the human idea of justice and mercy and would nearly border on the other extreme and come quite near the idea of universal damnation. A perfect God must have a perfect understanding of all conditions and the needs of all creatures, and if he enacts any law that law must necessarily be perfect, and if so it follows as a natural sequence that law would fit all men and all conditions. This we believe is apparent in the revelations of God as found in his word and that his mercy and justice are so far-reaching that they provide for every condition of human life, and yet with the one great motive in view: the salvation of the race in that condition which by acceptance and obedience to his laws, either in whole or in part, it has earned.

This view of the question puts the gospel before us as the "power of God unto salvation" indeed, and as the only supreme law by which salvation is to be secured and seems to be the only explanation necessary as to why the Savior went and preached to the spirits in prison; for Jesus had said, "My words shall judge you at the last day," and even human wisdom and justice would revolt at the idea of judging and condemning by words, or a law they had never had an opportunity to hear. But because men hear it does not follow that they will always accept, or obey, even though it be in the spirit life or in the prison-house, but can and will a just God judge and condemn (damn) men who have done good in the earth-life, just because they have not accepted and obeyed in the fullest sense the gospel? It is evident that the Savior did not so understand it, else he would not have said, "Agree with thine adversary quickly while thou art in the way with him; lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison." "Verily I say unto thee, Thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing." And again: "And whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward." These texts it would seem were sufficient to establish the fact that Jesus full well understood the nature of justice and that its demands would reward every good deed.

If more were necessary on this subject we think it may be found in the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, beginning at the thirty-first verse: "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." It is evident that this language refers to the last and general resurrection, and corresponds to Revelation 20:12, when the dead small and great stand before God and the books are opened and every man is judged out of the books according to his works.

By many in the world to-day it is represented that those who are here called "sheep" are Christians and those who have obeyed the gospel and are thus entitled to their reward; but a careful reading and a comparison with other sayings of Christ will lead us to other conclusions.

As we continue our reading in this story we see that Jesus does not say to them they are blessed because they have kept his commands, but they are blessed because they have done good unto his brethren, not because they are brethren. In this story we see three classes, the sheep, the goats, and his brethren, and again we notice that those whom the Savior calls "sheep" are surprised when they learn that they had earned any reward, and they say, "Lord, when saw we thee an hungered and fed thee? or thirsty and gave thee drink?" From these questions it would appear that these had been taught that they were entitled to no reward whatever, but were doomed to eternal damnation.

Again we notice the nature of the reward that they had gained: "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." We have emphasized these last words to call special attention to them and now let us compare them with the words of Christ to his disciples as recorded in John 14:2: "In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." Again we have emphasized the words we wish you to contrast with the ones above and we believe you will see that it is apparent that the "many mansions" correspond with the "kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world" which was the reward gained by doing good to our fellow men, while the place that Jesus was going to prepare was the special salvation he was going to give to his disciples, and it is apparent from the Bible standpoint that this salvation is that which is represented as being saved in the full sense of the term, and no doubt was that to which the questioner referred when he asked: "Lord, are there few that be saved?"

There is an inherent principle in man that naturally seeks the best, and why should not this principle assert itself in this matter of salvation as well as along all other lines of human action? We believe it should. And when we consider the matter aright we think we should be able to see that in the same ratio that we understand our duty, in that ratio responsibilities are placed upon each individual one of us; so then let us as saints of God be among the few, and not among the sleeping virgins, but with oil in our lamps and with them trimmed and burning let us be ready when the Bridegroom cometh, that we may enter in to the marriage supper.

HIGH-SPEED TRAINS.

In a recent issue one of our esteemed engineering contemporaries took occasion, in noting the successful attempts made in Germany to run cars over a special road at speeds exceeding one hundred miles an hour, to make a few well-considered remarks upon the desirability and practicability of running trains at such high speeds under ordinary conditions.

ARE FAST TRAINS DESIRED?

The question was asked, Who would care to travel at such speeds? The answer to this can only be found by an actual trial, but one can not help thinking that there is a large number of travelers who would be attracted by very fast trains. In addition to the time saved, there is keen enjoyment in fast traveling. However, few passengers board a train for the pleasure of riding. They always want to go somewhere, and, in general, the sooner they get there the better. Therefore, the faster the train, the better are they pleased. It is not to be expected that high-speed trains will be put in service unless they can be operated with safety and comfort; but if high-speed operation can be shown to be safe, we do not think that the railroads will have difficulty in securing passengers.

FAST RUNNING BRINGS SIGNALING TROUBLES.

Our contemporary also points out how difficult it will be to operate a road over which trains are run at one hundred miles an hour by the block signal system, and the sensible conclusion is reached that such trains can only be run over a track built for them alone. It is said that a mechanical signal can not be worked satisfactorily with a greater length of wire than two thousand feet. With the present train speeds it is not uncommon to place the distant signal twenty-five hundred feet back of the home, and, therefore, for trains running at one hundred miles an hour, the distant signal ought to be at least seventy-five hundred feet back, because the power stored in a railway train varies as the square of the speed, and all of this must be absorbed by the brakes to stop the train. The difficulty of operating a mechanical signal at this distance can, of course, be overcome by using some other system. An electrical signal can be operated at a distance of seventy-five hundred feet as easily as at a distance of seventy-five.

Another trouble with such high speeds will be in giving an engineer a signal which can not be misunderstood. With a train running at one hundred miles an hour and a signal that can be seen one thousand feet away, the engineer has less than seven seconds to verify the reading of the signal. If the signal, due to weather conditions, or otherwise, can not be seen for more than two hundred feet, the engine runner would have just one and one half seconds to decide whether his train was dashing to safety or destruction. Can not this difficulty be overcome by installing these signals, not singly, but in duplicate or triplicate a proper distance apart? There would be no more difficulty in operating three signals placed, say five hundred feet apart, electrically from a station seventy-five hundred feet away from the nearest one, than to operate one. Moreover, a number of engineers are working on automatic signal systems which will, in addition to the signal on the side of the road, operate a signal within the engine cab. A system of this kind would overcome all signaling difficulties.

HIGH-SPEED ROADS NOT IMPROBABLE.

It is hardly possible that sustained speeds of one hundred miles and more will be common for some years, but it would be unwise to predict that such speeds are not practical. In addition to the special track, a high-speed line should be completely fenced in and there should be no grade crossings either of other lines or wagon roads.—Electrical Review, October 31, 1903.

Fancy the effect of one of the venerable giant-cedars of Lebanon beside the obelisk in Central Park! Professor Sargent, of Boston, some years ago sent a man up into the wilds of the Cilician Taurus, a region where this beautiful tree grows wild. Seeds were secured at the most northern station, and a thrifty lot of seedlings are now growing in New England that promise to be perfectly hardy.

MOTHER'S MISTAKES—EXCLUDING THE FATHERS.

"Good-bye, and a good time, and don't worry about the baby. I'll take care of him all right."

Mrs. Hammond sitting at an open window rocking her little daughter to sleep, heard the words in a cheerful, hearty voice and the reply in a happy one, and knew that her young neighbor, Mrs. Graham, was going out with several friends, leaving her husband in charge of the household and nursery.

"Well, I never could do that," sighed Mrs. Hammond to herself, "much as I often feel the need of a rest and change. I just couldn't trust a man with a baby of mine. But then," she added rather bitterly, "there's no danger of my husband offering to do such a thing. I don't believe he ever once thinks how long it's been since I saw the inside of a church or went to a party or entertainment of any kind. It seems so strange how a man will insist on taking his sweetheart to everything that's going on, then when she's his wife let her sit at home day in and day out, when he knows she's fond of such things. Of course a woman with a family can not expect to go about like a young girl, but just once in a while it would be such a rest. Now Mrs. Graham will come home all fresh and bright, while I—I'm getting to look and act and feel like an old woman, always too tired to talk even if I had a chance to know anything new to talk about. How good it would seem to have Harry speak to me like that—there's hardly ever time for him to speak to me at all. He's in such a hurry at the morning and noon meals and I am so busy with the children; then in the evening after I have gotten them all cared for and put to bed, I am so used up and so much of the evening is gone it doesn't seem worth while for me to go downstairs any more, so he sits there alone or goes back down town. It does seem too bad when I remember what our evenings used to be before the children came between us—such music, reading, and nice long talks we had together; it doesn't seem that he is hardly like the same Harry who was always bringing home flowers, new music, and books, and always interested in what I did and said, never failing to notice and admire anything pretty I wore or new way I dressed my hair—oh dear, dear—yet," she interrupted her unhappy musings, "he certainly is not what could be called a bad husband. He is sober, upright, industrious, pure, and true as any man could be, only—I so miss the attentions; of course I haven't given him opportunity, and surely little to notice or praise in my appearance. I've so forgotten it myself that no wonder he should. I suppose if I took the time to array myself in a really nice gown once more he would have to notice it for very astonishment."

Then the subject appeared to her in a new light, from what must be her husband's viewpoints:

"I wonder," she thought, "if he has missed me from what I was as I have him out of what he has become."

A sudden resolution to put it to the test took possession of her. Gently she laid her little one in her cot, went into her dressing-room, turned up the gas, and in eager haste rearranged her hair, and put on a becoming gown.

As she crossed the hall a glimpse of her husband in the library brought her a new sense of his loneliness, for in their separation she had had the live, warm, responsive love of their little children, while he was thus night after night surrounded by inanimate objects; and the way his paper went down and his hands went out to her when he saw her left no doubt as to whether he had missed and wanted her, even before he said a word; but when in the talk they now had she realized for the first time how he felt the exclusion from her life and from any part in that of their children, which might have been a compensation to him for his sacrifice.

"It has almost made me feel sometimes," he confessed, "that I could not love my children as I should, because they have taken so much out of my life and brought nothing into it. I have wished I could share the burden and the pleasure of their care with you. I suppose I was clumsy in the first few efforts I made. I believe I might have learned to be useful—it seems to me even mothers only learn to do things deftly by doing them constantly. I've watched you holding and fondling our babies and longed to hold them in my arms, but you cautioned and protested so at every attempt it made me feel like a bear in a china shop; so I desisted, and when you're not allowed to have anything to do with them at first, there doesn't seem to be a way to begin later. Some men may like to have their children kept out of their way, almost out of their sight, as mine have been, but it always makes me feel like those animal fathers that have to be excluded from their young because they eat them! I do not wish to reproach you, but—"

"But I reproach myself!" exclaimed his wife. "It has been my fault. I never before thought how it might seem to you. But you shall never again be made to feel like that."

Still another view of the matter was presented to Mrs. Hammond that showed her the injustice to her children, as well as to her husband, of her course of conduct and greatly helped her in keeping her promise to change it. This was the account given her a few days later by a friend of hers, Mrs. Baldwin, concerning an acquaintance of theirs, Mrs. Paul, who had recently died.

"She just wore herself out," declared the narrator, "killed herself just as surely by overworking and neglecting herself as if she had taken something purposely to commit suicide, because there wasn't any real need of it. Her husband was quite able and would have been willing and glad to hire plenty of help, and assist her himself, but she had an idea that nobody else could attend properly to her house or her children, and took everything upon herself and did so much, too, that was really unnecessary, she was so fastidious and particular. Few women of our day could endure the strain—even if they are strong to begin with, which she wasn't—of bearing and nursing four children as near together as hers were, and do all that she did, and not lose their health. Even after hers broke quite seriously she wouldn't give up as long as she could drag about, saying nothing of her condition and doing nothing for herself until it was too late.

"The apparent suddenness of her illness and death," continued Mrs. Baldwin, "was what made it such a terrible shock to her husband and loss to her children. I met Mr. Paul yesterday, and it is too pitiful how he blames himself for not knowing and doing more for her and preventing her from doing so much. He said he felt so helpless with the children, because he had never been allowed to do anything for them and that it takes him and two or three servants to do what she had done alone, and then they can't nearly make the little things as comfortable as she always made them, let alone comfort or console them in the least. It's just breaking their poor father's heart to hear them keep crying, 'I want mamma,' 'I want my own mamma.'

"I tell you," Mrs. Baldwin continued, "no woman has a right to center her children's affections all in herself. It isn't fair to them or to their father or herself.

"No one more than a mother needs fresh air and ideas,—physical and spiritual, bracing and uplifting—and she had better leave her children long enough for the renewal of her energies than altogether. It's good for the father and children to be left to learn their relations to each other. A father must be allowed to make a place for himself in his children's affections or it is not to be expected that his counsels or corrections will have right effect. I've known mothers who never speak to their children of their fathers except to threaten them with punishment from him, nor to him of them except with complaints of bad behavior, which he is supposed to know how to improve without knowing his children. This is cruelly unjust.

"A mother should not be a barrier between her husband and children, but a link holding them together, and should allow them so to link her each to the other that the family may form a triangle, blessing all alike. To exclude the father is to weaken all family ties and lesson the mother's hold upon the children. She and they need his firm hand, strong will, and loving, sympathetic guidance and counsel. Sad indeed it is to lose them through death or enforced absence, but sadder still if it is through a mother's mistake."—Helen Raymond Wells, in Home Science Magazine.

Housekeeping Helps.

A good housekeeper is as proud of a neat and attractive kitchen as of a handsomely furnished parlor. To insure this system is as necessary as strength, for kitchen work is not drudgery unless you make it so. The woman who never has any dish-water hot, allows the rice-kettle to dry and the fire to go out when she needs it most, and does many things of that kind, makes the work much harder than it should be. Some housekeepers can find anything they want at a moment's notice, while others must make a search for the simplest article every time it is needed.

The arrangement of the shelves in the pantry and kitchen may have much to do with making the work easier. Things that are needed most should occupy the shelves that are easily reached, and all groceries put into boxes or cans that are plainly labeled. If all the materials for bread or cake baking are put close to the flour-bin it will save many a step.

A bracket lamp with a reflector that may be fastened to the wall or window-frame, costs only a few cents, and is much better than having to carry a lamp about. A clock that can be relied upon to give the correct time should occupy a conspicuous place. Hang a pair of scissors where you can be sure to have them when you need them.

Many kinds of provisions are cheaper when bought in quantities, and there is always a comfort in having a supply at hand. Soap may be bought by the box and the longer it is kept the better it will be. Starch will keep indefinitely. Borax is a very useful article, and a box of it should be found on the shelves of every kitchen or pantry. It is good for softening hard water, either for the toilet or laundry. Use it liberally about the kitchen sink and it will remove all disagreeable odors. A strong, hot solution of borax and water poured down the drain pipes purifies and disinfects them.

There are many tasks that may be performed while sitting down if one has an old office stool in the kitchen. If you have a high chair for which you have no further use the top may be sawed off, to make a stool of it. Paring vegetables, ironing and wiping dishes are not tiresome tasks when one sits down to do them.—Western Housekeeper.

The news of the war between Russia and Japan has been so voluminously reported, and with so many contradictions, that it is a relief to turn to the editorial statement which is presented in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for March, which, in graphic, discriminating style, carries the reader through the mass of reports and rumors and lands him safely in the few but intensely interesting facts. This record is copiously illustrated, and is supplemented by two descriptive articles on the men who are "doing things" for both Russia and Japan.

Library Work.

Dear Sunday-school workers:

Wishing to promote the interests of the library work, we have carefully considered the experiences of others, which, together with our own, convince us that system and uniformity of method,—for the conduct of the library work throughout the association,—are necessary to give strength and permanence to this important branch of Sunday-school work.

From three years' experience as librarian of what is now the Independence Stake, we have evolved a plan which we are pleased to call the "circulating library system"; and after a two years' test of its utility, we unhesitatingly recommend it to your favorable consideration.

The appended rules have been tested and found practicable here, and we believe, with a few minor changes, would meet the needs of any district. We call your attention to the circulating library rules, provided for the government of the district library work. These rules, under the management of a librarian imbued with the spirit of the work, and possessed of a good stock of patience, together with persistent effort, will produce the most gratifying results.

Kindly note rules 4 and 5 for upon these depend largely the success of the library work. Rule 4, which I assure you is feasible, provides a means for creating and maintaining a library fund, which is absolutely necessary. Rule 5, which is equally important, provides for a literature committee, composed of the district librarian and two other competent persons, whose duty it should be to select and purchase all library books used by the Sunday-schools belonging to the district.

A catalogue is in preparation, which, when completed, will be furnished the district librarians, from which the literature committee is expected to make its selections. But, in the absence of the catalogue, and to supply present demands, the General Librarian is prepared to furnish a list of carefully selected books with prices affixed. We also call your attention to the rules governing the local libraries, which we believe will meet the requirements of any well-regulated Sunday-school. The district librarian should furnish these to the local librarian.

Examine the quarterly report blank, by the use of which the district librarian can be kept informed of the condition of the local library work, which is of great importance. These blanks should be issued by the district librarian every three months.

And in conformity with section 10, of local library rules, we recommend the rules for the care and issuance of books to pupils. These rules should be pasted on the inside cover of every book belonging to the Sunday-school Association, and can be had of the general librarian.

We do not claim perfection for the plan we offer, nevertheless we invite a careful and impartial examination of its merits; and any suggestion or criticism you may feel led to offer, for its improvement will receive due consideration.

Do we fully realize the importance of the work intrusted to us; the seriousness of the situation that confronts us? Are you aware that tons of literature are annually distributed to the public of which we form a part? Every volume should undergo the closest scrutiny, for in much of it lurks the germs of immorality and its attendant evils, and even the practical things of life are invested with a glamour calculated to deceive, producing in the minds of the youth a spirit of discontent and unrest that is most pernicious in its results.

Now, to combat successfully this insidious foe, we must unite our forces, for in unity there is strength. There is a demand for literature among our young people and it is the imperative duty of those who have been made custodians of this important work to meet this demand by placing in their hands pure and instructive literature. Books that will develop the good and hence extirpate the evil that too often lies dormant in the heart.

It is true "God's people" of to-day are as they have ever been, "The poor of the earth," but need we be illiterate? Shall the "children of the kingdom," to whom the Master has said, "Read all good books," be slow to take advantage of the opportunities offered for intellectual culture? We hope not. We have national pride, we have family pride, and surely our love for that institution which has made it possible for us to become "heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ" will lead us to help one another.

By a concert of action among the schools belonging to districts, a library can be established in every school belonging to the Sunday-school Association.

And for its accomplishment we would recommend,—under the immediate supervision of the district librarian,—the circulating library plan, which if its rules are adhered to, will result in the consummation of that for which we are laboring. Praying that God may direct.
Your coworker,

GENERAL LIBRARIAN.

Thoughts on the Law.

LOOKOUT, Oklahoma, February 19, 1904.

Saints' Herald: As you are the medium through which we express our thoughts to each other, I have concluded to present a few thoughts on one line of our work.

In 1873 the Lord said, "It is not expedient in me that there shall be any stakes appointed until I command my people."

Again in 1901, he said, "My people are directed to establish two stakes."

Why was it not necessary in 1873? Evidently because the Church was unprepared to carry out the law, as it is required under stake organization. At that time there was not a sufficient number of men in any one locality competent to officiate in the offices necessary to compose a stake organization. And the Saints were not sufficiently educated in the law pertaining to temporal things to carry it out successfully. If the Lord gives a command, and that command is not obeyed, it brings the Church under condemnation. Hence he does not command anything to be done until there is ability to do the thing commanded. When the commandment came to organize two stakes, the material was at hand and they were organized. This carries with it the necessity of executing the law as required under stake organization; and for this purpose those stake officers were selected.

What is the law under stake organization?

In section 106, we have this: "Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion." The chief quorums of the Church have said that means the Presiding Bishop, and that must be correct, as he is the trustee for the Church and the only one that can legally hold and convey church property. Those men chosen to execute the law should necessarily be the first to comply with the law, hence all the bishops with their counsellors, the presidency and high council of each stake should at once comply with the law of consecration, or in other words turn over their surplus, which is substantially the same thing.

The council last spring decided that surplus was all a man could spare, or all above his legitimate needs, without injuring his business.

How shall this be determined?

By laying all things before the bishop, in Zion (section 72: 3) and having a full understanding with him.

How can we lay all things before the bishop?

By making a full and complete inventory of all our assets and liabilities together with the number and condition of our families or those dependent on us.

Should a stake or general church officer be sustained in his office if he fails or refuses to comply with this law?

We do not see how the Church can sustain a man in office without becoming responsible for the manner in which he is performing the duties of that office; hence to sustain a man who does not do his duty according to the law, is to sustain an unfaithful man; and the Lord says in section 64: 8: "And even the bishop, who is a judge, and his counselors, if they are not faithful in their stewardships, shall be condemned, and others shall be planted in their stead."

Does this apply to all bishops and their counselors?

I fail to find any exceptions in the law, therefore conclude that it does. If a bishop or his counselor does not do his duty as thus defined, and the Church does sustain him, will the Church be responsible and be condemned? If the Lord says an unfaithful steward shall be condemned and we fail to do that we certainly fail to do what the law says we shall do, and of necessity must be under condemnation.

Have all the bishops and their counselors complied with the law?

Ask the Presiding Bishop.

I should suppose they had, by their still remaining in their offices, some years having elapsed since they were chosen. A consistent man would not want to occupy an office, and not try to fill it honorably.

Has not each one the right to interpret the law for himself? No more than he has any other part of the law.

Is there danger of the Church being rejected, if they fail to keep this part of the law?

I should think so from this reading in Doctrine and Covenants 95: 3: "And I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall forsake all evil and cleave unto all good, that ye shall live by every word which proceedeth forth out of the mouth of God; for he will give unto the faithful, line upon line, precept upon precept; and I will try you, and prove you herewith." Again in Doctrine and Covenants 100: 2: "But inasmuch as they keep not my commandments, and hearken not to observe all my words, the kingdom of the world shall prevail against them, for they were set to be a light unto the world, and to be the saviors of men; and, inasmuch as they are not the saviors of men, they are as salt that has lost its savor, and is thenceforth good for nothing but to be cast out and trodden under the foot of men."

Inasmuch as the law of consecration and surplus is the word of God, we must observe it in Zion or her stakes or be rejected. And if those at the head of this department fail to call attention to it, they are unfaithful stewards. If those stake officers fail or refuse to teach or observe it, they are unfaithful in their stewardship and should be "removed and others planted in their stead." I now believe the best thing that can be done, and that which will result in the greatest good to the Church, is to put those stakes more fully in harmony with the law. Our work will not be effectual as it should be until this is done. These are some of my thoughts as one of the Bishopric.

"The Restoration First Preached in Indiana."

Editors Herald: Under the above caption I wish to present a few scraps of history touching the introduction of the "latter-day work," in the southern parts of Indiana, gleaned from those who seem to be partially familiar with the events as they occurred, which may be of some interest to the HERALD readers.

In 1842 "Hoit and Roberts" came to Indiana; preached at Mount Eden, meeting some opposition from the authorities of said Church. Moved their meetings to the residence of Mother Fanning and continued their meetings for some time. Then they left. And in the early part of 1843 they returned and commenced their meetings again at the home of Mother Fanning. Here they continued for some time and then moved on west to Nauvoo accompanied by Samuel Emmons, Thinneous Emmons and wife, and Mother Fanning, all of whom are said to have been baptized by Prophet Joseph at Nauvoo. Of Mother Fanning's blessing it is said that it was promised her that she should live to be quite old. It is well known she was far up in the nineties when she died.

Mother Fanning, after she returned from Nauvoo, let Bro. John A. Scott have P. Pratt's work and the Book of Mormon, and after a thorough investigation Bro. Scott became convinced of the renewal of the covenant to Joseph the Seer, and he was bold to vindicate these principles. Being identified with the Disciple Church, you may only imagine what an ordeal the brother passed through, but the effect was that of the tempest on the sturdy oak. The harder the tempest, the deeper it fastens its roots in the bowels of the earth.

So when Bro. W. W. Blair came in 1870 the seed sown germinated and developed into an organization on June 5, 1870, with fourteen members, which has reached as high as eighty members, now mostly scattered. But the work has spread out from Mount Eden, where it was first introduced, up and down Southern Indiana, and by the instrumentality of Brn. J. T. Scott, Regal, and others, the work has been planted in the city of Louisville, and the end is not yet.

Let me say that I have believed that God has raised up Nephews C. and S. W. L. Scott to vindicate the frequent insults and injuries that their father received from the so-called Christian Church. Be encouraged, brethren, they may shut their churches and schoolhouses against us, but that is the best argument they have.

Yours in Christ,

M. R. SCOTT, JR.

GALENA, Indiana.

RILEYVILLE, Virginia, February 19, 1904.

Dear Herald: I left Garland, Alabama, on December 10, 1903, enroute to New Orleans and Kentwood, Louisiana, on some business for Bishop Kelley. After tending to the business I came on to Fulton, Kentucky; spent a pleasant Christmas with Bro. G. W. McClain and family, but could hold none but prayer-meetings. Bad weather, bad roads, and the measles, prevented. I visited some with the Saints in different places, enjoyed talking on the work of God very much. Just before leaving Fulton three of Bro. McClain's family came down with the measles. They were very sick, but seemed to be getting along very well.

On January 8 I bade them good-bye and went to Louisville, where I spent ten days very profitably, felt well in visiting and preaching. Outsiders took care to stay away lest they hear and obey the truth. While in the city my home was with our faithful old Bro. Resch. I visited with a number of the Saints at their homes, all receiving me well. Brn. Metcalf and Kelley were getting ready for the debate at Brodhead, to begin on the twenty-fourth. I am informed through Bro. J. W. Metcalf that Mr. Davis, of the Christian Church, who was considered the champion of that part of Kentucky, backed square out and refused to meet his proposition as agreed upon.

On January 19 I left the city of Louisville for Old Virginia as previously arranged by the Presidency and myself. I arrived here on Saturday the twenty-third, being delayed by snow and stopping over one day and a night in Parkersburg, West Virginia, trying to secure clergy rates for the rest of my journey. In this I failed, so I had to pay full fare. My kinsfolk received me very kindly. We at once set about getting the Methodist church to preach in, but were refused. We then tried the Baptists and got theirs without any trouble. The weather was still cold and stormy, snowing and blowing in Western style. Sunday morning we made a fire and warmed up the church and at eleven o'clock in the forenoon we were greeted with a large turnout.

The writer occupied upwards of one hour with fine liberty and good attention. We occupied again at night with a larger crowd than before. I felt well in dealing out to them the good old Jerusalem gospel, and I scattered a large number of tracts which I hear are read with interest.

I have just returned from a trip above here where I have many relatives. They received me kindly and wanted me to preach. I secured the Advent church and occupied two evenings with good liberty but small crowds on account of the bad weather. Here I met a Roberts whose initials are the same as mine, though his name is not the same. He is an Advent preacher and seems to be a nice man. We had a chat on the differences between us and all passed off good-naturedly. I am billed to speak here Sunday night.

My health is not very good. About six years ago next March I had a severe spell of the grippe while at Bemidji, Minnesota. Since then I have been troubled with kidney trouble and a weak back. It is growing worse all the time and now seems worse than ever before. Otherwise I am well and enjoy the Spirit of the Master satisfactorily and hope to continue in his service.

I left the work in my mission in a fair condition considering the scarcity of workers. The first news I received after getting here was a letter stating that our worthy Sr. McClain, of Fulton, Kentucky, had passed away, pneumonia having set in with the measles. May God comfort the family is my prayer. With love to all, I am,

Yours in the faith,

I. N. ROBERTS.

WILBURTON, Indian Territory, February 4, 1904.

Saints' Herald: Another year has passed and gone and we are still permitted to gaze on the great wonder of time which adjusts all things and will finally bring the Garden of Eden back to us if we live for it.

At General Conference, last year, I was appointed to labor in the Indian Territory. So on the 25th of last April I started for my field of labor, preaching and opening up new places wherever I could get a chance. I preached during the year in the Choctaw, Creek, and Chicasaw Nations, and I am thankful to God for the success I had and the great liberty I enjoyed. At some of my meetings I would have from three to five hundred out, and sometimes it would look as though the whole crowd was ready to say amen to the gospel. I baptized twenty noble people, and among them were some full-blood Creek Indians. God sent angels to visit one Creek woman that she might be brought nearer to God, and angels are not altogether like us. They always do their work.

I believe the red man's time is close at hand and thousands will be taught by God's Spirit to sing the songs of Zion. There is a wonderful time about to dawn on this generation. I have seen it by God's Spirit for five years and it is closer than many of us anticipate. So let us get ready and do our work that God has called us to do. I never heard such a cry for preaching since I have been in the Church.

Eastern Texas and Indian Territory are ripe for the gospel; but where are the laborers? So let us so live and pray that God will call other laborers into the field, and let us strive to pay our tithing so the elders can go forth sounding their voice of warning to the nations of the earth, and let us not stop too long with a few Saints, but press on until the remotest part of earth has heard the angel's message. Ever praying for a great work this year and for the upbuilding of Zion,

Your brother in the work,

E. A. ERWIN.

INMAN, Nebraska, February 20, 1904.

Dear Herald: I believe it a truism that "It is more blessed to give than to receive," and as I have had so many good things from your precious pages, I feel that I should express my appreciation, if no more. And especially do I wish to speak of the pleasure derived from reading the letter of Sr. Emma Burton in your issue for the 17th inst.

Of course we who accept the revelations in regard to the setting in order the Church ought to be ready to recognize the importance of the work to be done by branch officers, those whose duties are to visit the house of each member exhorting them to pray vocally and in secret and to attend to all family duties and who are to "watch over the Church" and to "see that there is no iniquity in the Church neither hardness nor backbiting." Yet sometimes it would seem that there is on the part of some a lack of appreciation of the necessity of these officers and their work. But can we not see that in our own experiences when these officers have visited us in humility of spirit, there has accompanied their visit the spirit of peace, love, and fellowship? And have we not been strengthened and encouraged? I am glad of this testimony from those Saints on that far-off island, that God honors the official acts of the humblest of his chosen servants, when they go prayerfully and humbly about their "master's business." And should not these "lesser" officers everywhere take courage to move cheerfully forward to perform their part in this work that has been committed to us "all," so that the Church, the body of Christ, "may grow up in him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of its self in love."—Ephesians 4: 15, 16.

We are still battling for the right and often-times made to rejoice because of the help of the Master in presenting the truth. Saints are pushing forward, slowly it may be, but we trust surely toward the "mark of the high calling." However we think many need to quicken their pace lest they be left behind in the rapid march of events; for has it not been said it is the "hastening time"? I am home for a few days helping wife to take care of her sick mother, now eighty-six years old, who is suffering from an attack of grippe. Success to the workers in every department is my constant desire.

LEVI GAMET.

LEROY, Ohio, February 7, 1904.

Dear Herald: It is with a desire I may say something that will help some one of my brothers or sisters that I attempt to write these lines. From my heart I sang this morning, "My Savior, my Savior." I never will cease to love him, he's done so much for me. Do we always remember we are bought with a price, and that we should glorify God in our body and in our spirit which are God's? Are we caring for "our temple" as we should, making it a fit dwelling-place for the Holy Spirit? The spirit of God will not dwell in an unholy temple. What manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God! Should not our speech be pure, and we try to let our every-day life be blameless that our prayers may ascend to the throne of God as sweet incense, in behalf of the great work to be accomplished before our Savior will come again to earth? Why are people so prejudiced against us as a people, and not willing to investigate our claims? It is all so plain and so true. It behooves us to live our religion and let our life help others to see the light. The Spirit of God will not lead us astray and it will inspire us to do good not only to those who have done good to us but to those who have done otherwise.

My desire is to so live I may have the Spirit of God to direct me each day—to teach me his will. I anticipate a grand time this coming General Conference. It has been a long time since I heard a sermon preached by one of our elders, but I have enjoyed those in the HERALD. I feel lonely many times, but God is good, and I want to be patient and trust all my interests in his hands. I sometimes crave to live where I and my children could attend our church and Sabbath-school, and trust we may be remembered by our brothers and sisters. That God may bless each one of his children is the earnest prayer of your sister,

JENNIE A. HOLT.

ESCATAWPA, Mississippi, February 18, 1904.

Editors Herald: We have returned from conference with stronger desires to live nearer to our kind and heavenly Father. Bad weather and rain prevented large crowds, but the conference was enjoyed for the Spirit of God was present. The more I learn of this work the stronger my faith is in it, for if we live as we should, God manifests his love toward us in many ways.

Bro. W. R. Smith was present with us and his presence was much enjoyed and appreciated, as he preached twice during the conference, and had that peaceful influence with him that cometh from above. He is here in the Three Rivers Branch now, and thinks he will organize a Religio before he leaves. I think it is a grand study, and hope we will get started in before long. I want to learn more and more of the gospel every day, for the more we learn of it and the nearer we live to our kind Father the more our hearts rejoice and we become stronger in the faith. O how grand it is to be engaged in a work that will elevate and bring us to a higher and a better plane of life while here on earth, and give us an inheritance in that beautiful land that shall have no end. I have never found anything so grand as the gospel, for it brings peace and happiness that the world can not give. I only fear that I am not worthy of being called a Saint. I am glad that I am engaged in a work that is of God, for when the way seems dark we can go to him in humility and he will turn a listening ear to us and make our burdens light to bear.

When I come to examine myself and see how little I have done and that I have not lived up to the requirements of the gospel it causes my heart to throb with pain, for I know that I have been trampling on my own rights. I want to follow after the pattern that was sent for us to follow after, and I again ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints in our behalf that we may come out victorious in the end and sit down at the right hand of God.

Your sister in bonds,

HULDAH PORTER.

BARRYTON, Michigan, February 19, 1904.

Dear Herald Readers: We are only few in number. Some have moved away and some live too far away to attend meetings in such cold weather; but a few of the faithful ones are trying to live that the true gospel of Christ may be honored. Our Sunday-school is small, but all take on active part. We use the Quarterly, which is a great help and very instructive to both old and young; and we are raising money for a library. My heart has been in the Sunday-school work ever since we had one and I have always felt blessed in teaching a class and have tried to win the love and respect of my scholars, which I believe to be the duty of every teacher.

One young brother, Clyde C. Walrath, commenced to attend Sunday-school when seven years old, and three years ago he was baptized by my companion. This winter he was ordained to the office of priest and is now in Chicago taking shorthand and typewriting. He is with the Saints there and reports good meetings.

The Lord has blessed us here in many ways. Last September we had a good two-day meeting, and the Sunday-school gave an entertainment. The Saints are trying to do their duty in paying in their tithing which is a good sign; we must be Saints in deed as well as word. We bear our testimony that we love the Lord and that this work is true, but the Lord said, "If ye love me keep my commandments." We can not do this unless we pay our tithing that the work may be carried on and the needs of the ministry be supplied. May we all be found doing our duty. There are grand promises to those who have made a covenant to the Lord by sacrifice. Some are doing nobly in paying tithes and offerings and some are not paying any. Some are spending the best part of their lives in active work in the cause of truth, and there are the elders' wives, of whom we hear but little, who put in many years of lonely life in caring for their families as best they can.

Then why do all this? Is it for honor, wealth, or fame? No; not as the world gives, but the Lord looks on the heart and gives honor to whom honor is due and true righteousness is true riches. Then let us strive to build a true character. It is all we can take with us.

Before closing I will say the church papers are a great comfort to me.

In hope of eternal life,

MRS. J. R. BECKLEY.

Extracts from Letters.

Str. Rebecca Franklin, Cross, Texas, writes concerning conference of Central Texas District and reports a good time.

Str. Anna Culberson writes from Jamison, Nebraska: "I am quite sure this is the true gospel, and it is my desire to so live that I may be worthy of God's blessings."

Str. M. A. Ferguson, of Bellaire, Illinois, writes: "If my husband belonged to the Church what a pleasure it would be, but I do not get discouraged. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may always be a true Saint."

Warn Your Neighbor

Over seventy years ago the Lord commanded his people:

“And it becometh every man who hath been warned to warn his neighbor.”

Three years ago the subject of tract distribution was thought of sufficient importance to be again made the subject of divine revelation. Question:

HAVE YOU WARNED YOUR NEIGHBOR?

If you do not care to distribute tracts yourself, why not send in your contribution to the Presiding Bishop, E. L. Kelley, Lamoni, Iowa, and assist him in doing the work? The following are good tracts for general distribution:

35. THE OLD JERUSALEM GOSPEL RESTORED is a small twelve-page tract by Elder A. B. Phillips. It deals entirely with the foundation principles of the gospel. Price, 10 cents per dozen; 50 cents per hundred.

5. THE LATTER DAY SAINTS; WHO ARE THEY? is a twenty-page tract with neat colored cover by Elder T. W. Williams. It informs the reader as to the doctrines of the Church, and indicates the radical difference between this Church and the one in Utah calling themselves Latter Day Saints. Price, 20 cents per dozen; $1.50 per hundred.

209. THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST. There are many churches of men; only one church of Christ. Where is it? How shall I know it? This is an excellent eighteen-page tract by Elder William Lewis. It deals in a brief way with the principles of the gospel, the apostasy and restoration. Price, 20 cents per dozen; $1.50 per hundred.

301. THE APOSTASY AND THE RESTORATION is a twenty-page tract by Elder J. W. Rushton. It shows a complete apostasy from primitive Christianity and the necessity for a restoration instead of a reformation. Price, 20 cents per dozen; $1.50 per hundred.

302. WHY I BELIEVE THE BOOK OF MORMON is a sixteen-page tract with colored cover, by Elder H. O. Smith. It tells the story of a convert relating to his friend why he became a believer in this book. It is very convincing. Price, 20 cents per dozen; $1.50 per hundred.

He told his folks that he would not be here long and picked out a casket. A few hours before he died he sang, "Jesus, lover of my soul," and passed away with that assurance in his soul that he was accepted of Christ. Services held in the Saints' church in Magnolia, February 13, sermon by Elder W. A. Smith, assisted by Elder George Shearer. He was laid away in the Magnolia Cemetery where he had assisted his father as sexton, to await the resurrection of the just.

A. Smith and L. Streeter. Buried near the Saints' church at Magnolia, January 14, sermon by Elder W. A. Smith, assisted by George Howard. Buried in the Magnolia Cemetery.

McFARLAND.—Milton S., at Kirtland, Ohio, February 17, at 10 a. m., passed from this life, in his sixty-second year. He had been affected in one of his limbs and amputation was had with the hope of relief, but he survived the operation only a week. He was born in Kirtland, January 9, 1843, and served over three years in the Civil War in the Twenty-first Ohio Battery, and returning to Kirtland, became an active and useful citizen. He was married to Miss Viola L. Metcalf, March 12, 1868, who, with two sons and one daughter, survives him. Two brothers and one sister were present at his death and funeral which took place from the residence Friday afternoon, the Sam Allen Post No. 461 G. A. R. taking part in the exercises, also the K. of P. Lodge No. 659, Mentor, Ohio, of which the deceased was a member. Members of the Nineteenth Ohio Battery, of which Mr. McFarland was also an honorary member, were present from Cleveland. Bishop E. L. Kelley, formerly a neighbor and friend of the family, delivered a short address and officiated in the ceremonies, the interment taking place in the Kirtland Cemetery.

HOLLAND.—Bro. John Holland was born at Cheshire, England, August 13, 1827; died at Clearwater, Nebraska, at the home of his daughter, Sr. Sarah Rumel, on Sunday, February 14, 1904. The deceased came from Canada to La Salle County, Illinois, in 1858, and to Nebraska in 1892. He was never married. He joined the Baptist Church in 1878 and lived in the Christian faith to the time of his death. He had made his home for seven years with his niece, Mrs. Wade Jewel. The funeral was conducted at the home Sunday, January 31, by Elder A. C. Eaton, and a large congregation paid their last tribute of respect to a highly esteemed citizen and neighbor.

Mediæval Days in England.

The habits, the customs, the educational opportunities of mediæval days are often grossly misunderstood, and underestimated. As an entertaining piece of apologetic and of story-telling Dr. Seton contributes a paper to the February Catholic World on "Catholic England in the Olden Time." It is molded into the form of a story, and it contains many a reference that will enlighten us as to the intelligence and education of the people.

"In the part of England called Shropshire, and in the heart of one of these solitudes, there dwelt Anno Domini 1400 a hermit named Ethelwald. He was pretty old, past ninety, yet except for his bald head and snow-white beard you might have taken him to be much younger. Here let us say that Ethelwald, like other hermits, was a privileged character and might dwell in the forest unmolested. The cave in which he made his home, and where he said his Psalter daily, was occasionally visited by villeins and other folk from the manors of Shropshire, who brought him cheese and milk and fruits, and sometimes a new hood when the old one was giving out, while the skins for his bed were gifts from the free and daring outlaws—the Robin Hoods, who owned no lord except Jehovah. And in return for these good things the hermit would mend the shoes for the poor folk who came to his cave, for he was not a bad cobbler, and he might say with truth, 'from the time when I first came into this desert place I have never spent a day without doing something with my hands.' Yet it must be said that all who pretended to lead a hermit's life in those days were not true hermits. There were impostors among them, who left their retreats to go begging by the alehouse. But Ethelwald had obtained the sanction of his bishop to lead the life he led, and he observed the rules of poverty, chastity, and obedience.

"In those days the church was indeed the center and soul of village life; and connected with the church of Oakham was a club-house (sometimes cared for by a woman) where the people met to enjoy themselves; and while the young folk danced and bowled, the elders sat on the benches, sipping ale and wishing that they were young again. Of course, human nature being what it is, there were scandals and disagreements in those old-time parishes which to-day would lead to trials in the law courts; and when this occurred, the pastor and a jury of four would meet in council and endeavor to put an end to the trouble. From the pulpit too on Sundays the last wills and testaments of diseased parishioners were made known, and all who had claims against the dead person were bid to come forth and make good their claims. And when anybody was known not to pay his debts, this fact was also proclaimed from the pulpit. On the parish bede-roll we likewise find a list of the benefactors of the church; and for them the prayers of the congregation are asked; and the very humblest villein was anxious to appear on the bede-roll so that his memory might be kept green and his soul prayed for."

Nonresistance to Evil.

Professor Edward A. Steiner, who spent much of last year with Count Tolstoy on his estate at Yasnaya Polyana, has written "Tolstoy the man," which is to bear the imprint of the Outlook Company. Writing of the doctrine of nonresistance to evil followed so consistently by Tolstoy he says:

"It is providential that Tolstoy had the power of fame and the harmlessness of the nonresistant, for these two facts have saved him from the exile into which have been sent countless numbers who have provoked the authorities far less than has he. He lives in open enmity against the government whose power over him he does not acknowledge, whose corruption, cruelty, and hypocrisy he has exposed over and over again, and whose absolutism he is undermining more than any other person in Russia. Whether he wished to or not, he became the soul of all the opposition, and the dissatisfied of every class have gathered around his banner, whose reasoning they do not and care not to understand. He became without doubt the strongest man in Russia, in spite of his defenseless condition—stronger than the Czar, who lives in daily terror for his life; stronger than the officials, who, in spite of Cossacks and their whips, are making the country ripe for revolution and their own speedy overthrow."

Our Greatest National Highway.

The Indian trails were the threads which first bound the East and the West. Soon a large number of the threads were twisted, so to speak, into a few cords—hard, rough pioneer roadways which wound in and out among the great trees and morasses in the forest shades. Then came a few great, well-built (for their day) roadways which meant as much commercially and politically, in their age, as the steel hawsers which in our time have bound and welded a great people so closely together.

The greatest of those old-time highways was that wide avenue opened from Cumberland, Maryland, through Pennsylvania, the "Pan-handle," and on across Ohio between 1806 and 1840. It is popularly known as the Old National Road; its legal name was the Cumberland Road. It was the logical result of Washington's cherished plan of binding the trans-Alleghany region firmly to the East. It was largely promoted by Albert Gallatin, who, in 1806, made a report as secretary of the treasury, strongly urging such works of internal improvement. But its best friend and staunchest champion was Henry Clay; and beside it stands to-day a monument to his memory near the little hamlet which bears his name—Claysville, Pennsylvania.

This great road was born in the act of congress of 1802, which enabled the state of Ohio to enter the union. Section VII of that act decreed that the money received from the sale of one twentieth of the public lands in Ohio should be applied to building roads from the navigable waters of Atlantic streams to and within the new State "under the authority of congress." The matter was put in charge of the war department, and soon commissioners appointed by the president of the United States were surveying a route for a national boulevard from East to West.

The first government appropriation was dated 1806 and was thirty thousand dollars.

Words can not describe the intense wave of enthusiasm which swept over the West when it was known that this mighty new power in western life was actually to come into existence. Our government never carried out a more timely or popular measure. For it was as timely as it was popular; when the Revolutionary War was over a great stream of immigration poured into the West, but the Indian War of 1790-95 severely checked it. With the treaty of Greenville the great social movement again began, and the War of 1812, in turn, again interfered to postpone the genuine settlement of the Old Northwest. This national road was begun at Cumberland, Maryland, in 1811, and, even in the dark days of the war, was slowly pushed along over the Alleghanies by way of Uniontown, Pennsylvania, toward the Ohio River. When the war was over it was nearing its destination, and in 1818, was open for traffic to Wheeling, Virginia, (now West Virginia).—From "Henry Clay: Promoter of the National Road" (in the series "Stories of American Promotion and Daring"), by Archer Butler Hulbert, in the Chautauquan for February.

Mohammedans More Moral than Christians.

Marmaduke Pickthall, whose adventurous story of the Orient, "Said, the Fisherman," has made such a success here and abroad, became so saturated with the spirit of the Eastern people, during his five years in Damascus, that he takes their side even against the Christians. He declares that the Mohammedans are far more virtuous than the Christians, if you make certain allowances for Oriental standards. Especially he praises their sense of hospitality. "Once," he says, "I rode all the way by the coast from Jaffa to Beyrut with only a muleteer hired on the eve of departure, which was certainly a foolish expedition for a mere lad. The first night we stopped at Caesarea, and I rode to the house of the headman who received me politely, entertained me magnificently, and made me gifts when I departed. When I got to Beyrut I extolled the hospitality of the man. My astonished auditors exclaimed 'Caesarea is a perfect den of swindlers. Not three days ago an Englishman passing by was robbed and nearly murdered there.' You see having claimed the hospitality of these robbers I got their blessing instead of their blows."

Advance in Railroad.

American railroads, from road-beds and bridges to engines and cars, have been completely rebuilt or remodeled in the last ten years, writes Herbert Lawrence Stone in the March World's Work. Most of the equipment of a decade ago is now in the scrap-heap. The trains of to-day are heavy, long, and swift, and on many of the greatest railroads new bridges have been required for them over every river, creek, and culvert and often new and heavier rails.

The American railroad problem has been to increase the tonnage of a train to be handled by a single locomotive and crew. A locomotive with a single crew does as much work as three locomotives and three crews formerly did. A passenger-train of sixteen cars, most of them heavy sleepers whose weight has greatly increased of late, is not now an uncommon train, Formerly such a train would have been run in two or more sections. And eighty to ninety and in some cases even one hundred or one hundred and ten cars to a freight-train are not unusual. Indeed, on many main lines where the grades are not bad the "through freights" will average eighty cars to the train, and the superintendent or yard-master who starts one with fewer risks a reprimand.

In 1892 the average weight of a passenger-locomotive, with tender, was about seventy-five tons. The latest type of locomotive with tender, designed for the same service, weighs more than one hundred and forty-two tons. Only ten years ago the famous No. 999 of the New York Central, exhibited at the Chicago World's Fair, was looked upon as a marvel in size and speed; yet it weighed only one hundred and two tons as against the one hundred and fifty tons of the present passenger-engine.

In the same year the average weight of a freight-locomotive was eighty-five tons. The latest type of compound freight-engine weighs one hundred and eighty-one and one half tons and will haul more than four thousand tons of freight. Its tender will hold twelve tons of coal, as against the five or six of the old type.

Another radical departure is the new gravity-yard for switching and making up freight-trains. Heretofore all freight-yards have been built on the level and the switching has been done by many engines.

The gravity-yards are built on an incline, so that a car with but a slight start from an engine will run the length of the yard (often two miles and a half or more) by its own momentum, being switched in transit upon any desired track.

Paul's term, "instant in prayer," being used by Stonewall Jackson one day, his sense of its meaning was required. "I can give you," he said, "my ideas of it by illustration, if you will allow it and will not think that I am setting myself up as a model for others." On assurance being given, he went on to say: "I have so fixed the habit in my mind that I never raise a glass of water to my lips without a moment asking God's blessing. I never seal a letter without putting a word of prayer under the seal. I never take a letter from the post without a brief sending of my thought heavenward. I never change my classes in the section room without a minute's petition on the cadets who come in."

"And don't you sometimes forget to do this?"

"I think I scarcely can say that I do; the habit has become as fixed almost as breathing.—Exchange.

GENERAL FAST DAY.

By consultation and agreement the Presidency have decided to request the Saints in the different branches, and those isolated and in unorganized places as well, to observe Sunday, March 27, as a general fast day, the order of the fast being from after the evening meal on Saturday, the 26th, unto the evening meal of the 27th. We also request the officers of the different branches to request the Saints to observe the service of prayer at the different prayer and testimony meetings in offering prayer and petition to the God whom we serve to grant a profitable session of conference which will convene on April 6, at Kirtland, Ohio.

JOSEPH SMITH,
 FREDERICK M. SMITH,
 Of the Presidency.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 8, 1904.

HIRAM L. THOMPSON.

Bro. Hiram L. Thompson, the notice of whose death occurs in our columns elsewhere, was one of the most unique stalwarts in religion Texas or any other American State has ever known. Of him a local Texas paper had this to say:

Rev. Hiram L. Thompson, probably the oldest preacher in Texas, lies dead at the Franks Hotel. Rev. Thompson was born in Missouri, January 13, 1818, and his parents came to Texas in 1822 and settled on the Trinity River. In 1823 the elder Thompson was killed by a premature discharge of his gun while hunting buffaloes, and in 1825 Mrs. Thompson died, thus leaving the young Hiram Thompson without a relative to battle for his life in the wilds of Texas at the age of 8 years.

The mode he adopted in early youth to fight the battle of life and trying scenes through which he passed would make interesting reading. The clouds of war at different times hanging over the land like a midnight pall, the ever lurking foe ready to take a human scalp at every opportunity, yet he raised not his hand to strike his brother man; but ever ready to lend a helping hand in time of need.

For more than fifty years this man of God preached the gospel of Christ. Thirty years of his ministry was in the Methodist Episcopal Church and the rest of his life was with the Latter Day Saints. He never would receive one penny as a contribution from the church, but worked for the love of the cause.

Thus falls one of the rare men of God, and his fall was as rare as his life. Just one hundred and forty days ago this man fell from his chair and was carried into his room and pronounced to be dying; but not a trace of suffering marred the approaching end. So he lay, not suffering, but dying, just dying until the period of gestation of life, so was death. Rev. Thompson leaves four daughters and three sons, thirty-nine grandchildren and thirty great-grandchildren.

