PROBATION AFTER DEATH.

Probation after death may be a true doctrine, but discussed by unskillful minds I am of the opinion that it does the cause of Christ more harm than good. Nearly every one that preaches that doctrine carries it so far as to advocate universal salvation, and I have known some who, being satisfied that doctrine was correct, were satisfied to remain outside the church and take their chance in the world to come. The people at large do not need the encouragement that such preaching affords them; for they already are too prone to procrastinate the day of their repentance; and I am fully satisfied that the cause of Christ can be much better served by urging the people to obey the gospel now and here and not to take chances as to what may be on the other side of this mortal sphere. These things are out of our jurisdiction and in the hands of a just God. We are among the living. Our mission is to the living. And we have here enough to engage our attention without going into the precincts of the dead, or the living who live after death.

The people now are very much like they were in Book of Mormon times, and need to be reminded continually of the judgments of God, of death and endless duration to keep them in the fear of the Lord. (See Book of Mormon p. 117, par. 28, large edition.) Alma could see no way to reclaim the people but by bearing down in pure testimony. (See p. 190, par. 15.) All Book of Mormon citations are from large edition.

I once heard of a pious old lady saying to a man that had stolen one of her turkeys that he would have it to pay for in the day of judgment, to which the culprit replied, "Madam if you are going to credit me that long, I believe I'll take another one."

There are a number of texts used to prove the doctrine of probation after death, which at first glance seem strong and quite convincing; but there are so many just as strong to be used on the other side that it should convince us of one of two things: that is, that there is a conflict in the texts or that we do not properly understand them. I can scarcely believe that there is a conflict in the word, but rather concede that the fault is with us.

We are watched by a host of unscrupulous critics that desire to make us "offenders for a word," and to lay a snare for us, because we "reprove within the gates." We already have been accused of repudiating the Book of Mormon, because we teach probation after death, which is to say that they do not believe that the book teaches such a doctrine. No longer ago than last week I heard an Advent elder say that one of our elders had told him that we believe that even the Devil will be saved. It seems reckless for an elder to offer his private opinion as the faith of the people he is associated with. If the elder said that, he was wrong, for "we" as a church have never taken action upon the subject and do not teach it: nor do I as an individual believe it, neither do our books teach it, according to my understanding.

I repeat that if we all understood the texts that seem to favor or disfavor that doctrine we would see much more harmony in them than now appears. I believe that God foreseeing that inharmony and misunderstanding would arise among his ministry, in order to forestall it in giving the precious gift of the Book of Mormon, said, "In it is the fullness of the gospel."—Doctrine and Covenants, p. 93. Also that it should go with the writing of Judah (the Bible), "unto the confounding of false doctrines, and laying down of contentions and establishing peace." (Book of Mormon, p. 52, par. 16.)

I believe that we as a people are guilty of almost criminal negligence because we do not study more carefully the Book of Mormon. (See Doctrine and Covenants p. 226, par. 8.) I heartily commend the Religio in their study of the book but believe that when they finish archæology and turn their minds to the study of the doctrine and precepts more, their work will be more profitable and more acceptable to God. For we might learn the location of every camping-ground and of every battle-field, the name of all the kings and how long each one reigned, all about the Hill Cumorah and yet be under condemnation for not knowing and obeying the doctrines and commands of God contained in the book. In comparing the doctrines and teachings of the Book of Mormon with those of the Bible we find a greater plainness in the former than in the latter. This is just as God said it would be—it should speak in a familiar voice. (See Isaiah 29:4.)

A number of the texts quoted from the Bible, and made to do duty to prove probation after death—I might say universal salvation, for that is what it tends to—are greatly modified if not altogether changed in their meaning when compared with similar texts in the Book of Mormon; and yet in the main sense in which they are used there is no conflict in them, only the Book of Mormon throws more light on the subject. For instance, Jesus says, "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."—John 12: 32. This is one of the strong texts used by universal salvationists to prove that Christ was lifted upon the cross, and crucified to save all men. But the Book of Mormon in speaking upon the same subject puts it in plainer language: "For this cause have I been lifted up; therefore according to the power of the Father I will draw all men unto me that they may be judged according to their works."—Page 419.

This does not conflict with the text quoted from the Bible. That simply states Jesus as saying that he would draw all men unto him; while the Book of Mormon makes it plain why he will draw them unto him—to be judged.

Again. Paul in quoting from the prophet Isaiah says in Philippians 2: 10-14: "That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, . . . and every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." This is also considered a strong proof of the doctrine of probation after death; but it is spoiled of all its power for such use when compared with the similar text in the Book of Mormon: "I rejected my Redeemer; . . . but own that they may foresee and that he will come, and that he remembereth every creature of his creating, he will make himself manifest unto all; yea, every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall confess before him. Yea, even at the last day, when all men shall stand to be judged of him, then shall they confess that he is God; then shall they confess who live without God in the world, that the judgment of an everlasting punishment is just upon them."—Page 175.

Here is a confession that is truly to the glory of God; for it acknowledges that his judgments are just and that he is God. It does not conflict with the Bible. It is in harmony with what David said: "Thy judgments are just and righteous altogether." But the confession is not unto the salvation of the confessor by any means.

We have claimed and do claim that our books all harmonize in their teaching and that the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants are auxiliaries to the Bible; but it is plain to my mind that if we interpret the Bible to make it support that doctrine we make it conflict with the Book of Mormon; for that book can not be so interpreted without doing great violence to it.

Some of our writers who try to maintain the doctrine of universal salvation, or probation after death, exhibit skill in playing upon the words eternal and everlasting as found in Doctrine and Covenants, page 100. But in so doing they not only show bad taste but violate a positive commandment, for the Lord said we were not to preach those things to the world; to preach naught but repentance. I find more than forty texts in the Book of Mormon that teach endless or eternal punishment. Now, what shall we do with them? Shall, or do we believe them? Why so anxious to do away with hell? It suggests that we are a little bit afraid that there is too much truth in it. It is like the boy whistling while going through the graveyard. Not afraid? Oh, no!

I suppose that every Latter Day Saint believes that every son and daughter of Adam must have an opportunity of hearing and accepting or rejecting the gospel, as all are to be judged by it (see Romans 2:16); and if they have no opportunity of so doing in this life, they will in the hereafter, but that is a matter we have nothing to do with. God is the judge as to whether they have had a fair chance here, and it seems a waste of time to speculate in regard to those things. There is one thing sure, that is, if the Book of Mormon teaches any one thing in greater plainness than another it is that those who willfully reject the gospel in this life will have no further opportunity in the life to come.

In the Book of Mormon, page 210, we read of certain ones being chained down to everlasting destruction, and they shall be as though there was no redemption made.

What would be the condition of the world if there had been no redemption made? Compare with what is written in Hebrews 9:22: "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission." As God can not look favorably upon sin, would they not be in a state of eternal banishment from his holy presence? Could language more explicit be chosen to convey the idea of eternal punishment? I believe Alma said just what he meant and meant just what he said.

Nephi tells us that the doctrine that all are to be saved is "false and vain and foolish doctrine," but that many shall teach it. (See page 91.)

In Book of Mormon we read of one Nehor making quite a stir by preaching that doctrine, and that when Nehor was executed for killing Gideon, who was contending with him against the doctrine, while he was hanging between the heavens and the earth; he confessed that what he had taught was contrary to the word of God. (See p. 181.)

Here is another text that is indispensable to universal salvationists and a great favorite with those that preach probation after death: "Thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing."—Matthew 5:26. It is claimed this text tacitly says they shall come out some time, and of course that will be when they have paid all or "atoned for their sin," as it is put by some writers. This at first glance, or taken alone, looks all right; but I think a better understanding may be had of that passage by comparing it with the Book of Mormon where Jesus, speaking on the same subject, uses the same illustration; except that he puts it in plainer language or enlarges on the other. He says, "While ye are in prison can ye pay even one senine? Verily, I say unto you nay."—Page 396.

Now, will some one expert in mathematics tell us how long it will take an unfortunate one to get out of prison if he can not get out until he pays and while he is in he can not pay? Does not the language shut off the possibility of their ever getting out? If not, will some one tell us what words could have been used to convey that thought?

How can we make the following agree with some of our very liberal writers? "To reap eternal happiness or eternal misery according to the spirit which they listed to obey."—Book of Mormon, p. 188. Eternal means for ever when it refers to man's happiness. Oh, yes, but what does it mean when it refers to his unhappiness or misery? Does not the word mean as much in one case as in the other? If not, why not?

Again, "Now repentance could not come unto men, except there were a punishment, as eternal as the life of the soul should be, affixed opposite to the plan of happiness, which was as eternal also as the life of the soul."—Page 278.

Please tell us what is the length of the life of a soul.

I have only given a very few of the many evidences I find in the Book of Mormon that I consider are against probation after death as it is being taught by some of our writers; and if the passages quoted and others do not mean what the words so plainly imply and what we think they mean, will some one be kind enough to explain them and set us right?

Not long ago some one wrote, and it was published in one of our papers, that Judas Iscariot would be saved, and that it was ignorance of the teachings of our books that caused any one to teach otherwise. I have not given the exact words but the substance of what was written. When that brother reads the books sufficiently to learn that it was ignorance of the books that caused him to write as he did, he will be in a fair way to eventually learn what the books do actually teach.

There are some who at the bare mention of hell and future punishment will fly to the sayings of such men as Baxter, Beza, Jonathan Edwards, Doctor Trisse, and John Calvin, for the meaning they give of the words hell and future punishment, and as these men all believed in a literal lake of fire and brimstone in which the ungodly must for ever burn—they will pour out their eloquence in comparing that doctrine with the idea of a just and merciful God. They will do just as Bro. Blair used to say—set up their men of straw and kick them over, then applaud themselves for victory. I can not see the necessity of all this blowing of horns and beating of drums and marshaling of hosts to meet an imaginary foe; for when they have shown their skill in criticism they have accomplished nothing for the cause of Christ.

I had once quite a number of infidel works and read them a great deal and I find many of the same arguments in their writings that are used by some of our elders in trying to sustain the doctrine of probation after death or its doing away with hell, and I am sorry to see it.

After reading all about the lake of fire and brimstone, and Hades and Sheol and the fires of Moloch in the valley of Hinnom it would not be amiss to turn to the Book of Mormon, page 63, and read: "And their torment is as a lake of fire and brimstone, whose flames ascendeth up for ever and ever; and has no end." As a lake of fire, not a literal fire. All great men, and even God, use natural things to illustrate spiritual things. Jesus employed familiar images of heaven and hell to impress on man the supreme bliss and happiness of the righteous and the awful misery and suffering of the ungodly. (See Encyclopedia Britannica, vol. 8, p. 536.)

I find in studying the methods of some of the most successful evangelists of the world such as John Wesley, George Whitfield, Jonathan Edwards, Charles Spurgeon, and Dwight Moody, that their success lay largely in the fact that they held out to sinners punishment after death if they failed to secure salvation in this life.

I should think the torment of the damned is as great as if it were a literal fire, for it is the awakening of "the immortal soul to a lively sense of his own guilt, which doth cause him to shrink from the presence of the Lord, and doth fill his breast with guilt, and pain, and anguish, which is like a lake of fire," etc. (Book of Mormon, p. 129.) This is certainly hell enough.

We may speculate as much as we will about hell, the meaning of the word and its duration, but we can never change the fact that justice demands the punishment of the wicked as much as the rewarding of the righteous. And if the amount of good accomplished by the righteous determines the degree of their reward, it follows that the amount of evil done by the ungodly will determine the amount of the punishment they will receive, and of course, in both cases God will be the judge. No one can preach the gospel without preaching the blessedness that is to accrue to man as a reward for his obedience and the suffering and loss to the disobedient, for as we read in the Book of Mormon, "All things have their opposites." It is just as much the duty of the ministry to teach a future punishment as it is to preach a future reward. Both belong together and both conditions are to be realized in the world to come.

There may be comfort in the thought that "death and hell having served their purpose and God having no further use for them will be cast into the lake of fire," but how about those whose names are not found written in the Book of Life being cast into the same lake? What will be the chances for their redemption? Or will it be with them "as though no redemption had been made"?

That this article may not be too long and thus encroach upon your valuable space I will close by urging that probation after death is limited to those that have not had an opportunity in this life and is so taught in the Book of Mormon; and to carry it further than this is to strike at the Book of Mormon and is a violation of its teachings. To say that a certain class of sinners can not be forgiven, but will have to atone for their sins and when they have paid the uttermost farthing will then be redeemed—by their own suffering—is to belittle the atonement of the Son of God; and I am fully aware that it is a stepping-stone to the doctrine of blood-atonement. The blood of bulls and goats, neither of sinful man, could ever take away sins. If so, why was it necessary for the stainless son of God to suffer death? No! no! It must needs be an infinite atonement. (See Book of Mormon.)

Only desiring God's word to be maintained in truth, and having a deep and anxious regard for the welfare of the souls of men, I undertake this brief answer to the doctrine that I have opposed.

Your brother,

J. C. CLAPP.

"A PLEA FOR CONSISTENCY."

Under the above caption an article appeared in HERALD of March 15, in which this statement is made: "To the degree that a man severs all ties that connect him with temporal labors, and consecrates his services to his Creator, to that degree is he entitled to greater guidance, protection, aid, and counsel from on high."

Such a thought is too foreign to the teachings of the gospel to claim "consistency." Had the writer of the article qualified it, and made it apply only to the "chosen disciples" who are to go "into all the world" with the message of life, it would, I believe, be nearer in harmony with the law, but to take the position that the blessings of God are not to be equally enjoyed by those engaged in the "temporal affairs" is inconsistent.

Doctrine and Covenants 119:8: "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that labor-eth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all." It is possible for an individual who engages in "temporal affairs," at the same time remembering the duty he owes to the church, to accomplish a work just as acceptable to God as that done by the general missionary; and to say that he can not receive to so great a degree the blessing of "guidance, protection, aid, and counsel" is not consistent with the teachings of God. We are taught that we should be coworkers together, every man in his own calling and office, and we are given the assurance that as we perform the duties pertaining to our line of work so shall we be blessed. No one can say to the other, "We have no need of thee."

Should the thought advanced by the brother be a correct one, how discouraging it would be to all the local ministry, and officers of branches. If they must feel that so long as they engage in manual labor they can not share equally the blessings of "guidance, protection, aid, and counsel," then for what purpose have they been called and set apart?

In Book of Mormon, page 207, we read of the priests leaving their labor to impart the word of God unto the people and when they had done so they returned again to their work. God recognized their efforts and blessed them to a marked degree, neither was it necessary for them to "sever all ties that connect them with temporal labors," in order to secure God's blessings.

It is consistent to believe that whoever and wherever the individual may be, whatever his work is, if in righteousness he complies with what God has for him to do, the blessings of heaven will not be withheld because he is engaged in "temporal labors."

The apostle Paul engaged in manual labor in order that he might not be a burden unto those among whom he was laboring, neither were the blessings of "direction, protection, aid, and counsel" withheld from him.

Let us be consistent in all things.

"When you see a fellow mortal
Without fixed and fearless views;
Hanging on the skirts of others;
Walking in their cast-off shoes,
Why, walk yourself with firmer bearing;
Throw your moral shoulders back;
Show your spine has nerve and marrow,
Just the things which his must lack."

Too Late.

The old farmer died suddenly; so when Judge Gilroy, his only son, received the telegram, he could do nothing but go to the farm for the funeral. It was difficult to do even that, for the judge was the leading lawyer in X—and every hour was worth many dollars to him.

As he sat with bent head in the grimy little train which lumbered through the farms, he could not keep the details of his cases out of his mind.

He had never given his father a heartache and the old man died full of years and virtues, "a shock of corn fully ripe." The phrase pleased him.

"I wish to tell you," said the doctor, gravely, "that your father's thoughts were all of you. He was ill but an hour, but his cry was for 'John! John!' unceasingly."

"If I could have been with him!" said the judge.

"He was greatly disappointed that you missed your half-yearly visit last spring. Your visits were the events of his life," said the doctor.

"Last spring? Oh, yes; I took my family then to California.

"I urged him to run down and see you on your return, but he would not go."

"No, he never felt at home in the city."

The judge remembered that he had not asked his father to come down. Ted was ashamed of his grandfather's wide collars and Jessie, who was a fine musician, scowled when she was asked to sing the "Portuguese hymn" every night. The judge humored his children and had ceased to ask his father into his house.

The farmhouse was in order and scrupulously clean, but its bareness gave a chill to the judge, whose own home was luxurious. The deaf old woman who had been his father's servant sat grim and tearless by the side of the coffin.

"Martha was faithful," whispered the doctor, "but she's deaf. His life was very solitary. The neighbors are young. He belonged to another generation."

He reverently uncovered the coffin and then with Martha went out and closed the door. The judge was alone with his dead.

Strangely enough, his thought was still of the cold bareness of the room. Those hacked wooden chairs were there when he was a boy. It would have been so easy for him to have made the house comfortable—to have hung some pictures on the wall! How his father had delighted in his engravings and pored over them!

Looking now into the kind old face, with the white hair lying motionless on it, he found something in it which he had never taken time to notice—a sagacity, a nature fine and sensitive. He was the friend, the comrade, whom he had needed so often! He had left him with deaf old Martha for his sole companion!

There hung upon the wall the photograph of a young man with an eager, strong face, looking proudly at a chubby boy on his knee. The judge saw the strength in the face.

"My father should have played a high part in life," he thought. "There is more promise in his face than in mine."

In the desk was a bundle of old account-books with the records of years of hard drudgery on the farm; of work in winter and summer and often late at night, to pay John's school-bills and to send him to Harvard. One patch of ground after another was sold while he waited for practice, to give him clothes and luxuries which other young men in town had, until but a meager portion of the farm was left.

John Gilroy suddenly closed the book. "And this is the end!" he said. "The boy for whom he lived and worked won fortune and position—and how did he repay him?"

The man knelt on the bare floor and shed bitter tears on the quiet old face. "O father! father!" he cried. But there was no smile on the quiet face. He was too late.—Youth's Companion.

How the Father Cares.

"I grew up in a family where there were several children and never a superabundance of money," said a gentleman, speaking of his boyhood. "I knew my father loved me, of course, but those last two words might pretty nearly have expressed my view of the tie between us if I had considered it at all. He was kind, but he was naturally rather reserved and he was a very busy man.

"When I was a lad of eighteen, I went away from home and among strangers for the first time. I had obtained a situation in a town some two hundred miles distant, and I was greatly surprised one day to see my father come walking into my boarding-place. He had managed to leave his business for two or three days and had come to spend his brief holiday with me. The surprise of it grew upon me. I knew how he must have planned for it, have counted the money the journey would cost, and have given up other things for the sake of being with me, and suddenly I understood as never before my place in my father's heart. He visited the shop where I was employed, shared my plain little lodging-room and, when I was free, we had one long happy day together wandering about the little old town. I went with him to his train and walked back through the streets alone, saying to myself—'I didn't know father cared for me like that!'

"He never knew what a revelation that visit was, nor how from that day to the latest of my life it has put new meaning into the words, 'Our Father in heaven.'"—Selected.

In the Morning.

A dangerous time is the morning!
There is nothing to fear at night;
Calm are the eyes in closing,
Tired of the urgent light;
The body is healed in sleeping,
Trouble and labor cease,
The soul is in God's safe keeping,
The heart is in perfect peace.

But who can say in the morning
How fierce will the trials be?
What difficult paths may be trodden,
What griefs may encompass me?
The great, wide world is sunlit,
But I see not an hour before
What new, strange sorrows or dangers
The future may have in store.

Oh, speak to me in the morning,
Lord of my every day!
Thou art my great director
As I pass to the hidden way;
If I hear thy voice in the morning,
I open the day with song,
Forth shall I go to conquer;
Thy presence shall make me strong.

I think of another morning,
After long, long sleep—
But why should I fear the awaking
Since thou wilt my spirit keep?
Oh, speak to me in that morning,
Jesus, in thy sweet grace,
And I shall have found my heaven
In the light of my Savior's face.

May there be no cloud on that morning;
The clouds are for mornings here;
In the brightness of that great glory
All darkness will disappear.
O sunrise that has no setting,
O day of supreme delight—
God, give me the joy of that morning,
After a restful night.

Helps for Every-day Living.

Failure will hurt but not hinder us. Disillusion will pain but not dishearten us. Sorrows will shake us but not break us. Hope will set the music ringing and quicken our lagging pace. We need hope for living far more than for dying. Dying is easy work compared with living. Dying is a moment's transition; living, a transaction of years. It is the length of the rope that puts the sag in it. Hope tightens the cords and tunes up the heart-strings. Work well, then; suffer patiently, rejoicing in hope. God knows all and yet is the God of Hope. And when we have hoped to the end here, he will give us something to look forward to, for all eternity. For "hope abideth."

BRECKENRIDGE, Missouri, March 9, 1905.

Dear Herald: I desire the prayers of the Prayer Union in my behalf, that if it be God's will I may be restored to health and strength. I have a family of three children, and I greatly desire to live to raise them. I have been very sick, and it has left me feeling very poorly. The doctor told me he feared consumption. I earnestly ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

Your sister in the gospel,

ALMIRA SESSIONS.

Letter Department.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, March 15, 1905.

Editors Herald: Our district conference, held in this city on the 11th and 12th of this month, was quite well attended and a cordial feeling prevailed throughout. The business was transacted with excellent feeling, and the social and preaching-services were edifying and instructive, enjoyed by all present. Some of the local Saints were debarred of the privilege of attending on account of sickness. The city has been pretty well inoculated with contagious diseases this winter; measles, small-pox, chicken-pox, diphtheria, etc. Friday, the 10th, was taken up with Sunday-school and Religio work, closing with an interesting program in the evening. Altogether the meetings were very successful and encouraging.

On the 5th and 6th inst. the Idaho district conference was held at Blackfoot. The conference was quite animated, the Saints manifesting faith, contentment, and happiness in the faith. The meeting was successful every way. There are some enterprising, substantial workers in that field, notwithstanding the opposition and discouragements to be met.

The dominant church here is having its troubles, as you will see by papers sent, by influential persons, rising up in her communion and attacking the procedure and doings of the church, together with the conflict of long standing between Gentile and Mormon, and the end not yet. The general agitation and criticisms no doubt will make for good.

I should have mentioned before the marriage of J. E. Vanderwood, of Malad City, Idaho, and Sr. Bertha Radmall, of Pleasant Grove, Utah. Bro. Vanderwood is a promising young worker in the ministry, and Sr. Bertha a well-favored young worker in the Sunday-school of the Saints.

Things are putting on the appearance of spring here.

WM. H. KELLEY.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, March 14, 1905.

Editors Herald: This finds us at this place at the home of Bro. and Sr. Wilson, who are treating us very courteously.

We have just closed our district conference and feel that the Master was present with his Holy Spirit. All seemed to enjoy themselves, and the business seemed to move in an orderly manner, and a feeling of unity seemed to prevail throughout.

In company of Elder H. N. Hansen we spent a very pleasant month in Southern Utah, preaching at Nephi, Oasis, Deseret, Melford, Minersville, Adamsville, Greenville, and Beaver; and am pleased to say that we had houses to preach in, in all those towns, and that was not all. We also had fair-sized audiences to greet us. At Beaver we were to furnish the light ourselves, but in all the other places above named all was furnished by the people living in the respective places. At Deseret the choir rendered us service in singing for us, which of course was greatly appreciated.

Returning from our trip to the southern counties I reached Pleasant Grove on the 1st inst. and found all well, where on the 8th inst., at the home of my wife's parents, Bro. and Sr. H. J. Radmall, I had the pleasure of saying the words that made their oldest son, Bro. John H. Radmall and Miss Jennie Deveraux one; and we blend our voices with their many friends in wishing them a long and happy, as well as peaceful life.

Well, it will be kind of lonesome here all alone in the district until the new missionary force for the ensuing year arrives.

Our prayer to God is that he will assist us with his Holy Spirit and make us equal to every task, that we might defend his cause manfully. Hoping for the best, and ever looking forward for the redemption of Zion,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

BROCKTON, Massachusetts, March 21, 1905.

Editors Herald: This city has within the past twenty-four hours experienced the most appalling disaster its history has ever recorded. While sitting in the home of Sr. Ada Chase, 88 West Elm Street, yesterday at eight o'clock in the morning, answering some of my correspondents, the fire-whistle gave a shrill, prolonged sound and then the number of the fire-box, 7. This was followed in a few minutes by the second alarm. This with the clatter of horses' hoofs and the heavy rumble of fire-engines told us plainly that a serious fire had started.

Soon the third alarm sounded, which is the general alarm and signifies the seriousness of the calamity. I then put on my coat and rubbers, etc., and hastened to the scene, which was almost a mile away. There I saw a seething furnace of flame, heat, and smoke. One of Brockton's finest shoe factories was in flames, the shop where the famous Emmerson shoe was manufactured. The whole building had collapsed and everything was aflame. But this was as nothing to the scene around the burning ruins; for it was the belief that at least two hundred souls had perished in the flames. Mothers, fathers, husbands, wives, sisters, brothers, relatives, were frantically rushing hither and thither in agony of mind, wringing their hands, calling alternately on God and their fellow man to rescue their loved ones from cremation. Nothing could be done to help or save those in the ruins. After the first few minutes of heart-rending cries nothing but the roar of flame, the crackling of consuming board, and the roar of fire-engines was heard; the terrible crash of the collapsed building and its heavy machinery, with the awful heat and smoke, had brought the silence of the tomb to its human prey. Doctors, many, were on hand to assist in making as comfortable as possible the injured ones, of whom there were many.

The cause of the terrible disaster was the blowing up of the large boiler. The real cause will never be known as no trace of the engineer has been found. He must have been blown to atoms.

The boiler crashed through two floors and the roof, and then took a sail of more than two hundred feet through the air in a slanting direction, crashing entirely through one house, demolishing it, one of the household dying. Then it crashed into another house, moving it off its base and doing considerable damage.

Many residences were destroyed but the loss of life is what has cast a gloom over the city. Up to time of writing sixty-eight bodies have been recovered. In most instances a few charred bones only were recovered. It is estimated that fifty more bodies lie under the debris, and it may be some days before they are found. None of the Saints were among the dead or injured. An uncle of Sr. Eva Young, of Providence, was among the dead.

So war, fire, and other agencies of destruction are filling up our day of judgment and the end is not yet. With all these lessons the worldly are hardening their hearts against God and his work and shutting up the avenues of safety provided by our Father for those who obey his law. Zion is the Saint's city of refuge. Who will go up and possess the land? "The pure in heart, for this is Zion."

RICHARD BULLARD.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri.

Editors Herald: In your issue of February 8 I see an article from Bro. Henry Sparling on equality, consecration, etc. In that article it is asked: "By what law does an elder, after coming to Zion, and supposed to have consecrated all his surplus, still have another surplus left which he may invest in bank-stock, mercantile business, or build houses for rent, and receive interest, or a profit therefrom, in addition to the allowance his family receives from the church?"

Part of this I am prepared to answer. This is done by the same law that a man starts in business anywhere else without capital in cash. He may have capital in the form of credit! Consecrating, or turning over a man's surplus, is not supposed to destroy his standing among men, or destroy his credit. He is supposed to be as honest after he consecrates as he was before. Neither is it supposed to take away his business capacity that he had before. If this be true, what is there to prevent any man from borrowing money (if his credit is good) and investing it in "bank-stock, mercantile business, or building houses to rent"? I confess I can see nothing to hinder him. I hope the idea does not prevail in the church, that a man, after he turns over his surplus, must not try to make more money, and create another surplus if he can? It is every man's duty to make all he can in righteousness, pay his tithing on all his interest, after turning over his surplus; and if he makes more than he needs for himself and dependents, consecrate all he can spare for the Lord's work. This applies to all alike.

It may not always be wise for a man to go in debt, and invest in those enterprises. Each man must judge for himself in those things. If some get their allowance from the church for their family, then make some money in some other way, without taking their time from their ministerial work, could they not consecrate any excess they might have, or give an inheritance to a child that was in a condition to need it (see section 82 Doctrine and Covenants) and still be in harmony with the law of consecration? I think every man that can should do something to help himself; and help the church all he can, too. As to living in houses of different size, this is a matter of choice, each one having his own ideas on those things.

Extravagance and waste of means should be avoided by all Saints. Comfort and convenience should be sought, and had by all if possible. Education along those lines may be necessary. The family that has "only two rooms" should want, and try to have, more. The one with "ten rooms" may have more than is needed. I could not judge in the matter, until I would have the case before me in proper shape. Hoping to be finally found in harmony with the perfect law, I am trying to understand it.

G. H. HILLARD.

NEW PARK, Pennsylvania, February 6, 1905.

Dear Herald: With gladness I relate my visit to the brethren in Philadelphia to attend district conference. I found them in good spirits; the Lord is with them in all their works. I had a great desire to meet with the Saints in Philadelphia and to attend the district conference, but fate seemed to be against me. My leg was very badly afflicted, and my daughter was very low as the time approached. Also a very heavy snow-storm came at that time, blocking the roads with snow; we having fifteen miles to go by team before reaching the station. I called upon the Lord and also asked the Saints of Philadelphia to pray with us and fast for our affliction and also Baldwin Branch to which I belong, although I am isolated from the branch. The Lord heard our supplications, healing my leg and raising my daughter from her bed of affliction, and opened the way and made me a very pleasant trip. The Saints of Philadelphia received me with gladness and I felt at home among my nearest and dearest friends. I met with the Saints at Baldwin and also other branches. For years I have been studying and praying for understanding concerning the law of tithing, and the Lord blessed me with the privilege of meeting E. L. Kelley, the Bishop, and on the stand he opened that subject, in which not only I but the whole branch was edified. After the sermon he gave permission to ask any questions on the subject of tithing, and questions were asked and answered satisfactorily. Ever praying for the advancement of the Lord's work,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

M. O. MATTHEWS.

WALLSEND, New South Wales, Australia,
January 17, 1904.

Editors Herald: The annual conference of the New South Wales District convened in Wallsend, December 31, 1904, and after being in session three days, adjourned to meet in Balmain, December 30, 1905. A commendable interest was taken in all the business transacted. Questions before the assembly were discussed freely, fully, and dispassionately; and though all the speakers were devoted to their principles, respect was shown to the opinions of those holding different views. It is a pleasure to be in an assembly where order prevails; time is not wasted, bitter feelings are not created, and the legislation is likely to be better. There was a large attendance and it consisted, in part, of many Saints and delegates from various parts of the district.

While assembled we experienced some of the warmest winds we have had this summer, the warmest or hottest I ever felt. They were like blasts from a furnace. But soon a breeze from the ocean swept over the land. When Australia masks the heat waves she will have a fine climate. The state of the weather did not prevent the Saints from having a good time. The services were well attended and the countenances of all were bright.

Australians, wisely or unwisely, showed their respect for American missionaries when they tabled a motion which favored the "lessening if not cessation of importation" of missionaries. The motion providing for the lessening of imported help was moved by members who were desirous that the local talent here should be developed and utilized. A resolution was passed in which Bro. G. R. Wells was "respectfully requested to reconsider" his intended soon departure for America.

Elders John Jones of Dudley, G. R. Wells, and Alma C. Barmore attended to the preaching, and their sermons were inspiring and edifying. In the prayer-meetings the time was well occupied, many testimonies being given and very little or no preaching indulged in. Nearly all who spoke acquitted themselves acceptably, having spoken calmly, not excitedly, and to edification. This is as it should be. No one has a right to allow his conduct to be such as to cause others to feel their time was wasted to some extent in attending the meeting.

Elders Barmore and Charles Avery tarried for a short time after conference here in the Newcastle District; and during their sojourn, the former preached in Hamilton, the latter in Wallsend.

Wallsend is in a coal-mining district and just now the coal trade is about at a standstill. At the beginning of the new year the mine owners made a reduction in the wages of the miners and wheelers. The latter will not for the reduced wage return to work. Owing to many of them not belonging to a union, the arbitration court seems powerless to settle the matter. Boats are leaving the Newcastle port and going elsewhere for their coal cargo; and many foreign boats which would have come here have been directed to other ports. When it is considered that the prosperity of this district depends on the mines being in active operation it will be seen that the dispute is causing a serious, very serious depression in all the lines of trade.

Three years will soon have elapsed since I was appointed to labor in Australasia. Varied have been my experiences and many my blessings. Disadvantages are met with here in carrying on mission work as in all other lands, but the work we are engaged in is to all appearances slowly gaining ground. We have a few "Saints" sleeping, and it is a question with me if Gabriel's horn would awaken them. On the other hand we have a band of many noble Saints who live consistent with their profession and are diligent in performing what God has allotted to them as duties. The latter class are truly Zion's children.

I trust that in the coming General Conference all questions will be considered with an "eye single to the glory of God."

PAUL M. HANSON.

FULTON, Kentucky, March 9, 1905.

Editors Herald: One month ago Bro. G. H. Hilliard and the writer started on a tour of the Kentucky and Tennessee District, although the ground was covered with snow and ice, and the thermometer registering occasionally six to ten degrees below zero. We visited Foundry Hill Branch first, arriving there Friday the 10th, held forth with good interest and very good attendance notwithstanding the severe cold, until Wednesday, thence we went to Eagle Creek Branch, and Saturday to Oakland in Sedalia Branch. The weather was moderating some, so we preached each day and at night until Friday. Elders W. R. Smith and S. H. Field were with us at Oakland. Saturday, the 25th, district conference convened at New Bethel, which is twelve miles from Oakland, but in the same branch.

Bro. Hilliard and I came over Friday eve and put up at Sr. Lizzie Cook's. The roads were very muddy. A quiet spirit prevailed throughout the conference, the bright, warm sunshine reminding us that spring was coming. The sacrament-meeting Sunday morning and the prayer- and testimony-meeting that followed were enjoyable, as well as the preaching-services.

After conference we had another branch to visit, viz., High Hill Branch. We began meetings there the following Thursday night and continued over Sunday. I feel that much good was accomplished. Bro. Hilliard is a rousing preacher and has stirred the Saints up (to my mind) as they never were before. Bro. Hilliard is very plain in his manner of teaching. We have long needed just such preaching as he gave us here. I am thankful that the Lord directed him to visit the Kentucky and Tennessee District. His teaching with regard to the temporal law was very instructive, especially consecration and the gathering. I am sure a better understanding will be had along these lines as they have not been very well understood before.

I am hopeful of the work, and desire to see the Saints move out and pay heed to the instructions given. Jesus said, "He that receiveth whomsoever I send receiveth me."—John 13:20.

Dear Saints, let us awaken to our duties. Truly the hastening time is here. Then let us hasten and get in line. I hope to see the name of every true Latter Day Saint enrolled this year on the tithing list, in the interests of the great work which is "intrusted to all." Send your contributions to me at Fulton, Kentucky, and I will receipt for same at once. May the Lord bless each and every one is my prayer.

Your brother in Christ,
J. R. McCLAIN.

MANCHESTER, England, March 1, 1905.

Dear Herald: Seeing there are quite a few in America who were acquainted with our little school at East Manchester, I should like through the medium of your columns to let them know how we are progressing. We have sixty-one scholars and a full staff of officers. The husband of the writer is still the superintendent; he was elected when the school was organized in 1899, and has been sustained ever since. The teacher of the Bible class is Bro. W. R. Armstrong, who is a very able man; the lessons he gives are instructive and bright; he allows no one to get drowsy. Our middle class, composed of little girls and boys from nine to thirteen years of age, is taught by Sr. Lottie Davies; she is a very devoted teacher, and visits her scholars every week, which is a very good thing in our work. Our primary class is taught by Sr. Sarah Davies, who also visits her little ones' homes, and by so doing wins the confidence of their parents, and at times they come to our evening service through her visiting them.

I am also glad to report that we are in a fair condition financially, having nearly two pounds in the treasury.

Trusting that God will still continue to bless us, in this little corner of his vineyard,

Your sister in the one faith,

ADA GREEN.

Extracts from Letters.

Rilla Moore, Necedah, Wisconsin: "We have seen the manifestation of the Lord's power and goodness among us. Two of us who were given up to die by the doctor still live and are gaining in health. And in January, when Bro. Closson was with us, a dear little babe was dying, when by administration it was instantly healed, and we were made to rejoice."

Peter Jessen, Ribe, Denmark: "When Bro. Peter Anderson left here he said, 'The best that you can do is to scatter reading-matter, and not to concern yourself about preaching and baptizing, but get people well instructed in our faith and religion, then you can preach afterwards.' I have distributed much literature, and have talked our doctrine in many houses. I have the life of Joseph Smith translated into Danish. This I have read in many places where I thought it was suitable, and in many places it has awakened great interest, and caused them to marvel. I have been sick with fever and ague which lasted over four months, and I shake a little yet, but am getting better day by day. Otherwise I never felt better in my life. I am often scolded. Lately a man said that he would see that I was banished from the country; but he can not do that."

C. C. Joehnk, Hamburg, Germany: "The German people in general are a pleasure-seeking people, and it is nothing but theaters, concerts, dancing, and many other worldly pleasures. But I hope the Lord will open the way in due time that we may be able to reach them. Halls or places of meeting are difficult to obtain. Preaching on the street is not permitted. The only way is to go from house to house. I realize that it will be slow work, and will require patience. There are a few who are reading our tracts, and are interested in the gospel. I would like to see the Book of Mormon published in the German language. I am sure many copies could be sold, not only in Germany, but in the United States among the German Saints, and German-speaking people. At the last General Religio Convention a resolution was introduced that the Religio publish the Book of Mormon in the German language, but it was laid on the table. Now if that could be taken up and carried, it would be a great help to the church, I think, and it would help the missionary to a great extent here in preaching the gospel and spreading the truth. I am well and hopeful of accomplishing good."

Adolphus Edwards, Steubenville, Ohio: "We are still trying to prepare ourselves for a place in the kingdom glorified, and desire that whatever process the preparation calls for we may be able to endure with patience to the end. We have our Sunday-school, though we are but few. We also have our regular prayer-meetings, and preaching every Sunday evening. While we only have our own homes to hold our meetings in, we often have some not of the faith come in to hear our preaching, and we feel that it will not be long before we will gather some into the fold."

Flora Reesman, Kirksville, Missouri: "I think no one loses financially by taking the church papers; but I do think they gain spiritually. I thank the Lord for his tender mercies toward me; and know I have been blessed in many ways since taking the papers, and resolving to heed his teachings and instructions to come up higher. I often wonder why the elders do not try to open a new field in Kirksville. I give my papers to any who will read them. Pray for me that I may ever be faithful."

Fred Johnson, Independence, Missouri: "Will continue as a subscriber if those controversies do not appear too often. I consider it inconsistent for us to claim to be led by the Spirit which guides into the unity of the faith, and at the same time have elders dispute with one another through the church papers. Why do they not meet and discuss these differences, and keep it out of the papers till they can teach alike, and become 'joined together in one mind and one judgment'?"

G. L. Rathbun, Tulsa, Indian Territory: "In your issue for March 8, in an editorial I see mentioned some brethren who are very much grieved at some things they find in the HERALD. It reminds me of the story of the Deacon and the Parson. The Parson did not preach to suit the Deacon, so the latter proceeded to the parsonage and told the Parson that while he preached some things he liked, he also preached many things he did not like. The Parson after hearing the grievance of the Deacon, said, 'Brother, I have an old cow that can teach you philosophy.' He then took the Deacon to the stall where the cow was tied, and after feeding her some hay they watched her eat it. When she had finished, the Deacon said, 'I see no philosophy in that.' The Parson answered: 'Did you not see how she picked out all the hay and left the weeds?' Paul said, 'Prove all things, hold fast that which is good.'"

J. M. P. DeLancy, Quincy, Illinois: "I write to thank you and the brother for the article, in a late HERALD, page 245, 'A plea for consistency.' I think it a nail in a sure place and pray the Father that it may do us much good."

Mrs. C. D. Cook, Edgeley, North Dakota: "Any elder coming our way would be welcome at our home."

Alice Savage, Mt. Vernon, Washington: "I am one of the isolated ones, but my faith grows stronger in the work. I do not feel like turning back to the husks which do not satisfy the hungry soul. Pray for me. If the dear sisters who wrote to my daughter, Essie Smith, will kindly write again they will do us a great favor. After the request was made for fasting and prayer in behalf of my daughter who was afflicted with typhoid, these sisters wrote to her, but in some way the letters were lost, for which we feel sorry. Address Mrs. Essie Smith, Mt. Vernon, Washington."

P. B. Bussel, Bowden, Texas: "The Lord is in this work, and he will accomplish his purpose regardless of what we as individuals may or may not do. When I was ordained an elder I expected to be in the field devoting my entire time to the interests of this work, trying to carry the angel's message to benighted man. But, alas, things have not been as I expected. I am sorry that I can not write more favorably of the work in this part. At the time I came into the work there seemed to be quite an interest all over the Red River country, which continued for a time; but for the last two years, for some cause, I know not what, the interest seems almost dead. There has been considerable preaching in these parts, and good preaching too; but only once in a while would one step into the ranks."

John R. Allen, Cincinnati, Iowa: "The church publications are among our best preachers, for we sometimes feel lonely so far from branch association. I have tried to help the cause in a financial way, but am now shut off from that avenue by the closing down of the mines for the summer. I was employed as hoisting engineer, but am laid off with the rest. I would like to get work where there is a branch of the church, or some family of Saints near, as engineer or mine foreman, as I have a State license for both of these occupations."

C. E. Guinand, Atchison, Kansas: "Will you say for the benefit of the Saints who wish to gather into the regions near Independence, Missouri, that we are located sixty miles from Independence in a town of twenty thousand inhabitants. We have a coal-mine recently opened which works between two and three hundred men. New mines will be opened soon. Property now is quite reasonable, but is advancing in price. If any of the brethren who are miners wish me to I will make application for them for a place in the mines. We have our own church, and will welcome worthy brethren."

I Know Quit-to-Bac Will Cure. It is a God-Given Remedy
 "I says Bro. I. M. Dungan of Woodbine, Iowa. Writing July 3, 1904, says: "After having used tobacco for 30 years I feel that I am thoroughly cured of the habit by the use of your 'Quit-to-bac.' I commenced using 'Quit-to-bac' March 8, 1904, and used two and one half boxes, and have had no desire for the past two months, my health is better every way and I feel like a new man. I feel that I can not speak too highly of the merits of 'Quit-to-bac,' for I believe 'Quit-to-bac' to be a God-given remedy, that it will cure one of the most filthy and useless habits Satan ever invented; therefore I unqualifiedly recommend it to all addicted to the use of tobacco in any form, and will cheerfully answer inquiries from any one as to my case—how I treated myself, etc., if a stamp is inclosed. You are at liberty to use this recommendation as seems best to you. . . . I close with a heartfelt 'God bless you.'" Three boxes Quit-to-bac postpaid only $1.50 guaranteed to cure or money refunded for the asking. Address, (Bro.) B. F. ORDWAY, Peoria, Illinois.

Religio Convention

The delegates and officers of the tenth annual convention of Zion's Religio-Literary Society met in the lower auditorium of the Brick Church in Lamoni, at half past eight in the morning of April 3, 1905, for prayer-service, Brn. J. A. Gunsolley and Ammon White in charge.

At ten o'clock the business-session was called to order by President J. A. Gunsolley. After the usual opening exercises, the committee on credentials, (D. A. Anderson, Louis Joerndt, and W. W. Smith,) submitted report, which was read by the secretary, Etta M. Hitchcock.

Districts and locals reporting show a present membership as follows: Northern California 178, Southern California 90, London, Canada, 753, Chatham 216, Central Illinois 78, Nauvoo 117, Southwestern Illinois 79, Southeastern Illinois 162, Des Moines, Iowa, 114, Gallands Grove 125, Little Sioux 298, Lamoni Stake 521, Massachusetts 275, Eastern District 134, Southeastern Michigan and Northern Indiana 30, Clinton, Missouri, 163, Far West 488, Independence Stake 585, St. Louis 139, Spring River 117, South Sea Islands 530, Northern Michigan 8 delegates, Utah 91, Northern Wisconsin 31, Sault Ste. Marie, Canada, 22, Hawaii 31, Stonington, Maine, 19, Clitherall, Minnesota, 23, Bevier, Missouri, 53, Cleveland, Ohio, 24, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, 56, Birmingham, England, 42, Massachusetts 1 delegate, Omaha 55, Eastern Colorado 150.

Organization was completed by choosing Sr. May White-chorister, authorizing her to choose assistant and organist. The local janitor was asked to serve the convention. The chair was authorized to appoint ushers and a press committee. The courtesy of the floor was extended to all present.

At the suggestion of the chair, a committee was appointed to notify the First Presidency and the Twelve that the Religio, in convention, was ready to receive such suggestions or communication as they might desire to submit to the convention. Ammon White and S. A. Burgess were so appointed.

The reports of President J. A. Gunsolley, Vice-president Ammon White, and Secretary Etta M. Hitchcock, bespoke a healthy and sure growth of the society for the past year, and indicated that the general feeling throughout the church concerning the work of the Religio was good; that the work was well planted, and that the omens for future development were such as to cause a feeling of rejoicing. The president's report was prolific with good suggestions. The secretary's report showed one new district and seventeen new locals organized, and a gain in membership of 398.

W. J. Mather, treasurer, reported: Total receipts, $536.50; total expenditures, $419.37; balance, $117.19, with a working balance of somewhat over $300. The Religio Quarterly did not make quite so good a showing this year as last. Starting with a balance on hand of over $100, the total receipts have been $999.27, and the total expenditures $1,018.79, leaving a deficit of $19.52.

S. A. Burgess, general librarian, reported distribution of literature throughout the various districts as follows: HERALDS 6,479, Ensigns 3,539, Hopes 3,526, Quarterlies 309, other pieces 931, total 38,147, with 224 books, and 44 subscriptions taken. His general assistants during the year were Sr. Floralice Miller and John C. Grainger in America, and Alma C. Barmore in Australia.

Sr. Louise Palfrey reported as editor of Arena, expressing her appreciation of the work of her successor, Bro. Elbert A. Smith, who also reported.

Superintendent of the home department, Catharine Haines, reports a gain in membership of 56.

President Gunsolley announced as auditing committee, Mark Seigfreid, E. A. Davis, and Myron Thomas; and as press committee, Etta M. Hitchcock and D. A. Anderson. Meeting adjourned until half past two in the afternoon.

At half past two convention reassembled in business capacity. After reading of minutes, and additional report from credentials committee, a communication from a missionary was read suggesting the propriety of having missionaries for Religio work, both male and female, and having the same set apart by ordination by authority of General Conference.

A communication from C. C. Joehnk, now in Germany, was read suggesting that the Religio take steps to have published a German edition of the Book of Mormon.

A communication was read from Sr. Emma Burton, superintendent of the Religio of the South Sea Islands, stating that the introduction of the Religio work there was premature, and, for cogent reasons, had been suspended.

A communication was read signed by four hundred and thirty-five citizens of Nauvoo and vicinity asking that the Religio and Sunday-school hold convention in Nauvoo. This petition was submitted by the mayor of Nauvoo, and is as follows:

The following named citizens and residents of the city of Nauvoo, Illinois, and vicinity, do hereby petition the delegates and members of Zion's Religio-Literary Society in General Convention at Lamoni, Iowa, and also the delegates and members of the General Sunday-school Association of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints assembled at the above named place to convene your general gatherings in the city of Nauvoo in the autumn of 1905 or 1906. The city council of our city has freely granted you the use of our city park and made such arrangements as deemed necessary to your comfort and pleasure. We extend to you a hearty welcome.

The special order of the session, the election of officers for ensuing year, was taken up. The following were elected: President, J. A. Gunsolley; vice-president, Walter W. Smith; secretary, Etta M. Hitchcock; treasurer, Will J. Mather; librarian, S. A. Burgess.

The proposed constitutional amendments were then considered. The proposed amendment from the Northeastern Illinois District as published in Autumn Leaves for March, 1905, was read. The first part, changing the word matter to manner was adopted. Motion to adopt the balance was lost.

The proposed amendment from St. Louis local as published in February Autumn Leaves which contemplated a change from annual to semi-annual election of officers in locals, was voted down.

Adjourned to meet at half past seven in the evening.

At the evening session Vice-president Ammon White presided. Minutes of afternoon session were read. Credential committee presented additional report. Auditing committee reported all financial statements correct except an error of six cents in balance on hand of general treasurer's report. Correct balance is $117.13.

The question of merging Sunday-school and Religio was the special order for the session. Report of merger committee, as published in Autumn Leaves for December, 1904, was read and adopted without discussion.

The matter of the publication of the Book of Mormon in the German language was taken up, and, after some discussion, disposed of by resolving to establish a translation fund having for its object the accumulation of means to be placed in the hands of the Bishop to aid in translating and publishing the Book of Mormon in foreign languages as soon as the Presidency and Bishopric shall deem wise.

A resolution to the effect that it is the opinion of the body that instructing the president and secretary to cast the entire vote of the assembly for a candidate is lawful and in harmony with the constitution was adopted. A resolution was adopted reaffirming the action taken two years ago at Independence requesting the president of the Religio, if his circumstances would permit, to put in two months each year traveling in the interests of the Religio, etc.

The communication suggesting the propriety of setting apart laborers in the Religio, whether male or female, by the laying on hands by the authority of the General Conference, was called up and referred to a committee consisting of J. W. Wight, John Davis, and F. M. Sheehy, they to report at the next session.

A request from the Gallands Grove District for the publication of a Primary Religio Quarterly was read, also the invitation from the mayor of Nauvoo, and adjournment had until nine o'clock, April 4.

APRIL 4.

Convention reassembled at nine o'clock, Bro. Gunsolley in chair. Minutes read and additional credential committee reports received. Question of Book of Mormon in foreign languages again taken up and it was ordered that the executive committee be authorized to act in harmony with the suggestion that means be appropriated for the purchasing of a number of copies of Book of Mormon in the Scandinavian languages for use in those countries by missionaries; and, if considered favorable, that not to exceed the amount of fifty dollars be donated to this line of work.

The committee to whom was referred the request that action be taken in regard to setting apart male and female missionaries to labor in Religio work, reported that they were of the opinion that the communication should be referred to the First Presidency for definite and final action, which was subsequently amended to read General Conference instead of First Presidency. Report adopted as amended.

A communication was read from Sr. J. W. Peterson touching the character of the Religio work done in the islands.

A communication from the First Presidency, expressing appreciation of the work which the Religio has accomplished, their good will toward the society, and their wishes for the future welfare of the Religio work, was received.

The request from Gallands Grove for a Primary Religio Quarterly was brought up, and the matter referred to the executive committee, they being authorized to act as they deem best.

Concerning the petition from the mayor of the city of Nauvoo, it was moved that the president and secretary of this association be appointed a committee to extend to the people of Nauvoo through their mayor our appreciation of the kind and courteous invitation extended to us to go there and hold this convention, after which a motion prevailed to the effect that this convention favors holding a convention in Nauvoo in September, 1906; and it was also ordered that this matter be presented to the Sunday-school convention, with a request that they take similar action.

The matter of a revision of leaflet No. 3, and the report blanks, was referred to the executive board, and they authorized to act.

The minutes of the morning session were read, and the convention adjourned until next year.

Sunday-School Convention.

The Sunday-school Association convened at half past two in the afternoon with general superintendent, T. A. Hougas, presiding. James Pycock and Carolyn Jarvis of the credential committee reported. The schools sending in reports, with the votes to which they are entitled, are as follows:

Alabama 7, Central California 12, Northern California 23, Southern California 22, Honolulu 4, Wai-kiki 2, Central Illinois 19, Nauvoo 24, Northeastern Illinois 33, Southern Illinois 15, Kewanee 24, Des Moines 39, Eastern Iowa 11, Fremont 36, Gallands Grove 32, Lamoni 114, Little Sioux 84, Pottawattamie 42, Northeastern Kansas 22, Northwestern Kansas 14, Massachusetts 68, Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana 17, Northern Michigan 84, Clinton, Missouri, 29, Far West 70, Independence 151, Nodaway 11, Northeastern Missouri 22, St. Louis 33, Montana 12, Central Nebraska 15, Northern Nebraska

The appointment of ushers was left to the chair. Visiting members and workers given the privilege of the floor. The order of meetings and time of adjournment were left to the presiding officer.

The chair was requested to appoint a committee of two to convey official notice to the quorums of the First Presidency and Twelve, notifying them that the Sunday-school convention was in business session, and was ready to receive any communications or suggestions they might have to offer. W. W. Smith and David Anderson were appointed such committee.

Reports were read from the general superintendent, T. A. Hougas; first assistant superintendent, J. A. Gunsolley; general librarian, Sr. L. Etzenhouser; treasurer, John Smith; home class superintendent, Sr. T. A. Hougas; editor Gospel Quarterly Anna Salyards; the revising committee, Duncan Campbell, R. S. Salyards, and John Smith; Emma Burton, superintendent of the South Sea Islands District; and G. J. Waller of Honolulu. The association is now fourteen years old. At the close of the first year there were fifteen districts, and eight schools not in districts. Now there are more than fifty districts, with a membership of about 20,000 as against 3,915 thirteen years ago. Reports from all parts of the country are encouraging. Circulation of Quarterlies is increasing. This year has been one of unusual activity in the library department; and the majority of the sixty-three districts are making an effort to establish libraries, the most of them adopting the circulating system. The treasurer's report showed a total receipt of $3,317.40, and a total expenditure of $2,514.16, with a balance of $2,034.08 as compared with a balance last year of $1,230.84. Quarterly lessons are prepared up to October, and in the hands of the printers.

Committee on sunshine work reported, also the officers of Zion's Hope Sunshine Band, Sr. S. R. Burgess, president; Fannie I. Morrison, secretary and treasurer. The Sunshine Band in America has a membership of one hundred thousand, and Zion's Hope Sunshine Band a membership of one thousand. It was moved to approve the report of the committee and adopt the recommendations. Discussion was in progress when meeting was adjourned till half past seven in the evening.

Editorial

PRESIDENT JOSEPH F. SMITH ON REVELATION.

It is right that a man should be judged upon his own words rather than upon what others say that he said. Especially is this true if those reporting what a man says are opposed to him, or are at enmity towards him. We have given the HERALD readers what Joseph F. Smith, president of the church in Utah, testified to before the Senatorial Committee upon the subject of revelation; and also what has been said by some in regard to his denial of that testimony. We now give his own statement as the same was published in the Deseret Evening News for Monday, March 20, 1905, the day after the sitting of the Salt Lake Stake conference, at which the speech of President Smith was made.

The subject of revelation was introduced by Charles W. Penrose, who was the first speaker at the afternoon session, thus:

Referring to the misrepresentations of President Joseph F. Smith's testimony at Washington concerning revelation, the speaker showed that the question put to President Smith as to whether he had received a revelation from God, to which he gave a qualified negative, was predicated on the interpretation placed on the term by the attorney. What the interrogator called "revelation" as he defined it himself, in his argument, was "personal contact with God," speaking with him "mouth to mouth," hearing God's voice "as one man speaks to another." To this President Smith answered, No. But he said he had received revelation that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and testified that he himself was guided by the Spirit of God.

What President Joseph F. Smith is reported to have said is:

Now with reference to the principle and doctrine of revelation, it may be proper for me to say a few words on this subject while I am on my feet. For me to say, which was the very end that my critics and inquisitors were endeavoring to get me to say, in order that I might be led into that trap which they had made for me, to say that God had given to me a revelation upon some new doctrine, or theory, or principle, or precept, or anything to be written, to be observed, or handed down as a guide to the church, would have been untrue. I could not have said that, for he has not done this. But has God revealed to me his mind and his will? Has he made manifest to me a knowledge of his truth by and through the spirit of revelation? Did you ever hear of my denying that? No; no man has ever heard me deny that. . . .

The Lord Almighty has revealed to me many things for my own guidance, to assist me in the discharge of my duty, as an elder in the church, as a high priest in the church, as an apostle, one of the twelve apostles in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. And I fervently believe that God has manifested to me in my present capacity, many glorious things, many principles and oftentimes much more wisdom than is inherent in myself; and I believe he will continue to do so as long as I am receptive, as long as I am in a position to hear when he speaks, to listen when he calls, and to receive when he gives to me that which he desires.

We give these extracts from President Joseph F. Smith's talk on the afternoon of March 19, 1905, on the subject of revelation, as they contain the statements on which the charge is based that he contradicted and denied what he testified to before the Territorial Committee, offering no comment upon them, leaving those who read them to judge of them without the bias of an expression from us.

CARDINAL GIBBONS ON DIVORCE.

There is some reason to believe that the attitude of the Catholic Church in regard to divorce and remarriage is not clearly understood. The following from Cardinal Gibbons, an eminent prelate of the church, is in point and will materially aid to an understanding, if he is authorized to speak for the Catholic Church in America, which is to be presumed from the position he holds.

Whatever may be said of the Catholic faith and mode of worship it must be conceded that in this matter of the effect that divorces and the ease with which they are procured in our courts has upon society and the state, Cardinal Gibbons is in the right. Read and judge ye:

BALTIMORE, Maryland, March 20.—Cardinal Gibbons is taking a keen interest in the anti-divorce movement and hopes and believes a reaction is at hand against the trend toward making the separation of man and wife easier. In an interview to-day His Grace said:

"The first reason upon which the rejection of divorce by all Catholics is based is that the church, acting upon the word of God, does not recognize its existence. The Lord has decreed that the marriage bond shall be indestructible and he alone can sever it by taking from this life one or the other of the contracting parties. Marriage from the dawn of life on this earth be made holy and indissoluble. He established its law of unity when he gave Eve to Adam in the Garden of Eden, and this ideal of marriage remains to-day as it was in the beginning.

"The greater laxity of conscience which came with the years, however, soon caused alleged reformers to discard the sacramental view of marriage and to frame a new doctrine of marriage and divorce. Appealing as it did to the low and sensual passions of man, the new doctrine soon gained adherents, and marriage, which had been hedged in sacredness, began to be more and more openly trespassed upon.

"No matter in what light men look upon marriage and its attributes and obligations, all must admit that in the last analysis it is upon this institution that the entire structure of society rests. Statistics recently compiled show what inroads into the family have already been made by divorce in this country. The minds of legislators and jurists are kept busy devising new means for obtaining divorces. The facility with which they can be secured has served as an encouragement to hasty marriages and to equally hasty separations.

"We cry out in virtuous indignation against Mormonism. The press and pulpit denounce it as a national disgrace and demand its suppression. But is Christian polygamy less reprehensible than Mormon polygamy? Is simultaneous polygamy worse than successive polygamy? Why then is the one tolerated and the other denounced?

"We know that as a class the Mormons care for their wives and children, while Christian polygamists but too often leave wretched wives to starve, slave, or sin, and abandon miserable children to the care of the state. For which of these then shall be felt the greatest contempt, the divorced and much-married Christian or the much-married but undivorced Mormon?

"To every sober-minded moralist who has given the matter appreciable thought and study it must appear that the only satisfactory solution would be to stop all divorce. The doctrine of the Catholic Church, which offers this redress, also disposes of the problem of remarriage after divorce. No one, even though divorced by a civil power, can be allowed by the church to take another consort during the lifetime of the true wife or husband. Even, however, if the divine law did not prohibit divorce and remarriage after divorce, how poor a remedy it would be for the evils for which so many deem it panacea. There is no valid reason why divorced parties remated would be happier in this new connection than in the old. Does not experience, on the contrary, teach that unhappiness among married people frequently arises from causes inherent in one or both of the parties—causes that would as likely make a new union as wretched as the old—and not from mutual incompatibility?

"To those that think that absolute prohibition of divorce does not contribute to the purity of society, the example of ancient Rome offers a striking refutation. Does not the increase of every form of offense against charity point out a great moral? Can it be advanced that the increase in concubinage, prostitution, illegitimate births, abortions, and the disinclination of family life, concurring as it does with the increase in divorce, is a commentary upon the beneficial value of divorce on society?"

"That the argument I wish to make is a strong one is made evident by statistics, which conclusively establish that it is in those parts of the United States where loose divorce laws prevail that crimes of this sort flourish most.

"While opposing divorce, and more particularly marriage after divorce, I concede that there are occasions where for grave causes separation of husband and wife should be permitted. The Catholic Church recognizes this, and adultery, grave peril of soul or body, or even mutual consent, are accepted by it as justification of this separation. I can not admit, however, that for the benefit of the few, for whom no relief can come short of divorce, with permission to remarry, the morality of an entire community or nation should be lowered and society endangered.

"While waiting for the day when divorce shall be abolished altogether something might be done to lessen the ravages it occasions daily. The laws of the United States regarding it should be made more strict and altogether uniform in every State. The number of direct recognized legalized grounds should be lessened, and 'noiseless' divorces, divorces where a decree can be obtained without the knowledge of the defendant, should be abolished. The plaintiff should be a bona-fide resident of the State and judicial district in which his petition is filed, and in every case the legal representative of the State should appear for the defendant. If divorce can not be legislated out of existence let at least its power for evil be diminished."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

DOMINION GOVERNMENT AGAINST POLYGAMY.

The following is going the rounds of the newspapers, and if correct shows that the Canadian provinces are not to be made auxiliaries to the "menace of Mormonism," as the would-be religiously wise ones of the nation call it:

WINNIPEG, Manitoba, March 15.—The wholesale prosecution of Mormons on the charge of polygamy has begun at Raymond, Alberta Province. Mounted police have taken up the campaign against the Mormons, who number several thousand, having moved from the United States and Europe in the last five years.

The first action was taken against a well-known resident of MacGrath, who recently brought two wives from the United States, whom he is said to have married in Utah. He declared he was not living in a polygamous state, but was given his choice of leaving the country or being prosecuted.

Similar notices have been served on many others known to have more than one wife.

COUNTER STROKE AGAINST FRANK J. CANNON.

Truth, a paper published in Salt Lake City, Utah, in its issue for March 25, has a sharp counter stroke against Frank J. Cannon and Mr. Smurthwaite. It accounts for the motive of Mr. Cannon in the following:

Now, Mr. Cannon, to be frank, is it not a fact that your sole animosity towards Joseph F. Smith, and the great change that has come over you in regard to commercialism in the church is due to the following circumstances? When the church was in financial straits and compelled to issue bonds, that you went to President Lorenzo Snow and your father and wanted them to let you float the bonds at seventy-five cents on the dollar. That Joseph F. Smith objected and induced a number of local and influential men, some of whom were not members of the Mormon church, to take the bonds at par. By Mr. Smith's interference you were knocked out of over a quarter million of dollars that you were trying to make out of the financial distress of your own church.

Truth offers to give Mr. Cannon space in that journal to answer the arraignment, provided he will not do it in his own paper, the Tribune.

Truth alleges that Mr. Smurthwaite's statement that President Joseph F. Smith threatened to ruin him if he engaged in the salt business in opposition to the Inland Crystal Salt Company, is denied by President Smith, which raises the question of veracity between the two men, and there it rests. Truth further states that the "salt trust," so called by Mr. Smurthwaite, is not controlled by President Smith.

Closing this editorial Truth states:

Gentiles have no confidence in the stability of either Cannon or Smurthwaite in the positions they have taken. Smurthwaite "broke out" once before and later took it all back. Cannon, not so very long ago, was sick, very sick. He then sent for the officers of the church to administer to him by the laying on of hands and anointing with oil. He received these ministrations from the hands of the church and the men he now so bitterly attacks. When the proper time comes Mr. Cannon will go down on his knees and take it all back, just as B. H. Roberts did.

Truth, the journal, may be in the right of it, but what interests those out of the zone of conflict is, What is the truth of the matter in dispute? Let that be brought into the light no matter who it may affect; the innocent and true can not seriously suffer.

QUESTION. THE ANCIENT OF DAYS.

Who is the Ancient of Days mentioned in Daniel 7:9, 13, 23? Please let us know with references where to be found as we are having a great discussion about the same.

The only means we have of answering this query is section 26, paragraph 2, of Doctrine and Covenants, which we give entire, that the connection may be seen. The information sought is in the closing sentence of the paragraph. The marginal note refers to Psalm 96:2, which seems to apply to God, the author of all.

Daniel 7:9, 13, 23, point out that one like the Son of man came to the Ancient of Days, and that to him (the one like the Son of man) was given dominion and power; which agrees with other passages; although the description given in Habakkuk 3:3-5, applying to the Lord, is like that of the Ancient of Days referred to.

We have always understood the term Ancient of Days to refer to Adam, the human father of the race.

Behold, this is wisdom in me; wherefore marvel not, for the hour cometh that I will drink of the fruit of the vine with you on the earth, and with Moroni, whom I have sent unto you to reveal the Book of Mormon, containing the fullness of my everlasting gospel; to whom I have committed the keys of the record of the stick of Ephraim; and also with Elias, to whom I have committed the keys of bringing to pass the restoration of all things, or the restorer of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began, concerning the last days; and also John the son of Zacharias, which Zacharias he (Elias) visited and gave promise that he should have a son, and his name should be John, and he should be filled with the spirit of Elias; which John I have sent unto you, my servants, Joseph Smith, Jr., and Oliver Cowdery, to ordain you unto this first priesthood which you have received, that you might be called and ordained even as Aaron; and also Elijah, unto whom I have committed the keys of the power of turning the hearts of the fathers to the children and the hearts of the children to the fathers, that the whole earth may not be smitten with a curse; and also, with Joseph, and Jacob, and Isaac, and Abraham, your fathers; by whom the promises remain; and also with Michael, or Adam, the father of all, the prince of all, the ancient of days.—Doctrine and Covenants 26:2.

END OF THE WORLD—SPRING OF 1905.

A certain prophetess, Mrs. Catharine Hyden Haworth, wife of Doctor Haworth, of MacGregor, Manitoba, is out in a prophecy that the end of the world, or the advent of the millennium, will take place this spring. In this she disagrees with Benjamin and many of Benton Harbor, Michigan, who put it off till 1906 and later in the season. We think we have seen another that puts it for 1916.

MRS. MARIA WEED AND HER ATTITUDE TOWARD US.

No doubt many of our readers have heard of Mrs. Maria Weed, who for some time past has been lecturing in the interests of the Interdenominational Council of Women in their efforts to bring influences to bear to unseat Senator Reed Smoot and to have Congress make an anti-polygamy amendment to the Constitution. Possibly many of our men have heard Mrs. Weed lecture, and doubtless some have had occasion to attempt to offset some of the statements that Mrs. Weed makes concerning the history of the church.

While at Washington last December we had the opportunity of meeting Mrs. Weed and others of the Interdenominational Council of Women; and in the course of several conversations with Mrs. Weed on the subject we discovered that she felt quite bitter toward our men because of the efforts, as she believed, made by them to offset her work. She seemed to feel that our men were hindering her in her work against polygamy instead of helping her.

Bro. Sheehy and the writer had a number of conversations with her with the result, as we believe, of a better understanding on her part of our attitude on the matter.

After returning to our desk at Lamoni we wrote Mrs. Weed asking her to make a statement of her attitude toward our people for the purpose of publishing same in the HERALD, that our people might know exactly her position. At the time we wrote we sent books and papers indicating our attitude on the question, as to whether or not Joseph Smith was a polygamist, and wished her success in her efforts at offsetting the effects of the promulgation of the doctrine of polygamy and spiritual wifery. In reply to our inquiry we received the following letter:

January 25, 1905.

MR. FRED. M. SMITH, Lamoni, Iowa.

My dear Mr. Smith:—

Your favor, together with books and papers, have been received, and for these and your kindly interest in my work, permit me to thank you.

If denial would destroy conviction and affirmation create desirable conditions, I should have little difficulty in meeting your demands. Under the circumstances, believing as I must, I can not assert that Joseph Smith was not a polygamist. I have, however, many times said, that your organization claimed and believed that Brigham Young introduced this offensive feature and fostered it, even to the present hour and that you did not affiliate with them.

The attitude of your people toward me has been one of deepest and most bitter resentment, and this spirit has emphasized the worst elements credited to the sect. Of this, however, it is useless to speak, and perhaps they think themselves warranted; yet, this very thing has been a strong argument to my mind, that your organization, aside from polygamy, was essentially the same in belief. You remember the first morning of the "Investigation," you yourself said to Mrs. Hamlin and me, that you had "no idea that the churches differed so widely." All this is certainly in your favor, and, believe me, there is no one in all the land, who so desires to discover that our fears concerning your branch of the church are groundless, as myself. Whatever may have been the life of your grandfather, or my belief in it, I am glad to concede every known virtue to his present day followers. Therefore, while I can not disclaim the proofs of such evidence as I possess of the practice of polygamy in Nauvoo before Joseph Smith's death, I am willing and anxious to award to the Reorganized Church every just claim which is their due.

Trusting that this position is an amicable one and at least partially satisfactory, I am,

Most cordially yours,

MARIA WEED.

We regret that anything in the attitude assumed by any of our ministers should have given Mrs. Weed the idea that the attitude of our people toward her had been one of "deepest and most bitter resentment," a feeling which we can not afford to foster towards any one. Of course it is to be expected that our men will resent the statement that Joseph Smith was a polygamist, and that he had eighty wives, as Mrs. Weed insists, but this resentment should be made in such a way as not to give Mrs. Weed the impression that we have the spirit of "bitter resentment." For surely after years and years of persistent fighting against the contaminating influences of the doctrine of polygamy we can strike hands with any who are putting forth efforts to stop the practice and bring about the institution of such constitutional enactments as will bring the control of this matter directly under the influence of the general Government.

On the other hand, as we told Mrs. Weed, we do not believe that an organization attempting to effect such constitutional amendment can afford to antagonize the Reorganized Church, which has as an organization been tireless in its efforts in combating polygamy and concomitant evils.

We feel sure that as Mrs. Weed continues to investigate her subject more thoroughly she will find the claims of the Reorganized Church fully substantiated, and we trust that in the meantime her attitude as a public speaker will be such as not to unnecessarily arouse the antagonism of our ministers. On the other hand, we trust that our men, when they shall have occasion to meet Mrs. Weed, will deport themselves in such manner as to eradicate the idea that there exists toward her and her work a spirit of "deepest and most bitter resentment." Our men will naturally resent the statement that Joseph Smith was a polygamist, but this can be done in a way which ought not to be offensive to any one; and indeed, we feel that when this is done in a spirit of bitterness and anger the good we desire to accomplish is to a large extent marred, if not hindered entirely.

We can second and heartily support the efforts of the Interdenominational Council of Women to secure the enactment of a constitutional amendment which will enable the Government to master the situation so far as polygamy is concerned; but we can not second and support the efforts of their public speakers to besmirch the character of Joseph Smith. In fact, so far as the present situation is concerned, we can not see what bearing the question of whether or not Joseph Smith was a polygamist has on the subject. Surely there is enough in present conditions to justify every effort the Interdenominational Council of Women is making against the propagation of the doctrine of polygamy.

FRED'K M. SMITH.

AGE OF CONSENT IN ILLINOIS.

The Illinois legislature has enacted two important items of law for which that body of lawmakers should be commended. One is, raising the age at which a woman may consent to her own ruin from fourteen to sixteen years; the other now pending provides that the age at which persons may legally marry by consent of parents shall be eighteen for the boy and sixteen for the girl.

There also is a bill passed to second reading prohibiting common-law marriages. Surely the world moves—in Illinois.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Home and Mother.

"A great many homes are like the frame of a harp that stands without strings. In frame and outline they suggest music, but no melody rises from the empty spaces. And thus it happens that home is unattractive, dreary, and dull."—W. H. H. Murray.

God rather intended our homes to be as Henry Ware says: "To Adam paradise was home, to the good among his descendants home is paradise." There is probably no man or woman who does not feel that the sweetest joy and best reward of life is found in the love and memories of home; who does not feel that for whatever is good in his character he is indebted to his early home life and mother's influence. The men of the nation, to a large extent, are what their mothers make them. And it is truly a sad moment when the child suspects there is any place in the world that is better or dearer than home.

Reverend Doctor Hamilton defining a home says, "Six things are requisite to create a happy home. Integrity must be the architect, tidiness the upholsterer. It must be warmed by affection, and lighted by cheerfulness, and industry must be the ventilator, renewing the atmosphere in fresh salubrity day by day, while over all as a protecting canopy and glory, nothing will suffice except the blessing of God." And over this the mother may reign as queen, and if she is true, tender, loving, and womanly she unconsciously puts in operation an influence that does more to mold the destiny of the nation than all other powers or influences can. Let the child get wild and wayward as he does sometimes, but sometime in his wild career he will come to a halt, confronted by the old memories of a loving mother's prayer. He will feel the old home influence again to help lead him back to God. It may be years after the faithful mother is sleeping so calmly in the village churchyard, or it may be standing by the side of the new-made grave of mother when memory of her love and faithfulness may help the erring one, but truly the reward will come to the faithful mother. She is often unappreciated while she toils day by day in our midst, but "some day, somewhere," her reward is sure.

Mohammed spoke well when he said, "Paradise is at the feet of mother." There is one vision that never fades from the soul, that is the vision of mother and home. It seems that in view of all these great responsibilities and far-reaching effect, well may we ask, "Who is sufficient for all this?" But remember, He who has given us this duty has said, "My grace is sufficient for thee. Call upon me and I will supply all you need."

"A mother's love, how sweet the name!

What is a mother's love?

A noble, pure, and tender flame,

To bless a heart of earthly mold,

The warmest love that can ne'er grow cold.

This is a mother's love."

A MOTHER.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 14, 1905.

Dear Reader: Did you ever in a vision see your own burial clothes, your own coffin? and be in a grave and see your own corpse?

I did. I was sick for eighteen days and nights with a terrible pain in my face, head, and one eye. It seemed to me I suffered all one could suffer, but in my agony I had sweet momentary visions in the night.

The first night I saw my burial clothes. I saw myself sick and knew I was going to die; and our family thought so, too; so they all consulted what to do. I say all, it was my son and myself. I was deeply interested in my burial outfit, and felt quite businesslike about it and so did my son. It seemed he had selected the clothes, come home, sat down; unwrapped them, and laid them on the carpet, seemingly with great satisfaction. He had made an effort and thought he had pleased his dying mother.

I saw the things he bought as plainly as I ever saw anything; black crepe, nun's-veiling, white lace, fine linen, and shoes. My son sat back tired, and with a look to please me, said, "I got everything right but the shoes; I had to take one white one and one tan." And I, wishing to have my burial outfit complete, said, "Oh, that won't do!" I never will forget that sad look on my son's face.

I made up my mind then that I would ever appear to be pleased with all that he did; for I knew he had done the best he could. This was the first night and only momentary. The second night we talked of a coffin. He said he could get one for ten dollars, but it was old and might not suit me, and he would go and fetch it so I could look at it. I said, "Yes, go." He soon came back walking and driving a two-horse team and wagon and on that wagon was something like an old, dirty canoe or boat bottom side to me. He asked me if it would do. I said, "Yes," with a smile, for I knew he had done the best he could.

He was my constant and only attendant so I said to him, "Last night I dreamed of my coffin, the night before of my burial clothes; I wonder what it will be to-night?"

He said, "Oh, the grave." And it was; I was in a grave that had a vault in it; I sat on the edge with my feet in the vault. I was not only peacefully content but enraptured. While I sat there a light came in at one side of the grave and darted to the other; showing the bright and shining sides of the clay-colored grave.

Deep down in that grave at the dead of night and in a lone cemetery. Do you think I felt lone or forsaken? No, I felt like victory was mine. I could sit there undisturbed. But in that grave was an old woman who looked to be seventy years old. I saw her plainly in the light. She was bent and wabbly like I am now. I was sixty-two then; am now in my seventieth year. The fourth night I passed through a room and in that room was a corpse, and that corpse was myself. Do you think I went and leaned over that cold, pale, still form? If it had been a mother or a daughter I would have lingered long, but I did not, for it was my own dead form, and with delight I hastened from it and up a stairway. When part way up I looked back, saw the old form and knew it was mine, but thought, I am not in it; I still ascended the stair which opened into the air. I felt great ecstasy of soul, and as fleet as a young girl.

Why this vision was given to me I do not know, but it has given me great peace of mind. I have no fear of death or the grave, and when I see others grieving over the dead, then a great calm comes over me and something says, "She is not there but among us."

HOPKINSVILLE, Kentucky, March 22, 1905.

Editors Herald: In a letter written by the inspired pen of Elder T. C. Kelley, McKenzie, Alabama, March 6, 1905, I see the name of Elder Perry Booker, a colored brother, and the only elder of the colored race we have in this mission. When I read this report about Bro. Perry Booker being quite active and diligent in his efforts to get this blessed gospel before our people, I was made to rejoice in the Spirit of God over him.

I first met Bro. Booker at Kempville, Alabama, and after I had met him God showed me that Bro. Booker was of the priesthood, and I was the first to lay on hands to ordain him to the office of teacher. Thanks be to our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, who is our great Leader, that he has kept our dear brother true and faithful to the gospel covenant. May God speed him in his active efforts in the gospel is my prayer. Others of the brethren I also ordained in Alabama, at Butler Springs. Should the brethren see this letter please write to ELDER GEO. H. GRAVES.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri.

Editors Herald: In the HERALD for March 1, 1905, is a letter by Bro. Stephen Drazey upon a subject which is very interesting to us, as parents, and I would like to offer a few thoughts; not that I could explain the passage in question (Doctrine and Covenants 28:13), but I feel that the attention of parents can not too often be directed along these lines. We read there that "power is not given unto Satan to tempt little children until they begin to become accountable before me." The scriptures also tell us that "their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." That is, the guardian angels of little children always behold God's face, and this "that great things may be required at the hands of their fathers" (parents).

Fathers and mothers, do you see the great opportunity here given to us to get the start of the adversary by filling the minds of our little ones with the seeds of faith and the love of God? Before their fresh, pure minds have become contaminated with worldly thoughts and desires, our chance is given to fill them with the things of God, and it is marvelous almost to see how a little child loves these things. Many a time have I been deeply touched to see how the little ones will call for the Bible stories in preference to others. Surely a little child is naturally holy, and in endeavoring to teach them, we shall ourselves be brought nearer to our Father. Oh, let us not lose this God-given opportunity of sowing the precious seed in the appointed time. We are told in Doctrine and Covenants 68:4 that our children are to be instructed in the principles of the gospel that they may be ready for baptism at the age of eight years; so our work must be done before that time. Just think how much God has done to aid us in that work. Satan is restrained from tempting them, and they have the guardianship of holy angels that great things may be required of us.

I have heard that Pope Leo once said: "Give me control of a child until he is eight years old, and he will never be anything but a Catholic." Can not we do as well for our darlings, or do we sometimes allow our enemy to get the advantage by putting off the time of teaching—waiting for a more favorable or convenient time? That time comes but seldom, we must make use of the chances as they come, or even make them. It is not enough to see that the children attend Sunday-school regularly, for grand and far-reaching as the work of the school is, it can not do our work. Perhaps we do not know how to teach. Alas! Many of us do not know, but if our hearts are set to do the will of God, and we feel that we must bring up our children in light and truth as he has commanded, I know that he will bless our efforts even though they be weak and made in fear and trembling at thought of the great responsibility upon us.

One thing is important in teaching children; we should have our minds well stored with the incidents in the life of our Savior, as well as the sweet stories of the Old Testament, so that we may, by taking advantage of the universal love of childhood for stories, teach while we amuse them. Inspire their faith by telling of the nobleman who felt unworthy to ask the Savior to come to his house to heal his sick son, but pleaded: "Speak but the word," and it was done according to his faith. Also the stories of the woman who could not reach him for the press of the crowd, but managed to touch the hem of his garment, and was healed, Jesus walking on the water, feeding the five thousand, etc. Make them well acquainted with the many beautiful stories to be found in the Bible. Are there any sweeter ones? The children will not think so if you tell them such stories from the very dawn of their understanding, but as they grow older Satan begins to have power to draw their minds away from holy things if they have not been fortified against him. Does this suggest a possible reason why many of our young are not with us in the church? If, as Pope Leo (quoted above) implies, he can mold the mind of a child as he will, can we not do as well? If we are in earnest we can, for we have the cooperation of God himself and his angels, and "Straight from the mighty bow this truth is driven:

They fail, and they alone, who have not striven."

God will not require more of us than we are able to perform, yet he declares in section 68:4 that if our children are not ready for baptism at eight years the condemnation rests upon the heads of the parents. We have something to do, have we not, to prepare them? Oh how I do wish that I had words to express and could realize myself all the time, the awful responsibility of parents as well as their precious privilege. How I wish that I never allowed anything to come between me and the work that has been given me to do which shall have an eternal influence. Which will give the best returns, to know that we have kept our household affairs in perfect order, or to work with all our energies to fit an immortal soul to adorn the celestial world? O God, our Father, help thou our weakness.

Your sister,
CLARA M. FRICK.

AKRON, Iowa.

Dear Herald: I am delighted with perusing your columns every week as that is all the preaching I get, as I do not have the companionship of Saints. Bro. Rushton's instructions admonishing us all to always be pure in all our doings, striving to be ready for every good word and work, were good. As Bro. I. N. White says, when we expect a friend we make great preparations for his coming, so if we expect to meet or commune with our heavenly Father we must fit ourselves for the occasion. Dear Saints, you who are permitted to meet with two or more, do you appreciate your privileges as you should?

If I go to the other churches, which I do when able, I get husks and go home hungry for the bread of life. I go alone to the secret closet. I sometimes think if these walls could speak and reveal my earnest prayers offered for my unsaved family and neighbors, and all the honest in heart, it would reveal my over-anxious desires for them; but is it a sin to be over anxious? I read in the Book of Mormon of some that were burdened for souls to be saved. Perhaps I am too anxious, but I try to say from the depths of my heart, "Thy will, O God, not mine, be done." I do enjoy a very great degree of God's Holy Spirit. If I did not I surely would faint by the way. But, thank God, I am strengthened day by day; yet I yearn to be with those of like precious faith and have my dear children and husband and neighbors saved in the kingdom of God. I also plead with my heavenly Father that if it be his will I may be restored to health, that I may spend the few allotted years working in his kingdom and vineyard.

I have always tried to be useful. I have spent many hours in the sick-room. I have administered to the dying many, many times, and only plead very many with whom I have tried to serve shall be the better for the time I have spent among them, and that many spots on God's footstool will be the better for my having lived upon it.

I often think how grand it will be when we shall enjoy the thousand years of peace on the earth with our blessed Lord and Savior; yet I feel if Jesus would come now there would be some left out who would not be saved. Yet when the angel's message is brought so the people might hear it, so many turn a deaf ear and thus say, "We don't want Christ to reign over us." Yet God is in this work and he gives opportunity and time to all, that all may come to him if they will.

Bro. Charles Anway's family have all been sick and now their sixteen-month-old baby boy is hanging between life and death with pneumonia. Bro. J. M. Baker from Sioux City has been called here twice to administer to it but it is no better. Pray for them and all of us that if the Master calls for any of us we may be as pure as this sweet baby. Can we be as pure? Yes, Jesus says we must. "Be ye also perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect." We can be perfect by doing the commandments of God. That we all may be found so doing each day just as if it were the last day we were to have is the earnest prayer of
Your sister in the faith,

M. A. CHRISTY.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, March 29, 1905.

Editors Herald: Sunday, March 26, I had the pleasure of baptizing three people in the church font. That makes a total of seven baptized in the font since we installed it during the holiday season of the past winter. One of the three baptized was a member of the Utah church, having been born and raised in Utah. She said that it seemed hard when one had for years supposed herself a Latter Day Saint to find herself in error and have to be rebaptized; but with true courage she recognized the logic of our position and gladly embraced the opportunity to become a Latter Day Saint indeed. This lady began coming to our church several months ago. We treated her with courtesy and made no attack whatever on her or her people. We thus won her confidence and she finally requested us to explain the difference between our faith and that of the Utah church. We did so and it did not take long for her to decide.

From the 5th to the 14th of March Bro. Fred A. Smith held a series of meetings here that did considerable good. The attendance was good, partly the result of advertising in the daily papers, partly the result of attractive handbills, and largely the result of furnishing clear-pointed discourses when the people came out. The Saints here feel considerably encouraged over the outlook.

Mrs. Engstrom, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, recently lectured here at the First Presbyterian church on the subject of Mormonism. The audience was small, but larger than she deserved. Chapter one was a bitter and heartless attack upon the memory of Joseph Smith. And, like all the others, she was not content with attacking the man, she must vilify the very woman who bore him. Chapter two was a portrayal of the horrors of Utah Mormonism.

At the close we talked with her as long as she would listen, which was not long, and told her that chapter two did not concern us, while chapter one would have hurt worse had it been true. We endeavored to be polite, but she saw the point. She said that was a matter of opinion, which was a mistake; it was a matter of fact. One statement showed her opinion of fact. She said that the Nauvoo House was built by command of God for a boarding-house, and that any hour of the day Joseph Smith might have been seen in its barroom, drinking, and cracking vulgar jokes. The fact that that building was never completed during Joseph Smith's day, and that no man lived in it for a long time after his death, is probably a matter of opinion. Not a single statement made during the lecture would she defend in private conversation, and in that she was right in line with the average lecturer on that subject. When the mud is thrown they want to get clear of the scene with all possible speed. Her one lone argument was that a great many people said that Joseph Smith was a bad man and it must be true. On the same ground she would have been found in the days of Christ lecturing against that man who was called a glutton and a wine-bibber. We are confident of that because the Devil uses similar tools in all ages,—poor tools some of them.

Sincerely,

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a line from this Jack-pine country would not be amiss. We are still in the faith and trying to keep it, though we live scattered so far apart it is difficult to meet together very often. To-day, the Jack-pine Sunday-school was held at the North schoolhouse, and Elder E. B. Anderson was to preach; but, as I could not go, I thought I would write to the HERALD. I have been reading that splendid sermon by Bro. R. C. Evans, "Latter-day polygamy. Its origin," and I think it just right. I am glad there is so much proof of the innocence of Joseph Smith. Truly the Reorganized Church has had a great work to do in "pleading the cause of injured innocence." And what the true believers have had to suffer because of the departure of others from the faith ought to teach us the necessity of each Saint living close to the word of God. How much trouble might have been avoided in the past, if only each Saint had taken the "Word of God" as the man of his counsel instead of listening to their "file leaders," "spiritual advisers," "first counselors," or "father confessors," or whatever they chose to call them. Truly I think it is of great importance that we study the word of God, and learn to abide by it; not only to say, but to do. And I believe there is sufficient in the word to direct us as to our duties, whatever trial, temptation, or affliction may come upon us in this life. How careful ought we to be, that we bring no reproach upon the work we love, or the sacred name we bear; careful to love our enemies even and pray for those who persecute us as well as for the "children of the household of faith." There is no room for hate in our hearts towards any, "for none can assist in this work, except he be humble and full of love." No room there for petty jealousies or foolish quarreling, but plenty of room for exercising charity, judging leniently, rendering due respect for the opinions of those who differ from us; for the day of perfection has not yet come when all can see eye to eye.

But that ought not to discourage us. Some seem to think it is a terrible thing if our ministers do not all agree upon every subject, and are on the lookout for something awful to transpire, whenever they meet in General Conference. Now I think the Lord knew all this would be and provided a way to meet and overcome it. Hence the command to meet together to agree upon his word. He knew they would not reach perfection of understanding in this life, but were to assemble together; and by prayerful, careful study, and a sincere presentation of the views of each one, a better chance to come to a unity of the faith would be had. And where were the chance to exercise charity, and let patience have her perfect work, if we were all so perfect at once, in the very start of our Christian warfare, that there would be no need for charity or patience with each other? Oh, that we could all remember to be humble and full of love. It would help us over so many difficult places. And how great promises the Lord has made to the faithful; not that we should never be tried, or tempted, but that his Spirit should be given us according to our needs. In the world we may expect tribulation, hatred, opposition, and slander, because we shall be hated of all men for his name's sake. But if we are faithful,

"In him we shall have peace." "My peace I give unto you." Thus shall we be able to overcome all things by faith; not only little differences among the members, but little differences among the ministry. Truly it would be too bad for any to be moved out of the place to which God had called him because of differences of opinion upon any subject. The evil one would be only too glad to bring in discord and division in some way. But, dear Saints, let us not yield to him, no, not for a moment; but let us trust all things to him who ruleth all things, and whose word can not fail. Even when he covenants, as in Genesis 14: 30, 31, Inspired Translation, that "every one being ordained after this order and calling [Melchisedec priesthood] should have power, by faith, to break mountains, to divide the seas, to dry up waters, to turn them out of their course; . . . to do all things according to his will."

"All things" would include even agreeing upon subjects where there were great differences. All things are possible with God, so I pray that "his peace" may abide all through the General Conference and that he will help us all to keep the faith, and come to that perfection required of all Saints.

EMMA L. ANDERSON.

SOMERVILLE, Massachusetts, March 20, 1905.

Editors Herald: To-night as I reflect on the past and also look at the present, I wonder what the future will be, or as the poet has said, "Oh, what shall the harvest be?" I have just got the little ones asleep, and oh what a rest. It seems so hard at times, and other times easier to bring them up, but what a blessing if we do it acceptably to God. I believe there is no task that needs any more patience than to try to bring up a family aright, and especially for one like myself who is alone to do the praying. If I had a companion to kneel in prayer with me night and morning and ask God to direct us to bring up our little ones in a God-fearing way it would seem easier; but then I believe we must have tribulation in this world, but in Christ Jesus peace. But no, I made the sad mistake and must suffer the consequence. It is a very, very sad thing for young persons to marry outside of the church, and sooner or later they will find it out for themselves. I hope the unmarried sisters will take warning from one that has had the hard experience and go to God in prayer and ask his direction in this regard. You may think lightly of it now, but not so after a few years. I have prayed earnestly for my companion and can see the results now; but see what I have suffered; but thank God he has heard my prayers in his behalf. I had a dream before Christmas, and I thought I passed through some very dangerous places,—as fast as I got over one I went into another,—and so it has been with me this long winter; but still through it all the Lord brought me safely through them, and I was saved. I also saw my husband all alone far from me, yet I could see him with a sore foot. I did not understand the dream. I told it to a great many at the time and sure enough, if my husband did not come home from work with a fractured ankle. Well, he went to work to-day and during his stay at home he studied part of the Book of Mormon, also read the Life of John Bunyan and read many other books that he seemed very much interested in concerning the work previous to that. Now I often get him to study the Sunday-school lessons over with me and he seems quite interested.

I can sympathize with Sr. Mary Nash, also others in like condition. I also fully appreciate the letter written by Sr. Libbie Albertson. She wrote my very thoughts, for I can say with her my thoughts are ever on the gospel and God's chosen people. I also agree with her when she says, "I grow weary of my mistakes and failures, but never of the gospel." I can say that I look forward with the eye of faith when I can live with the Saints in that glorified earth where there will be no parting or sin.

I also agree with Bro. Mintun when he says that the intellectuality of the Saints quite exceeds their spirituality. Yet this is not my desire, for if such was best God could have said so. I love this gospel more and more. I believe my whole heart and soul is in it. I pray God may grant me strength to thus continue to grow strong until the crown of life may be mine to enjoy.

ELDORADO, Missouri, March 8, 1905.

Editors Herald: In your issue of the 1st inst., the second editorial item, you state: "If any of the missionaries have formed the idea that their labor consists in being ministered unto, petted, pampered, and made much of, they have evidently mistaken their calling," etc. I thought it might not be out of place to send you a few extracts from letters which tell their own story. Under date of January 27, a brother writes: "I came here on the 18th, got out bills, posted them, visited from house to house as wisdom directed. After nine discourses one, a man of family (Smith by name) is to be baptized to-morrow night." Another, written February 17: "It is very cold and we have to walk in the snow up to our waists, yet we do it, and are out every day and preach every night in order to win souls for the kingdom of God." February 26: "Snow and wind have been much against us; visiting and pulpit work have done good. A Lamanite family became interested; we followed them up and for hours taught them the pure gospel from the three books. Mr. Green and his wife were convinced and asked for baptism. Ice eighteen inches thick was cut Sunday, February 19, and a large crowd gathered on the ice, where I preached to them. I went into the water and baptized both the candidates. Everything was lovely, and I felt it brought glory to God and good to the people. Under proper conditions the man (Lamanite) when confirmed was told that he should be enabled to do a good work among his own people. Am still in the best of health. I find it hard work, but we are told to work."

These extracts are from Canada. I thought it might be a hint to the Cutlerites that elders of the Reorganized Church are doing a little work among the Lamanites as well as to show that there are some good as well as poor workers. The joyful part to me came in these words: "So you see, beloved brother, that God is still blessing your converts. . . . I hope this will encourage you. Let us try to be faithful and not let anything draw us from the path of duty." For the good of the work, I am,

Yours truly,

WM. WATERMAN.

[The news contained in these extracts is cheering, and we thank the brother for sending them. We note the closing sentence in the extracts: "I find it hard work, but we are told to work." Thus prompted to diligent labor, success is certain. We wish to append an extract from a letter we received a short time ago. It is not so cheering as those above, but we give it, hoping it may stimulate thought and action that may result in good.—ED.]

"There is so much in HERALD letters lately about the membership not doing their duty, that it looks like they might as well give up and quit trying at all. It looks as if we could never do any good to amount to anything. Bro. — wrote us that he would come here again now if somebody could take his team and go around and give out appointments and go to and from every meeting. I do not know whether we can do so or not, or raise the money to pay car-fare, or anything else. It seems that if he had stayed longer when here last fall, or if Bro. — and — had stayed longer when here afterward, it would have been better than going away so soon, and paying so much for car-fare. When Bro. — left last summer he told us he felt as if he ought to stay but the missionary in charge had sent him word to go to the other end of the State so he must obey. He went, but found no opportunity whatever to preach. No one would come out to hear at all. Then the missionary in charge sent for him to go several hundred miles to another part of the State; and he and another elder went and got to preach once apiece. It seems to me that something ought to be done to prevent so much hard-earned money being needlessly paid out to the railroad companies. My husband says it is the Gentiles sucking all the milk from the church till it will dry up pretty soon. One minister could spend more for car-fare in one year at that rate than three men could earn."

SAN BERNARDINO, California, March 14, 1905.

Editors Herald: I send you one of the tracts of the so-called Reverend Daniel Sault, (messenger, as he claims, to the seven churches in Israel,) and Reverend Erther Queen. While cooking for a bridge-gang on the Santa Fe Railroad, we were sidetracked in Santiago, about a week, so sometimes I would stroll up-town after I got my dishes washed to hear the Penal missionaries sing, or hear the Utah elders talk, or the base drum of the Salvation Army. One night this new man and new religion were presented to me in tract form as I was too late to hear his talk. He had got through and was handing out his tracts like the one I have sent to you. I heard him tell a man near me that there were not twelve tribes of Israel, but only seven; and in some way that I could not just understand, but so far as I could catch his way of explaining it, he was trying to harmonize the seven tribes with the seven churches in Asia. I did not ask any questions, and after reading his tract I supposed the rest would have been just as bad a mixture as that. I never heard of this new religion before. In fact, so many are being manufactured of late that it is hard to keep track of them. I suppose, though, you editors are aware of this new sect.

The woman (Queen) looked just about the same as other women and the man as other men, but had long hair down his back.

Santiago is the dumping-ground of a great many different grades of religion, as it is almost a perfect climate and is quite a resort for many people. The Utah elders have a hall rented there, and say they have a membership of thirty-nine. I wish we had some way to keep an elder there. It would need one well posted and up-to-date, as there is nearly everything to meet.

Your brother,

J. M. MILLER.

"A.—1906, May 29, comes due on Pentecost.

"Q.—How do you know?"

"A.—I have the message direct from God.

"Q.—When did he tell you and how long from the time he told you?"

"A.—On the 1st of September he said it would be one thousand days from the 2d of September, 1903.

"Q.—Where do you expect to be at his coming?"

"A.—With Christ at his appearing at the ingathering.

"Q.—Ingathering of what?"

"A.—Of his elect one hundred and forty-four thousand.

"Q.—Where will that be?"

"A.—Well, there will be twelve ingatherings of the holy city, New Jerusalem.

"Q.—Where is any of them?"

"A.—Three in Michigan, one in Texas, one in Florida, one in Illinois, and mine will be in the southern part of California.

"Q.—When will your ingathering begin?"

"A.—October 1, 1904, close to San Diego.

"Q.—How many members have you?"

"A.—Nine thousand, nine hundred and eighty-seven scattered all over the United States.

"Q.—And will they all be gathered together in one place?

"A.—In twelve different places, twelve thousand in each place.

"Q.—How must a man get in that great gathering?

"A.—By getting his name in the Lamb's Book of Life.

"Q.—How will he get his name on there?

"A.—By signing your name on the natural Book of Life, then you will see your name recorded in paradise in a vision.

"Q.—How do you know?

"A.—God said what I bind on earth is bound in heaven and what I loose on earth is loosed in heaven.

"Q.—At your ingathering, how will you fix yourselves for houses to live in?

"A.—There shall not be the sound of a hammer driving a nail in the city, they will all dwell in tents as of old.

"Q.—What church is this in Israel?

"A.—The seventh.

"Q.—Who is the messenger of the seventh church?

"A.—Reverend David Sault, of Ohio.

"Q.—What tribe is the seventh church?

"A.—Of the tribe of Joseph.

"Q.—What will you think if Christ does not come at that time?

"A.—There is no ifs or suppositions in our faith. He is coming at the appointed time as spoken. Peter says that which is spoken in the ear declare on the housetops. Get your names in the natural Book of Life that it may be found written in the Lamb's Book of Life. Come to Sault, who is the original Joseph."

[The tract referred to in the foregoing letter of Bro. Miller is a twelve-page one of small size, entitled The Seventh Church in Israel. All the "touch up" we need to give it, as suggested by Bro. Miller in a postscript at the head of his letter, is to call the attention of the reader to the fact that this Reverend David Sault, of Ohio, in his pamphlet has set the time of the coming of the Savior to take place May 29, 1906, one year and a month after the convening of our April conference of 1905, which he says comes on Pentecost day.

The quotations we have given are from pages 3 and 4 of the tract.

The second part of the tract is a number of answers to questions in regard to the creation, some of which are not fit for repetition.

A new religion is not a novelty in these last days when men are to wax worse and worse and deception is on the increase from the spirits which John saw go out upon the earth into the whole world.

Those who fix the time of the Savior's return forget what he said in Matthew 24:36: "But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only."—EDITOR.]

Editors Herald: The work of another conference year has passed into history, and it is but natural for those who have been interested in its progress to take a backward glance and see what we have done toward its advancement. With me, the year just ended has been one of much activity, and I have been blessed and prospered beyond any year of my ministerial life. We are pleased to report much improvement all along the line. Most all the branches have taken on new life and excellent prospects are discernible for subsequent additions. Our conference at the capital city was calculated to spur one upward and onward. Perfect peace and harmony characterized all our deliberations. The good Spirit was enjoyed by all, and especially those who delivered the message of life. A goodly number of strangers were in attendance. There is a flourishing branch there. Much credit is due to Bro. H. E. French and

J. E. Matthews for their persistent, discreet, and energetic labors. We have done what little we could to encourage them.

Bro. S. J. Jeffers and myself spent about ten days at Ironton, Ohio. Found splendid opportunities to do much good there. On Sunday, 5th inst, under the warming sunshine of spring, Bro. Jeffers buried three precious souls beneath the waves. All came forth rejoicing. Six or seven more are ready and will obey, I feel sure, on our return. Expect to take tent there this summer.

We experienced a remarkable case of healing there. A well-learned gentleman who had been a Methodist preacher for ten years, recently resigned his connection with them because he could no longer indorse their doctrine and went to work at the cement-plant. While thus engaged he met with a very painful accident. The doctors said he had cracked his spine. He had always been a close student of the New Testament and believed it just as it is. He was not long making the acquaintance of Bro. George Williams and to his surprise found there was a people who believed just about as he read the Scriptures. Hence, believing the signs would follow the believers, he sent for Bro. Jeffers and myself. We found him hardly able to rise from his bed. After a lengthy and friendly exchange of thought, I asked him if he believed the Lord would heal him and that we were the servants of God. His reply was, "I do with all my heart." We then anointed him and laid our hands on him and immediately while our hands were yet on him he was healed, and to test the matter arose from his chair and bent himself to the floor forward, then backward, several times. We expect him to be with us shortly, and he is well qualified to be a great help to us.

About all we see in the daily paper in this country for the past five or six months are war news and Mrs. Chadwick's affair. The former is plainly predicted in prophecy and admits of no comment; but the latter we think will bear a slight change from the utterance of Paul. He said many years ago, "For this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins." But here we have a woman boldly walking into banks and leading captive silly men, laden with infatuation, led away with diverse blandishments. A woman who has the power to induce cold-hearted business men to indorse notes involving millions of dollars, bankers to pour thousands of dollars into her lap beyond the capitalized stock, is a human enigma as hard to understand as the famed female warrior, Joan of Arc.

March 12, Bro. Charles Cooper and myself drove over to the little mining-town of Murray City, and at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hites, about eleven o'clock, I officiated in uniting Bro. Charles Foster and Sr. Sarah Weate of Manchester, England, in holy matrimony. The ring ceremony was used, which was quite pretty and impressive. Sr. Weate and her brother, Henry, had just arrived a day or two before from England. The invited guests were very much impressed with our ceremony, the lady of the house remarking she could not see how anybody could accuse us of polygamy with such language used in our marriage ceremony. Bro. and Sr. Foster have our hearty congratulations; and we believe they are well mated.

Have just closed a series of successful meetings. Saints encouraged to move onward. Some outsiders have become quite interested. The work here has taken on new life. I was ably assisted by Bro. Charles Cooper and Donald Hanna, and the excellent singing of the young people under the direction of Bro. Cooper gave additional life and attraction to the meetings. We are anxiously waiting for tent season. We have some good places awaiting us. This is the most potent way of getting the gospel before the people in new places. I trust the different branches or scattered members of the district will remember the resolution of our last conference, designating the last Sunday in April on which to take up a special collection for the purpose of more effectually prosecuting the tent-work in the district the coming year. Here is an excellent opportunity to do something for the work which has done so much for us. Let us all be workers together with God for the glorious consummation of his purposes.

Hopefully in the conflict for life,

F. J. EBELING.

GEELONG, Victoria, Australia.

Editors Herald: The last word I sent you was upon my departure from Sydney, New South Wales, for Victoria, where I landed all safe after two days "rocking in the cradle of the deep."

The voyage was pleasant, and with the consent of the steward, I preached to a fine audience of about one hundred in the dining-saloon in the evening, and I was greatly pleased to learn through conversation with some of the audience after service, what marked effect "our gospel" has upon the people where it is not known what church we belong to. Prejudice seems to be an awful hindrance to one's spiritual and eternal welfare. Upon my arrival home I found Bro. W. J. Haworth had made steady and permanent progress with the work at our new church in Geelong, and the outlook is encouraging. A Sunday-school was organized by Bro. Haworth and now numbers about thirty-six, with a lively interest.

From some cause or other I took internal bleeding, and was taken to the hospital near by, where I remained two weeks, and then returned home where I have remained since, and have occupied my time in visiting, preaching, and other work which tends to build up the kingdom of God and establish his righteousness.

I do not think my few days spent in the hospital were in vain, for I talked and explained our faith to several who seemed anxious to learn about this marvelous work. They now have my Book of Mormon reading it, and I go in and chat or give tracts and papers when I choose.

The more I know of this latter-day work, the more I learn to love it. The first principles are so plain and easily defended; and then there is joy and peace, inexpressible and full of glory, to be obtained by all true and diligent seekers.

The Lord has brought me through many a rough and stormy sea, during my few years in Australia, which I deem to be a great blessing in preparing for the trying and testing time yet to come.

I want to be among those who willingly fall into line with the onward march of Zion, for the Lord loves the willing and obedient heart.

May peace and prosperity attend Zion is my earnest desire.

Still in the faith,

C. A. BUTTERWORTH.

CAMAS VALLEY, Oregon, March 11, 1905.

Editors Herald: Since our reunion at Lee last August I have been laboring alone. Previous to that Bro. H. L. Holt and I were together in tent-work. I find plenty of opportunities for preaching, and have met with a measure of success, having baptized twelve since the reunion. Seven of them were out of my present field of labor. The citizens of Fieldbrook, California, requested me to return to that place and preach for them again. Bro. Joehnk and I were there in 1903 with the tent for seven weeks, and baptized seven adults. This request was accompanied by the money to pay my expenses, and I felt it a duty to respond to their request. The elements were against me at first. We were four days and nights out on the ocean going from Coos Bay to Eureka, California, a distance that is usually made in sixteen hours, but the Father overruled for the best.

After my arrival at Fieldbrook the weather was fine. I began services the same evening of my arrival with a house full of earnest listeners and continued for four weeks. The smallest audience was thirty-six. At the close of my meetings seven were baptized, all men and women of good report, who will be of benefit to the church. The baptisms were administered on Sunday afternoon. Many of the baser sort were there. Three men and one woman had guns, the woman a teacher in the public school. I presume they thought there might be some trouble, and they brought their guns along to see that I should have fair play. Otherwise my meetings were orderly and full of interest.

There are fourteen Saints there now and they ought to be looked after, and fed occasionally by the ministry. They said they would look after the expense side if an elder would visit them, and would take good care of him while there. I hope the church will see its way clear to send some live men into this field. For the gospel is aggressive, and it needs aggressive men to carry it to the world,—men that can go with the idea of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, men that have the love of divine truth in their hearts that will impel them to go to the world with the divine message that challenges earth and hell to meet it. God's truth is invincible and why should we handle it charily? I believe the men that are honored most of God are those that leave the beaten tracks of others, and go to the thousands of perishing souls who are hungering for the bread of life, and who have never heard a gospel sermon. Many times in my ministry have men come up to me after preaching-services, have shaken hands with me, and said, "That is just what I have believed all my life but have never heard it before." This kind of talk encourages me to try to reach others who are waiting for this blessed gospel.

Brethren of the missionary force, let us honor the calling that God has placed upon us, leaving the branches to the care of those that God has appointed over them and he will honor our labors by giving us sheaves for our hire, and comfort our hearts with the Spirit of peace and consolation that passeth understanding. My heart's desire and prayer to God is that the missionary spirit will be aroused, and the world be warned of its impending doom, and the final consummation of all things brought about in God's appointed way.

I am now at Camas Valley, Oregon, preaching every night. Am having very good audiences, and fair attention. The prospect is good for additions. My home address is Myrtle Point, Oregon.

Hopefully yours in the gospel of Christ,

E. KEELER.

WESTBRANCH, Michigan, March 16, 1905.

Editor Herald: The gospel seems to be progressing in this part.

On December 31, 1904, we were at Vienna. After preaching the evening of the 31st, we stopped at the hotel to talk to some people a short time, and when we went to the home of Mr. Welch, we found the house filled with young and old to watch the old year out and the new year in. And when the "happy new years" were exchanged they proposed that the preacher preach the first sermon of the new year. So, at ten minutes after twelve we opened meeting—no Saints present but the writer. At half past two the congregation was still there asking questions, and on the 20th of January I received a letter from Bro. Monroe of Sage, stating they wanted me to come there at once, as there was a Methodist minister there making onslaughts against the Saints and saying that we dare not meet them in debate on "baptism" and "laying on of hands." We went at once, but when he found that we were on the field and ready for action, he whistled "off brakes," and glided gently down the grade.

We preached at Sage for a week, then went to Rose City, where we found the Religio in a thriving condition, and here we held meetings for a week. On the 5th of February, although there was a driving snow-storm, we troubled the waters and buried three precious souls in baptism.

Later we went to Comins and opened meeting, and had a splendid interest, when on the 14th I received a card from West-branch stating that Bro. J. D. Duncan had broken his leg and wanted me to come at once. Reached him on the 15th at four o'clock, administered to him, and the pain left his leg at once, and in about five minutes he got out of bed himself and stood on his leg, and has not had any pain since, and is sitting up now, writing a letter. So the work goes on, the Lord working with his servants with signs following the believers as they did in times of old. Ever praying for the advancement of the gospel, I remain,

Your brother in-Christ,

GEO. W. BURT.

APPLEDORE, Ontario, March 24, 1905.

Editors Herald: We read so much about the college, but do not hear anything about where the boys and girls are to board. I have been thinking there is money in the West to build a boarding-house to accommodate one hundred students, the boys' rooms on one side and the girls' on the other, with dining-room, store-room and kitchen to the center, and other rooms in connection for comfort and convenience; if necessary, law and order to keep things in their place. And all could be done at one hundred dollars a week for board and twenty-five dollars a week for washing. With every good wish for the advancement of every good work, and a friend to the young and poor,

In gospel bonds,

KEZIA GREEN.

Editors Herald: I have been a reader of the HERALD about three years. I enjoy reading the letters of the Saints; have often been encouraged to try to live a more patient and humble life. We all have our trials; we must bear them patiently. My desire is to live so nearly perfect that when the Savior comes I may be able to meet him.

Let us not boast of helping our brother or sister who may be in need of help. It does not make them happy to have every one know they were in need of help. How nice it is to give; but do it in a quiet manner. The Lord knows who gives; it is not necessary to spread the news. Let us think of other's feelings.

May we always remember never to say anything about our brothers or sisters we would not like them to hear. We are commanded to love one another. If we are doing our duty there will not be time to waste telling of the mistakes our brothers or sisters make. Let us watch ourselves and live as near perfection as we can, then the Lord will bless us with the gifts he has promised.

AUNT SARAH.

OTWAY, Ohio, March 12, 1905.

Editors Herald: I wish to speak in regard to our duty as God's children. We should feel that we are brothers and sisters in Christ; in fact that we are of one family. Paul says, "By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." In other words, into the church. We should live humbly before God, for all blessings, physical and spiritual, come from his bountiful hand. We are not thankful enough for what we receive. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." We are rewarded according to our works. We receive just what we live for in this life. If we do not enjoy the love of God as we should, it is our fault. The writer truly desires to see the Saints grow in the cause of Christ and in knowledge of the truth.

Bro. T. J. Beatty is with us at present. We are having some good preaching, still the people will turn a deaf ear to the gospel. They are blind to the teachings of Christ and the apostles. The earnest desire of my heart is that all may come into the fold and be saved. Christ is the shepherd of the fold. By him we must enter the fold.

The writer desires to say to the Saints, if any lack wisdom, see what James says: "Ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not." We are taught in the word of God to ask and we shall receive. John says we "shall know of the doctrine." I am glad there are a few who know of the doctrine. Let us strive to do that which is right, and shun the wrong. Let us pray for each other. God forbid that any should stray from the fold.

Your brother in the one faith,

J. T. MITCHELL.

LEOTI, Kansas, March 29, 1905.

Editors Herald: I left Ness County yesterday, under pleadings of Sr. Gurwell, "Take more money with you." "No, I prefer not to." "You may get sick." "The Lord will care for me even though I have no money." Arrived at Scott City, and in fifteen minutes the Missouri Pacific train was there three hours late, otherwise I should have had to wait until one o'clock this morning. The agent was at supper. I asked the conductor if he would give me clergy rate without ticket. Said he would. The conductor began asking questions, and we talked religion all the while, until the train stopped at Leoti. Before leaving the car the conductor returned my fare. I thanked him and said, "I am traveling, preaching for the good of mankind, getting no salary." He said, "I thought perhaps you were; here is fifty cents more." He carried my large grip to the depot; then the brakeman came in and requested the agent to talk to me as I would interest him. Stopped at hotel. This morning I talked religion until after nine o'clock. The harness-maker now says for me to come to town ere I leave the county; he will rent the hall for me to preach, bearing the expense himself. I go to Sr. Mary Turner's this afternoon to fill appointment to-night, sixteen miles from here.

"Onward and upward,"

L. G. GURWELL.

SOUTH BRISBANE, Queensland, Australia,
February 22, 1905.

Editors Herald: The work here is moving on slowly. It takes much self-control to be patient. Some of the Saints, especially those who are novices in the work, become very impatient at times. It often takes years of experience to learn what to expect of the world in relation to this latter-day work. We can not build up by the methods or in the time that other churches do. If we tried it our efforts would end in misfortune. Our work is of an educational character and it takes time to understand and appreciate it. When we build up on a "spiritual" basis—a commendable thing in itself—the work does not always prosper. The reason is that new Saints—when left to themselves—usually "run amuck" in the exercise of spiritual gifts. Either false spirits enter in, "manifestations" (?) are created by undue zeal, or there is precipitation in the delivery of that which should be spoken "with care and by constraint of the Spirit." There is also, unfortunately, a disposition to reject caution and counsel and to assume that "we know." And that too in the presence of persons of much greater observation and experience. The result is that many Saints who are substantially spiritual are considered unspiritual just because they do not fall in with all the views of bigots and enthusiasts. It is in this as in everything else,—those who assume to know the most in reality know the least. Let us be careful, Saints, lest we "build castles in the air," weaken our faith, "come to grief," and thus become the means of our own undoing.

One reason why I like this mission is, I am absolutely safe from violence. Religious liberty is more carefully and securely guarded than in "Uncle Sam's" country. Liberty must be curtailed somewhere; otherwise it becomes license; in that case one man's actions infringe on those of another. This has occurred in "Yankee" land. The treatment the Saints have received in America would not be possible anywhere in the British Empire. Even if it took place in miniature we would have no trouble about getting justice from the courts. Abusive language in preaching or debate is tolerated less here than in America.

Progress is possible here if the Saints, local officers, and missionaries will only work and keep at it. In this connection I am reminded of what Daniel Quorm (an English character) says on "Winning souls":

"Now seemin' to me that the first thing is to set ourselves to do it. 'Tis just like everything else,—it wants doin'. It won't do it to be always talkin' about it, an' desirin' it, an' prayin' that we may be useful. We must get up and do it. Simon said, 'I go a-fishin'.' And he might have talked about it, and prayed about it all his life—he never would have caught anything till he went. We keep sayin', 'Dear Brethren, let us go a-fishin';' or, 'You know we really must go a-fishin'.' We talk of how very right an' proper it is, an' how we desire to do it, an' we go prayin' that we may be stirred up to go a-fishin'. But Simon gets out his bait-box, an' his cross-lines, an' he shoulders the oars, an' he shoves off the boat, an' settlin' down he calls out to the rest of 'em, 'I go a-fishin'.' Then the rest, who perhaps had been talkin' about it, shoved off their boats too, an' said, 'We also go with thee.' An' that's the way in fishin' for souls, you must set about it. Why, we stand in on the shore loungin' about the quay with our hands in our pockets, thinkin' that if the fish are to be caught the Lord will send 'em to us. If we want them, we must go a fishing.

"There's something about Andrew, too, that is almost as good as what Peter said. 'He first findeth his own brother Simon.' Now I am sure it is a good plan to go looking after one soul. (All can do this; it requires no particular talent nor special calls). And then there's another thing I like about Simon—he didn't mind goin' alone. I want for every one of us to say, 'I go.' I do dearly love that 'I go': like as if he said, 'You others may please yourselves, but as for me, I'm off.'"—Reverend Mark Guy Pearse.

Glad to note that With the Church in an Early Day is printed and for sale again. Could we not have the lives of some of our experienced men? Such books would build up spirituality among our young people (and others) more rapidly than the novelistic matter some of our papers are printing. We have an excess of doctrinal matter, especially in view of the insipidity of part of it. We would be better off if some of our books and tracts were called in and cremated. They are too weak and indefinite.

In gospel bonds,

A. C. BARMORE.

BELLAIR, Illinois.

Editors Herald: I for one am not willing to see interest in this part die out. We would do our part by elders, should any come to preach for us, sending car-fare. We would like the gospel to be preached at Casey, Illinois, and wish an elder could come soon.

Is it well for Saints to attend the services of other denominations, being in a place where there is only one church, which is the United Brethren? Two can not walk lovingly together except they agree on so important a matter as the gospel of Christ. For Saints to neglect their own meetings to attend those of other churches is not right; but when a member is in a place where there are no Saints, and no chance to attend meetings of his own faith, do you not think that it is better to attend other churches than none?

One great hindrance to spiritual growth is a failure to observe our prayers in the season thereof. This is often very difficult to do in a family if one of the partners cares but little for spiritual things.

I have often been asked why I became a Latter Day Saint. I was led to inquire into the truth of the gospel as taught by the Latter Day Saints, when Elder F. M. Slover came, with others, twenty-five years ago and preached the gospel. Although years passed before I became a member, I was baptized May 31, 1903, by F. M. Slover. I obeyed the gospel in its fullness, and feel to rejoice that the Lord in his mercy has spared my life to be numbered among his people. I hope and pray that I and others may be true and faithful to the gospel.

MRS. MARY A. FERGUSON.

WEST PLAINS, Missouri, March 19, 1905.

Dear Herald: Being a missionary's wife, I am alone with the exception of my sixteen-month-old babe, who is much company for me. I visited a sister this afternoon who is isolated, and has been ever since her baptism. She is firm in the faith, also quite a Bible student. She was baptized by Bro. H. Sparling at a place by the name of Egypt, and the last preaching she heard was by Bro. Joseph Ward. She walked several miles to hear him. There are only a few Saints in this town,—seven I believe, in number, at the present. May the prejudice be removed from the minds of the people so that they will be willing to hear the truth.

Brn. J. T. Davis and Joseph Ensley held a two weeks' meeting here last fall, of which some speak very highly, while others try to laugh it to scorn. There are about nine churches in town, the doors of which are closed against the Latter Day Saints. The visit by Brn. Baker and Brooner was appreciated by us. We are always glad to have the Saints come. I would like to be where I could meet with the Saints in meeting, yet we may perhaps be able some day, by the help of God, to have a branch in this little town.

I desire to live the life of a righteous Saint. Many times I go into by and forbidden paths; but, as my patriarchal blessing says, I must expect to have trials and disappointments to meet, yet if I only remain faithful God will come to my help. And each time as I read this over, it gives me strength and a greater desire to live to gain the eternal reward in the life to come.

Satan tries to destroy my peace of mind many times. He has told me that no church was right, that all were wrong, and if I had not received the blessings of God before no doubt I would have been shaken in faith. As I had been instantly healed, I could not deny my God.

May the Lord pour out his Spirit on those that gather at General Conference, and all like assemblies, and speed the time of building up Zion, is the prayer and desire of

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. J. T. DAVIS.

OTWAY, Ohio, March 22, 1905.

Editors Herald: I was baptized November 5, 1904, and I can say that this is the only true church. I was a member of the German Baptist Brethren Church, or Dunkards as most people call them. I belonged to them over seventeen years, but can say that I never received a blessing, more than God blesses all of his people. I can say that he has blessed me in more ways than one since I came into this work.

My husband came into this work November 26, 1904. Bro. E. E. Long was here in February and gave us some good preaching, and Bro. T. J. Beatty is here now,—came on the 16th and has been here giving us some good sermons.

Your sister in the one true faith,

MRS. MARY F. CALVIN.

Independence Items.

Many changes have taken place within the past few weeks: the lawns and gardens have donned their green vestments, the lilacs and syringas are putting forth buds and the cereals and wild herbage are beginning to spring up for the good of man and the beasts of the field.

The whole face of nature seems to have suddenly changed. The late high winds which put out of commission some of the electric and telephone wires in many places have somewhat subsided and what with the late plentiful rains and fair weather there is much in the prospective to make the heart glad.

The feathered songsters too seem full of the general inspiration that spring has awakened, and the refreshing influences from above increase our joy.

The Saints here have been holding the fort as usual, and the increased activity in all departments has been apparent at the convention and conference meetings as well as at the every week gatherings of the church.

They all have been well attended; but the young people especially seem to be making more attractive both the services and other assemblies, and what has been said by Doctor S. A. Northrup recently is apparently quite true; that "young blood is in demand now more than at any time in the history of the world."

Speaking of the boys he says they have begun early to serve home, state, and church.

Of course the the captious critic and worried church deacon take a few exceptions to this broad view and would like some kind of means to be adopted whereby church etiquette might in certain cases be improved. In our city a week or two ago a rather stringent regime was instituted by which report comes to us from the east side that there was issued a warrant for the arrest of a young man for "disturbing a religious gathering"; but in ye olden time it was not so here in Missouri, and the disturbers did much worse than to throw hats during church service.

Two young men have lately been ordained. On the 12th inst. Bro. Arthur Koehler was set apart as an elder under the hands of Brn. A. H. Parsons, E. L. Kelley, and G. H. Hulmes, and also on the following Sunday a like impressive ceremony was performed in the presence of a large audience and Bro. Ammon White was ordained to the office of an evangelist by Brn. I. N. White, W. H. Garrett, and H. Kemp, several of the brethren and sisters by the aid of the Spirit attesting the true calling of the brother.

On last Tuesday evening the Sunshine Band held a social at which the president, a matronly maiden of fourteen, stated there were eight hundred and fifty Sunshiners in the United States and sixty in this city, many of whom represent the families of the ministry, and creditably too, as evidenced by their witty little dialogues and well-rendered vocal and instrumental music.

Attending funerals, carrying flowers, and visiting the sick and aged constitute a part of their work. "Do something for somebody quick" is their motto, and as one of the beneficiaries of this society we may mention Sr. Annie Bishop, now in her seventy-seventh year.

Our sister joined the church in her native town, Tun, Switzerland, in 1854, and she with her husband, Bro. Charles A. Bishop, passed through many trials and persecutions for the work's sake. They came to New York in 1859 where our brother was ordained an elder and laboring for the interest of the cause baptized one hundred and three persons. Their many hardships were added to by a long and tedious journey over the plains to Utah (having to walk nearly the entire distance), where they remained about two years. They subsequently joined the Reorganization in Provo City, having been initiated by Elder James Gillen, who had baptized seventy and organized a branch there. From Provo they went to Malad, thence to St. Joseph, Stewartsville, and finally to Independence, where eighteen years ago they came "to build up the church and to help bring forth Zion that it may rejoice upon the hills and flourish."

On last Monday afternoon there was a Union Prayer-meeting of the Book of Mormon home department classes held at the church, forty sisters being in attendance.

At the close of the devotional exercises twenty testimonies were borne. To some the teachings of the Book of Mormon were dear because it had been read to them in childhood; to others also because having been isolated from the church they found in it great comfort and they had taught their children to love its plain and simple records. Marked interest was seen when a sister arose and related a vision in which a bright messenger presented to her a view of the sealed plates which were yet to come forth at a time when by faithful and pure lives the children of God will be prepared to receive it. The stake conference passed off acceptably and excellent interest was shown in all meetings. May the time come speedily when the gospel message shall reach the honest in heart of every kindred, tongue, and people, for

"One love, one hope, one duty theirs,
No matter the time or ken,
There never was separate heart-beat
In all the races of men."

Extracts from Letters.

In a personal letter to Bro. Joseph Smith, dated Los Angeles, California, March 19, Bro. T. W. Williams wrote: "I am truly gratified over developments in our branch and district. There is an unseen influence at work in every quarter and manifested in all of the ramifications of church-work drawing the workers together and cementing more compactly than ever before the ties of fellowship. We have had some excellent spiritual meetings here of late. The young men are taking hold and we are constrained to acknowledge the hand of God in it all. Have had good liberty in discoursing on simple (?) first principles of late with gratifying results to both Saint and sinner." The question mark in the text of this letter is suggestive that however "simple" some may think the principles of the gospel to be, it is a mistake to so view them as they are the massive and deeply-grounded foundations on which the whole superstructure of God's dealing with man and the salvation provided for in Christ is built. A man can no more understand, talk of, write of, or preach of the plan of salvation without the first principles of the gospel, than he can treat of the planetary system without the inch measure and the ounce weight; with these last he may tell the distances of the sun, moon, and stars, and weigh and measure their substances; with the principles of the gospel as the basis man may understand and apply all the spiritual phenomena attendant upon man's prior, present, and future existence—call them "first" principles but never "simple" in the sense of being foolish or immaterial.

Under date of March 2, Bro. G. J. Waller wrote from Honolulu that there was increased interest in our work there, both by Hawaiians and white people. He expected to baptize a Hawaiian woman on the 5th. On the 6th he wrote that the woman had been baptized; and concerning the work there he wrote: "Several of the members are doing better, and there is a better attendance at the meetings, and some old members who have absented themselves for a long time have come back to the church. The work in the different departments has been kept up, and in carrying on the same I have been ably assisted by Elder Ingham. In the Sunday-school work I have been assisted by my daughters, who have taught in the Honolulu Branch Sunday-school, as well as in the Waikiki Japanese and Hawaiian school. The work of the Zion's Religious Society has also been continued, and of late our Book of Mormon class has been fairly well attended by Hawaiians who seem much interested in studying the lessons as prepared in the Religio Quarterly."

Joseph Farnsworth, Idaho Falls, Idaho: "The Saints here all feel well in the work, and are enjoying good health. We are doing what we can to help the work along."

Sr. J. R. Clark renews for Autumn Leaves and writes: "I think the Leaves grows better each year, and I do love to read the articles written by our own people, especially the experience of elders, and the articles by Sr. Emma Burton and by Bro. Parsons, lately published. These should be read aloud to our children, and this will give us an opportunity to explain passages of scripture to them which tell of like blessings being received through faith and obedience to the laws of God. Or if we have had like experiences in our lives since obeying the gospel we can relate them to our children and thereby increase their faith in the latter-day work, always explaining to them that we may all receive these blessings if we but live faithful lives. We do without all other papers and reading-matter so as to be able to take the church publications. While I do not have time to read all of them aloud, I always read the Hope and Autumn Leaves to them anyway. Children forget so quickly that we have to keep reading to them and relating experiences over and over to them or they soon lose interest and do not grow in the faith as they would if parents were more faithful in their duty in teaching them."

C. W. Hawkins, San Jose, California: "Elder J. C. Crabb has been sounding the gospel trump here in San Jose for the past week, and it is no uncertain sound either. He also attended our district conference, which was a peaceful one. Fine spring weather here. Cala lillies in bloom. Wild oats headed out the first day of February."

Conference Minutes.

New South Wales.—Convened at Wallsend, December 31, 1904, to January 2, 1905, C. Avery and P. M. Hanson presiding; James Donohue, secretary pro tem, A. A. Ferrett, assistant secretary. Ministry reporting: P. M. Hanson, A. C. Barmore, and G. R. Wells, of the Seventy; Elders C. Avery, E. J. Haworth, J. Jones, T. Gregory, A. Seaberg; Priests C. A. Davis, D. Lewis, J. W. Smith; Teachers J. Cornelius and W. C. Heinrich. Branch reports: Balmain 180, Tuncurry 113, Hamilton 92, Nambucca 63, Wallsend 49. Bishop Lewis' report: Net balance in hand from all sources, including the "United Building and Tent Fund," £77 11s. 11d. Apostle J. W. Wight reported as delegate to last General Conference. Regarding Graceland College, he expressed disapproval of the action of trustees continuing the college against the will of the body. In so doing the creature dominated the creator. The General Conference had not sought to "amend" the Articles of Incorporation; but had only suspended one part, which they had a right to do. This in no way conflicted with the law of the land. Determined to vote in harmony with convictions at the coming conference, he felt it his duty to inform this district of his views, requesting that we keep them in mind when choosing delegates. Elder G. R. Wells stated that owing to not having been provided with a proper room in which to do the clerical work belonging to the Gospel Standard and the Book and Tract Agency, he had fallen behind with his books. This explained why a full and auditable report was not forthcoming from the new manager of the Standard who received the books only a few days ago. This was followed by a formal report from Elder W. J. Haworth, the present manager, showing receipts of £34 16s. 5d., mostly from the former manager; and expenditure of £24 16s. 3d., some £12 being for the purchase of type, etc. The balance was therefore £10 2d. 5s 12s. had been expended for house rent. By the advice of the missionary in charge, 8s. per week was being paid for rent for the family residence of the editor and manager, who later on found that by adding some shillings per week extra he could buy the house on the rent purchase system. From his own private means he had paid a substantial deposit, and now asked the conference to pass an opinion on this item. A lengthy communication was then read, signed by the two members of the board in Victoria (W. J. Haworth and W. Mackie) and the mission president (who had been appointed to act for the three New South Wales members of the board re removal); explaining the circumstances of removal of the Standard, showing among other reasons, that the paper as now set up by the editor could be printed in Victoria cheaper and better than before by contract; urging that no rash action be taken but that the paper be controlled in a broad-minded spirit; and recommending that the editor, type, and paper be removed to Sydney (as soon as the present missionary moved away) where, rent free, the paper could be printed still cheaper. The two above documents were read, some parts reread, questions asked and discussed informally, when it became apparent that the conference was not of the mind to either approve or disapprove without much amendment. An expression independent of either was arrived at and the foregoing were spread on the minutes as they stood. After much deliberation, occupying the greater part of two days' sessions, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted: "Whereas some dissatisfaction has arisen re the managing and editing of the Gospel Standard, we as a conference adopt the following: 1. We favor a fortnightly issue of the Standard if found practicable. 2. We object to the Standard as it now is. We believe, however, the present editor can make it more satisfactory to the mission. To aid him, we suggest the appointment of an assistant editor. 3. We object to the editor's rent being paid out of the Standard funds. Let it be paid in the ordinary way. 4. This district is not at present anxious to have the paper printed in New South Wales. We are aware of the honor and sacrifice connected with its publication,—that there is the former, all will admit; and there is the latter, too, since it detracts from the mission work of the editor. We are willing to bear our proportion of both these. 5. We consider the removal of the Standard and change of editors as being, under the circumstances, hasty and unwise. We do not, however, favor a change in either, now. 6. We are opposed to the present editor moving back to this State for the express purpose of editing the paper here. It will involve needless expense and is generally unnecessary. To bring the Standard back at this juncture would show a fickleness of purpose and management that would injure both the paper and the church. Let it remain in Victoria a reasonable length of time." Each of the above clauses received separate consideration.

Brn. C. Avery and Jones moved that Bro. G. R. Wells "be respectfully requested to reconsider his decision to, in the near future, leave these shores for America." This was carried and in response Elder Wells expressed appreciation of the spirit in which it was tendered and asked for time to consider the matter, promising a reply at the evening session. The decision of the High Council in America on the "Appeal of Henry Broadway versus New South Wales District" was now read. Decision of council was that "Action of Bishop's court and conference of 1903 be affirmed." It was decided to adopt this report and to regard it as final as far as this conference is concerned. A communication from Elders C. A. Butterworth and W. J. Haworth was received and read. Having a desire to see the above-mentioned case satisfactorily disposed of, they suggested that resolutions be formally moved, which, among other things, affirmed the decisions already given in the case; and considering the occurrence of many blunders and much misunderstanding proposed that the matter be now left to Bro. Broadway as a matter of conscience as between himself and God and that the disability under which he has been laboring be now removed. It was then resolved "That, inasmuch as we have already decided that the decision of the High Council shall be final, we can not entertain the resolutions." The following was moved by Elders Barmore and Wells: "Whereas the sending of missionaries to this country, especially for short periods, involves heavy expense; and whereas this mission has material suited to, and sufficient for its own work; therefore be it resolved that we suggest to the missionary in charge, and the Quorum of Twelve the appointment of local missionaries and the lessening if not the cessation of importations." This was given little encouragement, and after a brief discussion it was disposed of by the following: "That inasmuch as the proposal is premature, it be now laid on the table." Bishop George Lewis nominated the same members of the board of publication as were elected last year. Considering that as the missionary in charge has, ex officio, much to do with the appointment of the editor and manager, it was thought to be more consistent to place him on the board, and the nominations were so amended, upon the prior approval of the bishop. The board as now constituted is as follows: Bishop G. Lewis, president, Elders C. A. Butterworth, W. J. Haworth, J. Jones (of Newcastle) and G. R. Wells, the latter consenting to serve only on condition that the board be given power to fill the vacancy in case he were removed to America during the year. Such power was conferred to apply to all temporary vacancies as well. Elders Kaler, Luff, A. H. Smith, L. A. Gould, and J. W. Wight were elected to represent this district at the coming General Conference in America, with no instructions regarding Graceland. The next district reunion was set for Good Friday, 1905, at Bulahdelah. The rule requiring two months' notice of motion to alter matters of custom, etc., was rescinded. The next district conference will convene in Sydney, December 30, 1905. The election of officers resulted in choosing Elder P. M. Hanson for president, Elder J. Jones vice-president, and Brn. Donohue and Alfred Ferrett secretary and assistant secretary respectively. Bro. McLaren was sustained as district recorder. The new book of rules was adopted. An entertainment consisting of new book solos, recitations, and short addresses on Sunday-school vocal solos, contributed to by visiting and local talent and Religio work contributed to by visiting and local talent occupied most of the last session on Monday evening, January 2. By motion the rule requiring the reading of the minutes at 2. By motion the rule requiring the reading of the minutes at close of conference was for the present suspended. Just before the final adjournment, Elder Wells made the statement previously promised. He greatly appreciated the implied confidence couched in the respectful request to reconsider his decision to soon leave for America. It would give him a stronger heart for the work he might be permitted to do before leaving. Having been informed that God had a work for him to do in his home land, he was not in a position to say positively that he would stay longer. However, he would convey the request to the proper appointing authorities at the coming April General Conference, and with it would go a statement that he is willing to remain as much longer as they in their wisdom should decide. Believing that God's Spirit would prevail in their deliberations in the matter, he believed all could abide by the decision. If God willed he was ready to serve the mission a few years longer. The conference then formally adjourned.

Tent for Australia.

To All Whom it May Concern: All Saints have or should have an interest in foreign mission work. In view of this fact this appeal is written. As a missionary in Australia I see the need of a tent. The climate and habits of the people are suited to tent-work. The mission is carrying a heavy burden and times are very hard. The country is suffering from a drought of nearly ten years duration. I therefore kindly request Saints everywhere, and especially in the United States and Canada, to assist us in securing a tent. As an individual I would especially appeal to my old associates in gospel work. When I think of their faithfulness in sustaining my past efforts I am persuaded this request will not be in vain.

Please send your contributions to the address given below. The Religio especially will please take notice. Here is a chance to do mission work. What is sent will be reported to Bishop Lewis and credited either to the New South Wales or Australasian tent fund.

In gospel bonds,
ALMA C. BARMORE.
Emperor Street, SOUTH BRISBANE, Queensland, Australia.

The foregoing appeal has been submitted to me for approval, and as a compliance with the appeal will doubtless enable some to assist in a good work who otherwise might not have opportunity, the effort is therefore commended. This notice I understand was not first placed before Bishop Lewis of Australia for the reason that time could be gained by forwarding direct for publication. Notices of this character, however, from that country would first properly be submitted to the bishop in Australia. This appeal for a tent to help in the missionary work in Australia is for the general good in a sense as well as special to Australia and doubtless will be approved and appreciated by all. Let all who can help. Saints in America when more convenient may send to the undersigned at Lamon, and it will be forwarded direct to Bishop George Lewis, Wallsend, Australia, or to Bro. Barmore.

Trusting that all who can, will improve every opportunity within their reach and circumstances to assist in opening the way for the preaching of the gospel "in all the world," I am,
Very respectfully,

LAMONI, IOWA.

E. L. KELLEY.

Notices.

To the Saints in the Branches and the Scattered Members of the Northeastern Illinois District: By vote of the district conference held at Plano, September 24, 1904, it was decided to raise the sum of $175 for the purchase of a district tent, said tent to be in readiness for use by the district during the summer of 1905. At this date only about one half the sum named has been raised; some have pledged who have not yet paid. We hope that each Saint in the district will have sufficient interest in this matter to do his individual share so that the committee may be fully prepared to purchase the tent in time to meet the requirements of the district. Please send your remittances to Joseph Blakely, Plano, Illinois. Chas. H. Burr, chairman of committee; J. M. Blakely, secretary.

Died.

COX.—Youngest child of William and Sr. Bessie Cox died February 16, 1905. He was born July 21, 1904. Blessed by Elders J. W. Rushton and William Newton. When born the darling babe weighed fourteen pounds and continued in robust health until some six weeks before his demise, when he began to pine away, his sickness terminating in water on the brain. His grandmother was greatly attached to him. Nothing which kind and loving hearts could suggest was left undone. Laid to rest February 19 by sympathizing friends, Elder F. J. Pierce officiating.

BARR.—At Lamoni, Iowa, March 23, 1905, Sr. Hattie I., wife of Mr. Lester J. Barr, and daughter of Bro. and Sr. Henry C. Smith, aged 45 years, 10 months, and 28 days. A tumor was the cause of death, after a brief illness. A great sorrow has fallen upon the husband and three daughters, and many friends mourn with them. She was a good wife and a devoted mother. Was baptized by her father in Oregon in 1889. Bro. J. W. Wight had charge of the funeral-service, and sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins.

LOVELL.—At Lamoni, Iowa, March 25, 1905, Sr. Ida B., daughter of Bro. and Sr. Alfred Lovell, aged 30 years, 4 months, and 2 days; disease, appendicitis. She was a loving daughter and sister, and faithful in attendance at Sunday-school and the prayer- and preaching-services. She was baptized by Bro. James McDiffitt April 26, 1891. Her sufferings were borne patiently and she met the destroyer without fear. At the funeral-service Bro. A. S. Cochran had charge and Bro. H. A. Stebbins preached the sermon. Her parents, three sisters, and her brother grieve over the loss.

MELTON.—Bro. Henry Melton was born October 9, 1864, in Washington County, Nebraska; died March 5, 1905, at Valley, Nebraska. Our brother was married to Sr. Sadie Brown, March 1, 1886, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, and leaves wife and five children, four boys and one girl. He accepted Christ and was baptized September 29, 1891. He was noted for his honest, upright conduct, and his absence will be greatly felt by his many friends; and in the home circle there will be a vacant chair. The funeral-service was conducted by Elder W. M. Self.

MCLEOD.—At Pelican, Ottertail County, Minnesota, March 19, 1905, Sr. M. Matilda McLeod. She was born July 12, 1863; married to W. B. McLeod October 3, 1883. Was baptized June 21, 1885 at Cormorant, Becker County, Minnesota, by Elder Henry Way and confirmed by Elders Way and Martin. She was a good Saint and lived her religion; was respected by all. Fifty-nine carriages followed the hearse to the grave. The casket was covered with flowers. She leaves a husband and daughter to mourn their loss, besides a large circle of relatives and friends. Funeral-sermon by Elder T. J. Martin.

I Know Quit-to-Bac Will Cure. It is a God-Given Remedy

No says Bro. I. M. Dungan of Woodbine, Iowa. Writing July 3, 1904, says: "After having used tobacco for 30 years I feel that I am thoroughly cured of the habit by the use of your 'Quit-to-bac.' I commenced using 'Quit-to-bac' March 8, 1904, and used two and one half boxes, and have had no desire for the past two months, my health is better every way and I feel like a new man. I feel that I can not speak too highly of the merits of 'Quit-to-bac,' for I believe 'Quit-to-bac' to be a God-given remedy, that it will cure one of the most filthy and useless habits Satan ever invented; therefore I unqualifiedly recommend it to all addicted to the use of tobacco in any form, and will cheerfully answer inquiries from any one as to my case—how I treated myself, etc., if a stamp is inclosed. You are at liberty to use this recommendation as seems best to you. . . . I close with a heartfelt 'God bless you.'" Three boxes Quit-to-bac postpaid only $1.50 guaranteed to cure or money refunded for the asking. Address, (Bro.) B. F. ORDWAY, Peoria, Illinois.

AN article of five hundred or ten hundred words, with one or two points made plain, will attract the reader when a longer one would be passed over. Practice brevity, and do not try to cover too many points of law and doctrine in one article.

OUR readers will doubtless notice that the HERALD comes to them now in a new dress. We trust that this will be acceptable to her readers, as it doubtless will be. Our business manager and the mechanical force feel that the new dress is a beautiful one, and we think they are right.

IN a letter to the Editor dated March 24, Bro. Robert Winning wrote as follows concerning the historical HERALD: "In article on St. Joseph, hastily written, I regret very much my omission of the arduous, trying, and assiduous labors of Hyrum O. Smith, and of the good, wide-awake, active Sr. Burr, and of William Hawkins, Russell Archibald, Sr., Srs. Burgoyne, Holden, Gardener, and others of old-time, faithful Saints. Would be glad to have you name them." We are glad to make the correction noted in Bro. Winning's letter.

At the evening session, after reading the minutes and adopting further report from the credential committee, a report from the committee on normal work was read. Discussion of the report of the sunshine committee was then resumed, and continued at length, and on being put to vote the motion to adopt the report was lost; but it was moved and carried that we look with favor upon the work that has been done by Zion's Hope Sunshine Band of St. Louis, Missouri. Meeting adjourned till eight o'clock the next morning.

APRIL 5.

At eight o'clock the prayer-meeting was in charge of T. A. Hougas and J. M. Baker, and the time was profitably occupied.

Shortly after half past nine the convention reassembled in business capacity.

A report was read from the First Primary committee: Anna Salyards, Eva M. Bailey, Ruth L. Smith, Mrs. David H. Blair, and Mrs. W. A. Blair.

The secretary's report was then read. His comprehensive statistical report of districts and schools we believe will be of interest to our readers. (See next page.)

A resolution concerning the printing of texts other than King James' Translation in Quarterlies was read, also a report from the committee on normal work: J. A. Gunsolley, Roxanna E. Anderson, and Louise Palfrey.

The recommendations in the reports of the superintendent, home class superintendent, and secretary, that steps should be taken to revive the work in localities where it is lagging, and that field-workers for certain fields should be appointed, and that a plan might be formulated to enable missionaries to aid in the Sunday-school and home class work, was referred to a committee of three to report to the afternoon session. Charles Fry, A. Carmichael, and F. G. Pitt were appointed to act upon this committee.

The report of the committee on normal work was taken up. This report recommended that a committee of three be appointed to whom shall be intrusted the work of providing matter to meet the demand for normal instruction, and matter associated with such principles and laws of teaching as may be applied in the teaching of the lessons, supplemented by such Bible study lessons as may be found to be desirable and practicable. The following resolution prevailed: "Resolved that we believe the time has arrived to publish a teachers' quarterly, the nature of which to be determined by the judgment of the executive committee and the Quarterly editor."

The following resolution was presented concerning other texts than those from the King James Translation in Quarterlies: "Whereas the needs of the home department and Sunday-school require all quotations other than those from the King James Translation be printed in the Quarterlies with each lesson, therefore be it resolved that we request the executive committee to so provide." Resolution was adopted. Convention adjourned until half past two in the afternoon.

At the afternoon session the auditing committee reported all financial statements correct.

The following communications from the First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve were read and ordered published in minutes:

To the General Sunday-school Association in Convention: The Presidency has been notified by your committee in an official way that the General Sunday-school Association is now in annual convention and ready to receive any communications or suggestions which the Presidency might have to offer. This courtesy is duly appreciated by the Presidency.

We are quite fully cognizant, we think, of the good that is being accomplished by the Sunday-school work, and our sincere wish is that such good work may be continued without interruption, but we feel to issue a note of warning to beware of undue complications.

We trust that there will, at no time, be an interference in Sunday-school work on behalf of the ministers in the field. We should deplore any disposition on the part of the ministers in this direction.