AN unusual thing happened here on Sunday last. The speakers for the morning and evening hours both were unable to fill the appointments because of sickness, and their places were filled by others. This is unusual, and indicates to a degree the amount of sickness which has been prevalent. There seems to be quite a bit of it.

THE LAWS OF THE LAND VS. JOSEPH F. SMITH.

It is popularly believed among all classes of so-called Latter Day Saints that the Church was organized April 6, 1830, under the ministration of angelic direction—"regularly organized and established agreeably to the laws of our country by the will and commandments of God." (Doctrine and Covenants, Lamoni edition, section 17; Utah edition, section 20.)

In February, 1831, laws given to the Church contemplated that those who belonged to the Church, every member thereof, should be subject to the laws of the land, and that the Church was to deal with transgressors for the commission of certain crimes by delivering them up to the law of the land to be dealt with according to such law. (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 21, 22.)

In August, 1831, there was given to the Church a commandment prefaced thus: "Give ear to my word, and learn of me what I will concerning you, and also concerning this land unto which I have sent you; for verily I say unto you, blessed is he that keepeth my commandments, whether in life or in death." This occurs in paragraph 1, section 58.

In paragraph 5 of this same section occurs this significant language: "Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be until he reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet. Behold, the laws which ye have received from my hand are the laws of the Church, and in this light ye shall hold them forth. Behold, here is wisdom."

Two years after this revelation was given the Lord said unto the Church, "And now verily I say unto you, concerning the laws of the land, It is my will that my people should observe to do all things whatsoever I command them, and that law of the land, which is constitutional, supporting that principle of freedom, in maintaining rights and privileges belongs to all mankind and is justifiable before me; therefore, I, the Lord, justifieth you, and your brethren of my church, in befriending that law which is the constitutional law of the land; and as pertaining to law of man, whatsoever is more or less than these cometh of evil."—Doctrine and Covenants 95: 2; Utah edition, 98.

This was followed in December of the same year by the following, in reference to those who had been scattered: "It is my will that they should continue to importune for redress, and redemption, by the hands of those who are placed as rulers, and are in authority over you, according to the laws and constitution of the people which I have suffered to be established, and should be maintained for the rights and protection of all flesh, according to just and holy principles. . . . And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood."—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10; Utah edition, 101.

We have here a series of commandments given to the Church during its formative period, beginning with the organization of the Church in 1830 and continuing until December, 1833, not only recognizing the laws of the land, but directing the people to observe them, upon the statement that the institutions existing under the law were the product of the wisdom of wise men whom God had raised up for the especial purpose of drafting and enacting the Constitution that the Church might develop and continue to exist on this land. At no time from the organization of the Church until the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith was there any public teaching of any doctrine or tenet requiring the disregard for law or involving the practices of the Church which required any breach of the laws of the state and the nation. Every organization within the Church for the benefit of the people and for which there were statutory enactments, not only recognized the existence of the enactments, but was organized in accordance with the provisions of them. At no time did Joseph or Hyrum Smith teach or give the example in practice authorizing disregard for or the breaking of the laws of the land. They persistently claimed that obedience unto the laws of the land was essential to the well-being of the Church.

This was the condition of the spiritual laws understood to have been enacted by the Almighty and given through the inspiration of revelation to the Church for its government and guidance, of which we have the following commandment: "Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my scriptures for a law, to be my law, to govern my church."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 16; Utah edition, same; given in 1831. This is the basis upon which the position assumed by the Reorganized Church in reference to the laws of the land has been founded and maintained.

In the case of Mr. Reed Smoot, now being considered by the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, in which the right of Mr. Smoot to continue as a member of the Senate is a matter in contest, Joseph F. Smith, president of the Utah church, being on the witness stand on behalf of protestants, and in answer to question by Mr. Taylor, "Is cohabitation with a plural wife contrary to the rules of the church?" replied, "It was." Mr. Taylor, continuing his questioning: "You say there is a State law forbidding polygamous cohabitation, and you have been continuing to violate it in utter disregard of the consequences?" Answer: "I think I have." Question: "You have caused your plural wives to bear you new children in violation of the law you knew to exist?" "That is correct," was the answer. Mr. Taylor's next question was, "Why have you done so?" To this Mr. Smith replied: "For the same reason I have told you. I preferred to face the law. I could not disgrace myself. I could not degrade my family."

Mr. Taylor asked Mr. Smith, "How many children have you had since the Manifesto of 1890?" This question was objected to upon the ground that Mr. Smith had already stated that his wives had borne him children since the Manifesto and that it did not make any difference how many had thus been borne to him. Mr. Taylor said: "I contend that it does make a difference. It makes a difference how well the fact was advertised that he was violating the law. It makes a difference whether it was two or twenty-two in the effect his example might have upon others in the Church." Mr. Burrows then asked Mr. Smith if he had married any wives between the first and the last that he had mentioned during his statement to the committee. To this Mr. Smith replied, "I have." He had previously stated, "I married my first wife more than thirty-eight years ago, and my second more than twenty years ago." Mr. Burrows then asked, "How many?" Mr. Smith's answer was, "Three." Mr. Burrows then remarked, "Then you have five wives now?" Mr. Smith responded, "That is correct."

The question then asked by Mr. Taylor as to how many children Mr. Smith had had since the Manifesto of 1890, was repeated; and Mr. Smith's answer was, "Eleven since 1890. Each of my five wives have borne me children." "Since that time?" asked Mr. Burrows. And Mr. Smith answered by repeating the statement, "Since that time." He added: "I rather think that one of them has had three children. I could tell you a little later."

The foregoing represents the statements made by President Joseph F. Smith, of the Mormon Church in Utah, up to Saturday, March 5, as given in the papers of the day. We have been quoting from the Chicago Tribune, whose report is corroborated by the Des Moines Capital and the Kansas City Journal. In the report for Saturday's proceedings published in the Sunday Tribune we have a few items which will be sufficient for this present article.

According to the statement of President Smith before the committee, at the time of the issue of the Manifesto by President Wilford Woodruff, in 1890, there were twenty-four hundred and fifty-one polygamous families; in October, 1899, this number had been reduced to fifteen hundred and forty-three, and that now there are but eight hundred and ninety-seven, or a decrease of sixty-three per cent.

Accepting Joseph F. Smith's statement that he was now living in open violation of the laws of the state of Utah, with five wives, it is evident that by his example and consequently his teaching, all the rest of these polygamous families now living are also living in open violation of the statute laws of the State known as provisions forbidding and providing a penalty for living in what is known as unlawful cohabitation. This is significant from the fact that it has been constantly asserted that the Mormons were a law-abiding people, and yet here is their leading representative, President Joseph F. Smith, who openly declares that he has continued to live in violation of this law ever since the promulgation of the Manifesto which his predecessor was authorized by the Lord, as they state, to direct that polygamous marriages should cease; and it was understood that this cessation included the cessation of living together as husband and polygamous wives. And notwithstanding Joseph F. Smith's statement that he is not living in polygamy while thus cohabiting with his five wives, the generally accepted meaning of the word "polygamy" is primarily, "The having of a plurality of wives or husbands at the same time; usually, the marriage of a man to more than one woman, or the practice of having several wives, at the same time; opposed to monogamy; as, the nations of the East practiced polygamy." The lexicographer adds, "See the note under Bigamy, and cf. Polyandry." (Webster's International Unabridged Dictionary.)

President Joseph F. Smith admitted before the Committee that the Manifesto proclaimed by President Woodruff, his predecessor, was a revelation, and was submitted to the Church, and accepted by the entire Church as such. He also stated when the question was asked in reference to it, why the Manifesto was not published in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, that it was an oversight and that he would see that it was published in that book. There are two points to consider in the foregoing; one is, that the proclamation made by President Woodruff that the practice of polygamy should cease, was presented to the Church and accepted as a revelation; the second is, that whereas the so-called revelation on plural marriage was inserted in the Book of Covenants in the fall of 1876, presumably by the direction of President Brigham Young, it had not up to that time been submitted to the Church for a vote as to its acceptance or rejection. This is a matter of fact accredited by history. It is also a fact that from 1835 to 1876 the Article on Marriage as adopted by the Church in 1835 was continuously published in all editions of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as the rule of faith and practice of the Church in regard to marriage.

President Smith further stated that it was to the laws of Utah that he was answerable. "It is the law of my State that has the right to punish me. The courts of Utah are of competent jurisdiction. Congress has no right to interfere with my private affairs. If the courts of my State do not see fit to call me to account for my conduct I can not help it. Congress has no right to interfere—it has no right to pry into my marriage relations and call me to account."

At this point Chairman Burrows questioned, "You say you would not abandon your wives or your children. Why do you consider it necessary to have issue from your plural wives in order to clothe and care for your children that had been born before unlawful cohabitation became a crime?" To this President Smith answered, "Because my wives are like all other women. It is necessary to maintain peace, harmony, and good will between myself and my good wives. That is the kernel in the nut. That is why I have chosen not to obey the laws of my State prohibiting polygamous cohabitation."

This leaves the matter about in this condition: that President Joseph F. Smith as the head of the church in Utah is violating both the law of the land and the law of the Church as embodied in the Woodruff Manifesto, which prohibits polygamous cohabitation. This is an unenviable position for any man to confess himself to be in. The moral effect of these statements made by President Joseph F. Smith must be to the disadvantage of himself and his people.

OUR UTAH TRIP.

"Wenn jemand eine Reise thut,
So kann er was erzählen."—Goethe.

While, according to Goethe, it may be true that one who has made a journey can relate something, it seems also to be true that when an editor takes a trip he is expected to relate something. As has been told in the HERALD, the junior editor recently took a trip to Utah, to be present at a family reunion held in the "Bee Hive" in Salt Lake City, February 9. We expect to tell the HERALD readers something of the trip; but space this week forbids us doing much more than making the promise and disposing of some of the "preliminaries."

All people in traveling go from place to place, and when traveling along certain routes, go from those places to other places in definite succession. For us to say we went from this place to that, leaving the former at a certain time and reaching the latter at such a time, would be of little interest, for the railway schedule would tell you that much. But all people in traveling, though they may travel the same route, and have very similar experiences, do not have the same thoughts awakened within them. As we went over the intervening miles of railroad between here and Salt Lake Valley, we observed some things, and thought some concerning them. With the idea of telling somewhat of these observations and thoughts, we undertake to tell of our journey to Utah. We gathered some items of information in a general way which were interesting to us; and with the hope of their proving of some interest to our readers we will in our next issue begin the recital.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The Iowa Experiment Station has issued a bulletin on "Breakfast Foods." The bulletin shows the composition and food value of most of the "breakfast foods" on the market, and shows how absurd are some of the claims made by the producers of the foods. The following are the "conclusions" of the writers of the bulletin: "1. The breakfast foods are put up in an attractive form and many of them are pleasing to the taste; the statements printed on the packages are greatly exaggerated and little reliance can be placed in many of them. 2. The cost of the prepared foods is ten to sixteen cents per pound and the unprepared six to seven cents per pound. These products do not possess any nutritive value in excess of ordinary food materials. The attractive features are the packages and the palatableness of the food. 3. The claims made for many of the predigested foods are of little or no value. 4. The breakfast foods are not medicines and no reliance should be placed in statements which claim that they are a remedy for any disease."

At the sacrament services at Lamoni held last Sunday, the large auditorium was well filled. These services have grown in attendance till we are beginning to wonder how soon a larger assembly room will be necessary.

The business department informs us that the new Sunday-school book, "Zion's Praises," can be furnished promptly now on receipt of order. Price in cloth, forty cents each, or four and one half dollars per dozen. In leather, seventy five cents. Sunday-schools contemplating making a change in song books (and our Sunday-schools all ought to have our books) better do it now, and send in their orders promptly, while the supply is good. The book seems to be giving good satisfaction where it is being used.

Guy Warfield was recently sent by the World's Work into the anthracite coal fields, to make a study of the situation there since the great coal strike, and in the March number of that magazine he has given the public the benefits of his investigations. He shows how the settlement of the strike has been generally unsatisfactory to the laborers and the union men, but that the operators have been greatly benefited by the chance which it has given them to raise the price of coal until they are making much more than they were before the strike was called. The arbitration settled the matter for three years, or until 1906, and the indications are that at that time there will be serious trouble again, as the miners are already sounding the slogan, "No arbitration in 1906." Mr. Warfield gives things as he finds them, and closes his article by thus pithily summing up the situation: "We have had our coal famine, our high prices. We, the unorganized public, both faced the music and paid for it. Arbitration has been welcomed as the industrial panacea. About a year and a half have passed. The experiment is about half run. Here is the result: 1. The Board of Conciliation has proved a greater advantage to the coal companies than to the miners. 2. The nine hour day is no shorter or more profitable than the ten hour day. 3. The old difficulties which the arbitration board was supposed to have removed still exist. 4. Even with the ten per cent wage advance and the sliding scale, the average miner complains that he is no better off financially. 5. Arbitration has not proved as successful as it was expected to be."

Sometime in December last there appeared in the HERALD an invitation by W. N. Hanner, 422 Chestnut Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, for elders passing through to call. Bro. R. Etzenhouser recently wrote that he had called at that number and found another person had lived there for two years. On receipt of Bro. Etzenhouser's letter we referred to our mailing list and found the number should have been 442. Those who might have occasion to look Bro. Hanner up please note his address as 442 Chestnut Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Miss Mayme Resch, Louisville, Kentucky, recently wrote of a surprise reception tendered Elders J. W. Metcalf and William H. Kelley (Indiana) on February 16, at her home by their many friends. A second surprise on the occasion was the marriage of Bro. Henry Ellar, of Clarksdale, Missouri, and Sr. Eva E. Hubbard, of Louisville, Kentucky. We are glad our missionary brethren are well liked by the Louisville Saints.

NEWSPAPERS AND THE PUBLIC.

"Why People Disbelieve the Newspapers," is the title of an excellent article by Edward Bok in the March World's Work. Mr. Bok justly attacks the methods of the modern newspapers which pander to the popular demand for the sensational. He lays the blame directly at the door of the editors and publishers. After showing by many examples how news reports are distorted and exaggerated by direct order from the editors, Mr. Bok says: "It should not be a matter for surprise—certainly not to newspaper men themselves—that the public either positively disbelieves or accepts with mental reservation much of what is printed, for the public has learned by experience after experience that accuracy and truthfulness are not common." He shows how the increased size of the newspapers is responsible to some extent for this, because the increase of space often makes it necessary to "extend" news items into articles to fill up space. The unreliability of the daily press is really helping the circulation of the weekly papers.

Often we hear some one say on seeing some glaring "scare head" in the daily papers, "I wonder if it's true! Wait till we see a good weekly to see if the report is confirmed." A good, reliable weekly, such, for instance, as the Literary Digest, which gives a resume of weekly happenings, finds its space too valuable to waste in giving unreliable accounts of happenings, and hence the degree of reliability.

The readers of the HERALD are greatly interested in archæological discoveries and developments, especially in North and South America, as they often have a bearing on the Book of Mormon. We often see in the daily papers vivid accounts of such discoveries, and often have clippings from other papers sent to us by our readers. Often we do not feel we can use them because we know too well how terribly the truth is distorted by some newspaper correspondents. Hence all we can do is to file the clippings and wait till we can see the report confirmed in some reliable monthly or weekly. In scientific lines we have great confidence in the reliability of the Scientific American, and seldom have any hesitancy in using information we find in it.

Mr. Bok's article deals with the subject in an unequivocal manner, yet we fear it will not check the evil. The spirit of commercialism is strong to-day, and newspaper men will probably continue their practice so long as they think their methods are keeping up the circulation of their journals. When the public gives the newspaper men to understand that reliability is what is wanted, instead of sensationalism, then the efforts will be towards reliability rather than the startling and big "scare heads." Newspaper men, so long as papers are published for pecuniary gain, will give what the public buys; and so long as the public will buy newspapers which are sensational rather than reliable in their methods, so long will the papers which would rather be otherwise be compelled to "fall in line" and supply the public with what it wants. The question is, has the public taste changed the standard of the newspapers, or have the newspapers lowered the standard of the public taste?

R. M. Maloney is in Austin, Texas, working at his trade of brick-laying. He hopes to do some preaching while there, and desires to know if there are any Saints or friends of the work living in Austin. If any of the ministry go there while he is there he will assist all he can. He will be pleased to hear from any of the brethren.

THE CHURCH IN THE WILDERNESS.

In the HERALD for August 12 is another article on this much discussed subject. In the main we heartily agree with what the brother has written. We believe with him, that the woman of Revelation 17 is not the same as the one of Revelation 12. We think it unsafe from our point of view to argue that such is the case. If the woman of Revelation 17 is the woman of the twelfth chapter in a fallen state, then the efforts of the reformers to reform her were proper. We believe it safer to stick to the scriptural statement that the true woman went into the wilderness; and to teach that the base woman usurped her place. History establishes the fact that the church at Rome was but a branch of the church having the same status as other branches, until the time of Constantine. When he professed Christianity, he established an "immense national church." (See Marsh, p. 198; Presidency and Priesthood, p. 92). The national church of the Roman Empire could be nothing less than the Roman Catholic Church. From this time on, history presents us with the sad spectacle of a church, robed in Christian symbols it is true, but in reality the church of anti-Christ, arrogating to itself the title of the universal church of Christ, and blotting out the lives of those who refused to regard her as such. Can it not be truthfully said that this church was drunken with the blood of the saints? Having blotted them out altogether, she sat as queen of the earth, and made a counterfeit claim to being the church established by Christ, when in reality she was set up as a national church by Constantine. Is it not safer, then, to present this woman as a usurper who sits in the place of the true church during the twelve hundred and sixty years during which she is in the wilderness?

The writer is preparing a book on the Organization of the Christian Church, the Apostasy, the Reformation, and the Restoration, the title of which will be The Fall of Babylon. It is my intention to submit the manuscript when completed to the Presidency for inspection, and to give the Board of Publication the first chance to publish it. The subject under consideration is treated in it, in chapter five. We submit a draft copy of this chapter for the consideration of the brethren, and as we expect to revise it somewhat before submitting it to the Presidency, we would be pleased to see candid criticism from any who feel like criticising:

CHAPTER V.

The pure church of Jesus Christ is fittingly represented in the twelfth chapter of Revelation in the figure of a pure, beautiful, sublime, and perfect woman.

And there appeared a great wonder [sign.—R. V.] in heaven;

a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars.—Verse 1.

The consensus of opinion among all classes of professing Christians is that the above woman represents the church. Doctor Seiss, in his lectures on the Revelation, says of the above text:

We have here the image of a woman. Woman was made out of Adam. A deep sleep fell upon him for the purpose and of that sleep woman came into being. From a rib out of his side was she builded. There was but one made, and Adam had none other. She was brought unto the man, and accepted and loved as bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh, and made one with him in the closest of all earthly relations. This is not only history, but parable and prophecy. Paul is very particular to tell us that it is a "mystery," a sacred revelation set in historic facts, to show the character and relations of the church. Adam was "the figure of Him that was to come." Christ is the second Adam! And the wife of the second Adam is the church, made out of Him by the hand and Spirit of God from that deep sleep of His for the sins of the world. It is but one, and beside it there is none other. It is Christ himself begotten in his people, and joined to him in holy compact, service, fellowship, love, so deep and close as to be really organic; for "we are members of his body, and of his flesh, and of his bones;" one with him as the branches with the vine sharing each other's characteristics, estates, and destiny. . . . The church is the woman in her creation from the second Adam, in her naming after Christ, and in her receptivity, love, maternity, trusting dependence, and willing obedience. She is the betrothed of the Lord, his bride, his queen, partaker of his inmost love, and all his estate and kingdom, having her joy in him, and his in her. Nor is there another image known to man which more richly and truly sets forth that mystic body, which we recognize and identify as the church or people of God.—Pages 343, 344.

This church-woman is magnificently arrayed, being clothed with the sun. This is also to be figuratively understood, for no person or number of persons could be literally clothed with the sun. The sun is the most glorious temporal light known to man. Our eyes have rested upon nothing fairer or brighter. To be clothed with the sun, figuratively, the church-woman must needs be clothed with light. She must "walk in the light." (1 John 1: 7.) As the sun is the greatest temporal light, so the gospel of Jesus is the greatest spiritual light, by which the gross darkness of this alien world has been illuminated; and as the sun is the great temporal illuminator, so the gospel of Jesus sheds its beneficent rays over all the earth, penetrating nature's darkness in the souls and minds of men, chasing away the gloom of earth-life, and lighting the pilgrim's path to the realms of endless day. What more fitting garment could be found for Christ's church? Could anything be fairer or brighter, or possess greater illuminating power? The church-woman is clothed with the gospel—the heavenly light! She has the moon under her feet—she stands above it—the light of her garment is superior to it. The moon has no light of its own. Its light is all borrowed from the sun, the sun's rays being simply reflected on its surface. By this we must understand that the woman stands above a spiritual illuminator, which borrowed its light from the sun of God's righteousness—the gospel of Christ. Such was the Mosaic law. The gospel is a universal plan of salvation. It was preached to the Israelites by Moses, as we have seen in chapter three. Because of transgression the Mosaic law was afterward given. In other words, a temporary law, to meet local requirements, was borrowed from the gospel by which God designed to save the whole race. This borrowed law was to serve as a schoolmaster, to bring the Israelitish people to Christ. It was to have effect till the seed (Christ) should come, through whom all nations should be blessed by the revelation of a universal plan of redemption, and not one confined to the Israelitish people alone. Christ came, established his church, and clothed it with the light of his gospel, thus placing it in possession of the substance (the gospel) and subordinating the shadow (the Mosaic law) to a position beneath her feet.

The church-woman is in the way of motherhood. (Verse 2.) In this connection Doctor Seiss says:

She bears in her body the maturing germs of a mighty birth awaited in the future. There is but one individual outward figure, but that incloses and carries within it an invisible seed, the royal sons of a royal sire. The church is meant for the purpose of begetting, and bearing saints. It is not for show, but for fruitfulness,—for the carrying and bringing forth of a royal seed of God, to inherit his kingdom, and to rule and reign in the ages of eternity. God's fact picture of the church, is that she is burdened with a seed begotten of God, which is being nurtured from her own body, for a glorious birth hour. . . . Notwithstanding all discouragements and defections, there are within her body, unseen to mortal eyes, princes maturing for the birth to celestial and eternal rulership.—Page 346.

John beheld a great red dragon, which verse 9 informs us was Satan, standing before the travailing woman ready to devour her child as soon as it was born. Of course Satan worked through human agencies in this endeavor. Again we quote Doctor Seiss:

The dragon stands before the woman which is about to bring forth, that when she has brought forth, he may devour her child! How intensely does this sum up the whole history of the case! The church and the Devil; the kingdom of heaven and the powers of darkness, have ever been the two great antagonizing forces on earth. The one is the spirit of mercy, embodied in the work of man's deliverance; the other is the spirit of malignity, going about to crush and kill every tendency, power, or prospect of man's salvation.

With the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob was lodged the promise of spiritual sonship and glorious dominion. Out of these was to be developed the seed of the woman to redeem and rule the world. At Bethlehem, as the great Head and Chief of all, this divine seed appears. We hear the angels sing and the shepherds rejoice. We see the stars giving forth unusual indications, mighty sages of the far off land coming to lay their royal treasures at His feet, and everything aglow with the wonderfulness of the event. But the dragon is there with rage inflamed, and eager to devour. In Herod he inquires, and plots, and sends his executioners to slay all the children in Bethlehem and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, to make doubly sure of reaching this child's life, and destroying the whole seed for ever. So it has been in all succeeding ages. While Jesus was going up and down among the villages of Palestine, fulfilling the prophecies and maturing God's plans for begetting a people for himself, the earthly powers about him were ever prowling and plotting to destroy both him and his work, and finally seized him, killed him, and sealed up his mangled body in the sepulcher. When by the Spirit of God, he rose again, and gave new commissions and endowments to his apostles, threatening and slaughter pursued them, and the sword, the cross, and the stake awaited them. Rome joined with Jerusalem in oppressing, banishing, and destroying them, and all who adhered to them. Emperors sported themselves with their sufferings, and edict after edict went forth from the throne of the world for their extermination. Ten mighty persecutions fell on Christians throughout all the jurisdiction of the Cæsars. The earth was repeatedly deluged in martyr blood. And what was it all but this seven-headed and ten-horned dragon confronting the travailing woman, determined to make an end of her royal seed. Nor was it essentially different after paganism was dethroned, and the cross appeared upon the imperial banners. The tactics changed, but it was still the dragon that wrought. Outward oppression was broken, but then came inward assaults, corruption, and decay. The sword of state for a while was sheathed, but then was drawn the more killing weapon of domineering heresy.—Pages 362, 363.

Notwithstanding this satanic opposition it is written: "And she brought forth a man child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne."—Verse 5.

[The Inspired Translation tells us that she brought forth the kingdom of God and his Christ. See verse 7.]

We believe that the child brought forth was the collective body of Saints made perfect, between the setting up of the church and the universal apostasy already pointed out [in chapter 4]. In other words we believe the man child to be the heir of the triumphant kingdom of God brought forth by the Church before the universal apostasy set in. In this view we are supported by Doctor Seiss and others. He says:

If this woman is the visible church, who can this divine seed which she carries and nurtures within her body be, but just these genuine children of God, whose characteristics are yet hidden, and who are only to be manifested at the great day, to wit, the invisible church. Those who contribute to the invisible church are in the visible church, and for the present are still joined to the visible church as a most important part thereof. They are her chief treasure. The visible church exists for their begetment and nurture. Where she is they are also. It is on their account she has all her trials, her anxieties, and her assaults of Satan. It is with them that she ever travails, and cries out, and agonizes herself, that they may be brought safely to birth and manifestation as the sons of God. This is what we are to understand by this mystic child. Look for a moment at a few additional particulars:

1. There is a peculiar manliness ascribed to this child. It is not only "a man child" as our English version renders the phrase, but more literally "a son, a male," or a son who is a male. There is special emphasis laid upon the masculinity.

The letter of the description is such as to prove that this child is collective and composite, the same as the mother, and likewise includes people of both sexes. The Greek word (arsen) which means male, has the peculiarity of being in the neuter gender, and so applies to both men and women, and can not apply to any one individual. We have a somewhat similar instance in 2 Timothy 3: 6, where the apostle speaks of certain perverted religionists, "which creep into houses and lead captive silly women" (gunaikaria in the Greek), that is, silly women of the neuter gender, and so woman or womanish ones of both sexes. Sex, however, is not so much the subject of this arsen as the higher qualities of manhood common to both men and women. A body of persons is here meant, and this includes women as well as men, and men as well as women. But it is a body at the same time distinguished throughout with a special masculinity, which knows no sex; that is, with the most manly of virtues, and the most heroic of characteristics. By this man-child we understand saints begotten of the Holy Ghost, and pervaded with the highest qualities of virtue, courage, self-denial, and strength. They are all conquerors. They all have overcome the world, triumphed over the powers of darkness, won the race of faith, and through the grace of God possessed themselves of titles to everlasting crowns and honors. Their masculinity in these respects is unquestionable and most intense, whether they be men or women as to sex. Here we find all the noblest and best of the race, and the embodiment of the highest virtue and wisdom that ever pulsated in the arteries of humanity. Here is the proper "man child," if ever there was or will be one upon earth.

2. This child "is to rule [shepherdize] all the nations with a rod of iron." He is to reign, with unrivaled and irresistible authority and power, over the world. He is to govern, discipline, and control all the peoples of the earth (during the subsequent millennium of a thousand years), as a shepherd deals with his flock. To shepherdize with an iron sceptre, is to exercise a dominion which is inflexible, irrefragable, and that can not be withstood. Strength, absoluteness, and perpetuity of rule, is unmistakably indicated; and that rule is specifically said to be over "all the nations." It is universal. This is not true of any king or state in any period, from the beginning of the world till now. But it is true to the letter with respect to the regenerated and victorious children of God. All the true members of Christ's church are kings. From the days of the ancient prophets, the divine promise has been, that "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High." (Daniel 7: 27.) It is spoken of in the New Testament in the plainest language. In the last words of Christ, and uttered from heaven after his ascension, the promise rings out to and through the church of Thyatira: "He that overcometh, and keepeth my words unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations: And he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: Even as I received of my Father."—Revelation 2: 26, 27. That same "power over the nations," and shepherdizing with a rod of iron, is still held out as a part of the hope and reward of every overcomer. It must therefore be still future. Moreover, the language touching the official destiny of this child falls in precisely with the second Psalm. And that Psalm refers particularly to Jesus Christ, that greatest Son, as well as Lord of the church, in whom and with whom all the blessed and holy who have part in the "first resurrection" shall "reign for a thousand years." (Revelation 20: 6.)

3. This child is the special object of Satan's murderous malignity. It is on the child's account that he assails the woman, takes his station before her, and stirs up all his power to hinder and destroy. It is not so much she, as the child, that he is bent to devour. Here is something peculiar, special, and against which all the malice of hell is aroused and concentrated. We can very well understand this, and the tremendous painting comes out in all its significance, when we see in this child the collective body of God's true saints. To devour these, or to stop them from reaching the kingdom and thwart their exaltation to the authority and dominion for which they are destined, is the great malignant intent of the dragon. Their success is his defeat. Hence the intent of this unparalleled attempt to overwhelm them at the final extremity.—Pages 366-369.

Satan did not prevail against this "child-body of faithful saints," for they were caught up to God and to his throne (verse 5), the proper place for the spirits of saints made perfect. Having brought forth her child, the mission of the church for that age is fulfilled. By reason of the apostasy which has now become universal, "men love darkness rather than light," and have "turned their ears away from the truth and been turned unto fables." The apostate church set up by Constantine soon claimed the attention of the masses, making it no longer possible (while this state of apostasy existed) for new saints to be begotten of God, through obedience to the pure gospel of Christ. All then that remained for the church to accomplish at the time indicated in the Revelator's vision was to "bring forth" the faithful ones already being nurtured from her own body. This accomplished, she must enter into a state of barrenness until such time as the gospel of Christ is restored, making it possible once again for new saints to be begotten of the Holy Ghost, and given into her care, for nurture, and final "bringing forth" to eternal kingship. This is just what John foresaw would happen, for—

The woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and three score days.—Verse 6.

A wilderness is a "barren place" and the figure is evidently employed to denote the barrenness of the church-woman. This barrenness was to continue for twelve hundred and sixty days. Now these "days" are prophetic symbols, for we are dealing with symbolic prophecy, and as the woman and child are not to be understood literally, neither are the "days" to be so regarded. What period of time then is denoted by these twelve hundred and sixty days? The rule given in the Bible is that each day in symbolic prophecy is to be regarded as a year. The following are cases in point:—

After the number of days in which he searched the land, even forty days, each day for a year, shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years, and ye shall know my breach of promise.—Numbers 14: 34.

Lie thou also upon thy left side, and lay the iniquity of the house of Israel upon it: according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon it thou shalt bear their iniquity. For I have laid upon thee the years of their iniquity, according to the number of the days, three hundred and ninety days: So shalt thou bear the iniquity of the house of Israel. And when thou hast accomplished them, lie again on thy right side, and thou shalt bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days: I have appointed thee each day for a year.—Ezekiel 4: 4-6.

According to this rule of interpretation, the church-woman must be in "the wilderness,"—in a state of barrenness,—for twelve hundred and sixty years. The question is sometimes asked, "Where was the church during this time?" We answer, as an organized body it did not exist!

[In chapter 4, the church is written of as the body of Christ. The following argument is made, and is necessary to a proper understanding of the argument

I make just here, so we insert it: "We desire here to call attention to a feature of the human body which is applicable in this connection to the church. In our bodies there is continual decay going on, occasioned by our exertions in life. This decay is called 'waste of tissue.' We can not perform the simplest of acts without contributing to this decay. This 'waste tissue' is continually being replaced by new particles made up of the food we eat, and the liquids we drink, assisted by the air we breathe and the rest we take. Scientists inform us that by reason of this decay and subsequent restoration our bodies undergo a complete change every seven years. That is to say, that altogether new particles will, seven years from to-day, occupy the places of those of which our bodies are at present composed. The same outward form will be there, but it will be composed of altogether different particles than at present. So in the body of Christ—the church. In this case the 'particles' are individuals, and year after year there will be the same process of decay and restoration as in the human body—continued death, and 'new births' to fill the breach. Each century will find the church body composed of different 'particles,' but the same outward form will be there as long as the church continues to exist. Though continual decay and rebuilding of 'waste tissue' goes on in the human body, the form is not changed—the head, the feet, the hands, the arms, the heart, the lungs, etc., etc., are all there, unless some of them be removed by accident. In such a case the body would be rendered imperfect. We might substitute a wooden leg for a real one, or a cork arm in the place of an amputated one, but neither of these would be members of the body, and neither would restore perfection. In the church body it will be the same as long as each member (office) is in a healthy condition, and meets with no accident. Though the church will be made up of new individuals each succeeding century, the same offices should be in their proper places,—apostles, prophets, evangelists, bishops, elders, teachers, deacons, etc. The other members will be found exercising the gifts of wisdom, knowledge, prophecy, faith, miracles, tongues, interpretation, healings, and discerning of spirits. If we were to 'amputate' any of these members (offices) we would render the body imperfect. We might substitute a pope, a cardinal, an archbishop, an archdeacon, or a reverend or right reverend father in God, but all of these would be as foreign to the church body as a wooden leg or cork arm is to the human body, and not one of them would restore perfection if the church were mutilated."]

We have now presented the church under two figures. In one it is represented as a body made up of many particles. In the other as a woman, who brings forth "a man child composed of many members." Remember both of these are simply figures. In the latter one, the church "brings forth" her faithful children and they are caught away to God's throne. Now apply this "bringing forth" to the other figure and what have we? In the other figure the church is represented as a body in which continual decay, by reason of death, is going on. We must regard the "bringing forth" of the "man child" in one figure as the "decay of tissue" in the other. Unless the "waste tissue" is rebuilt of entirely new particles the body will cease to exist. This is the conclusion to which we are forced with regard to the church. Under one figure she becomes "barren," "ceases to nurture saints begotten of God." In the other figure the "rebuilding of tissue," is parallel with this "begetting of saints to be nurtured from her own body." With the universal apostasy this "begetting" ceased. As far as the church on earth is concerned, the last of her "tissue" became "waste" at this time. There was no immediate restoration of "tissue," and she must await twelve hundred and sixty years for this restoration, for the gospel to be restored to the earth, for saints to be begotten of God, and for the "waste tissue" to be replaced by new particles. The authority to "minister for men in things pertaining to God" can not exist outside of the church, therefore during the "barrenness" of the Christ-bride, while as an organization she does not exist upon the earth, there will be no priesthood authority authorized of God. With the "rebuilding of waste tissue" by which the body of the church-woman will be restored, this authority will return to the earth. Please remember that "rebuilding of tissue" will not bring change of form. The form of the sublime and perfect church-woman will be restored, with the pure gospel-sun garment for a covering, with apostles, prophets, evangelists, bishops, elders, teachers, deacons, etc., who alone can possess priesthood authority, for her officers, and with the gifts and graces of old as her blessings. Shall we not then, dear reader, look forward with expectancy for her restoration? Shall we not decide that true satisfaction can only come to us, when we are integral parts of this beautiful Christ-bride?

The reformation will be treated under the heading, "The earth helped the woman." We look upon the efforts of the reformers as earth's noblest sons, helping the church by preparing the way for her restoration. The dragon cast a flood of persecution out of his mouth—when the Roman Catholic Church sought to maintain her authority by crusading butcheries, flaming fagots, and bloody inquisition; but the earth (through some of her noblest sons and daughters) opened her mouth and swallowed up the flood, and prepared the way for the restoration of the woman to bring forth the remnant (remaining portion, or last part) of her seed in the latter days. The dreadful persecution through which the Church passed in the early days in Missouri and Illinois, was but the dragon making war with her seed. (Verse 17.) Some of the brethren may agree with the foregoing, but may like to suggest improvement. They will be welcome to do so. Others may not agree with it, and we shall be pleased to hear their objections. These suggestive or objective criticisms may be made either through the HERALD or privately by letter.

THE GOSPEL.

SERMON DELIVERED BY ELDER T. J. SHELDON AT ENFIELD, MIDDLESEX, ENGLAND, NOVEMBER 3, 1903.

(Reported by Dover E. Judd.)

I will read the first chapter of Paul's epistle to the Hebrews:

God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds; who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high; being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. For unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son? And again, when he bringeth in the first-begotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him. And of the angels he saith, Who maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire. But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: a scepter of righteousness is the scepter of thy kingdom. Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows. And, Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands. They shall perish, but thou remainest: and they all shall wax old as doth a garment; and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed: but thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail. But to which of the angels said he at any time, Sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool? Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?

As I stand before you to-night, striving to discern the leading of God's Spirit, striving to sense the mind of the Almighty, I am conscious of my calling, and my dependency upon God, and in humility I stand before him and before you. But I realize also there is with me to-night a power that is not my own,—a power which man can not give me, which demons cannot take from me. I have confidence in this power. I feel that this power has been leading me. I can echo the words of the verse which says:

"So long thy power has blessed me, sure it still Will lead me on,
O'er moor and fen, o'er crag and torrent till
The night is gone:
And with the morn those angel faces smile,
Which I have loved long since, and lost awhile."

And as I view this thought the fullness and the all-sufficiency of the gospel is impressed upon my mind, bringing to my mind the first chapter of Romans and the sixteenth verse: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." In the eighth verse I read again: "But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom."

I presume all are convinced of the righteousness of the gospel, of its power to uplift the sons of men. They have felt that there is something of intrinsic value in the gospel. But men fear to trust themselves to its power, not because there is inherent weakness in the gospel, but because they have weakness in themselves, and they fear that they will not be able to endure to the end, and they do not want to make a mock of it, as they tell us. I think the Lord of all is able to take this fear away, and he will if they will leave themselves in his hands. Some say they know the gospel is true, but they do not want to make a mock of it, and they leave it alone. Some say the same thing and nevertheless make a mock of it; while others profess that they do not want to make a mock of the gospel of Christ, and they do not, for they live their religion and succeed.

It is a cheering thought that God is in and behind the gospel and the individual who made the gospel principles, even Jesus Christ, can not pass away in a few years.

The gospel is as effectual for the salvation of men to-day as it was eighteen hundred years ago, and should the whole world continue under present conditions it will be as effectual in ten million years from now, as it is to-day. And why? Because "Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: a scepter of righteousness is the scepter of thy kingdom." Jesus is the life of the gospel; without him there is no gospel, for plainly did he state, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me." Because he is the power of the gospel we have assurance and hope. God has given unto us assurance, "in that he raised up Jesus Christ from the dead." What a glad message is announced to the obedient: "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall also be in the likeness of his resurrection." In that morning we shall see the smile on those angel faces whom we loved long since, and lost awhile.

The gospel of Jesus had made life possible, and as I view it as being the power of God unto salvation, I see that death is absolutely essential to man's eternal life. Under present conditions death is essential for man's eternal life, for if there is no death, there is no resurrection, and if there is no resurrection and no death, there is no putting off this mortal body. There may be a few exceptions, but the exceptions must undergo a process by which a change shall come about. "And we who are living and remain shall also be quickened: and shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye at the last trump." Therefore a change is necessary.

I would not like to live an eternal life with the limitations that are on my body now, and upon my spirit. No matter how much my love to God is, and how great my love is for my fellow men, and how much I may desire to preach the gospel unto them and bring the means of redemption within their reach, there comes a time—many a time in my experience—when the weakness, frailty, and fatigue of mind and body prevent me from ministering to them further, and I have to rest, to recuperate; and then, having renewed my strength through sleep, I go and do the same work again, and am again limited by the fatigue of the body and have again to rest when the night comes. Nor may I exceed very much to-day what I did yesterday, though each day may record some growth, may mark some development of my power to accomplish something is the service of God for the benefit of my fellow men. My spirit desires more than I am able to accomplish, and it is limited in its power to perform things. The environment surrounding man is not fully adapted to the capacity of the spirit within his body. There will come a time when I will put off this body and it shall be hid in the ordinary course of things, and I speak not now as an individual, for I do not predict my own burial; but it shall be in the natural course of things, as a seed set in the ground, from which shall arise another body that is better adapted to my spirit than the one I now possess.

I know that it is stated by some that this body shall not rise again, that there is no resurrection from the dead, and I find that the Apostle Paul says that this identical body shall not rise again, for he says "Thou sowest not that body which shall be," and calls the man who expects to reap the same body that was put in the ground a "fool." "Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die. And thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat or some other grain." Now Paul here symbolizes something that people know and recognize. It makes no difference whether they sow wheat, barley, oats, rye, or some other grain; it makes no difference what ground they sow on, they simply sow the seed and God gives that seed a body. After the seed sown has died, God gives the seed its own body, a body after its kind. Now having made this clear, I look for a body that is like unto Christ's glorious body, that will not be subject to death, pain, sorrow, or anguish. A body that will be adapted to my spiritual need, that will not prevent me performing that which my spirit aspires to. Though I expect this, and my expectations are in harmony with the truth, my brethren and sisters are expecting the same thing, and I see that I can not be fully redeemed without this taking place. This seems a strange thought. I find a statement in Doctrine and Covenants upon this point:

"Now, verily I say unto you, that through the redemption which is made for you, is brought to pass the resurrection from the dead. And the spirit and the body is the soul of man. And the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul; and the redemption of the soul is through him who quickeneth all things, in whose bosom it is decreed, that the poor and the meek of the earth shall inherit it."—Section 85: 4.

I can not be redeemed until I die and until I rise again. What says the poet? We sing it very often:

"As children of Zion,
Good tidings for us;
The tokens already appear;
Fear not and be just,
For the kingdom is ours,
And the hour of redemption is near."

Paul speaking to the saints of his day said their redemption was nearer in that day than when they believed. It was nearer by the number of years they had been believers.

We feel that a part of the gospel will not save man, and should any one here to-night say a man can be saved without receiving the Holy Ghost, his statement would be challenged. A part of the gospel can not save man.

What are the principles of the gospel? Faith in God and the Lord Jesus Christ, repentance from dead works, the doctrine of baptisms and the laying on of hands, and the resurrection of the dead and eternal judgment. You see the resurrection of the dead is one of the principles of the gospel. We can not be saved without it. You believe in the resurrection of the dead as a principle, but until the spirit operated on you, you are not redeemed; so Christ says: "He that shall endure unto the end the same shall be saved."

The Doctrine and Covenants says that the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul. This brings us to another thought, that is, that it is not enough to obey the gospel and endure faithful for just a little while, but we must go on right through giving faithful service. The Apostle Paul says in the eighth chapter of Romans: "But if the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." If the spirit that raised up Christ from the dead does not dwell in you, what then? I apprehend you will have to wait in your graves, stay until the thousand years and a little season are ended; then you can be quickened by a portion of the terrestrial glory, that is, the glory of the moon; or by a portion of the telestial glory, that is, the glory of the stars; and if you have not been good enough by a portion of that glory,—the glory of the stars,—you shall be quickened but not to come into the kingdom of glory, but to go away to inherit desolate heritages, for “you abode not in the law but abode in sin,” and because you did not abide the law, there is no law to give you glory. This verifies the statement that “God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.”

A Latter Day Saint's religion when rightly understood is a religion that demands a faithful performance of every-day duties; that should he run well for a little while and then turn from the way of righteousness, all the righteousness that he has performed shall not be remembered in the day that he turneth unto his transgression, but that he shall die for the sin he hath committed; that unless he repents of his sin he hath committed it will surely bring about his death, for John says: “He that committeth sin is of the devil.” The Inspired Version says: “He that continueth in sin is of the devil,” which is a better rendering, for he further says: “If we sin we have an advocate with the Father Jesus Christ the righteous.” Then it is upon the condition that we do not continue in sin, but if we confess and forsake our sins and do them no more then Jesus is our advocate, but his blood will not cleanse if we hear him not. But if we hear him the gospel is effectual to the salvation of every one—to the Jew first and also to the Greek.

It is consoling to think that He who is the life and the power of the gospel system is eternal, “that his throne is for ever and ever, that a scepter of righteousness is the scepter of his kingdom.” A scepter indicates power, and there is nothing that can withstand the power of a godly life. God can not turn a deaf ear to the prayer of a righteous man. Elias, a man of like passion to us, prayed. The power of his life was such that God heard his prayer and kept the rain back for three years and a half. When the prophet prayed again the rain came. It was not much of a cloud, remember. The prophet's servant looked six times and he did not see it, but the prophet said, “Go again.” I do not suppose the prophet looked once, while, in the meantime, the servant was sure he was right, for six times he had looked and each time there was not a cloud in sight. Do you not think God was trying his servant's faith? Six times the servant came back saying, “There is nothing,” and I have no doubt he was beginning to think that his master needed to discern the spirit that was leading him; for six times he had been, and there was not a sign that God had heard Elias' prayer. There was no indication that his prayer had been answered. The prophet had the discerning of spirits, though, and he knew what spirit was leading him. He was able to discern what many people can not discern. I find a lot of people who can discern the leading of every spirit but one, and that is God's Spirit, for they can not tell God's Spirit when it does lead. We find, however, that the prophet could and he said to his servant, “Go again; go up the seventh time.” Just imagine that servant going. He knew he was going to be fooled again, and that he was not going to find the object of his search. He had been six times already. Was not that enough for a man to be convinced? The prophet said, “Go again,” so off he went. And what did he see? Just a little cloud as big as a man's hand. I guess it is going to retain enough water for the prophet to have his prayer answered; no doubt this was his thought, but he comes and tells his master what he sees. That was enough for the prophet,—there was going to be rain, and he sent his servant with instructions, carrying a message to Ahab that it was going to rain, and that there should be abundance of it. Now that servant went. It was none of his business whether it rained or not, but it was his business to carry the message. It was the prophet's business to make that message true, or to verify the truth of that message. It happened just as the prophet said.

Now we must remember that we are men and women of like position to Elias. If we come under the same conditions as he did, keep God's commandments and walk humbly before him, it is enough, for the prayer of the faithful shall be heard by God and he will shed abundant blessings upon our heads. Nor are we the only ones praying, for the Spirit of God is praying too if we are living as we should live, and sometimes I think it is praying for us, if we are not living as we should live, and it makes intercession for us with groanings that can not be uttered; and because the Spirit is praying for us, beseeching him who holds the scepter of the everlasting kingdom on our behalf, because of this, I have confidence that the gospel will triumph and save the sons of men. Because of this, the Lord sends us ministering spirits to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation. Because of this, he makes his angels spirits and his ministers to minister unto the people such things as are necessary to edify them, and to bring them into the gospel of Jesus. He places within their grasp those things which are necessary to build them up and admonishes them to live holy lives. These holy lives have power with God. And God writes their names down in the book of life as being righteousness worthy to be called his, and because they are worthy to be called his “the angel of the Lord encampeth round about the righteous and delivereth them.” When the enemy comes in like a flood then the Spirit of the Lord raises up a standard against him.

The righteous man oftentimes has to stand alone. Did I say alone? No, he is never alone when God is with him. "But," says one, "is not a faithful minister in the Church, or a faithful brother, standing with him?" God requires something of me that he does not require of anybody else. God requires something of somebody else that he does not require of me. I am not envired as they are. Their circumstances are different from mine, and because our conditions are not just alike, the tests of our loyalty must differ; and could our brethren and sisters understand that which God particularly required of us as individuals they would stand by us, but they can not understand this and therefore they can not stand by us in everything. When man's extremity has arrived God's truth manifests itself and he raises up some one, enlightens him or her by the power of his Holy Spirit to minister that counsel, that help, that comfort that nobody else can give. "For he maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire." And it may be that one of God's ministers as a flame of fire may give us the counsel and instruction that we need. But failing this God by the power and through the medium of his Holy Spirit manifests those things which are necessary for us to know. The testimonies of God's people have always been one on this point, that when men are harrassed and perplexed they have been lifted up by their prayer and supplication unto God. For God says, "Before they call I will answer, and while they are yet speaking I will hear." And so, because of this they are enabled to continue unto the end.

We must not be forgetful of the fact that prayer may be heard and answered; but only in God's way and in God's time can the answer be conveyed to us—it takes time, sometimes days. These things are true, for the word of God corroborates and upholds this, and we have no hesitation in believing that he who is eternal announces the gospel and that he was able to make that gospel effectual to the salvation of all who would live in harmony with it. "His throne is for ever and ever, and the scepter of his kingdom is a scepter of righteousness," and because of this we have hope and consolation that he who has pledged himself to us is faithful, and is able to perform all that he has promised.

Railroad mileage has steadily grown until now we have two hundred thousand miles of steam railway in the United States. These railroads employ over one million men, whose wages amount to over six hundred million dollars annually. Their capital is over twelve billion dollars, and their earnings last year exceeded one billion, five hundred million dollars. They carried more than six hundred million passengers last year, and one billion, one hundred million tons of freight.

A Noble Work.

BY A FRIEND OF HOMELESS CHILDREN.

Twenty-one years ago three little children were suddenly bereft of father and mother—they were friendless and homeless; but it was only one of the many similar instances happening every day—only three little children left friendless and homeless; that was all. But it was a crucial moment in at least one life. Reverend J. G. Lemen was at that time pastor of a large church in Council Bluffs, Iowa. This man, whose heart was large enough to find a place for every unfortunate one, took these children into his own home, where they shared the same loving, tender care that was bestowed upon his own little ones. It was not long before he learned of other children who had been left to the cold mercies of a selfish world. Moved with compassion, he took these, also, to his already overcrowded home. Then came the test; money was needed. He had a few thousand dollars which he had saved up for a rainy day. He little knew what the Master had in store for him; but he was obedient, and when the news came that other little helpless ones had been left alone, fatherless and motherless, with no one to care for them, and the command came to take these also, to the ordinary man, with his house filled to overflowing and a large congregation looking to him to be fed spiritually, it would have seemed like an impossibility; not so, however, with this man; it was enough for him to know that his Master approved of it and bid him to do it. As he stepped out upon his promises and obeyed the command to go forward, the way opened before him, and when he had exhausted his own competency, never doubting but that a way would be opened to supply their needs, He who owns the cattle upon a thousand hills moved upon the hearts of his faithful subjects to send of their substance, that these little, homeless ones might be cared for. Larger quarters became necessary, and they were secured. Other children were left homeless, and found under his roof not only shelter from the storm, but a loving, tender father, as all at the Home delight to call him; and, more than this in his sainted wife, now deceased, who presided over the household affairs and was continually looking after their welfare.