We sympathize with the convention in the amount of "extra help" which is had in connection from those who, while in the ministry, are not ordinarily characterized by activity in the Sunday-school work. We trust that such freely proffered "help" (?) will grow less each year.

May the Spirit of the Master ever be with the Sunday-school workers, with its guiding, directing influence, and may the development of the Sunday-school be sure, steady, and safe.

Fraternally yours,

FREDERICK M. SMITH, Secretary Presidency.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 5, 1905.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 5, 1905.

To the Superintendent and Officers and Delegates of the Sunday-school Convention; Greeting: We are in receipt of your communication, and while we do not have any official instruction or counsel to offer, we take this opportunity of expressing to you our appreciation of the work done by the Sunday-school, and trust that this convention may prove beneficial in creating increased good feeling and greater efficiency in executive work.

Praying God's blessing to attend each and all who participate in your sessions,

Yours very sincerely, in behalf of the Quorum of Twelve,
PETER ANDERSON.
U. W. GREENE.
JOHN W. RUSHTON.

A resolution on Hope enlargement was read requesting the present session to take some steps toward appointing a committee to wait on the board of publication, to ask that measures be taken to enlarge the Hope to eight pages instead of four as at present. Signed by Mrs. T. A. Hougas and Fannie I. Morrison. The resolution was adopted.

The committee appointed to consider the recommendations in the reports of the superintendent, home class superintendent, and secretary reported, advising that a personal or circular letter be addressed to each missionary in his field requesting his personal assistance, and upon receiving favorable reply from said missionary he should be furnished with such Sunday-school literature and other help as may be needed in that particular field as seen by him and reported to the local Sunday-school authorities. With reference to field workers for certain localities it was recommended that the executive committee be authorized to engage the services of competent workers for limited periods. These recommendations were adopted.

A provision was carried appropriating two hundred and twenty-five dollars for contingent expenses of the association.

A request signed by P. I. Rogers and Mary A. White was read, asking that this convention of the Sunday-school now in session take up the advisability of issuing leaflets for smaller children of the Sunday-school and especially of the missions.

The election of officers resulted as follows: T. A. Hougas, general superintendent; J. A. Gunsolley, first assistant superintendent; Albert Carmichael, second assistant superintendent; D. J. Krahl, secretary; John Smith, treasurer; Sr. L. Etzenhouser, librarian; John Smith, R. S. Salyards, and Duncan Campbell, revising committee. The convention also expressed itself as favoring the reappointment of Sr. T. A. Hougas as home class superintendent.

A motion to entertain the petition from the mayor of Nauvoo at the evening session prevailed, and meeting adjourned till half past seven.

At the evening session the advisability of issuing leaflets for smaller children of the Sunday-school, etc., was taken up and it was moved and carried that the convention look with favor upon this request and that it be provided for if found practicable, and that it be referred to the superintendent and editor of the Quarterly for final action. Resolution adopted.

The committee appointed to present the matter of the enlargement of the Hope to the board of publication is Evelyn Burgess, Fannie I. Morrison, and Sr. M. Walker. Minutes of the evening session were read and approved.

Frederick M. Smith of the Presidency being present, he was invited by the chair to explain, if he so desired, certain portions of the communication from the Presidency read at the afternoon session, to avoid if possible any misunderstanding upon the part of members or delegates of the convention.

The secretary read the portions referred to, as follows:

We trust that there will, at no time, be an interference in Sunday-school work on behalf of the ministers in the field. We should deplore any disposition on the part of the ministers in this direction.

We sympathize with the convention in the amount of "extra help" which is had in connection from those who, while in the ministry, are not ordinarily characterized by activity in the Sunday-school work. We trust that such freely proffered "help" (?) will grow less each year.

Bro. Smith offered the following explanation:

I am sure that was plain enough to the minds of the Presidency. And I am sure a good many of you will remember that the time has not been very long since we had a great deal of opposition to the Sunday-school work by ministers in the field. I wonder if any of you do remember such as that? I wonder if you are cognizant of the fact that even yet the Presidency is made aware that there are people in the church who are opposing the Sunday-school and the Religio, and that some of these are ministers, too?

Now so far as I am concerned, as one of the Presidency, I understand it to mean that we deplore any disposition upon the part of the minister in the field to throw sprags in the wheels of progress of either the Sunday-school or Religio. [Applause.]

So far as that part about "extra help" to the convention is concerned, that is clear, I think. And I really think that one of the difficulties is that it has come pretty close home to some of those men, and they are trying to pick flaws with it. [Applause.] I look upon that matter something like this: There was a time when the Sunday-school and Religio might be considered infants; and there was a time when those infants had to be carried in the arms of the ministry; at least some of the ministers were progressive enough to extend the help that was needed before the child could walk. And I am disposed to think that some of these men have forgotten the fact that the child is able to walk largely by itself now, and they feel that unless they are holding the child in their arms it is liable to stumble and fall, when the fact is that the youngsters have both become quite capable to run by their sides and hang to their hands. [Applause.]

Last evening I was here (one of the few sessions—the only one in fact that I have been able to attend until to-night) and if I had not seen Bro. Hougas in the chair I would scarcely have known but what it was a General Conference; for nearly every speech and motion made, were made by men whom we recognize as being of the active ministry; and I was quite convinced by some of the speeches, that the speakers knew little if any more about their subjects than I do, and that is not very much.

Now, why is it that these men must come into these conventions and take the time that is necessarily short, and hence important and valuable, and simply bar out some of our active Sunday-school workers? A man who is in the active ministry in the field has so much to do in church-work that he can not be overly zealous in active Sunday-school and Religio work. I do not mean by that that he must withhold his influence; but when he is district Sunday-school superintendent, or president of a local, or other things of that kind, it is just sure to hamper his work as a church man—just sure to.

We have many Sunday-school officers, many district officers, and how many have we heard from in the last two evening sessions? Most of your work on the floor to-night was done by men who have been in the field. What has become of our district presidents and superintendents? We have not heard from them.

Last night I was very anxious to hear from some of those people concerning this sunshine work, and I simply had to listen to some of these elders talk, and we heard about almost everything under the sun except sunshine work. I believe there are plenty of people in the Sunday-school and in the Religio who are perfectly competent to take care of this business without we men of the church thinking we must hold this infant in our arms any longer.

I do not mean by that that there ought to be a separation of the auxiliaries from the church, for the closest affiliation that exists between son and father is when that son has reached the age of accountability and is able to respect and honor the integrity and the intelligence of the parent who has guided him along the pathway of life. I believe we ought to have reached that affiliation between the auxiliaries and the church, as should exist between a father and a mature child.

I look with favor upon the movement made to-night looking forward to the holding of a convention outside of the immediate influence of the General Conference. I believe that the time is not very far distant when these children will be big enough so they can hold their own conventions.

If there is anything ambiguous about these statements I would like to have you tell me now, and not go away from here and say, "Bro. Fred did not make his statements clear." I have tried to do so.

It was moved and carried that this speech be published in the minutes.

Bro. H. O. Smith made a few remarks, which were ordered incorporated as written up by himself in the published minutes. They are as follows:

Mr. President: I was one who objected to the language used in the communication from the Presidency, and that objection was not prompted by the fact that I had been guilty of consuming the time of this convention, as insinuated by the last speaker. I have not made a speech since I came here. I objected to the language because it implied that the ministry were hindering the progress of the Sunday-school and Religio work.

Complaint is made that the ministry are taking up the time of this convention to the exclusion of the Sunday-school workers. The facts are that the ministry have been sent from every part of the country as delegates to this convention. I am a delegate from at least two district associations, and am the only delegate present chosen by one of the largest districts in the Southwestern mission and I consider that that gives me a right to the floor here and I want to give notice right here, and now, that as long as I am a delegate to the various conventions of the different organizations of this church I shall have something to say when measures are introduced that I consider wrong, and shall consider it my duty by voice and vote to sustain that which in my estimation may be right. I object to the insinuation in the language used that the ministry are opposed to these two organizations and that they interfere in the good work to its detriment. I have yet to find the first man, in my sixteen years of ministerial work among the active ministry, who opposes the work. I consider it a part of my work as a minister to foster and spread this work as far and as widely as I can. When these organizations first started the cry was made that the ministry were not doing all they could to help them along and were in opposition to them in some cases. We were congratulating ourselves that this was a thing of the past, but now comes a note of warning from the Presidency that there is "grave danger" ahead for these institutions if something is not done to cool off the interest of these men. One of the most ardent Sunday-school workers we have come to me to-day at the close of our afternoon session and stated that she thanked God for the encouragement and help the Sunday-school had received from the ministry, not only in the fields, but in the conventions, and gave it as her opinion that the Sunday-school organization had been able to steer clear of many a shoal and breaker because of the wise counsel that it had received from the traveling ministry. I gladly welcome the era of good feeling that now exists and has existed between the Sunday-school and Religio workers and the traveling ministry for some time past as shown by the testimony of this sister, and I deplore the fact that anything should occur, occasioned either by the acts of the ministry or by the statements of others, that would destroy or have a tendency to disturb that good feeling and confidence.

Bro. T. A. Hougas called the attention of Sunday-school workers to the fact that change of officers in districts was not regularly reported as it should be, which caused considerable extra work and trouble.

There was but one district secretary in the whole association who had sent notice of every change for several years; that one was at Little Sioux, Iowa. Attention was called to the fact that the publication of a teachers' quarterly would inevitably be delayed for some time, and probably would not appear before the first of next year.

Bro. Gunsolley stated that an effort would be made to supply missionaries with the Religio Quarterly, and with leaflets, constitutions, etc., if they would but make their wants known. Bro. Hougas stated the Sunday-school Association would endeavor to do the same in the matter of Sunday-school supplies. Convention adjourned until next year.

APRIL 6.

The fifty-second General Conference was called to order at ten o'clock by President Joseph Smith, and it was moved and carried that he act as temporary chairman of the meeting. "Redeemer of Israel" was sung; prayer by Patriarch Alexander H. Smith.

The chair was authorized to appoint a committee of three to report on permanent organization and on credentials. M. H. Bond, O. H. Bailey, and T. J. Sheldon were appointed as such committee.

Pending the report of this committee speeches were listened to from several of the ministry. President Joseph Smith spoke as follows:

It is somewhat difficult to enter in upon an occasion of this kind with a speech. Some are more ready than others. But we are met under pleasant auspices, and for a work in which we are all engaged and all intensely interested. What may be accomplished by our thus assembling together remains to be seen; and if any have met under the impression that lowering clouds are over us and round about us, the experiences of the past ought to have taught us and we ought now to remember that the work we have engaged in we have been pleased to recognize as the work of God, and there can be but very few of us who have not in the past experienced those things that clearly teach us that it has been under the supervising power of God, and that his Spirit has wrought upon the hearts of men, fashioning them in their purposes for good.

The fight, so far, has been a long and a tedious one. It has taken us a long while to secure an open arena in which we have been recognized; but our experience now teaches us that those things through which we have passed have been productive of good to us as individuals. And while it has taught us this it has also taught us that there is no one of us so peculiarly essential to God's work that the work must necessarily come to a standstill if he drops out of it.

I am reminded this morning of the experience of a certain celebrated minister who was desirous of crossing from one portion of the continent to another in the Eastern world, and it was very tempestuous. The officers of the vessel would not strike out upon the voyage, and the minister was very restless and could not sleep. He was mourning and feeling bad; and the servant who was with him asked him if he might be allowed to ask two or three questions. He was answered, "Yes." He asked him if God had not ruled the world well before he came into it. The minister said, "Yes." "Will he not rule it well when you have gone out of it?" "Yes."

"Well," he says, "do you not think it would be wise to trust him to rule it while you are in it?" The bishop turned over and went to sleep. Now it strikes me that that ought to be a present consideration with us all.

I should be very loath to think—and those of you who have been with the church for a long time will remember that I have called attention to it more than once—I should be very loath indeed to think that if I should be taken out of the work that it would necessarily go to pieces, become a prey to ambitious men or ambitious spirits; and if it has been properly grounded this can not possibly occur.

The prophets before us have fallen asleep, and so have the apostles. Man after man has been raised up to take their places, one by one, as they have fallen. And I believe that this will continue to be so long as we remain within the charter of our liberties, our spiritual liberties. And I can not think of the work, so far as I myself am personally concerned, without feeling a restful assurance that no matter what may be my fate, if I keep the faith, the work will be cared for by Him who instituted it, and my place will be amply supplied so far as human agency may supply it, and the work will still go on.

Some ten years ago I called the attention of the people, at a conference at Independence, to the fact, when they were proposing to choose me for a certain work, that they must remember that according to the limit of human time, only about ten years would be granted to me. During that time I might work. It was supposed by some that it was a sort of a prophecy that I would not live ten years, but I have, and two more to the good. How much longer I may live I do not know; but I am willing to confess this morning that if I have as hard a job to keep sweet for the next ten years as I have the past ten I will age pretty rapidly. You know what I mean by that expression. These Western men know anyway. It means to retain complacency of spirit under disadvantageous circumstances, to bear the continual fret and wear and tear of everyday life, the meaner and minor things that try the temper and ingenuity of every man, and I guess some women.

I congratulate you this morning upon one thing; that is this: I called the attention of people some years ago, and stated prophetically that the time would come when it would require that the representatives of the Reorganization should be qualified men for exalted positions, to stand between the church and the world. And you know that that time has been put upon us, and is now. Exigencies have risen which it has been our province to note. Men have been found who have thus stood between the organization and the world. So far I was a true prophet, anyway.

You will remember, also, that I have predicted that sooner or later what was known as the Reorganization and what was supposed to be its chiefest disputant in the theological field must stand face to face, or would stand face to face before the great American jury, and the people of the world. Well, that prophecy has come true. And what we had for years urged, and for which had been charged with making statements that were false, and maliciously stating that that was untrue, has been presented in the open before a tribunal, the superior of which among the governments of men does not exist; and the very things which we stated have been openly confessed by those who were capable and qualified, and from whom it must have been expected that they should have stated just the position they occupied.

We are to be congratulated this morning on standing where we did twenty-five, thirty, forty years ago, believing that within the law we had our supremest liberty, and upon the basis of honesty, uprightness, and truth the interests of the work must necessarily be conserved.

Personally, I have some charity for the hypocrite; for he has some reasons for being what he is. I have some charity for a man who is addicted to drink because he has had a hard job to keep from his besetting sin. But, I confess before you this morning that I have small patience for a liar. A man who deliberately tells an untruth, who tells that which is false, there is no excuse for him, can be none. God is a God of truth; never authorized any man to lie. And when any man tells me that he speaks by virtue of the Holy Ghost and who makes a statement that is utterly false, and I know it to be false, I can safely challenge that he did not speak it by virtue of the direction of the Holy Spirit.

I know that it is within humanity to shelter one's acts by excuses. No man ought ever to utter an excuse to his fellow men that he does not believe to his own satisfaction would be received and accepted in the highest court. If he has a fault let him confess his fault, take the judgment that may be passed upon him by those who are competent of his compeers to pass that judgment, then bend like an obedient boy does to the correcting rod of his father or of his mother.

The work lying before us is a world-wide one. We are expected to stand as exponents of the truth, the New Testament scripture as we understand it. The higher criticism has brought before us an active field in this respect, and the faith of a great many, especially among the young, is being broken down and overcome by this disposition in the world to get rid of the consequences of the law by denying the validity of the law itself.

You and I who have confessed to the validity of the Scriptures, the voice of revelation, are not justified in attempting to get rid of the consequences of our actions, public or private, by attempting to destroy the law. That is bad policy always. It does not hold with the judge in any court, and wise lawyers do not use it.

There may be, and probably will be vexing questions raised during the sessions of this conference. We must approach those questions in calmness. We must approach them in quietude of demeanor. However earnest we may be we must avoid the charge of evil motives upon each other either by inference or by direct accusation. It will not do to—I was going to say fight in conference, but the word fight is now being used extensively to represent the conflict that may be going on between ideas and principles of men who are engaged in the maintenance of different positions, and looking at things from different viewpoints. While they grow earnest, such is the characteristic of the American organization that when the matter has been decided by competent authority those who have been overcome submit with whatever grace they can to what has been done. I hope this will be our case; that after we have contended earnestly for what we believe to be right within the rule of propriety and good-fellowship, and are overcome, we will let that decide the matter. My fellowship is too dear to me; my fellowship in the church and with my fellow men and with the association of the Spirit is far too dear to be rudely disturbed; nor can I afford to think of anything that shall separate me from the love of God and his work. Paul thought that principalities nor powers, things past nor things to come; things under the earth or over the earth, nothing of this character could separate him from the love of God.

I have lived so far without putting myself amenable to the laws of the church from offenses to my fellow men, my associates—personal offenses. I hope to continue to do so. If in the prosecution of my ministerial duties I should outrage any of the proprieties I propose to hold myself amenable to the proper officers of the church. And if I can so conduct myself morally as to leave a heritage of an untainted life in this respect to those who may follow after me I shall be satisfied.

I am sorry, but it sometimes occurs that the older a man grows the more foolish and careless, and the less guarded he is in regard to his moral conduct. Yet it seems to me the older a man grows the safer he should be everywhere in the intercourse with his fellow men, and the freer he should be from the condemnation of evil conduct.

I can not afford to be found, or to be guilty and then be found as having committed breaches of propriety and evil conduct that should leave a tainted heritage to my children or to my fellow associates in the Lord. What may have been in the past is a matter of course; but as I look forward I do so with a good deal of confidence, that having so reached the years that I have I shall be able to lay down the weapons of my earthly warfare in good fellowship with my fellow workers. I am going to try to do that, anyway.

The work comes to us from every part of the world, and will be represented here on the floors of this conference by somebody. We are not strangers although we may never have met before in the flesh. We have that common bond of brotherhood that binds us very closely together; and hence there are no strangers among us.

As I look back over the past year I find that several have dropped out of the active field. Some of them for cause, and some of them by death; some of them honorably discharged, and a few, unfortunately, lacking the honorable discharge. But they are gone. What the next year may bring, and the harvest of death may be we do not know. But we ought to be prepared for it, under every condition of life; let it come when it will, we ought to be prepared for the change.

The active ministry are here, many of them, from over all the country, from the far South, the far North, the far East, and the far West. We know something of the character of the work they have been doing, for the fields are so very nearly alike universally that the experience of one is almost the experience of another, varying only by temporary surroundings.

I hope we shall be able to possess our souls in patience during the continuance of the session; and that when we depart hence we will have the privilege of going home, not having been sorely wounded in the house of our friends, the house of God.

I thank you for the kindness with which you have treated me as your presiding officer during the year that is past, in my associations with you as men in the field. If I have neglected any one of you I am not aware of it. When I have been written to in regard to matters of importance, so far as I could answer them and commensurate with my duty, I tried to do so. If I have neglected any one of you I shall be quite willing to make reparation so far as lies in my power. I believe I have nothing further, but that I am at your further service.

The Presiding Bishop, E. L. Kelley, was called on by the chair, and responded as follows:

Mr. Chairman: I was trying to make my speech by moving resolutions which would call out others. I am certainly enough interested in this work to cast in my mite at most any time to help in anything that is possible for me to do, for the reason that I apprehend that I simply have an opportunity in this life to accomplish some good work. It depends upon me whether I shall improve the opportunity. I believe all of us have a like opportunity and that when we shall have filled the measure of this to the satisfaction of our heavenly Father, we will have reached the time and the condition when God's acceptance of us as a people will take place.

We are here this morning to enter upon conference—a work that I apprehend all are equally interested in, equally anxious to see forwarded, and equally desirous to see it make a triumph. If there are any who are not desirous of a triumph of our work, they should excuse themselves at once.

We are working for the accomplishment of something in this world, not simply to have a place. There is a hope in view on the part of the Saints that is as exalted as the divine promises of God to his people in the ages of the past. You and I are privileged to enter upon the work of trying to attain to the full fruition of this hope and these promises. We ought never to think that our calling is not a high and exalted one. There is none in this world that I know anything about that equals the calling of those who are present this morning, not in the halls of legislation of the world, not in the places of authority are there to be found any who have a higher calling than those who have enlisted to do faithful work in the army of the Lord. We ought not to underrate our calling, neither our opportunities, but move forward in solid phalanx to accomplish our work, laying the foundation of Zion and building up according to the pattern that God has laid in his word. It is not simply that we are to send our elders abroad to preach the gospel in all the world, but it is also to so lay the foundation that we may retain with us those who are converted and those who are raised up as the children of the converts to the Zion of God.

I noticed a short time ago an inquiry passing through the papers as to why it was that the increase of the membership, has not been so great in the past few years as it was in the earlier days of the church. I have not seen, however, an adequate answer. If you will glance back over the records, you will notice that if we had but retained in our own ranks, those who have grown up in the church, the families of the membership of the church, retained them all to the present time, the increase would have been as great as it is had there never been any new converts. Did any of you ever think of that? It is not on account of the fact that the eldership have not been moving out in the world, that the per cent increase has diminished, but it has been on account of the fact that we have not cared sufficiently for those at home, and I have been pained time and again to see entire families who had simply gone over and out of our ranks because they were not properly trained and fed within the ranks. Jesus said, beware of the leaven [the doctrine] of the Pharisees; because we have not been aware as we should, our children have fed with the kind of food that has taken them out of our ranks instead of holding them in solid phalanx within, as they should have been held. There is where we have had a great loss.

In commercial business, it is well understood that it is not the individual who gathers in the most in this world who has the most. A man may be able, on account of his gifts, to gain for himself, so far as bringing into the hand of himself and family, thousands and even millions of dollars, and yet stand comparatively a poor man. If he brings in and does not take care of that that he brings in, and it gets away, there is little saved. He has made simply a passageway for others to gain. We must not make the same mistake with reference to our work as a church and a people. The same God that said, "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," said that he would gather his people, and lay the foundations of Zion and build it up. I believe in the work of the building as well as I believe in the work of carrying of the message abroad, and I have never seen the wisdom of an individual going abroad in order to teach others while he left his own family at home to go to destruction, and I do not believe that God approves of that kind of work. We must take care of those that are at home as well as going abroad to sound the tocsin to others. If we do not, the enemy will come in and divide us in our own ranks and overthrow us in the way that we are not looking for.

I do not urge one word to hinder the preaching of the gospel in all the world. I have never advised as yet the taking out of a single missionary from the field who could go out and perform that work as a missionary in the fullest sense of the word, never one; but I have said time and again that any who are not now in the missionary field, young man or otherwise, who can go out and preach the gospel and perform the work of a missionary in the full sense, we need not hesitate sending every one when God calls, so far as finances are concerned. An elder that will go into the field and perform his duty is worth more than his immediate expenses; but we want in connection with this to leave some of our men to help retain and preserve that which we have at home and not waste or lose at home as we scatter abroad. These are the lines that I believe that we should look after and be careful that we do not move out of the way.

I am hopeful of our work, hopeful of its triumph. I do not expect anything else than that by and by there will be a triumph and that Zion will arise and shine and the nations of this world will acknowledge her light. Let us help, then, to make it so and God will pass the commendation in his own time.

The Presiding Patriarch, Alexander H. Smith, spoke as follows:

Was in hopes the committee would come before Bro. Kelley got through that I might escape being called upon.

Our president made a remark that I think would be well enough for me to recall to your attention. It is the thought that we rest where we did forty years ago. Now so far as our faith and the doctrine is concerned, we stand right there. And I think that one of the most pertinent remarks that I heard while I was in Utah some years ago was when one of the leaders asked his son why he did not enter into the ministry and move forward with the church. The answer came that he was not satisfied. He could not bring his mind to accept the conditions. He says, "Father, while you and your brethren claim to have the oracles of God, and to be moved constantly by the revelations of God, and the 'boys' (referring to the Reorganization) have no authority, have no God with them, have been moving in their field of action, there is one thing that is very peculiar. While you have taken position after position, position after position in your work, you have had to retract and back down from them. But the 'boys' have taken a consistent position and they have never had to concede a single point. Now it is puzzling to me that if you are led of God constantly, by revelation, how it is that you take positions and back down from them? I am not satisfied with that."

I feel to rejoice because so far as our faith in the principles is concerned, and the organization as it is progressing, as made manifest, we have never had to make any concessions. We have been fighting, it is true, a peculiar fight. We have had peculiar conditions and adversaries to contend with; but with them all let me call your attention to the fact that something like forty years ago the Reorganization met in conference in Bro. Israel Rogers' barn in Northern Illinois, and at that time there was not a house of worship in all the United States that the Reorganization could call its own; not one.

Now while we stand upon the foundation, our feet fixed, and the building has been going on, the superstructure has been spreading abroad until from Maine to Florida, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific, over all this broad land, aye, and across the deep waters on each side have sprung up houses of worship that belong to the Reorganization, the people of God.

And this congregation that I see before me reminds me that during the past twelve months there have been peculiar influences at work, and it has been forcibly brought in upon my mind, the peculiar organization of the representatives of this work. Sometimes you hear men talking about "putty men." There are positives and negatives. Now in this body of representatives there are very few negatives in organization. Almost every one of the representatives of this church, so far as I am acquainted with them (and I have had my hands on the heads of a good many of them) are positive. And because of their peculiar, strenuous personality they move this work right along against all the opposition that is brought against it. And one of the peculiar reasons of their success (I say one of them) is the fact that every man of them, when they are out representing this work, stands, feeling that the weight of the work rests upon him, and he is ready to defend it under all circumstances and against all forces that are brought against him every one of them have that feeling.

Our brother made the remark, also, that we must not think that if things do not go just the way we want them to that they are going to stop. The feeling is with the representatives, a great many of them, that if things are not going just the way they want them to go or just the way they think they should go, they are going wrong. Do you not know that principle has helped in the work? It has sustained these men when they were out in the field, put them in such a state of mind and condition that they have fought strenuously for every inch of the ground they have covered, and they are not willing to concede anything unless they have contended for it, and gone over and seen that that is before them from every point of view.

I like the work because it is a progressive work. I like the idea, the thought that church-buildings are springing up, being built over all the land, because it is in evidence to the world that we have come, and that we are here to stay. We are here to stay till Christ comes, and we are building for that purpose. And we can afford to put up with some inconveniences. Our brother touched upon the thought of maintaining and sustaining and building up our families, and taking care of our children; it is a good thought. I remember when the church sent me to Utah on a mission. When I went and talked with my mother, seeking all the counsel from her I could get, she said, "Alexander, you are going out West as a missionary ostensibly to save souls. There are souls right here at home that are just as precious in God's sight as those souls out West; and I want to tell you that you will never convert one of those leading men who have gone West. They have sinned away the day of grace." That was my mother's statement. My little children were growing up around me then. I feel to thank God that since then every one of their names has been enrolled on the church-books.

The work is spreading abroad. It is becoming more and more important. We can see the necessities that are before us better than we could twenty-five, thirty, or forty years ago. And yet there is not the same demand made upon the ministry that there was then. I remember my first visit through this country as a missionary, when I had to take my hand-satchel and walk across the prairies from place to place. And when I see the train coming in with car-load after car-load of representatives, coming here to this place that but a few years ago was a corn-field, why, I rejoice that my brethren of the ministry do not have to go through the same experiences that we had to go through forty or twenty-five or thirty years ago. The demand is not made of them to-day. It is not necessary to-day. I am glad of it. I only hope that every minister, that every soul shall feel the necessity of making sacrifice in this life, and not think to get everything that they can, get hold of it and make use of it for their own uses, but that they will be willing to make sacrifice for the work. It is a day of sacrifice. The Lord tells us it is a day of sacrifice until Christ comes. Do not think that you can sit down and get along in this work without making sacrifice. You can not do it and prosper in the sight of God. You must make the necessary sacrifice to make your calling and election sure before God.

It is hardly needful for me to call the attention of my brethren to the past. My brother has called their attention to the clouds that sometimes obscure the sun of prosperity and cause us to doubt. Do you not know that is the work of the adversary, to bring clouds in over us and hide us from our Father's face if he possibly can, and remove us from the influences that should bring us near to him? And again, do you not know that the adversities of life are calculated, when they are properly met, to bring the individual, in character, brighter, and better, and purer, and grander before God than if they were all the time prosperous? When they are all the time prosperous they depend upon their own strength and prosperity. They think it is their own wisdom that has brought it; and when adversity comes and they are called to suffer adversity, they call upon the Lord to help them, and when the Lord helps they feel it and know it and understand it. And if they are attuned aright it brings them nearer and nearer to God, under a better condition to enter right into the field of action. Whatever there is threatening, whether the clouds are dark or bright, they are ready to stand firm in their position and meet all conditions as they come to them.

The Lord is working. He has forced the issues that have been between us, the world and our opponents in the West. He has forced them right to the front, as a brother said, so that the jury of the people of the United States, the world, has passed verdict upon those issues. God is moving in that direction. I once told the people in the West that whatsoever was sealed in darkness should be brought to light and revealed upon the housetops. They asked me where I found that. I told them I found it in the Book of Mormon. If they believe the Book of Mormon they must understand that what they had done and what was being done by them that was under cover in their sealings would be revealed upon the housetop. Take the action of the committee that has examined those witnesses from the West and pray tell me how much higher on the housetops could it be placed than it has been placed in the examinations of this national committee?

I am glad that we are in this work. I feel thankful that during the past year I have felt the inspiration of God with me to a great degree; and from the testimony of those that I have been instrumental in blessing they too have been blessed under my hands. I rejoice in that and am glad. I only pray that God may continue my life and prolong it so long as I am useful to him; and when that work shall have been accomplished and it is time, I hope he will just call me and take me right within the veil. I know that the work will go on when I shall have passed away. I have no fears whatever in that regard. May God bless you.

The chair then stated that they would listen to some who had been out on the firing line, and called upon Elder T. W. Chatburn, who responded as follows:

Mr. Chairman: It is hardly right to abuse a man when he is out in the field on the firing line, and then abuse him when he comes to the conference. However, I have certainly been edified in listening to the remarks of our brethren, and it brings to mind some things of the past and reminds me that we are moving on. I can remember in the very early sixties, when Bro. Joseph first came to Gallands Grove,—black beard, black hair, a young man; about the first sermon that he gave us, he told the people there to freeze to their land and stick their stakes and stick them deep. At that time we were looking forward to the near future when something would sweep Missouri with the besom of destruction, and the Saints would yoke up their cattle and strike out for the Zion land. And I heard old men, when the sermon was over, talking on the corners. "Well," they said, "the boy does not have the spirit of his father; that was not the spirit of the old prophet." And they thought perhaps he was mistaken, and so on. We had stuck our stakes then, many of us, and looking through they ranged just like a straight row of trees. We have had to pull up our stakes and plant them again; still the prophetic words that were given then surely have been fulfilled. I remember that in that sermon he said he did not know how long he would live; but, he says, "Brethren, I know that I shall live to see the time that the name of a Latter Day Saint will be made honorable." I have often thought of it and when assailed upon the outside and when we have been on the forefront and had to defend this work against such fearful odds, seemingly, I have often wondered, "O Lord, when will it be that this will be utterly and completely and entirely fulfilled?" I am thankful that in the main it is fulfilled to-day. While there may be some isolated places where perhaps it is not entirely fulfilled, yet in the main it is literally fulfilled, through the courts and otherwise, and as we have heard this morning, God is working, and the positions that we occupy to-day are easier, fairer, and brighter than they ever have been since I knew the church. We are better understood out in the western country. We are better understood by those people, also by the world; and I am sure that we are moving on and moving upward. We are occupying higher ground and we stand fairer before the world than we ever did since I knew anything about the church.

And how oft have men risen up and tried to drive us into some kind of leading-strings; but as oft it has always been resolved that in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants is our rule and guide to faith. And that is the reason I love this work—there are no leading-strings, no shafts in it. We have plenty of room in which to grow. I love the idea of expansion, I want plenty of room so that if we have to change about a little we can do it without doing detriment or violence to our position. And it seems to me the Almighty has made this provision, that we may grow in grace and in the knowledge of his truth.

I am thankful this morning that I can be numbered with you, grateful that I am a Latter Day Saint; and I hope by God's grace to still continue along the line. I am sure that my expectations, perhaps along with yours, have not been fully realized in some sense. We had thought years ago that the Lord would hasten his work more so than he has; but we are growing more patient as we get older, and we believe that God will work his own work in his own time, and that the final culmination will come. So this morning I feel grateful that God has been as merciful to me as he has; and I am thankful that this work ever saluted my ears. I am satisfied that it has done me good and made me what I am, and though we are sinking into the sear and yellow leaf and soon the last sunset gun will be fired, yet we hope that come what may, whether it is the palsied hand or the tottering feet, through all the changes that go to make up the last great change, whatever it may be, we hope to live and die a Latter Day Saint. And I am satisfied that the work has come to stay. I have seen the time in my early life when I thought perhaps it was a bubble or a splinter off of the old church, but I have grown out of that, and I can bear testimony this morning that just so long as the rivers flow, so long as the hills remain and have not been worn out or washed down, just so long as those angry clouds shall give their gushing rains, to enliven the babbling springs by the mountain-sides, this work will remain and it will yet cheer thousands unborn. And as we grow older and see the final culmination coming on, I feel to thank God that we have been so well grounded and so well fastened upon the eternal rocks that it shall remain.

My faith is still in the work, and I am satisfied that sooner or later it will triumph. Thank you.

Elder J. W. Metcalf, from Kentucky, spoke as follows:

Brothers and Sisters: I have been quite edified by listening to the brethren who have preceded me, and especially in listening to the brother who has just spoken. It has only been about six years since I met this brother in controversy; and I rather filled up in listening to him this morning, until I feel that I am hardly able to say anything. But I rejoice that my talk with him in controversy led me to examine into this work, to investigate it; and in my investigation I became convinced that this is the work of God. And entering into it I have been more and more convinced by the manifestations and evidences that have been given to me time and time again by the Spirit of God. My associations with the church have been pleasant; and I have enjoyed this work. And notwithstanding I have met with things that have been unpleasant, things that have risen that seemingly were going to bring about a crash, yet through all of that God's hand has been with us, and we have seen the work go out victorious, and I feel to rejoice this morning that we have that faith and confidence in this work which the brother has just expressed; that the work has come to stay, and it is gathering in from the nations of the earth men who will be able to represent it, who will be able to stand and meet the adversary, that the name of the Lord Jesus will be honored through their work.

I am glad to say that in Kentucky, the parts of Kentucky where I have been laboring, we are gaining the confidence of the people, and I believe the time is coming that there will be a work done throughout our part of the moral vineyard. It has been a very hard place to introduce the work, and it is still a hard place; but its doors are more open to us now than they have been. I am glad to report that to you this morning, and I feel to rejoice in the work from the very depths of my heart. I am glad that I have entered into this work, and I feel that I want to remain, if the Lord will give me grace to bear the consequences that may arise. I desire to remain faithful and true to him like a man and like a servant of God. Thank you, brethren.

Elder F. G. Pitt, who has been laboring in the East, spoke as follows:

I feel a little like our brother who has just spoken, as it is termed in England when the cars are full, I feel "full up," and I do not know whether I shall be able to speak to you or not; but one thing I can say, I am glad that I am in the conflict, for a conflict it is; and while I have not altogether escaped the weapons of the enemy, I have not been seriously wounded that I know of, but still am strong in the faith.

My experience in the last year has not been altogether satisfactory to myself, as I have not done as much as I would like to have done. It may have been my own fault, perhaps it is, and perhaps it is not. In the East we have a little insect known as the mosquito. They are not dangerous but they are very annoying, and in the spiritual atmosphere down there we had something of the same sort to contend with, annoyances something like a spiritual mosquito, but as the cooler weather and the wind drives off these insects, so it seems they have disappeared, and conditions are better.

I have been very much edified with the remarks made, and especially with that part referring to the work as being a substantial one. It is substantial, and none of us need to be afraid of advocating it. When I was in England I found that I could stand on the street corner and throw out this truth without fear, because it was able to take care of itself. I wish I could see it make the progress that some claim, but during the last few years it seems to me that the work of reaching the people is more difficult than ever before. Why this is so I do not know; but there is one thing that is very consoling, and that is, the harder and more severe the conflict, the nearer we seem to get in touch with the Almighty; and though we have only been able sometimes to preach to a few, we have enjoyed as much liberty as when we were talking to hundreds.

I am pleased with what was said about taking care of our own. I fear we have been negligent along this line. We have been anxious to get people into the church, and have not been sufficiently careful of taking care of them when they were in. Now right here is where the work of the church is necessary. At the present time we need pastors to take care of the flock, men who are converted themselves, not only to first principles that have to do with the saving from sin, but men who are converted to those higher Christian graces, such as love, and joy, and peace, long-suffering, and gentleness, and charity.

I was greatly impressed with what was said about taking care of our own children. Years ago when I lived in Plano, a great deal was said about men leaving their families in the hands of God and striking out as missionaries, and I wondered whether this were my duty or not; and I made the matter a subject of prayer, and in answer I received a dream that satisfied me. I saw before me a beautiful wheat-field. In this field were men laboring, and it seemed to me I was walking along the road, and there was a party in charge of the field, and I asked if I could go in and labor. The one in charge said, Yes, go in and labor for an hour or five minutes as you have opportunity, and your time will be kept, and you will receive a reward for all you are able to do. That was sufficient guidance for me, to take care of my own family, while I labored locally as my circumstances permitted until they were able, to some extent, to take care of themselves, and when they were thus able, or partly able, I entered the field to devote all my time to try to convert others. And I know when I have been far away from home, one of the greatest consolations to me and to my companion has been that our own children were safe in the fold. If I had to see them wandering about as lost sheep, it would be very hard for me to try to do my work successfully as a minister.

What I think we ought to do is to take care of our own; and you young men who have families, it seems to me you can do a work just as acceptable, at least some of you can, right at home, by taking care of your children while laboring locally in the branch rather than to go out as missionaries and leave your families to the mercy of the enemy, so to speak, where he has more control of them than we have. We need men in the branches—active, honest workers—men who will look after the young. And right here I believe a word will be in season to some of our older ones; the Lord has commanded us not to forget the gladness of our youth, and I think that we ought to so labor that we do not forget the little ones. I have felt the most blessed when I have been trying to teach these little ones the way of life. When I have seen their little faces looking up so earnestly into mine, as I taught them the truth, and they seemingly understood me, I have felt well repaid for the work I was doing with them. I think that we ought to try to preach so that the little ones can receive good from our preaching.

I remember in one place when I was in Northern Illinois District there was a camp-meeting being held. As I entered the tent I heard a mother say to her children, "Now children, you run away and play until meeting is over, and then you can come back." I think there is too much of this letting the children play while we are at worship. I asked them to give me the privilege of holding a meeting for the little ones, and the older ones need not come, but we would preach to the little ones. Well, the older ones became to the service too, and we had the tent full of both old and young, and all were blessed. I think we need to take more care of our little ones. God will hold us responsible for those that are given into our charge.

There is much to encourage us. Most of all, God is with us when we do right. We have the evidence that he is with us, and no matter whether it is storm or sunshine, dark or bright, if we can only know that God is with us we can afford to await the time when this glory shall be revealed and success attained.

May God help us to be faithful.

Elder Richard Baldwin, from Pennsylvania, spoke as follows:

Mr. President: I would sooner sit down and listen to my older brethren and those who are perhaps more capable of interesting you than I am, nevertheless there is one little maxim I have always tried to follow; that is, when I am called upon, do the best I can.

When I entered into the work, I entered into it with the feeling that no matter where I was, or what I was laboring in, I would try to do my duty. In the field where I have labored I believe I can report that the last year has been the most successful year of my experience in the work. In the places where I have labored, as I have gone into a community and opened up one place, two or three others have opened up before me. As I was telling a brother the other day, in the latter-day revelations the Lord has said for us to learn our duty and act in our calling, and when we do so, if we move out, God will bless us. I have tried in the past year, and I have proved him, that his word is yea and amen. As I have moved out in my calling and tried to present the gospel of Jesus Christ to the people the divine influence of God's Holy Spirit has been with me, and I have been enabled to present this beautiful work to them, and they have sat with eager eyes and with listening ears to learn the truth as it is revealed in the gospel of Jesus Christ.

In our section of country, Pennsylvania and Ohio, I believe that the field is ripe. The only obstacle that we have had to meet the last year was the want of help. The cry was, "We want preaching," and there was nobody to send to occupy those places.

I am glad to report to-day that if we will all do our duty, thrust in our sickles and reap, that God will bless us, and the work will advance. I am interested in this work to-day, though perhaps I may not be able to give you the experiences of some who have traveled more. Nevertheless where I have labored I have been impressed with this one beautiful thought, that when we do our duty God is with us, and the thought is, Who can be against us? I am interested in the work and aim to go forward and do whatever little God may have in store for me to do. Thank you for your kindness.

Elder J. A. Grant of Michigan spoke as follows:

Mr. Chairman: I am truly glad to have the opportunity of meeting in this conference. I have longed to be here, yet I thought some weeks prior to coming that I could hardly afford the time when I saw the necessity of work all along the line. I thought, "Can I spare the time to go to conference?" But I am glad I am here and that we as workers together may meet together and receive the benefits to be derived from such meetings.

In the part of the world I have been laboring in, (Northern Michigan,) we feel the work is progressing nicely; while at times clouds seem to arise that will for the time obscure our spiritual horizon, yet we feel encouraged to continue on. But as the great train of God is moving on in this world once in a while it comes up against a landslide. You know the evil one is ever endeavoring to thwart the great plan of God; and while the train is moving along at a rapid rate sometimes there are collisions—we do not feel discouraged, though there may be a wheel broken once in a while. We simply just run in those gigantic levers and move off the rubbish and let the cars move on.

We are doing the best we can in Northern Michigan; the work is moving along nicely, and we have no complaints to offer. We are trying to work in harmony with each other. And I was much impressed with the remarks of the Bishop, that we must look after those that are already in the fold. Jesus said on one occasion, "He that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." And while it is true that we are gathering in, we must look after those that have already been gathered in, and I was glad to hear the remark from other speakers here that we are sorely in need of pastors, sorely in need of those that feel the interest in the souls of those who have cast their lot with this people, that they need to be educated in the higher and nobler and grander principles that will ultimately bring us to inherit that realm of bliss when Jesus Christ comes to reign in glory.

Therefore I hope while God spares my life and while I am permitted to labor with you, dear brethren, that I may always be found laboring for the right, that we may be in that condition of mind, that our minds may be so elastic, as to grasp truth and righteousness and thus put into execution those principles that we love so much in the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Elder J. M. Terry, who has been laboring in California, spoke as follows:

Mr. President: I feel gratified in having the privilege of meeting with you at this conference; and I come, representing, I trust, in my feelings and soul something of the sunlight of the sunny State that I represent away over in the far West, and, as President Roosevelt termed it, "beyond the West."

I am glad to report that this glorious work of the kingdom is moving on. And while in some regards there may be a little too much of the "Pacific" feeling and disposition, yet we have over there a grand army for this truth. There are those there who love this work, and whose faces are turned Zion-ward, and as I hear talked among the dear Saints of that part the desire to gather together, I try to impress upon them this one principle: that it requires more than a mere residence in Zion to constitute the true gathering; there must be a preparation of heart. Zion is the pure in heart. And that preparation of heart and soul can be accomplished upon the Pacific slope largely before the gathering.

So far as my experience in that sunny region is concerned, I feel very grateful that the work is moving there, though it is usually reported that with that people, in that climate, a condition obtains peculiar largely to the climate, that the people are not inclined to hear the gospel. This is largely true. And while this may be true there are those there who are coming out from this condition, are listening to the truth, and are obeying it.

I am grateful for the privilege of being in this work. I consider myself fortunate in having had quite an experience in this gospel work. At one time in the history of the work I was acquainted with about all the missionaries in the church, but as I look upon this audience I see many young, bright faces of those who have grown up and have taken hold of this work, and have become too numerous for my personal acquaintance. I am glad that the work is moving on. I was pleased to hear the sentiment expressed by those upon whom the main burden of the work rests, that the work is here to stay. And I have that confidence in this work that I am willing to place all my trust, place my life-work in this glorious cause. And I have no reason to believe that I shall be disappointed.

I have this testimony to bear in conclusion in regard to the care that God has over his servants: that as he has told his servants to go out and preach the gospel and he would take care of them, I can testify that during the thirteen years of active work, and much more in local work, as I have put my trust in God, gone out in the work, God has ever stood by me. We have been cared for, and surrounded by kind friends. In time of trouble those dear ones have stood by us, and the Spirit of God has been with us, and we have been thus preserved, and trust to continue in this glorious work.

The committee reported on organization, offering in nomination as presiding officers the President of the church and his counselors, Joseph Smith, Frederick M. Smith, and R. C. Evans, to preside at all conference sessions and arrange time and nature of services, speakers, etc. They also recommended that the secretary of the church be chosen as secretary of the conference with power to select his assistants. Sr. May White was nominated as chorister, she to choose assistants. The matter of ushers was left to the presiding officers. Report was adopted.

Report of general church recorder, H. A. Stebbins, and C. I. Carpenter, assistant, was read, showing a fair growth in numerical strength, the net gain being but little less than one year ago. There are seventy-five districts, and six hundred and fifty branches. Twenty-two new branches have been organized.

There have been 2,503 baptisms—seventy less than for the previous year. The gross gain is 4,165; gross loss, 2,642; net increase, 1,523. Iowa leads in the number of baptisms (359); Missouri leads in net gain (419), resulting from so many removing to Missouri.

Reports were also read from the church secretary, R. S. Salyards; C. A. Butterworth, missionary in charge of Australian mission; and the committee on revision of church history. Bishop E. L. Kelley reported that the committee on incorporation in Canada had not been able to finish its work. Reports from the Seventh Quorum of Elders, in England, and from the Sixth Quorum of Priests were read.

A request from Graceland College Choral Society asking the use of the auditorium for Friday night to give a musical entertainment, a collection to be taken up for the purpose of purchasing a piano for the college, was granted.

Announcements were made as follows: E. H. Durand to speak at the Home at seven o'clock with S. W. Simmons to assist; W. E. Peak in the church, assisted by Richard Coburn; the prayer-meeting Friday morning at nine o'clock to be in charge of Walter Taylor and W. Pickering; preaching-service at fifteen minutes to eleven by A. B. Phillips, assisted by S. K. Sorensen.

A petition from New South Wales requesting the return of Bro. Gomer R. Wells was referred to the Presidency and Twelve.

C. I. Carpenter's resignation as church librarian was read and it was stated by the President that the resignation had been accepted by the Presidency, and F. M. Sprague had been appointed to act until the present conference. It was moved and carried that the acceptance of the resignation and the appointment referred to be approved.

An invitation from Independence Stake to the General Conference and auxiliary societies to hold their next annual sessions there was read. Action upon the matter was deferred.

Petition from Mobile District was read requesting that Mobile, Alabama, be made a mission, and that a missionary be sent to labor there. This petition was referred to the Quorum of Twelve.

A request from Bro. Walter Haworth, of Australia, asking instruction as to whether he, being a Seventy, should accept an ordination as counselor to Bishop George Lewis, was referred to a committee consisting of one of the Presidency, one of the Twelve, one of the Bishopric, and one of the Seventy. Joseph Smith, F. A. Smith, G. H. Hilliard, and H. O. Smith were designated by their quorums to act on this committee.

The matter of the boundary line of the Pittsburg District was referred to a committee of three to be appointed by the chair. The chair appointed G. T. Griffiths, Bro. Baldwin, and U. W. Greene. Song 145. Benediction by F. M. Smith.

APRIL 7.

Meeting called to order by President Smith. After singing No. 101 and prayer by W. H. Kelley, R. C. Evans acted as chairman.

The question was raised as to the legality of the resolution of the day previous in providing for the use of the church Friday night by Graceland Choral Society, and the resolution of the conference of 1902 in reference to the subject was called for and read.

The committee on the boundary line of Pittsburg District reported that in their judgment the boundary lines should remain as adopted April 10, 1897, with the addition of Brooks and Hancock Counties, in what is known as the pan handle of West Virginia. Report was adopted.

Credential committee made additional report.

The committee to whom was referred the petition from Walter J. Haworth, of Richmond, Victoria, Australia, reported that they deemed it inexpedient to take an active minister of the Seventy from that service to that of the Bishopric, and recommended that if on inquiry from those present the necessities of the case require that Bro. Haworth should act as counsel to Bishop Lewis, he should resign the office of seventy or be ordained a high priest, thus preventing any friction or cause of complaint. After a motion to adopt, and considerable discussion, followed by a substitute to the effect that the matter be left to the discretion of the seventy and the missionary in charge, the whole matter after further discussion was referred back to the committee.

It was moved that the action of the body in granting privilege to Graceland Choral Society to use the evening hour for entertainment be reconsidered. Motion lost. It was then moved to rescind the resolution of 1902 regarding entertainments. Motion carried.

Report from the church librarian, F. M. Sprague, was read; also report from Fourth Quorum of Deacons recommending that quorum be disorganized and then reorganized. Report of Heman C. Smith, historian, and D. F. Lambert, assistant historian, was also read.

A report from Zion's Religio-Literary Society was read.

The matter of ordaining male and female workers in the Religio which was referred to the conference for final action, came up. Motion to lay on the table was lost, and the matter was referred to a joint council of the First Presidency and Twelve.

The committee to whom was recommitted the matter pertaining to Bro. Haworth's request reported: "Resolved that the said Bro. Walter J. Haworth may accept the position of counselor, providing the missionary in charge concurs in the necessity for the appointment." Report adopted.

Other items will appear in published minutes.

The following report was read from the joint council of the First Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric:

To the General Conference; Greeting: At a joint council of the First Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric held this morning, the following was adopted and ordered presented to the conference:

First, that after due consideration of the question of continuing the running of the college, and the importance of the same in giving proper training and educational facilities to the youth of the church, and such others as may care to avail themselves of its benefits, together with the present status of the financial condition of the same, we are of the opinion that the college should continue; and whatever minor changes as to courses of study and methods of development, if any, be left as provided by its articles of incorporation with the board of trustees, and such changes as may be made directly by the conference.

Second. We favor recommending to the conference that the expenses of running the college be met by voluntary contributions for the purposes, and that one day in each year be set apart, to be known as college day, upon which offerings, in the manner of collections, shall be taken up in all districts and branches of the church, to aid the college work, the same to be forwarded to the Bishop of the church to be devoted to such purposes.

Respectfully submitted,

HEMAN C. SMITH,

FREDERICK M. SMITH,

Secretaries of the joint council.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 7.

The adoption of the report was moved, and very thoroughly discussed. The motion carried, the vote being quite unanimous, only a few voting in the negative, and a few more refraining from voting. It was apparently the most unanimous action upon matters pertaining to the college that has been had for some years.

Elder H. A. McCoy was appointed to preach in the evening, assisted by C. P. Faul. Announcements were made for Sunday's services. Song, 110. Benediction by Alexander H. Smith.

APRIL 9.

Sunday was bright and very warm. At nine o'clock the regular session of the Sunday-school was held. At eleven o'clock three preaching-services were held. In the upper auditorium President Joseph Smith was the speaker, assisted by T. J. Sheldon. In the lower auditorium Elder U. W. Greene was the speaker, assisted by A. M. Chase. At the college chapel Elder J. W. Rushton spoke, assisted by D. A. Anderson.

After the morning service three were baptized at the Saints' Home. They were confirmed at the afternoon session by H. A. Stebbins and W. C. Earhart.

At a quarter past two in the afternoon the sacrament was tendered to the conference by the branch officers. The stake presidency presided in the upper auditorium, and the stake bishopric in the lower.

At the evening hour, Elder R. C. Evans addressed the assembly in the upper auditorium, assisted by A. Carmichael; and Elder F. M. Sheehy in the lower, assisted by F. G. Pitt. At the Saints' Home Elder Charles Derry was the speaker, assisted by O. H. Bailey.

APRIL 10.

Prayer-meeting at nine o'clock in charge of C. G. Lewis and Amos Berve. Preaching at a quarter to eleven by V. M. Goodrich, assisted by E. W. Nunley.

At two o'clock conference reassembled for business. Hymn 184 was sung, prayer by C. E. Butterworth. Fred M. Smith in the chair. After reading the minutes and a list of ex-officio members, a report from the board of trustees of Graceland College was read, showing enrollment of pupils as follows: Fall term 84, winter term 87, spring term 76. Report of the committee composed of the Bishopric and board of trustees appointed last year to carry out conference instructions looking to closing the college, was read. The report was in two parts, a majority report signed by E. L. Kelley, chairman, F. M. Smith, secretary; and a minority report signed by J. W. Wight.

A motion was made to adopt the majority report, and a substitute was offered to adopt the minority report. A motion to lay the whole matter on the table was lost. The balance of the session was devoted to a discussion of the adoption of these reports, the speakers being T. J. Sheldon, F. B. Blair, J. W. Wight, R. M. Elvin, and E. L. Kelley. It was then moved and carried that further discus-

BAPTISMS.—LOSSES IN. WHY?

In your issue of February 8, 1905, Bro. Edward Rannie, by statistics gleaned from the Church Recorder's reports for the years 1891 to 1904 inclusive, shows that for the last half of that time there were eight hundred and forty-one baptisms less than in the first half. This, too, notwithstanding the missionary force was being augmented every year until at the close of this period there were "about twice as many" as at the commencement; "and the increased number of local workers and the great number brought into the church through the influence of the Sunday-school and the Religio is also to be considered."

The brother further says: "These figures indicate that it takes more than double the work it did fourteen years ago to accomplish the same results in making converts." The caption of his article is, "What does it mean?" He does not attempt to answer, saying that he "does not possess sufficient knowledge of the forces that oppose the work to be able to give a satisfactory solution." Then he proceeds to give six reasons as suggested by others, neither approving nor disapproving them, as follows:

1. Exclusiveness and lack of sociability.
2. In methods of work, clinging to the past and not using present-day methods.
3. Lack of the true aggressive missionary spirit in the ministry and members.
4. The Smoot and Roberts cases in Washington causing a feeling of disgust to come over the public.
5. A need of a spiritual endowment to better fit the ministry for their work.
6. A trial of our faith, "The darkest just before the dawn."

Like Bro. Rannie, the writer does not pretend to possess wisdom enough to fully explain the matter, although he has been in the missionary field all these fourteen years. That the forces of evil are exerting themselves more actively and with greater power than formerly, I fully believe; but that the ministry or membership are less able to cope with the powers of darkness is not, with me, so certain. There may be "exclusiveness and lack of sociability" on the part of the minister and member, but I scarcely think there is more lack of sociability now, nor has there been for the last seven years, than in the seven preceding ones. Why, then, should that cause a falling off in the number of baptisms?

The writer believes that he is, because he knows how to be, much more sociable in a religious way, and proportionately less offensive in his manner of presenting the gospel to the world, than he was fourteen years ago. "Measuring other people's corn in our own half-bushel," we think that reason No. 1, is not well founded.

As for reason No. 2, I think it would have more force if turned squarely around so as to read: "Leaving the past and clinging to present-day methods." We may not have done that; but if we should it could but prove fatal to our progress. Are worldly methods to be adopted by us in order that sinners may be more rapidly converted to the divine order of things? Hardly. If we have the heavenly order, the kingdom of God on earth, and others have it not, must we resort to "present-day," worldly methods, used to induce people to accept false doctrines of a worldly origin, in order to convert sinners to the true gospel and baptize them? Nay, verily. If the use of certain methods in the past resulted in a greater number of baptisms, why does anybody think that clinging to those same methods is responsible for a less number of baptisms later on? Supposing the Egyptian farmers to have used the same methods of farming during the seven years of famine that they did during the seven years of plenty, would they have concluded that the famine was the result of "clinging to methods of the past," when those same methods had produced abundant harvests for seven years before? No. If anything is wrong with our methods let us look for the remedy backward to the ministry of Christ and his apostles, and of "those to whom these commandments were given that they might have power to lay the foundation of this church," etc., (Doctrine and Covenants 1:5,) not forward to those who build by human wisdom alone. That will be the safer way.

No. 4. "The Smoot and Roberts cases." I do not believe these cases stand much in the way. Latter Day Saints should not measure other people's interest in such affairs by their own. Out in the rural districts, away from the railroads, both north and south, there are thousands of homes where the daily newspaper is an unknown quantity. (In some sense it is that everywhere.) In these homes very little or nothing is known about Roberts or Smoot. Saying nothing of the multitudes in the British Isles, South Sea Isles, and other foreign parts where we have representation, I believe we would be safe in assuming that there are in the United States to-day five millions of people that do not know whether B. H. Roberts was excluded from the House of Representatives for being a polygamist, or whether he was excluded from purgatory for being a "saint." Neither do they know whether it is Reed Smoot or Smutty Reed who has caused the more recent inquiry by the Senate Committee. And these millions will not be baptized either, any more than those who read up, and understand all about the "Roberts and Smoot cases." Why will they not? Too ignorant? No. In some respects they are equal, in other respects superior to some of those who read everything they can get on the cases referred to. Still they will not be baptized. "Clinging to past methods" fails to reach so many as in the past. Methods that were more potent from 1891 to 1897, are more impotent from 1898 to 1904. Why is it so? Many of these people have had no chance to be baptized by us, but many have. And millions refuse to be baptized by any other ministers too.

I have passed over No. 3, but will now consider it with No. 5, as they have much the same characteristics. One says: "Lack of the true aggressive missionary spirit in ministry and members." The other: "A need of a spiritual endowment to better fit the ministry for their work."

If they had the endowment, they would, no doubt, have the "true aggressive missionary spirit." If they had the "true aggressive missionary spirit," would they not have the endowment also? Evidently so. And if they had this, baptisms would be more numerous than in the last seven years, or from 1898 to 1904 inclusive. All clear sailing, so far. But this drives us to the conclusion that during the preceding seven years, from 1891 to 1897 inclusive, both ministry and membership were more highly endowed with the "true aggressive missionary spirit," than they were during the corresponding period following. Is that true? If so, wherein have we lost ground? It can not be said that all the difficulty lies in the fact that the old veterans upon whom fell the burden of the work in the first period, and who were, to use the words of a brother (J. W. Williams of Kentucky) in a letter in HERALD of March 1, "zealous, persevering servants of God," have been succeeded by a new army of "slothful" ministers who do very little if any efficient work. We may have "slothful" ministers, and they may stand in the way; but that is not all the trouble.

As stated before, the writer has been in the missionary force during all the years for which Bro. Rannie gives statistics, and whichever end of this period presents the better showing, he is equally entitled to credit for work done, or deserving of censure for failure to work. I have no data at hand to determine precisely, but I believe that three fourths of the missionaries who were in the field from 1891 to 1897, were also in the field from 1898 to 1904. Now if in the latter period their number was increased till it was "about twice as many," surely out of an increase of one hundred per cent, twenty-five per cent were good, true soldiers of the cross, and this gives us the full quota of "zealous, persevering servants of God" engaged in the missionary work during the latter period that we had in the first period. Still they did not baptize as many, by eight hundred and forty-one, in the second series of seven years as in the first. Why then can we not count from "these figures"? Bro. Williams' reason, if good, may account for the failure of the missionaries to baptize a number as much larger in proportion as their own number was, but it does not make it plain enough for "the most simple" to see why an equal number of "zealous, persevering servants of God" together with an "increased number of local workers," supplemented by the more effectual work of the Sunday-school and Religio, should fall short to the number of nearly one thousand converts baptized in a given time.

But we are not the only ones who have been concerned about such questions. Away back in 1739 President Edwards wrote a series of sermons, which, in 1773, were committed by his son, the younger President Edwards, to Reverend Doctor John Erskine, who reduced these sermons to "a continued treatise," which was published in 1774, and again in 1808. Afterward the American Tract Society published a reprint of the 1808 edition, and from this I quote as further on. The work is entitled, History of the Work of Redemption. Mr. Edwards compares the work of the reformed churches at the time he wrote with the "first times of the Reformation," and gives three items showing things had changed for the worse. We pass the first and quote:

2. Another thing is the prevailing licentiousness in principles and opinions. There is not now that spirit of orthodoxy which then prevailed; there is very little appearance of zeal for the mysterious and spiritual doctrines of Christianity; and they never were so held in contempt as they are in the present age. . . . History gives no account of any age wherein there was so great an infidel apostasy of those who had been brought up under the light of the gospel; never was there such a disavowal of all revealed religion, never any age wherein there was so much scoffing and ridiculing of the gospel of Christ by those who have been brought up under its light.—Pages 422, 423.

Mr. Edwards accounts the work of the Reformation the gospel of Christ; and from that standpoint the above statement was made. And, if he was correct from his standpoint, as to those times, could we not say the same things of these days? Surely we can say with absolute truthfulness, "never was there such a disavowal of all revealed religion" by the masses; "never any age wherein there was so much scoffing and ridiculing of the gospel of Christ by those who have been brought up [professedly] under its light." Surely there never was a time when the spiritual doctrines of Christianity were held in more contempt than now, and with this condition prevailing among professors, what may we expect among the hosts who make up the ranks of "infidel apostasy"?

I quote further:

3. There is much less prevalence of the power of godliness, than there was at the beginning of the Reformation. A glorious outpouring of the Spirit of God accompanied the first Reformation, . . . to turn many to God and true godliness. But now there is a great decay of vital piety; yea, it seems to be despised, called enthusiasm and fanaticism. Those who are truly religious, are commonly looked upon to be beside themselves; and vice and profaneness dreadfully prevail, like a flood which threatens to bear down all before it.—Ibid., p. 423.

I would not be understood as applying these thoughts to the church of Jesus Christ to-day, as Mr. Edwards applied them to the Reformation. It would not be true. But to the thoughtful it will present a partial reason at least, for the added difficulties that now confront the church and her ministry. According to Mr. Edwards the people, some of them, enjoyed "a glorious outpouring of the Spirit of God" at the beginning of the Reformation. At that time the "power of godliness" was much more prevalent among them than in later years when they ceased to have such "glorious outpourings" of the Lord's Spirit. In time those who really were religious—had the Spirit of the Lord—were believed "to be beside themselves." It became more and more unpopular to believe in God's Spirit as a necessary factor in true religion; and as a result, "vice and profaneness dreadfully prevailed." As God's Spirit was gradually withdrawn from the people, there was "a great decay in vital piety," as compared with the first part of the Reformation, or so Mr. Edwards thought, and so the young Seer of this dispensation was informed by a heavenly being that "their creeds are all wrong."

Bad as this condition may seem, it was not nearly so bad as now, and every succeeding year plunges the world deeper and deeper into the darkness that covers the earth. Even when it was said, "Their creeds are all wrong," there were thousands who, although they were more or less corrupted by their faulty creeds, not willfully so, as we believe, were zealous and earnest in their religion, and their minds were never clouded with even a suspicion that the creeds which they sustained and in which they believed with commendable devotion, were all wrong and that they were sowing seeds that would in a generation produce a bounteous harvest of distrust and doubt in the hearts of their children. The spirit of infidelity was then in the world, but not in the churches, to the extent it now is. "But since that time there's come an awful change." The spirit of infidelity has invaded the realms of professed Christendom, and sits as queen of professed church people and worldlings alike. The creeds have been tumbling to utter ruin, and many people, gazing on the shapeless form of a once lovely, but now demolished creed, have lost faith in all things religious and do not care to commence again. Call their attention to the gospel story and they answer, if not in words then in actions, "We have been deceived once; that is enough"; or, "It's only a form; we have held to a form all our lives. What need to change to another?" Repeat the words of God to ancient Israel, to them, "Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts"; and as of old their answer is: "It is vain to serve God, and what profit is it that we have . . . walked mournfully before the Lord of hosts?" (Malachi 3:7, 14.)

The influences of the Spirit of truth are being withdrawn, because the attitude of those who profess to be religious has been such as to grieve the Holy Spirit of God, and he says: "My Spirit shall not always strive with man."—Genesis 6:3. The small degree of spiritual light which was enjoyed by those who were trying to serve God, notwithstanding the corruption in words and doctrine caused by the creeds, gradually grew dimmer when the restored gospel of the latter days was rejected by the self-styled Christian people of the world, and is still declining. Each passing year finds less real spirituality in the world, and a corresponding increase of spiritual darkness. This does not affect the true church of Christ as to her status or condition, but it does affect her labors in the world and retards her progress in converting and baptizing sinners.

The Egyptian farmers had their same old farms during the time of famine that they had during the time of plenteous harvest. But they would not produce. Changes in conditions of those fields was plainly the cause. We, too, have the same old field. "The field is the world." We have had no famine in church increase (and I pray God we may never have); but we have had a decline. We are of the opinion that this decline is not due altogether to any one cause, but if the "field" is changed by the withdrawal of the Spirit of the Sun of Righteousness, then we believe that may be put down as one of the chief causes.

D. L. Moody says: "A dead cold has come over the church."

Doctor Pierson, editor of the Missionary Review of the World, says: "I believe the Holy Spirit is withdrawing from the church of God as a body."

Bishop Fowler of the Methodist Church, in speaking of Doctor Pierson, says: "This deadness rests upon all the great churches."

"It is because the church has gone after strange gods."—Quoted by Elder R. C. Evans, Faulty Creeds, p. 54.

Never was the time when the lines of right and wrong, as regards the relation of the church to the world, were drawn so close together as now. "Anything to draw the crowd," is the watchword now. Tobacco-smoking, beer-drinking, dancing, "progressive euchre," minstrel shows, bowling alleys, and what-not, are coming into favor in some of the most popular churches. What more could a worldling desire? This condition is becoming more general as the years go by. Most people like to think they are on the road to heaven, and a majority are "tickled to death," (spiritual death) when told that the way to heaven will take them in the way of all worldly pleasure. It is therefore much harder to turn them to the "Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."

Meantime there should be no faltering in the ranks of the ministry or membership. Neither should there be a cessation of effort for a single moment on the part of any. It may be the "darkest hour" just before the dawning of better conditions; if so let us be prepared for the glad morning.

Hopefully,
T. C. KELLEY.

SOME REASONS FOR KEEPING THE TEMPORAL LAW.

We have at different times met with people professing to be Saints—and sometimes elders—who would say that under the present condition of things, relative to the financial affairs of the church, they do not believe in paying tithing or free-will offerings. They also try to give their reasons to sustain the position they take in regard to the same. To the close observer, or the man that is righteously endeavoring to keep the whole law, it would seem that the unquestionable result of such influence and teaching would only tend to weaken the faith and confidence of some, at least in those men whom God has placed in the church by divine revelation, to teach the law in reference to the above. We will do well to read the following instruction given to us as a people:

In regard to the gathering and to the work of the bishopric in regard to the law of tithing and consecration, I made inquiry what should be the attitude of the church in regard thereto. To this question I was answered, that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to.—Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10.

As we understand the law, tithing is one of the means instituted by God to make it possible that the gospel may be preached in all the world as a witness, preparatory to the coming of our Savior. If this position is a correct one, we certainly should be willing to concede that the means instituted by God are the best and the only means that will accomplish his great design. Those on whom is placed the great responsibility of teaching and executing the law, certainly need the united support and co-operation of all of God's people.

If we wish to be instrumental, by God's help, in promulgating the gospel of Christ and helping to make it possible for our Savior to come and for the great millennium to be ushered in, I can see no grander opportunity than that of keeping the temporal law. To those who observe and keep the law of tithing, God has promised that they shall be the recipients of his choicest blessings, and has said, "He that is tithed shall not be burned."

We would do well to read and observe the following:

Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

What grand instruction! Oh, if we can only observe the above instruction, and all work together with God for the accomplishment of the glorious work intrusted to all, and instead of trying to find fault, or using our influence against those on whom God has placed the great responsibility of teaching the law, each do his duty as an individual, how much more we could accomplish as a whole; and we would be in a better position to lay claim to the glorious gifts and blessings of the gospel promised to the faithful. Many are ready to bear their testimony that inasmuch as they have lived up to the temporal law God has always verified his promises. And inasmuch as we have been forewarned that just prior to the coming of our Master pestilences and destructions of various kinds would come upon the earth, let us be diligent in keeping the temporal law; for God has said he will rebuke the devourer for our sakes, if we will only do our part.

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts.—Malachi 3: 10, 11.

Recreation and Amusement.

Recreation is defined by Webster thus: "Refreshment of strength and spirits after toil, a forming anew." Amusement is that which occupies us lightly and pleasantly. Our ideas of recreation and amusement depend, to a great extent, upon our training and education along these lines. Our influence may have been such that to be entertained and amused we must have that which is trifling and frivolous or we may have been educated to care for that which is wholesome and commendable.

As youth is the time when habits for life are formed largely for the kind of entertainment demanded and enjoyed by the youth of the present. The world furnishes to-day ways of entertainment many and varied and it rests with us as individuals to choose for ourselves and with parents to choose for their children that which will renew as well as amuse, that which will refresh as well as please. We should educate ourselves to seek amusement with recreation and not demand hours of unadulterated fun, as the posters sometimes say.

PARENTS ARE RESPONSIBLE

READING.

Reading as a means of recreation affords both pleasure and profit and it requires careful discrimination to select that which is wholesome and instructive, and pleasurable as well. Books, like food, are not necessarily distasteful because nutritious. A child's test of a good story is in wanting it reread to him. If we read no books but those we desire to reread we would read but little light literature. If we read a book of light fiction, when we have finished the last page we lay it aside and do not care to read it again. One who has formed a taste for light reading will read book after book of this kind with no thought of remembering the contents. If a taste for good reading has been formed but few books of light fiction will be read.

Mothers should take advantage of this fact and train their children to love the pure and the good—that which is educating and refining in literature. Begin when the child is young to read to it good, wholesome stories of plant, animal, and child life. Oh, how they delight in listening! Children love truth in story form and can be taught to dislike to read that which is not true. As they grow older do not allow them to drift into fiction, but give them the same subjects in more advanced form. There are juvenile books almost without number from which to select—good biographies, simple histories, stories of other lands, stories of plants and minerals, animals and insects, stories of the wars of our country, bible stories, patriotic stories, etc. One half of a child's education consists in teaching him to learn for himself, the other half in teaching him to choose for himself. Let us teach him, then, to choose that which is pure and good in literature.

PARENTS SHOULD KNOW

what their children are reading. This can be done only by having the confidence of the children and by wise oversight and direction—by reading with the children. Young people should be encouraged to systematize their reading. A course of reading may be taken up during the long winter evenings. Know something about the books you read, their authors, when written, and where the scene of the story is located. Good books are educators. They teach nobility of character, love for humanity, and reverence for the Creator. Who can read such books as those written by Ralph Connor, Ian Maclaren, and others and not have a broader and better understanding of life and its duties than before?

MUSIC.

The love of music is planted within every human breast. One need not be cultured to appreciate the harmonious sounds of Nature—the song of the birds, the running brooks, the rustle of the leaves. Music is the language of the soul and there are few children who can not be taught the use of voice and instrument. Every child should be taught the rudiments of music.

There is nothing that can give more pleasure in the home than music, and no form of entertainment more enjoyed by youth and age. In every home there should be times devoted to song—times when parents and children join their voices in cheerful song. Permit the children to have their own particular favorites. When Sabbath evening comes sacred hymns or songs which teach love and reverence should be the order.

To so train the fingers that they may glide swiftly but accurately over the keys or touch the delicate strings so as to produce beautiful harmony of sound is another department of music but of equal importance, and the youth or maiden who has been fortunate enough to receive such training and has learned to love music can find in the home entertainment and pleasure that will help to keep him or her from worldly influences.

CHILDREN SHOULD BE TAUGHT TO CHOOSE

the good and pure in music as well as in literature. We should choose for them words whose sentiment is good and true and discard meaningless rhyme and silly jingle. We have been commanded through latter-day revelation to cultivate the gift of song. There is no purer or sweeter worship than that rendered through song. Music has the power to uplift and draw all mankind nearer their Maker.

Many a sad heart has been cheered and raised from the depths of sorrow by music; many a one has been drawn from the depths of sin by the influence of song. It is a power for good.

Then let us be musical to the full extent of the gift that has been given us. Let us make our homes cheerful and attractive with music, to the end that the influences surrounding our children may be beneficial and long remembered.

GAMES.

Games are among the most beneficial of all forms of recreation and amusement, particularly for children. They serve not only as a means of diversion and pleasure but through these lessons of truth, fairness, and consideration may be taught. Active games, such as are indulged in the open air, a few of which are suitable for indoor amusement, are a means of physical exercise and relief from restlessness among children. They should be encouraged to play games, as these are beneficial to them. The mind is always busy with something, be it good or evil, and when engaged with good, healthful games there is no room for that which is coarse and vulgar to creep in. Every child should be taught to respect the rights of others in his play, to avoid contact with others except where required by the rules of a game; also that pushing, shoving, tripping, scuffling, and wrestling are rude and insolent, and will not be indulged in by one who is mannerly and refined. Pleasure may be found to the exclusion of everything of this nature.

There are patented games which may be obtained in great variety, such as authors, quotations, historical and geographical games, dominoes, crokinole and other game-boards which furnish pleasant pastime, some of which are educational as well.

Any game which leads into questionable company, or places, or tends to destroy that reserve which should be ever present with older boys and girls should be rejected.

PARENTS SHOULD KNOW

what their children are doing as far as possible, whether at work or at play. They should not be too dignified nor too busy to join in games with the children, thus embracing an opportunity to become acquainted with those of their own household. They should teach their children to distinguish between games that are good and pure and those of inferior quality.

SPORTS.

For the older children and adults the sports come in as a means of recreation. Among these might be mentioned croquet, bolo, tennis, basketball, baseball, coasting, skating, fishing, hunting, etc., all of which are commendable if participated in at a proper time and not to excess. If indulged in to the overexertion of the body they cease to afford recreation and fatigue both mind and muscle more than the work that has been dropped because of needed rest and change. There is a strong public sentiment against football playing as it employs such harsh treatment and is often dangerous to life. Baseball also leads to misuse of the body, over-exertion of the muscles, and straining of the nerves. It should always be borne in mind that games and sports are for recreation and amusement and should therefore be indulged in for a short time only and not precious hours be squandered.

SOCIAL FUNCTIONS.

Humanity is so constituted that it needs rest and change from the dull routine of care and work to that which is light and pleasant. All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy, but all play and no work makes Jack a laggard and a dunce. Individuals must decide for themselves how much of their time can be devoted to social life, remembering that condition of body and mind and other duties and obligations must be considered. Choice should be made of that which is praiseworthy and which will not unfit the body for necessary duties. If the day is spent in labor and the night in recreation and amusement the system is incapacitated for the duties of another day. Boys and girls of school age still attending the high school should not be permitted to become members of society and should be allowed very few evenings away from home. If children were taught to love their work not so much time would be spent in seeking entertainment outside of the home, in amusement that is not amusing and recreation that is degrading.

In social gatherings some

ARRANGEMENTS SHOULD BE MADE

for the entertainment of those expected to be present. Provide some special entertainment. Have some kind of a party. For the children a soap-bubble party, a peanut-party, a story-party and others. For older children and adults, a George Washington party, a rebus sociable, a proverb social, a sewing party and others. If the time is to be passed playing games choice should be made of good games, the names of which may be written on slips, the order in which the slips are drawn to decide the order in which they shall be played. Social evenings may be pleasantly passed playing patented games. Provide something for entertainment. It may be a musical or literary program with short intervals for social chat. It is "the height of the ridiculous" when adults meet for a social evening and play such games as "Ruth and Jacob," "Twirl the platter," games of forfeit, etc. When church socials are given a committee should be appointed to provide entertainment. A musical or literary program; bible names or names of noted places or people may be used and the game "forty questions" be played. Questions may be written, cut in half, and distributed, each person to find the other half of his question and answer it. Latter-day Israel has been commanded to come up higher, to read all good books, to cultivate the gift of music and song, to be an example to the world in all things. Let us partake, then, only of those things that will elevate and refine. Ralph Connor says, "We must climb to some height if we would see afar." Let us endeavor to reach a higher plane where we may look out upon the things of the world and choose that which is pure and good.

ETTA HUNT.

BAYNE CITY, Michigan, April 2, 1905.

Dear Herald: I come to you once more that I may speak of the goodness of God, and that I may write something that may give strength to my brothers and sisters. As a branch we have much to thank God for. We have the privilege of meeting together to hear the word of God taught, and have the privilege of taking the sacrament twice a month. But the Lord will call us to account for the way in which we have improved on the light and blessings which we have received. The local brethren are striving to teach the law and to see that it is kept.

We have been blessed of late with the presence of Bro. J. J. Bailey, the patriarch of this district. He gave us much good counsel, and bestowed twenty-four blessings while here. As I write my mind goes out in prayer to God that as his children meet together in General Conference they may meet in such a way that the Lord may meet with them by his Spirit, and that he will make his will known that we all may be benefited by the meeting together to do business for the Lord, and that the time may soon come when we will be gathered to Zion, and be prepared to meet our Savior when he comes to claim his own.

Pray for me, brethren, that I may prove faithful, and that I may meet my Savior with joy.

WM. A. McCLAIN.

ROCKWELL CITY, Iowa, April 2, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have been in the church but little over three years. The first two years after I was baptized I was worse off than I would have been if I had never belonged to the church. As I stop and think of the past it makes me wonder whether the Lord will receive me when it comes time that I shall have to leave this life. Dear Saints, do not do as I have done in the past, especially those who are young in the faith. Ever try to push onward this work and God will give you strength as he has me.

The Lord's work in this part of his vineyard has created but little interest. We need the prayers of the faithful to help us push onward this gospel work and improve upon the talent which God has given us. For without the help of God we would become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal.

We would be glad to have an elder come and hold meetings once in a while. Let us know and we will have a place prepared to preach in. There are a few here who are not so prejudiced that they will not come out and hear the gospel preached.

We ask an interest in your prayers that we may continue faithful to the end.

JOHN REYNOLDS.

NECEDAH, Wisconsin, April 3, 1905.

Dear Herald: We want to say a word in praise of the Historical Herald, March 22. We all think it is just fine. Every one should have a copy. We feel as though we are gaining the confidence of the people here. A loss occurred here that has shown how the neighbors feel about our branch president, Bro. Lester Wildermuth. He lost, by fire, March 28, his team, harness, barn, crib, corn, fodder, hay, buggy, and everything swept away but the house. The neighbors truly sympathize with this brother's family, for as a lady said, "not many in that vicinity (and many not there) who have not rode behind that team"; quite a number of the elders can testify to that. If any one wanted to go to Necedah, or any one wished to come out here, it was generally Bro. Lester's team that was used.

We are about ready to occupy the new church. An old German Lutheran who lives near is working faithfully to help us, and freely too. He seems to be pleased to help with his hands, as he has not means to help any other way. Yesterday the clerk of school district where we hold meetings, Mr. Shultz, was out with his wife to sacrament-meeting, and after service handed Bro. Moore, treasurer of building committee, five dollars, and said, "You are doing a good work here and I want to help build your church." We hold prayer-meeting at their house in turn with others; also they have given us free use of their house for socials, and the Lord will reward them. We feel the Aid Society is doing some good creating a sociability among neighbors who would not be reached in any other way.

A MEMBER.

NEBO, Illinois, April 2, 1905.

Editors Herald: Elder W. J. Smith just closed a series of meetings last Sunday night at Nebo, Illinois. He came here sometime the first of February and preached twenty-three discourses in our church, about four miles out in the country. The preaching was intensely interesting throughout. One lady gave her name for baptism, but afterward repented and still is outside of the kingdom. One brother stated that he would not take the price of a good horse for what he had learned during these meetings. From here we went to Nebo, Bro. Smith preaching thirteen discourses, the writer one. The interest was all we anticipated, and in fact more. Quite a number who were there the first night became regular attendants throughout the entire series of meetings, including the banker and Doctor Pollock and his family. Comments of favorable trend were heard from different quarters, some remarking that their views had been "changed to a great extent," "that's the smartest man that ever came to this town," etc.

I preached last night at a new place and most of the audience were eager and attentive listeners. As to the work in general here the prospects are fair, but that oft-repeated injunction of the Spirit to the Saints, "Come up higher," should surely still whisper even to the rural districts, and surely not forget Nebo Branch.

Yours in faith,

W. A. GUTHRIE.

DARLING, North Dakota, April 3, 1905.

Editors Herald: Bro. Leonard Houghton is in active service for the Lord. I wish he would come this way and wake up the people. Some of them have heard the gospel and many have not. There are schoolhouses open and they have some preaching by the Methodist Episcopal. I am sure I would be glad to hear a gospel sermon.

Most of the people are homesteaders, and have small houses but big hearts. I hope the Lord will direct some of the elders to call if it is best.

Your sister,

MRS. E. J. HARDMAN.

ELDORADO SPRINGS, Missouri, April 8, 1905.

Editors Herald: My husband dying a year ago after an illness of nearly seven months, worn in body I have spent much of the time since among relatives in Iowa. I did much reading and resting, but for four months saw none of our literature or heard a sermon by our people. But I did not forget to talk gospel wherever I could find an ear willing to hear. Two sisters I spent much time with, both Methodists, were quite a contrast, one willing to hear and learn all she could, the other when I gave her our "Epitome of faith" to read, said, "I don't want to read it; I don't want to know anything about your doctrine." I replied, "The time will come when you will wish you had learned about it." And this sister, always before coming in this church I had looked up to as having much greater knowledge than myself; but now it seems as if she had got in a rut and stayed there, while I had been pushing ahead; and though I still feel my ignorance I would not take all this world holds in exchange for what I have learned in this gospel. But with my other sister I talked a great deal, and if a Latter Day Saint minister should go there, I have much confidence that she would obey the gospel. Her address is Mrs. Morris Nash, Story City, Iowa. Her husband does not claim to be religious. Any one going there inquire for her, but if convenient would like them to write me first that I might notify her! I had a good visit with Saints at St. Charles, also at Des Moines. Made the acquaintance of Bro. Mintun—the rustler, I call him. If all the elders were as active as he is there would not be so much sitting round the fireside of the Saints, but people in the town or vicinity would know they were there.

Bro. Barmore's letter in last HERALD suited me. If all were ready to "go," something stirring would be the result. But it may not be my place to speak of this, but rather of elders.

In imagination I can see the Saints assembled at Lamoni church this morning, and would think it grand to have a "phone" connection that I might hear the prayers and testimonies. With much love to all Saints, I am,

Your sister,

SR. M. J. (PHIPPS) JONES.

ATCHISON, Kansas, April 9, 1905.

Editors Herald: By your kindness I would like to say to the brethren (especially those who are isolated) who are coal-miners that I have the assurance of the managers of the Atchison Coal Mining Company that they will put a lot of men to work, if I can furnish them, and that it will be a steady job, no shut down on account of seasons. This company operates large saw-mills and mines, and never had a strike, because they treat their men right. They want sober, industrious men. They have been operating the mines here with a class of men who drink and lose time. They will pay seventy-five cents per ton for digging coal, vein thirty-eight to forty inches thick. I will answer any questions, if questioner will send stamp for reply. I am in receipt of letters of inquiry already. Will be glad to hear from more, if they desire to change their location. Brethren who see this speak to your brethren about it. I take this means to try to get isolated brethren to come here, and help us build up the work here. This is my only object.

C. E. GUINAND.

HEARNE, Texas, April 2, 1905.

Editors Herald: I am trying to serve the Master as I should. I give our HERALDS to all that will read them, and as the Saints all know that my husband has been afflicted for many years, I have toiled very hard, and it keeps me from writing many things that I should have written many years ago, but I will give you one of them now. In 1870 my husband was suffering, it appeared, all that he could bear. He got a little ease, and I lay down to rest a little, and dreamed that one of our old, feeble elders came to see my husband and told him that if he would believe in the gospel with all of his heart, mind, and strength he should be healed, and my husband told the minister that if he knew himself he did believe in all of the blessings and gifts contained in the gospel.

The minister arose out of his chair and pressed three kisses on my husband's right cheek, because he believed in the gospel, and the elder repeated the same promise the third time, and my husband told him that he did believe in all that is contained in the gospel. The elder told my husband that the prayers of faith had kept him alive a long time, and when this was done the elder and my husband walked off together over an old field, and in the middle of the field was a pen of swine. They stood side by side and looked at the swine, and then walked on over the field, the sun shining so bright, and I looking after them. By this time my husband aroused and I awoke to attend to him. This was my dream, and my husband was healed of that sickness by the prayers of faith, and he traveled with Bro. Montague, the very one that I saw in the dream.

We want to be one among the Saints of God, for I am trying to do my whole duty, and I know that my Redeemer lives and will reign supreme.

I want the sisters of the Prayer Union to pray for my husband, that if it be God's will he may be healed. Not our will but God's will be done.

Pastoral.

To the Ministry of the Pittsburg District: The "Magna Charta" of our acceptance with God, and usefulness to the church, is vouchsafed unto us in: "Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence."—Doctrine and Covenants 104:44. First learn, then act. Be faithful and prompt in all that lies within the scope of duty. "For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office; so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another. Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, let us wait on our ministering; or he that teacheth, on teaching; or he that exhorteth, on exhortation; he that giveth, let him do it with simplicity; he that ruleth, with diligence; he that showeth mercy, with cheerfulness. Let love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good. Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another; not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord; rejoicing in hope; patient in tribulation; continuing instant in prayer; distributing to the necessity of saints; given to hospitality. Bless them which persecute you; bless, and curse not."—Romans 12:4-13.

A golden opportunity is afforded for all to make rapid strides of advancement if we utilize the above beautiful counsel, for thereby we shall facilitate our work, and will assure ultimate success. Still let us never forget the paramount importance of a later revelation: "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise."—Doctrine and Covenants 81:3.

During the first part of the year, we addressed to the several branch presidents the following:

"CIRCULAR LETTER.

"To the President of — Branch: My understanding of the quarterly reporting that Bro. U. W. Greene is seeking to establish in his mission field is this: The small blanks are to be sent by you to each and every office-bearer of your branch whether active or inactive, and they to report to you; from the data thus gathered you report the facts obtained, giving the name, and office of each priesthood member of your branch upon the blank, upon which you report to the district president. Do not report members of the church. From the several reports of the branch presidents, the district president makes his report to the minister in charge, and thus he like a train dispatcher in his central office is made acquainted with the whereabouts of each local laborer, and once in a quarter knows what is done by those local men, and so he is the better able to direct the labors of the missionary force, and can furnish the First Presidency with a more complete and comprehensive report of the field.

"You will perceive that this system of reporting forms a complete chain, namely: the individual laborer to the branch president first link, branch president to the district president, the second link, and the district president to the minister in charge the third link, and his report to the First Presidency the fourth link, ending, or welding in the central office of the whole church.

"My excuse, if one be needed for writing you, is: There does not seem to be a unity of reporting, or a sufficient interest in so doing, and it appears to me there is not a full understanding as to either method or the importance of these reports.

"Now at the opening of this year I ask from you a hearty co-operation in this matter, for I feel satisfied that if wisely and kindly pushed it will be productive of much good to the cause, and as a result we have a healthier, and more satisfactory condition of the work in both branch and district.

"Come, dear brethren, let us put our shoulders more firmly to the gospel wheel and aid in rolling on this glorious cause of Christ.

"We hope the ministry throughout the district will help the branch presidents by cheerfully and promptly reporting.

"Let all our local men take counsel of the Lord, and then govern themselves in harmony with: 'He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand.'—Doctrine and Covenants 104:44.

"We are fully confirmed in our own mind that the following inspired language will apply with the same force to priests, teachers, and deacons, as it does to the eldership, under like condition of dereliction of duty: 'Be ye very careful, for many elders have been ordained unto me, and are come under my condemnation, by reason of neglecting to lift up their voices in my cause, and for such there is tribulation and anguish: haply they themselves may be saved (if doing no evil) though their glory, which is given for their works, be withheld, or in other words their works are burned, not being profitable unto me.'—Doctrine and Covenants 116:2.

"See to it promptly, dear brethren, that your works are 'profitable' unto the Lord, as also to the church. For he who willfully and continually fails to fill his office agreeably to the ordinance of his covenant of ordination, and will not repent, and improve his ways, after ample time, and faithful labor has been bestowed, is liable to be relieved of his priesthood under the precedent in the law: 'Let that which has been bestowed upon Ziba Peterson be taken from him, and him stand as a member in the church, and labor with his own hands, with the brethren, until he is sufficiently chastened for all his sins, for he confesseth them not, and he thinketh to hide them.'—Doctrine and Covenants 58:14.

"We do not overlook the existing conditions, that to all men come change of environment, and of mind as to responsibility in office, that the weight of years impose a bar, as sometimes obligations in business, all of which when understood should be charitably dealt with, and in some few instances the possibility of an error in the call and ordination, but in all cases there should be no unkind, hasty, or harsh measure adopted—for we will build firmly, and work wisely if we 'make haste, to go slow!' Keep moving, do not let the wheel of duty stand still, see that all the sprags are removed, and use freely the oil of cheerfulness, and the spirit of gladness in your work.

"In all ages of the church there has existed a test of love and fidelity for the whole membership: 'And the Lord said unto Cain, Why art thou wroth? Why is thy countenance fallen? If thou doest well thou shalt be accepted, and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door.'—Genesis 5:9, Inspired Translation.

"If ye love me, keep my commandments."—John 14:15. 'Behold, the Lord hath forbidden this thing; wherefore, the Lord God hath given a commandment, that all men should have charity, which charity is love. And except they should have charity, they were nothing: wherefore, if they should have charity, they would not suffer the laborer in Zion to perish. But the laborer in Zion, shall labor for Zion; for if they labor for money, they shall perish.'—2 Nephi 11:15. 'All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.'—Doctrine and Covenants 119:8.

"The rule of life for all Saints is right doing, and God hath provided that all may be helpful. Those who have tithes and offerings to aid the cause, can send to our agent as follows: Elder L. D. Ullom, 4014 Wood Street, Wheeling, West Virginia. The district secretary is James Raisbeck, Box 197, Fayette City, Pennsylvania.

"For the time being, those in the Ohio and West Virginia portion of the district needing the advice, counsel, or the ministry of district authority, will write to Elder O. L. Martin, 3812 Eoff Street, Wheeling, West Virginia; while those of the north, or Pennsylvania part of the district, will write to Elder C. Ed Miller, 215 East Robinson Street, Alleghany, Pennsylvania.

"These brethren may unite, or exchange labor as they mutually agree, Until notice my address will be, Box 224, Lamoni, Iowa."

May peace and unity abide, and this prove to be a year of good work done.

In bonds,

ROBT. M. ELVIN,

President of Pittsburg District.

Notices.

To the Saints of the Oklahoma District: Several letters of inquiry have reached me as to what was done at the conference held on February 18 and 19, 1905, and why the minutes of said conference had not been published. In reply, I did not attend said conference. I sent in the district records and my resignation as district clerk (for reasons well known to many throughout the district), and I am in no way responsible for what was done, nor for the minutes not being sent in for publication. I have been very anxious myself to see said minutes in print. H. F. Durfey, Ceiling, Oklahoma.

To the Saints of Minnesota District: Greeting: As the reunion committee has changed the place of holding the June reunion from Henning to Clitheral, this is to notify all interested that the district conference will also be held at Clitheral, June 10 and 11, and that the first meeting will be a social-service at 10 a. m. Book Review.

"Beautiful Stories from the Good old Book" by Isabel C. Byrum. It would scarcely seem that a new book of stories from the Bible were needed, yet such books continue to appear. The most recent to reach our notice is one from the press of the Gospel Trumpet Company, Moundsville, West Virginia. "Beautiful Stories from the Good old Book" is a volume of some three hundred and fifteen pages, bound in cloth, with illuminated cover. Evidently the publishers considered there will be sufficient demand for another such book of stories, and we doubt not they will dispose of enough to pay for their trouble and pains, for such books are welcome in the Christian home, the heartiest welcome usually coming from the little tots. The author of "Beautiful Stories," Isabel C. Byrum, on the title page sings,

"The good old Book, so pure and true,
Is filled with stories old, yet new;
To old and young they may be told,
New beauties will to both unfold."

Then she tells, in simple language, adapted to the little tots, the stories of the Bible, from the creation till the birth of Christ, telling that great event as the "Story of King Jesus."

Altogether the author tells one hundred and forty stories, which are illustrated by nearly a hundred pictures. The latter range from good to indifferent. Where angels are made to appear in the illustrations, we note that wings are a conspicuous feature. We wonder when that erroneous idea will be dispensed with.

Poems relieve the monotony of prose story succeeding prose, and we note that subjects which might be considered unsuitable for children are avoided.

sion of this subject be deferred until to-morrow at two o'clock.

Matters of business yet to come before the conference were mentioned. The President also stated that he held a petition from the Colorado District which involved the examination and determination as to the findings of certain missionaries, and branch and district presidents, also the Bishopric, Quorum of Twelve, and the President of the church. The President suggested that the proper way to dispose of it would be to appoint a committee of three to determine whether it should be considered by the body or not. It was moved and carried that the chair appoint a committee of three to consider this petition. Charles P. Faul, A. B. Phillips, and C. G. Lewis were chosen to act as committee.

Announcements were made, hymn 216 sung, and benediction by A. H. Smith.

Preaching at half past seven by H. O. Smith, assisted by Earl D. Bailey.

APRIL 11.

Prayer-service at nine o'clock in charge of Levi Gamet and W. H. Mannering.

Preaching in the forenoon at the usual hour by S. D. Payne, assisted by Henry Sparling.

Called to order for business at the usual hour, Frederick M. Smith in chair. Hymn 34 was sung, prayer by Henry Kemp.

Chair announced that unless objection was urged, discussion upon the deferred matter of yesterday would be resumed. A motion to limit speeches to five minutes was lost. The discussion continued until near time of adjournment of the session when a motion to defer further discussion until to-morrow at two o'clock prevailed. The speakers were G. H. Hilliard, F. M. Cooper, Heman C. Smith, E. D. Bailey, and S. A. Burgess.

Announcements were made, hymn 189 sung, and benediction by W. H. Kelley.

Preaching at half past seven by H. E. Moler, assisted by E. A. Goodwin.

Why Men Do Not Become Teachers.

The steady decrease of the number of men in the service is a matter for serious consideration throughout the country. The Massachusetts board of education has taken up the discussion in a recent report. It finds that there are now twenty-six male teachers less in the State than last year, while the women teachers show a gain of 468. This is probably typical of what is taking place everywhere in the country. But what is to be done? The Massachusetts board believes that "the matter of inducing more men to take up the profession of teaching is well worthy of the deep consideration of all persons interested in education." It certainly is.

But how are more men to be drawn into the field? Greater security of tenure of office and progressive salaries keeping pace with progressive work may do something. These are desiderata well worth laboring for, but they are not sufficient. Women, as a rule, are by nature and training more tactful, or call it more diplomatic, than men. The appointive powers are not infrequently the more readily persuaded by a woman that she should have the place rather than a man. Often sentiment is brought into play in behalf of a female candidate; it goes against masculine nature to secure a position in this manner. This suggests one reason why male teachers are growing less in numbers. Moreover, many school systems make it too easy for a man to obtain a principalship without any teaching experience. One result is that the men look for the better paid principals' places rather than for schools where they may lay the foundation of educational success by actual teaching. The consequence is that the fledgling just from college, or wherever he may hail from, commonly remains after his appointment an indifferent sort of principal who is readily replaced. If every school community should insist that none but experienced teachers could be eligible for a principalship, there would soon be an appreciable increase of male teachers.

How to hold a good man in the school-field is even more important a problem than how to get him there. Fair salaries, progressively increasing as the years roll on and the service improves, will do something. But insecure tenure of office and the re-examination evil have driven more men out of teaching than inadequate pay. Present usage permits any school superintendent to brush aside with one sweep of the hand all the past record of a candidate and to subject him to more or less absurd literary tests. So firmly is this practice established that the average school superintendent can not even get himself to think of any other plan for determining the qualifications of a teacher. The procedure in vogue is something like this: A principalship paying $1,200 or more becomes vacant. The superintendent advertises the fact far and wide to attract candidates. As a rule, he has decided in his mind whom he wants to appoint before the examination is held, and the test is shaped accordingly. Nevertheless, without one pang of conscience he will put the various candidates to the expense of coming to his examination: Can we blame men for turning away from teaching?

There will be no real change of attitude toward teaching as a life work until teachers are afforded an opportunity to earn diplomas absolving them forever more from the humiliating ordeal of re-examination. A superintendent who wants a teacher could then be compelled to look for suitable material among the holders of these diplomas. Instead of calling a miscellaneous convention of candidates, bearing the expense of their attendance, it should be his business to search for the teachers likely to fill the requirements. If he then wishes to apply a special test, let him do so; but the school system should invariably pay the expenses caused the candidates by their submission to the ordeal. This is business, and this is right.—Ossian H. Lang in the April-June Forum.

WHAT ABOUT THAT BOARDING-HOUSE?

A correspondent writing from Appledore, Ontario, wrote, "I have been thinking there is money in the West to build a boarding-house to accommodate one hundred students."

This statement ought to appeal to some lover of the race and the work to devote a sufficient amount to build such a suitable building out of the abundance of his worldly accumulations. A moderate sum only would be required to erect a completely suitable building; to include sitting-rooms, reading-room, and music-room, with appropriate furnishing. If the building were once built there are numbers of the Saints over all the lands who would take pleasure in providing the necessary furniture for the house in its different rooms by individual effort. Is the money in the West?

Editorial

WHAT IS THE ANSWER?

Should a church organization accept benefits from a man who makes his money by bleeding the people? Now that the pro and con of Oslerism have been fought out, there is a new question up for discussion. Ought the Congregational Church missionaries be paid with money earned for John D. Rockefeller by the Standard Oil Company; is it better to let the heathens remain heathens, rather than make them Christians through the use of Standard Oil pelf?

It is an interesting question and a big one. What is your opinion?

"The love of money is the root of all evil," wrote Paul to Timothy.

The question is not a new one, so far as the principle involved is concerned. It is older than the HERALD; has not yet been officially and definitely decided, and may never be. Should the church (or the Lord's people) take the world's money for church uses? In some instances the question is, should the Lord's people take the Devil's money to serve the Lord's purposes?

So far as the instance which gave rise to this query in the press of the day is concerned, i. e., the offer of John D. Rockefeller to give one hundred thousand dollars to the American missions board of the Congregational Church for missionary purposes, it is decided, the board having accepted the offer.

In the controversy urged before the board some peculiar arguments were used.

Reverend Gladden, a member of the board, said: "I object to this because the money thus bestowed does not rightfully belong to the man who gives it; it has been acquired flagitiously, and all the world knows it." He refers to Mr. Rockefeller as the one giving the money.

Reverend J. M. Fulton, leading clergyman of the Presbyterian denomination at St. Paul, Minnesota, says: "I agree with Doctor Gladden in all he says about the church taking money that has been obtained in an unlawful and outrageous manner. We do not want such money. Take the case of Helen Gould. It is all right for any church to take her money, although it came to her from her father, who made it in a most unchristian way. Miss Gould is a good Christian woman and has done much good with the money left to her."

There is here a contradiction in terms. Reverend Gladden denounces the gift of money obtained flagitiously; and for this reason the money offered the missions board should not be accepted. Reverend Fulton agrees with him fully in all he said; but finds that the money of Miss Helen Gould obtained by her father in a "most unchristian way" and inherited by her from him "is all right for any church to accept." The money offered by Mr. Rockefeller being in first hands must not be accepted, but the money of Mr. Gould, obtained in a similarly "unchristian way," passing into the hands of Miss Gould becomes Christianized in second hands and the church does right to accept of them.

By this rule of reasoning Miss Gould should have refused to accept her father's millions, notwithstanding the good use she is able to make of it.

Again, by this rule of reasoning Mr. Rockefeller, instead of passing his money directly to the missions board to be expended by them could have given the sum intended to some "good Christian" man, and then, the money being thus Christianized, it could be accepted by the church without blame.

The money offered to the missions board by Mr. Rockefeller may have come into his hands through the manipulation of the markets of the United States, and the rest of the world, by the Standard Oil Company, but in spite of sentimentalism and adverse criticism from competing oil producers and merchants it is legally his to dispose of as he chooses.

He may build palatial mansions, pay enormously fancy prices for ornamentation, horses, cats, dogs, bric-a-brac, or give his money for charity, public or private, and no one may legally estop him. The small sum paid to the Standard Oil Company, by any one of the many millions of the people who may have contributed to his excessive aggregation of wealth, can not be identified and no action of debt would lie for its recovery. Hence when Doctor Gladden asserts that the money which Mr. Rockefeller gives is not his but belongs to the people, to whom does he refer? And by what process would he have the money returned to the individual citizens who have bought Standard Oil? It would seem somewhat paradoxical for any portion of the people to refuse to receive portions of the aggregate sum held by Mr. Rockefeller when he voluntarily offers to return such portions to the people. He could only return his surplus in the way under consideration, and by helping other and similar charities, or public benefactions like the overdone public library gifts of Andrew Carnegie, some of which impose a burden on the people to maintain.

If Mr. Gould's millions, though obtained in an "unchristian way," become Christianized in passing through the hands of his daughter, so may the money received by Mr. Rockefeller from the people in infinitesimal sums from each be given back to the people in large sums to be devoted to the people's good.

It will hardly do for the average church, composed of all classes in community, to institute a board of inquiry whose duty it shall be to inquire into the several individual sources whence moneys flow into the corporate strong box to reject what has been obtained in unchristian ways; for what has been done by Mr. Gould and Mr. Rockefeller in a large way has been done, and now is being done in a variety of small ways by individuals, many of whom are chief supporters of the church. It might turn out that much money would need, to be Christianized. Paul wrote, "All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any." Conditions determined expediency; that being settled the lawfulness of it follows.

The report of the prudential committee to which the offer of Mr. Rockefeller was referred for inquiry as to its acceptance among other things states, that the acceptance of a gift involves no expression of opinion on the part of the committee as to the character of the givers and to intercept a gift to others in order to express an opinion seems unwarrantable. This seems to be a common-sense view of the situation.

EMMA SMITH AND HER SELECTION OF HYMNS.

In 1830, July, as recorded in Doctrine and Covenants, section 24, language was directed to Emma Smith as follows:

And it shall be given thee, also, to make a selection of sacred hymns, as it shall be given thee, which is pleasing unto me, to be had in my church; for my soul delighteth in the song of the heart; yea, the song of righteousness is a prayer unto me. And it shall be answered with blessing upon their heads. Wherefore, lift up thy heart and rejoice, and cleave unto the covenants which thou hast made.

The attempt has been made to use this language to Emma Smith to her detriment or dishonor, by stating that she had never complied with this command of Deity. This was of course an attempt made by an enemy to the church to throw discredit upon the lady elect, and to make light of some of the commands contained in the Doctrine and Covenants.

That they should have used this and made the statement that she never complied with this request shows how little they have delved into the history of the organization.

Doubtless if Emma Smith had been a woman of leisure, and had not had the care of the family upon her shoulders, she could have complied with this request in a comparatively short time. But one who knows of the multitudinous duties of the housewife can fully comprehend that the work of selecting and preparing for publication a volume of hymns must necessarily extend over a considerable length of time, especially for a woman whose disposition was to make her duties to her family of first importance.

In the second volume of Church History, page 372, we find this language:

The 26th they [the High Council] also voted that Sr. Emma Smith select and publish a hymn-book for the use of the church, and that Brigham Young be informed of the same, and he not to publish the hymns taken by him from Commerce; and that the Council assist in publishing a hymn-book and the Times and Seasons.

The work of Emma Smith in compiling the collection of hymns was consummated when, in 1841, there was issued a book from the press of E. Robinson at Nauvoo, Illinois, the title-page of which reads as follows: "A collection of sacred hymns for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, selected by Emma Smith."

Besides four pages of preface, etc., the book contains three hundred and fifty-one pages with index, and contains a total of three hundred and four hymns. The preface reads as follows:

In order to sing with the Spirit, and with the understanding, it is necessary that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints should have a collection of "SACRED HYMNS" adapted to their faith and belief in the gospel, and, as far as can be, holding forth the promises made to the fathers who died in the precious faith of a glorious resurrection, and a thousand years' reign on the earth with the Son of Man in his glory. Notwithstanding the church, as it were, is still in its infancy, yet, as the song of the righteous is a prayer unto God, it is certainly hoped that the following collection, selected with an eye single to his glory, may answer every purpose, until more are composed, or until we are blessed with a copious variety of the songs of Zion.

That Emma's work was carried on with the command of God constantly before her mind is evident from the fact that in her preface she uses the beautiful idea expressed in the command: "The song of the righteous is a prayer unto God."

Our "friends, the enemy," who have attempted to point out Emma's failure to comply with this command, flaunted it as another "evidence," as they term it, that Joseph Smith was a false prophet. The facts prove quite the contrary.

The only copy of this little volume which we have been privileged to see, that of the 1841 edition, is in the library of the Pennsylvania Historical Society in Philadelphia. We looked the little volume over with a great deal of interest, and ran through the index of first lines. We noted among others some of the following very familiar hymns still used in the church:

"All hail the power of Jesus name"; "Arise, my soul, arise"; "Alas, and did my Savior bleed"; "Am I a soldier of the cross"; "Beyond the glittering, starry skies"; "Begone unbelief, my Savior is near"; "Come, ye that love the Lord"; "Come, thou fount of every blessing"; "Come, all ye sons of Zion"; "Come, let us anew"; "Glorious things are sung of Zion"; "Guide us, O thou great Jehovah"; "How firm a foundation"; "Here at thy table, Lord, we meet"; "Hark! listen to the trumpeters"; "Jesus, and shall it ever be"; "Joy to the world! the Lord will come"; "Lord, we come before thee now"; "Let us pray, gladly pray"; "Lo! on the water's brink we stand"; "O Jesus! the giver"; "Praise ye the Lord, 'tis good to raise"; "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning"; "Who are these arrayed in white?"

We do not know how many editions of this work were published in the old church, but we do know that in 1860 the church, then reorganized, again asked, Sr. Emma to make a collection of hymns, and she again responded and enriched the collections she had already made, which was subsequently published by the Reorganized Church. Surely, on this score Emma Smith can not be charged with dereliction of duty.

Wisconsin is first in line on constitutional amendment against polygamy:

"MADISON, Wisconsin, April 8.—A joint resolution was introduced in the Wisconsin senate to-day calling on the national congress 'to pass such remedial legislation as will put a stop to polygamy and polygamous living and political control of the Mormon hierarchy and that we request the United States senators from the state of Wisconsin to vote to refuse Reed Smoot, an apostle of this church and one of its highest officers, the right to continue as a senator from the United States senate.'"—Des Moines Capital, April 8, 1905.

The South Sea Islands have been visited by a hurricane. We take the following from the Kansas City Journal of April 13:

"PAPEETE, Tahiti, March 31, via San Francisco, April 12.—On the evening of the 24th inst. a southeast gale developed into a hurricane near Tahiti. On the following morning the Japanese schooner Orlfena reported that her ship's boat had been damaged on a reef at Mahatea, one hundred and twenty miles north of Tahiti. On the 25th inst. the storm broke over Papeete. Great trees came crashing down, in some instances tearing houses in two.

"In the harbor the schooner C. Coppenarth struck a quay near the Oceanic steamship wharf, and had a narrow escape. Paul Martin's steamship-launch had its back broken, being washed ashore against the rocks, following close upon a government cutter, which was completely smashed. The schooner Marion dragged her anchors, but sustained little damage.

"The other sections of Tahiti suffered much damage from the fury of the gale. The French Protestant missionary schooner Leiox du Sud put into Teravan bay, losing nearly all her sails.

"The steamship Mariposa of San Francisco encountered the outer edge of the hurricane, two days out from Papeete, and was delayed about six hours, being compelled to avoid the usual passage through the Tuamotu islands, in favor of the new westerly one, around Mutuhiva, which is longer by one hundred miles. It is feared in Tahiti that the schooner Teite, owned by some natives, went down in the storm. It is also feared that the Famoier More, which is being repaired at Here Hentai, where she had struck two months ago, was caught in the gale. The greatest damage done by the storm is believed to lie in the destruction of cocoanut groves. In the Tuamotu section, the copra industry has been generally retarded for this season. Edward S. Hall, presiding elder of the Mormon church, has recently purchased a site in the city of Papeete suitable for the erection of a church and mission house."

APRIL 12.

The morning prayer-service was in charge of J. W. Wildermuth and Joshua Carlile.

Preaching in the forenoon by F. C. Keck, assisted by A. M. Baker.

At two o'clock conference met for business, with Frederick M. Smith in chair. Song 186 was sung, prayer by R. C. Evans.

Discussion of deferred business was resumed, and F. G. Pitt, Joseph Smith, William H. Kelley, F. A. Russell, Frank J. Chatburn, E. A. Blakeslee were heard from.

A motion to amend the substitute by striking out all after the word Resolved, and inserting, "that we receive the majority and minority reports of the college trustees but do not indorse either." Amendment carried. J. R. Lambert then spoke, after which vote upon the previous question was ordered taken. The delegate vote was called. Motions to adjourn till next day, etc., were ruled out of order, although it was past time for adjournment. The ruling of the chair was appealed from, but sustained, and the vote was taken. The substitute as amended carried. The vote stood as follows: Delegate, 1,067 yea, 607 nay; ex officio, 140 yea, 90 nay.

Preaching at eight o'clock by C. J. Hunt, assisted by E. D. Bailey.

APRIL 13.

Prayer-meeting in charge of W. H. Garrett and W. P. Robinson.

Preaching at usual hour by I. M. Smith, assisted by J. B. Wildermuth.

One was baptized at the noon hour by D. A. Anderson, and confirmed by Elders Elvin, Kemp, and Anderson.

The two o'clock session was presided over by Joseph Smith. Hymn 134. Prayer by A. Carmichael. Minutes read, amended, and approved.

A motion prevailed that no new business be admitted after three o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

Board of auditors reported that they had audited reports of Ensign Publishing House, Herald Publishing House, Bishop's Office, including Graceland College and Saints' Home accounts, and found them to be correct summaries of accounts as shown by the books of the several offices. A. Carmichael, F. A. Russell, Charles Fry, board of auditors. Report adopted.

Reports were received from the following: High Priests' Quorum, First Seventy, Second Seventy, First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth Quorums of Elders, Third Quorum of Priests, Second Quorum of Teachers, Second Quorum of Deacons, and Daughters of Zion.

Report of the committee to whom was referred the petition from the Colorado District, was received. They reported that the appeal was signed "Fifty-six Fraternal Colaborers." No names were signed thereto, and in the opinion of the committee the matter therein contained did not come within the jurisdiction of the conference. The report was adopted.

Notice of amendment to Articles of Incorporation of Graceland College was ruled out of order upon the ground that the sixty days' notice prior to convening of General Conference had not been given. Ruling of chair was appealed from, but was sustained by the body.

Place for holding next General Conference was considered. Independence, Chicago, and Lamoni were named. The vote resulted as follows: Independence 238, Chicago 28, Lamoni 73.

The resignation of J. W. Wight as a member of the board of trustees of Graceland College was accepted.

It was moved that a hearty vote of thanks be given the man who stood out for his convictions in the face of all opposition. Motion prevailed.

A resolution recommending that a correspondence department be established in Graceland College as soon as found practicable was referred to the board of trustees, as was also a resolution recommending that an industrial department be added to Graceland College.

The following resolution was introduced and its adoption moved:

Whereas the law of God provides that Zion shall obtain on earth and can be accomplished only by the "celestial law" which provides that we shall be one and equal, as found in the following language: "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119:8. And, "Behold this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, even as I, the Lord, have appointed, or shall hereafter appoint unto any man. And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God; yea, neither the bishop, neither the agent, who keepeth the Lord's storehouse; neither he who is appointed in a stewardship over temporal things; he who is appointed to administer spiritual things, the same is worthy of his hire, even as those who are appointed to a stewardship, to administer in temporal things; yea, even more abundantly, which abundance is multiplied unto them through the manifestations of the Spirit; nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld."—Doctrine and Covenants 70:3. As the "Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them"—hence the resolution of April 14, 1893, which reads as follows:

"Resolved that in the opinion of this quorum, general church ministers who labor in the literary concerns of the church shall conform to the provisions of the law in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, as found in 70:3, and 72:4.

"Resolved further that the Board of Publication be instructed to carry this resolution into effect in its management of the Herald Office." Believing it to be the duty of those appointed to administer the law in temporal things to do so without preference or partiality, as Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom as found in section 102, and being desirous to see the law honored in all its provisions: Therefore be it

Resolved that we reaffirm the aforesaid resolution as adopted, and require that this rule shall apply to all members in the employ of the church.

Moved and seconded to amend by adding after the word "Herald" the words "and Ensign," and to add the letter "s" after the word "Office" so as to read "Herald and Ensign Offices."

Moved and seconded to further amend by inserting after the words "Herald and Ensign Offices" "all banks, farms, manufactories, merchandise, colleges, whatever business under the management of church-members."

It was moved to defer further action on this matter until a quarter after two o'clock the next day. It was also moved that copies of the resolution and amendments be printed and distributed to delegates and ex officio members of the body.

The following resolution was introduced:

Whereas the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints recognizes but one cause for the divorce of married persons, viz., adultery, or fornication, therefore, be it

Resolved that marriage by ministers of this church of persons who have been divorced for other than said cause be, and is, hereby forbidden.

Action was deferred.

Preaching at the church at half past seven by James McKiernan, assisted by James Kelley.

APRIL 14.

The morning prayer-service was in charge of Ammon White and Henry Kemp.

Preaching at a quarter to eleven by Arthur Allen, assisted by E. Rannie.

The two o'clock business-session was presided over by R. C. Evans. Song 110. Prayer by R. May.

Special report from the First Quorum of Seventy was received.

Report was read from the Third Quorum of Priests.

At a quarter after two the deferred matter was taken up.

A motion that speeches be limited to fifteen minutes prevailed.

A motion to refer to the Presiding Bishopric, and another to refer to the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Bishopric, were lost. The afternoon session was devoted to a discussion of the matter. Motion to defer further consideration until to-morrow afternoon was then carried.

Song 187. Dismissed by Joseph Smith.

Preaching at half past seven by T. C. Kelley, assisted by J. M. Stubbart.

APRIL 15.

Prayer-service at usual time in charge of A. McCallum and L. D. Ullom.

Charles Jones preached in the forenoon, assisted by J. D. Stead.

R. C. Evans presided over the afternoon session. Hymn 1. Prayer by J. W. Wight.

The matter deferred from yesterday was taken up. After some discussion the following substitute was moved and prevailed:

Whereas it is a part of the work and duty of the Saints to do all in their power to redeem the waste places and establish Zion in keeping with the commandments as revealed in the law of Christ, and

Whereas it is only by the fulfillment and administration of the celestial law that the land of Zion can be sanctified and her children stand justified and made fully acceptable to God, therefore be it

Resolved that we commend the efforts of the Bishopric to administer the law touching the interests and work of the church in the stakes and so far as the same is practicable in all the branches of the church in every land and in every department of the work, and believe it proper that a full compliance with the same be urged upon every member so far as the same may be had in equality and justice.

Resolved that we recognize in the work and findings of the joint council of the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, contained in the report of said council entitled, "An address to the Saints," a proper presentation of this law, and outlines upon which to carry forward such work.

Report of the First Presidency to the conference is as follows:

To the conference: In a general way the development of the work in the past year has been quite satisfactory, though there have in some instances been local conditions which are adverse and troubles which are annoying, to say the least.

We feel that on the whole the work has advanced, though the peculiar conditions in which the church finds itself makes it difficult to tell just how great has been the advancement. It is quite generally believed that the church has been for some time past, and indeed now is, passing through what might be termed a transition period.

The needs of the church in a general way are at present great, and the question is, What is the probability of these demands being met? The cry everywhere is for more laborers. From every part of the land comes the request to come and help, to send more men into the field; men to care for the members, and men to tell the good story of the gospel to those not of the faith. But where are the men, and where the means to send them and to care for their families?

In a statistical way the growth of the church has been told in the reports made by the Recorder, Historian, and Secretary, and others.

The Presidency feel that one of the crying demands upon the church to-day is for measures to be instituted to bring about greater unity and closer association of all engaged in the development of church-work as a whole; and more complete ramifications through all parts of the church of the spirit of consultation and brotherly co-operation. All can see that it is impossible for us to prosecute our work as it should be prosecuted and make the progress we should be capable of making, if departments of the church as a whole are not working in complete harmony and understanding.

We caution the membership against entertaining or encouraging the spirit of suspicion.

The members of the Presidency in the past year have tried to care for the work in their charge to advantage. As is generally known, two members of the Presidency have been on the editorial staff of the HERALD, and one has acted as manager of the Canadian Messenger. One has been in editorial control of the HERALD, and one has been in direct charge of the missionary work in Canada, at the same time acting as Bishop's agent for that mission.

The Presidency has been represented at some seven reunions in the past year, at about fourteen district and stake conferences, five church dedications, and have visited in seven of the general missions of the church.

The future is before us, and in that future lie problems for this church to solve, problems the solution of which will probably try us as a people as great or greater than we have been tried in the past. To enter in upon the work before us demands steps looking towards individual perfection, that in turn our general condition may tend constantly upward, and hence toward unity and charitable harmony.

May the spirit of the work, the Spirit of the Master be with us to that end.

JOSEPH SMITH,
FRED M. SMITH,
R. C. EVANS,
The First Presidency.

APRIL 17.

The Quorum of Twelve presented the following report, which after amending the clause, "under the direction of the local authorities in connection with the minister in charge," to read, "in harmony with local authorities under the direction of the minister in charge," was adopted:

LAMONI, Iowa, April 15, 1905.

To the General Conference; Greeting: The Quorum of Twelve has adopted the following preamble and resolution and hereby present the same to you for your action.

Whereas the general missionary list has those on it who, by reason of age and other disabilities, are unable to travel and perform satisfactory missionary labor in the active field, and

Whereas it is our conviction that the list should be kept up to the best working condition possible, and the Presidency having advised removing from the list those who are not effective missionaries, the Bishop also requesting us to release those who by reason of lack of ability, infirmities of old age, physical condition, or family surroundings, that make it impracticable for them to do the work of an active missionary in the field, therefore be it

Resolved that we revise our list, retiring those who are incapacitated for active missionary work, from the general missionary list. Those aged ones, who by long and faithful service are entitled to our special consideration should be placed on the retired list, known as superannuated ministers, they to do such labor as their strength and circumstances will permit, under the direction of the local authorities in connection with the minister in charge, and they should receive the same consideration as the general appointees in the field, if their circumstances require it, they to report their labors and financial condition to the minister in charge annually.

Appointment to this list should be made by the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, in joint session, and published with the balance of the appointments.

These preambles and resolution were presented to the First Presidency, the two Quorums of Seventy, and the Bishopric, for their consideration.

The First Presidency reported their action as follows:

"Dear Brethren: The Presidency have received and considered the document submitted to them by you concerning your action had in quorum session on April 7, 1905, relative to the retiring of superannuated ministers, those incapacitated by age to do active missionary labor.

"We note that you have adopted resolution looking to the placing of such men on the retired list, they to labor as their strength and circumstances will permit, under the direction of local authorities, in connection with the minister in charge, and that they should receive the same consideration as the general appointees in the field.

"The Presidency has considered the matter and are of the opinion that such a move would be to the advantage of the work, and hence can give their indorsement to the action taken by you.

Faternally yours,

"The First Presidency,

"Per FREDERICK M. SMITH, Sec."

The First Quorum of Seventy reported their action as follows:

"To the Quorum of Twelve: The following action was unanimously passed by the Quorum of First Seventy: That we hereby approve of the resolution passed by the Quorum of Twelve as contained in communication. . . . Yours in bonds,

"J. F. MINTUN, Secretary of First Quorum of Seventy."

The Second Quorum of Seventy reported their action as follows:

"To the Quorum of Twelve: This is to inform you that the document containing whereases and resolutions, adopted by your honorable body, regarding the revising of the missionary list, and the superannuating of the aged faithful ministers, etc., was presented to the Second Quorum of Seventy at one of their sessions, held on the above date at half past eight in the morning, and the following obtained:

"Moved to approve the whereases and resolution coming to us from the Quorum of Twelve. Carried.

"Respectfully submitted on behalf of the Second Quorum,

"H. E. MÖLER, Secretary,

"F. A. RUSSELL, Assistant Secretary."

The Bishopric informed us of their action as follows:

"To the Quorum of Twelve; Greeting: The Bishopric having duly considered the action of the Twelve as reported to us touching revision of the missionary list so as to place those only upon the general force who are able to travel and perform general active service and make special appointment of those who can not so act, respectfully report, that we fully concur in the proposition.

"Very respectfully,

"E. L. KELLEY,

"G. H. HILLIARD,

"E. A. BLAKESLEE."

Respectfully submitted, in behalf of the Quorum of Twelve.

HEMAN C. SMITH, Secretary.

Resolution on divorce which was deferred from Thursday was considered. It was argued that the ground was sufficiently covered by action of a prior General Conference, and a motion to lay on the table prevailed.

Fifth Quorum of Elders presented the following preambles and resolution:

Whereas our church periodicals, the SAINTS' HERALD, and Zion's Ensign, are recognized as the "official organ," and the "missionary paper" of the church, and as such whatever appears upon their pages is taken as representative of the faith advocated by them, and

Whereas for some time past there has appeared an advertisement in both of the papers referred to, including the current issues, which says that "Quit-to-bac" is "a God-given remedy" for the curing of the tobacco habit, and

Whereas we do not believe that God has either directly or indirectly authorized any one to say that he has given "Quit-to-bac" as a remedy for the tobacco habit, and

Whereas the statement of this kind appearing in our church papers is taken (by some readers) as an indorsement of the church that "Quit-to-bac" is a "God-given remedy," and

Whereas our church periodicals should not permit an advertisement of anything that is not strictly reliable and known to be as represented, and

Whereas we believe that God has given a remedy for the cure of the tobacco habit in his word as recorded in Doctrine and Covenants 119:3, where he says, "Avoid the use of tobacco," and

Whereas we believe that the advertisement referred to is a disgrace to the church and a blemish upon the paper of every issue of the above-named papers in which it has appeared; therefore be it

Resolved that we disapprove of this advertisement, and that the board of publication be, and is, hereby instructed to cease the publication of the same.

D. A. ANDERSON, Secretary of Quorum.

The adoption of the foregoing was moved and carried.

A report from the Seven Presidents of Seventy was read which included the names of thirteen persons, which were recommended for ordination to the office of seventy.

These names were acted upon separately by the body. D. A. Anderson, Wardell Christy, Charles E. Harp, John A. Becker, E. F. Robertson, E. J. Goodenough, and James T. Davis each signified their willingness to accept the responsibility, and it was provided that they be ordained at the Sunday afternoon prayer-service.

Jasper O. Dutton and W. E. Haden each requested till Monday afternoon in which to consider the matter, and their requests were granted.

Alvin Knisley, R. C. Russell, William Mackie, and J. H. N. Jones were not present, and it was moved that the recommendations be approved and provided they accept, their ordinations to be provided for by the respective ministers in charge.

President Joseph Smith stated that in 1900 John Zimmerman was nominated for ordination as bishop, but not until now has he felt willing to accept. The nomination was approved by the body. The ordination took place during the afternoon session, after singing, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," and prayer by Frederick M. Smith, under the hands of President Joseph Smith, W. H. Kelley, F. G. Pitt, and E. L. Kelley.

A request from the Fifth Quorum of Elders, asking that provision be made for the ordination of C. I. Carpenter as president of quorum, and H. E. French as first counselor, was granted.

Reports were read from the First, Second, and Fourth Quorums of Priests.

On motion the election of members of the board of trustees of Graceland College was taken up. Daniel Anderson and J. A. Gunsolley were chosen to succeed themselves, and E. L. Kelley, Jr., was chosen to fill the short term caused by the resignation of J. W. Wight.

At the evening session Bro. W. E. Haden stated his willingness to accept ordination as seventy, and on motion the ordination was authorized. By separate motion it was also authorized that the ordination of J. O. Dutton be provided for should he accept.

At eight o'clock in the evening meeting of the Aaronic priesthood was held in the basement, in charge of the Presiding Bishop, E. L. Kelley, and his counselors, G. H. Hilliard and E. A. Blakeslee.

THE FOOLISHNESS OF PREACHING.

SERMON DELIVERED BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH AT THE REUNION AT DOW CITY, IOWA, SEPTEMBER 25, 1904.

(Reported by Belle Robinson James.)

The underlying principle of our faith, upon which every individual must necessarily stand, and upon which the carrying out of the great results which we anticipate for ourselves and each other as individuals must be based is this, that every individual must answer for himself. Whatever relation will exist between individuals and the one who shall apportion the awards for good or ill that men may have done upon the earth, is established between the individual and the Judge, upon the individual's own responsibility; and it is because of this principle that we as a people have always been willing to put ourselves within the light of the closest scrutiny, and furnish to every man who makes the inquiry, every possible means in our power to satisfy himself of the ground we occupy in the religious controversy, and of the particular items of our belief.

You can easily see that no one of us has any special interest for so deceiving any other persons that they will put their happiness in this life, their anticipation of happiness and contentment in the life beyond into jeopardy; because each of us realizes that we must stand before that great Judge and give an account for what shall be said and done by us individually in the flesh, and as a consequence we are satisfied in not having persons presenting themselves in that judgment-day with just accusations against us.

To illustrate this in order that you may comprehend more certainly what I mean. I may possibly not use much scripture, as those who have gone before me have covered the ground so faithfully that there is hardly anything left for me but the argumentation of the philosophy so far as the time will permit. I went into the Historical Association Building in Chicago a few years ago and saw the curator. In the course of our conversation he said that a gentleman whom I had known was making an effort to get up a work against us as a people had been in there, and had found upon the shelves of the association one of the earliest exposes of Mormonism that had been put into print. Examining it he found that it had been donated to the library by myself, and said to this curator: "I am surprised to find this book here, coming as it does from Mr. Smith; I would have thought that he would have been the last person to put into the hands of the public this work." It seemed to disturb him. I told the curator if he had an occasion to see this other man to tell him from me personally, that I was not so big a fool as to undertake to cover up all the claimed evidence against the people or against the theory; that the very fact of attempting to cover it up was an acknowledgment that much of it was true. I had no interest in covering it. My interest was that the people should have both sides of the controversy and then they should draw their own deductions, and if the philosophy that I with my brethren stood in defense of was a true one, it would stand the light; if it did not stand the light of investigation, I wanted to find it out as quickly as possible, and inform my brethren, and lay down our weapons and quit fighting. Now I feel just that way to-night.

I once was out in the Western country at the town of Logan, Utah. I heard a gentleman preach a gospel sermon in the ward-house there; and in the course of the sermon heard this illustration: "Now if I tell a gentleman that I have a thousand dollars, the best evidence that I have that thousand dollars is the thousand dollars itself." It seemed to be a foregone conclusion that an argument like that could not be met by one who was opposed to that particular philosophy. Let us see. "If I tell a man that I have a thousand dollars, the best evidence that I can produce that I have it in possession is the thousand dollars itself." He went on to make the statement, that using the word doctrines instead of dollars, they had the doctrines, and the best evidence in the world that they had them was that they had them. That sounded first-rate.

I suppose this position may be taken by every man that stands in the sacred desk and presents to those who come to hear him what he understands to be the means of life and salvation, the gospel as he and his coworkers are preaching it.

I did not reply to this discourse, but I spoke afterwards in the same building and referred to it. I admitted the logic of the statement but found fault with its application in this form. If a gentleman tells me that he has a thousand dollars, and that the best evidence that he has it is the fact of its possession, I have no quarrel with him; but if I hold his note or obligation to pay me a thousand dollars, when he presents the thousand dollars I may put every individual dollar of it to every test that I have in my power to determine whether the dollars are genuine or false; and he may stand up and object as much as he pleases, but he can not compel me to accept a single dollar of it until I have proved it to be genuine. You can understand that. Now, make the application to doctrine if you please, anywhere. You may make it in reference to the doctrines we may present, because that is your duty and it is your privilege. We have no right nor inclination to put a single hindrance in your way either to cover up or to prevent you having the clearest manner of investigation that is possible for you to make. And so one by one I tested the doctrines in my way by the text-book, by the cogent reasoning of fact, and put up my hands and refused to accept of that which I could not prove to be genuine.

Take this underlying principle now, that every man must answer for the deeds which are done in the flesh. We have this revealed: that God has endowed every individuality with the spirit which is controlling the body in which that sentient being called man is encouched, and he never will absolve that spirit from the responsibility which is thus thrust upon him by his particular creation until the great testing day is come and the test is over and the spirit is established in the right of life everlasting, in the resurrected body or in the body which Christ shall give it at his coming, and apportion him the place to which he is properly allotted.

Upon this individual responsibility rests a great deal of controversy. It involves the right of inquiry, and also it involves the privilege of establishing a relationship between God through Jesus Christ individually; and every man moving in every sphere, every woman stands within the right of being received by Jesus Christ upon what he or she may be at the time that judgment shall take place. I have put that far enough away not to frighten any of you. One of the reasons that I have for presenting this thought of individual responsibility is this: I am before the people as a son of my father, like the rest of these men here. But somehow there is attached to me as an individual a peculiar kind of conspicuousness because I am the son of my father, and the world somehow expects me to apologize for a good many things that my father is charged with having done. If he were here to-night and I had the privilege of telling him just as I tell you, I should tell him that he must answer for his own wrong-doings. I might possibly offer myself as a vicarious atonement, if I could bear his stripes, because of my filial relationship to him, but God would not expect that he would hold me responsible for what he himself had done. If he were arrested and taken before any court or tribunal where I had the privilege to appear in his defense I would see that he had a fair trial by every means in my power, but I would not attempt to shield him from the just punishment which his deeds had entitled him to receive. You may think that is harsh language from a son but I have a reason for making it.

The friends of Joseph Smith, so claimed, have charged him with wrong-doing; his enemies have done the same thing, and myself and my brethren, and a goodly number of others, appear before the world, as they suppose, as apologists for our progenitors. We do not do anything of the kind. We stand for the doctrines of Jesus Christ as these men presented them upon the authority of the Master himself, answering for our own individuality, not for theirs, but answering for what we may see and feel and know concerning these doctrines which we claim have been restored by revelation unto men, by which every man may be received into personal relationship with Jesus Christ, and established upon the rock so firmly and so solidly planted that the universe may be shaken but the man will stand firm. Any man who has the truth ought not to be afraid to let others examine it, and whenever I put up the bars to prevent my neighbor from inquiring into my doctrines, those things that I present for the benefit of men, I am going to do it when I get weak enough to confess that I am afraid of them. I am not going to do it; and whenever any man undertakes to put up the bars against my investigation into his theories which he has made public, I am just as sure to continue to tap on the walls to see what is behind them, and if he protests I shall take it for granted that he is afraid; I shall take it for granted that he has something there that will not bear the light of investigation.

I am now ready for the text. Are you? It has been quoted several times in these meetings:

For after that in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.

Here is the process: The saving is presented; the effect of salvation is presented; and the one from whom the salvation comes is presented. And the reason why I often feel called upon to bless God because he has so wondrously provided in his word, that after the commandments which he gives, after the strange requirements which he makes of us, he has so often presented the reasons why, right by and with the commandment itself, that every man ought to be aware of what they are. For instance, this one is just like it: "For after that in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God"—here is the premise, the reason why God proposed to do a certain work. The world had struggled to find him, the preaching of Christ was foolishness to the people; and let me tell you it is foolishness to a great many people at the present time. And this assembly that has been here to-day and the people who have worshiped here, those things that have been presented from this stand have been considered in the minds of some who have visited us as absolute foolishness, and some of them, no doubt, look upon me as being the most foolish one in the lot. For as a gentleman once told me, "Mr. Smith, I am really surprised that a man of your intelligence should believe as you do." I do not doubt that I have been pitted a good many times for that same reason. I said, "Come, do you know what my belief is, sir?" "Well, I have heard something about it." "Did you ever read any of my writings?" "No, sir." "Did you ever hear me preach?" "No, sir." "How, then, do you know what my belief is?" He said, "I heard one of your men once and I did not believe it." "Does my brother conclude me in what he presents?" The fact was that he at one time in a country school-house had heard one of our brethren in a debate with another man; the subject being disputed was the resurrection from the dead, and because he heard this brother of mine defending the proposition of the resurrection from the dead, he concluded that he was very much surprised that we, as intelligent men, should believe as we did. Now, is not that a curious judgment for an intelligent man to pass upon another?

The wisdom of men had failed to find out God at the time this was written, and the very same wisdom has failed now, always will fail. And why? Because in his inscrutable wisdom he has placed the barriers against the encroachment of human intellect and the resources at men's disposal outside of the spirit which he himself may give him by virtue of which he may understand God to the extent that he intends he shall. We can figure it out just as we please, but that is a fact. He has set limits to the reaching out of human intelligence. He has said to this boasting manhood of ours: "Thus far and no farther shalt thou go. I have set bounds around about my individuality and until I reveal myself, man's wisdom shall not be able to compass it."

The apostle Paul was a philosopher. He was not an idle writer. He was not an ignorant man. He was one of the most astute writers of the New Testament Scripture. His epistles are absolute marvels of research, and withal they are so kindly worded and show such excellency of charity that it is a pleasure to read after him, and yet he names some things which men aspire after as being vain philosophy and this is one of them, for men to suppose that they can compass the knowledge of God. We have tramped this park until we have crushed down almost all the grass with which it was covered ten days ago, and yet not one man of all the wise hosts of us or of all the wise hosts in this Western world can tell us the principle by which the grass is made to grow. We can see the phenomena of growth in the tree, in the grass, in the flowers, but we have no possible means of compassing a knowledge of the power of life by which they grow. We have no way of knowing and it is wise that we have not.

God saw this. He pitied man and according to the statement of the apostle Paul here, he undertook by the foolishness of preaching to save men that would believe. He writes concerning the preaching at that time:

For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise: and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty: and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are: that no flesh should glory in his presence.

What a man wants to be endowed with to preach the gospel is an overpowering sense of the truth; and when he has that I do not care how ignorant he is he will tell you a good story, and will indulge in arguments that are absolutely irrefutable. I do not believe that it is necessary for a man to have a collegiate education to tell the truth. Some of the wisest men that we have are the most skillful in covering up the truth, but "except a man become as a little child, he can in no wise enter into the kingdom." College scholars, and the men educated in the things of this world must come to the Savior and as a humble child must imbibe the truth before ever they can tell it, they must become acquainted with the truth before ever they can make a presentable test of it before their fellow men.

What was it that was so foolishly preached back there? Our brethren have been trying to tell us it was the gospel. It was at all events something by which they could become acquainted with the things which God had designed they should receive a knowledge of, and they were to do it by believing it. No man is going to enter into a speculation unless he has some kind of a belief that he will be successful. Many a man has thrown his wealth into the mines of the earth, dug holes deep with it, because he believed by the expenditure of labor that he should find wealth and receive in return. Men must enter in upon the pursuit of the truth in some such like spirit as that and they must persistently urge them forward in their pursuit upon the hypothesis that they must reach it for themselves, each individual to receive benefit for himself.

I have no doubt that these fishermen presented a foolish aspect to the wise men of their times. I have no doubt of it at all, and I have no doubt that it will continue to be so until the last man and woman are saved. It can not be otherwise, for there will be by and by a time come when the Savior will appear, and he has made the inquiry, Shall he find faith upon the earth? It is the faith of men that shall save them. It is the faith in them that shall produce the good works. If a man has no faith he can do nothing, can accomplish nothing, neither in the temporal world, nor in the spiritual world. If he has no faith, the farmer is a failure; so is the lawyer, the doctor, and the merchant; every class of workman if he has no faith can not work acceptably. A man never laid a brick, nor hammered a stone into shape but what he did it through the exercise of his faith; by virtue of his faith he shaped the stone, lined up the brick and mortar, pointed the joints into shape, turned the furrow after the plow, sowed the seed and reaped the harvest.

It seems to me we ought to use just as much common sense in this dearer and better pursuit that we exercise in our common, every-day affairs. Under the influence of this principle that every man must answer for himself, Joseph Smith and others presented themselves to the world with the statement that an angel had brought the gospel of the Son of God. A wonderful thing! That an angel had been sent, that he had committed the gospel unto men to be preached upon the earth, to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people. One peculiarity about that message was this: The men went with the Bible in their hands, they invited their comrades, their neighbors, to take the Bibles off their center-tables, to get them out of their closets, and bring them to their meeting-places, and watch them to see whether they perverted the scripture. We have invited you to do the same thing. The reason why we come with the King James' Version in our hands is this: We were told by the voice of revelation from God that the church was to take the things which were written in his Scriptures to be his law, to govern his church, and in this light they should hold them forth, the Scriptures. No people under the shining sun, especially in Christian lands, no people in this land-come before their fellow men with any stronger guarantee of their confidence and trust in the word of God than do the people whom we have been representing for these last ten days; for we have stated to you as we state now, that God has imposed upon us by virtue of revelation which we have accepted as his voice unto us, that we were to preach the Scriptures, the principles of life and salvation found in the gospel of the New Testament.

What is the reason you can not believe us? What is the reason that you come to us, listen to us, and then go away—just spending a holiday—you have been to a Mormon meeting and you have heard the Mormon preachers? I have been hunted while I have been on these grounds to see whether I had horns. People have heard that I had horns—where is your common sense? Have you any? For pity's sake use it, if you have any. Why, if I had horns, do you know what I would do? I would go and find Barnum or some other circus man and hire out for a fake show! Do you suppose that I would exhibit myself before intelligent people on a platform, preaching the gospel of the Son of God, if I had horns? Say, do exercise your common sense. Do you suppose I would undertake to walk on the waters of the Missouri on planks put in the water, or any of these Western streams, and undertake to fool the people, and make them think I was walking on the water, when you know there is not a stream in all this Western country that you could lay a six-inch board on and not be seen by any one that had his eyes? And if the current was any ways strong or clear those boards would be washed away in no time. Do you think that any man would fool you as a people? And yet Joseph Smith, my father, has walked on the water in the Mississippi River, in Chagrin Creek, in Seneca Lake, and I do not know where all—I have heard it over all this country. One man stated he saw him, and when Bishop Rogers asked him how old he was at the time, he learned that he was not born until forty years after my father was killed. It seems to me if any man had common sense, he would not be fooled by any such story as that.

Let me tell you another one to show how easily most people are willing to believe these absurd things. My grandmother was a witch! Oh, she was, undoubtedly! Preachers have said she was: men who have sold books to me have said she was. The family were very poor, but they managed to live somehow, and Lucy, that is my grandmother, was the breadwinner; and nobody knew how under the sun she maintained that family, the great, stalwart husband six feet high, and a lot of rugged, ragged boys, and so they set a watch to see how it was done. They watched about a month or a little over. By and by, one nice, moonlight night, two of them that were on the watch saw grandmother come to the door. She looked this way and that and saw nobody. Then she went back into the house and presently she came out, and evidently had something in her apron. You know how women sometimes have things in their aprons. And one of the boys was with her. They watched her closely. She went along to one of her neighbor's pig-pens where there were some lusty shoats just about half grown; she took out of her apron an ear of corn; she held it over the fence and the shoat got up on the fence with his fore feet to get her corn, and as he did so, she grabbed him, took the butcher-knife out of her paper which she had under her arm, cut him open, and scraped out the tenderloin, first getting hold of the shoat's tail and turning him inside out. Then after she had gotten the meat she wanted, she turned the hog right side out again, put him on his feet and went home. That is the way she got the meat for the family! People have told that and believed it, and doubtless they have trusted that those they have told it to would believe it. And people that had reverence for their Bibles, people that felt good toward their neighbors have absolutely believed that story that grandmother Smith was a witch; a woman of five feet four in height, blue eyes, fair complexion, and as kindly a disposed woman as any man ever had for a grandmother.

I only refer to it for this reason: When you broach an inquiry, ask after the doctrines which men are preaching as the means of life and salvation, do not attempt to forestall the influences of Jesus Christ by such silly, nonsensical stories as these which have pursued us right and left everywhere. Why, only twenty miles from home, they told that I had five wives! Twenty miles from home!! Who told it? Why, somebody that had the means of knowing the truth. I had lived in that neighborhood since 1881 and had preached all over the country there; and I went to a certain place to preach, and some one said, "I hear that Mr. Smith has five wives." A young girl by the name of German who had worked in our house heard this, and said to the party, "If he has, he is the smartest man I ever saw, for there wasn't anybody in the house that I knew anything about except his one wife; and if he had others, he kept them very successfully hid." These people had the means of knowing, and if they had brought their common sense to bear upon the every-day things that were passing around them, they would have known that a man of my reputation, a man holding the position that I did, known over pretty nearly all the State by some of the wisest and best men we have in the State, they would have known that they were being fooled by designing men.

Perhaps enough of that! How about this foolishness of preaching? Jesus Christ said when he was invited to stop at a certain place, "I must preach this gospel of the kingdom in other cities," and he went, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God. That was his manner of preaching foolishness—that was the kind of foolishness that was to save the world at that time. Now, the question comes home to me: Is this foolishness of preaching for you? Is it for the period of time in which you live? Is it for the country in which you dwell? Is it for you and your children after you? Have you an interest in that foolishness of preaching?

Let me call your attention to one or two things that I find in the Scriptures, and they are in your Bibles—examine them at your leisure. In the second chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, on that great pentecostal day, Peter, standing up with the eleven, moved by the Holy Spirit which he had received under the endowment, says, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Our brethren have emphasized that, but the other part of it they have not emphasized and that is this: "For the promise is unto you." Who? Unto you that are here this day. Ah, listen! And then the Spirit moved upon the apostle's heart and brain and fired him with the prophetic power and looking down the stream of time, he said: "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord, our God, shall call." I have not heard a revival appeal since I was a boy but what that conclusion of that voice has rung in my ears, and I have asked myself the question, "Does that promise reach you?" Does it reach me to-day? Does it reach my neighbor? Does it reach those with whom my life is to be passed in this world, in this life, and for whom and with whom I am to answer on the other side? Does that promise reach you people here of Dow City? Does it reach you in this western part of the country? Is it in force? Are you among those to whom God is calling, even those that are afar off? Afar off in point of time? There can be no people farther off than we in point of time. Afar off in point of location? There can hardly be a class of people farther off in regard to geographical position than we. Does it appeal to you? Every man and every woman that pretends to have faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as the Redeemer of the world, is this promise made by the apostle Peter upon the day of pentecost when he was full of the Spirit, of any value to you? I do not care what your denominational name may be. I do not care how far back in the history of the past you may think you can trace your church and the authority by which your ministers are preaching, I do not care how much you reverence the Bible, I do not care what your belief may be, all I want you to know is to find out whether that promise is applicable to you, and if it is let me tell you the conclusion is as inevitable as fate itself; that is, that it is a revelation of the Spirit by which you shall know that Jesus is the Christ, and establishes one of the strongest principles we have been called upon to defend, and one that finds the strongest objection in the minds of our religious confreres, and that is the doctrine of present revelation.