From a small beginning, twenty-one years ago, the Christian Home has grown until now about two hundred and fifteen children are cared for there, and two thousand have been placed in good Christian families. The real estate consists of about twenty-five cottages and other buildings, all owned by an organization which has been formed through the efforts of Mr. Lemen with a view of making it a permanent organization. Mr. and Mrs. Lemen have been blessed with four lovely children—three sons and one daughter. All of them take great delight in the work of the Home, and on them, no doubt, the mantle of their father and mother will fall. The oldest son is giving his entire time to this work also.

The scrupulous neatness and order that pervades the entire institution, the loving salutation of "Hello, papa!" that rings out from every quarter as he passes about the grounds, and the remarkable executive ability he displays in all the management of the affairs of the Home, are sufficient to impress every visitor that it is no ordinary man who has been called to this great and noble work. Children are taken here from any part of the globe, and have the best possible care and training. You, my readers, whatever you may be, may have a part in this grand work. It is a labor of love in behalf of all homeless, suffering children everywhere. The children are frequently adopted by Christian people, but are never allowed to go from the Home excepting into Christian families who are properly vouched for. The Christian Home is non-sectarian, but is heartily indorsed and supported by all denominations. It takes children from every State, and is not a local affair, but belongs to the world.

We have given this brief description of the "Christian Home" with the hope that all who read it will become interested in its welfare. If you have money which the Master desires you to use for such purposes, send it to this Home. There is no institution that is more worthy of your gift than this.

They publish a valuable paper called The Word and The Way; subscription price, only twenty-five cents per year. We assure you that if you will subscribe for it, you will get more than your money's worth, and we hope you will forward twenty-five cents or one dollar for yourself and three friends. Volumes might be written about this institution did space permit.

To the Prayer Union.

In reading an article in our church literature, I usually put up a petition that God will bless me with his spirit and enlighten my understanding, that I may get the full benefit of what I read. This morning I was forcibly impressed with a quotation made by a brother in the Ensign, and although I have read and heard the same quoted many times, and taken much comfort in the promise, yet I never connected some other ideas with it in quite the same way as now. It is this: "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." That is a real promise, and God never breaks a promise. He meant every word of it. If we go to the Prayer Union or Daughters of Zion meeting, with a prayer in our hearts that God will bless us with his Spirit, do we not commit a sin if we have any doubt that he will do so? What if we have no gift of tongues or revelations, he is just as surely with us.

I remember one afternoon at our prayer union an elder stepped in during our prayers. He said he felt the influence of the Spirit as soon as he entered the room. We were praying for a sick lady, belonging to the Christian Church, by her earnest request. She had been sick some time with fever, was very low, and it was thought she would die. This brother prayed also. When he got up to talk, tongues and interpretation were given him, and O what a eulogy upon the members of the Prayer Union. We, never realized till then, how much good our meetings had done. And the promises for the future were just grand, that our prayers and pleadings, our unity of heart and purpose had been recognized by the great Jehovah, and that our work and influence would broaden and reach out to do a great good. Then I began to realize that even our brothers were depending much on us, as one brother said he did not like our dropping it for the two hottest months; that the Devil never rested from his work, or took a vacation. How our hearts swelled with joy while our eyes overflowed in thanksgiving to our Father for such encouragement to continue faithful.

And, you ask, How about the sick woman? She got well, and the change in her was so sudden that it might be said, "She began to mend from that very hour." She had had the preachers and people of the different churches praying for her for some time, but without avail. But, alas for human pride and perversity, she believed then that our prayers saved her, but since her recovery has made slighting remarks such as I would not dare make. God is not deaf, and I feel sure the time will come that she will be so humbled under the mighty hand of God that she will repent, perhaps when to late, of what she has said and done.

The thought came, "Yes, the promise is to two or three, but will he not hear even one alone?" Yea, verily. "Enter thy closet, and shut the door," etc. Then it is not confined to one or two or three. But how many? God's Spirit is not confined to numbers but "all, in every place, that call upon the name of the Lord." "Forget not the assembling of yourselves together." Then if even on the Desert of Saharah, or in the largest church, the promise holds good. We are not left in doubt. It reaches all classes and all circumstances.

Praise God for his loving kindness and thoughtfulness toward his children. We do not always feel the same, and may think our prayers are not heard. But not so. The word changes not. We can depend on that, and not on our feelings. I heard of an old lady who was converted late in life, and in the evening was very happy. The promise on which she had based her hopes, was very precious to her. But in the morning her feelings had changed. The joy of the night before had left her, and she imagined she had been deceived. But her little grandson got his testament, found the verse, and with joy exclaimed, "No, granny, it's not gone. It's there just as it was." And so with us. Our feelings may be variable, but the word is not.

Sisters,—not of our branch alone, not of our district alone, or our State, but everywhere, in all climes,—and to the members of the Prayer Union I would say, while not forgetting the work that lies nearest your hand, forget not the Prayer Union, and forget not to pray for our brothers, that God will hold up and strengthen their hands for the work before them, that Zion may soon be redeemed, and the faithful saved to dwell with Christ.

Ever your sister,

MRS. M. J. (PHIPPS) JONES.

The General Superintendent in the Field.

Immediately after our return from the tour in the South, we began preparations to leave for a tour of the districts in the far West, California, Utah, and Idaho. Accordingly on January 13, we took train for Los Angeles, California, stopping off one day enroute at Independence with dear ones. Three days of uneventful travel brought us to the "garden spot of the world" as it has been called, though it looked very much as if mother nature had forsaken her fair spot, no rain having been had since early last spring. The country was dusty and brown. No green grass or grain or aught else except where irrigation had kept up the water supply. The drought was becoming quite serious. Business men began to discuss methods of economy, and laborers began to feel the effects of stagnation in business. One man, a salesman for a wholesale house, told us that some people were putting back to the east, having found that they would be unable to live here if the drought should continue. But, fortunately, the rains came, though too late to undo fully all the mischief that has been done. Not enough has yet fallen to insure crops and forage for stock, yet it will suffice for the present and indications are that there will be a plenty of rain and that though prices on some necessary commodities will be very high for some months, the country will again assume its normal degree of prosperity and go ahead in a business way as before. We trust it may.

The first few days of our stay here we were in the employ of that which we call lagrippe. However, it was only a few days till we were again in line of our duties. We attended the sessions of the Los Angeles Sunday-school and held other sessions of institute work. These sessions were only fairly well attended, but the interest manifested by the workers present was all that could be desired. Five sessions were held in interest of Sunday-school work which we trust will be of benefit to the work here.

We have here, as is the case to a greater or less degree in all places, a few who are alive to the interests of the work, and others who do not incline to exert themselves to see that the work prospers. But the work is in a growing condition and will accomplish much good in its time. There is a nice showing of children and young people, but not as many of the more elderly ones as we would be pleased to see. The school, in charge of Sr. Annie Reynolds, is very orderly and seems to be doing good, earnest work. May they be blessed.

About the last of January we accompanied a few of the workers from the Los Angeles school to a village about seven miles south of the city and organized a nice little Sunday-school there. It was thought there would be about thirty-five to start with. They met in the schoolhouse, but have since made arrangements for the town hall which will be a much better room for them. Our missionaries have arranged to hold preaching services each Sunday immediately following the Sunday-school. We are hopeful that considerable good will come from the efforts there. Sr. Dora Howland, a daughter of Bro. and Sr. Burton, was elected superintendent of the school and takes hold of the work in earnest.

Later on we visited the Saints at San Bernardino, staying with them from Saturday to Tuesday. They have there a nice chapel, and a fine, large school. The Sunday there being a rainy day did not give us a chance to see the school at full size, but there was still a fair representation of the classes and all went off well. Four sessions for Sunday-school work were held and all expressed themselves as much interested in this department of the work. They are doing well under the superintendency of Bro. Weatherby. He seems to enjoy the confidence of the workers and all seem to be alive to the best interests of the work. They seem to be ready for any suggestion that might improve the efficacy of the work.

The young people are carrying on a nice Religio. It was well attended and the interest was good. May they so continue.

We are greatly indebted to Bro. and Sr. George Wixom for their kindness to us in entertainment and in a nice drive over the country viewing the lofty mountain peaks, orange groves, mineral springs, and other points of interest, as well as calling upon some families of sick people. May God bless the brother and sister, them and theirs, in their happy home.

We will leave, ere this reaches the reader, for the northern districts of the State, there to remain a short time. Thence we will move on to the districts in Utah and Idaho. Soon thereafter we must face homeward preparatory to attending the General Convention at Kirtland.

Amusements.

The paragraphs which follow are taken from a chapter of the book, What a Young Boy Ought to Know, by Doctor Sylvanus Stall. They are so complete and so correct that we think all should read them. They are good for the parent. They are good for the child. Parents should notice if the amusements they provide for their children or those which they indulge in are of the proper sort. Read the paragraphs and then ask yourself the questions: "Does it cost more than I, in my financial condition, can afford?" "Does it rest me as it should? or did I go into it 'just for fun'?" "Does it interfere with the rights of others?" "Does it cause me to neglect business, family or religious duty?" "Does it create within me any distaste for my work or duty?" "Are my amusements entirely consistent with religion and refinement?"

"As amusement bears to the mind somewhat the same relation that recreation bears to the body, it is proper that I should speak of it here. There are many forms of amusement. Some are unobjectionable, some questionable, and many positively bad. I can not now particularize, but can state safe principles for government in such matters.

"First. Never engage in any amusement that imposes upon you an extravagant outlay of money. Amusement is a mere diversion, and to be good it must not call for a large outlay of anything so valuable.

"Second. It should be of such a character as to furnish the very diversion and relaxation which your condition demands—it should not be engaged in simply for fun.

"Third. Your amusements should not interfere with the rights of others, or put a cause of stumbling in their path.

"Fourth. The amusement which becomes so fascinating that those who engage in it neglect family or religious duties, or business obligations, is a dangerous amusement and should be avoided.

"Fifth. Any amusement which sends those who engage in it to their duties the next day with a distaste for the ordinary duties of life, that turns the thoughts of the apprentice boy from the tools because they are not swords; the smithy's boy from his leather apron because it is not a prince's cloak; and the herdsman from his cattle because they are not infuriated beasts or fighting bulls of the arena is harmful and wholly injurious.

"Sixth. The amusement which casts a reproach upon virtue, that suggests doubt about religion or sacred things, that would makes you think less of your home, that arrays vice in attractive robes, arouses passion, or benumbs the moral sense is a dangerous amusement and is to be avoided.

"In the matter of amusements be thoughtful, conscientious, and careful.

"As work may be engaged in with such zest and pleasure as to convert daily toil into perpetual recreation, so study, reading, and mental effort may be entered upon with such enthusiasm and pleasure as to carry into all mental employment and effort that very element which makes amusement attractive and beneficial.

"If we bring the right mind and temper to our work, neither recreation nor amusement will afford us any undue temptation or expose us to serious danger."

(The book referred to above is one of the "Self and Sex Series" by the same author, "for men" and "for women," by Mrs. Mary Wood-Allen, M. D., and Mrs. Emma F. A. Drake, M. D. This one and its companion, "What a young girl ought to know," are two very valuable books to be in the reach of growing children of twelve years up. The Herald Publishing House will order them for you. Price about $1.15 per book, post paid.)

Letter Department.

AVON, South Dakota, February 19, 1904.

Dear Herald: I am in the faith stronger than ever. I had begun to think that we were in a country where we could not hear a gospel sermon again; but about January 17 Brn. Hayer and Robertson came, and we enjoyed some eight or ten good gospel sermons, which made me eager to press on and try to live more Christlike. I felt bad that there were not more of the people willing to hear the truth as it was preached by the brethren. We had to drive about eight miles through the cold and over rough roads to get to the schoolhouse. We had been promised the use of the house for holding meetings, but on the second night we received orders from the director to quit; so it seems there are some who will not hear when they have a chance.

Since joining the Church I have not felt satisfied to stand still, as I feel to make a new covenant with my heavenly Father with his help to live a far better life than ever before; as we are commanded in Matthew 5: 48: "Be ye therefore perfect even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." I realize the necessity of trying to become more perfect even if I never reach the stage of perfection; and surely it is not impossible for any one to become perfect or we would not be so commanded. So I hope to become as near perfect as possible and ask an interest in your prayers that I may live faithful.

D. B. COFFMAN.

GLASGOW, Scotland, February 13, 1904.

Dear Herald Readers: It was with aching heart that I read the sad news of Sr. Gunsolley's death. Our prayers go up in sympathy for the bereaved ones. We little know when the pale reaper shall call for us. The grandest and most important thing is to be prepared, for great will be our joy if we have run the race well and finished our work that we have been called to perform.

It will soon be time for us to leave Bonnie Scotland and sail for the dear land of America. I dread the trip after the rough voyage coming over; but the words of the poet come again to my mind and cheer me up:

"Why should I fear when danger's near
I'm safe on sea or land;
For I've in heaven a Father dear
And he will hold my hand."

And I know I have lots of dear ones in America who will be remembering us at the throne of grace, while we are crossing the deep blue sea.

Such a pleasant, happy surprise I had the other week, when the postman handed me a great, fat letter from Stella Danielson containing letters from my own dear little class, Emma McKean, Helen Anderson, Edith Fleet, Earлита Smith, Goldie Bandy, Florence Heathman, Zella Mader, Ada Monroe, and dear little Beth Smith. Well, maybe I did not have a joyful time for a while, for they were such sweet letters. I could not restrain the tears.

Well, I would have loved to see the Sunday-school and Religio work prosper greater than it has done. One great drawback is, as soon as we get any converted they sail for America, not all either, but the majority. However, I trust that we have done some little good while journeying here. The people have been fully warned. I am sure that the hour of God's judgment is at hand, for I myself have distributed nearly twelve hundred tracts, about three hundred Hopes and, —well, I haven't counted the HERALDS and Ensigns yet, for to-morrow finishes my work. My husband and Bro. Arber have distributed thousands of tracts and lately J. W. Rushton gave lectures here on religion and science and distributed seven thousand handbills. Just before Brn. Smith and Evans came, they had one hundred large posters put up, and distributed, if my memory serves me right, ten thousand handbills, besides advertising in the papers. So if any one can do more, let them come and try it, for it is no easy task to distribute tracts here, for you have four flights of steps to climb and I tell you I found out what it was while tracting. I won't tell you the rest.

However, I will be glad to get home and see the loved ones, but some way or other I feel bad when I have to leave those dear ones of like precious faith whom I have learned to love since coming here, but will often think of them all and the many pleasant hours we have spent together in Bonnie Scotland. Indeed they will be bright spots along the pathway of life to which we can look back with joy and gladness and will be long remembered, for I have enjoyed myself splendidly since leaving the sunny shores of America. How can I help saying with the poet:

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above."

When the question was asked Bro. Joseph by Bro. Rushton, when he was coming back, he answered, "Not in this flesh;" but when the same question was asked Bro. Evans, he answered, "When there's no more sea." When I am crossing the sea I feel like Bro. Evans; perhaps if I was as good a sailor as Bro. Joseph, I would not mind it.

I forgot to thank all those dear ones in America who have so kindly assisted us in our work, by sending tracts, HERALDS,

Ensigns, Quarterlies, and Hopes. I am sure they are laying up treasures in heaven where no one can take them away, but they will be awaiting them when they enter in through the gates into that beautiful city of gold.

I have wondered how dear Sr. Plunkett is. At the last writing she was very ill. We have prayed earnestly for her in our little meeting and have been very anxiously waiting to hear from her, but not hearing have consoled ourselves that surely she must be better. Also Sr. Margaret Davis of Bevier, Missouri, who I am sure has been afflicted so long. I would love to see her and enjoy her company as well as all the rest of the dear ones in America. I would love to write to all, but as Sr. Chase has said, I assure you not one is forgotten by me, if I do not write. I also think of the dear ones at the mill and a sweet little girl by the name of Jessie. How eagerly I watch for the church papers and the Chronicle. Such good cheering news in all that I am lost to the world while perusing the dear pages and learning of the progress of the work and the many precious souls that are coming into the fold of the Christ and the good work being done by the elders and laity, the Sunday-school and Religio! I can not help but say we have truly got the grandest work upon the earth and why can not we be the grandest people upon the earth? I think we have and trust we shall all be the bravest of soldiers the army of the Lord ever produced. And now I am looking forward with bright anticipation to the conference at Kirtland. May we have a joyful time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. May his power attend his ministry and especially our dear beloved prophet, that his work may be glorious and his warfare victorious, and may his countenance beam with heavenly light from our dear Father above, giving him joy and peace here and a bright celestial crown in the world to come. With many greetings and salutations to all Israel everywhere,

I am lovingly,

ALLIE THORBURN.

FORT TOWSON, Indian Territory, February 29, 1904.

Editors Herald: On the 28th inst Bro. E. A. Erwin and myself went to Sawyer, a small town near this place, but we found the Holiness people holding forth in the schoolhouse, the only place for holding meeting. On Sunday at the morning hour they let Bro. Erwin occupy the stand. But the sermon did not suit them, and they decided that it was best for them not to divide time, and as they were to continue through the week, we decided to drop down to Fort Towson.

We left an appointment for the first of March and came here. The work had never been opened up here. The people knew nothing about the gospel as we preach it. As there is only one church in town and the Methodists have control of it, we called on the pastor and asked for the use of the church to preach a few sermons in. He at once asked us what denomination we were representing. We told him. He frankly told us no. We tried to explain that we were not affiliated with the people out West, but his only answer was, "You people believe in Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon and we don't need such stuff; the town will be better off without you fellows." I will say that we felt disappointed, because he is a man that claims to be sanctified and living above sin. I am sorry to say that we get worse treatment from those who claim to be sanctified, Holy, and living above sin, than from those whom they call infidels and sinners.

After we were refused the church we were told that there was an empty store-house in town we could get. We secured the house, fixed it up the best we could, and began meeting on the night of the twenty-fourth. There were about thirty-five out, mostly men. The good pastor had told the people we were Mormons and that we were indecent and were after their women. But the people began to investigate for themselves, and the next night to our surprise the house would not hold the people who came. The men brought their wives and daughters to hear the gospel. The interest continued till we closed last night. The Lord was with us, and greatly blessed us with liberty and power. The people would gather around us and tell us that they never heard such preaching and that they had been feeding on husk. Many had become discouraged with religion and had quit attending church, but when we came and began meeting men came out to hear us that never were seen in church. One lady told us that God had sent us here to preach the gospel in its fullness.

After we closed last night they gathered around us to tell us good-bye, and they plead with us to stay longer, and said they would feed us a month if we would stay and preach for them. Several took the address of the Herald Publishing House in order that they might purchase the Book of Mormon. Several are investigating and I believe that many will be gathered into the fold ere long.

I must not fail to mention a young physician and surgeon and his noble wife. Because he did not attend the meeting of the good pastor that I spoke about, he was called an infidel. He came to our meetings and insisted that we should call and visit him at his home. We did and he told us that they accused him of being an infidel. But he believed in the Bible and in the gospel of Jesus Christ, and said that his accusers did not have it. is investigating our claims.

I am interested in this latter-day work. The harvest is ripe, the laborers are few, we have more calls than we can fill. We go to Sawyer to-night; then we are billed for Fanshaw and Haileyville.

In gospel bonds,

JAMES A. PHILLIPS.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, February 29, 1904.

Editors Herald: Our late debate held at Little Sioux, Iowa with Elder Matthew Larson, of the Seventh-day Adventists, was held in the Saints' chapel, beginning February 8, at half past seven o'clock in the evening, and ended the evening of the 25th, after seventeen sessions of two hours each. Elder Larson is a fluent speaker, having the advantage of being able to talk considerable faster than myself. I affirmed that the ten commandments were abolished at the cross and were therefore no longer binding as a religious guide. He affirmed that the seventh-day Sabbath was and is binding on all mankind.

He then affirmed that the Lord's Day, the first day of the week, is the Sabbath since the resurrection.

Elder Larson was left bereft, absolutely without any seventh-day Sabbath, so far as the gospel covenant is concerned, since no reenactment of it is formed therein. He failed to show one example where the Saints met on that day, for any item of worship, or where any of the apostles met with saints under the new covenant to worship God on the seventh day. Not one command, not a solitary example!

He affirmed for five sessions, that Joseph Smith, Jr., was an impostor and his work a fraud. He used William Sheldon's work, of a few years since, written against the calling of Joseph the Seer, and the work. He also used Doctrines and Dogmas, by D. H. Bays.

Reason and credible evidence make a position, when taken, strong and tenable, not bold, unsupported assertion, garbling texts, and absolutely unsupported denunciation. Bays had been caught at Little Sioux years ago publicly falsifying the Book of Mormon, and exposed by Bro. H. O. Smith, and people there knew this, and knew Bays. When my moderator, Bro. J. C. Crabb, brought the confession from Elder Larson that he was using Bay's work, he showed chagrin and the audience just yelled with jeers!

Whether he would have made a showing at all without Bays' and Sheldon's works, is a question. He tried to pose as a Greek scholar, especially on the words "fulfill," "fulfilled," Matthew 5: 17-19, trying to show that they meant to close and bring to an end, so far as they relate to the ceremonial part of the law of Moses, but when these words related (in these same texts, mark you) to the decalogue part of the same code, they meant to preach it, fulfill it in the sense of extending, and putting it into practice so long as the heavens and earth shall endure! Strange position, this. Consistency can not be claimed for it. When, however, we informed the audience that we had the evidence at hand to show from his own composition that he did not write grammatical English, he ceased passing over to my table, and sticking his pretended Greek under my nose.

The Inspired Version came in for its share of objections, but it will stand the test at every point. I here suggest that the Board of Publication, as soon as may be, get out an elders' edition of the Inspired Version of the Holy Scriptures, raise the size of type to long primer, with moderate marginal references, on subjects relating to the doctrine of Christ, the apostasy, and "the restitution of all things." Printing generally at present is in such small type that to read it is injuring the eyes of many. A great strain to eyes in the study of that most important, is not the wisest indulgence, as we think. Our elders will have suitably printed and bound Bibles, if they do have to pay five dollars apiece for them. I believe two issues of one thousand copies each can be sold, if the Bibles are flexibly bound. Come, why should we for ever remain on the inferior side, with the superior article? You need not pardon this digression, but think, Saints and elders, about this matter. See Doctrine and Covenants 42, on this.

Standing-room at the debate was at a premium, especially on the five evenings of the last proposition. Some of our brethren came for eight or ten miles to attend, and so far as we learned, all seemed to be strengthened by the trial of faith.

The brethren and sisters sustained us by both their prayers and means. Bro. and Sr. George Scott made home pleasant for us, as did all the Saints there so far as time and circumstances permitted us to meet them.

Bro. George Shearer presides over the branch at Little Sioux, and he and his helpers are awake to the interests of the work.

We tried to get Elder Larson to discuss church propositions but he declined when invited publicly to do so.

Mr. Basset, of Little Sioux, presided as chairman during the debate, and did so quite satisfactorily. A good feeling prevailed with the audience at the conclusion, and I hope and trust good will come of the effort.

We hurried back to our appointed field to be in attendance at our district conference held at Underwood, and it was a good, spiritual season.

May divine grace attend Israel everywhere.

C. SCOTT.

FERRIS, Illinois, February 26, 1904.

Editors Herald: After returning from our district conference held at Burlington, I am made to rejoice in the work in which we are engaged to a greater degree than ever before. I realize to a greater extent the necessity of strict conformity to the laws of God. While I have always striven to live my religion, I feel now that I see new paths open for work and some one must fill them. If it is my duty I shall be glad so to do. We certainly had a time of rejoicing together as well as one of labor. But labor for the Lord is as pleasure for the man.

Now as we have a district Religio organization it behooves us, especially the young, to see that it shall be made a success, made to reflect honor and glory upon the Lord, to prove a blessing to those enlisted therein and a help to those who have not yet joined our ranks. We feel that we need the prayers of the Religians throughout the Church, and that with their assistance and the help which they implore in our behalf, we shall be made to rejoice as we have never rejoiced before.

Ever praying for the "Onward and Upward" movement, I remain,

In gospel bonds,

M. H. SEIGFRIED,

TAYLORVILLE, Illinois, February 28, 1904.

Editors Herald: We have quite a branch here and all seem to be striving to serve God in a meek way. May God bless our efforts to do good. We have in our midst a loving, kind, and faithful sister who is sorely afflicted. She is Sr. Alice Simpson and she puts all her faith and trust in the Lord. We ask that all the people of God will fast and pray in her behalf. She is the president of our Prayer Union in this place, and her service is much needed. We trust it will be the divine will of God to restore her to health and strength once more and to him we will all rejoice to give the praise. Trusting you will find room in your next HERALD for these few words,

Your sister in the faith,
SOPHIA E. JONES.

BLACKFOOT, Idaho, February 23, 1904.

Editors Herald: Since I last wrote I have been busily engaged trying to do something for the advancement of the Master's cause. I have visited Bloomington, Idaho, but found diphtheria there. I then went to St. Charles where I learned some were quarantined for smallpox.

But after tarrying a few days during a severe snow storm, I concluded to make an effort to do some preaching. Securing the Methodist chapel I held six services with small but interested audiences. I then returned to Bloomington, but could not get a house to preach in. So I went to Montpelier, where I visited from house to house distributing tracts and talking to the people who were willing to listen.

After a few days I went to Soda Springs, but only tarried there one night on account of small-pox being there. I then came to Blackfoot and vicinity, where I have been since the twelfth inst., performing such labors as conditions seemed to demand. I visited a number of the Saints and friends to the cause and tried to do them good; met with the Grove City Branch, also preached three times nine miles north of Blackfoot.

The weather has been very stormy here and the roads are getting muddy. I have just received word that Bro. O. T. Smith, of Idaho Falls, died last night. By request I go there this evening to attend the funeral. May God comfort the bereaved ones.

Yours in gospel bonds,
A. J. LAYLAND.

CANTON, Illinois, February 28, 1904.

Editors Herald: Winter with its cold and chilly blasts has almost run its course, and we anxiously wait for beautiful spring to dawn upon us; and while this season is slowly passing away, how many of our loved ones are passing away with it. Those with whom we have enjoyed days of pleasure are no more in this life. Still there lingers with us the sweet memories of days gone by, and while there are things in life that we love and cherish, that sooner or later fade away, memory travels with us all along the way. The remaining days of our sojourn here on earth to us are not numbered, but the question is, How will they be spent? God alone can tell. There are those who are drifting out on the sea of despair, others are sailing on and on, hoping at no distant day to have reached that land of pure delight. We are but creatures of humanity, so apt are we to go astray, and realizing this as we do, how ardently should we strive to walk the straight and narrow path.

God, who is just and kind,
Will those who err instruct,
And in the paths of righteousness
Their wandering steps conduct.

The humble soul he guides,
Teaches the meek his way,
Kindness and truth he shows to all
Who his just laws obey.

Just a few days ago, while conversing with an aged gentleman, one who has almost reached his four score and five years, he made this remark. "I have seen the days in my life, when this great world seemed to be at peace, but now what a commotion it is in!" His words are true. Not a city in this wide universe can we visit without saying, O Father of all, our Protector and Guide, be thou near us! We need not fear when God is near, for we know his words are true.

We look forward to the future, whatever it may be, with this end in view: that be they few or many, we know the great debt awaits us one and all, and when this great debt is paid, and the precious jewels are gathered home, O that we as Saints may be numbered there, as a united band, without the loss of one!

O may I see that glorious day!
And join with all the blest,
To sing aloud the Savior's praise,
And enter into rest.

Your sister,
IDA. L. JONES.

LEXINGTON, Tennessee, February 21, 1904.

Editors Herald: I love to read the letters from the brothers and sisters, as they are strengthening to me. I am a member of the Hailey Creek Branch and was baptized two years ago by Bro. C. L. Snow. I have never regretted the step, as I know this latter-day work is of God.

I was once a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. I soon found I was not right and left that church thinking there was nothing in any of the churches. So I prayed for the right church to be shown to me, if any was right. I had never heard of this work; but had heard of the Holiness Church and liked it better than any other. But still I could see that one was not right. I wanted to be sure before I joined any. I lived this way studying and praying over my case until I heard Bro. Snow. After he preached three sermons I was thoroughly convinced and was baptized.

I sometimes think that if I am a child of God I am surely the least of all. I desire the prayers of the Saints that I may live worthy of the blessings that are in store for all who love and fear the Lord. May the truth reach all the honest in heart and a way be opened for those who are deprived of hearing and obeying the gospel. Praying that his protecting hand may ever guide us in the right way,

Your sister in Christ,
NEALIE GOWER.

DES MOINES, Iowa, February 25, 1904.

Dear Herald: The church work in the city is moving onward and the anticipation of occupying the new church building here is causing renewed interest on the part of the interested ones, and it is having a tendency to interest the indifferent ones. The branch now numbers two hundred and five members, according to the report approved the 21st inst., and during the past eight months there have been twenty-nine additions to the branch. The spirit of God has borne witness of the approval of Heaven of the steps which the Church has taken, and a promise of an outpouring of blessings on the conditions of righteous efforts being continued.

We mentioned previously that the Register and Leader of this city contained an illustrated article on Sunday, November 29, concerning the church in Utah purchasing the old Carthage Jail, and that the said article was sensational and prejudiced. In the issue of the Register and Leader of Sunday, February 7, 1904, a half-page illustrated article appeared concerning the church under the head "Lamoni, home of Iowa's unique Mormon colony." The article was dated at Lamoni. It contained a cut of the Quorum of the Presidency, the College, the Saints' Home, the Brick Church, and a view of the town. The article gave a brief statement of our faith and stated clearly the difference between us and the Utah people. It also made mention of the church here in the city, giving the place of worship and our membership. The article was especially pleasing to the Saints here and at the business-meeting held recently a committee was appointed to prepare a statement of appreciation, addressed to the Register and Leader, for the article as it appeared. The said resolutions of appreciation were prepared and carried in person by our pastor to the editor; the same were accepted and will appear, together with a cut of the new church.

The occupying of the new church, larger and more commodious as it is, will bring prestige to our work here, and the Saints will make more diligent effort to bring our work before the people. We shall endeavor to use more space in the city papers and thus keep our work constantly before the people.

A letter under the head "Strenuous life at Independence," appeared recently, and while we can not speak of as much being done here as at Independence, more is expected at the center of Zion than in one of the cities of her borders. But we are proud to tell of what we have and are doing here. The report to the district conference convening the 27th inst., for eight months shows nineteen baptized, two received on certificate of baptism, and eight received by letter. Our total gain has been decreased by the removal of thirteen by letter, two by expulsion, and one by death. Two of our number have been ordained elders, and two of the sisters have married. A number of children have come into the homes of the Saints and these have been presented to the Church and received a blessing, and our pastor reports fifty-two administrations to the sick. The Sunday-school is in active working order with an increasing attendance and interest, with eight teachers. The Religio meets regularly and is accomplishing its design and purpose in its existence. At a recent social over ten dollars was cleared. The Ladies' Aid Society is working and is now preparing for a bazaar, the proceeds to apply on the church building. Their efforts on this bazaar we believe will prove interesting and be the means of calling the attention of many to us as a body.

We are going forward as a body, and progress is noticed by all. Looking back over the year, what a change has been made, how much has been accomplished! We have "come up higher." We have set our aims for the coming year and by united effort we will not fail. The work in which we are engaged grows brighter and grander with each advancing day. The field of labor is broader and the tasks made lighter by an increasing number of laborers.

With renewed and determined effort we will labor on for our own salvation and the advancement of the cause of truth.

A. A. REAMS.

DORA, Oregon, February 20, 1904.

Dear Herald: I would be lost without the church papers to keep us in touch with the work which is so dear to us. We do not have the opportunity to hear the gospel preached very often. Bro. Stilt spoke here twice the last Sunday in January. He did well. Come again, Bro. Stilt, you will always find a welcome.

We had some good talks by Bro. Griffiths, and I wish he could have stayed longer. The Saints felt better for his advice.

We now have a Sunday-school with an attendance of from twenty-six to thirty-four, and we are trying hard to make it successful. One young man told his mother he would give her a dollar if she would not have anything to do with our Sunday-school; but last Sunday he was there himself. Bro. Chase will be glad to hear that two of my children, Michael and Minnie, have joined the Church.

We are trying to let our lights shine and may the Father recognize us as his children.

Wishing the HERALD a prosperous year,

Your sister in bonds,

ROXANNA MINARD,

DOW CITY, Iowa, January 26, 1904.

Editors Herald: As there is quite a variation of thought upon the meaning of Zion's laws that are not to be executed till after her redemption, I think a few thoughts on the subject would do good.

All the revelations given to the Church commanding to purchase in Jackson County, Missouri, building up Independence, the center place, as it is called by the Lord, laying off inheritances, and building a temple and a city one mile square; the commandments to do this work are not in force, and will not be, till Zion is redeemed. And when the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, then I look for her redemption and not tell then.

I wrote my understanding of Zion's laws that were not to be executed till after her redemption for publication, sometime ago to the Ensign, but my views were incorporated in a letter in answer to a brother whom I thought referred to revelations to support his views that were not in force. I knew the Ensign was not a paper for criticism as much as the HERALD.

I came here the first of the year, my wife being at her daughter's, Sarah Pitts. And, as she and I have been husband and wife fifty-two years I am strongly inclined to be with her. I am not worth much now, my heart troubles me in walking.

Editors Herald: I just baptized and confirmed four more this Sunday afternoon (February 21) which with four last Tuesday, makes sixteen since coming here. Of the last eight all but one were heads of families. More are to be added within one week. I have blessed twelve children—of those I baptized—and organized a Sunday-school. I am informed that the Methodist Episcopal chapel out in the country here is offered for sale and it is a fact that the people refuse to raise the preacher's salary—the very preacher who slandered me and the work through the local paper. Only a couple of days ago a man placed five dollars in my hands, saying, "This is what I promised for the Methodist preacher."

There would have been another baptism to-day if it had not been that the mother of the pledged candidate might have taken hysterics as a result of the event. I expect to get her, however, in a couple days. The mother of another candidate was nearly as bad this afternoon. My, but they die hard! I tell you it requires the Spirit's striving and some diplomacy to get them into the water in this temperature.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

HENRY, Missouri, February 12, 1904.

Editors Herald: I am laboring in the interest of our Master's cause here in the Missouri River bottom near Richmond.

There has been much preaching of various sorts from almost every faction claiming to be the church or a part of it. But to date we have the lead, and that is not saying a great deal in our favor.

Bro. I. N. White and I visited through the district, stopping and preaching at Cameron with good results, at Karr, Far West (where we organized a branch), at Kingston, and then came here to Henry (Lexington Junction), where Bro. White left me.

I obtained the use of the Macabees' Hall here in the village, and have to date held five services, all being well attended. Not being able to get the Hall on Wednesday night, I went to Mt. Lebanon church owned by the Christian Union Church, or as they style it, "The church of Christ in Christian Union." I sent an appointment before and was greeted by about two hundred who listened with good interest. This last named place is the place known to the former elders as the King Schoolhouse. I expect to hold a week's services there later.

Bro. Alma Booker was preaching at Harden, Missouri, last week and this week up till Wednesday night, when the Baptists, whose church he was using, notified him to stop,—a plain case of shut-out. He is with me now and we are enjoying good liberty and fine, large crowds.

W. W. SMITH.

RILEYVILLE, Virginia, February 25, 1904.

Editors Herald: I have just returned from a short visit up the river from here about eight miles where I have a niece and many friends. I visited around with them for three days and nights explaining the faith and giving them an outline of what we believe in general. The result is an opening for me to preach in that neighborhood beginning the first Sunday in March. I will begin a series of meetings here Saturday night. The few public meetings I have held have given satisfaction to the hearers. Our faith demands their time in investigating the claims we make upon the atonement of Christ and the ultimate result of belief in God and the law he has given to mankind.

I now have several calls for preaching at other points. I can not respond to them now. I wish I could, but I do not believe in trying to cover more ground than I can properly cultivate. I find by investigation that here as well as elsewhere the people are getting tired of the hireling whose own the sheep are not. They seem to realize the need of the pure old Jerusalem gospel.

I have one subscriber for the HERALD and one for Ensign and Autumn Leaves. The tracts I have scattered have helped much in getting our faith before the people. The weather has moderated; the snow is gone. Roads are bad, but will soon be in good shape again if no more storms come for awhile. My address is Rileyville, Page County, Virginia. No Cedarpoint here any more. Will my correspondents please take notice. Write my first name in full (Isaac).

Yours for the triumph of truth,

ISAAC N. ROBERTS.

LEON, Iowa, February 28, 1904.

Editors Herald: Elder Kephart closed a series of meetings at this point on February 21, with good interest manifest and an average of thirty-four in attendance. Some were very much interested; especially a colored lady and gentleman, also the school-teacher. The colored lady always argued that her Church, the Baptist, was right and that she would have to be shown different before she would believe different; but after the meetings were over she said that she had nothing left of the Baptist Church to hold to; that Elder Kephart had knocked the props out from under her Church and she was now a Latter Day Saint. They were all sorry to see him go away so soon and will be glad to see him back again, for we all think he is the right man in the right place.

Yours for gospel truth,

R. D. F. 3.

Extracts from Letters.

Charles H. Burr wrote from Plano, Illinois, March 5: "I have just returned from a very successful trip in Wisconsin. Had a good hearing; and notwithstanding the weather was cold, the attendance was good, and for three successive Sundays we 'troubled the waters.' I have been sorely afflicted with rheumatism all winter, so much so that all the time I was away I could not put on a coat or vest without assistance; but it did not affect my speech in the least, and I enjoyed the Spirit of preaching in a wonderful degree."

Bro. R. C. Evans wrote from London, Ontario, March 3: "I returned from Toronto Monday night. From February 14 to 28 I was at work almost night and day; seventeen sermons, six addresses, fourteen baptisms, old Saints revived, last debt paid on church, church dedicated, splendid concert, and a weary, tired, happy boy."

Sr. Nar Hoover wrote from Zenith, Illinois, February 21: "Hindered from going to Sunday-school today, I have found comfort in the HERALD. I love to read letters from different parts of the world telling how the gospel is being spread abroad. I am young in the cause, and I long to do more for it than I have. Bro. J. F. Henson preached two splendid sermons Saturday night and Sunday morning."

Bro. Lars Leetum writes from Harvey, North Dakota, February 4: "We are the only Saints here that we know of. If there are others living around here, we would be pleased to know of them. If any of the elders come this way they can find a home with us and we would like to have the gospel preached in this neighborhood."

Sr. Sarah Bellville, sixteen years of age, writes from Dunningan, Missouri: "We are among the isolated ones, but I hope we will some day be close to a branch. I love to hear the gospel preached, and my desire is to do what I can for the work."

Sr. Lottie Husted writes from Shinnston, West Virginia: "I am still in the faith. My husband is not a member and I ask prayers that the Lord may open up the way that he may attend church. He is a good man. I would like for the elders to visit us. There might be good done here."

Sr. Abbie A. Horton writes from Independence, Missouri: "Weather delightful. Patriarch Kemp discoursed in morning (Sunday 21st); W. E. Peak in evening, when about two hundred were out. Sr. Bishop continues very feeble and suffers much."

Southeastern Illinois.—First convention was held at Springerton Illinois, February 26, 1904, Superintendent F. L. Sawley presiding, C. J. Spurlock assistant. In the absence of the secretary, J. T. Bozarth, Samuel Hoover acted as secretary. Four schools reported; two did not report. The afternoon time was used in institute work in charge of the superintendent. At night, after the organization of a District Religio association, a short entertainment of music and recitations was given. The Sunday-school and Religio associations will hold their next convention in the Dry Fork church June 10, 1904, prior to the next district conference to be held at the same place.

Nauvoo.—District association met at Burlington, February 19, Superintendent G. P. Lambert presiding, Madge M. Craig secretary. Reports from officers were read and approved. According to Rules of Order we then proceeded to elect officers as follows: G. P. Lambert superintendent, J. Guy Munsell assistant superintendent, Jessie J. Ward secretary, Mayme Giesh treasurer, Madge M. Craig librarian. Reports were read from Burlington, Montrose, Rock Creek, Farmington, and Keb. Keokuk and Ft. Madison were heard from in verbal reports. Ft. Madison is reported as doing especially well. The rules for circulating library system were adopted. The library work through the labors of Sr. Madge Craig is progressing; four libraries now and prospects of others. The following delegates were elected to General Convention: J. W. Peterson, J. Guy Munsell, James McKiernan, Sr. Hattie McKiernan, Lillian DeMuth, Madge Craig, Paul Craig, and Elbert A. Smith, delegates present to cast full delegate vote and in case of division cast majority and minority vote of the district. Balance in treasury, $10.92. The evening's entertainment, rendered principally by the Burlington school, and aided by Farmington and Rock Creek, also by Bro. J. W. Peterson and J. Guy Munsell, was fully appreciated by all.

This is in essence the way we are met at times in our gospel work. To it we have some objections which we present.

1. According to the Savior, men are not to "live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

This was the answer of one who knew the value of the word of God, and he fortified his own refusal to yield to the persuasion of the adversary of men's souls, and at the same time silenced and discomfited the tempter by the statement, "It is written." This was sufficient to sustain the Son of God, and defeat the "son of the morning."

2. The scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for instruction and guidance, for the reason that "holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." This was in the "old time," the record and history of which have come to us as scripture, written law, or the written word.

3. There would be no force or meaning in the Savior's injunction, "Search the scriptures," if no specific value was to attach to the doctrinal teaching therein contained, and no force to be given the "law and the testimony" in which the written word abounds. Of what use would the words "of the Savior" be in the rebuke given the Devil, in the language, "It is written," if what was written could be set aside at any time by "living oracles"?

4. When a lad we used to hear the question asked, and sometimes discussed, What would the result be "if the irresistible came into contact with the immovable"? In after-years the query made us smile; but, in our religious controversy we have found disposition in places to set aside the written requirements of the word of God by that which reversed and contradicted former commands on the same subject, upon the ground that God was a God of revelation and would continue to reveal himself until the end of time, and as "holy men of God in olden time spake as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost," so now men were made "living oracles" and spake as they are moved to speak and speaking by virtue of their calling whatsoever they speak is word the "of the Lord," and must be received as

DEVOTION TO THE WRITTEN WORD NOT A BAR TO THE HOLY SPIRIT.

We are sometimes confronted by this idea: "You, Josephites are too tenacious of the written word. We walk by the living oracles. The written word was well enough in its time, but when the priesthood was conferred, its power superceded the musty pages of the written word. The Holy Ghost is superior to the written word," hout regard to what has gone before and is of record "as it is written." We are of the opinion, however, that the Master will neither reverse nor contradict his word, that time has no meaning to him as it has to men on the earth; hence it is to him one continuous now, and being so he does not forget himself and what he is doing. So, in the light of this we deem it important to heed what is written. And our experience is that he who most earnestly and wisely pays heed to the written word is the more devoted in his worship, and his devotion does not prove a bar to the reception and enjoyment of the Holy Spirit.

The word of God is both irresistible and immovable, hence can not come into contact with itself.

OUR UTAH TRIP.

After a pretty busy day Thursday, February 4, we left Lamoni on the evening train, bound for Chariton, on the main line of the Burlington Railway. The train, No. 113, runs through Lamoni from St. Joseph, Missouri, to Chariton, and used to be quite an ordinary branch road passenger train; but of recent months on the major part of its trips through Lamoni (south in the morning as No. 114, and north in the evening as No. 113), it is "extraordinary" in that it is "bobbed" by process of "practical economy." The "bobbed" train consists of locomotive, combination mail and baggage car, and "combination" coach. The "combination" is effected by a board partition across the car, a little nearer one end than the other, its purpose being to separate the users and non-users of tobacco. Behold, by simply adding a thin board partition the management has made from an ordinary (old-fashioned) day coach a "combination" coach and "smoker." This two-car "combination" train runs from Chariton to Grant City, Missouri. At Grant City an ordinary day coach is added to the train, and the "combination" coach is turned over entire to the tobacco users. On reaching Grant City on the evening run, the day coach is set out, the "non-users" being driven into one end of the "combination" coach, and there left to continue their journey while enjoying (?) the odors from tobacco-scented cushions and spit-besmeared floors. Where's the economy, you ask? Well, just here: by causing slight (?) inconvenience to the non-smokers, (you will notice the smokers are the favored ones, they not being asked to change cars), the company is saved the expense of hauling a coach weighing probably thirty-five tons or less, from Grant City to Chariton (about ninety-four miles) and back. But it is done in the interests of economy, so I suppose we ought not to complain. Economy must of course (on the branch roads) be looked after rather than convenience of passengers; at least, so it seems.

But "bobbed" or otherwise, the man at the throttle on No. 113 usually gets his train to Chariton all right, and so we reached Chariton on the evening mentioned, about on time, the five minutes we were late being due to a "hot box" demanding some attention at Derby. Even boxes on "combination" cars will sometimes run hot. The five minutes, however, did not disarrange our plans, for we had a wait of about four and one half hours, for No. 5. It came about twenty minutes late, and we boarded it, bound for Omaha and the West. How different from the "bobbed" train is No. 5! Here the convenience of the passenger seems everywhere to be paramount. The day coaches are chair-cars, elegantly finished, well illuminated, commodious, and amply provided with lavatories and conveniences for the comfort of the traveler. Pullman coaches and a diner provide comforts and luxuries limited only by one's desire to furnish the money for such extra expenses. Instead of the old-style day coach of thirty or thirty-five tons, we find the chair-cars large coaches of from forty-five to fifty-five tons, which roll smoothly along over a well-balanced road-bed on which are laid eighty-five-pound rails. Powerful but fleet locomotives draw these elegant trains along at the speed of the wind, though the well-conditioned track insures a smoothness of running which deceives the casual observing traveler.

To insure this smoothness of running, as well as to reduce cost of operation, the Burlington Railway, in common with many other large systems, has recently spent enormous sums of money on track improvement. The work has been carried on for years past, and is still progressing. Between Chicago and the Missouri, the Burlington has spent millions in cutting down grades and reducing curves. This has in places required entirely new survey and construction, the new line in some places running far from the old. The result is that locomotives will handle heavier trains at greater speed and with greater degree of safety so far as the passenger trains are concerned, and the "tonnage" of the freight trains handled by a single locomotive is enormously increased. "Double-heading" over some certain divisions, and "pushers" to help over some pons asinorum are becoming rarer on the Burlington. The animus of these expensive changes is found in the prevailing spirit of commercialism. Economy on a scale not known a decade or two ago is the cause. When great railway systems like the Burlington were projected across the western countries years ago, to keep the East in touch with the rapidly western-moving frontier, rapidity of construction was the object, and roads were built around sharp curves and up and down steep grades, where subsequent operation and maintenance became expensive. Rapid increase in the weight of locomotives and cars necessitated replacing the lightly constructed bridges by heavier ones, and also forced the laying of heavier rails. Other systems paralleled the first ones, and sharp competition reduced the prices received for haulage, both freight and passenger, and then began the development of modern industrial management. Leaks in operating expenses were eagerly sought out, and men were trained along certain lines of supervision until their skill became great. The enormous cost of operating over steep grades and around sharp curves, as compared with straight and moderately rising or falling track, was carefully worked out. The industrial managers, thoroughly skilled in their line, called to their aid other skilled men, and the civil engineers who had so adroitly led the lines of railways across the continent were again called to the aid of competing capitalists and told to resurvey the lines, so as to reduce operating expenses. Thus it was that millions and millions of dollars have been spent in improvement of road beds. And the industrial managers, at the heads of the great railway systems, knew what they were about. It was not mere pride to own the best-built road-bed; it was a business investment, and they knew by careful calculation that those millions of dollars would come back to them in the way of reduced operating expenses. "A penny saved is a penny earned," was their adage. And they did not hesitate to spend the millions to save the "pennies." The pennies of operating expenses of any enterprise are continuously going out; to stop them in certain places, means a continuous saving.

And so, thanks to the shrewd and far-sighted calculations of the industrial managers, and the skill and problem-solving power of our brilliant but usually modest civil engineers, that class of men who are always at work but talking little, the elegantly fitted and luxurious Burlington trains glide across the state of Iowa with the speed of the wind, but, so far as the passenger within them is concerned, with the gentleness of the breeze.

But while we have thus digressed, No. 5 has been whizzing through the numerous little Iowa towns along the way, making few stops, for its schedule is somewhere around forty miles per hour, and that means pretty high speed in many places. I said numerous Iowa towns. Numerous is the word. Their number is legion. An agricultural State, Iowa supports thousands of towns, but no large cities. Des Moines, the capital, the largest city of Iowa, is often spoken of as an overgrown country village. But that these numerous towns are thrifty is evidenced by the fact that for the number of banks within its borders Iowa stands at the head of the list of the States of the Union. So we are informed.

But no matter how we wander from our subject, or rather from subject to subject, No. 5's course is quite true, and by daylight on the morning of the fifth we were rushing through the towns in Western Iowa, and reached Omaha about one half hour late. No. 5 stops there about one hour, waiting for some other connection. About a quarter to ten we left Omaha, and we were soon speeding swiftly over the rolling swells of Eastern Nebraska's prolific corn belt.

Lack of space here bids us desist till next issue.

LAWS OF THE LAND VERSUS JOSEPH F. SMITH—AND OTHERS.

The only apology that we offer for presenting anything in our columns concerning the Reed Smoot inquiry before the Senatorial Committee is that the advocates and practicers of plural marriage and polygamy are in this senatorial examination being brought prominently before the American public and are being put on record; and it is well enough for us of the Reorganized Church, who have long been antagonizing the dogma of plural marriage and its practice by those advocating it in living, cohabiting with, and holding out to the communities in which they live their plural wives as wives, to become acquainted with what these men testify to.

It must be evident to all thinkers that the example of Joseph F. Smith, president of the Utah Church, in violating the statute law of the State of which he is a resident, and his disregard of the rule of the Church as stated by his predecessors, Wilford Woodruff and Lorenzo Snow, would give countenance and direction to all others who might be situated like himself, and that they too would follow his example and disregard the laws. This is emphasized by the fact that Francis M. Lyman, now the president of the Quorum of the Twelve, and the next in line of succession to the Presidency of the Church, according to the precedents which have been established by them, admits that he is knowingly living in defiance of the law of God, his Church, and the nation. This was followed by Charles F. Merrill, son of Apostle Merrill, himself a polygamist child by his father's third polygamous wife, who stated that he was married in 1887 to a woman who died in 1889, and was married again to one Chloe Hendricks in 1891; that between his first marriage in 1887 and his last in 1891 he married, in 1888, one Anna B. Stoddard, whose rights he disregarded as a wife upon the hypothesis that when he married her he had a wife living, and therefore his marriage to her was not legal; therefore his marriage in 1891 was a legal marriage, notwithstanding he had lived with the one he married in 1888 and had children by her at the same time he was living with the woman he married in 1891. This shows the peculiar sense of honor which he at least as a polygamist had toward the woman whom he regarded as a polygamous wife, about the honorable treatment of which wives Joseph F. Smith, Francis M. Lyman, and Charles F. Merrill had so much to say before the Senatorial Committee. Mr. Charles F. Merrill also stated that his father now had two wives and was living with them both. He also stated that three of his brothers had married plural wives, and that two of his sisters had married into polygamous families.

Upon a cross-examination Apostle Lyman admitted, in reply to questions by Mr. Tayler, that he was conscious that he was disobeying the law of the land and the rule of his Church in living with the two wives who were now living as his polygamous wives. Upon a question by Senator Hoar, "Referring to the rule of which you have spoken, you understand the rule or law of the Church to be the law of God, do you not?" Mr. Lyman answered, "Yes." "Then you are living and intend to live in violation of the law of God and man?" To this Mr. Lyman, elaborating, said: "I fully intend to be true to the law of my country, to my God, and to my obligations and covenants with my wives, and I have never done a thing my conscience did not approve. The situation has been very painful to me; and I have been greatly pained to find myself in opposition to the law of the country and the Church; but I have made a covenant with my wives to love, respect, and honor them, and I could not find it in my heart to separate from them as long as they were true to me." Then said Mr. Hoar: "So you, an apostle of your Church, expecting to succeed Mr. Smith in the Presidency, and in that capacity to receive divine revelations yourself, confess that you are now living and expect to continue to live in disobedience to the law of the country, the law of your Church, and the law of God?" "Yes, I consider it my duty to live with and protect my wives," was Mr. Lyman's answer.

Andrew Jensen, assistant historian of the Mormon Church, testifying before the committee on March 10, in reply to questions, stated that Heber J. Grant, of the Apostles in Utah, had a reputation of being a polygamist, and that he had such reputation when he was appointed by President Joseph F. Smith to be the head of the mission in Japan; that it was understood that Mr. Grant took a wife to Japan and a wife to England, but he could not say whether he took the same woman to both England and Japan. He was asked by Chairman Burrows: "Do you know whether Mr. Smith has ever been interfered with for breaking the laws?" The answer was, "I think he has not." "Do you know of any non-Mormons who have been prosecuted since 1890?" Answer: "I don't know that any non-Mormons are living in Utah with more than one wife openly." In reply to a question from Senator Hoar, Mr. Jensen said that he had never known of any prosecution of any polygamist who continued to cohabit with plural wives he had married prior to the Manifesto of 1890.

This shows conclusively that there had been a continual disregard of the statute law against unlawful cohabitation, without interference by officers, who should be executors of the law, taking any notice of such infraction of the statutory provision. This also puts all the leading officers of the Church in Utah upon record as violators of the laws which President Joseph F. Smith, Apostle Lyman, and Charles F.

Merrill have admitted were the laws of the land, the laws of the Church, and the laws of God.

According to the statement of Mr. Lyman he is the present presiding officer of the Twelve Apostles of the Utah Church. John Henry Smith, a polygamist, is the second member of the Twelve; George Teasdale, a polygamist, is the third apostle; Heber J. Grant, a polygamist, is fourth; John W. Taylor, a polygamist, fifth; and Mr. Merrill, a polygamist, sixth. It is not an unfair assumption that under the circumstances and following the example of President Joseph F. Smith, all of these men are violators of the law, disregarding in principle, doctrine, and practice those revelations of God given to the Church which we quoted at the head of our editorial beginning on page 218 of the SAINTS' HERALD of our last issue of March 9, 1904.

Apropos of what appears above, we quote from an editorial on page 121 of the Millennial Star for February 25, 1904, published in Liverpool, England, the following. Under the caption, "A sufficient answer to Josephites," the editor says:

It is contrary to "Mormon" principles to attack any other church, creed, or religion. "We claim the privilege of worshipping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may." The mission of those who preach the gospel is to build up, not to tear down, and the reward of leading souls to the knowledge of the truth is in itself sufficient to overbalance all falsehood, slanders, calumny, and malice that come to every elder who is doing his duty, just as persecution and death itself were earth's tributes to the Savior of men.

Occasionally, however, it becomes necessary to correct misstatements, and to place matters in their proper light before the Saints, so that they, for themselves, may know how to answer arguments that are brought to bear against the Church of whose divine origin they have already a testimony in their hearts. There is an organization, that sprang into existence some years after the martyrdom of the Prophet Joseph, an organization conceived and founded by those who had apostatized or been cut off from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, that is sending missionaries into the world, not so much to preach the gospel as to work injury to Zion's interests. Their great effort is not to convert mankind to the principles of the truth, to build up the world in faith and in a knowledge of God. All this is secondary to the tearing down of the work of the Lord as established in these last days.

The question is often asked why the elders do not debate and argue with those who represent the Reorganized or "Josephite" Church. Revelation gives sufficient warrant for refusing to do so. When God cast Satan and one third of the host of heaven out of the Celestial Kingdom, did Michael and his angels stop to debate the question with them? They had no need to do so. They held the vantage ground, and all the vile threats, the vindictive curses, the specious arguments of Satan and his fellow comrades could not change the result. To-day the holy Priesthood and the Latter-day Saints hold this same vantage ground against those, a majority of whom they have cast forth from among themselves for wickedness that can not be tolerated in the true Church. With such there is no need of argument or debate. They have been cast out and the "great gulf" is fixed. In saying this we do not deny that there are many sincere, pure, and honest souls that have allied themselves with the Reorganized Church, and not infrequently these become convinced that they have made a mistake in so doing, and seek admission into the true fold.

Whether the Millennial Star, from which we have quoted, is considered an official organ of the Church in Utah, we do not know; but how do the Saints like the statement that the majority of the Reorganized Church have been "cast forth" from among the Utah Church "for wickedness" that could not be "tolerated" in that Church?

Speaking for ourself and brothers, sons of the Prophet Joseph Smith, we distinctly affirm that we were neither cut off nor cast out from among those composing the Utah polygamous Church; and we believe that we can speak safely for ninety-nine hundredths of the entire body of the Reorganized Church that they were not cut off nor cast off from among that Utah Church. Further: speaking for the whole body, we believe we are safe in saying that neither the Millennial Star nor any of those associated in its publication can name a single individual in good standing in the Reorganized Church who has ever been disfellowshipped by the Utah Church for wickedness of any kind. But in case there are among the members of the Reorganized Church those who may have been in connection with the Utah Church before uniting with the Reorganized Church, it was certainly their privilege if they found themselves in error and became satisfied that they ought not to indorse the doctrine and practice of plural marriage or any other of the doctrines taught by the Utah Church, to renounce their allegiance to that Church and unite with the Reorganization upon evidence of their repentance and desire for unity with it, precisely upon the same principle that they are privileged to leave the Reorganization and unite with the Utah Church.

It has been distinctly and persistently affirmed by the Reorganized Church that they had not apostatized from the doctrines of the Church taught during the presidency of the Martyrs, Joseph and Hyrum Smith; nor is there any evidence on record that the men who composed the Reorganization were ever accused, cited for trial, or arraigned before any authorized ecclesiastical court within the Church and by such court authoritatively disfellowshipped for apostasy or for wickedness of any kind. And the Millennial Star has gone out of the realm of truthfulness, and consequently of Christianity, when it makes the assertion that it has done, as we have quoted from its columns.

The sons of the Prophet Joseph Smith were never baptized into allegiance to the doctrine and practice of plural marriage, polygamy, or spiritual wifery as presented by these witnesses who are testifying before the Senatorial Committee on privileges and elections in the Reed Smoot case sitting at Washington, consequently they are not in any sense liable to the charge of apostasy from those doctrines, nor subject to be disfellowshipped by those holding to such doctrine, either in Utah or elsewhere. Joseph Smith, the son of the Prophet Joseph Smith, was baptized by his father into the faith as presented and understood by the Church existing under the force and power of the revelations given to the Church during its formative period, portions of which we have heretofore quoted, and into the fellowship of those who had obeyed like form of doctrine and received like baptism before the dogma and practice of polygamy, plural marriage, or spiritual wifery was either known or taught or practiced. He has never submitted to any other baptism, recognized any other authority of doctrine or faith than that into which he was baptized; and from those doctrines he has never apostatized, as he holds to them still, together with many thousands who are arrayed under the gospel banner of Jesus Christ according to the angel's message, which they are carrying abroad. This is the primary object of their ministry. The antagonism to the Utah Church and its propaganda is a secondary consideration, and is forced upon the Reorganized Church as a necessity, for the reason that they protest against the theories and doctrines taught and practiced by the Utah Church as set forth by the witnesses before the Senatorial Committee, the leading one of whom is Joseph Fielding Smith, President of said Church.

The Reorganized Church is fully persuaded that it is in legal continuation of the Church organized by Joseph Smith and others on April 6, 1830; that the conditions of dogma and practice as set forth by these witnesses before the Senatorial Committee were not a part of the original doctrine of the Church, were contrary to the laws of God, and the practice contrary to the laws of the land, had never become legitimately doctrines of the Church, and could not so become; and against them we have protested in the past, as individuals and as a Church, and shall continue so to do until the Master comes.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

E. H. Durand wrote from Detroit, Michigan, recently that the Detroit Branch is in the best condition he has ever seen it. They are having splendid social meetings, have a good Sunday-school. He gives Bro. Shippy credit for doing a splendid work there.

D. R. Chambers writes from Hamburg, Iowa, that the work there is moving along nicely, and that "all is well."

I. N. Roberts, in making report for the year, says the work in the Southeastern Mission is in a very good shape spiritually, but it is difficult to keep the work on the upward move with so few local workers. There seems to be plenty of openings for work, but they have not been occupied as they should. There is need for more men, and a greater development of the local laborers.

G. T. Griffiths, of the Oregon Mission, reports encouragingly. Three new branches have been organized in the year, at Dora, Portland, and Sagle, and the organizations strengthened in the Bandon, Castle Rock, Condon, Spokane, and Seattle Branch. Four new districts were organized. The branch at Spokane, Washington, now numbers between sixty-five and seventy-five, and prospects seem good for a church building soon. A branch will soon be organized at Rosetta, Idaho. The mission generally seems to be in better condition, and he reports nearly all the branches in active condition.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The recent widely-circulated reports of the "Smoot investigation" has given our brethren in various parts of the country good opportunity to get into the press in articles and interviews setting forth the differences between the Utah religionists and the Reorganized Church. We have seen articles in a number of daily papers published in various parts of the country in which these differences are clearly set forth by some of our brethren. We are glad of the chance to get our beliefs, in contrast to the Utah Church, before the public. The contrast will be to our good.

We recently noted the fact that Doctor Bevan, of Chicago, Illinois, admitted the inability of physicians to cope with the disease pneumonia. One of our brethren who is practicing medicine as a homeopath, sends us clippings from the Medical Visitor in which various practitioners of the homeopathic school tell of the results of their treatment of pneumonia. One, Doctor A. C. Cowperthwaite, of the Chicago Homeopathic Medical College, said Doctor Bevan may have spoken correctly from the standpoint of the allopaths, but did not represent the homeopaths. Doctor Cowperthwaite seems to feel great confidence in the efficacy of homeopathic remedies administered for pneumonia, because they tended to render the tissues unfavorable for the development of the pneumonia germs. Instead of trying to kill the germs by direct treatment the effort is rather to change the conditions which are favorable to the propagation of the germs. Doctor Cowperthwaite calls attention to the fact that "diplococcus pneumoniae can be found in many persons who do not develop pneumonia." "The proof of the pudding," says an old adage, "is in the eating," and theories are best proven by successful experiment and practice. If homeopathy has specific remedies for the dread disease pneumonia, this should show in the practice of homeopaths. We hope they have, and that the old school will take lessons or find specifics also.

In the March 3 issue of the Kansas City Star was an account of the "Smoot investigation" for that day, headed "Living in polygamy now." The column contained a portrait of Joseph Smith, of Lamoni, inscribed "Joseph Smith, president of the present Mormon Church." This error on the part of the Star was corrected in a subsequent issue in an article which clearly sets forth the difference in the belief of the two churches concerning the doctrine of polygamy. The Star stated that "Joseph Smith resents being classed as a polygamist, which the head of the Salt Lake City Church is." The article contains a brief account of the true history of the "polygamy revelation," showing that Brigham Young was responsible for it, and that it came out in 1852. Portraits of both Joseph Smith and Joseph F. Smith accompany the article.

The First Presidency has received from Bro. Joseph F. Burton, Papeete, Tahiti, a copy of the Doctrine and Covenants in the Tahitian language. The copy is a present to the First Presidency by the Saints of the South Sea Island Mission, of which Bro. Burton is in charge. We are glad to know the translation is completed and that it is ready for distribution among the Saints of the South Sea Islands. The book seems to be well printed on a good grade of paper, and is bound substantially in blue cloth.

Reverend T. C. Iliff, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who had for many years charge of the work of that Church in Utah and adjoining States, and whom we met in Salt Lake City in 1889, and in whose new church building we were one of a number of speakers invited to address the audience, the meeting being presided over by Governor Murray, lately lectured at Rock Island, Illinois, on the "Mormons and Mormonism." Of this lecture Bro. Edward Rannie wrote as follows under date of March 10:

"The lecture by Doctor T. C. Iliff occurred in Rock Island. He was the fairest and most gentlemanly person I ever heard lecture on the question. It was free from the usual stories about Joseph Smith being a "money digger," "sheep-thief," etc. Bro. J. B. Johnson, Srs. Louise B. Suman, Clara Johnson, and myself were present. The two sisters had previously written him in regard to the Reorganization. He made that the introductory part of his lecture and made the distinction very clear, spoke very highly of our people, and said we were working with them earnestly against polygamy. Also, that polygamy was introduced after the Mormons went to Utah. He denounced mob violence and the cold-blooded murder of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. We could not expect any more than what he did. It is a natural consequence for him to be opposed to our doctrine; he could not be a consistent Methodist and do otherwise."

We are pleased to learn that Reverend Iliff was so fair.

POLYGAMY.

DO THE THREE RECORDS, WHICH THE REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS CLAIMS TO BE DIVINE, TEACH OR UPHOLD POLYGAMY?

As a Church we acknowledge the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, as containing the will of God made known to man. The covenant made upon entering into the Church, through the waters of baptism, is to the effect that we will conform to the word of God as found in those sacred records; and he or she who is found deviating therefrom is considered a covenant-breaker, and unless they repent are not accounted worthy members of the Church and are expelled from the same. As a Church we hold that God is infinite in love, truth, justice, mercy, goodness, wisdom, knowledge, and power, that he changes not. (Malachi 3:6.) "With whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." (James 1:17.) "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever." (Hebrews 13:8.) His purpose is eternal. (Ephesians 3:11.) Hence his plan for the effectual working of that purpose is eternal, and "his purposes fail not." That plan is revealed in his word, and "the word of the Lord endureth forever." (1 Peter 1:25.)

In referring to the Bible for evidence we shall quote the Holy Scriptures as translated by the inspiration from God by his servant Joseph Smith; not because it differs from the authorized version in this particular, for we know of no difference as to principle upon this subject; but as this record has been accepted by the Church, we wish to show the harmony that exists in these three records, especially on this particular subject. We shall refer to the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, as accepted by the General Assembly of the Church on the seventeenth day of August, 1835. We do not accept the edition published by the Utah Church, in 1876, or any later edition published by that Church.

We enter upon our research commencing, as stated, with the Inspired Translation of the Holy Scriptures, and continue with the records in their order.

The purpose of God in the creation will be seen from the following scriptures:

Thus saith the Lord that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited; I am the Lord, and there is none else.—Isaiah 15: 18.

And I, God, created man in mine own image, in the image of mine Only Begotten created I him; male and female created I them. And I, God, blessed them, and said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply and replenish the earth.—Genesis 1: 29, 30.

And I, the Lord God, caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept, and I took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh in the stead thereof; and the rib, which I, the Lord God had taken from man, made I a woman, and brought her unto the man. And Adam said, This I know now is bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh. She shall be called woman, because she was taken out of man. Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife; and they shall be one flesh.—Genesis 2: 28-30.

From the foregoing we learn that God created the earth to be inhabited, and man that he might inhabit it. "The heavens, even the heavens, are the Lord's; but the earth hath he given to the children of men."—Psalm 115: 16. And in order that it might be inhabited, God said, of man, "Male and female created I them." Not two or more women for one man, nor two men for one woman. And God gave the woman unto the man; and the divine order of marriage, as made known to Adam, was, "Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife; and they shall be one flesh." This order was confirmed by Jesus Christ, who said, "But from the beginning of the creation, God made them male and female. For this cause shall a man leave his father, and mother, and cleave to his wife; and they two shall be one flesh; so then they are no more two but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."—Mark 10: 6, 7.

Paul shows that the same divine order was the one acknowledged of God in his day. (Ephesians 5: 31.) But disobedience opened the way for the spirit of lust, and, "When lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin."—James 1: 15. And polygamy was very early the child of lust. Lamech was the first polygamist of whom record is found in the Old Testament. (Genesis 5: 30-38.) It is written:

And Noah and his sons hearkened unto the Lord, and gave heed; and they were called the sons of God. And when these men began to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them, the sons of men saw that their daughters were fair, and they took them wives even as they chose. And the Lord said unto Noah, the daughters of thy sons have sold themselves, for behold, mine anger is kindled against the sons of men, for they will not hearken to my voice. And it came to pass, that Noah prophesied, and taught the things of God, even as it was in the beginning.—Genesis 8: 1-4.

From the foregoing statement I understand that they practiced polygamy, or its kindred evil, having a community of wives; and that the granddaughters of Noah were led away by the men of the world; and Noah, as God's prophet, cried out against their evil works, and protested against their departure from the divine order. And because of this and kindred evils, "The Lord said unto Noah, My Spirit shall not always strive with man," and the result was destruction by the flood.

The Almighty, true to his eternal purpose and plan for the re-peopling of the world, as in the garden of Eden, had preserved Noah and his three sons, and one wife to each man. "And God blessed Noah and his sons, and said unto them, Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth."—Genesis 9: 8. Had polygamy been God's order for raising up a righteous seed, that would have been a good time to establish it. The Prophet Malachi declares the divine order for raising up a righteous seed. Judah had not only broken the law by marrying the daughter of a strange god, but, the Prophet says:

This have ye done again, covering the altar of the Lord with tears, with weeping, and with crying out, insomuch that he regardeth not the offering any more, or receiveth it with good will at your hands. Yet ye say, Wherefore? Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously; yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant. And did not he make one? Yet had he the residue of the Spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a goodly seed.—Malachi 2: 13-15.

From the foregoing evidences, it is clear that God's order for the peopling of the earth, and for raising up a righteous seed, was and is monogamic. And the divine record assures us that his purposes fail not. (Isaiah 14:24). The fact that men of God had departed from this order, neither nullifies the order of God, nor justifies such departure, nor is it any evidence that God winked at such departure. It is only evidence that they were men of "like passions as we are," and that they were liable to go astray. Abraham's departure was not by command of God. Nor was it approved or winked at by the divine Being. It was Sarah's lack of faith in God's promise that caused her to tell him to go in unto Hagar, and it resulted in Sarah being made an object of contempt in the eyes of the bondwoman, which filled her heart with envy and jealousy.

Thirteen years from the birth of Ishmael, God condescended to appear to him again, and said unto him, "I, the Almighty God, give unto thee a commandment thou shalt walk uprightly before me, and be thou perfect."—Genesis 17:1. From this language it would appear that God had not approved of Abraham's conduct, that he had not "walked uprightly," neither had been perfect before the Lord.

Jacob's polygamy was brought about by the deceitfulness of Laban, in palming Leah upon him, when he had worked seven years for Rachel (Genesis 29), and was afterwards extended through the envyings and jealousies of Rachel and Leah. The polygamous practices of David and Solomon are nowhere approved of by God. Israel's kings were forbidden to "multiply wives unto themselves." (Deuteronomy 17:17.) And it can not be that God approved of their disobedience to his law. Indeed, the Book of Mormon declares that, in these things, their doings were an abomination in his sight, as will hereafter be shown. Solomon undoubtedly saw his great error and wrote thus to his son:

Let thy fountain be blessed: and rejoice with the wife of thy youth. Let her be as the loving, kind, and pleasant roe; let her breasts satisfy thee at all times; and be thou ravished always with her love. And why wilt thou, my son, be ravished with a strange woman, and embrace the bosom of a stranger?—Proverbs 5: 18-20.

Thus we find the Bible as translated by Joseph Smith in 1832 and 1833 is directly and emphatically opposed to the spirit of lust, whether in the form of "polygamy,"

"community of wives," or in the practice of "free love" or common adultery. (See Revelation 21: 27; 22: 15.)

We turn our attention to the Book of Mormon, the first edition, and with Isaiah we say, "To the law and to the testimony; and if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isaiah 8: 20. This book claims to be a history of God's dealings with his people on this continent, who were led out of Jerusalem in the days of Zedekiah, king of Judah, prior to the destruction of Jerusalem by the king of Babylon, about six hundred years before the birth of Christ. The purpose of God in leading them out of Jerusalem into this land is stated as follows: "Wherefore, thus saith the Lord: I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch, from the fruit of the loins of Joseph."—Book of Jacob, chapter 2. In order to bring about this purpose, he was true to the primeval order. He brought out Lehi and his wife and their four sons,—Laman, Lemuel, Sam, and Nephi, and Zoram, the servant of Laban. (First Book of Nephi, chapter 1.) There was also Ishmael and his wife, their two sons and their families, also Ishmael's five daughters (chapter 2), making just one woman to each man who left Jerusalem. For God had commanded their fathers "that they should have save it were one wife; and concubines they should have none; and there should not be whoredoms committed among them."—Book of Jacob, chapter 2. But the Nephites, like the Israelites, soon forgot the law of God, and yielded to their evil lusts, for we read:

And now it came to pass that the people of Nephi, under the reign of the second king, began to grow hard in their hearts, and indulge themselves somewhat in wicked practices, such as like unto David of old, desiring many wives and concubines, and also Solomon, his son.—Book of Jacob, chap. 1, p. 124.

The Prophet Jacob rebuked them because of their pride, then added:

But the word of God burthens me because of your grosser crimes. For behold, thus saith the Lord: This people begin to wax in iniquity; they understand not the scriptures: for they seek to excuse themselves in committing whoredoms, because of the things which were written concerning David, and Solomon his son. Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord. Wherefore, thus saith the Lord: I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch, from the fruit of the loins of Joseph. Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: for there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none: for I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of woman. And whoredoms is an abomination before me: thus saith the Lord of hosts. Wherefore, this people shall keep my commandments, saith the Lord of hosts, or cursed be the land for their sakes. For if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people: otherwise, they shall hearken unto these things. For behold, I, the Lord, have seen the sorrow, and heard the mourning of the daughters of my people, in the land of Jerusalem; yea, and in all the lands of my people, because of the wickedness and abominations of their husbands. And I will not suffer, saith the Lord of hosts, that the cries of the fair daughters of this people, which I have led out of the land of Jerusalem, shall come up unto me, against the men of my people, saith the Lord of hosts; for they shall not lead away captive, the daughters of my people, because of their tenderness, save I shall visit them with a sore curse, even unto destruction: for they shall not commit whoredoms, like unto them of old, saith the Lord of hosts.—Book of Jacob, chap. 2, pp. 126, 127.

On page 128 the prophet continued his warning, and declared that God had commanded their fathers to observe the law given in the Garden of Eden, and said:

Behold, the Lamanites, your brethren, whom ye hate, . . . are more righteous than you; for they have not forgotten the commandment of the Lord, which was given unto our fathers, that they should have, save it were one wife; and concubines they should have none; and there should not be whoredoms committed among them. And now this commandment they observe to keep; wherefore, because of this observance in keeping this commandment, the Lord God will not destroy them.

From this we learn that the Lord had already commanded the fathers to observe the divine order established in the Garden of Eden, and that in consequence of the Lamanites keeping this command, their posterity was still spared, notwithstanding their departure in other ways. This is indubitable evidence of the enormity of the crime of polygamy. No wonder Jacob called it "a grosser crime"!

The next instance of which we read is that of King Noah:

And now it came to pass that Zeniff conferred the kingdom upon Noah, one of his sons; therefore Noah began to reign in his stead; and he did not walk in the way of his father. For behold, he did not keep the commandments of God, but he did walk after the desires of his own heart. And he had many wives and concubines. And he did cause his people to commit sin, and do that which was abominable in the sight of the Lord. Yea, and they did commit whoredoms, and all manner of wickedness.

Their polygamous practices were branded as "whoredoms." It must be the same in the sight of God to-day, for he does not change. On page 179 it is stated that God sent a prophet among them saying:

Behold, thus saith the Lord, and thus hath he commanded me, saying, Go forth and say unto this people, thus saith the Lord: Woe be unto this people, for I have seen their abominations, and their wickedness, and their whoredoms; and except they repent I will visit them in mine anger.

Then he told them what calamities should come upon them unless they repented.

We have already seen from the book of Jacob, as found on page 128, that God had commanded the fathers "that they should have, save it were one wife, and concubines they should have none." And King Benjamin, on page 159, shows the necessity of observing all things which had been spoken by their fathers as commanded by the Lord, and adds:

And now, I say unto you, my brethren, that after ye have known and have been taught all these things, if ye should transgress, and go contrary to that which hath been spoken, that ye do withdraw yourselves from the Spirit of the Lord, that it may have no place in you to guide you in wisdom's paths, that ye may be blessed, prospered, and preserved. I say unto you, that the man that doeth this, the same cometh out in open rebellion against God.

King Mosiah calls attention to the wickedness of King Noah, and warns them against such evils (page 218). In the book of Alma, chapter 11, page 268, we find these teachings presented to the people:

Now those priests which did go forth among the people, did preach against all lyings, and deceivings, and envyings, and strifes, and malice, and revellings, and stealing, robbing, plundering, murdering, committing adultery, and all manner of lasciviousness, crying that these things ought not so to be.

We find no account of polygamy being practiced among the Israelites until we come to the reign of Riplakish, of whom it is written:

And it came to pass that Riplakish did not do that which was right in the sight of the Lord, for he did have many wives and concubines, and did lay that upon men's shoulders which was grievous to be borne; yea, he did tax them with heavy taxes.—Page 558.

Here the practice of polygamy was denounced as being not right in the sight of the Lord, showing that God changes not. What is wicked among one part of God's people is wicked among all of his people in every age, and will bring his condemnation upon them. Wherever this evil practice is mentioned in this record, it is denounced as "whoredoms" and "abominations." There is not one word in the Book of Mormon sanctioning or condoning it; but on the contrary, wherever it is referred to, it is denounced and the people are warned against its practice. Thus the Bible and the Book of Mormon agree, and if either is the more emphatic against it, it is the Book of Mormon.

We will examine the law as given in these last days for the government of the Church of Christ on this particular,—the law of marriage. In section 42: 5 of Doctrine and Covenants we read:

The elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them.

In paragraph 7 of this section it is written:

Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit; and if he repent not, he shall be cast out. Thou shalt not commit adultery; and he that committeth adultery and repenteth not, shall be cast out.

Reader, do you see any chance for the practice of polygamy in that? Are any of the creeds of the day more emphatic than that? That is the law given to this Church from the beginning, and only apostates and perverters of the truth have ignored it, and have sought to abrogate it. But "the word of the Lord endureth for ever," and terrible condemnation awaits those who have perverted his word. Again in paragraph 20 of this section:

Behold, verily I say unto you, that whatsoever persons among you having put away their companions for the cause of fornication, or in other words, if they shall testify before you in all lowliness of heart that this is the case, ye shall not cast them out from among you; but if ye shall find that any persons have left their companions for the sake of adultery, and they themselves are the offenders, and their companions are living, they shall be cast out from among you.

In paragraph 22 of this section, we read:

And if any man or woman shall commit adultery, he or she shall be tried before two elders of the church or more, and every word shall be established against him or her by two witnesses of the church, and not of the enemy; but if there are more than two witnesses it is better; but he or she shall be condemned by the mouth of two witnesses.

Thus whoredoms in every form must be punished.

In paragraph 3 of section 49, we have the law established of God in the beginning, by which the earth was to be peopled:

And again, I say unto you, that whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made.

We examine the marriage ritual observed by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in section 111, paragraph 2:

Marriage should be celebrated with prayer and thanksgiving; and at the solemnization, the persons to be married, standing together, the man on the right, and the woman on the left, shall be addressed, by the person officiating, as he shall be directed by the Holy Spirit; and if there be no legal objections, he shall say, calling each by their names: "You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others during your lives." And when they have answered "Yes," he shall pronounce them "husband and wife" in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by virtue of the laws of the country and authority vested in him: "May God add his blessings and keep you to fulfill your covenants from henceforth and forever. Amen."

The fourth paragraph of section 111, says:

All legal contracts of marriage made before a person is baptized into this church, should be held sacred and fulfilled. Inasmuch as this Church of Christ has been reproached with the crime of fornication, and polygamy: we declare that we believe that one man should have one wife; and one woman but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again.

In section 58, paragraph 5, it is written:

Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until He reigns whose right it is to reign.

In view of the foregoing evidence, from the standard works, which all officers and members acknowledge as the law to govern the Church, is there any legitimate means by which polygamy can become a law of the Church? Can God stultify his own word? If not, what becomes of the pretended revelation authorizing polygamy? Has not the introduction of that doctrine done violence to God's law? Could its introduction be anything less than a willful and damnable apostasy from the divine order? Even had the name of our martyred prophet been lent by him—which thing we believe he never did,—could that have sanctified the unholy thing? Eternally no! But Brigham Young, knowing that his own name had not sufficient weight to stamp the damning infamy upon the hearts and minds of the Saints, forged the name of the Prophet as the only means of leading them from the truth of God. And the enemies of truth of every shade from the highest of the hireling clergy to the meanest devotee of crime and debauchery, swallow down, as a sweet morsel, the vile falsehood, and roll it over their tongues as honey to their taste, that Joseph Smith was a polygamist, when the same people would not accept the most solemn testimony upon any God-given truth from the lips of these men. Polygamy is not, never was, and never can be, a doctrine and practice of the true Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

It is claimed by our enemies that the fact of polygamy being introduced is indubitable evidence that this Church is not of divine origin. Does the practice of polygamy by David prove that he was not a prophet of God? That God never called him from the sheepfold? That his psalms are ribald songs instead of the inspiration of heaven? Does Solomon's departure from the divine order prove that God never appeared to him, nor acknowledged him? That his proverbs, so replete with wisdom, are but the drivellings of an impostor? Does Abraham's liaison with Hagar prove that he was never the friend of God? That God never made choice of him to be the father of his chosen people? Does the fact of the Nicolaitans among the seven churches of Asia, having a community of wives, prove that God had never acknowledged them as his church?

Their departure from God's order of marriage simply proves that they were human and "men of like passions" as other men, and not governing their passions, they were led away by their lusts. But when they repented of their sins and returned to the divine order, then they were accepted of Him and their sins were forgiven, and they were used as instruments in his hands to accomplish the purpose whereunto he had called them. If the departure of those men from the purity of God's law proves that God had never called them to be his ministers, what becomes of the foundation of every shade of Christianity? But "the foundation of God standeth sure"! The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has been cursed with the foul blot of polygamy, but as God, in fulfillment of the prophets, hath set his hand in these last days to establish his kingdom upon the earth, in answer to the prayer taught by Christ to his disciples, and which every child in Christendom has been taught to lisp, it would be passing strange if the enemy of souls had not put forth his mightiest efforts to frustrate the divine purpose, and to that end forged the name of Jehovah that he might be more successful in his effort. Nor would it be anything new, in the plans of the arch enemy, if he sought to use some whom God had called to aid in the divine purpose, and thereby obtain a leverage which he could not find outside of God's church. But I thank my heavenly Father that he has preserved to himself a remnant who have not bowed the knee to the Baal of polygamy, and though they are made to suffer because of the shame that has come to the fair name of the Church, this remnant will continue, by the grace and power of God, to hold up the standard of truth to the gaze of the whole world, and declare the righteousness of God and the power of the gospel of Christ until he shall come in the clouds of heaven to "be glorified in his saints, and admired in all them that believe."

With kindly desires for all, and hatred to none, praying that this effort may be productive of good, I remain, yours,
CHARLES DERRY.

THE STANDING MINISTRY.

SELF-SUPPORTING AND OTHERWISE.

In a letter from St. Joseph, as published in HERALD of February 17, the brother touches on some matters of considerable interest. It certainly is very unfortunate if the idea is had that a servant of God is "looking back and unfit for the kingdom of God" when he undertakes to support himself and family while engaged in gospel work; unless it might be one whose entire time was required by the Lord. One's knowledge of the gospel must be very limited indeed to suppose that laboring for the necessaries of life, or to seek to be self-supporting, is in the least degree unministerial or displeasing to the Lord. The history of the Church from the very beginning shows that God's ministry have been largely self-supporting; and their effort has ever been to make themselves as little burden to the Church as possible.

Of late years there has seemed to be a tendency, in certain quarters, to underestimate the work of the local ministry; and a corresponding tendency upon the part of some to get into the missionary field. As a result the local workers have become so scarce that many of the branches and districts that were formerly supplied with local officers have to depend almost entirely upon the missionaries to keep up their organizations. This, too, in the face of the fact that the draft on church funds is more than the Bishop is able to meet, and the Church going deeper and deeper in debt.

We frequently hear the question asked, Where is the wisdom of sending out so many missionaries, some of whom are by no means representative men, but who would make good local workers, only to leave the branches destitute of officers unless the missionaries act as local officers? Some think they see a little danger here of the Church drifting into a paid ministry, something the same as the sectarian world. We believe it to be the duty of all, not only of the standing ministry, but of the traveling ministry as well, to be as nearly self-supporting as possible. One thing is very evident now, and that is, there is more demand for standing ministers, ministers to nourish and care for the flock, than there is for missionaries; for a large portion of the missionaries are hindered in their work of warning the world by the care of branches and districts. The Lord directs that the burden and care in organized districts or conferences be left to standing ministry, under the Presidency, while they—Twelve and Seventy—push their ministry into other fields. (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 8.)

There are some things, however, I can not at present see in the same light as our St. Joseph brother. I have carefully looked over the references he gives in Doctrine and Covenants, and from these I can not find any more provision made for supporting the traveling ministry than the standing ministry. Neither do I find that "the standing ministry are not under obligations to travel." One of the references expressly states that the high priest should travel, to warn the people, not only in his own place, but in the adjoining countries, and to "devote his whole time;" also suggests financial support in the following language:

It is my will that my servant, Warren A. Cowdery, should be appointed and ordained a presiding high priest over my church in the land of Freedom, and the regions round about, and should preach my everlasting gospel, and lift up his voice and warn the people, not only in his own place, but in the adjoining countries, and devote his whole time to this high and holy calling which I now give unto him, seeking diligently the kingdom of heaven and its righteousness, and all things necessary shall be added thereunto; for the laborer is worthy of his hire.—Doctrine and Covenants 103: 1.

"All things necessary" is all that either the traveling or standing ministry should expect to receive. When this rule obtains, those who can fill their office and calling and at the same time labor to support their families, should do so. Or those who have been able to lay by sufficient to sustain their families, do not need to call for help from the Church. Those who can not do the work that the Church requires of them without help, should receive the help needed. This seems to be God's plan.

That high priests are under obligation to travel is plainly stated in a revelation given in 1894 in the following language:

The twelve, and the seventy under their direction, together with such high priests and elders as can travel and preach as missionaries, shall be free to wait upon their ministry in gospel work, leaving the branches and districts where organization is effected to the care and administration of the standing ministers, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, so far as possible.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 7.

This last clause, "so far as possible," should not be lost sight of.

From the above it is clearly the duty of high priests, under the conditions named, to travel and preach; also the elders and priests. The law seems also to contemplate the setting of high priests over branches and districts, to devote all their time, as in the case of Warren A. Cowdery. If this was necessary in the land of Freedom, why may not the same be necessary in St. Joseph, St. Louis, Chicago, and other places? The answer may be, We do not need their services; we, as local officers, are sufficiently able to care for the work without help from the general Church. But in this who is to be the judge? It would seem that those in general charge should be best able to determine in this matter. The Lord has directed that organized districts should be under the Presidency of the Church. They, therefore, are the authority best qualified to say what the needs of the branches are. The local officers may be sufficient to do the preaching in the branch, conduct the Sunday-school, and lead the prayer-meetings. But there is a lot of work for a pastor outside of all this. Difficulties often arise in a branch which, on account of the lack of time to attend to, on the part of the local ministry, are permitted to run till they sometimes disturb the peace and even threaten the life of the entire branch, retarding the work not only in the immediate neighborhood but damaging it in other places as well. All of which might have been prevented if some one had the time to attend to the matter at the start.

Then, too, in a branch where there are so many local workers, there is generally a need for some one to have the time to open up new places, start missions, and find openings for the local workers to keep busy. It by no means falls upon the city missionary to do all the preaching in the branch. He may not be required to work in the branches at all, but rather to push the work in new localities. This, however, as we before stated, is to be left to those in charge to determine.

The St. Joseph Branch seems fortunate in having so many able ministers self-supporting, but not all branches in large cities are so situated. The cry seems to be general for help from the general Church. I see nothing wrong when the work is such as to require all the time of a servant of God, that his needs should be met, whether he be a member of the standing or of the traveling ministry. And we hope the time is not far distant when the local organizations will be considered more directly under the Presidency of the Church, and that they will see that the proper officers are supplied to nourish these organizations, so far as is possible, that the body may be strengthened. In the meantime, let no one think that they must be in the missionary work, or under general Church appointment, in order to have "hold of the plow." The Lord only requires our reasonable service. We are not all money makers, nor are we all preachers; but we can all be workers, and if we can but find our place and work in it faithfully we shall be "laborers together with God."

DANCING.

I know this is an old subject written about times without number; but there still seems to be a need of writing about it, for we constantly hear the question asked, "What is the real harm in dancing?" And often with deepest regret do we see professing Christians indulging in it, and saying they can see no harm in it.

I will endeavor to give my reasons for believing there is harm in dancing, and I believe I know whereof I write, as I have danced, and have seen and known these evils. In the first place, if there is a low element of society in the neighborhood, it will be almost sure to be there, and can you find a neighborhood that has not the low element? And mingling with society lower than your own standard you are apt to be brought down to its level; certainly you are not lifted higher morally, for if you were you would leave the dancing-hall in disgust. Look around and see the ruined girls and young men; glance back and see if their first start downward was not when they began to "run" to dances. They were possibly weak morally or the dance would not have led them to ruin. A great many of these fallen ones are from respectable families and would not have attended dances if respectable people did not go to such places. And, my dear Christian friend, you are not guiltless if you are one of the respectable ones who attend dances. Paul said, "If meat causes my brother to offend I will eat no meat while the world stands." So can not you say the same in regard to the dance?

Your very presence in the dancing-hall does one of two things, either casts a reflection on you or the church you represent or adds a seeming respectability to a pastime which may be some one's ruin.

You know the aim of every true Christian is to influence some one to do better and obey the gospel, and if you attend dances, which every one concedes is worldly, are you any better than the world? The world says not, so where is your influence? Our Bible says, "Be not conformed to the world," and how can you bring forth fruit to perfection if you are "choked with the pleasures of this world"? (See Luke 8: 19.)

One great evil of dancing is the leading away of your mind from things spiritual. It creates a taste for worldly amusement until spiritual things become actually distasteful, and then where are you? Not a Christian surely, for Christian means Christlike. It paves the way for other sin, and you are paving the way for others to follow in your footsteps. Are you not following in another's footsteps?

You may think you are as good as though you never had danced, but you are not. By what do we measure goodness? It is by obedience to the written word. If we break one command we are that much a transgressor, we have that much to repent of, and we are good or bad in that degree that we are obedient or disobedient.

I have heard some claim that dancing was allowable from a Bible standpoint, as it says, "There is a time to dance." But it says in the same chapter that "there is a time to kill," but who will excuse me on that ground should I kill one of their loved ones?

If you are at a gathering and the majority conclude to dance you need not be afraid of the sneers of the world if you put on your wraps and go home; the world, or at least that part whose opinions have any weight, will honor you for it, and, what is more consequential, the Church will rejoice. On the other hand, if you stay when you could just as well leave the Church (that part that hears of it) will be grieved and the world will make slighting remarks of you. I know this from facts. If you go or stay where there is dancing at the request of some one whom you love or respect, remember that he does not love you as he should or he would not ask you to do anything that is against your conscience. And no person can be our conscience. Last but not least is the effect on health. We have no right needlessly to expose our health, thereby impairing our usefulness or making ourselves a burden to others. I know there are many worse things than dancing, but that there is enough evil in it that we can afford to let it alone, is my honest belief.

THE TELEPHONE.

[Editorial from the New York Times.]

In an address delivered before the Underwriter's Club in this city on November 24, Mr. C. J. H. Woodbury, of Boston, an officer of the American Bell Telephone Company, gave some figures of exceeding interest respecting the telephone development in this country which will assist one who considers them thoughtfully to appreciate the extent the simple and familiar act of sending or receiving a communication by this method sets in motion titanic forces and to understand the magnitude and mechanical perfection of the plant provided for his convenience.

The amount of line built and maintained by the companies operating the Bell system averages 3.29 miles to each instrument, and, excluding the long-distance lines, fifty per cent of the wire is underground. When a call it made, the average amount of line placed at the disposal of the person who makes it is 6.58 miles. That anything like intercommunication is possible becomes the more a cause for wonder when it is remembered that the modern switchboard is a marvel of complexity in design and construction. It is the evolution of a quarter of a century, resulting from the collaboration of many experts working together for a purpose. Its mechanical intricacy will be better appreciated when it is remembered that even with the advantage of modern machinery and skill in manufacture it requires as long to build and install a switchboard as to build and equip a merchantman for foreign trade, the time being from one to two and a half years, and the cost varying from $500 to $600 per square foot for the smaller installations adequate for cities of 50,000 inhabitants, to $1,200 per square foot for the larger switchboards. The central station equipment, however, is but a small part of the whole cost of a telephone system, altogether it represents the greatest concentration of value in relatively small space. The life of a switchboard is usually short. Constant repairs, replacements, and extensions rapidly deteriorate it, and the effect of wear is distanced by the more rapid progress of invention and improvement. In a few years it becomes obsolete and the costly apparatus is burned to recover the copper it contains.

The result of systematic work in the perfection of appliances and the training of operatives has reduced within the past five years the average time of making complete local connections 3.9 seconds. This may appear to be a very little net gain, but as applied to all the telephone connections of the Bell system it amounts to 10,098 hours a day saved of the subscriber's time, or about three and nine tenths years for each business day of eight hours. The system provides for 9,322,951 calls per day, or nearly 2,500 calls a year originating at each telephone service. As one telephone is called for each one used, the average employment of each telephone in use is 5,000 times a year.

When one uses a long-distance telephone a large amount of property is placed at his service. For example, speaking from Boston to Omaha, as one business concern does every morning, the apparatus used, at the present price of copper, represents an investment of over $283,000, and it requires the service of nine skilled operators to make the necessary connections. The weight of the copper wire in the connection is 1,131,000 pounds, or 565½ tons, and it seems very like a miracle that the human voice can cause this immense mass of metal to vibrate in unison throughout its several parts, even to the delicate shades of tone which distinguish one voice from another, and that the instrument at the end is so sensitive that it can catch and repeat these vibrations and transmute them into articulate speech.

And it is all so new. Less than thirty years ago the telephone was an "over-capitalized" dream, and the stock of the Bell company could scarcely be quoted low enough to find a purchaser. Twenty years ago it was the luxury of the rich. What it has become in the past ten years we can best appreciate by reflecting what would happen if for any reason the telephone lines should be put out of use for a week.—Electrical Review, December 5, 1903.

CONFUCIANISM DECAYING.

Careful observers in China are noticing the gradual decay of Confucianism. Its sway over the minds of the Chinese "literati" is by no means what it was even as recently as twenty or thirty years ago. It is true that there is apparently no marked diminution in the number of ancestral halls, the existence of which all over the land serves as an indication of the vitality of the state religion; yet, nevertheless, the more the country is permeated with western knowledge, the more are the minds of the educated class becoming alienated from the teachings to which before unquestioning obedience was accorded.

The reason for this state of things it is not difficult to comprehend. It is gradually dawning upon the educated young men of China that a knowledge of the Confucian classics is no longer what it was from a commercial point of view. And the comprehension of this fact is sufficient to account for the diminishing interest that is being taken in the acquisition of Confucian learning. It must also be admitted that, as the broader and deeper knowledge introduced and inculcated by western scholars is being assimilated, there is an ever-increasing realization of how inadequate Confucianism is, notwithstanding its merits, to meet the requirements of the present day.—North China Herald.

WEALTH THAT IS DEAD.

It is astonishing how much of the world's wealth is locked up in diamonds, things which are of no earthly use to anybody except for the mere purpose of ornamentation. The money spent for diamonds every year would build fleets of peace and war, equip and pay armies, almost wipe out poverty in city slums, endow hospitals and schools, build railroads and create great libraries. Every now and then some American woman has trouble with customs authorities over the duty on jewels the value of which represents a sum sufficient for an ordinary man to raise and educate a large family of children.

Millionaires and crowned heads possess diamonds which represent idle wealth sufficient to build whole streets of model tenement-houses for the poor. The diamonds belonging to the German Empress are valued at $1,250,000. The crown jewels of England, largely made up of diamonds, exceed in value $15,- 000,000. The imperial crown alone contains 2,783 splendid diamonds. Besides this, the king and queen possess diamonds to the value of about a million more dollars, which are their private property. The crown jewels of Russia represent about $20,000,000. No one knows just how much the diamonds possessed by the Sultan of Turkey are worth, but they represent many millions. Many native princes in India own diamonds of great value. The gems of the Gaekwar of Baroda, consisting largely of diamonds, are valued at $15,000,000. Among his treasures is a carpet made entirely of diamonds and pearls, all matched and blended. Many churches, too, in the old world are rich in diamonds. The largest diamond in the world, the Excelsior, found at Jagersfontein in 1883, is so valuable that a special syndicate has been formed to stand the expense and risk of cutting it.

A large part of the world's gold, too, is locked away in royal treasure houses in the form of dishes or ornaments. In the Kremlin are many great gold dishes, so heavy that a strong man cannot lift them, and many millions of dollars' worth of gold made into ornamental forms. The gold dinner service at Windsor Castle is valued at $4,000,000, and a golden peacock with jeweled tail there is valued at $400,000. In the treasure house of the Sultan at Constantinople are tons of gold plate, and great golden bowls filled to the brim with rare pearls. Gold in every form which the ingenuity of man has been able to invent is scattered about in splendid confusion in the palaces by the Bosphorus. The Shah of Persia has golden ornaments and diamonds stowed away in his palace which, turned into money, would enable him to build railroads and open up his country to civilization.

There are millions untold hidden away in holes in the earth, in clefts in the rocks, in crannies under the eaves, in tin cans among rubbish heaps, in old women's stockings and bustles and in the thousand and one out-of-the-way places that the ingenuity of men and women can devise. This is the case in all countries of the world, more or less, but especially so in India and the East, where centuries of tyranny has caused every man to fear his neighbor, especially when that neighbor is in power. Or when this wealth is not hidden away it takes the form of nose and ear-rings for the women, ankle bands for children and slaves, and a myriad other uses that remove the precious metals as effectually from general circulation and utility as if they were cast into the sea—not to mention the untold millions that have been engulfed in old ocean's capacious and all-devouring maw.—Mining and Engineering Review.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

If and Perhaps.

"If every one were kind and sweet,
And every one were jolly;
If every heart with gladness beat,
And none were melancholy;
If none should murmur or complain
And every one should labor
In useful work, and each were fain
To help and cheer his neighbor—
Then what a blessed world 'twould be,
For you and me, just you and me!

"And if, perhaps, we both should try
That glorious time to hurry;
If you and I, just you and I,
Should smile and never worry;
If we should grow, just you and I,
Kinder and sweeter hearted—
Perhaps in some near by and by
That good time might get started.
Then what a blessed world 'twould be,
For you and me, just you and me!"—Selected.

Dear Sisters: Have any of you ever thought that you would like to have lived in the less strenuous times of our grandmothers? There have been such feelings in my mind at times when I have been thinking of the increase of wickedness and terrible disasters of these troublous days. I have been brought to think differently, however, and to realize that in being permitted to live upon the earth in the age so long looked forward to by prophets of old, when an angel should fly through the midst of heaven, bearing the everlasting gospel, and in receiving a knowledge of that gospel, I have been indeed highly favored of the Lord. And those who have been thus favored "should warn others," that all the honest in heart may receive of his light and blessing. O solemn responsibility, but glorious opportunity! My heart is melted when I think how much he has given into our hands, and I do marvel that I can ever, even for a moment, let the cares and worries of this world come between me and the full, loving, and willing service which is his due. Not that I imagine that I am required to neglect home duties in order that I may seek to engage in work which may be seen and perhaps commended by others. Not that. But I do long to purge myself of selfishness and of all that is not pleasing in my Father's sight; that my life at home, among my friends, and even among casual acquaintances, may be so consistent that what little influence I may have, will all be toward helping carry forward his righteous purposes.

How discouraging it is to find myself advancing so little! I, who have been raised in the Church and have had so many advantages which others have lacked. Why is it that I am still hampered with so many weaknesses, when I try so hard to overcome them! Perhaps it is that I may be kept humble, and sympathetic for the failings of others. That thought, however, shall not weaken my determination to rid myself of the faults I see so plainly that I almost despair of ever reaching the plane designed for the children of God to occupy.

One day when I was indulging some such train of thought as the above, there came to mind a saying of our Savior with which I have always been familiar, but now it came with a new significance: "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled."

O the sweet comfort with which I was filled when I thought of these words! They seemed to convey the assurance that I should be enabled finally to overcome, for I feel that I do hunger and thirst for righteousness, not that I may be better than others, but that I might present myself a pleasing sacrifice unto Him who has poured out upon his children the richness of his divine love, and rewards by the sweet influence of his Spirit those who honestly try to serve him.

SISTER CLARA.

Dear Home Column:—I have never asked admittance to your columns because I doubted I had anything of enough interest or profit to any one to warrant my so doing.

But there are some thoughts which have often come to mind very forcibly, perhaps because I have experienced them. Do we as Saints truly love each other? Oh, of course—somewhat vaguely, perhaps, but we hope they'll get along spiritually and temporally all right, and if they are in want we'll feed and clothe them, if we find it out, and we'll call them brother and sister when we meet them at church and ask them home with us to dinner; but we're really too tired, too taken up with business or home duties, too engaged, mind and body, in the necessary scramble after the "bread that perisheth" to go to their homes and visit them, to see if they are truly worthy of sympathy, real companionship, true friendship.