Does God reveal himself now? Now see. "The promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Admit that God is calling any one, and then you have this promise: "And thou shalt receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." What does the gift of the Holy Ghost do for them? Go back into Matthew, I think the sixteenth or eighteenth chapter, and there we have the query made by the Master of his disciples, "Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am?" One said that he was John the Baptist, another that he was Elias, etc. The men to whom he referred did not agree as to who he was. The foolishness of preaching had not as yet reached their hearts to know that and they had not received the knowledge. But he asked these men, these twelve upon whom the Spirit was to operate and who had been with him, "But whom say ye that I am?" Peter, the same wonderful man, says, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." I think in five separate places in the New Testament Scripture this testimony is borne by virtue of the indwelling of the Spirit in the hearts of those who make it. Once in the Acts of the Apostles, and I think each of the three evangelists makes use of the question; one says, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," and the others say the same, differing a little in the wording, but the principle is the same. Christ says to Peter, "I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter." Now Peter, or Cephas, signifies a rock and sometimes people think that it was upon Peter that he would build his church. That is not the case. "And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." That is the way Peter got that knowledge. "I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church." Is he building that church? We may differ as to our beliefs, our opinions, as to our sentiments and our feelings. We may even gather our theological skirts about us and keep other people from teaching us, fearing that we shall be contaminated by their theories and philosophies and thereby our calling and election be endangered, but the question still remains unanswered. Will Jesus build his church, or did he quit building it a good while ago? I am not willing to admit that, for the simple reason that he says in Matthew 28, "I will be with you alway, even unto the end of the world." I had a gentleman quote that as against my text. He held that Jesus Christ was always in the world, and that it was by virtue of this that he and others were engaged in the conflict. I then asked him this question, Why not put that with what had gone before it: "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world"? Jesus Christ is with no man that misrepresents him, with no class of men that misrepresent him; he has authorized no person either in that time or now to misrepresent him. His Spirit does not go with men who misrepresent him. Only those that represent the truth as truth, only those which he bore witness to receive of his Spirit.

I come now to the application. The time was that the pulpit expressed the sentiment of the press also. It now happens that we are in a period of the world when neither the pulpit nor the press express their opinions, the people speak for themselves. They are quitting being afraid of the press notwithstanding the press has the advantage to a certain extent; for they may report me adversely and if they choose they may keep me out of the columns so I can not retrieve myself in the estimation of the people.

But the application of this! When Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery and David Whitmer and others came preaching, they told the people what they understood the gospel to be and by virtue of the commission which had been granted them they were authorized to preach it, and every person that would believe it in his heart and come forward in obedience to it should receive the ministration of the Holy Spirit, and he should know of the doctrine and the witness should be borne to him. And do you know, it is one of the strangest things in the world to me when I think of it, that these men preached for fourteen years, Joseph and Hyrum Smith, before they were killed and during their administration and those with them for that time, a company of something near one hundred and fifty thousand people in the United States, in England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, France, etc., and there followed the ministration of some peculiar spirit which testified to them, by the thousands, that Jesus was the Christ and that the doctrine was true.

By virtue of what peculiar characteristic in these men did they dare to take captive that Spirit which testified to Peter on the day of pentecost; which gave to men the knowledge that Jesus was the Christ, which Jesus told Peter was the rock upon which the church should be built, and that it was not revealed by flesh because God had revealed it to them? How does it happen?

I know that there were some people when they came here who were strongly prejudiced against me; I could feel it. Before they sleep, if they sleep and wake, I know they will answer some of these questions for themselves. I now have been preaching over forty years. I have no doubt there are individuals in this congregation to whom I have administered the rite of baptism. During the forty years I have baptized some hundreds of people. I have laid my hands upon their heads, with others, to confirm them members of the church. I have heard these persons rise and testify by the Spirit which they have received that they knew the doctrine was true and that Jesus was the Christ. Did I have the power to impose upon God and upon Jesus Christ and the ever-present Holy Spirit to bind that Spirit to come down and testify to the individuality of these men and these women just what they testified to? Did I? Do these men that have preached here, Bro. Cohrt, Bro. Butterworth, my brother Alexander, my nephew Fred A., and all the host of them, Uncle John Hawley, Bro. John Pett—and I may stand here and name a great many of them—what right have they, what power have they to so take captive the forces of God on high or in the air or upon the earth that these wonderful manifestations come, and by virtue of their coming they convince men of the truth of the doctrine and that Jesus is the Christ? It is one of the most wonderful impositions you ever heard of; if it be an imposition. If it be a fraud, it is one of the strangest frauds of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries; if it has no foundation in truth, it is stranger still. I can not account for it upon any other hypothesis, if it be a fraud, than that it is one of the most extraordinary frauds that I have ever heard of or know anything about, so completely successful that it not only hypnotizes wise, but unwise men; not only the wise man but the young man, the middle-aged, old, and young, and absolutely hypnotizes the Holy Spirit so that it bears witness to the fact that Jesus is the Christ. What a wonderful thing that is! Just think of it! I am not using any hyperbole, nor any extravagant expression, because I can call them to witness, and they will arise here and everywhere one by one, and by hundreds and thousands and testify to that fact. It not only takes captive the Spirit and makes it bear witness to the testimony, but it takes captive Jesus Christ and makes him a party to the imposition. It takes captive the Almighty, paralyzes his arm, and prevents him from speaking the truth; it makes him bear testimony to the fact. What a strange thing that is!

The fact is, we are within reach of that wonderful promise uttered by Peter upon the day of pentecost. He spoke by virtue of the power and the Spirit that was in him and it is by virtue of that same power and Spirit that men can preach the gospel of the Son of God now, and if men so preach that the Master sends the Spirit, the Spirit must testify to every individual and not to them that are specially beloved of Christ, because we are all with him and every man that worketh righteousness is accepted of him, but it must serve every man alike. To one man it must give the knowledge that Jesus is the Christ by one means, and to another by another means. Now to illustrate: you heard to-day a song sung under the influence of the Spirit. You heard a prophecy. You heard a tongue. You heard several people rise and state that they bore testimony to these. You all heard it. These people may impose upon us, but can they impose upon Christ, so that when they pass off the stage of action each individual is to be measured by what he is at the time of his trial, and that he shall go unabashed into the presence of the great Judge, and there right in the presence of him, whose Lamb's Book of Life must be there in which the names of those who are entitled to the everlasting life must be inscribed, and absolutely fool the Judge? No, it can not be. As a consequence, whenever this gospel is preached, the testifying power of the Spirit must be preached with it. It is a concomitant part of the gospel. It is the ingredient that must enter into it in its assimilation into this process. It must be the power, for the disciple must assimilate unto himself these graces and in this he will make himself a fit instrument for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit continually. It reaches one man and woman in one way, and another in another way. To them that are strong and wise in the things of this world, it satisfies them by their power of reasoning. But here is a man or woman that is not so largely endowed with these wonderful intellectual faculties, and absolutely I have seen individuals rise in the midst of the people and have heard them bear such wonderful testimony, when I knew that they were poor, weak, frail mortals, almost—well, I was going to say absolutely ignorant, but that would not do, for they had a degree of intelligence, but you hear one of them speaking and not look at him and you would think that he was eloquent and had been educated.

We represent, then, the gospel of the Son of God as being nigh to you; the influence of the promise made by Peter upon the day of pentecost, because we are afar off, and also the continuation of the forceful influence and power by which Jesus certified to those disciples that "upon this rock" would he build his church. Some have said it was the rock of revelation. I do not altogether hold that, because revelation is the means by which the knowledge is brought: it is that by which the divine Spirit comes. It is not the Spirit itself, but that intelligence which is conveyed is the rock. It is the fact that Jesus is the Christ. That is the fact; that is the rock. Everybody built upon that rock can stand; everything not built upon that rock must fall; for when the elements beat upon it, not being founded safely, it must inevitably go down, for it is founded upon the sand, and the wind shall blow the sand out from under it. I was over in Nebraska a few years ago, and saw a five-acre field upon which the sod had been broken, and absolutely the wind had dug a hole in the five acres five feet deep, and had built a wall of sand all around it. A house built on that sand would be undermined. Dig deep and place your house upon that rock, that foundation, which is just as eternal as Christ and God and the Holy Spirit and your house never will fall, no matter what shall come.

I believe, my fellows believe, my brethren and sisters believe, that God is in the world in the Spirit of Jesus Christ building that church; and that Christ will see to it that just the same things which established the church in his days in the minds of the people to go out as representatives, that through the foolishness of preaching men might believe and be saved,—the same things must continue now and will continue until the time shall come for the separation of the tares and the wheat and the establishment of God's kingdom upon the earth.

The kingdom is likened unto a net that is cast into the sea and it gathers of every kind. "Anybody can belong to your church," a man once told me at Davis City, Iowa. He used it as a term of reproach. "I mean just what I say, the poorest and the most indigent and ragged can belong to your church." I said, "Sir, you pay me a compliment. That is just what Jesus Christ commanded me to do, to go and preach the gospel to the poor; never mind the rich." You fill a man's pocketbook with money and you have furnished him with that which will very likely keep him out of all the churches; he thinks he can just pay enough of his money within the bar of the Almighty to keep him from torturing him, and I am aware that so far as justice in this world is concerned, it is too true. Give him plenty of money and you can hardly get a criminal convicted or committed. I thanked my friend for the statement that he made that the poor could belong to the church which I represent. That is the class that the Lord sent me unto, those that need salvation. That is the class we are preaching to. The others may take care of themselves—they can do it. They think they can and I am willing they should. But by and by the Master comes and will try every one. "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil."

Christ says, "But I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." And in the twentieth chapter of Revelation we are told that all nations, small and great, shall stand before the Lord and be judged out of the things written in the books. My earnest aim is to so live and work that when that time shall come for me my name shall be written in the other book, not the general book in which the general names are inscribed, but that book, the other book, which is the Lamb's Book of Life. I want my name written there. You want your name written there; and it will be written there if you will only make yourself to be a citizen of the kingdom under the administration of Jesus Christ the Lord.

I read when I was a young fellow, a legend. It was like this: Every individual that is born into the world has an interest in the realm above and there are appointed to accompany that individual through the world, two angels, whose duty it is, the one to record all the good things, all the good deeds, all the good thoughts, everything that is good that the individual does in his waking hours; the other is to keep an account of all the evil things that are said and done during the waking, conscious hours of the individual. When the night comes down upon the earth and the individual is unconscious in sleep, these two angels confer together, and if, before the individual has slept, the things which have been written by the angel which kept the record of the bad deeds or bad thoughts, if he has repented of that which has been said and done that was bad, the angel crosses out the record and it is not inscribed against the individual; but if the individual does not repent of that which has been evil and bad, the angel with a sigh seals up that page and it is never to be opened again until the books are finally opened, and then the individual will have to account for it. And so day by day these angels wait upon this individual, the angels of his presence, and until the day shall come that they take their records into the great judgment with the individual who is to be the Judge, they keep these records until they present them there at that time.

However romantic that may be, and it is a legend of the East, it is full of import to us as a people, it is full of import to me, it is full of import to every individual that has a bit of a poetical, romantic disposition in him, any sentiment that awakens an answering response to that which is good or evil. That legend must have a meaning to him.

So be careful, my brethren and sisters, my hearers, that you so conduct yourselves that when these angels of your presence meet to balance accounts for the night that you will have repented of the evil done during the day, if you have done what is wrong; that there may be a blotting out, and not awaiting for the great day to come when you shall enter into judgment. And now at the close, may the peace of the Master be with you that are inquiring; may the peace of the Master be with those of you who have associated yourselves in the covenant of peace, and may you so live that you may from this hour continue to feel that spirit of brotherly love and affection which has been with you since we have been together, and may it be with you unto the end.

The General Convention.

The fourteenth annual General Convention opened its session at the Brick Church Tuesday, April 4, at half past two in the afternoon. There was a good representation from the various districts, though not so large as in former years. The Religio had just closed a very satisfactory session and the delegates were in the best of spirits to enter upon the work of the Sunday-school convention. The business of the convention was not heavy, and was carried through with dispatch and to the satisfaction of all concerned, we believe. The convention was an uneventful one and no questions of unusual import were up for consideration. The regular routine work with the questions naturally arising therefrom were all that were considered. We give the reports of officers and committees or such extracts therefrom as may be of general interest to the workers. The minutes of the convention will be published in full in the Ensign and daily Patriot and the reader can refer to them for the details of the work.

The election of officers resulted in but one change, that of the second assistant superintendent, Bro. A. Carmichael succeeding Bro. E. H. Fisher. The officers for the year are as follows:

Superintendent, T. A. Hougas, Henderson, Iowa; first assistant superintendent, J. A. Gunsolley, Lamoni, Iowa; second assistant superintendent, A. Carmichael, Anaheim, California; secretary, D. J. Krahl, Lamoni, Iowa; treasurer, John Smith, Lamoni, Iowa; librarian, Mrs. E. Etzenhouser, 2215 Wabash Street, Kansas City, Missouri. A resolution obtained favoring the selection of Mrs. T. A. Hougas as general home department superintendent.

GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT.

To the Brethren and Fellow Workers in Convention Assembled; Greeting: As we enter upon the work of the convention this evening we are reminded that we are just fourteen years old as an association. The reports to the first annual convention, one year after the organization, showed fifteen district associations, and eight schools not in districts. Our general secretary will report this year fifty-five district associations and thirteen schools not in districts. This is a gain in the thirteen years of forty district associations and five schools not in districts. There were at this first report 3,905 members enrolled, as against 20,289 at the present time, a gain of 16,384 in the twelve years. But numbers will not give the true gain of the association. It is very hard to estimate in units the amount of advancement made in any one part or in all parts together.

Most of our gain can not be measured in figures, and this is the most important part. The quality, the kind, and the amount of work done in various lines are the most important parts and can only be measured in a comparative way and must be seen to be appreciated. All work at the beginning was of a necessity crude and more or less unsystematic, scattering and often desultory. Experience and counsel together have enabled the workers to bring their work from this condition to a condition in many instances closely resembling perfection. District workers have sought to provide for the district convention that which was most needed by the workers of their districts and supply the demand for improvement. The General Association has sought to be useful to the districts in the same line of work, and altogether we have accomplished a work of which we are not ashamed.

It is to be regretted that some districts have not made the advancement they might have made—that some of the workers have failed to do what was their duty to do. And as a result of this failure the work has in some instances lapsed. But it is to be hoped that the time may soon come that the workers will better feel the responsibility that rests upon them and more faithfully discharge the duty that rests upon them. Some steps should be taken to re-establish the work in these places in a way that will make it permanent.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT IN "THE HERALD."

Immediately after last convention arrangements were made with the board of publication and the Editor of the HERALD for added space for the Sunday-school Department in the HERALD. The services of our worthy Quarterly editor were secured to prepare from week to week helps on the study of the Sunday-school lesson. These lesson helps have met a long-felt want and many attest their value by expressing their appreciation thereof. A little different course in the editorial part of the department has been pursued and to what extent it is an improvement those who read must judge. But with limited time at hand for all our work we were not able to satisfy ourselves but did the best we could under the circumstances.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

In obedience to the instructions of the convention the home department of the General Association was placed in the hands of a home department superintendent. Sr. T. A. Hougas was appointed and has been pushing the work as much as could be since her appointment. We have made special effort along this line this year, believing that an extra effort would result in extra good to the work, and so it has. The results have been very gratifying and beyond our expectations. It has been repeatedly demonstrated that where the home department work has been taken hold of with a will, it has resulted in building up the home classes and other work as well. The general secretary's report will show the statistics, but we would say that the classes are numbered by the hundred, here and there over the districts. Some of the missionaries have done splendid work in this and it has drawn many into closer relationship with the schools and the church. Several schools have been the outgrowth of home classes and still the work moves along. We hope to see it continued and no gain made be lost.

Christ, the great Teacher, did not shut himself up with monks, away from temptation of the great world outside. He taught no long-faced, gloomy theology. He taught the gospel of gladness and good cheer. His doctrines are touched with the sunlight, and flavored with the flowers of the fields; the birds of the air, the beasts of the field, and happy, romping children are in them. True piety is cheerful as the day.—O. S. Worden.

HOME EDUCATION.

Reluctantly, with many doubts, I essay this task that you have appointed me. We all know what should be, but the difficulty is in doing. This is why I feel doubtful that I can say anything that will be helpful.

As I took up my pen and tried to marshal my thoughts on the subject of your selection, there came to me like a voice from the spirit world, those words of thrilling eloquence that long ago aroused the people to the necessity of general education as a preservation of the liberty so dearly won: "We must educate! we must educate! or we must perish." And I realize that if secular education was a necessity to national life, much more is home training a necessity.

More than a hundred years have passed into history since those words were uttered. Our system of common schools have grown and broadened in scope and usefulness until, could Patrick Henry return from the grave, even he would be amazed at the avenues of education now freely open to the children of the American republic. Not only open, but laws compel the children's attendance. The high school course from which they may graduate, would in his times have been considered a liberal education. All free as the air of liberty to the humblest and the poorest. There surely is no danger of national obliteration through lack of opportunities for education. No doubt but our wise forefathers would rejoice as we do that this is so. Yet there came to me with that spirit voice a sense of danger as great, that will as surely cause our national decay;—I mean the lack of that careful home training once pronounced in American homes.

means the systematic development of right character by home influences. School studies have grown so numerous they take every moment of time through the week for the greater part of the year. Each week is followed by Sunday, when both parents and children are hurried away to four services of religious exercises. Now the thought that came to me with such force was this: We are carrying our educational schemes to such an extent that for want of time we have been compelled to drop the home curriculum; the teaching of those grand old Bible principles that were once such prominent characteristics of the men and times—honor and truth and moral courage. Look around and see in their place perfidy and moral rotteness permeating both public and private life. There is no office of trust that bribery and corruption have not invaded; no business dealings between man and man that are carried on in the strict principles of Bible honesty and honor. And understand that we are now liable to perish from this cause.

I do not charge that this sad state is the result of our great educational privileges or attainments, but that in the pursuit of these we have lost sight of those weightier principles that can alone be molded into the youthful character within a Christian home. There can be no such thing as acting well our part in life where the principles of truth and honor are not the underlying spring of action.

The church-work to redeem the world through preaching obedience to the doctrines of the gospel must be backed by the Christian home, where scriptural rules of life are both taught and lived. When we can send out the men and women from these homes to fill the places of trust in the nation as well as in the church and schools, then we may look for Zion's redemption, otherwise we perish.

I affirm that for this home education divine revelation is a necessity, as well as in the promulgation of correct doctrine. And for our guidance there have been no helps formulated, no rules laid down by the wisdom of the world, that will at all compare with our needs, as will the scriptures. They may be discarded in the public schools, but home education can not be successfully conducted without them if we would make those high principles of integrity the inspiration of our child's life. In taking God's word for our guide we find that one of the first demands made upon us is TRUTHFULNESS.

God not only demands truthfulness in us who have dedicated ourselves to his service, but as teachers to our children he demands our diligence in instructing them of its absolute necessity. I believe that the promise that the Holy Spirit shall guide us into all truth includes also these moral requirements, these principles of righteousness to be taught in the home long before the child can comprehend faith, repentance, and baptisms.

Truthfulness is the great foundation principle on which all else must rest if we would have a stable character. One of God's prophets, in view of the unstableness of the heart, asks: "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill?" and answers: "He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart." That means that inward principle that hates a lie. Mothers, it is your holy privilege to plant this principle in the inmost fibers of the infant heart. It is yours to watch and nourish and cultivate it zealously until the child knows to speak truth before he comprehends doctrine.

Make the children understand that all lies are black lies, that they are lies when told in jest or in earnest. That it is the province of a lie to deceive, and therefore is the work of the evil one.

MORAL COURAGE.

Here is another old Bible principle that must not be forgotten in home education. I say nothing of physical courage, because, as a rule, the schools attend to that. The able-bodied child, who is a physical coward, stands a fair chance to have it buffeted out of him among his mates at school. But the moral coward, who is always found on the popular side, who dares not stand for the right when it is unpopular, will remain a coward to the end of his days for all the help he will get at the public schools. He will never be a power to suppress wrong or help the right. We understand moral courage to be that quality of mind which enables one to do right, to maintain right, uninfluenced by the approval or disapproval of others, or of selfish gain to himself.

To make this quality of lasting influence in life, teach the children from infancy to say no to temptation, whether actuated from without or from within. To illustrate, let me tell you a little story related by a friend of a dear little boy whose father had taught him to say no to himself. He was but two years old, when, one day, he happened alone where was set a dish of beautiful golden pears, fragrant with ripeness. The first impulse of the child was to reach for one, but the little hand was quickly withdrawn, when the holy lips said, "No." The fruit was beautiful to look at, and lingering to admire, he forgot and again reached to take one. "No," he said a little more decidedly, and again the hand came back empty. A third time the temptation came, and a third time he said, "No"; this time quite emphatically, with a stamp of the foot and shake of the golden head; and then the conqueror over self strode away.

In these days, long ago foretold, when "evil men wax worse and worse," how grand that man who can say no to himself! Oh, for a million of them, for public leaders! Then we should not hear so much of bribes, and boodle, and malfeasance in office.

Not only must we teach moral courage in maxims but it must be so incorporated with the child's growth that it shall be one of the moving principles of his being, growing stronger with years, and firmly standing for that which is noble, true, and right. It will be a strength to him if in your teaching you back your precepts with God's word, that we are required to "be strong in the Lord," and "very courageous."

SELF-CONTROL.

In the wisdom of God we have most of us been born with a temper, and undoubtedly it has its mission to perform in us. It is that sense which is aroused in men and women by acts of injustice and wrong, leading them to vindicate the cause of right and innocence. It becomes a sin when, uncontrolled, it masters reason, and wreaks unauthorized vengeance.

It is not the part of home education to uproot that which God has implanted in our nature, the destruction of which renders us broken-spirited. We must follow the Lord's own instruction: "He that ruleth his spirit is greater than he that taketh a city."

There is such a thing as righteous anger. We are told to be "angry and sin not," with the anger that leads us to right a wrong in all good and lawful ways, not in committing one by taking vengeance into our own hands.

Sudden and violent wrath under provocation is not of itself wrong; it shows that the sense of justice and right is quick and keen, but the child must be taught to control his hasty temper, as he should bridle a fiery horse, that his sense of justice shall at all times be guided by reason.

Self-control is also needful when the child's temper, like a slow corrosive, eats away the peace of the household by small, constant annoyances. There is generally something wrong with the nervous condition, and the thing best productive of cure is self-control. It may require an effort, but even the effort has a calming effect that, when persisted in, will cure the trouble.

Self-control also embraces control of the tongue, control of the thoughts of the heart, until the whole being, spirit and body, are under self-government. You may have this lesson to enforce in some of the many manifestations of temper, perhaps more than once in a day, for many days, and even years. But it is an important lesson, to be taught by patience and by example, as well as by precept; but with firmness. I know from experience that it can be successfully taught. In many cases it will prove hard, it will try you to the utmost, especially if you have yourself grown up undisciplined; for, in that case, your task is double.

I can only very briefly mention the principles which I deem of most importance in the formation of character, and which are indispensable in rearing men and woman of integrity and worth. The apostle Peter, in describing the Christian growth, tells us to add to our faith

VIRTUE.

All you mothers assuredly know that it is morally your duty to teach precepts of morality to your children. But do you know that it is a part of your religious duty? Christ has made virtue an integral part of Christianity, the one imploring and embracing obedience to the other. The unvirtuous believer is not a Christian because of his faith; but, in adding virtue to faith we assent to the claim that the gospel is pure, and that it demands purity in life. Instruction in virtue must be added to all our instruction in the doctrinal parts of the gospel, as a part of the gospel as truly as baptism, repentance, or faith; as absolutely necessary to salvation. Do not wait until the child has formed evil habits, but begin, even before it is old enough to discern between good and evil, to enforce modesty and virtue.

There is nothing the neglect of which so swiftly brings punishment to both parent and child as this. Eli was a servant of God, and from all accounts a good man, but God's punishment came on him because, when his sons made themselves vile, he restrained them not. To be sure, we read that he had talked to them in a gentle, remonstrating way. But he never interposed his authority, either as parent or priest, to bring his sons to account; so the Lord had to do it.

I have been asked, "Why devote years to moral training if you believe sin to be remitted in baptism on repentance?" There are many reasons. First, if Satan gains the first hold upon the child you have no assurance that he will ever repent; while, if from the first the child is instructed in strict moral principles, the attraction of righteousness will bring him to Christ in baptism. Better to be a child of God from birth than to be ever so zealous a Saint after years of sin.

There is also another view. Men and women whose early years have been addicted to vice do not as a rule reach the age they might have, even though afterward through repentance and baptism they attain regeneration. For the law of the Lord remains in force that the wages of sin is death; and sooner or later it is paid. A life of virtue adds to longevity and usefulness. And "Zion is the pure in heart."

"AND TO VIRTUE KNOWLEDGE."

A knowledge of your children's characteristics and capabilities. Studying their dispositions with a view to aiding them in correcting faults, and stimulating the development of all desirable traits.

Self-knowledge is one of the hardest things to acquire. I do not think that any of us ever quite attain to it. There are so many unsuspected qualities of good or bad lying dormant in the best of us, until something calls them into play. We have all surprised ourselves in emergencies. But these things need not worry us if the governing impulses of every-day life are understood and directed into right growth.

Make the children to know their responsibility in the influence which they exert for good or ill around them,—responsibility to the home, the church, society, and the state. Make them understand fully that everything of which they are a unit is affected for good or evil by the resultant influence of good or evil in them. Suppose there are six in a family and four of them are incorrigibly bad: we say evil predominates in that family. And so the innocent minority suffers for the wrong of the majority. So in the church or the state. And as of evil so it is of good.

I know that you will say to me now, add to knowledge.

TEMPERANCE.

That certainly comes next in the growth of Christian character as outlined by Peter. But temperance in alcoholism is not included in the Christian graces. I believe that where intoxicating drinks are concerned the Bible teaches total abstinence. For him who would be a disciple of Jesus Christ it is "Touch not, taste not, handle not, the unclean thing."

You mothers, whose days are spent in worry, and whose nights are veritable nightmares for fear that your sons look upon the wine when it is red, or tarry long at the wine cup, you have been afraid to be too strict with your children because they argue that the Bible teaches temperance in all things. But the "all things" can not include alcohol because it is not included in the "all things" necessary to either physical or spiritual growth.

Temperance properly belongs to all things that have their daily and necessary use in human life—in eating, sleeping, in amusements, in work or in play; as using the good things of life, and not abusing them. If these things are taught to the children in home education, as a part of the gospel law of life, I believe that through your faithful instruction and prayers you will save them. But if there should be the taint of heredity that makes you fear, I advise that you get some work explaining the action of alcohol on the system, and have the child study it as he studies anatomy. I venture the opinion that he will never have a taste for anything intoxicating if he could see a stereoptican view of the drunkard's stomach during the various stages of the disease of alcoholism. Teach him also the added danger of heredity. And now we are to add to temperance because we mothers stand in need of it in all our teaching. For we may not expect immediately the desired results, but the teaching must go on, "line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little, and there a little," all through the impressionable years of the young lives committed to our trust.

Yes, truly, patience is called for. It must have its perfect work in you if you go on to the end of your arduous undertaking. Do you think I have placed too much responsibility upon you? No. It is there, though I had not mentioned it; though you remain in ignorance of it it is there. I would not, if I could, lay one unnecessary burden upon your shoulders, for those that are of necessity laid upon you are so great I wonder that any can endure:

"For oh, the battle has been so great,
The battle has been so long."

I look into your tired and careworn face, I note the tear-moist, earnest eyes, and I extend to you the whole sympathy of a mother-heart, knowing the arduous burdens of motherhood. But patience. The battle can not last for ever. The children will grow to maturity and take their places as men and women in the world work, fitted by your faithful labors if you have been successful in imparting to them those great principles that move the world nearer to God, namely: truthfulness, moral courage, self-control, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, charity. Lo! you have your reward in seeing the children of your body transformed into the image of that perfect character, Christ Jesus.

PHOENIX, ARIZONA, April 5, 1905.

Editors Herald: I desire some space in your paper to state that I am very thankful for the article on "Probation after death" by Bro. J. C. Clapp. I do not know when I have read an article that brought to me so forcibly a realization of the fact that we are surrounded by souls who are having wonderful opportunities to accept Christ, and they are carelessly letting these golden opportunities pass, not realizing that they are passing so lightly over the opportunity for which Christ died that they might have. Surely they can not expect further opportunities.

So many have their names down on the various church books as members, and they seem satisfied that that is all that is necessary; and, so far as one can see, there is no visible difference between these "church-members" and the "world." Paul says it is only our "reasonable service" that we present our bodies a "living sacrifice." There is so much in God's word to show us that if we would be his children we must "come out of the world" and be a separate people, living for him. Now is it not the duty of every one to warn these people of the judgments to come, and to help them to realize that they are not living up to the requirements of a child of God? True, we may not lead them into the restored gospel, but if we can cause them to seek God more earnestly are we not helping them to a position where God can lead them as he wills? And are we not responsible before God if we fail to warn our brother or sister?

I trust the Saints are not overlooking this all-important matter, but that article of Bro. Clapp's brought to my mind so forcibly the awfulness of neglecting our duty in this matter, that I felt I must say something about it. Isolated from all of our faith, and meeting so much prejudice and indifference, I fear I have grown careless, and I am brought to wonder if I had tried to warn people of their position of indifference before God more, instead of trying to interest them in our faith, if the results would not be better.

Dear friends, let us be fearless to work for our Master, and remember that we must "work while it is called to-day" lest by our delay we lose our opportunity of gaining our reward.

May each one of us strive with all our might to do the whole will of God. And remember that God having shown us the way, it becomes our duty to help others. Though we are weak, yet "My God shall supply all your needs according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus."

Editors Herald: I am glad that I am a Latter Day Saint, and my soul rejoices when I read the HERALD. The 26th of March, six years ago, I obeyed this blessed truth, and I am glad that I did. I know that I belong to the only true church of Jesus Christ. I am very glad that the Lord sent Bro. James M. Scott to the city of Louisville, Kentucky, in the year 1899.

Before I obeyed this blessed truth the Lord said to me by his Holy Spirit, that not every one who says, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father in heaven. It burnt in my heart, soul, and mind, until I obeyed the gospel of the Son of the living God.

Since I have been in Cincinnati, Ohio, the Lord has blessed me with his Holy Spirit, and has called me to work in his vineyard through Bro. F. J. Ebeling.

I am very glad that winter is over so we can get out on the street corners and tell the people of the glad tidings of this glorious gospel.

If any of the brethren write or stop here in Cincinnati, my address is now 1513 Cutter Street.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

WM. N. HANNER.

LEXINGTON, Tennessee, April 11, 1905.

Dear Saints: I love to read of this glorious latter-day work slowly but steadily finding its way to the honest in heart and bringing such grand blessings to those that are living up to their privileges and keeping the commandments of our Lord. I embraced this work in 1879 through the Utah or Brighamite teaching and emigrated to Colorado. When I got there they requested me to be rebaptized and reconfirmed before I could become a member in full fellowship, and in good standing. And if I would not do that I would be held as a scattered member. I would not do that, and then I found there was another Latter Day Saint church which they called Josephites and apostates. So I wrote President Joseph Smith to send me some of their tracts and literature, for I was anxious to know the true church, for I knew that the work was right; but I was sure the Brighamites were teaching one thing in the States and in the church were practicing another.

He received my letter and sent me a lot of tracts which satisfied me that the work was right, and I was then in the apostate church. Very soon after this we had Elder W. W. Blair visit us, and through his teaching there was a mighty awakening among the Brighamites; insomuch that he was shut out of their house by the leaders. Some thirty or more were baptized into the Reorganized Church, and some of the leaders were converted, and many quit the church when Elder Blair took their own book and showed them wherein they had been led astray by Brigham Young. Nearly all who went with me from Tennessee were baptized into the Reorganized Church. And from that day until now there has never been a doubt in my mind as to the divinity of this latter-day work, as introduced by the Lord through the prophet Joseph Smith, and maintained by the Reorganized Church.

Dear Saints, this is the testimony of one who has surely and thoroughly investigated, and who knows that the work is the Lord's.

WM. C. CUMMINGS.

MANCHESTER, England, March 31, 1905.

Editors Herald: Will you kindly permit me through your valuable columns to ask a question or two touching upon matters that seem to have been running through my mind lately and of which I do not seem to get to a definite settlement?

1. Is the Spirit of God and the Holy Ghost given of God through the laying on of hands by the elders, one and the same?
2. When does the birth of the Spirit of God take place within us?

If the Spirit of God and the Holy Ghost are one and the same how do we account for the words of Jesus to his disciples recorded by John 14:26 which reads: "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send . . . he shall teach you all things," etc. Surely these disciples who associated with Jesus, believed, taught, and practiced the very same doctrine would have the Spirit of God within them. If so and the Spirit of God and the Holy Ghost are one and the same, then it would seem strange that God (after the departure of Jesus) would send that which they already possessed. I believe there is a certain amount of the Spirit of God given to every man born in the world, or we should not be able to discern right from wrong. There is also given to every man a free agency and we can either cultivate that Spirit and cause it to develop and expand or we can ignore it. If we ignore it we shall have to put up with the consequences. But on the other hand if we pay attention to its dictates, its promptings, and encourage, nourish, and cultivate it, it will direct our minds to the gospel, wherein is contained that which by the obedience to it, and keeping faithful to the end of our probation here will give us an abundant entrance to eternal glory. The question then with me is, How did this Spirit which led us up to this obedience to the gospel get within us? Did it have a birth or did we receive it some other way? Of course my opinion is that it was born within us either before or at the time of baptism. But this is only man's opinion, for not being able to give scriptural evidence to confirm that opinion, it will perhaps not be worth much. It will also bring me in conflict with the statement of Jesus to Nicodemus in John 3:5, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit," etc., which will perhaps be understood by some that the birth of the Spirit does not take place till after the birth of the water, when the hands of the elders are laid upon our heads. But be this as it may, up to the present, I can not help but believe that the Spirit of God was within us either before or at the time of baptism of water. Will some one kindly enlighten us on the above?

I asked the following question some time ago through the HERALD: Are we perfect when we come up out of the waters of baptism? Bro. J. E. Vanderwood kindly responded, for which I was thankful to our brother. He presented several passages of scripture to point out my mistaken idea. But really I can not see that any of the scripture quoted answered the question; but would be more adapted to those of us who after leaving the waterside through circumstances over which we have no control would have to mix up again with the world and be tainted more or less again with sin. Our brother may be right, and through the want of sufficient comprehension I am not able to grasp the evidence he produced. But am I really to understand that our Savior and his immediate followers did not mean what they said when they made the statement, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," and "Why tarriest thou? arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins"?

In what other way can I look at this remission of sins but in the way Jesus teaches? I must obey God rather than men. (See Acts 5:29.) Man as good as tells me that my past sins are still upon me after I have been baptized. And Jesus tells me that baptism (according to gospel plan) will remit all my past sins. I understand then that the sins which made me imperfect when they are remitted I am brought back to the perfect condition I was in before sin entered my heart. When Jesus does anything he does it thoroughly so that no one can improve upon it, and when our sins are remitted there is not a stain left within us, so that we must be in a perfect and saved condition until we get tainted again with sin. Let us look at it in this way: Suppose we were called away from this probation as soon as we came up out of the waters of baptism, before we had time to enter into sin again, and having had no opportunity given us of perfecting ourselves as our brother states, although we had investigated the gospel plan of salvation and were thoroughly convinced that if we gain salvation, it must be by obedience to the gospel; and so taking Jesus at his word, that baptism will remit our past sins, we were baptized. Are we then after this obedience still sinners, imperfect, and in an unsaved condition? I hear some of our preachers say that baptism is a mere nothing, that it is only an entrance into the kingdom. Well, that may be so. But I feel thankful in my heart that God permitted me to gain an entrance, and I hope I shall never be heard to say that baptism (according to the gospel plan) is a mere nothing.

Our brother, quoting Matthew 5:48, says, perfection has to be sought after and that it does not seem reasonable that we are perfected in a moment. True, but I wonder what we were doing (I allude principally to those like myself who came from other religious bodies) all the time we were investigating this latter-day work, which was not done in a moment. Were we not then seeking after perfection in seeking after the greater light there was in the gospel than we already possessed? And I can not help but believe that when our sins which made us imperfect are remitted we are brought back to perfection and in a saved condition unless afterwards we are, as above stated, tainted again with sin. We should then strive to live such pure lives that will again lead us up to perfection. Our brother in the early part of his letter says he does not agree with me, but I find that later on in his remarks he does, for he says, to be perfect we must be sinless, which means also that if we are sinless we are perfect, which is the very thing I have been contending for, believing as I do that if our sins are remitted we are sinless.

Dear Herald: I know this work is true, and I love it. I have been a member five years next August, and have never regretted the step. Saints, I want you all to pray for me, that I may live such a life that I will be able to meet my mother in heaven. I was only seven years old when she died. I am sixteen now. Many times have I wished that I could have died when she did. But I know if I live as good a life as she did I will meet her there.

I feel my weakness, and I ask the prayers of all the Saints for I need them this morning. It is my desire to live such a life that I may be a Saint in actions and in works as well as in name.

I go to Sunday-school every Sunday that I can. I love to go to prayer-meeting. I know that by these meetings we are strengthened. There is a branch here of about forty members.

Your sister in the one faith,

MARIE McCLAIN.

WEST BRANCH, Michigan, April 1, 1905.

Dear Herald: I am living up here in Northern Michigan and do not see much in the paper from here, but do not wish to have you think that there is no work going on for the Master. There are many good Saints who are walking in the light as he (the Savior) is, in the light; that is, doing the best they can according to the knowledge and power they have, while there are also many who are doing little or nothing for the advancement of the Master's work, and there seems to be still another class, which seems to be trying to live good, straightforward lives, but it does not take very much to make them stay from meeting or Sunday-school; and if there is a call for money or anything for sacrifice in temporal things they are very quick to exclaim, "Oh, no, we can't do that." But there are others who are willing to sacrifice their lives and all the pleasures in them for the gospel's sake. As for me I can not see anything in this life to cause me to slacken my pace even for one moment of time, as I fail to find anything to compare with this work; but I do not wish to say by this that I do not have any trials. I have many trials and things that are hard to bear from those that should be my friends, but God being my helper I will serve him as long as he permits me to remain among men, and I am trying to do all that lies in my power for the advancement of gospel light and truth.

Just six weeks ago to-day we had to bury our infant son, one and a half years old, which was very trying to me; but we know that every son that God receives he also scourges, and so I am brought to think that the Lord had a wise purpose in so doing, and I can calmly say, "Thy will, not mine, be done, O Lord." I can still say I am in the ranks for the onward progress of the good work in these the last days; for I know that the Lord has his hand in the work and that it is accepted of him and had it not been for the knowledge I had of the work by direct revelation from God that it was his work I would not have been in the work to-day. I have had some very highly appreciated instruction lately at the hands of Elder David Smith, whom I think is a grand, good man, and one whose heart is in his work. We are expecting to organize a Religio local in April, and we hope it will prove a success.

Yours in the bond of peace and love,

D. D. DUNCAN.

Extracts from Letters.

G. H. Graves, Hopkinsville, Kentucky: "I send you clipping from the local paper noting my marriage to Mrs. Sadie Jeanette Williams, April 6, at four o'clock. The work is onward in this place. I have been invited to preach next Sunday, the 9th, in the largest brick church (colored) in this town. May God's choicest blessings attend all at General Conference."

J. W. Whitley, Bridgeport, Washington: "I hope the conference will be a success. I thank my heavenly Father that I have been permitted to understand the true principles of the gospel. I am not ashamed of it. I desire the prayers of the Saints in my behalf."

Alvin Knisley, Weyburn, Assiniboia: "I baptized and confirmed one of Dowie's Seventies to-day, who also took a course in the Dowie college, Chicago. After a horseback ride of twelve miles I preached in Weyburn Hall this evening to an attentive audience. All goes well. Prospects bright."

Henry Ellis, Llansamlet, South Wales, in a letter to Frederick M. Smith, March 26, wrote as follows: "I am in the midst of the Welsh revival, but as yet have been able to see but few lasting effects as a result thereof. That it has done some good no one will deny, I mean so far as drinking is concerned; but on the other hand I am afraid the general moral effect of the revival will not be of a very elevating character. We have recently been informed that the Lord has suffered this delusion (for such it is) to come upon the people to bring about his purposes, and to assist in preparing the way for his truth to reach the honest in heart, and we have received many evidences that he will bring about his will and cause the truth to be made known in his own time. I am looking forward to the day when the church will see her way to appoint laborers more abundantly in this land. Much harm has been done by some who have come here in the past and instead of building up the work here they have, to a very great extent, pulled down by inducing our members to emigrate to America. Numbers have left here and given up good positions to work for less than they could get here. I trust our people will act with more wisdom in the future, for I believe the Lord will manifest to us when the time comes to flee unto Zion. I trust and pray you may have a bright and profitable conference, and that much lasting good will result therefrom, and all the faithful servants of Christ be encouraged. I also hope this will find yourself and your beloved father enjoying the blessing of health. I shall ever remember him and his kindly disposition while with us here, and I hope his days of usefulness will be lengthened out in the cause he has so faithfully and so honorably adhered to. Should you meet Bro. William Lewis of St. Joseph at conference, please give him my kind regards. He was a father to me while here. With best wishes to you and all the household of faith. Your brother in Christ."

Morgan; vice-president, David Lewis, Arthur Edwards treasurer, Henry Ellis secretary and Bishop's agent. It was resolved that the next conference be held with the Penegraig Branch on the first Saturday and Sunday in September, 1905. The Sunday services were characterized by a marked degree of the Holy Spirit, and those present were stimulated to continue in the battle for truth. Owing, however, to the inclemency of the weather several were prevented from attending. Henry Ellis, secretary.

Harm Done by Farmers' Almanac.

It is hoped the time will come when it will be possible to forecast the weather for the coming seasons—to specify in what respect the coming month or season will conform to or depart from the weather that is common to the month or season—but that time has not yet arrived, and the officials of the weather bureau have been informed that they will best serve the public interests when, without indulging in personalities or mentioning any long-range forecasters by name, they teach the communities they serve the limitations of weather forecasting and warn them against impostors.

It is the opinion of the leading meteorologists of the world that the public interests are injured by the publication of so-called long-range forecasts, especially by such predictions as relate to severe storms, floods, droughts, and other atmospheric phenomena of a dangerous or damaging character, and the persistent efforts of certain men to foist their predictions upon the public for personal gain have reached such proportions that it is deemed advisable fairly and temperately to counteract the influence of those whom we believe to be preying upon the credulity of the public.

Some of these men may be honest, and may, in their ignorance, attach undue importance to storms that may, accidentally, coincide in time of occurrence with certain relative positions of the planets, or with changes in the phases or positions of the moon, or with periods of increase or decrease in sunspots or apparent variations in solar intensity. They may believe that they have discovered a physical law or a meteorological principle that has not been revealed to astronomers, meteorologists, or any other class of scientific investigators; but the publication of predictions that, by reason of their absolute inaccuracy, are calculated to be injurious to agricultural, commercial, and other industrial interests casts a serious doubt upon the honesty of their purpose and upon their asserted disinterested devotion to the public welfare.

Such publications bring the science of meteorology into disrepute, and can not, therefore, be made in response to a desire to advance that science along useful lines, and they retard the work of the honest investigator, through whose efforts only can gains be made in a fundamental knowledge of the causation of weather that will justify forecasts for a month or season in advance.

It is strange that men in any branch of industry should govern their business affairs by methods that were effectually discredited in the Middle Ages and which should not be tolerated in the twentieth century.—By Willis L. Moore, chief of the United States Weather Bureau, in Chicago Tribune, December 18, 1904.

McClure-Phillips announce that they have added to their list of spring publications a new book by Louis Dickinson. It makes a keen investigation into the creeds that are offered modern men by established churches, and discusses whether they can be accepted by educated people of the country.

Imaginary Geography.

Though no dreams of finding a new continent can fire people of our day, so long as the human brain remains imaginative, men will set out on queer quests. Some years ago a man in one of the Pacific Coast cities of the United States, after reading one of the wild romances of Stevenson, became convinced of the fact that in the South Pacific, near Fiji, there was an island inhabited only by women. It occurred to him what an easy and profitable scheme it would be to organize an expedition of men to go to that Adamless island, carrying the latest plows and axes and tools that belong to men, and to establish man's rule upon it. He was a persuasive genius, and in the course of a few months, organized a company of one hundred men, who chartered a sailing vessel, stocked it with farming tools and dresses, and then set sail across the Pacific. They arrived in Fiji in due course of time and told the object of their quest to the British governor. The governor laughed and said that the Adamless island was a fake. But they would not believe him, nothing could persuade them that they were on a wild goose chase. They persisted that the island was a reality and that they were come to take possession of it in the name of civilization and of the United States. Finally the governor, seeing they were in earnest, declared that even if one of the Fiji islands was what they sought, they could not take possession of it, because all the islands belonged to Great Britain, and it they attempted to plant the American flag on one of these British islands he would send his gunboat after them. The expedition then dispersed, about twenty remaining at Fiji and the others wandering off to other fields of conquest. But all still remained convinced of the existence of that island where only women lived.—From "Progress in geography," by Gilbert H. Grosvenor in the Chautauquan for April.

The Secret of Baby's Belly-Ache.

If we investigate formaldehyde, which, according to Doctor Bigelow's statement, is now the most common preservative used in milk, we may learn the secret of baby's belly-ache, of what ties his little insides into a knot. Professor Dean, of Wilkesbarre, says that formaldehyde is obtained from wood-alcohol by passing the vapor over a copper spiral, and is used for disinfecting purposes. It gives a rubbery consistency to milk, which makes it injurious to health, but keeps it sweeter for a much longer time than it would otherwise remain. Doctor Dean and Doctor Cochran, state chemist and professor of chemistry respectively at the Westchester Normal School, state that formaldehyde is a dangerous poison frequently used in embalming dead bodies, and that it is positively fatal to children and sick persons.—From "How the baby pays the tax" in the April Woman's Home Companion.

The Christian Science Journal, published in Boston, begins its twenty-third volume with the April number, and appears in a pleasing new dress. Its first editor was Mrs. Eddy, and to this number she contributes a poem entitled "Whither," and an article on "Prevention and cure for divorce." Mr. Kimball's article, "Christian Science: Its compassionate appeal," and Professor Mosley's discussion of "The problem of evil" are deeply interesting.

This being the official organ of the movement, readers of the magazine may expect to find in it a correct statement of the ideals of Christian Scientists. The publishers print in this issue a number of first-hand testimonies from those who have gained through Christian Science higher ideals of Christian living, as well as health.

Highway building will be taught in cities and villages from Lake Michigan to the Pacific coast by the Burlington-Northern Pacific-Lewis & Clark good roads special which will leave Chicago May 3. The special will be under the charge of the two railroads and the National Good Roads association. Stops will be made at thirty cities, and lectures will be given on the needs of better highways and the way to secure them.

The first part of the special's trip will be over the lines of the Burlington railroad. The train will enter on the Northern Pacific lines at Billings, Montana, continuing by this road to Portland, Oregon, where the final meeting will be held at the Lewis & Clark exposition in June.—Chicago Tribune, April 5.

One of the most interesting figures of American public life to-day is Governor La Follette, of Wisconsin, who has recently been elected to the United States Senate. The whole country will be interested in reading Mr. Walter Wellman's graphic account of "The Rise of La Follette," which appears in the March number of the Review of Reviews. In the same magazine, Mr. Charles Baldwin Cheney tells the story of the recent political movements in the Northwest, including especially those for primary reform and railroad taxation, with which Governor La Follette has been closely identified.

Committee on archæology reported. The report was approved and committee continued.

A report was read from the High Council upon the matter of jurisdiction of the Kirtland District in the W. H. Kelley versus Henry C. Smith case, in which the jurisdiction of the Kirtland District was maintained. The report also recommended that some measures be taken toward establishing a rule of action to be generally observed by the church in dealing with members of one branch who may be residing in another branch. This matter was referred to the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Seventies, they to report upon the matter at the General Conference of 1906.

It was then moved that the report of the High Council be referred back for thorough investigation of all the evidence in the cases of Henry C. Smith versus William H. Kelley, and William H. Kelley versus Henry C. Smith. After some discussion the vote was ordered upon the previous question and the motion prevailed by a vote of 229 for, 33 against.

A report from the meeting of bishops, counselors, and agents held at eight o'clock Monday morning was read. They reported to have adopted the following resolution:

Resolved that an organization of all the bishops, counselors, and Bishop's agents, be effected to hold its meetings during the time of the General Conference of the church, to which all bishops and agents shall make their report of work accomplished, to this organization, which shall be compiled and properly presented to the General Conference. Also, that proper blanks for this purpose be prepared and furnished the members by the Presiding Bishopric, and blank certificates for use by bishops and agents to be issued to members of the church, showing a full compliance with the law of consecration.

It was further moved:

Babies Cry for Milk, and Get Poison.

The babies of the land are crying for milk, and most of them are getting—what?

Within ten days I have received one hundred and fifty newspaper clippings. Thirty are about the Pure-food Bill now before Congress; twenty are miscellaneous, and one hundred—Poisoned Milk!

Milk is the Keystone to the arch of pure-food crusade. It is the life-blood of the nation, and by the sardonic logic of destiny is made the main channel through which the poisoners, for gain, are attacking the vitality of the race. Preposterous that out of one hundred and fifty articles on food-adulteration, one hundred should be on milk-poisoning, that this appalling preponderance of our capital crime should be committed against the babies. I say our, because there is not a mother's son of us who can vote or influence a vote who is guiltless. We are either actually engaged in the business of cheating the babies or are betraying them to the cheat.—From "How the baby pays the tax" in the April Woman's Home Companion.

Resolved that all bishops, counselors, and agents be requested to file their inventory, and teach all members that it is their duty to file their inventory and pay in their surplus or special consecration as the case may be.

The adoption of the recommendations was moved and carried.

The Third Quorum of Elders reported.

The Fourth Quorum of Elders also reported, and recommended that the ordination of C. G. Lewis as president of the Fourth Quorum of Elders be provided for. The recommendation was approved and provision for ordination authorized.

Report from Fifth Quorum of Elders was read.

F. A. Russell was chosen to succeed himself as a member of the board of auditors.

F. M. Sprague and Heman Hale Smith were nominated for librarian. The vote resulted in the election of Heman Hale Smith.

The matter of a "college collection day" was referred to the Bishopric and board of trustees.

It was moved and carried that the Bishop be requested or instructed to furnish more shelf-room for church library.

Benediction by Joseph Smith.

At half past seven Frederick M. Smith was the speaker, assisted by M. M. Turpen.

Correction.

On page 390, strike out the date in center of line near top of first column. The matter following is the continuation of proceedings of the 15th.

The up-to-date farmer will find the April Cosmopolitan especially suited to his needs, for two of the articles have deep concern with his life and interests. Professor L. H. Bailey, director of the College of Agriculture, Cornell University, contributes a most instructive and practical paper on the Rotation of Crops, and Alfred Henry Lewis describes the workings of the Harvester Trust and the injury it is working the agricultural element of our population.

I Know Quit-to-Bac Will Cure. It is a God-Given Remedy

So says Bro. I. M. Dungan of Woodbine, Iowa. Writing July 3, 1904, says: "After having used tobacco for 30 years I feel that I am thoroughly cured of the habit by the use of your 'Quit-to-bac.' I commenced using 'Quit-to-bac' March 8, 1904, and used two and one half boxes, and have had no desire for the past two months, my health is better every way and I feel like a new man. I feel that I can not speak too highly of the merits of 'Quit-to-bac,' for I believe 'Quit-to-bac' to be a God-given remedy, that it will cure one of the most filthy and useless habits Satan ever invented; therefore I unqualifiedly recommend it to all addicted to the use of tobacco in any form, and will cheerfully answer inquiries from any one as to my case—how I treated myself, etc., if a stamp is inclosed. You are at liberty to use this recommendation as seems best to you. . . . I close with a heartfelt 'God bless you.'" Three boxes Quit-to-bac postpaid only $1.50 guaranteed to cure or money refunded for the asking. Address, (Bro.) B. F. ORDWAY, Peoria, Illinois.

THE CONFERENCE OF 1905; DARKNESS—LIGHT.

Before the assembling of the conference just passed, there was more or less of spiritual disturbance in our moral atmosphere, with here and there a cloud indicating a center of commotion of greater or lesser importance which presaged storms. The unsettled college question; the action of the college board of trustees, and the controversy between Brn. Smith and Kelley, were the affairs which were the more portentous of trouble; and many were apprehensive as to the methods of settlement, and the results.

The routine business passed off pleasantly enough; and so indeed did the matter of the continuance of the college; until the introduction of the report of the committee created last spring at Kirtland, consisting of the Bishopric and the trustees of Grace-land, followed by a minority report made by a member of the committee and the board of trustees. The minutes show that neither the majority, nor the minority report was indorsed by the conference, the evident feeling being that there was merit in both to very many of the members of the conference who could not all see the matter of divergence in the same light,—an element of danger lying in either extreme,—the golden mean prevailing offering the better way out of difficulty being held by the majority. The contention was rugged and sharp, the motive for the good always appearing; and, if one may conclude from the calm and quietude of spirit which followed, the episode was profitable.

The effect resulting from the finding of the High Council in the cause appealed to that tribunal, was to throw into the open conference the controversy between Brn. Henry C. Smith and W. H. Kelley, standing since 1902; upon the discussion of which in greater or lesser degrees of heat, according to the temperament of those taking part, an order was made directing the council to take the whole matter into consideration. The council was duly formed and convened; but by one of those interventions of a kindly disposed providence, the brethren parties to the contention and their brethren counselors saw their way to a more peaceable and lasting settlement, one far less likely to be followed by continued bitterness, loss, and possible hatred if further prosecuted, a result most devoutly to be thankful for. The council gladly welcomed so peaceful a termination of their labors, to which their prayers as individuals and as a council had greatly contributed.

The brethren affected by the result and their counselors are to be commended for the prevalence of the better spirit of conciliation, rather than that of contention, the issue of which was at best doubtful so far as human wisdom could foresee. Nor must any be so uncharitable or careless of fact as to charge the result to an element of fear as to the issue on either part; no such element had sway.

The closing scenes of conference were characterized by a quiet and pleasant presence of the Spirit, showing clearly a promise of good for the year lying before us. We believe all felt that the watchcare of the Master would out of confusion bring order, out of the storms calm, out of differences unity, out of perplexity clearness and light.

There now is no vexing question left over for the conference of 1906. If there is any to arise we are not aware what it is. A matter is referred to the three leading quorums for examination with a view to agreement as to what the rule and course of procedure should be in regard to the jurisdiction of the branches over members of the church temporarily residing within their precincts, but who may have their names and membership in other branches. This ought to be considered and settled without any trouble, as we believe the inquiry will be made in fairness and with a view to the good of all.

LIFE IN DEAD PLACES.

Under the above head there appears an editorial in the Boston Daily Globe, sent us by Bro. C. H. Lake, as follows:

In a remote old village in Northwestern Massachusetts, the little town of Montague is setting an example which is liable to spread to other towns in New England and may yet redeem them from the stigma of decadence from which so many New England communities have suffered. In this town is found a new settlement called the New Clairvaux Plantations, which seems to be based on a new idea and a very practical one. It is a social settlement back in the country where the members support themselves, and earn their own living, sustaining themselves and families by farming, fruit- and poultry-raising, as well as by teaching, handicrafts, and industries of various kinds.

The object of this scheme is to make country life interesting as well as profitable, and to furnish a spiritual and mental life which will soften the physical hardships and make life truly worth living. On these plantations the proceeds of the work all go to the worker. The workers all co-operate by exchanging work, by conducting classes for learning handicrafts, by maintaining a co-operative exchange in the village, by public exhibitions, and by such an exchange of labor that very little compensation has to be paid. By making exchange universal and by a system of complete mutuality and harmony, the settlement is made to develop and the plantation to build itself up, though it is not a community but a thoroughly individualistic experiment, in which everybody is made to pay his own way.

The foundation of all the success of this plantation is harmony, aided by economy. Its original founder, a clergyman, began by testing Henry D. Thoreau's so-called "law of domestic economy," outlined in his "Walden," and he found that it was an approximately reliable fact that a single man can subsist in rural New England and live the life of a cultured person upon five or six weeks of manual labor each year. To this he added another six weeks' allowance for the support of a married couple.

Having outlined the economic side of his scheme he next proceeded to provide for the spiritual and social. Being a journalist by profession and by taste an ardent lover of good literature, he set up a small printing-press to advertise his farming scheme as well as to assist him otherwise. He provided lectures on Ruskin, Carlyle, Kingsley, Emerson, and Owen and erected a chapel where Sunday services were held. In this way the settlement was made to grow and to amass a fund of literature. Thus the ball was set rolling, and made even to get a start in certain other settlements which had formerly been deserted hill towns.

The key-note of this experiment is harmony. Membership in New Clairvaux Plantations is regulated by a consensus in ideas with existing members, and the proven ability to find work for a living in the locality. Each member is responsible to himself, and no attempt is made to graft community life upon the settlement. Those who seek speculative profits or attempt to profit by hiring others or who cultivate a low idea of work or religion, as well as all confirmed pessimists, are ineligible.

For him who has the least desire for fellowship with the members there is left the broadest charity, and no one is restricted in his individuality who respects the equal rights of others.

By the judicious application of these methods the hillside settlements of the northwest have silently developed. There is Prospect Point farm with its chickens, herds, and—children. Then there is the Twin Maple farm; and at the crossroads we have the egg farm with its pastures and scenery. All these were once deserted farms, but have been redeemed by the new methods of co-operation. It only shows what can be done where honest purposes and motives are made to possess those who are willing to work and let work.

What has been done in these places may be done in many others. It only needs those who are willing to live prudently, eschew the fashions and pretenses of artificial living, and come down to nature. How cheaply men can live was shown by Thoreau many years ago. If the deserted farms are to bloom and blossom again, men must live cheaply, but in living cheaply they may yet live well and worthily.—Boston Daily Globe, April 15, 1905.

The scheme sought to be carried out by this social experiment is unique in that it is individualistic instead of communistic. Numbers of communistic societies have sprung up, and ended in failure. The foundation theory was at fault, the rules and regulations have proved inadequate, or there has been a failure in the application of the rules.

Whether this individualistic experiment proves a success or not the object as expressed above is a laudable one, that is, to "furnish a spiritual and mental life which will soften the physical hardships and make life truly worth living." Under existing labor conditions the grinding physical toil crushes out almost completely the spiritual and mental spark from the lives of thousands. Home too often is simply a place where members of the family meet at meal-time to hastily swallow a few mouthfuls of the food they may be able to procure, and at night to catch a few hours' sleep in preparation for the next day's toil. There is no time to think of the spiritual; no time to cultivate the mental; all the energies are required to obtain a sustenance. And even in many homes where some of the comforts of life are found, the cares of business require so much of time and energy that no time or strength remains for the cultivation of the spiritual and mental.

In this individualistic experiment everybody is required to pay his own way, and all the proceeds of the work go to the worker. And if it be true, as stated by Henry D. Thoreau, that a man can live the life of a cultured person upon five or six weeks of manual labor each year, providing all the proceeds of the work go to the worker, what becomes of the proceeds of the work of the thousands engaged in unceasing toil the year round, and yet are compelled to exist in a state of abject poverty? And would it not be better to foster such regulations as will guarantee to the laborer, if not all the produce of his work, at least sufficient to supply his wants, and some of the comforts of life, instead of such as compel thousands to labor on, surrounded by the hopeless poverty, while the greater part of the produce of this labor goes to keep other thousands in idleness and luxury? Thoreau demonstrated his theory by putting it in practice in his own life, and the theory, in its application to a settlement, is now being tested at New Clairvaux Plantations.

All good men have sympathized with the poor, the oppressed, and the toil-burdened multitudes. The greatest and grandest of sympathizers was the Son of God. His early life from childhood was passed in poverty and toil; and he understands from experience the environments of the poorer classes. It is not surprising, then, that the plan of redemption introduced by him should provide for the uplifting of the downtrodden, and for the equalization of material or temporal things. The man who can not be happy unless he possesses an abundance of this world's goods above his brethren or those around him, is abnormally developed. The selfish side of his nature is in the ascendancy, and he presents a striking contrast to the meek and lowly One, who had "not where to lay his head," yet was content so long as he could bless humanity, minister to the wants of the oppressed, and preach the gospel to the poor.

The plan of equality, as revealed in the law of the Lord, is individualistic in a sense, in that it provides that each member shall have control of his stewardship, and the produce of his labor; and yet it also provides that he shall devote that which is above his needs and wants in assisting to care for the infirm and those who are denied the privilege of laboring for their own support.

An application of the law of God as revealed in this last dispensation is what is needed to soften the physical hardships of his people, and furnish opportunity for the development of the spiritual nature, and the cultivation of the mental faculties, that now is denied to many of the household of faith.

During the late General Conference at one of the social services the thought was expressed by one speaker and enlarged upon by two or three others, that the work of God was made up of two parts: God's part, and man's part. And if man would faithfully perform his part, he need not be concerned about God's part; he would look after that. There are so many who seem to take great delight in contemplating God's part. They like to talk of what God has done in ages past, and dream of what he is expected to do some time in the future, and yet the part that God has so plainly pointed out to them as their part of the great work, they are industriously hunting a way to avoid, seemingly forgetting that a failure or refusal to do the part allotted to them will preclude them from the benefits to be derived from the work God may do in the future, since they will not be permitted to take part in or witness it. Simply contemplating the magnitude of God's part of the work will not answer for the failure of man to do his part.

If this individualistic experiment by man results in the redemption of deserted farms from decay, and in making them profitable, and life worth living, surely a full application of the more perfect law, revealed of God, will redeem the waste places of Zion, soften the labors of the toilers, bring about that spiritual and mental development necessary before his people can become pure in heart, and make life "truly worth living," in its broadest sense.

FOR INQUIRY.

The following letter came during the busy conference affairs and has been delayed for that reason. We have lost trace of the parents of the boy referred to, and request the mother to acquaint us of her whereabouts, or any one knowing her address to send it to us:

PALMYRA, Indiana, April 3, 1905.

Brother Joseph Smith: Within you will find clipping of the death of a boy who was placed in the care of Bro. Thomas Wheeler, of Galena, Indiana. His name was Edward A. Hawn. I believe you were a party to the placing the lad with Bro. Wheeler. I conducted the funeral and learned concerning the death of the boy, and I am satisfied it was a clear case of suicide. Reports, however, are different. The verdict of the coroner was accidental suicide. The boy, I believe, inherited the desire to take his own life from his mother. Perhaps you may have heard of his parentage. Bro. and Sr. Wheeler loved the child, and fed and clothed him well, and also corrected him, at times, but this was necessary, for he was strong willed and in some ways heartless in intentions, as he expressed them. I wish you to make a notice for HERALD as you may think proper, based upon the clipping. I do not know where his mother lives, but hear she has married. Bro. and Sr. Wheeler are heart-broken over the affair, perhaps anticipating trouble from the boy's mother, and the loss besides, also gainsayers' stories hurting the work as well. All the doctors I have talked with believe the boy was not right mentally and inherited from the mother the disposition to suicide.

I am busy as can be in a series of meetings.

Wishing you a splendid conference, I am,

W. H. KELLEY, of Indiana.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The Ringgold Record, a paper published at Mt. Ayr, Iowa, one of our neighboring towns, in its issue for April 20, 1905, has the following concerning Graceland College:

WILL MAINTAIN COLLEGE.

SAINTS' CONFERENCE AT LAMONI DECIDES TO MAINTAIN GRACELAND COLLEGE.

It will be a matter of rejoicing to many to know that the recent General Conference of the Latter Day Saints at Lamoni arranged for the continuance of the work of that institution. The impression had gone abroad that the college was to be closed, at least temporarily. Many supposed that in effect that action meant a permanent closing. In all probability that would have been the result. The conference of the last year had been divided in opinion in reference to the matter and the status of the school was left in doubt. The managers of the college saw the situation and that it meant peril to the existence of the institution and went bravely forward to save it. They gave a broad and charitable interpretation to the church authority which was to govern them and moved boldly forward. The college was kept open, the students kept together, and the interest cultivated.

Events have fully justified their course of action. The college has during the year enjoyed a good degree of prosperity. The late conference felt like recognizing the fact and giving to the directors a hearty God-speed. In the meantime, the college debt has been reduced to forty-seven hundred and fifty-two dollars and forty-seven cents, and the report of the Bishop shows that there is a sufficient amount on hand and promised to wipe out the indebtedness. There is a disposition among the Saints to give liberally to sustain their college. The management has been marked by economy, wisdom, and common sense. The firm resolution and determination to overcome all difficulties in the way, is especially worthy of all commendation. Knowing well that a well-established and well-conducted college is a perpetual fountain of blessing, far reaching in its results, the Record joins in hearty congratulations to all concerned that the financial emergency has been safely "tided over" and that bright prospects now are open to the college of their early love.

We appreciate the good will shown by Editor Tedford in his congratulations and shall hope that the steady progress and continued success of Graceland will continue to merit such whole-souled interest as manifested by the Record.

General Conference

The request from the Fourth Quorum of Deacons for a reorganization of their quorum was referred to the Quorum of Twelve.

President Smith stated that some action should be taken to provide members of the High Council to sit upon the case referred to it yesterday, and other cases that might come before it.

It was moved that the President be authorized to name the high priests to sit upon that council, at the present time, when it shall convene, and all others between now and next conference, subject to the ratification of this body.

President Smith presented to fill the vacancies occasioned by the death of J. H. Peters and C. A. Beebe, the names of George A. Smith and John A. Grant. The nominations were ratified.

The resignation of W. A. Hopkins, member of the board of publication, was accepted, and the nomination of Oscar Anderson by the Bishop to succeed him was approved.

Lambert, and board of publication; clergy credentials, Joseph Smith, E. L. Kelley, R. S. Salyards; joint council with Church of Christ, A. H. Smith, E. L. Kelley, Heman C. Smith, R. C. Evans, Roderick May, R. S. Salyards; on incorporation in Canada, E. L. Kelley, R. C. Evans, William Anderson.

The following were sustained: Board of auditors; clerical force of conference including press committee; janitor and ushers.

President Joseph Smith pronounced the benediction.

Preaching at seven o'clock by T. W. Chatburn, assisted by Arthur Allen.

APRIL 19.

Prayer-meeting at nine o'clock in charge of J. A. Grant and John Midgorden.

Preaching at fifteen minutes to eleven by M. H. Bond, assisted by C. E. Irwin.

At two o'clock the closing session of the conference was presided over by President Joseph Smith. Prayer by I. N. White.

President Smith requested permission to withdraw the name of A. J. Moore as one of the temporary high councilors, and present instead the name of J. M. Terry, for the reason Bro. Terry was acting member of the High Council at the time decision was rendered which was referred back by the conference. The request was granted and the nomination of Bro. Terry approved.

The following resolution was adopted:

Whereas the Presidency has suggested that the conference provide that the High Council be convened to dispose of all matters referred to it before the sitting of the General Conferences,

Resolved that in the opinion of this conference the Presidency are authorized to convene said council at such times as will enable it to hear all cases before the sessions of the General Conferences begin.

Report of the General Sunday-school Association was received as follows:

To the Annual Conference of 1905; Greeting: The General Sunday-school Association respectfully submits the following report for the conference year just passed.

The progress of the work has been steady, certain, and in most localities and in most departments very satisfactory. As the results of the Sabbath-school work being better understood it is better appreciated and therefore more generally adopted. And when we say more generally adopted we mean that more persons are taking an active part therein. Lay member, officer, minister, old and young, all have caught the inspiration to unite in the one effort to teach the simple truths of the gospel to all. We will never know what good may come from these efforts but we are certain that it will be well worth the effort it may cost.

We are able to report 55 district associations, 467 schools, 20,289 scholars, being a gain over last year of two district associations, (after the loss of one occasioned by the union of the New York and Philadelphia Districts,) 41 schools, and 1,475 members.

The General Association had no regular worker in the field the past year, but considerable work was done by the officers at the reunions and district meetings. The same arrangement is provided for the ensuing year with the addition that the executive committee were authorized to engage the services of competent workers for limited periods to act as field workers in localities where this work is needed.

Our finances are on a safe basis. The Quarterly continues to produce sufficient revenue for the needs of the association, though the undertaking of new ventures may tend to reduce the balance this year.

The Gospel Quarterly continues to be useful in its sphere and so far as we are able to determine it has been fully up to the necessary high standard. The Quarterly is constantly increasing in circulation and we trust in usefulness too. It is now issued in four grades, though it is contemplated that as soon as the present series of six quarters of first primary lessons are completed to make them into permanent form and issue them as a book and not as a quarterly. The convention ordered the issuance of a teachers' quarterly which will be provided for as soon as practicable.

The home department has been established for some two or three years, but not until last year has it been pushed with special vigor. Mrs. T. A. Hougas was appointed general home department superintendent and has succeeded in planting this work in many places. She has had the hearty co-operation of many of the missionaries in the field, which has been of material aid to the work, and, as we believe, a blessing to those whom they induced to take up the work. She desires to express appreciation of the assistance rendered by the brethren and hopes that it may continue.

The fourteenth annual convention of the General Association closed with the evening session, April 5, 1905. The regular routine of business was transacted and preparations made for the work of the ensuing year. No questions of special or unusual importance were considered, and the only deviation from the former work is the issuing of the teachers' quarterly as before mentioned.

Sr. Anna Salyards, former editor-in-chief of the Gospel Quarterly, has been continued in that position. She will be provided with such assistance as may become necessary to accomplish the work to be done.

The revising committee, consisting of Brn. Duncan Campbell, John Smith, and R. S. Salyards, was sustained by the convention by a strong vote.

The officers for the ensuing year are as follows: Superintendent, T. A. Hougas, Henderson, Iowa; first assistant superintendent, J. A. Gunsolley, Lamoni, Iowa; second assistant superintendent, A. Carmichael, Anaheim, California; secretary, D. J. Krahl, Lamoni, Iowa; librarian, Mrs. E. Etzenhouser, 2415 Wabash Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri; treasurer, John Smith, Lamoni, Iowa; home department superintendent, Mrs. T. A. Hougas, Henderson, Iowa.

We wish to express our appreciation of the interest shown and good work done in our special line by the many local and district workers, and especially by the brethren of the missionary force. The tangible results of the efforts of these brethren and others of the ministry is quite perceptible, and we trust it may give them as much pleasure in doing the work as it does the association officers in receiving it. We hope that all may be able to continue therein.

We bid you all a hearty God-speed in your labors.

T. A. HOU GAS, Superintendent.
D. J. KRAHL, Secretary.

Additional report from the First Seventy was read.

A motion to extend a vote of thanks to the reception committee prevailed.

While waiting for some delayed quorum reports President Smith addressed the assembly as follows:

The session which has so far passed has been one of considerable trial to more than one. I presume were it not for the understanding that we have of the conscious confidence that we have in the overruling providences of God some would have been inclined to think that we had almost been forsaken by the Spirit.

I notice with considerable regret, as your presiding officer, the too frequent recurrence of the disposition to resent. It seems to me that we have not yet learned the full extent and meaning of what Christ said, "Resist not evil." I regret that any should so far have forgotten the natural courtesy which men professing to be servants of the Lord should exercise toward one another as to attempt to correct what is supposed to be, or known to be, or felt to be improper statements at once, or, to say the least, too vigorously. I regret this because it almost always leaves a sting behind, and to a certain extent hurts the influence that we have one with another.

However, nothing should be carried out of the assembly-room in the spirit of evil memory or of disparagement. Words spoken hastily in debate or under strong influence of provocation, or anything of that kind ought to be passed over. Whatever may have been done we all must admit that the motive in which we have entered into our work has been a good one, and we must credit all others with the same motive. I believe it to be due each other. And this largely removes the result of mistakes that may be made by us.

As one of the speakers has aptly remarked, "We do not claim infallibility, as individuals, nor as a body." We may make mistakes. And, as suggested by another, "Who has not made them?" You are all aware that I have because I have been the center of observation. I have been in the lime-light all the time now for forty-five years. And if I have not made mistakes during that time it is remarkable at least, and may possibly be attributed to innocence rather than design. And if those mistakes have not been observed, noted, it may be due to the dullness of those who have been cognizant of what has been done by me and said by me, or to an extreme charity on their behalf toward me. And perhaps it would not be well to claim, so far as I am concerned, either extreme; for you certainly are not a dull set of men. The records which you have made in the world in defense of the gospel you have been preaching abroad, the manner in which you have sustained yourselves under attacks that have been made, and against which you have defended that which has been advocated by you, and the general proposition indorsed by the church, all indicate that however quiet you may be there is a latent reserve force that stands well to your credit and to the benefit of the cause you serve.

I trust that in the year that is past I have been enabled to co-operate with you all in the ministerial field, and in local charge, acceptably. If I have not done this I shall not be offended if my attention is called to it; because it would be a mistake to ignore the just claims of any, and I have no disposition to treat with disrespect any laborer in the field. That at least is my present conviction.

I know that everybody engaged in this work with full purpose of heart must necessarily make some sacrifice. I have not made the sacrifice that a good many of you men have made and are making, notwithstanding that when I engaged in the work I have from that time to this never had any other aim or object. I never engaged in business enterprise that I was not forced into. I have never tried to make any money by other methods of business. I have never had any political ambition to gratify, though political honors have been offered to me. But by an understanding and agreement with President Blair, who was of an opposite color of politics, we quietly minded our own political business, and did not make it a subject of quarrel between ourselves. And, as you are all aware, he sunk personal enterprise and ambition to engage in the work, and I could do no less than this. And of course we let political matters alone so far as the personal advocacy or accepting political honors is concerned.

Every man has his influence, and I have mine. I am called partisan by some. I do not object to that. Any man who feels earnest must be partisan, more or less.

Another thing that has been rather against me, and in favor of others who have made sacrifice is this: I have had a personal interest in accomplishing a part of the work that we have been striving to do. I had a selfish interest in redeeming the name of my father from unnecessary obliquity. If he had been guilty of wrong let him suffer the penalty, but if he had been suffering unjustly, and if his memory had been suffering unjustly I had a personal interest in removing that so far as I could honorably. It was not especially for the purpose of making the name of "Smith" honorable that I did this; but believing as I did at the outset that the religion that he had been instrumental in bringing to light was in its greater portion true, and the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ, I was interested that that work should not suffer because of undue obliquity cast upon his name or his memory. So far, you can understand, I have had a personal interest. And the sacrifice I may have made, whatever it might be, I do not claim that it was much of a sacrifice, for the possibilities are that I would never have succeeded in anything else if I had engaged in it. I am quite willing to take the estimate that has been made in respect to me, that in material things I should not have strength. Let that be as it may, I know that many of the ministry have sacrificed just as much as I have in regard to engaging in their work. They have not had this selfish motive at heart. It was with them, the work, first, last, and all the time. And they have done this, making this sacrifice heartily. If a man could not stand it he was approved if he stepped out quietly, maintained an honorable integrity before the world and before his fellows, but ceased to labor. But when the question of sacrifice is brought in it has been justly said that those who are dependent upon the ministry also sacrifice; and they sacrifice a good many things, and the spirit of sacrifice is certainly as much to be admired in them as it is in those who are ministers. But again, these sacrifices are shared alike by other portions of the great working mass of the church. And, as a consequence, if a sister is entitled to credit for sacrifice of the associations of her husband, or father, or brother who is in the field, we ought by no means to deny other sisters elsewhere the privilege of helping the work by sacrificing in another way if they choose to do it. For certainly they may and do feel the spirit of sacrifice just as much as do those wives of those ministers in the field. And I say, Let them heed the Bishop's call, and sacrifice in this sense. They may have the company of fathers, brothers, husbands, and enjoy their association at home; but let them sacrifice, while they have these blessings, for the benefit of those who are deprived of them.

Now it seems to me that that is, talking about equality, that that is at least equality.

There is another thing, (and I would like to impress it if I possibly could, as deeply as I feel it,) and that is that that which belongs to the body, of honor, esteem, and respect, in position, ought not to be entirely forgotten in mercy to an individual. You can easily understand that when I make a personal application of it. The body has rights so far as I am concerned. They respect and honor the discharge of my duties toward them. But if by any means I become recreant to my sense of duty to that body, no tender mercy to me as an individual ought to stand between the good, the honor of the body and my just punishment for that recreancy. Now how little you may think it or how great you may think it, one thing is absolutely certain: I could paralyze the best arm of the ministry we have, by personal misconduct,—dishearten and discourage the leading ministers of the church in every field occupied by those ministers. It would be an unseen influence that would paralyze their efforts, and they could not maintain the honor of the church if they had to sustain me in wrong-doing. And if that is good in my case, it holds good in every other man's case, no matter how great or how small he may be. The principle is there, and we must not lose sight of it in our extreme regard for the individual rights of members. We must not forget that which is due the body, the body of Christ.

Another thing: Every man does his duty as he sees it. It is out of the question for me to see my duty at all times as somebody else sees it. I must do it as I see it. And every man in this body claims precisely the same privilege. I do not care what his name is, or what the position he occupies, he must do his duty as he sees it, and as he feels responsible to the body and to God. I make no reflection when I say that if in the endeavor to secure my way I feel an extreme degree of selfishness there are minds in this church who would be exercised by the spirit of distrust when I undertook to presage the influence that I might make by proclaiming my honesty in the effort; that is conceded to every man, that he acts honestly. I concede it, no matter whether he sees as I see, or does as I do, or would do differently from what I would do under similar circumstances. The question of honesty is for each and every one.

Let me illustrate this. I remember upon one occasion while living in the Lamoni Branch, Bro. M. B. Oliver was presiding. There came to us a man who had been a Strangite. He came to us for the purpose of being received upon his original baptism. He had been a member of the old church, as I understand it, and understood it at the time. The matter was presented to the branch authorities in business-meeting, and the proposition was made to appoint a committee for the purpose of hearing what he had to say and reporting to the business-meeting what they would recommend in reference to it. One of our brethren vehemently opposed the appointment of this committee because it was contrary to the law of God, and he so testified by the revelation of God to him, so he said. But in spite of that the committee was appointed, and he was named upon the committee to serve, notwithstanding that he had said that he had a revelation from God that it was contrary to the law of God, examined the case and reported it at the business-meeting. You can understand what I mean when I say that it is possible by an extreme urging of our conscience upon others who may oppose us, that we detract from our own virtue, our own honor.

I used to say (I would not dare to say it now after what I have seen of men I have met with in the world) that I was always afraid of the man who jumped into the middle of the street and yelled, "I am an honest man." I always thought I would watch that fellow.

The honesty of ourselves, as soldiers together, is to be measured by our continued onward course, and our consistent behavior while pursuing that course. You can easily see that. And the silent pursuer of his course will sooner or later attract more attention to himself, and receive better credit than one who continually insists that he does what he does because of his honest convictions. His honest convictions are always conceded.

Now the year that lies before us, I am thinking, will be fraught with a great deal of interest to all of us. We stand before the world in a slightly different position to what we have done hitherto, in regard to the controversy between us and the people in the West. That difference is this: He who is presiding over that body in the West has publicly confessed before the people, before one of the highest critical courts of examination that it would be practical to get before, in the world, that he has been living in violation of the law of the State, the law of the United States, the law of the church, and the law of God. It has been asserted by us years before that such was the case, of those who occupy that position. But now it is a confessed fact. And the position taken by the Reorganized Church has been practically emphasized before the people of the United States, and before the people of the world. And the great mass of us are in condition to take advantage of that when conditions make it necessary or convenient when the question arises.

I do not know what may be the thought of you men, altogether; but I will tell you how it has occurred to me. If I had to stand before the people of the United States, with my conception of what is due to honor, integrity, and truth, facing such a confession as that, I would resign every honor that you have conferred upon me, and would seek the ranks of private life, and stay there. That is what I would do. My reason for that is simply this: We have conceded from the first that nothing but that which is true will ultimately stand. We may make mistakes, but sooner or later those mistakes must stand face to face with the great truth; and whatever we may have been under an expression of the truth must go, not, perhaps, to our salvation, but to our discredit, and we may be so saved as by fire but our works must perish. We must lose them.

Further than that, no man can afford to stand before his fellow men branded as one who falsifies the law of God, in his acts, in his conduct. He can not afford to do it. We have been confounded together because his name is Joseph. His name is Joseph Fielding; and I have seen his picture put in the public press with my name under it. But I hope that my brethren, wherever they go, will set the public at rest so far as the identity of the two men is concerned. And if sooner or later this man should be expurgated from blame before his fellow men and before God, no man would be better pleased with it than I. Not because he is a Smith, mind you. It is a painful thing for me to think that one of the family who has been born and brought up under the protecting care of this latter-day work in a sense, should prove recreant to what he owes to God and to his fellow men. In order to make that plea to his own people he must conclude that God has been a changeable being, and that he has so changed himself and the operation of his laws to fit the peculiar conditions of mankind. But there is no revelation or scripture written anywhere nor any revelation of his own that has come authentically before the people that would warrant you or me in thinking that he has ever taken into consideration a condition of the people when he has given unto them a law that should be an everlasting law.

I hope that we shall be getting nearer and nearer together in our attitude before the world, and in defense of this great work, and that we shall really have a profitable year, taking up the duties that lie nearest to us with a respondent effort to do what we can.

I used to preach a sermon from the statement, "I would rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness." And hence I have always felt willing to do anything that lay in my power, from the work of the deacon clear up, or from the work of the presiding officer clear down, if it were necessary, never thinking that the work that was being done was that which would honor or dishonor the man; but that it was the effort he put into the work, the heart which he put into the work that made the work honorable. The man that sings and is joyous over his work is the man that gets through without unnecessarily being tired. But the man who drags himself into his work and continually pushes himself that way, he is always tired. That will not do for us. We are to be cheerful. And when I am not cheerful I will try to keep out of the way of those who are likely to get cloudy because I am.

I congratulate you, brethren, all of you, of every degree of the priesthood, every office in the priesthood, in the two priesthoods, for the—I was going to say magnificent effort you have made for the good record. I congratulate you upon the effort you have made to keep your ranks clean, and suggest that a proper oversight of your membership in the different quorums continue to this end. But be careful that you do not allow mistrust, suspicion, unjust aspersion, to either grow up in your heart or spring out from your lips. To my thinking it is altogether improper. And while we are authorized to take notice of diversions from right ways, we are not authorized to listen to the whisperings of unjust suspicion, and to repeat those whisperings where the influence of the man who is in the field, or any responsible position, is injured in his work. We can not do that. Those who are sensitive feel this. Honorable men feel it. Useful men feel it. And notwithstanding they may put on a bold front, keeping a stout heart, it must sooner or later tell upon the individuality, and he will get weary, weary in spirit. Now we can not afford to do that in my judgment.

I am truly pleased with the degree of unanimity, as a whole, in which we have conducted the business which has been intrusted to this conference. It has been very peculiarly trying to some of us, and yet I believe we have preserved the love of God in our hearts.

I have heard since I began the conference that the Devil was here in Lamoni, and that things were all going wrong in the church, and the Devil had his ascendancy in our midst. I do not believe a thing of the kind. Not at all. Mischief may arise from our undue enthusiasm, and from our human weakness; and for me to confess that the Devil has rule in the church, either from one end of it to the other, I do not believe a word of it. Not one word.

I do not know that I could express it in the language of another, but the substance is about this: that our judgment of that which is outside comes from that which is within. And the judgment that we may pass upon such a condition of things as this may arise, not from the fact charged that there was this that we foresaw, but was shown through the lens through which we gazed at it, a distorted vision. I hope we will learn that to our good.

So far as I know, I have the personal confidence of those who are laboring in the field, and I am sure that every man whom I know, and whose name I recognize, as laborer, everywhere, has my support and confidence in the work unto which he is called.

I am not an aristocrat. I do not believe in priestcraft. I believe just what the prophet wrote while confined in jail: "Any man who exercises his priesthood in any degree of unrighteousness over his fellow men, amen to that man's priesthood." I believe that, and I believe that wherever it may be so exercised it is an error and must just as surely bring in evil in its train, as it is exercised. For that reason there ought to be complacency. And if we ever get nearer together it must be by a mutual bending toward each other. It must not be by an exercise of supreme authority, or anything of that kind. That never will bring men nearer. Look at the wide difference between the autocrat and the peasant of Russia. The autocrat dare not step outside of his castle without being surrounded by armed men. And our domestic president rides from one end of this country to the other, goes out and trusts himself to men out in the West, armed men, without a thought as to his personal injury. While we, as a people, may designate some man to watch over him, he puts himself at the mercy of the American citizen. He ought to do that.

One of the happiest thoughts that I had when I took my last mission out to Utah was that I was not afraid of any United States marshal that was in Utah or anywhere else. While numbers were hiding away from the marshal, a citizen of Iowa was out there, a citizen of the Reorganized Church, a member of it was walking the streets without a thought as to being arrested for misdemeanor. I was glad I was free. It made me feel good to think that I was a free man; that the son of Joseph Smith the Martyr, whatever they may think about him, or how mistaken they might think that I was, I was there, and my name was not on the list of the seven hundred that Marshal Ireland had in his hands for arrest. My liberty was with the people.

Now I know that you feel that way so far as your citizenship is concerned. I heard not long since a man state in the pulpit that he was glad that he was a free man. When he picked up the Bible he was at liberty to present it as he saw it, as he felt the influence of the Spirit. That he was not in leading-strings, and no man had put him in bonds as to what his liberty should be. That is the spirit in which men will conquer.

I remember a story told of General Jackson upon one occasion when Peter Cartwright was preaching. He was an eccentric preacher, and when Jackson came in and some one pulled Cartwright's coat and told him General Jackson was there, he says, "Who cares for General Jackson? He will be damned and go to hell as quick as anybody else if he does not repent." That was the sturdy independence of the man.

I thank you, brethren, for your kindness with which you have borne with me in the past as a presiding officer. I feel grateful to you. I am getting old, it is a fact. Might well be placed upon the superannuated list if it were not for the little strength that I have. And what I have shall be spent in the work.

I feel grateful that the Lord has listened to your prayers in my behalf. I feel grateful to him that he has thus far prolonged my life, until I am just about ready to say, Well, I am glad the work may be intrusted to younger men, stronger men, and that there is a goodly number who will rally to the support of the general work. And I hope that we will continue to grow, not only as a body, together, but compacted, enriched, ennobled by the continuance of the Spirit of the Master in us and with us until the triumph shall have been fully won.

The day of our assembling this month was the seventy-fifth anniversary of the organization of the church—three fourths of a century, longer than Israel wandered at one time. But we now have our faces fairly set toward the promised land. Let us not forfeit our right, but continue until it shall be accomplished.

REDEMPTION OF THE PURCHASED POSSESSION.

SERMON BY ELDER J. W. WIGHT, AT LAMONI, IOWA,

NOVEMBER 25, 1904.

In the first chapter of his letter to the Saints at Ephesus, beginning with the second verse, and concluding with the fourteenth, Paul writes as follows:

Grace be to you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ: according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love: having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the beloved: in whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace; wherein he had abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence; having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself: that in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him: in whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will: that we should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ. In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory.

God certainly knew that which was for our best good; and in sending his Son into the world that through that Son we might be redeemed, our Father knew just what was necessary upon the part of the Son, as well as the obligation upon ourselves, in this great work looking to the final establishment of redemption. And when Paul speaks here of the Holy Spirit as being the "earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession," he framed that language that was not only necessary to the saints at Ephesus, but to the people of God in all ages of the world. For when he went to Miletus on one occasion, as you will find recorded in the twentieth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, he sent to Ephesus and had the elders of the church come down, and instructed them, giving them that kind of instruction that was necessary for those who have charge of the flock, the church of God, over which the Holy Ghost had made them overseers. What for? "To feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." This is the "purchase," mind you. And we are to have an earnest of our inheritance "until the redemption of the purchased possession." The possession of the Lord Jesus Christ by virtue of the purchase, is his church; and there is something given unto that church that is to act as an earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of that purchased possession. Now, we are aware of the fact that the church is not yet redeemed; and in fact there is no controversy upon this point, and can be none. And until the day of redemption which is promised unto the church that Holy Spirit is to be given unto us as an earnest of our inheritance. That is the way Christ has made the promise that he will redeem us. He came for that especial purpose. He spoke nothing of himself, but declared that the Father gave him a commandment what he should say, and what he should speak; and he knew that his commandment was life everlasting. And in harmony with that commandment he went forth, and for some three years and a half, in his ministerial career, suffered all the scorn and the contumely incident to his trials as the Son of God, which finally culminated in his death upon the cross.

Now, mind you, he says, "I came that ye might have life." There is the promise unto us, and it seems to me that Paul simplifies this in such a way that there need be no difficulty whatever in comprehending the thought that it is to act as the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, the church. That is, the Holy Spirit is to so act.

All who are acquainted with the purchase of lands are well aware of the fact that this method is pursued: that if you purchase land, without paying cash down, or if you purchase it upon the installment plan, you do not get your deed, but you get a bond for a deed, which is the earnest of your inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession; and when that redemption is completed you obtain the deed; the bond is no longer necessary. But until that redemption is completed that bond is necessary. So, as Ezekiel calls it, the bond of the covenant is necessary for us until the redemption shall have been completed of this purchased possession—the church of the Lord Jesus Christ.

It seems to me that this is so simple that, just as the prophet has declared, a wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein, and points out so conclusively, and beyond the question of a doubt, permitting no opportunity for controversy, the necessity of this Holy Spirit in the church, that it is almost unnecessary to argue in favor of the thought. And yet the necessity arises from this fact: There are those (I presume just as honest in their conviction as your speaker is in his) that argue that there is no necessity for the Holy Spirit to-day; so far as the baptism of the Holy Spirit and the power incident thereto are concerned, that day has gone by; it was given in the early days of the establishment of the church simply that the church might be established amidst all the turmoil and trial incident to such establishment; and that when the necessity ceased there was no longer any opportunity or right to claim the Holy Spirit, especially in baptismal power.

Now I wish to say to you that I do not believe (and I think the statement has scriptural basis) that it will be possible for us to ever be redeemed and gain the promised inheritance without the aid of the Holy Spirit. And I believe that the Holy Spirit comes that we may receive a complete remission of our sins. Somebody (possibly a church-member; I do not know) may hold up his hands in holy horror at such a thought; but I remember that God spoke and said in the morn of creation that every plant should bear seed after his kind, and I do not believe that he has ever set aside that law, but that it is as unalterable as the law of the Medes and Persians; and that when God spoke he spoke in harmony with natural fact. I believe that every spiritual law and opportunity that may be granted unto us is in harmony with natural facts, because Nature is the handiwork of God. And when he purposed redeeming you and me from the fall he designed just the manner in which that purpose was to be accomplished. And when he sent his Son to the earth, he revealed unto him that design in its completeness, and, as we argued on Sunday morning, thereby made manifest a perfect law, no part of which can be removed. This body, as argued night before last, is immersed, emblematical of the burial of Christ, rises from the liquid grave, emblematical of the resurrection of Jesus Christ, just as Paul argues in writing his letter to the saints at Rome, as you will find recorded in the sixth chapter; and in his letter to the saints at Colosse, the second chapter. And as this body is laid within the liquid grave, it being some eighty-seven per cent water, it may be called an aqua man, and is applied to its own element; every plant bearing seed after his kind. And as the spirit is tabernacled within this body, and not being made up of the aqua element, it is therefore compelled to receive by some other means the regeneration of redemption incident to that spirit. For that spirit having entered into this body, and been kept within the environment incident thereto, has necessarily partaken of the sins incident to the body; and now the body having been cleansed, as shown on the other night, and as stated especially by Peter on the day of pentecost, when something like possibly three thousand souls cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do": "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise"—what promise? Ah! the promise of the gift of the Holy Ghost that Christ made prior to his departure. "The promise is unto you, and to your children, [or offspring,] and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." The Lord our God is calling, "Come unto me, O ye ends of the earth." The call is certainly broad enough. The promise is just as far reaching. Consequently every son and daughter that enters into covenant with the Lord Jesus Christ has the promise of the reception of the Holy Spirit. For do we not read how that Christ said to his disciples, as he led them out to Bethany, after having raised his hands and blessed them: "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be indued with power from on high"? I would like to have you think of that, friends, to-night. Think of all that it means. These men to whom the Lord Jesus Christ had given power over devils, and power to heal all manner of sickness; and yet when the time came for his departure, when the time came for him to go away from them, he said, "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem," etc. Though all this power had been given unto them, yet they had not the authority to go forth and build up the church and kingdom of God until they had been indued with power from on high. And as a consequence, to the mind of the speaker, it would be sheer presumption upon his part to go out and undertake to represent the Lord Jesus Christ, and seek to build up his church and kingdom among men without having received this indument from on high, this promised Comforter that would qualify him, like it qualified those centuries ago, to go out and build up the church and kingdom of God. I repeat the thought, that if your speaker should stand before you to-night and tell you that he did not believe in the baptism or gift of the Holy Spirit, then it would be sheer presumption upon his part to claim the right to go out and represent the Lord Jesus Christ, and build up his church and kingdom among the children of men. Because Jesus said to his disciples, "Tarry ye [wait ye] in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be indued with power from on high."

For ten days they waited; and when, as we read in the second chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, the day of pentecost was fully come, they were with one accord gathered in one place, and there came into that room a sound as of a rushing mighty wind, and filled the whole house where they were sitting. Now when the whole room was filled they could not help being immersed in Holy Spirit. And cloven tongues like as of fire sat upon each of them, and they arose and began to speak in other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance. Some people said, "Why, these fellows are drunken." They did not realize the power of God. They had no comprehension of it; and why? Because they had not been born again. Jesus said, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born again he can not see the kingdom of God." Nicodemus marveled at this, and wondered if a man after he had grown old must again pass through all the conditions incident to the physical birth. No, that was not what Jesus meant at all. "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born [regenerated] of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." "Why," somebody says, "that is funny argument. You talk about these men to whom Jesus had given such marvelous power, and you tell us that we must receive the Holy Ghost before we receive a complete remission of sins." Now I may say like this, so far as that argument or thought is concerned, that when Jesus Christ was with them he acted as their Comforter, and I am doubtful to-night whether those men had been really converted, though such power had been given unto them. For I read in Luke, chapter 22, how Jesus took Peter and said unto him, "Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat: but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." I do not believe that Peter was fully converted until after he had received the Holy Ghost himself, and in fact not until he saw that God was no respecter of persons. For when he saw the Holy Ghost fall upon the Gentiles, just as it had on them at the beginning, he says, "What was I, that I could withstand God?" "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him."

Now how does God accept us? By giving unto us the earnest of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession; or, in other words, giving unto us that Holy Spirit power, the power that Paul talks about, which is the earnest of our inheritance till the redemption of the purchased possession. And as a consequence thereof, when that Holy Spirit comes and baptizes our spirit, (every plant bearing seed after his kind,) our spirit is regenerated by the process and the powers incident to the baptism of this Holy Spirit, just as this body was regenerated by virtue of being baptized in water. Not that I would argue, nor did the brother argue the other night, that water has virtue in it to cleanse sin. It is the fact of obedience that brings the cleansing. Obedience to God's law. And if God had said that we were to raise our right hand and hold it heavenward for the space of half an hour, and would thereby receive a remission of sins, the remission would have come just the same, if, honestly, we had yielded obedience to the mandate. It is obedience, or as the prophet told King Saul, when he met him returning from the war and bringing with him the spoils thereof and asked him if he had done all that God had commanded him to do, the king said, Yes. Then said the prophet, "What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears?" And the king sought to excuse the crime he had committed against the commandments of God by saying that he had brought the spoils of war to offer a sacrifice to God; and the prophet said, "To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." And consequently since the command is so positive, so complete, and so replete with the grand promise of the Lord Jesus Christ that we shall receive this remission upon our obedience to the command, I say that we ought to obey without any question in the matter. And how it is that from time to time people do question this matter and at the same time make profession of belief in the Lord Jesus Christ, is beyond the comprehension of your speaker.

There came a time when it was necessary for Jesus to depart, and he said to his disciples, "I go away." They likely hung their heads with sadness. "What! going to leave them?" But he immediately promises: "I will not leave you comfortless." "I will send unto you another Comforter, even the Spirit of truth." And he makes promise that when that Spirit has come, he will take away the things of the Father and show them unto you.

Now, these men did exactly what Jesus told them to do. They went to Jerusalem and tarried until they received the promised Comforter. That Comforter took them and taught them the things of the Father. And Peter, fifty days after he had been a moral coward, so much so that three separate times he denied the Christ, finally cursing and swearing; and then, hearing the cock crow, went aside and wept bitterly, (he was a moral coward then, he was Peter the man,) fifty days subsequently he stands before the vast multitude (for it is said that they congregated from every part of the city, when they heard what was transpiring in this particular place, and they began to say that these men were drunken) and beckoned with the hand to command silence, and then began to preach unto them Jesus Christ and him crucified. And finally waxing warm under the influence of the divine afflatus he says, Whom, "ye have taken and with wicked hands have crucified," "God hath raised up." Ah, Peter is inspired, now. The promised Comforter has come to him. It is taking him and teaching him the things of the Father, and under its divine influence he makes promise to those hungering, thirsting souls, who cry out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, for the promise is unto you; and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."

I tell you, friends, as I lift my heart in gratefulness to God, as I try to respond in thankfulness to him, I am thankful that that promise was not only for a time, but that that promise was to all, even afar off, who will yield obedience to the divine command. And just as Jesus said, We must be born again, he tells us how we are to be born: "Of water and of the Spirit." There is no opportunity to make denial of that. If I deny that we are to be so born I assume that I know more about the matter than the Lord Jesus Christ did; and I would not dare presume so much as that, would you? It was he who made the promise, he, the Son of God, who "spake as never man spake." And he said to these men, When he is come, he will take the things of my Father and show them unto you.

I follow the record and history relative to those early times, and I come to the part that tells of a place called Samaria. I find one, Philip, preaching down there. And when they believed him preaching the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women. "Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, [they, the Samaritans, had been baptized, you see, with water baptism, and that was according to the word of God,] they sent unto them Peter and John; who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost, (for as yet he was fallen upon none of them)."

The question arises, How are we to get this Holy Ghost? There must be some law by which we receive it through obedience to God. God does nothing without law. He operates by law. For should he seek to accomplish anything without law he would then be one who would set aside law, and become an anarchist, and confusion would be the result. For where no law is, chaos reigns.

Now, what is the law governing in the case? These men were to be taken by the Spirit and taught the things of the Father; and they have reached just that point now, and the record says, "Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost. And when Simon [the man who prior to his baptism by Philip had been a sorcerer] saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money, saying, Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost. But Peter said unto him, Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money." No, it can not be; there is no question about it. It is the gift of God, and it can be purchased only by obedience. Christ himself yielded obedience, who was a Son. He learned by obedience. Shall you and I do better, then? Shall we refuse to obey, and say, I will do nothing of the kind?

I have had people tell me, "But this idea of the laying on of hands for the receiving of the Holy Ghost, you can not make me believe it. No, sir, I will not believe it, neither will I yield obedience to it." It is not a question, just now, as to whether I have the authority; it is a question as to whether God taught the necessity of it. And certainly he did, as manifested by the number of those men who yielded obedience to the command of the Lord Jesus Christ, and who tarried until they received the enduing power from on high. And, receiving the power and influence of the Holy Spirit, they were taught of the things of the Father. And in harmony therewith, and in conjunction with such teaching, they laid their hands upon those Samaritan men and women, thereby imparting unto them the right to receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. Not that the virtue was in their hands particularly. The virtue more especially was in keeping God's commands. And God can empower, and is just as willing to empower his servants to-day as he was eighteen centuries ago, or else there has been a change. Why, you do not believe God is changeable? No, we will not argue that.

Following this thought I go to the eleventh verse of the ninth chapter of Acts, and find one, Ananias, who has been commanded to go to the street that is called Straight, and there find one, Saul of Tarsus, and "behold, he prayeth." And Ananias sought to excuse himself. Why, Lord, wherever this man has gone he has done everything to oppose us. The messenger said, Go on, doubt nothing. And he went. In the seventeenth verse I read, that coming in, and putting his hands upon him, he said, "Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost."

Somebody has argued like this: Nobody but the apostles, and they on whom they laid their hands, ever had the right to impart the gift of the Holy Ghost. We have to meet that kind of argument. I have met it in public debate from time to time. We are told that nobody but the apostles, and they on whom they laid their hands, had the authority to impart the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands; that it never descended to the third person. Let us see how that may be borne out. I quoted to you from the seventeenth verse of the ninth chapter of Acts, how that Ananias came in, laid his hands upon Saul, and as a consequence thereof, taking it for granted that one or more of the apostles laid their hands upon Ananias, then Saul was the third person, and would have no authority to lay hands upon others for the reception of the Holy Ghost, if the argument holds good. Now, let us see whether that would work or not. I want to quote the language found in the nineteenth chapter of Acts. I read that Saul went into the upper coasts, and finally came to Ephesus, where he found certain disciples, and he said unto them, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost." What? Suppose that I preach here, that my brother preaches here; and we continue not only a week, or four weeks, but four months; and during this entire series of services we never say a thing about the Holy Ghost, but we emphasize the necessity of baptism by water, and continue to emphasize it until many are convinced, possibly a hundred,—anyhow twelve,—and yield obedience. And somebody else comes along and tests these twelve as to whether they are true disciples or not, and asks, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said, We never heard anything about the Holy Ghost. And he said unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said, Unto John's baptism." And do you know that a great many people have reached the conclusion that John's baptism was not Christian because of that statement? Now, Christ was baptized with John's baptism, and if it was not Christian then he was not Christianized!

Paul says, "Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said, Unto John's baptism." He then instructs them more fully, and then they are baptized in the name of Jesus Christ. "And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied." Stop a minute! Paul was the third person. Are you forgetting that thought? If an apostle laid his hands on Ananias, the apostle was the first person, Ananias was the second, and Paul the third, and yet in this nineteenth chapter and sixth verse of the Acts of the Apostles the record says, "And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied. And all the men were about twelve." Then the third person did have the authority to lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost!

But somebody says, "Bro. Wight, what about Cornelius? He did not have any hands laid on him." No, not that we have any record of. But wait a moment. That was the exception; and the laying on of hands was the rule. And from my boyhood days I have always been taught in grammar, in reading, in orthography, in arithmetic, in every branch of science, to take the rule and not the exception. There was a necessity for this exception, so far as the Gentiles were concerned; for Peter did not believe that the Gentiles were worthy, and he called them unclean in the vision that God gave unto him. And God said, "What God hath cleansed, call not thou common." And then when Peter went up to Jerusalem, in after-time, the apostles took him to task for eating with the Gentiles, and he defended himself. He said, When I saw the Holy Ghost fall on them just as it did upon us at the beginning, what was I that I could withstand God; for I beheld that he was no respecter of persons, but that in every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted with him.

Now, I ask you, will you take the exception, or the rule, which is the laying on of hands? Thank you.

And they tell in a garland their loves and cares;
Each blossom that blooms in their garden bowers
On its leaves a mystic language bears.

SAINTS SHOULD BE CHEERFUL.

In the one hundred and nineteenth section of the Doctrine and Covenants it is especially enjoined upon Saints to be "cheerful in their warfare" and "in cheerfulness do whatever may be permitted you to perform," and we are convinced that we should heed this admonition as closely as any other instruction given us.

The obedience of this particular part of the revelation referred to, as all other similar advice from the Lord, brings with it the blessing, and we are not required to wait until the future life to receive it; for, like virtue, as proved by Socrates, it is its own reward.

When we have trials to pass through, suffering to endure, and misfortune to encounter, it may be hard to look upon the brighter side and sing about the sun shining somewhere and about the clouds being silver-lined and all that; but if we remain firm in our integrity before God we are assured that everything will ultimately result in good for us and we will feel so much better by being resigned instead of impatient, and cheerful instead of gloomy and when the clouds of adversity have passed (they will surely pass away for they are but transitory) we will be better adapted to enjoy brighter conditions.

We would not be understood to mean that we should not weep for departed friends and with those who are called to mourn, but the practice of wearing a long face and sad countenance should be guarded against lest we get the habit formed and do it continually.

We have met and become acquainted with persons, even members of the church, faithful, active workers, who from care and trouble should be entirely free. They were healthy, well provided for, and apparently situated so that they might be the most happy people on earth. Nevertheless they persist in wearing a sorrowful face, telling in a pathetic vein of the sacrifices endured, ever referring to this beautiful earth as a "vale of tears," ending their devotions to the Giver of all good something like this: "At the end of our suffering save us."

We may possibly be mistaken, but we believe that this condition is a perverted one, acquired by allowing ourselves to get into the sorrowful habit, and can and should be lived down. This may, we hold, be done by cultivating the opposite, indulging only such thoughts as are conducive to comfort and happiness.

One of the unpleasant features of the habit just mentioned is that the face gets so used to being contorted that it stays so and makes one have the appearance of being downcast whether he is or not.

If we are, as is commonly advocated, here on the earth on probation, permitted to pass through trials and tribulation for the purpose of proving our worthiness to enter upon better conditions after finishing here, it seems unreasonable to suppose that after having borne our suffering sorrowfully and met our misfortunes and disappointments grievously, that we will be well prepared to enter into the condition that is expected when through the probation, that of joy, happiness; and bliss.

The habits that we form are woven into and tend to shape our characters; and if we have allowed them to be of a sad and gloomy nature we will hardly be able to appreciate those opposite conditions of happiness and light.

Of all people we, as a class, should be the most decided optimists in the world, rejoicing in the light of the restored gospel and the manifold blessings that it brings; and though men may persecute us for the gospel's sake, we are still commanded by the Savior to rejoice because of that, and be exceeding glad, for great is our reward in heaven. We have the assurance that if we are faithful in the Master's service we shall overcome whatever may oppose us. Therefore we should cultivate cheer and hopefulness, that they may shed their rays about us to gladden and encourage those who may have more difficulties to meet than do we; for be our task ever so hard and our trials ever so numerous and severe, we can still see about us those whose lot is quite unenviable by us.

HOW MAY A PASTOR HOLD THE INTEREST OF HIS PEOPLE AND KEEP THEM IN GOOD SPIRITUAL CONDITION?

(Read before the High Priests' Quorum by Elbert A. Smith.)

The two divisions of this topic are closely related: if one can not hold the interest of the people he can do little toward keeping them in spiritual condition; and on the other hand if he can not do them good it is of no use for him to hold their interest.

We will suppose first that the man is called of God to be a pastor and so has some natural qualification for that position, the work of which is vastly different from field missionary work. A good man for pioneer frontier work might not wear six months as a pastor, while a good pastor might fail utterly in the work of a seventy.

God is somewhat like man in that he can work best with suitable tools. We know it is poor policy to try to chop wood with a plane or smooth a board with an ax. Each has its own work; nor need there be any dispute about which is most useful in the work of erecting the building,—the ax or the plane.

The pastor will find three lines of activity in which to expend his force. First. Teaching from the pulpit. Second. Teaching in private. Third. Teaching by example. Shortcomings may be overlooked in the first two lines but he must not fail in the third.

In preaching, the traveling minister changes audiences constantly and must perforce go over the same subjects repeatedly. The pastor has the same audience week after week, perhaps year after year, and if he would hold their interest he must cover a wide range of topics and ever essay to be original and a leader in thought. He may interpret current events, or use them to illustrate his subjects, but they should be secondary; the scriptures should furnish him his topics,—using the term scriptures to include all inspired writings. He should not try to be a historian, a politician, a school-teacher, a scientist, a lecturer, or a humorist. He may glean from the fields of all these, but his calling is different from and higher than any of them. He is a preacher and his work is to preach the gospel. There can be no higher calling.

At times it may seem to the pastor that a blank wall confronts him. What will he talk about? But as he proceeds, inexhaustible fields open up and at the end of two or five years he will feel that he has but just begun to preach to his people and they will listen just as earnestly as at the beginning.

Every one should discover how he can best do his work as a preacher, and then feel free to work in that way. My own experience has been that I can do best to carefully go over my subject before entering the pulpit. And I have felt the Spirit present in great power during the work of preparation at home, and later while presenting the subject from the pulpit. The fact that the outline is well in mind, as suggested by thought and by the help of the Spirit, does not hamper God or eliminate him from the sermon in any sense; but on the contrary, it leaves the mind of the preacher free to wait upon the guidance of the Spirit which will help him to round out his thought and present it forcefully in clear and pleasing language. The Spirit is a guide to all truth, more especially during the quiet hours of meditation. During the active hour of preaching it "brings to mind things past" and draws from the well-stored mind such material as is needed. The man has his work; the Spirit has its work. He should study to show himself approved, and only in an emergency expect the Spirit to do his work without preparation on his part.

Of course no effort should be made to commit a set series of words to memory to recite in the guise of a sermon, or one will lose his own interest in the subject; and the preacher who is not himself interested can not interest others. A study of good books and magazines and some good grammar will help in this work. Funny stories will not greatly help. We can hold interest with better things.

At first thought it would seem that one who speaks so often to the same audience should dilute his ideas and make them go farther, yet he is the last man who can afford to be diffuse. He should be concise and brief and let his talks be so clear and plain that the least able can understand. He can teach the most profound thinkers in that very way. The simple way of stating truth will reach all classes; while the abstruse way reaches only one class.

The pastor should be very careful to not weary his people with long sermons. Some subjects and some times may call for a long sermon; but as a rule the pastor should be watchful, and close before he loses the interest of his audience, and there should be no doubt in their minds when he is done as to what he was talking about.

In regard to the second line of work,—private teaching,—there perhaps we find a still greater need for ability and judgment. That part of the topic has not fallen into good hands. The writer is a poor fireside preacher. The pastor who is able in this line will find a rich field in the homes of his people. Yet I have learned that a pleasant call does a world of good, even when religion is not mentioned, even when the pastor lets the people do the talking; perhaps that is the best, at times, because he thus learns what interests them. As regards nonmembers,—often a word in private to them does more good than a public sermon. It is not best to unduly urge such people toward baptism, yet there comes a time when it is proper to urge,—a time when the man has been well taught the way of life and then halts undecided,—hesitating to go on, liable to go back and be lost. By an earnest, honest appeal the pastor at this point may turn the scales, and the individual will thank him for it later. He should not intrude, or offend, or tease, or threaten, but he should voice the old invitation, "Come unto me," and the Spirit will carry the message home. Within the past few months five out of eight people to whom I have made such an appeal in private have responded and been baptized and one of the other three is now ready. They tell me now that they are sorry they ever put it off so long, but they could not decide until they were plainly told that the hour of their decision had come.

Now we come to the third and most important line of work,—that of teaching by example. It is absolutely necessary that the pastor should back up with his private life that which he publicly teaches. It is entirely useless for one to tell people to live in unity and be patient and forgiving, unless they see that he is patient, long-suffering, charitable, ever ready to forgive and forget. It is useless to preach humility if one is proud, or virtue unless virtuous. The pastor will find great pleasure and help in his intercourse with his people and should be a friend and brother to them all, but should not step over a certain line of intimacy either with man or woman. The congregation should be able to point to their pastor as a standing refutation to the charges sometimes made by the world. He should be a living argument in favor of the gospel that he preaches, and if he is not that his other arguments are in vain. In dress, in speech, in decorum, in morals, he should be a teacher and an example. It is no light thing to be a pastor, because a pastor can not preach simply when he will, he preaches all the time in varied ways and will soon realize that he needs the Holy Spirit out of pulpit quite as much as in it. He needs wisdom daily. He is located and must meet the results of his acts right where he is. If he makes a mistake he can not move on and leave some other laborer to clear it up; he must meet the issue and make his record. His joy when the work goes well and his sorrow when it goes ill makes the sunshine and shadow of his life, and he will find cheerfulness and a saving sense of humor a great help to him when the clouds predominate.

The pastor should take an active interest in that which interests his people, especially in church-work. He should sympathize and work with his young people. Their enthusiasm and cheerfulness will help him and will counteract the despondency and cynicism he may find among some of his older members. The pastor should not be a leading officer in the Sunday-school or Religio, if it can be avoided, but he should be in full sympathy with and a counselor of those who are in charge of such work. He will find these organizations a great help in his work. He should not be afraid to speak a word of appreciation to those who help in that way, or as organists, or singers, or deacons, or to those who bring flowers to decorate his pulpit. He should enlist every member as well as the local ministry so far as he may in some part of the work. Make them laborers together. Those who have work to do are interested. He should encourage each individual in any line of church-work that may appeal to him or her.

It will be well for him to see that the church-building is made as attractive as the means at hand will permit so that it will be a pleasant and homelike place; not a dirty and forbidding place of gloom where people gather to be scolded, but a bright and cheery room where they gather to hear the gospel of love from one who loves them. And in conclusion let us say that if the pastor does not love his people he can never be a pastor to them: and if he is not thoroughly sincere and natural in his work they will find it out and he will fail to hold them and lead them. Elocution or other artificial trimmings will not wear long in pastoral work, but real character will wear for ever.

Additional Notes.—This paper was written from the standpoint of a pastor who has had a very small force of local laborers at his disposal. That part of the problem is not given due prominence for that reason. You will note that the writer does not lay down a rigid rule regarding preparation for the pulpit, but says that every one should learn how he can best do his own work. A knowledge of elocution is not condemned when it is used to develop natural qualities and when it is made servant; but only when it is "put on" as a "trimming" and makes its unfortunate owner to be a servant, his natural or God-given talents less in evidence than his acquired gestures and inflections. The writer has found it a good idea at times to distribute printed announcements at the morning meeting setting forth the character of the evening service, subject, etc. These are printed with a neostyle or mimeograph at slight cost, and are sometimes illustrated with diagrams or drawings that will arouse interest.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Report of President of Daughters of Zion.

To the Daughters of Zion Assembled; Greeting: On account of the conference being held at Kirtland last year, so far away from the homes of the general workers, so that few could attend, we were not able to hold a business-session, therefore my report refers to two years' work.

As Sr. Hougas and myself were the only ones of the advisory board who were in attendance at the conference of 1904 we decided to hold a meeting for the purpose of creating an interest in the work; also to give an explanation regarding home class work. Bro. T. A. Hougas kindly assisted us. A good interest was manifested and we know that good resulted. We also distributed, by permission of the Presidency, leaflets, "Questions and answers," and "A call for volunteers."

For some time my work has increased, this partly an account of the scattered condition of the advisory board, which prevented us from holding our usual monthly meetings, depriving us of the advantage of consulting together. This has largely hindered our efforts and made the work more laborious by reason of the necessary correspondence in other directions, in the way of assisting local work.

After the appointment of the advisory board, April, 1903, before we separated we held two meetings in which plans were laid to carry on future work.

Sr. Walker having requested to be released from her long service of preparing "Select readings" for locals on account of her health and so much other work on hand. Srs. Stebbins and Smith of the board were appointed a committee to take charge of this work.

Sr. Schmutz and myself were appointed a committee to take charge of leaflet work. The result was two leaflets prepared by Sr. Walker, one by Sr. M. Eleanor Kearney, and one by myself. A number of each have been distributed.

I still feel as I have stated in the past, that much of our work must be done by free distribution of literature, to those who do not or can not attend our meetings.

I am sorry to learn from inquiry that many of our sisters do not take the church publications, hence our readings do not reach them, and for this reason we feel the need of reaching them in other ways.

The committee appointed to take charge of the "Select readings" for local meetings has, with the assistance of Sr. Walker, supplied the Home Column with excellent matter.

Our corresponding secretary, along with her other work, has been active in sending out leaflets. This work has also been done in a measure by others among the active workers.

We are gratified by the good work being done in the Sunday-school by the "Parents' day programs," because it is in line with the work we hope to see accomplished.

We have reason to know that the work in our departments in Autumn Leaves and Ensign is appreciated.

Regarding the financial part of our work, I do not expect much of a report for the reason that no special call has been made on the locals to aid in defraying the expenses of the society except at our last general meeting; but a movement, as you know, has been made by our society to raise a fund for some "benevolent purpose," that purpose to be decided upon by the general society at this meeting. In response to this call the society has raised the sum of five hundred and fifty-four dollars and sixty-eight cents.

As there is a growing demand for literature, and funds needed for other purposes, I would desire to see the local presidents calling attention to voluntary contributions in their respective locals for this need and that such amounts be forwarded to the general treasurer as soon as it can be done.

In conclusion, I will say, while the society has not advanced in numbers, as some might expect, yet in view of the fact that some new locals have been organized, and good has been accomplished in other lines, I feel that the effort of this organization is accomplishing a work that is entering the homes of those who are not among our number. I feel the work is onward.

I pray that God will direct us in all the work of this meeting; and that his guidance may be with the future advisory board and the organization in general.

Report of the Gleaners.

THE YOUNG SISTERS AUXILIARY SOCIETY OF THE INDEPENDENCE DAUGHTERS OF ZION LOCAL FROM JULY 1, 1904, TO JANUARY 1, 1905.

We have been striving hard to do our part in this great work. Have had many discouragements, but now a good interest is shown by the young people.

Have held sixteen regular meetings in the time stated above, and one called meeting, with an average attendance of ten members present.

We have quilted one quilt; pieced three quilts; made five aprons, and four gowns; and knotted five comforts.

On December 6, 1904, we gave a "doll bazaar" and oyster supper from which we realized fifty-five dollars and thirty cents; fifty dollars of this we appropriated to the "Childrens' home fund."

Have paid our tithing, amounting to eight dollars and twenty cents, and have given such clothing to the poor as came into our possession.

We hope ever to continue faithful.

MRS. ROBERT KEMP, President.

MISS EDNA YINGLING, Secretary.

[In publishing the above reports we feel that we can not let the opportunity pass without calling the attention of the various local societies to the work done in Independence, Missouri, by the young sisters, as shown in one of these reports. In doing this we wish to ask of all local societies who are not in like manner encouraging the young: Are you not losing a golden opportunity? It is not only the amount which these young sisters by their earnest efforts were enabled to contribute towards the fund now being raised by our society which is to be considered in weighing the importance of this matter. To us the fact of their being drawn nearer to the church, through working for it, far exceeds in importance any consideration of dollars and cents, and we do earnestly hope that wherever it is possible the example of the Independence local society may in this respect be followed by others, and we feel sure that much good will result to our society and also to the young girls themselves.—Ed.]

Prayer Union.

Sr. Hattie Minear of Medina City, Bandera County, Texas, earnestly desires the prayers of the Prayer Union. She is a faithful sister with a family of small children and is in very bad health. Her great desire is, if it be God's will, that her health may return and that she may live to raise her family.

GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT.

Our work for the year past has been very largely from our desk. It has required a heavy correspondence, though not so heavy as in the earlier years of the association. About one thousand letters would cover the whole year's correspondence, whereas it once required nearly two thousand in the same length of time. There are a great many other items of work that do not appear to the public eye that require a large amount of time and attention, perhaps the larger portion of the work, which we have given our careful attention and handled as promptly as possible for us to do under the circumstances. Having again resumed secular business, we are unable to do as well with such work as one entirely free to devote his attentions thereto.

Reports and personal letters are our main source of information this year. We have heard from many of the sections of the country, and almost without exception they give a very encouraging report. So that while figures and corrections in same may not show as flattering results as we might like, we are still encouraged with the outlook in a general way.

Early in the year we prepared some programs for district conventions, and also for a "parents' day" program for local schools. These were sent out to the district superintendents with request to use and report the results. And from many of the districts come very good reports. In some instances they were even elated with the programs and the results of the work, some of them using the programs the second time, and others sending for new ones. The line of the work is for the improvement of the home as most of you no doubt know. We have felt for some time that the Sunday-school was failing to accomplish what it might, owing to a lack of interest on the part of the parents. And it is hoped by this work sent out to interest the parents and get them to thinking more upon what their duties toward their children are. The success of the work is sufficient to fully justify its continuation, we think. And we sincerely trust that the matter will not be allowed to lapse for want of care. A sister, one whose name is perhaps the most familiar of any sister that has ever been connected with the work of the young in the church, said, "You must keep it going till the harvest."

We are happy to recognize the effective services of many of the missionaries in the work this year, more than heretofore. The work is being better understood and its results better appreciated, so that it needs only to be pushed to be established. Many of the laborers in the field have taken hold of the Sunday-school work, especially the home department work, and we can see material results from their efforts. We fully appreciate the help of the missionary force and assure them that their efforts will bring good results to the work on all lines. One of the brethren of the Twelve very kindly furnished us with the items of work reported to him in his field, which have, we believe, been very helpful to us, and we extend our thanks for the same. Truly we are laborers together for Christ.

Our finances are on a firm and prosperous foundation. The Quarterly has continued to produce sufficient revenue for the needs of the work. Our balance this year will be more than the balance of last year, owing, in part, to the increase in the circulation of the Quarterly, and in part to the decrease in expenditures of the association. The treasurer's report will give us the exact amounts.

The Quarterly has continued to increase in circulation, and as we believe, in usefulness. The Primary, or what some may better understand as the infant class Quarterly, has been published as per the instructions of the last convention. And since the separating of the first primary lessons from the regular Primary Quarterly, the circulation has been held up far beyond our most extravagant expectations. We had expected that it would be a difficult matter to hold the subscription list up to what it should be, but have been happily surprised at the splendid results in this respect. The Quarterly editor and primary editors are to be congratulated upon the work they have done, for, to prepare work that is used by so many thousand critical persons and pass comparatively free of criticism, would certainly indicate great care and competency in preparation; and, too, that the Lord looked with favor upon the work.

We take pleasure in acknowledging the efficient and prompt help of our associate officers. Our relations have been the most congenial and our work has been pleasant. And their experience in the work is a resource of unmeasured value to the association. Each in his place has done what could be done under the circumstances and done it cheerfully, promptly, and well.

During the nine years of our service to the association we have at all times endeavored to do the best we could. We have sacrificed business, the pleasures of sociability and of home, and many other things for the sake of the work. We know we have made some mistakes, perhaps many of them, but there is no one who regrets them more than we do. We have spared neither means nor physical strength to make the work all that was in our power to make it, for the work has been one of true pleasure to us. We entered it believing that God had a work for us to do, and the assurances that we have felt from time to time have served to confirm the conviction. It has been the source of more true pleasure, of more real soul-satisfaction to us than any other work or pastime in which we have ever engaged. We took up the work with no other thought but that we should remain therein and do the best we could as long as our services were needed or desired. And we believe we can conscientiously say that we have done what we set out to do. But circumstances that have transpired since our re-election one year ago have convinced us that we have at least completed our work. It will be remembered by those who have been regular attendants at the General Conventions that when our name has from time to time been presented for re-election we have never declined, have never offered one single objection, believing that it was our duty to do what might be given us to do. But now that conditions are changed, we trust that no one will consider us indifferent to the interests of the work, or unmindful of our duty therein when we say that we are not a candidate for re-election. It is with many regrets that we are brought to the conclusion, but it seems we have at last come to the parting of the ways. We are not always able to control the fates and must recognize conditions when they are placed upon us.

The conventions of recent years are to be congratulated upon their unity and the good work done, and we trust this one will not fall below the same splendid standard. May the good Lord give us wisdom and strength to do our and his work with promptness, earnestness, and effectiveness.

REPORT OF FIRST ASSISTANT SUPERINTENDENT.

To the General Sunday-school Association in Annual Convention; Greeting: My work the past year has been quite limited. Have attended to various executive matters at Herald Publishing House incident to our business there, by advice of the superintendent, much of the time in connection with the secretary.

I conducted the work at five reunions as follows: Des Moines and Davis City, Iowa; Stewartsville, Missouri; Fanning, Kansas; and Plano, Illinois, though at the latter place my stay was very brief and I was not directly in charge.

In addition to the reunion-work I conducted a Sunday-school institute at Canton, Illinois, and attended the conventions of Northern and Eastern Michigan Districts and Lamoni Stake. I was also in Northern Indiana and Southern Michigan District, but did no active work more than to meet with some of the Saints and converse with them. I thus visited nine districts in the church, and feel that some good was accomplished.

The opportunity for reunion-work and institute-work was never so great as now, and here is afforded the most efficient means of lifting up our work to a higher standard of excellence. If we had available, competent persons who could go to different localities and districts and remain a number of days, and a week or two, if necessary, the good that could be accomplished no man could tell; and the expenses of travel would readily be met by those to whom such ones should minister.

I have felt well in the work and have realized that God approved. Also there seem to have been manifested a deeper and more genuine earnestness and interest upon the part of the workers everywhere.

My expenses have been fully met both as to traveling expenses and postage, so I have no financial statement other than this.

In gospel bonds,

J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 23, 1905.

REPORT OF SECRETARY.

My work for the past year has been limited to the actual correspondence work connected with the office. I have acted in connection with the first assistant superintendent in looking after some publishing interests and also in his absence have been under the necessity of going ahead and consulting afterwards. I have performed no work in the field owing to conditions, and also from the fact that this part of the work has been left with the superintendent. I have received valuable assistance in correspondence work from Mrs. Krahl and Berta H. Johnson in preparation for convention. I believe the time has arrived, yes, long ago, when field workers for certain localities where the work is lagging should be appointed. There are now 55 districts, an increase of 2 after the uniting of the New York and Philadelphia Districts; 467 schools, a gain of 41 the past year; 20,289 members, a gain of 1,475. Trusting that the new year will be a fruitful one,

D. J. KRAHL, Secretary.

REPORT OF LIBRARIAN.

Dear Sunday-school Workers: The Sunday-school year just ended has been one of unusual activity in the library department. Many letters of inquiry have been received, that plainly indicate an awakened interest in this branch of Sunday-school work. It is not our policy to encourage a mushroom growth in building up the work, but we are making a strenuous effort to lay a foundation that shall give permanence and stability to an institution whose work is but little understood now, but if given the opportunity it will plead its own cause more clearly and forcibly than its most earnest advocates could do.

It is the channel through which the poor of earth's children can acquire the right use of those intellectual powers that mean so much to us, not only here, but in the great beyond.

In prosecuting the work we have sought to establish system, and wherever practicable, uniformity of method, for we believe the work will reach proportions that will make this absolutely necessary.

We are also endeavoring to incorporate, in the rules governing the district work, a few general principles upon which rests, largely, the success of the library work. The most important of these is a uniform plan for creating and maintaining a library fund; for it takes money to purchase books, and the most capable librarian, with only an empty library case, would accomplish nothing.

Now, to meet this demand, we urge that each school in the district contribute one twelfth of its annual collections to the support of this fund; the apportionment to be made quarterly or semiannually. It has been said, "The plan is impracticable," but we have tested it and are prepared to defend it, for we have proved both its feasibility and utility.

Three years ago the Independence Stake established a district library, adopting the circulating system for its conduct, the above-mentioned plan for raising funds being one of its features. Since then, a little less than three hundred volumes of the best literature have been purchased, and all expenses, such as freight charges, cartage, book-binding, stationery, stamps, and stenographic work, have been met, and there is now a balance of five dollars and thirty-three cents on hand. And under the management of the newly elected and eminently capable librarian, Sr. Dora Young, we expect still more gratifying results in the future.

Library blanks were sent to all the district librarians, but up to this date we have not received sufficient data to give a statistical report.

Of the sixty-three districts comprehended in the General Sunday-school Association, about two thirds are making an effort to establish libraries, the major part of them having adopted the circulating system.

We are sending library literature to our newly acquired territory, Australia and Honolulu. There is now one library in Honolulu, and with our progressive brother, Gomer Wells, as superintendent of the Australian District, we believe the library work will receive the consideration it so richly merits. And in the Northwest with Bro. T. W. Chatburn to take the initiative, need we ask for a more favorable auspice?

In attempting to establish the work in Canada, we find that the Saints, like our own Missourians, "Must be shown first," but there are those who are eminently qualified, and willing, too, to undertake the task. And under the direction of Sr. Floralice Miller and others, we are sure it can be successfully accomplished in a most satisfactory manner.

There are a number of districts that are pushing the work with an energy that is truly commendable. These we would like to mention, but since our report is already too long we refrain.

Hoping that at least the financial feature of the library question may be taken into consideration by this convention, I am, Sincerely,

LUCINA ETZENHOUSER, General Librarian.

REPORT OF JOHN SMITH, GENERAL TREASURER.

Balance, April 1, 1904, $1,230.84; receipts to April 1, 1905, $3,317.40; total, $4,548.24; expended, $2,514.16; balance, $2,034.08.

H. H. Rogers as a Timepiece.

One of the traditions at the "Standard Oil Building" at 26 Broadway, New York, is that Mr. Henry H. Rogers, vice-president of the Standard Oil Company, arrives and departs exactly at 10.30 in the morning and 3.30 in the afternoon. One morning recently the veteran watchman who stands at the Broadway entrance to the building was seen to take out his watch when Mr. Rogers hurried in, look at it, and confidently set it forward ten minutes. For among the distinguishing characteristics of Mr. Rogers is a regard that almost amounts to a reverence for time, and those who know him are aware of it.—World's Work.

Editors Herald: It does our soul good to hear of the many embracing the gospel in different parts of the world. Bro. N. C. Enge visited in and around Ross Grove Branch in January and February, and gave to the few who came out to hear a feast of good gospel talks. Am sorry to say that it was the worst time for the Saints to get out to meeting that I remember experiencing, as some were sick and others burdened as it is a mother's lot to be.

The dear sister, Mary Rowlett, who was sick while Bro. Enge was here, departed this life February 26. Funeral-sermon was preached by Peter Anderson, conducted by the writer. Sr. Rowlett was a Saint indeed, but was hindered from receiving many blessings which she deserved.

R. K. ROSS.

LENORA, Oklahoma, April 8, 1905.

Editors Herald: My hopes are for the advancement of the true gospel of Jesus Christ. It seems hard to be so isolated from the church. We attended the district conference at Guy, Oklahoma, part of the time. Living so far away it is hard to go often. My husband and myself are striving to do right. As the Saints all know, Satan is ready to overthrow at any time.

There is one family of Saints here besides us. Most all our neighbors are United Brethren. They laugh us to scorn to our backs, but are good to our faces. One United Brethren member said he was too smart to believe our doctrine. I believe if we change the word smart to ignorant it would better correspond with the facts.

I am looking forward to the time, if we are faithful, when we will all be in the redeemed Zion, where we will be free from temptations and cares of this life. My prayers are for the good work. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may be found faithful.

Your sister,

MRS. GRACE BALLINGER.

PROVO CITY, Utah, April 12, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have been a constant reader of the HERALD for years, and hope I will always be able to have it in my home, for there is so much good in it. I dearly love to read the letters, and especially in the Mothers' Home Column. The few Saints here are trying to keep the Sunday-school going and also the Religio; and as a rule we have good attendance and feel that God blesses our efforts. I often think how grand it will be when the faithful Saints shall enjoy the thousand years of peace on the earth with our Lord and Savior. May God help me to so live that I may be numbered with the redeemed when Jesus comes, is my earnest prayer. Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may be faithful to the end.

Your sister in the one faith,

LOTTIE CARTER.

Winegar, and Fred Turnbull will labor in the Spokane District, Bro. Chatburn in charge. W. S. Pender, Bro. Holloway, and William Johnson in the Seattle and British Columbia District. Henry Sparling and N. V. Sheldon in Central and Eastern Oregon. I hereby appoint Bro. Henry Sparling to act as district president until June conference, in place of Bro. Crabbe who was sent on another mission. I also appoint Bro. N. V. Sheldon as subminister in charge. E. Keeler and Bro. Enge to labor in Western Oregon, Bro. Keeler in charge. We insist on the brethren reporting quarterly, on time, the first of the month.

We sincerely hope the membership will not forget the part that they are expected to perform in connection with this work. Also, to make our labors successful, do not forget to send your tithes and offerings to the respective agents in the mission. The ministers who have been assigned to this mission this year are all able and active men worthy of your confidence and support. My mission address will be 1202½ Seventh Avenue, Seattle, Washington, in care of F. W. Holman. Home address, R. F. D. 2, Willoughby, Ohio.

High Council.

Met in the President's office, April 20, 1905, at 2 p. m., for consideration of cause referred by resolution of General Conference of April 17, 1905.

President: Joseph Smith, Frederick M. Smith, Richard C. Evans.

Council (of the regular panel): William Anderson, Asa S. Cochran, John A. Grant, Willis A. McDowell, Joseph A. Tanner, James M. Baker, Robert M. Elvin, Frederick G. Pitt, George A. Smith, and to fill vacancies by order of conference, High Priests: Marcus H. Cook, Emery W. Nunley, John M. Terry.

After a careful and patient consideration of papers submitted by the counselors for the parties, the president of the council handed down the following opinion, and decision:

"BEFORE THE HIGH COUNCIL."

"In the matters of controversy between Henry C. Smith versus William H. Kelley and William H. Kelley versus Henry C. Smith.

"This came on for a hearing before the High Council upon an order of conference made April 17, 1905, in the following resolution: 'That the report of the High Council be referred back for thorough investigation of all the evidence in the cases of Henry C. Smith versus William H. Kelley and William H. Kelley versus Henry C. Smith.'

"The High Council met on Thursday, April 20, 1905, at the office of the Presidency, Lamoni, Iowa, to take the matter under consideration. The parties to the controversy appeared by counsel on the part of W. H. Kelley, and in person and by counsel on the part of Henry C. Smith.

"By request of the counsel in the case, a continuance was had until the 21st inst., when at nine o'clock a. m. the parties appeared by counsel, E. L. Kelley on behalf of William H. Kelley, and Heman C. Smith and Amos Chase on behalf of Henry C. Smith, and filed with the council papers in agreement and settlement between the parties over their respective signatures, as follows:

"April 21, 1905.

"ELDER W. H. KELLEY,
Lamoni, Iowa.

"Bro. Kelley: Desirous of fulfilling the law of Christ in every way required thereunder, whether of procedure in the church courts or otherwise, I herewith and by these presents offer full and complete apology as required by the findings of the elders' court convened at Kirtland, Ohio, fifth day of March, 1902. That wherein I may have injured you in any way, that this shall fully restore and for ever settle the matter. Anything which you feel that you can properly say in conjunction with this to second the effort to bring about a full and complete restoration to all concerned, will be duly appreciated.

"As ever hopeful and confident in the gospel message and the Lord's work, I am,

"Very respectfully yours, HENRY C. SMITH."

"The apology of Bro. Smith seems to cover the whole matter implicating Bro. Henry C. Smith now pending, and I see no reason why it should not be accepted as sufficient and end the matter.

"Bro. Smith and I had always been personal friends, so far as I know, up to the time of this trouble, and with this out of the way there is no reason that we should not continue friends in the future. The above will cover the case and end the matter so far as I am concerned. In the interests of harmony I withdraw any harsh statements used in the procedure, in fact have already stricken out this in one of the main papers. And any injury done Bro. Smith from this I hereby apologize for same.

"WM. H. KELLEY.

"The counsel for the parties retired from the council-room, and the council proceeded to take the papers into consideration, and by a unanimous vote decided that the parties had in the agreement filled the requirements of the law so far as proper intercourse between men and members of the church demanded; it was therefore within the province of the council to admit the papers as a sufficient settlement of the matter in controversy, and exonerate the council from further prosecution of the inquiry required by the order of conference. It was thereupon determined by the council that the apology of Bro. Henry C. Smith, and its acceptance by Bro. William H. Kelley were within the recommendation of the elders' court held at Kirtland, Ohio, March 5, 1902, and sufficient to release Bro. Henry C. Smith from being further held to answer before the courts of the church. And that the terms of the acceptance on the part of Bro. William H. Kelley and his acknowledgment and apology for any injury which may have been done Bro. Henry C. Smith by him, are sufficient to warrant cessation of further inquiry on the part of the High Council.

"It was further considered by the council that the authority of inquiry conferred upon the council by the resolution of reference heretofore recited also conferred upon the council the right to accept the agreement and settlement made by the parties as a proper abandonment of any further prosecution of the cases referred to and relieved them from any further duty to the law of the church in the premises.

"It was further considered by the council that the apology of Bro. Henry C. Smith and its acceptance by Bro. William H. Kelley should release Bro. Henry C. Smith from further disability as to his membership and eldership in the church, and that the council should so order.

"The decision of the council is that Bro. Henry C. Smith is hereby restored to his membership and eldership in the church and his name ordered enrolled on the branch record where he may elect to reside.

"No further action was had by the council with reference to the report referred back.

"Done by order of the High Council, at Lamoni, Iowa, April 21, 1905.

JOSEPH SMITH, President,
ROBT. M. ELVIN, Secretary."

Attest: The opinion was approved, and decision of the President was sustained by the full vote of the council.

ROBT. M. ELVIN, Secretary.

April 22, 1905.

[Note.—Bro. John W. Peterson, of Lamoni, was associate counsel with Bro. Heman C. Smith and Amos Chase for Bro. Henry C. Smith, but was not with them before the council at the filing of the papers in settlement; hence his name does not appear in the disposition of the cause.—Ed.]

High Priests' Quorum.

Those of the quorum who have changed their post-office address since circular letter No. 6 was issued, and not given in your late annual report, or those whose permanent address is changed by their late conference appointment, will please let me know as soon as practicable. Dear brethren, permit me to further request that when you make a change in your address, report the same to me, and by so doing you will be the more apt to receive any and all quorum business sent for your personal consideration. A little care and promptness saves much of disappointment and is helpful in our duty. In bonds,

Babies Cry for Milk, and Get Poison.

The babies of the land are crying for milk, and most of them are getting—what?

Within ten days I have received one hundred and fifty newspaper clippings. Thirty are about the Pure-food Bill now before Congress; twenty are miscellaneous, and one hundred—Poisoned Milk!

Milk is the Keystone to the arch of pure-food crusade. It is the life-blood of the nation, and by the sardonic logic of destiny is made the main channel through which the poisoners, for gain, are attacking the vitality of the race. Preposterous that out of one hundred and fifty articles on food-adulteration, one hundred should be on milk-poisoning, that this appalling preponderance of our capital crime should be committed against the babies. I say our, because there is not a mother's son of us who can vote or influence a vote who is guiltless. We are either actually engaged in the business of cheating the babies or are betraying them to the cheat. —From "How the baby pays the tax" in the April Woman's Home Companion.

HANSEN.—Bro. Hemming Hansen was born August 1, 1818, in Denmark. He embraced the latter-day work under the presidency of Brigham Young, but when the gospel as taught by the Reorganization was presented to him, he accepted it as the truth. He died April 19, 1905, at the home of his son, Elder H. N. Hansen. His earthly frame was laid to rest in the Boomer Cemetery by the side of his companion, who preceded him nearly four years. He leaves a son and daughter, two foster daughters, seven grandchildren, and five great-grandchildren. Funeral-sermon by J. Carlile, assisted by J. Christianson.

JONES.—Sr. Hannah Jones was born in the month of February, 1818, in Flintshire, North Wales. She emigrated to America in 1854, settling first in Pennsylvania, but afterwards removed to St. Louis, Missouri, Alton, Illinois, and lastly, in 1861, to Pottawattamie County, Iowa, where she died at her home near Crescent, March 27, 1905. In 1858 she was married to Bro. Owen Jones, who survives her to mourn. Sr. Jones was a faithful and devoted member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. She was laid to rest in the Crescent Cemetery. Services by H. N. Hansen.

Cutting a Queen Bee's Wing.

Dallas Lore Sharp describes a method of preventing bees from swarming in the Country Calendar for May, the first issue of the new outdoor monthly published by the Review of Reviews Book Company:

Keep your queens clipped. Lay aside your sentiments, your fears of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, your ideas that it hurts her, your fears of killing her,—and get your scissors. Seize her any way. She won't sting. Get her by one wing (if you can't do better) and holding her gently against the frame, snip off one wing. This won't stop the swarming, but it will keep the bees from absconding, for the swarm won't go off without the queen while you are away. So you are often able to induce them to call off the strike and go back to work.

Clip your queens then, give the bees room, give them shade at the hottest hours if necessary, shake them if they show signs of swarming, and keep the colonies strong.

The cooking articles in the Twentieth Century Home are of a nature different from those to be found in other women's magazines. They attempt to explain the principles that underlie the various systems of natural cooking. An exceedingly interesting series on oriental cooking is now being run in its pages. The article in the May issue is devoted to "Chop Suey." The many ways of preparing the natural Chinese dish are explained, and also how it can be made by the American cook.

I Know Quit-to-Bac Will Cure. It is a God-Given Remedy

So says Bro. I. M. Dungan of Woodbine, Iowa. Writing July 3, 1904, says: "After having used tobacco for 30 years I feel that I am thoroughly cured of the habit by the use of your 'Quit-to-bac.' I commenced using 'Quit-to-bac' March 8, 1901, and used two and one half boxes, and have had no desire for the past two months, my health is better every way and I feel like a new man. I feel that I can not speak too highly of the merits of 'Quit-to-bac,' for I believe 'Quit-to-bac' to be a God-given remedy, that it will cure one of the most filthy and useless habits Satan ever invented; therefore I unqualifiedly recommend it to all addicted to the use of tobacco in any form, and will cheerfully answer inquiries from any one as to my case—how I treated myself, etc., if a stamp is inclosed. You are at liberty to use this recommendation as seems best to you. . . . I close with a heartfelt 'God bless you.'" Three boxes Quit-to-bac postpaid only $1.50 guaranteed to cure or money refunded for the asking. Address, (Bro.) B. F. ORDWAY, Peoria, Illinois.

ON APRIL 27 the Illinois Senate passed a bill which prohibits the remarriage of divorced persons for one year in every case; and for two years where the charge on which the divorce is obtained is infidelity to the marriage bond. The penalty, however, applies only to the person in the fault.

The name of Bro. George Jenkins, of the Seventy, was omitted by mistake. He was appointed to the Clinton, Missouri, District.

ECHOES OF THE CONFERENCE.

The Burlington, Iowa, Evening Gazette for April 15, 1905, has the following breezy letter from an attendant at the late conference, which will be read with pleasure by many. Bro. Elbert is the son of Bro. David Hyrum Smith, deceased; and a live representative of the work:

Elbert A. Smith, pastor of the local Latter Day Saints' Church, writes the following entertaining letter from Lamoni, Iowa:

"The casual visitor at Lamoni, Iowa, finds a small country village, yet a very interesting one. As he approaches the town he sees first Graceland College, a beautiful brick and stone building, that may be seen for many miles around. The president of this college is Professor Dewsnup, author of several books on railroad economics and known in most parts of the world as an authority on that subject.

"Next the visitor's attention is attracted to the Herald Publishing House, one of the largest and best equipped publishing houses in Southern Iowa. The Herald, the official organ of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is printed there, together with a young people's magazine and several hundred books and pamphlets. The college is also owned and managed by that church, but it is not sectarian, no system of theology being taught there.

"Prominent, too, in the little town is the 'Saints' Home,' a large two-story brick building where the aged and infirm of the church find care and sustenance. On the most prominent hill of the town stands the brick church, capable of seating between fifteen hundred and two thousand people.