Perhaps many a heart has starved and grown cold for the lack of these visits, for humanity has yet to depend upon humanity. I remember once under certain circumstances calling a Saint "a friend" to an outsider, although I had only met that Saint two or three times, and it has been a source of some humiliation to me since by the thought that I had been presumptuous. But I had not long before come into the branch from over one thousand miles away, and had left relatives, friends, and Saints, and I had reached that stage when if the king on his throne or a beggar in the road had borne the name of Saint I would have called them friends. Ah, the name of friend is greater than the name of Saint although I believe they should mean the same. And perhaps we have one with us who has been ordained to preach the gospel. He isn't just as fine as he might be, his clothes are worn and not so clean as they really ought to be, but we rebuke him for this and tell each other that he disgraces the Church and we wish that conference would send him away somewhere in the wilds of Arkansas where such things don't matter much, and give us some one we can appreciate, for we really can not love him very much. But he goes on preaching soul-convincing sermons for a time, and we know by this that God has not forsaken him yet, for he is a simple and unlearned man, and can not do this of himself, and he is still God's ambassador for yet a little season. But by and by he goes into forbidden paths and teaches false doctrine and is cut off from the Church because he will not repent, and we are sorry of course, but it is really no more than could be expected and we will be irritated no more by his uncouthness of dress and speech. But do we remember that it is one more of God's immortal beings lost to his celestial glory and mourn as becometh us? How many will inhabit Zion? Our hearts are hard toward our erring brothers and sisters. They should not do thus and so we writhe under the disgrace they bring on the Church, for we must always bear the stigma of an abused name, and we feel that is quite enough.

But could we have helped them any? Even ever so little might possibly have turned the tide in their favor at some opportune time; but we were too busy, too tired to think of it, had enough burden and trials of our own to contend with, and they ought to go to God for strength and then be brave. How is it? God alone knows. Have we wasted opportunities, or perhaps we have none, and are we "our brother's keeper"?

And the children! How we wrong them in our impatience and fretfulness, and I wonder sometimes that God leaves them in our bungling, clumsy hands. O,—I know we love them with all our strength, but frail human nature gives way, and we are "judged according to our works." But still we will struggle on while life lasts; still we will pray for each other, still love each other, and ask "our Father" in Jesus name to forgive us our sins and love us better than we love our fellow-creatures.

WAYFARER.

Lead Me On.

O God, give me thy helping hand,
Lead thou me on;

Safe to that brighter, better land
Lead thou me on.

Around me all is dark and drear,
And oft I tremble, doubt, and fear,
But still I hope that thou art near,
Leading me on.

O God, show me the better way,
Lead thou me on;

Let not my feet from virtue stray,
Lead thou me on.

Lord, when I wander, haste thou bear
Me swiftly from the tempter's snare;
Of every sin help me beware,
Leading me on.

The General Superintendent in the Field.

In the latter part of February we moved northward for work in the Northern California District. We arrived at San Francisco late Saturday night and were met at the station by Bro. and Sr. Parkin, who, though they had never seen us, at once singled us out of the motley throng. We were at once ushered to their hospitable home on old Mission Street, where we were royally entertained during our stay in the city. We are much indebted to Sr. Parkin for a very enjoyable trip to the "Golden Gate," "Cliff House" "Seal Rocks" and last but not least, a trip through "Chinatown." How quickly we may pass from the hustle and bustle of a modern American city to the languid, sluggish-moving, oriental scenes. Costumes, decorations, habits, and conditions of a typical Chinese city are to be seen; and the odor—well it is oriental, too.

We met with the Saints in their Sabbath-school on Sunday morning and found a happy band of workers who are not only earnestly trying to make a success of their school, but are securing results that are really gratifying. Bro. J. W. Gilbert, our missionary lately from the South Sea Islands, has the work in charge and is bringing the school up to a standard worthy of emulation. Whatever Bro. Gilbert undertakes is done with all the vim and enthusiasm that he possesses and his influence is plainly visible in the school. May he be blessed in his untiring efforts.

Our next stop was in Oakland just across the bay. But owing to a lack of time we could not remain over Sunday, and for this reason did not get to see the school in operation. But there was a good interest manifested in the institute work done, and we are led to believe that the work is progressing well.

While there we made our home with our beloved Bro. and Sr. J. M. Terry, with whom we had been often associated in the interior States. Bro. Terry is the shepherd of the little flock at Oakland, and with the help of his devoted companion is doing a splendid work there. We pray for their welfare and a long continuation of their usefulness.

Our next point reached was San Jose, in the Central District. We met with the workers of the local school Thursday evening. The meeting was only fairly well attended, but we have not seen better interest manifested anywhere. The next day was the convention of the Southern California District. It was fairly well attended in spite of the incessantly falling rain, and some good work done. Sr. Smith was sustained in her work as superintendent of the district. She has some odds to contend with, but is accomplishing much good nevertheless.

We were very kindly provided for at the home of Bro. and Sr. J. B. Carmichael, and it was with reluctance that we bade them "good-bye" even after an acquaintance so short.

After taking an early morning train from San Jose, hoping to reach Sacramento before noon, we met with much delay owing to excessive floods on the Sacramento River. But after riding more than ten miles through an inland sea of water up to or over the rails we reached the city in safety. The Saints were in district conference assembled. We missed the Sunday-school convention, but other time was provided for our work and a very pleasant as well as a profitable time was had. The school here is in excellent order; so, also, is the Religio. Bro. Robert Parker is the pastor here and his work is making lasting impressions in both these societies as well as in the Church. Sr. M. A. Saxe was again placed in charge of the Sunday-school work of the district and we are hopeful of continued prosperity for them.

This completed our work in the California districts. We reached but a portion of the schools and were much hurried in almost every place, yet are hopeful that some good was accomplished. We found the schools in good condition generally, and think that there are even better times coming.

We are indeed, very much pleased to note the marks of progress made by the several schools under the direction or care of the missionaries who have labored in the State. And, notwithstanding the great distance that intervenes between the Saints on the Pacific slope and the larger body of Saints in the interior where the general meetings are held and the benefits of association are enjoyed, they have kept well up in the line of progress and, generally, are very anxious to "come up higher."

Our tour through the State has been a pleasant one and we have made many acquaintances that will ever be dear to us. When we may return, we do not know. But we trust that it may not be long. God bless and prosper the workers and the work.

DES MOINES, Iowa, March 1.

Editors Herald: The conference just closed here marks a period of decided advancement and progress of the work in this district. The conference of one year ago was the beginning of a new era of the work in this district and the progress of the work for the year past is seen in every department, especially in the local churches. Progress along every line has been made by some of the churches, but we are sorry to say that not all have been as progressive as they should have been. From the first assembling of the Saints for this conference there was plainly manifest that spirit of love and brotherly kindness that is born of God, and each service, whether for business, social, or preaching, that spirit of humility and devotion, and Christlike earnestness was plainly manifest. Heavenly peace seemed to fill the house of worship, and all entering were influenced by it. This was true of all the sessions from Friday morning, and when assembled on Sunday afternoon in the social meeting and the ordinances in God's house were officiated in, ordination, confirmation, administration, and blessing,—the prayers of God's people were ascending from a multitude of hearts, and His praises, being sung in joyful song, and his blessings and goodness, and power, being spoken of in testimony, the Holy Comforter present and speaking through His servant, this hour was the one of fullest enjoyment and peace of the conference. A body of Saints representing one district of the Lord's vineyard gathered together in heavenly union, opens to our view the glorious time to which we look forward, when the church universal will be gathered, ready to receive our Savior when he comes again, (glorious day, and triumphant hope!) and carries us on to that opening of eternity when the great gathering of all of God's people of all ages will take place. What mind but that of an infinite God, a divine Creator, could have conceived such a plan of redemption and revealed it to us in the gospel of his son. And we his elect have been offered his glorious gospel in this our day, and can we doubt but that God has, indeed, introduced a marvelous work and a wonder?

We, as Saints of the Des Moines district, have "come up higher" as a body, and as individuals, during the year, and as we reach this higher plane the beauties of eternity open brighter to our view and we have an increased desire to press onward.

A. A. REAMS.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, March 7, 1904.

Editors Herald: We fancy we note a constant improvement in the HERALD; at any rate it comes to us as an ever-welcome visitor. It is our opinion that no Latter Day Saint who does not take the HERALD is justified in taking any other publication, —though of course we would not kick so strenuously if he took Autumn Leaves.

We want to indorse some of the ideas presented by "Fidelis." We are inclined to think that the average reader knows less about who was president of the church in the days of the apostles than he did before he began the arduous task of reading those lengthy articles pro and con. It is about as important as the vexed question, "Who wrote Shakespeare's plays?" A good deal may be said for Shakespeare and it will be answered with an equal output in favor of Bacon; but after all the plays are the main thing.

Well, about our own work. We have spent our conference year here in Burlington by appointment, dividing our time between editorial work on the Autumn Leaves and regular missionary work. Our work has been congenial and spiritually profitable, to us at least. The work has kept us busy and it has been a happy year.

The Saints have treated us with the greatest kindness and good will, which indeed has added to the pleasure of the work. Actual conversions from the outside ranks have not appeared to any extent; but the Saints, especially the younger Saints, have been drawn nearer the Church, definitely and enthusiastically enlisted on the side of Christ, so that we are confident they will never fall away.

We have found the young people and the Religio a great help. Our Religio is held Sunday evening just before preaching, and sometimes of stormy nights its members are in the majority at the preaching service. Some of them have come long distances through storm and mud or snow to be present.

Great credit is due the local brethren who have kept the work alive here for years against adverse circumstances; but they labored against too heavy odds. I think that the local brethren almost everywhere will agree with us that men who must labor every day can not give the work in cities the attention it should have. We are sure, also, that the missionaries reviewing the condition of various branches in cities that have depended for years on the care of laborers who must spend the week in the shop or store will admit that their condition is a strong argument in favor of having men in those cities who might spend their entire time at the work. Otherwise the work of the missionary is undone and the incoming convert is soon the recreant Church member. This is no reflection on the local laborers. It is simply impossible under present conditions for men to earn their livelihood and find time or keep themselves in good condition to prosecute the work in a large branch. Either their employer during six days or their hearers on the seventh will suffer; and it will be no fault of the minister, either. It is to his credit that he is willing to take up the labor; but God hasten the day when his hands may be loosed; when in every large branch there will be men at liberty to give the word their entire time.

We have been greatly blessed during the year. We have sometimes marveled at that love which the Master had for people who were in a measure strangers, whom he had not learned to love through companionship as do we. We have recognized that that love must be the motive spirit of the missionary; but it seemed beyond human power. However, we came to understand it better. After coming here while walking the streets of the city, ere we had met many of the Saints, and while thinking on this subject, we felt that Spirit which Christ must have felt come over us like a cloud. That Spirit of love for all among whom we were to labor. That Spirit which knows no distinction of nationality or position or individual disposition. We have tried to retain and nurture that priceless gift. We feel that without it we can do nothing. The laborer who has not a genuine affection for the people to whom he ministers will have no influence for good.

We are pleased to note an increased desire among the Saints here to observe the financial laws; although many of them always have been very faithful in that regard.

One other thing. We have heard that some stated at the Lamoni Stake conference that it is their opinion that not one family of Saints in ten is teaching its children the gospel. We do not know where these observers have observed; but we want it known that such is not true of the Saints here; nor have we observed it to be true in any place where we have ever labored.

Sincerely,

ELBERT A. SMITH.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 5, 1904.

Editors Herald: In HERALD for December 23, 1903, a letter is found over my signature in which reference is made to a conversation had with one of the members of the Utah Church, no name being quoted. Several weeks ago a communication came from Elder A. M. Musser of Salt Lake City, protesting that he had been misquoted in that he was made to say that he had a Kanaka, Filipino, and Indian wife. His version is that he has a Kanaka grandson, a Filipino grandson, and a Ute granddaughter, respectively born in Manila, Hawaii, and Salt Lake City. He became a little furious over the reference made to the conversation as reported. It was sufficiently correct, however, for him to identify it by reading, as his name does not appear in connection therewith. I wish to say to him and all who read the statement in HERALD that I understood him to say just what is there reported, and I think yet that the language used was worded in such way as to convey that thought, at least conveyed it to me. I was sitting near him, was interested in his narrative, and had no disposition to question or misrepresent what was said. I wrote him in reply and asked if he lived now, or ever had lived with women of the named nationalities, as wives, but have received no reply. It is just possible that he was misquoted, as it is an easy matter for a person to misapprehend another in conversation. I may have failed to gather his thought.

Just a day or so ago, I had a conversation with a brother in the presence of his wife. On my leaving the house, his wife informed him that I had received a wrong impression from the way he expressed himself. She was so certain that she was not content until he came to see me. He came the next morning and sure enough his wife was correct. But who was to blame, the speaker or listener? This is true in the other case. There was no disposition on my part to misrepresent the statement of Elder Musser and nothing to be gained by so doing. I understood him to say just what was stated in my letter, but as he ought to know his own fraternal relations and it is an easy matter to misapprehend another in conversation, I extend to him the benefit of the doubt and am quite willing that my statement be corrected to read grandsons and granddaughter instead of wives. I trust no injury may come to him from my statement as none was intended. Will he please pardon the mistake? From his standpoint of belief no injury could come to him, for he would have a right to marry a Kanaka woman, Filipino woman, Indian woman, or one of any other nationality if nothing stood in the way. I trust this will be satisfactory to Elder Musser, as he may rest assured there was no intent to misrepresent or injure him or his in any sense.

WM. H. KELLEY.

TORONTO, Ontario, February 27, 1904.

Editors Herald: We have been having quite a lively time in Toronto, and the cause of the stir has been in the presence of your Canadian counselor, President R. C. Evans. He came here on Tuesday, 9th inst., and presided over an entertainment the same night.

In the year 1900 the Toronto Saints placed themselves under a liability of twenty-six hundred dollars for a building lot and brick structure as a place for the worship God, at a time when only one owned the place he lived in and had it paid for. R. C. really was the power and influence that moved upon the Saints and but for his energy and vigorous push, it may be expressed as doubtful that the building would yet have been erected. This is expressed, not to glorify President Evans, but to give honor to whom honor is due.

It took some little time to find a place, a building-lot, within the compass of their exchequer, and one was found on Camden Street, west of Spadina Avenue, and south of Queen. Some opposition as to the locality was manifest at the start, but the unity of the majority was so pronounced as to carry all before them. The cause of the opposition was on account of the somewhat immoral character of the immediate neighborhood. All this is now changed, the influence of the Latter Day Saint Church having caused a general cleansing.

There is no need that I give you a detailed account of the work of building, the devotedness of the Saints in their struggles, toils, and deprivations. R. C. was general overseer and financier. He toiled with his hands as well as labored with his head. To him all looked, and as soon as any tangle occurred he must put the skein in running order. Others worked faithfully, and all, no doubt, did their best.

In a little less than four years the debt has been paid, and they justly feel proud of their success. To those at a distance, who extended substantial aid, notably the London Branch, they desire to express their appreciation and heart-felt thanks.

As soon as they saw the clear possibility of liquidating the debt in a short time, they proceeded to arrange for the dedication and, of course, President R. C. Evans must be the man to preach the dedicatory sermon. In paying the last of the indebtedness, there was a good-natured contest as to who would put in the last dollar of the remaining one hundred, said contest centered in Bro. Joseph Gillett and John Hall, on one side, and the Religio on the other, in which the latter succeeded. No money, however, was refused.

The Saints having decided to hold a series of meetings, bills were circulated in the city to that effect and in many of the store windows, as well as on boards at street corners. Thereon was clearly outlined the expressive features of President Evans and many and varied were the remarks as to who and what he was, or might be. To a goodly number he is well known and appreciated.

The meetings began on Sunday the fourteenth of February,

Saint Valentine's day, a day when, in accordance with an ancient belief, the birds began to couple. Also, a day when many epistles of love are sent; some expressive of the real sentiment, and others only caricatures. With the Toronto Saints, their valentine, or love gift presented to their heavenly Father was no caricature, but an offering of love, pure, sweet, and joyous, in the sanctifying presence of the Holy Spirit in attestation of Father's acceptance of the same.

Preaching in the morning at eleven by R. C., prayer-meeting at half past two in the afternoon, which was largely attended. There was a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and the Saints felt it good to wait upon God. Four were called to ministerial offices, two to higher ones, and two from the laity.

The dedicatory sermon was at night. All the seats were occupied and well filled. The speaker gave an outline of the struggle of the Toronto Saints, their efforts to get the angel's message before the people; of Bro., now Elder, Fred Gregory, then but a boy, and a devoted band of earnest young sisters of the Church who prayed and fasted and worked with all the powers of their being, till their faith and works brought success. The story of their sacrifices can not be given herein, nor will they be fully known till all secrets shall be revealed. The story was told of Sr. Lizzie Hattey, wife of branch priest, Charles Hattey, scrubbing a store to obtain sufficient money to hire a hall for Elder R. C. Evans to preach in. Others labored and sacrificed, whose names can not be given, but their works have gone on before, and in the day of rewards they will be remembered. The dedicatory prayer was by Patriarch John H. Lake, who, with his stenographer, Bro. Ray Omans, of Lamoni, Iowa, was present. The choir was under the direction of Sr. Minnie Faulds, and, with organist Elder F. R. Tubb, rendered appropriate hymns.

The meetings were continued through the week, President Evans preaching every night, except Saturday. A well-signed petition of Saints and outsiders was presented to R. C. requesting him to remain another week, and longer, if possible, was successful. A large increase in attendance every night was noticeable.

On Saturday night, the 27th, he preached at Humber Bay, as well as on Sunday morning. This was by the earnest request of the Saints there. Two sleigh loads of happy Toronto Saints drove out on Saturday night, to hear him again. The four-mile drive was an enjoyable one, though sleighing was not of the best. I do not know, Bro. Joseph, whether you have had any experience of a Canadian winter or not, or even a part, but Sr. Ada has. If she was in her old Garay home during the present one, she would have seen, possibly, more snow than during any other one of her recollection.

Sunday night, the 28th, closed the series of meetings. The Church was fairly packed, the aisle being occupied. The discourse, "Wash and be clean," was a flood of eloquence and sound logic. Baptism, as an essential to salvation, was clearly demonstrated, the folly of infant baptism also; the doctrine of universal depravity was overthrown and the reasonable and proper interpretation given to David's penitential Psalm, the 51st. At the conclusion of one of the finest discourses it has been the writer's lot to listen to, a stirring appeal was made to the congregation for all who desired baptism and to be identified with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to arise to their feet. As R. C. held his arms out with such an expression of supplication in his animated appeal, all were deeply impressed with the solemnity of the moment, and nine arose to their feet. Immediate preparation took place, and he led them into the water of baptism. As soon as a change of raiment could be made, they were confirmed. It was certainly, an impressive scene to gaze upon seven fine looking young men and two young women sitting upon the platform, just over the grave from which they had arisen, and see and hear the act and words that confirmed them members of the Church of Christ. Five had been baptized before, making fourteen in all through these meetings.

The work is growing here, and I gaze on the Toronto Branch with a pardonable degree of pride with the oft-uttered prayer that they may see greater necessity for redeeming the time as the days are full of evil.

I expect to go out to Humber Bay, at the end of the present week, and give them two or three weeks of preaching and visiting.

A. E. MORTIMER.

CANTON, Cardiff, Wales, February 24, 1904.

Editors Herald: The columns of the dear old HERALD after thirty-seven years of acquaintance, are a source of comfort and at times joy to me and especially so when away from the central field of the Church. When a man is trying to do good and prosecute mission work, it is a great satisfaction to know that the other fellow is doing something, possibly more than we in the same line of work, and especially so does this apply in gospel work. It is said that even misery likes company, and that laughter is contagious.

How it is possible for Latter Day Saints who claim to love this latter-day work to content themselves without any of the church publications, is more than I can comprehend. We hear much complaining because the families, especially the children of the Saints, are indifferent and sometimes drifting away from the church influences. This may occur when the very best that parents can do is done. Yet to raise a family without a reasonable amount of healthy literature is a flagrant mistake. At present, as for some years past, the Church is blessed with a class of literature in the form of Autumn Leaves and Zion's Hope and books that are calculated to be of special interest to the young.

The time was when the only publication issued by the Church as a periodical was the HERALD, and for eight years prior to its advent the Church had existed without any church paper. The HERALD was small in size and a monthly for years. And at that time its yearly subscription price was nearly three times as much as now. When the difference in the amount of reading-matter furnished now in the HERALD is compared with the amount furnished during the first decade of its existence, you will find that it gives you much more for your money now than it did then. It is the persistent and faithful support of the few in bygone years that has made it possible for the many to enjoy the great blessings of the present.

Our Western Wales District conference held at Llanely, Carmarthenshire the 6th and 7th inst., was a success. The attendance was fair, the order good. The spiritual blessings bestowed upon the Saints in our Sunday afternoon testimony meeting were encouraging and strengthening to all present. The writer was elected to preside over the district for the coming term, and Bro. John G. Jenkins was elected vice-president. Conditions seem to make this action advisable for the present. The good brethren of the Pontyates Branch are as faithful as ever, with their character above reproach.

Their unabated interest in the Llanely Branch has been a great strength to it. The Saints have shown commendable zeal and endurance. They keep the little chapel clean, and as far as their circumstances will permit, attractive. Bro. Henry Ellis is still their president, although he lives in Llansamlet. He visits the branch once a month. Bro. Arthur Edwards is the presiding teacher and has been quite active in his office for several months. Some of the clouds that have darkened his spiritual horizon have been dispelled and at present he says he has a strong desire to accomplish all he can.

The brethren at Gilfach Goch are active distributing tracts and doing some street-preaching, although the weather is so exceptionally wet and chill.

The few Saints at Pen-y-Graig Branch have failed to bear the burden any longer of paying hall rent. Emigration and poverty lessen the possibilities of weak branches and the Saints become dispirited. The burden is made heavier and the goal of success and triumph for the work in Wales is made to appear at a much greater distance even to those who entertain any hope of ultimate success.

By the death of Bro. John Jones and the emigration of Bro. and Sr. George Morris, the Nantyglo Branch has been materially weakened. The work at Aberaman is at low ebb.

Uninviting as the prospects are, yet I feel to continue the effort and trust in God for the coöperation of his Spirit to carry conviction to the hearts of the honest and to confirm his words with signs following.

The Cardiff Branch is doing real well. Bro. Thomas Gould is still the shepherd and Brn. Benjamin Green and E. J. Trapp are his faithful assistants. There is considerable expense to be met by the few. Their names may not appear as tithing-payers upon the Bishop's book, yet they appear monthly as rent-payers, and other expenses are met. Four have been added to the branch by baptism this week, Bro. Gould and E. S. Trapp performing the rite.

Bro. Rushton writes his intention to come to Wales for a few weeks after Easter. He will be welcomed. I intend furnishing through the HERALD one or two of the favorite Welsh songs sung by the Welsh Saints many years ago, but now almost lost.

Yours,

137 Severn Road.

EVAN B. MORGAN.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, March 7, 1904.

Dear Herald: After about three months of wandering from place to place in this country, we have at last found a resting-place for our weary feet, at least so we trust. We landed in New York on the 10th of November, being met there by our esteemed Sr. Squires, Sr. We remained in Brooklyn but a short time. I had the pleasure of preaching for the Saints while there in their new church that they were just about completing. It is indeed a credit to the Brooklyn Saints.

Thinking I could do better at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where my line of work was best obtained, I left Sr. Arber and Alex with Bro. and Sr. Rushton, who have been very kind to us, arriving in Pittsburg November 19, where I found a saintly welcome at the home of Bro. and Sr. Lockard, where also resides our genial missionary, Elder R. M. Elvin. Words fail to express our gratitude to them for their kindness to us, in our hour of trouble. I remained in Pittsburg six weeks, but as trade everywhere was dull and near the close of the year it appeared almost impossible to find employment. Several of the brethren there assisted me in trying to get a position, some giving me letters of recommendation that we all thought would prove beneficial, but all seemed in vain. Everywhere I went I was treated kindly, but was told that instead of setting men on they were ready to let some out, so after all this time, I began to wonder when and where I should find something to do. Pittsburg is a large city and under ordinary circumstances it is a good place for work, but, as I came at a bad time of year it appeared unfortunate for us at least.

Hearing of a likelihood of a position in the town of St. Joseph, Missouri, I considered whether it would pay to go a thousand miles farther west, and thinking the matter over I concluded to venture, upon the prospect of work. I reached there only to be once more disappointed, as the man who had promised Bro. Lewis's son-in-law, went back on his word. I stayed there a few days looking around for something that would prove profitable to me.

During my sojourn in St. Joseph, I met some of the finest Saints that it has been my privilege to meet. Preached for them twice on the Sabbath, also addressed the Sunday-school. I was again treated most kindly by all the Saints, and especially by Bro. and Sr. William Lewis, Bro. and Sr. Bacuaster, and Bro. and Sr. Guinand. Not hearing of anything it occurred to me to go to Kansas City and Independence. So I bade adieu to the Saints of St. Joseph making my way to Kansas City, then on to Independence.

By this time I had indeed felt a stranger in a strange land, but I had still confidence in God, that all would work out to our good, and I am happy to say that I have found it so.

I arrived in Independence on Tuesday afternoon, made my home with Bro. and Sr. John Luff, Jr., who knows how to make a wanderer comfortable, for such I had by this time began to consider myself. I began the next day to look around to see if there was anything for me here, and I am happy to say in that I was not disappointed, for only a few days had elapsed, when Bro. Tom Crick and Bro. John Luff had knocked their heads together sufficiently to find Bro. Arber something, if it was only a helper's position. I felt grateful to them for it. We have a saying in the old country, "It never rains but what it showers,"—so it was in this case. I had only been working four days at the foundry, when the manager at the Metropolitan Street Railway Company, at Sheffield, or I should say a little beyond Sheffield, sent for me to fill a vacancy in the machine-shops, where I am at present employed in a nice, steady position. I can now see where the hand of an all wise One has been over me, and I trust to be ever found worthy of the guidance of God's Holy Spirit.

We often think of our dear brethren and sisters in the old country, and would ever welcome a letter from them, also those in Scotland, from whom we regretted to part, but circumstances necessitated us doing so. We shall anxiously await to see who will be sent to Scotland from amongst the conference appointees. We sincerely trust that this mission will have help sent, for they need it. Can the Church afford to let that mission go down? There is only Bro. Rushton left now, and he can only put in part of his time, having to care for the whole British Isles, as missionary in charge. I am certain from evidence received while in that country, that there are many good, honest men and women who will yet obey the gospel, and when we remember that this mission is comparatively a new one, I ask, again, can the Church afford to neglect it? My prayer is that the coming Conference will be one of the best ever held by the Reorganization, proving beneficial to the whole Church.

Well, I am happy to say we have begun housekeeping once more, although Sr. Arber is very homesick. I wish to thank all the Saints most sincerely for their kindness to us since coming here. We have found indeed a true home amongst the Saints of God. I am proud to be engaged still in such a noble work and I love to see it spread, because I know it is the truth of heaven. The truth is to make us free; and when we try to keep God's commandments, and do his holy will, we can feel free indeed. We feel very grateful to our heavenly Father for his watchcare over us. May we ever live worthy, and prove faithful to the end to magnify his holy name. With love to all the Israel of God,

In gospel bonds,

JOSEPH ARBER.

JONESPORT, Maine, March, 1, 1904.

Editors Herald: I have looked in vain for news from this district the whole year, not because there is anything of great importance, yet I am confident that many are interested in the welfare of the Saints here and would note with pleasure their progress.

In the conference year now past we have lost by death some noble workers, among whom was Sr. Lois Mansfield. She has been known for many years as one of the staunchest supporters with means and influence of this gospel work. All the ministry laboring in this field in times past remember with gratitude her ministrations. As she was blessed with some means she was a sincere friend and helper to those not so well favored with this world's goods. None will be missed from the active ranks more than she.

I came here from General Conference and have labored in this district almost entirely for the year by advice of missionary in charge.

Last week during a short series of meetings at Beals I had the pleasure of leading two young men into the waters of baptism. One of the brethren served in the late war with Spain and was a seaman on Admiral Dewey's flagship Olympia at the battle of Manila. I trust that he will serve King Immanuel as faithfully as he served his country. The other young man, Grover Merchant, will be remembered by Brn. Green and Ames, as he was healed of consumption a few years ago after having been given up by the physicians to die. The week following the baptisms Bro. Uriah Kelley and I went there to hold more meetings when we found a revival going on. The Advents and Reformed Baptists had united and with the assistance of an evangelist were having great excitement. Their singing, shouting, jumping, etc., drew a large crowd and from six-thirty to eleven o'clock at night there was a continuous performance. We decided to postpone our meetings.

We found later that this was fortunate, as some were driven crazy with excitement. One woman is raving crazy and it is expected that she will have to be taken to an asylum. Some parents attempted to kill their children as sacrifices. One man had to hold his little child in his arms all one night to prevent the mother from killing it. A favorite dog and cat were killed as sacrifices in one family. Some who would not kneel and pray were beaten and pounded with Bibles and fists and they called this the laying on of hands. One woman in frenzied excitement in the church during a meeting shrieked, "I am an angel of God." The ministers and others shouted, "Glory to God," "Amen," etc.

The selectmen and sheriff stopped the whole thing and ordered the ministers out of town at once. A crowd of citizens collected at one place, thinking seriously of mobbing them, but this was averted. Fortunately none of our people were in any way connected with this terrible affair. Undoubtedly if the authorities had not interfered there would have been blood shed. The chairman of the board of selectmen told me he considered it a case of hypnotism. A prominent physician here who attended the worst cases told me he thought it was hypnotism. I attended one meeting and considered it a clear case of devilism. That brings "perilous times" pretty close home to us.

I want to say just a word to the Saints in this district about money affairs. I am not Bishop's agent, but as president of the district will call attention to the pressing need of financial help. Bro. U. M. Kelley, of Indian River, is Bishop's agent and tells me he has not the means to meet expenses. Let us make an extra effort in this direction with our tithes and offerings. Bro. Uriah will be pleased to give you a leaf from his receipt book in exchange for the treasures you desire to lay up in heaven.

C. H. RICH.

MOUROVIA, California.

Dear Herald: As many say you are a very welcome visitor to my home, for it has been my lot to be cast among strangers the most of the time since I came into the Church. But truly we are living in an age when the gospel is being preached in many different forms. Since I have been in Mouravia just two months I have heard it proclaimed by five different classes of believers. All seem to think they have "the" gospel, but to me it seems they fail to have the authority to preach. They do not claim to have it at all. Surely we are living in the age spoken of by the prophet when he said they would be running to and fro to get knowledge, but fail to look for it in the right place.

I am thankful to tell you that I am still holding on to the faith that was once delivered to the Saints. I am glad to see the good work going on and hope I will be able to help more in the future than I have in the past. Wishing you all God's speed I am as ever, a true sister in Christ Jesus,

M. C. HANNAH.

TULSA, Indian Territory, February 28, 1904.

Editors Herald: We have no branch organization at this place, but a few Saints have moved in. Among them are the families of Brn. O. L. James and W. H. Robinson, of Independence, Missouri. Brn. T. C. Kelley and H. O. Smith, of Independence, held a series of meetings here which we think did much good. While the attendance was not so large as might have been, numbers have expressed themselves as understanding us better and some have asked to read our books. We have not been slow in giving them out, I assure you. We hope the work will be opened up here in the near future. It is not good for Saints to be cut off from branch privileges. One can not afford to be idle, for there is so much to be done.

We hope the elders of this district will not forget the few Saints at this place, and that more Saints will move in. This is a good country.

Your sister,

HELEN LOGAN SHERWIN.

NAKOMA, Kansas, March 5, 1903.

Editors Herald: While at Great Bend Mr. Ogden and Mr. Godfrey, Adventists, came to talk with me on the Sabbath question. Ere they met me they were laughing about how they would trap the Latter Day Saints, they never having met one before, but supposed our position was like the sectarian world. This Mr. Godfrey told me several days after, but a three-hour talk resulted in Mr. Godfrey becoming interested in our cause, and is anxious for more gospel.

A twenty-day meeting at Alexander was productive of good, as a letter from there states a young man awaits baptism, which I shall see to as soon as convenient; one Mr. Oelson said to me, "I am either a Latter Day Saint or an infidel." He is a young man with a family. That's the way they travel. "Lord, to whom can we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life."

Bro. E. H. Ebert and I recently held a meeting near Leoti. I baptized a young man, formerly member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and superintendent of the Sunday-school. He bids fair to become a useful man, and is a son of Sr. Mary Turner. Brn. Hoffman and Sears with their families, are moving to Kansas City, thus making considerable change, lessening the numbers at Bazine. We trust the move is for their good. I am here holding forth; this is the first preaching done here by a Saint. Bro. Hoffman paved the way for the meeting.

Praying that the coming Conference may be very fruitful to God's glory,

L. G. GURWELL.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. J. A. Grant writes from West Bay City, Michigan: "The severity of the winter has rendered it almost impossible to do anything in missionary work in Michigan or at least in the part where we have been. But considering all things, the work as a whole is moving along fairly well. We are still hopeful of the final triumph of Zion."

Sr. Cora Weir, writing from Center Junction, Iowa, March 9, 1904, says: "We have only a handful of workers in this district. O that the Spirit of God might awaken this district and we have a full report, is my prayer."

Pauline Ruby, writing from Angus, Iowa, March 10, 1904, says: "I am trying to do all I can for the blessed gospel work. Have the promise of another subscription for the HERALD and shall try to get more. My niece, with whom I am staying, is ill with heart trouble. She is a good woman but does not seem to see or feel the necessity of obeying the gospel, but has heard so little of our preaching she does not understand it. I have hoped and still do trust an elder may come here and preach so she may hear and obey the gospel before it is too late."

Bro. Romanan Wight writes from Bonesteel, South Dakota: "I came here to attend conference. All moves fairly well in the Northern and Central Nebraska districts."

George Jenkins, wrote from Plainville, Indiana, March 1: "I just came from Washington, Indiana, which is a new opening. I had large audiences and very good interest. I think much good has been done there. The work is opening up very rapidly in this district. I can not fill all the calls being made; but we are doing all we can to keep the work moving on to victory."

Notice.

To the Saints of Minnesota, Greeting: The time for holding our reunion is drawing near and in order to make it a success and provide good speakers it will be necessary to raise funds to pay expenses. We anticipate a good time, and expect to have some able speakers, all of which will cost money. Will presidents of branches see that some one is appointed in their respective branches to solicit funds. And will all give as they can for this purpose? Will notify you later on as to whom and where to send. Let all begin now to lay plans to go, and all go that can. And as you go take the Spirit of the Lord with you. Then our meeting together will be a success. Yours in the faith, E. A. Stedman, president of district.

Married.

ROBINSON—STEDMAN.—The marriage of Mr. Olden Clark Robinson and Sr. Wealthy Lorretta Stedman which took place at the residence of the bride's father, February 11, at Lamoni, Iowa, was a very pleasant affair. A few near friends were invited guests, Elder William H. Kelley being the officiating minister. Nature has favored both bride and groom in many ways. She is talented and one of the beautiful girls of the neighborhood. He is of good physique and has a manly appearance, but both are unfortunate in being mutes. A nice repast was served and a number of valuable presents received testifying of the esteem in which the contracting parties are held. They go to live on their own well provided farm home at Odebolt, Sac County, Iowa. They have a good house and many conveniences and money ahead. So the happy pair starts out under favorable auspices as to temporal things, and with the best wishes of those who know them. May success and happiness go with them.

If you lose a cow, hog, or horse—that might have been saved—you're out from $10 to $300, aren't you? Our Veterinary Department tells what to do for sick live-stock in an emergency.

JULIA, Kansas.
 Twentieth Century Farmer, Omaha, Neb.
 Gentlemen: Your paper seems to cover about every condition that is likely to arise on the farm, from raising horses, cattle, hogs, and sheep, down to garden truck. I have kept every copy of your paper and because I did I saved a valuable Hereford cow worth $275.00, because when she was taken sick I turned to the veterinary columns and found a remedy for her trouble. If I had had to wait to get a doctor she would have died. It's a grand good paper. Yours truly,

OUR UTAH TRIP.

The "B. & M." in Nebraska is a well-built railroad, curves being remarkably few. The fine condition of the track is probably due to a large extent to the character of the country, which permits of railroad building at cost comparatively small. However, facility of construction alone is not alone the cause of the Burlington possessing so fine a track. Ease of grading will not account for good steel on rock and slag-ballasted road-bed. On eastern roads or more specifically through Eastern Ohio and Western Pennsylvania will be found much ballast furnished by the iron blast furnaces,—the slag, which in color, to a casual observer, has the appearance of crushed limestone. On the B. & M. we noticed a dark-colored ballast which has, from the moving train, the appearance of broken crockery-ware, but which is in reality slag from the large smelters of the West,—Omaha in Eastern Nebraska, Denver in Colorado and Western Nebraska. This slag is a hard, heavy substance which ought, judging from appearance, to last almost forever. Crushed rock is used on the road-bed where slag is not available.

And so over the slag-ballasted track our train rushed forward, at a speed which "ate up distance" astonishingly. But why not go fast behind such steeds? Such monster locomotives as are running on the Burlington! Veritable "greyhounds" for speed; but in size and weight, how they have grown in the past ten years or so! In 1892 the average weight of a passenger-engine was, with its tender, about seventy-five tons. The latest type for the same class of service weighs something more than one hundred and forty-two tons. The freight-engines have grown even more. From an average of about eighty-one tons in 1892 they have increased in weight till now roads are running engines weighing from one hundred and eighty tons to over two hundred tons,—ones which draw loads of more than four thousand tons. We see why the road-beds have become heavier and better,—necessity.

And some of these big passenger-engines draw the trains on the Burlington. A favorite style is known as the "Atlantic type," those long, large engines, with two pairs of driving wheels placed near the center of the boiler, and a "trailer" by the fire-box. So high are the drivers, that should a six-foot man

FOR the man who makes everything that leads to happiness, or near to it, to depend upon himself and not upon other men, on whose good or evil actions his own doings are compelled to hinge—such a one, I say, has adopted the very best plan for living happily. This is the man of moderation, this is the man of manly character and of wisdom.—Plato.

walk up to them he would find the rim at the top of the wheel about a foot above his head.

But it takes more than mere size to run a locomotive, as is evidenced by the clouds of smoke which issue from the stack and roll past the length of the train. And as we see the smoke we can not but think of the great waste of energy. Only a small per cent of the energy stored in coal is utilized by a locomotive or other engine. About one twelfth of the energy in coal is made available by means of the steam-engine. What a waste! How we are robbing future generations! Wasting eleven-twelfths to get one! Coal supply may be exhaustless, but we are digging coal from the bowels of the earth at a rapid rate. Did you ever stop to think how much coal is being mined in the United States alone every year? In 1902 the total output of anthracite and bituminous coal was 301,590,439 tons, valued at $367,032,069. Taking the population at seventy millions, that amount of coal would furnish about three and one half tons to each person in the United States. Of course a large part of the coal is used to keep the busy wheels of factories whirling; but the thousands of locomotives in this country, as they rush along the "arteries of commerce," consume great quantities of coal. No wonder we get speed,—we ought to. One of the old-fashioned light locomotives of two or three decades ago, weighing but thirty tons, would burn from five hundred to two thousand pounds of coal an hour, to evaporate from six thousand to twelve thousand pounds of water. An eighty or ninety ton locomotive in a run of one hundred and seventy-five or one hundred and eighty miles will burn from ten to twelve tons. You can see it takes work to "feed" such a locomotive. The great fire-boxes are hungry maws, always ready to eat. It takes skill and physical strength to keep the boilers "hot."

But waste or no waste, the coal thrown into the fire-boxes of the big Burlington engines get the trains over the road, and No. 5 "bowled" along over the gentle Nebraska swells at a speed which soon after leaving Omaha brought us to Lincoln. We were soon on the way again.

No. 5, through Iowa and Illinois a fine and very fast train, becomes local west of Omaha, and west of Lincoln her schedule time is reduced so that her runs are easy. It not running farther than Wray, Colorado, we got off at McCook, Nebraska, to wait for a train to Denver.

McCook, named for General McCook, is a thrifty Nebraska town, one of the "older" ones, founded in June, 1882. In an older country it would be called a new town, but the rapid development of our western country makes a twenty-year-old town seem old by comparison. McCook's population by the 1900 census is twenty-four hundred and forty-five, but it claims four thousand. The editor of one of the local papers conservatively estimates the population at thirty-five hundred, basing his estimate on their vote and school census. The town has electric lights and water-works. We found things very dry, there being no snow, and the roads and streets were very dusty, a bad condition of affairs for February. The editor of the Tribune said it had been so dry that much of the wheat sown for winter wheat had lain in the ground without sprouting. This statement led to a query as to the usual precipitation for that part of Nebraska, and we were told it was about twenty inches yearly. The average yield of wheat in that county in 1903 was twenty-six bushels per acre. It was the banner county of the State. Three contiguous farms near McCook had produced twenty-one thousand bushels of wheat.

McCook is a division point on the Burlington, has a roundhouse, and (what the citizens are more directly interested in) a railway pay-roll of about thirty-five thousand dollars per month.

After supper at the hotel, the Palmer House, a man who had seen my name on the register, asked "what Smith" I was the son of. He knew father and "Uncle Alex" well,—had been raised at Nauvoo. His name was Charles L. Dundey, of the family who for so many years was connected with the ferry between Nauvoo and Montrose. He is now a practicing attorney in Omaha. We had a very pleasant chat with him about Nauvoo, past and present.

After a night's rest at McCook we resumed our journey the next forenoon on No. 13, and made the trip to Denver without unusual incident. Western Nebraska presents a rather monotonous appearance. Remains of sod houses mutely testified of what had been. New frame houses and barns nearby bore evidence of better conditions and times. Of considerable interest to us in the way of curiosity, was the number of "dug-outs" still to be seen along the line of railway.

Excavations in the hillside, roofed over, formed dwelling-places probably much more comfortable and warm than sightly. The soil seems to be of character such as to permit such excavations without caving.

About three o'clock in the afternoon the mountains became visible to the west. How abruptly the Front Range rises from the plains. At the edge of a plain which extends hundreds of miles eastward, the mountains rise abruptly to a great height, with foothills only a short distance from them, and in some places with none. The range appears to mark the place where Nature quit leveling. She became tired, perhaps, or became discontented with her work; or mayhaps the roughness of the great mountain piles and their extent caused her to give up in despair, as a hopeless task. Or again the mountains as they rise irregularly, appear to have been the dumping-ground of Nature, where she threw the left-over material after making the beautiful and richly endowed (agriculturally) country of the Mississippi Valley. As they appeared to the west of us, thin clouds, hanging from the highest peaks over the gulches in places, gave them the appearance of smoking, like a gigantic culm-pile lending an aspect of reality to the imagination that they were the dumping-ground of Nature, as though her great ladle had just been emptied of the still hot refuse.

Is it the dumping-ground of Nature, or where she quit her "leveling" process, or might we not call the mountains her treasure-box, where she has stored great quantities of precious metals, hidden them in the midst of such grand confusion, where man could not get them? But she knew not man nor his greed for those precious things. He has searched that treasure-box, and gathered from their hiding-places great quantities of rich ores, and the end is not yet. Nature has still more than they have taken from her.

But while we have thus mused our train has rapidly approached the mountains, though they still are far away. Over the whole range hung a bank of clouds, dimming the view, toning down the sharp relief, and acting as a veil, as though Nature was loath to reveal all at once the grandeur of that rugged chain of mountains,—as if to modify to the plainsman the sharp transition from level plain to ragged mountain ridge. Who can ever tire of watching those sturdy hills, in all their changing aspects, as they are approached by the Burlington trains? To one who has been raised in a prairie State there is something awe-inspiring in the approach to the "everlasting hills."

While we have gazed and admired and mused, No. 13 has whirled us over the plains, until the suburbs of Denver are before us, and soon we are in the Union Depot of that city set on the plains yet guarded by silent, snow-capped sentries of the Front Range.

YOUNG MORMONS IN UTAH PROTESTING.

The Chicago Tribune for Monday, March 21, has a "special" to the effect that some five hundred young Mormons have formed an organization, the object of which is to demand and secure the carrying into complete effect the pledges concerning polygamy and unlawful cohabitation, given at the time Utah sought for and obtained admission into the Union as a State. It is further stated that an ultimatum would be presented by these protestants to the April session of conference, next, insisting that President Joseph F. Smith, and others of the leading officers, shall abandon their polygamous practices or they will leave the Church.

It is upon the younger element of the Utah people that the burden of carrying on the economic and political affairs of the Church must now rest, and they ought to see to it that the privileged three or four per cent of lawbreakers no longer stand in the way of progress for the State.

It may be a newspaper canard, but it is significant if true.

TWO GENEALOGIES OF JESUS.

We answer a request for the genealogy of Jesus Christ on the mother's side by reproducing the following from HERALD for July 22, 1896.

The whole subject of the genealogy of Jesus is treated with carefulness in Andrews' new edition of "The Life of Our Lord," as published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. In view of all that is known on the subject, there is good reason for supposing Mary and Joseph were first cousins, and that they were both decendants of David. Hence Doctor Andrews says: "We conclude that the two tables given by Matthew and Luke are to be regarded as those of Joseph and Mary, and are in beautiful harmony with the scope of their respective gospels. Through that of Matthew Jesus is shown to be the heir of David as the legal son of Joseph; through that of Luke, to be David's seed according to the flesh by his birth of Mary. The former, beginning with Abraham, the father of the chosen people, descends through David the king to Christ the royal heir, in whom all the national covenants should be fulfilled; the latter, beginning with the second Adam, the eternally begotten Son of God by creation, ascends to the first Adam, the Son of God by creation. Each evangelist gives his genealogy in that aspect which best suits his special purpose: To the one he is the Messiah of the Jews; to the other, the Savior of the world."—Sunday School Times, December 28, 1896.

There is a seeming disagreement between the records of Matthew and Luke concerning the genealogy of Christ. After studying the matter, the following seems to me the most reasonable explanation of the difficulty. I, however, cordially invite any to pull my theory to pieces, provided he can offer a better; or, if this seems reasonable, I shall be grateful for any additional evidence in its favor.

Evidently the writers of the two Gospels (Matthew and Luke) have traced the lineage of the Savior through two different lines; both, however, springing from the loins of David, and both, therefore, in harmony with the prophecy uttered by Jeremiah:

"Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth."—Jeremiah 23: 5.

David's two sons, Solomon and Nathan, stand as heads of these two lines, Matthew tracing the genealogy through the former, and Luke giving the history of Christ's descent through Nathan's line.

By Matthew's account the generations from David to Christ, excluding both David and Christ, number twenty-six. Luke gives forty-one. The number of years from the birth of Solomon to Christ was about one thousand thirty-three; so that by Matthew we are allowed a little less than thirty-six years to a generation, and by Luke a trifle over twenty-five. From this it may be supposed that Nathan's descendants usually married younger than did those of Solomon. It will be observed that the name Salathiel is given as the sixteenth (beginning to count at David) in Matthew's record, the same name being located by Luke in the twenty-second generation.

By our estimate as to the length of a generation in the respective lines, Matthew makes Salathiel to live about five hundred seventy-six years after the birth of Solomon; and five hundred fifty years after that event according to Luke, a difference of twenty-six years, which is easily accounted for by the consideration that the length of the generations varied, some exceeding and some falling short of the average.

From all this we are led to the conclusion that the name "Salathiel" refers in both records to the same individual; and we seem to be confirmed in this conclusion when, by a comparison of the two accounts, we discover that in both Zorobabel is declared to have been the son of Salathiel.

If the above be true, then the two lines have been united, which we believe may have come about in this manner: In Matthew Zechonias is said to have begotten Salathiel, while Luke says, "Salathiel, who was the son of Neri." In 1 Samuel 16:19, David is called the son of Jesse. In the twenty-sixth chapter, seventeenth verse, and those following, Saul addresses David as his (Saul's) son; and in the twenty-fourth chapter, eleventh verse, David speaks to Saul calling him "My father." In reality David was the son of Jesse and the son-in-law of Saul.

The thought that we would bring out is this: The genealogies record the names of the male descendants in the two lines down to the time of Zechonias and Neri, when, it may be supposed, Neri failed to supply a male descendant; but that his daughter married Salathiel who was therefore reckoned as his (Neri's) son, but who was in fact his son-in-law. Here again let us call your attention to the fact that both writers state that Zorobabel was the son of Salathiel, and we can see that here is a strong point in favor of our theory. But after Zorobabel the records again diverge, one giving Abiud, the other Rhesa, Zorobabel's two sons, evidently. The accounts again coincide when we get to the name Matthan (Matthat, Greek). The union of the two lines is here effected in the same manner, we presume, as before. But another difficulty arises: One writer states that Matthat begat Jacob, the other affirming that Heli was from the loins of Matthat. Remember that Matthan and Matthat are the same. And then Matthew says Jacob begat Joseph, while Luke claims that Joseph was from the loins of Heli. Thus both of the sons of Matthan are given as the father of Joseph.

This does not look reasonable until we are enlightened somewhat in regard to the ancient customs and laws.

In a book entitled "Joseph the Seer" (Bro. William W. Blair), on page 47 are found these words:

It was a custom of the ancient Hebrews, (Genesis 38: 8,) and a law under the Mosaic polity, for a man to marry his brother's widow and raise up seed unto his brother. And it was especially provided "That the firstborn which she beareth shall succeed in the name of his brother which is dead, that his name be not put out of Israel."—Deuteronomy 25: 6.

Now Joseph, the husband of Mary, was the natural son of Jacob, but, under the law we have cited, he was reckoned from "the loins" of Heli; for Joseph's mother was first married to Heli, and, as he died without seed, Jacob took her to wife and their firstborn was Joseph, who by the law was reckoned as Heli's son, and as being "from the loins of Heli."

FRANK L. KELLEY.

INDIAN RIVER, Maine, October 30, 1894.

"WHOSO DOETH THE WILL OF GOD SHALL KNOW OF THE DOCTRINE."

A brother whose name we are not at liberty to give sends us the following. We insert it, craving his pardon for so doing, as it is strikingly suggestive of and in harmony with the text referred to in the caption, John 7: 17:

It is with the best of feeling and sentiments of the highest esteem that the venerable President of the Church is asked to read this communication. It is written in the light of pure knowledge, it having been declared unto me by the voice of the Spirit that it was my duty so to do. And, not desiring to weary you, I will condense it in as few words as the subject will permit, the burden of which is a brief review of some of the more important words of eternal truth.