"Since April 6, the world's conference of the church has been in session there. On Sunday three preaching-meetings are held simultaneously, in the upper and lower auditoriums of the church, and in the college, and over two thousand delegates and visitors listen to the word.

"The organization of the church is best studied at the business-meetings, which afford an object-lesson. On the stand is seen the First Presidency of the church, Joseph Smith, his son Frederick, and Richard Evans of Canada. These three stand at the head of the church. Back of them are seated the evangelists and the bishops, the latter having the financial work in charge, also on the stand are the twelve apostles, who have oversight of the missionary work in all the world. In front of the stand are seated the two quorums of seventies, who are minute men pledged to go wherever duty calls. To the right are the priests and deacons and to the left the delegates among the laity.

"The large audience is held in perfect order by President Smith, who is a very able parliamentarian and presiding officer. He is over seventy years of age, yet is hale and clear-minded and has the unqualified respect of members and nonmembers alike. The church believes in present revelation and when difficulties arise that can not be settled by the combined wish of the church, God is asked to speak through him and clear up the matter. He in no sense poses as a dictator or as being personally infallible. His rulings may be and frequently are assailed with all the logic and force at the command of individuals or groups of men on the floor of the conference. The church is democratic and settles such questions by debate and vote. In this particular, as in most others, the Reorganization differs widely from the church in Utah, with which it is at times confused by pulpit and press. A member of the latter church opposing with voice or vote the will of a superior is liable to immediate expulsion.

"The president of the church now in conference at Lamoni is the oldest son of Joseph Smith, who founded the church in 1830. It fell into confusion and disorganization in 1844 and the reorganization began in 1852 among those who had refused to affiliate with the portion led by Brigham Young. So to-day the church at Lamoni is presided over by Joseph Smith, while his cousin, Joseph F. Smith, a son of Hyrum Smith, presides over the Utah church, and is the man who has been in such straits before the committee at Washington, incident to the Smoot case. No bond of unity or sympathy arises between the two men or the two churches. The one obeys the law, the other does not.

"The conference at Lamoni will continue over Sunday, April 16, and at its close the ministry will scatter to their several appointments. One of the most interesting sessions is when the list of appointments is read. This will be near the close of the conference and each minister waits with bated breath as his name is called to learn if he is appointed to the home field or to some distant land. If it proves to be the home field he smiles and his family feels relieved, if it is abroad he still smiles—but there is a difference."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Will the sons of perdition ever be resurrected? Read Doctrine and Covenants 76:4; and 28:7, 8.

The Bible, Book of Mormon, and the revelations all teach that all men born into the world will be resurrected. Section 76, paragraph 4, cited above, points to the idea that a certain class of men, (or devils, sons of perdition,) are the only ones on whom the second death shall have power. The "second death" leaves the inference that they may have suffered the first death, the death of the flesh, and will suffer the second, the possible death of the spirit—the going away into the realms of eternal punishment—there to remain in the rule and reign of the Devil and his angels. Section 28:7, 8 teaches that all shall awaken and come forth from their graves, the righteous unto life and glory, the unrighteous unto punishment, and that the Lord had not yet said that those who depart into this punishment shall ever return. (See paragraph 8.)

This is in perfect accord with paragraph 4, section 76, and shows that however inquisitive we may become we will not be permitted to know, either the end of the torment of the wicked or the place of it; which is in effect a statement that it has not yet been revealed, nor will be, only to those who partake of that punishment. As to whether they are resurrected, who they shall be only as recited, or what the awful fate impending over them, and as none of us are anxious to partake of the horrors of the condition referred to as awaiting the sons of perdition, it is just as well that we quit trying to get light on a question on which the Lord himself has set the limit of our research.

All men will be resurrected; some to peace, honor, glory; some to sorrow, shame, dishonor, and everlasting discomfort, loss, and disgrace. The sons of perdition are of this latter class; they will after resurrection of the body, go away into the condition to be imposed by the second death.

Let us be content to seek after the things that are lovely and of good report, that our souls may be made glad, and not after the things gloomy and dark by which our souls are made sad.

MEXICAN MISSION.

It is pressing upon a number of the workers and leading minds that some of our young men ought to be acquiring the Spanish language to the end in view that missions may be undertaken to such parts of the southern countries as use that tongue. It is not a very difficult language to acquire, especially to those already having a Latin basis. We call attention to this part of the field, in the confident hope that some enterprising young men may take up the language as a study. Why not?

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. A. B. Kirkendall, of Creola, Vinton County, Ohio, was nominated by the Vinton County Republican convention, April 22, 1905, for probate judge by a vote of eighty-five against sixteen for his rival. The Vinton County Republican has this notice of Bro. A. B.: "A. B. Kirkendall, Republican candidate for probate judge, is agent and operator for the Hocking Valley Railroad at Creola and is also engaged in merchandising at that place. He is widely known and popular with everybody, and is amply qualified to fill the office acceptably. Indeed, the people of the entire county will be fortunate in securing his services in this office. There is nothing but deserving praise for Mr. Kirkendall, whose prospects in the campaign will never be bulletined in the doubtful column."

American and English railroads are operated under different conditions. The American track mileage is 200,000, the English 22,152. The American railroads carried more than 655,000,000 passengers, the English roads fully 1,200,000,000. The traffic revenue of the American roads was $1,720,814,900 and of the English $500,061,164. The net traffic receipts of the American roads were $560,000,000 and of the English roads $200,000,000. The American roads employ 1,189,315 persons and the English roads 575,834. The working expenses of the American roads are 67 per cent of the gross receipts and the working expenses of English roads 62 per cent. The cost of operating a mile of American road is $5,810, of the English road $13,636. The American roads clear $2,800 a mile on operation and the English roads $9,000. The American roads have six employees for every mile of track and the English roads have twenty-eight.—Chicago Daily Tribune, April 24, 1905.

Ten tall totem poles from Alaska have been erected on the Government Peninsula at the Lewis and Clark Exposition. These curiously carved logs represent the superstitions of Alaskan Indians. They are painted gaudily.

Those of the missionary force who can make use of those papers take notice.

The poor people of Russia have good reason to be thankful for the spirit of liberality manifested by the Czar, as shown by the following from the Chicago Daily Tribune, for Sunday, April 30, 1905. It is to be regretted that the Czar did not go a step farther and accord equal rights to the Jews with those of other faiths:

"ST. PETERSBURG, April 29.—The Czar's Easter ukase, which will be published in the Official Messenger to-morrow, remits the peasants' arrearages of taxes and back payments on account of lands given to them at the time of their emancipation, amounting to about thirty-seven million, five hundred thousand dollars.

"Although no general amnesty for political offenses will be granted pardon will be extended to certain classes of prisoners, including those arrested for participation in the disturbances of January 22.

"The ukase also orders all Christian sects to be permitted to exist without penalty. Adherents of the Old Faith, whose altars were sealed up by Pobiedonostzeff, procurator general of the holy synod, twenty years ago, and who now number seventeen million, will have their altars opened to worship on the Russian Sunday undisturbed.

"The ukase provides, further, that converts from the orthodox faith and other Christian creeds shall not be punished. This decree makes lawful changes of faith for which hundreds of thousands of families have been expropriated and exiled to Siberia.

"The ukase further decrees that Mohammedan and other nonchristian subjects of the emperor, except the Jews, shall have equal rights and shall no longer be styled pagans. Nothing is conceded to the Jews.

"There were no disturbances during the Easter Eve services at the capital. The number of beggars in the streets was unprecedented."

Original Poetry

Saturday.

At earliest dawn of morning,
When Saturday rolls around,
We are up betimes with the first faint light
For the work our hands may find.
Such a busy day before us,
To-morrow is Sabbath day!
We must bake and brew, we must boil and stew,
No time must we waste in play.

No time for slumber or shirking,
The floors to make snowy white.
There is wood to cut, there are lamps to fill,
To shine mid the gloom of night.
The windows to wash and polish,
Our homes must be clean and sweet;
Then the children to wash and make ready,
They, too, must be trim and neat.

The cleanest and freshest clothing
Laid ready with thoughtful care,
To be donned in time, when the church bells chime,
Pealing forth the hour of prayer.
So tired are we when th' kind old clock,
For bed time at last gives warning!
But our work's well done, and our rest is won,
On th' eve of th' Sabbath morning.

On th' eve of a grander Sabbath
That shall last a thousand years,
When the Christ himself shall our Pastor be,
And banish all pain and tears,—
On this fair Saturday morn,
Last day of creation's week,
Let's begin our work with earliest dawn,
With spirit willing and meek.

First, from cellar to garret roof
Make our dwellings sweet and clean;
Above and below, within and without,
Ready by Christ to be seen.
For the eyes, the soul's bright windows,
Reveal, if one glance within,
Whether spotless and fair our chambers are,
Or darkened and stained by sin.

Our lamps should be filled and burning,
So they'll cast a mellow ray
Into the gloom of that Saturday night,
That follows the busy day.
The fair white robes must be prepared,
And when the cleaning is done,
To outwit the moth, and keep them from mold,
Let us don them every one,

We'll be weary, weary, working,
Ere the toilsome day is past.
When the work is done, and the rest is won,
We shall sweetly sleep at last.
Yet if work press thick upon us,
And we toil all night till dawn,
Take hope and press on! cometh rest and joy,
With th' light of that Sabbath morn.

"REMEMBER LOT'S WIFE."

SERMON DELIVERED AT THE DOW CITY REUNION, SEPTEMBER 17, 1904, BY ELDER R. C. EVANS.

Permit me to introduce to you the thirty-second verse of the seventeenth chapter of the gospel as recorded by Saint Luke, where you will read these words, "Remember Lot's wife." This may seem a very peculiar text for me to take as a basis for the remarks that I may offer for your consideration to-night, but I am impressed that there is a depth of meaning within these words. First, because he who spake as never man spake, gave to us this advice and instruction. It is further stated by him: "I came not to do my own will, but the will of him that sent me. He gave me a commandment what I should say and what I should speak." Here, then, we have the Father and the Son behind this text. Now I do not know that I shall be able to delve deep enough or soar high enough to present for your consideration the grandeur and the greatness connected with the thought as suggested by this text, but if I do not present to you the true thought, there is nevertheless great merit in it, else Jesus, the stainless one, would never have given the counsel: "Remember Lot's wife."

The first question, perhaps, that may arise in your minds is, "Who is this Mrs. Lot, and why should we remember her?" "Is it because she was given to us as an example which we may follow because of her goodness?" and we remark that we apprehend not. There is but one who is given to us as the way of truth,—the light and the life,—the example. Every other individual who has lived, however great he may have been, has been the victim of great weaknesses too; and it has always been unsafe to follow man blindly. "The arm of flesh will fail you, ye dare not trust your own," the poet has said, and I presume that this is true. Perhaps, then, it is because of some failure upon her part, perhaps because of a disobedience on her part that she may be remembered with profit.

Mrs. Lot was the wife of Mr. Lot and Lot was the nephew of Abraham, who is called the father of the faithful. Now you will remember that Abraham was instructed by our heavenly Father to leave his home and country and go into a strange land. He made that sacrifice and took with him his nephew; and you remember he became very wealthy. Now right here let me touch a thought that has been suggested by some, that a rich man can not be saved, but this is not true. A rich man has grave responsibilities resting upon him, just as Latter Day Saints perhaps have greater responsibility resting upon them than the exponents of any other phase of the religious thought.

The Latter Day Saint claims that he has been made the recipient of the gift of God's love, as revealed in the fullness of the gospel, and that he does not only believe but as one of our poets has said, "We know what we believe," and having demonstrated to us by the divine force that the gospel that we have obeyed is not a cunningly devised fable of man, but it is the power of God unto salvation, therefore a great responsibility rests upon us as lights of the world, as the salt of the earth, as the city set upon a hill, by reason of the truth that has come to us, and the opportunities that are afforded us of letting our light shine. So it is with the rich man. God has endowed him with riches and as a result he is responsible to God, for every sane man that stops to think will admit that God is the proprietor of all, and we are only stewards, and this doctrine of tithes and offerings and consecration and all that to a Latter Day Saint is to only demonstrate the fact that we recognize that God is the proprietor and we are the stewards, and consequently the more we have, the greater responsibility rests upon us because we should use these means with an eye single to his glory.

Now a rich man, as a rule, is not willing to do that. We have known of some who have so much, who have been figuring how to get out of this responsibility of doing what God has really enjoined upon them and has made them to know that it was their duty; and yet having so much, they are like the rich man of the dead years of the past, they go away sorrowful and are unwilling to bear the burden that these riches really heaps upon them; consequently the Savior could say, How hardly can a rich man enter into the kingdom of God. He did not say a rich man could not enter in, but he recognized that it would take him all of his time because of the wondrous responsibility. You remember that he taught us that it was easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God, and some had thought that that had reference to a cambric needle and therefore it was a physical impossibility for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven. There is a beautiful lesson taught in it and somehow or other I can not get away from it, so I tell you. You remember those Eastern cities were surrounded by great walls, and the traveling man had for his means of conveyance the camel; and perhaps having traveled weeks and months over the dusty plains he saw the lights of the city. He hurried on, because within these walls were wife, children, and mother, father, brothers, perhaps a sick friend; and he made every effort to get there before the great gate closed, but he failed. What then? He must either have a well-trained camel or else he was doomed to stay outside the walls of the city until the gates were open the next morning. But if a well-trained camel, what then? That camel would obey orders and render implicit obedience to the commandment of his master, so much so that when the burden was taken off his back, he got right down on his knees and just drew himself up to the smallest capacity possible, and crawled through what we call the "Needle's Eye," or the small gate built in the larger one. But you notice he had to be obedient to all the instructions of the master, else he could not get in. That is what the word means.

The rich man is willing to pay his way into the kingdom of God, if he could enter that way. I was down in Newport just three weeks ago, and I sat in Vanderbilt's pew. I was told how many thousands of dollars that man had given for the right to occupy that pew; and so it illustrates the thought that rich men if they could purchase an inheritance in the kingdom of heaven, would all have reserved seats there, but God Almighty has decreed that the poor among men should rejoice in the Holy One of Israel, and that no man could enter in, only as he would come in the sunny way of obedience. He must humble himself and submit to the divine conditions, and there are hosts of rich men who are not willing to humble themselves and come in according to order. They are willing like the Assyrian general. You remember how he went down there to get his blessing from the servant of God, when he was smitten with leprosy. The record says he took six thousand pieces of gold, and ten talents of silver, and ten suits of clothes as a present. Figure that up as I did a little while ago and you discover that that rich man for one blessing was willing to pay seventy-seven thousand, nine hundred and forty dollars in American money. That would tempt most preachers, to say nothing of the ten suits of clothes. He had to humble himself and comply with the conditions, but he refused to do so, and the record says he turned away in rage. He says, "Are not the rivers of Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel?" or Jordan, to which he had been bidden to go and dip seven times, you remember. He went off in a rage. Well, the prophet did not follow him. Why? The prophet's business had been accomplished. He could stand there in the splendid independence of the servant of God. He was under responsibility to deliver the message and there his responsibility ended, just exactly where the rich man's responsibility began. When the command had been given, the servant of God had finished his business, the other man's business was to start right there. Well, now, the servant of God could afford to be independent, because it was not he that had the leprosy—it was the other man; but the other man could not afford to be independent, because he needed that blessing. But by and by, you remember, his servant approached him and said, "Say, Master, if the prophet had bid thee do some great thing thou wouldst have done it." To use a common expression, that was a solar plexus for the rich man. He did come prepared to do some great thing. He came prepared to give seventy-seven thousand, nine hundred and forty dollars. But conviction hit him hard, and he turned around and finally humbled himself, and obeyed the law and got the blessing. Rich men are few who are willing to comply with the conditions, and consequently Jesus said, How hardly will a rich man enter in. And as I see the light bursting in upon the pathway of Latter Day Saints now in the present condition in which the church is existing, how hardly shall a rich man enter in.

But we pass it by—rich men have entered in. Abraham was very rich. Lot was rich. Job was rich, and many others have been wealthy; and yet they have used that wealth as the work of God committed to their trust and they have labored with it as part of the commandment of the Almighty and they have entered into the kingdom of God. Now Abraham was that way, and others. You remember they became very wealthy down there; and the records show that there was a fuss between Lot's herdman and Abraham's herdman; and now I want to show you the difference between Lot and Abraham. Abraham comes to the boy and says, "Now, here, the world is large, no use of us having any hard feelings over these difficulties that have existed; you take your choice. If you go east, I will go west, and if you go west, I will go east, so that we can be on friendly terms." Now you can see the magnanimity that shone out in the splendid character of Father Abraham. I am rather glad that he is called the father of the faithful. But now notice the difference in this nephew. If he had really been what he ought to have been at that time, he would have said: "Now, uncle, I really am dependent upon you,—you gave me my start here—I am not going to be selfish in this thing—you take your choice." That is what Lot ought to have done, but he was selfish. He was a good man, perhaps, but he had a great weakness and it shone out there. The record says he lifted up his eyes and gazed upon the land and he discovered that all the valley of the Jordan was well watered. That was the very thing that the fuss was over between the herdmen, fussing over watering their cattle and all that. And he says, "I am going down to the valley of Jordan." That showed selfishness on the side of Lot and magnanimity and generosity on the part of his uncle who had the right to the choice.

Well, they parted, and they both became wealthy, Abraham going up into Canaan and Lot staying in the valley of Jordan. Years glided by, and by and by three holy personages make a visit to the camp of Abraham, and again we see the generosity and the grandeur and the beauty of the Abrahamic disposition cropping out. The first thing he says, "Come in, gentlemen; wash your feet and rest yourselves under the tree and have something to eat before you pass on," and he turned to Sarah and gave her to understand that he desired her to get some fresh biscuits and some fresh milk and meal, and he said to one of the servants, "You go and kill a tender calf." There were some noble individuals there. They ate meat, and they had a splendid meal out under the tree. And there is another thing that you will observe; Abraham recognized that these three individuals were so great that he was really unworthy to eat with them, and the record says he stood by under the tree until they ate. Finally he washed their feet and they started on. Two of the individuals went toward the City of the Plains; but the third one, in the soliloquy of his mind, says, "Shall I withhold from Abraham what we are about to do?" Finally he went back to Abraham and said that the great cities of Sodom and Gomorrah were about to be destroyed; and suddenly Abraham remembered that little adage which says that "blood is thicker than water," so he approached this individual whom the King James Translation says was the Lord with two angels, and said, "Now, if you find fifty righteous in that city, will you spare that city?" "Yes." "Well, if you find forty righteous, will you spare the city?" "Yes." "Well, now, being as I have taken it upon me to speak to you—if you find thirty righteous in that city, will you spare it?" "Yes, if I find thirty righteous there I will spare the city." "Now, if you find twenty, will you spare the city for the sake of twenty righteous men?" "Yes, I will." "Just once more, O Lord, may I approach thee? If you find ten that are righteous there, will you spare the city?" And the response was, "Yes, I will spare the city." There is a thought—I do not want to run away from that thought. There are a great many of our young boys and girls that have to leave the parental roof and go out into the wild cities where there is so much froth and foam and gilded show, and they soon become discouraged and say, "It is no use for me trying to bear my testimony to the gospel of the Son of God here; there are hundreds and thousands around me, and I won't say anything about it." And they think they are forgotten because they are surrounded by the sins of a great city. That is not true—notice the case in point. God will remember the righteous wherever they may be. Remember the care of our heavenly Father is so great that he says that even the sparrow can not fall to the ground without his notice. Mark you, it comes down finer than that. The love of God is so infinitely great that the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Not only would he spare the city if ten righteous were there, but the story goes that there were not even the ten. And so the angels approached the city and they met Lot, the nephew of Abraham. They went in to see his home; dwelt with him over night, and they preached to him the gospel message of salvation. Now we heard a beautiful talk this morning about this everlasting gospel; that it started away back there. As soon as man was sick he needed a physician; as soon as he fell he needed the ameliorating force of the Almighty upon him; and since he was lost he needed a Savior, a Redeemer; and so, in the economy of God, the blessed gospel of hope, of salvation and redemption was preached to the first man that needed it. All the way down God has made preparation.

Well, in this case, we see the city given over to wickedness, and God comes down there, and the angel's message is given to the people of that city. I want to make a few little applications here and see how they will fit. I just imagine that I hear the criticism along the streets of Sodom and Gomorrah—"Well, the idea! That an angel from God would appear to Lot down there!" Now, you would in this day have called him a cow-puncher. He was a herdsman down there on the plains. That an angel of God would pass by the great prelates, the priests, and the great learned men of the time, pass by the Sanhedrin and the temples of God down to this herdsman and commit to him the dispensation by which the people might be saved! Yes, have you ever heard a criticism like that in these latter times? Sodom and Gomorrah were really a type of the sinful world just as we now have it in latter days. We call the sinful world Babylon. As God had committed through the angel's message there, "Escape for thy life, stay not in all the plain; turn neither to the right hand nor to the left; look not behind thee; escape to the mountain." That is all the gospel message and it fits in every dispensation. So the angel's message of peace, of love, of safety, of rescue, was given to this people; but they laughed it to scorn. Lot went out and told the story, but he was persecuted. You remember all that he could get to believe that blessed story of salvation was his wife and two daughters. He had two other girls but they had married out of the church, and when the sons-in-law had heard that message they laughed the old father-in-law to scorn and they would not believe it, and so of course the girls were married and remained in the city and were destroyed, according to the record.

Lot was commanded, "Escape for thy life." Here you discover it was a message of life and death. It is a fact that that tocsin of alarm has come down to us to-day. The message has come by angel hands, and the world has made the same kind of a criticism. What! That an angel should appear to a boy born in the back-woods of New York; a boy only fourteen or fifteen years of age! The angel would pass by all the learned men, all the pastors, preachers, and priests of our age and select this young individual! That is God's way of doing it. Jesus taught us this saying, "I thank thee, O Lord, Father of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight." It was a good way in God's sight, and Jesus was thankful for it, you discover. And Paul supplements the same thought when he says: "You see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are: that no flesh should glory in his presence." That has been the way all along the line.

Now this message has been ridiculed because it did not come from those high people. But it never did go to the high people; they were not willing to humble themselves to receive it; and so God has always selected that class that he might, as I believe, demonstrate the fact in its most plain way, that the gospel is the power of God to salvation, and the lower he gets down and brings up to perfection the one from the lowest conditions, the more plainly and strongly comes the proof that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation. Now, then, as the angel's message was ridiculed in the days of Lot, so it is ridiculed to-day, but the message was the same: "Escape for thy life." That is just what we must do now. That is the message. "Come out of Babylon, O ye, my people, and be not a partaker with her in her evil and a partaker of her plagues." That is the same message, in fact, as they were commanded, to escape for their lives, prior to the destruction of the city. So we learn that the world is to be destroyed when Jesus comes in flaming fire, to take vengeance on all those that know not God and obey not the gospel. Here was a fiery destruction to the disobedient then who rejected the angel's message. It is a fiery destruction that awaits them now who reject the angel's message and will not escape for their lives. It is a message of life and death now, as it was then. There can be no neutral ground. "Turn neither to the right hand nor to the left," is still true. The message comes to us now: "He that is not for me is against me; he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." Now you people who are sitting on the fence, you people who are occupying neutral ground, who do not know just what side you are on, you are either for him or against him, you are gathering with him or you are scattering abroad. You remember he said when he was here—you will think it is harsh if I say it, but I will just put it on the Master, when he said to one class of individuals, You pray, "Our Father which is in heaven"—to another class of people he said, "You are of your father, the devil"—they both had fathers, you see—"And the lusts of your father ye will do." I am a stranger in Iowa and I am not going around hunting up parentage. "The works of your father ye will do," consequently that is what the Master said. He that will not escape from Babylon will lose his life in Babylon. That is all there is to it. You may think that is uncharitable—that is the unvarnished fact, as it is. "Escape for thy life, stay not in all the plain." There must be no half-heartedness in this. We must, as the Bishop said to-day, serve God as opportunity affords. Every opportunity is a link that may be forged in a chain that will bring us up unto celestial glory, and if we neglect to forge the link, we will not reach the top.

"Well," says one, "we are in the world, Bro. Evans." Yes, I will tell you, a ship is built to act her part in the water, that is her place, that is the proper condition. So Latter Day Saints are in the world; they must act their part in the world, but not of the world, as Jesus says: "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst save them from the evil which is in the world." The ship is in the water, but you must not get too much water in the ship, else it will go down; and so while we must be in the world as a witness, we ought not to be of the world; we ought not to let the world get into us in such a degree that we will be worldly. "He that is not for me is against me." The sacrifice must not be a partial one. It must be complete. What are the sacrifices you have to make? Let any one get up and say what thing in all that God has asked you to abandon has been worth keeping. You used to drink whisky, perhaps. Was that worth while? Used to swear; use tobacco. Were any of these things worth keeping? You sacrificed darkness for light, error for truth; wrong for right, the world for heaven. What a wonderful sacrifice you have made! "Well, Bro. Evans, you do not know the secrets. I was engaged to be married to one of the finest young men in the country, and a home of happiness and luxury was before me. Just as soon as I joined this church an estrangement came between us and I am alone." Get down on your knees and thank God that you are alone. A man that refuses to love you because you want to be good and love God, because you want to be pure and love Jesus Christ and serve him, the man that would forsake you because of that condition, thank God for the blessing that came in disguise; you are never asked to leave anything that has been worth having, never in this world.

The sacrifices are all, shall I say, imaginary? God asks our reasonable service; and anything we have to leave to serve God is only froth and foam and gilded show anyhow. The happiest man in this wide world to-night is the man that is in the closest communion with our heavenly Father, the man that has let loose of the world and has thoroughly committed his way to God; he is the happiest man in the world. The conviction is growing upon me, as I grow older, that the world is nothing but froth and foam compared with the wonderful solidity that is found in every part of this beautiful, symmetrical kingdom of God. It is grand and great in its every department; and if there is any department in it that you think is a little weak, get the strongest thing of this earth to run up against it, and it will only give the truth a chance to demonstrate its omnipotence.

Go back to the thought: These people had to leave the city; they had to escape for their lives. So we have to leave the sins of the world and we are to turn neither to the right hand nor to the left; the renunciation must be complete. "Stay not in all the plain." Now there are a great many of us who have left the world. We have obeyed the first principles of the gospel and we have gone on our way rejoicing, but by and by there is a fuss in the branch, or some little altercation between some brethren, and we have grown discouraged, and we are not as good Latter Day Saints to-day as we were a year ago, or six months ago, or five years ago. How often we hear people referring back yonder to the good old days; that is a confession that you are not living as good as you were. It is our privilege to walk in the light, and the pathway grows brighter and brighter every day, growing more bright until the perfect day. We ought to be in the sunburst of it now; we ought to know more now than we did a year ago or we have lived this year in vain. Is it a fact that we have been forgetting Lot's wife? That we have been doing like Israel of old? You know it is said that there were six hundred thousand of armed men besides hundreds and thousands of unarmed men, of boys and infants and girls that left Egyptian bondage under Moses. After they had gotten out into the wilderness, after they had been baptized under Moses and all that, they began to grumble and find fault; and of course their shafts were directed to the leading men of the church and so they came unto Moses and said, "Were there no graves in Egypt that you should lead us away out here in the wilderness to die?" And they took up stones upon eleven different occasions to stone Moses, and you remember God Almighty hardly had as much patience as Moses, for he says to him, "You stand back out of the road and I will smite them," and Moses said, "O Lord, if you do that, the nations around will say that we could not bring them through," and God spared them, only those that were recreant to the trust God had imposed upon them, and he opened the earth and swallowed them up. Time after time these people made their assault upon the elders of the church. They would not live their religion, and finally God took away the Melchisedec priesthood and the beautiful principles of the gospel, and the law of Moses that was added because of disobedience, and the comers thereunto could not be made perfect; that thing was added to lash them into line, and was taken away when the people got sense enough to know the mercy of deliverance as they saw it revealed in the gospel message again. You remember that all but two who left Egyptian slavery died in the wilderness because they were incorrigible. They were recreant to the holy trust. They were dissatisfied. They were unfaithful, and they all died in the wilderness. Like Lot's wife, they looked back unto Egypt and longed for the onions and leeks and cucumbers. If you run well for a season and then something comes up, and you do not know all about it, and you do not go to the proper source to find out, and you lose your faith and begin to complain, you have been looking for the leeks and onions of Egypt; and will you die in the wilderness? Will we forget the grand truth that heaven has endowed us with? Shall we tarry in the plain? Shall we turn to the right hand or to the left? Shall we forget the command, "Look not behind thee"? Now there is something in this, "Remember Lot's wife." Are there sacrifices to make? We have them to make. Sometimes they are very dear to us though perhaps they are not worthy; yet we can hardly get rid of them. Seemingly we hang on to them contrary to the law. Lot's wife loved those daughters back there as only a mother can love a child. You know there are so many different kinds of love in the world; but a woman's love is so unselfish. She did not love those girls because they were finely developed women, and pretty, and all that. She remembered them as the little children when she tucked the clothes around them before they knew how to do it. She remembered the little chubby finger that was bruised and she bound it up. She remembered the little dirty faces that had come in crying and she had kissed the tears away, and now they are about to be destroyed. You say there is another love—but oh, it is such a risky one, that other one. Sometimes we think it is love when it is only admiration for a pretty face, for a symmetrical form, or a well-filled pocketbook and a bank-account. But when the bank-account is gone, and the sweet voice is gone, and the plump face is now channeled and wrinkled with the years, we forget it. It is a wonderful love, I know. Ella Wheeler Wilcox gets it off so beautifully:

"How strong, how vast, how awful seems the power of this new love,
That drags a maiden's heart from all its moorings,
And controls her more than all the joys the years have held before
That treats a stranger with a kingly grace,
And gives the one that bore her second place."

But this mother-love of Mrs. Lot. It is a wonderful love. She looked back, she thought of those girls away back there on the burning plain, she looked back, and the record says she was turned into a pillar of salt,—a monument of God's wrath upon disobedience.

Now that was not much of a command, says one. Who said that? Not a Latter Day Saint. Surely we have been taught to believe that command was one to be respected: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." And surely no Latter Day Saint has begun to argue that this is only a little command, whether it is tithes, or offerings, or consecrations, or the college debt, or whatever it is. If God has spoken it is a command and it is our privilege and duty and should be our pleasure to obey; while on our part it should be admitted fully that it is God's right to command. God commanded this woman, saying, "Look not behind thee." It might have appeared as a trivial thing; but it was a command from God. Are we bound in the same way? Yes. He that loves father, or mother, or house, or lands, husband or wife more than me is not worthy of me. Jesus said upon one occasion that Christ is the Prince of Peace. Yes, but on another occasion Jesus said, Think not that I came to send peace on the earth, but a sword. I came to set the mother-in-law against the daughter-in-law, the son-in-law against the father-in-law, and a man's foes shall be they of his own household.

I remember in a discussion I had with an infidel, he brought that up one time. He showed that Jesus Christ's plan was to raise a fuss in the family. Why did he say he came not to send peace? He requires your first, best, and truest love; he is a jealous God. "Thou shalt not have any other gods before me." If God is worthy of your love at all, he is worthy of your first, best, and truest love; and you must not have an idol in your heart, nor in your pocketbook, nor in your home, nor anywhere; the consecration must be complete. "Here, Lord, I give myself away, 'tis all that I can do," said we, as the choir sang, and then we look around for a nickel. Think of it, friends! Now, if a mother, or a father, or a daughter will choose to remain in the world, we must not look behind us; we must walk in the sunny path of duty and go on; leave them behind. Why? Because we want to? It is their fault. We have not raised the row. We are doing good, we are walking after the commandment of God, and they are persecuting us. They are the ones that raise the difference, that cause the disturbance, that make the separation. They will not do right and we determine to do right; of course the separation comes and we have got to leave them in the world, just the same as Mrs. Lot had to leave her folks in the world. Hundreds have done it and we must do it.

I am talking to men and women to-night who have had to do it. That earthly tie must break; but this heavenly tie, this first birth, is a miniature affair when compared to this second birth. This first brotherhood is only for time and it only lasts until the shadows of the grave; but this heavenly brotherhood makes us all one, enables us to use the same language, to speak the same thing, to think the same thing, to have the same mind, to be endowed with the same aspirations and expectations. We are traveling in the one way, and even at death—death is only "a little moment," that is, only a separation for a little moment. And to this new brotherhood death is not a wall; but it is a door through which we enter into grander possibilities than are known here. As Isaiah says, "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee: hide thyself as it were for a little moment." Yes, that is all. The first brotherhood may be separated for eternity, but in this second brotherhood the separation is only for a little moment; and we recognize that brother has just stepped into another door or room and is working there; and we sorrow not as those that have no hope, for when we shall meet him he shall be clothed in the white robe of paradisaical beauty. We do not weep as those without hope. We must leave that earthly brotherhood behind unless they propose to enter into the second birth and take part in the heavenly brotherhood. But if we refuse to do it, and love the world more than God, we excite his jealousy, we incur his displeasure and disapproval. "Turn neither to the right nor to the left." Jesus said we have to walk the straight and narrow way,— "Straight is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." And we must go right on that way. Says one, "He never told us about not looking back." You can not get that into your text. "He that puts his hand to the plow and looks back is not fit for the kingdom." Jesus said that, and if you are not fit for the kingdom, you will not enter in; it is only those who are fit who will enter in. Mercy will not rob justice, and justice will not rob mercy, in the resurrection. The all things, the things we have done, the results of them, will be restored to us; we can not enter in unless we have kept the commandments, and hear the voice which says, "If thou wouldst enter into life, keep the commandments." "Now escape to the mountain." How are you going to fix that? Just this way: I heard of a story told in that book of something that was cut out without hands, as a little stone, and it rolled and became a great mountain and filled the whole earth. Now we are helping to form that little stone kingdom, and it will become the great mountain. "Come out of her, my people." "Escape to the mountain." "Come into the kingdom."

Brethren, I know we have a great many crosses and trials; but it is the sunny way, after all; it is the beautiful way, it is the good way. How lovely it is to be enabled to go to bed to-night in the recognition and the consciousness that we are serving God to the best of our ability, that our renunciation of the world is complete, that our consecration is a full and complete one. And after we have made the consecration that God demands in every way, what a lovely life that is to live! A man living that way will be enabled to go to bed with an honest man every night, if he has to sleep alone. But when you feel that compunctious throb that God has commanded you to do something, and you know you ought to do it, but you are hunting around for a little excuse; then you are not doing your duty. Let us meet these conditions fairly, and be true to our trust, for according to the dispensation of the gospel we should be the lights of the world.

Jesus comes to us to-night just as much as he did then, saying, "Remember Lot's wife." Do not look back into the beggarly elements of the world; there is nothing behind worth having. May we be consecrated to God! We have the truth. The angel's message has come to us. We have nothing to be ashamed of. There is nothing in this beautiful gospel that is calculated to bring a blush of shame to the cheek of the most modest maiden. Many of you have heard it tested in its every department. It is solid. It is the truth of God. It is God's best love revealed in the divine scheme that will terminate in our salvation.

May we be true to the trust reposed in us, not looking back into the beggarly elements of the world, but remember Lot's wife and the consequences that followed her disobedience, is my prayer in Jesus' name, Amen.

POINTERS NO. 3.

BY R. MAY, INDEPENDENCE STAKE BISHOP.

Co-operation in business under the proper management is bound to succeed and we have now in Independence several enterprises under the control and management of our church-members, and thousands of dollars is paid out monthly for wages, all of which helps to build up the people and the church, and helps, more and more, to firmly establish the church within the stake, as it never was before. We see the necessity of other establishments of such a character as are necessary for the good of the people and to bring profit to the investor.

To loan money on interest may be all right; but money invested and properly secured in business which will likely bring better interest, help the poor laboring man, and build the city and its requirements, is far more commendable. We are told to love our neighbor as ourselves. The man or woman who is selfish and will not help build up Zion by his means, it is only a question of time when he will be disappointed and move out.

MOVING.

There are very many church-members moving into the stake, especially to Independence, and there is scarcely a mail comes but brings us inquiries expressing anxiety for moving into Independence and the regions round about. Some few come with means, others with very little. We welcome both kinds alike and often they fail to heed the injunction: "Have all things prepared before you." We think we see some coming with the air of what is thought to be the spirit of "American citizenship"—independency. It is all right, to be an American citizen and be independent so long as it is not too costly, or a burden on other people; but when moving to Zion, move in God's way. It is the best.

HOME BUILDING.

Homes are being built by the Saints at Independence, many of which are strictly modern and very comfortable. Whole streets are being built. Success to them and I hope that it may continue and that the blessing of God may rest on every house and household; and it will if you will remember the poor brother or sister who, by reasons of circumstances, for which he may not be responsible, has no home.

We also believe there are now mistakes being made in building. Some buy or build larger and more expensive houses than are necessary. Our success in this world does not depend on how much display we make. The only one in this world who made a success of life was a King who was the largest real estate owner of which we have ever heard. He was the meek and lowly One and had nowhere to lay his head, willing to divide up with his brethren. What an example! We notice that very often, yes, too often, and without reason, Saints with limited means build a larger house than their means will afford. We think it foolish for a man who has only one thousand dollars to build a two-thousand-dollar house, or a man with two thousand dollars to build a three- or four-thousand-dollar home; and the cry comes sooner or later, "I am in debt and I must meet my obligations before I can pay money to the church." The best way to do is to pay the church first and then build according to your means.

CHURCH TOO SMALL.

Once upon a time we built a large stone church, and it cost considerable money and caused the few members, at that time, considerable worry to pay for it. And now, you who have caused us to take a back seat while you have gone to the front, there is only one remedy left, and that is that we keep you and all who may come to the front in helping build another church, for you are the cause of the shrinkage at the Stone Church. So you can round up your shoulders and help build a structure that will hold you and us, and your friends and our friends to the number of five or six thousand people. And we would ask those who are here, and those who expect to be here, for five dollars a seat, and we will build an assembly building ready for next General Conference. Get your money ready, we have the plans. (To be continued.)

SOME MORE VITAL QUESTIONS TO AND ANSWERS
FROM PROMINENT SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS.

Will the reader please turn to the SAINTS' HERALD of August 2, 1904, pages 710 to 712, where the Adventist question was treated under the above caption—except the word more, which we think appropriate to this article.

We find in the Adventist Camp-meeting Journal, Sparta, Wisconsin, June, 1898, that the Sabbath of the decalogue was introduced to Mrs. E. G. White and her followers by Mrs. Rachel D. Preston, a Seventh-day Baptist, at Washington, New Hampshire, late in the autumn of 1844, and they began its observance at once. The Journal also says: "The first church of Seventh-day Adventists was thus developed . . . in the last three months of 1844." Again we read, "But their doctrines did not become sufficiently formulated to begin to constitute a settled system of belief till the following year, or 1845; which may therefore be set down as the year in which the Seventh-day Adventist denomination began."

In the HERALD referred to, admissions are made by leading Adventists that they receive into full fellowship members of any orthodox church who have been baptized by immersion without rebaptism unless the candidate demands it; they have also declared that the fourth commandment of the decalogue, (keeping Saturday as the Sabbath,) is binding on all nations of men in all ages of the world; and that Mrs. E. G. White is regarded as a prophetess of God to their church and to the world, while one very prominent official placed himself upon record that she occupies a similar position in this dispensation as John the Baptist did in New Testament times.

We will proceed to question their positions and examine them.

Question.—What offices in the Adventist Church are filled by ordination and how do they take precedence in office and position by virtue of their ordination?

This question was answered by W. W. Prescott, editor of the Advent Review and Sabbath Herald, Washington, District of Columbia, August 16, 1904, as follows:

Ministers and local elders are ordained to their respective offices, and I think in some cases there is an ordination service for deacons. Generally speaking, a minister would take precedence of a local elder.

Another question was submitted: Are there ecclesiastical rights, powers, and privileges vested in the ministry of the Seventh-day Adventist Church, by reason of their ordination, which are not possessed by Protestant ministers?

Editor Prescott made this startling reply September 11, 1904:

We regard the Seventh-day Adventist Church as in the direct line of apostolic succession; inasmuch as they teach the pure gospel as taught by the apostles. Further than this, we have not been accustomed to make comparisons between our rights, powers, and privileges, and those of other denominations.

The following question was asked: Does it require the same legal right or authority in the person to administer the sacred rite of water baptism as it does to perform the solemn ordinance of ordaining to the office of elder?

On January 30, 1905, Editor Prescott offered the following answer:

According to the church order adopted by Seventh-day Adventists, an ordained minister is authorized to administer the rite of baptism wherever he may be; a local elder is authorized to administer baptism in the church over which he is the ordained elder.

Editor M. C. Wilcox of the Signs of the Times, Mountain View, California, January 29, 1905, wrote:

I would say, "Yes," only those ordained according to the gospel have the right to administer baptism, and yet local elders do sometimes baptize, although they are not supposed to ordain other elders. The reason that local elders have been permitted to baptize has been for the reason that ministers were not present and perhaps could not be present, at times, and therefore this has been taken into consideration in the ordination of every local elder.

A ministerial licentiate would not be qualified to perform the rite of baptism or to ordain one to the office of elder. A local church elder would, on necessary occasions, if no minister were present, be qualified to perform baptism, but not to ordain an elder.

Please reread the question, then note the answer made by W. J. Stone, president of the Indiana Conference of Seventh-day Adventists. He wrote from Indianapolis, January 23, 1905:

I would simply answer "Yes," if I understand your question. One should have received the Spirit, and be set apart for his work the same as the other.

The foregoing interrogations and replies will be nearer complete when we read this question and the answer: "Would an ordination of a Seventh-day Adventist to the office of an elder be valid if that ordination was performed by Adventist ministers who had received their only ordination to office in Protestant churches?"

Editor Prescott replied to the question August 16, 1904, with apparent surprise that such a query should be present. He said:

I can hardly understand how such a case as this could be possible, as, so far as I know, it has been the practice of this denomination to ordain again any ministers who were received from other denominations. I am not myself acquainted with any minister in the denomination who was ordained outside the denomination. In view of these facts, it does not seem necessary to reply to a supposed situation.

We certainly appreciate their plain admissions, for we learn by them that the only offices held by ordination in the Adventist Church are ministers, elders, and in some cases deacons, and that they rank in the order just named. Will some one of their number tell us why they do not have men ordained to offices of apostles, prophets, evangelists, sevens, bishops, priests, and teachers also? In a communication from their acting historian, J. N. Loughborough, August, 1904, he wrote that Mrs. E. G. White "was never ordained by man," which statement is worthy of record.

How proud Editor Prescott must have felt when he dictated the sentence: "We regard the Seventh-day Adventist Church as in the direct line of apostolic succession, inasmuch as they teach the pure gospel as taught by the apostles." We opine that were the dear old apostles privileged to view the Adventist Church as it is in organization, doctrine, and practice, they would be sorely grieved at her distorted, unscriptural appearance, and would reprimand her for even claiming to be the Lord's church.

Elders Wilcox and Stone state, as quoted above, that in the Adventist Church it requires the same legal authority to administer baptism as it does to ordain to office. But we will show that they do not practice what they teach, for their church does receive people into full fellowship who received their only baptism by Protestant ministers, and yet they close their church door denying the same Protestant preachers the right of joining if they assume to bring their ministerial privileges with them. This is their position to-day, but there is another side to the picture, which will be shown.

As has been quoted, Editor Prescott said that so far as he knew, it had been the practice of Adventists "to ordain again any ministers who were received from other denominations." Also that he was not "acquainted with any minister in the denomination who was ordained outside of the denomination. In view of these facts" he said, "it does not seem necessary to reply to a supposed situation." The facts are that the "situation" which was "supposed" to never have existed in the Adventist Church has come to light, and proves to be a clear case of illegality in their fraud church on the important question of authority in ordinations.

Note the following from the pen of Elder J. N. Loughborough, acting church historian, Oakland, California, May 12, 1904:

Some of our earliest ministers were those who had been ordained to the gospel ministry in other denominations, and went forward under that ordination. . . .

The first one ordained as a Seventh-day Adventist minister by Seventh-day Adventists was myself. This ordination was at Grand Rapids, Michigan, in the month of June, 1854.

In August, 1904, the same historian wrote that the men who ordained him were Elder James White, formerly of the New England Christian Church, and Elder M. E. Cornell, formerly of the First Day Adventist Church, which proves that Elder Loughborough was the first man ordained in the Seventh-day Adventist Church, and that Elders White and Cornell had received their only ordinations by Protestants, and according to Editor Prescott invalidates Mr. Loughborough's ordination, leaving their church without a man legally set apart to do ministerial service in any sense. This proves their first ordination illegal, and it necessarily follows that an illegally ordained man could not legally ordain others to office, hence we conclude that according to their own witnesses there is not a man in their ministry legally ordained.

On their complexed question of ordinations we present testimony from J. W. Watt, president of the Vermont conference of Adventists, who wrote from North Walcott, December 30, 1904:

It would not be consistent for ministers of another denomination to ordain a man to eldership in a Seventh-day Adventist church. I think such a thing would be entirely out of place.

Why not reject baptisms by Protestant ministers as not being consistent as well as their service in ordaining? Echo answers why!

We take pleasure in giving place to a statement from their prophetess, Mrs. White, on church order, found on page 12, in Supplement to Experiences and Views of Her Early Writings, published in 1891:

There was order in the church when Christ was upon earth, and after his departure, order was strictly observed among his apostles. And now in these last days, while God is bringing his children into the unity of the faith, there is more real need of order than ever before.

The publishers, in a foot-note, make the following comment on what Mrs. White said about church order:

The Adventists were of all churches, and they had no idea of forming another church. After "the time" [1844] passed, there was great confusion, and the majority were strongly opposed to any organization, holding that it was inconsistent with the perfect liberty of the gospel! Mrs. White was always opposed to every form of fanaticism, and early announced that some form of organization was necessary to prevent and correct confusion. Few at the present time can appreciate the firmness which was then required to maintain her position against the prevailing anarchy. All the union which has existed among Seventh-day Adventists is due to her timely warnings and instructions.

In the same book, under the title "William Miller," Mrs. White said:

As John the Baptist heralded the first advent of Jesus, and prepared the way for his coming, so William Miller and those who joined with him, proclaimed the second advent of the Son of God.

It may be true that "they had no idea of forming another church" in 1844, for it really seems that what little they have done in that direction has been illegal. We suggest that they consult Mrs. White on church order and organization without delay.

The following question was asked: Does the Adventist Church receive into their numbers those baptized by Protestant ministers who were knowingly violating the fourth commandment of the decalogue at the time they administered the sacred ordinance? Answer was made by Elder J. W. Watt, president of the Vermont conference, December 30, 1904:

We have always so far as I know accepted members into church fellowship who have been immersed by other denominations; if the person is sincere and is satisfied with the former baptism, it is all right.

According to Elder Watt, ministers who are knowingly wearing the destructive so-called "work of the beast" can do acceptable church ordinance work for them.

This question was also submitted: When a truly repentant man is baptized by immersion by a Seventh-day Adventist minister, is that baptism for the remission of his sins, and does he come out of the water freed from sin, and is that baptism the door or entrance into the Lord's church on earth? W. J. Stone, president of the Indiana conference, wrote January 23, 1905:

I can only answer it briefly. I do not understand that a person's sins are washed away by baptism. The sacrifice of Christ atones for our sins. "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."—1 John 1:9. Then we are cleansed before we ever go into the water. And unless one has been baptized into Christ's death, and cleansed from sin, he is not a fit subject for water baptism. Water baptism is simply following the command of Christ, and the answering of a good conscience. (See 1 Peter 3:21.)

Editor W. W. Prescott made the following reply January 30, 1905:

Water baptism has no efficacy in itself, and is not, as the Roman Catholic Church teaches, a sacrament by means of which a person is cleansed from sin. It is, however, the outward profession and sign of an inward work. When, therefore, a truly repentant sinner is baptized, it ought to be true that he is baptized for the remission of sins, but the remission comes through his faith and not through the efficacy of the rite of baptism. Christ is the door and not baptism. And yet it is true that every member of the church ought to be baptized. You will see that the outward form and the inward experience ought not to be separated.

The last witness we call on the above question is Editor M. C. Wilcox, of the Signs of the Times, who wrote, January 29, 1905, as follows:

I would say that baptism is only one of the steps in the remission of sin. The mere act itself doesn't take away one's sin. "Repent and be baptized unto—[or in order to]—the remission of sins." It is a step the same as repentance. When a man is truly repentant and his faith takes hold of repentance in that baptism, he certainly comes out of the water freed from sin, and of course, that is just what baptism ought always to mean, although all the fruits may have taken place before,—that is to say, one may have been truly repentant of his sins and accepted Jesus Christ as his Savior and have had all his sins forgiven before being baptized. Baptism in that case is the outward act of what has already taken place in the heart. The very best illustration is that which the Bible gives,—that of marriage. Two hearts are joined together long, perhaps, before marriage takes place and they are as truly each other's before that time as after, and yet the marriage itself must take place in order to make it legal. They do not enter upon the united life until that time. So marriage becomes the entrance to that new life. Even so in the church, "as many as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." "So then, brethren, ye are become dead to the law by the body of Christ that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that ye should bring forth fruit unto God." Marriage is therefore the door of entrance into the Lord's church on earth.

It is plain to see from the attempted answers on baptism and its designs that Elders Stone, Prescott, and Wilcox are confused. We advise them to read their Bibles more carefully and take counsel from the plain teaching which says baptism is for the remission of sins.

Editor Wilcox assures us that when the gospel prerequisites have been complied with that "Marriage [baptism] is therefore the door of entrance into the Lord's church on earth."

Will some Adventist explain how their elders can consistently teach that their church is the Lord's only church on earth and that baptism is the door of entrance, and still receive people from Protestant churches without rebaptizing them? Do they have two doors or permit some to "climb up some other way"?

We assure them that zealous Protestants who are Sunday-keepers would feel insulted if told that they had been baptized into the Adventist church, however much they might think otherwise, and that all that was, or would be required of them to be numbered with "the one hundred and forty-four thousand" was a statement of their "profession of faith" and a transfer of names.

In conclusion, we present the following from Editor W. W. Prescott, September 11, 1904:

1. A believer who has been baptized by immersion, by any evangelical minister, is usually received in full fellowship into the Seventh-day Adventist church without being rebaptized, unless he, himself, desires rebaptism. The usual method would be to receive him on profession of faith and previous baptism.

2. Inasmuch as Seventh-day Adventists believe that immersion is the only scriptural method of baptism, they do not receive into membership, persons who have been sprinkled or poured.

3. To the best of my knowledge, neither the Seventh-day Adventist denomination as a body nor any representatives of the denomination, have ever petitioned the legislative bodies of the United States to "recognize or to establish Saturday as the rightful day in which to rest and worship God, instead of Sunday."

From a careful examination of Adventism we conclude that their church is not in harmony with the Bible in organization, ordinances, faith, teaching, and practice.

MRS. E. G. WHITE'S VISION OF THE DECALOGUE.

In a book, The Christian Experience and Views of Mrs. G. E. White, volume 1, fourth edition, 1891, page 9, the publishers say that Mrs. White had her first vision after the great Advent disappointment in 1844.

After relating several so-called marvelous experiences, and time passed on, she says, on page 18:

I was struck dumb, and for a few moments was lost to everything around. . . . A card was held up before me, on which were written in gold letters the chapter and verse of fifty texts of scripture. . . . After I came out of [the] vision, . . . I took the Bible and readily turned to all the texts that I had seen upon the card. I was unable to speak all day.

The texts she claimed to have seen on the card were all from the New Testament, and not a word about the Mosaic Sabbath. Strange indeed that Mrs. White did not receive some scriptural texts favoring the Sabbath which was taught her soon afterwards by Mrs. Rachel D. Preston, a Seventh-day Baptist.

However, it was about three years after meeting Mrs. Preston, or 1847, when she claims to have had a vision (see page 25) and saw and entered a temple where the Lord showed her, among other things, "the tables of stone" on which "the Sabbath commandment shone above them all"—all the other nine.

Does Mrs. White and the Adventist Church want the world to understand by her vision (?) of the decalogue that "the Sabbath commandment shone above" the mandates "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image"; . . . "Thou shalt not kill. Thou shalt not commit adultery. Thou shalt not steal"? —Exodus 20:1-17.

The Seventh-day Adventists better reconsider the teaching of Mrs. White and see to it that "God is not mocked."

With charity to all and malice toward none.

The General Convention.

REPORT OF HOME CLASS SUPERINTENDENT.

To the Sunday-school Workers in Convention Assembled;
Greeting: In closing up the work of the year, we do so with a feeling of both regret and hopefulness. Regret that so little has been done compared to what seemingly ought to have been accomplished during the year. Just how we have grown numerically the general secretary will probably tell us in his report.

We are hopeful because of the bright prospect before us. Encouraged by the result of a feeble effort we are led to believe that at some future day, every Latter Day Saint worthy the name will be enrolled on the records of the Sunday-school. The home department of the Sunday-school is growing, but not as we would like to see it grow. But experience has taught us to be patient, for no good work springs up like a mushroom. It takes time to develop the sturdy oak. As yet the success of the home department is confined to those places where some energetic, enthusiastic Sunday-school worker has been given the opportunity to lead in the work of the district and schools. The work of this department is moving, but it goes only where somebody takes it. It is powerful and strong when it gets there, but it is too young to go alone. In some districts the district superintendents have been able to introduce the work; in other districts the missionaries have done good service. But the greatest need of the department is some one who will carry the work to people.

Our most flattering reports came from the missionaries who have taken up the home department of the Sunday-school as a means to hold the interest and keep alive and in touch with the work of the Saints in unorganized districts and in branches where the place of meeting is too far for them to attend services regularly. In most branches the children go to Sunday-school, but in many instances the parents have done their whole duty (?) when they get the children off on time. Christ said, "The field is the world," but alas! The church is a great field wherein much missionary work is needed. We have two classes in this great field, the neglected and the neglecting. The neglected are the parents who reside in the locality of your Sunday-school and do not obey the commandment to "go to the house of prayer" and who do not receive an invitation from the local superintendent of the Sunday-school to join the home class of that school. The neglecting are the Sunday-school officers who do not make a special effort to enlist these parents in the Bible study of the home class of their schools. Dear Sunday-school officer, are you one of the neglecting?

The field of the home class worker is a missionary field for every member of the Sunday-school, but unless there is some one to direct that work nothing is done.

As we said before, the best reports have been received from the missionaries. And why not? Because of the authority and responsibility of the missionary his influence is greater than that of others. By his visiting among the families his acquaintance with the inside life of the home he visits fits him for this especial line of work. No one else can know the needs of his flock as does the shepherd. No one is better fitted for home department superintendent of the district than one of the missionaries of the district. One missionary in a tour through his district secured over sixty home class members. Sixty people set to work systematically studying the word of God! On Sunday sixty people thinking and praying over the same scripture, who, in all probability, if not belonging to the home class and detained for reasons from attending church services, would have been otherwise occupied on the Sabbath day. Dear missionary, is it worth while? We realize we are only a helper in the church, and now we are asking the church to help us, but can not we be workers together? Will not the father help his needy child?

We sincerely hope to see this convention make some special effort to formulate a plan, which, when adopted, will enable the missionaries to aid us in this work.

In the course of the year's work we have sent out two circular letters and one complete home department outfit to each district superintendent in the association. We have answered as best we could all letters of inquiry, which have been many. We have enrolled several scattered members on our general class-roll, in each instance the whole family taking up the work. We have received many encouraging letters. We have enjoyed the work, and have realized more fully than ever before, that real happiness comes only through unselfish service for others.

Yours for the spread of the work,

MRS. T. A. HOUGAS.

REPORT OF EDITOR OF "GOSPEL QUARTERLIES."

LAMONI, Iowa, April 4, 1905.

To the Sunday-school Association in General Convention

Assembled; Greeting: I am pleased to report that the work of the year is finished and that lessons of all grades are prepared up to next October. To accomplish this has fully occupied my time aside from that given to home duties. The lessons now in the printer's hands are based upon the first letter of John, and it is the present plan to continue the study of those epistles in the ensuing quarter. There probably will be sufficient material in the New Testament for the lessons for the coming year.

I may add to my report of the labor done in my department that there is no diminution of my interest in the work of the church; on the contrary, there is a deepening love for the truth of God as time unfolds it more and more to my understanding, and I feel an increasing willingness to do my part well. My heart's desire for the church is that we may grow in the knowledge of God, that we may come to understand his ways and to make them ours, that we may learn that beautiful simplicity of life taught in the gospel and in the example of the Master.

Sincerely in the work,

ANNA SALYARDS.

REPORT OF FIRST PRIMARY COMMITTEE.

According to instruction of the last General Convention to us we have commenced the work of the revision of the lessons first published by us in the Second Primary Quarterly. We have revised the lessons based upon the Old Testament, and they are now being issued in separate Quarterlies; we have still before us the work of revising the lessons based on the life of Christ, which will fill three numbers of the Quarterly. There has been no remuneration for editorial service, but the traveling expenses of the committee have been met by the association. We are pleased to render this report to you and to assure you of our continued interest in the work intrusted to us.

Respectfully submitted,

ANNA SALYARDS.

REPORT OF REVISING COMMITTEE.

To the Convention of the General Sunday-school Association; Greeting: Your revising committee beg leave to report that they have performed the duty imposed upon them to the best of their ability. The work has been done in unity and we trust the teachers will find as much satisfaction in teaching the lessons as we have found in revising.

REPORT OF SR. EMMA BURTON OF SOCIETY ISLANDS MISSION.

To the Officers and Members of the Sunday-school Convention; Greeting: May the peace of our Lord Jesus Christ abide with you all. I am pleased to report that I have visited during the past year the Sunday-schools on six islands of the Tuamotus and found them in fair condition, yet there was need for a little setting in order in some schools, which was not a difficult task because of the ever-willingness to receive any words of counsel and to profit by them so far as they can adapt themselves to foreign ways. We are forced to remember that they are natives and can no more change or lay aside their nationality than we can ours; nor will American teachers ever Americanize them. While the missionary is with them they seem to be in a very progressive condition, but when left to themselves they drop back to their own ways as naturally as a piece of elastic. Thus we have learned to let them conduct their work much in their own way, only that they follow the outlines given by the General Association as far as they are adapted to the conditions here.

We are now in the midst of the work of printing our lesson-books on the mimeograph. The Saints were not able to pay for having the printing done on the press, neither was Mr. Henry able to do the translating; therefore we undertook the whole work ourselves. Joseph has prepared and translated twelve lessons for the senior grade. These lessons according to the ruling of our last convention were to be without answers to the questions; but lest any strife of words should arise in regard to the correct answers, Joseph has typewritten the answers and will send a copy to each local superintendent to be referred to when needful.

I have prepared the children's lessons. Joseph translates my questions and I copy the answers from the native Bible. We have arranged to print six hundred books for the Sunday-schools and will bind them with the sewing-machine. If the blessing of health is continued to us we expect to have them all finished before conference.

There has been no change in the number of schools so far as I am informed since last report. But I have recently received for the first time reports from the three schools of the island of Tubuai, which now gives us eighteen schools reporting, and three schools not reporting, total, twenty-one schools.

Respectfully,

EMMA BURTON, Superintendent.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, February 23, 1905.

REPORT OF ELDER G. J. WALLER.

HONOLULU, Hawaii Territory, March 1, 1905.

ELDER D. J. KRAHL, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Brother: Inclosed you will find reports from the Honolulu Branch Sunday-school and also from the Waikiki Sunday-school, together with certificates of appointment of Elder R. S. Salyards as delegate to represent both schools at the General Sunday-school Convention to be held in Lamoni, April next.

District Organization: We have not so far any district organization, and have, therefore, sent reports of the two Sunday-schools. As we desire as far as possible to work in harmony with the plans of the Sunday-school Association we will at an early date take up the question of a district organization.

Sunday-school Report: I am glad to be able to say that better work is being done by our secretaries, and it is possible, therefore, for us to make more complete reports than formerly. I realize, however, that there is still room for improvement, and shall try to encourage these officers to attend to their duties so as to make their reports as complete and as full as possible.

The Gospel Quarterly: The Quarterlies are used in both schools as you will notice from the reports, and we find them very useful; in fact, we do not see how we could get on very well without them. We are glad to be able to report that they now reach us on time, so we are able to keep up with the study of the lessons on the dates indicated. The Hawaiian members are delighted with the instruction that they are receiving from the lessons given on the book of Revelation. Many of them had been taught in churches to which they formerly belonged to regard that book as one that it was impossible for them to understand. I enjoy studying the lessons as well as teaching them. It seems to me that the spiritual food they furnish can not fail to encourage those who desire to walk in obedience to the commandments of the Lord and to come to a knowledge of the truth.

Finances: The members of the Honolulu Branch Sunday-school do very well in the way of rendering financial assistance. I have not thought it advisable so far to take up any collections from the children who attend the Waikiki Sunday-school, fearing it might keep some of them from attending. They are as you know, Japanese and Hawaiian children, whose parents are poor.

The Outlook: I consider the outlook promising and hope in the near future to organize another Sunday-school in a different part of the city. When we take into consideration the large number of children of different nationalities (Chinese, Japanese, and Portuguese among the number) that are growing up here and receiving instruction in the English language, we can appreciate to some extent the magnitude of the work that is opening up before us here.

I am just as much interested in the Sunday-school work as ever, and I consider the work accomplished by this organization of great assistance to the church generally.

I trust that you will have a profitable session at the coming convention, and that good will result from your meeting together. We will endeavor to remember you in prayer at that time.

Yours in gospel bonds,
G. J. WALLER.

Letter Department

KINGFISHER, Oklahoma, April 24, 1905.

Editors Herald: I love to read the testimonies of others, and their experiences. I think and believe this latter-day work is of God. I have not had any great manifestations like some, but that does not cause me to doubt it in the least. I am sure if I could and would place myself in shape to receive it, I would have more of the Holy Spirit to guide me. We are isolated from church privileges; no branch near. There has been no preaching here for a long time. When we last tried it seemed as if it were a waste of time. None would turn out to hear. There are but three Saints living near here that I know of. My husband and my two little children do not belong to the church. I hope and pray that I may live to see them obey the gospel. We expect to move to Independence in the near future. More especially do I desire to do so on account of my boy and girl, to place them in Saints' Sunday-school and Religio. Oklahoma is a nice country, and every prospect for good crops this year. Wheat is the main crop, although corn, oats, and cotton do well here. Every fruit-tree and bush is loaded with fruit.

Your sister,
MRS. IRENE B. SORDEN.

POND CREEK, Oklahoma, April 16, 1905.

Editors Herald: I feel that we could not get along without the church papers, and receive the spiritual strength necessary for every true Saint. And it is necessary for the Saints to keep posted on what is going on in the world, the attitude of the churches in regard to our church, and the means employed to injure us as a people, to advance their own cause. I am still giving out all the literature I can.

Preacher G. W. Bird, of the old Christian Church, has taken up his residence just across the street from us. I have talked with him on the restored gospel very pleasantly, but it seems we can not see alike. He says the perfect time came when the Bible was completed, when the apostles gave all the law necessary. I gave him "Creed-making" to read, and some good sermons in HERALD and Ensign. He has the Book of Mormon, Voice of Warning, Book of Mormon Vindicated, and, I presume, many other of our books. He gave me a book to read: Mormonism Exposed, by G. B. Hancock, copyright applied for, 1902. On the preface I see: "Joseph Smith an impostor, and the Book of Mormon a fraud." Printed in 1902, A. Doggett, Marionville, Missouri.

The author says, "We had no idea of writing a book to expose Mormonism till after the debate held with them at Fayette City, Pennsylvania. We had been challenged for debate many times, but never could succeed in getting them to discuss such propositions as we were willing to debate. For years we had been satisfied that those who had debated with Mormons had given them unnecessary advantage in the way of propositions. They invariably sought propositions that gave them opportunity to play upon side-issues and give simply a rehash of matter that they had delivered in lectures and preached in sermons till they had it by heart. We determined that they should not have this opportunity in the Fayette City debate.

Besides, we felt if they were taken from their stereotyped course of presenting their doctrines, they would be utterly at a loss, and manifest clearly their inability to sustain their system. Our conjecture proved to be true. The proposition as we affirmed was: "Joseph Smith, the reputed prophet and the author of the Book of Mormon, was an impostor and the Book of Mormon is a fraud." There is much more, too much to write, but suffice to say they claim the Latter Day Saints were not prepared to meet it and were beaten. It is full of misrepresentations and perversions of the gospel of Christ from start to finish. One of their members who has read Creed-making, Book of Mormon Vindicated, and other papers, and is now reading With the Church in an Early Day, told me she was surprised for she had always heard we put Joseph Smith ahead of Christ. She likes our literature; said it was all Bible truths—what she always believed. I read her the twelfth and thirteenth chapters of 1 Corinthians, and she can see the "perfect" time is when Christ comes; then we shall see face to face and know as we are known. She said she heard our people would not debate with theirs. I told her it was a mistake, for our people have challenged the world, and I had heard a debate, and we would have an elder here to debate whenever they were ready.

I gave Preacher Bird the book From Palmyra to Independence to offset his book. When I take his book back I shall tell him we will debate the subject.

The worst part of the book is that it tries to make Joseph Smith the originator of that foul doctrine of the Utah people.

A lady who lives not far from the schoolhouse here where Bro. and Sr. Hans Hemmingsen live, asked me why our elders did not come and preach, as they could have the schoolhouse now, and the other churches preach there. I told her I thought after conference was over we would have some elders here to preach. I dreamed several years ago that I looked out at the Congregational church and saw our people coming out of the church, and I knew our elders were preaching there, and believe in God's own time they will, for it was so plain. I believe God has a people here. Many like our literature. There are several families of Saints here, and I think it is just as necessary to feed the sheep as it is to try to bring others into the fold.

Every Saint should take the papers and have tracts to give out; for I notice where the people read our literature they are not so prejudiced. Latter Day Saints, Who Are They? and many others make the truth so plain. I make my HERALDS into books, and sew the Ensigns together when articles are continued, so when I give them out they can get the full sense of the articles. I gave some literature to the Methodist Episcopal minister and wife.

My husband has been sick for three weeks. He was taken suddenly with lumbago while carpentering. He is some better now. The doctor says it will be three weeks at least before he is able to work; but I know all things are possible with God, and when two unite together in any one thing, they shall ask and it shall be given them of the Father which is in heaven. So says Jesus. Dear Saints, pray with me that he may be healed, and that we may grow in grace and in the knowledge of God and his law, and be faithful and brave soldiers in the army of the Lord, and be the means of bringing many souls to Christ; and that our three dear children may be brought into the kingdom soon; and that we may all be gathered as one happy family with all the redeemed of God.

I know this gospel is true. I know that my Redeemer liveth, and in the latter days will stand upon the earth. I have seen him in vision coming in the clouds, and heard repeated the thirteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians. Have seen the New Jerusalem and many other evidences. With love to all the Saints, I am,

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. EFFIE J. McCULLOUGH.

LAPEER, Michigan, April 24, 1905.

Editors Herald: Since my wife left for Detroit and Canada last fall, for the good of her health, she has been staying most of the time with her daughter, Sr. Mary C. Watson, of Bathwill, Ontario. I have just received the sad news that the doctor says she can not get well, and that it is only a matter of time with her, yet I hope that the dear Lord will spare her life to get home again.

This last winter I have spent the most of my time doing work for my Master, although a good deal of the time was spent in fireside preaching. In the northwestern part of Lapeer County I had a good interest, with crowded houses every night, till I had to stop on account of my cold, and the effects of the "grip." Some expressed a wish that it was spring and they would be baptized, etc. I have been greatly blessed in the Lord's work and wish to be faithful till the end comes.

A. MCKENZIE.

AKRON, Iowa.

Dear Herald: I am often led to wonder if indeed Zion will be redeemed through the righteousness of God's people that are now in the conflict; or will pride and unfaithfulness hinder the progress of the grand work in which we are engaged?

I hear one sister say, "I can see pride in the well-to-do Saints who live in their fine homes and are at ease in Zion, manifesting a disposition to look with disfavor upon those in less favored circumstances, a condition that ought not to find lodgment with the Saints of God."

I sometimes wonder if the same mistake will be repeated that history declares hindered Zion from being redeemed in the first organization.

I heard an elder a few years ago, at the time the Bishop issued the call for God's children to come up with their consecrations, if they expected to obtain inheritance in Zion, and help to build up Zion, say he was not going to intrust what he had in other hands and run the risk of losing it.

I wondered at the time if the elder was right in manifesting such fear of his brethren; and I wondered, too, "How shall we know when it is an opportune time to lay our consecrations at the apostles' feet, if we can not trust the officers who are placed in charge of such work?"

I am so often led to exclaim, "Praise the Lord, O my soul," because of the progress I glean from reading the church literature which comes each week bearing such encouraging articles from its contributors in sermons, items, and correspondence from my brothers and sisters, through Ensign, HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and Hope; also the Histories of the Church. It is the only way I have of learning and going to God in prayer for wisdom to understand this marvelous work and a wonder that I may teach it to others when opportunity offers.

I do not want to be a drone but a doer of the word. Dear Saints, the opportunities are in our reach wherever we are to be enlightened in God's work. Every Saint ought to study Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, with the HERALD and all the papers. Perhaps all have not gotten all these, but when I tell you I have earned all these for myself with as poor health as I have always had, it seems to me that with economy and a little sacrifice all can place them in their reach. And if we keep our covenant at all we must sacrifice.

A SISTER.

FILLMORE, Assiniboia, Northwest Territory, Canada.

Editors Herald: On the rather cold and sunless 13th inst. our venerable old Bro. Neill brought me here from Weyburn for the purpose of creating an opening where the full gospel has not heretofore been proclaimed. Bro. Brantwait's, in as snug a little prairie home as I have seen, about seven miles out of town, is my headquarters. We are about twenty-two miles from Weyburn.

Yesterday we billed Fillmore for preaching to-morrow in the schoolhouse, which is open to all denominations. It happens often in this country that churches are built interdenominationally for all but the Catholics; but in the case of a school which is supported by public funds the people are not allowed such partiality. If there are a few Latter Day Saint rate-payers in the section whose preacher is excluded, they can file complaint with proper tribunal and exclude them all.

On our overland journey here we were greatly moved by the spectacle of the prairie for many miles in extent, for it had been recently visited by a fire. Somebody had—probably no one knows who—accidentally or intentionally let a spark drop, thrown a cigar down, and as a result a vast extent of feed and pasture became fuel, the land ungrassed and turned into a parched and gloomy nakedness. Some stacks and buildings were reduced to ashes. And the disappearance of the woolly, yellow grass—dead but nutritive—good pasture, and the only dependence of the hungry flocks of the incoming settler subjects them to nameless inconveniences.

Already there is manifest intense bitterness at Fillmore. Others think they have the right of way because they were on the track first. Only the restraint of the civil power has prevented violence in some cases; possibly other causes. The Union Jack says hands off. Over a blood-soaked earth was it put in the heavens in many places, but I am thankful that wherever it waves there is liberty. We must not forget that flags are rags, however, and each man must remember that he is one grain of sand among billions of sands equal to himself. He who shapes his character by this mold is a humble man.

Very little face to face opposition have I met in the Northwest; generally it has been waged where I had no chance to reply.

The good fight of faith, in defense of the faith, is honorable. But the fight with each other wherein it retards the work, keeps the honest without, is lamentable always. I refer to our fight with each other. One transformation we will never be able to bring about in the church—the conversion of the Saints to the idea of the justifiability of controversies between ourselves through the HERALD. Never. They will always rise up against it, and you can never crush them down. You kindle the fire; they experience the effects. They feel the effects and you can not make it otherwise. I tell you you can not argue comfort into one who sits on a bed of coals. They know. They will always clamor against it as long as there is a necessity to hand out HERALDS, as long as they have neighbors to convert.

When week after week their paper is unfitted; when for the good testimony, the good article it contains, there is a stain by its side, it is no wonder they cry out. No one has any right to fatten on the leanness of others. A priest is despicable who lifts a palace at the impoverishment of his parishoners. A czar is a monster who takes comfort on a cringing peasantry. The iron heel of the former may stamp the latter into silence, but if the effect continues they will cry out again. So I would say to those who are struggling for a just cause in Russia, in Germany, in the church: Go on, you Nihilists; go on, you Socialists; go on, you Saints.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

DOWNES, Kansas, April 23, 1905.

Dear Herald: Our branch is pretty well scattered, the members living so far apart that it is hard to get enough together to have meeting at all. Our last conference and Sunday-school convention was held with this branch, and a good time was had. The good Spirit was with us to a great degree. I think all who attended were well repaid for going. Three splendid sermons were preached. I love to be with God's people, but hate to have to leave them when meeting is over. A good many of us try to put the work all on one member. Dear Saints, this is not right. We should be willing to do our part of the work, and when we can help be willing and ready to do our duty.

And again, some of us are not in a hurry to get ready for church, but are from five minutes to a half-hour late.

My health is better this spring than ever before, for which I am truly thankful. But I am weak when it comes to doing work for my Master. I want to so live that I may at last gain a home in heaven. I need the prayers of all of God's people.

Your sister,
MYRTLE COOP.

CHESTNUT, Montana, April 18, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have been over this district and find the Saints with a few exceptions perfectly satisfied with the faith as presented by the Reorganized Church; but am sorry to say I have found very few live workers. It is not because they do not want to work, for I am satisfied that most of them do; but they are like sheep without a shepherd. They have no one to feed them the bread of life. This district needs a good, live, spiritual man to put all his time looking after and feeding the scattered sheep. There are only two branches in this district that have presiding officers, Gallatin and Deer Lodge. There are four or five families in Reece Creek, four families in Bridger, five families in Butte, six or seven in Bitter Root, two in Ellison, seven or eight in Helena and East Helena, and one on the Yellowstone, and no one to look after them. I will leave here the latter part of this month for Weyburn, Assiniboia; and as I will not have time to write to all the Saints and friends that desire to hear from me, I take this means of exhorting them to be faithful, to continue their Sunday-schools and prayer-meetings, and do the best they can until some one shall be appointed in my place. Bro. Frank Christofferson is vice-president of this district.

Praying that the grace of God will abide with you all,

Yours in bonds,

E. E. WILLIAMS.

MOUNTAINVILLE, Maine, April 24, 1905.

Editors Herald: In the HERALD of March 29 my attention was attracted by this little paragraph: "If those who have a talent for writing, would exercise it as they may be led, they would see how hard it is to resist the temptation to do that very thing." I am heartily in accord with the one making this statement and have been for a long time. I think that many Saints have some talent in this direction, and by cultivating that talent, small as it may appear, and hard though it may be, we shall grow more and more talented along this line of work. And we must remember that it is only by improving the talent the Father has given us that it will be possible for that talent to grow. It is only by exercise, constantly, day by day, that the physical body grows stronger and better prepared for the work and duties of life. It is only by the constant exercise and application of the little gifts God has given us to develop that we grow stronger, spiritually, and become daily better prepared to successfully meet and war against the lust of the flesh and the enemy of our souls.

Personally, I feel I have some talent in this line, and though it may be small, I feel that as I improve this gift of God I can write better and to a greater purpose than when I began. And if you will pardon further personal mention, I believe that through my written thoughts to the church papers I have made others better, and stronger, and been the means, as a tool in God's hands, of advancing in some degree God's kingdom here on earth. I say this not for my own praise, for God knows I am weak enough, but for the good of others. Letting my light shine out a little, you know.

I believe that Saints, whoever they may be and wherever located and under whatever condition of life, might do much more for the Lord's work and be in fact powerful factors for good if they would exercise the gifts God has bestowed upon them and which lie seemingly dormant and dead. This talent of writing for the church papers from time to time is certainly one of them. If you have received any good to be thankful for, any blessings and ideas that would be helpful to others, do not keep the fact locked up in your heart, for it is too precious to remain there. Write it. Let others know that they may be benefited, and in turn benefit others, and in this way would not the harvest be much greater? You love the letters and articles of the Saints each week. Do not you think they would be as much interested in yours? Let us think about these things and then with God's help make the effort and we will not labor in vain, poor as our efforts may appear to us.

The work here is moving slowly. Many of the Saints have been sick, so our church attendance has been rather small of late. We hope for more and better work later. Our district conference convenes at Stonington, the 20th and 21st of next month, and we are already looking forward to a good, profitable season.

Ever praying for the success of the work and the redemption of Zion, I am,

Your brother in the faith,

WALLACE A. SMALL.

LONDON, Ontario, April 8, 1905.

Editors Herald: The letter I wrote you on February 27 was not intended for publication. I was expecting to see the answers in the form of a letter from some of you gentlemen who could give the desired information off-hand, as I thought that instruction and admonition coming from the HERALD Office along the lines suggested would at any rate have some weight with the readers; and otherwise, a good letter touching those things could be read with profit at our Religio meeting, or at some week-night prayer-service, should occasion arise; and I still believe that such a letter would do good. Had I known you were going to publish the letter in question, I would have written a little differently. As it is, I was charged with putting all the bad phases of the branch to the front, to the exclusion of the good. I want to say that nothing was further from my intention than the showing up the unfavorable side of any one branch. Men and women, boys and girls have nearly the same characteristics no matter where we go; and I argued that if such a letter as I imagined my questions would call forth, would do good in London, it would do good as well everywhere the HERALD should go. Since, however, the questions have been published, I hope that some one who can will answer, and that the desired results will follow.

Will you grant yet space enough for me to refer to one feature of our meetings? An outsider entering the Saints' house of worship for the first time could not help but be struck with amazement with the obtaining conditions, considering the place, and the ostensible object of the assembly. There is the hum of busy tongues everywhere throughout the audience; everybody, generally, is talking with his or her neighbor; some are tittering, and others in various stages of laughter; some leaning forward or sidewise to talk with some one in front, or down the seat; some turned round facing the door talking with somebody in the seat behind; but the strangest part, to me, is that the very elders who are to lead the worship are among the visitors, laughing, joking, chatting as readily as any in the audience.

God forbid that I should presume to instruct or admonish these, but what is to be done? Shall present conditions continue? If not, then who are the proper ones to lead in a reformation? Until the elders and the higher priesthood set the example, the lesser priesthood may as well sit, or stand and look on, and hold their peace. In no wise disposed to set up cast-iron regulations, I still maintain that the meeting-house is none other than the house of God, the gate of heaven for the time being; and if we assemble for a prayer- and testimony-meeting the fact that we have assembled to commune with and worship God should be the uppermost thought in our minds.

Our business affairs, our pleasures, our home affairs, and those of our neighbors should have no place in our thoughts during that sacred hour. It may be said, "Oh, Bro. So and So is a crank; and there is no harm in a little friendly conversation, even if we do go to church for a prayer-meeting." But, brethren, that is not the point. It is rather this: It is the hour of prayer. We go to meet with God. The hour, one short hour out of the whole week (is it too much?) should be devoted wholly to God. I believe that God would be more pleased with us were we to shorten the time one half and devote all of it wholly to the purpose or object of the meeting, than he is now while little or no time at all is consecrated to him as it ought to be. Much more could be said, but let it come from the most effective and influential source, and may God add his blessing.

P. H. PHILIPPIN.

NEW CANTON, Illinois, April 26, 1905.

Dear Herald: I started from General Conference to my mission field the evening of its adjournment; but for the purpose of seeing the historic ground of Nauvoo, Illinois, I consented to stop on the way. When arriving at Montrose, Iowa, I called upon Branch President McDonald and abode with him that day and night.

The evening "testimony-service," which I also attended in the Saints' neat chapel, afforded me the acquaintance of other Saints of the locality.

Bro. Simpson on the following day piloted me across the great river and over the Nauvoo region.

It is putting it mildly to say I appreciated my first view of the beloved city's remains which once astonished the world with its growth, and the progress of its inhabitants.

The foundation of the "Nauvoo House," extending ten feet under the ground, and including one story above, is of large and beautiful stone, of splendid architecture, and including the brick stories laid above it, was sufficient to astonish the "traveler" of sixty years ago.

Several houses that were erected and occupied by old-time Saints and prominent church officials, still stand as monuments of the early zeal of the restoration.

The next three days I spend in Quincy, Illinois, where we have but two families of Saints.

Bro. Delancy took interest in acquainting me with extent of the city, but I was much surprised when passing "Highland Park," on the Sabbath, to discover beer-drinking, card-playing, and dancing on a large scale, and in which both men and women participated. Of course the baseball players were out at work in their uniform. A young Methodist Episcopal minister with Bible in his hand, told us that he did not hold the working men in blame for attending the park on Sundays, because that was their only time of recreation. I am convinced that Quincy, Illinois, is sadly in need of the gospel.

At night I attended the Easter service at the large Methodist Episcopal church, and was cordially welcomed by the minister of the occasion, Pastor Shield.

After the entertaining cantata, the preacher spoke, mentioning, among other things, that he was not concerned over whether the Methodists were in apostolic succession, neither did he worry about it, but that he was proud to regard themselves as in direct "angelic succession." He added that many were the times that angels had spoken peace and comfort to their souls, dispelling fears and troubles.

Monday afternoon I arrived at New Canton, Illinois, and have since arranged to begin services to-night, near the town, in the Saints' neighborhood.

W. H. MANNERING.

Independence Items.

The abundance of rainy weather has clothed the box-elders and soft maples with richest verdure, and vegetation is progressing rapidly. On the 20th the vicinity of Salem Church about six miles distant was visited by a phenomenal hail-storm lasting thirty minutes. There was also a terrific wind here which for three hours put the intramural cars out of commission.

The prayer-meetings of Wednesday, 19th and 26th, were lacking in the attendance of some of our usual number as not all our conference people had returned. All the Easter services were interesting.

The discussions by the conference over matters pertaining to the past year's work have been fraught, we believe, with good, resultant not alone from what has been said and done, but what remains to be said and done,—that which is called the essence of power, reserve. To be sure some of the auxiliaries' work consisted of little more than the reading of reports and election of officers and committees for the ensuing year; but enough of resolutions and reaffirmations of what have always been the governing principles of the church have been passed upon to safely predict a spiritual, moral, and intellectual uplifting never before attained, and every humble representative may with increased faith take up the burden in his or her labor for the building up of Zion.

The Saints here are encouraged by the continuance of excellent instruction furnished by the elders from time to time, by the useful, commendable activities of the younger ones, the incoming of faithful Saints from abroad taking up their abode with us, and the adding to our number by letter and baptism.

Sr. Eva Pearl Lockling from Harrison County, Iowa, a young relative of Grandma Mary Eaton, was baptized last Sunday by Bro. Ammon White, and on last Wednesday Bro. Harry Lyman Smith, a young son of Elder Smith, formerly of Gage County, Nebraska, was initiated under the hands of Bro. H. Garrett.

The Ideal City, a book written by E. Peterson of this place, and which has been widely circulated, received scant favor in remarks made at last Sunday afternoon's prayer-meeting, by Bro. Hilliard and Hulmes.

In one of its chapters Mormonism is "dissected." Speaking of "the true inspiration" of the prophet Joseph Smith, he says, "There are no such ear-marks of genuineness on any of the revelations of any of his successors, and instead of building on the foundations he laid and according to the plans marked out by him, they have established themselves on a commercialism as pronounced as any in the world's history." The author looks with disfavor or ignores the strenuous discipline of the Saints in their advocacy of all the Christian virtues including, of course, social purity, and the sanctity of home, together with the training of the young in the principles of a higher life; and his anathemas extend even to the voting on questions presented to the General Conferences, to the carrying out of the principle of tithing, and of that important one couched in the watchword, vox populi est vox dei.

Our brother caps the climax when he declares the Saints are under the great delusion that "they have the real, genuine, and only true gospel of the kingdom in full operation."

Poor, weak, fallible man may try huge experiments and commit egregious errors, he may approximate the good and the true and improve and develop his God-given powers; but the church of God still will abide on its sure foundation,—the true Messiah, and the Rock of Eternal Truth upon which it is built is secure for ever.

No plan of man's devising though it be instituted for the betterment of his condition can ever attain to the grandeur and greatness of that message brought by the angel three quarters of a century ago,—"a message from the Most High." Millions of dollars may build an "ideal city," but our hope is still in Zion, the pure in heart.

"Not gold, but only man can make
A people great and strong
Men who for truth and honor's sake
Stand fast and suffer long."

Pastoral.

To the Missionary Force and Church Membership of the States of Kansas, Missouri, and Central and Southern Illinois, and that Part of Arkansas and Indian Territory Included in the Spring River District; Greeting: We have just passed another eventful conference; far reaching in an educational way. Indications are that we are nearing an eventful period in the church, hence unity of purpose and concert of action should characterize our every effort during the present year. The measure of success that will attend our endeavors will depend upon our systematic co-operation, persistency of effort, holiness of purpose, and purity of life. That we may be prepared for every emergency that may arise in our field, we will try to keep in touch with each conference appointee, and more especially those whom we put in charge. We urge upon the ministry, traveling and local, not to engage in public discussion without first consulting those in charge. It will be remembered by the ministry that their quarterly reports are due the first of July, October, January, and March. We will furnish blanks for the same on application, and shall expect all to be prompt in sending in their reports. Fill out every item asked for in the blank, and do not leave us to "guess" what you have been doing. That the necessities of the work may be met, we urge upon every officer and member to use great diligence in the performance of whatever duty may fall to his or her lot, that we may find favor with God, and thus secure to ourselves a right to the tree of life, and an entrance into that rest prepared for the faithful in Christ.

That we may be better able to handle the work placed in our charge, we cheerfully choose the following named brethren to assist as ministers in charge of fields named below: A. H. Parsons, in charge of the missionary work in Kansas City and suburbs; Arthur Allen, St. Louis District, excepting the city of St. Louis; James T. Davis, Southern Missouri District; W. E. Haden, Nodaway District; John Kaler, Independence Stake, excepting Kansas City and suburbs; F. C. Keck, Spring River District; W. S. Macrae, Northeastern Missouri District; W. E. Peak, the city of St. Louis and suburbs; T. J. Sheldon, Far West District, excepting the city of St. Joseph, and suburbs; F. M. Slover, Clinton District; David Smith, Southeastern Illinois District; R. T. Walters, Central Illinois District; S. J. Madden, Northwestern Kansas District; James Moler, the city of St. Joseph and suburbs. We have two evangelical ministers, Brn. Henry Kemp and Ammon White, who will be glad to respond to calls in their respective fields, and hold revival meetings in connection with the branch and district officers. That God may recognize us in our united labors, and through our instrumentality enlighten the minds of many regarding the truth in Christ our Lord, let us pray. Commending all to the favor and grace of God, we are,

Your colaborers,

JOSEPH LUFF.
I. N. WHITE.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, April 24, 1905.

To the Saints in Great Britain; Greeting: Having been appointed to labor in the interests of the church in Great Britain another year, I take this means of thanking all for the kindly support that has hitherto been accorded to me, and of soliciting your co-operation in the work of saving souls, and establishing the work which we believe to be of God. Last year we made an attempt to remove some of the difficulties that had for some time militated against the progress of the work, and especially sought to establish a feeling of unity and confidence among the official members of the mission. I hope that we were not unsuccessful in this effort though we are not yet satisfied with the results. There still remains much to be done in this way before we can feel that satisfaction in the spirit of unity that is so absolutely necessary in our work. Therefore we appeal to each and all of the Saints to make every effort to improve the opportunities of the moment in diligence and fidelity. Time is rapidly passing; opportunities come and go; they never return; if they pass unimproved, the loss is ours. In order to experience the real blessings of this work we have espoused, we must give ourselves up entirely in the spirit of complete consecration, taking the splendid example of the apostle Paul, and "count all things loss so that we may win Christ and be found in him." This condition of mind is only to be obtained by the continuous cultivation of love for God and all that is good. As we lose sight of the cares of this life and wean ourselves from the elements of the world we become more and more absorbed in the things of God. We shall grow enthusiastic in the cause that fills the whole field of our desires and affections and surely nothing can be so profitable to us here, as well as hereafter, as the work of cultivating a noble and Christlike character. Personally I feel that it is in this whole-hearted service to God that we are lacking. We are not sufficiently in earnest, and treat lightly and with indifference the things of God. Because of this inertia and carelessness we have not experienced the blessing that the religion of Christ is capable of producing. If this work is worth anything it is worth the very best we are capable of producing. Let us therefore make up our minds that we will make every reasonable effort this year to do something for the Master that will meet with the approval of God. Let our first endeavor be to overcome self, and these selfish anxieties that are so injurious to the spiritual growth. I am convinced that as a people we need more earnest prayer, and the carrying out of our religion into our every-day duty at home and in our daily employment. Let us endeavor to make our daily task our daily religion and mission in life. Again, let us cease to find fault with each other; rather cultivate a happy temperament, being cheerful and kindly sympathetic towards one another. Let us revive the old-time interest in the church services, and so far as we can, let each brother and sister become a missionary among friends, relatives, and neighbors, inviting some one each time we attend the meeting to accompany us; and also resolve not to let a day pass without speaking a word or doing something for the Master. If all would do this, in a single year we could reach thousands, and the seed sown in love and watered by prayer would yield a rich harvest.

I wish to call the attention of the local ministry to the circum-

lar letters which have been issued this last year; and make a beginning to get them worked out into actual experience during this coming summer season. Our missionary staff is not any larger than it was last year and we want to make the best use of the small staff we have at our disposal. In one or two places we have had to have missionaries doing local work in branches and districts. This we wish to be discontinued as soon as we can do so with safety to the work, and the missionaries as we can do so to which they have been especially called. I take up the work to which they have been especially called. I only wish to say that as soon as ever we can see a disposition on the part of the local ministry to do the work that rightly belongs to them then we shall be ready to put the missionary into other fields. No one desires to see this condition reached more than the missionary in charge, but we do not wish to see the work where it has been established perish because there is no one to look after the interests of the cause. I advise, therefore, that the local ministry who are not engaged in branch work place themselves under the direction of the district president and labor in the locality in which they may live. I am also anxious to see greater care exercised in the branches in regard to instructing the members in their duties; to attain this see that the priests are regular in their visiting of the members, and let us try to acquaint ourselves with the spiritual import of the work we profess. I also wish the Saints in this mission to attend to the temporal duties which are involved in church membership. I renew my request that this matter be reduced to a system and that we observe this matter every bit as faithfully as any of the duties that we often discriminate as being spiritual. The church has now declared that it is time that we entered upon the work of consecration more completely than hitherto. This is a means of blessing to those who put it into practice as well as placing means within the church treasury that will enable her to prosecute the work of evangelizing the world. Let us see to this immediately.

The following brethren will labor as follows for the present: Elder Evan B. Morgan, Wales, in sub-charge; Elder James Evans, Wales, including Lydney; Elder W. H. Greenwood, Sheffield District; Elder Thomas Taylor, Leeds District; Elder William Newton, South of England, including London; Elder Frank J. Pierce, Plymouth and Exeter; Elder William E. LaRue, Scotland.

I commend these brethren to the Saints in the localities mentioned and ask your support on their behalf. Should there arise any occasion to complain of any, let me once again state that all complaints must be made to the missionary in charge, after the one complained of has been approached in the proper way as pointed in the law of the church. I hope to be in the mission by the middle of July. My address while in America will be 902 East Grand Street, Elizabeth, New Jersey, United States of America. In gospel love, your brother,

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

To the Saints in the Clinton District, Missouri; Greeting: As I have been appointed in charge of the missionary work in your district, and as I have a desire to reach every part of the field, especially all new places where there are opportunities for presenting the word, and as the field is new to me, I request all who can find open doors for preaching in new places to address me, Box 18, Holden, Missouri, and Brn. George Jenkins, A. C. Silvers, and J. W. Paxton, my assistants in the field, or myself, will respond cheerfully, and take great delight in telling your friends of the angel's message.

We ask all to assist us in this work. And where doors are not opened make an effort to get them opened, and the Lord will bless you, and thus help to push the preaching of the word into new fields as required in Doctrine and Covenants 122: 7.

I pray the blessing of the Lord upon all that we may have a prosperous year.

Your colaborer in the work of the Lord,

F. M. SLOVER.

HOLDEN, Missouri, April 27, 1905.

Notices.

I have been receiving letters in almost every mail, and so many that it will be difficult for me to answer all. However, I will answer all personally, who have sent stamp for reply; but I think I have learned from these letters from different brethren all that you desire to know so I will now answer in this way all these questions. Any of the brethren who are miners will only need to send me their names if they want work in the mines, and try to hold themselves ready to come on short notice. I do not think I can find employment for other than miners. No, I am not a miner. The work is long wall, not room; no blasting; all pick work. The mine is eleven hundred and eighty feet deep, and is reasonably dry, yet not entirely free from water; is absolutely free from gas. Old miners say there is no danger from explosion. They do not riddle coal in the mines; load it mine run; have good roof, no clay; is a union mine. Not many horsebacks. One or two run down to twenty-four inches, then to forty-eight inches. A man can get out all he can let loose, as the mines will not be crowded. They pay for coal as it runs; oil thirty-four cents per gallon. No powder needed; top taken down for roadway. There are some empty houses, but brethren contemplating coming will do well to come first themselves and send for their families afterwards. C. E. Guinand, Atchison, Kansas.

Withdrawn from the Church.

By letter from Elder M. R. Scott, Jr., of Wirt, Indiana, we are informed that he has united with the Christian Church. He does not give the date when this occurred, but requests that his name be dropped from the list of missionary appointees.

Notice is hereby given that he is officially dropped from the list of missionary appointees and is not authorized to represent the Reorganized Church as an officer from this date. His letter bears date of April 26, 1905.

Missionary in Charge J. W. Wight and all district and branch officers in Michigan and Indiana, please take notice.

Signed,

JOSEPH SMITH, for Presidency.

We Are Learning History.

A Chicago man recently wrote to an Oregon paper that many Chicagoans have conceived the idea that the Lewis and Clark Expedition which is to open June 1 at Portland, Oregon, is a sort of Coney Island show managed by the firm of "Lewis & Clark," of which Senator Clark of Montana, is the junior member. Though it was not so stated by the writer mentioned, it is possible that these Chicagoans imagine the renowned J. Hamilton Lewis, formerly congressman from the state of Washington, to be the senior member of the firm.

This truly is rich. Chicago ought to know better than that. Even the schoolboys in this town are aware that Lewis and Clark were two great American historical characters, dead and gone these many years, who one hundred years ago explored the great country lying west of the Mississippi, going up the Missouri River from St. Louis to a point near its headwaters, crossing the Rocky Mountains overland and voyaging down the Columbia River to its mouth at the Pacific Ocean. Our schoolboys know that the success of this expedition, which was sent out by President Thomas Jefferson, resulted in the acquisition of three hundred and seven thousand square miles of territory by the United States, out of which three great States have been carved, Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, not to mention considerable slices along the western parts of Wyoming and Montana.

It is not believed that ignorance as to the meaning and importance of the Lewis and Clark Centennial Exposition is very widespread, even in the East, where as a rule matters of Western history are not considered of intimate interest to the average citizen. But the Lewis and Clark Expedition which is to be commemorated at Portland this year by a great international exposition was of such importance in the growth of our great nation that it would seem that no one should neglect to study it. Captain Meriwether Lewis and his associate, Captain William Clark, were the first Americans to make the journey across the continent. The country which, largely by reason of their prior exploration, was added to our domain, gave the United States its first coast line on the Pacific; and this acquisition led, more or less directly, to the subsequent annexation of California, Alaska, Hawaii, Guam, and the Philippines.

But if the acquisition of the Oregon country alone had been the ultimate result of this expedition, that fact furnishes the people of the Pacific Northwest with a sufficient reason for celebrating the anniversary of the event, and it gives the people of the rest of the United States ample reason to regard the coming exposition as a matter of national interest. Should any further enlightenment as to the purpose of the Lewis and Clark Exposition be desired, the reader is referred to any good library for books relating to the Oregon question, the discovery and exploration of the country, and the thrilling story of its settlement and development.

The Production of Maple Sugar.

The Bureau of Forestry has been studying the maple sugar industry with the view of securing a larger use of the maple forests. Since 1850 the area of maple sugar farming has greatly changed and shrunk. In early days maple sugar was commonly made, even in many parts of the South, because cane sugar was virtually unobtainable. No longer is there even a limited production in South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Arkansas. This is because cane sugar can now be bought everywhere at a low price, and is preferred to maple sugar for sweetening. In Indiana, Michigan, and Illinois the maple-trees have been extensively cut for lumber, thus reducing the opportunity for tree-tapping. In those States also the markets are glutted with imitations, which removes the incentive to extending the industry. In other States, as in Western Maryland, West Virginia, Ohio, New York, and in New England, the maple-sugar industry has held its own or been increased.

The best sap flow is secured in the cooler Northern States, yet good results can be expected in most of Pennsylvania and West Virginia, in Western Maryland, all of Indiana and Kentucky, Eastern Tennessee, and Western North Carolina. At present the largest producers of sugar maple products are Ohio, Vermont, and New York. The sugar and black maples yield the most and the best sap, although some other species of maple may be worked to advantage when neither of these is available.

The maple is a hardy and vigorous tree and readily reproduces itself, so there need be no fear of failure of sap supply. For sap production the all-important consideration is for the tree to have a full and heavy crown. Yet it should also grow under forest conditions which maintain a ground cover of litter and humus.

As a result of the study recently made, definite directions for the management and improvement of existing groves, and for the establishment of new ones in suitable localities and under different conditions, have been prepared and will soon be published. Many valuable data regarding the profit in making maple sugar were also collected. From these it appears that a farmer can easily clear about three dollars an acre from a sugar grove. The expenses in this estimate are placed at a maximum; all the labor and hauling are charged in at market rates, though as a matter of fact the sugar season falls at a time when the farmer has little other employment for himself or his horses. In actual practice, for the farmer who can do most of his own work the profit should be considerably larger. And the land thus utilized will yield little or nothing under any other use.

The old method of collecting the sap by making a diagonal cut in the tree was abandoned long ago because it injured the tree so that it could be worked for but a few years. The approved practice now is to bore a hole one inch deep and three eighths of an inch in diameter into the sunny side of trees over twelve inches in diameter, and to make but one hole in each tree, except possibly where the trees are especially large and productive. Vast improvements have also been made in appliances for handling the sap and boiling it down to sugar and syrup.

Maple-trees now furnish but a small per cent of the commercial maple syrup and sugar. While the demand for both these commodities has constantly increased, the output from maple-trees has decreased during the last twenty years. The trade has been supplied only by radically adulterating the pure goods, or by manufacturing a product entirely from foreign materials. It is conservatively estimated that seven eighths of what is sold as maple syrup and sugar is a spurious article. Most of the fabrications are entirely harmless, but they are not the real thing. Those fortunate enough to have eaten the genuine article will always demand it, and conditions should be such that they may get it, if they are willing to pay the price.

The fault does not lie with the producers, those who tap the trees and reduce the sap to syrup and sugar, but with the middlemen who buy the sugar and mix and adulterate it most profitably for themselves. The extent of this adulteration is illustrated by the fact that while the amount of the raw product has decreased, the whole quantity sold has largely increased and its market price has been reduced. Of late years the price has fallen in direct relation to the decrease in the price of cane sugar.

The most common substitutes used in the adulteration of maple sugar and syrup are other sugars and glucose. Much of the so-called maple syrup on the market is nothing but a combination of sweets with a little maple molasses added to give the maple flavor. There is also a maple syrup which contains no maple at all, but the flavor is obtained by adding to the compound an extract of hickory bark. This extensive adulteration forces the producers of pure maple syrup to compete with cheap imitations. The price of their raw product is kept down, and the forests of maple are not as profitable to their owners as they otherwise might be.

The consumer is entitled to pure goods, and the producer is entitled to have his syrup and sugar bought and used for what it is. The remedy is in the hands of the producers; and they can effect a change for the better in two ways. They can associate themselves in State and large local companies, and, by selling direct to consumers, cut out the middlemen; and they can also put their product on the market in the form not of sugar but of syrup, which is most in demand. The public will not object to the paying a little higher price for guaranteed pure goods. The cost of making and handling syrup might be a little more than that of sugar, but the net returns would be larger, the public better served, and the maple sugar industry profitably extended. The association plan has been adopted in Vermont with excellent results. Annual meetings are held, through whose influence improved methods of production have been adopted, a central market established, and a registered trademark created which is a guarantee of absolute purity. In this way a trade of good proportions has been built up.

Education in Russia.

From the point of view of education Russia presents an extreme variety of conditions. There are parts of the empire, as Courland, Esthonia, and Finland, in which nearly every one can read and write. There are other parts, such as Archangel, Astrakan, and Bessarabia, in which the proportion of the population that can read and write is estimated at not over two per cent. It is only within the last forty years that the Russian government has given much practical attention to the matter of popular education. So far as the mere providing of school accommodations is concerned, a reasonable amount of progress has been made in this time, even though it be true that instruction is not yet to be had by more than one third of the 13,000,000 children of school age in the empire. The latest official statistics show that there are 84,544 public schools in the empire, with a teaching force of 172,000, and costing more than $25,000,000 annually. It has been thought in many quarters, notably by the socialists, that the government purposely retards the spread of education because it thinks that the moment the masses find themselves the autocracy will be overthrown. It is impossible to determine what measure of truth there is in the accusation, but we at least have the word of Prince Sviatopolk-Mirsky, as minister of the interior, that when the present war shall end the government expects to set to work energetically to provide a broader system of education for the people. And the Tzar himself is quoted as saying "Experience has shown such important defects in our educational system that I believe it is time to correct them." However ignorant the peasants of to-day may be it certainly can not be said that they are at all indifferent to education. On the other hand its value is deeply appreciated and the parents are rare who will not undergo any hardship in order that their offspring may learn to read and write. The door of opportunity needs only to be opened to be entered by thousands who have hitherto been beyond its reach. —From "Social and Industrial Russia," by Frederic Austin Ogg in the Chautauquan for May.

May, 1905.

One of the most charming bits of spring verse ever written, appears in the May Cosmopolitan, by Charlotte Perkins Gilman. A two-page drawing sympathetically and beautifully interprets the spirit of the lines:

"Just to be out of doors! So still! So green!
With unbreathed air, illimitable, clean,
With soft, sweet scent of happy growing things,
The leaves' soft flutter, sound of sudden wings,
The far faint hills, the water wide between.

"Brest of the great earth-mother! Here we lean
With no conventions hard to intervene,
Content, with the contentment nature brings,
Just to be out of doors.

"And under all the feeling half foreseen
Of what this lovely world will come to mean
To all of us when the uncounted strings
Are keyed aright, and one clear music rings
In all our hearts. Joy universal, keen,
Just to be out of doors."

A Great Church Convention.

In Des Moines, Iowa, June 22 to 28 will be held what promises to be the largest church convention ever held in Iowa. At that time the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) will hold their Jubilee Convention, celebrating the completion of fifty years' missionary work of that church in the State.

Fifty years ago that church had 7 ministers, 37 congregations, and 3,000 members in Iowa. They now have 327 ministers, 485 congregations, and 60,000 members in the State. Strenuous efforts are being made to have this gathering eclipse any gathering of the kind that has ever been held in the State, and it will not be at all surprising if 25,000 people attend these sessions. The church is waging a strenuous evangelical campaign this year. They have their hearts set on winning 10,000 souls for Christ during the year and have for their motto "Each one win one." The ministers and churches are unitedly pushing the interest of the convention and are taking offerings in their respective congregations to support the missions of the State.

The Wiles of Adulteration.

Comparatively few consumers realize to what extent foods and drugs are adulterated and misbranded, says the May's World's Work. Most of the spurious products are sold in States other than those in which they are manufactured or produced. Strawberry jelly is most commonly made of glucose and timothy seed, and colored with aniline dye. Cigars are frequently sold as Havana though made from tobacco grown in Virginia, Kentucky, or Missouri. Furniture made from Wisconsin bass-wood is polished and sold throughout the country as mahogany. Syrup composed of glucose and cane syrup is sold under a maple syrup brand, though it does not bring a maple syrup price. Cotton-seed oil is sold as olive oil, though it does not bring the price of the genuine product.

Enormous Bills for Adulterated Food.

Honorable Porter J. McCumbe, senatorial sponsor for the Pure-Food Bill, says in the Independent: "The Secretary of Agriculture some years ago estimated the sale of adulterated articles of food in the United States in a single year at one billion one hundred and seventy-five million dollars, or about fifteen per cent of our entire commerce in foods. He made his estimates upon reports from the food commissioners of the several States, and from such other sources as he could command; and then, to be conservative, adopted but fifty per cent of what the total results showed. Considering the vast amount of misbranded and adulterated goods consumed which escapes the attention of those engaged in the enforcement of the law, my judgment is that the results should be doubled rather than diminished." —Henry Irving Dodge in Woman's Home Companion, for May.

TRACTS—ATTENTION WRITERS.

We need a number of four-page tracts, to contain about the same number of words as one page of the HERALD, or six hundred words each tract.

The following subjects are suggested. 1. Revelation—what is it? Its need. 2. The angel's message—its history. 3. The gospel—what it is. 4. Faith. 5. Repentance. 6. Baptism of water. 7. Baptism of the Spirit. 8. Laying on of hands, (a) For confirmation, (b) Gift of the Spirit, (c) Ordination, (d) Blessing of children, (e) Spiritual blessings, (f) Healing of the sick. 9. Resurrection from the dead. 10. (a) Judgment of men, (b) Judgments of God, (c) Eternal judgment. 11. (a) Mercy of men,

(b) Mercy of God. 12. The redemption. 13. The hope of Saints. 14. The intermediate state, (a) Of the righteous, (b) Of the unrighteous. 15. (a) The final destiny of the Saints, (b) The final destiny of the wicked. 16. The gifts of the gospel. 17. The Spirit—its office-work. 18. The church—an instrument of salvation. 19. The church—its organization, officers, etc.

We want our writers to furbish up their pencils, look up their sermons and notes, and then "boil 'em down," to the prescribed limit and thus help the work, and incidentally themselves by the educational process the opportunity will afford them.

TROUBLE FOR EVAN ROBERTS, THE WELSH REVIVALIST.

It appears that the Welsh revivalist has met with unlooked-for trouble. He lately denounced a congregation of two thousand evangelical Christians at Liverpool, saying of them that they were not founded on "the rock." Reverend Daniel Hughes, a Baptist minister of Chester, publicly resented this at a meeting held on Friday evening, April 14, at which the revivalist was present on the platform but entirely silent for more than two hours, while others were praying and speaking. Reverend Hughes insisted that the revivalist should become reconciled with Reverend W. O. Jones, pastor of the insulted flock, before he should feel at liberty to exhort others to repentance.

At the same meeting Reverend H. M. Roberts, Calvinistic Methodist, insisted that the revival as conducted by Evan Roberts "was not the work of the Holy Ghost," but "the work of the genius of man."

Reverend Daniel Hughes, in a letter to the South Wales Daily News, of April 15, wrote this of the movement:

But, when Mr. Evan Roberts claims to receive sensational messages from high heaven, and dogmatically asserts that a section of the Christian church as such is not founded on the Rock (by which, I presume, he means Christ), then I think it is time that all sane and justice-loving men should enter a protest as strong (if not as bitter) as the monstrous charge. Visions are not confined to Evan Roberts. He can not monopolize the Holy Spirit; he is not infallible, though he acts as if he were. And this young evangelist comes to Liverpool and bans on the authority of God a community of evangelical Christians, numbering over two thousand Christians who are led by devoted servants of God, whose chief leader has been a spiritual cheer to many hearts, whose home is like Bethany's, whose prayer at Westminster-road meeting expressed (without hysteria) depth of conviction and a closeness of contact with spiritual realities; whose one aim is the extension of the kingdom of Christ, Christians who have brought a large number of the stray souls of Liverpool to a fold and a home, who have sacrificed greatly and have been blessed greatly by the heavenly Father; Christians among whom are old and tried men of prayer and service, who have evangelized in Liverpool in a humble way ere Mr. Evan Roberts was born.

Yes, these are the people who are told by this young magnetic person that their church is not founded on the Rock. Liverpool should cry "Shame." No; visions are not confined to Evan Roberts. I have also received a vision; it is from God. I received it, it is true, without physical paroxysms before thousands of highly strung worshipers, but in the quiet of a Presence which stands for justice, love, service, and this Spirit moves me to write. I wish I were not called upon to do so, but it is the Spirit's message. Evan Roberts can do with it what he likes, it comes direct from God, the burden is too heavy for me to bear, I must deliver it.

"Brother Evan Roberts, look to yourself and pray for forgiveness, confess the bitter injustice you have perpetrated. Seek the Reverend W. O. Jones, fall on his neck and weep, he will be ready to forgive; see that, before you speak in the name of God again, you are right with your brother in the ministry. You rightly divined that the 'obstacle' was there—in the ministry. Look still nearer home, and behold it entering the chapel as you make your appearance."

A VOICE FROM THE PAST.

In the True Latter Day Saints' Herald for October 15, 1875, issued nearly thirty years ago, we find an editorial which appeals to us as being worthy reproduction, especially at a time when some are fearful for the welfare of the church because brethren have been permitted to express their convictions through our columns. The editorial is as follows:

FREE SPEECH.

We had thought it unnecessary to refer to this subject again, so far as the HERALD is concerned; but it appears that there is not yet a common understanding between the patrons of the HERALD and its Editor.

That a certain degree of oneness should necessarily exist between the various contributors to the columns of the church organ, may be expected; but that there should be absolute sameness of view and expression, upon each and every topic discussed by so numerous a band of writers, many of whom have never seen each other, and are living widely separated and surrounded by differing conditions of life, and have been obedient unto the "one faith" from widely differing denominations, is hardly compatible with well-known human characteristics.

Besides this, if it is presumed that the HERALD is the organ of the church, is it to be presumed that it does or should reflect only that which is in accordance with the views of one, and he be made perforce the censor of the press? To illustrate: One writer states, "I am sorry to see so much difference between the writers of the HERALD." Another states, "I dislike so many contradictory articles in our church paper." Another, "It can hardly be called a standard of decision." Now, each of these expressions carries the idea that there should be dogmatic certainty in every article that is published in the HERALD, and that that certainty is certified to by some one in charge. If this were conceded to be the case, then each article published would be a finality upon the topic discussed in that article, and neither the authors of the expressions referred to, nor any others would be at liberty to criticise or differ from that finality—and it is quite certain that neither of those writers would be willing to be silent, if the views expressed by another were to them erroneous; nor would they consent to be concluded by them, hence, though a theoretical certainty is plausible, and a departure from it seemingly dangerous, an absolute certainty is out of the question.

Again, a church organ is thought to be accessible to all within the fold; to be as free to one class of thinkers as to another; to be the common forum whence every orator who may choose may speak. If this thought is correct, to whom has been delegated the authority of absolute rule? Who shall say to this man, "Go up and speak"; and to another, "Refrain from going up"? Or when one shall have spoken, who shall say that another, if he differ from the first, shall not speak?

That a large discretionary power should be permitted whoever may be placed in charge, needs no argument; but that in the exercise of this power, he is absolute, and dogmatically certain, is difficult to support; and as a free man in Christ, we have only this to say, If there be one whom the church can trust with such a power, and he will consent to assume the prerogative of its exercise, then it is better that he be placed in charge, provided that the church deem it to be wise to create such a censorship.

To be able to so retain in memory every position assumed by different writers for the HERALD during an editorial charge of ten years, as to prevent a possible collision between later and former productions, would be very remarkable; and to be without this memory would necessitate an amount of constant and laborious research that few would care to expend, as upon the receipt of an article for publication there would need to be a present comparison with all others already published upon the same or similar topics to see whether there might not be a direct or constructive conflict of sentiment or doctrine; and if such conflict was found, the former, by reason of its being first published, must be the standard rule of correctness by which the latter must be condemned as incorrect, and be excluded, no matter what its real merit may be.

When persons write for the HERALD upon any subject in regard to which he or she thinks light has been shown to him or to her, the views presented in such article are essentially their own; and are not the views of the Editor of the paper, nor of the church, as a body; neither is the church as a body, nor the Editor as an individual, under any obligation to defend those views, further than their intrinsic worth upon examination may warrant. All persons then, writing, should bear in mind, that because their articles are published in the church organ, they are not therefore necessarily the expressed sentiments of the Editor and of the church, and thenceforth, for that reason, doctrinal to the church. Nor should they forget that they are expressing their own views, subject to the examination of all the readers of the paper in which their writing appears, and of course subject to approval or disapproval upon such examination.

The Editor is quite willing to be held accountable for what he writes; and he thinks this responsibility great enough, without being held to answer, morally or mentally, for a corps of writers gathered from so many classes of thinkers as is the one contributing to the HERALD.

So far then as the HERALD being a standard of decision is concerned, whatever the church declares through its columns is decisive upon the points involved; so far as the opinion of the Editor, either as editor or as an officer of the church, may be a standard, whatever he has written may be so taken as decisive upon the points involved.

So far as contradictions between writers of articles are concerned, we have this to say, Some of them are only apparent conflicts, while others are honestly-held views upon points in regard to which the church has not spoken. And it has been thought by the Editor in charge, that, until the church does decisively declare upon those points, the public examination of them might result in good, while no possible permanent injury could accrue to any one. Until convinced otherwise, or positively instructed to the contrary, such will continue to be the policy of "ye Editor." We believe in "free speech."

From time to time readers of the HERALD are very much disturbed because of the opposing views advanced by contributors to its columns, and the Editor is blamed by some because, in the exercise of his discretionary rights, he does not eliminate those articles containing expressions contrary to the views of other writers or members in the church.

The HERALD is the official organ of the church; and its object primarily is the enlightenment and advancement of the Saints. Its columns should be open to all who desire to express a conviction, in a brotherly way, which tends to draw out thought, and lead to a consideration of the doctrines and policies of the church, as well as the views and opinions expressed by others. The right does not suffer from a thorough, careful consideration.

The theories and opinions and convictions expressed by any writer through the columns of the HERALD are his own, and he alone should be held responsible, whether editor, minister, or layman. And to accept the HERALD as a standard of decision would be, in our judgment, a mistake. The revealed law of God is the standard of decision; any theory or opinion not in harmony with the law may safely be rejected.

The Bible is of value to us because it presents to us a true history. Not only does it reveal the virtues of our foreparents, of Abraham, Jacob, David, and Solomon, but their errors and transgressions also. Not only does it give an account of Peter's strength and integrity, but it tells us of his weakness. Not only does it teach us of the faith and power of the apostles, but it reminds us that sometimes the contention was sharp between them. While they labored earnestly for the Master's cause, they also "sought occasion one against the other." If the Bible told only the good, it would be of little value to us as a history. Then why should not the HERALD present conditions as they are, rather than otherwise? Can we gain anything by pretending that we are perfect, when we are all well aware that perfection has not obtained? How many have declined to accept the message of light because they discovered that the name Saint was not yet a synonym for perfection? A good many it may be. But how many more have had their faith shattered and all but smothered out after subscribing to the requirements of the divine law, by becoming acquainted with conditions which, if they had known and considered before, would now be no stumbling-block to them?

The discouraging feature to us is not that there are differences of opinion, but that any should seem to deplore a discussion of differences in a right way, and would prefer to remain ignorant or keep others in ignorance of real conditions. We must realize that we are imperfect, before a step can be taken toward perfection.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Speaking of the labor strike now in progress in Chicago, the Public for May 6 says: "The sad thing about all this menacing turmoil is the blindness or indifference to its real nature, of those who engage in it or encourage it or weakly deplore it. The employer thinks it a violent outbreak of the lower classes, which can be put down by superior violence. He ignores the obtrusive fact that there may be an exciting cause of increasing intensity. In that case the superiority of violence will almost certainly shift, in the not distant future, and make of him and his, helpless victims to their own selfish pride. Let him remember the arrogance that preceded the French Revolution. On the other side of the picture the idealistic labor unionist, acting in response to an economic pressure which he feels but does not understand, thinks to relieve it by coercively organizing the working classes into a body that shall treat an injury to one as the concern of all. He ignores the fact that the pressure he feels may be one of increasing intensity, and that in such cases organization may not be able to keep pace with it without a degree of coercion which means riot, troops, slaughter, and the gallows. Labor unionists of the business type view the matter in still another way. They expect to lift their own class of labor above the level of the lower labor classes by safe and sane business methods. They overlook the fact that a lower class of labor is all the time a competitive menace to the class above, and that no isolated unionism can long withstand it. Another type is the ideal nonunionist. He is a sturdy believer in the right of free contract between employer and employe—almost as much so as is the employer who finds him a convenient catapult for battering down the walls of unionism. . . . As for people who deplore these troubles, but neither think with vigor nor speak out like men, lest they may check an income, or anger a parishioner, or lose a client, or get disliked in a club, or be marked as a crank, or otherwise suffer some petty annoyance—as for them, can they not realize what will happen if there is an intensifying cause for labor troubles? The time must soon come when that cause will bring on ir retrievable disaster, in which even they, their own dainty selfish selves, may be engulfed along with the rest of us."

Some of our missionaries were holding meetings at Hastie, Iowa, last spring, and it seems that one newspaper man disapproved of the misstatements of another newspaper man, as evidenced by the following clipping from a local paper: "The pompous scribe at Hastie steps forth and declares that the Latter Day Saints are a well-behaved people, but their theology is rotten. Doesn't this malformed bigot at Hastie know that the Book of Mormonism is authenticated by exactly the same kind of evidence as proves the divine origin of our Bible? Of course, teachers and directors, as well as every one else who come in contact with them, know that they are always kind, fair, and courteous. Attend their meeting, and at the close of service you will not have to suffer insult by having a man with a narrow strip of forehead above his nose, shove a hat in your face and vulgarly beg for money. They live their religion, and their daily lives show a sincere reverence for God and all that is good. Their church at Hastie is growing in numbers and influence, notwithstanding the frantic attacks of the intellectual mid-get on the hill."

William E. Curtis in Chicago Record-Herald: "The Mississippi River drains an area of 1,240,050 square miles, 41 per cent of the territory of the United States, 1,800 miles from north to south and 1,500 miles from east to west, embracing ten entire States, portions of twenty-two other States and part of two provinces in Canada. More than 80,000 miles of rivers and streams and 15,000 miles of navigable rivers are tributary to the Mississippi, and between its banks it is estimated that 780,000,000,000 cubic feet of water are annually carried to the sea. This, however, is only 25 per cent of the rainfall, the remaining 75 per cent being consumed or lost by evaporation or absorbed by the ground while en route."

A room in the Museum of Fine Arts, a thoroughly fire-proof building at the Lewis and Clark Exposition, has been secured for the exhibition of relics of the Lewis and Clark trip to the Pacific coast, which this year's exposition is to commemorate. A fine collection of powder-horns and other pieces of equipment carried by the exploring party, and now owned by Major O. F. Clark, a grandson of the explorer, will be seen; also a camp-chest which was given to Captain Clark by the Marquis de Lafayette. This is now in the possession of Mrs. J. K. Clark, a granddaughter living in New York. Many other interesting relics are to be shown.

The railroads have agreed upon one fare for the round trip from all Eastern points to Portland, during the Lewis and Clark Exposition. This is the cheapest first-class transportation ever offered from the East, and it will afford opportunities for seeing the Pacific coast country which may not be repeated in many years.

The West Side Chicago Branch now meets at 989 West Harrison Street,—a new place.

SEARCH THE COMMANDMENTS.

SERMON OF ROBERT M. ELVIN, AT INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI,
JULY 10, 1904.

(Reported by Marie H. Morgan.)

Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled.—Doctrine and Covenants 1:7.

It is not our wish to add to nor take from that which the speaker of the morning offered, nor to make any attempt to amplify upon the theme that he presented before you. But after long years of careful study in this world with the earnest desire in my heart from the beginning of my labors to approve myself before God, and to be entitled to eternal life when the warfare was over, I have not tried to waste any time but to be diligent in complying with every commandment that I have found recorded within the three books of authority given to the church. And I know of no particular place where the worshipers who come together in the hope of that which is taught in these three books are more deeply concerned and interested in getting what God has in store for them than the congregation I speak to to-night. There may be others who are equally interested, but no one can have a greater interest. With you it is a paramount interest; comprehends all of life here and the unending cycles of eternity. There can come no benefit, no blessing, by mistaken labor; and the highest, the best, the most earnest desire of every heart that claims to be a Latter Day Saint should be to know what God requires. And if they possess the faith that the children of light should possess, there is no task, no labor, no sacrifice that will be too great or irksome for them to perform that they may be entitled to the crown that fades not away. This injunction, then, "Search these commandments," in the Doctrine and Covenants, has more meaning than a paragraph in your daily paper. It has a deeper significance than the utterances of any man who may stand here as a witness and testify to the truth. In its far-reaching comprehension, it takes in the labors of all the officers of this church and every member thereof. The bulwark of our security now and hereafter shall depend upon how accurately and faithfully we comply with the commandments that God has given; so that should there come to us trials of spirit, loss of life, and the spoiling of our goods, there will be an anchorage that is sure and steadfast and we will be assured of the truth that God has established this work. The searching of these commandments has the promise contained in this short paragraph that all the promises and prophecies contained in this record will be fulfilled; and it is of great importance to us that we should know what promises God has made and discover what prophecies are contained in this record; and then have wisdom with the acquired knowledge to make a right application of that revelation or that commandment that will be helpful to us in doing our duty and earning the reward of the righteous. We wish to connect with this statement a few scriptural statements; and if your speaker is able to make you see the importance of these citations as they appear to him, he will have more than accomplished good this hot, sultry evening. The first citation is found in Isaiah 8: 20:

"To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

That scripture is just as applicable to Latter Day Saints as it was to the people of God when uttered by the euphonious voice of that sweet, godlike man, the star of the Old Testament; and it has more than a passing bearing upon our work. "To the law and to the testimony." I will try to demonstrate by other references how far reaching is this thought of our being directed to the law and to the testimony, and how much it should enter into our life-work in the preparing of individuals to stand as proper representatives of God's kingdom here on earth. In addition to that, the apostle Paul, the great apostle to the Gentiles, in writing to the Thessalonian saints uses this verse (it is upon the tongue of every Latter Day Saint): "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." How much does that reach, and where is the individual who has accomplished or compassed that small verse? Have you seen him? Where, in all the ranks of this church, is the man or woman who has gone out in the vastness of God's universe and proved all things? It comprehends from the morning of creation down to the present time. It takes in the scope of the vast work that God's people have accomplished all along these years of the past; and there is not one who has carefully read the records of the past but he is prepared to say to you that along the shores of time the wrecks of righteous men are found by reason of their not being successful in holding fast to that which is good.

Now, taking these thoughts in connection with that which forms the basis of our conversation to you, we discover there is an importance attached to it. It was the Master who said in his time, "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." Of the same import and just as valuable to us is the searching of these commandments. The former are not moved out of the way. They are not disallowed by those later. They are but supplemented and strengthened and supported by this new revelation that has come to this church to search these commandments, for in these commandments directly we find the connecting link in which we are commanded, and your minister tells you from Sabbath to Sabbath, that the man who stands in this pulpit should teach the gospel as it is contained in the Bible, and in the Book of Mormon and in these commandments, and if he has not the Spirit he should not teach. Thus we unite, then, these scriptural statements that we have referred to. It was the Master who gave evidence, as he labored here, pointing to the prophecies of the past, directing the attention of the people to the prophecies of the time in which he lived, and gave as an evidence that when these things had come to pass they know of the truth of them. The history of our church dates back now for about seventy-five years of active history, and I do not know just what the opinion of every individual is. I must say to you that after nearly forty years of experience, I have found that it was necessary for me to change my opinion upon some things that were taught when I first became acquainted with the work of the Latter Day Saints. Not that I have changed as to the cardinal principles of the doctrine that have been presented; but there is, and always has been, and I suppose will continue to be while mortality has to do in this present probation with the things of God, a certain amount of speculation, a certain regard to the opinions of men, a degree of enthusiasm that takes the place of solid facts and God-revealed inspiration, and these things are the chaff that is found among the wheat, and we will have to be satisfied. Had it all been wheat, had there been no uncertainty, had there been no possibility of our stepping aside, these commandments would not have been given, or the statement found in the New Testament that at a certain period—and I am not so sure but you and I are living proximate to that time, if not in that time, when the adversary shall come he shall be so successful in his labors that if it were possible he would deceive the very elect. The Master thus puts us upon our guard and gives to us a degree of inspiration if we accept of his word.

One of the favorite things among the ministry of the church is to tell the Saints that they must watch and pray. Watching seems as important as praying, being coupled with the ending. They must watch; and who are they to watch? I do not know that I have any right to answer for any one in this congregation but one, and that one is to be watched. God gave me a commission to watch him. His name is R. M. Elvin. I have a right to watch him. We have, I was going to say, two kinds of Latter Day Saints. I think perhaps I better not limit the number, but there are that number at least. There is one kind who are always willing that the work should be successful. They are perfectly willing that the other one should do the work. They want part of the reward, however. There is another kind of Latter Day Saints that when anything is said that is corrective, that points out to them a duty, as I heard a good old brother out in Nebraska once make the statement, they came to church with a pitchfork, and when there is anything said to correct a wrong, they always catch that on the pitchfork and throw it over to Bro. Brown, or Bro. Jones, or Bro. Smith; it belongs to him. And then they will tell you what a wonderfully good sermon the preacher delivered, but it all touches somebody else. Another class of church-goers go to church with a rake, and everything that is said, whether of a corrective nature or whether of an encouraging character, or whatever may be the nature of it, they rake it in, take it home, turn it over, examine it, see how it will fit them. I have tried to carry a gospel rake with me now for more than thirty-eight years, and the only way that it will be possible for me to prove all things and hold fast to that which is good is to rake it all in and then work out the chaff when I have time to pray and think and study. I can not possibly afford to go to church and carry a gospel pitch-fork and throw everything to the other brother, for possibly he will get all the plums, and I will go hungry; and I am just as anxious to be spiritually fed as any other individual possibly can be.

Now there is a scriptural quotation, a lengthy one; I will not attempt to read it, but I will call your attention to it and if I cull it will do it in harmony with that which is presented. 1 Kings, chapter 22. When you go home it will be a good thing to read this entire chapter. The circumstance, to make it plain, and as short as possible, was that there were two kings, one of Israel and one of Judah. King Ahab of Israel had had a real estate misfortune and Syria had taken away from him, as he considered unjustly, a portion of his territory called Ramoth-gilead. And after thus depriving him of the right to the government of that portion of his country, his fellow associate, King Jehosaphat, came down to pay him a visit and I do not know just how the conversation came about. I am not aware of what led to it, but Ahab said to Jehosaphat, Did you not know that Ramoth-gilead belongs to us, and it is unjustly held or kept away from us, and now will you go with me? I want to take that place back. And this good King Jehosaphat said, I am as you are; my men as your men; my horses as your horses; my chariots as your chariots. That is, I place myself and my kingdom at your command. If you want to go up to Ramoth-gilead I will go with you. They had a practice at that time that in all they undertook to do, they first would go to the Lord and ask him what he had to say concerning it, to find out whether the Lord would approve of their efforts. So they held a conference and called together the prophets. They held a big meeting and there were four hundred prophets. They all prophesied with one voice and said to these two good kings, Go up to Ramoth-gilead and prosper and take the place. I look by the eye of faith back to that conference and I peer into the face of Jehosaphat, that honest king who put himself in obedience to the other king, Ahab, and I hear him speak. Is there another prophet of the Lord, that we may inquire of? Were there not four hundred of the Lord's prophets who prophesied, and with horns of iron made a great demonstration, and said that these two kings should go up and be successful? What's the matter with Jehosaphat? He has heard the testimony of four hundred, and he yet said, Is there not a prophet of the Lord? I see old King Ahab hold down his head. Yes, there is Micaiah, the son of Imlah. I hate him. Oh. Let us hear what Micaiah has to say. Well, Ahab did not like to send for him. He was not among that four hundred. He has taken no part in that great demonstration. But Jehosaphat seems to have hesitated now. Let us hear what Micaiah has to say. King Ahab calls a faithful officer: Go up to the house of Imlah; bring Micaiah; let us hear what he has to say. Away goes that faithful soldier and servant of the king; comes to the house of Imlah; inquires for Micaiah; says to him, We have had a great feast; we have had a wonderful demonstration; glorious outpouring of the Spirit; four hundred prophets have testified that we are going to have a grand victory at Ramoth-gilead. Now you come and you say just what the other did. You testify just as the four hundred did. Micaiah was brought by that soldier, that servant of the king, into the presence of the kings, and I think I see him with bowed head, and he says, Go up and prosper. He had to say just as the others had said.

Then something takes place, marvelous, wonderful. It is something for us to think about. That same man had prophesied in the presence of Ahab before. He had said that Ahab would go up and that he would die when he went up. Ahab had heard that man when the power of God rested upon him and there was sufficient light and understanding in that king's mind that when this Micaiah said, Go up and prosper, he knew there was no God in that statement, and he said, How many times shall I adjure thee to speak only that which the Lord shall command thee. I see a change in that prophet; that man of God who had come obedient to his king; as a citizen, he had done just what the servant told him to do, Say, Go up and prosper. He straightens himself up and declares that he had looked into heaven and there he had beheld a council of God, and in that grand council he had witnessed a spirit go up before God and the question was, Who should go and deceive Ahab? This spirit had said, I will. And the Lord inquires of him, How are you going to deceive him? He replies, I will go and I will put a lying spirit into the mouth of all his prophets. The Lord said, Go, and you shall be successful; and we see what the unity of the working of that spirit was. Four hundred men, inspired by the lying spirit, had said to that king, Go and succeed. Did the king believe the four hundred, or did he believe the one? He got real angry. He said he hated Micaiah, and he got angry when this prophet prophesied and told him what he had seen. He said, Take that fellow; put him in the prison. Feed him on the bread of affliction and upon the water of affliction until I return in peace; and well might that man of God in humility say, Yes, if you return in peace then God hath not spoken by my mouth. He could go cheerfully to the prison and eat the bread and drink the water the king had appointed. Did the king believe the four hundred, or did he believe the one? Which? Let us see what the sequel to this is. They got ready and went up; banners flying; bands playing; why, it was a regular Fourth of July celebration when these kings went up to take Ramoth-gilead. But old Ahab shows evidence of where his confidence was. He says to Jehosaphat, You put on your royal robes and I will disguise myself. Where is the evidence he had any faith in the testimony of the four hundred? He disguised himself, and Jehosaphat went into the battle in his royal robes. The king of Syria said, Fight not against small or great; only against the king of Israel, and as the thirty-two captains leading the army of the Assyrians looked over the battlefield, they saw but one king. Obedient to their king they concentrated their forces upon Jehosaphat, and his army, and they pressed him so closely that he stood up in his chariot and told them who he was, and they turned around and hunted for somebody else. They were not caring anything about Jehosaphat. They wanted Ahab. There was not another king in all the ranks of that Israelitish army; but one man at a venture,—that is, I am going to take my chances now,—he placed the arrow in the bow and pointed that bow and took aim at a man in a chariot, and that was the fatal arrow. It smote the king, Ahab, between the joints of the harness, and he said to his driver, Turn aside out of the battle; I am wounded! and as the sun went down he died in his chariot and the dogs licked up the blood, as Micaiah said they would, and that night there went out the proclamation, Every man to his own city and every man to his own home; Israel is left without a king.

What has been may be again. Along the line of latter-day Israel there has been just as great manifestations of deception as there ever were among former Israel, and there is not a man living to-day who is able to stand up and say to you there may not again come crises in which we must meet the powers of the adversary. We are not free from the encroachments that shall be made upon us by the dulcet voice of that vile spirit of deception that will creep in among us and lead astray. And when the tall cedars are struck and they have their influence and guide astray, I ask you then where is your security? Where is the bulwark behind which you may stand and be absolutely safe when the crash will come? Is it because the testimony of many has come? I answer to you, without fear of successful contradiction, the only hope of every Latter Day Saint is in the commandment, Search these commandments, for every prophecy and every commandment and revelation contained therein shall have a fulfillment.

I suppose the best part of my sermon will be to make it very short this evening, but I have just a few things to say to you. I might talk several hours. There is plenty of room, and certainly something of interest in it. The first attempt to have a Book of Covenants was in this city in 1833, and in 1879 I plead with the Latter Day Saints in this place to purchase the lot upon which the printing office was—the one torn down, and the first issue of the Book of Covenants called the Book of Commandments was scattered to the four winds. They could have purchased that lot for four hundred dollars then. It would have been a grand center for you Latter Day Saints had you built your church there. The next effort was in 1835. Then a Book of Covenants was compiled, given to the world. In that Book of Covenants was found what is now in this book section 111, the article on marriage, and that article remained in the Book of Covenants in every issue, in every edition, from 1835 until 1876. It was then removed and a document claiming to be a revelation was placed in lieu thereof. The same parties who took that revelation or that section 111 out of the Book of Covenants have taken one out and put twenty-four in, making a change of twenty-five sections in the Book of Covenants. I want the elders to take notice. You search the history of the church of Latter Day Saints from its beginning up to the present time, along the line of the Reorganization, and the only article on marriage we have ever had is what is found in section 111. You go West and ask those individuals what is the article of their marriage, and they will point up to 1876 to that article on marriage, and since 1876 they have no article of marriage. They have no rule of marriage, and how they perform that article, and that act I do not know. Search their history. They threw them out and from that day to this they have had no article upon marriage. You inquire of their ministers, and they will tell you that that so-called revelation of July 12, 1843, was placed in the Book of Covenants. Mr. Andrew H. Anderson, in his history of the church printed two years ago, makes the statement that it was placed in the Book of Covenants and you could find it there. The young ministers who go out, born since 1876, testify that that so-called revelation is found in the Book of Covenants. Turn to the cold facts of history and inquire concerning this, and you will learn the solid truth that that so-called revelation never saw a printing office or never came to light through the public print until 1852. It was first published in the Deseret News; then published in the Seer at Washington, District of Columbia, and in the fall of that year it was printed in the Pearl of Great Price in Liverpool, England. I possess some of these documents, and as I further tell you it never found its place in any Book of Covenants until 1876; and when Wilford Woodruff testified concerning the matter he did not know who took section 111 out of the Book of Covenants, and he did not know by what authority that so-called revelation of July 12, 1843, was put into the Book of Covenants. These were two things he did not know.

But here is the point that I wish to call your attention to: That Utah to-day has more influence in the things of America tenfold than this Reorganization has. They can obtain a better advertisement through our great newspapers than we can, and they are testifying by the hundreds and by the thousands as to the difference between us. Now, then, "To the law and to the testimony." "Search these commandments," and I tell you people from that which I do know that if you have trouble in the church and depend entirely upon the testimony, you may have abundance of testimony. If your testimony is contrary to the law and an appeal is taken you will lose your case. The law first; the testimony afterward. Now there is something solid there. God's law is adamant. There is no shaking it, and every Latter Day Saint will be admonished and assisted from on high, while with all due care they give honor and attention to that which is taught to them by the duly appointed officers of the church. I hope I do not commit heresy (if I do I must take the consequences) but I want it distinctly understood wherever my voice is heard that neither prophet, president, apostle, or bishop, or any other man shall ever lead me one single step beyond that which God has pointed out. And it is my duty to know what the law directs; and it is my duty to stand shoulder to shoulder with those who are preaching his truth. And when we stand upon that solid foundation I tell you, dear Saints, the heavens will bend down and the earth will teem with blessings, and the glory of God will come into your hearts, and it will then never be too hot nor too cold to go to church. You will stand like faithful soldiers in every hour of trial. In death the glorious thought that will be in your hearts shall be, I have fought a good fight; I have kept the faith, and there is for me a crown that fadeth not away. "Search these commandments."

When you get into a tight place, and everything goes against you, till it seems as if you could not hold on a minute longer, never give up then, for that's just the place and time the tide'll turn.—Harriet Beecher Stowe.

THE PATRIARCHAL OR EVANGELICAL ORDER, IS IT
ESSENTIAL IN THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST?
CALLING AND DUTIES OF PATRIARCHS
CONSIDERED.

BY THE ORDER OF EVANGELISTS.

INTRODUCTION.

Harmony is one of the leading evidences of truth. Where there is no harmony there is no truth; but whenever and wherever true harmony exists, there is truth. Every new truth (new to us because not known before) will harmonize with the old, for truth never conflicts with itself. No more can we expect to find one principle of truth in conflict with others, than to find God in conflict with himself!

The gospel of the Son of God is the grandest system of truth ever revealed to man. Its different parts are all harmonious, each principle having an important part to perform in the salvation of the children of God. And as the whole system came from God (see John 7:16), it must necessarily harmonize with him in all its parts, and as a whole. It follows therefore (and for other unmentioned reasons), that the most needful and important thing for the children of God to do is to make themselves truly acquainted with the living and true God. Or, to put the same thing in another form, to learn the truth, obey it, and abide in it, is our salvation. "This is the whole duty of man."

The purpose of this booklet is to show that the calling and work of patriarchs, or "evangelical ministers," is an important part of the divine plan, and as such, is found to be in complete harmony with the character of God; that it supplies true and important spiritual demands, and in all its parts agrees with the sacred history and gospel doctrine set forth in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. The subject is a grand one, and it will not fail to interest and instruct the lovers of truth, who have faith in God, both in the church and the world.

It has been and is our grand privilege to live in the beginning of "the dispensation of the fullness of times"; or as expressed by another apostle, "the times of restitution of all things, which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." (Acts 3:21.) Let us not forget, therefore, that we are living in the times of restoration, in which all things which are in Christ shall be gathered together, in one, both in heaven and on earth.

God's work is progressive; and notwithstanding the backslidings and apostasies of his people, every dispensation is, in some sense, in advance of preceding ones. The one to which we have just referred is, therefore, the greatest of all. It is not strange that at the beginning of this latter-day work, the precious truths of ages should be brought to light and made operative in the great preparation which must precede the return of Jesus Christ to his people, invested with power and glory, to reign in righteousness and peace.

HISTORICAL CONSIDERATION.

In making the effort to throw some light upon this important subject, we are aware that we are entering upon a field of seeming mystery, one which very few have searched thoroughly; and it may be that we will not make plain to all our readers, and to their satisfaction, the subject we have undertaken. If, however, we can establish as a historical fact that such an order of the priesthood, or office, has been recognized as part of the economy and order of God in the history of the past, we will have answered the object of this writing. There is no trouble in recognizing that the Bible gives historical data clearly showing some sort of patriarchal order, in the early history of God's people, and his dealings with them.

HISTORICAL PERIODS.

In fact the Scriptures seem to be divided into three historical periods,—the Patriarchal, Prophetic, and Christian; and until the restoration by the angel's message, little thought had been given to the subject of the Patriarchate. In fact, comparatively few ever heard of it.

Believing, as men did, that that age with its influences and purpose had long since passed away, and like the Prophetic Age, had received its fulfillment and ceased to be, having answered its end in the great economy of God's time, and the necessity for it had ceased since the ushering in of the Christian Age; that God having spoken once for all, through his Son Jesus Christ, revealed his will, making it his last will and testament to man; hence all that had gone before had answered the purposes for which they were ordained, and had passed away.

THE CONNECTING LINK. THREE IN ONE.

To reach the truth in this subject, and learn of its importance, we need to discover if there is any connection of a permanent character, between the Patriarchal and Prophetic Dispensations, and between these two and the Christian, and so link them together as to form a chain of priesthood authority which it would be dangerous for us to break, or to lose any of its links, if we anticipate arriving at perfection through the means which God has ordained from the beginning; and we are forced to admit that he did ordain the whole system from the beginning. To hold otherwise, would apparently admit that each age has been only an experiment, and this would submit us to the humiliating thought that two ages have proved a failure, so far as the work of God is concerned, and that the Christian Era may also pass away as a failure! Then we would be made to feel the weight of that saying,

"For since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation."—2 Peter 3: 4.

Solomon, the wise man, is credited as saying: "The thing that hath been, it is that which shall be; and that which is done is that which shall be done; and there is no new thing under the sun."—Ecclesiastes 1: 9.

Ecclesiastes 3: 14, 15: "I know that whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him. That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth that which is past."

THE HISTORY INCOMPLETE.

We have only a meager history of the human family at the best; and even that found in the Bible, which claims to reach back to the beginning, is wonderfully deficient. At least the King James version seems quite lacking as to a record of the immediate family of Adam and Eve, and still it is the best the world has to rely upon. We believe our researches will show many points wherein a more detailed account of important events would be very beneficial to us at the present time.

NOTED PATRIARCHS.

The beginning of the Patriarchal Era seems to start with God's choice and call of Abraham, after the episode of Noah and the ark and the flood. And because of Abraham's faithfulness his name was changed and he was no more called Abram, but Abraham was his name and the land of Palestine was given to him as an inheritance; and as Abraham had no children, God wrought wonderfully in his behalf, and Isaac was born, and Isaac became the father of Jacob, and to Jacob were born twelve sons; and these men are called the patriarchs, and we may thus number them, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and the twelve sons of Jacob. The world looks upon these ancient fathers of the house of Israel as the patriarchs, and the beginning of the Patriarchal Age.

And thus, from this account, it has followed that a father of a large and numerous family is called a patriarch. But has not the name some other significance? We think it has.

Much has been written concerning Israel and his twelve sons, but the object of this research will be to find others who may rightly be called by that appellation. We notice that Israel, ere he departed this life, called his sons around him, and as a patriarch and father, blessed them; and he also, as a patriarch, blessed the sons of Joseph, his grandchildren, and in so blessing them he claimed them as his and named the name of Israel upon them, and in them he places the hope of Israel and salvation in the latter days.

This is seen in the inspired blessing placed upon the head of Ephraim, the younger son of Joseph, who was sold into Egypt. Witness a portion of Joseph's blessing, Genesis 49:24-26:

"But his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob; (from thence is the shepherd, the stone of Israel;) even by the God of thy father, who shall help thee; and by the Almighty, who shall bless thee with blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lieth under, blessings of the breasts, and of the womb: the blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills: they shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren."

Here we see the hope of Israel placed upon the sons of Joseph, even Ephraim and Manasseh, grandsons of Jacob.

How different the blessings of these patriarchs. Some of them sound very much like a cursing instead of a blessing. To Judah was promised the kingly power till the Shiloh should come, whom we understand to be Christ. History tells us this blessing has been fulfilled, and Judah is known to this day, though scattered in all parts of the world. Ephraim and Manasseh were to become a multitude in the midst of the earth.

The patriarchal character of these men is clearly shown, and their calling made manifest. We now wish to introduce another class of witnesses and see if there is any relation of a spiritual character between them.

We notice that Abraham was contemporary with one Melchisedec whom the record calls the high priest of God, or perhaps more correctly speaking, "the priest of the most high God." Here we have two men; types of two classes, both great men. Much is said of one, the history of whose family fills the good old Book, and his descendants can be traced to this day; but of the other, there is not much written, and yet he was, if anything, the greater man of the two.

GOD'S HOLY ORDER.

The apostle Paul writes of this Melchisedec, Hebrews 7:1-4, Inspired Translation: "For this Melchisedec, king of Salem, priest of the most high God, who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him; to whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all; first being by interpretation King of righteousness, and after that also King of Salem, which is King of peace; for this Melchisedec was ordained a priest after the order of the Son of God, which order was without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life. And all those who are ordained unto this priesthood are made like unto the Son of God, abiding a priest continually. Now consider how great this man was, unto whom even the Patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils."

This great man brought forth bread and wine and ministered to Abraham, and blessed him, and Paul says, "And without all contradiction the less is blessed of the better."—Hebrews 7:7. Here is one point on which it would be well if we had more detail in history. Who were the people over whom this great man exercised his ministerial functions? Where was the city over which he ruled as king?

What relation do these two men and their calling have to the gospel economy, if any? There is no dispute about their being patriarchs in those days, and considering that the Melchisedec priesthood was on the earth, and co-existent with the patriarchal order, it is but natural that when the one is found active, by command of God, the other should also be found. In other words, when God restores the one in all its working power, we may expect him to restore the other; and that is just what we believe he has done. The authority of one of these men is recognized as necessary in the gospel economy for the salvation of the race: and if this be true, why not the authority and calling of the other?

These questions trouble some, who are believers in the restored gospel and the re-establishment of the church and kingdom of God in these latter days; hence the effort to connect these dispensations, and bring them together in their work. We desire, if possible, to show the relation, association, and usage of God's order, established in ancient as well as in modern times. If it can be clearly shown that the same order existed in the days of the early patriarchs, it is but reasonable to suppose, it being of God, or God's order, that in the restoration or re-establishment of the church and kingdom in latter days, the office and calling of patriarch will be found. It is conceded that the patriarchs, or many of them, possessed the prophetic gift, as witness Genesis, forty-eighth and forty-ninth chapters, also 2 Peter 1:21, which reads as follows: "For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

And those patriarchs of old possessed in a marked degree, above those who surrounded them in their time, this wonderful gift. It is almost impossible for us in this late day to think of God having a priest, or high priest, among men, outside of the Mosaic and Christian order or dispensations; yet we have the record of a high priest of God administering the emblems of the body and spilled blood of our Lord, the wine and the bread, also acting as a patriarch, blessing Abraham, who was also a patriarch; acting as a bishop, that is, receiving tithes because of his office as the priest of the most high God. And all this long before the Mosaic order, or economy, was established. Using only the popular or King

James Translation of the Bible, we are left to conjecture and speculation, as to the historical events surrounding Melchisedec, the King of Peace.

Two points are plain in this record, however. First, Abraham was a patriarch; second, he was obedient to the law and the priesthood. He paid his tithing.

Here we have the two orders in active operation, the patriarchal and the law of temporalities of the Christian economy, working in harmony long before the law thundered forth from Mount Sinai.

ANTIQUITY OF THE GOSPEL.

To strengthen this thought, we seek farther. In Acts 7:38, it is written: "This is he, that was in the church in the wilderness with the angel which spake to him [Moses] in the mount Sina, and with our fathers: who received the lively oracles to give unto us: to whom our fathers would not obey," etc.

Here we have both Christ and the church in the wilderness before the Mosaic law was received. And again, it is written in 1 Corinthians 10:1-4: "Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea; and did all eat the same spiritual meat; and did all drink the same spiritual drink; for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ."

The gospel economy again. This time baptism, and also the sacrament, and the presence of Christ among the patriarchs, or the children of the patriarchs, long before Sinai. But let us continue. Galatians 3:8: "And the Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed." Also verse 17: "And this I say, that the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, can not disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect." In verse 19: "Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator."

From these evidences we conclude the gospel was preached to ancient Israel, but did not profit them, not being mixed with faith; and for this cause the Mosaic law was given of which one writer says, Hebrews 7:19:

"For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did; by the which we draw nigh unto God." Referring to the gospel as the better hope.

Again, the law of the Mosaic Age, which is generally said to be the beginning of the Prophetic Age or Era, according to the apostle Paul, was given as a "schoolmaster" to bring the children of Israel unto Christ.

There is a point we wish to make here. God called Abraham, and after awhile Abraham's descendants got into trouble and could not get out of it by themselves; but God remembered them and called again. This time Moses is called, by the angel in the burning bush, and God interfered for the temporal good of Israel, and the families began to be led by prophets. Two calls. Prophets now guide Israel.

By and by, the time having rolled around, God moved again for the redemption of Israel, and the angels again came down and warned Mary and Joseph, and the shepherds on the mountains; and Christ the Son of God had come. The result is the preaching of the pure, primitive gospel, the means of salvation, not only for Israel, but, now, for all the world. The church is organized, the order of God established, the kingdom of God set up with its officers, as ordained of God, and as in the beginning. The power of God is again made manifest, and men rejoice and are obedient for a time. Then, again, the children of Israel, both the natural born and the children by adoption through the gospel, get into trouble by transgression and apostasy, and can not get out of it by themselves; for the more they try the worse the confusion in the world, and the farther men stray from the primitive order. God foreseeing this trouble, foretold what would take place. And when the time was fully ripe, he sent his angel to fulfill what he had foretold by the mouths of all his holy prophets, the restoration of his order, as at the beginning. And order came out of confusion to those who believed the call, for God did call again, and like his former calls, his angel does his bidding and brings the message, "the everlasting gospel," and the authority to preach it, the Melchisedec priesthood. As a result the church or kingdom of God is established in these latter days.

STATEMENTS OF MOSHEIM.

We must not forget that men have tried to keep a history of the church and kingdom, which resulted from the labor of Christ and his disciples, for many have tried to keep it in mind and have written much, some of which we shall now call your attention to, not forgetting the object of this paper. Doctor Mosheim is, perhaps, among the best of ecclesiastical writers, so we will use his writings. We shall not make the effort to multiply evidences, but use a few from this source, and pass on. Volume 1, page 37, 1860 edition the history says:

"The extraordinary teachers whom Christ employed to lay the foundations of his everlasting kingdom, were the twelve apostles, and the seventy disciples, of whom mention has been made above. To these the evangelists are to be added, by which titles those were distinguished whom the apostles sent to instruct the nations, or who, of their own accord, abandoned every worldly attachment, and consecrated themselves to the sacred office of propagating the gospel."

Again in volume 1, page 137, 1860 edition, we have this record which we introduce simply to show that the office of patriarch was known in the Christian church in an early time in its history:

"It was much about this time [A. D. 451] that Juvenal, bishop of Jerusalem, or rather of Ælia, attempted to withdraw himself and his church from the jurisdiction of the bishop of Cæsarea, and aspired to a place among the first prelates of the Christian world. The high degree of veneration and esteem, in which the church of Jerusalem was holden among all other Christian societies, (on account of its rank among the apostolical churches, and its title to the appellation of Mother Church, as having succeeded the first Christian assembly founded by the apostles,) was extremely favorable to the ambition of Juvenal, and rendered his project much more practicable than it would otherwise have been. Encouraged by this and animated by the favor and protection of the younger Theodosius, the aspiring prelate not only assumed the dignity of patriarch of all Palestine, a rank that rendered him supreme and independent of all spiritual authority, but also invaded the rights of the bishop of Antioch, and usurped his jurisdiction over the provinces of Phœnicia and Arabia. Hence arose a warm contest between Juvenal and Maximus, bishop of Antioch, which the council of Chalcedon decided, by restoring to the latter the provinces of Phœnicia and Arabia, and confirming the former in the spiritual possession of all Palestine, and in the high rank which he had assumed in the church. Thus were created in the fifth century, five superior rulers of the church who were distinguished from the rest by the title of patriarchs."

Previous to this the churches were in a manner independent, having been the result of the missionary labors of the apostles, and having been presided over by bishops and patriarchs or evangelists; but now these ambitious officers began to extend their jurisdiction, encroaching upon the rights and jurisdiction of others, and a quarrel began which spread throughout all the Christian churches. A contention for supremacy, as to which office was paramount, that of bishop or patriarch.

The historian continues relating the contentions upon this subject, until the contending bodies seem to have engulfed the whole Christian organization. One of these bodies located headquarters at Rome, and was presided over by a bishop, whose title was subsequently changed to that of pope. This body assumed the title of the Holy Catholic Church, or Universal Church of God.

The other contending body located at Constantinople, and was presided over by a patriarch, who also claimed to be the supreme head of the church, commonly called the Greek Church. It is now the state church of Russia, still presided over by a patriarch. The Czar is the head of the church, called in Russia, "the Little Father."

Please note that both evangelists and patriarchs are here recognized as ministers of importance in the early Christian churches.

DIFFERENT DISPENSATIONS HARMONIOUS.

The common definition of the title evangelist is "a preacher of the gospel"; but historical records lead us to believe a more comprehensive meaning was understood in the early days of the church. We have seen in the above brief mention, that evangelists and patriarchs were officers of great responsibility and importance aforesaid. Under the common definition of the word, men claim the title who represent no church, no organization; they simply preach, but fail to preach the gospel, as revealed in the Scriptures. They assume this right.

However, we have another witness to examine, and then we will bring, if possible, the dispensations together in office, work, and object. The biblical history, in some respects, is lacking, and in some places so ambiguous that it has been assumed that the translation is defective, and many translations have been the result of such assumption, and the effort to correct said errors. As a part of the result of the angel's message in these latter days, we have a corrected translation of the Bible, and we shall introduce it now, in our closing arguments on this subject. Our readers must remember that one object of this writing is to show, if possible, the relation of each dispensation with the others; for we recognize that if each be the work of God for the good and salvation of man, there must be harmony in all. We use the Inspired Translation of the Holy Scriptures, which we have, because, to us, the internal evidences of inspiration prove it to be the best work of any to which we have had access. The early history of the race is more complete, as given therein, and in harmony with the New Testament.

It may seem late to premise, in this article, that God to be just to all, and no respecter of persons, must have ordained the same law of redemption for those who lived in the morn of time, as for those who lived in the meridian, or the eve-time of the world. So we believe, and hence we claim for him his unchangeable character. But we look in vain in the popular version, the King James, for information of the opportunity having been given to our father Adam and his immediate posterity, to obtain salvation through the gospel order.

But in the version we now introduce, a more detailed account is given of the early history of the first family, and a careful examination of it adds very materially to our understanding of God's character; and it gives us a beautiful view of the solicitude of our heavenly Parent to redeem all mankind, beginning the plan of redemption right where the first need for it occurred, giving to Adam and Eve a chance to save themselves, and to teach their children the plan of salvation. In the fourth chapter of this work is related (after the Lord had driven Adam out of the garden) how that sons and daughters were born to Adam and Eve; and these sons and daughters began to separate two and two, and till the land and tend flocks, and to multiply and replenish the earth, and have dominion over it, as God had commanded. And God spake unto Adam, and commanded him to make an offering unto the Lord, and Adam was obedient and did so. After many days an angel asked him why he made an offering unto the Lord. Adam's answer was, "I know not, save the Lord commanded it." Adam had had some experience in disobedience, and had evidently come to the conclusion that whatever God commanded, that was the thing he was going to do. Then the angel of the Lord preached the first gospel sermon we have any account of, and revealed to Adam the means of his redemption. Thus God began the work where it should have begun, at least so we think. And in the sixth chapter it is stated that God himself talked with Adam and explained the matter in full. (See the fifty-second verse.) And from this record we learn that Adam was not only willing, but anxious to get back into the good graces of his Creator; so he was baptized and received the Holy Ghost, and afterwards was ordained and became an evangelist, and God commanded him to preach the gospel to his children. Thus Adam became the first evangelist, and I think none will deny that he was the first patriarch among men.

THE APOCRYPHAL NEW TESTAMENT.

For the benefit of many of the HERALD readers who have not been blessed with the opportunity of a perusal of the Apocryphal New Testament, I submit a few notes, extracts, and observations on the same.

Section 88 of the Doctrine and Covenants, is a revelation on the Apocryphal Old Testament, given 1833 at the time the work of translation was in progress. When coming to the apocryphal portion and probably meditating the propriety of translating it the following instruction was given: "There are many things contained therein that are true, and it is mostly translated correctly; there are many things contained therein that are not true, which are interpolations by the hands of men . . . and whoso is enlightened by the Spirit shall obtain benefit therefrom."

While the circumstances of this revelation might have a tendency to impel the belief that it has an exclusive reference to the Apocrypha of the Old Testament instead of the New, they being then engaged in the translation of the Old and coming to the Old Testament Apocrypha, there is certainly no such an indication in the revelation, and with what facts and data are at my access I come to the conclusion that the Lord had in view the whole Apocrypha, Old and New, and that it is as referable to one as to the other. That is, that some of the New Testament Apocrypha may be true, may be beneficial; that it may also embody some untruths and interpolations. In the doctrinal matters the portions untrue and in conflict with the accepted word of God might be detected and perceived by the average Latter Day Saint without any especial conferment of God's Spirit to enable him to do so. But with the historical portions it is different; as, for example: Euclid's elements, which were formulated by that sage some four hundred years before the coming of Christ, are principles which are provable, demonstrable to-day; Catholic historians inform us that when Paul was beheaded at Rome his head struck the ground in three places, at each of which there came a spring of water oozing up, in which instance we only have their say-so for it, and though possibly it is true we entertain our reasonable suspicions. In the reading then of the historical portion of the Apocryphal New Testament, unless it happens to be a correspondence in relation with our accepted records, we have a reason to doubt until the still voice of the all-discerning Comforter whispers, It is true.

Some of its promiscuous utterances I have been able to ascertain were false from the fact that they were diametrically opposed to known truth—known to us—and I should judge them to have been written by some party, rather mysteriously concocted to support some dogma, some creed, some innovation of Catholicism. The introduction of many of the corrupting changes was gradual,—invocation of saints, the sale of indulgences, the decree of infallibility, etc.; and you know it was easier to have some incredible manuscript to appeal to than nothing at all. You know it was easier for Brigham to put up the "private-lock-and-key" plea, than make the definite statement; "I received this direct from God."

I should say in regard to the Apocryphal inspired translation that if the historical matter is true it is very important inasmuch as it brings to view many items respecting the infancy and early life of Jesus not even alluded to in the New Testament. Indeed, the New Testament is almost a blank in reference to his acts from the time of the cradle till a thirty-year monotony is broken by these words: "Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." Who has read what is said concerning Jesus in the four testimonies but who have said to themselves: "I wish we had a fuller history. I would like to know more about him in those middle years that are left in doubt"? Comfort is a priceless ingredient in the well-being of our lives, and who will attempt to question the vastness of the comfort accruing to us from having our wanderings, our mind-soarings satisfied, even though that which answers the end suggested has no bearing on our daily life?

The Apocrypha is historical, epistolary, and there are the commands, similitudes, and visions of the last and truly unique book of Hermas, who is said to have been "brother to Pius, bishop of Rome." There are no less than twenty-four books, by less than that number of authors, for like the Bible and Book of Mormon in some cases one man is the author of several books being entitled by the name of the person or congregation to whom they are addressed.

With the epistolary writings, some of them, against which no objection can be raised in regard to their contents, one finally has this question: Are they genuine? that is, true or untrue; were they written by the persons to whom they are ascribed? Take the epistle of Barnabas and Clement, the instruction is wholesome, is self-recommendatory and really their nature impresses me as quite beyond any ordinary capacity in respect to their spirituality and the excellent and sweet breath they do exhale. In them, as also in others, there are to be found some utterances which are rarely coincident with some of the peculiarities of this latter-day work. Some grand truths are enunciated which are repudiated by all, or nearly all, but our people. It is very perspicuous then that one reason why some of them were thought unworthy of a place or of a retention in the canon was because they inculcated some things which were not accepted at the time their spuriousness or genuineness was decided on by a council of select scholars. Had all the scholars and ecclesiastes who have borne a part in the receiving and eliminating of manuscripts purporting to have been written by the apostles or early ministers of the church while it is admitted that inspiration still continued to manipulate the faithful servants of Christ; had they been as unprejudiced as a mariner's compass, I thoroughly believe that some of the books which are now apocryphal would compose a part of the New Testament. The Bible-makers had preconceived ideas. They were chained to a stake of discipline and everything had to bend to that.

Another point which must not escape the attention of the apocryphal reader is this: that it is not a correct conclusion to arrive at that a certain book is spurious simply because we find something, some isolated item that we know to be untrue. The section in the Doctrine and Covenants from which I quoted an extract at the outset makes this provision—that there are "interpolations by the hands of men." Interpolation is suggestive of the genuineness of that which is not interpolated. It is not proper to speak of any whole book as an interpolation. An interpolation is a passage that is supplied or introduced by other hands than the one to whom the book is ascribed. There are thirteen lines in Josephus in relation to Jesus Christ. It is affirmed that it was fraudulently put there by the monk Eusebius. If so it is properly an interpolation; because he put it there as the words of Josephus and did not put his own name to it. Even if this be true—which has been much mooted—it does not follow that none of the book was written by Josephus.

The revelation on the Apocrypha says there are many things true, many things untrue, and some interpolations. It says nothing in regard to inspiration, whether any of it is inspired, or whether not. It is easily conceivable how in that sphere it may rank equal with the New Testament, very little if any of which claims of itself the character of inspiration, or to have been indited by such a measure of the Spirit as would exclude all possible errors. John by inspiration received the Apocalypse, but whether he wrote it by inspiration is a different question. It is not very difficult to see how a man might have a wonderful vision and yet afterward make a mistake in recording it. It seems that John recorded the accounts of what he saw while he was yet in the Spirit; and if so it is doubly inspired, so to speak, as the facts recorded were communicated to him by the Spirit and under the impulse of the same influence he was guided in penning them. The question then is not, Is the Apocrypha inspired? but, Is it true? Not only that, but, Is it genuine?

Parts of the Apocrypha profess to have been received by divine revelation, visions, etc. If these revelations were really received and reported correctly they are much for our profit and edification.

The books in their order are Mary, Protevangelion, 1 Infancy, 2 Infancy, Christ and Abgarus, Nicodemus, The Apostles' Creed, Laodiceans, Paul and Seneca, Paul and Thecla, 1 Corinthians, 2 Corinthians, Barnabas, Ephesians, Magnesians, Trallians, Romans, Philadelphians, Smyrnaeans, Polycarp, Philippians, 1 Hermas, 2 Hermas, 3 Hermas.

Mary is attributed to Matthew, Protevangelion to James the Lesser. Abgarus and Jesus to the two. First Abgarus writes a letter to Jesus and Jesus replies. The book Nicodemus is attributed to the same Nicodemus who came to Jesus by night who, it is claimed, afterward became one of of Jesus' disciples. Laodiceans is by Paul. An epistle bearing that title is referred to by Paul in his letter to the Colossians. It is possible that this is the same epistle. It is very brief, pointed, nothing in it objectionable that I can see. Paul and Seneca consists of an exchange of letters between the two. Paul and Thecla (a woman) is an account of Paul and this virgin written by a third person.¶ She heard Paul preach, became converted and suffered martyrdom for her religion. Corinthians, first and second, are attributed to Clement, a disciple of Peter. It is said that he was bishop of Rome, and again that he was an apostle. Such a name is mentioned we know in the New Testament. Barnabas is attributed to Barnabas, the companion of Paul. It lays a greater claim to canonical authority than most others. Ephesians, Magnesians, Trallians, Romans, Philadelphians, Smyrnaeans, and Polycarp are all ascribed to the one author—Ignatius. Philippian is by Polycarp, and Hermas by Hermas himself.

Mary, the first book, records considerable information with regard to the parentage of Mary, her birth, her virginity, vow of chastity, espousal to Joseph, her conception, etc. It records that the names of Mary's parents were Joachim and Anna; that they were barren; that an angel promised them a child; that they lived in Nazareth in Galilee; that Mary was educated in the temple, being taken there at three years of age; that she came in contact with Joseph while there and by miracle and revelation the high priest determined the alliance of the two.

The book of Protevangelion represents Joseph as a widower; that Jesus was born in a cave three miles from Bethlehem and afterward consigned as follows: "But Mary learning that the children were to be killed, being under much fear, took the child, and wrapped him in swaddling clothes, and laid him in an ox-manger, because there was no room for them in the inn." Jesus speaks of Zacharias (in New Testament) who was slain by the Jews "between the temple and the altar." It has been mooted as to what Zacharias he alluded to. This book says it was the father of John and that he was murdered for withholding from Herod the news of the whereabouts of his son John. After the death of Zacharias, Simeon is chosen by lot as his successor.

The gospel of the infancy of Jesus says that he was born in a cave; that he spoke from the cradle; that "the wise men came from the East to Jerusalem according to the prophecy of Zoradascht" (Zoroaster). Zoroaster was a Persian philosopher who founded the Magian religion, whose date is indefinite and personal history unknown. It is quite possible that the Magi were acting on a prophecy that had been made by one whom they revered as a prophet, one of their countrymen, rather than on the strength of one in the Old Testament of the Jews which says "His star shall be seen." But if there is any genuine book in the Apocrypha that deserves suspicion it is this one called the Infancy. It is either ingenuine, or if once genuine and authentic it has certainly been atrociously mutilated. The authenticity of much of it is extremely doubtful, whoever wrote it. It gives such accounts as: a person turned into a mule and the mule turned back into a person; of Judas Iscariot being a demoniac in his infancy; of Jesus doing miracles at seven years of age and in his infancy. When I read this book I can see the foundation Ingraham had for his story of Jesus in his boyhood when at play with other boys making mud sparrows and imparting life to them so that they all flew away. It speaks of James as the son of Joseph. In fact the Infancy puts me in mind of the Arabian Nights' Entertainments.

The book of Nicodemus contains many details in regard to Christ's trial, crucifixion, and death not found in the New Testament. It gives the testimonies of a number in his favor who had been healed by him and thus testified before Pilate. It declares that two sons of Simeon were in the resurrection of Matthew 27:52, 53, and that Christ visited hell and translated some from thence to "everlasting light." It speaks of Satan as the "prince and captain of death," and of Beelzebub as the prince of hell. A foot-note says: "St. Jerome affirms that the soul of Christ went to hell." The prince of hell being apprised of the approach of Jesus into hell said to Satan, "Bring not therefore this person hither, for he will set at liberty all those whom I hold in prison . . . and will conduct them to everlasting life." It speaks of them in hell as "prisoners," "captives" and declares that he "with his invincible power visited those who sat in the deep darkness."

Again (17:7), "Who art thou who dost release the captives that were held in chains?" And, "He has broke down our prisons from top to bottom, dismissed all the captives, released all who were bound." Chapter 20 describes the two witnesses mentioned also in Revelation 11 and says it is to be Enoch and Elijah. That might be. Chapter 21 says Michael was resurrected with Christ. Chapter 22 says it was two thousand, two hundred and twelve years from the creation to the flood.

Clement says in 7:10: "The merciful shall inherit the earth; and they that are without evil shall be left upon it."

One most objectionable feature of Clement to the compilers was his statement that there were "worlds beyond the ocean."—9:12. America was undiscovered at this time and it is possible that the author was inspired as Isaiah was in 18:1, 2, where he spoke of a land beyond Ethiopia.

In 17:40 Clement says, "He that made us, and formed us, brought us into his own world; having presented us with his benefits, even before we were born" (italics mine).

Priests in the church are spoken of in 20:24. Second Clement teaches a literal resurrection; that we shall "come to judgment in the flesh."

The tenor of the writings of Clement shows the church was drifting into the darkness of apostasy which he was trying faithfully to restrain.

Barnabas teaches baptism for the remission of sins in chapter 10. He says (verse 10) that Christ "has joined both the cross and the water," that we (verse 11) "descend into the water"; (verse 14) that "we go down into the water full of sins and pollutions; but come up again, bringing forth fruit," etc.

Chapter 12 says that God creating the world in six days and resting on the seventh signifies that "in six thousand years the Lord will bring all things to an end." The seventh is the millennium. The eighth, he says, is the "beginning of the other world"—after the millennium. "For which cause we observe the eighth day with gladness, in which Jesus rose from the dead." Not a very good passage for Seventh-day Advents.

Ephesians also teaches baptism for the remission of sins. It speaks of purifying "water to the washing away of sin." (4:9.)

Trallians says that Christ was raised from the dead "after the same manner as he will also raise up us." (2:12.)

Philippians teaches that there were "priests" in the church, (2:13), also that Paul was a married man, (4:6.)

The diction of Hermas is strange. If it is genuine and authentic there is certainly one interpolation we run across right on the start. It says (1:6) God "hath made all things out of nothing." Then 3:42, says we are "saved by water." The latter chapter (verse 79) also teaches that there will be degrees of glory in the next world; that after some have "been afflicted and fulfilled the days of their sins" they shall be placed in a "lower rank."

Second Hermas 4:18 says, "We go down into the water and receive the forgiveness of our sins." Same book, 9:6, contains the following wholesome counsel: "Wherefore purify thy heart from doubting, and put on faith, and trust in God, and thou shalt ask. But and if thou shouldst chance to ask somewhat and not (immediately) receive it, yet do not therefore doubt, because thou hast not presently received the petition of thy soul. For it may be that thou shalt not presently receive it for a trial, or else for some sin which thou knowest not. But do not thou leave off to ask, and then thou shalt receive."

There are other things in Hermas that are almost conspicuously consonant with some of our teachings which are not regarded with particular favor by our religious contemporaries. It teaches in a very impressive mode that rewards and punishments will be proportionable to the deeds or misdeeds, the fruitfulness or barrenness, the good or bad of the individual. Chapter 7 of 3 Hermas is comparable to section 90, Doctrine and Covenants. The latter brings to our intelligence some words of reproof administered to some of the leading officers of the church, including Joseph himself, because they had neglected their duty in regard to the proper tuition and discipline of their families at home; for which cause, some of them it appears were in affliction.

Through the writings of the early Fathers and those who wrote during the first four centuries after Christ we learn the names or titles of about seventy apocryphal pieces not now extant.

Thirteen Christian authors of the first four centuries contain (in their works) catalogues of the books of the New Testament. Some of them leave out Hebrews and Revelations, and Origen omits James and Jude from his catalogue.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

A SERIES OF FAMILIAR TALKS INTENDED FOR USE IN LOCAL SOCIETIES AND HOME CLASSES.

BOYS WILL BE BOYS!

Yes, and it was the intention of the infinite mind that they should be boys, else they never would have existed as boys.

But was it the intention of infinite wisdom that spirits should take bodies and first defile them, then turn from the evil of their ways and walk in the paths of honor, truth, and virtue?

You will certainly join us in saying, Never!

The results of care and culture are to approximate perfection, while decay and death follow in the train of neglect.

Go to Nature and there contemplate this law. Why is one field of grain full-grown and ripening for the harvest with heads so heavy that they bend beneath their own weight, while a neighboring field is shriveled, choked with weeds, and promising little in time of harvest except tares and chaff? It may be (for it often is found to be the case) that in each field both seed and soil were equally good, but the husbandmen differed. The one was faithful, vigilant, and industrious, working intelligently for the obtaining of the best results; the other was shiftless, careless, and doing all that was done in an indifferent, haphazard way, trusting to chance rather than intelligently directed efforts for results. We do not live in a world of chance, but a world governed by law—a world of order; hence the failure.

There on the sloping hillside stands an orchard, every tree of which is bending beneath the weight of healthy fruit in different stages of growth and ripening, while just a stone's throw away is another orchard in which the trees are gnarled and stunted and much of the fruit worm-eaten, blasted, and rotting on the ground. No need for the intelligent mind to ask: Why this difference? Upon the one trained and careful thought and labor has been bestowed; the other has been neglected. The orchard like the field of grain has many absolute needs as well as many enemies. These needs must be supplied, these enemies must be known and also the means of destroying them, if we hope to obtain the best results. But all this knowledge may be in our possession and we yet fail because we neglect to apply it in time.

Far up in the mountains a little rivulet wended its way trickling from its source in the hillside spring towards the valley below. So gently it flowed, and so meager its volume, and shallow its bed, that the hand of a child might have blocked its way and changed for ever its course. And yet the rivulet of the mountain and the rushing, maddened torrent bidding defiance to man were one and the same stream, and there was a time and a place when it might have been turned into a channel so broad and deep that none need have suffered from the overflow of its waters.

Like the brook far up in the mountains, the child in its infancy is intrusted to the guidance of its parents and it is in their hands to determine its course; but wisdom is required to direct it aright. You who are familiar with the word of God given to his church in this last dispensation will recall with feelings of intense gratitude the fact that God has not only made the wonderful provision to the need of which all nature points; but he has emphasized this great law in regard to children by making it the subject of direct revelation. (See Doctrine and Covenants 28:13.)

In this revelation we are told that God for a certain length of time restrains Satan from tempting children. That until children are old enough to be accountable for what they do the adversary of all righteousness is not permitted to influence them. Is not then this tenderly susceptible period of life the time above all other times in which parents and teachers should strive earnestly to plant and water the seeds of truth, virtue, and everlasting life? Nor is it enough to plant and water; they must be cultivated, watched over, and nourished with ceaseless care, in order that they may grow and strengthen day by day, and sinking deep in the heart of the child so fasten their roots in his very being as to make it impossible for later influences to ever wholly eradicate them. Through all the years of manhood to come—through tempest and storm of temptation, trial and sorrows, far beneath all the angry waves beating against his life—like gems that lie at the bottom of the ocean, safely imbedded beneath overlying sands, will remain the underlying truths, planted in the heart of the boy by father, mother, and teacher, and watched over and nourished by faith and prayer.

O fathers, mothers, and teachers, can you think of these things unmoved! Can you voluntarily assume responsibilities so great without earnest thought and careful preparation? Far back in the history of time God commanded his people concerning his law: "And these words which I command this day shall be in thine heart: and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down and when thou risest up."

This then is the atmosphere our heavenly Father intended should surround the children born to his people—a faith-pervading, faith-creating atmosphere, and it is made obligatory upon parents to provide such. Wisdom is needed, but let no one forget that "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom," and the test of our love to God is obedience to his commandments.

"I may have made mistakes, but I have done what I believed right according to our faith," were among the last words of Pope Leo XIII, and as Saints it is this firm belief in the word of the Lord and above all the carrying of our belief into practice which we need. "The law of the Lord is perfect," but we need to know his law and knowing to obey it if we would retain our children in the fold, and this law must be taught them from their very infancy. It is not enough that our children are presented to receive a blessing, but the Lord demands it at the hands of parents that they shall be taught to pray and shall be so thoroughly instructed in the gospel that they will be ready for baptism when eight years of age. This is certainly our faith. Are we living in accordance with its principles?

If each member of the church were impressed with the absolute necessity of this, and more, if it were done and faithfully done by each, there would still be need for work by our organization. The grain of our fields, the fruit of our orchards, as well as the flowers which beautify our homes, all have their deadly enemies. Our government has, at great expense, established experiment stations from whence the valuable information obtained by trial, observation, and study is sent out to the people, and those who are wide-awake and progressive gladly avail themselves of it. To them is given free that which has cost others much labor, time, and money to obtain.

In the church are women (some are mothers, others are teachers, and yet others are neither) who have had much experience with children and who love them. Some of these have made childhood a special study. This has in many instances demanded of them both time and means. There are also aged women who have raised large families and learned much in the hard school of experience. Do such owe no duty to the church, to society, and is it not reasonable to suppose that from such meeting together for counsel and study—exchange of ideas and comparison of notes, good should result? As the whole is greater than any of its parts, so ought such a body or meeting to be wiser than any one of its members, and from such meetings good should emanate. Meetings of this kind are found to be necessary in all things pertaining to the acquisition of knowledge. Even the ministry of the church are holding them and why should not mothers?

Program for June Meetings of Daughters of Zion.

1. Hymn No. 179.
2. Prayer.
3. Reading from HERALD.
4. Paper: "How may I sow seeds that will bring the best results during the first twelve years of my boy's life?"
5. Vocal music.
6. Paper: "How may I prevent the wild-oat period in my boy's life?"
7. Address: "Is eight years of age too young to have our children baptized?"
8. Discussion of above papers after the reading of each.
9. Closing exercise.

Questions on Reading for June.

Is it necessary for boys to sow wild oats? What is the natural result of wise care and culture? By what is neglect naturally followed? How is this illustrated by the difference in care given two fields of grain? What lesson may we learn from the contrasted orchards? What knowledge is necessary to keep an orchard at its best? What knowledge is necessary to keep a boy at his best? To be availing, when must the knowledge in either case be applied? What is the lesson of the rivulet and the devastating torrent? Where has the Lord said that parents are responsible for starting their children in the right way? What share should teachers feel in this responsibility? After the important years of early childhood should less care be felt as to keeping children in the right way? What does experience show as to the relative difficulty of early and later training? What will make the later training less difficult? As indicated by the word of God, what atmosphere did he intend should surround the children of his people? What mistakes are sometimes made in forcing religious matters upon the attention of children? How may such matters be made attractive—as natural and as necessary as pure air? What effect will precept without example have upon a child? Are we living in accordance with our faith regarding the teaching of our children? When is there need for and what may be the benefits resulting from meetings of mothers or those interested in children?

Prayer Union.

To the Sisters of the Prayer Union: I earnestly desire your prayers for my oldest son, who is in poor health. His trouble seems to be a gathering of abscesses or ulcers in the stomach, causing him to raise blood and corruption, and making him unfit for labor. He was healed by the divine power, I think about fifteen years ago, through administration of Bro. F. M. Shēehy assisted by Bro. U. W. Greene. May it be the Lord's will to heal him once more is my prayer.

A sister in the one faith,

Dear Herald: I am not enjoying the Spirit as I once did. I request the Saints to pray for me and my little ones. We are alone and isolated from the Saints. We are toiling daily for both spiritual and temporal food and the burden is heavy to bear. It is strange but true that we forget to trust the great Power for the necessities of to-morrow, and this is where the trouble is.

Open confession is good for the soul, so here it is. We say sometimes that we will keep something for Hard Times. Well, Hard Times is sure to come along and get it, and we are much worse off than if we had not had it. Once, when I first joined the church, Bro. Isaac N. Roberts was holding a series of meetings. My cousin Johnnie Tipton decided to collect some offerings for Bro. Roberts. He came to me and said, "Will you give Bro. R. something? I answered, "No," abruptly. I shall never forget how he looked. He said, "Please just five," and his voice lowered and added, "cents." The Spirit said, "Five dollars" to me at the same time; but I stoutly refused. I said, "I work for what I have. I keep a few dollars for Hard Times." I kept that same five-dollar goldpiece for seven years, and it was stolen from me, so Hard Times came round and got it. Oh, how much better it would have been had I obeyed the Spirit than have all the mean thoughts and regrets. I feel that I owe this with double compound interest to our beloved Bro. Roberts. Well, time rolled on. Sometimes pretty rough sailing, but never so bad but there was plenty to be thankful for. The Lord prospered my labor the nicest in the world. Well, I forgot that great Ruler. I thought "In a year or so I will be in living circumstances." But Hard Times came round again, and took my mule, and two cows, and some valuable hogs (all of them died). These I thought real necessities. All this time the Spirit was pleading with me to help spread the gospel. I said, "Well, in a year or so I will be in living circumstances, and then I will send in my tithes, and the children their Christmas and birth offerings. Where is it? Hard Times got it. So I would say to all the Saints, Do not rob God of his tithes and offerings but trust his promises for the blessings, which are worth more than all the world. If you do not Hard Times will come around and get it all, and you will be the looser, not God.

Your unworthy sister,

M. E. BUYARD.

UBLY, Michigan, May 1, 1905.

Editor Herald: It is now twenty years since I embraced the gospel, and as yet fail to find a flaw in the great work we are engaged in, and am willing to submit to the will of God for the benefit of his work in whatever way would be consistent to his will, knowing this latter-day work to be true beyond a doubt. I am the mother of ten children, four sons and six daughters. One of this number has passed away; the rest still remain. Four are in the church, and we are looking forth to the time the rest will be with us in the work of our Master. My husband is a missionary and the oldest son likewise.

I feel it my duty to praise God for his great love made manifest to his people in these last days, for the beautiful gifts of the gospel. The gift of healing has been proved to me beyond a doubt. When our youngest daughter was three days less than one year and four months old, our team ran away, and the little one being in the yard the horses ran over her. I picked her up, but there was no sign of life. I asked God, in Jesus' name, to let her breathe again for my sake. She then began to move. We went to the house and my oldest son and one daughter bowed in prayer to God; and he in his love and mercy came to our assistance, and by his mighty power restored our little one to health. Another instance was when our third daughter was six years old. The oldest sons wanted to put a log on the skid for wood, and the log being heavy for them they got the little one to block it for them, and while trying to do so the boys lost their hold, and the log rolled over her badly bruising her head. The oldest son picked her up and brought her to the house and said, "Ma, I guess I have killed Jemima." I said, "I guess not." Sr. McKay being present with us, we bowed together and all three prayed. God heard and restored the little one to strength. Many such like evidences he has given us of his truth.

There is a branch here, and our prayer-meetings fairly well attended, while the dear Saints try to do their part. The Master meets with us by a portion of his Holy Spirit which makes our hearts rejoice in the Giver of all good. We hope to be remembered by our brethren and sisters that we as a branch may be able to stand. Ever praying for the onward march of the gospel,

Your sister in the faith,

ELIZA A. DAVIS.

FARGO, North Dakota, April 16, 1905.

Editors Herald: Would you allow me space in your columns to ask a few questions? In the HERALD for March 29 I notice the following: "It is every man's right to make all he can in righteousness." "Neither is it supposed to take away his [the minister's] business capacity that he had before" [entering the ministry]. "I confess I can see nothing to hinder him [the minister] from investing [his cash, or his credit] in bank stock, mercantile business, and building houses to rent."

From this we infer that the brother holds out those lines of business, viz., banking, mercantile, and renting, [as they are conducted to-day] as righteous callings; and that a representative of Jesus can engage in them, and still maintain his spiritual equilibrium. Now, are you ready to affirm that the banking system of to-day is in harmony with the gospel; and that it is an institution fitted to have a place in Zion? Are you willing to go on record in the affirmative that the present mercantile system is a "righteous" institution? Are you willing to defend the taking of rent by and from a follower of Christ as being in harmony with the gospel?

I have no fault to find with the creating of wealth in "righteousness"; nor any with a man's business capacity, if the capacity or the business has not that cursed thing selfishness for its basic principle. To justify any (from a Bible standpoint) in obtaining all they can under the present economic conditions of the world, is to grant that sin is righteousness. For all of our great moneyed men of to-day have obtained their wealth from just such sources as profit, interest, commission, rent, etc. And these same men are now using their extorted wealth, as the foot-pad does his gun, in holding up the public and forcing them to pay tribute in form of rents, interest, commission, etc. It is true a man will have more to cast into the treasury when manipulating these economic strings on his fellow man, and he will be able to furnish a more luxurious home for those of his household, but ere placing too much stress upon this (large tithing) we had better consider well the lesson of the widow's mite; money is power in the world; but I do not believe that it can be shown to be so in the church in any age, but rather to the contrary, this church being no exception. And I do not believe it can be shown that the ministry of to-day have any greater converting power (though assisted by the powerful auxiliaries of the press) than the brethren who lived in privations and formed the nucleus of this latter-day work, statistics showing rather to the contrary. If my position be not correct, what disposition will you make of Luke 6:35, 38, where we have the Master on record as saying, "But love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing [not interest, rent, etc.] again, and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the highest." No room here for profit off your brother, no matter what it might be called, whether interest, rent, or commission.

If I understand the Scriptures, we, this church, or family (with one father, the owner and giver of all gifts contained in heaven and earth) are strangers, pilgrims seeking a city, or government whose builder and maker is God. We are not to conform ourselves (in our business relations) to this present world; but rather to be transformed. We are all equal in the sight of God so far as the necessaries of life are concerned; that is, we are all entitled to all we need, so long as we are willing to produce it. God has filled the earth with marvelous resources for the good of all mankind. And nowhere has he given man or men the right to exact of his brother a tribute for the privilege to produce a livelihood, whether it be in the form of a margin, commission, rent, or interest, and I challenge any man or set of men to prove otherwise from the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants.

In Doctrine and Covenants, 38:5, we have the following: "Let every man esteem his brother as himself: [can he do this and exact of him interest, rent, etc., when he is in a needy condition,—and it is from such that men make their wealth] for what man among you having twelve sons, and is no respecter to them, and they serve them obediently, and he saith unto the one, be thou clothed in robes and sit thou here, [in a mansion] and to the other be thou clothed in rags and sit thou here [in a hovel, and be ready to serve him that liveth in the mansion] and looketh upon his sons and saith, I am just."

Surely this would be an unjust father, yet this is the system that men are found advocating as a righteous one. The present business methods and economic conditions are based upon selfishness, and the more selfish a man is the more a man will have for himself and his, and the greater will become his influence. But we notice that it doth corrupt the public servant, and is it not possible of the servant of the church? Those who think that getting gain from increase (interest, rent, etc.) is right, we would have read Leviticus 25:35, 36; Nehemiah 5:7; Ezekiel 22:12; Deuteronomy 23:19; Exodus 22:26; Psalm 15:5. From these it will be noticed that everything savoring of a profit from our fellow man is contrary to God's will and to the general welfare of his children, and we must prepare ourselves for a grander and nobler system (outlined plain enough in the Scriptures) that must come in vogue sooner or later, before Zion shall dwell safely. The Psalmist in Psalm 15:5, has given us an outline of some characters who will dwell in Zion, and he says thus: "He that putteth not out his money to usury [interest—Webster] nor taketh reward [rent, interest, commission, etc.] against the innocent, [those whose conditions are such that they must pay it, having no other recourse]. He that doeth these things shall never be moved." Then those who obtain a large income from these sources which are and will be contrary to Zion's law, will be moved no matter if they have paid in ten thousand dollars into the treasury out of the hard-earned and sweat-stained products of another.

Again, Paul says: "Let every man seek not his own, but his neighbor's good." Now Paul's business capacity seems to have been plied only for the necessaries of life and for bettering the condition of his fellow man, and may this be the aim of the pillars and strength of Zion. May the day speedily come when in Zion shall be established a better and more righteous system, both social and industrial, than the present selfish one that her children are forced to meet in their scattered condition. And may all principles productive of inequality be banished from her borders, that a people and a family may be fully prepared to meet their God. Then will "the towers of Zion" glitter, "like the sun in yonder sky," as himself each will love his neighbor, "and we'll all see eye to eye."

Hoping to be ever striving on the side of truth, and to obtain a part in that beautiful city, I am

Yours truly,

W. SHACKOW.

ONSLow, Iowa, April 29, 1905.

Editors Herald: In the HERALD of October 5, I read the following, "Are we perfect when we come out of the waters of baptism?"

This is a subject that has occupied my mind a great deal, and, if the dear brethren will bear with me, would like to tell you how these things look to me, hoping that we may all be led to see the great responsibility resting upon us as Saints to improve our opportunities to live godly lives after God has cleansed us from all our sins.

I read in the Inspired Translation, Genesis 6, beginning at the sixty-second versé:

"Even so ye must be born again, into the kingdom of heaven, of water, and of the Spirit, and be cleansed by blood, even the blood of mine Only Begotten; that ye might be sanctified from all sin; and enjoy the words of eternal life in this world, and eternal life in the world to come, even immortal glory. For, by the water ye keep the commandment; by the Spirit ye are justified; and by the blood ye are sanctified."

In the fifty-ninth verse of the same chapter we read that we should teach our children "that all men, everywhere, must repent, or they can in no wise inherit the kingdom of God."

Therefore, if we believe in God, repent of our sins, and are baptized, we keep the commandments; and by the Spirit we are justified, as a child is when he has obeyed his earthly parents; and the blood that is promised to cleanse us from all sin is applied, and we are sanctified. We are now sanctified children. We have been in obedience; God gives us his Spirit, and we feel justified before him. We have been fed on the milk of the gospel, but now we are required to go forth and work in the armor that God has given us; the whole armor of righteousness. We are to take the shield of faith, the helmet of salvation, the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, and go forth and battle for the right, that we may attain to the statue of men and women in Christ Jesus. When we are full size we will grow no more, and then, I believe, will be brought to pass, "He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified."—Hebrews 10:14.

I find many things in God's word that lead me to believe that sanctification is at the commencement of the Christian race and perfection at the ending.

1 Corinthians verses 1 and 2, says, "Unto the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be Saints; with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord, both theirs and ours." Also, Ephesians 5, 26, That he might sanctify and cleanse us by the washing of water, and by the word.

A great many people believe that sanctification and perfection are the same; that we never will be perfected in this world; and, perhaps, not until the end of the millennial reign; but, James 3: 2, says, "If any man offend not in word the same is a perfect man."

It seems to me that we read that Satan is to be bound through the thousand years and we will have no temptation to sin, and therefore be able to govern our tongues. Thessalonians 2: 13, reads, "But we are bound to give thanks always for you, brethren, beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the spirit and belief of the truth."

One definition of sanctification is to set apart; another, to make holy. When we are baptized for the remission of sins and the blood of Jesus Christ is applied to cleanse us from all sin, are we not made holy, sanctified? Now, we are as children, have been fed on the milk of the word. We are sanctified children; have done all we knew to do, and God is satisfied with us. As we go forth to battle for the right, do we always do as we should? Do we at all times guard our tongues and keep pure as at the waters of baptism? Can we see almost daily in ourselves some sin, either of commission or omission, which proves to us we are not perfect; that, do the best we can, we are only unprofitable servants, and that it will only be by the amazing power and love of God manifested to us that we shall have power to overcome and at last be perfected in his kingdom?

I well remember the day I was baptized into our blessed church, this part of this familiar hymn, "Wash me and I shall be whiter than snow," kept continually running through my mind; but after I came out of the waters of baptism I could not sing it. It seemed to me if I did I would be doubting God's word that he would remit my sins; and I believed in my heart they were all remitted. I, so far, had been obedient and felt justified before God, and he said the blood had been applied and I was sanctified. But I never felt I was in a position that I could not sin. I was like a child just starting to walk, stumbled here and there; but, thank God, he had promised his Spirit to be my helper. With his Spirit he draws me, and by the aid of his servants to teach me the perfect way, I hope to come "In the unity of the faith, to the knowledge of the son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ"—perfection.

MRS. B. M. GREEN.

ABERTYSSWG, New Tredegar,
South Wales, April 17, 1905.

Dear Herald: I am sending you a few clippings of our Welsh papers, in reference of the revival that has been raging here for some time (but is cooling down now). The members of the sectarian churches, and ministers of the same, likewise a large number of the world, and, I am sorry to say, some of our brethren, think that this revival is of God. But I am glad that all of us are not of the same opinion. I, for one, believe that it is not of God, and I have the Scriptures to bear me out; for if it were of God, they would speak the words of God. "If any man bring not this doctrine unto you, receive him not," and "though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you, than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." "For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God."

The question is, How can he speak the words of God when he (Evan Roberts) has not kept God's commandments? He has not been born of the water, nor does he preach it. Evan Roberts' doctrine is, "Will you love Jesus Christ to-night?" and "If you will confess the same then you are saved from that very instant; and if you or any one will leave the building without confessing the same, you will leave with your soul in a lost condition." What a different plan is laid down by our Savior! How can we believe a man who will teach people such false theories?

I believe the doctrine that this man is teaching the people is a "strong delusion" that they "should believe a lie" because they will not have the truth. God has ordained that he would save the world by preaching; but this Evan Roberts would save them by singing and excitement and hypnotism which he calls the power of God. Doctor Bodie, of Liverpool, says that Evan Roberts is a hypnotist of great power, and this is the secret of his success.

Another question: Where are the signs that should follow the believers? They do not follow him.

When this revivalist started his work among the sectarians in Wales, he went where the Spirit led him (so he said); he did not know to-night where he would be to-morrow. He trusted to the Spirit to lead him whither it would, and that was to be his plan always. But how quick that plan altered! Before the end of last November, he could say where he would be on the twenty-sixth day of December. What a change, and "God is unchangeable," and, is "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. You may draw your own conclusions about this man and his doctrine. My conclusion is that he is the finest actor the "world" ever produced. May God be with us unto the end.

WALTER EPTON.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, May 2, 1905.

Dear Herald: I rejoice in the Lord because of his goodness in that he has been careful of me in all the long years of my life. In the sixteen years of my mission work he has dealt kindly with me. In all my travels the angels of God have camped round about me, even when I have traversed the lonely prairies of Western Texas. Many times I have preached where no other Latter Day Saint has ever yet trod to my knowledge. In my many afflictions the Holy Spirit has been given me as a comforter.

In the last few years I have been deprived of much travel; but the blessed Lord has given me homes among the Saints and friends, and my children. I would be ashamed to ask more than they have done for me.

I have for some time been troubled in regard to what could or would be my lot for the few remaining years of my life. While musing and pondering in my heart, the glad news comes to me that in the wisdom of conference, aided by the peaceful Spirit of God, I am released from missionary duty, and authorized to continue in the good work as my health and strength will allow.

What a glorious work is this, and what a privilege to be honored in the great labor of love! What a blessed warfare! God bless the brave young men who are called to fill the breach made by death, and the retiring of the aged.

Finally, brethren, my cup of joy seems full to the overflowing. God, I know, is with the faithful of his people. Be of one heart and of one mind, as good servants of the Lord. Love one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath loved you. God be merciful unto the wayward, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus.

L. L. WIGHT.

Thanks.

Dear Herald: Will you permit me a little of your valuable space in which to thank the General Conference for its kindly consideration of me at the last sitting.

I have been aware for some time that my days of activity in gospel work were drawing to a close, and that I would soon have to step aside and give place to others more capable; but I did not expect that my stepping aside would be attended with such honor to one so unworthy.

This morning while thinking on the change my soul was filled with a commingling of joy and sadness, that would be difficult for me to explain. Of course my joy arose from the fact that I had labored so long in the cause, and was able to step aside with as good a record as I have, not that my record is what I wish it was, and ought to be, as a bearer of the gospel message, but I feel that there is no damaging stain on my ministerial character; and this gives me comfort.

I have labored for the church forty years and the last thirty-two years have been with the First Quorum of Seventy, and I can say truthfully that I have never missed an appointment. I have never lodged a complaint against a brother or sister, and that I have never had one lodged against me that I ever knew of.

When I have presided over missions I have never exercised any undue authority, and when I have labored under the direction of others I have never shown any insubordination.

In looking over the list of conference appointees I see the names of quite a number that I was instrumental in bringing into this work, and this affords me comfort, for I feel that they will aid in carrying on the work when I am no longer among you.

My sadness is from seeing so much yet to do, and I am able to do so little of it. I never saw the need of energetic labor more than now, and I believe I would gladly take my grip and launch out into unexplored fields if I were able. And although I feel the sorrow and regret of being handicapped by affliction, and the infirmity of age, I feel determined to do all I can while I am permitted to remain here.

To my quorum, with whom I have labored so long, let me say, I leave you with the best of feelings, and pray that God may bless you in your labor of love. And to those that will succeed to places made vacant by the retiring ones, May God bless you and make you men of power and excellent wisdom that shall greatly aid in pushing forward the car of salvation to glorious triumph.

Now, brethren, I would like to give a little of my experience. It may be that you have had something similar. If so you will see that I am right in what my experience has taught me.

You see I boasted a little of punctuality in keeping appointments, and while I yet claim that punctuality is a great virtue, I have carried it to extreme and the work has suffered in consequence. I can now look back over the field of my operations, and see many cases where I had worked up a good interest, when, having made appointments ahead, I would pull up and leave to fill them, and before I would get around to that place again the interest would be gone. "The birds of the air would come and eat up the good seed." So I can bear witness that while punctuality is a great virtue, it is not good to have appointments too far ahead, but to stay at work as long as the interest keeps up. I fain would recall my many mistakes, but the arrow has flown and can not be recalled, and I can only hope that some may profit by my experience.

Again thanking my brethren for their confidence, and God for his grace, I am,
Your grateful brother,

J. C. C.

COOKES POINT, Texas, May 2, 1905.

Editors Herald: At home again. I stopped at different places in Texas, before I reached home, to do some church-work. Since leaving Lamoni I have taken a retrospective view of the General Conference. I attended all the business-sessions, and nearly all other meetings.

While I did not take any part in the discussions, yet I observed everything that was said or done; and, taking it all in all, I consider it the best conference that I ever attended. I commenced to attend them in 1890. The college question is in better shape than ever before. It seems, now, that the doors will stand ajar for all time.

I visited the Saints' Home a number of times. It is a good home, well kept. Sr. Dancer is the right sister in the right place. God bless the home and all its inmates.

I also visited the Herald Publishing House. It contained a lot of busy workers. Let us all do what we can to sustain the publishing house in every way we can. In short, let us do all we can to push the work this year as never before. I feel like doing more than ever before.

I again say I know that God is in the work, and no matter who falls by the wayside, it will go on unto victory. No man need think that he is of so much importance to the work that he can not be dispensed with, for that is a mistake, yet we have no men to spare. Every one of us ought to say by word and deed, Follow me, inasmuch as I follow Christ. Just as sure as we do this, no matter how the Devil may rage in and by men against the work, it will move on perpetually to victory.

Yours in the conflict until the end,

E. W. NUNLEY.

OAKLAND, California, April 29, 1905.

Editors Herald: Referring to Bro. W. Maddock's letter in HERALD for April 19, I thought possibly the following may aid to a better understanding of the principles involved in one of the brother's questions; viz., "Are we perfect when we come up out of the waters of baptism?"

If we have believed in the Lord Jesus Christ; have repented of our sins, which means to cease to do evil and learn to do good; if we have earnestly sought forgiveness of our sins, and have, in baptism, received a remission of the same, as the Scriptures teach, i. e., have washed away our sins, and hence had a clear conscience, both before God and men, then are we perfect in the sight of God, i. e., sinless, as the brother puts it. Our hearts are right before God; still our nature, our disposition, our inherent inclinations may be something we may have to fight all through life. Though our desires are changed, though we may long but for that which is pure and elevating, which is holy and righteous, we still have our human nature; we are weak, we are like babies, we still stumble and fall, and if we are not very careful, watchful, prayerful, clothed with humility, Satan will take us unawares, and we will be tainted again with sin. We will then have lost, for the time at least, our perfect state. But, it appears to me, since the Lord will not despise a broken heart and a contrite spirit, we can anew war a perfect warfare against self, sin, and the Devil, until, when Christ shall appear, we shall, by his grace, be made like him, for we shall see him as he is. Then we shall attain to a perfect stature in Christ, and then only; for as yet we are but babes, and see, as it were, but through a glass darkly. In the meantime we may be perfect children of our Father in heaven, and in the hereafter kings and priests of our God.

Your humble brother,

AUGUST H. MERKENS.

LARRABEE, Iowa, May 5, 1905.

Editors Herald: In my labors in the Gallands Grove District since last writing, those among whom we have labored have been kind, and those who have furnished team and buggy or have taken us from place to place have our thanks.

The Spirit has greatly assisted in the work done, giving evidence that Christ is still the "author and finisher of our faith."

The article written by Bro. Elbert A. Smith and published in HERALD for the 26th ult., is appreciated and much enjoyed by the writer. It is indeed pleasant to see the Saints alive in Christ and active in his work. Example preaching is evidently as much needed as the presentation of the principles of the doctrine of Christ in eloquence and by the power of the Spirit, for both are in harmony with the Spirit and the word. Both are necessary to the development of the true Christ character.

Following the impress of the Spirit I came to Cherokee where on the 1st inst. I spoke for the benefit of the Saints and have met twice with them in social service, and find them an earnest little band of workers for Christ.

On the 2d inst. I had the pleasure of baptizing three of Bro. William Leonard's children at their home some six miles from Cherokee, and in the confirmation-service, which was held at the home, a good flow of the Spirit was enjoyed, testifying that God had given the increase. May the Spirit continue to direct and bless these young people and their parents.

I did this work by request and feel that the conversions were due to parents, other ministers, and the light and impress of the Spirit. I have given a few blessings and have been blessed in doing the work though I have had no stenographer.

May the Lord bless, direct, and prosper his people.

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

Extracts from Letters.

C. L. Snow, Lexington, Missouri: "I came to this place last Wednesday. People are attending the meetings who never heard before. Am feeling well, and hopeful of the work here at Lexington. Brn. Reed and Scott are doing a good work here in this country. The house I have been using is a private one, and will not accommodate the people. Expect to bring the tent here if it meets the approval of the one in charge. A pressing call comes from middle Tennessee for one to come there, but I can not go yet."

Sarah M. Ray, McLeansboro, Illinois: "I have been suffering very much with rheumatism the last two weeks. I am delighted with the Historical HERALD, and am keeping this paper safe, for I prize it very much. I understand that the signs do follow the believer, for Jesus said that the signs should follow the believer, and I know that I am a believer. While in Chicago my oldest daughter was very sick. She called for the doctor to attend her, but everything seemed to fail, and she thought she was going to die. I said, 'Let me send for the elders of my church and let them pray for you.' She thought that too much trouble, and I asked her if she wanted me to pray. She did, so I kneeled and prayed fervently, and when I got through, tears were streaming down her face. She felt much better, and went to sleep. She had not slept for four days and nights. Dear Saints, I ask your prayers that my family may become true believers in the work of God."

Miscellaneous Department

Pastoral.

To the Saints and Ministry of Iowa, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Nebraska; Greeting: Having been by the General Conference appointed to labor with you for the ensuing year I wish to make some suggestions which I think will assist us in prosecuting the work committed to our care and help us to an understanding in systemizing our efforts.

First permit me to name as my associates in charge the following brethren: 1. James McKiernan, Nauvoo, Eastern Iowa, and Des Moines Districts. 2. D. R. Chambers, Fremont and Pottawattamie Districts. 3. Romanan Wight, Gallands Grove and Little Sioux Districts. 4. D. M. Rudd, the state of Nebraska, and those portions of North and South Dakota west and south of the Missouri River. 5. Eli Hayer, those portions of North and South Dakota east and north of Missouri River. 6. H. A. McCoy, Minnesota.

Those of the ministry appointed to labor in the Lamoni Stake may report their labors directly to me, but all labor done in the several branches of the stake should be by understanding and in harmony with the president of the stake, Bro. John Smith.

By understanding with Bro. I. N. White those counties in Missouri included in the Lamoni Stake, and Nauvoo District, are to be considered in our jurisdiction, and by a like understanding with Bro. J. W. Wight that portion of Illinois included in Nauvoo District is in our charge.

I hope that the appointment of the brethren named above will be satisfactory and that they will command the entire confidence of the ministry and the Saints in general.

I hope that the brethren will remember to report promptly on the first day of July, October, January, and March. Do not neglect it even for one day as this delays me in making my report to the First Presidency, and keeps everything in arrears all the time, which should not be.

Those who are associated with me in charge will please prompt the brethren when necessary so that they can receive their reports in time to report to me not later than the 10th of the months named above.

I suggest also that the presidents of branches report to the district presidents all local labor done in the vicinity of their branches, and the district presidents report to the minister in charge in order that we may have a general idea of the work done that we may be able to report progress and also to know the needs of these localities, and thus be able to better provide labor where labor is needed.

If these suggestions will be heeded we will soon be acquainted with the needs in all parts of the field, and will do the best we can to meet the demand as light may be given.

Those who have been assigned to the superannuated list will please to take notice that though they are relieved from the responsibility attaching to the regular appointee they are at liberty and are solicited to occupy as their strength will permit.

We confidently expect that they will be of much service to the church in the places where they reside and where they may be able to go.

They are also relieved from the necessity of reporting every three months, but are requested to report directly to the missionary in charge their labors and financial condition annually. This should be on March 1.

Ministers in charge are not expected to call upon these brethren for any special service, but their co-operation is invited and any service they can render will be appreciated.

According to rules governing, the evangelical ministers should be recognized and their services solicited where revival-services are needed. This will not prevent others from holding revival-services, but this being their special calling they should not be overlooked where such services are in demand.

Trusting that we may receive sufficient favor with God to receive his gracious blessings in our labor and that our association together may strengthen our trust and confidence in each other, and in God, I am as ever,

Your colaborer and servant for Christ's sake,
LAMONI, Iowa, May 3, 1905. HEMAN C. SMITH.

She leaves a husband, five children (four boys and one girl) and two sisters to mourn her sudden death (which was caused by heart-failure). She was a woman highly esteemed by a large circle of friends which esteem was shown by an unusually large number in attendance at her funeral at the chapel in West Jonesport. Sermon by U. M. Kelley.

McFADDEN.—Arthur McFadden; born April 19, 1825, at Armagh County, Ireland; baptized November 25, 1863, at Louisville, Kent County, Ontario, by James W. Gillen, and confirmed by John Shippy and J. W. Gillen. Died March 16, 1905. Buried March 18, 1905. Funeral-sermon by Samuel Brown.

Higginson September 15, 1887; and died April 21, 1905, at the home of his parents at Lamoni, Iowa, where he, with his wife and daughter Ruby, was visiting. He ever remained a true, faithful, and firm member of the church until the last, and leaves to mourn their loss, a loving wife, one daughter, many relatives, and a host of friends. The body was laid to rest in the Pleasant View Cemetery, Kewanee, Illinois. The sermon was at the grave by Amos Berve.

The May number of the Open Court is devoted almost entirely to a sketch of the life and work of Friedrich Schiller, the great German poet, with illustrations of his poems and life. The May issue is profusely illustrated and contains selections from Schiller's poetry as follows: "My creed," "Division of the earth," "Hymn to joy," "Cavalry song (from Wallenstein's Camp)," "Proverbs of Confucius," "Light and warmth," "The lay of the bell." Of Schiller the editor of the Open Court says, "Friedrich Schiller is not merely a great poet, he is great as a man, and as a leader in the progress of humanity. He is a disciple of Kant, but not his blind follower. He applies Kant's philosophy to practical life, but works it out in his own way. Especially in his religious convictions Schiller is far ahead of his time."

Progress in the Chinese Empire.

The fact of Chinese progress in Western methods can not be denied. The further fact, that this progress will soon be greatly intensified, is also beyond question. It is, therefore, important to inquire what are the motives of the Chinese government in encouraging this development. The motives determine the use, hostile or friendly, to be made of the new power. Are the Chinese enamored of Western learning? Do they humbly think that they are being improved by the adoption of Western manners? Quiet conversation with friendly Chinese who have confidence in your discretion and sympathy will soon dispel any such belief. The humiliating experiences of 1895 and 1900 showed the Chinese that in war they were no match for the Westerners. The loss of territory to France, to England, to Germany, to Russia, to Japan, within the last few years, and the aggressive threats of the representatives of most of these powers at different times, convinced them that China, as a territorial and governmental entity, would soon cease to exist if they did not make themselves able to resist foreign aggression; have convinced them, therefore, of the absolute necessity of adopting foreign learning so far as it is necessary to strengthen them for war.

Those of the Chinese who have studied abroad, and have become familiar with the foreign home and with the moral excellence of some of the Western doctrines as actually lived by some of the best of the foreign people, believe that in many individual particulars Western customs are superior to their own, but this belief is by no means general even among the higher classes, and probably, with scarcely an exception, they all believe that in very many respects the Chinese civilization, and particularly the Chinese ideals of life, are superior. The Chinese are making little effort to cultivate Western art, to study Western literature, to adopt the Western religions, to adopt even Western methods of government, except so far as these things contribute directly to their power of resistance to Western aggression. It is probably not at all unjust to conclude that the Chinese are not adopting Western methods because they recognize their essential superiority, but because they will thereby be better enabled to meet the Westerners on even terms in the contest which they believe to be inevitable for the protection of Chinese territory and of Chinese civilization. But the Chinese are not aggressive, and there is every reason to believe that nations that are willing to do justice will receive from them just treatment in return.—From "The progress China is making," by Professor Jeremiah W. Jenks, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for May.

What's in McClure's.

There is nothing in McClure's for May that is not, first of all, good reading. The stories, six of them, are singularly various but all entertaining. The articles, as always in McClure's, invest interesting, important information with a real story-quality.

First of importance is an article by William James of Harvard University, an appreciation of his friend, Thomas Davidson, whom he characterizes as a man "who tried to be on earth what good people hope to be in heaven." In these days of fierce struggle for material gain, such a life as his is an inspiration. Thomas Davidson, though little known, is a heroic figure.

Lincoln Steffens writes frankly and fervently of the trust-licensing industry of New Jersey. His trained eye sees the larger significance of his subject and the story, tinged with his own broad Americanism, passes beyond merely local interest. It has power to stir every right-thinking American.

Charles Stuart York, a recent addition to the already large family of McClure's children, adventures delightfully with a very human burglar. Pictures in tint by Reginald Birch of Little Lord Fauntleroy fame contribute most happily to the charm of May Kelsey Champion's manly little boy. Then there is the "Marriage morn," by Ethel Turner, a sweetly sympathetic picture of a young girl and her day of days.

John McAuley Palmer contributes another "Colonel Lumpkin" satire. This time the doughty ex-franchise grabber proves how "traction" can be put upon an honest basis.

"The terror of the sea," by P. T. McGrath, recounts true tales of the mysteries of the seas.

OFFICERS' DUTIES.

We are so frequently requested to answer personal letters of inquiry with regard to the duties of officers, being unable to respond, except to a few, we decided to republish articles written a number of years ago and thus place within the reach of the larger number our understanding of the matters required of, so that if our opinion is of any value in the premises and will be helpful to any, we will be pleased to share with our coworkers. We suppose we can aid each other and "our torch is none the less for lighting our neighbors"; so pass it along.

Hoping this course will meet the approval of the HERALD readers and be useful in its intention we commend its study to all. The following is republished from the SAINTS' HERALD for April 20, June 29, July 20, and September 14, 1889:

DUTIES OF OFFICERS.

In this issue we begin the republication of a series of editorials, written by President Joseph Smith in 1871, on the subject of duty, in which the duties of deacons, teachers, priests, and elders are ably and clearly defined.

They will be found of great value to all the ministry, and of especial interest to those who have not heretofore had opportunity of studying them. The one in this issue discussed sets forth the duties of deacons, and will be followed—as our space permits—by three others, in which the duties of teachers, priests, and elders are respectively considered.

"Let every man learn his duty" is the divine injunction, and we give good opportunity for so doing:

"DUTY.

"Most men are willing to do what the law of the land requires of them, what association with their fellow-men in the social compact makes necessary, and what is clearly pointed out in the church covenants. There seems to be, however, lack of performance in some parts of the church organization; which lack is by some attributed to the want of desire to do what appears to be plain duty.

"We have occasionally been asked to point out what the duties of the several officers were. We have from time to time attempted to do this. But from the peculiar condition of mind into which the Saints have naturally fallen, or at least a great number of them, which seems to have induced them to believe that they are to be teachers and not to be taught, we have found the defining of duties a very difficult task.

"When, in the presentation of an article in which the duty of an officer is defined, we quote from the Doctrine and Covenants, it is abundantly criticised; and one of the criticisms to which it is subjected, is that 'We all know what the language of the law is, can read it at any time; but what are our duties under the law?'

"When, to comply with the foregoing inquiry, we essay to

In the blackest soil grow the fairest flowers, and the loftiest and strongest trees [spring] heavenward among the rocks.—J. G. Holland.

point out one by one what we believe to be the duties appertaining to certain officers, that essay meets with the very characteristic rebuff, 'Where's your law for that?'

"So, whether we quote the law, or attempt to define its unwritten provisions respecting the active performance of duties under our church organization, as contrasted with the unpraiseworthy desire to passively receive the favors of a kind Father, unblest by the faithful endeavor to merit them fully, we are met with what we think to be unfair repulsion.

"Were our desire for the general good of the cause less than it is, we should be willing to let the matter rest upon the plain statement of the law itself, suffering every man to demean himself in accordance with his especial predilections, those predilections being created and governed by the circumstances without, and the spiritual increase within the man.

"But our desire for the general good is of that sort that we are quite ready to give our opinion of the proper construction to be put upon the declarations of law not sufficiently plain of themselves; and also the proper applications of those constructions, and that law, to the actual life, temporal and spiritual, of those professing the light of the latter-day work.

"There is but little written in the Book of Covenants specifically defining the duty, or duties of a deacon; yet everybody supposes that there are duties properly belonging to the office of a deacon; those which are peculiarly and specifically to be performed by a deacon, by virtue of his calling; those which may be performed by men holding another office, but should be the special province of a deacon.

"The office of deacon must be of some importance in the economy of the church, or it would not have been provided for; and the duties of the man ordained to that office must be necessary, or there would have been no appointing him; or any consideration of him or his duties had in the history of the church.

"Of what the duties of the deacon may consist, may be properly considered; and we shall present a few thoughts upon the subject of the duties of the deacon.

"In a Bible Dictionary published in 1811, the word deacon is said to signify chiefly, 'An officer in the church, whose business it is to serve in distributing the elements at the Lord's table, and to provide for, and duly distribute provisions to ministers and to the poor.'—Bible Dictionary, by Brown, page 385.

"Doctor Buck says that 'The office of deacons originally was to serve tables, the Lord's table, the minister's table, and the poor's table. They took care of the secular affairs of the church, received and disbursed moneys, kept the church accounts, and provided everything necessary for its temporal good. Thus, while the bishop attended to the souls, the deacons attended to the bodies of the people; the pastor to the spiritual, and the deacons to the temporal interests of the church.' (See Acts 6.)—Buck's Dictionary, page 110.

"The Scriptures have not much from which to draw instruction upon this point.

"Paul and Timotheus addressed an epistle to the Saints at Philippi, including the bishops and deacons; but nothing is stated about the duties of either bishops or deacons. (See Philippians 1:1.)

"In Paul's letter to Timothy, he gives a sort of general sketch of the qualifications necessary for the office of deacon, but as before does not specify their official duties. (See 1 Timothy 3.)

"There is frequent mention made of high priests, elders, priests, and teachers in the Book of Mormon; but it appears that there was either no necessity for the deacon, or the office was not of such a character that it would be mentioned in such a history. We can not draw conclusions from this record as to what deacons' duties are.

"Deacons, as officers, and the office of deacon are referred to in the Book of Covenants, pages 96, 97, 225, 231, 243, 294, and 296 of the present edition; and from the statements found in that book we may possibly derive some instruction.

"There are certain duties expressly stated in paragraph 11, section 17, page 94, as attaching to the office of the deacon, if occasion requires. The duties are, 'To watch over the church always, to be with and strengthen them, and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking; and see that the church meet together often, and also see that all the members do their duty, . . . and take the lead of meetings in the absence of the elder or priest.' They are also 'to warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come to Christ.'

"It will not defeat the foregoing statement for any to say, 'Those are the duties of the teacher.' This is true, but the declaration, 'if occasion requires,' and the closing sentence quite definitely determines it. The offices of teacher and deacon are necessary to the full enjoyment of the Aaronic line of ministry; and from the further teaching found in paragraph 10, section 104, page 291, one of the prerogatives of this ministry was the administration in 'outward ordinances—the letter of the gospel.'

"The church need good, kind, and watchful ministers, to be with them constantly; to do whatever may be necessary for their benefit, welfare, and spiritual advancement; so far as their especial ministrations may secure this. To provide for this urgent and always increasing want, it is declared that deacons should be appointed. Our law for this will be found on page 331, section 83, paragraph 22, Doctrine and Covenants.

"Deacons must learn their various duties by being instructed therein; and this instruction may be derived from inspiration direct, from the teachings of other deacons, teachers, priests, or elders, in preaching and in conversation upon the word; or from the actual necessities of the condition of the church, (congregation, association of Saints, or branch of the church,) of which he is an enrolled member, and of which he is a chosen officer, called to minister unto and for the church.

"Deacons are also expected to act at times as presiding officers, to sit in council, direct, control, and guide the deliberations of that council, and teach the members of it their duty, the duties of their office as deacons being clearly understood by this. (See Doctrine and Covenants, section 104, paragraphs 31 and 33, pages 294 and 296.)

"We have now gone through, very briefly, what is written, so far as we are at present informed, respecting the duty of a deacon in the church of Christ. All the duties spoken of or specified, thus far, are of a general character, and apparently no provision is made for many things necessarily to be done, and which must therefore be considered in the inquiry, 'Who shall do them?'

"In order that every branch of the church, having a membership of six or more, may receive and enjoy the fullest benefit from their church fellowship and association, it is absolutely necessary that they have and control a place where meetings for worship, fellowship, and business, may be held.

"This place of meeting must be kept clean, must be warmed during the season of cold, whenever meetings are held, and must be lighted during all evening meetings. To do all this requires the outlay of time, labor, and money, even under the most favorable circumstances. This outlay of money, labor, and time, must be met, and to meet it 'somebody' must act, must in a word 'do something.'

"We begun this article with the statement that most men are willing to do what the church covenants pointed out as duties; but this must be qualified to some extent. Many, if not quite all of the duties specifically named in the covenants are of what we may justly call an honorary character. By this we mean that they are those duties more immediately connected with public administrations, preaching, baptizing, laying on of hands, blessing children, and administering the sacrament; duties upon the discharge of which it is supposed there attends the conferring, or the receiving of some special spiritual power; duties to which there attaches, from their nature, some special privilege or prerogatives. These are the duties to which the statement of willingness was intended to apply.

"The duties just enumerated do not comprise the whole list of things necessary to be done, to secure a healthy spiritual condition in a church, an association of members of a church, called a branch.

"We have no written law commanding the appointing of deacons other than the one cited from section eighty-three of the Covenants. Notwithstanding this lack of positive commandment, the whole body of spiritual authorities of the church, from its earliest history, have considered them necessary; and the custom of appointing them has grown by usage to be a law. If the custom was founded upon a misconception of the law of the church, and has been continued in error by reason of false precedent, it should be abandoned. If, on the contrary, the custom was founded upon a wise and just conception of the law by which the church should exist, and has been continued by reason of wise yielding to true precedent, then should the law, made so by custom and use, be sustained and honored.

"The unwritten duties of the office of deacon are not less binding than those specifically defined. The fact of their being unwritten in the Covenants, is not a defense against a charge for their not being fulfilled; the reason why they should be faithfully discharged more than counterbalancing such defense when it is urged.

"These unwritten duties are the ones; which however necessary their performance, or however much the association of church-members may suffer because they are not performed, few are willing to perform; their willingness being judged by their failing to do.

"We have elsewhere written that every branch must have a place of meeting. This place of meeting, if a public building, hall, or meeting-house or church, must be in the actual possession of the association of the church-members worshipping there, at least during its occupancy while worshipping; and if the property is owned by the church, some one must have constructive possession at all times. What particular officer of the church has precedence of right to this constructive possession? The right to carry the keys; open the doors; conduct visitors, either those belonging or not belonging to the church; to see that the floors, doors, windows, pulpit or stand, seats, table or stand, lamps or other fixtures are clean and in good order; to open the doors at the hours of gathering for preaching, fellowship, prayer- or business-meetings; to see that the lamps or candles are trimmed, lighted, and burning in time for all evening meetings; to see that the members coming in find seats; to keep watch over the Saints during the meetings, repressing loud talking, whispering, and laughing; reproving the thoughtless and rebuking the giddy; putting a prompt stop to rude, indecent, and boisterous acts, by which the propriety, solemnity, and peace of the meetings may be disturbed; to exercise kind and diligent supervision over the health and comfort of the Saints while in meeting, by securing a proper ventilation of the room; to light and keep burning the fires by which the room is kept warm; to have charge of the treasury; to receive, disburse, and account for the contributions of the Saints intended for the necessary and incidental expenses of the association of members; to keep, preserve from damage, and account for all personal effects of the association; to visit the poor, ascertain their needs, and report the same to the church; and in fact, to perform any and all of those necessary duties by which the welfare of the Saints is secured through a careful administration of the outward ordinances, a faithful employment of the talents intrusted to that man? We repeat the question, Whose prerogative, privilege, right or duty is it, by reason of official standing, to do all these things?

"It is not the elder, for his is the duty to administer in word, in doctrine, and in spirit; to preach, expound, and exhort in spiritual things.

"It is not the priest, for to him pertains a duty to visit the members at their houses; to exhort them to attend to spiritual duties.

"It is not the teacher, for it is made his prerogative to act as a sort of spiritual constable, a kind of general conservator of the peace among the Saints.

"It follows then of a necessity that the right, the duty of performing these acts—these unwritten but essential things of the law devolves upon the office of deacon.

"Some portions of the law which may be cited in support of the opinions expressed in this article have been already given, to-wit: The general understanding long since obtaining concerning the institution of the office of deacon, and the duties of that office as cited at the beginning of this article.

"The acquiescence of the church, by its constant practice, hitherto, in that construction of the duties of a deacon.

"The actual necessity for the performance of those duties.

"The positive declaration that the deacon shall be a standing minister to the church; and the fair presumption as to what some of the absolute requirements from a standing ministry would be.

"The specific appointment of other duties to other officers, and these unprovided for.

"What we have here written was not intended to deny the right of any one holding the higher priesthood from acting as a deacon; or to deny his privilege to do any and all of the things specified as duties of the deacon, if he shall so choose and there is a necessity therefor. Nor will the fact of there being good, kind, true, and noble men holding the office of elder, who are willing to perform those duties without a murmur, if they can thereby serve the church, secure unity, and provoke some to the emulation of good works, make the law any less void, or detract from the dignity, prerogative, and efficiency of the deacon's office. On the contrary it goes to show that any duty which may be performed by an elder that comes within the province of a deacon, that does not sully nor detract from the spiritual efficiency of that elder, may be far more profitably, honorably, and properly done by a deacon.

"Many elders have thought so lightly of the office of priest, teacher, and deacon, that it has been thought to be somewhat disdainful to suggest that men of any talent should receive the office of deacon. It has been thought, by far too many, that an eldership was the lowest position or grade of office which it was honorable to aspire to, or to offer another.

"Let every man be esteemed according to the integrity and faithfulness with which he fills the office whereunto he is called; not according to the peculiar honor which is supposed to attach to the office itself. Honor him who honors God by honoring the office ordained of him.

"For there is no power in the church but that of God; the powers that be are ordained of God.—Romans 13:1.

"Nay, much more the members of the body which seem to be more feeble are necessary.—1 Corinthians 12:22.

"Let every man stand in his own office, and labor in his own calling.—Doctrine and Covenants 83:21.

"Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence.—Ibid., 105:44.

"THE TEACHER.

"Teachers are numerous throughout the world. In the churches they specially abound. What may be taught, depends upon the peculiar province and calling of the teacher. There are teachers of philosophy, simple and profound; teachers of medicine—medicine for ills, mental, moral, and physical; teachers of law, natural, human, and divine; teachers of art, and teachers of science. Any man who teaches may be called a teacher; but it is not every man who teaches that holds the office of a teacher.

"The teacher, as a church officer, being especially an out-growth, or a necessary sequence of the introduction of the gospel in the last days, it will be very natural to expect that the church articles of organization should contain something by which the duties pertaining to that office are defined.

"Now there were in the church certain prophets and teachers."—Acts 13:1.

"And God hath set some in the church, . . . thirdly teachers." "Are all teachers?"—1 Corinthians 12:28, 29.

"And he gave some apostles; . . . and some pastors and teachers."—Ephesians 4:11.

"And it came to pass that I, Nephi, did consecrate Jacob and Joseph that they should be priests and teachers over the land of my people."—Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 4:5, third European edition.

"And it came to pass that King Mosiah granted unto Alma, that he might establish churches throughout all the land of Zarahemla; and gave him power to ordain priests and teachers over every church." . . . "Therefore they did assemble themselves together in different bodies, being called churches; every church having their priests and their teachers."—Book of Mormon, Mosiah 11:12.

"And, behold, you are they who are ordained of me to ordain priests and teachers to declare my gospel."—Doctrine and Covenants 16:5.

MORE ABOUT EMMA SMITH'S SELECTION OF HYMNS.

Shortly after the appearance of the article on "Emma Smith and her selection of hymns," which appeared in HERALD for April 19, we received the following letter from Bro. H. O. Smith:

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, April 21, 1905.

Brother Fred. M. Smith: I notice in HERALD of April 19 an editorial in which you mention the collection of hymns made by your grandmother, Emma Smith. You state that you have seen but one copy. I was fortunate enough a few years ago to find among a collection of old HERALDS and other papers a copy of an 1835 edition of this hymn-book, published in Kirtland, Ohio, by Frederick G. Williams and I still have it in my possession and it is before me as I write. It is in a fair state of preservation with title-page complete including index. The edition I have contains but one hundred and twenty-one pages and ninety hymns.

Yours,

H. O. SMITH.

We at once wrote Bro. Smith asking if he cared to dispose of the copy, and on April 30 we met him in Independence, when he said he would let us have the book for the church library. It is now in the library, and Bro. Hyrum has our hearty thanks for his kindness. It is a prized accession to our collection of rare books.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

A single piece of native copper, weighing one thousand pounds, will be part of the mining display from Josephine County, Oregon, at the Lewis and Clark Exposition. The chunk of copper was taken from the Golden Standard ledge, the ores of which have been found to assay eighteen dollars a ton in gold, and twenty-two dollars in copper.

The Lewis and Clark Exposition at Portland, Oregon, will open June 1. President Roosevelt will press the button. The people will do the rest.

In the Salt Lake Tribune for May 2, 1905, is an account of a visit to the land of the cliff-dweller by H. L. A. Culmer. We excerpt the following: "Although the explorers did little digging in these caves because of the foul odors and choking dust, they succeeded in discovering sandals of various styles, burial decorations, and thread, made from Yucca plant, that resembles in every respect that sold on the market to-day. Two battle-axes made of granite were also brought back. Their handles are made of wood curiously twisted around the rock, which tapers from a flat head to a sharp edge. . . . Then there were the specimens of pottery, all finished smoothly and decorated with artistic figures. These pieces of pottery are found all over the country and hint at the great pottery factories of the ages now gone."

Three were baptized Sunday, May 7, at Burlington, and confirmed by Elbert A. Smith and A. S. Cochran. Two of the converts were from the Utah church. Eleven have been added to the Burlington Branch since New Year's day.

A few days ago Bro. A. H. Smith received a letter from A. M. Fyrando, inclosing a grocery bill thirty-nine years old. The bill is dated June 11, 1866, and itemizes the provisions bought from John Beresheim, Council Bluffs, Iowa, by Bishop D. M. Gamet, "for missionary purposes." These supplies were furnished to A. H. Smith, William Anderson, and J. W. Gillen for their trip across the plains. We note a few items which will be of interest:

THE PATRIARCHAL OR EVANGELICAL ORDER. IS IT
ESSENTIAL IN THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST?
CALLING AND DUTIES OF PATRIARCHS
CONSIDERED.

BY THE ORDER OF EVANGELISTS.

DISPENSATION OF THE FULLNESS OF TIMES.

The object in thus tracing this history can be clearly seen. The result of the preaching of the gospel followed. The church was organized in the morning of the world's history, and those early ministers for Christ were the first evangelists, and were patriarchs in the grandest sense of the word. Adam, Seth, Enos, Cainan, Mahalaleel, Jared, Enoch, Methuselah, Lamech, and Noah, and I may with safety say Melchisedec; all evangelists, and as much entitled to the appellation of patriarch as Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

We have thus far connected the first dispensation, as a gospel dispensation, with the patriarchal, the patriarchal with the prophetic, the prophetic with the Christian; and now we come to the time of the welding of all these dispensations in the restoration of all things spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world began, the bringing of all things together in one, in Christ Jesus, the angel's message bringing back and restoring the gospel, the church, and, necessarily, the ancient order in the church.

So God, in revealing the lost ordinances, has given the officers belonging to the church, and has revealed the order of patriarchs, and called men to act in his name in the holy ordinance of blessing the children of the covenant; and in restoring this order, he necessarily restores the correct meaning of the title of evangelist. (See section 125, Doctrine and Covenants.)

This introduces our closing testimony, the revelations of God to the church in this the dispensation of the fullness of times.

Doctrine and Covenants 83:2: "Verily, this is the word of the Lord, that the city New Jerusalem shall be built by the gathering of the saints, beginning at this place, even the place of the temple, which temple shall be reared in this generation; for verily, this generation shall not all pass away until an house shall be built unto the Lord, and a cloud shall rest upon it, which cloud shall be even the glory of the Lord, which shall fill the house. And the sons of Moses, according to the holy priesthood, which he received under the hand of his father-in-law, Jethro; and Jethro received it under the hand of Caleb; and Caleb received it under the hand of Elihu; and Elihu under the hand of Jeremy; and Jeremy under the hand of Gad; and Gad under the hand of Esaias; and Esaias received it under the hand of God; Esaias also lived in the days of Abraham and was blessed of him, [patriarchal,] which Abraham received the priesthood from Melchisedec; who received it through the lineage of his fathers; even till Noah; and from Noah till Enoch, through the lineage of their fathers; and from Enoch to Abel, who was slain by the conspiracy of his brother; who received the priesthood by the commandments of God, by the hand of his father Adam, who was the first man; which priesthood continueth in the church of God in all generations, and is without beginning of days or end of years."

See also Doctrine and Covenants 84:3; "Therefore, thus saith the Lord unto you, with whom the priesthood hath continued through the lineage of your fathers, for ye are lawful heirs, according to the flesh, and have been hid from the world with Christ in God; therefore your life and the priesthood hath remained, and must needs remain, through you and your lineage, until the restoration of all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began."

Doctrine and Covenants 104:17-29: "It is the duty of the twelve, in all large branches of the church, to ordain evangelical ministers, as they shall be designated unto them by revelation. The order of this priesthood was confirmed to be handed down from father to son, and rightly belongs to the literal descendants of the chosen seed, to whom the promises were made. This order was instituted in the days of Adam, and came down by lineage in the following manner:

"From Adam to Seth, who was ordained by Adam at the age of sixty-nine years, and was blessed by him three years previous to his (Adam's) death, and received the promise of God by his father, that his posterity should be the chosen of the Lord, and that they should be preserved unto the end of the earth, because he (Seth) was a perfect man, and his likeness was the express likeness of his father, inasmuch that he seemed to be like unto his father in all things; and could be distinguished from him only by his age. Enos was ordained at the age of one hundred and thirty-four years and four months, by the hand of Adam. God called upon Cainan in the wilderness, in the fortieth year of his age, and he met Adam in journeying to the place Shedolamak. He was eighty-seven years old when he received his ordination. Mahalaleel was four hundred and ninety-six years and seven days old when he was ordained by the hand of Adam, who also blessed him. Jared was two hundred years old when he was ordained under the hand of Adam, who blessed him. Enoch was twenty-five years old when he was ordained under the hand of Adam, and he was sixty-five and Adam blessed him—and he saw the Lord: and he walked with him, and was before his face continually; and he walked with God three hundred and sixty-five years: making him four hundred and thirty years old when he was translated. Methuselah was one hundred years old when he was ordained under the hand of Adam. Lamech was one hundred years old when he was ordained under the hand of Seth. Noah was ten years old when he was ordained under the hand of Methuselah. Three years previous to the death of Adam, he called Seth, Enos, Cainan, Mahalaleel, Jared, Enoch, and Methuselah, who were all high priests, with the residue of his posterity, who were righteous, into the valley of Adam-ondi-ahman, and there bestowed upon them his last blessing. And the Lord appeared unto them, and they rose up and blessed Adam, and called him Michael, the Prince, the Archangel. And the Lord administered comfort unto Adam, and said unto him, I have set thee to be at the head: a multitude of nations shall come of thee; and thou art a prince over them for ever. And Adam stood up in the midst of the congregation, and notwithstanding he was bowed down with age, being full of the Holy Ghost, predicted whatsoever should befall his posterity unto the latest generation. These things were all written in the Book of Enoch, and are to be testified of in due time."

And now, as a closing statement to the historical consideration, we call attention to Doctrine and Covenants 107:37, 38. "Verily I say unto you, I now give unto you the officers belonging to my priesthood, that ye may hold the keys thereof, even the priesthood which is after the order of Melchisedec, which is after the order of my only begotten Son. First, I give unto you Hyrum Smith to be a patriarch unto you, to hold the sealing blessings of my church, even the Holy Spirit of promise, whereby ye are sealed up unto the day of redemption, that ye may not fall, notwithstanding the hour of temptation that may come upon you."

Thus we see that when God's working force is fully organized, it is a unit of power for the good and salvation of the race; and it is unsafe for us to miss a link in the great chain designed of God to bind Satan, that old Dragon, which is the Devil.

DOCTRINAL PROOF. PROVIDED FOR IN CHURCH ORGANIZATION.

"Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular. And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues."—1 Corinthians 12:27, 28.

"And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head; even Christ: from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."—Ephesians 4:11-16.

In the above scripture, the apostle sets forth the order of God, in the organization of the church of Christ, in a clear and forcible manner. The language shows the necessity for, and the beauty, importance, and immutability of the divine plan.

God has placed in his church the offices and gifts referred to, that men might occupy in the offices, and men and women exercise the gifts—all to be done according to his will—"till" (an adverb of time) we become full grown and perfect men and women in Christ Jesus our Lord. All this was, and is, for the harmonious development of all the members of the church of God, that the true Christ character might be the result of their obedience to the truth. Without this character, there is no such thing as salvation.

It is claimed by a large class, without, and a small class, within, that no such office as that of patriarch is mentioned in the New Testament, and, therefore, that the introduction of such a class of ministers, under this title, is an innovation.

The conclusion is hasty and not well founded. In the above scriptures, we evidently have specific and general titles, used to denote the different offices provided for in the organization of the church. That general as well as specific titles are used, is evident from the fact that seventies, bishops, deacons, etc., are not named, while every New Testament believer must admit that God placed these in the church.

Before our objectors prove that there is no place for patriarchs, in harmony with New Testament teaching, let them prove just what officers are referred to under the titles of "teachers," "helps and governments," "evangelists," "pastors." We refer, of course, to those who believe that there can be no revelation to us, from God, outside of the Bible.

The plain truth is, however, that the New Testament, as well as the old, teaches the doctrine of present or continuous revelation. That is, the channel of communication between God and man is always open, in every age and every clime, unless closed by transgression or unbelief upon the part of those who should be the people of God. New, or additional, revelation is not necessarily false. It is plain that if God's people had always believed that additional revelation is false, we would now have but a very small portion of what is contained in the Bible. All that is not found in the first revelation of God to man, as recorded in the book of Genesis, is additional; and while man is strictly forbidden to add to God's word, (see Deuteronomy 4:2; Proverbs 30:5, 6; Revelation 22:18,) yet he has the right, and it has been his practice, to add to his own word, whenever and wherever he pleased. According to Bible history, this was God's practice for more than four thousand years; and the good book does not contain even an intimation that God would ever change his policy.

It is a very foolish thing, and in no sense our privilege, to attempt to limit God. It is not for us to say when God shall speak, nor when he shall keep silent; nor is it our privilege to dictate to him what he shall say when he does speak. Finite man is not permitted to dictate to the infinite God! Where God has placed limitations on his own acts, or informed us what he will not and can not do, we should accept it in good faith; but for puny, weak, finite man, to say to the Infinite One, "Thus far shalt thou come, and no farther," is altogether a different thing.

The truth is, we are not only asked to limit God, where he has not limited himself, but we are asked to believe, and make it an important part of our faith (?), that he will not do the very thing which he says he will do. (See Matthew 11:27; 7:7-11; James 1:5; John 14:21-24; 26; 15:26; 16:13-15; 1 Corinthians 12:3; Acts 17:26, 27.)

It is proper to say in this connection, that while the Bible is of great importance as a guide to truth and an expositor of error; and while it contains a record of the truth which makes us free (that is, saves us), yet it must be admitted that the record, both in history and doctrine, is brief and incomplete. Some fifteen or twenty books, which were written, have been lost. Speaking of the biography of Christ, John says:

"And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written."—John 21:25.

Now, the pertinent question is not whether the specific name, patriarch, is known to the New Testament, but, rather, are the office, calling, and work of the patriarch in harmony with God's character, ways, and word, as revealed in the Bible? We claim that they are; and if these claims are correct, then it is both safe and profitable to receive them.

In New Testament times, the same office was sometimes known by different titles. John was one of the twelve apostles, but he always called himself "the elder." (2 John 1:1; 3 John 1:1.) Peter was an apostle, but he sometimes called himself an "elder." (1 Peter 5:1.) It is not strange, therefore, that we should read in Doctrine and Covenants 17:8, "An apostle is an elder," etc.

A number of the titles mentioned in 1 Corinthians 12:28, and Ephesians 4:11, may have also been known by other titles. If the same office was known by different titles, in the same age, then to the same extent, at least, and probably to a greater extent, would the same office be designated by different titles in different ages of the world. This would not impair the authority of a minister of Jesus Christ, or vitiate his work in the least. The authority of the minister, and the character of the work he is called to do, are what we need to look after more than the mere name by which he is called.

At this juncture, and in order to throw light on the use of different titles as applied to ministers in the Christian church, we call attention to the titles of deacon and bishop. The Greek word from which we get deacon is diakonos, and literally means "minister," or a "runner," i. e., "servant." From the use that is made of this title in primitive church history, there are good grounds for the belief, we think, that the title of deacon was applied to several of the lower officers in the church, perhaps to what are now known by us as priests, teachers, and deacons.

The same is doubtless true of the word bishop, except that it applies to higher officers of the church. Bishop comes from the Greek episkopos, which literally means "overseer, superintendent." The title was doubtless applied to men who held different offices in the Christian church, but who were all invested with the right to preside. This will account for many things said of deacons and bishops, in primitive church history, which otherwise conflict, to some extent, with the duties of these ministers as defined under the restored gospel.

But we are told by the small class who reject the work of patriarchs, and yet claim to be believers in the latter-day work, that they are justified in rejecting them because they are not even mentioned in the Book of Mormon, which is said to contain "the fullness of the gospel."

If on this ground we may properly reject the calling and work of patriarchs, why not, on the same ground, reject the calling and work of bishops, seventies, and deacons, as set forth in the Bible and Book of Doctrine and Covenants? The Book of Mormon fails to specifically state that any such office as that of bishop, seventy, or deacon, was established in the primitive Christian church on this continent.

It must be admitted, that while the Book of Mormon is plainer and much more complete, on some important matters of history and doctrine, than the Bible, on other matters, including church organization, it is very incomplete. Mormon, who abridged the record, so far as it was abridged, says: "And now there can not be written in this book, even a hundredth part of the things which Jesus did truly teach unto the people."—3 Nephi 12:1.

Is it wise and safe to reject the provision made in later revelations for the office and work of patriarchs, because they are not mentioned in the record which does not contain a hundredth part of what Jesus taught the people? We think not, provided this provision is in harmony with the word of God.

That phrase, "fullness of the gospel," has been almost as badly used, or abused, by some Latter Day Saints, as Revelation 22:18 has been by those who reject all present revelation. The Doctrine and Covenants teaches that "the fullness of the gospel" is contained in the Bible and Book of Mormon. (Doctrine and Covenants 42:5.) It also states that the Book of Mormon, by itself, contains "the fullness of the gospel," (17:2, 26:2.) It must be admitted then that the Bible, when properly translated, contains the "fullness of the gospel," as well as the Book of Mormon; and inasmuch as each book contains important matter which the other does not, and the usual interpretation is that the phrase denotes that the Book of Mormon contains all gospel truth, then, upon this ground, are we not driven to the conclusion that each book contains more than "the fullness of the gospel," or each one contains less than the "fullness"?

What, then, are we to understand by the much abused phrase, "fullness of the gospel"? We are to understand this, and this only: In the Book of Mormon, also the Inspired Version of the Bible, is contained the gospel as it was given of God to those ancient worthies, who wrote and spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, without garbling or loss of "plain and precious parts."

The statement of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants is, "The Book of Mormon, containing, the fullness of my everlasting gospel."—Doctrine and Covenants 26:2.

There is a difference between "the fullness," and all "the fullness." Let the Doctrine and Covenants explain itself on the use and meaning of this phrase. In the vision seen by Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon (see section 76:3), speaking of Christ, we read: "Of whom we bear record, and the record which we bear is the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, who is the Son, whom we saw and with whom we conversed in the heavenly vision."

Their testimony is a presentation of the truth, as it is with God, concerning Jesus Christ and his gospel; nevertheless, there is much valuable information concerning Christ, the ordinances of the gospel, and the work of the ministry, which is not found in the vision.

A witness, when in court, is sworn to tell "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth"; that is, he is to tell the truth in its fullness; and yet, all the truth he knows, at the most, is a very small fragment of what exists in the universe of God.

PROPER PROVISION FOR PATRIARCHS AND THEIR WORK MADE IN THE REVELATIONS.

This brings us to the material and vital point: Are the calling and work of patriarchs, as designated in modern revelation, in harmony with God and his word? If they are, we may safely admit them; but if not, they should be rejected.

As already shown, we learn from Ephesians 4:11, that by the authority of Jesus Christ, the office of evangelist was established in the primitive church. Doctrine and Covenants 104:17, reads as follows:

"It is the duty of the twelve, in all large branches of the church, to ordain evangelical ministers, as they shall be designated unto them by revelation."

We are not at a loss to recognize the peculiar significance and propriety of these statements when we consider the character of the calling and duties of the Twelve.

"The twelve are a traveling, presiding high council, to officiate in the name of the Lord, under the direction of the presidency of the church, agreeably to the institution of heaven, to build up the church and regulate all the affairs of the same, in all nations; first unto the Gentiles, and secondly unto the Jews."—Doctrine and Covenants 104:12.

In the communication of April 15, 1901, given at Independence, Missouri, and now published as section 125 in the late editions of the Doctrine and Covenants, we have the following plain definitions of the calling and duties of patriarchs:

"The patriarch is an evangelical minister. The duties of this office are to be an evangelical minister; to preach, teach, expound, exhort; to be a revivalist, and to visit branches and districts as wisdom may direct, invitation, request, or the Spirit of God determine and require; to comfort the Saints; to be a father to the church; to give counsel and advice to individuals who may seek for such; to lay on hands for the conferment of spiritual blessing, and if so led, to point out the lineage of the one who is blessed. He is to be free from responsibility—ministerial—as a traveling minister, and from the care of the local branch or church and district affairs. When traveling and preaching, holding revival meetings, he is to labor in connection with the branch and district officers, not subject to the ministerial control of the missionary in charge, except he should transcend his bounds and teach false doctrine or be found in transgression. He is not to meddle with branch affairs or district affairs. He is not to listen to complaints made by individuals to him, but if persons insist upon presenting their troubles, he is to request them and require them to make them in writing, signing the name, giving time, place, and character of the trouble, with the witnesses, which it will be his duty to present to the branch or district officers, as the case may require. He is not to be put in charge of either branch or district. These are the privileges which attach to the office of patriarch and evangelical minister. The presiding patriarch is to be considered the first, and when patriarchs meet in council, is to preside. Besides these duties, the patriarch may meet with quorums in their quorum meetings, where he may be asked for counsel, but will not have either voice or vote, except by courtesy, having no directing control of quorums. Other evangelical ministers besides the presiding patriarch have similar duties in the districts where they are appointed. Revelations have been given, as my people know, that these men should receive ordination, but hitherto those upon whom this burden has lain have neglected, for the reason that they did not understand the duties and prerogatives that attach to the office. Let my servants take heed and hesitate no longer."—Paragraphs 3-6.

From the above we learn that a patriarch "is an evangelical minister," which was also taught by Joseph the Seer. His leading work is "to preach, teach, expound, exhort; to be a revivalist, to lay on hands for the conferment of spiritual blessing, and if so led, to point out the lineage of the one who is blessed."

The above speaks for itself. The work indicated is not only in complete harmony with God's character and word, and the needs of his children in all ages, but it is among the most important work provided by the divine Being for the benefit of his children. It is pure gospel work, and as such is found to be in complete harmony with God's love, wisdom and power, and all gospel teaching recorded in the sacred books of the church.

A QUERY ANSWERED.—DOES CHRIST SAVE ONLY A FEW SELECT ONES?

Mrs. H.—Does your church claim to be the only right and true church of Christ?

Elder S.—Yes, that is what we claim.

Mrs. H.—Do you claim then that you are the only ones that will be saved?

Elder S.—No, we believe all men will be saved in their order; except the sons of perdition. For them there is no salvation.

Mrs. H.—Would you please explain, as I do not understand what you mean?

Elder S.—I will be pleased to do so. I suppose that you believe the Bible?

Mrs. H.—Yes, sir.

Elder S.—You believe the explanation of Paul in 1 Corinthians fifteenth chapter, where he explains how men will come forth in the resurrection? Paul here tells the people that all will not come forth in the same glory; that is to say, receive the same reward, enjoy the same degree of salvation; but that some will come forth in the morning of the resurrection in the glory represented by the glory of the sun. Others will come forth in that glory represented by the glory of the moon; and again others will come forth in a glory of which the stars are typical; and as one star differs from another in glory so will the resurrection be. You will also understand that the dead are raised at two different times at least; one to take place a thousand years before the other. (See Revelation, chapter 20.) And Christ also speaks of a resurrection of the just and of the unjust. (See John, chapter 5.)

Mrs. H.—Yes, this seems all plain enough, though I confess that I have never understood these scriptures like that before. But this does not answer my question, whether you will be the only ones who will be saved.

Elder S.—We are not yet through. We have simply noticed the fact that different degrees of salvation exist in the resurrection, and that some are to be raised one thousand years before others. You will admit that Jesus Christ came to the world to establish his gospel, that through obedience to it men might be saved?

Mrs. H.—Yes, sir.

Elder S.—Christ says, I came not to do my own will but my Father's. Then, the gospel which Christ came to establish, was the Father's. It was then a perfect law because it came from a perfect being. That being true, is it not also true, that, if we do not comply with a perfect law, we can not obtain a perfect salvation?

Mrs. H.—It would seem that way.

Elder S.—Then those who can not abide in a perfect law must be satisfied to abide in a condition inferior to a perfect glory. Just as the moon is not perfect in itself but receives its light from the sun, so it will be with those who shall inherit that glory represented by the moon. Is that clear to your mind?

Mrs. H.—Yes, sir. I think that is plain enough.

Elder S.—You understand, then, that only those who yield obedience to a perfect law can be perfected and sanctified by that law, and as a result, receive the highest reward, that of which the sun is typical?

Mrs. H.—Yes. I think I can understand that all right. But what am I to understand by a perfect law? All claim to teach a perfect law, and what assurances can you give me that the Latter Day Saints teach a more perfect law than others teach.

Elder S.—The best assurance I can give, is for you to compare our teachings with the Bible; and judge for yourself whether we teach all of it or not. If we teach all of Christ's teaching to us and make it applicable to our lives we are then entitled to a full salvation. If we only teach it in part, then we are entitled to only a partial salvation, and may obtain one of the glories as represented by the moon or stars. You know some claim to be saved by faith only and that Christ has done it all and we have nothing to do. If salvation can be secured by faith only, then the Devil can be saved also, because he not only believes in Christ, but he also knows He is the Son of God. The Scriptures teach that faith and works must go together and it is the "work" part that bars out the Devil from salvation, because he will not comply with the commandments. Well, if it will bar out the Devil, is it not reasonable to believe that it will bar out others, also, who will simply believe and do not the works?

Mrs. H.—Well, it would seem so.

Elder S.—Then there are others who think that repentance is an essential feature in addition to faith and will say that baptism is nonessential. Did Christ ever give a nonessential command? Or do you think the Father made a mistake when he told his Son what he should say and what he should speak? If not, how dare we say that baptism is not essential to salvation? and how can we obtain a perfect salvation if we only comply with a part of God's law? We are also taught in the Scriptures that the "laying on of hands" was a practice had in the days of Christ and the apostles for conferring spiritual gifts and blessings and also authority. This practice has largely been done away and is disbelieved by many. How then do we receive these gifts and blessings now, unless we receive them through the channel God has ordained? Furthermore, the existence of these gifts and blessings as spoken of by Paul in 1 Corinthians 12 is denied as being a necessity now. The signs which Christ said should follow the believers are likewise denied. (See Mark 16.)

While other religious bodies believe in parts of the teachings of Christ, the Latter Day Saints believe and teach them all, as one perfect, unchangeable law, suitable and applicable to all who will obey it, by reason of which they may attain unto the highest degree of glory in the resurrection; but for those who will only obey and believe it in part, only a partial salvation can be obtained, as typified by the moon and the stars, for as much as they are inferior in glory to the sun so will their reward be inferior to those who believe and practice all the teachings of Christ. Those who believe and live according to that perfect law shall come forth in the first resurrection; but the rest of the dead live not again until the thousand years are ended.

Mrs. H.—I never understood the plan of salvation in that light, but I see it plainly now. I can now understand what Paul meant when he wrote to Timothy that Christ is the Savior of all men, especially of those who believe; and I suppose he meant by that, those who carried that belief into practice, or else, as you say, it would include the Devil also. Hence I see now that there is a special salvation for those who believe all things.

Elder S.—You begin then to understand our position; how that a person may obtain a partial salvation, and not receive a fullness. How that Christ, when he shall have conquered death, will say to the prisoner in the prison-house, Go forth, (see Zechariah 9:11, 12; Isaiah 42:7; 61:1,) and how at that time he shall reward every man according to his works. (See Revelation 20:12, 13.) Then we can understand how the nations of them which are saved and receive their reward in these inferior glories shall walk in the shadow and receive of the ministration of the higher glory spoken of by John (see Revelation 21:24), but who are not permitted to enter into it (the holy city). But the kings of the earth, those who shall be kings and priests and reign over these nations, (see Revelation 20:4; 5:10,) shall bring their glory and honor into it.

Mrs. H.—You spoke of the prison-house and of prisoners coming out of it; what do you mean by that?

Elder S.—I mean those who were disobedient to God's law when Noah was preaching, and were destroyed in the flood, whose spirits Christ went and preached unto in the prison, as stated by Peter (see 1 Peter 3:18-20; 4:6) as well as the spirits of the ungodly of all ages. They are confined in a place called the prison-house or hell, to await the time of resurrection, and during this intermediate state suffer the penalty for their ungodly deeds, after which Christ by reason of having obtained the keys (authority or power) over hell and death, shall enter into the strong man's (Satan) palace, overcome him, and take away from him his armor wherein he trusted, and divide his spoil, his prisoners. (See Luke 11:22.) This is a part of the mission-work of Christ as prophesied by the prophets. (See Isaiah 24:21, 22; 42:7; 61:1; Zechariah 9:11, 12.)

Mrs. H.—But, do not the Scriptures teach that they will stay in hell for ever, those who get there? That is what I have always been taught by my pastor.

Elder S.—If that be so, your pastor was certainly mistaken, as there is no such doctrine in the Bible; but on the contrary, John says in Revelation 20:13: "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and HELL delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man [those who had come out of hell] according to their works. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire." Hell was now destroyed, having served its purpose.

Mrs. H.—Yes, it seems very plain when you explain it, but somebody will come along and tell me just the opposite, and make it appear very reasonable, and they will tell me that the rich man and Lazarus were for ever separated and that there was a great gulf fixed which no one could pass over. It says very plainly that the rich man was in hell, and now if he could not pass over that gulf, how say you then that he can?

Elder S.—I believe that if you will notice this language closely you will discover that it refers to a past event and that it is intended to portray the condition as it then existed in hell, or in the prison-house, showing the impossibility, without the intervention of Christ, to ever escape from that condition; but when Christ shall have risen from the dead, and thus broken the bands of death and made possible the resurrection from the dead, (for without it there would have been no resurrection,) then shall the rich man and others who were in hell, come out. At the last resurrection, when the dead shall all arise, and when the sea, death, and hell shall deliver up their captive spirits, then shall also the rich man come forth with all the rest. Then shall come to pass the saying in Revelation 5:13, that, "every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb for ever and ever." No wonder then that every knee shall bow and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the honor and glory of God, when he shall have redeemed them from the grasp of the Devil and delivered their bodies from the power of the grave and their spirits from the powers of hell.

Mrs. H.—Well, I never heard things explained that way before, but it looks reasonable enough. But just wait a moment, Elder S., I want to show you what Christ says about it and if you can explain that to my satisfaction, I am almost persuaded that your teaching on the mission-work of Christ is all right and superior to anything I have ever heard before. You know that Christ in Matthew 25:31-46 says that when he shall sit upon the throne of his glory, all nations shall be gathered before him, and he shall separate them as a shepherd doth his sheep, the goats on one side and the sheep on the other; and he shall say unto the goats on his left, depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire prepared for the Devil and his angels. Now, it seems to me, that this is very plain and goes to show that they shall be punished for ever.

Elder S.—Yes, that it is very plain, is true, and there is to come a time, when this terrible sentence is to be pronounced upon a certain class; but to come to a correct solution as to whom this refers, and when it shall take place, we must examine it a little closer; and also compare it with other scripture. In the first place we notice, that this event is to transpire when Christ shall have come to earth again and while he is ruling in glory sitting upon the throne of his father David, which is here on earth, and ruling all nations, who shall be subject to his reign and dominion. Then shall come to pass the prophecy by Zechariah 9:10: "And he shall speak peace unto the heathen; and his dominion shall be from sea even to sea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth." The prophecy in Psalm 2:8, shall also then be fulfilled: "Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." At that time shall also the saying come to pass that no one shall need to say to his brother, Know ye the Lord, for they shall all know him from the least to the greatest. This knowledge is received through the operation of the Holy Spirit, which shall then be poured out upon all flesh, and is the only means by which this knowledge can come. Now you would naturally think that having received this knowledge and living under the prosperous and peaceful reign of Christ when there shall be nothing to hurt nor destroy in all the earth, when Satan shall be bound and have no power any more to deceive man, that it would be impossible for them to be deceived again by the Devil; having received this knowledge. This class, you must bear in mind, are not the ones who come forth in the first resurrection in the glory of the sun, who are kings and priests, and reign with Christ; but are those of an inferior glory, who had not overcome in this life and had not yielded obedience to the gospel of Christ. But there is a time coming at the close of the thousand years, called the "little season," when the Devil shall be unbound and he shall go out on the face of the whole earth; and we are told in Revelation 20:7-10, that he shall succeed in deceiving a very great number, and shall come up to battle against the holy city, the camp of the saints of God. And now comes the judgment of those spoken of in Matthew 25. They had known the Lord, and that by the power of the Holy Spirit; and having now suffered themselves to be overcome they sin willfully, against their knowledge. They sin against the Holy Ghost who has imparted this knowledge to them, and now there remained no more "sacrifice for sin" as the apostle says, and Christ says that to sin against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven in this world nor in that which is to come. Hence they are become the sons of perdition, the angels of the Devil, of whom we have spoken before; that for them there is no salvation, but they are the ones to whom Christ shall say, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." All the rest shall receive in the resurrection that for which they have lived and fitted themselves. But only those who receive the glory represented by the sun can ever come where God and Christ are worlds without end, but will receive of the ministration of those who occupy higher glories than they themselves occupy, who are kings and priests of God and reign with him and under him.

Mrs. H.—I am surprised. How plain it all seems, and I must confess that I can not see a single objection to it. I can now comprehend the justice of God, when I see it in this light. But I had always been taught that all who were not worthy to go to heaven would be cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, there to roast eternally. I am very glad that I have met you, because I feel now that I can love a Savior that I dreaded before. I could not understand how he could be a loving, merciful, and just God, and yet deal thus with his creatures, created in his image, and by him, and for him, and to his glory, honor, and pleasure as the apostle says. But now, since your explanation, I feel to honor and glorify his holy name by reason of his goodness, which Paul tells us leads us to repentance, and that we should receive a spirit of love, and not that of fear which leads to bondage.

Elder S.—Is your question answered satisfactorily?

Mrs. H.—I think so. I understand from your explanation that you are not the only ones that God will reward, but that others will be rewarded and punished according to the degree of good or evil they have done. And it looks reasonable that if man is to receive a full and complete salvation only by obedience to the gospel in its fullness, that they who do not obey fully should not receive a full salvation upon a partial obedience. I had always thought that you Latter Day Saints were very egotistical and conceited, in saying that you were the only right church, and I naturally supposed that you assigned everybody to hell who did not believe as you do. I see, now, that you are more liberal, and more consistent, and have more truth than any professors of religion I have ever met before. There is another question I would like to ask you before you leave. Is your church the same as what is commonly called the Mormon church in Utah?

Elder S.—No. We have no affiliation with that body in the least. They are simply an offspring from the original Latter Day Saint church, who when they had settled in the West adopted certain theories and dogmas which were contrary to the spirit of the gospel and in direct opposition to the established faith of the church as held prior to 1844, when in that year her leader and prophet was slain and the church left to the mercy of ambitious and aspiring men who led the people astray.

Mrs. H.—Well, how did your church then come into existence?

Elder S.—It was simply a reuniting of the people who refused to follow these would-be leaders and refused to adopt their teachings; and this body is now known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Those interested in the outlook of the latter-day work will do well to read a symposium of the views on this subject of six prominent church workers as they are given in the May Autumn Leaves.

THOUGHTS ON THE PRESENT GREAT RELIGIOUS REVIVAL.—PROBLEMS FOR THINKERS.

Connected with some of the profoundest psychological problems of the latter days, is the question governing the environments of the religious and ecclesiastical world; and particularly the present outburst of religious fervor and emotionalism characteristic of the great revival under the leadership of the Welsh evangelist, the Reverend Evan Roberts.

Every thinking reader will, I am sure, indorse my first proposition, viz.: that it is either of God, or it is not of God. That there would be spirits going abroad upon the earth during the latter days in order to deceive the people is most evident from the holy Scriptures. (See 1 John 4:1; 2 Thessalonians 2:11; Matthew 24:4, 5, 24; Revelation 13:12.)

My second proposition is also one which will meet with the acceptance and approbation of the thoughtful and judicious among your numerous readers, and it is this: The law and testimony of God must be the sole and self-sufficient, nay, the supreme test of the veracity or otherwise of whatever "spirit" or religious movement we may desire to bring under critical analysis and investigation. To this proposition agrees Isaiah 8:20: "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

What word? Obviously the "word of reconciliation" alluded to by Saint Paul in 2 Corinthians 5:19, Galatians 6:6, Ephesians 5:26, Colossians 3:16, and many other portions. See also Psalm 68:11, Isaiah 44:26, John 12:48 and 15:3, in all of which texts the true gospel is denominated "the word." Obviously, then, there is no escaping the severe logic involved in this proposition, that no matter by what power or by what signs or even by what miracles these demonstrations may be proclaimed and accompanied, if they are not speaking according to the true gospel (word) there is no light in them!

I now embark upon a different phase of the same proposition or inquiry. God in the beginning made all things. (See John 1:3.) Further, he made all things good. (See Genesis 1:31.) He invested man with a certain godlike attribute which differentiated him from, and raised him above the brute creation and all the lesser works of the omnipotent Creator's hand. That godlike attribute is called man's mind, or his reasoning faculty, i. e., his reason.

I now adduce my third and last proposition, viz.: that whatsoever spirit or doctrine or religion ignores or debases or dethrones man's reasoning supremacy is, prima facie, not of God; for when he made man's reason he pronounced it very good. He can not therefore, be the author and originator of anything which subverts or antagonizes that which he himself made and pronounced to be very good. Hence he himself says, "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."—Isaiah 1:18. Again, "Produce your cause, saith the Lord; bring forth your strong reasons, saith the King of Jacob."—Isaiah 41:21.

Still more emphatically, as if to guard against unreasoning spirits and unphilosophical systems of religion advanced in the latter days, the Spirit spoke plainly and unequivocally through Paul the apostle: "For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind."—2 Timothy 1:7.

One thought by way of practical application of the main proposition, and I have done. Let your readers compare the doctrines of the "Revivalists" with the scriptural "word of reconciliation" (see Acts 2:37, 38) and see what agreement is inherent in the premises. Still further: Let them compare the solemn and dignified attitude and words and deportment of the true ministers and apostles of the Lord with the fiery and wild and frenzied utterances of modern "revivalists," and see the throngs of "converts" screaming and gesticulating in a manner characteristic of the unfortunate inmates of our insane asylums; and I ask, in all sobriety and sincerity, is theirs the gospel, and procedure of sound mind or not?

THE CLIFF-DWELLINGS; HOME OF PRIMITIVE MAN.

The best place in the world to study the home life of primitive man is in southwest Colorado and northwest New Mexico. Here nature seems not only to have offered a suggestion, but to have urged man to make her bosom his home. . . . Four years ago we were in this section in the month of April. . . . The cliffs in which the cavite lodges are cut are from one hundred to five hundred feet in height. . . . On the top of the cliff we usually find a large communal building, containing several hundred rooms. These great buildings are of stone cut out of the sides of the cliffs. . . . We discovered one room that seemed to be a music-room, the only articles we found in it being fifes and flutes, made of the leg-bones of pelicans. In nearly all of the rooms we found pottery, vases, jars, bowls, water-bottles, ladles, some of them plain, others beautifully and elaborately decorated. These are fine specimens of primitive art. . . . By uncovering forty or fifty rooms in different portions of the great building, we were able to gather much as to the life, habits, and customs of the strange people who once dwelt here, but whose history is otherwise unwritten and unknown.—Doctor George L. Cole, Archæologist, Pasadena, California.

The above extract is from the Epworth Herald, December 3, 1904, a Methodist Episcopal paper. The article testifies in favor of the Book of Mormon account of large buildings, and the great civilization on the American Continent prior to the coming of Columbus. We suggest to Doctor Cole and the Methodist Church that they read the Book of Mormon and learn "much as to the life, habits, and customs of the strange people who once dwelt here, but whose history is otherwise unwritten and unknown."

We thank the Doctor for tacitly admitting, in behalf of the Methodist Church, that they need just such a "history" as the Latter Day Saint Church can supply them with.

Selected Articles

[The following article from the Friend (a paper published by the Board of the Hawaiian Evangelical Association) was sent us by Bro. G. J. Waller, who says of Reverend Thwing: "Mr. Thwing is a minister of the Presbyterian Church here, who devotes all his time to work amongst the Chinese. He speaks their language." Many of our readers will have interest in reading the article.—Eds.]

HAWAII AND CHINA.

Hawaii holds a unique position, midway between the greatest empire of the East and the great republic of the West. It is here that these nations first joined hand in friendly intercourse across the wide Pacific. At these islands, in the very center of the ocean's crossroads, China has her first view of the life and civilization of her occidental neighbor. Her officials, her statesmen, her teachers and scholars, on reaching Honolulu see for the first time a real American city. The relations between the Chinese and Americans of Hawaii have always been most friendly, and it is here in this eastern center of American life that the strongest effort should be put forth to build up the best evangelistic educational and social work for the Chinese who have come among us.

For more than fifty years the Chinese have lived in these islands, year by year coming in larger numbers, until just before the annexation to the United States they numbered about thirty-nine thousand. In earlier times they carried on an extensive trade in sandalwood with the chiefs of old Hawaii, so that even now the islands are known to all the Chinese by the name of "Tan Heung Shan" or "Sandalwood Mountain." Much of the development of the islands, the sugar industry, the rice plantations, has been due to these steady working people. Although since becoming a part of the United States their numbers have been decreasing, they are to-day one of the best and most reliable classes of our population.

Travelers from California have often remarked that the Chinese of Honolulu seem to be a better class, as a rule, than those of San Francisco. Why is it so? They are exactly the same kind of people as those in California, all coming from much the same districts of South China. But in Hawaii the Chinese have been better treated, have been given a fairer chance than on the mainland. They have been protected and trusted, and have as a rule well proved themselves worthy of the kindly feeling extended to them. If you should visit among the Christian homes of Honolulu to-day, you would find many of the brightest, pleasantest, and in every way quite American homes, those of the Chinese. In the schools they are among the most industrious and capable of the students. They have proved themselves faithful in positions of trust. Some of them have already returned to China, and are putting their education and experience to good use in helping their own people to a larger civilization. Some are now studying in Japan and making ready to help in the forward movement for China.

During the past twenty or thirty years Christian work has been carried on among the Chinese living at different places in the islands. One faithful worker under the Hawaiian Board was pastor of a Chinese church on the Island of Hawaii for twenty-four years. In his declining years he is now at his old home in China doing something for his people there. His son, a graduate of Mills Institute, is an active Christian young man in Honolulu to-day; he plays the large pipe-organ in the Chinese church, as well as giving good assistance in the Sunday-school work. There are now six Chinese churches, besides many other stations for school and mission, carried on under the care of the Hawaiian Board. In the largest Chinese church in Honolulu, between two and three hundred Chinese meet every Sunday for Bible study and gospel preaching. There is also here a Christian Endeavor Society, a Chinese Y. M. C. A., and a Young Ladies' Missionary Society. The church-members help, in services for the Chinese at the jail, in street-preaching in Chinatown, and in other forms of city mission-work.

Christian work is also being done on some of the large plantations among the Chinese laborers. They are always glad to gather after their evening meal and listen to a talk from the missionary. And in this way the seed is sown, gospel tracts are left among them, and little by little they come to understand that the religion of Christ means helpfulness, comfort, and benefit for the people of China. One Chinese laborer who accepted Christ said: "My father and mother, my wife and children in China are not Christians; I am sorry, so I am going to send my boy in China to the Christian school in Canton, that he may learn of Jesus and so teach the others."

The watchword of the church should be ever forward, pressing on to more victories and greater achievements. Hawaii has been long a land of missions, and is still to be a great centre of light power. The church in America is just beginning to awaken to the vast possibilities which may come from active and aggressive work among the Chinese and Japanese here. With the aid furnished by the churches of America, the Hawaiian Board of Missions is planning an enlargement of the work. New evangelists are coming from Japan. The Board is sending the superintendent of the Chinese work on a special mission to China to secure more Chinese workers and to bring the work for the Chinese in Hawaii into closer touch with the missionary work in China. He will visit the important Chinese settlement in Yokohama, Japan, and see the Chinese from Hawaii who are studying there. Japan to-day is doing much to awaken and lead Chinese thought, Hawaii is having an influence on Japan, and so through Japan on China. He will make a study of the magazines and literature being published in Japan for the Chinese. During visits at Shanghai, Hongkong, and Canton, he will visit some of the large Christian colleges, and see some of the Chinese from Hawaii who are studying at these places. The more modern plans and methods of Chinese education will be carefully looked into. Various large mission presses will be visited, and the best literature for use among the Chinese of the islands will be selected. It is the desire of the Board not only to enlarge, but by every means to bring its Chinese work to the highest efficiency. Every effort must be put forth to make the work here tell in the future of China.

Nowhere else in all America's wide territory, from Boston to the Philippine Islands, is there a better opportunity for reaching her Chinese than here in Hawaii. And I say "her Chinese," for America should look upon them as her own people, just as much as those who come from other lands. And here in Hawaii, more than anywhere else, are many Chinese proud to claim American citizenship, because they have been treated well, and not as strangers and aliens. With over three hundred Chinese-American citizens here, and many more native-born Chinese, securing citizenship every year, with some two thousand Chinese children in our schools, what a grand opportunity there is of training up and developing young Chinese men and women, who may one day be a power in China.

In God's wise providence, Hawaii, that brightest jewel of the ocean, has been given to America. Shall she not do for Hawaii and for Hawaii's children the very best in her power? Here in this land, as it were, the hand of Christian America is reaching far out over the Pacific Ocean toward the empire of China. May it be a hand of friendship and helpfulness, to beckon China "Onward and Upward." Is it not a duty and privilege of every Christian, who values the joy and light and liberty of our own land, to give to all the Chinese who come to these sunny islands of the Pacific the help that will lead them to better things? Then shall Hawaii lead in the triumphant march of the church of God, eastward, ever eastward, until all of China shall be won for Christ. —E. W. Thwing, in the Friend, Honolulu, Hawaii Territory.

THE STORY OF A FAMOUS OLD "MANUSCRIPT" FOUND IN IOWA.

FAIRFIELD, Iowa, December 29—(Special.)—Dusty and almost forgotten, the famous "Fairfield 'Aztec' Manuscript" lay for years in the possession of its finder, T. J. Griffith, of this city. The "Fairfield 'Aztec' Manuscript," at the time of its finding, in 1896, threatened to revolutionize the entire theory as to the origin, so far as America is concerned, of the Aztecs, held to be the original inhabitants of Mexico. But only recently did it find a fitting place of repose, it having been given to an eastern museum. The birch bark manuscript that created such a stir in historical circles was found September 2, 1896, by T. J. Griffith, while excavating for the new water-works' lake. He brought to light what was apparently a chunk of wood, except that it was encased in a coat of pitch. This relic was only about three feet from the surface, something over a foot in length, by eight inches, and five or six inches thick. Out of curiosity Griffith struck it a blow with his pick, and to his surprise and the surprise of the other workmen, the supposedly solid block split open, revealing a space in the center, in which lay a roll of birch bark, covered on one side with strange hieroglyphics.

The manuscript was sent to the Smithsonian institution at Washington, and by request to the Ohio State university, but neither of them was able to translate the inscription, which was certainly intended to convey some particular meaning. The bark was then sent to the Peabody Museum of Archaeology and Ethnology, Harvard university, and Professor F. W. Putnam, curator of the museum, was of the opinion that the find was a fake.

The bark is very thin, and its natural color is well preserved, this being due to the fact that it was sealed almost air-tight. This color of the bark was one of the chief objections of Professor Putnam to the authenticity of the relic. The edges are torn and broken, and there is every evidence that a part of it is missing. Further excavations were made to discover any more parts, if there were such, but the search proved futile, and Griffith positively asserts that he placed all that was in the original box into the glass case in which it now lies.

The box is of oak, and shows marks on the end of having been rudely hewn with stone axes. There is no practical joker in the vicinity that has the knowledge to execute a plan like this and keep quiet about it. Griffith has been working in the earth for years and is positive that the earth surrounding the manuscript had not been disturbed where this was found. A tree some fifty or sixty years old grew directly over the spot, the hollow log or box being found under its root. The gum or wax, which not only fastens the pieces together, but made the receptacle practically water- and air-tight, had been evenly distributed by turning the block over a fire. This was plain, because the block was not only covered with soot, but was also slightly charred. The characters are written in red, probably the juice of some plant.

This manuscript could not be translated. This, however, does not prove that they are not Aztec, for, though a great deal has been written on Aztec and Maya manuscripts, no one could translate them, and one half of the archæologists who claimed to read them gave different translations of the same manuscript, according to the idea of Warren K. Moorehead, then curator of the department of archæology, Ohio State university, who also thinks that the characters are manifestly Aztec or Maya, and were made by some highly cultured tribe of Mexico or Yucatan.

Mr. Moorehead says: "A party for some unknown reason set out north, carrying this little box, and on account of a decrease in strength, either through sickness or war, buried this manuscript at the point where it was found. It is not at all probable that the whole thing is a hoax, for if it were a fake we must account for the knowledge on the part of the workman who found the Aztec or Maya glyphs, which is not in the least probable. There are very few men in this country who know anything about the hieroglyphics, and it would be impossible for any one in Fairfield to make them, unless he had a work at hand containing plates of the Maya hieroglyphics. The characters are not Indian."

Mr. Moorehead then goes on with a comparison of various South and Central American writings with those of European origin. "There have been several fraudulent sculptured stones found in the United States," adds Mr. Moorehead, "But they are all totally different from this, and do not appear aboriginal either in concept or execution."

This is the story of the mysterious Aztec manuscript that had its run in the newspapers at the time of its finding. The characters may not be those of any language, living or dead, but that the birch bark was found containing them, and that they had not been recently placed there; can not be questioned.—Iowa State Register, December 30, 1904.

[Mr. T. J. Griffiths, of Fairfield, Iowa, who unearthed this manuscript, writes us that he can furnish two photographs of the find for one dollar. One photograph, he says, shows the characters upon the birch bark.—EDITOR.]

The remarkable religious revival that has swept over South Wales has attracted the attention of the entire world and men have gone from America, Germany, England, and various other countries to investigate it. Elder Evan Morgan has visited the scenes of the revival and gives a history of its start and progress in the April and May numbers of Autumn Leaves.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

The Bright Side.

Do you know it is our duty (and should be a pleasure) to make others happy? Not just our own circle and home folks, but all whom we associate with, and the world at large. And if we would be happy ourselves,—and who would not?—we should make it a business to see the best of every one. All have their faults, and all have good traits of character. Let us see the good, overlook the faults. Put ourselves in their place; ask what would we wish to be done to us, and thought of us, were we in their place. Indeed the oil of gladness persistently applied will make life run much more smoothly, and we will get our share of joy while aiding in making others happy.

There are those whose eyes see only the dark side of life. Can not we in some way cheer their lonely lives? A cheery smile may do much more than we think. Never mind if your own lot has not fallen in pleasant places, and your vocation in life is not what you had aimed. Do with a will whatever your hands can find to do; make the best of your life, and what you have. Bear the troubles of to-day bravely, and do not borrow those of to-morrow. Refuse to be crushed down. Set your aims and aspirations above the ordinary, then climb to them. If surrounded by barriers and obstacles, it will only make the daily duty easier to accomplish by having an incentive to spur you on.

Every heart knows best its own sorrows, disappointments, and burdens. The poet has said,

"Laugh, and the world laughs with you,
Weep, and you weep alone."

This, I am glad to say, is not always true, for there are kind, loving, sympathizing hearts to weep with us in trouble. But, "All have enough of their own," so let us try to help lighten others' burdens by looking on the bright side of everything and "doing unto others as we would have them do unto us," and—

"Do not look for wrong or evil,
You will find them if you do;
As you measure to your neighbor,
He will measure back to you."

So we only need to measure kind, loving, generous thoughts, good deeds, pleasant smiles, and be a true, faithful friend to others to be a recipient of all we, too, long for,—true friendship in all its truest, fullest sense. So, if from no other point only for our own good, why not live to make others happy and see the bright side of everything? When the spirit of love and good will is in our hearts, we can not help but share it with others, "And a pleasure shared is a pleasure doubled." Have courage to do what you know is right, and never say, "Fail"; for he that doeth right is the most cheery, generous, liberal person in the world; his heart is right with God, and he can afford to share all his pleasure.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column: As I have received help so many times through your columns, I have thought that perhaps a slight discussion of the subject "Mistakes of mothers" may aid others in rearing their little flock.

The first thought that presents itself is, How many mothers realize that their little ones are actually starving for love? But I want to go back a little farther and say that mothers must love them before their birth. Begin loving them just as soon as you are aware of their existence. I tell you, dear sisters, I am a great lover of a large family. Yes, the more the better. Now I see many hands go up in horror! Not so very long ago many ladies happened to meet and President Roosevelt's article was one of the subjects discussed. Every lady, but me, was against me with their hands raised, and would say, "Mrs. Langton, you may have my share; I don't want any more." Finally this Scotch lady said:

"Yes, ladies, I know from my own personal experience that Mrs. Langton is right, for I was an invalid for years until my second child was born. I prefer the quiet home with a baby on my lap to all the entertainments, clubs, lodges, etc." I wonder if I have drifted from my subject? I was nearly ready to lecture on the evils of clubs and lodges. I am sure many critics would have been on my trail, though.

1. Do not think you have not time to love and caress your little ones. My little two-year-old baby pulled me by the dress this morning and wanted me to sit down and roll the ball with him. Bless your souls! I took my hands right out of the dishwasher and sat square down (as he wanted me to sit, just like him) and rolled the ball to him. I was more than paid for my trouble. His little eyes just danced with delight.

2. Do not spank little ones under three years old. Dear me! it just makes me sick to see and know of mothers whipping children so young. It is with a child as with a grown person—they can get used to anything. Let me tell you, my oldest, thirteen years, was just whipped once when five years old. Then I cried the harder. My second just once and then to my shame. I was to blame. Then I wept sadly. My next two were boys and I believe boys a little more trouble as I found it necessary to spank them twice. Now you will wonder if my children are really good or does she only think so. One woman says to me "Mrs. Langton, I do not see how it is your children are so good; I whip mine four or five times a day, and then I can not do anything with them."

Teach them to be obedient through love and not fear. Do not punish babies for paddling in the water-pail. Put water out of their reach. If he gets into the ashes, give him some playthings to draw his little mind from the ash-pan. Every slap hardens their hearts. Just love and pet them and you will be amply repaid. In loving, I do not mean to give them the hammer and mirror, or to give children everything they ask for. Now as they grow older, do not let them go away and stay nights with other children. I have seen so much harm come from this practice. If they never start it you will not be troubled to keep them at home. Have them where you can give them the goodnight kiss. Do not use deception in any way, for they will soon discern that failing in a mother. I heard a mother say to her son, "There is no more sauce down cellar," when at the same time she knew there was a jar, and wanted it for company the following Sunday. And one mother said to a child, "Now you lie." Do not do it, mothers, even should you know that child is not speaking the truth. Teach it the evil of falsehood, and that one evil step leads to two, and so on.

One more mistake and I am through. That is, Do not punish a child in presence of others, not even a member of the house. It breaks their pride. I pray some of my remarks will benefit in some way.

I want to mention that I was overjoyed when I read of an effort being put forth to build a children's home. What a blessing it will be! I will send five dollars as soon as I know to whom I should send, and promise more aid this fall.

Yours for all good,

LAWTON, South Dakota.

Sunday-School Department

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamon, Iowa.

The General Convention.

(Concluded.)

The only item of business of any special import was the action taken after considering the report of the committee on normal work. It was thought best by the committee that a course of normal work for the Sunday-school teachers and workers should be prepared and published in such periodical or form that it would reach the most of the workers. But the form in which to publish it seemed to be a difficult matter to determine. Some thought it should go into the Hope, others thought better to publish it in the Sunday-school Department in the HERALD, and still others thought better to make it a supplement to the Quarterly. And after considering from all these standpoints, a substitute for the whole matter was moved which provided for a "teachers' quarterly." This substitute was discussed and when put upon its passage was carried by a strong vote. This necessitates another publication and will be provided for as soon as practicable. We are unable at present to make definite announcements concerning the publication but we may safely say that it will provide the necessary helps for the teacher on the lesson for the day, and also the desired normal course, and such other matter as may be of value to the work in general or to the workers. As soon as the plan is definitely worked out, full announcements will be made.

The convention will go down in history as one of unity and decision, uneventful but a "positive" rather than a "negative." All that was affirmed or denied was by strong votes. And as a result of the good work done and the good feeling manifested in the convention, we look for a year of satisfactory work for the association. To this end let us all bend our strongest efforts.

No provision was made for a field-worker for the year, and to offset our loss in this way, it will be necessary for the local or district workers to take a more resolute hold of the work, and endeavor to make it all that can be made of it. Local workers could often do much more than they do if they would have the courage and resolution in this work that they have for other work. We have done well, very well, in the past; let us do even a little better the ensuing year.

To the Missionaries.

We would call the attention of our brethren of the missionary force to the Quarterly matter again. We shall be glad to furnish any missionary laboring under General Conference appointment the Senior Quarterly free of cost if he will send us his mission address. We say "mission address" because we want it to get to you for your use while in the field, and they can not be forwarded as can a letter from your home office. If sent to your home office it would have to be remailed and postage, one cent, prepaid. However, many of the missionaries are so constantly on the move that they have no mission address. In such case use your home address and have your friends remail them to you.

We make up a new missionary list after each General Conference as there are always so many changes that the old list will not do at all. So do not think because your name was on last year that it will be this year, for it probably will not be there till I hear from you. I have no way of knowing for certain what your address is. Drop a card to T. A. Hougas, Henderson, Iowa, not to the Herald Publishing House, and we will do the rest. Give notice of any change of address during the year.

One word more. One brother said to me since the last conference, "I have subscribed three times and never got a Quarterly yet." Why this should be I do not know. I am certain that his name has been on the list the last two years and that the Quarterlies have been mailed regularly. And as it went to an office where many other Quarterlies go, it must have been received by some member of the family or person getting their mail. We have known of instances of their being received but were mislaid by some one and not sent or handed to the missionary who is so often away from even his mission address. But whatever the reason for not receiving your Quarterly, write us again and we will provide you with another. We much desire that you have every issue of the Quarterly and shall do all we can to get it to you if you will write us. Our best wishes go with you.

For the Country.

We find persons now and then who think that the home department is adapted to town and city churches, but that it is not feasible in the country congregation. The facts of experience show the falsity of this position. We know of a country church starting a home department two and one half years ago, which has at present two hundred members and sixteen visitors. The main school numbers about one hundred. It is true some of these visitors have to drive long distances, but the results more than pay. Some of the well-to-do farmers with their families, who before were nonchurchgoers are now regular attendants of the church, and some have united. Several neighborhood Sunday-schools have been started as a result also of the work. A home department fits anywhere, but it will not go itself. Earnest, persistent work brings success everywhere.—Heidelberg Teacher, in World Evangel.

A Prime Factor.

Some of our churches are apparently just coming to a realization of the fact that the Sunday-school is one of the prime factors in church-work, and not something of secondary importance. When all churches come to a realization of this fact, and all Sunday-schools are set upon their proper basis, it will give a tremendous impetus to the whole Sunday-school movement. Every thoroughly wide-awake and progressive pastor recognizes the importance of the Sunday-school, and gives it his warmest support. One of the hopeful signs of the times is in the fact that all Christian workers are more and more appreciating the possibilities of the Sunday-school as a religious educational force, and every year witnesses renewed efforts to increase its value. Your help and the help of every officer, teacher, pastor, and Christian worker is needed to make this great Sunday-school work take on its appointed honor and glory.—New Century Teachers' Monthly.

Letter Department

MOTLEY, Minnesota, May 8, 1905.

Editor Herald: I am the only Latter Day Saint in this place, and have just been reading the HERALD, a paper that is always a welcome visitor to me. I enjoy reading the letters of the Saints; have often felt a portion of God's Spirit, and felt that I ought to live more humble. My desire is to live so that when the Savior comes I may be able to meet him with joy.

The people in this place do not know anything about Latter Day Saints. Perhaps it would be a good plan to send some one to tell them the true story of the gospel. I am glad I ever heard and obeyed it. I was baptized by Bro. J. J. Cornish, and have been healed through his prayers, and will always believe in the latter-day doctrine. Dear Saints, pray for me that I may be faithful.

Your sister in the true faith,

MRS. THANKFUL WELCH.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, March 30, 1905.

Editors Herald: We are making preparations for our conference which soon will be upon us with all its responsibilities, and we are made sad when we remember the many vacant seats there will be of those who formerly took an active part in all the deliberations in the conferences, and who for years had upheld the work in this mission. While I was in Tiputa I visited the sepulcher of good old Bro. Tehepea, one of the strong men of the mission, who died shortly after our conference in Avatoru in 1899, and was buried there; and the brethren then built a mausoleum over his grave, of stone and mortar; about six feet high, seven feet long, and four feet wide, the top sloping as a roof, leaving walls about two and a half feet high at the sides. And on the second of February of this year Mahana died. This was not his real name, which was Paaua a Tauraa; but in early life his name was changed to Mahana, the meaning of which is sun, or day, probably in commemoration of some event in his life, quite a common practice here as well as in old Bible times, as Jacob to Israel, and Sarai to Sarah; so also Tekakahu to Metuaore, our bishop, who took upon himself the name of Metuaore (which means parentless), when his parents died; and Davida Mautahala became D. M. Pohemiti when his son was drowned in the sea, for pohe is death and miti is the sea.

Mahana was born on this island on February 6, 1815, and when as a young man he heard the gospel as taught by the elders who were sent by Joseph the Seer from Nauvoo he received the glad tidings with great joy and in 1845 was baptized by Elder Addison Pratt in Tiarei, and ordained a deacon then, and in about 1846 he was ordained priest by Elder B. Grouard in Anaa; and during the dark days which followed the sending away of the elders by the government he still held fast his former faith; and relying upon the testimonies of the first missionaries here he anxiously waited for the coming forth of Young Joseph (or Joseph the son as he is called here) of whom Elders A. Pratt and B. Grouard had often spoken in his house where they frequently tarried, their testimony to him always being that Young Joseph was twice blessed and set apart by his father, Joseph the Seer, before his death, to be his successor in office as president of the church. After Brigham Young had claimed that office he asked them why young Joseph was not appointed to his office in harmony with the blessing pronounced upon him by his father, and he was told that Brigham Young was merely holding the office for young Joseph until he became of age; but when the years passed and Joseph was of age and Brigham Young yet held the office which they often had told him was young Joseph's by divine right, he then was told by them that Brigham Young had robbed young Joseph of his rights, and that young Joseph was the proper president of the church and that the Lord would so order it for it was the voice of God to his father Joseph the Seer; and these statements of Elder Mahana were frequently made to me by him, and these testimonies of Elders A. Pratt and B. Grouard as related above are yet the subject of many conversations.

Although the church here during the dark days between the time of the death of the martyrs and the coming forth of young Joseph had formed various organizations, the two chief ones calling themselves Abrahamites and Israelites, yet Mahana kept himself aloof from them all and held fast his faith in the doctrines taught him by the first missionaries and especially their testimonies concerning the blessing of young Joseph to be the successor of his father. And when Bro. T. W. Smith came here in 1884 Mahana gladly received the message he brought of young Joseph having taken his place in the church, the place which was appointed him by his father, and was ordained elder by T. W. Smith on October 3, 1885, in Tiona, and with two other elders, Faito and Teeva, was sent to Anaa by him to inform them of the coming of young Joseph, and of the missionary he had sent to them, and of the good work of the Reorganization begun by Elders C. W. Wandell and Glaud Rodger; for the old-time Saints here were loth to believe the reports in those days, and even when T. W. Smith came here many of the Saints were loth to believe him and went to Elder John Hawkins for counsel, who always told them: If Elder T. W. Smith teaches the same doctrines and ordinances as the first missionaries taught us, when they first came, then receive him; but if he does not teach as they at first did, reject him. Not long after this Bro. Hawkins himself received the Reorganization at Panau; Bro. T. W. Smith had sent to Arutua for Bro. Hawkins to meet him in Kaukura and interpret for him during the conference. He went to Kaukura but was taken so painfully sick after his arrival that he could not go to the place of conference. T. W. Smith sent for him but the messenger could not properly inform him of the sickness of Bro. Hawkins, so T. W. went himself, being somewhat angry. And as he entered the room where he was and saw him lying on the floor, he said to him, "Why do you not come and interpret for me, do you want your pay first?" Bro. Hawkins replied, "I came here to interpret for you but was overtaken with this severe rupture and am in great pain and can not go." Then Bro. Smith's sympathies were aroused and his most remarkable faith was manifested, and he asked Bro. Hawkins, "If you were able would you come and interpret for me?" He replied, "Yes, that is what I came here for." And Bro. Smith spoke as follows: "I then command you in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ to arise and follow me." Immediately his hernia was reduced, he was healed, and he arose and followed him and interpreted for him, and shortly after was received into the Reorganization.

Bro. Hawkins, although now eighty-eight years old, is still actively engaged in the work, strong in the faith, and has from 1844 loved the great latter-day work with all his heart, and yet recounts with pleasure the toil he endured in those early days for the gospel's sake; how ardent was his love for Jesus and his work; with what perfect self-abnegation did he devote all the powers of his body and mind to assist in building up and establishing the church in these islands; and but few if any can realize the grief which almost overwhelmed him when, upon going on board of a vessel from Australia, bound to California, which had as passengers several Brighamites, he was informed by them that the church in Utah had introduced the shameful doctrines of polygamy and Adam-god worship. He still has the "Watchman," which if I remember rightly was the name of the paper published in Sidney, Australia, in which were advocated those doctrines. He immediately denounced them as doctrines of devils, and has consistently and continually advocated those doctrines of the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants which teach "They twain shall be one flesh," "And worlds without number have I created . . . and by the Son I created them. . . . And the first man, of all men, have I called Adam." Adam having been created by Jesus Christ was not God but Adam, a man.