I was in the Spirit on the nights of January 23, 19, 9, and 3, in the year of our Lord 1904, and on November 27, 1903. Above fourteen years ago I was visited to the dividing asunder of spirit and body while wide awake and was entirely conscious of what I saw and heard. I saw with my own eyes the Lord Jesus Christ, in glory, at the right hand of God; that he was in the Father and the Father was in him; and the Holy Spirit proceeding from his presence to fill the immensity of space. I saw hosts of angels rejoicing before his throne, and that they were anxious about the work of God in the earth. I saw Peter, James, and John, and that their testimony was true. I also saw that the Old Testament, with the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants contained words of eternal truth.

The vision closed with my hearing the voice out of heaven, saying; "You know that Jesus Christ is the son of God and your faith is confirmed." The Holy Spirit remained on me and in me after the vision closed, causing joy unspeakable. The following doctrines are confirmed by the same voice and power: faith; repentance; baptism by immersion; laying on of hands for blessing little children, confirming into the church, healing the sick, ordaining to the ministry, and for giving patriarchal blessing, in which actual blood relationship is pointed out; baptism for the dead, through which all the dispensations from the foundation of the world shall be joined together; which ordinance can only be administered by direct revelation; the sacrament of the Lord's supper, as it is called, in which he who has authority to administer may call to his assistance whom he will, as occasion requires, when the Church does not prevent. Marriage is ordained of God. It is lawful that a man may have one wife at one time, and one woman one husband; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her shall lose the Spirit, and except he repent shall deny the faith. All men are conscious between death and the resurrection.

I saw the suffering, of the ungodly, and they shall have their part in outer darkness where there is weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth. Many who went to Utah committed the unpardonable sin. Sealing and spiritual wifery of every sort are cursed doctrines.

I am able to say as a result of what was shown me in 1897 that God knows when battles by land and sea will be fought and all the mighty influences that are transpiring in the earth before they take place.

I saw in the vision those who had holdings in the Church, and it was declared that surplus was determined between the Bishop and the one who had it in his power, and what was over not destroying the holding, is declared to belong to the Lord to be repeated as often as a surplus accumulated.

It sometimes occurs that a person receiving so clear and pointed confirmation of the doctrine of Christ is led to believe that by virtue of the reception of such evidence he is called to an important position in the ranks of the workers for Christ, or is burdened with some mission and divinely commanded to both assume the position and attempt the mission.

We have always been willing, and so far as we are aware ready to give place to any whom the Lord might indicate as his servants, or call to important position in the Church, or among the children of men; and have been also willing to hear what message men have been commissioned to bear to men. Notwithstanding this willingness and readiness expressed above, we must know, either by the word of revelation to us direct that the call and message offered for consideration have been authorized by him; or, convinced by proper evidences justified by human consideration and reason that both call and message were worthy of acceptance and would be productive of good to those to whom they came. We think it quite consistent for men who are acknowledged servants of the Master in charge of any considerable portion of his work and whom he has blessed by instruction and direction in their work, and who are commanded to ask for knowledge and guidance and exercise the right so given to ask, should receive testimony indorsing the calls and messages of those who may assert claims to having received such; providing the Master has sent them; if he has not sent them, no one will suffer condemnation for rejecting them.

In the absence of an indorsement of calls or messages by testimony from the Master when they have been presented to us, we have tried to weigh them fairly by the word and our work and decide according to our best judgement, and we shall continue so to do in the future, "Many spirits are gone out into the world." Not every spirit is of God. We may be deceived, but do not care to be by our own or the ambition of others.

LEGAL DECISION ON "SEALING."

SALT LAKE, Utah, February 20.—Judge W. C. Hall has rendered a decision to the effect that the "Mormon celestial marriage," known as "sealing for eternity," does not constitute a marriage in the eyes of the law.

The effect of this decision, if it stands, will permit polygamists to escape prosecution by setting up the claim that their plural marriages are "celestial."

Mrs. Annie F. A. Hilton was sealed to Doctor John R. Park in 1873, when the woman, then Miss Armitage, was supposed to be dying.

The couple never lived together. Miss Armitage married a man named Hilton while Doctor Park was alive and Hilton still lives.

When Park died she brought suit, claiming a widow's share in the estate. Judge Hall decided that as her wedding to Park was for eternity she was not his legal wife.

If the plea that a celestial marriage is not a legal marriage, what is the status of a woman who has been married by such a ceremony? The clipping misrepresents the decision of Judge Hall; the decision being that Miss Armitage was but sealed to Doctor Park for eternity, and was not by that ceremony made a wife in the sense in which marriage constitutes a woman a wife. It is that Doctor John R. Park was already a married man and had a wife living at the time Miss Armitage was sealed to him for eternity. If so, it was a celestial marriage without the earthly essence of a marriage within the jurisdiction of the court. Such decision of Judge Hall could only be cited to affect celestial marriages of the same circumstance and condition as the one taken under consideration; it might not have effect in cases under different conditions.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. Salyards informs us that about twenty districts have so far failed to send in credentials, and the work of preparing credentials to submit to committee is thereby retarded. District officers should promptly forward credentials to the Church Secretary, just as soon as possible after the delegates are chosen. See to it at once, secretaries.

A new folding machine has been ordered for the HERALD Office, and it is expected to be in place by next week. It is expected the new machine will greatly assist the work of the office. Is is needed, for the work to be done has steadily grown until the capacity must be increased some way.

Bro. Joseph Clapp, writing from Santa Barbara, California, March 8, states that no preaching of our faith having been done in that place, he went there on Friday, March 4, obtained the promise of the use of a small hall, advertised a week's effort, held two meetings, and abandoned his effort; the reason being that the hall is rented by a small band of "comeouters" from the Catholic faith and called "Episcopal Baptists." They are Mexicans, known in the local "gringos" dialect as "greasers," and being governed by the old Catholic superstition, are intolerant.

Bro. Clapp is not so much put out at being shut out of the hall, but, as he writes, "It is a little trying to be sat down upon by a lot of ignoramuses just because somebody has done wrong. And then the idea of a 'greaser' making a kick! Why, it is like an old darkey woman that would not let her children go out doors for fear they would get sunburned. Well, we are not discouraged and will not pull down the flag. You will hear from us again ere long."

WALTER WELLMAN ON THE SMOOT CASE.

In the Chicago Record-Herald for March 14, Walter Wellman has considerable to say concerning the "Smoot case." Among other things he wrote as follows concerning the "non-polygamous Mormons":

The committee has also been appealed to by other Mormon churches to take action which shall result in justice to them. It seems that there are several Mormon societies in various parts of the country whose members do not practice polygamy, and who never did. These churches regard the Utah organization as apostate and the Utah people as cordially hate the others. These monogamist Latter Day Saints are as bitterly opposed to Smoot or any other Utah Mormon sitting in Congress as the Methodists or the Presbyterians or any other Christian people could be. They want Smoot unseated and have not been at all backward in making their wishes known to the committee. They have informed the committee that Smoot and every other Utah Mormon who goes through the endowment ceremony has taken an oath which binds him forever to "follow his file leader" without question or demur. Moreover, the monogamist Mormons say the polygamous Mormons are taught that they may swear falsely to any Gentile, and that it is not a sin. It is declared that many who in innocence have gone through this ceremony believing it to be right have afterward been so shocked by it as to induce them to leave the church and denounce the whole thing.

One of the largest of these nonpolygamous societies is known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa. Members of Congress from Iowa who know these people say they are the equals in probity and morality of any people under the sun. No citizens of that State are more highly respected by their neighbors. The members of this Church and their friends of similar societies in Michigan and other Western States are imploring the committee to give them a chance to prove that President Joseph F. Smith of Utah in his recent testimony before the committee bore false and outrageously unjust witness against the original Joseph Smith. President Smith declared on the stand that Joseph Smith, who was killed at Carthage, Illinois, in 1844, introduced polygamy into the Mormon Church. This the non-polygamous Mormons, or Latter Day Saints, vehemently deny, and they ask the committee to give them an opportunity to prove that President Smith did not tell the truth. There are fifty or sixty thousand of these nonpolygamous people, and they are to this day under the leadership of the sons of the original Joseph Smith. They aver that it is hard enough for them to be compelled to stagger along under the reproach and disgrace of the apostate church of Utah, because in the minds of the uninformed there is little difference between one Mormon and another, without being compelled to endure this false witness.

It is not probable that the committee will accede to the request to open up this old controversy. But a member of the committee, who knows something of the high character of the monogamist Latter Day Saints, says he has personally examined some of the evidence which has been submitted to the committee and he can find no proof whatever that President Smith was correct in saying Joseph Smith had introduced polygamy into the Church. On the other hand, he finds almost conclusive proof that Joseph Smith did nothing of the sort and that the founder of the Church neither practiced nor preached polygamy. In the Book of Doctrine and Covenants of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints it is written: "Marriage is ordained of God unto man, wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife and they twain shall be one flesh." Again, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart and shalt cleave unto her and none else." This, it is believed, was the only doctrine of marriage ever taught by the founder of Mormonism. In fact, it is pretty well demonstrated that the Church never taught polygamy till Brigham Young became the absolute ruler of the organization. Members of the committee say they would like to do justice to the moral and law-abiding citizens who compose the Church in its undefiled form, and who have been preaching repentance to their erring brothers in Utah these many years, but the committee can not go into that question.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

J. B. Kinney, Portland, Oregon, wrote under date of March 8, reporting two baptisms there. The work in Portland seems to be gaining slowly at least.

U. W. Greene reports for the last quarter of the year that the men in the western part of the Eastern Mission, in spite of the hindering severely cold weather, made several new openings of a promising character. Some excellent work has been done in these openings, and indications point to a large ingathering. With slight exception, peace and harmony have prevailed among the elders. Fifteen baptisms have been reported by the missionaries for the quarter.

Bro. Peter Anderson reports the work in the Scandinavian Mission for the year. They have baptized eighteen, and have done much work in the way of visiting, conversing, distributing literature, etc. Most of their work has been confined to Norway, mainly at Christiania, Porsgrund, Grimstad, Christianssand, and Egersund. The Banner has been a means of spreading the "sound" of the work. They need help in that mission, as the field is opening up in Denmark also, and work could also be done in Sweden.

Bro. Luff, in reporting for the California Mission, says sickness and temporal affairs have hindered to quite an extent the missionaries in that field. Some of the men failed to furnish statistics of work done. Concerning himself Bro. Luff wrote: "My health improved for quite awhile, but when I began to push out and preach more than two or three times a week, I broke again, and have been suffering. . . . Am happy in the work of telling the angel's message."

Report of Missionaries to the General Conference of 1904.

SIGHTS AND SOUNDS OF A GREAT CITY.—NO. 3.

"Chop Suey."

"Chop Sooy."

It is spelled both ways, but smells one way, and tastes the same; "chop sooy," as an introduction device to the American people (though it might have been characterized by Bret Harte as one of "the ways that are dark," or "the tricks that are vain," for which, Bret says in his poems, "The heathen Chinese is peculiar"), is becoming an American habit, and it seems to be a fact that this peculiar kind of a "heathen" has been to a large extent successful in undermining the "Melican man's" prejudices against the mysteries of the "menues" of this ancient kingdom.

Plenty of Americans, men and women, eat regularly, or dine often, upon "chop sooy" and other "heathen" delicacies in the fast multiplying Chinese restaurants of Chicago and other American cities, but few Americans may be acquainted with the real texture and make-up of the Chinese article which might be classed with an American production denominated by Mark Twain as "mystery," or, translated into the American "vulgar" tongue, means "hash." And whether it is the American or the Chinese article we are introduced to, the boarding-house or restaurant production contains, confessedly, secrets that in a large measure are deserving of the title applied to it by the great humorist. Mark once said that it required "faith" and "confidence" to enable one to enjoy the American article, and the lack of that has deprived me on one or two occasions of getting my money's worth out of a Chinese repast. And I wondered if somebody paid the proprietor again for the combination, warmed over, which I failed in courage to appropriate.

I think, however, that the American, uninitiated as yet, who seeks an introduction and pursues an acquaintance with the Chinese aggregation will have, or will acquire, a confused idea of meat, mushrooms, celery, rice, onions, etc.,—all served together in intricate and inextricable association, and with it a bowl of finely cooked rice that seems to be a very nice, candid, open-faced, and honest affair by the side of its insidious and constant companion, "chop sooy" by name. A pot of clear tea accompanies this ill-assorted pair and is said to be superior to the article generally served by Americans.

From this twenty-five-cent combination, you may start out to explore, with the aid of a well-filled purse, the merits of a bewildering assortment of articles, the titles of which, if found printed upon other than a bill of fare and numbering over one hundred dishes, might to a novice or to a man whose knowledge of language excludes the Chinese way of communicating ideas, be interpreted as well to mean a sled or an overcoat as something to eat. For example: "Sub gum guide" will cost you one dollar and twenty-five cents; "gum ten guide," one dollar and a half; "arp deeng," with "hop ho," two dollars and fifty cents; "chew mun" with "bird's nest," three dollars. You are in doubt as to what kind of an attack is threatening your internal organism, even when you are offered "chow mien" with "chicken sub gum" for two dollars and twenty-five cents. And if you want to become reckless with your pocketbook, and yourself, you can order from the list of "imperial dishes" some "long soo, tone bark arp" for the small sum of eight dollars; "shark's fins—long fong Chea," only five dollars. If you are disposed farther in this direction, you may order a dish of "bird's nest bud ball yet been war," which will leave you out of and "John" in fifteen dollars.

Any or all of these mysteries may be explored day or night in the Clark Street Palace Restaurants whose proprietors have spent thousands of dollars in fitting up with magnificent appointments from the marble stairs to the costly inlaid tables, paintings, and adornments.

Their music, fine, clean-looking, and polite waiters, all these are new innovations to the people of Chicago. Of the numerous Chinese restaurants and eating houses in this city, the three visited are said to be the finest, here or elsewhere.

Joy Yet Lo is said to be the millionaire proprietor of the one first visited. The second, and finest, only a block from Van Buren Street on Clark, is owned and managed by the King Yen Lo Company. Another elaborate and costly affair, another block below, has been recently opened to the public by the We Ying To Company. At any time, night or day, you can see well-dressed, fine-appearing men and ladies, single, or in company, patronizing these places.

Whether their growing popularity and success is due to the American craze for fads and fancies without reference to quality or real merit, or whether they are discovering something of real superiority or merit in the imported cookery or edibles of the heathen acquisition to American society, is a matter of which the writer has as yet perhaps too little information to render him a competent or wise judge. But whether John Chinaman has been justly assigned to a place in the rear end of the procession as a soldier or statesman in the eyes of the world, he seems to be making successful assault and headway upon the American stomach, and in other and various ways upon the American's pocket-book.

Perhaps, however, in the introduction and "mix-up" over the social amenities of the table where the instincts of peace and good fellowship are engendered, it may be possible that the work of "cementing the nations" may receive something of an impetus.

"Quien Sabe?"—Who knows?

For us as a people, however, the better and more profitable prospect lies in the direction of simplifying rather than that of mystifying, elaborating, or enlarging upon our means of testing physical capacity and strength or ability to endure assault upon the organs of digestion. The Word of Wisdom, through a safe and authoritative means, is better calculated, in the matter of food or diet, to produce the highest and best results. And although the world is given for a field from which wise men may glean profitable lessons, neither the priest nor cook, whether dignified by the title of "chef," or any other popular or mystifying name, of China or any other nation, with their habit or manners in relation to these things, may be safely exchanged for the fullness and completeness of instruction, as relates to our temporal or spiritual interests which the Almighty has furnished in these latter days, or is willing to furnish when the habit or law of self-denial of things harmful, or unprofitable, shall have obtained more complete sway over our lives than it now does with many of us.

In Christ is life, physical, temporal, spiritual. Outside—in the realm and world of appetite and passion uncontrolled by an understanding and an observance of all of the laws of the Creator that was designed to govern our being—is disease, disaster, and death.

FORGIVENESS.

I have long been revolving a problem in my mind based on this subject, which I wish that some one more able than myself would take up and define, giving their definition and correcting the thoughts brought forward in this article. For it seems to me to be a subject that is commonly understood only in a superficial manner.

I turn to my dictionary and find the word defined very nicely, so will give it in substance: To pardon, to excuse, to overlook, to give up, to resign, not to exact, not to punish, to cease to feel resentment towards. It produces reconciliation when it is sincerely granted, and sincerely demanded. Now we have learned the definition of the word, and what we must do to forgive, but the question is, How much ground does it cover? What sort of offences are we called upon to forgive? I read in Matthew 12:31 that all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men, except blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. Then I read in the Lord's prayer, Matthew 11:12: "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." And in the following verses I read: "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if you forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive you your trespasses."

Are we to forgive in accord with the liberality of our Father which is in heaven? If an unscrupulous man seeks to take away my goods unlawfully, shall I forgive him for his act of violence, without using lawful means to recover my goods? If so, where is our safety from pillage, and being preyed upon by the lawless element of the world? And again, If we are not to ask our goods again from him who takes them away, are we not in danger of suffering extreme poverty or of becoming a burden to the Church? And yet, if we do not forgive men their trespasses, of whatsoever nature they are, how can we hope to become a peculiar people, zealous of good works? And how in the face of such plain teaching as quoted, can we hope to have our trespasses forgiven, if we discriminate and forgive only after we have used the force of the law to recover our goods? Shall we not receive in the same measure with which we have measured?

In Doctrine and Covenants 64:2, I read: "But of you it is required to forgive all men; and ye ought to say in your hearts, let God judge between me and thee, and reward thee according to thy deeds." Does that mean to forgive and allow God to be judge after we have used the force of the law to recover goods that have been unlawfully seized upon? Or are we to forgive without making any attempt to recover that which is rightfully ours, although we may suffer for the want of it? Can we use the force of the law to recover that which is justly ours, and then conscientiously kneel before God and pray, "Our Father, glad in our dear rights we come with soul, with mind, with spirit bringing all to learn accord with thee life's perfect sum. And, now, Father, as we have frankly, from the depths of our hearts, forgiven our fellow men all the transgressions wherewith they have transgressed against us, we do confidently ask with expectancy that our sins and transgressions may be forgiven us, and that we may be acknowledged as obedient children by thee"? Could you do it, or would there be an inward consciousness that you had not forgiven your fellow man all the transgressions with which they had transgressed, that would hold you back from approaching the Father with such expressions of confidence?

Some say, "O well, we will forgive the man for taking away our goods unlawfully, but at the same time we will compel him to relinquish his hold upon them, for they are ours. He has no right to them." Then the same parties will kneel and pray, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those that trespass against us." Or in other words, "Heavenly Father, please hold us strictly to the performance of all the obligations wherewithal we are obligated to thee, and forgive us for attempting to break the obligation. Compel us to pay our tithes and offerings into your storehouse, and forgive us for attempting to rob you of them." Again, I ask are we to learn obedience to the gospel of Christ as we are taught obedience in the scripture—namely, to attain to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ, to become perfect as he is perfect? If so, must we not learn to forgive all manner of sins?

I read in James 5:6 that the just did not even resist death. They must have followed the instruction to resist not evil. Then, if we resist evil are we justified? If so, why do I read in Doctrine and Covenants 95:5: "If men will smite you, or your families, once, and ye bear it patiently and revile not against them, neither seek revenge, ye shall be rewarded; but if ye bear it not patiently, it shall be accounted unto you as being meted out a just measure unto you." But, perhaps some will say that does not say that a man shall not seek to recover his own goods which have been unlawfully taken, but it says that we shall not seek revenge. Very well; I will ask if there is any exception made regarding the manner in which our enemy is to come against us? Or would we be taking it patiently if we were to use the force of the law to recover our goods? Then there is a promise of God that if we bear it patiently we shall be rewarded.

Again, I read in seventh paragraph: "If he [thine enemy] trespass against thee and repent not the first time, nevertheless thou shalt forgive him." Also, the second and third time.

Here is one more quotation which I wish to give; it is found in Colossians 3:13: "If any man have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye." Would not we have a quarrel against a man that unlawfully took away our goods? My observation of human nature goes to convince me that but few things at least, would more quickly start a quarrel.

One more thought comes to my mind. Paul says in Hebrews 10:34: "For ye had compassion on me in my bonds, and took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven a better and more enduring substance." I have brought together this collection of thoughts and teaching in the hope, as I stated at first, that some one with more ability and better discernment will take up the subject and make a clear exposition of it. I have one hundred and seventy-five dollars at stake, which lawful measures would soon restore to me. I desire to know the truth that I may be made free.

Your brother in Christ,

CHAS. L. SESSIONS.

NEED OF LABOR.

When I consider the vastness of the field of labor even in this country, to say nothing of others, and think of the few who are laboring diligently to win souls to Christ, it causes me to try to think of some way to use what material we have to a better advantage.

We number between forty and fifty thousand members. Suppose we give away an average of one tract each per month; that would not be very much, it seems to me—say thirty thousand per month or three hundred and sixty thousand tracts per year. I believe we as a church can do more in the way of distributing literature, tracts, papers, etc., than we do. What do you think about it, reader?

The HERALD Office has these for distribution; they are cheap, the Saints need them, and the world should have them. I know a sister (not a dozen or two, but one) who takes her buggy, goes to schools and other places and distributes HERALDS. Can not others, both of brethren and sisters, do likewise? The Religio is making a commendable effort in that line. They need encouragement in that line of work. I am thankful for the work being done by the Good Literature committees. Do not be discouraged in that department of church service and think your work amounts to nothing.

Is not life made up of little things? If you differ from me and conclude life's work is composed of big things then just console yourself in thinking over the big things you have done in the past, but be sure you keep on doing them. Where there is a family of Saints you should get the Sunday-school Quarterlies and study them—teach them to your children, and if your neighbors will take part with you, all right; if not, that does not excuse you. We can all find something to do if we look for it. He that seeketh shall find. The time is fully here for work; every one old enough to be baptized is old enough to work. The Lord is not pleased with idlers in his vineyard; sometimes even preachers will preach a while and get kind of sour over something and quit. Will that help the matter any? Are you more spiritual since you quit preaching? Perhaps some one higher in authority than you has said something you did not like: well, suppose he has and has done wrong; he must answer to his Master for his acts, and the same is true of you and all the rest of us. "By our works we stand or fall."

Then let us, whatever be our calling, do what we can now for the cause of truth. C. J. SPURLOCK.

TO-DAY.

It's so easy to murmur "I'll do it to-morrow"—it's so near, yet so far away; but postponement is often prophetic of sorrow—then why not do it to-day? "To-morrow" is misty, is vague and uncertain, though the present is mirthful and gay; no human eye pierces the morrow's black curtain—so take hold and do it to-day. The future is made of our coming to-morrows—have faith in it, therefore, I say; but if you would make it secure against sorrows—then do your whole duty to-day.—G. W. Hatch.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

The Child Eternal.

I heard their prayers and kissed their sleepy eyes,
And tucked them in all warm from feet to head,
To wake again with morning's glad sunrise—
Then came where he lay dead.
Those other children long to men have grown—
Strange, hurried men, who give me passing thought,
Then go their ways. No longer now my own.
Without me they have wrought.
So when night comes, and seeking mother's knee,
Tired childish feet turn home at eventide,
I fold him close—the child that's left to me,
My little lad who died.—Selected.

Memories of Childhood.

The pleasures of hope (a phrase that springs to our lips instinctively) pale into insignificance beside the pleasures of memory. For which of us have not known the hope that remained for ever unfulfilled, and the expectations which, when realized, brought only disappointment and distress? But memory holds things tangible, things that really happened, events that oftentimes fulfilled our longings, pleasures untold even to our nearest and dearest, a storehouse whose full treasure can only be appreciated when many a year has passed, and we begin to be content to sit quietly and let others take our place (that place we fought so hard to win) in life's activities.

Suppose the gift of memory were denied us; suppose we awoke on our twenty-first birthday and found that instead of being able to recall the events of yesterday the waters of Lethe had flowed over our mind during the night? We can read, therefore we know that at some forgotten period we have worried through our A. B. C. We speak divers tongues, we perform wondrously on some instrument, we are conversant with the usages of the world; by these we know that once some one had taught us; but of the pains and penalties endured during the process we recollect nothing. Alas! we have forgotten the time when "the beauty and the glory of the dream" remained with us, and that period when, all unconsciously, some shreds of those "clouds of glory" yet hung about us, and by their gentle light purified our thoughts and words. With what an astonishment we would contemplate little children! how we would wonder what it felt like to be a child! What do they think of? How do such imaginings enter their wee heads? What must it be like to wander at will in that Wonderland where they seem the natural inhabitants, but where we, with our blundering footsteps, can not enter.

But most of us can remember from the time we claimed to own five years; we date it from some event, probably trivial, but it imprinted itself on our minds, and is one of those things which to the end of life we will never forget. And so memory began, and now we would not exchange its fairy gifts for all the world can bestow. The walks which, when emancipated from nurse's hands, we so proudly took with our elders, the little excursions, so long planned and at last realized; the first visit to a great city; the first flowers of our own growing; the first bit of sewing we accomplished (oh, those dog-tooth stitches!); the first boat we carved, and the first penknife we owned—we remember these things; they come back to us so vividly, it seems as if it had all happened but yesterday; we can hardly realize the years that have flown since then.

For the greater part of our lives we make our memories for ourselves; it is our own fault if eventually they prove bitter to our taste; but during our early days our parents are responsible for them, and our recollections centre round their figures and actions and are permeated by their influence. Are we careful enough as to what the little ones are storing up in those wee, busy brains? Do we grudge time spent in playing with the children, in encouraging their loving little ways, in giving them simple pleasures, in teaching them to be kind to each other (for the art of giving up requires to be taught), in helping their little natures to expand and grow in the sunshine of loving one another?

A mother was once heard to say: "I never encourage the children to climb on my knees, they know better than to do it. I never nurse them, I have something else to do with my time."

Something else! But is it possible it was something better?

One sees such children and one knows such homes; they are quite easily recognized. The children are carefully looked after, it may be well fed and taught and clothed—but there it all ends. There are no loving glances, no surreptitious kisses, no shriekings with delight when baby wins in the race to bring father's slippers, no little nursings and huggings by mother in the firelight, no playful pranks in all pure innocence with one another, no pet names, no little delightful secrets, the keeping of them such an important business, the betrayal of them such a crime, their happy fruition such unalloyed pleasure! And what memories will those children have? No doubt their parents would miss them were they not there, but the well-spring of love does not seem deep enough to let its waters overflow towards the little ones.

It is hardly possible for parents to lavish too much wise love on their children; think of the weary road they must travel ere their sun sets, think of the disappointments, the trials they may be called upon to undergo! Then see that you furnish them abundantly with tender memories of your loving thought, memories that will keep your name sacred in their hearts to the last day of their lives, when the birds and clouds are the only watchers round your bed.

And, like most other good things, these memories can not be bequeathed without effort and self-denial on the parent's part; they need a little bit of ourselves woven into them. They don't require money; the ship carved roughly from a bit of wood, and furnished with calico sails hemmed by mother has finer lines and a snowier swell of canvas in its owner's eyes than any Shamrock ever floated by a millionaire. The twine for the shrouds ran short, and there's an unnautical knot here and there; and the paint for the red line round the hull had to be eked out by Mary's paint-box; but never mind; was there ever a greater beauty built? The dolly dressed in a bit of one's own best frock and scraps of lace is far grander and follows the fashion more closely than the white satin lady in the middle of the toy-shop window!

"Mother dressed my doll her own self. I saw her cut out the clothes." And "Father made the little deck-house, and put in the masts, and isn't she splendid?" What words of pride underlie these statements!

And Jemima Jane will never be thrown away, but will outlive the reign of many a more gaily-decked favorite, to be discovered some day in a neglected corner; even then she must not be parted from, but have her poor faded face carefully dusted and laid away in a box, for she was—the very first doll mother gave me.

And when Jack can make a torpedo model himself he will come across his first boat, now a sheer old hulk, yet a certain something makes him keep it and look at it with a kindly feeling, even though his critical eye can not help seeing the flaws in her rough outline; but it may be that the fingers which carved it are now at rest, and their touch has invested the wood with something sacred even to the boy's prosaic eyes.

Is it not true that, were all our youthful memories suddenly swept from us, nothing equally valuable in our eyes could be found to replace them?

Is any fruit half so ripe or so luscious now as it was in those days? Search the autumn shows, and you will discover no such Nonpareils as those we risked our lives to get; climbing a sally tree, whose swinging topmost bough, bent by our weight, brought us over the garden wall and within reach of the prize! Do gooseberries grow as thickly now as they did on those bushes amongst whose branches we dodged to evade our governess's call, filling our pinafores and pockets with soft berries as ammunition to keep up the warfare? Does any snow fall now as hard and crisp as what we made snowballs of? Ah! In those far-off days it may be that all our geese were swans. Be it so! We do not want to be disillusioned; we want to cling to our memories, all the pains and penalties forgotten, only the delightful escapades of a boy and girlhood remembered.

We can scarcely rest a moment by the fire now without seeing a fat, childish form cuddled up, oh, so comfortably, in father's arms, two bare legs dangling, a fair head laid so trustingly against his breast; and we hear, aye, as plainly as we ever did, the low, soft croon of a long-forgotten childish song, one that has never found its way into print, but was more replete with soft persuasiveness to sleep than any other; and then we hear the kind voice saying, "Hush, the little one is asleep, how comfy she looks," and patiently she is held there while the embers glow and redden, and drop, one by one. Those loving arms are resting now; that old-fashioned song will never be framed by those lips again, but the child holds the memory of the clasp and the song, and will keep it until she, too, reaches the far-off land.

For the garden of a child's mind needs such careful tending that, if we wish for rare blossoms and rich fruitage, if we wish to serve our children so that they in return will joyfully render us bountiful service, we shall inevitably find that we can not serve the world too. The seeds that bear fifty or a hundredfold are matured oftentimes with a mother's life-blood, the scattering in that little heart of holy memories demands the very fibers of our being. But if you must keep the outside world within your grasp, well, you must forego for ever the expectation of making a permanent impression on your child's mind and affections.

Think for a moment. Would you like your child's interest to revolve entirely round nurse, good and kind and trusty though she may be; is she to be the principal figure in the wee one's mind, and mother only a shadowy phantom, who flitted now and then across her path, mystic and beautiful, a dispenser of chocolates and bonbons, but by no means a being into whose lap one would think of jumping, or who could be expected to care about white mice or the black cat's numerous progeny? Or round whose neck one would dream of flinging chubby arms and while stroking the soft cheek with sticky fingers, murmur cooingly, "I want to kiss you, muddie, I want to."

But the caress hastily bestowed, the picture-book raced over, the little promise unfulfilled, the oft-repeated "Now, baby, run away, and leave me in peace," such will never gain the hearts of the wee ones.

We aim to secure, not only the natural love inborn from child to parent, but to fill them with such trust in us that they know they can always count on their parents, and that mother and father will never fail them. It is not easy, but for such a prize who would not strive to reach the goal, and if we strive in earnest we shall surely succeed, "Sometime, somewhere."—Selected.

A man who wants to see a country must not hurry through it by express train, but he must stop in the towns and villages and see what is to be seen. He will know more about the land and its people if he walks the highways, climbs the mountains, stays in the home and visits the workshop than if he does so many miles in the day and hurries through picture galleries as if death were pursuing him. Don't hurry through scripture, but pause for the Lord to speak to you. Oh, for more meditation!—Reverend Spurgeon.

Joseph Burton and Emma; servants of God. Peace be with you in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

This will inform you of the holiday exercises which were held for the Christmas day, with the branch of Kaukura. A committee of four were chosen to direct the exercises in the gatherings, they were Tapuni, Taneterau, Tetuarere, and Teehu; and a committee of six women to prepare the tree, their names are Maui, Tahu, Oue, Tengahe, Teata, and Teheura.

1. At seven o'clock in the evening of the 24th of December, 1903, the Christmas services were opened with singing by a class of forty persons, of Kaukura, Tetauhiti the teacher; and prayer by Elder Tapuni.

2. Singing by a class of forty-eight persons of Arutua; Tearava the teacher.

3. The curtain was then removed from the tree, and the children and older persons received their presents. There were present forty-one children of Kaukura, twenty-two of Arutua, four of Apataki, two of Manihi, and five of Takapoto, and they received seventy-four bags of candy.

4. The children of Kaukura, Arutua, Manihi, Apataki, and Takapoto put an aroha on the tree for Joseph and Emma of five dollars and forty cents.

5. There were speeches by Putoa, Ioane, Tamaiti, Huoi, Tapu, Tetuarere, Paite, Vaiarea, Teehu, John Hawkins, Louis, and Neri, and Sr. Maui; after which the exercises were closed with singing by a class of fifty persons whose teacher was Maire, and prayer by Tetuarere.

15. The committee arose and said, Friends, this closes the exercises for this time, and all who desire to speak their minds concerning them may do so, and there will be no censuring. Elders John Hawkins, Tapu Putoa, and Louis said they were very much pleased indeed with all the exercises of this Christmas time, it was very good and has given us joy in our hearts.

16. Closed by singing by a class of fifty of Arutua, Teata the teacher, and prayer by Ioane Tamaiti.

At 7 o'clock in the evening the matutu of the branch of Arutua began with singing by a class of fifty persons, and prayer by Neri. The subject was, man's body and its members; and the body of Christ and its members. The committee stated that the matutu was finished, and Elders Putoa, Fakatoro, Tetuarere and Vaiarea expressed themselves as much pleased and therefore the exercises were all received with much joy by the committee; after which the services were closed with singing by the Kaukura class, and prayer by Teehu. Thus ends the translation.

On Monday at 7 p. m. preaching by Putoa, after which the services of the Religio of Arutua began with singing by a class of seventy-eight, Poimata the teacher; they were divided into eighteen classes; Tiho president, Louis assistant president, Taataroa secretary. Used lesson five; concluded by singing, and prayer by Tapu. We expect to leave here for Anaa in about two weeks to attend conference, everything is moving along fairly well in the mission.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
J. F. BURTON.

BONESTEEL, South Dakota, March 2, 1904.

Dear Herald: I came here last Friday to attend the conference of the Central Nebraska District, and met Brn. Wight, Gamet, and the local priesthood, Brn. Joseph Smith, W. W. Whiting, and Daniel Parmer, all of the last three being of the little branch at this place. Friday was occupied by the Sunday-school convention, and, considering the scattered condition of the schools, the reports were encouraging. Bro. William McKee, superintendent, is doing all in his power to make the school a success, and conducts his school in a very creditable manner.

Conference convened on Saturday, and passed off very pleasantly. The district embraces a large territory, making arduous work for those in charge of the work. Bro. Gamet deserves great credit for his zealous work under such trying conditions. Bro. Wight has done all in his power to aid in the work. The writer spoke to a very attentive audience Saturday night on spiritual development. Bro. Wight preached Sunday morning with good liberty, and Bro. Gamet delivered a very interesting discourse on the life and power of the gospel.

Monday night the branch held a priesthood meeting to devise means to promote the welfare of the work at this place. There is some excellent material in the branch here, diamonds in the rough, but honest, kind, generous people, needing only a strong guiding hand to preside over them, and instruct them in the law. When they learn discipline they will be a power for good in this country.

This is one of the finest countries on earth. When the resurrection is opened for settlement this will be one of the most lively and enterprising places in the West.

The Saints generally are well situated—some of them waiting to secure land. Bro. Willoughby, president of the branch, is a typical son of Tennessee, and a man of sterling character who befriended old Bro. Thomas when threatened by a mob in Tennessee. He delights to tell of the episode.

Meetings will probably be held all week if the weather is good. I do not know where we will go next, but will try to keep the ball in motion until time to go to General Conference. The writer stopped at Norfolk enroute here and preached four times at the house of Bro. Hyrum Strong, with little interest manifested.

Ever praying for Zion's welfare,
J. S. STRAIN.

Bow, Washington, March 4, 1904.

Editors Herald: Last Sunday we were treated to quite an exciting Mormon surprise party. We were enjoying a profitable visit from Bro. Walter H. Dancer formerly of Lamoni, when a man rapped at the door and said he would like to give a "faith talk" in the schoolhouse that evening if I had no objection. He soon got to talking and he proved to be a cousin of Bro. C. W. Earl of California and said he had read the Book of Mormon twice. He has walked (and rode) seven thousand miles through Washington, Oregon, and California.

We started for the meeting and on arriving there found two Mormon elders, Frank and Earle, who were on their way from Vancouver, British Columbia, to their conference in Seattle and were to walk the entire distance. Before I met them, my neighbor, a Swedish lady who keeps the hotel, told me they were Latter Day Saint elders, and knowing I always liked to meet my church people told me they were my brothers and that I would no doubt want to keep them over night as they said they had only fifteen cents between them. I asked them if they were Utah Mormons and they said "Yes." I then told them I belonged to the Reorganized Church.

At the close of the "faith talk" I told them as Bro. Dancer was visiting me they would find accommodations at the hotel where I had made arrangements for them to stay.

They asked me several questions about the growth of our church; said they had met Brn. Parr and Chatburn in Spokane and finally I asked them how they could believe in polygamy and if Joseph the Martyr did not always teach the Church to obey the laws of the land? They said he did, but a generation had grown up since Joseph's time and made a crime now what was not then a crime, and that although the Book of Mormon prohibits polygamy, the Old Testament upholds it, and he pointed me to the case of Hannah, a polygamous wife, finding favor with God in 1 Samuel. All this time the people had gathered around, eagerly drinking in every word; people whom I had told Joseph Smith was an honest man and not a polygamist.

Elder David Frank then said I was the first member of the Reorganization to "jump" him, and in a dramatic manner held up both of his hands and said that he could testify that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God and that he knew he was a polygamist. I held up one hand and said that if you say you know Joseph Smith was a polygamist, you lie, and the Kirtland Temple is a standing monument to the fact, for your church in Utah sent all the witnesses she could muster to prove her point in the court in Lake County, Ohio. Did Joseph Smith ever have polygamous children? No. "Then" said I, "you can not find that Joseph Smith was married to any woman but Miss Emma Hale, nor prove that polygamy is a command of God." Among other things Elder Frank asked me if I knew that the Utah and Reorganized Churches were combining together to purchase land in Jackson County, Missouri. I told him no, and I gave him my name and address to send me the authentic particulars. Several minor statements were made by him which I called on Bro. Dancer to prove were false. As he passed out of the schoolhouse among other slurs at the Reorganization he said it was too slow and stupid to get converts. The next morning I learned that they made a lot of talk about me and said I said things which I did not and easily proved I did not by the little faith talker and others.

Bro. Editor, did I do wrong in telling him he lied as I did? Here I have been teaching in the public school in this district for almost two years, and telling the story of Joseph Smith as only we can tell it and tell the truth and then to have a man who professed to believe in him say in one breath he was both a prophet and a polygamist! No man knows it! They undid in one breath what I have endeavored in my feeble way to build up in several breaths. They denied preaching Adam-god, blood atonement, etc., but I proved it was in Brigham Young's Journal of Discourses.

Since the meeting, I have gone to the "law and the testimony," as follows: Paul says in Galatians 1: 8, 9: "Though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel . . . let him be accursed." Romans 1: 16: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation." It does not say "polygamy" is the power of salvation.

Galatians 3: 27, 28 says: "There can be no male or female to those who have put on Christ by baptism, for we are all one in Christ." Therefore neither polygamy nor any form of marriage has anything to do with salvation.

In Acts 20: 17 we read that Paul called the elders of the church to him, and following the chapter to the twenty-eighth verse he tells them the Holy Ghost hath made them bishops to feed the church of God, using elder and bishop interchangeably; and in 1 Timothy second verse, we read that a bishop shall have but one wife and in the twelfth verse of the same chapter, a deacon shall be the husband of one wife. What can be plainer? This must refer to the whole priesthood, or else an elder, priest, or teacher would be in a pretty pickle if they had two wives and were made a bishop in the literal sense.

As to Elder Frank's reference in 1 Samuel; Elkanah took two wives and Hannah was the first one. A tract left by the elder at the hotel called "A friendly discussion on religious subjects," from Mr. Durant of Salt Lake, says, on page 12: "God does not send men into the world to preach contrary doctrines, for this creates confusion." This is very consistent coming from a church which by its leaders inculcating and preaching polygamy, Adam-God theory, and blood atonement, along with the pure gospel of Christ, is making "confusion worse founded."

As to their innovations, Adam-God theory, etc., they are so well known I will not quote where they can be found except to say that the pamphlet, "The books and Utah Mormonism in contrast," gives the references. But the queries have come to me, If what Brigham Young preached was true how could God turn himself out of the garden of Eden and curse the ground for disobeying his own command? Such logic is nonsense, just the same as polygamy is lasciviousness and therefore the doctrine of the Devil, for it is of the flesh. See Galatians 5: 19-20, and the seventeenth verse says the Spirit and flesh are contrary one to the other. Then how can any one claim the gift of God through the lusts of the flesh and have common sense? For the law of common decency as well as common sense teaches polygamy is an abomination before God and man. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God," does not include such doctrine in this day and age.

Brothers and sisters, we are to be tried as by fire. Never was I tempted to give up as now, but God is able to sustain us, and there is no turning back. Remember Lot's wife. Let us all pray for the Conference at Kirtland that the Holy Spirit may be present as a mighty power and that it may be a season of great refreshing and rejoicing to the whole church and kingdom of God, and I would especially ask you, Brn. Chase and Holt, who conducted me into the Church, to pray for me that I may still be more faithful, and now that I have been called by the Spirit, that I may be more faithful and have the office and spirit of my calling. I ask the prayers of all. "Let us pray for one another."

I wish to testify that I have kept the Word of Wisdom by the power of the Spirit since conference and have no desire to return to coffee, etc.

Since writing the above I have read of the testimony of Joseph F. Smith having five wives. It seems as if our faith is to be tried to the utmost, but let us stand firm.

Yours in the conflict,
WILLIAM E. CLARK.

SEILING, Oklahoma, February 22, 1904.

Dear Herald: As I have just finished reading your pages, and those of the Ensign, I feel to rejoice that I am thus favored with such means of instruction, and of perusing letters from such a "cloud of witnesses," thus cheering each other in the conflict with opposing powers. There is one thing that causes sadness and that is that death is making its inroads into the ranks of our able workers. There is not so much of sadness connected with the death of those who go down to the grave like a shock of corn fully ripe, with a long life's work fully done, which will live after them in many branching channels through the lives of those they have taught, until their teaching in waves of light and knowledge shall reach the shores of eternity. How grand and all sufficient is this "perfect law of liberty."

We Saints in this part are striving to hold to "the rod of iron." We have faithful workers in our home branch and occasional visits from other branches in the territory, as well as our missionaries, from all of whom we are pleased to receive instruction. Bro. Hilliard was with us a few days and preached several grand sermons accompanied by the power of the good Spirit. We feel to thank the Giver of all good for calling such men, some from the old mother church, others various sects, and still others from the ranks of infidelity, and putting the Spirit of the highest upon them to "preach good tidings to the meek," preparing a people for the soon coming of our Lord in glory; the establishing of Zion, the gathering together of the pure in heart. O that we may all so receive and retain instructions that we may be coworkers with the Master for the salvation of the honest ones.

We had the pleasure, one week ago yesterday, of attending the dedication of the Saints' church at Seiling, Bro. Hilliard preaching the dedicatory sermon. The Saint's of our branch are building a modest brick church. The brethren are donating the work. Bro. Malony being a fine brick-layer is acting as head boss on the work while some of less skill and experience are rendering him efficient aid. They have the walls nearly completed, and want to get the roof on before heavy rains. If weather permits it will be ready to meet in soon. As the Saints of this part have had the hardships of new country life to contend with there will be an indebtedness to meet of perhaps one hundred dollars on the building. If any Saints in this mission or elsewhere see fit to contribute towards paying off the debt it would be a great favor, much appreciated, and we might return the favor in a like enterprise at some future time. That we each might be material in the great spiritual temple of the Lord is my desire for every Saint in all the world.

Yours in hope of the final triumph of truth,
HATTIE A. CRAWLEY.

TUNNELHILL, Illinois, March 15, 1904.

Dear Herald: I am interested in the work of Christ and would like for the people of our Church to know what we are doing. We have Sunday-school and Religio and preaching and prayer-meeting at our church and I ask all the Saints to pray that we carry it on successfully.

We have not had any preaching here since Bro. F. L. Sawley was here; but he delivered some excellent sermons for us while here.

I have been in the Church a little over a year and I ask you all to pray for me. "Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation."

Your brother,
BERT GRACE.

FULTON, Kentucky, March 12, 1904.

Dear Herald: I enjoy reading the letters in the HERALD very much. For about a month I have been studying over a dream that I had and desire to know what the interpretation is. The night that I had the dream I went to bed feeling very poor in spirit and heavy-hearted, studying about my condition and my husband, who has been afflicted for seven years. He and I had asked the Lord to heal him and he did not seem to get any better. And I began asking the Lord about this matter as I had often done before, asking for the restoration of my husband's health and to give me spiritual dreams and to make known to me in dreams or visions what was lacking, and while trying to pray I fell asleep and I had a beautiful dream—the sweetest I ever had.

My dream was that my husband's two brothers and sister were with us and they and my husband were at the table eating. I had gone into the front room and looking out I saw something like the sun rising—not shining, but looking red. It was up and down from the sky to the earth and in that place was the body of a tree with two broken limbs with the top cut off and the limbs cut off opposite each other, forming a cross. It was as plain a cross as I ever saw one pictured and I called to the rest to come and see the sight and they were slow about coming. But finally they came, and said it was a cross. My husband, however, sat at the table and made fun of what I was saying about the beautiful sight. Something was in his behalf—something like he must not become discouraged and to cheer up; also something being in the millennial reign. I can not exactly remember the words.

My husband finally come to see the sight and the tree had become taller with more limbs and leaves. And then it became full of leaves and got to looking like people on it and began to shake and then disappeared. It all was so pretty to me that I can not describe it exactly as it was.

I would like for this to be interpreted.

Your sister in the faith,

JULIA FIELDS.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, March 11, 1904.

Dear Herald: As I have not seen anything for some time in your columns from this part of God's heritage, I thought perhaps it would be of interest to some, to know how the work is progressing here. Our district conference has just closed, and notwithstanding the attendance of Saints was small and we were without aid of a missionary, the Lord's Spirit was with us and the Spirit of peace pervaded the meetings. The local elders present were Brethren D. S. Palmer, J. P. Neal, W. H. Davenport and T. J. Jett.

On Sunday night the house was filled, the audience consisting mostly of outsiders. Bro. D. S. Palmer was the speaker, showing the difference between the Reorganized Church and the Mormon Church, and was blessed in the effort.

We still have the little Sunday-school, the average attendance being about twenty-five.

Four services are held in the church every Sunday. The church building is not finished on the inside yet, but we hope in the near future to see it completed.

I rejoice in this great latter-day work, but I have my trials as well as others. One of the trials I have had to pass through was the death of my father, who departed this life January 23, and while my heart was burdened with grief yet I felt thankful to our heavenly Father, that he in his wisdom and mercy saw fit to release him from suffering. He died strong in the faith and seemed willing to go.

My greatest aim in life is to live worthy that I may meet my father and mother, who also has passed to the other side. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am,

Your sister in the faith,

RUTH GIFFORD.

BYRNVILLE, Indiana, March 11, 1904.

Editors Herald: The Southern Indiana District is about holding its own. Our missionary force are all good active workers. Bro. Jenkins, missionary in charge, we feel is doing all he can to keep this work to the front. Bro. Marshall, our associate in district work, is a fine preacher and a willing worker, but has been hindered some this winter on account of moving his family several miles. One good trait about Bro. Marshall is he does not cost the Church anything, when not at work. What a blessing if all of us could say as much! Bro. M. R. Scott, Jr., of Wirt, Charles Harp, J. J. Boswell, and Peter A. Flinn are splendid good men and are "in the faith" and are willing workers for the building up of Zion.

But of all the rustlers we have ever seen the "jots man" is the best. He came into this district January 1, and has since averaged one sermon a day. Bro. T. W. Chatburn started in at Plainsville Branch, and was there about two weeks, then went to Washington, and effected an opening there and preached to a crowded house for a week or so and at the close several demanded baptism. Leaving the opening there in charge of Bro. Jenkins he turned up here with the Byrnsville Branch; preached here thirteen times and closed with a crowded house and good interest, to fill appointment south of English at what is known as the Buckeye Schoolhouse.

Here a great interest was manifest, which resulted in four baptisms and three other openings, one at Grantsburg, seven miles north of Buckeye. There he preached in Union or Campbellite church, with standing-room at a premium, and silenced Salvationists, Campbellites and all other "ites." He closed there with an opening at English and Milltown, but his word was out to begin at Georgetown east of us five miles. Hall rent was one dollar per night but three honest souls stood by him and one Latter Day Saint living there to keep him, the work begun. After two or three nights the hall was full, and creeds were laid bare. Some of the brethren say T. W. was too hard on them, but we do that not think so. At any rate he silenced all of their batteries, planted the work in the town, and converted many, whether they accept it or not. Meetings closed there last night with many good people wiser than before, and the strongholds of Babylon were riddled with holes and their institutions are crumbling and ready to fall.

Now we say to the appointing power, Send us T. W. Chatburn with the rest of the faithful boys this coming year. We want T. W. to finish the good work begun, and fill the calls he has had.

JAMES P. SAPPENFIELD.

SEMINOLE, Alabama, March 10, 1904.

Editors Herald: We had a two-day meeting on February 27 and 28. At three o'clock Sunday afternoon we had a sacrament meeting led by our worthy president, Bro. Scarecliff, and Brn. Jessie Reader and Bankster. Bro. Scarecliff also organized a Sunday-school in the Perseverance Branch and we feel that it will be a great help to us. We were edified to a great extent through the good, spiritual meeting we had when the brothers were with us. Three children were blessed during the meetings. We are going to have our church house finished by the full moon in May and will have it dedicated to the Lord at conference time.

Yours in the faith,

T. B. COOPER.

CHATHAM, Ontario, March 8, 1904.

Dear Editor: Every Saint, no matter how humble, has an influence that he can use in some quarter if he tries. In every branch you will find some brother or brothers who belong to some fraternal society, volunteer regiment, or organization of some kind, which bodies attend divine service once or twice a year or oftener. These organizations are undenominational, composed of all creeds, and it is customary for societies prior to attending divine service to appoint a committee to wait on some minister or trustees of some particular church. They generally take denominations in turn and ask the privilege of attending that church. It is a rare thing to hear a member of any organization stand up in the body of the lodge-room and invite members to his church.