Bro. T. W. Smith did a wonderfully good work here, and is held in high esteem by the Saints as well as by those not of us; starting with the fifty-one baptized by Bro. Glaud Roger, and the few whom they had baptized, there were about one thousand members of the Reorganization when in 1889 he left here, and his book, Questions and Answers for Sunday-schools, is still much sought for, and is generally counted an end of controversy on questions spoken of. It is a small book in duodecimo, of one hundred and fifty-three pages.

On Friday, the 17th inst., I called upon the newly arrived governor, E. Julien, who informed me that for commercial and economical reasons he would not permit a large number of the people of the Tuamotus to attend conferences in Papeete; that he might possibly permit this present conference if I would write a request to that effect; that all religions were free in the colonies to assemble in worship, but that he would not permit an exodus from the Tuamotus to Papeete for conferences, but that they might meet in the Tuamotus in conferences; but he would defer his decision until I requested by letter permission to hold a conference. He also wished to know what was the nature of the work or ceremonies of a conference, the number of sessions, and of attendants from the Tuamotus.

The Governor has sent his consent to hold a conference this year, but reserves the right to stop them if the people of the Tuamotus come to Papeete in too large numbers; but he states that all religions shall be free here; but the conferences cause too large an exodus from the Tuamotus to Papeete, therefore they must cease; but they may be held in the Tuamotus, and so all things are going along smoothly again.

The Saints of Niau and of Makatea have arrived, seventy altogether, and we are looking daily for the Saints from Tikahau, Rairoa, Arutua, Apataki, Kaukura, Manihi, and some of the windward islands. We are not expecting more than two hundred from the Tuamotus, and on account of the hard times I have written them not to come in large numbers unless they come prepared to pay the merchants a fair portion of their debts, or they may cause them some trouble before the courts.

We, that is, Emma and I, may possibly leave here on the next steamer, which leaves here on the 6th of May and arrives in San Francisco on the 18th, but we may be delayed until the June 11 boat. May peace abide with all the Israel of God.

JOSEPH F. BURTON.

RICHHILL, Missouri, May 8, 1905.

Editors Herald: Bro. F. M. Slover and I came to this place Saturday to begin our work for the year, this being a new field to us; but we find that God has a noble band of Saints here. I shall be glad to meet with all the Saints in this district during this conference year, and form acquaintance with them. I will be pleased to visit and preach in those places where the Saints are isolated from the branches that all may have the privilege of hearing the angel's message. I take this opportunity of extending thanks to all the Saints and friends in the Southern Indiana District for their kindness in caring for me so long in the work, having been with you in the district as one of your missionaries for thirteen years. You have won within my heart a warm place, so that I shall never forget your kind deeds to me. I have moved from your midst, yet my mind reverts back to the many times of rejoicing we had together in the work of the Lord. And permit me now to exhort you to be faithful to the end, for this is a glorious work in which we are engaged. Let us never turn back, as some have so recently done, but remember Lot's wife, as well as Apostle Paul's statement in Hebrews 10:38.

The Lord is only pleased with our actions when we act in accordance with his law and will. We hope we may meet again in this life, but should we not, my earnest desire is that we may meet together in the by and by, with the redeemed of the Lord on the new earth.

Your brother in the hope of the redemption of Zion,

GEO. JENKINS.

DES MOINES, Iowa, May 11, 1905.

Dear Herald: This conference year opens with bright prospects for church-work in this district, and especially in the capital city. The missionaries are all acquainted with the needs of the district and know just where to take up the work which they left at the close of the year.

The district conference convenes in Des Moines June 3 and 4. It is expected that Elder Heman C. Smith will be present at the conference, and all will enjoy meeting him, as he is scarcely known, personally, to any in the district. The June conference is always the most largely attended of any during the year, and the Saints of the district should avail themselves of the opportunity of meeting together at this time.

The Religio will meet on Thursday, June 1, and take up the work that the society is doing, and what it can do to assist in this great work. The Sunday-school association will meet on Friday, June 2. This will be an interesting gathering of Sunday-school workers from all parts of the district.

The church-work in the city of Des Moines is progressing. The Saints have been able to meet the financial obligations on the church-building, and it will be dedicated sometime during the early part of the summer.

With the coming of spring and summer there has been a marked increase in the interest and attendance of the Sunday-school, especially in the primary department. Preparations for children's day are being made, and this annual day for the little folks is fully enjoyed by all. Our first primary class now numbers about forty, and when these little ones grow up we are fully certain of an increased army of workers in the Lord.

Elder J. F. Mintun returned to the city this week and again takes up his labors here until after conference at least. His work in the city the past year was fully appreciated by the church here. The church is now in the best condition it has ever been, and as a body we stand far better in our relation to the people of the city, i. e., we are better understood as a church, we are recognized as a religious body, and from this on we hope to see marked progress along new lines of work.

Urging the Saints of the district to remember the conference and try to attend, and the Sunday-school and Religio workers to attend the conventions, we are still hopeful of the future.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, May 6, 1905.

Editors Herald: We who know the gospel of Jesus Christ ought to be happy. Happy, I mean, that we know the blessed truth, the pure gospel of Christ. We have a permit from the mayor to preach on the streets in Cincinnati, and we hope we will do some good here. I hope the servants of God will reap a good harvest this year. Pray for me,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

WM. N. HANNER.

MILLERSBURG, Illinois, May 11, 1905.

Editors Herald: On leaving General Conference I went to Marshalltown, Iowa, to meet my father and mother, and from there came home. On my arrival here I found our district over-run with Utah ministers, and in almost any town of any size you can at present find a couple of these men preaching that "Joseph was a prophet, and that Brigham Young was his successor in fact, and that both preached the same doctrine," etc.

At Aledo, Illinois, (seven miles from here,) two were preaching, and so we went over. For a half hour they conversed with me and were very positive that Joseph Smith advocated the doctrine of polygamy in every work he was instrumental in bringing forth. I asked them for a Book of Mormon but they had none. Then it became necessary for me to show who I was. Read part of pages 116, 113, 117, 164, 519. Then they said, "Do you believe that book?" I answered, "Yes." Then they wanted to be friends, but were too friendly to do any discussing, and the third night said they were counseled not to do any discussing. Of course we counseled them to obey counsel.

During our half hour discussion a Presbyterian minister was at my elbow to help, but when my identity was revealed he left the whole affair, evidently thinking he had pushed into a real "Mormon" row. We advertised them so thoroughly in Aledo that they can not do much there. They said whenever they tried to preach the principles of the gospel, we always came along to tear them down; at least, F. M. Cooper did at Peoria. Better convert Bro. Cooper. (Ha! Ha! Guess we know the trouble Bro. Cooper.)

Bro. Russell will be on the ground soon, and then for street work.

I thank our heavenly Father we are sent out with something that we can defend, both with the books and with our testimony; and we do not have to obey counsel: "Don't discuss with any one."

Yours for truth,

O. H. BAILEY.

ZEARING, Illinois, May 9, 1905.

Editors Herald: We are striving to please the Master by living according to his commandments; as those that hold out faithful unto the end the same shall be saved. I feel it a pleasure to cast aside all worldly pleasure and live as the Master wishes his children to do. There is no pleasure in this world to compare with the pleasure and joy we will have over on the other side, always to dwell with our blessed Savior, and all of the Saints that have gone before. We are trying to get the gospel before the people here at this place, but we have been refused the union church here. We had Bro. F. M. Cooper and Bro. Eli Wildermuth of Plano come here last winter and hold some meetings in our house. Much prejudice has been removed. Bro. Charles Barr was with us the last Lord's day, and gave us a fine sermon, having a full house and good interest. Heard many remark that it was the best sermon they ever heard, and that they never heard of those sayings in the Bible before. I guess that is right. So-called ministers are feeding their flocks on husks. I hope that all may come to the knowledge of the truth as taught by Christ and the apostles, and be saved.

Myself and family are trying to come up higher, that we may at least receive the crown that is promised to the faithful.

Yours in the one true faith,

Z. M. SANTEE.

WAMSLEY, Ohio, May 9, 1905.

Editors Herald: I am still in the faith, and can say with John, I know of the doctrine. We are still unorganized. But I can truly say I am thankful that the Lord is not confined to large congregations. We have our prayer-meeting; two families of us meet and have our Sunday-school. We have our trials and persecutions in this life; but Paul says that things present or things to come, height or depth, can not separate us from the love of Christ.

The writer is trying to live this true religion. I am thankful that the true gospel has been restored to the earth again. We must become humble before God. Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

The earnest desire of my heart is that all people may accept the gospel and be saved. I want to say to the Saints, Be faithful to the end. We have the true witness that we are in the straight and narrow way that leads to life everlasting; and few there be that find that way. I ask the dear Saints to pray for me that I may be faithful to the end.

Let us all work and do all we can. The Savior said, "Ye are the light of the world; a city set on a hill can not be hid." So we must let our light shine that some wandering one may see the light of the gospel before it is too late. We must show to the world that we are what we profess to be and live our religion. James says, "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves, for if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass." It is all right to be a hearer as far as it goes. According to Paul we have to hear first in order to become a doer. Paul says, "Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God," or in other words, Faith comes by hearing the word of God. So let us both hear and do the word. Some will complain that they do not receive anything from the Lord. It is their own fault. God does not do anything against our will. We must have faith, and we must have works with our faith. Faith and works must be linked together; one without the other being dead. God only rewards us as our works have been.

Let us get to work and do our part and the Lord will do what he has promised; he will never leave nor forsake us if we do our duty. May God help us all and at last bring us up in the first resurrection to have that peaceful reign with the Savior here on the earth, when Satan will be put in the pit and shut up until the thousand years are ended.

Your brother in the faith,

J. T. MITCHELL.

Independence Items.

The present month so far has been marked by the occurrence of many events calculated to enlist considerable notice, yet space forbids only to mention a few of the most important ones, not the least of which were the opportunities the Saints have enjoyed in listening to a number of our elders on their return from General Conference.

Our brethren of the ministry are generally possessed of undoubted gifts for public speaking, and power to hold the attention of their hearers; but it is the earnest pleading for purity of life and solicitude for the welfare of weak, erring mankind, in whose interest they are offering the sacrifice of zealous yet humble service, which holds sway.

An unusual degree of interest seems to have been awakened among the young men, which certainly portends good results, especially at this time, when so many inducements are held out to our young people for frequenting the newly-opened parks and other places of recreation on Sunday afternoons.

According to report of our last Sunday-school business-meeting, the majority of its members are in favor of the resolution disapproving of officers and teachers attending the theater, skating-rink, or opera, also using tobacco and strong drink. This, some are inclined to believe, is a more radical position than even the church has hitherto held.

At the business-meeting of last Monday more than twenty names were added to the membership by letters of removal, and recently six have been baptized.

Two deaths have lately occurred, Bro. E. H. Boulson, formerly of Fremont, Nebraska, and Mr. M. M. Ahlstrom, the father of Bro. and Sr. Ahlstrom, living here. A short time before his death he suffered much from despondency and finally committed suicide by drowning. This together with other occurrences have conspired to cast a feeling of sadness over many in the community; then, too, as said in the newspapers, there are now and then crimes committed in our cities that "outrage the public's sense of humanity and morality."

One J. C. Hedgecock, an aged man of over sixty, living on the south side, and near the homes of some of the brethren, was brutally whipped and tanned by a crowd of whitecappers last Saturday night for no other reason than alleged attentions to a negro woman. No wonder Bro. Rushton says the word "miracle" should not be used so recklessly; and remembering how cruel and inhuman is the heart of man sometimes, we can but repeat his words, "The miracle of a transformed life is the greatest miracle I ever witnessed." And oh, how gracious are the inviting words on provision to the sinner: "The promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off"—and surely many in this degenerate age are afar off.

So we see that although "Imperial Missouri" is pre-eminent in many respects,—especially so in regard to educational advantages and her growing enterprises,—yet according to all accounts there is much room for improvement.

The continued high winds, hail, and terrific electric storms experienced of late bring forcibly to mind the dreadful disasters of our neighboring States, Kansas and Oklahoma, where, within the past week, hundreds have lost their lives, and many more been fearfully injured by terrible storms and tornadoes. We are indeed witnessing the fulfillment of prophecy in these visitations; but as Bro. Sheehy said in a late address, "Zion's work is moving on. Let our faith and confidence be in God and he will work mightily for us in his own good time."

We desire the prayers of the Saints in behalf of the sick ones here, some of whom we miss from their accustomed places because of their usefulness in the Lord's work.

Right away after the severe hail-storm at noon to-day, the sun shone out brightly and the robins and orioles began to sing over on the Temple Lot. Of course we were all thankful for pleasant weather again. This evening three or four young couples will be married and receive congratulations.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

LOUISVILLE, Kentucky, May 12, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have been preaching on the streets using a gasoline torch to make light. On last Monday night while preaching some one threw an egg at me but it did not hinder me the least in my discourse. By my preaching at this place I have an invitation to preach in the homes of a Mr. Glenn and a Mr. Richardson, whose parents both belong to the Utah church and are now in Utah. He seems to be interested. He is a Baptist at present.

Two weeks ago on Saturday night while preaching to a large crowd an infidel attacked me and we had a nice little tilt. The crowd all made a rush for me at the close to get to shake my hand. So the preaching of the gospel is a warfare, and I hope to say as did Paul, "I have fought a good fight and have kept the faith," that there may be laid up for me a crown of life.

To the Saints in Minnesota; Greeting: As I have been placed in charge of this State I again ask for your co-operation. I desire to thank every Saint that answered my letters of last year, and again appeal to all, wherever you live in the State, to write me. If you think work can be done let me know, and I will try to see that you are not neglected. If you are so situated that you can take care of the brethren who may come, do not hesitate because you do not think a big congregation can be had. Let that be as it may; give them a chance and help us all you can financially. If you have not paid your tithing, and desire to do so, send it to Elder W. C. Griffin, Frazee, Minnesota, who is Bishop's agent for Minnesota. All who can, come to the reunion at Clitherall, June 10 to 20, and let us get acquainted.

To the brethren in the missionary force I will say, Wherever you find an opportunity to labor, take hold, you are welcome; but I hope all will meet at the reunion. We expect Bro. Herman C. Smith, our missionary in charge, will be with us. Conference of this district convenes the first day of the reunion.

Many of my letters of last year remain unanswered. Please look them up and answer, and let me know the situation where you live. Your brother in the gospel work,
AUDUBON, Minnesota. H. A. MCCOY.

To the Saints of the Rocky Mountain Mission; Greeting: The news of the appointments made by the late General Conference for that mission will have reached you ere this through the church papers. Some disappointment may be felt because so few have been sent, but this seemingly could not be avoided. The field is so great and the demands so many that there is not a sufficient number of laborers to suitably sustain the mission fields, hence the only way to proceed is to let wisdom have her perfect work and make assignments as she directs. We will need to unite, as in the past, and put forth our best efforts and trust results in the hands of him for whom we labor, and remain hopeful that in due time he will raise up more laborers for the vineyard.

At present there will be no change in the disposition of the laborers from last year. Bro. S. D. Condit will continue in direct charge of the field force in Idaho. His address is Logan, Utah. Bro. A. J. Layland and John Condit will be associated with him. Bro. J. W. Morgan will continue in a similar directive oversight as last year. His address is No. 725, East Dale Street, Colorado Springs, Colorado. Bro. J. F. Curtis, James Kemp, J. D. Curtis, and J. F. Petre associated with him in the Colorado field.

Those laboring in Utah, Wyoming, and Montana will report direct to the missionary in charge. Bro. J. D. Stead and A. M. Chase will labor in different parts of the field as the demands may be most urgent, as they are familiar with the field. They expect to be in Montana at an early date. The missionary in charge would like to correspond with each one in the field, and others who may wish to do so, and thereby keep in touch with the immediate demands of the field. With the aid of local helpers, the membership, and friends of the cause we can do a good work even if our force is a small one.

Bro. J. E. Vanderwood is now laboring in Utah; and Bro. Swen Swenson and others will labor there some of the time. We are greatly in need of an experienced Danish-speaking laborer for that field, but have not been able to secure one. Bro. H. N. Hansen preferred not to receive an appointment this year.

Do not neglect to send in your quarterly reports promptly. Others are interested in those besides the one in charge of missions.

Thanks are extended to the Saints for their confidence and care in the past; and may our associations together the present year be such as will increase that confidence and also increase the pleasure of our personal relations. Let us not be slothful servants, but hopeful and alive to duty, improving every opportunity.

The Utah contingent is something to be reckoned with at almost any point in this mission. It is all right to open their eyes as well as those of the people to their stupendous errors in belief. Of course it is measures not men that we have to do with. When they are ready to repudiate by church action the dogmas of "blood atonement," i. e., the theory of killing men to save them; that Adam is God; the false temple-service imposed with its terrible oaths, dubbed "endowment"; Utah as Zion; polygamy, etc., and render proper respect to the laws of the country in which they live, it will be time enough to cease our conflict with them on these points. One wiser than others among them remarked jocularly to me, "It would not do for us to repudiate those things; you Josephites would not have any ammunition left to fire on us." Pretty well said, I thought. He had sense enough to know we were not personal enemies and could realize that as long as they held to those obnoxious views, tacitly or otherwise, it was a proper thing to criticize them and keep it up until they are willing to repudiate. But here we are again. How can assumed infallibility repudiate? So the conflict is on.

May the Lord bless the faithful at home and abroad and crown their efforts with success.

WM. H. KELLEY, Missionary in Charge.

Box 181, SALT LAKE CITY, Utah.

To the Ministry, Saints, and All Whom It May Concern, Located in Michigan, Indiana, Northern Illinois, and Wisconsin: The Presidency having seen fit to appoint me to the above field, the same having been ratified by the conference, and feeling so much better acquainted with you than I did one year ago, and hoping the coming year may add largely to that acquaintance to our mutual good, it is thought well to offer the following:

1. J. J. Cornish, Reed City, Michigan, will be in associate charge of Northern Michigan, Eastern Michigan, and Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana Districts. 2. W. D. Ellis, who will please give his field address, will occupy like position in Southern Indiana District. 3. Bro. F. M. Cooper, Plano, Illinois, will so occupy in Northeastern Illinois District. 4. F. A. Russell, 931 Grand Avenue, Davenport, Iowa, may be reported to in Kewanee District. 5. C. H. Burr, Plano, Illinois, will be in charge of Wisconsin.

That these brethren may report early to me the ministry in general will please see to it that their quarterly reports are made out and forwarded not later than the first of July, October, January, and March. The importance of reporting on these dates requires that you note them in your note-books and comply with this request.

That we may keep in more direct touch with the work in general, will the branch presidents please report to the district presidents, and the latter to the ministers in associate charge, so that the latter may report to me and I to the First Presidency and thus a complete system of reporting be had and a knowledge incident thereto obtain.

So far as I am acquainted with the Saints it is felt that you do not need to be reminded that the railways will not carry your brethren for nothing; it is also suggested that as ministers for God we need to practice the strictest economy.

In matters of conflict that necessitate a public debate the minister will please confer with the missionary in general charge prior to engaging in such debate so that no conflict of action will ensue.

Understanding the more specific duty of the evangelist is that of a revivalist, permit me to suggest that where you feel that you have such need especially existing that you write the evangelist accordingly. This does not prohibit others from acting in such capacity, neither is it intended as a hint that said evangelists are not to feel free in the exercise of other duties and privileges.

Those on the retired list and living in the above mission will please write me at once as to their financial need that I may be able to confer intelligently with the Bishop, and then send me a general report March 1, 1906.

Hoping to visit all within the year and that God's blessings and favors may be granted to us generally,

Your colaborer in Christ,

J. W. WIGHT.

To the Ministry and Saints of Ohio, West Virginia, Virginia, Eastern Kentucky, and Western Pennsylvania; Greeting: Another conference year is opening auspiciously before us and that we may improve every opportunity to advance the work entrusted to our care we desire the hearty co-operation of the local ministry and membership as well as of the missionaries. The Lord has said: "Let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all." Every Saint seeking to honor this instruction will contribute of his means that there may be sufficient in the treasury to properly care for those who are far from home and loved ones. We urge all local ministers to prosecute the work in the vicinity of their homes. Become soul-winners for the Master.

That the missionary-work may be systematized the following brethren will act as sub-ministers in charge of the districts designated: F. J. Ebeling, Ohio and West Virginia; J. W. Roberts, Virginia; D. A. Anderson, Kirtland. Those laboring in Pittsburg District will report direct to the minister in charge.

By special arrangement with Elder F. A. Smith of the Southern Mission we will care for the work in Eastern Kentucky. Bro. William H. Hanner will labor in the vicinity of Covington, and Bro. E. E. Long in the eastern end of the State.

It is desired that every missionary will obtain from the HERALD Office a copy of the loose-leaf monthly report books and promptly report their labor as instructed.

We renew the request that all arrangements for discussions be made after consultation with the one in charge.

I shall expect the missionaries to leave the branches to the care of those placed over them and prosecute the work assigned them, with the warning voice.

Praying the divine blessing may attend each one,

Your colaborer in the Lord,

WILLOUGHBY, Ohio, Route No. 2.

U. W. GREENE.

To the Saints of Southern Missouri District, and those counties joining on the east; Greeting: Bro. I. N. White having put me in charge, I desire to do all I can to advance the work entrusted to all. And that we may all be united in one grand effort to push the work, let us give each other our co-operation.

Those isolated members who want meetings and can secure an opening, will please write me as below.

And to the local officers: We shall expect to hear from you; and we urge you to move out in your official duties, and let us have a report of your work at our district conferences. There are elders and priests in the district that have not reported to the conferences in years that we shall expect to hear from in some way. Let us know if you are still in the faith, or have you lost sight of that love of Christ wherewith he has loved you and called you to the holy priesthood of God. It might be well to inform you that the district has passed a resolution to look with disfavor upon officers failing to report for a reasonable length of time.

To the missionaries appointed here: We hope to see each one move out into new fields, and open up the work in those parts where the gospel has not yet been proclaimed. Do not wear your shoes out going from branch to branch, for we will leave the branch work to those called to that work. To be sure, as Bro. A. M. Baker is our district president, he will have to see after the branches to some extent. Let us labor together in love for the Master's sake.

The Real Meaning of the Kansas Oil Agitation.

On the face of the laws enacted, the Kansas Legislature has taken a definite step toward the settlement of the trust problem, writes I. F. Marcossin in the May World's Work. This step consists of laws preventing discrimination in prices to crush competition, establishing maximum freight rates, penalizing the making of rebates, and making oil pipe-lines common carriers. But the constitutionality of these laws remains to be proved. The Standard Oil Company, as the statements of its representatives indicate, says that it is impossible to observe some of the laws. The corporation will not surrender without a fight. The highest courts must decide.

The State Refinery may, or may not, be a success. But it will tell people a great many things about the profits of oil refining that they do not know. These facts will aid to a better understanding of the methods taken by trusts to prevent competition. In essence, the chief merit of the refinery may be publicity.

The working out of the Kansas experiment, whether it be Socialism or not, will be watched as one kind of test of the case of the people against the monopolies.

Cabin That Roosevelt Lived In.

The log cabin that President Roosevelt lived in for three years while he was a rancher will be exhibited at the Lewis and Clark Exposition as a part of the state of North Dakota's exhibit. The cabin has been taken apart and the pieces have been numbered, so that it may be put together again exactly as it was when the President lived in it as a cowboy.

It was in 1883 that Mr. Roosevelt went to North Dakota and purchased the Maltese Cross Ranch, a place on the Little Missouri River eight miles south of the town of Medora. On taking possession Mr. Roosevelt changed the name to Chimney Butte, on account of a chimney-shaped butte a short distance away. The rough cabin which he bought with the ranch was the future President's only home for nearly three years, and in it he lived the life of the cowboy.

In the cabin at the Lewis and Clark Exposition this summer there will be exhibited also a number of interesting mementos of the President's life at that period. An old straw hat, which Mr. Roosevelt wore when he went to the ranch, but which was discarded shortly afterward as unsuitable to the kind of life he must lead, was found in an old sack in a corner of the cabin, and will be shown to visitors at the Western World's Fair. Other relics will include the President's old gun, his "chaps," boots, and the war bag in which he stored these articles when he gave up his cowboy life.

While the Roosevelt cabin probably will prove the most popular feature of its participation, North Dakota will have a most interesting display at the Fair. The citizens of that State are proud of its resource, and when the legislature refused to appropriate money for representation at the Lewis and Clark Exposition, they raised the required money by private subscription, under a plan proposed by Governor E. Y. Sarles.

North Dakota, being an agricultural State, will have its exhibit in the big agricultural building at the Exposition, where wall space thirty-six feet wide by ninety long has been awarded. In this space an exhibit of grains and grasses and other farm products will be made, with the view of telling the world of the greatness of the State as a farming country. Commissioner Warren N. Steel of Bismarck is in Portland, superintending the installation of the exhibits, almost all of which have arrived.

OFFICERS' DUTIES.

"It is not proper to suppose that any office instituted of God for the establishment, or the government of his church, was intended to be a sinecure—an office existing in name only,—the man holding it an honorary appendage to the church body politic. If there be such an office, it certainly does not come within the province of an incumbent of the teacher's place.

"His duties differ from the duties of a deacon, and still are so closely allied to them that he may require the deacon as an assistant. The teacher is made the constable of the church, the arm of public service, to secure by personal supervision of the Saints the performance of their public duties.

"We quote from section 17, paragraph 11; and as this quotation will be frequently referred to, both in this article and others that may follow in this series, and may possibly be used by those who take exception to the positions taken by us, we shall quote it entire:

"The teacher's duty is to watch over the church always, and be with and strengthen them, and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil-speaking; and see that the church meet together often, and also see that all the members do their duty, and he is to take the lead of meetings in the absence of the elder or priest, and is to be assisted always, in all his duties in the church, by the deacons, if occasion requires; but neither teachers nor deacons have authority to baptize, administer the sacrament, or lay on hands; they are, however, to warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come to Christ."

"It is not difficult to draw a conclusion as to what the general duty of a teacher is; but so much is left unwritten that there are not many who feel themselves fully or even fairly competent to define what are the duties, or give a list of those duties specifically the prerogative, or right, or privilege of that particular church officer.

"It is the duty of a teacher 'to watch over the church always.' 'This watching over the church is one of the special prerogatives of this officer; but the manner of his watching is not clearly indicated.

"We are of the opinion that this clause, fairly construed, means this: He is to know personally every member of the church unto which he is made a standing minister. He is to become acquainted with their general walk and conversation; to know whether they are careless, indifferent, ignorant, or willful in not attending the meetings of the church, if they neglect to attend. He is to be a pacificator between brethren and sisters who have become estranged by offenses, or otherwise, and who are unreconciled. He is to be the medium through whom wise counsels may prevail, when members grow angry and say harsh things of each other publicly. He is to allay fears, dispel doubts, encourage, cheer, and comfort any whom he finds drooping and doubtful in spirit. He is to arrest the course of the liar by careful reproof, and a teaching of the excellencies of truth; to stop by instant rebuke the tongue of the backbiter and the slanderer; to refuse to listen, except as a mediator, to any scandalous charge against any one, and not then, except

ELDER JAMES MOLER has duly arranged for a year's canvass of the work in St. Joseph, Missouri, and takes hold with the assurance that brings success in his new field. We hope he will be fully sustained in his efforts, by the St. Joseph Saints. Unity and a little enthusiasm in the work will bring a great success to the cause, in that city.

the person complaining has attempted reconciliation and been refused a hearing by the aggrieving member. He is to protect and defend the character of all who are absent when they are assailed in his presence.

"The teacher is to see that 'the church meet together often,' and also, that 'all the members do their duty.'

"By this clause the teacher is made the active, vigilant, assembling officer; the one through whom official notice of meetings is circulated; the one to whom especially belongs the outside duty of gathering the flock, and through whose instrumentality the warning voice of the council is heard by refractory members. He is made the officer to serve 'citations to trial' and 'summons to attend as witnesses.' He should attend the sittings of the councils to serve as a messenger to execute the will of the council away from the assembly-room. He should, if possible, attend the sitting of the elders' conferences to prepare himself for all his duties.

"The teacher is to 'take the lead of meetings in the absence of the elder or priest.'

"This clause has been one of those which has given occasion for misapprehension, and discussion.

"The fact that the teacher is given authority by this declaration to take the lead of meetings; the fact that paragraph 22, section 83, Doctrine and Covenants, provides that teachers should be appointed to watch over the church, to be 'standing ministers to the church'; the fact that King Mosiah granted Alma authority to 'establish churches,' and to 'ordain' teachers over them; the fact that Nephi did 'consecrate' 'teachers over the land' of the people; the fact that God 'gave teachers' to the church; the fact that God hath 'set' teachers in the church, and the fact that there were 'teachers' in the church, as before cited, are all evidences that teachers may preside over churches, watch over and teach them, care for them, counsel them, rebuke them, reprove them, cherish them, strengthen them, comfort them, and build them up.

"By paragraph 25, section 17, the teacher's duty includes carrying the reports of names and other items from the churches to the elders' conferences.

"By paragraph 9, section 39, teachers are to 'labor' with their hands.

"By paragraph 5, section 42, teachers are to 'teach' 'observe the covenants and church articles to do them,' and are to be directed in their teachings by the 'Spirit' given unto them by the 'prayer of faith.'

"Paragraph 5, section 83, declares the necessity of teachers.

"Paragraph 37, section 85, provides for the appointment of a 'teacher' in what we believe to be a school of the prophets; but this teacher is not the official teacher of the church, for in paragraph 43 he is called 'president or teacher.'

"In paragraph 31, section 105, there is provision made for a president, or presiding officer 'over those who are of the office of teacher'; and paragraph 39 of same section specifies how many teachers may be presided over by a presiding teacher; this number is twenty-four. He may therefore preside over twenty-four of the same grade of office as himself, in council, in directing, controlling, guiding, and assisting them in their deliberations.

"From what we have now written on this subject, after as careful research of the law as we have been able to make, we are prepared to assert the foregoing as the duties of the teacher. We are further prepared to say that we think the duties of the office of teacher have been much neglected; and that men have been ordained elders who had more capacity for, and would have made able and wise teachers. Men who have not been able to be actively engaged as field-laborers, and who would have been very efficient as teachers in caring for the flock, have refused to act as teachers, under the mistaken notion that their priesthood would suffer indignity by so doing, that it was hardly commensurate with the calling of an elder to perform the necessary duties of a teacher.

"We are still further of the opinion that there are good men who hold the office of teacher who have been hindered from performing the duties of their office, because of the unwise and uncalled for opposition of elders, who, over-zealous of the dignity with which they were invested as holding the superior priesthood, have unduly repulsed them as teachers, and denied them the privilege of magnifying their calling.

"Whatever act may be necessary to be done, whatever duties wisdom and the Spirit point out as adapted to enhancing the good of the cause, not specially assigned to other officers, or not forbidden to the teacher, may be done by him, and are within the role of his duties.

"Let every man learn his duty,' has long been and is a trite saying in the church. We now urge the adoption of one equally as excellent and as true, 'Let every man do his duty.'

"DUTY OF PRIEST.

"In pursuance of our self-imposed task we attempt in this article to give some expression of the views we hold touching the duty of the priest.

"The common acceptation of what the word signifies, as found in Webster, is as follows:

"A presbyter or elder; a minister; one who is authorized to consecrate the host and say mass; but especially, one of the lowest order possessing this power.' 'A presbyter, one who belongs to the intermediate order between bishop and deacon.'

"The definition of presbyter is: 'An elder having authority to instruct and guide in the church.' 'One ordained to the second order in the ministry, called also a priest.'

"Doctor Buck states that one class in the Church of England, who consider the sacrament of the Lord's supper both 'commemorative and eucharistical,' also consider all those 'authorized to administer that sacrament in the strictest sense priests.' 'Others hold the Lord's supper to be a feast upon the one sacrifice, once offered on the cross; and these must consider themselves clothed with some kind of priesthood.'—Buck's Dictionary, page 369.

"These statements are given for the purpose of showing the generally understood nature of the priest's office; not for the purpose of citing them as definitely deciding the question; only as aids, not as finalities.

"Now for a long season Israel hath been without the true God, and without a teaching priest, and without law.'—2 Chronicles 15:3.

"It would not be very difficult to enumerate many of the duties of the priest under the Mosaic economy; but that there will be some obstacles lying in the way of defining the duties of that office under the economy of the apostolic ministry, we need not doubt.

"And it came to pass that I, Nephi, did consecrate Jacob and Joseph, that they should be priests and teachers over the land of my people. And it came to pass that we lived after the manner of happiness.'—2 Nephi 4:5.

"And it came to pass that king Mosiah granted unto Alma, that he might establish churches throughout all the land of Zarahemla; and gave him power to ordain priests and teachers over every church. Now this was done because there were so many people that they could not all be governed by one teacher; neither could they all hear the word of God in one assembly; therefore they did assemble themselves together in different bodies; being called churches; every church having their priests and their teachers, and every priest preaching the word according as it was delivered to him by the mouth of Alma; and others, notwithstanding there being many churches; they were all one church; yea, even the church of God; for there was nothing preached in all the churches except it were repentance and faith in God.'—Mosiah 11:12.

"And, behold, you are they who are ordained of me to ordain priests and teachers to declare my gospel, according to the power of the Holy Ghost which is in you, and according to the gifts and callings of God unto men.'—Doctrine and Covenants 16:5.

"The priest's duty is to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and administer the sacrament, and visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and to attend to all family duties; and he may also ordain other priests, teachers, and deacons; and he is to take the lead of meetings when there is no elder present, but when there is an elder present he is only to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and visit the house of each member, exhorting them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties. In all these duties the priest is to assist the elder if occasion requires.'—Doctrine and Covenants 17:10.

"And the elder or priest shall administer it.'—Doctrine and Covenants 17:22.

"Or send by the hand of some priest.'—Doctrine and Covenants 17:25.

"I give unto you a commandment, that every man, both elder, priest, teacher, and also member, go to with his might, with the labor of his hands, to prepare and accomplish the things which I have commanded.'—Doctrine and Covenants 38:9.

"And also priests to preside over those who are of the office of priest.'—Doctrine and Covenants 104:31.

"And that the solemnization should be performed by a presiding high priest, high priest, bishop, elder, or priest.'—Doctrine and Covenants 111:1.

"The passages of Scripture, and quotations from the Book of Mormon and Book of Covenants are presented together for the purpose of assimilation, as no one isolated passage can give so much light on a given subject as many, or all that may be cited, bearing upon that subject placed in comparison together.

"From these quotations we receive the understanding of the priest's duty, or duties, which we give in this article. It is the duty of a priest to 'preach the word.'

"In preaching the word, a priest is privileged to use all the diligence, faith, and charity requisite to be used by an elder to render his preaching acceptable. He may likewise sing, pray, open meetings and conduct them, using the Scriptures as a text-book. He may invite men to come to Christ, using every auxiliary, honorably and truthfully, within his reach; and may baptize into the body of Christ those who hear and believe on his words. So far, the duties of a priest do not materially differ from those of an elder; and indeed from the character of those duties we may be excused if we conclude that the priest's office is of a composite character, spiritual and temporal.

"In the specification of the duties of a priest, as in those of both teacher and deacon, there is much undefined in the law that may be understood by the nature of those duties which are clearly stated.

"The organization of branches or congregations of disciples into churches, as they may gather themselves together in the various places where elders may preach and baptize, is not provided for by direct commandment, so far as the organic law contained in the Doctrine and Covenants reveals the commandments; yet there are few who would risk their reputation by asserting that congregations or churches could not be so organized. The good of such churches and the genius of the work demand organization.

"How this organization is to be effected, and who shall convene the members of whom this organization shall be composed—the believing and baptized disciples—or who shall be selected from among them to become their standing minister, or how he shall be appointed, chosen, or elected, are not pointed out; but it is quite essential that all these things shall be done.

"The New Testament affords but meager record as to how the various churches were organized; but bishops and deacons are both written of; and in various places the church is named as being under rule, being governed, controlled, or supervised by some one of their own number.

"The Book of Mormon, as we have before quoted, affords us a certain indication of the manner in which those churches were organized there written of; and priests and teachers were ordained over them.

"The spirit and power of the instruction given by King Mosiah unto Alma, were to organize those hearing, believing, and obeying the word, into churches; and select from their midst men who should be ordained to have charge over them, spiritual and temporal authorities for temporal and spiritual labors.

"These selections were evidently to be made, governed, aided, and decided under one of three conditions; either chosen by the voice of the body, ascertained by nomination and vote; by the authoritative declaration and selection of the person who was instrumental in originating and conducting such organization; or by the appointment of the Spirit through proper representatives of the church, in answer to the prayer of faith. In the event of one being appointed by the Spirit, the office to which he should be called would most likely be named; but in case he should be selected by the voice of the person officiating, or by the choice of the people, he would needs be so chosen 'according to the gifts and callings unto men,' and ordained according to the 'power of the Holy Ghost in the one ordaining.' Ordination in either case must be in accordance with the law by which the church was established and by which it should continue.

"What instructions King Mosiah gave Alma touching the manner of his organizing churches, the selection of persons for officers and the grade of office to which they should be ordained, does not appear; but the fact recorded that Alma in accordance with the permission of King Mosiah did organize churches, is evidence that he was acquainted with some law by which his acts should be regulated, or that he had received some specific instruction from the King; or what would serve our present purpose far better, had received instruction from the Spirit of Christ.

"One of the reasons given for organizing churches, was that all could not be governed by one teacher; nor could they all assemble at one place to hear one person declare the gospel.

"Whatever may have been necessary for Alma to do in organizing those churches was done; and when he ordained priests and teachers over those churches, he very evidently did not transcend either his instructions or the law by which they were to be organized.

"Whatever now may be said, the priests ordained by Alma must have been preachers; men of character and standing; men of influence and power; men of ability and gifts; men able to persuade, incite, and urge other men on in the spiritual race; men prepared to place themselves in the advance in defense of the church, in all good works, and in suffering for the cause; wise enough for counsel, and strong enough for battle against error; men who were not sycophants to those above them, nor tyrants to those below them; in a word, standing ministers to and guardians of the flock.

"It is the duty of a priest to 'teach.' This teaching is for the benefit of the church, and though he holds the privilege in common with the teacher and deacon, it is made his duty by the statement that he is to teach. He shall teach the things of the kingdom, deriving the instructions which he imparts from the word of God, from the teachings of the elders, from the dictation of wisdom, and the voice of the Spirit.

"It is the duty of a priest to expound and exhort.

"He shall make himself conversant with the scriptures, the laws of the church, the covenants and commandments, that he shall be able to give them a proper construction and application.

"It is a priest's duty to visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray, etc.

"In the discharge of this duty there is grave responsibility imposed upon the priest. He comes in contact with all kinds of people, under various circumstances, and of different tempers. He must be cool, sagacious, and wise, whatever may be his natural disposition; it is his duty, therefore, to cultivate those qualities.

"In his visits from house to house the priest must necessarily hear and see much of the inner or domestic life of the Saints; it is his duty, therefore, to refrain from telling what he sees and hears; and in no case is he justified in betraying confidence reposed in him by those among whom his visits are made. His questions should be few, and directly connected with his spiritual office as priest. He must neither be suspicious of, nor give rise to suspicion in others. He should study to make his visits welcome seasons of enjoyment to the Saints. He must not hear, encourage, nor meddle with, personal differences where hardness against others is held, only to sooth, palliate, or advise to seek for and obtain reconciliation; this he should exhort offenders and offended alike to do.

"The priest is to take the lead of meetings 'when there is no elder present.'

"The priest is to assist the elders in all the duties enumerated in the paragraph of section 17 which defines the priest's duty.

"The taking 'the lead of meetings' is made a part of the duty of a priest, and from the connection of this paragraph, with duties defined in other places, the facts heretofore cited, of the formation of churches by Alma with 'priests and teachers' over them, and the declaration made in section 17, paragraph 25, that the lists of members should be sent to the elders' conferences by the hands of a priest, show that it was contemplated that churches could be represented by that priest; the further fact that a priest is authorized to administer the sacrament, are all significant that the same unwritten rule of church law by which different churches may be organized, provides that the chosen, selected, or appointed officers, are presiding officers over such churches. The priest here spoken of, then, is such chosen, selected, or appointed person ordained over the church.

"The priest is to assist the elder in all these duties if occasion requires, and in no other case does occasion so urgently require as in the case of the absence of the elder.

"In paragraph 11, section 17, it is made the duty of the teacher to take the lead of meetings in the absence of the elder or priest.

"These two paragraphs, the tenth and eleventh of section 17, of the Doctrine and Covenants, have been made the subject of much discussion. In most of these discussions it has been insisted, by some, that the words 'he is to take the lead of the meetings when there is no elder present, but when there is an elder present he is only to preach,' absolutely prohibit a priest from taking the lead of a meeting when there is an elder of the church, belonging to the same branch, present in such meeting. This is the chief and strongest objection against a priest presiding. It is used as an unanswerable argument, and so it is always thrown in as a clincher.

"Paragraph 11 has the terms differently placed, and the words 'the elder or priest,' seem to have a specific reference to some one of the whole number of elders and priests as 'the' one elder or priest indicated. It is not claimed that this eleventh paragraph can be so strictly construed as paragraph 10.

"We desire in this connection, although it may be deemed a digression, to offer the following:

"If the words 'no elder present' and 'an elder present' are to be construed to include only elders belonging to the branch, or particular church, meeting at any one given place, do not the words 'the elder or priest,' in paragraphs 11 and 22, equally as certainly indicate some one of those elders and priests belonging to such branch? If so, are there not two declarations making the application specific and limited, against one making it indefinite and general?

"Again, if the words 'no elder' and 'an elder,' occurring in paragraph 10, prohibit a priest who belongs to a branch, or specific church, from taking the lead of any meeting when there may be an elder of the same branch present, by what rule of construction are those words confined in their meaning to elders belonging to the branch?

"Again, if it is an interpolation to construe the words 'the elder or priest' occurring in paragraphs 11 and 22, to mean the elder or priest chosen, selected, or appointed over that particular church, is it not also an interpolation to say that the words 'no elder,' and 'an elder' in paragraph 10 mean the elders resident in, or elders of that particular church?

"The declaration made in paragraph 8, 'and to take the lead of all meetings' is distorted when it is construed to say the 'elders are to take the lead of all meetings.' In the beginning it reads, 'An apostle is an elder, and it is his calling'; the pronoun his representing the word apostle, not the word elder. If it read an elder is an apostle, and it is his calling, etc., then the sentence might with propriety be construed to signify that 'the elders are to take the lead of all meetings.'

"We have never been in favor of a strained construction of the law; nor are we any more in favor of seeing the law overrode and set aside by precedents not in accordance with the law; and where access can be had to the law, and a construction be put upon that law harmonious with itself and with the organic law by which the church was established and perpetuated; that construction should obtain and be observed; the charge then that we sometimes go contrary to some former precedents has not yet daunted us when hurled at us by those who hold views of the law created by those precedents.

"The fact that many branches of the church were governed and controlled by an elder and his two counselors, does not invalidate the law of organization for branches, or churches, if we can find that law. We find no law providing for a presiding elder and two counselors as the officers of a branch, or separate church; but we do find the priest, teacher, and deacon spoken of as standing ministers to the church, priests and teachers being ordained for that especial purpose.

"Whenever usages of the past contradict or contravene the organic or governing rules of the church, those usages should be abandoned, and a nearer approximation to those rules should obtain.

"We can not say what prejudices may be held respecting the taking the lead of meetings; but if by this taking the lead of all meetings, it is intended to convey the idea that the care, trouble, anxiety, and self-sacrifice necessary and incident to the spiritual oversight of a church of six or several hundred of the disciples of Christ is meant, we can see nothing especially to be desired to make one jealous of such honor; and just as little do we see the propriety of any man being so tenacious of his personal dignity as to claim from another the privilege to read a hymn; to invoke a blessing; to read a chapter; to deliver a discourse; or preach a sermon; to pronounce a benediction, and be subsequently tortured by fear lest he has trodden on some other man's pet theory, or denounced some other man's pet practices; to be harassed by charges of error, lack of judgment, false doctrine, and so on to the end of the chapter as read by some one of equal ability and equal right to the same privileges.

"The priest is to 'teach, expound, exhort and baptize, and visit the house of each member, exhorting them.'

"These duties are continuous, involving a constant watch-care and oversight; not merely an occasional visiting or exhorting, during the time of meetings. A consideration of the language of this statement of duties, shows that the presence of the priest or teacher is always recognized; that he is the visible presence of the power and authority of the church, its spiritual safeguard. His duties neither begin nor end at the close or opening of the meeting-room door; he is always on duty. In him the higher and the lesser blend, in him they diverge; his duties being of the spiritual and the temporal, partaking so much of the spiritual as to take him to the door of the sanctuary; acquainted with the mysteries within, yet delighting ever to bring men thus far and return for others still on the way. Permitted and authorized to declare the honors and delights of the kingdom, to throw wide the doors and help others through them, yet restricted from conferring the Spirit in confirmation, not because of his lack of worth, but because of the necessities of the duties which he is called to perform.

"That he may preside is shown by the fact that Israel mourned when there were no 'teaching priests'; by the fact that 'priests' were consecrated by Nephi over the land; by the fact that Alma established churches and ordained priests and teachers over them; by the fact that the Twelve were to ordain priests to declare the gospel of Christ; by the fact that he is made a visiting, teaching, standing minister to the church; by the fact that he may administer the sacrament, even in the presence of elders and high priests; by the fact that he may preside over those who are of the office of priest; and by the further fact that in all these duties he is to assist the elder if occasion requires.

"Section 17 of the Doctrine and Covenants is not a revelation; but is a definition of sundry duties arranged and presented to the church at a solemn assembly, or conference, and by them accepted and adopted; therefore it is clearly within the province of a similar body to define the construction to be put upon the act or acts of their preceding assembly. This section bears the same relation to the church that the 'Lectures on Faith,' the 'Organization of the High Council,' the 'Articles on marriage,' and 'On governments,' do. The formulas given respecting the sacrament are both transcribed from the Book of Mormon and are accepted as commandments. We are therefore neither guilty of contempt for the law of God, disregard for the covenants of the church, nor blasphemy against the character, goodness, or the word of God, in thus presenting our understanding of the duties of a priest in the church of Jesus Christ.

"DUTY OF ELDERS.

"The duties of an elder in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints are varied and single, simple and difficult.

"Ye stand this day all of you before the Lord your God; your captains of your tribes, your elders, and your officers, with all the men of Israel."—Deuteronomy 29: 10.

"Gather unto me all the elders of your tribes, and your officers, that I may speak these words in their ears, and call heaven and earth to record against them."—Deuteronomy 31: 28.

"Ask thy elders, and they will tell thee."—Deuteronomy 32: 7.

"Ye rulers of the people, and elders of Israel."—Acts 4: 8.

"And sent it to the elders."—Acts 11: 30.

"And when they had ordained them elders in every church."—Acts 14: 22.

"And when they were come to Jerusalem, they were received of the church, and of the apostles and elders."—Acts 15: 4.

"And the apostles and elders came together for to consider."—Acts 15: 6.

"And as they went through the cities, they delivered them the decrees for to keep, that were ordained of the apostles and elders which were at Jerusalem."—Acts 16: 4.

"Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially they who labor in the word and doctrine."—1 Timothy 5: 17.

"That thou shouldest set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city."—Titus 1: 5.

"Let him call for the elders; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord."—James 5: 14.

"He ordained priests and elders, by laying on his hands according to the order of God, to preside and watch over the church."—Book of Alma 4: 1.

"The elders are to conduct the meetings as they are led by the Holy Ghost, according to the commandments and revelations of God."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 9; 46: 1.

"Every elder, priest, teacher, and deacon, is to be ordained according to the gifts and callings of God unto him; and he is to be ordained by the power of the Holy Ghost which is in the one who ordains him."—Ibid., par. 12.

"The several elders . . . are to meet in conference, . . . and do whatever church business is necessary to be done at the time."—Ibid., par. 13.

"The elders . . . shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible, and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of my gospel; and they shall observe the church articles to do them."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5.

"And the elders shall lay the case before the church."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 22.

"Ye shall instruct and edify each other."—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 3.

"Go ye into all the world; preach the gospel to every creature."—Doctrine and Covenants 48: 1.

"The offices of elder and bishop are necessary appendages belonging unto the high priesthood."—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 5.

"These quotations, although numerous, do not exhaust the list; but do form the sum of our present article.

"The office of an elder comes under the priesthood of Melchisedec, to which priesthood belongs the right of presidency.

"It is the duty of an elder to officiate in the administration of spiritual things, 'agreeably to the covenants and commandments of the church.' (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 7.) In administering in spiritual things an elder must not transgress, contravene, or contradict the covenants and commandments; nor will he ever be led by the Spirit of Christ to do so.

"The elders, in their teaching both to the world and to the church, are to remember that the principles of the gospel of Christ are found in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, (see Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5,) and that at the time this revelation was given, February, 1831, the commonly received version of the Bible was the one had and received by the world and the church, and consequently the one meant. The giving of the Inspired Translation, now called the Holy Scriptures, does not effect the removing the obligation to receive, reverence, and teach the principles of truth and righteousness contained in the Bible. It was intended to be a witness for God in the world; and if a witness for God, it is to be heard and used by God's servants on earth for the purpose of convincing the world of the mission of Christ,—the life and immortality brought to light in the gospel. It is therefore the duty of an elder to revere the truths of the Bible, and respect the means through which those truths reach him.

"The principles of the gospel are taught in the Book of Mormon, and by the quotation referred to it is made the duty of elders to teach those principles therein contained.

"They shall observe the church articles to do them,' requires a teaching of those articles and a practical adaptation of them to the life of the elder. It is his duty therefore to learn what those articles are; and having learned them, to act in accordance therewith.

"It is the duty of the elders to 'meet in conference as often as practicable, or necessary. When they do thus meet together, it is their duty to do whatever church business it is necessary should be done.

"The general business which should occupy the attention of the elders at such conferences should be the 'spreading of the gospel,' the work of the ministry 'in the preaching of the word,' and the 'care of the churches,' the well-being of the children of modern Israel, and the 'edifying and instructing' of each other in the 'things of the kingdom.' Whatever will conduce to the furthering of either of the above objects, not contradicting nor contravening the principles of the gospel, the church articles, and the commandments and revelations of God to the church, the elders should do. Nor is it necessary that every separate act must be authorized by a specific declaration from God, before its accomplishment is attempted.

"In the conducting of these conference meetings the elders are to observe the admonitions of the Spirit, the dictates of wisdom, the suggestions of propriety, and preserve due decorum, order, peace, dignity, and solemnity, during their sessions. It is the elders' duty to be grave, courteous, cheerful, contented, and happy.

"It is the duty of the elders to be law-abiding, law-observing, law-sustaining citizens; both of the kingdom of God and the countries wherein they dwell. To make this more certain the elders are commanded to see that the law is kept. (See Doctrine and Covenants 58:5.)

"It is the duty of the elders to preach in the region round about and build up churches. (See Doctrine and Covenants 58:9.)

"In this business of building up churches, the following is to be done; and although we can not say that it is exclusively the duty or special prerogative to do them, we can say that they hold a common right or privilege with others to the performance of those acts necessary to be done.

"An elder may officiate in solemnizing marriage rites. (See Doctrine and Covenants 111:1.)

"An elder sitting in conference with the elders of the church, may ordain other elders, and other officers in the church. (See Doctrine and Covenants 17:14-16; 35:3.) They may also send the elders out to preach. (See Doctrine and Covenants 108:3.)

"An elder may preside over ninety-six others, elders like himself, forming a council or quorum of elders, for instruction and for business, whatever may be needful to be done. He may also preside over the whole body of elders at their election. (See Doctrine and Covenants 105:31, 41.)

"An elder may travel. (See Doctrine and Covenants 83:22; 105:43.)

"An elder may administer the sacrament. (See Doctrine and Covenants 17:22.)

"An elder may sign certificates of membership and good standing. (See Doctrine and Covenants 17:26.)

"An elder may baptize. (See Doctrine and Covenants 17:21; 42:5.)

"An elder may lay on hands in confirmation and for conferring the gifts of the Holy Ghost; in the blessing of children and in administering to the sick. (See Doctrine and Covenants 34:3; 17:18; Acts 8 and 19.)

"An elder may act as one of a court of elders to ascertain the guilt or innocence of any person charged with a transgression of the spiritual law of the church. When he has thus decided upon the case he shall lay it before the church. (See Doctrine and Covenants 42:22.)

"Under this clause, which is specific, the duty of the elders is to inquire into the truthfulness of the charge preferred, and find accordingly. It is not in accordance with any law that we know of that the court of elders should 'cut off,' 'cast out,' or 'disfellowship' a person whom they are trying. The form of their verdict should be to this effect: 'We, John Jones, James Johnson, and Charles Corsin do find upon a proper investigation that Richard Rakeby is guilty of evil speaking and slander, as charged.' 'We further represent that the said Richard Rakeby exhibited a spirit of humility during the trial; and we recommend that he be subjected to reprimand from the presiding branch officer or that he be disfellowshipped.' The result of their action to be left to the church.

"An elder may preside over a branch, if chosen by the members of that branch; or a district, at the election of that district. Or he may be appointed by the church authorities to take the active oversight of a district of country. (See book of Alma 4:1; Doctrine and Covenants 1:5.)

"When presiding over a branch, it is the duty of the elder to be active, energetic, and vigilant; kind, considerate, and wise, and ever ready to do and bear; never angry and seldom moved to indignation; sober, thoughtful, and temperate.

"He should always be prompt and steady in his attendance upon all meetings of his branch; never absent except for good reasons. When present in meetings he should be wakeful and exemplary, sedate, earnest, and zealous. He should pay attention to the rules adopted by conferences and honor them. He should be watchful for the interests of his church; not bigoted, superstitious, proud, or haughty, but calm, consistent, steadfast in principle, and unswerving in his integrity to God and his fellow man. He should not be overly tenacious of personal rights or privileges, and should never shrink from a defense of his faith; he should never offer an excuse for the nonperformance of a duty not absolutely out of his power. He should neither be contentious, nor loud-voiced in council, or conversation; but willing to teach and to be taught. He should not be hasty in his own defense, nor should he pay much heed to unjust criticism; just criticism he should profit by.

"He should pray for and with the sick, comfort the weak, restrain and aid the strong; bear with the contentious, headstrong, and willful so long as there is a possibility of doing them good; and what need to say more, save that an elder should in all respects be a good man, loving his God supremely and his neighbor as himself.

"Few possess the character portrayed in this article, or come near to meeting the requirements specified; but all may approximate to them all by study, by carefulness and faithfulness, being diligent in the things intrusted to our care.

"Let us 'cease to do evil and learn to do well.'"

"THE DEVIL IN THE PULPIT."

For many years we have thought what the caption suggests, and never more satisfied of its correctness than when taking note of the almost frantic efforts put forth in the pulpit against what the occupants for the time choose to call "Mormonism." At least it is evident that if "auld clootie" is not himself a pulpit orator, he very industriously stands by to suggest lies to the overheated imagination of the unwise zealot who is engaged in building theological windmills and demolishing them; seeing lions in the way and fighting them.

In the pulpit of the South Park Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, Chicago, Doctor A. R. Lambert, as stated in the Tribune for May 15, among other things said:

Forgetful that it is his mission to deal with immortal souls, too many pulpits are transformed into the ordinary stage, where the man of God is the principal actor, playing the buffoon, whose chief stock in trade is witticism and sensational utterances.

Actuated by a desire to stand in the lime-light, to win the applause of the multitudes, oratorical powers are called into play, not with a conscious sense of an exalted Christ, incited to high resolves, holier living, but to laud the speaker instead. This is the devil of selfish ambition.

Fearing to incur the displeasure of those whose lives are steeped in sin, but whose contributions to the church are large, the gospel plow is not allowed to descend deep enough to awaken the slumbering conscience. This is the man-fearing devil.

ART THOU THE MAN?

We know a man (several of him), a man with a family of wife and two, three, or four children, all small, for the man is yet a young man, who is a habitual user of tobacco (chewing and smoking) to the average amount of ten cents' worth a day (as reported). This is seventy cents per week; three dollars per month (thirty days), and thirty-six dollars and sixty-five cents per year. This amount would furnish this family (including the husband), if there were four children, flour for the year, (four barrels, estimated cost, six dollars per barrel, twenty-four dollars,) and leave twelve dollars and fifty cents for shoes for the whole at ordinary prices, or for other necessary household expenses. If the family is only one, or two children, another six dollars would be added to the sum for household uses. How any man of ordinary judgment and good will towards his wife and children, can feed himself on such an article of daily diet at such a sacrifice imposed upon his wife and children, with the possibility of irreparable injury to himself primarily, and to his children through the law of heredity, is a curious problem which the Editor of the HERALD is unable to solve.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Elsewhere in this issue will be found a report of the sermon by Lyman Abbott which created so much comment, in the newspaper world at least, last winter. While his ideas may not exactly harmonize with our belief, yet it is hard to see where his presentation of God is not better than the presentation that has been made by some of the creeds in the past. He at least seeks to impress the thought that God is near to us. Doctor Abbott's ideas of what God really is, so far as may be gathered from the sermon, may not seem very clear and definite to our readers, but we must recognize the fact that he has gone as far as the wisdom of man authorizes him to go in the description of the Deity, has reached the limit of his authority. A study of history and science, and a contemplation of the wonders of nature reveal an overruling mind and tell us something of his wisdom and power and majesty, but they do not tell us who he is nor how we may approach him. So the Red Man has his tale of the Great Spirit; the white man has his tale of the Great Energy; one is as edifying as the other. But the holy men who have been in touch with this overruling power tell us of the Great Jehovah, the only true God, the Lord of Hosts, and they reveal to us his character and personality. History, literature, and science, separated from the revelations of God, can not reveal him. The wisdom of man, unaided, can not find him. The revelations of God alone reveal him. His personality is doubted by many, yet they call him the Infinite, the Great Energy, the Master Mind. In our short experience in life we have never discovered the evidences of mind just being scattered around separate and apart from personality. And the thought that the Infinite One, the Master Mind, is devoid of personality, is past our comprehension. Men who have been in communication with him do not so teach.

The Farmington, Iowa, Herald for May 4, 1905, has this note concerning the visit to that place of Bro. John W. Rushton, of Leeds, England: "Reverend John W. Rushton of Leeds, England, was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Stirling a couple of days last week. A few years ago when Mr. and Mrs. Stirling took their trip to the mother country, they formed the acquaintance of Reverend Rushton while on board the vessel. Reverend John W. Rushton is a prominent minister of the Latter Day Saint Church, having charge of the work in England, Scotland, Wales, and other portions of the Orient. He is a native of England, but makes frequent visits to this country in the interest of the work in which he is engaged. The special occasion of this trip was to attend a conference of the Latter Day Saints Church at Lamoni, Iowa, and while in the State Mr. Stirling prevailed on him to make a visit. While here Reverend Rushton preached two sermons at the Latter Day Saint church, one on Thursday and one on Friday evening. These were pronounced by those in attendance to be rare intellectual, moral, and spiritual treats, and should he come this way again it is doubtful if there is a church edifice in town that would hold the people who would flock to hear him."

A full page of the HERALD will contain about eight hundred words. Our request for tracts mentioned six hundred; but every writer can count the words and tell for himself. The intention was that the tract desired when folded should be one quarter the size of the HERALD page; in fact a little booklet of four pages.

A diving apparatus, whereby the diver may examine the bottom of the sea at a depth of three hundred feet, instead of only about sixty-five feet, as formerly was the case, has been invented by John L. Watson of Los Angeles, California, who will show his apparatus at the Lewis and Clark Fair.

Brn. D. C. White and W. H. Kephart, of Lamoni, were at Centerville, Iowa, holding services the week of Tuesday, May 9; so states the lowegian of that date sent us by Bro. White. The impression being made by these brethren was good.

"No one ever reached heaven by living a careless, listless life. As Oliver Wendell Holmes once said: 'To reach the port of heaven, we must sail some times with the wind and sometimes against it, but we must sail and not drift nor lie at anchor.'"

THE PATRIARCHAL OR EVANGELICAL ORDER. IS IT
ESSENTIAL IN THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST?
CALLING AND DUTIES OF PATRIARCHS
CONSIDERED.

BY THE ORDER OF EVANGELISTS.

OBJECTIONS CONSIDERED.

It may be said that we do not need patriarchs to perform the work assigned to them, for there are other ministers of the church who are duly authorized to attend to this important work. With equal consistency we may claim that we do not need apostles and seventies to preach the gospel and regulate the affairs of the church, because elders and high priests have been duly authorized to do this kind of work. The truth is, that while the ministers of the church perform much of their work in common, there is, nevertheless, a clear distinction of duty as applied to each class of ministers. And the further fact that patriarchs are relieved from some important responsibilities which attach to other leading ministers of the church, seems to plainly imply that the purpose of God is that they should be specialists in their line of work.

Preaching, teaching, and exhorting, it will be admitted, is gospel work which should be performed by every leading minister of the church, and by all others to whom it is assigned; but there is a large class, without, and a small class, within, (strange to say) who will object to patriarchs giving spiritual blessings by the laying on of hands. Perhaps none will care to dispute the well-established fact that the laying on of hands is an ordinance of divine appointment for the conferment of spiritual blessings. (See Hebrews 6: 1, 2; Acts 8: 14-20; 19: 1-6; 6: 5, 6; 13: 1-4; 1 Timothy 4: 14; 2 Timothy 1: 6; Matthew 19: 13-15; Mark 10: 13-16; 6: 5; 16: 15-20; Genesis 48: 14-20; Numbers 27: 18-23; Deuteronomy 34: 9.)

In the blessing of little children, confirmation into the church after baptism, laying on of hands on the sick in connection with prayer and the anointing with oil, and the ordination of men into the ministry, spiritual and physical blessings are conferred. Now, to put it mildly, the giving of spiritual blessings by the patriarchs is in harmony with all this. It is insisted, however, that after we have been confirmed into the church we have proper claim upon God for the Holy Spirit, as we shall need it, and for every other blessing of the gospel, if we will only live in a manner to receive them.

Yes, surely. But how are we required to live? In obedience to all the ordinances of God, or only a part of them? Man is commanded to live "by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." (Matthew 4: 4; Doctrine and Covenants 83: 7; 95: 3.) Is it the privilege of man to limit the administration of the laying on of hands for the conferment of spiritual blessings? Hardly!

By the laying on of hands Jacob conferred blessings upon Ephraim and Manasseh. (See Genesis 48: 13-20.) In Doctrine and Covenants 17: 8, when defining the duties of an apostle, we read, first, that it is "his calling . . . to confirm those who are baptized into the church, by the laying on of hands for the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost, according to the scriptures"; and second, "to confirm the church, by the laying on of the hands, and the giving of the Holy Ghost." Now, if the apostle can lay on hands and confer spiritual blessings upon the members of the church, why can not those who are specially called to perform this and other kindred work? In this connection we call the attention of the thoughtful to the fact hereinbefore stated, that the Twelve are to ordain evangelical ministers in all the large branches of the church, "as they shall be designated unto them by revelation." We also quote items of instruction given to Joseph Smith in July, 1830: "And continue in laying on of the hands, and confirming the churches."—Doctrine and Covenants 23: 4. "Behold, I say unto you, that you shall let your time be devoted to the studying of the scriptures, and to preaching, and to confirming the church at Colesville," etc.—Doctrine and Covenants 25: 1.

Of course we do not claim that the bestowment of spiritual blessings by the laying on of hands is the only means of confirming the saints in the different branches of the church, but we do claim that this is a leading and important means ordained of God. Please read carefully the passages just cited in the light of Doctrine and Covenants 17: 8. It is our opinion that the First Presidency and Twelve, if not all who hold the Melchisedec priesthood, have the right to give spiritual blessings by the laying on of hands, and it may properly be done when necessity demands. This responsibility is not laid upon them, but they may properly officiate in this ordinance, when an exigency demands it, just as the seventies may preside.

A patriarchal blessing is given for the evident purpose of bringing the one so blessed in closer touch with those divine influences which transform the soul and make us more like the Master, into whose service we have been called. In other words, it secures to the intelligent, sincere applicant, more divine light, knowledge, faith, humility, courage, patience, fortitude, integrity of heart, and spiritual strength, that the struggle may be a successful one, and eternal life be secured.

In support of this position and statement, read what was said when Hyrum Smith was called to succeed his father in the patriarchal office, as set forth in Doctrine and Covenants 107: 38:

"First, I give unto you Hyrum Smith to be a patriarch unto you, to hold the sealing blessings of my church, even the Holy Spirit of promise, whereby ye are sealed up unto the day of redemption, that ye may not fall, notwithstanding the hour of temptation that may come upon you."

What could be more strikingly in harmony with God's love, power, and wisdom, than the above? First, the sealing power is declared to be the Holy Spirit of promise. This agrees with all scripture on this important point. (See Ephesians 1:13, 14.) Second, the grand purpose of an administration of this sealing power and blessing, upon the heads of God's people, by the patriarchs, is that they "may not fall, notwithstanding the hour of temptation that may come upon" them!

When the patriarch is humble and pure (as all God's ministers should be), putting his trust in God, and the candidate comes for the blessing intelligently, with a broken heart and contrite spirit, because he feels that he needs it, the experiences of both will be in harmony with the precious statements of the above paragraph. Light, comfort, and spiritual power will be given, according to their needs.

Right here, we can not too strongly impress upon the minds of the Saints the importance and absolute essentiality of proper coöperation with God, upon the part of the candidate. Our observation and experience clearly indicate that, where other things are equal, the best results are secured where there is the greatest degree of true faith in the living and true God. Do not come for a blessing just because others do; nor neglect to come just because others do not apply; but when you feel that you need it, and desire it, come, whether you are a millionaire or not worth a single cent. This does not affect the case in the least.

If persons apply for patriarchal blessings, simply as an experiment, without true faith, to see whether it will do any good, and without having fully made up their minds to live near to God, and do his will, when known, at any cost, how can they expect good results?

"For whatsoever is not of faith is sin."—Romans 14:23.

"For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"—Matthew 16:26.

Some urge the following as an objection: "Each blessing shows, in a marked degree, the personality of the one who gave it. Therefore it is not inspired."

It is a little strange that any one claiming to believe the sacred books of the church, and, presumably acquainted with the office-work of the Holy Spirit, should take such a position as this. It is not claimed that a patriarchal blessing consists wholly of revelation from God. It is a divine ordinance in the same sense that the blessing of little children, confirmation into the church, and administration to the sick, by the laying on of hands, are divine ordinances. Just as the elder needs the help of God's Spirit to minister acceptably in these ordinances, so does the patriarch need it in giving blessings. Perhaps the only difference is that the importance and character of the ordinance make it necessary that the patriarch should be brought more fully under the supervising influences of the divine Spirit.

But what about the objection? Do not the writings of each prophet and apostle, in the Bible, show plainly the personality of the one who wrote? The style of Isaiah is very different from that of Jeremiah; and that of Ezekiel differs widely from both. Are their claims for inspiration therefore false? But let us bring the matter still nearer home. The revelations given to the church through President Joseph Smith, not only exhibit his distinctive style of composition, but in a large degree, the thoughts and sentiments which he had previously spoken and written to the church. The same is true of his father, in a degree, at least.

It is not necessarily any reflection on the prophet, or his revelations, to have previously believed and expressed some of the same things which God afterwards commands him to speak to the church. It is more of a credit than a reflection. "We are workers together with God," says the apostle. The more we believe as God knows, speak as God speaks, and work as God works, the more we partake of the divine nature, and the better are we prepared to minister in sacred things. Nor would a partial or complete agreement between the purported revelation and the style and known views of the individual through whom it was given, of itself, prove the revelation to be false, inasmuch as the Spirit of truth may reveal here a little and there a little, until part or all of what God commands to be given to his people, at once, has become the sentiment of the individual to whom it was given.

A patriarchal blessing may or may not contain that which is prophetic in its character; and even if it does, this, as a rule, is by no means the more valuable part of the blessing. We are simply asked to recognize the scriptural and well-established claim that God has called men to officiate in this office; that the ordinance of bestowing blessings by the laying on of hands is divine; that in the bestowment of these blessings, such a degree of inspiration is afforded, by the divine Being, as will greatly assist those who receive them to come out of the low and undesirable conditions and bring themselves more completely in rapport with God.

"But some mistakes have been made which destroy our confidence in the claims made for patriarchal blessings."

Why does this destroy your confidence? It would be strange indeed if there were no mistakes made, and yet these mistakes are not a necessity. Every other department of church-work is open to the same objection, from the work of the First Presidency down to that of the deacons. If there can be no mistake made in the giving of revelations to the church, through its presiding officer, why do we examine and pass upon every purported revelation? Why has God commanded that all things should be done by common consent? (See Doctrine and Covenants 25:1; 27:4. What we surely need is more intelligent faith in God, and less blind trust in man.

"Why is it that the more unworthy ones receive the better blessings, and the more worthy the poorer ones?"

We do not admit the correctness of the question, though it may often so appear. This is an important point and we need to approach it with great care. We ourselves have been made to wonder at times, at what appeared to be the very thing complained of. We have felt the results as keenly, perhaps, as those who have supposed that they were not properly recognized in their blessings.

It is necessary, before arriving at a final conclusion on this important matter, to carefully examine the following considerations:

1. We may easily err in deciding upon the comparative merits of blessings given. What we call the poorer blessing, may be a tacit or expressed recognition of moral and spiritual strength and worth in the individual who received it; and what we regard as the better one, may be an exhibition of God's great condescension to one whom he recognizes as weaker and more needy, but possessed with a pure desire to serve God and do right.

A forcible illustration of the point before us is found in the dealings of the father with the prodigal son and his brother. Upon the return of the wayward, disobedient boy from a "far country," where he had "wasted his substance with riotous living," his father met him, had compassion, "and fell upon his neck and kissed him." The best robe was placed on him, a ring on his hand and shoes on his feet. The fatted calf was killed, they ate and were merry. But the elder brother was offended and would not come into the house.

Now, the question is, Did the younger brother receive a better recognition from his father than the older one? Oh, no. The few words spoken by the father to the older one, constitute a far better commendation than all the demonstration had for his younger brother. "Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine!"

All that was done for the younger brother, was to show the great love and joy of the father because of his son's return—not only from a "far country," but from the depths of wickedness; and also to encourage the boy to carry out the grand and important purpose of his heart when he said: "I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son; make me as one of thy hired servants."—Luke 15:11-32.

God is always seeking to save; to lift up the weak and bless the needy; to give his special attention and help where they are most needed. He does this because of his goodness, and without any compromise of principle. Who that knows him can refuse to render a cheerful obedience to his will? We should not be offended because our Father is good! (See Matthew 20:15.) So, after all, that which has been urged as an objection, is, in reality, a strong point in favor of the divinity of the work.

2. We may err in judgment as to who are the more worthy. How little do we know of what is in man! God knows all. He sees clearly the most hidden recesses of the heart. How often we have been deceived. This should teach us to be more careful and more thorough. We should not judge after the sight of the eye, but, rather, according to truth and the Spirit of truth.

"Judge not unrighteously, that ye be not judged; but judge righteous judgment. For with what judgment ye shall judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."—Matthew 7:2, 3, Inspired Version.

We have tried to carefully consider the leading objections which have come under our notice, and we know of no others which will bear the light of fair investigation.

OTHER DUTIES.

While the giving of spiritual blessings is an important part of the work assigned to the patriarch, it should be borne in mind that it is by no means the greater or more important part. He is a leading minister of the church, whose first duties are "to preach, teach, expound, exhort; to be a revivalist, and to visit branches and districts as wisdom may direct, invitation, request, or the Spirit of God determine and require; to comfort the Saints, to be a father to the church; to give counsel and advice to individuals who may seek for such."

All this comes before the statement that they shall "lay on hands for the conferment of spiritual blessings," etc. Now to make the giving of spiritual blessings the principal part of their work, everywhere and at all times, is to do violence to the above statements, which have already been accepted as the will and wisdom of God in the matter. Is it not the reasonable duty of the patriarchs, so far as they are permitted by the branches and districts, and the general church, to place themselves in harmony with the foregoing definitions of duty? We think so.

The statement that the patriarch "is to be a father to the church," is both instructive and important.

If he is too greatly restricted, how can he do the work of a father among the children? On the other hand, we are glad and ready to concede, if there is no one who may properly interfere in case the children are taught false doctrine, or in any other way subjected to danger or abuse, then they are left unprotected, and the work is injured. But this is provided for in the foregoing definitions of duty:

"When traveling and preaching, holding revival-meetings, he is to labor in connection with the branch and district officers, not subject to the ministerial control of the missionary in charge, except he should transcend his bounds and teach false doctrine, or be found in transgression."

If the patriarch has no leading control anywhere, how are we to interpret the following statement found in paragraph 5?

"Besides these duties, the patriarch may meet with quorums in their quorum meetings, where he may be asked for counsel, but will not have either voice or vote, except by courtesy, having no direct control of quorums."

This statement says, by the plainest kind of implication, that the patriarch does have a degree of "direct control" somewhere. Where is it?

Again; as a spiritual father to the church, he is "to give counsel and advice to individuals who may seek for it."

Does this mean that he may not, or can not, properly give counsel and advice, except he is individually requested to do so? If so, then the child becomes more of a father, so far as his gospel education is concerned, than the father himself. This item of instruction simply indicates a privilege to the children of the kingdom, which they may use when necessary, if they will. It also gives the patriarch to understand that he must honor such requests. But as a spiritual father to the church, he is a general counselor and adviser, and as such, may at any proper time and place, give such counsel and advice as he deems best, or is needed.

We feel keenly the grave responsibilities which rest upon us, but proper cooperation upon the part of the Saints will greatly lighten our burden. Evidently God intended that men who are called to this important office should be qualified by experience, wisdom, faith, justice, mercy, self-control, and love, to guide and protect the children of God who are exposed to so many snares and dangers.

That which enters into every true character, and without which none can be celestially saved, must be carefully instilled into the minds of the Saints. The course of our age is a wanton disregard for the obligations we owe to each other and to God. The patriarch should be prepared to teach correctly on this point, and on all others which are essential to the development of true character. • The only proper and successful way to teach, especially on moral and spiritual questions, is by precept and example.

The true father will not be afraid to take a firm stand for the right, lest he should offend, no more than he will fail to extend love, patience, and good will to all who are struggling to do the Father's commandments. John, the disciple whom Jesus loved, and the one who wrote so much and so beautifully on the topic of love, was quick to denounce wrong and evil, in strong terms. He said:

"Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son."—2 John, verse 9.

The doctrine of Christ is pure in all its parts. It exhibits and teaches the principles of love, justice, and impartiality, in their perfection. It teaches us to so love God that we will be willing to love our neighbors as ourselves. What could be grander and purer than this? It teaches us to do right, and only right, under all circumstances and at all times.

"This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie and do not the truth: but if we walk in the light, we have fellowship with one another and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."—1 John 1:5-7.

Love, the pure love of God, is as intelligent as it is kind. It is the very thing which qualifies us to teach truth and right, and denounce error and wrong. The spiritual fathers of the church should be among the first, that is, they should be specialists, in teaching those grand, practical truths without which true character can not be formed and developed, hence without which there can be no salvation. They should ever seek to exemplify these principles in their lives. And in our opinion, the man who has not sufficient faith in God and the truth to overcome the fear of doing right, lest by so doing he should do wrong, is not fit to be a father to the church.

EXPENSES.

It has been repeatedly published, through the SAINTS' HERALD, that there is no charge, or fee, for a blessing. As in other departments of church-work, so in this, the expenses are met by voluntary donations by those who receive blessings, according to their ability and willingness, they themselves being the judges. Some, as a matter of course, are not able to give anything, but they are just as much entitled to their patriarchal blessings as though they were millionaires. No one should feel embarrassed, or hesitate, because he has nothing to contribute to the expense fund. Those who are able and willing are expected to supply this lack.

The usual way is to furnish typewritten copies of the blessings given, arranging the duplicate copies in book form for preservation by the Presiding Patriarch. This, of course, involves some expense. But the principal part of the expense attaches to the patriarch and his stenographer, including railroad fare, clothing, stamps, etc. These expenses, in the very nature of the case, are supplied, mainly, by those who receive blessings.

If the patriarch is under General Conference appointment, his family is supported by the church, and the same is true of the stenographer. But when not under general church appointment, the donations made are all they receive.

This policy we think to be in complete harmony with the financial system of the church, now in use; but if the church has a better one, for this department, we will be glad to adopt it.

All donations made should be paid to the patriarch (or to the stenographer for him), who is required to make satisfactory arrangements and division of funds with his stenographer, and account for all receipts, with the names of the donors, and expenses, in his annual report to the Bishop.

CONCLUSION.

The foregoing, while brief and imperfect, is sufficient to indicate the nature of our high and holy calling, and the true character of our work. Surely, none who give the matter careful investigation, can fail to see that our calling, and outlined duties, are in striking harmony with the character of God, as well as the ancient, and modern revelations of his word; and that the work which we are required to do, is supplying true and important demands, all of which proves that the provisions made, and the commandments given, were made and given by the infinite God. If anything more is needed, by the way of testimony, it will be supplied to all the faithful ones who truly humble themselves before God and place themselves in harmony with this department of gospel work.

It is our fixed purpose, God being our helper, to do all the good we can, and no harm. There is great need of careful and earnest labor along the lines indicated to us in the instruction given. What manner of men and women must we become before our Father can receive us unto himself in glory, and grant us celestial reward?

A PLEA FOR THE REFERENDUM.

DOES THE MAJORITY RULE?

In this great, free country it is said we are ruled by the majority of the people. On election day the people vote for those men who are on the party tickets; the men who get the most votes are declared elected as rulers. These men meet in the halls of congress and state, make law that the people must obey, and every man of congress, or state, is as a king with kingly power. Now, should all the laws enacted by state or nation, at the end of the year be sent back to the people, they to consider those laws and on a day set apart vote, or voice their approval or disapproval for and against, then and only then would or could there be a majority rule. This would rob those officers of state and nation of much of their power for evil. Had such been the case McClure's had never printed "Enemies of the Republic." True it is that minorities rule, and the voice of the whole people is seldom heard; and can not be till all matters of rule and law are referred back to the people for their consent before they become law.

In the religious world, even in the church that claims the most freedom, we have at best a minority rule; and for some reason few of us know there is an ex officio who has a full vote, for each delegate twenty votes; that is a minority rule and can be none other till there is a change in the present order of things. If all the affairs of conference were sent back to the people then would the majority rule. Only in this way can there be a majority rule. The mistakes of the past have been many. Why not profit by those mistakes, and in future have a majority rule? Listen to the discussions at times in the HERALD; one says that the Lord said to pay the debt. Aye, but who created that debt? Why should the Lord's people get in debt? This and many other questions can only be settled by a reference to the whole people. Why should it be otherwise? If the church stands forth as the light of the world, then it is time that we as a people should act on the broad, liberal plan: equal rights for all, favors to none. Let the ex officio be no more than one of us. Let wisdom, peace, and harmony rule; then, and only then, can we as a people lead foremost in freedom's cause, and in defense of truth.

ODESSA, Missouri, March 6, 1905.

WHY DOES THE WORK OF GOD MOVE SO SLOWLY?

When Christ came to the Jews, the Pharisees were the dominant members of society; they were proud, oppressive, and heaped burdens on the poor which were hard and grievous to be borne. Christ called them hypocrites, a generation of vipers, fools, blind guides, extortioners, full of hypocrisy and iniquity. He said the people should beware of the leaven or doctrine of the Pharisees.

"The common people heard him gladly."—Mark 12:37. They were in a deplorable condition of wretchedness, and poverty was their heritage, while the Pharisees were reclining in the lap of luxury. Christ taught to them the "simple life." That life did not consist of the abundance of things which a man possessed. * A religion that consisted only or mainly of prayers, reading the Scripture, and singing psalms, and omitted justice and mercy did not appeal very strongly to them. They were looking for a practical religion that would lift them out of their condition of moral and physical degradation.

The sermon on the mount was a blow at the selfishness and covetousness of the proud Pharisee; and at the same time lifted the cloud sufficiently so that they could gaze into the garden of God's great love and see enough of the flowers of hope that were sufficient to supply all the needy, and many to spare. With one blow he would break down the partition wall that divided the camp into two unequal divisions, the few rich and the many poor, and would establish the brotherhood of man wherein righteousness was the standard by which man's fitness to enter was determined.

The Jewish nation rejected Christ and his philosophy. The saints of that time attempted to carry into effect his philosophy, but it failed because they were in the midst of an alien population that made the difficulties insurmountable.

When Christ went to the Nephites they accepted his message. The "simple life" was the ushering in of better conditions; it was the glorious period of the Nephite nation, their Golden Age. It surpassed everything, in grandeur and loveliness, the world had ever seen, or has since seen, with the possible exception of "Enoch's band." It demonstrated the practicability of his ideas being carried into effect, and gave encouragement and hope to others that were willing to accept his teachings.

Nephi, one of the disciples of Christ, said there "were no contentions and disputations among them"; "they dealt justly with each other; they had all things common." "There were not rich and poor, no bond and free; they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift." No envying, no strife, no tumult; surely there could not be a happier people among all the people who had been created by the hand of God.

Only those who have come in contact with the evils of the age and witnessed their blighting power realize to what extent the demon, Selfishness, rules in the world. In Joseph's blessed land where we burn cotton, thousands have not sufficient clothing to appear decent in society. The mountains have abundance of coal in them; and millions of people shiver in their cold and cheerless homes. The fruit rots in the orchards; the wheat and the meat products are shipped to foreign lands; the corn made into whisky; and millions of people are hungry. Children are begging for bread, but none is to be had.

We have an excellent school system, but only a small percentage of the children of the poor can avail themselves of its privileges. They must go to work; the income in the home is not sufficient. We can but dimly see the misery and sorrow that are broadcast in our land. If the curtain could be lifted, the sight would be one that would shock our moral sensibilities; our hearts would ache within us. Our selfishness is refined and made tolerable by custom, but as cruel and relentless as the coarser kind exhibited by the uneducated brigand of the mountains of Turkestan. The helpless children, the poor widows, are the ones who drink from the bitter cup "when sorrow drowns the brim." The laws are too weak to reach out and protect them; the majority of the people are too busy with their own selfish affairs to heed the cry of the helpless ones.

James must have seen some of the cruelties of the rich and proud, or he would not have used such forcible language: "Howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted; and your garments are moth-eaten."—James 5: 1, 2.

The true ideal of religion can never be realized in the house of worship alone. It must exalt the poor and abase the rich; it must visit the "fatherless and the widow in their affliction"; it must bring us to that condition that we "will have the same care one for another," and "love our neighbor as ourself." There can be no rich, no poor; we must be one in Christ Jesus.

The midnight darkness that engulfed the world as a calamitous result of the apostasy, robbed the simple religion of the Master of its beauty and left in its stead a monster of selfishness that was but little removed from the cruelties of the most inhuman savages.

Because present-day religion has failed to reach the common people and lift them to conditions that are in harmony with the Christ idea, that is, "love thy neighbor as thyself," it has driven them away; and as a means of bettering their condition they have organized many "fraternal societies" to do the work that belongs to the church. The gospel is to make us one in fact, not alone in theory, so that we will have the "same care one for another."

When this gospel begins to manifest its wonderful power to lift up the lowly and give them a share of God's bounteous harvest, and brings the highly exalted down from the mountain of selfishness into the valley of humility, it will move with greater speed and sweep within its gates many who stand without waiting for the tokens that will assure them that it is God's work, "a marvelous work and a wonder."

GOD IN HIS WORLD.

The recent sermon preached at Harvard University, December 18, by Lyman Abbott, was preached extemporaneously and no verbatim report was taken of it. But it followed closely along the lines of an address on the same theme delivered before the National Council of Congressional Churches on October 19. That address was taken down in shorthand, and so much of it as deals with the personality of God and the divinity of Jesus Christ is here published from the stenographer's report. This presentation in constructive form of Doctor Abbott's expression of faith in the perpetual presence of God will, the Outlook believes, answer the queries, expressed and unexpressed, and clear up the perplexities that have been caused by imperfect and misleading reports of the sermon.—THE EDITOR.

Many converging tendencies have operated to bring about a time peculiarly adapted for great spiritual work in and through the Christian church. We have already entered upon an epoch, intellectual, social, spiritual, which we can make an epoch of the greatest spiritual movement the world has ever seen.

When Christianity passed over into Europe, it found Europe dominated by a great imperialistic system. Cæsar was the supreme authority. His edicts were absolute law—ecclesiastical, civil, political law—throughout the empire. He was represented by a host of subordinates who were simply the instruments to interpret and execute these laws. He was absolutely inaccessible to the great multitude of the citizens of the Roman Empire; they could come to him only through his subordinates, who were mediators between the people and the Emperor. Christianity entering into Europe and pervading it, adopted, naturally, as its ecclesiastical machinery, this framework of government. The pagan Roman Empire was transformed, as Mr. Bryce has well shown us, into the Holy Roman Empire. Cæsar became the Pope; the prefects and sub-prefects became bishops and arch-bishops and rectors and curates; but the essential principle of the ecclesiastical system remained what the essential principle of the political system had been—absolute imperialism. The Pope was the vicar and representative of Almighty God—the supreme and absolute authority. The decrees of the Vatican were the laws of God. The bishops and arch-bishops and curates and rectors were the representatives of this Cæsar. They were the mediators between him and the people.

At the same time Christianity was modified in its thinking, or rather was transformed in its thinking, by this imperialistic system. The Hebrews were not philosophers. The Old Testament contains no philosophy; the New Testament contains very little, except such as is to be found in Paul's epistles, and not a great deal even there. But when Christianity passed over into Europe it took on a philosophic form, and therefore the Roman form, and therefore the imperialistic form. God was conceived of as a celestial Cæsar, sitting in the center of the universe and ruling it. The church was the representative of this divine Cæsar. The laws of God were edicts issued from him and handed down to men. This God was inaccessible to the great majority of men; they had no ears to hear him, no capacity to reach him; they must reach him through mediators. First was Christ the divine Mediator. But Christ was too holy and too remote. Next there was the mother of God, as the mediator through whom to come to the Christ; but she was too holy and too remote. Then there were saints to come to the Mother of God, and priests to come to the saints. And so the individual came to the priest, and the priest to the saints, and the saints to the Mother of God, and the Mother of God to Christ, and Christ to the Eternal. The Eternal was an absentee God, dwelling in a far-off world. Law issued from him; sin was disobedience to that law; forgiveness was remission of the penalty for violating that law; access to him was only through a throng of mediators.

The Reformation broke down the ecclesiastical system for the Reformers and the children of the Reformers. The Protestant world said, "The Pope is not the vicar of God; the church is not the supreme and final authority." The church had held to the sacredness of the Bible, but to the Bible as the constitution of the church. It was not for the common people; it was for the church; and the church was to interpret it and to declare its meaning. The Protestant Reformers went back of the church, of the priesthood, of the human mediators, to the Bible. They said, Any man may take this constitution; any man may interpret it. But still Protestantism accepted and adopted—unconsciously, perhaps—the notion of an absentee God. Still God was conceived of as enthroned in the center of the universe, as the Moral Governor; and laws as edicts issued from him; and sin as disobedience to those laws; and forgiveness as remission of a future penalty; and the Bible as the book of his laws, and an authoritative statement of certain conditions precedent to obtaining that forgiveness.

But presently there began to come another set of influences weakening the belief that the Bible is an ultimate and supreme authority. First came geology, with its message that the world was not made in six days. The church replied, Six days does not mean six days; it means six long periods. Then came anthropology, with its message that man was not created six thousand years ago; that he has been on the earth at least ten or fifteen or twenty thousand years. The church replied, The Bible is not authority on matters of chronology. Then came evolutionary science, with its message that man was not made perfect; he has been developed gradually, like all other animals, from a germ. And then the church replied—nothing. Then followed literary criticism. It analyzed the Bible and compared it with other literatures, and announced its conclusions: These laws of Moses were not handed down complete, once for all; they are composed of various elements which can be distinguished; this code of laws was gradually produced, and the progress of their gradual development can be traced. Then came the study of comparative religions with its message: We can find the Hebraic legends of creation and fall and deluge in the older religions of Egypt, of Phœnicia, and of Assyria. Little by little the Protestant faith that the Bible is the supreme and final authority was weakened, and for some destroyed. Whether we like it or not, that lessening of the authority of the Book as a book must be recognized. We have only to compare the sermons of the great orthodox preachers of the past and the present to see the difference of appeal.

While this process was going on within the churches, there was going on a process without, subtle, powerful, irresistible. Science was attacking the notion of an absentee God, a God who can be defined, described, analyzed, interpreted in creeds. Science, which, first, showed how vast the universe was; which, secondly, showed how the universe was all one; which, third, showed that the same forces were at work in this world and in the remotest sun and in this epoch and in the remotest epoch, so that all days are equally creative, undermined the notion of a celestial Cæsar sitting on a celestial throne afar off, creating matter and force out of nothing, and laws to govern them, and leaving them to their own operation with occasional interventions on his part. Then came history. History had been mere annals, the mere story of events, the mere record of lives. Voltaire, I think, was the first one to portray history as a development of life. He was followed by others—Mommsen, Curtis, Arnold, Buckle, Macaulay, Green. All these men differed from the old classical historians in tracing history as a gradual process of development—the widening out and the upbuilding of humanity—and in thus showing a divine development in humanity as science had shown it in nature. Then came literature and the study of comparative literatures, the literatures of Greece and Rome and Italy and England; and last, but not least, of the Hebrew people, and of the common life of man that animates them all and underlies them all; and the discovery (for it was almost a discovery) that remorse is as universal as the human race, and forgiveness as universal, and love and pity and sympathy as universal; and that underneath all nations and all races and in all eras there beats, not merely one blood, but one human, palpitating, emotive life. This process has been resisted by some men in the church and feared by more; but the resistance has been in vain and the fears have been needless. For it has been a divinely ordered process toward a pro-founder faith, a larger hope, and a closer and tenderer love.

One day some years ago a young man called upon me with a long list of theological questions. He wanted to get copy for his newspaper, and he asked me to answer them. I was bowing him out with a polite declination when he stopped me: "Just a moment, please. Do you believe in a personal God?" "What do you mean by a personal God?" I asked. "Well," he said, "I mean—I mean a big man sitting up in the center of the universe and ruling things." "No," I said, "I do not believe in that kind of a personal God." "Well, then," he said, "you are a pantheist!"

That picture of a "big man sitting up in the center of the universe, ruling things," was a very crude expression for a belief that was universal in the Middle Ages. Among the cartoons of Raphael is one representing the creation. A venerable gentleman is represented as seated cross-legged upon the ground, with the various portions of a child's Noah's Ark before him, putting the different parts of the animals together. It was a great artist's conception of a divine creation. That notion of an absentee God—an imperial Cæsar sitting in the center of the universe ruling things, whose edicts are laws, who is approached only from afar by men—that is gone, or going. There are some of us who still cling to it, and to whom the removal of that image seems like atheism: some that are trying to cling to it, though their grasp is loosening; some that are trying to make themselves believe that they still believe in it; but it has gone or is going. Not merely the final authority of the church is undermined; not merely the authority of the Book as an ultimate court of appeal is lessened; but the conception of a God sitting in the center of the universe ruling things, as an imperial Cæsar sits in Rome ruling things—that also is growing dim or absolutely disappearing. What is coming in its place?

I am not going to ask the theologians what is coming in its place; I will first ask the scientists.

Herbert Spencer was not, in my opinion, a great philosopher; but he was a great interpreter of the philosophic tendency of his times; and this is Herbert Spencer's answer to the question, What will science put in place of this conception of a divine Cæsar sitting in a celestial robe:

"But one truth must ever grow clearer—the truth that there is an Inscrutable Existence everywhere manifested, to which we can neither find nor conceive either beginning or end. Amid the mysteries which become the more mysterious the more they are thought about, there will remain this one absolute certainty, that we are ever in the presence of an Infinite and Eternal Energy, from which all things proceed."

What has science to offer? This: that we are ever in the presence of an Infinite and Eternal Energy, from which all things proceed. No longer an absentee God; no longer a Great First Cause, setting in motion secondary causes which frame the world; no longer a divine mechanic, who has built the world, stored it with forces, launched it upon its course, and now and again interferes with its operation if it goes not right; but one great, eternal, underlying Cause, as truly operative to-day as he was in that first day when the morning stars sang together—every day a creative day. That is the word of science.

What is the word of history? The historian tells us there is a progress in human development, and that history illustrates that progress, and that not only the individual man grows from babyhood to manhood, but the whole race of men grow from infantile beginnings to a future, we know not what. Is there any meaning in this? Is there any power behind it? And what does this power mean? And, again we turn to a historian, not a theologian—not even an orthodox historian—to Matthew Arnold. He tells that the one thing history makes sure is that there is a power not ourselves that makes for righteousness; a power to-day at work in the world as truly and as efficaciously as ever in the past; that the evolutionary processes that are going on are making for righteousness.

Finally, we turn to literature, and we ask one of the great poets to tell us what is to take the place of this Romanized conception of an absentee God. What has human experience to tell? What word have the men of vision to bring back to us as the product of their insight into human life? And this is Tennyson's reply:

"The sun, the moon, the stars, the seas, the hills, and the plains

Are not these, O soul, the vision of Him who reigns?
Dark is the world to thee; thyself art the reason why;
For is He not all but that which has power to feel, I am I?
Glory about thee, without thee; and thou fulfillst thy doom,
Making Him broken gleams, and a stifled splendor and gloom.
Speak to Him, thou, for He hears, and spirit with spirit can meet;

Closer is he than breathing, and nearer than hands or feet."

The notion of a humanized God, sitting in the center of the universe, ruling things, is gone; and in the place of it science has brought us back this: "We are ever in the presence of the Infinite"; and history has brought us back this: "There is a power not ourselves that makes for righteousness"; and literature has brought us back this: "Spirit with spirit can meet: closer is he than breathing, nearer than hands or feet."

Am I then a pantheist? Is this pantheism? I suppose there are a great many persons who do feel that this changed conception of God is going to destroy the personality of the Divine. Is it?

Go into a great cathedral, as St. Paul's or St.

Peter's. As you look on these great pillars, on this great dome, this splendid architecture, you say: I see here the fruit of the personality of Wren, or of Michael Angelo; I am looking on something more than stones and mortar; I am looking on the work of a great mind and a great heart. But now imagine for one moment that as you stood there you could see stone reared upon stone, and column upon column; you could see some invisible hand tracing the fretwork around the columns and carving the beautiful forms; as you looked, the cathedral grew into its splendid proportions; and then some invisible force lifted the great dome and put it like the dome of heaven on the columns underneath. Would you think the personality was gone because it was operative before your eyes? Am I to think that there was a personal God six thousand years ago, or sixty thousand years ago, or six hundred thousand years ago, and that to-day, when I can go out and see him painting the leaves, and starting this fall the beginnings for next year's spring—see the love and life of the ever-present God at work before my eyes, can I think that his personality is gone? No; a thousand times nearer, a thousand times closer. We are in the presence of the great Divine personality. What we mean by personality is this: The Infinite and Eternal Energy, from which all things proceed, is an energy that thinks, that feels, that purposes and does; and is thinking and feeling and purposing and doing as a conscious life, of which ours is but a poor and broken reflection.

The image which in my childhood I formed of God as a great king sitting upon a great white throne was really an idol, though it was not formed of stone nor painted upon a canvas. It is not to such an imagination we are to go for a realization of the personality of God. God has personified himself in human history. He has entered into one human life, and filled that life so full of himself that in Jesus Christ we see the image of the Invisible God. Christianity is not an episode. The life of Christ is not a historical event completed in three short years. Jesus Christ is the revelation of an Eternal Fact, and the Eternal Fact is the Ever Present God. I stood one night on the top of Mount Washington. The clouds were passing over the mountain all the evening, and the moon was behind them, and I stood in a diffused light, sometimes brighter, sometimes less bright; but every now and then the moon would seem to break through the clouds, and bend down and rush toward the earth as though it would kiss the very foreheads of those of us who were looking at it, and then as suddenly it would retire again, and the clouds once more obscure it. But it was always there. So the "Light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world" was always in the world, and always will be in the world as long as God is love and man has need of him. The coming of Christ to the church was in order that we might know that God is. It was the revelation of a perpetual incarnation; the revelation of an unseen but eternal presence. Too long we have stood at the foot of the cross or at the door of the tomb, and not seen the stone rolled away and the triumphant Savior emerging. Too long we have thought of the life of Christ ending with his passion and death. But the greatest part of his life is his post-resurrection life.

For the message of the gospel is not merely that Jesus Christ lived and died eighteen hundred years ago, living here for three short years and then disappearing, to be an absentee Christ; it is that God is always pouring out his life upon men and into their hearts, lifting them up out of their sins, succoring them from their remorse, and making them live again. Long before Christ lived the Psalmist wrote: "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless his holy name; who healeth all thy diseases; who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who redeemeth thy life from destruction, who crowneth thee with loving kindness and tender mercies." Men said, "What does that mean?" And God said, "I will tell you." And he came, and for a little while he lived among men; he forgave the woman that was a sinner, and bade her go in peace, and sin no more. This, he said, is what I mean by forgiving iniquity. He succored-doubting Thomas from the skepticism in which he was entangled, of the unstable Peter he made a rock, and of the ambitious John the beloved disciple and the prophet of a spiritual life. This, he said, is what I mean by the healing of diseases. He surrounded the traitor Judas Iscariot with love, and recovered the denying Peter and sent him back reconsecrated, to his ministry. This, he said, is what I mean by saving men from their own destruction.

Did he cease then? He has been doing this work of love ever since. The history of the world has been simply this: man sinning, God forgiving; man diseased, God healing; man destroying himself, God redeeming him from his self-destruction; man sordid and selling himself into slavery, and God recovering him from slavery and crowning him with loving kindness and tender mercies. And the message of the Christian minister to-day to this sorrowing, sinful, troubled humanity is, "The God that was in the world then is in the world now." It is not Browning's message: "God's in his heaven; all's right with the world." If God were in his heaven, all would not be right with the world. He is in his world making it right.

I suppose there are some of you here to-night who will feel that this frank recognition of old forms of faith is injurious. I wish you who hold still to the sacredness of the Roman theology would consider this question one moment. You remember how Gideon, beating out the grapes in the wine-press, was told by God to destroy the idol of Baal and cut down the groves, and how, when the people came out the next morning and found their idol and their sacred grove gone, they rose in wrath against him, because he had destroyed their religion. But he had not destroyed their religion; he had simply given it a wider scope and a purer life. You remember how, when Jesus Christ told the people at Jerusalem that the temple would be destroyed, they identified religion with that temple and with those sacrifices and that priesthood, and counted as an enemy of religion any man who said that all those things were to be destroyed. But he was not the enemy of religion; and the destruction of that Jerusalem and of that priesthood and the overthrow of those sacrifices were only the opening out of a larger life. You remember how, when Luther said, Pope, you are no vicar of God; church, you are no infallible representative of God, men all over Europe—honest men, devout men, godly men, and godly women—wrung their hands in despair and said, If there is no church to interpret God's law, how shall we know what it is? But here in this audience I need not argue that the destruction of the notion of an infallible church only widened the scope and enhanced the power of religion. May it not perhaps be that the same God who destroyed the idol of Baal and the Jewish temple, and for us Protestants the power of the mediæval church, has destroyed this idol that we have reared in our minds only in order that he may bring us nearer to himself?

God is in all nature; thank God for the scientists, for they are thinking the thoughts of God after him, whether they know it or not. God is in all humanity, and every man is a child of God, whom we are to endeavor to bring back to his Father. God is in history, forgiving and redeeming, as Christ was in Palestine, forgiving and redeeming. God is in human experience, inspiring, uplifting, life-giving. Our message to our congregations is not a mere ethical law, not a mere philosophy about God, not a mere reiteration of a traditional creed, not a mere interpretation of the Bible. But through ethics, and philosophy, and the creed, and the Bible, we are to bring this threefold message: the message of science—"we are ever in the presence of an Infinite and Eternal Energy, from which all things proceed"; the message of history—"There is a power not ourselves that makes for righteousness"; the message of literature—"Speak to him, for he hears; closer is he than breathing, nearer than hands and feet." "We are all his offspring, he is not far from any one of us; in him we live and move and have our being."—Lyman Abbott, in Outlook for December 31, 1904.

Men are always wanting to do some great thing. Let them overcome themselves for that is the greatest conquest.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Who is Strong?

Dear Readers of the Home Column: From time to time we read letters in the Home Column from sisters, whom some thoughtlessly call "the weak ones," warning the young sisters not to marry out of the church. Having some experience myself in the same line, perhaps I can tell some who fear they have made a mistake of a remedy that was of great assistance to me.

But first, to the young sisters, let me say, It is a great mistake to marry any one, in the church or out, without the Master's approval.

This is one of the times our faith is needed as much or more than at prayer-meetings or by the sick-bed.

"Trust in God" is our watchword, and at no time in life is his help needed so much as in choosing a companion for life.

Having read the Home Column since a child of seven when I could with difficulty spell out the dear little lines then always found at the beginning, until at the age of fifteen, I was fully convinced I would never, no never, marry out of the church. That was the first virtue my ideal must possess.

So when I found I really loved one who lacked the required membership, I did not love him less, but only felt concerned for his welfare, and I was constrained to plead for him and ask the loving Father to give me assurance of his approval or help me to put the love from me. He heard as he is sure to do when we ask in faith; and the assurance came, like a dark cloud, for about the space of two years ahead, and beyond this was light, so it appeared, and I felt safe and at peace, for with the Lord to stand by me I was not afraid to face the world. So I made the change that brought the disapproval of several of my best friends down upon my head, and there were other clouds hovering near.

Husband's father denounced and disinherited him for marrying a "Mormon" and thereby, as he imagined, bringing disgrace upon the whole family; besides I was known to have a very disagreeable temper and others warned him against the evil days in store for him. I had myself told him of my love for the church and that there I would not brook interference, for that was the one freedom left to all.

Shortly after we were married his father told him he had no objection to me personally, and if he could prevail on me to leave the church he would give him all the assistance possible, and as my husband was in great need of help he thought it would be an easy matter. So he told me in a kind but firm way that he wished me to leave the church as there was no good in it for me, and that he had decided we must separate if I did not consent.

Here, dear sisters, is the time our faith is tried. None but those who have had the trial of these disagreements can realize. But it is also the time to remember what the church is. My answer was, as near as I can remember, and I think these very words: "Dearer than life you are to me. If you asked my life I would gladly give it. Life without you would be only a burden, but your love affects this life only so long as I remain true. But my faith in God and hope of salvation never. That means all of eternity to me."

With the words spoken earnestly and feelingly, I turned and walked away.

He called to me to return, but I could not. Then he said, "Come back, for if it means so much to you I will never speak one word against your faith again." Then I turned back and met him half way.

This was a victory well worth the effort for me. I had heard a sister relate a dream that was and is still much comfort to me. She dreamed she was in a school. The Savior was the teacher; some of the pupils were studying, some were idle. Presently five young men entered with primers in their hands, saying they had attended several schools but they could not learn in them so had come to his school to see if they could learn. The Teacher turned to the sister saying, "Ellen, you may take these for your class, prepare that bench," (indicating a very dirty bench in a very dirty corner,) "and take charge of them."

She began to scour and clean the place and in a very short time it was very white and clean and she found her scholars very bright and interested.

To the sisters who have been given the "dirty corners" I would say, Work, work. The more work you do the more satisfaction there is in the reward. Remember that the ones that through misunderstanding fight Paul-like are well worth the saving.

Do not talk of the church if it is distasteful to them. Live, conquer, and pray. Remember that one of the greatest duties of a Saint is to be a true wife. Do not complain of mistreatment. Do not think that merely belonging to the church will make your husband what you wish unless he is truly converted. Ask some of the traveling ministry if this is not true. Pray and weep for the sister or brother either whose husband or wife belongs to the church but who will swear or scold and occasionally backbite brethren and sisters who are trying to live right.

Think of the different effect on your children. There is no way you can do so much to inspire respect for the church as to be patient and live according to the principles of your religion every day. Why, one woman alone can do more for the good of the church in this way than several weeks' preaching of an elder in a neighborhood where lives a man or woman of the church who has done some little injury to family or neighbor.

I do not advocate marrying a man to reform him. Look for character first. A man who loves and reverences his mother and sisters is sure to have character.

My husband now belongs to the church. There are many things connected with his acceptance of the gospel that I feel would interest and help you who are struggling alone. And why alone? You Saints who call these sisters weak, are you strong? If you are it is your duty to help the weak. See that they are supplied with church papers and tracts; lend them church books. Let them know you have an interest in, and love for them. This is a chance for the wives and daughters of the priests, teachers, and deacons, of the branches to which these sisters belong. They could visit them or if they moved away write to them and find a work among these sisters whose husbands do not belong to the church, and the priest and teacher thereby be apprised of the condition of these he can not in some cases visit. Why, I have met some of the members of the branch to which I belong who would hardly speak to me, supposing I cared nothing for the church after being absent so often, when my heart was hungry for a word from them and my ears aching for a sound of the voices of those I had been so accustomed to meeting with. So, dear sisters, remember the lines:

"Satan trembles when he sees
The weakest saint upon his knees."

Hoping to encourage some one, I remain, only A WEAK SISTER.

Springtime.

Oh how bright the sun is shining
Bringing gladness everywhere.
All the pretty birds are coming,
Hark, their music fills the air!
Lovely springtime, joyous springtime
Sweetest season of the year.

See the farmers busy sowing
Golden grain in furrows deep,
And the bright and glorious sunshine
Warms the earth the grain to keep—
Keeps it growing, waving, blowing,
Till the farmers come to reap.

And the cool, refreshing showers
Fall upon the thirsty earth,
Up then peep the pretty flowers,
See their beauty, know their worth.
Let us thank our heavenly Father
For such blessings on the earth.

Thank him for the pretty flowers,
For the sunshine and the rain;
Than him for the busy hours,
And for the song-birds came again;
For the sweet and joyous springtime,—
Thank the Lord in Jesus' name.

Notices.

The advisory board of the Daughters of Zion take pleasure in announcing that five hundred and fifty-four dollars and sixty-eight cents was raised in response to the call for funds for some "benevolent purpose." At the general meeting of the society it was resolved to place this money in the hands of the Bishop for the purpose of assisting in the establishing of a children's home when the church so decide, and it was also resolved that we continue to work for this purpose.

We now wish to give notice to those who have not yet turned in the money they have raised in response to this call to send it to Sr. Minnie B. Nicholson, Lamoni, Iowa, as soon as it can conveniently be done.

MRS. B. C. SMITH, President.
MRS. T. A. HOUGAS, Secretary.

The advisory board of Daughters of Zion wish to give notice to all local societies and to their members and friends everywhere, that funds are needed for carrying on this work. We trust that this call may meet with a hearty response, as this is the only provision made for raising money to carry on the work of the general society. Send all money to Mrs. Minnie B. Nicholson, Lamoni, Iowa, stating whether it is for children's home or for the general work of the society.

Prayer Union.

Sister Sophia Stone, of Arlington, South Dakota, asks your faith and prayers in behalf of her sister, Mrs. Severson, who is very ill and beyond all human help. She is the mother of a large family of small children, and desires if it be God's will to be spared to raise her family.

Questions and Answers.

Question.—Has a Sunday-school or the local librarian the right to sell or otherwise dispose of the books in the Sunday-school library?

Answer.—Yes, the school may by vote order the books sold or exchanged or even given away, but the librarian would have no right to in any way dispose of the books without an order from the school.

Q.—In order to properly dispose of the books in a Sunday-school library, is it necessary to consult the district librarian?

A.—If the library belongs wholly to the school it is not actually necessary to consult the district librarian, though it might be advisable to do so. The district librarian may be able to make some suggestions that will be of great benefit to you. And it certainly can do you no harm. But if the library is a part or an installment of a circulating or district library, it would be necessary to consult the district librarian before any change was made with it. Of course, no school would have authority to sell a part of a circulating library, but might wish to exchange it for other books, in which case they should refer the matter to the district librarian.

Q.—What is the meaning of the word "business-meeting" in the second paragraph of section 4, of article 7, of the by-laws for Sunday-schools? Can a business-meeting of officers and teachers transact business? If so, what kind?

A.—The meaning of the word "business-meeting" evidently is a meeting called for the transaction of business. Yes, the officers and teachers can transact business at a regularly called business-meeting. But from the fact that provision is made for a business-meeting of the school too, it would follow that there was to be a distinction between the powers or prerogatives of the two meetings. And while the by-laws are not explicit on this subject, we conclude that the officers and teachers must confine their business transactions to such matter as concerns them in their offices directly. Such questions as the grading of a school, the promotion of scholars, awarding of banners, prizes, etc., providing for visiting committee work, home department work, etc., are proper ones to be considered by the officers and teachers in business-meeting, and they may have the right to take such action as they see fit in the matter. Such matters as the election of officers of the school, and such questions as would naturally involve the whole school in the carrying out of the orders, should be handled by the business-meeting of the school. It may be difficult to determine at times to what class the question belongs. In this case it would be wise for the officers and teachers to first consider the question and make their recommendations to the school, and let it be disposed of there. Certainly the officers and teachers have a right to transact business else it would be folly to "meet once a month for business pertaining to the duties of their office."

The Home Department.

Have you ever counted the proportions of church-members that never attend the Sunday-school? If not, take a few moments and count them up. You will be surprised. Think for a moment what a school or church service you might have if all would turn out and do their parts. This, too, would surprise you. But you know there are some who can not attend the Sunday-school for this or that reason, and there are many who do not or will not attend. But whatever the reason for not attending the services may be, it is quite certain that a large majority of the "stay-a-ways" may be induced to take up the home department work. And if the school officers and visitors do their duties promptly and thoroughly, there is little danger of their dropping out of line. This is the result of the work as shown by experience. The home department work is not a fine spun theory or some ideal dream. It is a practical means to an end. The means is simple, very simple, and the end is desirable. We know of branches now in existence that are the outgrowth of a home class in a private house. Who knows but that your work will result as well?

We are happy to note that so many schools are taking hold of the work in earnest. And we venture this: that there is not one school in the association or church but that could have a good home department if the workers would but take hold of it with a zeal. Why do you not start it? Start it if you have but one member. It will be a blessing to that one. The home department editor of the World Evangel says, "If your home department failed it was because its superintendent and visitors failed." This is very true. We have never seen a single home department fail or go down while the superintendent and visitors were actively doing their work, and we never expect to. The very nature of the work is winning and there is a world of opportunity for the one who enters the work with a zeal and a determination to make it succeed. Will you not give it a trial in your school?

To Secure Home Preparation.

Henry Clay Trumbull says, "The chief cause of the common complaint that scholars do not study their Sunday-school lessons, rests in the fact that the scholars do not know what is meant by studying that lesson. Is it fastening in memory the title, the topic, and the golden text of the lesson? Is it finding the answer to the questions in the lesson help? It is not enough to leave the subject in this vagueness. If, however, you point out to a child some one thing that he can do in the studying line, and ask him to do that, he knows what is wanted of him, and he is quite likely to be ready and glad to attend to it accordingly." We wish that all teachers would give this a very careful reading. Read it again. Note the point the Doctor makes. He directs you to assign some "one thing that he can do." Too often we spoil our work by giving too much. Better have one thing done than a dozen not done. When the scholar acquires the habit of study or preparation outside the class, his work may be increased from "one thing" to more.

Another point. Take your Bible and Quarterly and show the scholar, whether old or young, how to go at it to get the lesson. You will be surprised at the fewness of the number that know how to get their lesson. Study with them several times. Work with them till you are certain that they comprehend the plan of the Quarterly lesson and how it is intended to assist in the study of the lesson from the Bible. If you can not get any other time for such study, better take the class hour and so study the lesson than to miss the opportunity to teach them how to study the lesson. If this plan were followed in all classes, you would see less disinterested and indifferent scholars. A much larger percentage of them would come with prepared lessons. Try it and see for yourself. We have tried it to our complete satisfaction.

The following clipping is from an article by A. H. McKinney, in the March, 1905, New Century Teacher's Monthly, on the above subject:

"HOME WORK.

"For the purpose of helping my fellow laborers in the Bible-school, I have been making investigations concerning the success of public school teachers in their efforts to get their pupils to study at home. Recognizing the many differences between the day-school and the one that meets on the Lord's day, I have been very careful to eliminate all those things which the former may employ but which, from the very nature of things, are not possible to the latter. Without taking into account those things which are impossible to the Bible-school, I have learned some facts which may be suggestive.

"My young friends do not talk any longer about home study, they speak of 'home work.' Their papers, note-books, and exercises are headed 'Home Work.' Without attempting to discover all the reasons for it, I have learned that the young people enjoy this term and seem to revel in their work. Perhaps this is because the phrase is new. At any rate I do not find the rebellion that formerly was manifested against home study. I do find, on the contrary, many expressions of pleasure concerning the doing of the home work. One reason for this evidently is: The home work is so varied that the pupil has much variety in what he does. The monotonous, tiresome memorizing of my school days is no longer in vogue.

"May we not learn a lesson from this? If we were to provide our pupils with pads, note-books, and pencils, and week by week assign home work, might we not get much better results than are now obtainable by the method of talking about home study?"

"ASSIGNMENTS.

"By very carefully watching my day-school friends, I learn that their teachers are very definite and very particular in their assignments of home work. No longer are the pupils told to study pages such and such, but the teacher gives out certain definite things that are to be done at home. In the doing of these things various powers of the pupils' minds, in addition to the memory, are so exercised that the whole burden of acquirement does not fall upon the latter. This variety is very much enjoyed by the learners.

"The same ingenuity in the assignment of home work is as possible to the Bible-school teacher as to the teacher in the day-school. If the former fails to appreciate this fact, or is unwilling to take the time necessary to prepare for putting it into execution, she need not mourn over the lack of home study by her pupils.

"GRADATION.

"I notice that the home work of the day-school pupils is graded according to their years and their intelligence. Will is a little chap who does not do much at home. He can write with difficulty. Nevertheless, he has his note-book and pencil. He does not do much, but still he does something. The little that he does is well done, because he wishes his 'home work' to be as good as that of the other boys. Jennie is two years older than Will. She has much more to do at home than he has. She is enthusiastic in the doing of it. Carrie is three years older than Jennie. Her work is still greater. She is very desirous of doing it and always finds time for it."

MANCHESTER, Texas, May 9, 1905.

Editors Herald: After being away two years I was sent back to Northeastern Texas, where I first saw the great light of this latter-day work, and where I was permitted to see my first vision fourteen years before I came into the church. The curtains of the future were raised, and I saw this latter-day work in its glorious triumph. And those of us who continue faithful to the end will meet Jesus Christ and reign a thousand years under the white flag of peace. But, Saints, do not think that that flag is hoisted yet. For it is just as Bro. Heman C. Smith said in that grand sermon he preached on "All things work together for good to them that love God." There is the human in this church; but inspiration will swallow it up some day as Moses' rod did the Egyptians' rod. A brother said to me the other day that pride had entered into the church, and would overthrow it. I asked him if he ever read the Book of Mormon. He said, "Some." I said, "The second chapter of Helaman, verse 24, reads this way: 'And in the fifty and first year of the reign of the Judges, there was peace also, save it were the pride which began to enter into the church; not into the church of God, but into the hearts of the people who professed to belong to the church of God; and they were lifted up in pride, even to the persecution of many of their brethren.'" So, kind readers, you see it was those that professed to belong to the church, but not those that composed the church indeed. I know things are coming and are now here that will try man's faith; but so it has been in all ages of the world.

A good deal has been said of late about baptisms decreasing in number. I think the forty-third verse of the second chapter of the book of Helaman explains the matter. It reads: "And because of their iniquity, the church had begun to dwindle; and they began to disbelieve in the spirit of prophecy, and in the spirit of revelation; and the judgments of God did stare them in the face."

"Oh," says one, "Bro. Erwin, I believe in prophecy, if you will let me say who ought to prophecy." Yes, the world says, "If God had let them say, who the angel ought to come to, they would have believed the message. But God does not question man about these things. It takes faith to please God."

Well, the work in this country is at a low ebb. But by the Spirit of God I hope to be able to put life into the work, and that when the year has passed we can say much good has been done, and noble men and woman brought into the kingdom of God. I ask an interest in the prayers of Saints that my health may be good this year.

Editors Herald: Having promised so many to write them after General Conference, and now discovering my inability to comply with all requests, I take this method to satisfy all demands along this line. I came home from conference much encouraged in the work and saving power of the church. I am convinced there is enough righteousness, truth, justice, and mercy to cleanse and purify it from all evil that may develop, or be brought in by wicked persons; and that the church is taking advance steps is easily observed. Spirituality is increasing, better conditions obtaining, and a higher ideal in the minds of the Saints touching righteous living. We can but say amen to all this. Let us get above the earth-currents of sin and all its influence, get up into a purer atmosphere, higher and nobler plane of life, or in correspondence with God, in a receptive condition of mind so the Lord can impress, instruct, reprove, or rebuke if need be for our good.

I want the Saints (all who know me) to know my confidence is increased, hope enlarged, faith solidified in the gospel as presented by our people.

I came here yesterday, called here by phone to preach funeral of Sr. Ulrich, a noble woman, one who will be missed by the branch here very much, and by the Sunday-school, as she was superintendent of the school, and always anxious to push the work. May God bless Bro. Ulrich and the older, and especially the younger ones of the family. They will miss mother.

I will go home from here to finish some work there hindered by the continued heavy rains. I have not fully decided yet whether to go to Lima, Ohio, or to Sandusky County to begin a summer's campaign.

SAN BENITO, California, May 3, 1905.

Editors Herald: On the morning of April 20, we boarded our train at Lamon, on our field of labor in the West. The train was well crowded with fellow ministry and laity returning to their various fields of labor and homes. A jolly crowd it was to St. Joseph, but the parting caused a wave of sadness to spread over us. As we pulled out of St. Joseph for a run to Denver, only my fellow laborer, F. A. Russell, was with me. At Table Rock Frank and I parted company. As I gave him a parting grasp of the hand I—well, I swallowed my feelings.

I arrived in Salt Lake City April 22, and stayed all night at E. W. Kelly's home. This gentleman is a distant relative of mine and seems to be a hearty supporter of F. A. Cannon in his present fight against the Utah hierarchy. His father was a member of the "polygamous faction" but was cut off several years ago for daring to call to account some of the leaders. Through Mr. Kelly I met ex-Senator F. A. Cannon and had a pleasant chat with him. Also met a Mr. Phillips, a reporter of the Salt Lake Tribune. Both these gentleman seemed well-posted as to our position. Mr. Phillips spoke well of Bro. F. M. Sheehy's work at Washington. Said Frank gave him much valuable assistance. Through the courtesy of Mr. Phillips I was allowed to occupy about one-half column of the Tribune showing the difference of the modus operandi of our handling tithing and the way the Utah church handles it.

I purposely stayed over at Salt Lake City and Ogden to get, if possible, an idea as to the effect on the masses produced by the, to say the least, peculiar position assumed by their leader, Joseph F. Smith. To this end I freely mingled and conversed with the devotees of "Mormonism."

Almost invariably on being approached they first denounced the attacks of Mr. Cannon as bordering onto assinnity. Persecution would cause them to stand closer together, etc. A few judicious questions soon brought out the fact that there was a strong feeling of discontentment, and criticism of the leading men was freely indulged in. One young fellow declared that "Joseph F. Smith was a chump." Why? "Well, a man that will admit that he is breaking the laws of the land as well as of God, who goes to a theatre with his sons to take in a prize-fight, who has violated the pledge of the state of Utah when she knocked for admission into the Union, a man of this character who claims to be a prophet of God, say, isn't he a chump?"

When asked regarding the condition of inequality existing, the reason why their leaders wax rich in this world's goods, they drop their voice and with a shake of their head say "Something is wrong."

When I asked some of their members if the position as stated by the Tribune was correct, that Joseph F. was gradually introducing the principle that his blood should fall heir to the presidency, they defiantly answered, "What of it?" I reminded them that when they were firmly grounded in this belief to remember that the Josephites had the Smith blood as their leader.

A vein of dissatisfaction was clearly shown when discussing their educational interests. The graduates of Brigham Young University do not all remain true to the theological teachings of that institution. Some left rank sceptics.

"How about the gifts?" was asked of one who had been among them since 1850. They are seldom seen, was the reply. Once in a while they have the gift of tongues. "By whom?" Well, only by some old brother or sister who belonged to the old church, was the answer.

I left our "Utah cousins" with a firm conviction that God was feeling after them, in a marvelous manner, that as a church we had nothing to fear as to the revealments of futurity and that the wise positions taken by our Joseph for years back would stand the test both of time and eternity. I felt within my soul that "the hastening time" was on,—that Israel's God was rising in his might to hasten on his work. Before what tribunal on the face of the earth could the Smoot investigation take place that would give the doings of the Utah church more publicity? A nation where freedom of the press is unequaled, where "the secret acts" are revealed and flashed over countless wires to be read by millions of intelligent readers! God speed the right!

Extracts from Letters.

H. D. Gill, Wheeling, West Virginia: "The Saints here are lending their efforts toward a new church. We have been favorably recognized by our friends, and assisted financially. We expect Bro. G. T. Griffiths this week."

Sr. M. A. Simmons, Johnston, Illinois: "I have been sick ever since last February. We lost our little four-year-old boy and are having so much bad luck. I have worried so much about not having money to pay for my paper, as I do not desire to give it up, for we are isolated and have no church privileges. I can read my HERALD to my husband and children at home and be filled with the good Spirit and rejoice in the glorious angel's message. I have three children in the fold; and I hope to work with patience to keep them in the straight and narrow way. We have not heard a sermon since last October, when Bro. Spurlock preached at our home. My prayer is that we may be faithful, and worthy to be gathered with all God's people."

William Dodson, Farnam, Nebraska: "Please tell the missionaries in charge of Southern Nebraska that we would like to have them come out and preach for us. They missed us last year. We would gladly receive any of the elders who may come here."

Miscellaneous Department

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Ohio and West Virginia Districts; Greeting: Having been placed in charge of the above-named districts I address you that we might more effectually discharge the duty God has imposed upon us. We have been fortunate in the liberal supply of efficient workers, which means added responsibility for you. All are not called to go out and preach, but there are various ways we can do a work for the Lord just as acceptable, viz.: by tithes and free-will offerings, feeding and clothing the ministry, securing for them places in which to preach, encouraging them by your presence at the meetings, giving out tracts, and above all living a life consistent with our profession, thus reflecting credit and honor upon the message we bear. In a general sense we begin the year's work with a more united and hopeful feeling than for many years past.

For economy and system the ministry will labor as follows for the present: 1. Bro. O. B. Thomas, Hocking Valley, with Sand Run as basis of operation. 2. Bro. T. J. Beatty and L. R. Devore travel together and labor wherever the Spirit of wisdom may suggest. 3. James M. Baggerly, Wellston and surrounding towns. 4. E. H. Durand, Dayton, to be assisted by Bro. Davis and Warren. 5. William N. Hanner, Cincinnati.

We earnestly urge upon all the Saints in those respective places to aid the ministry as much as possible in the various ways suggested; and we also urge upon the ministry to get into new places as much as consistent with their demands. The tent will be operated by myself and Myron E. Thomas. Bro. O. B. Thomas will accompany it until Bro. M. E. arrives.

6. For the West Virginia District, Bro. E. E. Long and N. S. Dunnington will labor together, pushing into new fields as much as possible.

7. Bro. S. O. Foss, for the present, will labor among the branches seeking to infuse new life into them. Let the Saints earnestly cooperate with him. S. J. Jeffers, aside from Bishop's agent's work, will labor in the district wherever wisdom may direct. Report all branch matters to district president A. B. Kirkendall, Creola, Ohio. He promises to give several months' active work in the district this summer. I expect to spend considerable of my time with you.

Information from any one having knowledge of an opportunity for preaching, or desiring a series of meetings, will be thankfully received and promptly acknowledged. My address will be Creola, Vinton County, Ohio.

The Electric Park at Welston, Ohio, has been secured for the reunion of the two districts to be held some time in August; definite announcements later. Let all who can possibly attend begin now to make preparations.

Let us all give a long and hearty pull together, and see just what we can accomplish the coming year. And to this end let us all watch and pray.

PORTSMOUTH, Ohio, May 17, 1905.

F. J. EBELING.

To the Workers and Saints of the Des Moines, Eastern Iowa, and Nauvoo Districts, Greeting: Bro. Heman C. Smith having appointed me in charge of the above-named districts, I take this method of urging all to diligence in service, and constant vigilance in looking out for and seeking new openings and opportunities for the preaching of the word. The local and scattered members can do much in this line; if not more than the traveling elders. If you can discover a church or school-house in your vicinity where an opening may be made, secure the use of it and write to the missionary of your district, or to the undersigned, and the place will be supplied as soon as practicable. The missionaries are more than anxious to effect new openings, but they have not the money on hand at all times to run around and hunt them up. You are there, and without any great loss of time or expense can prepare the way before them. Will you help on the work by so doing?

Also that you sustain the Bishop's agent with your tithes and offerings. He can not pay out unless he receives in.

In the past year in the Eastern Iowa District some of the elder's families were behind in their allowance four or five months and are yet behind three months. This ought not to be, and should not continue. If the elder's family do not pay their debts they bring reproach on the cause. If you withhold your means so they can not pay their bills, but must go in debt, are not those who withhold their means and so deprive the agent of money to pay allowances the parties who are responsible for that reproach?

Let us all work together for the success of the cause of Christ, members, local officers, and missionaries, each in his or her special duties, and we will see at the end of the conference year that the gospel has made progress. Letters sent to my home address will be promptly forwarded to me in the field.

Your brother,

JAMES MCKIERNAN.

Box 225, FARMINGTON, Iowa.

Under existing conditions the burden of active and detail service in directing the mission-work in the field assigned to Elder I. N. White and myself must rest upon him, and, therefore, all correspondence should be addressed to him. Should any reach me it will be at once turned over to him. In case my counsel shall be necessary Bro. White will confer with me and thus our action will be joint. Let all concerned please note this and act accordingly and thus relieve,

Yours in bonds,

JOSEPH LUFF.

To the Saints and Colaborers of the South and North Dakotas: I wish to say, as I am entering into the work of this conference year, I have a desire to become acquainted with the field, (having been appointed to assist our missionary in charge) and all who may be able to help us in making openings, or to continue such as are already made, that the work may prosper and souls of men be saved in the kingdom of God. My field address will be Newark, South Dakota; home address, Lamoni, Iowa. Either of these places will reach me. I desire to hear from as many as possible. Those who labor in the field as missionaries will please be prompt in reporting to me at the above addresses, by July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1, so our missionary in charge may receive them by at least the 10th of each of the above months mentioned as requested by him in HERALD of May 10, 1905.

This work in which we are engaged is the Lord's work, and we will only be successful with his aid. Let us make every necessary sacrifice for its advancement.

Yours in the struggle for eternal life.

PIPESTONE, Minnesota.

ELI HAYER.

To the Ministry and Saints of California, Nevada, and Arizona; Greeting: We take up the work of another conference year with much to encourage us. The church has entered the period of time prayed for and prophesied of by the pioneers of this work—the time in which Zion's laws can be put in force for her temporal redemption. As God manifests more power in behalf of his Saints, so Satan, in his final efforts, will have more power over his own. If we as ministers or members, have in us aught that belongs to Satan, the day will so manifest it, for we shall be tried as by fire, and Satan will present his claim. A pure and unfeigned love for God and his children will make our yoke easy and our burden light.

God has blessed California this year with abundance of rain, and we hope that his storehouse will greatly profit as a result thereof. The Saints have done nobly, under trying circumstances in the days of drought, so we can trust them in the days of prosperity.

Bishop C. A. Parkin and his agents receive tithes and offerings in Northern California. His address is 3010 Sixteenth Street, San Francisco.

Elder A. Carmichael, Anaheim, California, R. F. D. 1, is agent for Bishop Kelley, in Southern California up to the northern line of San Luis Obispo County. Send tithes and offerings to him or to his collectors in the branches.

The conference has given us but a small force of men this year, which increases our responsibility. All, excepting Bro. Burton, have at present, local charges. We desire that the brethren provide, so far as practicable, for the filling of their pulpits by local men, and move out into their surrounding country.

Bro. Joseph F. Burton is expected to arrive soon from Tahiti. I request him to take sub-charge of Southern and Central California.

Bro. J. M. Terry will have charge of the missionary work in San Francisco and Oakland as heretofore.

Bro. J. C. Clapp and William Gibson have been placed upon the list of supernannuated ministers. These brethren, by long and faithful service, have earned their rest from the arduous duties of active service and are to work only as strength and circumstances permit, in harmony with local authorities and under direction of missionary in charge, as per conference resolution.

I shall move out as wisdom may direct and shall try to make opportunities.

Reports are required of the missionaries on the first of July, October, January, and March.

The Presidency require prompt reports from the ministers in charge, so, brethren, please report promptly. I will furnish you with blanks.

I desire to hear from the officers of the church in Nevada, concerning conditions there; also from Saints in the out-lying parts of the mission, concerning conditions and opportunities for work. We may not be able to reach you all, but we wish to get acquainted with the whole field, and information may bring results of value to you in the future.

May the Lord of the harvest abundantly bless our reaping and help us to be strong and yet humble in the performance of duty.

CHAS. E. CRUMLEY, Minister in Charge.

2417 Kay Street, SACRAMENTO, California.

To the Missionary Force of Gallands Grove and Little Sioux Districts; Greeting: As I have been appointed assistant minister in charge of the above-named district I thought the missionaries would expect a word from me. We have a great work before us, and the Master expects a steady, persistent effort upon our part. The entire force are experienced missionaries who understand the needs of the mission as well as I do. So let us all be energetic and thrust in our sickles and reap while the day lasts.

Anything I can say by way of suggestion will be gladly given. I would like to hear from you all occasionally. Do not fail to report to me on the days indicated by the missionary in charge. Hoping we will have a prosperous year, I remain,

Your brother,
ROMANAN WIGHT.

THE total value of farm property in the United States in 1900 was more than five times as great as in 1850, and 28.4 per cent greater than in 1890. The railway industry was in its infancy in 1850, so that comparisons extending back fifty years are unfair, but, taking 1890 as a basis, it is found that railway property, as indicated by total capitalization, rose from ten thousand and twenty-nine millions of dollars in that year to eleven thousand eight hundred and ninety-two millions in 1900.

EXPERIENCE AND SOME OTHER THINGS.

There is now manifested a desire for activity by the elders who are in the general and local fields which is commendable. It is pleasing to see and note.

The word says, "It is a day of warning; let him that is warned warn his neighbor." It is an excellent policy for all to keep busy. By keeping busy in our labor in the Master's service we will have no time to spend in the Devil's work and will avoid collusion with his emissaries, aids, and helpers, busy-bodies, talebearers, scandallovers, backbiters, disturbers of the peace, and all the other long list of evil workers; so let us be busy in our legitimate field. The world needs the truth as we see it, and there are many who will welcome it when they hear it. Why not give them an opportunity?

One brother, a veteran, lately said, "I never felt better spiritually. And I have not enjoyed my work so well in many years as I do now."

A sister lately remarked, "I never saw the need and fact of authority so plainly as now."

Another said, "Though some things during the last conference were trying and calculated to disturb, on the whole it was an educational session that I would not have missed for anything."

Forty-two were released from the missionary field, and twenty-four added, which makes the list some eighteen less than last year.

There should be a better energy developed on the part of the local forces everywhere. There must be places near to every branch where services may be regularly held by the officers, which, sooner or later, would be followed by good results. Elders, priests, teachers, and deacons may all "warn, teach, expound, and invite to come to Christ." Wake your zeal and let it burn.

There is complaint both in the pulpit, report, and letter, that there is great lack of experienced local presiding men to look after the flock. We think this complaint is often made unnecessarily, and disparages local men improperly and to their hurt as well as to the work. Men never get to be experienced men until they have been put into positions where it is to be obtained. Why criticise men for lack of experience who have not been permitted to acquire it? It is better to put men in charge, aid, advise, and encourage them, and then let them exercise the duties of their offices without subjecting them to restraint because of their lack of experience.

To us it is unwise to expect too much of men on the part of those who have by conditions and the lapse of time gained experience, and who see the need of it in others. They were once without experience and gained it by being trusted; why not try this on others as well?

The Lord certainly does not call men who are not qualified in some degree for the work they are called to, the position in his work they must occupy. Why complain of the material he gives to the work out of the world. If Paul may plant and Apollos water, and God alone can give the increase, it would seem wise to accept what God gives without finding so much fault with it. We may not see as the Lord sees, and by that be incapacitated to judge wisely. Better take men as they are, give them an opportunity to gain experience, and encourage them by cheerful advice and forbearance, rather than discouragement by disparaging criticism.

Like Paul we may plant, like Apollos we may water; but now as in their day "it is God that giveth the increase."

DOWN WITH THE CREED.

Simultaneously with the putting the Devil in the pulpit by the good Doctor A. R. Lambert of the South Park Avenue, Chicago, church, the following appears as a special from New York, descriptive of an effort by Doctor Samuel T. Carter, of New York, Presbyterian, to get that church to "drop" the Westminster confession of faith. Will they do it?

NEW YORK, May 14.—[Special.]—The general assembly of the Presbyterian Church, which will meet at Winona Lake, Indiana, beginning Thursday, will discuss the overtures made by the presbytery of Nassau, Long Island, to drop the Westminster confession of faith and substitute therefor the brief statement of the reformed faith. Between the conservatives and radicals there promises to be a lively discussion.

This was recently adopted by the general assembly as a brief statement, but not as a creed of the church, the old confession, known as the Westminster confession, which contains many doctrines that have caused sharp controversies between clergymen, being retained.

The Reverend Doctor Samuel T. Carter, New York City, last September sent an open letter to the presbytery at Nassau which attracted wide attention. He assailed certain doctrines "received by the church, but not generally believed." The reading of the letter at the Presbyterian meeting in Oyster Bay precipitated a discussion over the statements it contained.

The controversy continued until the next meeting, held in December. It was believed that Doctor Carter might be tried for heresy, but after appearing before the presbytery at Nassau and making an eloquent appeal for the truth and the dropping of misstatements, however time-honored, he triumphed in that instead of trying him for heresy the presbytery voted to make overtures to the general assembly to drop the Westminster confession.

A statement has been given out by Doctor Carter, in which he says:

"The general assembly of the Presbyterian Church meets in the month of May. The presbytery of Nassau asks it to take the necessary steps toward dropping the Westminster confession and adopting a brief statement of the reformed faith, the simple and kindlier creed which has already been indorsed by the church.

"The general assembly can reject the petition more or less courteously. But can it afford to do so? It is important to rid the church of bad creed, but still more important to dispel from the minds of men the gloomy ideas of religion which go with the old creeds and most of all the dreadful dogma of endless torment which has caused such intense suffering.

"The secular press has thus far treated the matter so courteously and sympathetically that I feel it to be a privilege to present my appeal before the public through it. The Westminster confession presents for the worship and allegiance of man a God who, according to the good pleasure of his will, has assigned millions of the human race to endless torment before they were born or had done good or ill.

"Of this number a large proportion died in infancy and committed no personal transgression. The whole heathen world formed another large company. By the teachings of the confession Homer and Virgil, Plato and Socrates, Cato and Antonius, Confucius and Gautama are at this moment roasting in the literal flames of hell fire and shall so burn for ever and ever.

"Has the Presbyterian Church the face to make this declaration to men in this generation? The Westminster confession, in fact, says that God is a monster; modern theology says he is not. In this sentence lies the whole gist of the confession.

"Every fiber of my moral being rises up against this God who dishonors theology; with the utmost fervor in my soul I reject this God of the confession, and as fully as I reject this God, so gladly do I receive the God of the gospel, Jesus Christ.

"The father in the great parable, who runs forth to meet his wretched but repenting son, falls upon his neck and kisses him. Sham theology is sure to make sham religion, and sham religion is sure to lead to the horrors of the Roman empire and the French revolution, to the eruption of the human volcano.

"It has been well said, 'Repelled light becomes lightning.' Of such a state of affairs as this, Martineau sadly says: 'Will not bad creed, then, be got rid of? Not a bit; and year after year thousands of clergymen will solemnly profess before tens of thousands of assenting people a creed which is false to the heart of them all.'

"This is what they are doing in the Presbyterian Church to-day. The general assembly will do nothing so good as to make an end of it. It is more seriously important than sending missionaries to China. There is no use of sending truth abroad if we live a lie at home."

We heartily agree with Doctor Carter when he states that the confession which he is trying to get dropped is so wanting in expression that it makes God to be "a monster," and it will be a pleasant day when it is disposed of by repression. Whether the church has the courage of the conviction of its better element is to be tested we hope; so that, if we have to continue to contest this dogma of men with the other errors which have come to us out of the Dark Ages, we may have a more recent affirmation of it than the one responsible for its origin, should the church refuse to drop it.

Of course, there is in the minds of conservative men the latent fear always attaching to any attempt to remove ancient landmarks, whether set up by God, or God-fearing but mistaking men, who, unable to comprehend "God manifest in flesh," set up a creature of their own darkened nature and essayed to worship it,—a worse idolatry, if possible, than the one referred to by the poet:

"Lo the poor Indian whose untutored mind; Sees God in clouds, and hears him in the wind."

It is worse because it is a formula prescribed for the uninformed and unintelligent believers by the informed and intelligent, who are unconsciously misled by the spirit of mysticism and error, as long predicted: "The wise men and the seers hath he covered." "Where is the wise, where is the prudent," of this world?

The strange and so far unaccounted-for falling off in attendance and the apparent decadence in the churches, is working disastrously to the faith of the masses. If Doctor Carter's contention is successful and this "awfulness" in dogma is dropped, Where will be the next line of attack? must necessarily be the query. We can only pray, "watch and pray," that in the fall of the creed the good may not fall with the bad; notwithstanding our acquiescence in the truthfulness and fulfillment of the saying, "If the blind lead the blind they shall both fall into the ditch." It really seems that the blind are falling into the ditches of skepticism and unbelief.

Reverend William Chalmers Covert, of the Forty-first Street Presbyterian church, Chicago, in a sermon preached Sunday, May 14, upon the text, "What the minister sees in the pew," presents for consideration the following:

The failure to scrutinize accurately and sympathetically the conditions in the pew, and thus get into the life of the people with a message fitted to their needs, is at the bottom of much of the pastor restlessness of the day. The minister sees an altogether different audience, mentally and spiritually, from what his father saw forty years ago. Then the pastor was one among a few educated men—an oracle of rare and unchallenged wisdom. To-day with books and periodicals rolling from the presses like avalanches from mountain sides, a new learning has come, and with it a new capacity for judgment and independent thinking.

A great spiritual change has also come over the audience of the modern minister. This is the most susceptible and approachable era in the history of truth, all surface indications to the contrary notwithstanding. A new feeling for humanity has arisen. The audience shares in it. Social and economic questions are viewed from the Christian point of view by the thought leaders of the day. The golden rule is the shining goal of more men than ever before. The minister sees a most distracted company of men and women before him. Life is overcharged with energy.

There are innumerable obstacles to overmaster before the minister can get an entrance for his message. There are diverse religious tastes and experiences before him, old pilgrims and new recruits. Some want theological sermons, others ethical discussions; some want a strong literary flavor to the composition; others ask for simplicity of style; some desire the appearance of the finished product in the written sermon; others ask for the opportunity of closer personal touch through an extreme method.

Some want what they call the "pure gospel," by which they mean sermons that have no direct reference to the live issues of politics and society, while others insist that religion is a poor sham if it is to be kept wholly within the pulpit desk and not related to the burning themes of daily life. Some want their emotions stirred, others plead the fleeting character of all emotional appeals. What a minister sees from his pulpit is a picture too varied for description. What is he to do? Let him survey the field like the army surgeon with the fighting line, rush past the more trivial needs of the slightly wounded, and go with his help and healing to those who bear the grievous wounds of death.

All this leads to the conclusion that really it is the pure gospel that is needed. But would the preacher of the primitive faith, the gospel as given in the New Testament with its natural correlatives of history and prophecy in the Old, meet with favor or a frown from the pew? Our experience so far leads us to believe that both the pulpit and the pew as a whole would reject the preacher and his message. But let the work of enlightenment go on.

THE CHICAGO STRIKE.

For something like two months now a strike struggle of more than ordinary extent and importance has been going on in Chicago. It appears to have originated in a dispute between Montgomery Ward & Company and some of their workmen in the clothing department which remaining unsettled for some time was finally taken up by the Teamsters' International Union, of which C. P. Shea is president. The movement soon assumed greater proportions and involved a number of local unions in sympathetic strikes.

Against the effects upon the business traffic of the city, a protest was made by some business firms, together with some team-owners' and team-employers' associations whose business was affected by the strike and boycotts against business firms incident to such movements, the issue was joined between labor unions and business firms, and the "strike was on," in the language of the street.

The usual result followed. The business firms affected by the strike filled the places of the strikers with other men, so far as they could secure them, and essayed to do business. This was resented by the striking teamsters and their sympathizers, and soon riot, mob violence, police protection; appeals to law and order, and all the accessories to a well-defined and strongly contested struggle between clashing interests came as a consequence.

Various attempts to bring about peace between the warring elements have been made by Mayor Dunne and the city council; two thousand or more additional men have been added to the police force, much property has been destroyed and gone to waste, a score of lives have been sacrificed, some of them not directly connected with the struggle, many, possibly hundreds, have been more or less seriously hurt, some never again to be well on both sides, hundreds of arrests have been made, and the courts are busy with the trial of persons charged with the commission of wrong-doing, disturbing the peace, and committing acts of violence against persons and property, and the end does not appear to be near.

President Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, is at present writing, May 19, in the city with a view by his presence and advice to assist in bringing about a settlement of the strike. Whether he will be permitted to accomplish the end sought is doubtful.

So far as a settlement between the contending elements is concerned, the statements made by some of the parties themselves, as given in the leading papers in their issues for May 18, perhaps may show the situation better than the expression of either a hopeful or a disheartening opinion might do.

President Shea is reported to have said:

We have always been for peace, but I am not in sympathy with any settlement which does not meet the demands for which the strike was called. All strikers must be reinstated—that is the only condition upon which I will agree to a settlement.

In this it is to be supposed President Shea speaks for the Teamsters' International Union on the part of the strikers. And opposed to it Robert J. Thorne speaking for the Employers' Association on the part of those contending against the strike is reported thus:

The men who now are employed to take the places of striking teamsters have been engaged to fill permanent positions, and under no consideration will they be discharged to make room for the strikers who wish to come back.

We intend absolutely to stand by these men who now are standing by us. The strikers will be taken back to the extent that there are vacancies open. I can not say how many positions now are vacant. They are becoming fewer every day. The statements credited to President Shea that all the striking teamsters will be put back to work within a few weeks are ridiculous. An effort is being made by the employers to knock out once and for all the thuggery and domination by radical unionism that have held this city in check for years. The fight is a fight to put Chicago back at the head of the list, where it belongs.

This apparently presents the situation in brief. The striking Teamsters' Union as a condition to the settlement and calling off the strike insists that the men who went out of employment on the strike must be taken back and given the work and places they had when the strike was called. The contending Employers' Association and their associate business firms, state that the men whom they engaged to take the places of those who went out of their service on strike were given permanent employment and will not be discharged by them to give place to those who struck. One says "You must"; the other, "We will not." What prospect for settlement is there if both refuse to yield?

We take neither the side of the employers nor the side of the striking employees in this controversy; but we can easily see that interference with business, acts of lawlessness, disturbance of the public peace, the inconvenience and actual loss to which the innocent public is compelled to submit, and for which they have no remedy which they may avail themselves of, loss of life, destruction of property, and the disregard of law and order are all wrong, no matter what the inciting origin of them may have been, or whoever may have been in the right or the wrong at the outset of the trouble.

One very discomfoting and unfortunate feature which has come to light during the course of the strike is, that an association called the Wagon Workers' Union, of Chicago, in an effort to keep its members in line with the decisions of its councils established a fund called an educational fund. With this fund and at the direction of a council, a business agent, Casey by name, employed certain men to discipline some of the rebellious members, a list of names was furnished the chief of these educators and a sum amounting to fifteen dollars per head was agreed upon as the price to be paid for putting these members "out of business." The first name on this list was C. J. Carlstrom. This man was followed from his work to near his home, and there assaulted, and notwithstanding he made a hard fight for his life was so badly beaten that he died in the hospital to which he was taken for treatment.

Three men have been arrested and will be tried on a charge of murder, or manslaughter, with the members of the Executive Council of the Wagon Workers' Union as accessories before the fact; and, if they be found guilty, it will go hard with them. One other man, Bill Anderson, was severely beaten by the same hired educational committee; and one, George Herman, badly frightened; for which forty-seven dollars was paid out of the funds of the union.

All this is a matter of history as told in the current press of the day; and taking no side as to the merits of the strike now pending in the city of Chicago, the metropolis of the Northwest, we can but express the hope that further violence and bloodshed will be avoided, the real differences and grievances successfully adjusted, and law, order, and peace be reinstated.

THE long expected battle between the Japanese and Russian fleets has taken place in the Corean Straits, with the result that Admiral Togo has won the fight, almost totally annihilating the Russian warships, cruisers, and other fighting ships. Reports place this sea fight as the most remarkable in a hundred years. Will it bring peace? It is to be hoped so.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Can a priest, or teacher of a branch, resign his office if he desires to?

Yes. If good reasons exist why a priest or teacher should not continue to serve in the office to which he has been ordained, he may resign.

How should he proceed?

He should present his resignation in writing to the president of the branch, who will present it to the branch business-meeting for acceptance; or, he may present it to the meeting himself. Whichever way he may choose he should state his reasons for resigning in a clear and plain way, so that he may not be misunderstood, or misstated afterwards, to his disadvantage.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The following is from the National Daily Review, May 20, 1905: "Do you remember the 'petrified man,' supposed to be eight thousand years old, discovered in a gravel-bed near Leavenworth a few years ago, and which had the scientists of the whole country guessing? This wonderful specimen was made from a plaster of paris cast by Charles Parmer, an eccentric old man who lives on a farm adjoining that of John Cory, near Lowemont. The cast was taken from a human being. Parmer had arranged with another man to help out in his scheme to make some money. Accordingly the specimen was hidden in a ravine near Miocene, three miles northwest of Leavenworth, and was found per the arrangements. It was taken to Leavenworth and placed on exhibition as a genuine petrified man. Great interest was manifested in it, and the owners realized a neat sum by charging an admission fee to it. Scientists examined it and were puzzled. Finally Parmer traded the curiosity for one hundred and sixty acres of land in South Dakota, and the new owner went on a tour of the East, attracting attention everywhere. Parmer divulged the secret to Doctor Redmond, Sheriff Stance Myers, and editor of the Kansan on the train between Lowemont and Potter Tuesday. He made this specimen seven years ago. A few years before that he 'made' a woman in California. This became famous throughout the West as the 'San Joaquin woman.' Parmer made these images out of a substance of his own manufacture, which, when it 'sets,' is as hard as rock."

Here is another from the Denver Times for May 10: "PINEDALE, Wyoming, May 10. — Mrs. Mary Schall has made a startling discovery in the great fossil beds at Fossil in the form of an iron pin ten inches long and about an inch in thickness, firmly imbedded in the fossil-rock. The find proves that the manufacture of iron was known at a much earlier age than generally supposed, antedating any other iron implement heretofore discovered.

"The iron pin is a remarkable piece of work, inasmuch as its manufacture produced a metal which has a ring like a silver bell, making it apparent that in some respects the people of prehistoric times were ahead of the present age in iron manufacture.

"The iron pin was found in rock formed many ages before the Aztecs or the Toltecs and indicates that America has been inhabited for thousands of years, a high standard of civilization existing here countless years before the time when Adam and Eve are popularly supposed to have occupied the garden of Eden."

We have seen iron pins made within the last decade that if found in certain formations of rock would promptly be pronounced a million years old. It has always seemed to us that such wild estimates of the age of rock formations, etc., as we read from time to time, are made by men who forget that it is possible that atmospheric conditions were vastly different two, three, or four thousand years ago by which these layers of rock might have been formed within a score of years, instead of the thousands of years that would be required, as estimated by scientists, under present conditions. This iron pin may have been one of the pins made by Noah for holding the timbers of the ark together, and may have been lost by little Ham, but we very seriously doubt that its age would reach farther back than that.

THE TITHE IS THE LORD'S.

A copy of this article was furnished the Standard for circulation in the Australasian Mission. It is commended to the consideration of all.—Ed.

Whatever may be said of the disposition and practice of men in accepting and applying to their own uses that which is not properly their own, it is safe to affirm that God will neither improperly receive nor apply to the furtherance of his purposes anything offered or taken outside of holy and just claims.

Abraham, who received the gospel, paid tithes to Melchisedec, "Him whom God had appointed to receive tithes for the poor."—Genesis 14: 38, Inspired Translation.

Jacob entered into covenant with God and vowed: "Of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee."—Genesis 28: 22.

These worthies complied with the law of tithes and offerings four hundred years before the date of the ceremonial law under Moses, and were blessed under its administrations. It must have been a part of the gospel order that was obeyed by the patriarchs and preached afterwards by Christ to call men to him, for Jesus said to the Jews: "Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day; and he saw it, and was glad."—John 8: 56.

Paul also bears testimony corroborating this thought: "And if ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise."—Galatians 3: 29.

It is significant that the covenant of promise to Abraham and his posterity was made after that he had fulfilled the commandments of the Lord, including that of tithes and offerings. Do not overlook this fact. Abraham did not test the Lord, to see whether he was true and faithful to duty, but God let Abraham show his faith by his works. And of the faithfulness of Abraham to duty touching the law of tithing it is written: "Wherefore, Abram paid unto him tithes of all that he had, of all the riches which he possessed, which God had given him more than that which he had need."—Genesis 14: 39.

Abraham first demonstrated a living faith and upright character in performing his part under the law. Then God could act, and it is said of this action: "And in that same day the Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river Euphrates."—Genesis 15: 21.

Abraham observed the law providing for rendering an account to the bishop in financial matters, as in other things, and for all this God blessed and commended him saying: "Abraham obeyed my voice, and kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes, and my laws."—Genesis 26: 5.

The Lord does not deviate from his course nor change as to his promises, nor does he gather to him those who refuse to honor his law and observe his statutes; neither will he walk with the man who departs from his ways and ceases to perform his proper work. His unvarying character is forcibly set forth in the calling of Solomon to the throne of Israel. Of this he said: "I have chosen him to be my son, and I will be his father. Moreover I will establish his kingdom for ever, if he be constant to do my commandments and my judgments, as at this day."—1 Chronicles 28: 6, 7.

Solomon was chosen and anointed because at the time of the choice, his life and character were found to be in keeping with God's statutes. The promises made to him then were so limited that he could expect the divine favor and blessing to continue with him only so long as he was "constant" to do the will of God, "as at that day."

This divine order should strengthen the hope of every faithful Saint. Our commendation depends upon our own faithfulness to duty, not that of others; and although others may, like the sons of David, who were rejected of God, fail, ("for he had many sons," but only Solomon was chosen,) yet the obedient will be accepted as a son indeed, and his inheritance established for ever.

The true order is, "Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."—Psalm 50: 5. This is just the reverse of the thought which is sometimes presented, that the sacrifice is to be made after the gathering.

In 1831 the Lord said: "Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at His coming); for after to-day cometh the burning; this is speaking after the manner of the Lord; for verily I say, to-morrow all the proud and they that do wickedly shall be as stubble; and I will burn them up, for I am the Lord of hosts; and I will not spare any that remaineth in Babylon."—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5.

The time for administration of the law according to this instruction is now. Certainly from the year 1831 until the coming of the Son of man. Neither is this work limited to place. It is applicable to any body in any place, who may hear and is capable of doing. The Lord also certainly knew the condition of the church when this was given, and what the people could and should do. It remains, then, for us to accept and stand approved, for we are powerless to change God's order or his law.

In 1861, when the question of procedure in financial work was before the church, the following instruction was received: "In order to place the church in a position to carry on the promulgation of the gospel, and as a means of fulfilling the law, the twelve will take measures in connection with the bishop, to execute the law of tithing; and let them before God see to it, that the temporal means so obtained is truly used for the purposes of the church, and not as a weapon of power in the hands of one man for the oppression of others, or for the purposes of self-aggrandizement by any one, be he whomsoever he may be. As I live, saith the Lord, in the manner ye execute this matter, so shall ye be judged in the day of judgment."—Doctrine and Covenants 114:1, 2.

It will be seen from this that the step toward applying the law to the gospel believer was initiated by revelation, not by individuals, and is found to be in harmony with what was required and observed under the gospel order by Abraham and Jacob, of whom reference has already been made. Tithing was observed and the Lord accepted it under the gospel order preached in Abraham's time, when the church was in a scattered condition, as in the present; men may change, but God's order does not.

On the 9th of April, 1872, this question was before the church and it adopted the following: "Whereas we, the elders in General Conference assembled, believe that the church should put forth a greater effort, financially, than in the past, therefore be it resolved that we consider it to be the duty of the presiding officers of missions, districts, and branches to teach the law of tithing and free-will offerings, presidents of branches to act as the Bishop's agents in collecting and disbursing such tithing and offerings, keeping an account of all moneys received and forwarding the same to the Bishop to carry on the work of the ministry, etc."

Following this, March 3, 1873, the church was instructed to more perfectly organize and select Bishop's agents to assist in carrying on the work, confirming in fact the action of the previous conference and supplementing it with the instruction that the Bishop should appoint agents to act in the matter. It is as follows: "It is expedient that the bishop of my church shall choose two counselors, and that they be ordained to their office as my law directs, that there may be henceforth no caviling among my people. The bishop of my church may also choose and appoint bishop's agents, until it shall be wisdom in me to ordain other bishops, in the districts and large branches of my church."—Doctrine and Covenants 117:10.

God does not call and set men apart to work when there is nothing to do. Why "expedient" to set these men in their places to officiate, if there is nothing to be done until the people go to Zion?

The Quorum of Twelve took action upon the question in 1875 and reported as follows: "That the law of tithing is binding upon the church in its scattered condition." This was presented to the church, and at its General Conference adopted, April 10, of the same year. By this it is seen that the church placed itself upon record upon the question at least thirty years ago, and while it may be claimed that the church may have erred in its action at the time upon the matter, it can not reasonably be said that God, who has continued to instruct the body since that time, could err, and accept the tithes of the people if wrongfully paid, any more than in the cases cited of the patriarchs.

The observance of the law of tithes is indicative of our homage and gratitude to God, showing that we recognize in him our great helper and deliverer, and it brings men nearer to him and teaches them to serve him more perfectly. Without this part of the law we wander too far away from God; hence the necessity of "fulfilling" this command as stated in the revelation, and proving by our works that we are what we claim to be, the children of faith.

"He who is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much; and he who is unjust in the least, is also unjust in much. If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches?"—Luke 16:10, 11. By our works we are to be known. Not simply the works we do in Zion or some place outside, but everywhere. It is as broad and continuous as the injunction: "Therefore, let your light so shine before the world, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven."—Matthew 5:18.

It is sometimes urged as an objection to fulfilling the law by the church when in its scattered condition, that Israel did not pay tithes until they passed over into Canaan, and that this is the true type of which latter-day Israel is the shadow. If it could be shown that the children of Israel never kept the law of tithes and offerings until they passed over Jordan, it would in no way affect the order of the present Israel, for they are under a law given by direct command of God. Under such condition it is not a question of what ancient Israel did, but what is the present Israel commanded to do. The argument, however, that Israel in the wilderness did not keep the law is based upon an assumption, and not on fact. Why suppose this part of the law was never administered until after they got upon the other side of the Jordan?

The sons of Aaron and the Levites were separated to act in the priest's office, 1491 B. C. (See Numbers 3:3, 4.) Soon after this the Lord made provision for sustaining these ministers so that they might devote their time to the service of the tabernacle, and referring to this he says: "And, behold, I have given all the tenth in Israel for an inheritance, for their service which they serve, even the service of the tabernacle of the congregation."—Numbers 18:21.

Twenty years after this statement and forty years after the separation of the tribe to the priest's office,

Israel passed over Jordan (see Joshua 3:1-17); and is it fair to presume that the law was not kept all of this time, but that the people were waiting till they should reach Canaan?

But we are asked again, Why did the Lord command them to pay their tithes and offerings "when ye have gone over Jordan" (Deuteronomy 12:10, 11) if they were under the law in the wilderness? The answer is that this instruction concerned the place where tithes should be brought after crossing the Jordan, more particularly than the fact of simply paying in Canaan. The fact sought to be prominently impressed in the instruction is brought out clearly in the prohibitory clause of the enactment: "Take heed to thyself that thou offer not thy burnt offerings in every place that thou seest; but in the place which the Lord shall choose in one of thy tribes, there thou shalt offer thy burnt offerings, and there thou shalt do all that I command thee."—Deuteronomy 12:13, 14. The language used when the people are directed as to the place of performance indicates that they were already familiar with and keeping, in their way, the law. Note closely the reading: "And thither ye shall bring your burnt offerings, and your sacrifices, and your tithes, and heave offerings of your hand, and your vows, and your free-will offerings, and the firstlings of your herds and of your flocks."—Deuteronomy 12:6. Such a command could not be intelligently understood by a people which had never performed this work.

Touching other matters of the law comprehending in fact every moral precept, positive command is given as to what the people shall do when they "enter the land whither they go to possess it," but it will hardly be claimed that the people were not under the moral law and that it was not binding till they should attain their inheritances. And if this were true and the type is a fitting one should we not stop preaching morality and spirituality while the church is in a scattered condition, as well as tithes and offerings? "And the Lord commanded me at that time to teach you statutes and judgments, that ye might do them in the land whither ye go over to possess it."—Deuteronomy 4:14; 6:1. Following this instruction is to be found moral and religious commands guiding and directing the people in their duties and obligations both to God and man. The claim, then, that the precedent found in the example of the children of Israel, is such as to relieve the Saints while in a scattered condition from complying with the law of tithes and offerings, we think is not well founded.

The instruction given in the revelation of 1838 has been construed by some to reveal the beginning of the law of tithing as it belongs to the gospel economy, instead of the application of that part of the law relating to "surplus property" to "Zion and her stakes." At the time this was given the inquiry was, "How much thou requirest of the properties of thy people for a tithing." It is first made a special matter to the people at the place of Far West, Missouri. Far West at that time was a stake and the answer is directly applicable to the people of a stake: "I require all their surplus property to put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 106:1. In the application of the law to the second parties referred to it says: "Verily I say unto you, it shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties." Do not read this stopping at the word "tithed," as some do, and try to form your construction; this would not be in accord with the reading. It does not say that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed. That would leave a wrong inference not warranted by the full sentence. The teaching is, "tithed of the surplus property." This is the subject of explanation at the time and not the general law which signifies by its terms the "tenth," as we have already seen. Tithing, a tenth, was taught in 1831, as applicable outside of Zion or in Zion as has already been shown; was practiced by Abraham and Jacob (see Hebrews 7:2; Genesis 28:22); was approved by Jesus (see Luke 11:43); is the law for ever: "And after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually."—Doctrine and Covenants 106:1. But the tithe of the "surplus" is made specially applicable to "Zion and her stakes." Those outside may comply with it, and in so doing will fulfill this part of the law applicable to the citizens of Zion; but those inside "shall be" tithed of their surplus, "or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you."

If the Saints enter fully upon the work of keeping the law wherever they may be they will be found to be in full harmony when they shall come into Zion or her stakes. This is wisdom; hence the Lord states: "They that are appointed by the Holy Spirit to go up unto Zion, and they who are privileged to go up unto Zion. Let them carry up unto the bishop a certificate from three elders of the church, or a certificate from the bishop, otherwise he who shall go up unto the land of Zion shall not be accounted as a wise steward. This is also an example."—Doctrine and Covenants 72:5.

This is applicable to "all the extensive branches of my church, in whatsoever land they shall be established."—Ibid., paragraph 4. Wherever the place, "the tithe is the Lord's," and he should have his own.

This applies to Australia, Asia, Europe, or America. Let us all wake up and all be "children of the day," not the night.

May grace and peace abound with you and all the Israel of God.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 13, 1905.

BISHOP E. L. KELLEY,

Dear Brother: Your article entitled "The tithe is the Lord's," written for the Australian Standard, was read and considered by the Quorum of Twelve in its session to-day, and the following resolution was adopted: "Resolved that we indorse the conclusion of Bishop Kelley in the article presented to us so far as it relates to the law of tithing being in force before, as well as after the gathering, and also that the law of tithing now has general application to the Saints in 'Australia, Asia, Europe, or America.'"

By separate motion I was authorized to furnish you a copy of the above resolution with permission to publish in connection with your article if you so desire.

Respectfully submitted,

HEMAN C. SMITH, Secretary.

"PROBATION AFTER DEATH."

And I give unto you a commandment, that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass.— Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21.

Herein is a command to enter into an almost unlimited research for truth. A wise command, gracious counsel, and blessed privilege; to the intent that we may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, and doctrine, and in all things pertaining to the kingdom of God, that is expedient to understand. Who among us is to-day ready to say to ourselves that we have no need to be instructed more perfectly?

Does the doctrine of probation after death pertain to the kingdom of God? It certainly must if it pertains to anything. It has been said by one of our worthy standard-bearers, in a recent article, that "probation after death may be a true doctrine." Now, if it is true, the same power which is promised to guide into all truth, should be as effectual in supporting the unskilled while discussing it as any other principle pertaining to the kingdom of God. If it is a part of God's truth we need not fear to trust it in the hands of the seemingly unskilled, who are filled with the spirit of love and humility. And of course none can assist to advance any part of gospel truth without these qualifications. If this particular doctrine is not true, the sooner we discover it and leave it out the better.

The instruction cited above requires us to learn of things which are, and things to come. Probation after death deals with things to come, and so does every other part of the great gospel plan, directly or indirectly. Certainly, ministers should urge the people to obey the gospel "now and here"; and, by the way, give the unbeliever some of the very best of reasons why he should obey the chief and great commandment to love the Lord with all the "might, mind, and strength," by introducing him to the God of love and mercy, as well as justice. Impossible to love an object or creature without recognizing lovable traits or attributes.

It is not necessary to forget the terrible punishment of justice upon the vile and wicked, simply because we speak of manifest truth that "our Father which is in heaven" will extend his love and mercy to the very farthest limit; even to the confines of reformatory imprisonment. This deep-grounded truth, that we are called to love and serve such a God and Father, calling out all the best qualities of men for service of love, instead of wretched fear, is amply supported by the three standard books which we love for their precious store, and causes us to rejoice in contemplating the mighty breadth and depth of the indestructible, everlasting gospel.

True, our mission is to the living; but when we offer the plan of reward and punishment after death, with the principle of the resurrection, we are forced to a consideration of things after death; and certainly are required to consider all things pertaining to the kingdom of God which are expedient. And this is surely expedient, that we may be instructed more perfectly in doctrine, theory, etc.

Especially so since we are to "search the Scriptures," and in the search we find the acts of our Savior, the writings of the ancient prophets, and modern revelation from on high, citing us to the harmonious truth that the opportunities of this fleeting life do not for ever bar the path of progress, when gone.

What! Is death, which finds its victim in every stage of spiritual development, to be the eternal line drawn through the existence of a soul, beyond which the arms of mercy can not extend? Fickle death, which comes by chance of an innocent breach of Nature's law, by accident, or by purpose, to youth and age, high and low, good and bad, is this to be the eternal limit extended by wisdom and justice to all advancement toward salvation and happiness? And is this the principle upon which we are required to "love the Lord our God with all our heart, might, mind, and strength"? Surely it can not be.

We can not evade the plain scriptural statements in 1 Peter 3:18-20, and 4: 6, that Christ did enter into a place where the wicked dead were confined in prison, and preach to them. Nor can we conceive of any possible purpose for such preaching, other than that the hearers might be benefited. They had been disobedient in the days of Noe, and we are taught that Noe was a preacher of righteousness, and as the gospel is the means by which righteousness is always to be established, they must have been disobedient to the gospel. At any rate they were disobedient to the counsel of God, and notwithstanding that fact, the Savior is sent to them to preach; and as the pattern-preacher what could he preach but the gospel? And for what purpose? Let those who do not believe in a probation after death answer.

Reasoning that God is always the same, and no respecter of persons, we conclude that he will not extend a certain privilege to a select few and deny others who are equally as worthy of the same blessing.

If the above-named scripture stood alone in support of our claim of God's perfect love and mercy, it would require a more reasonable explanation than any we have heard to convince us that this interpretation was wrong. I am glad it does not stand alone, and that seeming conflicts between the records vanish like dew before the sun when properly understood. It seems that one secret to the situation lies in the fact that we sometimes forget that there is to be different degrees of punishment as well as different degrees of reward in the hereafter; and that all manner of sin and blasphemy will be forgiven men except the unpardonable sin; which sin can not be committed by those who have not received the Holy Ghost. What then shall we say of all the wicked who die without going that far in sin? Must their punishment be so severe and eternal, when their sins were not beyond the limit of forgiveness? Freely do we accept the many statements in the Book of Mormon, and other books, which speak of "eternal punishment," etc., but we wish to qualify them to the same degree that the Scriptures as a whole do qualify them. Many are the statements that the wicked shall suffer eternal punishment, etc., without direct qualifications. But the general teaching when taken as a whole makes the matter clear by informing us what part of the wicked will be thus punished with eternal pains, etc.

The hell of the second death is spoken of as a place prepared for the Devil and his angels. Who are his angels? Those evil spirits which are now with him in his war against truth, and all others whom they succeed in drawing beyond the limit of forgiveness, thus making them angels to the Devil and partakers with him of eternal punishment, in the same manner as the righteous are partakers with their leader, who is Christ.

We find also that the "for ever and ever" spoken of, the duration of blessedness of the righteous, is itself not without conditions hereafter as well as here. The eternal happiness in the realms of the redeemed would abruptly come to an end, if, by use of the free agency which God gives to his creatures, they should forfeit their right to the eternal happiness by being found in rebellion to right. "Oh, but there is to be no tempter then," some one says. Yes, it is true the tempter will be bound for a time, and when he is banished for ever it will still not be impossible to forfeit the happiness which is also no doubt as "endless as the life of the soul" by rebellious conduct.

Lucifer himself was once a son of the morning. And we read in 2 Peter 2:4, of angels who sinned, which with similar scriptural teaching proves that it is possible for even angels to sin. (See Doctrine and Covenants 28:10.)

Then since the eternal happiness is to be on conditions, who shall say that at least some of the eternal punishment is not also on conditions? We do not need to leave the matter to conjecture, however, since the Lord has spoken so plainly upon the subject, and tells us, in so many words, that those who receive not the gospel, neither the testimony of Jesus, shall be thrust down to hell, and finally to be redeemed, and shall be heirs of salvation. But the statement is modified by telling of the inferior degree of salvation—the telectual glory.

What great inducement can the understanding of this truth offer to the ungodly to procrastinate the day of their repentance? especially when taking into consideration the teaching that the wicked shall not be redeemed until they have suffered the furious wrath of God through years of terrible punishment. "What," some one says, "does this writer make bold to say that there ever will come a time when the wicked shall be redeemed?" True it is, and let us not make haste to condemn a matter without a very thorough consideration, while we bear in mind that the most experienced of us can yet possibly be instructed more perfectly in theory, doctrine, etc.

Let us remember that the world is so filled with false and blind teachings, that their influence is not entirely without effect even upon those who have access to a better light. For the long-accepted theory that death ends all chance of progression still holds its claims upon us to an extent, from the very fact of its almost universal acceptance.

Let us now carefully consider the following, which I believe to be in evidence to support conclusions already stated in this writing. And as we consider this instruction from Doctrine and Covenants 76:4, I wish to call attention to the fact that this word was given direct to this people in this age, not having to be translated from any other tongue, therefore by avoiding second, or third hand delivery, can be expected to convey the Lord's intended thought to us as accurately (if not more so) as any other writing. A moment's thought will convince us of the impossibility for even God to convey a perfect uniform thought to all alike, through the means alone of an imperfect, changeable language:

Thus saith the Lord, concerning all those who know my power, and have been made partakers thereof, and suffered themselves, through the power of the Devil, to be overcome, and to deny the truth, and defy my power; they are they who are the sons of perdition, of whom I say it had been better for them never to have been born; for they are vessels of wrath, doomed to suffer the wrath of God, with the Devil and his angels, in eternity, concerning whom I have said there is no forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come; having denied the Holy Spirit, after having received it, and having denied the only begotten Son of the Father; having crucified him unto themselves, and put him to an open shame: these are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the Devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power; yea, verily, the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the sufferings of his wrath; for all the rest shall be brought forth by the resurrection of the dead, through the triumph and the glory of the Lamb, who was slain, who was in the bosom of the Father before the worlds were made. And this is the gospel, the glad tidings which the voice out of the heavens bore record unto us, that he came into the world, even Jesus to be crucified for the world and to sanctify the world, and to cleanse it from all unrighteousness; that through him all might be saved, whom the Father had put into his power, and made by him, who glorifies the Father, and saves all the works of his hands, except those sons of perdition, who deny the Son after the Father hath revealed him; wherefore he saves all except them; they shall go away into everlasting punishment, which is endless punishment, which is eternal punishment, to reign with the Devil and his angels in eternity, where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched, which is their torment, and the end thereof, neither the place thereof, nor their torment, no man knows.

We notice that it is not stated that it is those who reject the gospel in this life who are to receive punishment everlasting, but those who commit the unpardonable sin. And that they are the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the suffering of his wrath, or after "paying the utmost farthing." And the punishment of all others is to have a limit, and can certainly be for no other purpose than the satisfaction of the demands of justice, and the good of those punished. What teaching in all the sacred writings does this do violence to? None. But upon the other hand it harmonizes teachings otherwise misunderstood, and lets the light of the last dispensation of the glorious gospel in upon the matter, and bids Saints to rejoice that the wisdom of the wise world must perish before the light of eternal truth, revealed to the simple-minded, noble youth from the fountain of all light and truth, in the times not far past.

When we think of our own blessed privilege, of living a life connected with a work that stands through storm and calm, through tempests of theological shot, charges of Satanic wrath, and shells of worldly zealous ignorance, still standing superior to all else; let us give our gladness full sway, and bid faith hold her own, while she leaps to gain yet forward heights. Cast doubts far backward, fears to the wind, discharge present duty of a faithful soldier, and joy in the thought that our great General will lead the ranks of the army of truth, on, on, to mighty victory.

Let us not dampen our warmth of love for each other because, forsooth, we do not all think alike. The sacrifice is too great, the goal too precious, the tie of union too sacred to be so ruthlessly rent. Let us extend our faithful service, in labor and praise, to the Master Mind and Author of so perfect a plan of life as we know the gospel to be, far beyond a doubt, and while "we see through a glass darkly," let our faith be strong in the promise that we shall finally all see eye to eye.

JAMES YATES.

HOPE OF SAINTS.

But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.—1 Thessalonians 4:13, 14.

The hope here of being with Christ should be comforting to all those who accept him as the Redeemer of the world and cause them to strive "earnestly for the faith that was once delivered to the Saints," and also to comply with the law that Christ has given, for he has said, "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him."—John 14:21. Therefore, if we love him we shall have hope of being loved of him, and he says, "If ye love me, keep my commandments."—John 14:15.

The Saints, therefore, having kept his commandments, have become the children of God and "are heirs according to the promise." Christ told his disciples, "Where I am, there ye may be also."—John 14:3, and a hope of being with Christ is something that should enable us to endure the trials of this life with pleasure, realizing that if we keep his statutes we will dwell with him and have rest, and happiness, in the celestial kingdom of God, "and see him as he is." John says, "And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure."—1 John 3:3. And if we are pure we shall see God. (See Matthew 5:8.)

And above all is the hope that the Saints have of obtaining a part in the first resurrection, and living with Christ a thousand years, on earth, in peace and righteousness, all for a few years' faithful service. Just think of the economy in living a saintlike life, the reward that is gained, and the hope we have to cheer us while we are battling on in life. We read: "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."—Revelation 20:6. This of itself should bring comfort in abundance to the Saints by giving them assurance of having a part in the great thousand years with their great and glorious King, and also that the second death shall have no power over them. What a consolation to those who have obeyed the gospel law! For, "the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." (Revelation 20:5.) At least a thousand years gained by keeping the commandments of God! And besides that a part in the highest glory, as we will see by referring to the Doctrine and Covenants 76: 5.

And again, we bear record for we saw and heard, and this is the testimony of the gospel of Christ, concerning them who come forth in the resurrection of the just: They are they who received the testimony of Jesus, and believed on his name, and were baptized after the manner of his burial, being buried in the water in his name, . . . these are they who are just men made perfect through Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, . . . these are they whose bodies are celestial, whose glory is that of the sun, even the glory of God the highest of all.

Therefore the hope that the Saints have of attaining to that condition where they can be like unto God in glory, and dwell in his presence for ever, and be freed from the bands of death, sorrow, and pain, is immense; and we can not well prize the goodness of God in making it possible for us to receive of his blessings unless we have been made partaker thereof in this life through the Comforter which is promised to the Saints when they do his will.

It is only those who have obeyed the gospel law that shall have a place in the celestial world, as we read:

And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom. . . . Ye who are quickened by a portion of the celestial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness.— Doctrine and Covenants 85: 5, 6.

Therefore, if we have obeyed the gospel, been baptized for the remission of sins, received the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, we are quickened by a portion of that law of Christ, that celestial glory, and hence when we came forth to meet the Bridegroom at his coming we shall receive of his fullness, and his glory. Hence the hope that Saints have is a great and grand comfort to them continually.

THE MAIN CAUSE.

In your issue of February 8, in "What does it mean?" and also in HERALD, April 12, "Baptisms—losses in. Why?" the brethren give some reasons which might be considered minor causes, but they both admit that they do not know the cause. I do not profess to be endowed with any great amount of wisdom or knowledge, neither do I believe it requires a prophet, seer, or revelator to understand the greatest cause, why it takes so much more labor to accomplish the same results. I believe our social condition, or in other words, the economic system we are living under, is the greatest cause. Take for instance the beginning of the latter-day work. The church was organized with six members, and grew in fourteen years to one hundred and fifty or two hundred thousand members. At that time we were under a different system. People were on an equality, socially. They owned the tools of production. But to-day it is different. The tools of production have changed hands. They no longer belong to the producing class. They are owned and controlled by the captains of industry; and with the labor-saving devices and machines, and these owned by the capitalists, the producing class are at the mercy of the trusts and combines, and these conditions have caused the fast concentration of wealth until we are rapidly approaching a nation of millionaires and paupers. While on one side money is the only god, on the other side the producing class have a hard struggle for existence.

To prove this proposition we have only to refer to government statistics. The producing class compose eighty-seven per cent of the whole population. They produce all. And they get seventeen per cent of what they produce. The captains of industry get the other eighty-three per cent. Thus eighty-seven per cent of the population who do all the producing get seventeen per cent of their produce, while thirteen per cent of the population get eighty-three per cent, they themselves producing nothing. And while they may be members of popular Christian organizations, and contribute liberally to the churches, they are robbing the poor, according to James 5, and Isaiah 3: 14, 15:

For ye have eaten up the vineyard; the spoil of the poor is in your houses. What mean ye that ye beat my people to pieces, and grind the faces of the poor? saith the Lord God of hosts.

What are the spoils of the poor? The poor belong to the producing class which produces all, but gets only seventeen per cent of the produce, while the capitalists get eighty-three per cent for the use of their tools and machines, which they can not consume nor the laboring class buy, hence this is the surplus, so stated by these same captains of industry, for which they have to seek a foreign market. According to the economy of God this surplus should be placed in the Lord's storehouse for the benefit of all. But instead, it goes into the coffers of the rich, and is used as a means to exploit the poor in interest, rent, and profit, and has brought us to the present condition, as spoken of by the prophet, Jeremiah 6: 14-17, which says:

They have healed also the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace. Were they ashamed when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush; therefore they shall fall among them that fall: at the time that I visit them they shall be cast down, saith the Lord. Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein. Also I set watchmen over you, saying, Hearken to the sound of the trumpet. But they said, We will not hearken.

The following we quote from the Literary Digest:

A New England clergyman in a letter to Mr. Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, asked him to state in his opinion the cause why so many intelligent working men do not attend church. Mr. Gompers in reply wrote that "one reason is that the churches are no longer in touch with the hopes and aspirations of the working men, and are out of sympathy with their miseries and burdens. The pastors either do not know, or have not the courage to declare from their pulpits the rights and wrongs of the laboring millions. The organizations most effectual in securing improved conditions have been frowned upon by the church. Laborers have had their attention directed to the sweet by and by, to the utter neglect of the conditions arising from the bitter now, and now the church and the ministry have been the apologists and defenders of the wrongs committed against the interest of the people, simply because the perpetrators are possessors of wealth."

Mr. T. DeWitt Talmage certainly understood something of the true condition when he uttered the following statement:

Unless the church of Jesus Christ rises up and proves herself the friend of the people as the friend of God, and in sympathy with the great masses who with their families at their backs are fighting this battle for bread, the church as at present will become a defunct institution, for the time has come when all classes of people shall have equal rights in the great struggle to get a living.

In an article in the Forum on "Social problems and the church," Bishop Huntington said,

When a great mixed audience in one of the public halls of New York City cheered the name of Christ and hissed the name of the church it settled no question, proved no proposition. But it was as significant as half the sermons that are preached. The time was when the people heard the words Christ and the church with reverent silence if not with enthusiastic devotion. Only in these latter days when working men think, read, reason, and reflect does a promiscuous crowd rudely, rather than irreverently, take the two apart, honoring the one and scouting the other.

Yes, the Bishop was right. The laboring classes are not only reading but are doing some thinking also along this line; and still there are few who can read the handwriting on the wall.

The Appeal to Reason quotes Reverend Russell Conwell, of Philadelphia, as making the following statement in Omaha, Nebraska:

Every man in Omaha has had an opportunity to get rich. It is a disgrace too for any man to live in Omaha ten years and not be rich. No man has a right to be poor. As a rule the poor people are the dishonest people, and the rich are the honest people in this day of Christian civilization. The foundations of business success and Christianity are identical. Money is power, and you should pray for power.

Is it any wonder that the churches are fast losing their hold on the masses?

There are Latter Day Saints who attribute the slow progress of the church to the latter-day apostasy; but is this the cause of the decline in other churches? I hardly think so. I think if any one will dig down to the solid rock of God's eternal truth, he will find the cause of the slow progress of the latter-day work is attributable to our economic system. We can see that the faster wealth is being concentrated in the hands of a few the harder it is to reach the masses with the gospel. And when capitalism is fully culminated, it will either be the utter overthrow of the nations of the earth, or the bringing in of a better system. We hope that a better system will be established. This we fully believe will be done, for it is in harmony with the prophet Isaiah, 65: 21-23:

And they shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant and another eat. . . . They shall not labor in vain, nor bring forth for trouble.

Under such conditions it would be an easy and pleasant task for the ministry, for the people would then hearken to the sound of the gospel trumpet, and inquire for the old way and the true paths, and walk therein.

Micah 4: 2-4:

And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths. . . . and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig-tree.

This will be when capitalism and militarism (which are twin sisters) are abolished.

Are we laboring to bring about this condition, or do we fear that we will starve or go insane if we fail to support a system that creates millionaires, tramps, and paupers?

I have only briefly mentioned this subject, not wishing to impose on your valuable columns.

Yours for the final consummation of all things spoken of by the prophets,

REVELATION.

Divine revelation is the mind and will of God made manifest unto man through the working of the Holy Spirit. Job gives us to understand this when he wrote: "But there is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Lord giveth them understanding."—Job 32: 8.

Man, then, has the privilege of receiving knowledge from the Lord if he will place himself in condition to receive it. This condition is portrayed in the language of Jesus when he said: "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes."—Matthew 11: 25.

The condition, then, is that we become babes, and the changing process is set forth in the following words: "Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 18: 3.

Peter gave some light along this line on the day of Pentecost when he said: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."—Acts 2: 38. The Holy Ghost, then, is the inspiration spoken of by Job. It will enlighten our minds and open our understanding, as it is written: "Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak, and he will show you things to come."—John 16:3.

Would not that be a revelation to us, and could we not rejoice and testify as did Peter, "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God"? Without this knowledge coming to us from God we can not say Jesus is the Christ, for we would not know, although we might believe ever so sincerely. Paul tells us that, in one of his letters where it reads: "Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed; and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost."—1 Corinthians 12:3.

So we find that it is an impossibility to know the Father and the Son without placing in operation the principle known as revelation; and for further evidence let us notice the following words of the Savior: "All things are delivered unto me of my Father: and no man knoweth the Son but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him."—Matthew 11:27.

The spirit of man understands the things of man, and the Spirit of God understands the things of God. For us to understand the things of God we must partake of that Spirit of God, which is the Holy Ghost. Having this we have the means of receiving the testimony of Jesus. And if we have the testimony of Jesus we have that knowledge which Christ has said is "life eternal." (John 17:3.)

Do we not need this necessary knowledge? Surely we do; for as we take a view of the religious world what do we see? Strife and confusion. They have said that revelation is no longer needed, and that the Bible is all-sufficient. God has never said that the written word was all that was necessary, but he has said: "For precept must be upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little."—Isaiah 28:10.

At all events we must admit that God will fulfill the promises found recorded in the Bible; and if such is the case there will be revelation wherever there is a person willing to place himself in a condition to receive it. If we can not receive more light than is found in the written word, we can never know of a surety whether we are in the straight and narrow way or not. This knowledge of being right is promised by the Savior wherein it is written: "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself."—John 7:16, 17.

Will you apply the test? The apostle Paul realized the advantage of this higher light and at one time wrote concerning it: "That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him."—Ephesians 1:17.

All who abide the conditions stated are in a position to receive revelation unto themselves that they might know for themselves and not be driven about with every wind of doctrine.

However, there are those whom God has chosen to be special instruments in his hands that he might communicate his will unto the body (church) of Christ in a general or specific way. They are known as prophets and revelators. (See 1 Corinthians 12:2-8.) Among those of the past were Moses, the prophet, and John the Revelator. They did not assume this responsibility, but were chosen by the voice of the Spirit or personally by the Lord Jesus Christ. The instance of Paul's calling gives a very comprehensive idea of a calling of God: "As they administered unto the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them."—Acts 13:2.

And again it is written, "God hath set in the church," showing that it is God who chooses men to be his ministers and not merely a desire and purpose on their part. From the fact that God set them in the church we naturally conclude that there has been some communication between God and man, and this is revelation—the will of God made known by the Spirit.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, April 27, 1905.

Dear Readers of the Column: We are now in the midst of packing boxes and trunks for home. The missionary house already begins to look bleak and lonesome, and we are looking forward with fond anticipation to a few days of rest, then of seeing the dear, familiar faces of home Saints and children. I feel this evening that the few days' rest on the passage will be more appreciated than anything I can think of. But how thankful we should be for the favors and blessings that are ours to enjoy.

Another hurricane has swept these islands, leaving destruction of property in its train; and the loss of a few lives also. There was no tidal wave, but the sea was driven over several islands, and partly over others. Arutua and Apataki suffered the most so far as we have heard, only one house left in Arutua—that of Tapu. The little town of Apataki is obliterated; all that remains there is three dwelling-houses; thirty were destroyed. The Catholics' new stone and plaster chapel on an elevated site suffered the same fate as did the more humble edifice belonging to the Saints, and on a low ground; several boats in that harbor were destroyed also. The Hitinui was broken up at Ahe. The Teavaroa, owned by the same man, was driven on the low reef of Kaukura between the pass into the lake and the motu, Moturaa. When she struck they hastily cut away the spars, which lightened her so that she was borne far enough on the reef so as not to break in two and fall back into the sea; she is considered to be too badly damaged for further service. The Victor, another schooner owned by Mapuhi also, which was on her way to the windward islands, went on the reef near the pass at Takaroa and went to the bottom with a full load of provisions and dry-goods and all on board were drowned except three sailors. One of those drowned was a Mr. Harris, who is well known to our former missionaries, and now the once rich Mapuhi has not a vessel afloat.

The sea came in at Tiputa and several houses were destroyed.

At Avatoru there was a large trading-boat or sloop at anchor in the pass having a part load of provisions and bufa; every effort was made to save her, but to no avail; boat and cargo was carried out to sea to perish in the waves. Tikahau also suffered some damage and loss of buildings, also a boat belonging to the Catholic community left there about the time of the storm for Papeete, bringing a load of bufa, and has never been heard from. The island of Tahiti shared in the general ruin. At Hitia sixteen houses were destroyed and several at Tautira, both by wind and sea. Papeete being in a sheltered nook only suffered the loss of trees, and some difficulty with the shipping in the harbor. The monarch tree of Taronā was badly broken down but not uprooted. A large shade-tree at our back gate was laid flat across the road; others were both blown down and broken off.

I have always expected a hurricane or tidal wave here, and wondered if I would be good and brave, or frightened; for though one may feel a steadfast assurance when all is fair, one does not know how it would be in the presence of a hurricane. But I was not put to the test, for I slept through it all,—the roaring of the wind and rain, the shaking of the house, banging of doors and window-shutters that were prone to fly open despite Joseph's efforts to make them secure. But I knew nothing of it till morning. Perhaps the good Lord saw that I had nerve strain enough with the demands of each day, and kindly let a deep sleep rest upon me.

It seems indeed that the destroyer has gone out upon these once peaceful waters. About a month before the storm the schooner Huahine went on the reef at Apataki with a full load of provisions and dry-goods, and in a few minutes all was gone except the crew and the clothes they stood in. In the calm that preceded the storm the schooner Tapioi drifted ashore at Toau and when the storm came she was driven farther on and broken up.

We hear that Raroia has had a flood by rain that descended eight days without ceasing, so also in the Marquesas Islands. But the Lord shields those who put their trust in him. William related in the Sunday afternoon testimony-meeting during conference, how they of Kaukura were saved. The vessel, Teiti, that was going to bring them (about one hundred) to conference arrived in due time off the island, and was ready to take them on board, but for some reason they felt unwilling to go; perhaps it was because there were a few of the brethren still at the other side of the lake; so they called a meeting for the purpose of prayer to ask the Lord if they were to go on board that night. While at prayer one of the sisters had a vision in which she saw that they should send for the brethren across the lake before they went on board. They did so, and by that time the storm was so apparent that the captain put out to sea where there would be no danger of being driven onto any of the islands; and by the vessel being light and unencumbered he out-rode the storm; where if the people had all been on board they would probably have perished. About the time that they were ready to leave Kaukura, Tapu, with others, arrived there from their desolate island of Arutua for food, for there was none on the island; and seeing an opportunity to come to conference he came right along, letting the boat go back to Arutua without him. Bro. Hawkins was in Arutua and therefore did not get to conference. The Saints of Anaa were to have come on the Tapioi, but she was wrecked and there was no other opportunity. The height of the storm occurred at Tahiti on the night of the 22d of March, yet it blew heavily for three days.

The Saints are hovering about us manifesting their sorrow because of our near departure. Scarcely any one comes in (especially if it is for help for some sick one) without saying, "What will we do when you two are gone?"

Some time ago Joseph thought it best to remain in the mission until another missionary came, but since the way was made clear he concluded it was best to return to America at once, for these reasons: a successor that would be appointed at conference would not probably get to the islands before June or July, then there would be no good to him in our staying to meet him unless we stayed a month longer, which would be an expense that the Saints could ill afford to bear, together with paying our way home; and another very important reason was to get in the cool climate before the summer months were spent, seeing that we have been in the warm weather so long the change would be much felt by me at least, and our going will give the Saints an opportunity to gather up a little and so receive the new missionaries better.

Later, on board the Mariposa: We have crossed the equator for the eighth time in the South Sea Island Mission work, including Australia; are now moving on into cooler air, and have had time to read up our last mail.

I have written at times of having much to do with the sick ones in the islands. Those statements with what is found facing Joseph's name in the elders' reports might lead some to think that he did not administer; that little mark was intended to lay lengthwise, but some way it got itself on its feet and poses as the figure one; but if it had two round 0's on the far side of it it would not give the correct number.

The parting with the Saints was more sad and tearful this time than on former occasions, for then they were fully assured that we would soon be back, but this time we all accepted as a final parting. The last Sunday with them was not the regular sacrament-Sunday, but they made the change of one Sunday so that we might partake together before we left. All the Saints from Tiona were at Taronā that day, and some stayed till we left the next Saturday, others went home and returned again on Thursday and remained till we left; quite a number from Makatea did not go home to their island after conference, but remained to see us off. May the Lord bless them all, help them to do right, keep the commandments of God, and thus have an entrance into his kingdom.

EMMA BURTON.

P. S.—Arrived yesterday, the 19th, all well. A pleasant trip; a little rough on the coast, but nothing unusual. Am deeply grateful to be in our native land again after so long an exile; yet an experience that is worth the having.

Notice.

It may interest the friends of the Daughters of Zion, as well as the members of the organization, to know that the advisory board contemplates issuing the monthly readings hereafter in leaflet form. Special notice of terms and arrangements will be given soon.

"I really believe," says "The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table," "some people save their bright thoughts as being too precious for conversation. What do you think an admiring friend said the other day to one that was talking good things,—good enough to print? 'Why,' said he, 'you are wasting merchantable literature, a cash article, at the rate, as nearly as I can tell, of fifty dollars an hour!' The talker took him to the window and asked him to look out and tell what he saw.

"'Nothing but a very dusty street,' he said, 'and a man driving a sprinkling machine through it.'

"'Why don't you tell the man he is wasting that water? What would be the state of the highways of life, if we did not drive our thought-sprinklers through them with the valves open, sometimes?'"

Home.

"Home"; it is a beauteous word,
By it our better thoughts are stirred
And memory's sweetest echoes heard;
Our own "Sweet Home."

Once did our infant eyes soft rove,
Nor ask if tower or thatch above
So long beneath dwelt one we love
'Twould be our own "Sweet Home."

In childhood's realms and youth's full flower,
The first free flush of manhood's power,
Or the gloom and chill despairing hour
'Tis still our own "Sweet Home."

'Tis there that mother reigns a queen
The father's kingly wisdom seen
With Love o'er all—a silver sheen;
God bless our own "Sweet Home."

Where precept kind and soft rebuke
Has schooled our tender years to look
For all that's best in voice or book
That part was learned at "Home."

Now in the westward flight of years,
Fast leaving the traveled vale of tears,
Still shelt'ring round the silver hairs,
Safe harbor still—our "Home."

"Home,"—one more thought! The years have flown,
Dear ones have passed—I stand alone—
List'ning to sweeter voices—and I go on—
To another, sweeter "Home."

EARNEST WEBBEE.

A Backward Look.

Could we recall the years that have gone,
Changing to good the evil we've done,
Our hearts would be glad as the birds that sing,
With the joy that comes with the coming of spring.

But once and once only we pass this way,
The good and evil must live for aye;
The words we have spoken, the deeds we have done,
Have passed with the passing of days that are gone.

But a glorious future is waiting us still,
In which we may yet accomplish his will
By being and doing our best each day,
Though never again shall we pass this way.

—Catharine F. Little, in New Century Teachers' Monthly.

About Children's Day.

A superintendent asks several questions about children's day. Among the more important ones are: "When is children's day? What kind of a program should we have and how long should it last? What is the aim of the day?" There is no set day for "children's day." But the majority of schools have it some time in June. There is no reason for this except that it is a very fine time of the year to hold a meeting either out doors or otherwise.

The program should be appropriate to the day, the Sabbath, and also appropriate to the theme of the day, the children. What we mean by this is that it should be either for or by the children. All the work should center upon one theme and that a love for Christ, for the Sunday-school, and for our parents, teachers, friends, and neighbors. Make it something to interest children and encourage them to be one of the class, the school, or one of those who are kind and good at all times. There are many children's day programs published by the various publishing houses that give a very nice idea of what a children's day program should consist. The International people make it a "decision day" for the children, a day upon which they try to get all who have not before done so, to confess Christ. And while we do not exactly indorse the way in which they do a portion of their work, we do think the idea of there being a time at which we should try to induce the child to want to enter the church is a good one. Often there are children who really want to be baptized but are very timid or are afraid to mention it to any one. They need a little kind encouragement and persuasion. And there is no better time than on children's day to bring this matter up. If there are one or more children to be baptized, make it a part of the day's work and refer the matter to the branch officers to attend to.

Just "how long it should last" is a question to be decided by those in charge. Schools must be governed by their circumstances. We have seen a very nice day about as follows: Half past nine in the forenoon, regular session of Sunday-school; At a quarter to eleven, exercises of intermediate and primaries with music by all; at half past two in the afternoon, baptism and confirmation-meeting following, including an address to the children by a minister; eight o'clock in the evening, exercises of the young people's classes. This was all right for that school but it would not do for some other school, perhaps. Plan your day to suit your conditions and possibilities.

The "aim" of the children's day program is to benefit the children and increase the attendance at the school, both of which it is sure to do. Whatever gives the children a diversion, something in which they figure prominently, and directs their thoughts in right lines; whatever makes a time and place for them to enjoy and to love to go to; whatever draws them together under the hallowed influences of the church and the Sunday-school and away from the wickedness and temptations of the world is to be sought for and found even though it costs us both labor and money. Children and young folks, yes, and older ones too, must have something to occupy their minds and occupy them in an attractive and pleasing way. And if the home and the Sunday-school and church do not supply these necessary things, they will seek them in the world and will find them there. Here lies one of the strong points in favor of a special day exercise for the school. We have many children who have no amusement whatever except what the Sunday-school provides that they do not get in the wicked world. Shall we not do something for such ones? To provide a nice program for the children is one of the many things we can and should do for our little ones and our youth.

Work.

A part of the gospel of every Sunday-school worker should be the gospel of work. It is only hard, unremunerative toil that is a curse to man; work in itself is a blessing. Many suffer for the want of it, just as machinery often rusts out instead of wearing out. "It is not the revolution that destroys the machinery, but the friction," says Beecher.

How much good in the world at large might be done with only a little willing work on the part of each! Mr. Moody once said that "three G's would accomplish anything—Grace, Grit, and Greenbacks." Real devotion to one's work in a Christian spirit and with God's help—that is grace. We all know well enough what grit it. And the greenbacks are necessary because we need to invest money in God's work as well as in any ordinary business; but one who has little of these last to give may give what is fully as valuable in the shape of Christian service. Governor Hoard of Wisconsin once said, when urging a convention of dairymen to take more pains with their business: "I know you will say to me that that means a good deal of work, but I am here to tell you how to exchange hard work for hard cash." If we could realize that we could by hard work exchange our efforts for results just as substantial in the advancement of God's kingdom, who would begrudge working a little harder to bring it about?

BUT WORK IS NOT ONLY A BLESSING

in what it accomplishes in direct results: it has a profound reflex influence for good upon the worker himself. There is an exhilaration about energetic work like that of rapid motion in the swift yacht or the automobile. It is the lazy man who finds time hanging heavily on his hands. "The rest of the laboring man is sweet." There is no satisfaction greater than that of the faithful, persevering Sunday-school teacher who begins to see his efforts tell toward the achievement of the success he desires. It is like that of the athlete who rests on his oars after the race is won. It is also true that nothing could be more wholesome for the Sunday-school teacher than hard work. Perhaps more men die for lack of exercise than for lack of food. To be a healthy Christian one must be an active and useful one. A missionary to the Indians was once asked what kind of a man was needed to convert the full-blooded Indians. He replied that they needed a full-blooded Christian. And exercise is as necessary to produce a full-blooded Christian as it is to produce a vigorous athlete.

The spirit of work also leads to harmony. One who is earnest in doing good will have little disposition and less time to criticise his fellow workers. A working church or Sunday-school will not be troubled with quarrels.

Finally, heaven itself will mean further service. Let us not think of it as a place where there is only singing and playing on harps of gold. "His servants serve him day and night." We only conjecture what that service will be, but the picture of heaven suggestive by the Scripture would be incompetent without that phrase.

In view of these considerations, should not the Christian worker glory in his privilege as such, and resolve to make more of his opportunities than he has ever done before? Let us emulate the spirit of the poet, who says:

"I ask no heaven till earth be thine,
No glory crown while work of mine
Remaineth here.
When earth shall shine among the stars,
Her sin wiped out, her captives free,
Her voice a music unto thee,
For crown new work give thou to me.
Lord, here am I."

DAVIDSON, Oklahoma, May 20, 1905.

Editors Herald: I returned home from General Conference feeling I had been greatly benefited by attending same. On arriving at home I began at once to make preparation to enter my field, the Indian Territory. In a few days I received word that I had been transferred to Southwestern Oklahoma to labor with Bro. Renfro. I came to this place on the 12th, just two days after the storm swept this part of the country, carrying destruction in its wake. Snyder, a town of about one thousand population, just twenty-nine miles north of here, was blown away, over one hundred people being killed. I came through there on my way here, but as it was after night I did not see any of the wreckage. Have been preaching as opportunity has afforded since coming here. If Saints living within a radius of fifty or seventy-five miles desire preaching and can get a place for preaching, we would be pleased to hear from them, and give assistance along this line. Address B. F. Renfro, or E. L. Henson, Davidson, Oklahoma, R. F. D. No. 2. We want to spread the work as much as possible.

I would say to the Saints of Northeastern Texas, after having labored there for nearly four years, that I regret to discontinue our association, it having been of the very pleasantest kind; yet I believe the change will be good for the work in that country. I thank you for all the assistance you have given me in the gospel work. Hoping you will sustain him who shall serve you this year with your faith, prayers, and offerings, and praying for the welfare of the work, I am,

Yours in bonds,

E. L. HENSON.

FULTON, Kentucky, May 8, 1905.

Editors Herald: I wish to offer a few remarks, written in the way of inquiry. Some of my dear, sensitive brothers and sisters became more or less chilled or irritated because of a letter of February 12 (wrongly dated January 12) in which I gave my honest opinion in answer to the questions asked by Bro. E. Rannie in regard to the decline in baptisms during the last seven years. These were my honest sentiments at the time, and are yet to the full extent. I am as one who expressed himself in the Book of Mormon on this line: "My soul delighteth in plainness." When I entered into the church five years ago last August, I was anxious to do all that the Lord required of me, and I considered that the paying of tithing was an important duty, and also free-will offering was a duty, some less important, but one that should be performed. So at the time, my few effects all included, were considered to be worth five hundred and eighty-eight dollars by Bro. D. W. Cook, M. M. Turpen, and myself. So I began to pay my tithing so far as I could, it seemed, and my free-will offerings also. I even denied myself of real necessities in order to pay money as fast as possible to assist in carrying the glad tidings before the world. I wanted everybody, that had not heard such "good news," to hear it if they would. So I paid up to September last one hundred and ten dollars tithing, I think, and a little over fifteen dollars free-will offering. Will a single one of my critics count money with me, according to the circumstances with us both, I mean expenses for the gospel's sake? If you have not tried it as I have, now deny yourself of necessities for a while to pay your most important debt, and then open your eyes, and use a little "plain judgment," and see how the thing will look to you to see your "offering" going to help feed and clothe and perhaps pay for a few luxuries for fellows you might know (if you would not be so much like a young robin) were simply out for an easy time as much as for the souls of men if not more. I judge by the rule given: "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."

But to the point. My main reason for writing was to make inquiry as to some things. I can not see the beauty of the equality that is among the people of this church,—at least I do not see it, but I may if any one will put the true light on the revelations in the Book of Covenants. Section 38, paragraph 8, "And now I give unto the church in these parts, a commandment, that certain men among them shall be appointed . . . and they shall look to the poor and the needy, and administer to their relief, that they shall not suffer."

Section 42, paragraph 8, "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold thou wilt remember the poor, . . . and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me, and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors. (Not by donation if you please.)"

Section 44, paragraph 3, "Behold, I say unto you, that ye must visit the poor and the needy, and administer to their relief." Section 51, paragraph 2, "And let that which belongs to this people be appointed unto this people; and the money which is left unto this people, let there be an agent appointed . . . to take the money, to provide food and raiment, according to the wants of this people. And let every man deal honestly, and be alike among this people, and receive alike, that ye may be one, even as I have commanded you." Now here I wish to ask some questions. I know a sister in the church, a widow with two children four or five years old, who is required to live and pay house rent with what work she can do, on the allowance of five dollars per month, out of the moneys of "this people." Then I know of other sisters who are allowed more than three times that sum to live upon with only one child much younger. Why should a missionary's wife be allowed so much more than the poor widow, out of the moneys of "this people" who should "receive alike"?

Again in section 52, paragraph 9, Christ said, "And remember in all things, the poor and the needy, the sick and the afflicted, for he that doeth not these things is not my disciple." Section 82: "Verily thus saith the Lord, in addition to the laws of the church concerning women and children, those who belong to the church, who have lost their husbands or fathers . . . if they are not found transgressors they shall have fellowship in the church; . . . widows and orphans shall be provided for, as also the poor."

Does fellowship mean equality? Will those who have the Book of Covenants read section 101 carefully, and notice especially the decree of the "Great I Am" in the latter part of paragraph 2, and see if it is not high time to be about this part of our duty? "Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment." "Behold, I say unto you, Were it not for the transgressions of my people, . . . they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom."—Doctrine and Covenants 102:2.

Can we expect it under the present rule of equality in the light of these Scriptures? I remain an inquirer and lover of justice, according to our works. May the Lord influence his people and bless us all. J. W. WILLIAMS.

What Is Truth.

It is the word of God made manifest to man, sent down from heaven to instruct fallen man. Truth is eternal and can never die, for "Truth crushed to earth will rise again."

Is not this the written truth of God: "They were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance"? The Holy Ghost is truth. Truth crushed to earth will rise again, and in the end will crush false creeds. Truth is as eternal as God himself, and as unchangeable. To say that the Holy Ghost ceased at the death of the apostles is to say that a part of God is dead. This would be error. Truth never dies.

Man is but one of the representatives of God on earth, and is authorized not to evade, but to present the truth. Truth has been crushed to earth for hundreds of years; but now is made manifest to his saints in these latter days. God's word can not return unto him void. The word of God can never die; it is truth made manifest, and can not return unto him void.

Men, for filthy lucre, have sought to destroy the truth; but truth crushed to earth will rise again, and will lift the gospel above the heads of those who perverted its sacred principles.

While many thousands are branding the Latter Day Saints with the word "Mormon," "polygamy," and the cry of "delusion," I am glad to say that truth will heal the grievous wound inflicted by false teachers. In the days of Christ and the apostles the same human cry was raised against the words of truth. Christ was called a deceiver. Paul was whipped five times as a deceiver. Peter was crucified with his head down.

Joseph Smith was imprisoned and shot with four bullets for teaching the same original gospel. Was it for crimes that he had committed? No, not that; but for preaching the truth.

But darkness will be banished far away, and truth crushed to earth time after time will rise again, and will never return unto God void.

ELDON, Iowa.

CENTRAL CITY, Illinois, May 20, 1905.

Dear Herald: I am yet in the faith. I enjoy reading the letters in the HERALD and Ensign. I was truly glad to see Bro. Spurlock's letter in the Ensign; I love to hear from the Saints, and to read their testimonies, also the letters of the ministry who are preaching the gospel to the world.

I was glad to read the letter that one of our brethren wrote on the tobacco question. It makes my heart very sad to know of any one making use of the filthy weed, for I was once a user of tobacco myself. I realize that God helped me to overcome the habit and he will help others to do the same. In God's word you will find, Doctrine and Covenants, page 229, that tobacco is not good for the body neither for the belly, and is not good for man.

We have no branch here, myself and about ten more being all the Saints who live here. I am anxiously waiting for the time to come when the gospel will be preached at this place, for I realize there is a great deal of good to be done here.

I am poor in the Spirit, and I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may hold out faithful till the end and save others as well as myself.

Your brother in Christ,

L. L. GOTT.

FULTON, Iowa, May 11, 1905.

Editors Herald: Our district conference will convene here the last Saturday and Sunday of this month. All who come by train to Maquoketa will be met till Friday noon. Please do not stay at the depot, but come to Cave's store. You need not walk out, for we will see that you are conveyed.

Last Sunday we witnessed the Baptist preacher from Maquoketa, Reverend Chandler, baptize six young people in the Maquoketa River. The first two he baptized with their backs down the river, raising them against the stream. The second one got away from him altogether. He, the preacher, stumbling, fell on his back, the girl foundering partly on him. He made three grabs for her; I made toward them to help, but stepped back, thinking best not to interfere. It was the most disgusting act I ever saw. There must have been three hundred people to witness the ceremony. When praying he asked the Lord to let nothing mar the solemnity of the occasion; his God did not answer him his request. Some laughed. Some cried, thinking the girl would drown. The preacher had rubber boots on and water-proof pants, making him helpless, apparently.

Our Branch is not gaining as we would like it to, but we are keeping up our Sunday-school and prayer-meetings, and Sunday preaching-services and sacrament-meetings. It seems hard to hold our own or gain some, but we will toil on, praying, trusting, hoping that sometime all will be well, and that the plaudit will be, Well done. Satan is not idle here either, and sometimes uses those for his purpose who should be helpers in his church. But there will be five wise and five foolish virgins. May we be of the wise virgins.

Your brother,

JOHN HEIDE.

SAN BERNARDINO, California, May 10, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have been comforted many times by reading the letters from brothers and sisters. I have been a member of this church for nearly forty years. Instead of regretting it, I rejoice in it. I have passed through great trials and hardships, sometimes, I thought, more than I could bear. But God in his goodness held me up and kept me from falling. Now in my declining years I have peace, sweet peace and comfort, for which I lift my heart daily in thanksgiving and praise to my heavenly Father.

I have been a widow seventeen years, have raised six children, all in the church but one, though they are not as punctual to duty to God as I would like them to be. My health has been failing for the past year, but I have not given up my work in the church and Sunday-school. As long as God gives me strength I will work for him, for I love him and his people.

I ask an interest in your prayers for my children, that they may take a lively interest in the work and make good use of the time given to them; and for myself that I may hold out faithful to the end, and be an instrument in God's hands in saving some.

Your sister in the faith,

M. A. MATHEWS.

POND CREEK, Oklahoma, May 14, 1905.

Editors Herald: I write to inform you that I have had a talk with preacher G. W. Bird. He brought the book, From Palmyra to Independence, back and I gave him his book, Mormonism Exposed, by G. B. Hancock. He asked me what I thought of the book. I told him there were some good thoughts in the book, as they believed as we did in some things; but the book was founded on a wrong premise, inferring that the gospel was perfected in the days of Christ and his apostles and he had ceased to reveal himself to man only through the written word; and that all coming after that time claiming revelation were of Satan. Is not that what Jesus said they would say? "If they have called the Master of the house Beelzebub, how much more they of his household?"

He asked me to read Galatians 1:1-9 inclusive. I read, "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." I read tenth verse, also eleventh and twelfth. "But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." I said, "There, he did not receive it of man, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ. Do you not see that without revelation man can not intelligently represent God? That scripture does not mean that God never would reveal himself to man, after that, in another age, but there was only one plan of salvation, one gospel, 'no other name under heaven' whereby we can be saved, except the name of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." I told him that Daniel, John the Revelator, and many others foretold an apostasy, also ancient historians; that the church was in the wilderness twelve hundred and sixty years. John the Revelator says, "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come," etc. I asked, If it were already upon the earth what would be? I told him that book by G. B. Hancock was full of misrepresentations of our people.

I said, "You people think you have the truth; so do we. Now suppose we debate the subject here. I will have a man to represent us, whenever you people are ready. We will have both sides put before the people in love and kindness, and see who has the truth, taking the Bible as standard of evidence." But I did not approve of them taking advantage of us by wording a proposition like the one debated with G. B. Hancock. I told him I thought it fair to both sides to debate on equal terms, each affirm they are the church of Christ as set up by divine authority over eighteen hundred years ago, or something like that, as agreed upon by the parties taking part.

He owned he was prejudiced. I said, "Of course when a person has lived so long in a belief of the traditions of the past, it is pretty hard to see; but the Lord does not require a blind obedience. We are commanded to 'search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life and they are they which testify of me.'"

Will some proper person write to G. W. Bird, Pond Creek, Oklahoma, and have the matter arranged soon? I think the summer or fall is the best time to hold a debate for then we can have a better audience. The people are very much afraid of the cold winds in this country in winter. I have given literature to so many who are delicate. Hoping I have not done anything hastily or displeasing to those in authority, as I understand there is a standing challenge wherever the faith of the Saints is misrepresented, and evilly spoken against, I therefore take this opportunity of apprising the authorities of the facts as they stand in this little corner of God's heritage.

Mr. Bird said he would want a man sanctioned by the church. I said, "Certainly; we never send out any other kind, and we will want your man to be sanctioned by your church." He said he would find the man.

Your sister in hope of the gospel,

MRS. EFFIE J. MCCULLOUGH.

STANBERRY, Missouri, May 22, 1905.

Editors Herald: As we are remitting for the HERALD, we thought we would pen a few lines to your columns. We can not get along without you, as you are an important factor in dispensing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God. We have just received the minutes of the last General Conference, which contain a great deal of food for thought. The Saints of this place, though few in number, are trying to keep the camp-fire blazing. We have Sunday-school every Sunday, and sacrament-meeting once a month; and we wish to be numbered with those who are "holding forth the word of life" in the midst of a "crooked and perverse nation." The Lord has blessed us many times in the past, and especially in restoring our baby to health, for which we feel we can not be thankful enough. May the Giver of all good bless his covenant children everywhere is the prayer of your brother and sister.

MR. AND MRS. JAS. SCHOFIELD.

CHANUTE, Kansas, May 23, 1905.

Editors Herald: I left home on the twenty-ninth day of April; stopped at Ft. Scott where we have a little branch under the care of Bro. J. T. Higdon, who has done a noble work there, keeping the little flock together. I preached for them four times; had good crowds and good interest. I then went to Oak Grove Schoolhouse, in Neosho County, and held over Sunday; baptized two. The people were busy farming, so we went on to Shaw, where our noble brother, T. R. Berger, had obtained the use of the Christian church to preach in. We held forth from the 11th to 21st with good crowds from start to finish, and baptized seven, all adults but one; others said they would be baptized soon. The Lord was with us in power. Much prejudice was removed. I bade them good-by with the promise to return soon.

Am holding meetings here in Bro. Cochran's house with good interest. Bro. D. E. Tucker held a series of meetings here a few weeks ago, while visiting Bro. Cochran. He started the fire, and we are trying to keep it going. Both Saints and non-members have helped us financially.

I feel well in the work and hope to make this the best year's work I have yet done.

LEE QUICK.

COFFEYVILLE, Kansas, May 22, 1905.

Editors Herald: As we have not seen any letters from this part of the country for some time, we will try to write a line or two. Some may have gotten the idea that the Angola Branch is dead (spiritually) but it is not. To be sure we have not a large number of Saints here, but it is not always the large number that counts. For some time our branch has been progressing rather slowly but we are now beginning to realize more fully the necessity of walking more closely in the paths of righteousness.

Our Sunday-school is taking new life and energy. We account the success of Sunday-school due to our Religio work, as in it the young are encouraged to take part, thus developing their different talents; in fact the Religio is our training-school for the young. As the workers in the church here are nearly all young in the work, we would like all to remember the Angola Branch in your prayers. Another sister, Mrs. Wilbert Hart, was added to our number, May 14, 1905. A few of our members are a little careless in attending our different meetings, but we have hopes of them attending more regularly in the future.

Our Religio society sessions prove to be very interesting under the supervision of Bro. Wilbert Hart.

We held a discussion on the question, "Which is to be commended, belief that requires evidence or belief that asks no evidence," a while back, which proved to be very interesting. Both sides thought they won. This week we will debate on the question, "Resolved that the love of money has caused more harm than the love of drink." As we all try to bring out all the light we can on the different sides in our debates, we find them interesting and instructive.

ELMER R. HART.

SAN FRANCISCO, California, May 23, 1905.

Editors Herald As all matters pertaining to the church and government were quietly settled, and the church entirely free, our conference over, and the way seemed prepared before us, we left Papeete for this place on the 6th of May, arriving on the 18th, both fairly well, and were received very kindly by the Saints from both sides of the bay.

I have no doubt that the protest, presented to the authorities at Washington by the Presidency and Bishop, wrought this change in the mind of the authorities in the colonies, who stated to us that hereafter we should enjoy perfect religious liberty, but—they will still regulate the natives in all matters of political economy; which means that when they consider it best to keep the natives from leaving their islands to attend conference they will stop them, and if they think it will be to their interest not to meet in church capacity they will stop them; however, it is probable that if the brethren of the different branches act wisely there will not be any further trouble, at least until a new governor is sent there.

Since the great storm in Hikueru of January, 1903, there have been several gales of wind which have caused a great deal of loss of property; but not many lives were lost, as in the storm in Hikueru; in Arutua the brethren were preparing to come to conference but the winds and waves stopped them and every house on the island was destroyed excepting Tapu's, the missionaries' home while there, as Brn. Peterson, Gilbert, and others know. All the boats were destroyed except one, which was carried so far inland that it was thus saved. The cocconut-trees were all stripped of their fruit (even the young buds were destroyed) and their leaves twisted and broken off; it probably will take two years for them to recover. Two boats from Manihi were overtaken at sea by the storm and made the island of Arutua, and ran their boats ashore there; and, watching the waves, they carried their boats across the shallow water into the lake and were thus saved. The sea rose about ten or twelve feet. Four persons were drowned there, but none of them were members of the church. At Apaki all the houses of the village were destroyed excepting three, also several boats, but no lives were lost on that island.

Mapuhi, the native trader, has lost all his vessels and only has the two boats. The Teavaroa, the Victor, and the Hitinui were lost in the gale of March, and as the upper islands where he did his principle trading have suffered the most severely by the storms and high waters, he is on the verge of bankruptcy. Although there are many of the Tuamotu people indebted to him, yet those persons have no cocoanuts, and the pearl-shells are valueless, and the copra and shell being their only means of support they can not help him; and we also may lose some if he fails.

We had a pleasant passage home, and will stay a few weeks more before going south to meet the children and children's children.

Peace be with all the Israel of God.

JOSEPH F. BURTON.

ONAWA, Iowa, May 23, 1905.

Editors Herald: Bro. Oscar Case, from Moorehead, came over Sunday and organized a little Sunday-school here and we have hopes that it will be prosperous. We are not very many in number but we will try to make up in zeal and ambition. We ask an interest in your prayers that we may prove faithful and humble in whatever capacity we are asked to serve the Lord.

Yours in the gospel bonds,

MRS. G. W. LINDSEY.

FAIRBANK, Iowa, May 9, 1905.

Editors Herald: Some of the elders of this district have been preaching at the Oran Center Schoolhouse last fall and winter, among whom were Elders O. Case, Warren Turner, and J. Rulon. Elder Rulon is the president of Oran Center Branch. (We would have been glad if Elder Case would have been sent back to Eastern Iowa again.) Also Bro. R. Smith, priest, president of Waterloo Branch, talked to us several times.

Our priest, H. D. Miller, has been making calls on some of the members with the result that a few have been attending more regularly than before. But there are others who seldom attend meetings, and some others have not been to meeting for several years. Through the efforts of the officers of the branch some misunderstandings have been adjusted and some wanderers have returned.

Our Sunday-school is doing fairly well but not quite as well as last summer. There is a fair attendance, but there is room for improvement. I like the articles in the HERALD concerning Sunday-school also Home Column and—well I like the whole paper with few exceptions. I think the HERALD is full of good instruction.

Your brother,

J. G. HODGES.

MONONGAHELA CITY, Pennsylvania, May 11, 1905.

Dear Herald: I am weak when it comes to doing my Master's will. Where we live there are only a few Saints, about six in all, and our nearest church is sixteen miles away; but we have our little home Sunday-school, and meet as often as we can; for the Father has said, Where a few come together in his name there he will be in the midst. Our prayer is that we will soon have a little branch in this city, and I know the Lord and Master will answer our prayer in his own due time. I have been in this faith only a little more than a year; but I rejoice and feel to thank the Lord that an elder came this way and gave us a chance to hear the true gospel. My husband, daughter, and myself gladly accepted, and I think we have much to be thankful for.

A week before I was baptized I dreamed that I was sick and dying. The door of the room in which I lay was open, and my brother and sisters, and families, came to see me, but would not come into the room where I lay; they would only peep in. At last I said, "You all know that I am dying, and not one of you will come near me." When I had said that my only brother came into the room, but the rest would not. This dream was partly fulfilled just two weeks ago when they all joined the Methodist Church except my brother. I pray the Lord will open his eyes and understanding that he may accept the one true faith which leads to life eternal. I ask the prayers of all the Saints that the Lord may bless me with better health and keep me ever faithful.

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. MAY LAMER.

WATERLOO, Iowa, May 18, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have watched with keen interest the doings of our late General Conference, and especially as to how the college business would come out, though I did not have any fears but what Graceland would be safe at anchor, notwithstanding those little gusts of wind we heard blowing before conference came off. To my mind, this is one of God's ways of telling the Saints that he wants them to be progressive, for if we are going to hold our own we will have to be progressive in every possible line. For no longer does a millwright hew out a water-wheel centreshaft from a log, to make a water-wheel forty or sixty feet in diameter. Oh, no, we make high speed turbines from eight inches to two feet in diameter, with a maximum power at the expense of a minimum amount of water used, and they are eight or ten times more powerful than the old, large diameter wheel. Nor do we make locomotives like George Stephenson and his competitors used to make, with a speed of ten miles an hour, pulling one open coach, — and he was laughed at by the members of the British Parliament when he told them he might attain a speed of twelve or fifteen miles an hour. No, we make locomotives with a speed of eighty miles an hour, pulling fourteen coaches, and fitted up with airbrakes, air bell-ringers, and air-blast sanding apparatuses, etc.

And I notice in some of our church papers, that some writers are coming out in a very progressive manner along other lines. The articles I refer to are, "Society as it is, and as it will be," in the Autumn Leaves, and that article on "Alma eight and eight," also in Autumn Leaves. Also the letter from Bro. Shackow in North Dakota, in the HERALD of May 10.

These articles are true to life, as the saying is; not a bit overdrawn, and they are decidedly socialistic in their tone; but then the Socialist doctrine is founded on the second commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," though it is like the Book of Esther: there is neither God nor Lord mentioned in it; but, like Queen Esther, men need to be reminded that they have poorer brethren and sisters who have a claim on them for protection and support.

But some men, and I may say even some calling themselves Saints, seem to think that they can utterly ignore the second commandment when they are in the polling booth, and vote for some good (?) philanthropic (?) man who has grown rich by working the workers, and oppressing the poor, by holding back their unpaid-for labor-profits. United States government statistics show that capitalists get thirteen dollars to the laborer's two dollars, and I have figured up some of the local factories here, so I know that this is the exact proportion.

It seems as though the more covetous a man is, the more he is honored; and I do not know where the idea originated, to call such men long-headed, (?) brainy (?) fellows. If we look at this great (?) nation, what is the picture that presents itself — it is the picture of a sovereign people supplicating their hired men. Beautiful, is it not?

I might go on and show up the arrogance and perfidy of the idea of ignoring the second commandment, but let it suffice to say, that if men would only sweep down a few cobwebs and allow other men to obey the second commandment, it would not be a very hard matter to get them to obey the first.

Your brother in Christ,
ROBERT SMITH,
Box 292, WATERLOO, Iowa.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. J. D. Erwin was busy at Coalgate, Indian Territory, May 23. He wrote: "I am in my field busily preaching to good crowds. Great demand everywhere for preaching in these parts. Let us work and pray until the Master comes."

Bro. J. T. Davis writes from Piedmont, Missouri: "Since writing you before, from Naylor, Missouri, I have baptized five more at the same place: one elder of the Christian Church, two deacons, and a clerk from the Free Will Baptist Church, also a sister from the Christian Church. Am here with the tent with fair prospects for a hearing."

Pastoral.

To the Ministry and Saints of Nebraska and Those Parts of North and South Dakota West and South of the Missouri River; Greeting: Having been placed in charge of this field I take this means of getting into communication with all who would like to have ministerial labor performed in their vicinity. I would like to hear from any one who has friends or relatives in this field who would like to have our ministry call upon and talk gospel to them. It is our purpose to push the work as much as possible throughout the field; and to accomplish the most possible good we ask for the assistance of the local ministry, as much as they can give us. There are but few missionaries for so large a field and I assure you all the aid we can get from any helper in the gospel will be appreciated by us and you will receive reward from the Giver of all good for the effort put forth. Let each member see to it that his or her life is a continual invitation to others to accept the grand and glorious gospel we have received.

My permanent address will be Dow City, Iowa. Do not hesitate to write to me if you want any information concerning the work in this field; and be sure you give me what information you can about the needs of the work in your vicinity.

Reports should all be sent on the first day of July, October, January, and March.

Praying God's blessing upon his work and workers I remain,
Your brother and colaborer,
DAVID M. RUDD.

To the Ministry and Saints in Wisconsin; Greeting: Since it has pleased our minister in charge, Elder J. W. Wight, to place me in charge of the State for the year, I wish to say to the ministry and Saints that it is my desire to keep in such close touch with the work in our field that we may labor in unison and harmony for the advancement of the work, consequently I wish each one of the ministerial force, whether laboring under conference appointment, or in a local capacity, to feel perfectly free to communicate with me at any and all times relative to the needs of the work in their several localities and offer such suggestions as to the demands of the work as they may see it.

So much has already been said about reporting promptly at the close of each quarter that it seems needless to say more, but I have found by past experience that reminders along this line are sometimes necessary.

My post-office address is Plano, Illinois, Lock Box 555, and mail sent to this address will reach me in due time. The date for the Northern District conference is June 10 and 11, at Twin Lakes, Chippewa County, and we hope to see a goodly number present at that time. I would suggest to those who are scattered in the State and are isolated from branches and desire to have preaching in their neighborhoods, that they do what they can in the way of securing an opening for a place to preach in and in providing a way for the missionary to reach them and communicate the same to me and we will do all we can for them.

We hope to reach each branch in the State this summer and do all we can to assist you, and invite your cooperation to this end.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
PLANO, Illinois, May 22, 1905. CHAS. H. BURR.

You will address all communications to me at 2500 Logan Avenue, Des Moines, Iowa, that call for immediate attention.

"THOU THAT JUDGEST DOEST THE SAME THINGS."

Bro. John Zahnd, of English, Indiana, sends the following clipping from the Cincinnati Times-Star, and says: "It seems to me that there is as much along this line to condemn in other large churches as there is in the Utah church." Certainly no church organization is justified in condemning the Utah church for doing that which they themselves also practice; for in so doing they make applicable to them the statement of the apostle Paul: "For wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest doest the same things."—Romans 2: 1.

POLITICAL MORMONISM IN OHIO.

The Presbyterian Assembly at Winona Lake did well in sounding a note of warning against the plan of the Mormon church to elect more Mormons, as members of that religious organization, to the United States Senate. But the principle of noninterference of church organizations as such in political matters is a universal, and not a general one. It can not be made to apply to any one particular church organization.

The action of the Mormon church in bringing about the election of officials who will vote on political matters as the leaders of the church organization will direct is most reprehensible; but it can not be made more reprehensible than similar action on the part of any other church organization, whether it be Jewish, Catholic, Methodist, Baptist, or even Presbyterian itself. A belief in the falsity of the religious teachings of another church organization can not justify one in pursuing a course of conduct that he would deny to another.

The Mormon church is totally and absolutely wrong in its attempt, as a religious organization, to dictate the political actions of its members. Too strong language can not be used in condemning such a course, and the Presbyterian Assembly is right in denouncing it.

But when one turns to Ohio and sees the tactics of Mormonism being used by several of the religious organizations, even to the extent, as one church paper has done, of threatening to invoke the discipline of the church against any member who dares to vote in opposition to the declared policy of the leaders, one may well pause.

It may be consistent with the policy of some of the church organizations to do as the Mormon church has done—attempt to dictate the candidates of political parties and to cast as a unit the votes of the male members of their organizations; it may be consistent with their view of the teachings of Christ; but it is not consistent to practice in Ohio what is denounced as heinous in Utah.

Ohio tolerates political Mormonism neither in Ohio nor in Utah. It stands opposed to any attempt of any religious organization to dictate, as a religious organization, how its members shall cast their ballots. An end must be brought to the attempt to install political Mormonism in Ohio, to use the church organizations in a political propaganda.

HYPNOTISM IN REVIVALS.

Frederick Morgan Davenport, professor of sociology in Hamilton College, is out in a book synopsising LeBon's psychology of the mob, of revival methods, and the influences making them possible and effective. He writes:

It is a grave error to think that you can touch the sensibilities alone and have any appreciable effect upon the conscience and character. You must touch the intellect as well, and primarily. There is a necessary crudeness about religious groups that are built up by the emotional revival method unless there follows a most careful and intelligent training in true piety in order to establish what the revival movement can not give, an equilibrium of character. Emotional devoutness leads easily to fanaticism. Holiness experts and professors of entire sanctification are notoriously hard to get along with. They are the real spiritual defectives and not their fellow members of the church, at whom they often rail accusingly. This moral egotism is always a product of moral passion, uncontrolled by common sense and reason. The emotional revival fosters it.

The type who yield impulsively in a revival are they in whom the higher cerebral processes are imperfectly organized. Impulsive self-surrender is injurious to a wholesome and normal religious experience. It was not cultivated by the head master of Christianity. "If any man will do my will," said Christ, "he shall know the doctrine." It was this method which gave spiritual birth and nurture to Abraham Lincoln in the darkest hours of the Civil War. Any other but turns the world of religion and politics alike over to the rule of the subconscious and the passional.

HOPE FOR THE CZAR.

There is reason to believe that the Czar of Russia is becoming cognizant of the advanced opinions of the nations around him with regard to the governmental policies pursued by the Russian ruling powers. The following speaks well for Emperor Nicholas, and will indicate that he is being led by more humane impulses than have obtained hitherto, and may finally attain unto conditions of saner policy in the government of his wide domain. It is a welcome sign of good, looking towards the bettering of governmental policies, not only for Poland, but for Finland, and Russia itself.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 17.—There is little room for skepticism as to the genuineness of the broad policy of imperial reform after the remarkable steps sanctioned by Emperor Nicholas in the imperial rescript issued yesterday modifying the restrictive decrees in nine of the western governments of Russia and giving the Poles greater freedom for acquiring farming lands and purchasing land and giving permission to introduce the Polish and Lithuanian languages in the primary and secondary schools where the majority of the inhabitants are non-Russian.

Almost at one sweep the whole burden of the vexatious restrictive laws in Poland and the Baltic provinces have been removed and the privileges for which the natives have been fighting for years are restored, the assemblies of the Polish nobles are reestablished, and all the harsh administrative measures introduced at the time of the policy of reaction and Russification are abolished.

In effect the measures sanctioned amount to an entire reversal of Russian policy in ancient Poland and the Baltic provinces.

In Poland, by confining the land-holding to persons of Polish extraction strictly by inheritance by descent and not even by testament, it was designed to force the Poles either to become orthodox Russians or drive them into Poland proper. The hardships thus entailed were innumerable. The property of deceased Poles was sold to Russians by forced sale and at ridiculous prices.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Am I right?—Mrs. Stowell.

Yes, as to the question you ask. There is no necessity for a letter chain asking the Saints individually to pray for the missionaries. This is the burden of over fifty thousand prayers every week, most of them every day at the family altars.

CONTROVERSY IN "HERALD."

Does it ever occur to those who rate the HERALD because of the occasional controversy that gets into its columns, that such fault-finding is itself a controversy and calls for and justifies a reply to each article of the objections?

We do not write this to protest against the sending to us of such objections, but to remind those who write against controversy that they are themselves controversialists, and are adding to the bulk of the contentions; for they give reasons why they object, which reasons may not appear to be good to others who favor open discussion upon topics of interest to all. So it goes; what is one man's mental meat, is, or may be another man's mental poison. There is in this as in other questions of difference a golden mean; can we attain to it?

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The Bay City, Michigan, Times, of May 20, 1905, in its correspondence columns has the following from Rose City, the place where Reverend Clark Braden is roasting the "Mormons." The attitude of the Rose City correspondent seems to agree with the estimate of the situation stated in Bro. S. W. L. Scott's letter:

"ROSE CITY, May 20.—Reverend Clark Braden, of Grand Valley, Ontario, lectured here Thursday night on "Mormonism," giving a detailed and vivid history of that church and addressing some fiery remarks to Latter Day Saints present, calling them polecats, skunks, sneaks, and cowards. Among those so addressed were Reverend Burt, Cornish, Grant, Smith, and a number of other reputable citizens. Mr. Braden came here ostensibly to debate with a representative of the Latter Day Saints denomination, but no effort was made to meet them and agree upon propositions, but instead Mr. Braden lectured to an opera-house full of people at ten cents a head. He objected to Elder Cornish occupying the rostrum after the audience had been dismissed, to read propositions which had been prepared for debate, but Mayor Rose, who was chairman, accorded Mr. Cornish that privilege. Excitement runs high and the people who were led to believe there would be a debate are not well satisfied with the turn matters have taken. The Saints object to the door fee and say they will not submit to an admission fee if the debate is held. Reverend Stilwell, the Methodist Episcopal pastor, who got Mr. Braden to come here, had to give a guarantee of fifty dollars and takes this plan to raise the money."

Elder Clark Braden was at Rose City, Michigan, May 22, 1905, at his old policy, trying by a peculiar species of trickery to prejudice the people against the church, by lecturing, and challenging before debate. Brn. J. J. Cornish, E. A. Goodwin, O. J. Wheeler and S. W. L. Scott are on the ground of dispute and will look after the matter.

The question is sometimes asked, If an individual throws discredit upon the cause of Christ by evil conduct or misrepresentation, and thereby prevents some honest-hearted person from accepting the truth, which one merits the punishment, the first or the second? The answer usually is, The first, of course. It would seem that both would be under condemnation. The first must answer for evil conduct and misrepresentation, and possibly to some extent for the failure of the second to receive. But that would not relieve the second, entirely, from answering for his failure to accept the way of truth, even though it might be evilly spoken of. No matter how much the first may be punished for deceiving the second, that could not bring to the second the position he might have attained through obedience. Number one may be punished for actions that have prevented number two from entering the kingdom of God; but that will not place number two in the kingdom, consequently he must suffer loss. Obedience brings reward. Failure, for any cause, does not. Hence we should not allow the actions of others to deter us from right-doing.

Reverend T. H. Koepsel, pastor of the Iliff Methodist Episcopal Church at Salt Lake City, Utah, lately resigned his charge there. In announcing his intention of leaving the Methodist Episcopal ministry and the church he did so in rather bitter terms, according to the press reports.

"He denounces the Methodist creed and certain churchmen in bitter terms. He stated that the Presbyterian Church was his first preference and the Congregational his second. He had not decided which church he would enter. However, he announced it as his determination to remain in the ministry the remainder of his life whatever religion he might embrace.

"In explanation of his action Mr. Koepsel states that he has found Methodism to be a despotism, that he considers it not Christian or biblical. In plain words, he declares the Episcopate to be a machine that hampers true Christian work. His sermon explains his position in the matter. His text was from John 8:36: 'So, then, if the Son set you free you will be free without doubt.'" He said:

"The government of the Methodist Church is unbiblical; that it is unchristian when compared with the church of the New Testament. Methodist Episcopalianism is absolutely despotic. There was no superiority in the church of Christ. There were no popes, bishops, or petty despots called presiding elders to block the member in his growth or retard him in his usefulness. During the lives of the apostles there was no such thing as the Episcopal government as we know it. The Episcopal form of rule was a heathen invention. With all of its polish, modern phraseology, and apparent democracy the Methodist Episcopal government has been turned into a fiercer despotism than could possibly obtain even in the Roman Catholic Church.'"

We would not question the motive of the promoters of the letter chain idea for any laudable purpose, but we wonder if they ever considered seriously the enormous outlay in postage consequent upon the carrying out of their plan. For instance, a person may write five letters to as many persons requesting each to write five letters in turn. His expense would be ten cents for postage. The five to whom he wrote would expend fifty cents; the hundred and twenty-five to whom they wrote would expend two dollars and fifty cents. The six hundred and twenty-five to whom they wrote would expend twelve dollars and fifty cents, and so on until by the time the tenth series of letters was sent out, if it should reach that far, each member of the church would pay postage on two hundred and forty-four letters, and the aggregate expense would be over two hundred and forty-four thousand dollars. This if put in the hands of the Bishopric would pay the church debt three times, pay the college debt and running expenses for a year, and care for the missionaries' families for a year.

The Presbyterian Assembly of good ecclesiastics, by a very respectable majority refused to change or alter the Westminster Creed, as asked for by Reverend Carter. So what he called the "monster god" is still in their confession of faith.

WORK FOR EVERY ONE.

A new conference year has now been entered upon; the missionaries are already turned toward the old and new fields of labor, and the indications are that the centennial year of the founder of the church will be an active and busy one.

But would it not be sad should we, amidst this earnest toil and bustle of these zealous children of faith, find some one who has nothing to do? Nothing to do! although every other hand and heart is fully alive to the importance of accomplishing the work the body has entered upon, and is to be found striving to imitate the busy, useful life of our Leader who said, "I must work the works of him that sent me, while I am with you."—John 9:4, Inspired Translation. Now is the time for us to perform our work; if we procrastinate it will be too late.

To accomplish the year's task there should be an earnest and united effort at once. It will not do to postpone to a later time in the year anything that can be done now. Each should eagerly seek an opportunity to help, not wait for one; each should take a place among the pushers, not be found among the loiterers.

It would be terribly discouraging to a tithe-payer to observe a missionary sitting idly at home or in his field of labor, waiting day after day for somebody to find him a congregation to preach to, or some one to whom to tell the gospel message. Jesus would find an audience upon "the highway," "at the seaside," "in the synagogue," or "by the well"; busy everywhere; and shall it be said that he is represented by an elder who is content to sit down and wait for an opportunity? The direction is, "Behold, I say unto you, that it is my will that you should go forth and not tarry, neither be idle, but labor with your mights."—Doctrine and Covenants 75:1.

What applies to the preacher in the discharge of duty in the illustration will fit well every other member in the body. The Lord would not assign work to be done if it were not essential that it should be performed; and the performance does not rest with the missionary alone. The divine message is, "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119:8. "For we are laborers together with God; ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building."—1 Corinthians 3:9. And again: "The idler shall be had in remembrance before the Lord."—Doctrine and Covenants 68:4. It must not be forgotten that this holding the idler in remembrance is to his condemnation, not his approval. Having been granted such a precious privilege of laboring and sacrificing with our divine Lord in the building up and establishing of his church, shall it be said that we have in the least failed of duty?

THE TIME FOR WORK.

The close of the annual conference in April is the beginning of another year's effort to carry forward the gospel proclamation and to more firmly establish the cause of Zion. The missionary departs, necessary expenses must be met, families are to be aided, the poor properly cared for, the missionary furnished with books and tracts with which to sow and cultivate the great gospel field, and lands purchased to maintain the work of building. Burdens must at once be shouldered and borne. It will not do then for any of us to postpone any part of the work that we can now perform. By all entering upon their respective duties at the beginning of the year, the burden will be easily sustained, means saved to the church and much more and better work accomplished. The best thought of all, however, is in the fact that each in his work and position will stand approved before the Lord. Upon this question of time for work, Jesus declared: "It is that servant who watcheth, to impart his portion of meat in due season. Blessed is that servant whom his Lord shall find, when he cometh, so doing."—Luke 12:51, 52, Inspired Translation. To impart "in due season" is not to await our own time and pleasure, but to perform the work when the necessity exists. It is to be done in the Lord's time. To stand in a justifiable position this should be our first and best work. Do not make the accumulation of the things of this world more prominent, or place them before the performance of the duty which we owe to the Lord's work. Let his work be first, and then it is right and proper to gather and apply to other purposes.

"Wherefore, seek not the things of this world; but seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matthew 6:33, Ibid.

Before preparing for our own selves then, let us follow the example set by the Master, and make his work first of all. He did not hesitate in labor, or to make sacrifice for us, and shall we shrink from fealty to him and his cause in the earth?

PROPER MOTIVE OR OBJECT IN WORK.

"And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing."—1 Corinthians 13:3. To fill the object of the law of Christ there is required a whole-souled and unselfish service on the part of the worker. Not have it in our hearts simply to perform our respective parts that we may get advantage of, or discredit some one else, neither perform a task with reserve or hesitatingly;

but as argued by the apostle: "Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity; for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver."—2 Corinthians 9: 7.

To be entitled to the peace and blessing of God we should show forth in our hearts a proper object, being desirous of glorifying his name and indicating "a readiness both to will and to do," without regard to the question of whether or not it will in any way return to advance our personal or private interests or schemes.

With proper motives to advance the interests of the Lord's work no thought of building up one church or locality at the expense of some other part of the church will be tolerated for a moment by the Saints. The church's work is one; its interests one; and its triumphs or defeats materially affect in some degree every member in the body. We must not be content to witness any part of the work come to naught, nor a single member suffer, without putting forth a proper effort to render relief.

The stability and security of the "stakes of Zion" are under the law made as certain as that of Zion itself, and any effort on our part to disparage or weaken the work or welfare of one of these places must eventually result in injury to the entire body. The stakes are planted not with the idea of removal, if the membership belonging thereto shall perform their full duties and sanctify and make hallowed these places; but to continue to the benefit and deliverance of the people; to stand as places of renown and sure refuge in times of trouble and distress:

"It is ordained that in Zion, and in her stakes, and in Jerusalem, those places which I have appointed for refuge, shall be the places for your baptisms for your dead."—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 11. Also, "I have other places which I will appoint unto them, and they shall be called stakes, for the curtains, or the strength of Zion."—Ibid. 98: 4.

The fact should not be overlooked that the stakes are "for the curtains, or the strength of Zion," and that any move on the part of the church, which would have the effect of destroying its stakes, would be fatal to the interests of Zion itself. In the early history of the church, the Lord warned the Saints against abandoning the stake in the East; counseled them against hurriedly gathering to Independence or any other place. But the people were selfish, fearful of losing an opportunity of bettering their conditions commercially, held too lightly the commandments of God touching Zion and her welfare, and rushed inadvisedly forward, abandoning the work in the East already well planted, only to bring swift disaster to the new planting in the Central West, the character and conditions of which to the Saints generally, were in great part misunderstood and misinterpreted. The following direction, so suggestive in its character, was almost wholly disregarded: "They that are appointed by the Holy Spirit to go up unto Zion, and they who are privileged to go up unto Zion."—Ibid. 72: 5. The gathering must not be "in haste" nor "by flight." Whatever is done, the stakes which give strength and security to the interests of Zion must not fail.

It is natural on the part of the world to publish sensational things about moving from one place and building up another. Men of the world wish to create a property boom for their own personal gain or make their news columns exciting to the over-anxious reader. But Saints should never drink into this spirit of using the work committed for religious and divine purposes to secular and personal ends. To do so is to impede the work, not to aid it. That idea may suit Satan, but can not suit the Lord; hence the readiness of the world to clamor after such things.

Notwithstanding the many press notices and diverse speculations as to the removal of the Herald Publishing House, headquarters, college, Saints' Home, or any of the work fixed in the Lamoni Stake to the Independence Stake, the Saints should remain unmoved and undisturbed in spirit or hope. The Lord's planting is not moved about in that way; he does not plant stakes in the wilderness, but directs a tabernacle; his ways are one, and "whatsoever he doeth, it shall be for ever."

Should the necessities of the work require the President of the church, or the Bishop, or any general church officer to remove to the Independence Stake, it would not affect or necessitate a change of headquarters or the seat of the First Presidency; nor would it necessarily create a boom for Independence as a result. Should any such change at any time be made, it is more likely to be in the interest of calming the waters of the place than their agitation; to hold in check wild schemes and misguided theories, not to launch such upon the world. Let the Saints, then, be warned against becoming too enthusiastic over, or taking part in agitations that shall interfere with the firm planting of the work of God, east or west, north or south; for thereby we serve ourselves instead of the work of Christ.

GIVE A RIGHTEOUS JUDGMENT OF MATTERS.

It must not be thought that in dealing with the church that a failure to act upon right lines will be overlooked when we shall render a final account. A missionary who enters upon his work and endeavors to keep just sufficiently active so as not to come under the censure of the appointing officers will hardly receive the approval, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." The excuse may be offered that others are not doing their best; but this in no way can excuse us. Others must answer for their manner of work; we for ours; and the Lord says to those who have accepted such a high and responsible calling: "Let no man think that he shall not render an account unto me." The prime thought with each of us should ever be, "How much can I do?"; not, "How little may I do to find acceptance."

The same general principle applies to every other member in the body as it does to the missionary. No one should find himself puzzling over the question, "What is the least I can do now to help the work and yet keep the law?" The inquiry is from a wrong standpoint and will lead to an unrighteous judgment. It feeds the spirit of covetousness and selfishness. The proper position is for each to look carefully over what he has, and ask himself, "How much of this can I give to the Lord's work?" "He did all he could for me; I want to do all I can for him." A brother or sister who will canvass duty in such a spirit as this, will give a righteous judgment, and such judgment, "will be meted unto them again."

For an elder to sit down and canvass over the matter of an allowance for his family with the idea in mind to see how much he can get from the church would be to move upon wrong lines. The proper inquiry on his part is, "How little can I do with and my family get along in a proper way?" Occasionally now it is noticeable that in arranging the allowance, the elder has in mind the thought, "How much can I get and not be shut out." A few years ago such a spirit was never recognized. It ought never to be found now: neither find room in the heart.

Neither the law, nor the rules of the church, recognizes salaries or pays for services rendered in gospel work. The fact of giving to the minister when he travels is based upon his necessities for such aid, and should he receive more than is sufficient to meet these necessities he is to turn it over to the church to assist others. The allowance is given to the family to meet necessities in the absence of help from the husband and father on the same principle, and such necessities should be rendered to a worthy family if the chief member for its support was not in the missionary field, but on a bed of sickness, or the mother a widow. The question of salary or pay is eliminated when the question of supplies is considered. But the law which requires that every one shall be furnished "according to his needs and his wants inasmuch as his wants are just," does apply. The church does not undertake to supply the elder's family sufficiently so the family may get along without an effort on its part. This would spoil a family instead of doing good to it. Every one must perform his part. Not an idler, nor a truant can be commended. Upon each and all of these matters let us be just and render a worthy and righteous judgment.

SUSTAIN THE TRACT FUND.

Nothing is found to be more useful to the missionary's work in interesting the people in the gospel message and educating them in the principles of truth than a proper supply of tracts. For the past two years the church has made efforts to supply every worker of whatever place or nation where any demand was made with means of help. Thousands and millions of tracts are sent out at the cost of publishing and postage. In 1901 at Independence we were instructed:

"It is the duty of the church to provide tracts in the Scandinavian, German, Chinese, Japanese, and Portuguese languages, and others, as the missions may require; these tracts to be written by those in the ministry and those of the brothers who are not of the ministry who have a talent for writing, and to be submitted to the Presidency before being published. They should be short, clearly stated, and a sufficient number should be printed to furnish the traveling ministry with the quantities desirable for them to distribute."—Doctrine and Covenants 125: 11.

With this divine instruction, and the numerous testimonies of the laborers of the great assistance of these tracts, there ought not to be found a gathering of the Latter Day Saints anywhere in the world, that does not make an earnest effort to supply this tract fund; and yet, the past year the offerings to sustain the tract fund amounted to less than one fourth of what it cost to print and send out tracts. Let us have a few thousand dollars for the tract fund; it is greatly needed.

NECESSITY OF CONSECRATIONS.

The giving of the tithe, the making of an offering, are acts of commendation so general among all classes of people now, that the activity of the Saints in these matters is not greatly in advance of a few other religious bodies. But, however general this may have become, it is the more gratifying because without doubt this is a part of the law of Christ, and the more general its observance the more certain is the Master in this, honored by the people. But this is not all of his law upon the subject. This part serves a proper and holy purpose and should be faithfully fulfilled; but the surplus consecration has the same divine sanction and it has equal claims in purpose and holy results in its administration.

The surplus is whatever a person has that he can do without and yet fulfill all proper obligations to his family and creditors and maintain his proper business. The question at once arises, "If a person has something over and above what is necessary to him to carry out these conditions, why should he hesitate to turn it over as surplus into the Lord's storehouse to assist those who are destitute and who do not have a proper stewardship by which they may make for themselves and families a proper home and living?"

The law says: "All children have claim upon their parents for their maintenance until they are of age; and after that, they have claim upon the church; or, in other words, upon the Lord's storehouse, if their parents have not wherewith to give them inheritances. And the storehouse shall be kept by the consecrations of the church, that widows and orphans shall be provided for, as also the poor. Amen."—Doctrine and Covenants 82: 2.

It is right and proper for persons to provide for their own; but it is not right to selfishly provide for our own and have no care or consideration for others. God, it seems, has provided a remedy by which to rebuke the unholy spirit of greed and selfishness that might obtain among his people. To obtain the blessing we must apply his remedy. Men have failed too often to improvise a proper one. Why not accept divine direction in this as in other things?

"He who is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much; and he who is unjust in the least, is also unjust in much. If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches?"—Luke 16: 10, 11.

Parents provide for their children under the law if they are able to do so. If they can not do so then the Lord has provided a means by which they are to have a stewardship and an inheritance. This provision is made by the gathering and saving of the surplus to be spared by the people. Under this view, are there any who would not be willing to sacrifice something, if necessary, so that he might place something of a surplus into the storehouse and thereby aid in helping others to a proper stewardship as well as those of their own households?

It must not be forgotten that this life brings about many and sudden changes in the conditions of the people. We may be in good circumstances this month; but next, penniless. A parent may provide well for his sons or daughters this year; but next, through the misfortunes of life, these same children may be in want, and they in turn compelled to look to the church for help and for a proper stewardship and inheritance. Would it not be humiliating to a parent to know that he had in providing for his own children done so without a thought as to the welfare of any one else, and had wholly neglected to turn his surplus into the treasury as the law provides, and that afterwards his own children through some cause, had been compelled to look to the treasury for help? The picture will be a common one in our experiences where duty is not performed. On the other hand, how grandly satisfied would a parent be who in such case could point his destitute child to the Lord's treasury and say, "We have been unfortunate and possibly foolish, but in my helpfulness I placed in the Lord's storehouse help for the needy, and now we may with gratitude to God who arranged this, receive of that which is our own." Can we afford to fail to look after a full and hearty compliance with this part of the law?

It is a worthy insurance; a wise provision for the good of all; a righteous and just law leading to equality; Christ's holy order. No one should hesitate to become a worker under this for the Master, and for the benefit of Zion and her children.

It may be said that the required compliance of the law is a great one. So it is. But our claims are great; the cause in which we have enlisted is great; the object and hope of the work are the greatest and best revealed to the world. For us "to look back" shows an unworthiness to be partakers of the life the Lord has prepared. It will not suffice for us to simply make a profession of entering upon the warfare. We should perform fully and faithfully the work, or abandon our claims. Surely there is "work for every one."

E. L. KELLEY.

LAMONI, IOWA, May 25, 1905.

TWO ASSEMBLIES.

One among the last injunctions Christ imposed upon his disciples ran thus: "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high."—Luke 24: 49.

To the lover of righteousness and the student of God's word, the fact is made apparent that God's revealments are reflective of his purposes; and forasmuch as man is a creature of time, his religious growth has its incipient stages, made visible proportionate to his diligence in conforming to those revealments.

I am not a linguist, but in view of the fact that God's word is explanatory of his doctrine and man's duties, I risk the observation that the thing said, is the thing meant; for were it otherwise the claim that the word of God was a sure guide were invalid, or so I think.

Then, too, I think that the revelation of God's saving method was a necessity subsequent to man's fall with a view to his salvation; therefore the acceptance of this saving method is a preventive to the recognition of any system in antagonism to God's given methods of salvation.

In a general way Christ's divinity is conceded, which I think tantamount to a concession that Christ was a perfect teacher. For, as I take it, nothing would be more effective, in intensifying the confusion of modern Babylon, than assuming the right to revise or evade any part of God's given method of salvation, under any method of human origin.

The Bible student can hardly overlook the fact of Christ's recognition of two adverse powers, namely, the divine, and the satanic; therefore, so far as the vital question of religion is concerned, as reflected in the everlasting gospel, what is not divine is satanic. And yet, I would not insist that man is inveighed in the meshes of demoralization at one bound, as I would not that he thus aspires or reaches absolute perfection. For the ultimate of any contemplated project has its incipient stages, or preparatory steps. So that, while the possibility of fallen man reaching and enjoying absolute perfection in the ultimate is demonstrated, the goal is not reached by leaps or bounds, but is the result of a steady endurance in a practical observance of righteous deeds as divine law directs, the stimulant being in our earthly warfare a consciousness of receiving from God here and there a little, never losing sight of the fact that the ultimate reward is the result of endurance to the end.

No fact is more conspicuous or essential, in Christ's sermon on the mount, than that found in Matthew 5:6, from which we learn that those thirsting for righteousness are to be filled therewith, which affords a basis for belief that man's first step in the divine life is a practical demonstration to God of a thirst for righteousness, which carries with it the thought, or the necessity, of a corresponding abhorrence of all that is unrighteous. Furthermore, as this practical demonstration of a love for righteousness culminates in acquiring a citizenship in God's kingdom, thus forming a relationship with God and his Christ, this acquiring citizenship is but a beginning, and the perpetuity of this citizenship, being a necessity, is only possible by the manifestation of godly zeal, leading to a practical demonstration of this love that began to burn on the altars of our hearts prompting our induction into the kingdom, intensifying as the years go by, with a corresponding abhorrence of all that is unrighteous, which, as I understand, is only possible by being subject to divine law.

Since my identification with the Reorganization I have been taught that given and accepted law is supreme, which I verily believed superior to individuals and societies. And whether I survive or perish, as I pen these thoughts I have no desire to compromise on this line, but make no boast as to what the morrow may bring forth.

My experience in this world life is not altogether dissimilar to that of other men; but whether I have utilized it as wisely as others have done, I pause not to say, but have thought that what I do, whether for or against God, is done at my own peril; never cherishing the remotest wish that any other one, through my procedure, should suffer. For I have been fully impressed with the thought that salvation is a personal affair, not being altogether unmindful of the fact that God is not mocked, the fact always looming up in my mind in my studious moments: As I sow, so shall I reap; for in God's justice I have implicit confidence, for in him there is no unrighteousness. Hence I do not fear him, save with a filial fear.

In further consideration of this solemn assembly the sequel reflects the following facts: 1. The claim Christ made from the inception to the termination of his work among men of being one with God and the Holy Spirit, is made valid in the interposition of the Holy Spirit in its visitation, by the consent of God and Christ, as a mighty rushing wind. 2. The fact of Peter by the inspiration of that Spirit silencing the slanderer or accuser, claiming that they were drunk with new wine, denying the charge that intoxicants in any way contributed to their reception of the power made visible, seeing it was but the third hour of the day, which affords a basis for belief that the traffic of intoxicants was prohibited until after the third hour of the day. 3. Informing them that the power was attributable to that Spirit spoken of by Joel the prophet. 4. The manifestation of God's power at that time and place was the climax of evidence of the opening up of the gospel dispensation to all nations. 5. The fact of Peter explaining the gospel under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, the only infallible teacher God and Christ had promised to these chosen disciples, serves as proof that they were qualified to raise the blood-stained banner of Christ to the gaze of the nations, inviting them to take shelter under its broad folds, thus showing unto them the pattern of heavenly things.

Having said so much in reference to assembly No. 1, I essay the presentation of a few thoughts on assembly No. 2 in contradistinction to assembly No. 1, for they are widely different, but both have received publicity, and are therefore public property. And both may be examined, and indorsed or rejected, without doing violence to either. For were there no other preventive to one of God's creatures persecuting another, because of his proclivities, a proper conception of manly dignity would be an effective preventive to such ungodly work, or so I believe. For however positive and imperative Christ's teachings may be, they are as free from coercion as the great body of water, designated the sea, is free from malaria. Hence nothing could be more despicable, contemptible, unmanly, or mean, than that savoring of deception or partiality, absolute or despotic rule, under the guise of religion, whether by priest or people. For wrong must be wrong, whether perpetrated by angels or men or devils. Yet, from time immemorial, man has been prone to drift from the God-given moorings, and the end is not yet.

Under the caption of "Popery at Trent," Mosheim writes:

The opening council, at Ghent, A. D. 1545, to the closing session of A. D. 1563. The seventh session respecting the number of sacraments, the number were pretty generally agreed. It was held there were seven. Viz, baptism, confirmation, the eucharist, penance, extreme unction, orders, marriage.

It is needless to state that these seven sacraments constitute that known as Roman Catholicism, hence in the catechism used in that church the question is asked, How many sacraments are there in the church? The answer is given, There are seven. Then follows the seven sacraments as given above.

An extended investigation of Roman claims would supersede the design of this article. It will therefore suffice to note a few differences between the two assemblies.

First, assembly No. 1, met as per command of Christ, for confirmation in the doctrine, which Christ had already taught them, which they in turn were to preach to all the world without addition thereto or detraction therefrom. While as the sequel shows, the council at Trent assembled to legislate and decide on sacraments, which were to constitute that known as Roman Catholicism, the first of these seven sacraments being baptism. And whereas the manner of baptism under Christ and his chosen disciples was immersion for remission of sins, faith and repentance being the prerequisites, Christ's mission given to his disciples, in which the following from Christ appears, "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark 16: 16), serves as proof in itself that belief is essential with repentance as preparatory steps to the act of baptism; therefore as the manner of baptism by the council at Trent was changed, and aspersion or sprinkling was established in lieu thereof, whatever may have been the religious status of this people or church up to A. D. 1545, they placed themselves in a rebellious position to God in their rejection of God's given manner of baptism. For whereas the plan of salvation exists as a whole, by the integral parts enumerated by Paul, faith, repentance, baptisms, laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment, as a perfect method of adoption, therefore the ignoring or repudiating of one of these integral parts deprives those thus repudiating of the benefit of the whole method of adoption, as given of God.

Moreover, the action of the above council is the substitution of a manner of baptism in contradistinction and in lieu of that established by Christ, and intensifies the rebellious act to a considerable extent, and by the God-fearing Bible student can only be received and understood as denying the God who gave and imposed the manner of baptism.

I once read an extract purporting to be from a book written by Cardinal Gibbons of Baltimore, Maryland, entitled The Chapter on Baptism. The learned representative of Rome makes the statement that the ordinance of baptism was administered for twelve hundred and fifty years by immersion. However, exceptions were admitted by very few. That was the teaching of the church—immersion only. Continuing the Cardinal says: "In the year twelve hundred and fifty the Pope of Rome, being the vicegerent of Jesus Christ on earth, and having the power, changed the ordinance from immersion to sprinkling."

Is not that plain enough? Should the Cardinal have been misquoted the fact of the change is made sufficiently manifest,—too much so to admit of a doubt. So that if the act of assembly No. 1 in proclaiming the order of baptism to be immersion and for remission of sins were authoritative, the action of assembly No. 2 in changing the order and substituting a diverse order in lieu thereof was nonauthoritative, therefore rebellion against God, as all similar acts must be, whether obtaining previous or subsequently to the acts of assembly No. 2. For God-given truths never change; therefore, in the event of two parties holding diverse views relative to the vital question of religion, they both possibly may be wrong, but one must be wrong, as Christ is not divided. Moreover, the immunity and rights of a previous law is subverted by a subsequent and contrary law, or so I believe.

Looking back in thought to A. D. 52 it is made to appear that those endued with power had not overlooked the fact of God and Christ promising them the Holy Ghost as a perfect teacher. "So from Acts, chapter 15, we learn of the apostles and elders coming together to consider a matter attributable to some zealous ones teaching circumcision and the law of Moses. This gathering, therefore, was a necessity for an authoritative adjustment; no matter whether James or Peter was president, not a particle. The adjustment was reached as the sequel shows: "For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things." —Acts 15: 28.

It is refreshing indeed, that in their struggles from Pentecost to the above time, A. D. 51, they could so boldly testify having met and adjusted the then trouble in the sight and by the power of the Holy Ghost.

Opportunity offering, the Kirtland Temple endowment will be considered in a future article.

METHODS OF LABOR.

Our field of labor being the world, and the world being large, it follows therefore that there are various kinds of work to be done in order that salvation, individually and collectively, may be obtained. As there is a variety of work to be done in a temporal way in order to secure our temporal welfare, so it is in the spiritual realm. In temporal work we have farming, mining, manufacturing, and so on; in spiritual work we have public preaching, private conversation, distribution of tracts and periodicals, Sunday-school work, Religion, and so on. Thus there is work for all. One thing that is especially characteristic of this age is the great amount of work done in a short time by means of labor-saving machinery. Should not we, as a church, learn a spiritual lesson from this and do much work in a short time in a spiritual way? We believe it to be but a short time till Christ shall come, yet much work is to be done prior to that event. How shall we do it is the question. Evidently it is to be done by using all the means that is placed in our hands to the accomplishment of the desired end. One may say, We may use the means as laid down in the standard books of the church. True! but may we not use other means for which there is no commandment? He that waits for a commandment in all things is a slothful and not a wise servant. (See Doctrine and Covenants.) The printing-press, for instance, may be used in the forwarding of this work; not only that of the church, but state and county newspapers may at times be used to great advantage. One may say, If I undertake to write for the newspaper I neglect other work of more importance. Now this may be true but it need not be. In a few moments one may write an article to a newspaper showing some of the chief differences between the Reorganization and the Mormons, and thus accomplish great good. Such articles should be short and to the point. True, we should not work on one line to the ignoring of others of equal importance, but we need to be "all around" workers, so to speak, and work in every lawful way possible for the speedy accomplishment of the work intrusted to us.

C. J. SPURLOCK.

THAYER, Missouri, May 22, 1905.

[Bro. Spurlock inclosed a short article from a local paper written by himself which we here reproduce, as it shows what may be done in a brief, short article. It will often attract attention and be read when a two or three column article would be passed by. We would be pleased to hear from other missionaries concerning methods of work which they find successful.—Eds.]

"TO THE PUBLIC.

"We would like for the people of Mammoth Springs, and of course elsewhere, to know that we of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints are a different people and church from the Mormon church in Utah.

"Not that we are prejudiced against the Mormon church, or any other as to that, but that the truth in the matter may be known I make the above statement.

"In some things, however, we agree; in fact I believe all churches hold some things in common. We claim that the Utah church as well as others have some truth. What people need is to get what truth there is in all churches combined in one and the error eliminated therefrom, and thus constitute the people of God, or his kingdom on the earth.

"The president of the Mormon church in Utah is Joseph Fielding Smith; the president or presiding officer of the Reorganized Church, with headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa, is Joseph Smith, son of Joseph Smith, hence a cousin to the one in Utah. Joseph Smith of Utah has five wives, according to his testimony in Washington in the Reed Smoot case; the one at Lamoni, Iowa, has but one. We of the Reorganization believe in keeping both the law of God and the law of the land, while the church in Utah have, according to their own confession, failed to keep either.

Respectfully,

"C. J. SPURLOCK."

IS HALF OF OUR SCIENCE WORTHLESS?

That fifty per cent of the results of modern experimental science is good for nothing is, in effect, the statement made by no less an authority than Professor Karl Pearson, of England, author of The Grammar of Science. The data that we have so industriously collected are, he says, partly inaccurate and partly useless.

Not more than half is worth keeping. This statement is elicited by an elaborate proposition by Professor Simon Newcomb, looking toward the systematization of research. Professor Newcomb's scheme was sent by its author for criticism to a number of eminent scientific men, of whom Professor Pearson is one, and their remarks are printed, with an account of the plan, in the third year-book of the Carnegie Institute. Professor Pearson's comment is that we need not so much the organization of investigation as individual investigators with brains. His views are abstracted and commented upon in the New York Evening Post (February 3) as follows:

"We need not so much a method of manipulating present statistics, as a means of getting rid of valueless data altogether. At least fifty per cent of the observations made and the data collected is worthless, and no man, however able, could deduce any result from them at all. In engineer's language, we need to 'scrap' about fifty per cent of the products of nineteenth century science. Doctor Pearson specifies as notoriously inaccurate meteorologic and medical statistics. Biological and sociological observations are ordinarily even of lower value. He doubts whether 'even a small proportion of the biometric data being accumulated in Europe and America could by any amount of ingenuity be made to provide valuable results,' and believes 'that the man capable of making it yield them would be better employed in collecting and reducing his own material.'

"To assume a position of authority over the incompetents would be immensely difficult, he fears. The director of a bureau for research is too likely to find himself 'in an impossible position relative to the mediocre observers whose data he is to manipulate.' In short, Professor Pearson ever comes back to his thesis, that it is difficult and always risky to base any generalization on the data collected by routine observers. Inclined as we are to divide scientists into those who measure and accumulate and those who draw general conclusions from the materials thus gathered, Professor Pearson brings us back sharply to the real dilemma, that no man whose nose is always on the details of observation is a safe fact-gatherer, while no one whose head is too high above such necessary drudgery is a safe generalizer. In his scorn of statistics as they are frequently taken, no one conversant with the facts will find Professor Pearson too severe. In these matters one has to do not only with defective intelligence, but with incredible indolence and fraud. Throughout the country the Government pays thousands of persons to take stated weather observations. How many of these hand in sheer guesses? It was an edifying sight in a small New England town to note the elaborate system of corrections by which the observer, an habitual late riser, ascertained the readings he was supposed to take at six o'clock. But his statistics were doubtless as good as many that pass through the Government printing-office. Short of fraud, this measuring age produces masses of statistics that prove everything or nothing. After the presidential election we were offered a chart of appalling size and exemplary neatness, in which was recorded election by election the vote of every town in the State for a matter of fifty years back. In this way one might study the political fluctuations of New York or of Cobleskill. It is such methods that make Professor Pearson wonder if the fault is not more with bad observers than with tardy theorists, and lead him to offer, in place of Professor Newcomb's more ambitious scheme, a modest plan for a statistical and computing institute.

"This frank confession of a scientist brings a certain comfort to philologists and historians who, imagining modestly that their own subjects had a monopoly in misuse of the statistical method, looked upon the data of the exact sciences with something like superstitious awe. In view, however, of Professor Pearson's avowals, it is evident that a strong human bond exists between him who measures average sentence-length, color words, and the like, and him who tabulates, say, immigration under categories of raciality and red-headedness. The difficulty is, after all, that which Sir Joshua's pupil found with his palette. Statistics as well as colors need to be mixed with brains; and all the organization in the world brings us little nearer that desideratum. Professor Newcomb's circular note has provoked a very interesting discussion; it may result in the establishment of some new and measurably valuable facility for science. A substitute for the great scientist it will scarcely supply, and the great scientist when he comes will be rather little beholden to organized encouragement. Unhappily, Professor Pearson's idea of an institute for the discouragement of unintelligent research seems even more of a dream than Professor Newcomb's clearing-house and directorate for experimental science."—Literary Digest, February 25, 1905.

THE SEEDLESS APPLE.

[There seems to be two sides to the seedless apple story, but from the following it seems that it would not be wise to cut down our seeded varieties yet awhile.—EDITORS.]

The newspapers and some of the scientific journals have recently had much to say of the seedless, coreless, and bloomless apple. The horticulturists of authority who conduct the departments of this magazine inform us that so far as any new or revolutionary discovery in apple culture is concerned, these stories "come in handily at a time of the year when the sea-serpent is temporarily out of commission." The current paragraphs tell us how a western horticulturist has originated—some say "created"—a seedless apple. The apple has no core and no blossoms, and, because it has neither blossoms nor seeds, it can not be killed by late spring frosts nor invaded by worms. The stories say further that the originator of this twentieth-century wonder is now at work, expecting to produce seedless Baldwins, Northern Spies, Jonathans, and other similar boons to humanity. The wonder element fades away entirely before the fact that seedless, coreless, and so-called bloomless apples are fairly common, and always have been. Since the recent outbreak of advertising began, there have been several seedless apples reported from different parts of the country, from Virginia to Prince Edward Island. The whole seedless apple question had its last previous turn in this country only fifteen years ago, when it was fully dealt with by Professor L. H. Bailey. As a matter of fact, this curiosity of horticulture was well known to all the old botanists and pomologists. Duhamel's magnificent work on fruit-trees, published in France in 1807 (second edition), had a beautiful colored plate of the fruit and blossoms, with two pages of descriptive text. An earlier picture and description appeared in Bauhin's Historia Plantarum in 1650. Parkinson described it in 1629. And, omitting hundreds of other references to seedless and bloomless apples, the record of Pliny may be quoted, who names the apple "a conditione castrati seminis, quæ spadonia adpellant Belgæ," among those familiarly known to the Romans at the beginning of the Christian era. The facts are, therefore, about as follows: There is such a thing as a genuine seedless apple. Several varieties have been known and recorded from the time of Pliny, at least. They have never been considered of any practical value. The assertion that any one is even on the way to produce a seedless Baldwin or Ben Davis, or other useful and desirable variety, is absolutely denied by those competent to express an opinion.—The Country Calendar, May, 1905.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Dear Sisters: I am a mother and I have been benefited many times by reading the letters from our sisters, so I will write a few of my thoughts. Much has been written against the practice of corporal punishment, yet we can find almost as many parents favoring it as opposing it. I can say for myself that I am very much opposed to it. The time was when I thought that children must be whipped for a great many offenses but I now believe that nine children out of ten can be raised properly without whipping. The Bible says, "Come and let us reason together," and most children can be reasoned with if they have been taught that they are supposed to be reasonable beings. I find I can make a greater impression for good on my little ones by having a real heart to heart talk with them about their faults, and I sometimes ask them if Jesus were here would they do just as they are doing, and of course they answer, "No." Then I tell them it is possible for him to know it just as if he were here to-day. So of course that puts them to thinking. Whipping a child may make him afraid to do the naughty trick again. And if you are sure that only by fear you can train him to be good, then whip him, of course, for it is necessary that he should be taught to obey; but, dear mother, try your reasoning powers on him before you give him up to the lash.

Sometimes parents whip children because they are angry and then it makes them feel better to do so, and sometimes because they threatened them before they thought, (so pray be careful), sometimes because you are too fond of your own pleasure to take time to think whether you might not have a better influence over them in some other way, and sometimes because you are too indolent to attempt a method of exacting obedience that would require more time and trouble. It does not take long to whip a child, but sometimes it takes him years to forget the injustice of it. I have seen mothers laugh when their small boy whipped his stick-horse with all his strength. But would they have laughed had they stopped to think seriously about it? Mothers make a great mistake when they let such opportunities to exert a good influence pass unnoticed, and because of that they are really to be blamed for a part of the cruelty in the world to-day. The necessity of refinement in all dealings with children can not be too strongly insisted on. Teach them personal reserve, a characteristic that can not be too carefully cherished. Never criticize people before a little child. No one can be truly courteous unless he has been taught to have a genuine respect for humanity.

FLORA ADAIR.

The Sunday-School:

The Sunday-school is one of the grandest organizations in existence, yet how many realize its value. Some one may say, "I do not enjoy it because it is a mere form." True, it has a form, but what is there that exists without a form, because order is heaven's first law. And without order, form, and government all would be chaos. Some will say that the children are working for the prizes that are offered; but, dear parents, remember, we are all working for a prize. Do you think we would be earnestly working if we were not offered a crown of eternal life?

Fathers and mothers come with me for just a few moments. Let us take a bird's-eye view of the city. First we pass a boy, aimlessly sauntering along looking for something, he hardly knows what. At last he spies other boys. A crowd of them collect and soon they are playing marbles or some more questionable game, perhaps, which may lead them to quarreling, fighting, and the use of profane language. Where are these boys' fathers and mothers this beautiful Sabbath morning? As we pass on through the streets we see some smoking, some going to the parks, some to theaters and different places of amusements. Where are their fathers and mothers?

Parents, do we ever think that the Sunday-school is as much for us as it is for the children? It seems to be the idea that Sunday-school is for the little folks altogether; but I think that is not true. There is just as much for us to learn as there is for the children. We, as parents and teachers, think that all that is necessary for the Sunday-school is just enough older ones to be there to teach and take care of those children that are sent there. Oh, what a mistake! If I could only express to you in words the beautiful lessons that I have been taught by the children in the Sunday-school! When a teacher or parent feels that they are only going to Sunday-school to teach, they are mistaken. Come before their class and come in contact with the beautiful souls, shining through their little windows, the eyes, and watch them grasp the truths you unfold to them. It can not but help to inspire your soul with the Spirit of God and bring you into closer relationship with your Maker. And as you hear their sweet voices ascending and singing those sweet little songs of praise and thanksgiving, it brings you nearer heaven and makes you think of the words of Jesus when he said, "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

I believe there is one great way of parents helping the Sunday-school, and that is to come with their children. Come and bring your children and help to teach them to respect the house of God. Do not wait too long, but come hand in hand with your children and let them lead you to realms of light and love, because the Savior said, "Except ye . . . become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."

Stop and think, parents, out of all the inhabitants of the earth, how many parents attend Sunday-school; and what is their excuse? Sometimes it is the father that does not care to go, and again it is the mother. Parents, if you would work in unity what excuse would you have? You would have no trouble in getting to Sunday-school. We can sacrifice our work, our health, our money for amusements and worldly pleasures, but do we sacrifice a little sleep or work on the Sabbath morning to take our little ones where we and they will be taught beautiful and everlasting truths? You will never realize what you have lost until you mingle your voices with the little ones. God has intrusted us with the care of these little ones, and oh, how sacred the trust and responsibility placed upon us. Can we afford to neglect this?

How beautiful the words of Hawthorne, "As the pure breath of children revives the lives of aged ones, so is our moral nature revived by their pure and simple thoughts, their native language, their airy mirth, for little cause or none, their grief soon caused and soon allayed."

Many have been the struggles the teachers and officers have made to do their duty and uphold the banner of truth, and many times they would have failed but for the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit shining through his little lambs. Jesus said, "Feed my lambs." Parents, to you we extend an invitation to come to the Sunday-school. Come and help us that your light may shine everlastingly.

"Come learn of the Meek and Lowly,

Come sit at the Master's feet,

No place in the world so holy,

No place in the world so sweet."

The True Purpose of Life.

Life is more than breathing, yet how many seem content with the purely physical! So much work, so much play, so much sleep—this is the program of a mere animal. Life is more than thinking, noble as intellectual pursuits are, for culture is not character. Life is more than dreaming, flitting from flower to flower in a fool's paradise. The best, the noblest thing in life, is to know God, to love God, to serve God. Here is man's destiny, here a field for his noblest endeavors. Only as we know our Father through the Son can we know ourselves. Vain was the ancient sage's advice, "Know thyself"; neither he nor his compeers ever knew themselves. God's life, Christ's life, is the light of men. Few people "know themselves." They think they do. Their mental concept of themselves, however, is quite erroneous. It has been well said that "the true, real self never stands fully revealed to its possessor, for our character is never in sight, as a whole. Full self-diagnosis, as well as prognosis, or seeing what we shall become, are to us alike impossible."

True self-knowledge must be sought by painstaking introspection, and this is the true purpose of life, and from its cultivation spring all the fair flowers of a constantly developing and beautiful life. Because it is a rare attainment even in the elect, we must not shrink from attempting it, learning by discoveries of frequent falls our "real self," and being humbly guided by the estimate of ourselves "as others see us."—Sel.

A Convention Without a Program.

"I see no use of meeting so often. We have nothing to do." This statement was made by a district superintendent in a convention when the question of the time of the next convention was being considered. Some thought they should meet quarterly while others thought they should meet only semiannually, or even at longer intervals. And one of the reasons for favoring the long interval was the quotation above. And without entering upon the question of frequency of conventions, we wish to call attention to a thought suggested by the language quoted.

"We have nothing to do" tells a long and important story. The thought in the mind of the speaker was that a convention was solely for the transaction of the routine business and, possibly, a little entertainment to be given by the children and young people. We find this idea a very prevalent one. Often the convention assembles in the afternoon and transacts a little business and adjourns for an entertainment at night. No program of work, for no work is done. No papers are prepared because none are assigned nor is there any time to use them had they been prepared. No discussions upon subjects interesting to the Sunday-school teacher or officer. No questions asked and answered by others. They have not thought of such a thing. The sum of their ideas is, election of delegates, reading of reports, electing officers, and deciding when to meet again. And with this idea in mind, is it any wonder that they are led to question the advisability of having conventions so often?

We do not wish to underestimate the business of the convention, for it is absolutely necessary to the life of the work.

Without it the association or the school could not live at all. But it is only a "means to an end," and not the object of our work. And the sooner we learn to expedite business in a businesslike way, to economize our time at conventions and use it in a more profitable way, the sooner our conventions will become more interesting and more profitable. Business transacted properly and with dispatch is profitable and the time spent well enough. But time wasted in long drawn out business-sessions is not profitable and should be otherwise used.

But what is that "more profitable way"? Besides the necessary business of the convention there should be all the miscellaneous work that time will admit, as follows: Papers or addresses upon subjects pertinent to the needs of Sunday-school workers; discussion upon these papers or addresses; model classes or reviews; illustrations of blackboard work or object-lessons; Sunday-school newspaper; round table talks or question box; prayer-meeting; model session of Sunday-school, etc. You can not have all this at one convention; of course not. But you can use what will best conserve your purpose. Think what the district wants and needs and endeavor to supply it. Distribute your work to the various schools so as to get representatives from all over the district as far as possible. Enlist new workers by giving them something to do which they can do. Make your convention "of the workers, for the workers, and by the workers." "Get out of the rut onto the smooth road and then travel out."

We know of no better way to illustrate our idea than to give you the exact programs of two district conventions that are before us now. They are programs that will be carried out by the districts for which they were provided ere this reaches the reader. They are in the main just such programs as these districts have been preparing and carrying out three times a year for several years. The programs were not prepared for this article, but for the district convention. In fact, the ones who prepared them will not know that they are used till they see them in print. And what they are doing, why can not others do? If it is true, and we believe it is, that "what man has done man can do," other districts can under similar circumstances do too. And we hope that if you are one of a district that has not been doing work in your conventions that will instruct your teachers and officers, that will fill them with enthusiasm and zeal for the work, that will enlist new workers and fit them for duty, you will study these programs carefully and see if you can not discern in them the practicality and the vein of earnestness that goes through them both. Note, too, that they both begin on Thursday night and continue till Friday night and Saturday morning sessions respectively. Further that they are both joint conventions of the Sunday-school and Religio. The business for both societies is done, as well as other work in both lines. The district conference follows in each case. This has been the custom of both districts for some years and the conventions are always well attended and so, too, are the conferences.

Following are the programs complete except names of individuals:

COALGATE, Indian Territory, May 26, 1905.

Editors Herald: I left home and loved ones the 6th of May for my field. Indeed it is sad to leave wife and children crying and watching for the last glimpse of us. I have labored at Wilburton and Haileyville, and reached this place last Sunday. Held meeting with increased interest all week. Will continue until I see what can be done.

We have a fine little branch here,—some noble young people,—Bro. Yates, a worthy young man, presiding over it. Indeed it is pleasant to meet with those we have associated with in past years and find them still trying to carry on the work to final success. But the Devil has put in some hard blows to destroy the work here in the last twelve months, the result of some unwise actions and schemes to make money. "The love of money is the root of all evil," is just as true as when Paul wrote it. When any man or set of men start out to make a fortune and get rich in the work of God, they are the grandest humbugs and frauds on earth. Yet some Saints are ready to bite at such frauds and tricks to cajole them out of what they have. Not everything that shines is gold, by any means. Not one single Bible precedent to speculate on; the works of Christ let them alone.

A brighter day dawns for the work in Coalgate. A great work no doubt will be done here. A brother warned them at the last district conference of serious trouble ahead. Some found fault with him for it. However, he was hardly out of the town until it came down upon them like a cyclone. But everything will be adjusted and work for the best. Indeed I am having a fine meeting, nonmembers attending better than ever before. I will try to reach every place where meetings are needed during the year in my field. Remember to refer all debates to F. A. Smith, Lamoni, Iowa, and H. O. Smith, Independence, Missouri. My address is 202 South Willis, Independence, Missouri.

Cordially,

J. D. ERWIN.

PLEASANT GROVE, Utah, May 24, 1905.

Editors Herald: As I have promised some of my brethren and friends that I would let them know through your columns where I was, and what I was doing, I take pleasure in saying that I am yet in the faith and striving to hold aloft the banner of King Immanuel, and rally his forces.

Since last writing I have had the pleasure of visiting Salt Lake, Ogden, and Union Fort Branches, accompanied by my better half, who is an efficient helper in gospel work. The Saints at Salt Lake were doing some better than they have in the late past in that they were coming out to the services in greater numbers.

Arriving at Ogden we found our way to the residence of Bro. and Sr. Wells Chase, where the elders always find a hearty welcome.

While there it rained the greater part of the time, yet we were successful in holding four profitable meetings. The Saints there seem to be alive in the work.

Bro. Brokaw and wife are now there and helping to move things in the right direction, and the branch president, Bro. C. W. Hedelius, is a very devout and zealous worker, and it seems that the branch is improving.

Leaving there we returned to Salt Lake City, where we made our abode at the home of Bro. J. D. Wilson for the night. The next day we took the car for Murray, where we were met by our assistant Sunday-school superintendent, William H. Smith, and conveyed to his father's residence where we were kindly received. There at eight o'clock the same evening we met with the Religio, where a mutual feeling prevailed, and a spiritual time was enjoyed.

The Sunday following found us at Bro. and Sr. Wardle's home, where sacrament-service was held. All seemed to enjoy themselves, and a spirit of love and oneness seemed to prevail throughout.

We preached in that vicinity during the week, and on Friday attended Religio which was held at the residence of Bro. James Wardle; there was a large crowd in attendance and after a profitable lesson, an interesting program was rendered.

The feature that is commendable in the Union Fort Religio is that all take their part and try to make a success of it; and they realize that the work depends on the united effort of all.

On Saturday morning Sr. Wardle and her son drove us to the depot and we took the train for this town, where we have attended Sunday services twice.

I expect to return to Salt Lake Valley this week and resume my labors in that part of the field. Continually battling for the right, I remain,

In the faith,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

ROSE CITY, Michigan, May 23, 1905.

Editors Herald: I came to Rose City to engage Mr. Braden in a discussion but as yet no terms are agreed upon. As usual, Mr. Braden paved his way with misleading circulars. Began his lampooning in the Rose Hall. The first evening about two hundred attended, dwindling until last evening, when we learn about twenty-five graced his presence. The majority element are being convinced that the prime object of Mr. Braden is the money. He demanded a guarantee of fifty dollars and expenses, which guarantee the honorable mayor refused. They then adopted the ten-cent admission policy. He will debate but one proposition—Joseph Smith—as the only “pertinent” one involved. I called on him in his room at hotel yesterday. He says he submits to arbitration. The disputants failing to agree, both sides choose committees—the committees select one man each; these two latter agree to select one more—final. This conical-shaped committee is to do business. But this was inaugurated by one side, not both. The disputants never had the opportunity to even get together to try to effect an agreement, and when the printed circular was adopted by a vote of about twenty, indorsing the misleading and falsely formulated proposition, our brethren stood upon our rights to arrange fair terms, they were dictatorially commanded to “sit down,” “keep your mouth shut.” Braden has proceeded to block every opportunity for fairness and justice. He it is who has issued the proposition, wording and ornamentation. He it is who has dictated terms, suggested and engineered his committee, adopted his circular, cut and dried the whole affair, without even a ghost of a show to his opponent; and because we can not consent to such dishonorable arrangements, he wants to know who is the coward. He absolutely refuses to “debate doctrinal propositions.” Then what is the use of committee to arbitrate? If arbitrators decide on fair, doctrinal propositions, Braden refuses to abide by decision “under any circumstances,” as he both publicly and privately asserted he would “not debate doctrinal issues under any circumstances.”

But his circulars boast of victories in every conflict with the Saints, in various parts of the United States. We have confronted him with the fact that the very propositions which have given him notable victories over the Saints, were “doctrinal,” and presented to him four sets of propositions which he discussed with Kelley, Scott, White, and the list presented by Cornish for his acceptance the first night of lecture. Query: If the discussion of “doctrinal” propositions gave Clark Braden such wonderful victories in various parts of the United States why will not the discussion of similar or same doctrinal propositions give him similar or same victory in Rose City, Michigan? Why does he decline the honor of a victory at Rose City by absolutely refusing to debate doctrinal propositions? The people are beginning to see that the object of Clark Braden is not to enlighten, is not to impart the proper information, but in true keeping with the original object of his predecessors, “the deorganization of sects,” “the destruction,” “the abolition of all these contumacious sects.” (Hayden History and Christian System.) The Reverend Stilwell secured the services of Braden. Stilwell was formerly an Episcopalian, but he is pastor of Methodist Episcopal Church here. The case stands like this: Clark Braden, a Campbellite, is employed by Stilwell, formerly an Episcopalian, to come to Rose City to lampoon the Latter Day Saints in the interest of the Methodists! What a happy combination! How beautifully they amalgamate! “Behold how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!”

Braden pushes out a proposition which he knows we do not believe, a proposition misleading, misrepresentative, tortured, involving a wicked mistatement of our belief, and when reversed makes two, and engineers the selection of committees to enforce the adoption of this proposition. How American! To force men to defend that which they do not believe? Shades of the Dark Ages! Braden, by this means, reminds us of a “fossil remain,” a defunct specie, walked out of the dead century of the Dark Ages into the twentieth century of progress. What next? Why, meet at the theological Mason and Dixon line with theological glue-pots to stick the committees together!

But even should committee be chosen by us, it could not be done until Braden closes his lectures. He refused us the use of hall one evening, for this work. The Methodists refused their church, and these two buildings are the only available ones here; and we propose acting in as public a manner as did the opposition. We are not going to skulk, or act in a dark corner, but to reach the general public is our aim. So at close of lectures we may come to some conclusion. The business men of town, the intelligent part of community, is already disgusted. So blow on, Braden, you have but one charge of powder, and when that is blown out, you blow out with it.

S. W. L. SCOTT.

HAMILTON, Iowa, May 23, 1905.

Editors Herald: In April Bro. W. H. Kephart and I visited Centerville, Iowa, where there is a small branch of Saints. We remained with them two weeks or more in trying to get the gospel before the people, and the Saints to understand their duties better. Our effort was rather a special one, and it is hopeful that some good was done.

While there we met two Utah elders—one by the name of George W. Nichols. Both were young men. They were preaching on the streets and canvassing from house to house with their tracts. On careful inquiry we found that they failed to show a distinction between the Utah church and the Reorganized Church. We found people that thought there was no difference and supposed these men were some of our elders distributing Utah literature. This you see is just enough for the prejudiced mind to say, “Yes I told you they were all connected with the Mormons.” Mr. Nichols confessed to me that he believed polygamy was of God, and only suspended until such time as the people will accept it. Are the people likely to accept polygamy unless it is taught? That is just what the Utah elders are doing in a sly way, but have not got manhood and honesty enough to stand before the public and avow their own faith. Bro. W. H. Kephart and I went to the city editor and got out about five hundred circulars, showing some of the differences between the two churches. These we scattered through the city quite well, and a number of our tracts, which we think has clearly brought the Reorganized Church before the people.

On the last two evenings of our meetings I announced to speak on the Book of Mormon. This brought out a good hearing. One preacher was among them. We are now near Buxton, Iowa, holding meeting. Quite a number of Saints are scattered through this section. Buxton is a town of about six hundred of which about two thirds are colored folks. There are some of the best coal-works here in the State. Veins from four to seven feet thick.

People are very busy and crowds small through the week. We are trying to visit the house of each member and give all a chance to do their parts in tithes and offerings; and make a statement of their temporalities, so they can tell whether they have "kept the law" that must redeem Zion. I find some are slow to act. So will God be slow to bless such.

Your brother in bonds,
D. C. WHITE.

HAILEYVILLE, Indian Territory, May 30, 1905.

Editor Herald: Returning from General Conference I stayed in Kansas City, Missouri, four days and preached five sermons for the Second Kansas City Branch, and returned home on Tuesday of the next week. Having arranged with Bro. H. O. Smith to hold a series of tent-meetings in Hearts-horn, we made arrangements and held a two week's series of meetings. Bro. J. D. Erwin came and helped to get the meetings started and then went on to Coalgate. I would have stayed longer there with the tent, but there was not interest enough to warrant it. The people there were so very religious when we commenced our meetings that the church bells of the town began to ring, and two or three of the churches began to hold meetings also. The Baptists had been holding meetings, so they continued as long as we held our meetings.

We had a little advertisement, by the way. We ordered five hundred bills struck off, but when we called for them we were informed they had not printed them, so we did without bills; but they thought enough of us to give us a little send-off through the papers. The Heartshorn Sun stated the Utah Mormons were in town with a tent but they would get nobody but suckers. The Cricket stated the Holiness people were holding a tent-meeting in town. I expect to start for my field of labor the last of this week or the first of next. I am going to make an effort to raise the work to a higher standard of activity and numbers. As I have been assigned to Southern Arkansas and Louisiana I will go without a murmur although I would rather have been left here in the Indian Territory.