Dear Saints, if you belong to an order, no matter what it is, attend your lodge some weeks previous to the time your brotherhood attends their usual service and at the proper time stand up and tell your brothers you have been a faithful member and have always been courteous and attended service with them year after year whenever they went. Tell them you are a humble representative of the Latter Day Saints and invite them to your church. You will always find honest and noble men in every order who are always willing to treat all men alike. Tell them if they accept your invitation that you will promise the services of some elder who is capable of giving them a good fraternal and spiritual address and by kindness you will get them to attend and they will go away with a better opinion of the Saints than they formerly held.

It wears away prejudice and makes friends of both press and citizens and if you don't succeed the first time you invite them, have patience and keep on asking till they come. Never get discouraged, you can not know what you can accomplish till you try.

We in Chatham are doing this and have succeeded and expect to meet with more success along these lines. Dear Saints, I have been a member of the Church about a year and half and I love the Lord's work and he has been kind and wonderfully blessed me and I earnestly hope and trust you will consider and accept this advice and use your influence in this capacity and God, the Great Architect of this universe and of all nature, whose all-seeing eye ever beholds you, will reward you for every effort that you put forth to advance his cause, whether you succeed or fail.

STEWART LAMONT.

MONTOUR, Iowa, March 9, 1904.

Dear Herald: I want to let the Saints know that I am still trying to serve the Master. Although away from the Saints and alone in the faith, yet I have no thought of giving up the battle. It seems as if it is all I have to live for and I want to live each day so I will be ready when he calls. I want all the Saints to pray God will give me strength to endure to the end.

MARY KENNEL.

KANSAS CITY, Missouri, March 12, 1904.

Editors Herald: We are having a very lively time here just now. Mr. Reverend G. B. Hancock, of the Church of God, and Bro. I. N. White are holding a debate at Fifteenth and Jackson Streets, this City; each one agreed to affirm his church. But last night Mr. Hancock said he had no church, and it seems to be a fact. There seems to be a great deal of merriment and very much pleasing to the majority of the congregation. It reminds me of the boy at the window sticking pins into the flies, —it was lots of fun for the boy, but death to the flies.

The first proposition which Bro. White affirmed is over. It was agreed that the Bible should be the standard of evidence. Reverend Hancock never once referred to Bro. White's argument to disprove the organization of the Church nor the laws governing it and the blessings promised, but most all his argument was something like this: Jesus promised his disciples that they should receive the Holy Ghost which would guide them into all truth. They received it, but it did not guide them into the Book of Mormon and therefore the Book of Mormon is not of the truth, but from the other place and the Latter Day Saint Church is from the same source. And as "old Joe Smith" stands ahead of Jesus Christ and the Book of Mormon stands ahead of the Bible, therefore all intelligent people can see that it is the church from the lower regions of hell.

It makes me blush for my opponent to think that men would stoop so low, and it even makes the Devil blush to see the audacity of my opponent to use such arguments as that. Reverend Hancock is making lots of friends for us and our Church. The hall is crowded so that there is not standing-room left and many are turned away, I am told.

God is hastening things here in his own way. We have now six branches here in the city and prospects for one or two more in the near future. Bro. Ammon White and I have labored constantly here this winter and God has blessed our efforts.

Yours in gospel bonds,

F. C. WARNEY.

FAIRFAX, South Dakota, March 11, 1904.

Editors Herald: At present writing Bro. J. W. Smith and myself are at this little village. We are not having the flattering success that some report, but we are battling away just the same. Sometimes the poor despised missionaries get almost discouraged when they consider the importance of the message they are advocating and that it is because of the pressing need of mankind hearing and having the privilege of obeying its requirements that impels them to leave friends and family associations to face an unfriendly and cruel world; and yet notice how indifferent and careless they appear when it is presented. But still our little discouragements sink into insignificance when compared to the sacrifice our Master had to undergo.

The conference of the Central Nebraska District at Bonesteel passed off very pleasantly and we were made to realize that our Father who has made provision for these gatherings will do his part and bring peace and contentment when we do our part. Both the Sunday-school convention and conference finished their business session without friction. The preaching and prayer-meetings were marked by a goodly degree of God's Spirit. Bro. Gamet, the district president, was at his post and gave timely counsel and instruction. He was again chosen to preside over the district.

I will start home soon to make ready for General Conference. I am in hearty sympathy with the movement providing for a day of fasting and prayer. I think the Church would make increased speed in a spiritual way if we were devoting more time to fasting and prayer. It seems that in Book of Mormon times, Alma, the man of God, advised that those who did not belong to the Church should be remembered by the Church in fasting and prayer for their conversion.

As the conference year is now drawing to a close I look backward and ask myself the all-important question, Have I done all that was required of me to do and am I willing to devote my powers of mind and body to the dissemination of truth and assisting in releasing from this bondage of sin and evil practices that the world is now submerged in? May God grant that I may never grow weary in well-doing and that I may ever realize where my fountain of strength lies.

I can never forget the many acts of kindness shown me by the Saints and friends in this field and I can only commend them to God for their reward for their untiring efforts to assist both in temporal and spiritual emergencies. Time would fail me in enumerating all the acts of kindness shown me and also those that have manifested the same to me, and so will simply say that they have been appreciated. I feel impressed to say that if we will all put forth a united effort and become devoted heart and soul to the accomplishment of the work that is intrusted to all, not only by our prayers and faith, but also by our means, that the coming year will be one long to be remembered as the beginning of marked spiritual growth and development and that God will graciously love and support his people and make a way for their escape from the impending doom of the wicked.

I am at the home of Bro. and Sr. George Bender, and they are making our stay very pleasant indeed.

ROMANAN WIGHT.

NEBO, Illinois, March 7, 1904.

Editors Herald: Since writing you last I have been actively engaged in my mission-field preaching among the branches and making some new openings. One in particular at Osage City deserves special mention. I secured a union church there which is open and free to all denominations and which is not occupied by any but the Baptists who hold services once a month. I succeeded in getting a few quite interested in the angel's message, and believe if the work is properly followed up that good will result therefrom. The only drawback is that I have had to pay my board, but this will be overcome soon, as there are some friends there now who will look after the wants of ye missionary. I mention this place in particular so that whoever is sent to this field next year may also know of this opening.

I came to this place on February 19, and have been holding meeting almost every night and on Sundays. The Saints here have been trying to complete their church which Bro. Arthur Allen begun when he was in this district two years ago. I have just finished the lathing of same and now have it ready for the plaster. When that is done and it is painted it will be ready for dedication, which they want done sometime this summer.

Bro. Willard J. Smith was with us over last Sabbath and preached five rousing sermons for us. He returned to St. Louis on the 29th. The Saints of the St. Louis District would welcome his return to this field.

Two precious young souls were born into the kingdom of God on yesterday, being buried with Christ in the icy waves to arise to a newness of life. How grand it is to see the young coming into the fold, before they become entangled with the sins and vices of this world. I think there will be others come in before I leave this place. The work in the district is in fair condition, and if it could be supplied with three or four good men next year a good work could be accomplished. There have been upwards of twenty baptized in this district this year, and many have been permitted to hear. Some trouble of long standing has been adjusted, and much prejudice removed. Our district conference convenes at St. Louis on the 12th of this month. A good time is expected. I take this means of expressing my thanks to all the Saints and friends of the district for their kindness to me during the year I have been with them. May the Lord bless all his Saints.

W. R. ODELL.

BIRMINGHAM, England, February 27, 1904.

Editors Herald: The time for me leaving the British Mission is at hand. I landed in Glasgow, June 8, 1902, and I leave March 9, 1904. I have preached in Scotland, Wales, and England. I now take this means of bidding the Saints good-bye. I have been treated very kindly by the Saints, but the world—the Christian world, in some places, has treated me very unkindly. But it may work for the best in the end. I hope so at least. I can not make such a report as I would like; neither can I paint this mission in glowing colors. Every step taken in this field will be a dearly bought one. In the two years I have baptized twelve and some of these the fruits of the labor of others, and I believe that some will follow my labors and enter into the harvest. All will be known in the sweet by and by, and honor will be given where honor is due.

I have done more work in the Summerfield Branch, Birmingham, than any other place. I realize now as never before, that the harvest is great, the laborers are few. In Birmingham I found quite a number of willing workers. I trust that their candle will never go out or their light be dimmed by time, but that it might become brighter, that it may gleam across the tempestuous waves of time and cause many to steer their storm-tossed bark into the haven of rest, there to anchor for ever in the port, safe from the many streams of life. Memory will ever keep alive the recollections of this mission. I pray God's blessing on you all that peace may attend your way as a mighty river, continually running into all righteousness.

I am fully persuaded that very few of the many I have met in this mission will I see again in this life unless the Twelve would be so ungrateful as to send me back again. To be sure I am willing to take my share, and rough it when necessary, but am perfectly willing that others have a try at it. Some may succeed better, but remember it will be up hill work. Tracts are needed here, about twelve different kinds, and this should be understood by those sent here. Wise men or those who are not wise can work without tools. Sometimes they put that statement a little different, just so you understand what I mean. They should have two thousand tracts, then some good evidently will be done. I am writing from experience. I do hope and pray that God will send men into the harvest, and that all will be blessed that take up the great work of preaching the gospel. Praying for Zion,

Your colaborer in the kingdom,

General Conference Notes.

1. It will greatly aid those having in charge preparation of arrangements to care for attendants to the General Conference, if all who expect to be present will notify the undersigned by March 25 or earlier if practicable.

2. It is suggested that elders, especially the missionaries, who expect to attend arrange to remain through the entire session. The trouble and expense to prepare for them for one week is nearly as great as two, and if expense is incurred at all let them stay till the business is finished up. There is no reason why the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric shall be present at the opening of the session and remain until final adjournment, that will not also fairly apply to all the missionaries and eldership.

3. In arranging for mail while at the conference the postmaster at Kirtland, Mr. John Wells, has assured me that all mail directed to Kirtland he will have delivered at the Temple each day and take up all letters which it is desired to send out. Have your mail directed, Kirtland, Lake County, Ohio.

4. How to reach Willoughby from Chicago:

Lake Shore Road: Leave Chicago, 10.35 p. m., arrive Willoughby 8.39 a. m. Leave Chicago, 10.39 a. m. arrive Willoughby 9.58 p. m.

Nickel Plate Road: Leave Chicago, 9.15 p. m., arrive Willoughby 9.00 a. m.

To reach Willoughby from Buffalo:

Lake Shore Road: Leave Buffalo, 2.00 p. m., arrive Willoughby 6.07 p. m.

Nickel Plate Road: Leave Buffalo, 12.50 p. m., arrive Willoughby 6.53 p. m.

Other trains on these roads do not stop at Willoughby except on special order which may be had in case of a dozen or two passengers. If you get to Willoughby in the night, arrangements have been made to go to the Kingsley House at special rates.

5. Entertainment: board and lodging four dollars and a half per week. Lodging without board one dollar per week. To some this may seem high but it is as low as it can be had without a loss. The most of the attendants will be fed by arrangements made by the Church. If anything is made the Church makes it. If anything is lost the Church will lose it. This fact ought to stop criticism and grumbling at the outset from every one who desires the Church to succede rather than himself. This board is at the rate of sixteen and two thirds cents per meal, and to go to expense of preparation for this short time and pay high prices for help and food stuff, as must be done, it is only hoped to get through without loss. Now I hope no one will begin to imagine extortion, etc., against the Kirtland people; read this carefully and you will see this is not correct, and do not violate the Bible injunction which says: "Thou shalt not imagine evil against others."

6. All will be looked after and cared for who come, but we would be glad to have a guage to measure the stream of humanity beforehand, and hence will take the time and pleasure of reading your application. Very respectfully, KIRTLAND, Ohio, March 14, 1904.

E. L. KELLEY.

NEWBERRY.—Bro. Alma M. Newberry passed peacefully to rest, in the faith and hope of the gospel, on March 12, 1904, at Lamoni, Iowa. Born December 25, 1846; baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, October 7, 1866; ordained to the office of teacher in 1876, to that of priest, in 1892. He was married to Sister Philena S. White, May 22, 1884, since which time, with the exception of about five years, they have made their home in Lamoni. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

The Real Postal Scandal.

In the March World's Work M. G. Cunniff points out the real postal scandal in the inordinate price paid by the government for transporting mails. The United States says he, pays more money every year for the transportation of mail than all the other countries of the world combined. The bulk of the transportation is by railroad, for according to a special weighing of mail by the Post-office Department in 1898, 85 per cent of all the matter mailed in the country requires railroad carriage, and the proportion is not less abroad. Yet freight and passenger rates are cheaper to private individuals in the United States than in any other country. Why is it, then, that the cost of mail transportation is so high to the United States?

In 1901, according to the latest statistics of the International Postal Union, Great Britain, France, and Germany alone—not to speak of the other countries—mailed more than 9,000,000,000 pieces of matter, as compared with more than 7,000,000,000 pieces mailed in the United States.

The other countries of the world, omitting Great Britain, had 48,000 miles of post-routes more than we. Great Britain's post-routes added to this total would make the difference even greater. Thus, notwithstanding the cheapness of American railroad rates on other traffic than mail, foreign post-offices, taken all together, handle vastly more mail than ours, send it farther over a greater number of post-routes, and pay less for the service. It cost our Government in 1901, in round numbers, $38,500,000 for railroad transportation alone; the rest of the world for all their domestic transportation, by railroad, by wagon, and by messengers, paid but $37,000,000—$1,500,000 less.

The United States Post-office Department reports a deficit for last year of $4,000,000. The real deficit is about $1,000,000 greater, for in the peculiar bookkeeping used in recording postal accounts, the salaries of the Post-Office Department, the rent of large city post-offices, and other postal items are not charged as postal expenses. But even at $4,000,000 the postal deficit is a national disgrace when we consider the inadequacies of the postal service. It is caused in the main by the inordinate railway mail pay.

Kim the Korean.

Here is part of a description of "Kim," the typical Korean as given in the Outlook's March Magazine Number by Dr. W. E. Griffis, author of "Korea the Hermit Nation," which still remains the best book on the queer country which is now the scene of war:

Kim the Korean smokes his yard-long pipe, squats in his baggy cotton clothes—the whole nation looking as if just out of bed, or as if other nations had been up and awake long before them in the world's race. Still Kim leads his bull and pony in this wheelless land, digs up the soil with his three or five-man-powered shovel, and lives at the dead level of uncomplaining poverty. Still his wife, whose dress waist is at her armpits, plays the rat-tat of mangle-rod on the starched coat of son and father, and carries her baby on her back, recking nothing, after marriage, of exposing the symbols of maternity. A cipher in public, she in old age rules the family, especially her Ruths and Orphas, with a rod of iron. Pipestems make splendid spanking instruments, and in this method of correction, both by government and individual, in jail or family, adults or youths are one. Kim lives in a three-roomed house, one-storied and thatched, if of the people, but in one having two stories and roof tiles and a "scenery-viewing chamber" if he be a Yang-

in. Usually the cottage is vine-covered in the country. The first basis, or rather raised foundation, is of earth and stone. The kitchen is at one end, the smoke-hole at the other. The cooking fire, by means of stone or brick flues laid under the floor, warms the house from end to end. If the floor is old and cracked, letting out smoke and odors, what odds? Does a burglar wish to enter? He loosens a stone on the outside and climbs up and through the flues.

Kim coils his hair up in a chignon resembling a roll of American navy plug, and coops it up inside a horsehair net. As to his head-gear, there is a "language of hats" in Korea, and the twenty or more styles have each a voice and meaning. If in mourning, sixteen square feet of matting, making and extinguisher or pyramid two feet deep, and held to his noddle by a ring of band, are necessary to express his grief and to satisfy the proprieties.

A Girl Heroine.

The following story of the heroism displayed by a Nebraska girl is taken from an article in the March Woman's Home Companion, entitled "True Stories of Heroic School-teachers":

"Louise Royce, the youngest of the three girlish heroines, had but three small pupils in attendance at the little country school-house, three miles west of Plainview, Nebraska, over which she presided that day. When the storm, previously unnoticed, suddenly broke, in the middle of the morning session, her first thought was for her charges. Wrapping them in every warm garment that could be mustered, the brave girl attempted to carry them to the nearest house. But the storm was already so severe as to render the task impossible. Blinded and beaten by the stinging, whip-like snow fragments, torn and tossed by the bitter wind-blasts, confused and imprisoned by the wavering, shifting but impenetrable snow curtains, the way was speedily lost. All day and all night did the heroic girl wander, never letting go her grasp of the helpless children, until—the end came.

"One of the little boys died in the night, despite her frenzied efforts to relieve and save him; then the second boy succumbed to the horrible cold and exposure, and at last, just as the day broke, the little girl breathed her last. Then the poor teacher, long since stripped of every available garment for the sake of the children, sank down, utterly overwrought and exhausted in the tempting up-piling snow. Daylight and the partial cessation of the tempest brought help from a near-by farmhouse—the farmhouse she has striven so long and so vainly to reach—but she was terribly maimed and frozen, and it was necessary to amputate both legs."

INCONSISTENT TEACHING—OR PRACTICE.—WHICH?

President Joseph F. Smith, of the Utah Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and Apostle Francis M. Lyman, who will be the next president of the Church in Utah, if he survives President Smith, both agree in their testimony before the Senate committee, that any and all communications purporting to be revelations from God must be presented to the Church and be accepted by all, or a majority of the Church, before they can become laws to the Church, or rules for guidance and government, or the members become subject to commands which may be given in such revelations. This is in harmony with the contention of the Reorganized Church.

Further than this, President Joseph F. Smith testified that any member of the Church had the right and was privileged to reject documents offered as revelations, and still be considered in good standing and fellowship in the Church. Such persons would be out of harmony with their brethren, but might still be retained in their membership. It is suggested to thought that if a revelation must be accepted by the Church to become a law or rule of faith and practice, and the members of the Church have the right to reject the revelation as well as accept it, as it is their privilege as well as right, then when a revelation is presented to the body for acceptance or rejection, the opportunity to reject, or refuse to accept, should be afforded to those who desire to so vote. If they have the right to accept or reject, not to offer the chance to vote to reject deprives them of both the right and the privilege.

Now for a few facts:

1. The so-called revelation on plural marriage was not presented to the Church by Joseph Smith for acceptance or rejection.

2. The so-called revelation on celestial or plural marriage was not presented to the Church for acceptance or rejection by any officer or member of the Church, by order of Joseph Smith, acting President of the Church.

3. No such revelation was presented to the Church for official action during the lifetime of Joseph Smith.

4. No such document was presented to any body of the Church east or west, north or south, for acceptance or rejection after Joseph Smith's death upon any authentic written order from Joseph Smith.

DO NOT be discouraged if you can not talk religion, but look to it that it is the strong current of your life, that it guides you and, through you, your children. If this be so, the fruit you bear may be small, but it shall be sweet and perfect of its kind and steadily, year by year, the harvest will increase.—Selected.

5. No such document has been presented to any body of Latter Day Saints at any time since Joseph Smith's death for official recognition, examination, acceptance, or rejection by a vote of the members assembled for such consideration.

6. Eight years and two months after Joseph Smith's death, at a special conference of the Church in Utah, under the presidency of Brigham Young, held in Salt Lake City, Utah, August 29, 1852, a document purporting to be a copy of a revelation on "celestial marriage, including plurality of wives," said to have been received by Joseph Smith, Jr., July 12, 1843, nine years and seventeen days prior to the date of that conference, was read by order of President Brigham Young, and a sermon on the subject was preached by Elder Orson Pratt.

7. The document purporting to be such copy was not identified as a properly certified copy of its purported original, taken by the official order of Joseph Smith, Jr., as the one, it was claimed, through whom it came. Nor was the absence or the suppression of the original paper properly accounted for.

8. The minutes of that special conference as published in the Deseret News Extra, of September 14, 1852, and in the Supplement to the Millennial Star, volume 15, published by Samuel D. Richards, Liverpool, England, for 1853, show the assembling of the conference, the introduction of the subject by President Young, the reading of the document, the preaching of the sermon by Elder Pratt; but contain not a line of a statement showing that the document was examined, considered, discussed, presented authoritatively by the officer presiding for acceptance, or rejection; nor do the minutes show that a vote was taken to accept or to reject the revelation.

At the opening session of this conference, Heber C. Kimball stated the business to be transacted by the session, but the presentation and consideration of the so-called revelation on plural marriage was not mentioned as one of the items. He was followed by George A. Smith, John Taylor, Ezra T. Benson and Brigham Young, who addressed the assembly, but not one of them referred to the presentation of any document as a revelation. This was on Saturday, August 28, 1852. On Sunday, the 29th, at the morning session, Orson Pratt preached the sermon referred to, and in the afternoon the document was read. The minutes close without a word as to a vote having been taken, either to accept or reject the document read. Not a hand was raised to accept it, no opportunity for any one to reject it.

10. Orson Pratt stated at the opening of this remarkable sermon in regard to the subject, "It is rather new ground for me; that is, I have not been in the habit of publicly speaking upon this subject; and it is rather new ground to the inhabitants of the United States, . . . consequently we shall have to break up new ground." This was the first sermon ever preached in public in advocacy of plural marriage, so far as the Mormons are concerned, and as recorded. At the conclusion of Elder Pratt's sermon, and before the reading of the document, President Brigham Young said of the doctrine: "Though that doctrine has not been practiced by the elders, this people have believed in it for years. . . . And I tell you—for I know it—it will sail over, and ride triumphantly above all the prejudice and priestcraft of the day. . . . I am now ready to proclaim it." At the close of the reading the minutes read: "The conference then adjourned to the 6th of October next, 10 o'clock a. m."

11. The manifesto of President Wilford Woodruff, who succeeded President Brigham Young next after John Taylor in the presidency of the Utah Church, issued under date of September 26, 1890, authorized the cessation of plural marriages, and the living with polygamous wives. This manifesto was presented to the conference of the Utah Church convened at Salt Lake City, October 6, 1890, as a revelation, and put to the question, the vote upon the motion to accept or approve was taken on the affirmative; but the vote on the negative was not taken, and no opportunity given for any one to vote to reject it.

12. In answer to Mr. Tayler, in the investigation in the Smoot case, President Joseph F. Smith said: "I will say this, Mr. Chairman, that no revelation given through the head of the Church ever becomes binding and authoritative upon the members of the Church until it has been presented to the Church and accepted by them."—Proceedings before the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate, page 96.

In the examination of Apostle Lyman before the Senate committee, page 465, question was asked by Mr. Worthington: "You have already perhaps mentioned it, but any revelation, whether it be one as to an apostle, or anything else, it must be submitted to the conference and sustained, as you call it, by a majority of the conference?" Mr. Lyman answered, "Yes." Mr. Worthington questioned, "Before it becomes binding?" Mr. Lyman answered, "It would have to be sustained by the apostles before it becomes binding." "Then," Mr. Worthington asked, "And then it has to be sustained again by the conference?" Mr. Lyman answered, "By the people." In answer to further questions upon the topic of revelations being received and not binding until accepted by the people, Mr. Lyman stated as follows: "The Lord has directed that in all our transaction of business everything must be done by common consent; that the president or the prophet or the apostles can not take matters in their own hands, even if it comes from the Lord, and carry it in spite of the people. We can not defy the people. They have their rights and their rights are respected, and their agency is respected."

13. The first law of Congress making the taking of more than one wife an offense was enacted in 1862. This was held by the Church in Utah to be unconstitutional, but upon an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, made in 1878, it was decided that the law of 1862 was constitutional. In 1882 a bill was passed by Congress making plural marriage and cohabitation with plural wives unlawful. Under the law of 1882 a great number of prosecutions were had against offenders, officials and members of the Church in Utah, both for polygamy and unlawful cohabitation. Many were punished by fine and imprisonment; many others avoided service of writs and continued to escape prosecution under the Congressional enactment. On September 25, 1890, President Wilford Woodruff issued a manifesto, which was presented to the Church and accepted as revelation, which made plural marriages and cohabitation with plural wives contrary to the rule of the Church. This action was had in October conference, 1890. In 1894 Congress passed an Enabling Act which provided for the admission of Utah into the sisterhood of States, which was accomplished in 1896.

From the consideration of the foregoing facts those who may be interested in what has been known before the world as Mormonism and the conduct of the professed adherents to the faith and practices under the revelations given to the Church, may be able to draw fairly just conclusions as to where the rights of the controversy may lie.

SILCOCK VERSUS BRIGHAM YOUNG.

One N. T. Silcock, writing to the Deseret News from Riverton, Utah, March 12, 1904, says:

I, N. T. Silcock, was at a meeting in Nauvoo, in July, 1843—the congregation numbered three or four hundred—where the Prophet delivered a discourse on polygamy. This was the only systematical polygamous sermon I have ever heard. I also know positively that he had more wives than one; I was personally acquainted with two besides Emma.

We do not know who this N. T. Silcock is, but he is in direct antagonism to what has been stated by a number of others of the Utah Church. For instance, President Brigham Young stated that the doctrine was introduced by them after they got to the Valley. H. B. Clawson, a son-in-law of Brigham Young, stated that it was not practiced by them until they reached Utah. Wilford Woodruff stated that it was not publicly taught at Nauvoo by anybody. Joseph F. Smith stated that it was taught to a very limited number. George Q. Cannon said that it was not for polygamy that Joseph and Hyrum Smith were killed; for it was not known to the world at all, and to but very few of their intimate acquaintances. Lorenzo Snow stated that the Church never accepted the revelation on polygamy during the lifetime of Joseph Smith; that it was not presented to the Church during the lifetime of Joseph Smith; that it was not taught publicly during the lifetime of Joseph Smith.

Bathsheba Smith, wife of George A. Smith, stated on oath that she never heard Joseph Smith preach either in private or in public the principle of plural marriage or polygamy. She also stated that she knew Emma Smith, wife of the Prophet, and that no one else was held out as his wife down to the time of his death. She did not know of any one having more wives than one at Nauvoo during the lifetime of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

Joseph B. Noble stated that he knew of no law of the Church authorizing polygamy up to November 15, 1844, and that he did not recollect of having heard anybody preach polygamy while he was in Nauvoo.

President Woodruff also testified that he never saw the original revelation during the lifetime of Joseph Smith, neither did he see what was purported to be the copy.

Franklin D. Richards, Historian of the Church in Utah, stated that Joseph the Prophet married Emma Hale January 18, 1827; that of the names of his other wives and the date of their marriages to him they were not informed.

It is quite too late in this conflict to attempt to show by letters of the sort written by Silcock that any public statement was ever made from the stand at Nauvoo by anybody in favor of the doctrine of plural marriage or polygamy. This statement by him that the Prophet delivered such a discourse leaves the inference that it was an affirmative discourse in favor of the doctrine and practice, whereas his letter does not say this. If he heard such discourse by the Prophet in July, 1843, it is astonishing that no one has ever thought of it before this; as, if there were three or four hundred persons present at said meeting it must have included a great many of the principal men of the Church, not one of whom has ever opened his head or written a line making such statement.

We venture the guess that this Mr. Silcock was not old enough in July, 1843, to be present at such meeting and take cognizance of what was said. Not one of those who have stated heretofore that they heard the doctrine in Nauvoo prior to the death of Joseph Smith has ever stated that they heard it in public from any one. It was altogether a secret affair, if it existed at all.

It seems to us now that when such men as Wilford Woodruff, Lorenzo Snow, George Q. Cannon, Brigham Young, and Joseph F. Smith have put themselves on record in reference to this question, that such men as this correspondent to the News would do well to keep in the background and not further jeopardize the character for truth and veracity of their leaders. There is now a strong prejudice existing against accepting the statements made by these men in reference to plural marriage and the date of its introduction into the Church, when it has been clearly shown and admitted by the leading Mormons in Utah in their application for amnesty to the President of the United States that it was presented to the Church in Utah by President Brigham Young, August 29, 1852. We have the statements of Elder Louis Gaulter, Thomas Stuart, and Joseph C. Clapp to the effect that they were present at the meeting in the Tabernacle in Salt Lake City, Utah, on that fateful 29th of August, 1852, and that while the so-called revelation was read to the people in the afternoon of that day, as is also stated in the minutes of said meeting published in the supplement to the Deseret News for September 14, 1852, and in the supplement to the Millennial Star, volume 15, 1853, the question whether the revelation should be accepted or rejected by the people was not put to vote, and no vote was taken.

We may be blamed by some for keeping this matter before the HERALD readers, but the time now is opportune to set the matter right before the people. The contention of the Reorganized Church must be recognized, and there is but one way to do this, and that is to keep it before the public while the public is in condition to take cognizance of these religious quarrels.

We trust that the elders and Saints will be careful in their public statements neither to misstate nor overdo the presentation of their views, lest they prejudice their hearers against them. A quiet, firm statement of the truth without undue excitement and free from the bias of vindictiveness will go further towards convincing men of fair minds of matters which require to be taken notice of than will any amount of denunciatory rhetoric or vindictive calling of names. The sentiment of the people is aroused and the supporters of polygamy are in an unenviable position before the great American jury, and it is our province to bear a faithful testimony in accordance with the law. This we propose to do.

A WORD TO THE SAINTS ABOUT UTAH.

There is considerable excitement outside the Church and in, in regard to the investigation going on in Congress by the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections upon a protest urged against Senator Reed Smoot continuing to occupy a seat in the higher branch of Congress. We have been repeatedly urged from different localities and by different members, elders and others, that the Church should take steps to be heard in the controversy going on before that Senate committee. We are as anxious to be properly represented before the American public as anybody possibly can be, but we are not willing to prejudice a good cause by pushing in unadvisedly where our interference would be productive of more harm than good. The question before that committee is whether Mr. Smoot, an apostle of the Mormon Church in Utah, should continue to act as a Senator from the state of Utah. The period of time under consideration is from the issuing of the Manifesto by President Woodruff, September 26, 1890, to the present time. Has Mr. Smoot taken any obligation to his church that will prevent him from properly discharging the duties of a United States Senator?

The question as to who was the human originator of plural marriage in the Mormon Church came up incidentally in the questioning of Joseph Fielding Smith, present President of the Church in Utah. The issue to Mr. Smoot does not turn upon who was responsible for polygamy, and such inquiry as would bring the truth to light would be only a matter of propriety, or curiosity upon the part of the committee, if they should decide it was relevant to the adjudication of the case. We would have no standing in the inquiry, unless it should be accorded us by the voluntary action of the committee. For us to demand or attempt to urge the matter upon the committee would be out of place if we attempted to do it as a Church.

We have no disposition to restrict the action of members of the Church, either officers of the Church in the field or local men, and for this reason we are prepared to see the different defenses and explanations in the papers by the brethren in various localities. We learn that conferences of some of the districts have passed resolutions in reference to it, the brethren evidently believing that they could by this place themselves on record and secure an opportunity to place the truth as they understand it before the public. We have in mind two of these efforts, one at Denver by the Colorado District, and one at Providence, Rhode Island, by the Massachusetts and Rhode Island District. The effort at Denver got into the papers with the additional information that subpoenas had been issued by the committee for Brn. E. F. Shupe and A. E. Tabor to appear before the Senate committee to give testimony. A letter from Bro. Shupe, dated the 8th, states he had no knowledge of any subpoena—none had been issued. It is fair to presume, however, that if the committee desire any information in regard to the Rorganization and its attitude toward polygamy and the Church in Utah, they will cause subpoenas to be issued for some of the general officers of the Church, who are known to the chairman and others of the committee.

The effort at Providence appears in the Mystic Bell for March 17, over the signature of Bro. Richard Bullard, the chairman of the committee, in which there are at least three misstatements or errors; the first is an inaccurate description of the President of the Utah Church, whose name is given as Joseph H. Smith; the second is the statement that the so-called revelation on polygamy or celestial marriage was brought to light in Utah by Brigham Young in October, 1852; the third, that it was eight years and four months after Joseph Smith was dead. It is a matter of history, and has been repeatedly published in the HERALD, that the date of that special conference at which that so-called revelation was presented was August 29, 1852—not October. These inaccuracies ought not to occur, and the statement of them prejudices those to whom they are presented, as they seem to indicate want of proper information upon the part of those who make them.

The Presidency and the Bishop are alive to the situation, and we assure the Church that we are prepared to take advantage of any opening which may properly be presented and which we may have the power to occupy to set the faith and the truth of history before the American public. We suggest that it is wise for us to possess our souls in patience, and whatever movements we make to make them carefully and by due advice and consideration with each other.

The chairman of the committee, J. C. Burrows, is from Michigan, was well acquainted with Bishop George A. Blakeslee, is also well acquainted with Bro. E. A. Blakeslee and others of the Saints in Michigan. Senator A. J. Hopkins is from Aurora, Illinois, fourteen miles east of Plano, where we used to reside, and was the attorney for Bro. Israel L. Rogers in a suit against the town of Plano for damage to property suffered by action of the trustees of the town, and was acquainted with the people of the Church at Plano, and has evidently kept himself in touch with what the Church has been doing. We personally know Senator Hopkins. Senators Allison and Dolliver and Congressman Hepburn, of Iowa, the latter being from the district in which Lamoni is situated, are all acquainted with the Church to a certain extent and are informed touching the people and the officers of the Church.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

On March 17, W. M. Self wrote from Tecumseh, Nebraska, telling of the debate between Bro. J. R. Sutton and Yancey Wilson, of the Advent Christian Church, which closed on Saturday, March 12. The question discussed was the mortality of the soul, and each contestant was to affirm his belief; but after Bro. Sutton had affirmed, Mr. Wilson refused to affirm his position, so the debate closed sooner than had been arranged for. Bro. Self thinks the debate has resulted in good to the cause. Following the debate some meetings were held with good results.

F. A. Smith, in reporting for the year, says there is a greater demand in the Iowa Mission for preaching than at any time since he has been in it. More new openings than last year, and the interest in a number of old places has been increased. One new district (North Dakota) and five new branches have been organized. Some persecution has been met in Dallas Center and Lacona, Iowa. At the latter place the persecutors threw eggs and stones. Bro. Smith has found his relations with his missionaries pleasant.

Bro. A. T. Rush wrote from Lexington, Kentucky, that they were expecting a visit soon from Brn. Snow and McClain. The latter has been there recently, but was unable to accomplish much. Bro. Rush has been in the Church about four years, and is rejoicing in the blessings he has received.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Paul M. Hanson appeared in the Clarence and Richmond Examiner, Australia, issue for December 15, 1903, in an article headed "A sketch of Mormon history," in which he clearly sets forth the attitude of the Reorganized Church on the question of polygamy.

A sister writing from Janesville, Wisconsin, under date of March 21, states that Mrs. Maria Weed, who is touring the country lecturing on Mormonism and anti-polygamy, lectured at Janesville on March 18. The sister sought an interview with her and after some lengthy chat succeeded in getting a promise from her that she would in her public lectures make a proper distinction between the Reorganized Church and the church in Utah. This Mrs. Weed did, giving the Reorganization credit for its opposition to polygamy and the rule of church and state. At the close of the lecture one of the brethren distributed quite a number of tracts to those who would take them, outside of the hall where lecture was delivered. There are but few of the faith at Janesville, and yet it is evident that they are quite alive to the interests of the work, which we are pleased to note.

In another column will be found a notice of the death of Sr. Alma Cecilia Jarvis, wife of Bro. H. E. Jarvis, of Burlington, Iowa, and sister of Sr. Callie B. Stebbins, of Lamoni. Sr. Jarvis was well known for her work in Sunday-school and along other lines, being superintendent of the Burlington Sunday-school at her death and a prominent member of other organizations, chief among which is the Sheldon Circle of the King's Daughters. The Burlington Hawk-Eye for March 17 contained a biography of the sister, and resolutions of respect from the Sheldon Circle.

Bro. A. B. Morris, whose address is Box 79, Kelseyville, California, wishes to secure a copy of the Watson and Blair Debate and will be pleased to hear from any who have copies they will sell.

ADVANTAGE OF GETTING KNOWLEDGE.

Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom: and with all thy getting get understanding.—Proverbs 4: 7.

Solomon, that oracle of wisdom in ancient times, realized the importance of getting wisdom and understanding. Those words are as applicable in our day as when they were spoken ages ago. Are we as a people alive to the necessity of keeping ourselves abreast of the times? We are living in a wonderful age. Momentous events on which hang great issues, are taking place. History is being made rapidly, but I have noticed a great apathy and indifference on the part of members of the Church in regard to the live questions of the hour. Why should we be behind any in our knowledge of affairs? We as a people should be progressive.

There is great necessity on the part of the Church to be educated along all lines. We are living beneath our opportunities when we do not grasp every straw of knowledge. God has not put a premium on ignorance. The glory of God is intelligence. God has commanded us in these latter days to get knowledge in "things which have been; things which are; . . . things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations, . . . and a knowledge also of countries and of kingdoms, . . . to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21. "And to obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man, and all this for the salvation of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 12.

The fight is on; we must meet the opposition of the world. We can not afford to be ignorant. We need a large fund of knowledge from which to draw.

I have heard the remarks that a knowledge of events was not necessary in this work; that the signs of the times were only a secondary affair. It is nothing short of exasperating to listen patiently to sentiments so contrary to God's laws and commandments. The eyes of the world are upon us, and if we ignore the signs of the times, which are plainly evident, how are we to reach the minds of the worldly? Ignorance is inexcusable, good reading-matter is within the reach of the poorest. It is necessary in order to keep up to the times, to have a general knowledge of what is passing in the world, a general knowledge of all subjects so as to be able to meet all grades of intellect on a common level.

This great latter-day work is comprehensive and requires a broad knowledge of every day events and of humanity, a study of the characters of men of the past and of the present, a study of the history of nations and of creeds. There is positively no end to the study, and there is no room for drones in the gospel hive. God commands us to get knowledge, and we narrow our own sphere of usefulness by ignoring this command. Again the idea prevails with some that all the knowledge that is necessary is given by the Holy Spirit. The cultivation of the intellect is not the work of the Holy Spirit. We must get knowledge by reading and study of all good books; then God can use our knowledge. We then become instruments in his hands through the work of his Holy Spirit by which he can bring souls into his kingdom. What a grand thought, to store our minds with great knowledge—storing it up to be used for God's work in his own good time.

THE MARK OF THE BEAST.

Our Seventh-day Adventist friends inform us that Sunday observance is the above mark, but as to just in what manner "both great and small" receive it in "their foreheads or in their right hands," is a matter upon which they do not inform us. We believe that both the followers of the ten-horned and two-horned beasts (which we believe to be the Roman and Greco-Russian Churches respectively) of Revelation 13, will affix a distinct mark or sign upon the foreheads of both great and small, of course of those who come under their especial jurisdiction. The ten-horned beast was to have power over all nations for twelve hundred and sixty years, therefore we must expect to find his "mark" in vogue during the above reign. We as a people believe that his power ceased with the restoration, therefore, we must look for some sign which was affixed by the authority of the beast during his reign. The conviction has recently been forcibly impressed upon the mind of the writer that this sign is the sign of the cross, which is in such common use among the Roman, Greco-Russian, and some Protestant churches. We invite fair criticism of what follows, with the simple request that every critic should first give careful consideration to what is written.

The sign of the cross was first introduced in connection with baptism in the second century, at a time when apostasy had already set in. Of this sign Moshem says:

They supposed there was great efficacy in the sign of the cross, against all sorts of evils, and particularly against the machinations of evil spirits; and therefore no one undertook anything of much moment without first crossing himself.—Murdoch Reed edition, Century 3, part 2, par. 5, p. 107.

The following is a foot-note on the same page:

The Christians at first used the sign of the cross to bring to remembrance the atoning of Christ on all occasions. . . . So late as the second century the Christians attached no particular virtue to the sign of the cross, and they paid it no adoration . . . but afterwards powerful efficacy began to be ascribed to it.

When we remember that the apostasy was a gradual bringing into Christianity of false doctrine, heathen worship, superstition, etc., we can understand the growing importance of the superstitious use of the sign of the cross during the first few centuries. Satan was working in the church, sowing the seeds of apostasy, and we can expect that he was doing his best to lay the foundation for a system of hypocrisy which he had designed should take the place of the true church of Christ. What better opportunity was there for him to lay the foundation of a hypocritical practice than to stimulate the growth and importance of the superstitious use of the sign of the cross? The cross of Christ was the center about which all that the Christians held dear revolved. How easy, then, to play upon his superstition and sentiment, and cause this sign to be important to him!

Greater importance than ever began to be attached to it, after the Emperor Constantine professed himself a Christian. It is claimed that in the year 312 A. D. Constantine, while on one of his campaigns, saw a luminous cross in the heavens on which was the inscription, "In hoc signo vinces": By this sign conquer. He afterward professed Christianity, and the "sign of the cross" was embroidered upon the imperial standard. When the symbols of paganism which were opposed to it "went down in the night of blood, the triumph of Christianity over the Roman world was deemed complete." Some have doubted that the Emperor ever saw the cross in the heavens. We are more inclined to doubt the source from which the vision came, but that it was seen by him, We can not believe that Christ's kingdom was to be maintained and extended by the sword. In fact history plainly points out the fact that the imperial armies fighting under the sign of the cross prepared the way for the man of sin (2 Thessalonians 2) otherwise known as the "little horn" (Daniel 7) and the "beast" (Revelation 13:17). When ancient Rome was divided, the papacy obtained the supremacy over the ten divisions. Then followed a "reign of terror" during which the sign of the cross was worn by the soldiers, executioners, and inquisitors, who did the will of the papacy.

The Pope sought to extend his power by the Wars of the Cross—the Crusades. Priests and monks were the recruiting officers, and their most effective arguments were appeals to Christian sentiment based upon the sign of the cross. The object of these crusades was ostensibly to rescue the "holy sepulchre from the infidels or heathen." Just imagine the hypocrisy of the whole transaction! The real object was to extend the power of "his holiness, the Pope." The armies of the most tyrannical hypocrites sought to extend their power under the plea of rescuing Christ's sepulchre from the heathen, whose worship was no less acceptable to God than their own. What a sea of blood was shed in these endeavors to extend the papal power! And remember that the sign of the cross was the mark upon the breast of each soldier and upon the regimental standard.

Again, when the Pope desired to blot out the Waldenses and other "heretics," he had crusades preached up by fit men, and again the sign of the cross was the symbol which the papal armies carried to the massacres of thousands upon thousands of men, women, and helpless children, whose greatest crime (?) was a desire to leave some of the corruptions of Rome behind and to draw nearer to primitive Christianity. Then during the period covered by the reign of the Inquisition, inquisitors and executioners of all grades wore the sign of the cross.

This sign is regarded by many as a Christian symbol. We do not wish to be understood as attacking it as such. It has without doubt been the symbol of papal hypocrisy for many centuries. We firmly believe it to be the identical "mark of the beast." (Revelation 13:16.) It is also used by the Greco-Russian church. Mr. Michael Davitt, the journalist, informs us that during the recent massacre of Jews at Kishinef in Russia, "the houses of Christians were marked with large crosses and none of these were attacked." Truly the sign of the cross as used by the above two powers has cast a dark shadow which will never be removed from the annals of the past. Many millions of professing Christians have been blotted out by those who bore it on their banner.

We are informed by Daniel that the "little horn," representative of the papacy, would "Think to change times and laws." (Daniel 7:25.) History points us to the fulfillment of this prophetic statement. The papacy has changed many of the laws of God. But he has ear-marked every change! The sign of the cross is upon every one! The Virgin Mary has been enthroned as a goddess. The "rosary," is used to count the repetitions of the parrot-like prayers offered to her. A cross is attached to every "rosary," and the person using it must first make the sign of the cross with the right hand. In absolution, and indulgences, the same sign is used. We might point to many minor doctrines in which it is used, but will take the most important. These are the seven sacraments, as follows:

1. Baptism.
2. Confirmation.
3. Holy Euchrist.
4. Penance.
5. Extreme Unction.
6. Holy Order.
7. Matrimony.

(See Catholic Belief, p. 55.)

The writer of the same work also states that the sign of the cross is "used in all the sacraments." (Page 172.)

The sacrament of matrimony is invalid unless performed by the authority of the Roman Church. Pernicious doctrine number one. That of "holy order" means the consecration of the priesthood. In the church of Christ, the officers were apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, etc. In the church of Rome the officers are popes, cardinals, archbishops, etc. There has been a change, and the sign of the cross used in all the sacraments is the ear-mark of that change.

"Extreme unction," another innovation, is similarly marked. "Penance," which is substituted for repentance, is also marked. "Holy Euchrist," along with the corrupt doctrine of transubstantiation, is branded, too. "Confirmation," which the papacy has changed to a farce, in which a candidate assents to the vows made by his "godparents," also gives the candidate the mark of the power that caused the change. It is in administering the "sacrament of baptism" that the mark is given to "both small and great."

In the year 1311 a Roman Catholic council, held at Ravenna, declared immersion, pouring, or sprinkling, to be immaterial. The Bible knows only baptism by immersion, but the Roman Church claims power to change even the laws of Christ. Here is a change which was foretold by Isaiah as follows: "The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant."—Isaiah 24:5.

The sign of the cross is made at all baptisms in the Roman and Greco-Russian churches. True the Greeks immerse, but they countenance sprinkling in Russia and other countries under their jurisdiction.

The "beast" representative of the papacy changed the ordinance of baptism, and he causes all who receive the changed ordinance to be signed with the sign of the cross upon the forehead. This is the only sign put upon the forehead by the authority of the papacy and as the power of the "beast" has been broken, it is too late to look for the mark in the future. It may be argued that no visible "mark" is made. This is not necessary. The movements of the priest's hands in making the sign are visible. Again, every good Catholic is expected to make the representation of a cross with ashes, on the forehead, every Ash Wednesday. Every good Catholic daily makes the sign of the cross with the right hand. They have therefore received it in their right hands as well as in their foreheads.

To show the adoration in which the cross is held by Catholic people we quote one of their learned writers, Thomas Aquinas, as follows:

"We say that a cross is to be worshipped with the worship due to God; and for this reason we supplicate a cross, and we pray to a cross, as if Christ himself hanging on the cross, were before us."—Presidency and Priesthood, pp. 349, 350.

Here, then, is the mark of the "beast" to which all Roman and Grecian Catholics, submit themselves.

Sad to relate, Protestants who have accepted the papal change in the ordinance of baptism, also sign with the sign of the cross at the time of administering the changed ordinance. It may be urged that this sign was used in the second century. Yes, and apostasy had also set in. The Bible knows nothing of the sign of the cross.

We would say to all who have this "mark" to get it washed out in the waters of Christ's baptism, and thus get "the victory over the beast and his mark." (Revelation 15:2.) The condemnation of God will be upon those who receive this mark, while the promise of the resurrection is to those who overcome or get the victory over it. (See Revelation 14:9-11; 16:2; 19:20; 20:4.)

It is the duty of those preaching the restoration to warn people against receiving this mark. (See Revelation 14:9, 10.) Shall we do it, brethren, or shall we say it is unprofitable to bother our heads about "the mark of the beast"?

AMERICAN ANTIQUITIES.

Foreign travelers complain that America presents nothing like ruins within her boundaries. No ivy-matted towers, nor moss-covered turrets, as in other quarters of the earth. Old Fort Putnam on the Hudson, rearing its lofty decayed sides high above West Point, or the venerable remains of two wars at Ticonderoga upon Lake Champlain, they say afford something of the kind. But what are moldering castles, falling turrets, or crumbling abbeys, in comparison with those ancient and artificial aboriginal hills which have outlived generations and even all tradition—the workmanship of unknown hands! Here are skeletons of strange forms unknown to the Indians! Preserved bodies, fortifications, immense mounds and tumuli, which from their obscurity of origin and magnitude are to be ranked among the wonders of ancient things. It remains for America to tell the story of her antiquities—to arouse her virtuosi and antiquarian to the search; for here, beyond a doubt, are traits of nations coeval with ancient, and probably with the oldest works of man this side of the flood. These mounds and fortifications are generally found on fertile bottoms, and near rivers. Several hundreds have been discovered along the valley of the Mississippi and one of these stands not far from Wheeling, on the Ohio. This mound is fifty rods in circumference and ninety feet in height. It is filled with thousands of human skeletons, and was probably situated near some great city, and was a general depository of the dead for ages—where they were placed in gradation, one layer above another, till they reached the top. Judging from the large trees growing on the mound, amid old and decayed timber covered with mold and leaves, showing them to be of the second and third growth, it must have been at least twelve hundred years since it was deserted.

In the lower part of Wisconsin are found mounds exceedingly curious in their form and structure. They consist of elevations of earth of diversified outline and various size, for the most part consisting of effigies of beasts, birds, reptiles, and of human form, but often circular, quadrangular, or oblong in shape. None of these works exceed fifteen feet in height. In Dade County, Wisconsin, the figures generally resemble the bear or buffalo, and vary in size from ninety to one hundred and twenty feet in height.

In the midst of one group is a representation of a human figure, placed with its head towards the west, its arms and legs extended. Its length is one hundred and twenty feet, and it is one hundred and forty from the extremity of one arm to the other. The body is thirty feet in breadth, the head, twenty-five feet in diameter, and its elevation greater than that of the others, being about six feet.

At Marietta, Ohio, extensive fortifications are found, consisting of walls and mounds of earth running in straight lines, from six to ten feet high, and nearly forty broad at their base. There is also at this place a fort of ancient description, which incloses nearly fifty acres of land. There are openings in these fortifications, supposed to have been thronged with their own busy multitudes, used as gateways, with a passage from one of them, formed by two parallel walls of earth, leading towards the river. This fort gives us something of an idea, not only of the power of the builders, but the strength of their enemy. These fortifications correspond in almost every respect, with the Roman forts and camps. It is highly probable, as we will hereafter show, that they were constructed by that nation.

Any one, on looking at the account given by Josephus of the forms of the Roman camps, in his book 5, chapter 5, page 219, will be surprised at the striking similarity between the two; a similarity that could not have been the result of chance. Doctor Morse says the forts of the Romans in England were universally square; and those of the ancient Danes, Belgians, and Saxons were distinguished by being round. Here, too, are the parallel walls, the ditch, the elevated squares at its corners, the parapets and gateways, like those of the Romans.

At the time that the Romans held Briton as a province, their character was a martial and a maritime one. They possessed a sufficient knowledge of navigation to traverse the ocean by the means of the star and the sun. Their ships as early as the year 55 B. C. were large and heavy; and it was equally in their power to have found America by chance, as well as other nations, the Welsh or the Scandinavians, who made a settlement at the mouth of the St. Lawrence in the year 1000.

In the month of December, 1827, a planter discovered in a field, a short distance from Monte Video, a sort of tombstone, upon which strange and unknown characters were engraved. This stone covered a small excavation formed with masonry, in which he found two exceedingly ancient swords, a helmet, and shield, which had suffered much from rust, also an earthen vessel of large capacity. Greek words were easily made out upon them, which were translated as follows: "During the reign of Alexander the son of Philip, King of Macedon, in the sixty-third year Olympiad, Ptolemais." It was impossible to decipher the rest, on account of the ravages of time on the engraving of the stone.