Yours for the advancement of truth,
CHAS. E. IRWIN.

Dear Herald: This finds me back in my old field, and right glad I am, for Southern Nebraska is a good field for work. I must say that this year I go to my Master's work with gladness, because of the advanced step we have taken as a church. We are moving towards the culmination of the hope of God's people, the redemption of Zion. This year finds us more in the preparatory stage than ever. Provisions have been made and are now in effect that will enable us to cut loose from the worldly and place our entire confidence in God. With a united effort by us all, there is no reason why we can not prosper.

Our love for the great latter-day work makes itself manifest in various ways, just as many as there are ways to carry on the work. Our reunion, to be held at Nebraska City this summer, is one of the ways to carry on God's work, and we want the Saints to attend and do what they can to make it a success, and that requires means. Bro. W. M. Self is treasurer, so please remember when he comes around. By holding our reunion in the city we can reach lots of people that we can not in our church. We kindly invite the Saints from across the river, and from the district north. We will make things as convenient and pleasant as possible.

Our next conference will be held at Fairfield. District convention convenes the 8th and 9th of September. I wish all that can contribute for institute work, which will be on the 9th. In this line we need essays on Sunday-school topics. The following will give you an idea: 1. The influence of the Sunday-school. 2. The history of the Sunday-school. 3. What can a teacher do to hold the attention of a class? 4. What does it take to make a good teacher? 5. What is necessary to make a good pupil? 6. What relationship is the Sunday-school to the church? 7. Ought there to be a committee appointed to visit pupils and parents and solicit new members? Please do not make your papers too lengthy but to the point.

This year we shall push out into new territory as much as it is possible. We would like the scattered Saints to let us know of the opportunities for introducing the restored gospel in their localities.

As I am now going to move my family to Nebraska City, my address will be the same as Bro. W. M. Self's, Fourth Avenue and Ninth Street.

We also wish to be remembered by all the Saints, that we may work together in love and effectiveness for the prosperity of Zion's cause.

Your fellow laborer in Christ,
ADOLPH E. MADISON.

MARLIN, Texas, May 25, 1905.

Dear Herald: For some time I have felt a desire to write you. Am delighted to say that we, the Philadelphia Branch, are somewhat renewed in spirit. After many trials and buffetings, we can say that the Lord liveth and is our God.

Oh, how thankful we Saints should be for the knowledge of the work in these the latter days. I feel that I am the weakest of all, and yet I know that the Lord will hear and answer a weak, feeble petition from me, when I humble myself and ask in earnest. And just one prayer—oh, just one answer from the Lord is worth so much!

We have no church-house here and have to hold meetings at private houses; but it seems that the Lord has a purpose in keeping us here, as it has been the case for some time. There are a few at present interested in the work. Let us pray that they may see and obey before it is too late.

I love the work, and I have a special love for the Book of Mormon. Yet, I lack something. Dear Saints, pray for me that I may have patience. The Bible says "In your patience possess ye your souls."

Pray for me and my husband that we may do our duty, and receive a crown hereafter.

LULA VANCLEAVE.

DUNSEITH, North Dakota, May 23, 1905.

Dear Saints: As I have received so much cheer and comfort from reading the Home Column I thought I would write a letter. As I opened our HERALD to-night, the first thing I saw was the article from Sr. Langton, and it carried me back to the reunion at Dunseith. Yes, dear sister, a large family is one of God's blessings. If all young mothers could have your letter to read I think there would be a different feeling about the little ones. Yes, keep them where they can have the good-night kiss as long as you can. My two little ones have just kissed me good-night, and if the oldest one was at home to-night (she is thirty-two) she would want her good-night's kiss before she laid her head on the pillow to rest.

I must say one word for the blessed privilege we Saints have in calling on the elders in sickness. I have been ailing all the spring and could hardly do my work. To-night as I was in Dunseith, I saw Bro. Houghton. I concluded I would have him go out to our house and stay to-night. He came and I was administered to, and as he took his hands from my head I felt better than I have in a long while. How thankful we should be, Saints; pray for me, I am weak in body and spirit. Pray that I may never be found wanting in any duty that may fall upon me for my family or church.

MRS. HANNAH STOWELL.

CHEYENNE, Oklahoma, May 27, 1905.

Editors Herald: The work is moving along nicely here, though it has been hindered some in the past. The Saints seem to be in good spirits, and are looking forward to our district conference, and want to have the best that has ever been in the Territory. We invite all who can to cooperate with us and let us have a good time. We aim to have plenty of pasture for the stock, plenty to eat for all who come, and plenty of shade for the preachers, and feel confident of a good time.

Bro. S. S. Smith has been doing some good preaching here of late. Bro. J. W. Hancock is our branch president, whose advice and counsel is good. I consider the Redmoon Branch in fair condition. The location and time of our reunion is not definite.

Your brother,
L. W. PATE.

COVINGTON, Kentucky, May 29, 1905.

Editors Herald: Bro. H. E. Moler, having joined me on the 21st in Louisville, we came to this city the 25th and have been holding forth on the streets with very good interest. We are going to try to rent a place to-day for the Saints to hold their meetings in, and for our use in our labor here. Bro. Moler has his organ and we take the gasoline torch, so we have plenty of light and music, and we are both big enough to give them plenty of preaching. We hope to be able to reach some good people in this city.

We are enjoying the hospitality of Bro. and Sr. W. A. Damon. Bro. H. Pasmán, the Hebrew brother from Chicago, is living here now, and he is a great help to the work here. He is very zealous in the work of our Master. I wish we had a host of such to help push the work. Bro. W. N. Hanner is also doing what he can to build up the kingdom of God.

There is a wonderful stir in this city by the different religions. Deception is rife here in this place, and it takes very forcible preaching to do anything with the people. By the help of the Lord we will batter the walls of Babylon till the honest-hearted are awakened and shall flee to Zion for safety. May this be a year of victory for the church.

118 East Eleventh Street. J. W. METCALF.

DES MOINES, Iowa, May 30, 1905.

Editors Herald: Since the General Conference I have busied myself in copying the minutes of the work done by the First Seventy, and the Council of the Seven Presidents during the sittings of conference, and preparing the work at home so that the wife and children would enjoy existence in their lonely condition more pleasantly, the hastily throwing my books and clothing together for mission work, and another siege of living in the midst of conflict. I came to the city of Des Moines by the instruction of the minister in charge to remain till after the district conference of this district which convenes next Saturday and Sunday, the 3d and 4th of June. On account of the uncertainty of continuing in this mission, and the brevity of time before the conference, I did not tarry at home long after completing the copying referred to above, coming to the city the 8th inst. On the day of my arrival I united in the holy bands of wedlock two of the members of my Sunday-school class, Bro. Joseph G. Carpenter and Sr. Zoe Seward, who are now enjoying home life in their own possessions in the city.

Upon my arrival in the city I learned that the wife of the branch president was very sick. She is now able to be up most of the time, having endured about three weeks of sickness, part of the time not expected to live. This with other severe illness on the part of members of the branch has occupied a large share of my time since my arrival.

I learned since arriving in the city of the departure for Denmark of the district president, Elder S. K. Sorenson, which has burdened me with the work of the district presidency, I being the assistant president. This has occupied some of my time and attention.

One was baptized at Hastie by Bro. T. P. Cook on the 14th inst., and confirmed at the forenoon meeting of the branch last Sunday. The party baptized had been addicted to drink, to his own sadness and the great trial of his family and relatives. It was remarked by one of his neighbors that if he did not return to drink, we had done the greatest thing in the direction of saving that had been done in that neighborhood. The brother has been freed from the power of drink so far, and he rejoices in the help he has received.

Last Sunday was raised the last cent due on the church purchased one year ago last April. Last night the last payment was made, and the note is now in the possession of the branch president with a few dollars extra for further repairs, such as painting and putting shingles on a part of the roof. For the debt and the repairs that have thus far been made the Saints have raised something over eighteen hundred dollars, receiving a very little help outside of the branch. What has been done is a cause of marveling by those who have known and now know the financial condition of the Saints of the branch. As soon as proper arrangements can be made the church will be dedicated.

The Religio and Sunday-school raised several dollars of the debt that has been paid. All worked together, and by so doing the task was accomplished without any special inconvenience to any, just as the Lord said it would be when they were contemplating the purchase of the building.

The same special kindness is shown us as last conference year by the dailies of the city.

The city and country is all astir to-day, moving with the common thought, the decoration of the graves of the slain of our common brotherhood in the nation. It begets within me thought of the slain for the brotherhood of a cause supremely above the cause for which many of these specially remembered to-day were slain. Do we of that kingdom remember these brethren, and the cause for which they laid down their lives as we should? How much more honored are those who have died fighting patriotically for the cause they professed to love, than those who have died, who, while professing to defend the cause, have but strengthened the enemies' attacks, and weakened our defense!

Dishonored indeed would be the name of Jesus Christ if he died in the defense of a cause he pretended to be of God; and yet he really introduced and defended as the work of God for the good of humanity, all that many of his professed followers claim now that he died for. Equally dishonored is the name of Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum, with all the martyrs of the church previous to 1845, if the claims of those who profess to follow Jesus as he was represented by these men and women are true as represented by the ministers of the church whose headquarters is in Salt Lake City, Utah. The claims of these have weakened our defense of Jesus Christ, and strengthened the enemy. In fact the representation of these men and women of Utah in regard to what Jesus Christ taught through Joseph Smith as a servant of God is the strength of the defense of the opposer of the angel's message referred to in Revelation 14: 6, 7. While hundreds are acknowledging the scripturalness of the doctrine that it is shown was introduced through Joseph Smith and his associates to the world in 1830, yet the reproach that has been brought upon these men by the claim of Brigham Young in his day, and his followers to-day, is a barrier to their acceptance of it. Who will be the most condemned, the ones who have laid, and are laying the stumbling-block, or the ones that stumble? The answer, "The first party," will not be denied by any who are consistent with the teachings of the Scriptures. How can any one think that a church is patriotic that will uphold a man as its president who publicly acknowledges that he is living contrary to the law of God and the law of the land? Such patriotism is badly affected.

It is to be hoped that, now the Saints are free from a church debt hanging over them, there can be opened up a mission or two in other parts of the city where can be held continuous services each Lord's day. An effort will be made along that line,—the Lord willing.

I regret very much the disappointment that it has caused some of my brethren and sisters of the Nebraska Mission to which I was assigned by the last conference. Never have I been treated with greater respect and hospitality than I was treated while executing missionary work in that part for over seven years. Dearer friends I have not anywhere in the world. But as all are interested in the great cause, my labors here and whatever success attends with the rejoicing occasioned thereby, will be a source of rejoicing by the Saints everywhere. The reasons for my occupying here instead of there will be better understood in the great day of accounts. May God bless the Saints of the Nebraska Mission, and laborers there, with all the Israel of God.

In bonds of peace,

J. F. MINTUN.

NECEDAH, Wisconsin, May 30, 1905.

Dear Herald: We are still striving on, and feel that we have many things to be thankful for. Last week a half brother of Bro. A. J. Fisher requested baptism. He has been here on a visit from Iowa; has been studying the church books, also hearing Bro. Robinson preach, also working on the new church. The time was set for ten o'clock Sunday morning, and we went to the river and found seven more ready to go into the water, too; all grown people. We knew they were investigating and some were nearly ready, but it was a surprise to see so many come. Some children are expecting to be baptized children's day. One of those baptized Sunday was a man to whom Bro. Closson explained the Sabbath question last winter.

Our first church-service in the new church was the confirmation of the new members and we felt it was a good service, for the Spirit was present in a good degree. Bro. W. P. Robinson is with us, has worked on the church and also baptized new members to worship in it, as Bro. Whiteaker did last fall. Several more are nearly ready. We rejoice to see the honest-hearted gathered in.

M. R.

ROSE CITY, Michigan, May 25, 1905.

Brother Joseph: You no doubt will be anxious to know how matters are moving along in Rose City. We are here yet, but there does not seem to be any debate in sight. Braden has positively refused to debate doctrine, or Bible principles.

He claims our men and the Methodist minister, R. J. Stilwell, agreed to meet and discuss on Joseph Smith, and agreed not to discuss doctrine. Our people claim that the Reverend Stilwell said he would get a man who would "root Mormonism out, root and branch, and tear it into ribbons." Bro. O. J. Wheeler said, "We will accept that challenge."

The facts are Braden has debated with our people so many times and has been beaten every time, and he knows he has been beaten, so much so, that he dare not try it in an honorable way, and upon Bible principles, from a biblical standpoint. It was not his intent in the first place to discuss but to lecture against us, and added in a crafty way, "If the Mormons did not back down, the lectures would be turned into a debate," and then drew up propositions of his own, one of which he knew was not our belief, and one he knew we would not accept, thus avoiding discussion, and taking advantage of the situation, telling the people we would not meet fair propositions, and "They dare not meet Clark Braden," with "They dare not meet it, you dare not, [with teeth clinched, and a fist swinging in our faces] you dare not, you dirty sneaks." And after a few more boastful assertions, he again added, "You know you dare not; put it down in black and white, and sign your name to it, you dare not do it, you cowards."

Then when we tried to read our propositions, such as he had before discussed, we were met with the words from Clark Braden in angry tones, "Sit down, sir!" However, by permission of the chair we got the matter properly before the people, and that night the tide turned in our favor. I saw it going rapidly. When I arose I calmly and plainly told them we were not "dirty sneaks" and cowards, nor skunks, but were law-abiding citizens, and trying to live according to the gospel as Christ and his apostles had left it, etc., and all we asked was justice and fair play, and we would meet before the honest public in an honorable discussion with Clark Braden, or any other man.

I won the majority of the people then, and from that on but few paid any attention to Clark Braden or his lectures. I did not forget to tell the people either that it was only a "money-grab" upon the part of Braden, and that I had no idea whatever that he or any other man would meet us upon fair propositions, especially if they were willing to pay him the ten cents every evening, to hear his wicked and slanderous statements against the Saints, whom he admits "are honest and law-abiding citizens."

On account of better light being on the stage, and plenty of room there, and to let the people see, and Braden know, that I feared not the would-be "Mormon destroyer," I went on the stage and took notes. In a whisper with the chairman, I obtained permission, thinking to do so until Braden would show himself by ordering me off. And on the beginning of his lecture the third evening he ordered me off from the stage, and the chairman arose and spoke kindly to me saying, "Mr. Braden will not permit any one on the stage but himself and the chairman. I know the lights are not good to write by down there, but he would not allow any one here." I bowed, and in the silence of the moment, I calmly said, "All right, Mr. Chairman, I will abide your rules."

I noticed Mr. Reverend (?) Stilwell was not on the platform that evening as before.

My leaving the platform so meekly, after Braden so roughly commanded me to get down, and if I "said anything, I'll have you arrested," etc., turned some more in my favor, and the crowd began to drop off and a less number came to hear Clark Braden, until Saturday evening (the fourth evening) the 20th, there were only fifty or sixty people in attendance, many on the streets saying "It is so unfair," etc.

Bro. S. W. L. Scott came to West Branch on the evening of the 20th and arrived in Rose City on the morning of the 21st. We obtained the use of the hall for that day, Bro. J. A. Grant gave a good discourse in the forenoon, and the writer occupied in the evening. We had good congregations.

On our arrival at the evening meeting we found a letter on the desk addressed "Elder Cornish" evidently Braden's handwriting, which read as follows. "Please to announce. The theme of the lecture of Clark Braden in this hall to-morrow night at eight o'clock will be: 'The Book of Mormon.' An admission fee of ten cents will be expected from all, except door-keeper, lecturer, chairman. R. J. S." I read the notice, and stated that I had never yet paid a man ten cents to be abused, and be not permitted to say anything in reply, and hence I would not be present.

And on Monday evening none of the Saints attended, and several others were absent, and the number attending was about twenty-five or thirty. On Tuesday about twelve persons, and on Wednesday there were only about twelve. We were on the street last evening (Wednesday) and looking up we saw Braden looking through the window down on the street, and after he went back, Stilwell came and looked. We were thinking they must be wondering why the people did not come. But no doubt Braden thought he would draw them on the 23d when he advertised and sent out his circulars, telling the people what he would lecture on, etc., and that night only about twelve persons attended, the smallest number up to that time. Poor Braden! Poor Stilwell! Stilwell must see that Braden is paid to abuse and slander the Saints. Where will the money come from? It will not be raised by the ten-cent admission fee, if only about twelve persons attend.

On the fourth evening, Saturday, 20th, Mr. Braden became boastful, as he had understood Bro. Scott was to be present, but up to that time he had not arrived; then he told us a story about a colored man who sang,

"Where, O where is the good old Daniel,
Where, O where is the good old Daniel,
Where, O where is the good old Daniel,
Away down in his Southern home."

These four lines were repeated. Then says Braden, so I would like to know

"Where, O where is the Alphabet Scott,
Where, O where is the Alphabet Scott,
Where, O where is the Alphabet Scott,
Away down in his Mormon home."

These lines were also repeated, with the exception of the "Mormon home," for which was substituted, "coward home." Then he went on, "He isn't here, nor they have not heard from him, nor they won't hear from him." I sat in front of him, and shook my head. He said, "Have you heard?" I said, "Yes sir." He said, "Well he isn't here." I said, "He is." He had come to West Branch, and a brother had gone to meet him, and on Sunday morning "Alphabet Scott" was in the battle-field.

Some of the readers of the HERALD might wish to know what started the excitement in Rose City. I would say, Oh, nothing more than what has brought forth the like in the past, hundreds of times; our brethren preached the true gospel, and two young converts of the Methodist faith (school-teachers) believed we had the true gospel, and felt it their duty to obey the same; and about the time their six months' probation was over in the Methodist Church they were baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; and the reverend man got mad about it, and then to get even before the public, he lectured and slandered a dead man, who was not here to answer for himself, and our local brethren took up his challenge. If Joseph could not be proven such a character in his lifetime as Braden and his like would try to make people believe he was, it is no use for them to attempt it now, sixty years after he is dead!

I inclose Braden's circular, which has but little truth in it, and will also send one or two of ours.

Very truly,

J. J. CORNISH.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, May 30, 1905.

Editors Herald: I take this way of reaching the readers of the HERALD with a request. I am publishing in Autumn Leaves a series of articles entitled, "Inspired dreams and visions of modern times." Those who have been blessed with such experiences will please write me a clear and comprehensive account of their experience, for use in Autumn Leaves.

We are also about to begin a series of articles dealing with ways by which we may attract the attention of the people so that they will give our gospel message a hearing. Those of the ministry who have used various methods of house to house work, street-preaching, advertising, etc., and found them effectual, please write us your experience. It will perhaps help others. Address me at 1106 South Twelfth Street, Burlington, Iowa.

Yours for the rapid spread of our work,

Better Late Than Never.

A promise is considered binding until fulfilled. It sometimes occurs that circumstances delay making good the obligation till it may seem out of place, but patient waiting, with lasting expectation on the part of the one for whose welfare the promise was made, increases the obligation rather than releases the maker. Such is the present situation; hence, this very late communication. There is such a thing as laying away articles so carefully that they can not be found when needed, which we "run across" later. Of this also the present occasion is an example. Neither are all the needed documents now at hand. But memory will perhaps come to the rescue.

We have not the HERALD containing the letter to which we refer, but many of the Saints, particularly those of the Seattle and British Columbia District, will remember a letter by a brother in the Seattle Branch, about January last, written in such a way as to reflect seriously upon the presiding elder of the branch, representing that he had so opposed the Sisters' Aid Society there as to result in its disorganization; the complaint being that he had not been consulted.

The writer of this explanation promised to set the affair in its true light, which he could well do, being, with his collaborer, innocently and helplessly implicated. It was agreed that the names of both missionaries should be signed to the correction when written. The reasons for the too long neglect attended with other impossibilities, are already given.

The president of the branch referred to attests that he did not oppose the efforts of the sisters, but was present when they organized the aid society, and sold more tickets for their first entertainment than any other person. This was done before the missionaries giving this explanation were in the field. They were, however, present, and parties to the result of the action which the president did oppose, and can speak advisedly. His house has long been the hospitable home of the missionaries, one, two, or more; his doors swung wide open to all visiting Saints at all times, in fact the "dropping in place" of everybody, for all of which he never would accept a cent, with rent and current expenses to keep up by the labor of his hands.

Nowhere were elders ever made more welcome than there, as attest the writers. Now the plan he did oppose. Those who read the letter referred to, will remember in the account, the loan of ten dollars to the brother who wrote the letter, for the purpose of purchasing a bed for fitting a room in his house "for the elders." The sisters also contracted to pay ten cents each meal for the elders while there. These conditions "we elders" did not know when invited to occupy that room and stay with the family at any time. It was this one movement to which our free-hearted president, Bro. D. W. R. Davis, objected. Now, how were the elders implicated? One morning after breakfast, and the brother had gone to his daily route as mail-carrier, at eighty dollars per month, our attention was drawn to a couple of notes lying on the center-table. One was addressed to us, the other to the branch president. It appeared that the sisters found they were not able to keep up with the ten cents a meal, after loaning the ten dollars for the bed, and putting a dollar or two each into the hands of the elders.

The note to the elders explained the fear that they would "lose" their "home," on which they had contracted to pay a certain amount each month, and then said they could not keep us any longer. We were requested to hand the other note to Bro. Davis, from which we quote: "But except the offer is accepted at once, you will after to-day take the elders yourself, or the branch provide for them." The offer here referred to was the same the sisters had undertaken. Bro. Bell had spent a portion of the intervening time visiting old acquaintances, but the writer had stayed more with the proffered home, supposing he was simply dividing the burden between the two families.

Detroit News.

The Saints of this city are busy preparing for district conference, and all seem to anticipate a good, spiritual time. Among the other activities in church-work, the Willing Helpers have recently started a "lot fund" with a view toward helping to purchase a lot for our church. This energetic society of ladies was organized less than two years ago, yet in the short period of its existence it has collected, by means of two bazaars and a few socials, the sum of four hundred and thirty-eight dollars and thirty-six cents, with which it has purchased for the church a beautiful organ, a pulpit, a flower-stand, chairs for the rostrum, and several pews, all of which are choice oak, also carpet for rostrum, matting for aisles, chandelier, communion set, sacrament linen, hymnals, flowers for the sick, etc., besides assisting to pay Graceland College debt, and supplying valuable financial aid to Detroit's missionary. The society has a membership of about twenty ladies (but their average attendance is only about eight) who meet every Wednesday afternoon to make aprons and other useful articles, and their prayer-meetings, which they hold each month, are usually blessed with a marked degree of the divine Spirit as an acknowledgment of the Master's approval, which affords joy and encouragement. Their phenomenal success demonstrates what a few earnest sisters can do to assist the Lord's work, which other branches may profitably try to emulate.

The Governor received them very kindly and assured them that they should have perfect religious liberty after this always, etc.

Pastoral.

To the Saints and Collaborers of the Southern Indiana District; Greeting: Having been appointed by Bro. J. W. Wight to take charge of the work in the above-named district, I invite the hearty cooperation of the missionaries, local officers, and all the Saints in the extending of the Redeemer's kingdom in this territory.

Those desiring to write me will please address me at Reed City, Michigan, my home address, as I do not know yet what my field address will be, but will give notice later on.

Scattered Saints who desire to have openings made where they reside, will please notify me and we will see that such places are looked after. To the missionaries, I will say, Move out into new fields as wisdom may direct.

I will get into the district as soon as possible, and try to assist all I can. Let us all put our shoulders to the wheel and do what we can to move on the "gospel-car." And to this end let us all watch and pray.

Missionaries will remember to report promptly, July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

REED CITY, Michigan.

W. D. ELLIS.

To the Ministry and Members of the Far West, Missouri, District; Greeting: Having been placed in charge of the above-named district I desire to address you through the HERALD. The opening of another conference year with its attendant duties is here; and we desire the cooperation of all that the work God "has intrusted to all" may be accomplished. Let all move out and perform the duties outlined for them under the law; and strive to recognize each other in the office and work to which God and the church has called and appointed us. If this be done no jarring, jealousy, or contention will be possible, and good will come to us individually and collectively.

Bro. I. N. Roberts is the president of the district, and to him branch officers should look for advice and counsel. Should there be trouble in any of the branches and the branch officers can not settle it, then the assistance of the district president should be sought. After that, if it becomes necessary, the submission, then the general missionaries in charge of the field should be asked for advice and counsel, so that all things may be done in order and no man's office be ignored. Brethren should not consider complaints made unless made to them in writing and the complainant's name signed to it; then the complaint should be handed to branch, district, or mission officers as the case may require. If this be done backbiting, slander, and evil-speaking will be almost impossible, and confidence in each other will be maintained and the work will be built up.

When the storm-period has passed we expect to run the tent, and will need assistance. Let the brethren who attend conference at Kingston who are able to assist some with the tent, notify me then and there. Places where the tent is desired should be named, so let all who desire the tent notify me at the earliest possible time, giving what information they can, that we may know what lies before us, and make preparation in harmony therewith. I desire to be in touch with all the work that is performed outside of branches, so that I can report from time to time the exact conditions of the field. So let all those laboring outside of branch organizations report their labors to me from time to time, as it is in this way the conditions can be fully known.

The financial arm of the church should be sustained. Bro. Charles P. Faul, of Stewartsville, Missouri, is the Bishop's agent, and to him the tithes and offerings should be sent.

Let the brethren everywhere, when called upon to teach tithing, teach it as outlined in the "Address to the Saints" as ordered by last General Conference. No matter what any one's private teaching may be, this is the church's definition of the law, and none are authorized to teach contrary to it. All the books of the church harmonize on this point, and the "Address" is so worded that their teaching is reflected in it. This is an urgent matter, and the ministry should read the address and understand it. It teaches first the consecration of the surplus, afterward the tenth. I have been careful to impress this upon you, as there is dissatisfaction and misunderstanding in some parts of the district on this subject. Let us work in harmony. The funds in the Bishop's agent's hands are low, hence another need for emphasizing this matter. Parties wishing to write me will please address me at Stewartsville, Dekalb County, Missouri, as this will be my home address for the present year. Now let us work together unitedly, meekly, endeavoring to do the work the Master has called us to perform. Praying that these suggestions will be helpful, and that God may direct in the effort of all, I remain,

T. J. SHELDON.

To the Saints of the Northwestern Kansas District; Brn. I. N. White and Joseph Luff having appointed me in charge of the above-named district, I urge all to diligence in service and looking out for new openings for preaching of the word. This is a large district and only two missionaries to labor in it. Let us all work together for the success of the cause of Christ. Members, local officers, and missionaries, each in his special duties, that the gospel may make progress through the year. May the Lord bless his work. My home address is Holden, Missouri. My field address is Scandia, Kansas.

In bonds,

S. J. MADDEN.

To the Saints of Western Nebraska and Black Hills Mission; Greeting: We are entering upon another conference year. The question is, What have we done, and what are we going to do for the gospel work this year? Having been continued as your Bishop's agent for the mission, the question is, Are you going to keep me busy a part of the time receiving for tithes and offerings? God has greatly blessed us in giving us the light of this great latter-day work. Now in return for the many blessings received, are we going to help with our means to bring others to a knowledge of the angel's message? Realizing that but little can be done without your help, I earnestly ask that you will not forget that a Bishop's agent can not supply the elders' families with their allowances unless the tithes and offerings are sent in. So, dear Saints, do not forget. Send to me at Minatare, Nebraska, until further notice. You did well last year, but we hope our books will look better at the close of this year. As one of the gospel tents is expected to soon be put in the field there will be some expense attached to it. I trust you may send such offerings as you feel to give, for the missionaries must have something to eat while out with the tent. When sending money please state for what purpose. Send in your tithes and offerings as soon as possible, for we are behind with the elders' families' allowances. Remember this mission is large, and it is impossible for me to call on each one. Remember God loves a cheerful giver. I will send receipt by return mail. Your colaborer in the vineyard of the Lord,

-MINATARE, Nebraska. R. O. SELF.

A Dangerous Man.

All officers and members of the church are warned to be on the lookout for a dangerous lunatic, named Charles R. Francard, a member of the Armstrong, Kansas City, Branch, who escaped from the State Hospital in this city on the 27th inst. He is under suspension from all church privileges by action taken in his home branch recently.

He is laboring under the delusion that he is a spiritual detective, and claims to be sent direct from God, to regulate and set the priesthood in order, and usually begins to write foolish and very threatening letters to branch officers and members. He has caused grave trouble in this city, also at Wheeling, West Virginia, and at one time was an inmate in the Nevada, Missouri, State Hospital, from which he escaped.

He is about 6 feet 1 inch tall, weighs 175 pounds, sandy moustache, light chestnut hair, pale blue eyes, peculiar expression, florid complexion, unusually long legs and arms, and extra large hands and feet, slightly stoop-shouldered, converses in a very low tone, except when he is excited; the little finger on each hand is stiff, and each are bent toward the palm of the hand; usually dresses in an old, black suit.

The physicians informed me that he has an incurable case of insanity; and that as he grows older he will become a very dangerous man. H. E. FRENCH, President of Branch.
COLUMBUS, Ohio, May 29, 1905.

Special Convention—Lamoni Stake Religio.

The resignation of our stake president and stake secretary makes it necessary to call a special session to elect to fill the vacancies. A session will, therefore, be held on Friday evening, June 16, at eight o'clock, just prior to the convening of the stake conference at Lucas, Iowa, for the above business and such other business as may legitimately come before the convention. Let all the locals send delegates, and let as many others interested as can do so be present.

D. L. MORGAN, Vice-president.
FLORA L. SCOTT, Librarian.
J. A. SIMPSON, Treasurer.

The Presidency.

MISSIONARY—LAMONI STAKE.

Notice is hereby given that Bro. D. C. White is laboring as a missionary in the Lamoni Stake, in connection with his duties as counselor to the Stake Bishopric.

Wanted.

Dear Readers of the HERALD: I am getting up a work which, when placed in the hands of our friends, will be evidence to the honest minds that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is in harmony with the church established by our Savior and the apostles in former days, in organization, doctrine, gifts, and blessings. In doing so I ask those that have any knowledge of the fulfillment of the following to send me a statement of same with the date and address, also give the address of some witnesses—about two names in your statement. Please avoid the spirit of boasting or selfishness. Write with no other motive in view save to confirm the faith of the weak and to lead the minds of the honest to search the Scriptures for the truth. I shall myself try to comply with the above in that which I shall say.

1. The visitation of angels; the results of their visits.
2. Dreams and visions. State whether visions were had at night or day.
3. The power of healing, sickness, broken bones, restoration to sight, healing of deaf, and dumb, and lame; drinking of poison, bites of serpents, burns, casting out of evil spirits, fulfillment of prophecy, discerning of spirits, speaking in other tongues. Give name of language spoken, nationality of person speaking, interpretation, by whom, name and address of one present that understood the tongue. Give briefly what you personally know. Address WM. LEWIS.

The Primer of Forestry Completed.

As a source of positive information about what forestry really is, and to spread a knowledge of its methods, a book has been prepared by Mr. Gifford Pinchot, Forester of the United States Department of Agriculture and Chief of the Bureau of Forestry, entitled, A Primer of Forestry, which is published in two parts. Part I was issued in 1899, and has passed through several editions, reaching a circulation of about two hundred and twenty-five thousand copies. It deals with the life of a single tree, with trees as they exist in a forest, with the life of a forest, and with the enemies of the forest.

Part II of the Primer has just been published. It deals with "Practical Forestry," the purpose of which is defined as "to make the forest render its best service to man in such a way as to increase rather than to diminish its usefulness in the future." In other words, it means "both the use and the preservation of the forest."

Chapter I of Part II tells of the varied uses of the forest; specifies the four requisites if the forest is to yield good returns under management—protection, strong and abundant reproduction, regular supply of ripe trees, and growing space sufficient for each tree; discusses the yield of a forest, describing how it is determined and showing that it must keep even pace with the growth; and concludes by describing the different systems of cutting trees in such a way as to get the best returns from the forest, while at the same time improving its usefulness.

The second chapter discusses "Work in the woods." Conservative and ordinary lumbering are contrasted, and the great superiority of conservative work is shown. Information and suggestions are given on the work from the time the tree is found standing in the forest until it passes through some distant mill. The chapter is intensely practical, and indicates changes in present lumbering methods which will make for the advantage of the forest.

Chapter III is entitled "The weather and the streams." It discusses the influence forests have on climate, and explains in detail the effect of forest cover on temperature, moisture, evaporation, rainfall, and fallen rain. One of the most vitally important functions of the forest is to restrain the fallen rain, to prevent erosion of the soil, and to store away the water for gradual use in the future.

Chapter IV, the last, is a short sketch of the history of forestry abroad and at home. Important events in forestry in this country are recorded down to the first of this year. The showing of the United States in this field is behind that of every other civilized nation. Still initial steps of high promise have recently been taken, and there can be no question but that the development of a truly American system of forest management, adjusted to our own conditions, is now fairly under way.

Part II of the Primer supplements Part I, and the two together give the fundamentals of forestry in terse and compact form. Part II is illustrated by eighteen plates and forty-seven text figures. In typographical execution and general appearance it is an exact counterpart of Part I. The Primer as a whole will be read with profit by every one who takes a practical interest in the forests and who wishes to see them protected and properly developed as one of the greatest resources of the nation.

A MISTAKE.

Some of the brethren in the field who have made promises to correspond with their stay-at-home brothers, find after a while that it is an irksome job, which they have not the time and inclination to perform, so they shirk the list by writing their friends through the HERALD, with the view of "treating all alike," etc.

This would be all right if the writers knew that the ones to whom they promised to write take the HERALD, and would be sure to see their communication, and accept it as a fulfillment of the promise made to them, which it is not.

Another thing these writers ought to be sure of, it strikes us, and that is that the four thousand and odd readers of the HERALD to whom they made no promise to write would be pleased to see their names at the end of a letter, and would read with interest what they had written. It is worth a thought whether such a method of keeping a promise is a fair compliance with what was promised, i. e., a friendly, brotherly, personal letter for the eye of the reader alone.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. Joseph F. Burton and wife arrived at San Francisco, May 18, well and in good spirits. Bro. Burton left the affairs in the South Sea Islands Mission in fairly good shape in the absence of any one sent by conference to take charge. Questions with the French government were amicably arranged and our folks were to be accorded similar rights as other religious bodies received. He writes at the close of his letter of May 27: "I feel very grateful to the good Master and to you all for permitting us to return, and yet I feel a great longing for the well-being of the dear Saints there. If I were a little younger I would like to go back, although in this wonderful land everything is just splendid and one likes to feel himself free."

Just now the Government is struggling with the immigration question, the Isthmian Canal, the reciprocity question and the divorce question; that is to say, these are among the leading questions being agitated among the lawmakers, the politicians, and the people.

The first of these is quite important from the fact that for reasons not so well understood by everybody a class of immigrants is reaching the United States, which is not only undesirable but an element of danger to society; so it is asserted by some, and restrictive measures are suggested as necessary to prevent this undesirable class from becoming absorbed into our heterogeneous population.

The time was when Uncle Sam was rich enough to provide land for all comers; that day now is passed and how the average man may establish himself as a citizen is a pretty serious question.

The opportunities for mixed and miscellaneous stealing offered by the carrying on of the building of the great national ditch, the Panama Canal, must necessarily give trouble to an honest effort to accomplish it, and it may be a wonder if a commission can be selected which from start to finish will keep the governmental skirts clear of just charges of "graft" and speculation. We can only hope for the best.

That there should be a system of equitable reciprocity between the United States and all other nations, by reason of which the home government should be able to make available the resources of the country for foreign trade and commerce to the best possible advantage is plain to everybody, but in this as in other directions there is opposition from corporations and private interest which may appear to be invaded or discriminated against, so varied are the complex interests and business industries of the country. Who can see the way out of the labyrinth?

It is being pretty well agreed upon in public opinion that there is need for a general law of divorce in the formulation and enforcement of which the sacred nature of the institution of marriage should be forcibly taught and conserved by law.

Doctor S. Parkes Cadman of Brooklyn holds that the law should free the innocent person and impose life-long restraint from remarriage of the guilty one in cases of divorcement. Doctor Minot J. Savage thinks that many of the divorces are to free from marital oppression the woman in the case, and that there ought to be a uniform law prevailing everywhere in the United States on the subject.

It is evident that for a question so largely a moral and social one suitable legislation is difficult. For this society, the church, the pulpit, and the forum are largely to be blamed. The ethics of Christ's gospel must be applied, and were this done by society legislation would not be needed.

On Sunday, June 11, through the energetic efforts of Governor Folk the saloons and the barber shops in the city of St. Louis were closed, the police enforcing the order of Governor Folk under statute provision ordering the cessation of the sale of intoxicants in the State. Of it the Chicago Tribune says: "Throughout the State similar conditions prevail. Hannibal, which has shown some disposition to ignore the closing order, surrendered completely and was absolutely dry. St. Joseph, Kansas City, Springfield, and other big towns are reported thoroughly law-abiding, while smaller towns gave in weeks ago. Had it been possible for a man to visit every town and hamlet in Missouri to-day, June 11, he probably would have been unable to buy a drink of intoxicating liquor."

Bro. James Caffall desires the following corrections in the reading of his article, "Two assemblies," in HERALD for June 7.

In paragraph 3, line 3, it should read, "I risk the assertion" instead of "observation."

In paragraph 6, line 6, it should read "man is inveigled," instead of "inveighed." The latter word means nothing in the sentence. It is a typographical error.

"A letter that leaves a sting should never be written. There is a great temptation to say smart things in a letter. They sound so nice to you, when your typewritist leaves the completed letter on your desk.

"But how do they sound to the other fellow? All the smartness has oozed out before the missive has reached him. Only the ugly brutality remains.

"Read the letter over; admire it and yourself; read it to your clerk, to the office boy, to the cat, if you must show it to some one. Then tear it up, and write another.

"State your case as fully as you wish, and as strongly as it will stand. You can do all that and still be polite and friendly. Make no threats. Use no taunts. Keep out bravado and bluster."

"Some day there is going to be a terrible revolt in this country against the 'boiled shirt.' We are not going to wear boards on our bosoms surmounted by picket fences when the laundryman feels cross and cuts a saw-edge on our collars. American manhood is going to rise in its might some day and carefully drop the starched shirt over into the next lot where the tin cans are. To-day we have not the nerve to do it. We are under the domination of social and commercial propriety to such an extent that we do not dare to arise and proclaim our freedom in the name of liberty of person and freedom of conscience. Some day we will wear soft shirts and flowing collars and the man who wears a starched board on his bosom and a sheet iron ring around his neck will be known for the conceited and artificial fellow that he really is."—Minneapolis Journal.

THE WONDERFUL WORKS OF GOD.

The illuminating rays of the sun; the great central orb of the universe, sheds its splendor over the earth to warm, protect, and preserve the earth and its creatures, with all of its vegetable life, against the icy breezes that sweep down from the far North from off the ice mountains, which no man has ever yet been able to penetrate since the Lord placed the ten tribes of Israel beyond those icebergs for protection and preservation until he shall call for them. And while man has been striving to penetrate this far-off region for many years, and while many adventurous mortals have lost their lives in their efforts to accomplish this object, and while men may continue to strive to do so, yet it is clear to my mind that this will never be done till the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob shall call, O ye sons of Israel, return to the land of your inheritance, which I gave unto your fathers, and to their children after them. When this time comes, then those great frozen hills will flow down, and the way will be opened, and those long lost exiles will return to their land and be for ever established, when the wilderness and the solitary places shall blossom as the rose, when Lebanon shall have become a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest, and Jesus Christ shall come to take the throne of his father David, to reign henceforth even for evermore.

What a wonderful being our Father in heaven is! When I think of his goodness, mercy, and love that have been manifested that we, poor fellow creatures, might be redeemed from our lost conditions, and be brought back into his presence, and that in our day he has set his hand the second time to gather together his elect, to gather together the pure in heart from all countries and climes, to gather together in one all things which are in Christ, both in heaven and upon the earth, it makes my heart and soul glad. But when I begin to reflect upon the gifts and blessings that God has in store for his creatures, and that he has promised to his children in the beautiful gospel, which he has committed to the earth in our day, and for our good, the fact is forcibly brought to mind, that we who have taken upon ourselves his name are living (or at least a great many of us) beneath our privileges, so far as enjoying the gifts and blessings of the gospel is concerned, because of our failure to discharge our duty as we might if we could only get the consent of our minds to more fully consecrate ourselves to the Lord as we should.

I know that this latter-day work is true; that it is the work of the Lord; and, dear Saints, so do you. We have all been made to rejoice many times in this work, and in the hope that one day Zion would be redeemed, and the pure in heart be gathered together to meet our Savior, and enter into that beautiful rest to reign as kings and priests unto him, when he comes to reign as King of kings and Lord of lords.

We read in the inspired writings of the apostle Paul, 2 Corinthians 13:5, where he says to the saints in his day, "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith." We read in Acts 15:9, that it is by faith that our hearts are purified, and in Acts 26:18, that it is by faith we are sanctified. We read in Romans 3:28 and 5:1, and Galatians 2:16 and 3:24, that it is by faith that we are justified. We read in Romans 11:20 that it is by faith we stand; in Galatians 2:20 we read that the apostle Paul said that the life that he then lived in the flesh he lived by the faith of the Son of God, who loved him and gave himself for him. In Hebrews 11:6 we read that it is impossible to please God without faith. In James 2:17 we read that faith without works is dead, being alone. In James 2:22 we read that by works faith is made perfect. In James 2:24 we read that it is by works and faith that we are justified and not by faith only. This same apostle says in chapter 2, verse 18, "Show me your faith without your works, and I will show you my faith by my works." So, then, dear Saints, let us examine ourselves, whether we be in the faith.

If we want to be pure in heart, if we want to be sanctified, if we want to be able to stand when the Redeemer comes to claim his own, let us live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord, whether in ancient times or in this age, whenever and wherever he speaks. Let us strive to obey; and while we wait and wish and pray for the redemption of Zion, let us remember that the Lord has said through his servant, "Gather my Saints together, those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." Let us remember the law by which the means is to be placed in the hands of the Lord's servants to enable them to send and carry the gospel to the nations of the earth, which law is the law of tithing and consecration.

We are, it is true, many of us very poor in this world's goods, and in hard circumstances; but we read that our Savior, though he was rich, yet he became poor that we through his death and sufferings might be made rich. We hear him exclaiming, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the son of man hath not where to lay his head." And yet we hear him saying that he always did those things that pleased his Father; and for that reason he always knew that whatsoever he asked of the Father he would receive it. He left us an example, that we should follow his footsteps, and he said to the scribes and Pharisees, "Ye pay tithe of mint and annis and cummin and have omitted the weightier matter of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."

We read somewhere that no good thing will the Lord withhold from them that walk upright before him. I believe it has been stated by revelation in these last days that he that is tithed shall not be burned at the coming of our Lord. So, then, we see that tithing is a part of the perfect law of the Lord, and should be obeyed, as much so as any other part of it.

The people all over the world are organizing to try to better their condition.

They are enriching their land, inventing machinery to enable them to cultivate more of the soil, so as to make bountiful crops. Yet some possibly will not hear the word of the Lord, nor heed the perfect law when the Lord has said, in Malachi 3: 10-12:

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in my house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open up the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts. And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord of hosts.

And in the same chapter, verse 6, he says:

I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.

And Paul says:

Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever.—Hebrews 13: 8.

Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God.—Hebrews 12: 1, 2.

And having these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh, perfecting holiness in the Lord, and "receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save." Let us each strive to prove "what is that acceptable and perfect will of the Lord," and if possible place ourselves in that attitude that we will be worthy to receive the blessing he has in store for us. May we all hear and obey, is the prayer of your humble servant,

WILL THE GIFTS AND BLESSINGS CEASE, AS WE ATTAIN TOWARD PERFECTION?

The above, no doubt, will seem to be a strange question to propound to Latter Day Saints, or a peculiar caption for an article addressed to the HERALD readers; and we feel like apologizing for writing upon such a question, but recently we heard the position taken that the reason that the gifts and blessings are not enjoyed, in some localities, to that extent as formerly, may be because we are getting nearer perfection, and hence because of such advancement we do not need the manifestation of the gifts to the extent that in our earlier experience in the church. This position was taken in a public discourse delivered to a congregation of Latter Day Saints. The argument was made that miraculous manifestations received by an individual, or a people, were an indication of their ignorance and imperfection. The proof-text cited was in Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians:

Charity never faileth; but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away. For we know in part, and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away.—1 Corinthians 13: 8-10.

This is the text so often used by our enemies in the attempt to prove that the gifts and blessings have ceased, but it is used without avail.

It is apparent from the apostle's language that he understood that their prophesying, speaking in tongues, and their knowledge was only "in part." That that which was in part was to be done away at some time. That it should be done away when perfection comes, and not before.

Will the coming of perfection obliterate all prophecy, tongues, and knowledge? If so, then there will be no knowledge. But when I ask, Will we know less then than now? I am answered, "No; we will know more then than we do now." Very good, then. It is our partial or imperfect knowledge that is to vanish away at the coming of perfection, and shall be supplanted by knowledge complete. This being true, why will not the same apply to prophecy and tongues? That which is in part shall be done away, but it will be swallowed up of that which is whole—complete—perfect. All will then have the spirit of prophecy,—“for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy,” (Revelation 19: 10,) and surely we will have the “testimony of Jesus” when perfection comes—and there will be no need of one teaching another. (See Jeremiah 31: 34.) All will have the gift of tongues to the fullest extent, even to having a “pure language.” (Zechariah 3: 9.)

But please take notice that Paul did not say miracles should cease. Neither is there anything in any of God's revelations to man indicating that miracles should ever cease, either gradually, by reason of our development towards perfection, or abruptly by any means, save it be the unbelief of the people.

By referring to Isaiah 11: 15, 16 and 60: 19, 20 we can see that miracles—great ones too—are to be done at or near the time of the end. Note the following:

Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say, The Lord liveth, which brought the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, The Lord liveth, which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I had driven them; and they shall dwell in their own land.—Jeremiah 23: 7, 8.

Great miracles were done in leading Israel out of Egypt, but the miracles and events connected with leading Israel from the north countries, etc., will evidently be so much greater, that they will cease to use the old proverb, and take up a new one. This shows great miracles to be done in the future. Much more might be presented along this line, but the foregoing is sufficient.

But suppose that Paul had really said, or meant, that all gifts and blessings should cease when perfection comes, What then? Well, the time has not come yet. He does not say, As we advance towards perfection, so shall these things cease; but, "When that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away." Perfection has not come yet (perfection as referred to by Paul is certainly the same condition prophesied of in Isaiah 11:9 and Jeremiah 31:4), hence these gifts and blessings will continue—though in part—as it is God's will to bestow, and his children are worthy to receive. Better not be too anxious to conclude that they are not needed.

Now for a few quotations from the Book of Mormon, that will apply here:

For behold, I am God; and I am a God of miracles; and I will show unto the world that I am the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever; and I work not among the children of men, save it be according to their faith.—2 Nephi 11:18, small edition.

This represents God's unchangeability in regard to miracles. He is a "God of miracles," "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." And it also teaches us that if we are not enjoying spiritual favors, it may be accredited to our lack of faith, rather than to our "great advancement towards perfection."

Again:

And there was not any man who could do a miracle in the name of Jesus, save he were cleansed every whit from his iniquity.—3 Nephi 4:1.

Now hear Moroni:

And again I speak unto you, who deny the revelations of God, and say they are done away, that there are no revelations, nor prophecies, nor gifts, nor healing, nor speaking with tongues, and the interpretation of tongues. Behold I say unto you, He that denieth these things, knoweth not the gospel of Christ; yea, he has not read the scriptures; if so, he does not understand them. For do we not read that God is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever; and in him there is no variableness, neither shadow of changing. And now, if ye have imagined up unto yourselves a god who doth vary, and in him there is shadow of changing, then have ye imagined up unto yourselves a god who is not a God of miracles."—Book of Mormon 4:6.

In harmony with the foregoing we cite the reader to a revelation given December, 1830:

And it shall come to pass, that there shall be a great work in the land, even among the Gentiles, for their folly and their abominations shall be made manifest, in the eyes of all people; for I am God, and mine arm is not shortened, and I will show miracles, signs and wonders, unto all those who believe on my name. And whoso shall ask in my name, in faith, they shall cast out devils; they shall heal the sick; they shall cause the blind to receive their sight, and the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak, and the lame to walk: and the time speedily cometh that great things are to be shown forth unto the children of men; but without faith shall not anything be shown forth except desolations upon Babylon, the same which has made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.—Doctrine and Covenants 34:3.

Here we find that the Lord plainly declares that he will show miracles, signs, and wonders, not to the "ignorant and imperfect," but unto those who believe on his name. So then it matters not who we are, if we do not receive any of those things, it can clearly be seen where we stand. Again:

Wherefore, beware, lest ye are deceived, and that ye may not be deceived, seek ye earnestly the best gifts, always remembering for what they are given; for verily I say unto you, They are given for the benefit of those who love me and keep my commandments, [not for the ignorant and imperfect ones. H. E. M.] and him that seeketh so to do, that all may be benefited that seeketh or that asketh of me, that asketh, and not for a sign that he may consume it upon his lusts.—Doctrine and Covenants 46:4.

The above needs no comment. Dear Saints, let us be consistent. And should we find that in some respects we do not enjoy the gifts of the Spirit to that extent as formerly, let us not excuse ourselves, and make the sad mistake of saying that it is because we are not so ignorant as we were, and that we are more perfect than when we enjoyed those blessed favors bestowed by the Spirit of God, but rather let us examine ourselves, and our standing before the Lord, in the light of his word, and see if the cause can not be traced to our lack of faith and worthiness.

THE RESURRECTION.

I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.—John 11:25.

More than seven hundred and forty years before the crucifixion, the prophet Isaiah testified that the Savior would make his grave "with the rich in his death." (Isaiah 53:9.)

The Jews who took part in his crucifixion desired to "make his grave with the wicked," which was to cast him out without burial, with criminals. But they were foiled in this design by one of their own wealthy rulers; Joseph of Arimathea, who, in this darkest hour for the followers of Christ, stepped out boldly and took his stand for the crucified Savior. Joseph had great influence with Pilate, and begged from him permission to take the body from the cross and give it honorable burial. Pilate, who was conscience-stricken for condemning the Lord, readily gave the desired permission. Tender, loving hands took the Savior from the cruel cross, and bore his body to the new tomb which had never been used before, and there he was laid, thus literally fulfilling the statement of the prophet.

Although poor while in life, his body at death was laid in the new rock-hewn tomb of the wealthy ruler of Israel. No greater honor could have been shown to the dead than was accorded to Jesus by Joseph and Nicodemus.

Of his rest in the tomb we read in the beautiful language of David:

Therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth: my flesh also shall rest in hope. For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell [the grave]; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption.—Psalm 16:9, 10.

In the hour of death the faith of Christ took hold upon the promises of God. He laid down his life in the full assurance that he would soon hear the call, "Jesus, thou Son of God, thy Father calls thee." Solomon had said, "The heaven of heavens can not contain him."—2 Chronicles 2:6. Paul, speaking of his death, said: "It was not possible that he should be holden of it."—Acts 2:24.

Early on the first day of the week, a bright and powerful angel appeared at the tomb; the Roman guard fell as dead men before his glorious brightness; the stone was rolled away and at the command of the heavenly messenger the bands of death were broken, and the Savior came forth a mighty conqueror. Henceforth the resurrection of the dead was a reality. It is to this resurrection scene that the apostles looked as the sure promise of the future reward of all the faithful. Says Christ: "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."—John 11:25.

Christ died "that through death he might destroy him that had power of death, that is, the devil." (Hebrews 2:14.) Satan claimed all who had fallen in death as his subjects. The resurrection of Christ broke the power of death. From that time the Devil knew that his hold on the human family would sometime be broken, and that his days were numbered.

Paul, looking forward to the general resurrection which is to take place at the second coming of Christ, describes it in the following words:

For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words.—1 Thessalonians 4:16-18.

Our future reward is placed at the time of the resurrection, for the Savior says, "For thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just."—Luke 14:14.

Paul bases his entire hope for future life on the resurrection of the dead. He says if there is no resurrection, "then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." But this is not possible, "for since by man came death by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." "For the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible and we shall be changed." (1 Corinthians 15:12-22, 52.)

Isaiah looked beyond the grave when he testified:

Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead.—Isaiah 26:19.

Job was willing to rest his future hope on the resurrection:

If a man die, shall he live again? all the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come. Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee: thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands.—Job 14:14, 15.

Where was Job to wait? Here is his own answer:

If I wait the grave is mine house: I have made my bed in the darkness.—Job 17:13.

He that conquered the grave shall come to this earth again, and at that time "the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live." (John 5:25.)

May each and every one of us live in such a manner before God that we may dwell with him at his second coming.

BOONE, Iowa.

THE CHURCH IN SCOTLAND IN AN EARLY DAY.

Soon after the establishment of the church in America, Joseph Smith sent two missionaries to Scotland. When they landed in the city of Glasgow, one says to the other, "Here we are, strangers in a strange land, not a penny in our pockets, and no friend to meet us." A man then stepped up to them and said, "Gentlemen, you may not have a penny in your pockets, but you are not without a friend; come home with me." The Lord had shown this man, in a vision, those men coming in a ship, and what he was to do for them, so he was there to meet them. They went home with him, told the gospel story, and that man and all his household were baptized. Thus the Lord had prepared the way for the good of all, and the good news spread from city to town and village, till thousands obeyed and rejoiced in the light revealed. And of a truth it could be said, The Lord worked with them, confirming the word with signs following the believers; for many were the miracles done in the name of the Lord. The blind received their sight; the deaf had their hearing restored; and even the dead were made to live again.

It would be too long to write it all; but two remarkable cases of healing are worthy of mention. A man was carried home from the mine so badly hurt that the doctor and three of his assistants said they could do nothing for him. He was as good as dead; but through the power of God he was restored hale and strong. A young man had his hand so badly smashed between the bumpers of some railway wagons that the doctors said it could not heal, it would have to be cut off. "Nay," said the young man, "I could not do without my hand." Through the anointing with oil in the name of the Lord, the man had his hand restored to use again. An infidel used to tell this story: That he was at work in a shaft, digging down for coal. They had got so deep that the dirt and rocks they dug had to be hoisted up to the surface by steam. One day they had got ready to blast, lighted the fuse, and given the signal to be hoisted up out of the way of the blast, but behold the engine would not work. The Saint looked at the infidel and said, "Are you afraid?" The infidel said he was. "Then," said the Saint, "get into that corner and I will tumble the hoisting-tub over you." So the infidel sat down in the corner, the Saint tumbled the tub over him, then sat down on the tub and sang, "We are the true born sons of Zion." The blast went off, the rock showered all around, the Saint was not harmed. This infidel could not understand how a man in the face of death could sit on a tub and sing, nor could he ever see that it was a fulfillment of the words of Christ, wherein it is written that we have a joy which the world knows not of.

And truly in those days there were many joys, and much cause for thanks and praise to God, for the wondrous gifts of his love.

None were rich as to the riches of men in this world, nor were any learned as to the learning of men. Nearly all who received the gospel were from the ranks of the sons of toil, fishers, weavers, laborers, and miners. Many were despised among men because of their poverty. Those were the days of simplicity. The conferences were a counseling together for the spread of the gospel. They would volunteer to go two and two to live in a town or village, where they could find work at their own occupation; thus they worked by day, and preached, and talked gospel in the evenings. Sometimes it would be a priest and teacher, for in those days both teachers and deacons preached, and were active men in the branches. And thus the gospel was spread from town to village, till there were three district conferences, and thousands rejoiced in the glad tidings.

There was no system of tithes then, but if a brother or sister was out of work, or in trouble, the teachers reported the trouble. If the deacons had no offerings in hand, there would then be a chipping in of sixpences, and shillings, till the one out of work had equal wages. Yes, they lived together, worked together, and were glad to aid and receive help one from another; and in this way their love for each other was truly manifest.

What might have been no human can tell, had not the blighting blast come from Utah. Yes, the glad sound of the gospel came to them from America. Surely, no evil could come! They too readily accepted the change, and polygamy, blood atonement, Adam our father and god, were taught as the higher principles, and the cry was, "Gather home to Zion; there you will receive your washings, anointings, and endowments, in God's temple." Then the cry of tithing, "A tenth of all you earn" to support the tramps from Utah. The native elders were set aside, and in their place were the men with the holy garments, which had a hole in the knee and one in the breast, and what wonderful tales and needless lies they told. Half of the church fell away and would not accept the teachings of Brigham Young. Since that time till now the name of Saint has become a hiss of scorn among the people. How can it be otherwise, for there are the tramps from Utah! Some of them confess to two or more wives, and polygamy, and all things taught by Brigham Young, are taught there to this day. There have been some attempts to establish the Reorganized Church, but as yet it has little success because of the wickedness of some, and the lack of wisdom in others. Just what may be can not be told.

Some have said that the Scots of to-day are a degenerated, whisky-drinking race. Four years ago I spent a three-years' sojourn in Scotland, and I can truly say that I found the people of to-day as honest, just, and upright as are good men anywhere, and temperance societies flourish in all the towns and villages. In the town where I was born is a large temperance society, all of my kindred are members, some of them active leaders, and most all of the young men and maids were members. From my kin I learned much that was good, and I am sure that the Scots of to-day are as good advocates of right-living as were their fathers. I saw no drunk person in that town, nor a young man or maid drunk, all the years of my sojourn. It is true Scotland to-day has a large foreign population at work in mines and ironworks who do drink, and they are, just like the Italians and others in America, living by themselves. I have seen on a Saturday evening in a mining-camp in Montana a big wagon-load of strong drink, all two horses could draw, taken up to the foreigners' part of town. We knew they got drunk, fought, and even killed each other; but we never said those were the American people.

One of my joys was the street-preachers in Scotland. Yes, in every town and village they were there rain or shine, at the time appointed. Nearly all had fine music and good singers, and just listen to their testimony of what the gracious Lord, the Christ, the Savior of men had done for them! It is true it was after the traditions of their fathers, and I was led to think, "Now what acceptance have those with the Lord," and I was given to understand that they were just as acceptable before the Lord as we were, and would be so till such time as contention would cease and jealousies and pride among the elders be set aside, and they obeyed the command, "Love ye one another, even as I have loved you." I have oftentimes sorrowed because I do know of this pride and these jealous contentions; but I was glad and greatly comforted to know the Lord was no respecter of persons, but that in every nation those who sought him and worked righteousness were accepted; and that every one is rewarded for his work for good among men.

I have long been satisfied that Zion can not be built up in accord with the systems of men, and have been comforted to know that the time is at hand when the Lord shall set up and establish peace, and a place of safety for those of the righteous among all nations. Then shall the righteous of all nations gather home to Zion with songs of everlasting joy.

W. PENMAN.

ODESSA, Missouri, May 31, 1905.

TOBACCO-USING.

I often thought I would contribute a few thoughts on the subject of tobacco, and the results of its continued use; and after reading a resolution introduced by the Fifth Quorum of Elders, and adopted by General Conference, April 17, 1905, instructing the board of publication of our church periodicals to cease the publication of a remedy for the cure of the tobacco-habit, commonly called Quit-to-bac, I am now more impressed than ever to write, and if any one can or will profit by my experience, to God be the praise. I will say first that I heartily indorse the resolution and its adoption. I was a veteran and a slave of the tobacco-habit for about twenty-two years. I used it in every conceivable manner. First I began smoking cigarettes, and would chew occasionally. Before a great while I became so addicted to the use of it that the cigarettes did not satisfy the great desire I had for it, and my boyhood days being spent upon a ranch and my surroundings being so that I could not indulge in the cigar, I took up the pipe-habit. For several years I kept up a constant chewing and smoking.

When I began shipping stock in the Northern and Eastern States I dropped my pipe and took up the cigar, still retaining the chewing part of it. It became such a habit with me, and I used it to such an extent that it became part of my nature. Finally my health began to fail and I then began to realize my condition, and to try to stop using it; but I soon found that I had something to do to master the situation. About that time I joined the church, and naturally wanted to get rid of all my bad habits. My health kept failing me and I tried all the harder to quit using tobacco, until finally I saw that it was beyond the power of man in my condition to quit it. The doctors told me that I must quit it or die. I tried with all my might and strength to quit it, realizing it was a filthy habit, and that my life depended on it. So I promised myself several times that I would quit it, live or die. If I went four to six hours without it I would become a complete wreck, great drops of perspiration would stand out on my brow, and I would actually lose all control of myself, and of course go back to using it.

During all the battle that I had I was a constant churchgoer; and I want to say right here that I had some of as hard sermons preached to me about using tobacco as could be preached; and from personal experience, and for the good of others, I would say to the priesthood to never try to whip one in line who is addicted to the tobacco-habit, with the spirit of man, but be an example to them, go in the lead, have patience with them, pray with them that they might receive of Almighty God that Spirit that will enable them to overcome; for I tell you, brethren, it is beyond the power of man to overcome it when he gets in the condition I was in.

I commenced praying to God for help, and I prayed without ceasing for months and months. I promised God that if he would help me to overcome, I would never partake of it again, and that I would serve him the rest of my life; and I can say that just as soon as I got myself in the proper condition and trusted to God, he came to my rescue and that on the fifteenth day of last April, one year ago, I laid it down without any trouble at all. I continued right on with my office-work and have been blessed continually in my efforts. I have long since learned that the promises of God are sure and steadfast, and that if any one will follow after the Spirit that is in this great latter-day work he will never partake of the evil things of this world. I would like to convey to the world my thoughts in words upon this subject as it were in thunder tones and warn the fathers, the mothers, and sisters to not neglect their dear ones who are going off after the tobacco-habit.

As a result of my getting rid of it I will say that my health has greatly improved until I am now in better health and weigh more than I have in several years. And to those who use tobacco I will say by experience that the greatest remedy or helper is Almighty God, the great Physician of all. Take the matter to God in prayer, and just as soon as you go to him in earnestness and in humility, just that sure he will come to your rescue, and you will be a better man physically and you will be a better man financially, and best of all better fitted and prepared to do God's will.

A PETRIFIED FOREST COVERING THOUSANDS OF ACRES.

Lying in the eastern part of Arizona, scarcely outside the borders of the Painted Desert, and glistening like a field of hugh, rare gems under the rays of the seldom-clouded sun, is the famous Petrified Forest of the United States. It is a parched and almost barren expanse, covering several thousand acres, strewn with prostrated monuments to epochs in the history of vegetation otherwise unchronicled.

To what age these petrified logs owe their origin, and of what epoch and evolutionary processes they mutely tell, is unknown, but their antiquity is well testified to by their appearance.

The opinion, doubtless well founded, is that at some time in the misty past a large forest of stately pines grew here. Years passed, and in the course of time they were prostrated by some unknown force, probably by eruptive volcanoes, to the earth, and over them drifted snow-like layers of sand. Next over the area spread the waters of an inland sea, and all traces of the once green forest were crowded into complete oblivion. After another lapse of unreckoned time the sea vanished, and craters belched forth volcanic spume, to serve as a mantle to the ocean bed. The forest of the past slept, forgotten. In the ever-changing contour of the earth's surface, Nature is not always building. Material is indestructible and nonincreasable. Consequently, to follow the periods in which the mantle over the forest was being builded, there must come a reversing time. It came. Rains fell, and as the water hurried toward lower levels, it gnawed the mass and labored constantly toward the resurrection of the pines. Erosion was at work, and after centuries it has accomplished its object over the greater portion of the area—the logs from the ancient forest are revealed to modern eyes. But how changed they are! As they reposed in their grave, the sybaritic chemistry of Nature transformed them from sappy and sapless wood into logs of stone.

Such is briefly the conjectured history of the Petrified Forest, which, having recently been set aside as a Government reserve, is divided into an eastern and western section, respectively containing about two thousand and three thousands acres of practically valueless land. Such has been Nature's work in the creation of the garden of monuments to ancient vegetation, which hundreds of people from all parts of the world are annually flocking to view.

Leaving the Santa Fe Railroad at either Holbrook or Adamana, the traveler engages a carriage, and starts southward toward the forest. The trip at the start is uninteresting, for there is naught to view save a limitless plain; but after riding a few miles, stray bits of petrified wood sparkling by the roadside begin to attract his attention. In a few minutes he espies larger and larger blocks. Presently there appear trunks of trees, then huge logs, some more than a hundred feet long, tumbled about in confusion, or lying just as they were bared by the action of the elements in the process of resurrection.

The traveler is now in the Petrified Forest. In every direction are to be seen pieces of petrified wood, ranging from the size of a toy marble to blocks and logs eight and nine feet in diameter. Some are still partly buried beneath shale, and occasionally from the side and near the top of some mesa, with which the ancient ocean bed is dotted, projects the end of a log. Here is an excellent opportunity to study the effect of erosion. The mesas, many towering sentinel-like, are composed of shale, clay, and sandstone, and down their sloping sides wind many crevices. When it rains here, which is seldom now, water trickles down these crevices, and thus small particles of the mesa's substance are borne away. By pondering upon this sight, one is given a faint idea of the number of years that have passed since this thick blanket began to erode.

Stepping from the carriage and strolling about, one notices segments of logs, almost always broken by transverse fracture, representing nearly every conceivable color, and with all its different shades. Among them are black, red, white, yellow, blue, purple, and lavender; and each piece shows some resemblance to wood, though all are as hard as adamant. There are sections that appear as if decayed, and piles of smaller pieces that look enough like chips to tempt one to try a match on them; but picking up one of these bits, he finds it almost as heavy as so much lead and as dense as a piece of flint. The mineralogist, analyzing these fragments, finds in them chalcedony, topaz, carnelian, onyx, agate, and amethyst; and if questioned, will advance the theory that each substance represented owes its existence to the state of preservation of the log at the time of its petrification, and to the stage it reached in compactness prior to being unearthed. The Government, since it has declared the forest a public reserve, prohibits the removal by the visitor of any large blocks, though any one is at liberty to make a collection of smaller pieces as mementoes.

In another section of the forest the visitor finds the famous natural bridge; a huge, petrified tree-trunk spanning a canyon-like ravine fifty feet wide—a bridge of agate and jasper overhanging the only clump of living trees within the forest's borders. Each end of the log is imbedded in shale and sandstone, leaving one hundred feet of it either wholly or partly exposed. How much of its length still remains completely buried is unknown, but each year the action of the elements brings more into view. So far, time has graciously spared the integrity of this natural curiosity, but in the last few years the log has begun to show signs of yielding to the natural inclination of petrified trees, and in several places transverse cracks appear. Fearing that the bridge would tumble to destruction, the Government has recently had two stone abutments erected under it, making of it a bridge of three spans. This no doubt will preserve it for at least several years yet.

While there is a similarity between the different divisions of the forest, a drive to all portions of it will be found interesting, despite the driver's assertions to the contrary. During a recent visit to the forest, I insisted on acting as my own guide, and as a result several places hitherto unexplored were visited. At one of these almost secluded spots I found a deposit of petrified sage-brush roots—indisputable evidence that the chemicals which had worked such wonders on the pine-logs were equally as powerful in effect on other fibrous substance.

Here is also study for the ethnologist. Scattered about over the area covered by the Petrified Forest are the remains of a prehistoric race of people—the fast-disappearing remains of that race of people known as Aztecs, that once inhabited Mexico and the southwestern part of the United States. There are crumbling walls of ancient habitations, broken bits of curiously painted pottery, and on the large rocks of a near-by cliff strange and as yet uninterpreted hieroglyphics. Drifting sand has nearly buried the old walls, but for the opportunity of studying this ancient masonry many of them have recently been resurrected. Between these old remains and the not far distant dwellings of the Pueblo Indians of to-day there is noticed a striking similarity, and the belief, now seldom disputed, is that the latter are the descendants of the Aztecs. That such is a correct belief in the matter of genealogy is evidenced also by a similarity in the pottery and the arrow-heads found here. Instead of flint, however, petrified wood is used for these arrow-points, and it evidently made good ones.—Charles Alma Byers, in the Scientific American, May 13, 1905.

THE DEAD SPEAKETH.

The hunter of the hidden treasure of the past and the lore of the Red Men might find something worth his while in Belvidere Township. For twenty-five years the plowmen have raised grain and corn over an Indian cemetery of considerable proportions. This mound, in which the bodies of the Red Men, their squaws and children, had lain undisturbed until the advent of the white man, is near the Baggs School-house.

M. Michelson, who resides near there, was in town Saturday, and from him a Democrat reporter learned some facts not generally known to the county.

More than one hundred skeletons have already been unearthed and the manner in which they were found would indicate that the burial took place at or near the same time.

Most of the skeletons crumbled when the air and light got to them, but a close examination has shown that some, at least, were massacred or killed in battle. The skeleton of a child was found with flint imbedded in the skull, and a few other marks have been discovered that indicate that death was caused through violence.

The bodies have generally been found in layers, with heads together. Three such layers have been found, with a considerable quantity of earth between the layers. In Indiana, Ohio, and New York, Indian burying-grounds, constructed in much the same manner, have been found, and have given museums and libraries some glimpses into the habits of a people whose history is not written.

The relics unearthed in the Belyidere mound consist of some crude crockery, stone battle-axes and flints, and of these only a few have been found, and these show that the Indians who inhabited the banks of the Little Sioux River of this county used only the weapons of a primitive people, such as the Indians used when first discovered on the Atlantic coast.

It may be that a more careful search by persons experienced in looking for the buried history of the Red Man's past may find something in the Indian mounds of Belvidere Township that would shed some light as to the people, their manners and lives, who passed from these prairies in the evolution of the past that a better people might grow up in their stead.—Onawa (Iowa) Democrat, May 23, 1905.

OBEEDIENCE.

Doctor Trumbull in "Hints on Child Training" says: "Training and teaching must go on together in the wise upbringing of any child. The one will fail of its own best end if not accompanied by the other. He who knows how to teach a child, is not competent for the oversight of a child's education unless he also knows how to train a child. . . . It has been said that the essence of teaching is causing another to know. It may similarly be said that the essence of training is causing another to do. Teaching gives knowledge; fills the mind; shapes the habits, and brings to the child that which he did not have before. Training gives skill, shapes the habits, and enables the child to make use of that which is already his possession. . . . Training is a possibility long before teaching is.

"Child-training includes the directing and controlling and shaping of a child's feelings and thoughts and words and ways in every sphere of his life-course, from his birth to the close of his childhood. And that this is no unimportant part of a child's upbringing, no intelligent mind will venture to question."

Just here will it not occur to every thoughtful parent and teacher that the foundation for any successful training is obedience upon the part of the child? Can there be successful training when obedience does not exist?

In this world we stand related to claims made upon us by God and by society. The latter are largely the result or outgrowth of the former. "Fear God and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man."—Ecclesiastes 12:13. In the commandments of God are embraced the principles of conduct intended to govern us in every relation of life, and of this principle of obedience God says, "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams."—1 Samuel 15:22. Nothing will excuse in us the want of obedience and no repentance, however sincere upon our part, can stand between us and the consequences of our disobedience. Many times in the course of life this lesson has come home to us in bitterness and tears. Knowing, then, that this principle of obedience is of such vast importance, is, in short, one of the eternal verities by which the universe itself is upheld, why are we so remiss in heeding it ourselves and in teaching it to our children? Obedience to the laws of God makes us honored members of his government, citizens of his kingdom, and joint-heirs to an incorruptible inheritance. Obedience to the laws of the land will cause the poorest and humblest of its citizens to be honored for their sterling worth and integrity, while, on the other hand, disobedience is always followed by loss and many times brings dishonor as well. Why, then, as wise parents and teachers, do we not realize the importance of this great principle, this eternal law which, in its operation, preserves the harmony of the greatest as of the minute works of God?

"It is a mistake of many parents," says Trumbull, "to suppose that their chief duty is in loving their children, rather than in loving and training them; that they are faithfully to show their children what they ought to do, rather than to make them do it. The training power of the parent is, as a rule, sadly undervalued. . . . Children can be trained in almost any direction. Their natural tendencies may be so curbed and guided as no longer to show themselves in disagreeable prominence. It is a parent's privilege, and it is a parent's duty, to make his children, by God's blessing, to be and to do what they should be and do rather than what they would like to be and do. If indeed this were not so, a parent's mission would be sadly limited in scope, and diminished in importance and preciousness. The parent who does not recognize the possibility of training his children as well as instructing them, misses one of his highest possibilities as a parent, and fails of his most important work for his children. It is a sad thought and bitter when it comes to the heart of a parent that the life of his child has been a failure largely because of his own remissness in training him to win success. Obedience is manly and this together with its absolute necessity should be taught the child from infancy, because it is the foundation of all training and upon no other can the superstructure of a noble character be built."

"It is," continues this same author, "largely a child's training that decides the question whether he be gentle or rough in his ways, considerate or thoughtless in his bearing towards others; whether he is captious or tractable within the bounds of due restraint; whether he is methodical and precise or unsystematic and irregular in the discharge of his daily duties; whether he is faithful in his studies or neglectful of them; whether he is industrious or indolent in his habits; whether the tastes which he indulges in his diet and dress and reading and amusements and companionships are refined or are low. In all these things his course indicates what his training has been; or it suggests the training that he needed, but has missed."

If all this be true, and we believe that no one will gainsay that it is, how important then it becomes that parents should see to it that they command the obedience of their children. All through life obedience is to be rendered. There is no position free from responsibility, no delegated power which is not held accountable to a power higher than itself and hence the boy can only win his way to positions of trust and honor through the training of strict obedience. If he has not received this training in his youth he will have it to learn in his manhood or else be compelled to accept of such meager respect and trust as is meted out to the unreliable and irresponsible. In the words of another, "One who has not learned to obey can hardly find a pleasant or satisfactory position in a world that both physically and socially is held together by obedience." President Porter, of Yale, said, in substance, that "the chief advantage of the college curriculum is, that it trains a young man to do what he ought to do, when he ought to do it, whether he wants to do it or not."

And ought not the question to come home with force to each parent and teacher, Is not the training of that home or that school which does less than this to a large extent a failure?

Questions on Reading for July.

What ought to accompany teaching in the bringing up of a child? What has been said to be the essence of teaching? What may be called the essence of training? What does teaching do for a child? What effect has training? What may be said to be the foundation of any successful training? Can you cause a child to do, if he will not obey? What is said in Ecclesiastes 12:13 of the duty of man? What does the Lord say of obedience in 1 Samuel 15:22? What is the result of obedience to the laws of God? What is the result of obedience to the laws of the land? By what, in either case, is disobedience always followed? Can repentance free us entirely from the consequences of disobedience? Is the training power of parents fully valued? What is said by Trumbull of the mistake made by many parents? What is the parent's privilege and duty in the training of his children? What are some of the questions to be decided for a child by his training? Is there ever a time in life when obedience is not necessary? In business life, by whom will the pleasant and satisfactory positions be held? What did President Porter, of Yale, declare to be the chief advantage of the college curriculum? What may be said of every home and every school that does not do the same?

Program for July Meetings of Daughters of Zion.

Hymn No. 80. Prayer. Reading of "Half hours with parents and teachers" No. 16. Discussion and questions. Paper, "Should parents compel obedience from their children?" Vocal music. Paper, "Ought we to insist on our children obeying us immediately?" Address, "How may parents gain obedience to their commands in the spirit as well as in the letter?" The above papers should be discussed if the time will permit. (A good idea is to assign the discussion to one or two who will lead out; others will then follow.) Closing exercises.

Notice.

The advisory board has decided to publish the readings for local organizations in leaflet form as well as in the Home Column, and the July reading will be so issued. They can be purchased at the HERALD Office for twenty-five cents per hundred, or fifteen cents for fifty, and ten cents for twenty-five. It is hoped that the sisters will find these leaflets useful, not only in their local meetings, but for distribution among their friends as well. Do not delay in sending in your orders for them.

Prayer Union.

Mrs. Nettie Woodworth desires an interest in the prayers of the Prayer Union that if it be God's will she may be healed and be blessed with good health. Pray that she may be led to see the truth as it is in Christ.

The Review.

We have noted with deep regret that some schools have abandoned the general or superintendent's review, for which they assign various reasons. One will say he has not time for it. Another that there is no interest taken in it by the scholars. Still another has trouble to keep down the discussions that almost cause a disagreement in the school. And others will have this or that reason to offer.

TIME FOR REVIEW.

Yes, you have time for a review, plenty of it. If your school has but sixty minutes for the whole session, use thirty minutes of it for class work and five minutes of it for review. This will leave twenty-five minutes of it for opening and closing exercises which, while a little short, will suffice very nicely if you are prompt and active. Reviews should run from three to seven minutes. All that needs be done can be done in that time if you are thoroughly alive in the work and try to influence the rest to be the same.

THE INTEREST IN THE REVIEW.

If there is not an interest in the review, there is a reason for it. Maybe you do not prepare your review well enough before going to the session. No one can conduct a good review who is not prepared for it. He might do fairly well or even quite well, but could do much better if properly prepared for it.

Your interest will lag unless you are full of life and energy. The more enthusiastic you are in your work the more you may expect from your scholars. Enthusiasm and earnestness are two strong elements of success. Kindness and patience are also strong elements of success in our church-work.

You can destroy interest in the review by going too much into detail. The review should touch only the salient points and focus them to the central truth of the lesson. This can be done without all the details of the lesson. These details are supposed to have been canvassed in the study of the lesson or in the recitation and should not be repeated.

Avoid protracted discussions in general review. They seldom do any good and often much harm. They only lead to disorder and are a great damage to the school that permits them. When you see that a subject is terminating in a discussion, dismiss it and go on with the next. Protracted discussions should never be permitted in either the class or in the review.

HOW TO PROCEED.

Just how to proceed in all cases would be impossible to tell.

But a very good method to modify to your needs and individuality is about as follows: First, gain the attention. Beginning with the smallest scholars, have some question for all to answer or some concert exercise. We usually have them repeat their golden text several times. This "breaks the ice" and gets them to talking almost without thinking about it. You can usually proceed then without difficulty. Review the smaller ones first, next the larger, following till you have noticed all. Then after you are about done with the older scholars, return to your smaller ones and close with them. The golden text or memory verse makes a good concert exercise for closing the review.

HAVE YOU ABANDONED REVIEW?

Returning again to the thought of the abandoned review, we would urge that you try it again, profiting by the above suggestions as best you can. Make an earnest and persistent effort to interest the school. If you fail once, try again. If you do this and succeed only in part, you will add much to the efficacy of your school work.

AN EXCERPT.

The following from Doctor Wayland Hoyt in his "Sunday-school news and notes" in the New Century Teachers' Monthly on the subject of "Reviews" is right to the point here. It is one explanation of why the review fails. Read it carefully and see if there is not a point in it for you:

"WHY THE REVIEW GOES AND WHY IT DOESN'T."

"One superintendent says he always keeps ahead and lays out a complete plan for his review. He says:

"I aim always to utilize every element that can be brought into activity, not only on review Sunday, but at every other session of the school. The result is that I never lack for helpers on special occasions. It is a principle with me never to do anything myself that I can induce others to do. The clear evidences of growth on the part of pupils and teachers are a delight to me."

"This superintendent tells thus of another:

"My friend Smith is superintendent of a large school in the western part of our city; a busy man, with many engagements and many cares; his Sunday-school work seems to burden him, and I sometimes wonder why he does not either master it or else get out from under the burden it seems to entail. We met by chance one Saturday afternoon, each having a half-holiday from business. Being fully ready for my own review service, I quite naturally asked him about his plan for the next afternoon."

"'Plan!'" he answered briskly, "'I haven't any plan. Those pesky reviews come so often that they make me tired. I haven't had time to think of what I can do to-morrow.'"

"I said suggestively, 'You have this afternoon of course.'"

"'Not a bit of it,'" he replied almost sharply; "'that big ball game comes off this afternoon, and I've been counting on it all the week! Couldn't miss that, you know.'"

"'Well, this evening, perhaps,'" I said, a little timidly.

"'Wife and I have a box at the Academy for this evening. Big concert. Great attraction. Sha'n't get home much before midnight, probably.'" He spoke as if the case was now closed and we turned to other subjects of mutual interest."

"Is it not perfectly plain why reviews are 'pesky' in the one school and a delight in the other?"

Pure Word of God.

Young souls immortal claim your constant tending;
To these be true.
Be sure to give the bread from heaven descending—
Naught else will do.
Mix not with earthly things, that cause distraction,
The bread divine;
The Word itself has infinite attraction,
Yet—break it fine.
Nor let them lose, for any selfish reason,
The measure due;
Remember, for their portion in due season
They look to you.

Points for the Teacher.

The resume of "good points in our teachers," as shown by their lives are, 1, Love for God and his Book, the Holy Bible;

2 Diligence in its study; 3 Enthusiasm in teaching it; 4 Punctuality in attendance; 5 Reverence for his house and his service; 6 Love and prayer for the children, and 7 Willing service in all possible ways for the successful promotion of his cause.—New Century Teachers' Monthly.

Debt.

"Poverty is bad enough, but there is an abyss that is far deeper, and that is debt. If you own but one coat, and that is patched and on your back; but one pair of hose and they are darned beyond recognition, you can yet hold your head high as that of any honest man. But if you owe a debt that you can not pay, why, then you are some man's slave till you are freed from the incumbrance. Half the unhappiness of the world comes not from poverty, but from debts incurred that might have been avoided."—Selected.

Editors Herald: I have received my letter of appointment and entered upon my duties. I am now engaged in open-air preaching and delivering tracts from house to house. I am making all the friends I can to the work, and no enemies if I can help it.

I visited a gentleman with tracts this last week, and it appears that our Utah friends had been there. So when I presented the tract to him, he said we wanted the hose-pipe (water-pipe) turned upon us for seeking to have people believe such stuff as the story of the Book of Mormon, etc. He said, "I want nothing to do with the 'trash.'" But I stuck to him, and in a little while offered him our tracts which he had before refused. He took them from me, and said, "I will read them." We still talked together, and when I had been with him about an hour, I gained his consent to read the Book of Mormon. He says, "I will read it, but I will never believe it." "That will be all right," said I, "you will at least know what you are rejecting; and further, you will know when you have read the Book of Mormon, that its contents can only be commended by all right-minded people."

May God bless the work and all the workers, and give success to the cause we so much love. With love to all Saints, I am,

Your brother,

W. H. GREENWOOD.

DES MOINES, Iowa, June 5, 1905.

Dear Herald: The district conference was held here June 3 and 4, with Religio and Sunday-school conventions on the 1st and 2d. The Religio convention, while not largely attended, was of interest, and more Religio work will be done the remainder of the year than during the first part. The Sunday-school convention of Friday was an interesting and profitable session in every way. A fair representation of the school workers from the different parts of the district were present. The business-session of the morning was followed in the afternoon by the reading of papers and discussion on various lines of school-work, and the district superintendents were authorized to appoint those in charge of the different departments of the work in the district. The main thought and work of the convention was to point out the real need of the school-work that greater progress could be made, and the most successful way of doing this is to better prepare those in charge of the several lines of work, as teachers and officers, by having normal work properly conducted for the benefit of those needing it, that including all. A special effort along these lines will be made during the year.

The conference session opened at ten o'clock Saturday morning, and Bro. Heman C. Smith was chosen to preside, assisted by J. F. Mintun. The attendance at the conference was very large, and the different parts of the district well represented. The routine business of the conference was dispatched with promptness, and a large amount of new business transacted. All the reports were of the most encouraging nature, and every-thing indicated that the work was making progress, and very rapid progress in some parts. The district now has two tents, and from the calls for tent-work already on hand it seems that both of them will be in constant use during the summer. It is hoped that sufficient laborers will come into the field to occupy in every opportunity offered. This is a splendid opportunity for the local brethren, and several of them will likely do considerable work in the ministerial field during the year.

Our district president, S. K. Sorensen, was absent, and at this time has possibly reached his native land, Denmark. His earnest and efficient work in the district for several years past will be missed during his absence. We all wish for him a safe return.

Our aged and honored brother, W. C. Nirk, was again chosen to serve as district president. Two years ago Bro. Nirk refused all district work, after thirty-six years of service, and retired to private life, as we all thought to rest from his labors and enjoy the evening of a well-spent life. The Divine Spirit made it known that he would again take up the district work, and when he came to this conference and the responsibility of caring for the branches in the district was placed before him he could not refuse, and we believe that the Lord has called him to continue in the work for a little season at least.

The district reunion will be held at Runnells, beginning August 18. This annual reunion is looked forward to by the Saints of the district with great pleasure. The hospitality of the Runnells Saints is known all over the district, and they will do all they can for a successful reunion. Heman C. Smith expressed the hope that he could be with us part of the time.

The older ones of the district remember when the district conference was but little attended, because of the few in the district, and when it was held in some small hired hall, or some rural schoolhouse, but the late session was held in a neat chapel in the capital city of the State, the property of the Saints, and the chapel well filled with the delegates from different parts of the district. The writer remembers when it was an occasion for great thankfulness if the business-sessions were finished without harsh words being said. But now it can be said that all business-sessions are peaceful from beginning to end, and these district gatherings wherein the Saints come together in such unity and good feeling give us a hope of the time of universal peace, and a foretaste of that lovely season when not only the Saints of a district will be gathered together in union and love, but the church universal will form one grand conclave, and later these to be joined by those of all ages. Who but an infinite mind could have conceived such a plan, and what greater joy could his Saints ask? And when our brother who presided spoke with the authority of a living apostle of the blessed Christ, his words were received by every delegate present in the kindest spirit, and his counsel and advice accepted, and an earnest effort will be made to live by it. "Tis good to be a Saint in latter days."

The new district tent will be staked for the first time at Colo this week, and active work will be kept up. Elder Mintun will remain in the capital city and vigorously prosecute the work here, and the Saints of the city having canceled the debt on the church are now in a position to use liberally of their means for the missionary work in the city.

One marked tendency of the conference was to settle up any left-over difficulty of the past, and with possibly one or two exceptions, a period of universal peace has dawned upon the district in church affairs, and this is certainly an omen for good. With one heart and mind, greatly strengthened in the faith of the Christ, and the divinity of the work in which we are engaged, and with a strong desire to see the work progress, the Saints went out from the conference to their several homes to continue even more steadfast than before. The aged ones are better able to give counsel, and an army of younger ones are ready to go out on the line of battle, trained ready for the fight.

The church is moving on, the Sunday-school and Religio are doing their part in the training and developing process. The Lord is calling more laborers into the field; and Bro. Smith in his sermon on Sunday morning made it very clear that all are called to the work, that all have a sickle. And we are commanded to thrust it in and reap, and that all men who are humble and full of love can assist in this great and marvelous work which has come forth. Labor where duty calls, and he that performs his duty well is great, possibly not in the eyes of men, but in the eyes of a loving and just God.

The Sunday service of the conference consisted of Sunday-school, two sermons by Bro. Smith, social meeting in the afternoon, and baptismal-service,—surely a day spent in the service of the Lord, with profit and encouragement, and happiness to every Saint in attendance at the conference.

Yours truly,

A. A. REAMS.

RICHMOND, Virginia, May 22, 1905.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I have penned anything for your columns, not because I have had nothing I wished to say, but because time and opportunity have been lacking.

This year has been one of peculiar trials and sorrows to me, and I wish to give a testimony concerning the comforting power of the gospel of Christ.

I lost my father shortly after conference last year; although he lived in far-away Pennsylvania, yet I felt the loss none the less keenly, and it was only the beginning of sorrows. Yet in none have I been without hope. Some were of that character I do not care to make them public, and were embittered with the thought that they were needlessly or heartlessly forced upon me; but Christ and his Spirit have comforted me, yes, and strengthened me, or I should have sunk by the wayside. Sometimes it has seemed as if I would be glad to lay down the burden of life, yet Hope has ever whispered of brighter days ahead, and Faith has bidden me have courage. The dark clouds would soon be gone and behind them the sun was still shining.

In September my youngest boy was sadly injured by falling from a tree, and went on crutches till in January. My daughter-in-law was ill all winter; her babe was born in November, and she seemed to be as well as could be expected, and had begun helping about the work, when she was again taken down and for weeks her life was despaired of. People wondered how I kept up; but they did not know of the source of my strength.

To make matters worse all of the boys were out of work the greater part of the two months she was ill; and had it not been for timely aid from our good Bishop and others, we should have suffered. It was the first time that I ever had to have help from the city, but I availed myself of the provision for wood and coal that is made for widows, and thought, If this is God's way of keeping me humble, I will accept it and be thankful. "Thy will be done" was the sentiment of my heart if not often voiced by my lips.

In March my daughter-in-law had so far recovered that we moved out to another suburb town, Fairmount, thinking it would be a better locality for several reasons, the main one being the purer air and cleaner situation.

It has proved beneficial to us all, with the exception of her baby. He had a touch of pneumonia in April, was very ill for two weeks, but was getting on as well as could be, we thought, when suddenly he sickened and after an illness of two weeks and one day his little spirit left the frail tenement of clay and returned to God who gave. Last Saturday we laid his little emaciated frame away "under the daisies and clover," in the silent city, beautiful Oakwood, there to wait in painless rest the time when the words shall be spoken that shall give life to all who are in their graves. Dear Baby Leslie, just six months and six days of this earth life was his, and much of that was spent in suffering. For many reasons we are glad, even in our sorrow, that the Father saw best to bid the little spirit return to its haven of rest. I had no hope from the time he was stricken with this last illness. Besides, we had a warning that may sound foolish and superstitious; but from the moment it occurred I felt that Leslie would die. It was in the beginning of his illness, too, when he did not seem to be ill. An old clock that is all to pieces, and can not run at all, and has not for years, suddenly startled us by striking nine, and Sallie said it did the same thing once before while she was alone in the house with baby. He was certainly struck with death the 9th. The doctor said no human power could save him; and just nine days more we watched the struggle for mastery between life and death, and at midnight or a little after of the 18th his little candle was snuffed out.

I told Sallie that although it might seem hard to her yet I should be thankful when he breathed his last. She replied that she would be, it was so hard to see him suffer so. Poor Leonard, baby's father took it so hard. Alas! he has not the consolation of a perfect trust in Christ. Pray for them both, dear Saints, that he may be led into the truth, and that she may see the need of obeying the gospel she already believes.

The neighbors were kind and helpful. The funeral-services were conducted by the Methodist Episcopal pastor of this place, who had called on us once, and who showed such a sweet, charitable spirit, when I told him I was a Latter Day Saint, that I was drawn to him. He cordially invited me to church and to join his Sunday-school, and said, "Come on, any way, and I'll promise you this, I will never try to proselyte you."

He said he did not know anything about our church, but of one thing he had long been of the opinion—that Joseph Smith was not the author of the evil things taught and practiced in Utah.

I have given a brief outline of my trials. With these has been mingled others even more bitter, as living sorrows are worse than dead ones; but I have been led to pray that God would overrule them all for the good of all concerned; and even now I can see how it has been done, to a great extent.

I have had but little time for prayer or communion with the Father, had it been necessary to go entirely by myself. Too many duties were pressing, but thanks be to his name, I only have to lift my heart heavenward to receive comfort and help. Will those of the Saints who have written me and have wondered why Sr. Corson did not reply, please accept this as my apology for what has seemed like neglect. My thoughts and prayers were often with you all at conference. And it often seemed as if I were with you, as in spirit I was. I was much pleased with the decisions of conference concerning some things that had rather troubled me. One was concerning the Quit-to-bac advertisement, for that was thrown in my face once as an argument against the claim of our church being the church of Jesus Christ, and our being saints, and indeed it was a weighty argument. But the Lord truly will cast out "all things that do offend," as the fisher does from his net, which has gathered of all kinds.

May 25. Since writing the above there has come a new sorrow, and I wonder how much more I will be called upon to bear. My son Leonard, father of the little baby we buried last week, was very seriously injured to-day. He was working on the new capitol building and fell fifty-five feet, and some pieces of timbers fell behind him and struck him on the head. They only tell us his injuries are not necessarily fatal, but he is badly hurt; how badly we do not know. Several ribs are broken. Oh, dear ones, pray, pray that he may be spared, if it be God's will. His poor wife is so distressed; as for me I must bear up for the rest, as long as possible. If "underneath" I did not feel the "everlasting arms," I should give way now, but the Lord is able to bring him through, and to bring joy to us all out of this sorrow. Pray, too, for me that my faith fail not. Satan seems to be trying to do his worst with me one way and another. But I know in whom I am trusting.

I loaned The Old Jerusalem Gospel and some other literature to a young Baptist minister to-day who is very anxious for me to join their Sunday-school and take a class. He sees no reason why what we claim concerning the gifts following the gospel should not be true, although he has never seen them. No works of an apostle had ever been wrought to his knowledge. I told him it was because he had seen no God-sent apostles. He asked many questions, and says he enjoyed my talk; that it was a pleasant surprise to meet with a person who could express so much clear scriptural truth in such plain language. I was not flattered by that for I know the Spirit taught me what to say. I was thrilling with holy joy, when the bell rang again and there stood the messenger with the sad news of Leonard's accident.

Oh! Will you pray for us in our hour of trial? Still trusting in his love,
Your sister,

ALICE R. CORSON.

WILLOW RANCH, California, May 29, 1905.

Dear Herald: As I think how long it has been since I was baptized with four other souls in 1903, I am impressed how little I have done. I suppose we all do things that will not appear to our credit or discredit until eternity reveals them.

While at Alturas I was a member of the Christian Endeavor Society, which is carried on with the motto, "For Christ and the Church." Topics are assigned regularly, and leaders are appointed for each Sunday. Each member is supposed to study up on the subjects and contribute to the meeting by speaking or reading. A monthly payment is requested from each as much as each sees fit, for carrying on society, and also foreign missions.

I was given a chance to introduce parts of our theory or belief, but alas! I had to go slow, for they differ so greatly that should I branch out widely and give it them wholly, they, I am sure, would consider me an anarchist to their cause, so I withdrew from their society for the reason that we could not agree. Our ministers and foreign missionaries were not considered Christians and did not receive any money from their society. While they treated me very nicely yet I could see should I go on I would be the cause of confusion in the class.

While here I gave a man and his wife a copy of Elder J. Luff's sermons and requested them to read. They are members originally of the Campbellite Church. They read the book and returned it without comment promising me they would, upon my requesting it, give me some of the literature of the Christian Church—but this has not been forthcoming. I wonder why?

Presently a new minister arrived. His name is Reverend P. S. Bandy from Iowa. He is occupying at a salary of something like seventy-five dollars per month. These ministers do not have a regular standard doctrine, but in their own language, "We will cooperate with any Christian man in preaching the gospel and saving souls." Tacitly, however, it is any man whose doctrines do not conflict with popular notions held by them. The writer knows of several such circumstances, Latter Day Saints not excepted.

In talking with Mr. Bandy upon the subject of religion and church, he, among other things, said, "Oh, yes, I know of the Latter Day Saints; have attended their big churches in the cities. I know they are not Mormons. They don't believe in polygamy. I always thought the church founded by Joseph was narrow, very narrow."

I once thought of joining the Episcopal Church, but now I am glad I did not. One of Mr. Bandy's favorite remarks is, "No church has a corner on truth." I gave him a copy of Elder J. Luff's book of sermons and he promised to read it through. Says he wants truth, and will read anything for truth.

Shortly after, accosting me on the street one day, he said, "Well, Porter, I have read a chapter or two in your book." "Well, Mr. Bandy, I am glad. How did you like it?" "Well, some things the writer knows what he is talking about, and some things he is just like the rest of us, does not know much about it. And then his sermons attack the churches. Why, I know he says things that are not true; things I know of the denominations." "Well, Mr. Bandy, I have read the book three times, and I believe the man is a very good man. You read it all. Don't read just one or two chapters, but read it all." "All right, I'll read it and be as unprejudiced as possible, and get all I can out of it."

Afterwards Mr. Bandy said there were lots of good things in it, good points once in a while. Once he criticised the education of the man, but did not carry it far. Bandy is an educated man, but needs to be brightened up on gospel truths.

A young man going to a State university, and an active worker in Christian Endeavor Society, said, "I consider the Latter Day Saints the same as Mohammedans." When this was flung at me I was unable to reply, as I did not know; so at the first opportunity I posted up on Mohammedanism. How many of the young Saints know the real difference between that and the pure faith of Jesus Christ as revealed in the New Testament? There is hardly a point of similarity between them, save perhaps the zeal and devotedness to their cause.

PORTER PLEASANTS.

BOYD, Oregon, May 29, 1905.

Editors Herald: My wife and I are the only Latter Day Saints in miles of here, and when we attend church we are compelled often to hear a mutilation or a deflection of the Scriptures, which thing grates upon the ears of the Saints, and then, oh, for a power to instill the truth.

Last Sunday while we were attending the Methodist Episcopal Sunday-school, a question arose which involved the divinity of the Book of Mormon, and one elder of the Christian Adventist Church, a Mr. L. G. Dix, said he would prove from the stand on a certain Sunday that the Book of Mormon is a fraud on the face of it. I then asked him if he would discuss the subject with our elders and he said he would, and later stated that he would debate on the following propositions:

"Resolved that the church which I, L. G. Dix, represent was established by divine command." He to affirm, the Saints to deny.

"Resolved that the organization known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is identical with the church that Christ built, and its teachings and practices are in accordance with the Bible." He to deny.

"Resolved, that the soul of man is immortal and that it is conscious between death and the resurrection." He to deny.

He also proposes to prove the works of Joseph Smith a fraud by his own writings, by the Bible, and the archaeology of America. Now will some good elder of a debating spirit please satisfy the ambitious desire of this fellow?

He claims to have held a sixteen-night debate with a brother at Hood River, Oregon, about a year ago, and seems to be somewhat elated over his supposed success.

Any one wishing to meet Mr. Dix can find his honor in the person of L. G. Dix of Hood River, Oregon. Any of our ministry will find a hearty welcome at my house, and any help that I can give will be done in joy and cheerfulness. God speed the work is my prayer.

W. J. BREWER.

WATERLOO, Nebraska, May 31, 1905.

Editors Herald: We had a nice conference and Sunday-school convention at this place beginning Friday evening, May 26, and holding over Sunday. The weather was very much against large attendance; but those who were able to attend were well pleased with the meetings, and, I think, all felt well paid for their efforts to attend.

Bro. Lytle of Blair was elected president of the district and recommended to the Bishop for appointment as Bishop's agent, at the resignation of Bro. Huff, who said he expected to leave the district in a couple of months. Bro. Lytle appears to be a good man and I trust the Saints of the district will support him as they should.

Bro. Hale W. Smith was elected district secretary and I think he will make a good one. He takes great interest in the affairs of the district. He is also district Sunday-school superintendent. His work in preparing the program and conducting the convention was commendable.

Saturday evening the convention rendered a fine program; and, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, the house was crowded. Bro. and Sr. Spanswick and H. W. Smith and Rogene Munsell of Omaha, by their musical talent, added much to the enjoyment of the occasion.

The next conference and convention will be held with the Blair Branch the last of September.

Monday after the conference I baptized one of Bro. Richard Brown's and one of Sr. Melton's boys. There are other children of the Saints here that I think will be baptized ere long. Bro. Herb Robinson and I went to-day to visit William Brown, son of Oscar Brown, deceased, who has been in the background for three years or more. We succeeded in getting him to promise to take hold of the work anew. If he does he will be a benefit to the branch here.

I will start for Meadow Grove Friday. I have a brother there who has promised to be baptized, and I hope to be able to attend to it soon. From there I hope to make arrangements with Bro. Gamet for the summer campaign.

Any one desiring to correspond with me may address me at Meadow Grove, Nebraska, or at my home, Lamoni, Iowa.

Yours for the spread of the gospel,

J. M. STUBBART.

OTWAY, Ohio, June 5, 1905.

Editors Herald: I love to read the letters from different parts of the country, and it encourages me to read the testimonies of the truth of this latter-day work. I am glad that the true gospel has been restored to earth again, and that a few have accepted it as taught by Christ and his apostles.

It will be a year the 3d of July since I accepted this blessed truth. I can say with the apostle Paul, the gospel "is the power of God unto salvation unto every one that believeth."

I trust that all who are seeking for truth will find the way. The Savior said, "Seek and ye shall find; ask and ye shall receive." This is in harmony with James: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not."

I do not want to praise men, but I must say I can never forget Bro. T. J. Beatty, as he brought the gospel to the writer. I love to see the good work going on. I want to do all I can to help some poor soul to see the light of the true gospel. I want to live so that I may meet the Savior in peace. I feel that I am

"one of the weakest of God's children, and desire the prayers of the Saints that I may get stronger in the Lord, and that I may continue faithful unto the end."

May all be faithful until the end. That is where we get our reward. May we watch and pray that that time will come not on us as a thief in the night. Let us be like the wise virgins, and have our lamps trimmed and burning; and let us be ready to go in when the Bridegroom comes.

Your brother in the one faith,

J. T. MITCHELL.

ARMBRUST, Pennsylvania, June 2, 1905.

Editors Herald: The first copy of the HERALD came to hand this morning, and since I received it I concluded to send you one dollar and fifty cents for one year's subscription instead of six months. I love to read the letters and articles on the restored gospel, and hope the time will soon be at hand when the graven image will fall, that truth and righteousness will cover the earth as the waters cover the deep. And we hope to see the kingdom of Jesus flourish; but we believe there must be a wakening up of dry bones, first, an arising to rightness and truth. The stone cut out of the mountain without hands, that brake in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold, was emblematical of all foreign kingdoms, outside of the kingdom of Christ. "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come."—Revelation 14:6, 7.

Nations shall rise up and war shall be the sign of the near approach of the end of time. May God draw all the honest in heart to read, reflect, understand, and obey the gospel which Jesus Christ came and died to establish for poor humanity, is my prayer.

Yours in the restored gospel,

J. L. ARMBRUST.

TACOMA, Washington, June 1, 1905.

Editors Herald: On the 19th of April when the names of those appointed for the mission fields were read, I found that my name was among those who were to labor in the Seattle and British Columbia District; somewhat of a surprise to me as far as distance was concerned as it was my first appointment to the field.

On May 10, received a letter from Bro. N. C. Enge, saying he would be in St. Joseph, Missouri, the following day to go to his field of labor, and would expect to meet me there. So I hurriedly began making preparation for my departure. Bidding friends and relatives good-by I started on my journey, glad that I was going to help in so grand a cause, but sorry that I was leaving friends so far behind.

Started from Lamoni, May 11; at St. Joseph, through some mistake, could not find Bro. Enge, so was compelled to make the trip alone. I left St. Joseph at noon, and the next morning arrived in Denver, Colorado. I did not have the address of any of the Saints here so went to a friend who formerly lived near Lamoni. The next morning I started for the coast via Salt Lake City and Ogden. On my way I had quite a discussion with some ladies who were missionaries. Soon all that were in the car were attracted by our talk which lasted some two hours or more, and when the ladies left me they said they were glad they had met me as they had a much better opinion of us as a people, and now knew we were different from those living in Utah. Also, a number said that if they were ever given the privilege of doing so, they would go and hear our elders preach. I passed through Salt Lake City, made only a short stop at Ogden, met Bro. and Sr. Chase, also Sr. Combs. They refilled my dinner-box, and soon I was ready to resume my journey.

In Portland I remained for a short time, then left for Seattle.

I found a home with Bro. Holman, also visited with other Saints in the city. Spoke in a hall the Saints have rented on Sunday, also Sunday night. I find some Saints at that place who are doing all they can to further the interest of the cause we dearly love. I spoke again the following Sunday, also again at night.

On next day I received a letter from Bro. Griffiths saying for me to go to Tacoma. So in evening took boat for this place. Arriving here, I went to the home of Bro. Van Eaton where I am staying at the present time. Expect to begin meetings here in the Saints' new church which they have lately built, and I wish to say they have done well in building their church, as I understand they do not owe anything on it, and it is nearly completed.

I wish to say to all my friends that I hope you will bear me up in your prayer that I may accomplish good; for I realize I am weak, and this work is of such importance that it should be given our best attention and our most earnest efforts, that men may come to an understanding of the truth.

When I see how little people care for this work it almost makes me want to give up the fight so far as preaching to them to show them the better way of life. But then I think again that I am glad to be accounted worthy to help in so grand a work as this. This gives me encouragement to battle on, hoping that I shall be able to endure to the end, that I may have a right to the tree of life.

Your brother in the conflict,

L. G. HOLLOWAY.

Mission address 1202½ Seventh Avenue, SEATTLE, Washington.

WEST JORDAN, Utah, June 1, 1905.

Editors Herald: On the 27th ult. I bade good-bye to a loved one, and again started out in my field of labor. Leaving the train at Sandy I took my grips in my hand and walked over to the home of Bro. and Sr. James Wardle, where I found a hearty welcome. The next morning on receiving a telephone from Sr. Wilson, of Salt Lake City, to the effect that Bro. Fred M. Smith and wife were there, and that he was advertized to speak at eleven o'clock, I decided to go to the city accompanied by Bro. Allan Wardle; so we started on foot together for Murray, a distance of about five miles, where we took the car for the city, and in due process of time reached our destination. When we got off the car we had just two minutes until eleven, so we walked hurriedly to the chapel, a block and a half distant, and reached there just a moment before meeting commenced, and found that Bro. Fred was there all right, and to our surprise Bro. Smith begged to be excused, due to having arrived at a late hour the night before and being somewhat wearied by his trip; and the writer was asked to take the stand and address the Saints who had assembled in good numbers.

Well, after we had been taken to a restaurant and had our dinner, (by Bro. Wardle,) we decided to go to the "Mormon Tabernacle" and on the way we called at the "information bureau" where there was a number of tourists receiving (?) information regarding Mormonism. We listened a while, and then I told Bro. Wardle that I was going to ask a question or two, so we stepped forward, and there a very nice appearing young man was stationed to furnish all with necessary information,—I think he was a son of President Joseph F. Smith. I told him there were certain questions I was interested in; but had never received as yet a satisfactory answer, and that I would be pleased to have him, if he could, give me some light on the matter,—and he said, "Ask on." I then asked him if he could inform me as to when and where, if ever, section 132 of their Doctrine and Covenants was accepted and adopted by the body as a law to become binding on the church. After a little evasion, and being pressed for an answer, he frankly admitted that he did not think it had ever been adopted in such a manner

(there was a number of tourists who stood by and listened).

I then asked if he could tell me when and where was Brigham Young ordained to be president of the church, and by whom he was ordained. He then called an elderly man to his assistance, and after both had made some effort to find data, the old man walked away, and the young man said he did not know, but he supposed that all necessary ordinances were attended to when he was sustained as first president at Winter Quarters; but that, he said, was just his supposition; there was nothing to substantiate it. He further said, "Such questions are of such minor importance we do not consider them." I told him that I considered them of vital importance, as I read in section 20 and also 107, of their Doctrine and Covenants that he must be ordained, i. e., every president of the high priesthood. Hence I wanted to ask just one more question, and that was, when, and by whom was Joseph F. Smith ordained in such a manner, and the answer was, "I can not tell." But he said, "It is of such minor importance that we as a church do not consider it." So with them a violation of God's law is not to be considered.

Well, we went to the Tabernacle, and the speaker informed us of how loyal they were to their country and that they wished to extend the same privileges to others as they wished to receive themselves—and I really wished he was representing them correctly,—but he had an object in view—he was speaking for the tourists who were there from a distance. I could not help but think of the scripture which says, "Be not as the hypocrites which say and do not."

But he also informed us that "he would rather believe in the oracles of to-day, than the oracles of the past." So we concluded that he stood on equal ground with the brother before mentioned who thought that a violation of God's law was of such minor importance that it was not worth noticing. The oracles of to-day can teach that it is not necessary to abide the law that God has given; and hence they are led to disregard it.

Well, we returned from the city and preached at the residence of Bro. Pedersen, and it will suffice to say that I have preached every night this week. Last night we made our first effort on the street for this season.

I hope to be able to sow the good seed and leave the result with the Lord, for without his assistance our labors would be in vain.

Oh may we then but trust to God
To guide our steps aright;
That we may in knowledge grow,
And favor in his sight.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

MIDDLETOWN, Ohio, June 3, 1905.

Editors Herald: Bro. O. B. Thomas and myself are here with tent. Prospects favorable; several ready for baptism. Will remain here but a short time, only to do some necessary repairing, then move into new places. Expect to go to Portsmouth next week. Prospects quite good for a permanent opening. I was there two weeks ago. Baptized three and others gave their names whom we expect to baptize on our return. I was at Ironton and baptized two there. Saints there are beginning to manifest their faith in a material way in the prospects of a new church-building. This will be a good move. You can not expect people to attend your meetings very well in private houses. Put up a permanent place of meeting. The people will see you have come to stay and will patronize you.

Now a few words to the Saints in general of the Ohio District. Perhaps you are sufficiently acquainted with me by this time to know when I talk plain I am not mad but only in earnest; hence I have a few earnest words to urge in behalf of tent-work.

At our conference at Columbus in February a resolution passed calling upon all the branches and scattered members to take up a special collection the first Sunday in May for tent-work. So far only two branches have been heard from. We are now ready to begin operations but need some necessary equipage, such as small tent, cooking utensils, bed-clothing, etc., and before many weeks, a new top for tent. We thought to save you money in buying a second-handed tent, but in this we have been badly disappointed. It has evidently been folded just after a sprinkle, and every drop has caused mildew. We noticed this when we first put it up last season but thought nothing of it till the holes appeared. We would advise Saints against buying second-handed tents.

Will you come to our rescue and help in the hour of need? Remember you are not helping the missionary in particular, but the Lord's work. I have heard many of you say you love this work. Here is an excellent opportunity to emphasize your love by helping to take the message to others. True happiness consists only in helping to make others happy and there is no better way on earth in which we can make others happy than in sending to them the message of life. The gospel cost us nothing when its glad message greeted our ears; but remember it cost some one much sacrifice and anxiety of heart. Some woman and children lived along perhaps many weary months that we might hear and rejoice. Should we not help to send the same glad message to others? I feel sure if you knew as we do how eagerly some struggling souls grasp for the truth when presented to them, sacrifice would be more cheerfully made. I believe the elders as a whole are perfectly willing to make the required sacrifice to redeem Zion, but if they make it all where will your reward come from? For God has said, "Gather my Saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." This reminds us of the warning of St. John: "Let no one take thy crown." Those who have the heaviest cross here will wear the brightest crown hereafter.

I have lived for days on dry bread and cheese in tent-work, in new places, until people began coming out and bringing us things, while perhaps you had abundance on your own tables. I have slept all night under wet bed-clothing, while you were sweetly slumbering beneath your dry coverings. I have sat in a damp tent and gazed upon mud and water six inches deep in the tent all alone while perhaps you were in your pleasant parlor with happy friends. I do not mention this to complain, for I most cheerfully endured it, but simply to drive its warning still deeper, "Let no man take thy crown."

Much of those undesirable conditions could be greatly lessened by a little help from each one. In a few days we go among strangers to sleep under a canvas which will turn (?) water like a sieve, and take "pot-luck" three times a day, and in the midst of it all we are commanded to be cheerful. Will you help cheer us a little? The good we have done already with tent can not be estimated in dollars. We are determined to make it a continued success. If we can not in one place we will in another. Garden truck will soon be here and we can live cheaply. We will look after the table if you will only supply the house in which to live and preach; and until such is secured we will continue to bother you, and like the judge before the importunate woman, you will give to get rid of us. I am a descendent from the German race and you know they hang on with bull-dog tenacity. Send all remittances to S. J. Jeffers, Radcliff, Ohio, and thus honor the resolution you helped pass. Honor God's law of free-will offering. Bless your fellow man. Gladden the heart of your elders; and obtain to yourself a crown. Let all the Saints in the Ohio and West Virginia District prepare for the grand reunion the latter part of August. Begin to lay aside your dimes.

Will the officers and scattered members of the West Virginia District communicate their needs to me so I can the better direct. I expect to be with you the latter part of the summer.

Bro. O. B. Thomas will soon be with you. We feel sure you will be benefited by his labors.

Still hoping for final triumph, I am,

Your colaborer,

F. J. EBELING.

HAILEYVILLE, Indian Territory, June 6, 1905.

Editors Herald: I think that this is the first time I have ever asked for space in your letter department, but for the last few days I have felt as though I should add my mite to the testimonies of this glorious work we are engaged in. It indeed rejoices my heart to be able to be numbered among the Saints in these the latter days when by the grace of God the gospel has been restored to the earth again; and, when we realize the power that Satan is striving to gain over God's people and see those whom we had looked up to and loved as God's servants falling by the way, how strongly comes over me the desire and resolution to remain faithful. As Saints, we all need to humble ourselves before God and seek day by day to conform ourselves to his will, and earnestly pray for his Spirit to be with us to indeed lead us and guide us into all truth. The work in this place among the Saints seems to be onward, and most of them striving to do their duty. There might be improvement with some, and we trust that God's Holy Spirit will strive with the Saints everywhere so that they shall arise to new energies and renewed faithfulness.

Bro. C. E. Irwin and J. D. Erwin lately held tent-services here at Hartshorn, but without success so far as to converts, very few of the town's people coming out. Still, we hope that the seed sown will eventually bear fruit. Lately a Religio society was organized here with a charter membership of over thirty. The writer was chosen president and we shall exercise ourselves to carry this on to perfection. The Saints here seem to be much gifted in visions and dreams and I wish to relate one as given to me this morning by Sr. Melia White, and will give it as near as I can in her own language. Should any of the Saints anywhere receive the interpretation of it, would be glad to hear the same. The vision was as follows:

"While sleeping upon my bed on the morning of June 6, 1905, I saw the following: I seemed to be in the company of several young people and some members of the branch and was standing out doors, having just come from a visit to a mine slope, when in the sky in the east appeared, at first faintly and disconnected, what seemed to be letters or characters. These united themselves in the form of a word and I thought of the handwriting on the wall spoken of in Daniel, and I looked to see the hand tracing them in the sky, but could not see it, neither was it given to me to understand the meaning of the letters, though I called the attention of my husband to them and asked what they meant. While beholding them and wondering over them there appeared very faintly a large box, about the size of a common room, which as it advanced became plainer and plainer and we saw that its front was composed of large iron bars, like a great big cage, and that it was filled to its utmost capacity with people who seemed to be greatly excited over something. Suddenly there seemed to come from the cage flames and smoke and a personage appeared in the cage whose countenance was terrible to look at—such an ugly face, great big teeth, and horns on his head. In his presence the people seemed to fall to the right hand and to the left by his power. While wondering greatly what this could mean, the cage settled to the earth until it rested upon it, and as soon as it touched the ground there seemed to come from heaven a light, bright as the sun at noon-day, and in a narrow streak extended to where the cage rested, and I saw one, like unto the Savior, appear coming down in this light. His countenance was pleasant to look upon and shone brightly; he was clothed in a long, white robe and seemed to be coming to the earth. I then awoke, and a fear came over me regarding the cage and its occupants, and I prayed that the fear might be taken away and not overshadow my mind. I continued in prayer and the fear was taken away."

Our desires are for the advancement of the truth and to live so that when Christ comes I may be prepared to meet him with joy.

Ever praying for the advancement of the gospel, I am,
Your brother in Christ,

W. P. BUCKLEY.

PENNSBORO, West Virginia, June 5, 1905.

Editors Herald: I left Lamon, April 27, stopping at Middletown, Ohio, over Sunday, to await "orders," arriving in Cornwallis, West Virginia, May 5.

I preached at Goose Creek a few evenings, then Bro. Beall took me to Bro. and Sr. Carpenter's, where I was soon "water bound"; Bro. and Sr. Carpenter sitting up till midnight to see whether the house would go down with the flood. Ye missionary went to bed and slept soundly, resolved not to "climb the hill" till he came to it. After two days of exile I managed to cross the creek in an old boat and secured the use of the schoolhouse for preaching. Only a few out and no interest manifest. After a faithful effort on the part of Bro. Carpenter we decided to move on.

Bro. Dunnington joined me the evening I closed and the next day we started for Cabin Run. There we found a few Saints bearing a good name among their neighbors, but not doing much to advance the cause. We tried to get the schoolhouse but were refused; so the only thing to do was to keep moving. We next went to Washburn, as per instructions from the missionary in charge, to see how the work was doing. We preached a few times in Bro. Huffman's house—schoolhouse and churches being closed against us—and visited some of the Saints and tried to encourage them to keep up the struggle.

Instructions from the sub-missionary to "push out into new fields" drove away the "blues," and we started at once. Let me here say, I for one have no desire to lie around the branches. I would sooner take my grip on my back and penetrate the unknown than to be tortured trying to preach where the work has been suffered to languish.

What a responsibility is resting upon those set as "watchmen" and "overseers"! The fate of the one who buried his talent should be a lesson and an incentive to action.

Glad to leave the branches to the care of others, we came to this place, having previously been impressed by the Spirit that there was a work to be done here. We called on the mayor, also the marshal, and were told to "sail right in" and preach all we wanted to. We made no request for either of the five churches in the town, as we felt it would be useless, but went to work on the street. Novelty drew quite a crowd—it was something new—but curiosity soon gave place to interest, and now they will begin to gather on the ground long before the time, while such expressions as "The only men who ever preached the gospel in the town." "The first time we ever had the gospel preached," etc., etc., are to be heard in more quarters than one. The people seem to be in just the right condition to hear the truth. They have been fed on husks so long that they are starving for the word of God, while the only man in the town—Reverend J. W. Bibbee—who dared transcend the bounds of the creed and preach his honest convictions has been turned down by his brethren and looked upon as a heresy-breeder.

The rainy weather has hindered us to some extent, as our "roof leaks." We need a tent in this field, and if it be possible we will have one. A gentleman remarked last night, "If you men had a tent here you could do a great deal of good." The good that is to be done here would more than pay for a tent, and we would like to ask the Saints of West Virginia to come to our assistance. Truly the harvest is white and the laborers few. Bro. Dunnington is at Clarksburg and will see about a tent there that we heard of to be had cheap. He says he will advance the money if the Saints will make it good. Who will be the first to respond? Send either to us, or to Bro. B. Beall, of Goose Creek, West Virginia. If we can get the tent we will look to Bro. Green for a Bilhorn organ and will furnish the organist ourselves. We have one in view. My mission address is Goose Creek, West Virginia, care of B. Beall.

Independence Items.

As sometimes in the early morning the western clouds in rifts reveal the golden reflection of the rising sun, so, grateful to the heart, seem the clear indications of a brighter day dawning on the spiritual horizon.

According to the divine word both men and nations are being "called by the voice of thunderings, and by the voice of lightning, and by the voice of tempests . . . by the voice of mercy all the day long, and by the voice of glory and honor, and the riches of eternal life."

So now in this dispensation we behold increasing many of the signs foretold by the latter-day prophet three quarters of a century ago, which behind the glorious manifestations of our Father's love present a gloomy background.

In this portion of the vineyard, as elsewhere, all nature is arrayed in the loveliness of early summer, and the healthful conditions surrounding us, also the privilege of living here where center the sacred memories of the past, the hopes of the future, and the bright realities of a prosperous present all fill the mind with thoughts of thankfulness.

Within the last two months about forty of the Saints, of whom many have come here quite recently, while others have had residence among us longer, were received by letter, and nine by baptism, and also the names added to the cradle-roll of the Sunday-school are of no insignificant number, two of whom were blessed last Sunday; by name, Paul Raymond Thompson and Dover Dell Crenshaw.

The attendance at the Sunday services both morning and afternoon continues large, but in the evening is somewhat diminished.

Last Sunday evening's discourse by Elder Hilliard revealed the fact that much of autobiography as well as sound doctrine can be inducted into a sermon of even moderate length.

Like the brethren of the "New Thought" and "Solar Plexus" cult our preacher eliminated the dark and objectionable, which was especially enjoyed by the young people present, and in the sunshine of the evening's effort we remember he did not want his friends, when he should die, "to go in mourning and wear black" for him "unless they truly believed he had gone to hell."

His life's experiences afforded food for thought to the unbelievers by the positiveness of his position, for, after a life of observation, reading, and strenuous warfare he knew the doctrine was true, and among his strong "affirmations" were "If God does not speak to men now, he never did speak to men. No man can enjoy life unblest by the spirit of light and truth. Nothing short of a pure and consecrated life can merit and receive the divine blessing."

In the morning Bro. T. W. Chatburn held forth, taking for his text "Enter ye in at the straight gate" as found in Matthew, chapter 7. Said he had only twenty-nine minutes in which to speak, so he outlined a few events of church history, embracing the departure from the true faith by the different factions, and affirmed the belief of the one who was appointed to be leader of the church and to abide in the principles set forth in the beginning of this latter-day work.

Tuesday being Decoration Day, it was considered by the bishop as an appropriate occasion to visit Mound Grove Cemetery, especially for those interested in the completing and beautifying the work begun, also the purchasing of lots there.

Quite a number availed themselves of the opportunity presented, as it was a lovely day, and the object of the visit a very worthy one.

Activity is apparent everywhere, and on this evening, June 1, the good literature committee are making an extra effort by way of holding an ice-cream social on the church lawn for the benefit of the tract distribution work.

The members of the choir are making the welkin ring on this their regular night of practice, the few of the old folk who ventured out are chatting away and looking askance at the children rollicking on the dewy green sward, and the hour being "well on" the young people are gathering at the decorated tables, of course to help on the work.

The other auxiliaries also have an eye to gathering up the nickels for good uses,—the Willing Helpers in the interest of the church improvement fund, and the Daughters of Zion and Gleaners, of the benevolent home fund.

The Daughters held their annual business-meeting on the 17th ult., and elected officers and committees for the ensuing year, also made provision for the distribution of their literature, "where it would do most good." Eighteen were present.

The stake Religio convention was held on the 20th and 21st ult., and at the business-session there was a fair attendance. The young people were evidently in earnest. The retiring president made suggestions as to future work in the way of lectures on physical culture and literary lines, story-writing and elocution, also encouraged musical features, vocal and instrumental.

Nine locals will represent their work at the reunion to be held at Pertle Springs, September 10.

The home classes are doing effective work, and the stake librarian is evidently fully equipped with energy and information concerning his work, and his report was an interesting document to listen to.

Before adjournment provisions in a financial way were made for the carrying on of the work, and at the evening session an enjoyable musical and literary entertainment was given in the upper room which was filled to its utmost seating capacity. In the line of oratory we noted the selection "Paul before Agrippa," and this familiar incident was rendered most effectively, although it was divested of all spectacular accessories. The occasional criticisms offered in the HERALD were emphasized by a paper on "Church decorum." The orchestra was full, and as a whole and in part added much to the enjoyment of the musical numbers.

The Religians occupied at the services on Sunday, the 21st, with their usual zeal, and the Sunday-school turned out to the number of six hundred and fifty-seven, including thirty-seven visitors.

A new feature, the gathering, by invitation, of the members of the cradle roll took place in the north room, and fifty-one were present with one hundred and eighty-four of the primary classes. President Roosevelt would have been "delighted" had he been present.

At the usual hour a large audience assembled for church service. The platform was decorated with ferns and bouquets, there was the preliminary instrumental and vocal service, and the officers of the Religio with the speaker, Bro. G. E. Harrington and Elder Atwell assisting, took charge.

At the noon hour, Bro. Marshal Eversole was baptized in the font by Elder Alfred White.

The community of the city interested in education has also lately had its gala day, and two thousand children have been dismissed for their annual vacation. The baccalaureate address has been delivered, and the thirty-three graduates, after receiving their diplomas, bade adieu to alma mater; and so crowned with honors, started out to renew their labors in broader fields of usefulness.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. J. J. Cornish, writing from Rose City, Michigan, May 31, has this to say about the Braden lectures at that place: "Yesterday was Decoration Day, and there was quite a large crowd in the hall, and the lecture was again announced. Quite a fair crowd went, but a moving congregation, some going up and some down during the entire service. Braden gave the citizens a rub, saying, 'I am surprised that the leading citizens have not attended these lectures. I have not been treated with respect. . . . I have never been used so mean before.' To-day, Stilwell is running up and down the streets begging money to pay up Braden, and Braden is at the hotel boarding at a dollar a day house until Stilwell gets the money! A leading merchant said to me, 'Well, Elder, you and your work have been advertised as never before, and you have more friends now than you ever had before,' and so we think. We did not start the trouble; our people were here attending to their own affairs, not interfering with any one. One of our ministers would come and preach occasionally; and two bright young ladies (school-teachers) believed the gospel and obeyed it. Reverend Stilwell got mad about it, and began to abuse us, and lectured against us, etc., and got Clark Braden here to abuse and slander, giving a rehash, with a mixture of other things, which did not agree with the taste of good-thinking and fair-minded people, and now the 'elephant is on their hands.' Well, let old Babylon fight it out among them. We are to have the use of the I. O. F. Hall, and will reply for a few evenings, and try to clear the mist away."

Bro. F. M. Smith wrote from Salt Lake City, May 31: "Reached here Saturday night about midnight, having missed connection at Colorado Springs, and having accordingly gone by way of Denver. Having about five hours to wait at Denver, we looked up Bro. C. E. Everett, and spent a few very pleasant hours at their recently purchased home. Their hospitality afforded us an excellent opportunity to take a much-appreciated rest from travel. We very much enjoyed our journey over the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad, the far-famed 'scenic railroad of the world.' Sunday we spent with the Saints in their little chapel, and until last night found a resting-place at the always-open-to-missionaries home of Sr. E. Barrows, whose kindness in caring for a wayfaring family will long be remembered. Locating furnished rooms in Salt Lake City is not any more pleasant a task than in any other city, I presume, and possibly not any less disagreeable. But perseverance will accomplish much, so we are finally located."

A. B. Dunnam, R. F. D. No. 2, Grapeland, Texas: "Bro. Harp is appointed on this mission, but I do not know his address though I hope he will come to see me as I am the only Saint in this vicinity. We are having a gloomy time here. It has been raining all the spring. Just think of a man having to put up his fence fourteen times because of overflows this year! Of course our crops are ruined."

G. B. Moss, Seale, Texas: "I received a copy of the Book of Mormon; do not know who sent it, but desire to say that we appreciate it very much. We find so much good in it. We are isolated, and never heard but three sermons preached by Latter Day Saints. We would be glad to have some of the elders come here to preach. We received five copies of the SAINTS' HERALD. The first was dated March 29, the last April 26. I am very feeble and ask all the Saints to pray for us."

Bro. A. E. McCord, Stewartsville, Missouri, June 6: "Bro. Haden and I just closed a very good series of meetings at New Conception, Missouri."

Bro. J. F. Mintun, Des Moines, Iowa, June 6: "The conference of this district was a very profitable one, giving evidence of progress. All the ministry have gone to their fields of labor, Bro. Heman C. Smith and his son Hale yet remaining in the city for a few days; Bro. Heman to minister the word previous to his departure to the Minnesota reunion, and Bro. Hale to seek information relating to his work as Church Librarian. Some sickness yet remains among the Saints here, some quite serious. I expect to spend a short time at Milo, associated with Bro. Ward Christy, the last of the week; some there are near the kingdom, and we go to reap as well as to sow. Three were baptized during the conference. I shall go home the 14th to remain at the graduating exercises of my eldest daughter from the Woodbine Normal."

Pastoral.

To the Saints and Friends of the Southern Mission, Comprising what has been known as the Southeastern and the Southwestern Missions; Greeting: I find myself in charge of a new field this year, and realize that I am a stranger to many of the Saints and friends, and comparatively a stranger to some of the missionaries, but feeling that you have a mutual interest with me in this great work, I appeal to you to give us your hearty cooperation in the promulgation of this, God's work.

To assist me in the work of directing I have chosen Brn. H. O. Smith and T. C. Kelley as associate ministers in charge. Bro. H. O. Smith will have the oversight of the western division, and Bro. T. C. Kelley will have the oversight of the eastern division. The Mississippi River being the dividing line, all those laboring on the west side of the river report to Bro. H. O. Smith, and those on the east side of the river report to Bro. T. C. Kelley.

To the ministry, we would call special attention to this matter of reporting; as it has been considered a matter of importance we will furnish you with blanks, and would request you to keep your record of items according to the blanks, and we will insist upon a prompt and full report, so do not forget the dates, July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1. The latter should be a double one, one for January and February, and one for the whole year. Now do not neglect this and then lay it to a poor memory, but get your reports in promptly on time.

In regard to debates, consult with the respective associates in charge, or the minister in charge, before entering into any debates. A strict observance of this rule may save you and the church some embarrassing entanglements. Do not seek debates for the sake of victory, but ever stand ready to defend, "wisely" and in a proper spirit, the work in which we are engaged. We hope the local brethren will observe this rule in regard to debates as well as the traveling ministry. We want all the help that our local men can give us. If they are not engaged in the branches we would advise them to get out in the vicinity where they live and put out appointments every Sunday if it is so they can do anything. And if they can give a week or two or a month or more time in the field we would like very much to have it. A great amount of work can be accomplished in this way. They should report all the missionary labor to the respective associate ministers in charge. Any one who holds a series of meetings outside of the regular place of holding the branch meetings, or puts out appointments and keeps them up outside of the branch, is doing missionary work, and we desire that all such work should be reported to us.

We expect to furnish all branch and district presidents blank forms for reporting, and hope to have them respond promptly, so we may know the condition of the work in all the field and report it correctly to the Presidency of the church.

In consultation with my associates we have thought it best for Brn. Grimes and Case to labor in Central and Western Oklahoma; and Brn. Baker and S. S. Smith, in Northwestern Oklahoma; Brn. Penrose and Henson in Southwestern Oklahoma; and Bro. H. E. Moler to be associated with Bro. Metcalf in Louisville, Covington, and Eastern Kentucky, with the exception of that part east of the 83d parallel. All labor done on the east side of this line should be reported to Bro. U. W. Greene.

Now, brethren, let us go to with a will and push this work into as many new places as we can during the coming year, not forgetting that it is the part of the missionary to hunt for those who will hear this word of salvation that may be scattered in the world. If you were hunting for lost sheep, you would not hunt right in the same place all the time, but you would scour the hills, and look in every corner and place where you thought it possible one might be found, and some places where you did not expect to find them, and there you would frequently find some of them. Leave the old places where they have been preached to a standstill, for a season, and push out into new places and plant the work in other points as missionaries for Christ, engaged in establishing his work among men. Do not let trivial excuses call you home, or keep you around home. You have offered your time and energy to the church and to God, as missionaries, to spread this work, and if you can not do it, working as faithfully and persistently as the men of the business world have to work to make a success, you can not expect to meet with much success in this work, for it means work, and God has said that "the idler should be cast out." We are living in a time when the church, and God, call for workers, and workers they must have. We appeal to the Saints to assist with their means so far as they can, and insist that the missionaries use the means carefully, and in the pushing of the gospel. Thus we become workers together and will have the help of God, so as workers together with God we can expect something will be accomplished, and we can rejoice together.

I may not be able to reach all the vast field this year but will try to acquaint myself with it, and its needs, so far as I can consistent with wisdom, and the accomplishment of such work as may be specially demanded of me. I want all to feel free to write me at any time, whether in the mission field or the local work.

If there are any of the isolated who can make a home for an elder for a season, while he opens up a new place, we would urge you to do so, even if it is not as good as you would like to offer, and though it may require some sacrifice; get the work planted in your vicinity if you can. Write me at Lamoni, Iowa, Box 225, at any time, and it will reach me as a rule. In a few instances it has failed; so if you do not get an answer in a couple of weeks write again.

May God bless and prosper the mission during this year is the prayer of your brother and coworker for Christ,

FREDERICK A. SMITH,

Minister in charge of the Southern Mission.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 2, 1905.

To the Officials and Saints of Southeastern Illinois; Greeting: Having been placed in charge of this field, I will be pleased to correspond with all who would like to have ministerial labor performed in their vicinity, as we desire to push forward and do all we possibly can to accomplish the most good. And, as our field is wide and the laborers are few, let every man who has been ordained see that he does his duty. Lean upon the strong arm of God and he will always help you to tell the gospel to others. I will try to visit all the branches as soon as possible.

My permanent address will be Springerton, Illinois, and I will always try to respond to your needs and wants, so far as it is in harmony with my work.

Ever praying for the welfare of the work, I am,
Your brother and colaborer,

DAVID SMITH.

The Bishopric.

NOTICE OF APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

Northern Nebraska District.—The Saints and friends of the Northern Nebraska District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will please take notice that Elder James Huff, former Bishop's agent in and for said district, has resigned his position as agent, and that Bro. Herbert S. Lytle, of Blair, Nebraska, has been duly appointed Bishop's agent in his stead. Bro. Huff having arranged to change his residence from the Northern Nebraska District found it impracticable to continue his work as agent, and for the good work he has done, his faithful labors in the past, and his correctness in accounting and reporting, the Bishopric hereby extend their thanks and solicitations. Trust that the blessing of the Lord may attend him in his faithful labors wherever he may go.

The Northern Nebraska District conference has duly recommended Bro. H. S. Lytle, of Blair, Nebraska, for appointment as the new agent, and we take pleasure also in commending him to the Saints.

Trusting that they may also become fully interested in aiding and assisting the agent and the work that he has to perform, I am, in behalf of the Bishopric,

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 9, 1905.

Changes of Appointments.

In consequence of Bro. S. K. Sorensen, who was appointed to labor in Des Moines District, leaving the field temporarily, and for other considerations, I have been under the necessity of making the following changes:

Bro. J. F. Mintun, who was appointed to Northern and Central Nebraska, is requested to labor in Des Moines District with Des Moines City objective point.

Bro. Wardell Christy, who was appointed to Des Moines City, is requested to extend his labors to the entire district, thus enabling him to more effectively perform his work as Bishop's agent.

Bro. W. A. Smith, appointed to Little Sioux District, is requested to labor a part of the summer in Nebraska, as may be agreed between himself and the brethren in immediate charge of those fields.

HEMAN C. SMITH,

DES MOINES, Iowa, June 7, 1905. Minister in Charge.

Appointment of Missionary.

Presidency concurring: JOSEPH SMITH, for Presidency.

Notice of Appointment.

To the Ministry and Saints of Pittsburg District; Greeting: Arrangements having been made for Bro. Richard Baldwin to continue in this field during the year, I have placed him in sub-charge of the Pittsburg district and Western Pennsylvania. The traveling ministry will report to him. I trust the Saints will render every assistance to the elders in their work that success may crown their efforts.

ULYSSES W. GREENE.

Reunion Notices.

The reunion of Kentucky and Tennessee District will convene July 15 and 16, at Oakland, Graves County, Kentucky, in the Sedalia Branch, near the home of Elder J. H. Adair. Nearest railroad station, Murry, Kentucky, twelve miles. Mayfield, Kentucky, fifteen miles. Everything will be as pleasantly and comfortably arranged as possible. All who are concerned are invited. Died.

GERVAIS.—Sr. Laura L. Gervais passed away at her home in Oakland, California, May 24, 1905, at the age of 43 years and 28 days. Her husband, though a Catholic in faith, honored the faith of his wife by requesting administration before her death, and asking her pastor to officiate at her burial. She was baptized September 23, 1903, by J. M. Terry, who also preached her funeral-sermon. She held fast the faith to the end. Apoplexy caused her death.

KENNEDY.—William Adie Kennedy was born in Conderret, near Glasgow, Scotland, in April, 1815. He married Miss Elizabeth Wilson, October 18, 1844, who bore him ten children, six of whom, with her, are left to mourn his demise. On the 5th of November, 1879, at Holsteine, Ontario, he embraced the gospel, and shortly after was ordained a teacher. By reason of his advanced age, he had been unable to do manual labor for several years, and had become blind about two years before his departure from this life. He died in Cadillac, Michigan, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Jessie Maxwell, March 4, 1904, funeral-sermon being preached by John J. Cornish.

YAGERS.—Sr. May E. Yagers was born February 17, 1867, in Harrison County, Iowa; died May 26, 1905, at her home near Woodbine, Iowa. Married to William Yagers, October 15, 1885. Four children were born to that union. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church about the year 1902 by Elder W. A. Smith, and proved faithful to her covenant. Husband, four children, father, two brothers, and one sister remain to mourn their loss. Funeral-sermon by W. A. Smith, assisted by S. B. Kibler, in the Woodbine church, May 28, 1905. Burial in Woodbine cemetery.

STEEL.—At his home near Seiling, Oklahoma, April 2, 1905, Bro. Arthur W. Steel, after several weeks of decline, aged 57 years, 11 months; and 22 days. Married to Sarah Jones, March 7, 1869. Seven children blessed this union, three having preceded him. United with the church in 1893; ordained to the office of deacon in 1896. Words spoken at the last as if to his departed son were: "I am coming," and linger in the memory of his loved ones as a token that death is truly only a door to the spirit realm. Sermon at the home by James Yates.

"Rise, mighty Anglo-Saxons!" is the title of a spirited poem in the June Arena written by Katrina Trask. It is instinct with moral enthusiasm, and is a moving call to the conscience of England and America to unite in a practical manner for the furtherance of the cause of peace. "In prison and in exile: the experience of a Russian student" is a paper of general interest told in a simple, direct, and effective manner, revealing the trials and privations which the students of Russia are liable to undergo if they express the slightest interest in the cause of freedom and enlightenment. "The commerce of Latin America: a magnificent field neglected by the United States," by Professor Frederick M. Noz, is a very thoughtful paper that should appeal strongly to business men and all persons interested in broadening the field of American commerce in a legitimate manner. "The Benjamin Fay Mills movement in Los Angeles" is a highly interesting and suggestive paper showing what a practical manifestation of the Christianity of the Nazarene has accomplished in less than one year. "The constitutional rights of American shipping," by William W. Bates, the well-known author of American Navigation and other important works on the commerce of the New World, is a valuable contribution to present-day discussions. Mr. Bates, though opposed to ship subsidies, is a strong advocate for American commercial expansion, and points out a practical way in which our country can regain her supremacy by methods which prevailed before the decline of American shipping. "Frederick Opper: a cartoonist of Democracy" is a character sketch of one of the most popular and influential of the newspaper cartoonists of the day, and contains a great number of Mr. Opper's best cartoons. Among the political, social, and economic papers of special value are a very timely and exhaustive discussion by W. G. Joerns, entitled "Juggling with facts and figures about transportation; or, how the railway interests and their special-pleaders are seeking to deceive the people," and Rudolph Blankenburgh's unmasking of the amazing corruption in Philadelphia, under the title of "municipal black plague." This issue of the Arena closes volume 33, and is one of the strongest numbers that has yet appeared.

JUDGE EVANS' SPEECH.

It is with pleasure that we give to our readers the speech of Judge H. K. Evans, of the district court, delivered in the college chapel at the commencement exercises of Graceland College upon the close of the 1904-5 term, June 14, 1905.

The graduating class was composed of Laura, Jeannette, and Belle Kelley, Marguerite Wickes, Anna Soderstadt, Rufus Willey, Roy Dillon, Ada Taylor, Grace Brewster, Ruby Allen, H. H. Gold, and Nora and Eva Reynolds.

The exercises were in charge of Professor R. M. Stewart, who with others of the faculty occupied the platform with the class.

Judge Evans was introduced by Winfred B. Kelley, county attorney of Decatur County, an alumni of Graceland, who expressed pleasure in being connected with and a friend to Graceland.

We commend the reading of Judge Evans' address for the especial reason that he in a plain, businesslike manner set before his audience and the graduating class the fact so clearly taught in the religion of Jesus Christ and so strongly emphasized by our gospel teachers under the ministration of the Master, that labor, industry, and honesty are the elements that enter into human career essential to success: that all other elements by which men gain nominal success in this life with these left out, can give transitory results only, and will not fitly prepare a man for the enjoyment of the best of the life that now is, and the happified life over on the other side.

Honesty pursued only as a policy lacking the innate quality which makes a man "the noblest work of God" will not be the character-mark recognized of God in the judgment-day. An honest man—one honest in heart, in word, conversation, walk, pursuits, in intercourse with his fellow men—need have no fear of the judgment of his friends, his enemies, nor his God. He lies down at night conscious that whatever the issues of the hours of darkness may be he neither dreads nor fears the coming of the morning light. Of him it can not be said that he "fears the light because his deeds are evil."

The Judge well said, the elements which are effectual in bringing an "abiding success" are labor, industry, honesty, freedom from bad habits, and the rule over one's own spirit. His address was listened to with profound attention and marked interest by an appreciative audience.

THE catalogue of Graceland College is now ready for mailing. If you are interested, the secretary, F. B. Blair, Lamoni, Iowa, will send you one upon request.

CHILDREN'S DAY will be observed by the Lamoni Sunday-school, Sunday, June 25.

THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT—AND ITS AUTHOR.

The readers of the HERALD who have a love for historical matters and the personal data connected therewith, will not begrudge the space we give to the following sketch from the pen of Henry Barrett Chamberlain, taken from a late issue of the Chicago Tribune. It appears in the same issue as does the notice of the death of Hiram Silas Cronk, the last survivor of the war of 1812, who died at Ava, in the northern part of the state of New York, at the age of one hundred and five years, a ripe and venerable age. What memories will the notice of the death of this veteran and the sketch concerning the author of the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution cause to arise in the minds of lovers of their country:

In Lebanon, Indiana, at the ripe age of fourscore and eight, there still lives the man who prepared the original draft of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Primarily written to secure the enfranchisement of the negro, it is now construed so liberally as to have become the basis for decisions involving not only the fundamental rights, but the privileges of the citizens of the nation. The recent decision of the Supreme Court as to the bakers in New York and the announcement that the attorneys for Caleb Powers will, under its provisions, ask the transfer of his case from the State courts of Kentucky to those under Federal jurisdiction, are noteworthy instances of its broadening scope.

Stephen-Neal is the father of the fourteenth amendment. Born in Pittsylvania County, Virginia, June 11, 1817, he was taken by his parents to Bath County, Kentucky, when two years old. Here he spent his childhood and youth, working on a farm and securing an academic education. Without collegiate training, the trend of his mind was the desire to acquire knowledge, with the ultimate hope of adopting the law as a profession. In 1841 he was licensed to practice at Carlisle, Kentucky, and two years later established himself at Lebanon, which has since been his permanent home, excepting two years spent in Iowa.

Two years—1846 and 1847—he served as a representative in the Indiana legislature, and during his second term introduced a joint resolution, which was passed, forbidding the granting of legislative divorce. The substance of this resolution was inserted in the State Constitution adopted in 1850. In politics he was then known as a Jefferson Democrat, and took an active interest in national questions, but he was not hidebound, and from time to time changed his party affiliations. He was actuated by principle rather than party fealty, and in 1856 cooperated with the Republican party, remaining thus affiliated until the close of the Civil War and until the measures of reconstruction by the General Government had been consummated.

In April, 1866, viewing with dissatisfaction the various plans for reconstruction proposed by the press and officials, Mr. Neal formulated a measure which he believed would be adopted by three fourths of the States. At the time, Godlove Stoner Orth, an intimate friend, was the representative in