On the handle of one of the swords is the portrait of a man supposed to be Alexander the Great. On the helmet there is sculptured work that must have been executed with exquisite skill, representing Achilles dragging the corpse of Hector round the walls of Troy, a scene taken from Homer's Iliad.

From the discovery of these relics it is quite clear that the soil of Brazil has been dug by some Greeks, who lived near the time of Alexander Eratosthenes, a Greek philosopher, mathematician, and historian, who lived two hundred years before Christ; mentions the name of Pytheas who lived in the time of Alexander the Great, as being a great Greek philosopher, geographer, and astronomer, as well as a voyager, if not an admiral, as he made several voyages into the Atlantic Ocean. There was a great liability of these adventurers, being driven off in a western direction, not only by the currents which set always towards America, but also by trade-winds which blow in the same direction for several months in the year.

In 1821, on the bank of the river Desperes, in Missouri, was found by an Indian a Roman coin, which was presented to Govoner Clark. A Persian coin was also discovered near a spring in the Ohio some feet under the ground.

The remains of former dwellings, hearths, and fire-places, and bones of animals in immense quantities, are found along the banks of the Ohio, many feet under the ground; while above these former habitations of men are found growing trees, as large as any in the surrounding forest. Surely this carries us back into the past, and tells us a mournful tale of overthrow of mighty nations, and the final extinction of their race from the earth.

Lexington, Kentucky, stands nearly on the site of an ancient town of great extent and magnificence, which is amply evinced by the wide range of its works covering a great quantity of ground. There is connected with the antiquities of this place a catacomb, formed in the bowels of the limestone rock, about fifteen feet below the surface of the earth, discovered in 1775. The sides and extreme ends were formed into niches and compartments, and occupied by figures representing men and proved to be mummies preserved by the art of embalming, in as great a state of perfection as any that had been dug out of the tombs of Egypt, where they have remained for more than three thousand years. Unfortunately for antiquity and science, this inestimable discovery was made by an ignorant class of people, at a period when a bloody and inveterate war was carried on between the whites and the Indians. The whites wreaked their hatred and revenge upon everything connected with them. Supposing this to be the burying-place for their dead, they dragged them out to open air, tore open their bandages, kicked the bodies into the dust, and made a great bonfire of the most ancient remains antiquity could boast.

The cavern was capable of containing two thousand subjects. Could these people have come from Egypt? Catacombs are numerous all over Egypt—vast excavations, with niches in their sides for their embalmed dead,—exactly such as the one we have described. This leads us to believe that wherever the thing is practiced, we have found its authors either a colony from Egypt or the descendants of some nation in Africa acquainted with the art.

In Scipio, New York, a Mr. Halsted has from time to time plowed up on his farm seven or eight hundred pounds of brass, which appeared to have been formed into various implements of husbandry and war. We can not resist the conclusion that on this farm was situated a European village of Danes or Welsh, who were exterminated by war hundreds of years before Columbus was born.

On the flats of the Genesee River, on the land of Mr. Liberty Judd, was found a bit of silver, about the length of a man's finger, hammered to a point at one end, while the other was smooth and square, on which was engraved, in Arabic figures, the year of our Lord 600.

The traits of a Scandinavian, Welsh, and Danish population are clear, and agree with the remark of Professor Beck, that they certainly form a class of antiquities entirely distinct from walled towns, towers, or mounds.

There are many undoubted evidences of an antediluvian population in America. These most rare relics of a world before the flood present themselves in digging far below the surface of the ground. They occur in the form of fire-brands, split wood, ashes, coal, tools, and utensils of various kinds, brass rings, etc. Immense vessels of pottery of curious workmanship and remarkable size, have been discovered eighty and ninety feet below the surface.

In digging a well near Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1826, the stump of a tree in a sound state was found eighty feet below the surface. The marks of an axe were still visible, and the remains of the tree was firmly rooted in its original position, several feet below the bed of the Ohio River.

Another stump was discovered near this place ninety-four feet below the surface, and on its top it appeared as if some iron tool had been consumed by rust. In the section about Fredonia, on the south side of Lake Erie, utensils of various kinds have been found, split wood, and ashes, from thirty to fifty feet below the bed of Lake Erie.

But if any doubt exists, discoveries like these at this vast depth, scattered over so wide a region of country, can not belong to any age or to any work of man this side of the Deluge, as time enough has not elapsed since that catastrophe to allow the decomposition of vegetables, nor of convulsions to have buried these articles so deep below the surface. None can be entertained respecting the skeletons of mammoths and birds whose quills were large enough to admit a man's arm into the calibre, and claws measuring feet in length. The remains of a monster were discovered in Louisiana seventeen feet under the ground, the largest bone of which weighed twelve hundred pounds and was thought to be the shoulder-blade or jawbone. Its total length was one hundred and twenty-five feet.

MORMONISM AND POLYGAMY.

When President Joseph F. Smith, of the Mormon Church, took the stand on Wednesday of last week to testify before the Senate committee in the Smoot case, he described himself as a prophet, seer, and "revelator." But those who looked for any revelations of a startling or significant sort in his testimony were disappointed, for he told nothing that has not been generally known and made use of in all the discussions of Mormonism in recent years. It is an interesting spectacle, however, to see the head of that peculiar religious organization examined by a committee of the United States Senate; and the daily papers have been filling many columns with the questions and answers relating to the marital relations of the Mormon president.

Senator Reed Smoot, the Mormon apostle, whose right to a seat in the Senate is the main subject of this inquiry, is not himself a polygamist; but his opponents are trying to show that the Mormon hierarchy, of which he is a member, "form a propaganda of polygamy," to use Senator Beveridge's expression, and they are trying to show, further, "that Mr. Smoot could not by any possibility put himself up against his associates in his actions, not even in his vote as a senator."

President Smith testifies that he has five wives, each of whom has borne him children since the Church's anti-polygamy manifesto of 1890. Six other "apostles," he says, also have more than one wife each, but all these marriages took place before 1890. "Since the manifesto of 1890," he declares, "no man has entered into plural marriage with the knowledge or approval of the Church." His reason for continuing his state of plural matrimony is the one usually given by the Mormons. "I would rather face the law," he says, "than desert my family." He states his case thus:

"I had a family—a plural family if you please. I married my first wife more than thirty-eight years ago, and my last wife more than twenty years ago. By these wives I have had children, and I have preferred to take my own chances with the law and suffer any consequences the law might visit upon me rather than to abandon these children and their mothers. I have continued to cohabit with them since the manifesto of 1890, and they have borne me children since that date. I was fully aware of what I was doing. I knew I was amenable to the law, but, as I say, I preferred to face that situation rather than to desert them. I have not cohabited with these wives openly or flaunted the fact, but I have acknowledged these wives and children as my family. The people of Utah have regarded the situation as an existing fact. These people, as a rule, are broad-minded and liberal in their views, and have condoned the offense

—if offense it is—rather than interfere with my situation as they found it. It has been known what I have been doing. I have not been interfered with, nor disturbed in any way. If I had been, I was there to answer the charges. I was willing to face them and submit to the penalty, whatever it might be."

The Mormon president says that his people enjoy great freedom of opinion, and tells us that only three or four per cent are living in polygamy. He declares:

"The members of the Mormon Church are among the freest, most independent people of all the Christian denominations. They have freedom of speech, freedom of thought. They are not all united on every principle of the Church. They are not expected to be. They are entitled to their own conception in regard to the principles of the Church; their own conception of what appears to them to be the right or the wrong. So long as one accepts God and his opinion is not in conflict with the accepted standards of the Church, he enjoys fellowship in the Church. He who denies God, he who commits adultery, or steals, or lies, or bears false witness against his neighbor in any way, or goes contrary to the cardinal principles of our Christian religion, is compelled to withdraw. But one who is honest, virtuous, believes in God, and has a little faith in our religion, is nurtured, though he may not believe in the Church in all that it teaches. In that book [Mr. Smith pointed to one of the volumes that had been identified earlier in the proceedings] is a revelation on plural marriages. Not more than three or four per cent of the entire membership of the Church have entered that state. All the rest have abstained from plural marriages, and many thousands have rejected the principle entirely."

The New York Globe is shocked at "the cool effrontery and callous immorality" of the man who owns up to having led such a life; and the Springfield Republican thinks that "the least that can be said" is that the Mormon Church "needs a new head, who will obey the laws of the land, rather than insolently defy them." The Philadelphia Press admits that Mr. Smoot's unfitness to be a Senator is not yet established, but it believes that "the inquiry steadily draws near this proof."

The Hartford Courant argues that Congress has no right to object to any Senator or Representative on religious grounds; and the Boston Herald says:

"The Republican party has flirted too openly with Mormonism as a political factor to make it logical for Republican Senators to refuse to sit with one whose offense is only that he belongs to that Church, without having broken any statute law in his personal conduct. Utah is a sovereign State, and its citizens, be they Mormons or Gentiles, have the rights of citizens, one of which is the right to hold office without subjection to a religious test."—The Literary Digest, March 12, 1904.

IS THERE A "CATHOLIC PERIL" IN AMERICA?

M. Urbain Gohier, a friend of Dreyfus and the author of books which have attracted some attention in France, has been studying religious conditions in the United States, and is much impressed by the growing power of the Roman Catholic Church. In his new book on the American people (from which extracts are printed in the pages of the Independent), M. Gohier observes: "The Catholic question in the United States is one of extreme interest. Within a few years it will be the Catholic peril." He goes on to say:

"The Roman Church, which in the United States numbered 44,500 communicants in 1790, to-day numbers 12,000,000 or more. The total population of the country is twenty times more numerous than at that epoch; the Catholic population three hundred times more numerous. To this we must now add 6,500,000 of Catholics in the Philippines and 1,000,000 in Porto Rico. The territory of the republic maintains 1 cardinal, 17 archbishops, 81 bishops; administering 82 dioceses and 5 apostolic curateships, almost 11,000 churches, more than 5,000 chapels, with 12,500 officiating priests. There are 81 Catholic seminaries, 163 colleges for boys, 629 colleges for girls, 3,400 parochial schools, 250 orphanages, and nearly 1,000 other various institutions. Finally, the United States alone sends more Peter's pence to Rome than all the Catholic countries together."

Two incidents, continues M. Gohier, have served within recent months to reveal the real significance of the "Catholic question"; namely, the Pennsylvania coal strike and the situation in the Philippines. We quote further:

"While the Protestant clergy were divided in their partizanship between the strikers and the operators, the Catholic clergy went solidly for the strikers. Its attitude and policy was directly contrary to that which it holds in Europe, except that it was the essential Catholic policy of playing for favor. In the United States the Catholic population is in the lowest stratum of society, comprising Irish, Polish, and Italian immigration of the pauper class, besides a large influx of Canadians, who are as abjectly submissive to their priests as their forefathers of the seventeenth century. Under these conditions the politics of the Catholic Church is and will continue to be that of demagogues. In the case of the recent strike it is to be remarked that John Mitchell, 'the Bonaparte of the miners,' is a Catholic, the son of an Irish Catholic, and his oldest son is being educated for the Catholic priesthood; that the Federation of Catholic Societies of the United States petitioned President Roosevelt to end the strike; and that on the request from the operators that a clergyman be included in the Arbitration Committee, the President chose a Catholic bishop.

"The question of the status of the friars in the Philippines gave a striking illustration of the changed position of the United States. In 1776 the Government in its infancy forbade the Pope the nomination of a single prelate, and refused to make any kind of recognition of the Holy See. To-day the outcome of the Philippine issue is that the Pope has the official nomination of one hundred prelacies within American territory, with the added triumph of having received American ambassadors at the Vatican. The mission of Governor Taft, it is true, was represented by the Government at Washington as without any official character, but his flimsy holding of the facts can not bear examination. As the Independent observed, Judge Taft was equipped with credentials and empowered to negotiate with the Vatican as formally and completely as any other ambassador. The conduct of Catholic leaders in America at the beginning of the agitation against the friars was significant. Archbishop Ireland counseled prudence and forbearance as the course for the Church, lest public apprehensions should be roused by a revelation of the power of the Catholic community now solid and formidable in the heart of the American nation. His counsels, however, were not adopted by the Federation of Catholic Societies, then in convention at Chicago. Bishop McFaul, of Trenton, led in a bold arraignment of the American administration in the Philippines, declaring that it had been animated by Protestant fanaticism, and calling on the President to do his duty under the Constitution and secure personal rights and property—to the friars—in the Philippines. This means that Catholicism in the United States feel itself sufficiently powerful to lay aside diplomacy."

In brief, "the power and success of the Catholic Church are apparent to discerning eyes in every part of America." M. Gohier says in conclusion:

"The public press, for example, carefully tempers its news and its views in deference to its Catholic patronage. In most of the largest towns the Catholic youth are not only united in special societies and clubs, but even in military organizations. The Church even derives profit from the American weakness for marrying foreign titles by introducing young Catholic aristocrats into the society of millionaires, and she is often rewarded not only by gaining control of great dowries, but even by gaining fair converts, who embrace the ancient faith for the pleasure of being married by a bishop or cardinal amidst the theatrical and medieval pomp of Rome. The Catholics, it is true, are a minority; but they are a minority that is homogeneous, organized and disciplined. They form a solid block in the midst of a heap of crumbling Protestant fragments. They are, it is true, the lowest element of the nation; but under universal suffrage the vote of a brute is worth that of a Newton. When there shall be an army of fifteen or twenty millions of Catholics, firmly united by a tyrannical faith, trained under the régime of the confessional, blindly committed to the will of their priests, and directed by the brains of a few high Jesuits, we shall see how much of a showing there will be for American liberty."

M. Gohier's utterance has aroused unusual interest in the religious press, and his alarmist views are indorsed by more than one Protestant paper. "There was never a greater call for evangelical Protestantism than there is to-day," says the Herald and Presbyterian (Cincinnati); "and the papacy was never more of a menace than it is to-day." The Boston Watchman (Baptist) thinks it idle to deny that "during the last twenty-five years there has been a decided 'rapprochement' by public opinion in the United States towards the Roman Church." It continues:

"The genius of Romanism falls in subtly with a very strong tendency of our times. Men crave the voice of authority and the note of certainty. We call this the age of free thought, of inquiry and investigation, but it is also the age of credulity and superstition. Any man or woman who speaks with sufficient positiveness can gain a hearing and a following. Mrs. Eddy does not have to be rational or even intelligible to build up Christian Science 'churches,' she has only to be positive. Protestantism, with its right of private judgment, is not to-day striking a universal note. Many people are tired of inquiry and investigation, they do not want to discover the truth, they want to be told what is true, and they believe what they are told if the speaker is dressed like a prophet and talks like one. All this works directly in the interests of Romanism.

"Our readers will doubtless say that this is a pretty dark and hopeless picture, and so it is unless American citizens are on the alert against any union of church and state, and unless Protestantism rediscovers itself. On the spiritual side what Protestants must do to resist the incoming sacerdotal tendency is to find out whether there is anything so definite and positive in their faith as to justify the note of spiritual certainty, for depend upon it that is what men are eager for. And if we can not give it to them Romanists will."—The Literary Digest, August 22, 1903.

Said George William Curtis, "Goes the year to its setting. These calm, cold days impress me like the fine old characters of history and the elder time. So the old year sings to me as it goes crowned with crystals and snowdrops to its end. Without shrinking, without sorrow, it folds its white garment around its withered limbs and submits gracefully to the past. The grandeur of the year may be the strength of our character."—Chicago Tribune.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Reading for Daughters of Zion Locals for April.

The following is taken from the Home Magazine and we commend it to the consideration of those who value peace in the neighborhood and children who will grow up to be lovers of their own homes.—ADVISORY BOARD.

CHILDREN AS NEIGHBORS.

We all have them and know that they may be the source of much pleasure or annoyance, according as they have been trained to respect or ignore the rights of other people.

"I was so surprised," said a lady lately, "to have my new neighbor send her small son to me to apologize for some childish prank. It was so different from what I have been accustomed to from the people on the other side of me, from whose children I have long had to put up with offenses much greater, for which they never apologize or were punished, but in which they were openly upheld if I made remonstrance.

"This I seldom did," she continued, "but you know how I love my flowers and love to share them with others, especially with children who are truly fond of them—which they who destroy them are not—and when they wantonly trampled my crocuses under foot and pulled my choicest hyacinths only to throw them away, while at the same time they left those in their own yard untouched, I did remark upon the inconsistency of excusing them for the mischief done my flowers on the plea that they were too little to know better, when they had evidently been taught to know better than to do the same thing at home.

"Well it has resulted in my not being able to take the pleasure in either flowers or children that I should have liked; and I admit that I heard with regret, that a family of children were coming into the house on this side, where always before had lived quiet, childless people, and it was with dread I saw the same number and about as lively youngsters taking possession of the house on our left as those in the place to the right. But I soon learned it was not the same. The little boy, as I said, was sent in to make amends for his first offense and within a few days one of the little girls came with a daffodil that had been over-tempting. On questioning her, the mother found she had helped herself without permission and insisted on its being returned with an acknowledgment of the fault and a prayer for forgiveness.

"When I wanted to give her the flower she was not allowed to accept it, or any others for an entire week. Although I felt that this was a little too strict and it punished me as well as the child (for I saw it was a real love for flowers rather than a spirit of destruction that prompted the act), I did not wish to interfere with the lesson the mother was trying to impress and I admired her attitude in the matter. She seems determined not to allow her children to be bad neighbors. Another demonstration of her right-mindedness was given to-day when she made the oldest boy scrub off some muddy tracks he made across our walk. Now, you know, I begin to believe we will be able to take some comfort in those children, as we never could in those of the inconsiderate family, because they will evidently not be allowed to take a wrong advantage of privileges granted or kindness shown them, or make nuisances of themselves in any way.'

Another item that might well be added to those in the above experience of neighbors' children, is the unlimited number of times they are allowed to go visiting in some neighborhoods.

In good neighborhoods where the children are all nice, it may seem as some mothers claim, that there could be no harm in giving the children freedom to come and go as they please. But experiments have convinced me that in addition to the objectionable inclination to vagabondism thus engendered, there is often harm done in mischievous enterprises concocted by a number of children together that would not be attempted by those of one family alone.

Then, too, when they are allowed to overtire themselves with the play that is more strenuous in proportion to the larger number engaged in it, they are apt to rasp one another's tempers and from children's quarrels parents' estrangements frequently result.

Again, the strain will be unequal because it will be where attempts are made to furnish home attractions that the children who have none will gather, and much as you may love children there is no gainsaying the fact that each one added to your group causes more care and commotion among your own brood, and even the nicest, most attractive child will wear out his welcome if he comes every day and all day long, which is a pity both for the child and the people he torments. Then all in all, it is undoubtedly best to limit the freedom of children, as far as their coming and going are concerned. Too great liberty frequently becomes license, and its appreciation is very soon lost to all concerned.

Dear Fathers and Mothers: Some time since, when thanking those who had so kindly sent us copies of "Footsteps of Jesus," we said that we would have more to say in regard to the books we hoped soon to publish. This little book (as we think some of you will remember) was written at the dictation of the Spirit and Sister Young, the author, was also directed in the same manner to send it to us for publication, which she did. We do not know how many copies were published, but the entire edition has long since been exhausted. As stated before it is our intention to republish this excellent little volume, in connection with the "Gospel Story." The two combined will make a neat volume and one which every parent in the Church will, we earnestly hope, be most anxious to place in the hands of their child. But for the pressure of work at the Herald Office and the inability of our Business Manager, Bro. F. B. Blair, to secure the amount of help needed, this volume would now be on sale. We have the promise, however, that it shall be the first work taken up after Conference and we hope very early in the summer to be able to announce that it is ready for mailing. It will be in some respects an improvement over any volume of the series heretofore published as it will be beautifully illustrated and substantially bound in cloth.

Please let it be remembered that the books known as the "Birth Offering Series" are intended for the little ones—the ones who most of all need "their portion in due season," but who are most likely to be overlooked when the feast is spread, or asked to wait until the older ones have been served.

I ask at this time the help of God's Spirit to enable me to show you that we, as parents, can not afford to do this. God has commanded us to "bring up our children in light and truth." This we never can do if we allow the first years of their lives to pass, without laying the foundation upon which in after years we hope with God's blessing to help them in building or forming, such characters as the Master will approve.

Those who have made a close and earnest study of child nature tell us that during the period of infancy and childhood (the former covering the period from birth to six years of age, the latter from six to twelve) "is the era for conscience building. Politeness, moral conduct, and even religious observance may now be made so much a matter of course that they will never seem foreign." "And during this period the possibilities of wise parenthood to preëempt the young soul for goodness are incalculable."

It has taken wise men and women a long time to discover these truths from the study of children themselves, but O, how many a gem of moral and intellectual worth might have been saved to the Church and work of God had we as parents obeyed the law of God in regard to this matter! The will of God is that parents should in this way preëempt their children from the want of faith, the sin and corruption which is in the world, and thus fit them to become laborers with him in the world's redemption. And in this work the Church as a church certainly has a duty to perform, else the Master had never said to Peter, "Feed my lambs."

It is the very little ones, as we said before, who most need this feeding and who are yet most apt to be neglected. It is our purpose, if God spares us a few years longer, to see to it that a few volumes are provided especially for the children of our Church. Such is the combination and competition of capital in this day that there are almost insurmountable barriers to be overcome by a publishing house of small means, such as our own is. Had we ample means there would be much less difficulty. But as Holland truly says, "We grow by the things which are under our feet." It is the work of those who love God to surmount difficulties, and by self-sacrifice and earnest zeal to overcome them. The Birth Offerings already sent in have enabled us to illustrate the forthcoming volume without expense to the Church and we expect to see these offerings increase, until they will be a fund sufficient of themselves to carry on this work. Dear parents, have any of you missed the amount you sent in gratitude for the gift of your little ones? Without waiting for an answer are we not safe in saying you have not?

May we not, then, ask that, as time rolls on and other little ones come to your hearts and homes, you will still remember this work? And more, is it too much to ask that those who may thus far have failed to remember it will come to our help? Those who have means in abundance to provide the best reading-matter for their own, must not forget the less fortunate ones, but help in publishing these books so that the Board of Publication may be able to make the price less than they otherwise could, and that mothers especially may keep this thought in mind we insert the following beautiful poem, the author of which we do not know, but the beauty and pathos of which we feel sure will appeal to the heart of every mother who reads it:

"How best can I serve thee, my child! my child?
Flesh of my flesh and dear heart of my heart!
Once thou wast within me—I held thee—I fed thee—
By the force of my loving and longing I led thee—
Now we are apart!

"I may blind thee with kisses and crush with embracing,
Thy warm mouth in my neck and our arms interlacing,
But here in my body my soul lives alone,
And thou answerest me from a house of thine own—
That house which I builded!

"Is there no way my life can save thine from a pain
Is the love of a mother no possible gain?
No labor of Hercules—search for the Grail—
No way for this wonderful love to avail?
God in heaven—O teach me!

"My prayer has been answered. The pain thou must bear
Is the pain of the world's life which thy life must share.
Thou art one with the world—though I love thee the best;
And to save thee from pain I must save all the rest—
Well—with God's help I'll do it!

"Thou art one with the rest. I must love thee in them!
Thou wilt sin with the rest—and thy mother must stem
The world's sin. Thou wilt weep—and thy mother must dry
The tears of the world lest her darling should cry!
"I will do it—God helping!

"And I stand not alone. I will gather a band
Of all loving mothers from land unto land—
Our children are part of the world! Do ye hear?
They are one with the world—we must hold them all dear!
Love all for the child's sake!

"For the sake of my child, I must hasten to save
All the children on earth from the jail and the grave.
For so and so only I lighten the share
Of the pain of the world that my darling must bear—
Even so, and so only!"

Letter Department.

WOODBINE, Iowa, March 11, 1904.

Dear Herald: Perhaps it may be well that while I am benefited by reading the good news which comes through your pages, I should contribute my mite for the benefit of others. It is true my labors are more limited than in days past, not because they are not needed as much as ever, for I realize the great necessity for greater diligence and more laborers in the great, spreading field, but because I am also made to realize the truth of Christ's saying, "The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak." And while my spirit is as anxious and as earnest as ever in the spread of the truth, my physical powers are on the wane. Were it not so, I should not be at home now, writing this letter, held down by physical debility and inclement weather, but should be trying to tell the gospel story to my fellow men. Time was when storms did not deter me, and it took more than a temporary attack of sickness to keep me at home; but all things earthly must decay, and the old body loses its vigor, the power of the whole man for good is lessened, and though the spirit may be like a caged lion, restless for a wider field of activity, it must submit to the conditions. I do not write to complain of this, but am desirous of explaining any apparent lack of diligence on my part to those who have a right to expect the benefit of my labors.

When three young men at our last quarterly conference were presented for ordinations to God's ministry, that fact seemed to me to be the divine answer to the question, Who shall take up the burden of this great work when the grey-haired veterans shall be called home? The young are coming from the Sabbath-school, from the Religio, and from all the means of grace that God in his wisdom has provided. They are coming better prepared than we were, and must accomplish a greater work. And as I see them coming to the front, and putting on the gospel armor, I feel like saying of him, as John said of Jesus, "He must increase, but I must decrease."

Still, I am not content to slack my hand in the work, but shall continue to do what I can to spread the light of truth. I am desirous of doing more by tongue and pen. I desire to leave something behind me that it may be with me as with the ancient worthy of whom it is written, "He being dead, yet speaketh." I care not for official honor, but I want to leave a record that will cause no blush of shame, when I meet it in the great day of awards, and for this I shall still labor, and I desire an interest in the prayers of all Saints that I may endure unto the end.

I believe the work in this district is in fair condition. Of course it can improve and I never expect in this life, at least, that we shall get beyond the line of improvement. That is one of the beauties of this work,—there is no limit to our improvement, there are always greater heights of perfection to attain, greater depths of wisdom to fathom, a more profound knowledge to obtain, and higher and grander excellencies of purity to reach, and if we are not pressing forward towards these, and every other excellence, we are going backward. We can not stand still if we would. I would to God that all who profess to be the children of God would learn and remember this all-important truth and set their eyes upon "the mark of the prize of our high calling of God in Christ Jesus" and press forward to that mark.

Brn. Baker, Crabb, and Smith of the missionary force have labored hard and not without success. W. A. is holding forth here every night to large audiences who seem very much interested either in him, or in the truth. I hope it is in the truth. He labored hard to present the light and is blessed in his effort, and I trust that souls may be saved as the fruit of his labors.

I believe the presidents of the branches, without exception, are earnestly laboring to encourage the Saints to come up higher in the scale of perfection. Nor can I see any fear or defection among the Saints from the opposition of the "antis." In fact, there is nothing to fear from any source, if we are true to God and ourselves. There is the grand secret. Let us labor and pray for that unity that Christ prayed might characterize the efforts and lives of the apostles of old. There is no time for splitting hairs on questions that do not affect our future welfare, and it is a shame for us to be striving for the mastery over each other. Let us be brethren not only in word, but in reality.

Hoping to abide in the faith to the end, I remain,

CHARLES DERRY.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, March 11, 1904.

Editors Herald: As I read in the HERALD for the 11th, that one of the elders, Bro. R. Etzenhouser, was looking me up, I would like to say to the dear brother that my address is now 503 Wade Street, near John Street, Cincinnati, Ohio. I am very sorry that the brother got disappointed. The Utah elders are getting a very good hold here now. I am still holding on to the rod of iron and doing all I can to uphold the work in this city.

I am glad that I am a Latter Day Saint and I am very proud of the name and of the only true church of Jesus Christ on this earth. I hope and pray that the Spirit of God will be in mighty power on the 6th of April and all through the General Conference at Kirtland.

Your brother in the one faith,

WILLIAM N. HANNER.

DUDLEY, Iowa, March 17, 1904.

Editors Herald: Since my last communication, Bro. B. Johnson and self closed a three-week meeting at Sandyville in the latter part of February, and left several investigating and almost believing. The Christian preacher announced that he would sometime in the near future deliver a lecture on "Joe Smith and the Book of Mormon." At the close of the service I respectfully requested him to let me know when he would do so, as I desired to be present. But his looks and manner indicated that he did not care for my presence, but in the presence of his congregation he could not very well refuse to grant my request, hence promised me, but in rather a half-hearted way. Not being altogether satisfied with his promise, I went to his stopping-place the next morning before he took his departure for Des Moines, and tried to elicit a more satisfactory answer and also to decide on the time of lecture not too far distant. He finally promised to inform Bro. Knox a week or so before time so that he would have time to let me know and also give me time to get there before the lecture. And after arguing the pros and the cons somewhat I left him after taking his order for a Book of Mormon, as he was now going to post up on Joseph Smith. Says he, "I suppose I will find out all about Joseph Smith in that book?" "No", said I, "you will find nothing in that book about Joseph Smith." "Where then?" said he; and I told him to see our Church History.

Later I saw him in the post-office, when he told me that he had decided not to lecture himself, but to send some one else.

Yesterday I received a letter from Bro. Knox stating that he (the preacher) was going to send some one there while I was attending the district conference at Runnells, but that their members would not permit any lecture against us there. Some of their best members are investigating our faith and I hope are not far from the kingdom.

The truth is slowly gaining ground, and old Babylon tottering before it though its supporters are straining every nerve to keep it from falling! In spite of every effort it is falling and will continue to fall, for the Lord has so declared.

Our district conference was well attended by members from the various parts of the district, and a real spiritual feast enjoyed by all present.

The writer was privileged to bury in baptism two precious souls in the chilly waters of the Des Moines River below Runnells: Sr. Flora Stevens of Dudley and Sr. Clara Knox of Sandyville. May they ever prove faithful to their covenant.

After the district conference the writer bade adieu to the dear Saints, whose company he always enjoys, and wended his way to Hamilton, a mining town in the south-east corner of Marion County. There he began to unfurl the gospel banner in the "Friends" church. This was a new place, with the exception of a couple of sermons preached by Bro. T. F. Jones last summer, but there was a show in town at the same time and it was all the "show" the people of Hamilton cared for; another evidence of the truthfulness of Paul's prophecy in reference to the last days—"lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God."

There I preached sixteen sermons and left several investigating and acknowledging it is the truth we preach, while others said that we preached from another bible made by ourselves. Thus acknowledging their ignorance of what was in their Bible.

One good lady, in order to convince herself and prove to others that I was using the King James Bible stepped on the stand one evening and examined my Bible, and sure enough it was the King James Translation, she said. Others tried to be as disorderly as possible, to create disturbance, evidently a "put-up job" to run me out; but I was determined to stay until I got ready to leave and had fully presented the whole counsel of God to those who were anxious to hear, and leave it as a testimony against those who would not hear.

At present I have more calls and opportunities for preaching than I can fill, and have been very busy ever since the fore part of November. One peculiarity I have noticed this winter, which is also an evidence of the crumbling to pieces of Babylon, is the many churches standing empty all over the land. Since we left home on New Years day our meetings have been conducted in vacant church buildings, except the one at Sandyville, and it is on the verge of vacancy. The one at Hamilton has been vacant for four or five years. The time is not far distant when there will be plenty of churches all over this land for our elders to occupy in, and where God's name will indeed be honored in the very buildings which have been built to his name, but in which they have dishonored him by teaching their own tradition and setting aside the commandments of God. May the Lord bless and prosper his cause.

As ever in the faith,

S. K. SORENSEN.

MCIVOR, Michigan, March 17, 1904.

Editors Herald: Assisted by Bro. J. W. McKnight, I began an effort here the evening of Sunday the 13th, before a packed house. The Macabee Hall was secured for the services, and each evening the hall is filled to the doors, and the "Standing room only" card is in order. Interest is intense and if the weather remains favorable much good ought to accrue.

With my wife's assistance the choir is furnishing a splendid musical program which adds greatly to the attractiveness of the meetings. We are very hopeful. Public interest in the Smoot case, now pending before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, is warm. It has had the effect of stirring up some sectarian aspirants for fame, who have treated the people to a rehash of the old story, but our men are watchful and it turns in our favor in the end. I have nothing but the most encouraging reports to offer regarding the feeling of those outside. The saddest feature is the indifference of many who are in the work. Of course, this spirit has always had a representation, and probably always will, but that does not render it less pathetic.

We are trying to raise the standard of morality and spirituality among our people here. I find many who for years have not been in touch with the work and are dead from starvation.

Some of these have wandered far from the spirit of the Church and are reclaimed with difficulty. However, we shall not weary. A favorable feature here is the faithfulness of Bro. and Sr. G. A. Pringle, who are letting their light shine with a luster most commendable. Bro. Pringle is a very prosperous merchant, and I hope he is not in debt to the Lord.

I trust that the conference at Kirtland will mark another stride in the forward movement. Personally, I feel stronger in spirit than for a long time. I feel like putting my shoulder to the wheel, and with assisting grace I hope to labor on.

Your brother in Christ,

E. A. GOODWIN.

WOODBINE, Iowa, March 21, 1904.

Editors Herald: I am still alive in the work of the Lord. I have been holding meetings at this place for the past three weeks, with good attendance and good interest. There is a noble band of Saints at this place, and it seems like leaving home to leave them, and that is the way I find it all over the district. There is a demand for preaching all over this field,—more calls than we can fill.

Bro. S. B. Kibler presides over the branch here and he has the confidence of all and is worthy of it.

Yesterday was a happy day to me. I led seven down into the water and baptized them beneath the cool waves. That makes ninety-six that I have baptized the past year. I closed meetings last night and leave to-day for Unionburg to assist Bro. J. C. Crabb. I hope that the good Lord will bless us this coming year. Let us remember that the prize is at the end of the race.

Your brother,

W. A. SMITH.

XENIA, Illinois, March 16, 1904.

Dear Herald: While reading the letters from the brothers and sisters from the different parts of the world, my heart is cheered. I feel resolved to follow my Savior, leaving the path of sin. Friends may oppose me, foes may beset me, still will I follow him. The Lord in a dream showed me the two different ways, the straight and narrow way and the broad way. In the narrow way there was such a few people going, while there were so many hastening down the broad road, the end of which was misery and woe, and banishment from the presence of the Lord.

Satan uses so many different ways to lead the young as well as the old people into crooked paths which lead to the broad way. There is the ball-room, the dancing-hall, card-playing; all who love worldly pleasure are gathered to these places of amusement. But one of the most enticing schemes which Satan uses to lead the young men astray is the saloon, where music streams forth, and the walls are decked with beautiful scenes. At these places may be found young and old spending their time and money,—taking the bread out of the mouths of hungry children and destroying the happiness of the home.

O that all could only see the narrow way! We have all seen the beautiful little dens woven by the spider, and we know the innocent little insects that alight thereon for rest are captured and taken away to a dark cell. So it is with every one who is not walking in the straight and narrow way that leads to life everlasting. May we all live that our light will shine out before the world, for we who know the truth, and doeth it not, shall be beaten with many stripes.

I attended the conference at Springerton, Illinois, and I enjoyed the conference and prayer-meeting. The Spirit of God was present to cheer and comfort. I ask an interest in the prayers of God's people.

Your sister in the faith,

MARTHA E. BING.

MALAD CITY, Idaho, March 15, 1904.

Editors Herald: When I last wrote you I was at Blackfoot, Idaho. From there I went to Idaho Falls to attend the funeral of our beloved brother, Oliver T. Smith, who departed this life on the 22d ult. While there I did some preaching in the city, being the first representative of the Church to preach the gospel in Idaho Falls. I did what I could to console and strengthen the dear Saints who live there. Some not in the faith seemed to be interested and I hope good will result from my labors there.

On the 9th inst. I returned to Blackfoot, where I attended three sessions of the Sunday-school convention, but left there before it adjourned, and came to Pocatello where I called on a number of Saints who live there, desiring to learn something of the nature of their surroundings and the prospect for preaching the gospel there. We have no organization there, and the prospect for an opening is not very flattering. The Saints are firm in the faith and are trying to live their religion.

On the 11th I came to Malad City where I attended the Idaho District Sunday-school convention on the 12th, followed by the district conference. Both passed pleasantly and I believe will be profitable to all those who attended. The work in Idaho is onward, and though we meet considerable opposition from the Mormon people, yet, knowing that we have truth and right on our side, we are ever ready and willing to give a reason for the hope that is within us, and we have no fears concerning the final outcome.

As ever in the true faith,

A. J. LAYLAND.

A Short Sketch.

March 19, 1904.

Editors Herald: In the last issue of the HERALD we read an article in regard to T. C. Iliff. We were informed by the Kansas City Journal that he lectured on Mormonism in that city last week, and from excerpts from his lecture we learn he said: "Mormonism, its doctrines, teachings, and practices are hurtful to God, home, patriotism and intelligence," and then stated that "Joseph Smith was the founder of Mormonism." That does not appear to be stating the facts "with fairness," and he seems not to be making good use of that principle of intelligence which he says is one of "the corner-stones of Americanism."

But we should not make Doctor Iliff an offender for a word, and it may be he speaks now of false "Mormonism" and then of true "Mormonism." The late investigation at Washington has emphasized the many testimonies heard from time to time in regard to the teachings and practices of Brighamism. On the other hand, truthful men and women have for years been speaking and writing in defense of the pure character and unsullied principles of the founder of the true Church. Some of these are in our midst. Only yesterday Sr. Mary Eaton, widow of Elder John E. Page, said to us, "I knew Joseph the Martyr at a time when he was suffering from persecution on every hand. All manner of falsehoods were told concerning him and the direst indignities perpetrated upon him, but like a man of God he bore it all with forbearance and fortitude. When assailed because of false reports which were whispered about, he said, 'My sister, polygamy was wrong when practiced by the ancients, and it's wrong now.'"

The footsteps of this frail little sister are tottering, the feeble and delicate frame can hardly support itself; but though waning, the memory of that honest, pure-hearted man whom she had ever revered as a prophet of God, still answers to the humble prayer and to the soulful desire to continue to the end, abiding in the faith of the message delivered to this generation through Joseph Smith. She loves also to quote a portion of her patriarchal blessing given under the hands of "Father Smith," and now, in her eighty-seventh year, feeble and afflicted, she is still happy and contented, for she rests in the promise: "The Lord shall prolong thy life, and if faithful, thou shalt see Zion flourish upon the hills; and, if thou art faithful, thou shalt see the temple of the Lord, and the glory that shall come into it."

Loving hands minister to her every need; and, as she resides in a cottage just across from the temple lot, she will, we trust, be able to look out again upon its expanse of foliage, when nature shall waken the songs of birds, and delight us all with its beautiful verdure and the sweetness of springtime.

We have just been enjoying our semiannual stake convention and conference with their pleasant greetings and instructive sessions. Reports, resolutions, and elections have taken up most of the time; but we were glad to hear them, also the speeches. Some of them were even refreshing. Bishop May told us that "should we tell everybody to come who wants to come here as the gathering place, we would be swamped."

Elder Pickering feasted us for a few minutes with a graphic account of his visit to the Holy Land, prefacing his remarks with this one: "There are other kinds of work for us to do besides preaching the gospel." Did he mean engaging in the various cults, agriculture, horticulture, etc? He regaled us with visions of radishes as big as the speaker's arm, and of bunches of grapes two feet in length, and revived our hope in the promises because, as he said, the former and the latter rains have indeed again been restored to Palestine.

Much might be written about the fine sermons preached during the last few weeks by Elders Arber, Aylor, Grimes, and others, also by our home talent; also one might write concerning the changes going on in the Church, from time to time, both as to mind, body, and estate. The intermingling of that which is sorrowful and joyous, dreary and bright in life must still continue to remain the inevitable, not always understood.

Bro. I. N. White has recently had another valiant engagement. He proceeded to the front at Kansas City; but according to all reports, did something more than take observations. As Togo generally says, after a severe attack, the enemy retreated. We feel assured that the missionary's thrilling voicings for emancipation from darkness and error will not fail to be heard although they may be answered only by ridicule and reproach. Emotional eloquence may pass into desuetude; but as the pulsations of the air once set in motion never cease, so the words that proceed from the fountain of living truth must abide for ever. May the coming conference be fraught with much good and prove a blessing to us all. With love for the work,

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Dear Herald: The HERALD always brings good news to our home. We take the HERALD, Autumn Leaves, Hope, and I love to read them all. I am thankful I am a Latter Day Saint. I was baptized about seven years ago, with nine others, by Bro. Stead. It was very muddy and cold, but what did we care for that; we just enjoyed obeying God's commands.

I was always taught the gospel by my father and mother, and I have never regretted the step taken, but I am sorry that I have not lived better. I will try to do all I can in the future that I may go on to perfection. Paul tells us to go on unto perfection, not laying again the foundation, but add to your faith, virtue, etc.

This world is full of discouragement, and I believe it to be our duty to try and encourage our brothers and sisters and the world to live right. We should not live for ourselves alone, but for the good we may do for others. There is no time for us to sit with folded hands; there is a work for all of us to do, and if we do not do our duty in this world, we will fall short of our reward when we are judged at the last day. It is my desire to live right so I can go to Zion, for all that are not worthy to flee to Zion for safety, must take up the sword and fight against their neighbors.

Your sister in the one faith,

SARAH BING.

BRISBANE, Australia, February 18, 1904.

Editors Herald: Since my last there has been a change in my field of labor. In December I was appointed to this city which is in Queensland. It is four hundred miles north of Newcastle and five hundred miles north of Sydney. It is warmer here than at the places named. This is a beautiful city. It resembles Los Angeles, California. It is the capital of the State, the principal products of which are bananas, pineapples, and sugar-cane. The first two are now in season and the markets of the city are well supplied.

Our work here began about two years ago. The commencement was the baptism of twenty-eight persons out of the Brighamite Church. This work was done by Bro. John Kaler. Since then the work has grown slowly but surely. There is now a neat little church erected. This is due to the sacrifices and labors of a few very earnest Saints. I wish the Spirit which actuated them was more frequently found elsewhere. Now that they have a church the brethren expect greater success in mission work. The branch is doing well under the efficient presidency of Bro. J. W. Barkus. Bro. B. is an educated man, but is one who knows the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. He considers all things as naught that he may win Christ and be found in him, without spot and blameless, not having his own righteousness, but that of God.

My wife and I came here and brought our household effects. Our separation from Wallsend, Hamilton, and Sydney Saints and our relatives was very affectionate. Their words and acts of kindness were encouraging.

In gospel bonds,

A. C. BARMORE.

BERRYVILLE, Virginia, March 21, 1904.

Dear Herald: Since last writing you I have been quite busy preaching and visiting with friends and relatives. My meeting at Rileyville was all I could ask considering the weather. The people turned out well and interest was good. The large church owned by the Baptists and Lutherans was well filled most of the time. The Methodist preacher, a Mr. Wilson, never came in once while I was there, but stood outside one night. Other times he hoisted the window to his house and listened from there. He warned his flock to keep away, but it availed him nothing, as the most of them came to hear for themselves.

On Sunday, the 6th inst., I held forth at a place called Sandy Hook. The house was crowded and interest fine. On Tuesday, the 8th, I lectured in the Young Men's Christian Association Hall in Luray, the county seat of Page County, with about sixty out and interest was good. I received some warm handshakes at the close of service, with the expression that they were glad to see the difference between the Latter Day Saints and the people of Utah. I was blessed in making the difference plain, for which I feel very thankful to our heavenly Father.

On Wednesday, the 9th, I went to Shenandoah and visited a friend of mine. I enjoyed my visit much; gave them an understanding of our faith which pleased them much. I think with a little effort an opening can be made there.

On Thursday, the 10th, I went to New Hope in Augusta County, by the request of Bro. and Sr. Isaac Coffman. I found them strong in the faith and glad to see me. I spoke there four times, enjoying very good liberty, though few came out. I enjoyed my visit with these good people and left them feeling well in the work. On the 16th I bade them good-bye, returning to Rileyville where I had an appointment for a lecture. The house was well filled and all seemed to enjoy the lecture.

I left Rileyville on Friday, the 18th, for Sterling, Virginia, to answer a call from Bro. W. R. Davison. This brother moved to Virginia some four years ago from Logan, Iowa. They were glad to see me and we had a fine time while together. This brother and his faithful family have tried hard to get an opening for us, but little in sight as yet. Bro. Davison tried to get the Methodist Episcopal church for me, but failed. Sunday morning we went to hear the preacher and such a mess! I am sure my presence cheated him out of his liberty to make much of a talk. He steered clear of both Bro. Davison and the writer, so I failed to form his acquaintance. Well, I don't think I lost much.

Sunday night we had sacrament-meeting and praised our heavenly Father for the gift of the gospel in these latter days. With regret I bade these dear Saints good-bye and am this far on my way back to Rileyville.

This valley I think is a good field for some one who will work out among the people and preach the good old Jerusalem gospel to them and not criticise the habits and customs of the people. I arrived at this place about two o'clock and have to wait until after six before I can leave. I have put in my time visiting with some folks I used to know in my young days. They were glad to see me and learn I was engaged in such a grand work. The weather is bad; cold rain all day. That has hindered me much this winter in holding public meetings, also in visiting my relatives and friends. I have been here two months and have not visited near all the places where I am wanted. I hope this field will be looked after in due time. I am, as ever,

Yours in the cause we love,

ISAAC N. ROBERTS.

LUCAS, Iowa.

Dear Editor: Throughout our time there is much preaching in regard to the first principles of the true gospel of Christ. Quite frequently we hear of the four fundamental principles, such as faith, repentance, baptism, and laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost; but there is one thing that should be impressed on the mind of every individual, and that is eternal judgment.

After leaving part of the first principles, we come to the last and great event that will affect every one. Eternal judgment means an effect that God has to place on all those in a different capacity except those who are entitled to celestial glory. It is the will of God that all good Saints shall realize celestial glory, because they will be perfected through the blood of the Lamb. This is the highest glory of all; when we reach that climax we will be with the Father. There is much taught in receiving the gospel in the spirit world. But there is a limited condition to this. We believe that every one shall be rewarded or punished according to the amount of good or evil done here on earth. While this is true, eternal judgment rests to a great extent on every individual excepting those who have suffered for the work's sake, as John the Revelator says on the Isle of Patmos. Those who were beheaded and killed in various forms, and suffered scoff and scorn for the true gospel of Christ, and also those who neither received the mark of the beast on their hands or on their foreheads, shall be made priests of God and of his Christ and shall reign with Christ a thousand years, and, consequently, there will be no need of judgment on them. In John 14: 1, 2 we are told by the Savior that in his Father's house there are many mansions. He told his disciples not to be troubled, for he was going to prepare a place for them.

According to the Savior's statement there are different kinds of spheres in his Father's House. Paul describes the different glories and that the celestial is one and terrestrial is another, etc. He says there is one glory of the sun, which is greatest, and another of the moon, and another of the stars. For one star differs from another in glory. So the will of God is for all to obtain the highest glory. This is for the Saints of the Most High and those that will obey the gospel in the spirit world, heaving not the chance to obey it here; but God's judgement will rest upon those having the chance to obey and do not obey, and they can never reach that climax of the highest glory for all eternity. The highest glory is for the obedient and the faithful.

This is a matter of great consideration to those in the Church and out of the Church. Harken to what the poet says:

"Thus on to eternal perfection
The honest and the faithful will go;
While they who reject this glad message,
Shall never such happiness know."

So we can see at a glance that our God is a just God and that he will reward every man according to his works.

Yours for the truth,
HOWELL JONES.

REED CITY, Michigan, March 17, 1904.

Editors Herald: I take great comfort in reading the church papers. I ask myself sometimes, What would I do without them? Left alone as we poor elders' wives are, what a joy and comfort it is to have them to read. I do not see how Saints can get along without them. I know some who can not afford (?) to take a single church paper, and yet they will indulge in the filthy habit of tobacco. I pray that each one may overcome this.

Dear Saints, the gospel is a comfort to me, although I am the only one in my father's family to obey it, as yet. The rest are Baptists, and are terribly prejudiced against us. I feel more at home with a band of Saints than with my own relatives.

I truly thank God for sending his servant, J. J. Cornish, here, and for giving us a desire to obey his gospel. Although we may meet with discouragements, God is ready and willing to help in every time of need. I do so much desire to live where our children could have a good Sunday-school to attend, and where we could hear the word preached.

Our children are interested in reading the Church History. I have before me a letter from a dear friend who is spending the winter in San Bernardino, California. She tells me of visiting our church there, February 14, giving me a description of it, also telling me of the good sermon she heard, from Bro. George Wixom, and of the friendly manner in which she was received. It did me good to hear of this, as she is a good woman, one I would like to have obey the gospel.

Ever praying for the advancement of truth,
Your sister in the one faith,
MRS. W. D. ELLIS.

Editors Herald: I have been without the HERALD for several months, but I feel that I can not afford to do so any longer. It is a great mistake to deprive ourselves of spiritual food that we may save a few dollars, or have more time for other things. I think we can not read the HERALD and Ensign without feeling encouraged and having a stronger desire to do what we can for the gospel.

I have of late been made to realize how absolutely necessary it is that we live our religion. We have taken upon us the name of Christ, thus declaring to the world that we are followers of the Savior. We must make good that claim. Without constant effort and watchfulness we shall find ourselves not representing the Master we love, but misrepresenting him. We often feel and express our thankfulness for the great privileges that are ours, the gifts and blessings of the restored gospel; but some of us, perhaps, have not thought so much as we should of the necessary sequence: "unto whomsoever much is given of him will much be required."

Unconsciously, and whether we wish it or not, we are continually influencing those about us. What need, then, that we make straight paths! To walk in a straight line toward any given object we must fix our eyes steadily upon that object, not looking to the right nor left, nor can we look down. So, in the gospel way, let us fix our eyes upon Christ, and strive to come nearer and nearer to him and to bring our lives to the standard he has set for us. If we look to this one or that, seek for easier paths or worldly pleasures, our path is not likely to be a very straight one.

As we go on our way Satan will do his best to overthrow us and unless we are very careful we may stumble. What then? Must we give up beaten? No, we can get up and go on with more determination than ever, learning from the fall to be more watchful and prayerful. I have in mind certain ones who have felt that because of a failure it is no longer any use for them to try. If they were going on a journey here a fall or two would not stop them. Shall eternal life be given up more easily? If we are thoroughly in earnest in our determination to overcome neither Satan nor the whole world can ultimately prevent us. Self alone can do that.

But I wonder if we are always as ready as we should be to give a helping hand to those who are down. If we stand off with an "I am holier than thou" air and think to have nothing to do with them because they brought it upon themselves, I doubt our following very closely the example of Him who sacrificed not only reputation but life itself to save that which was lost.
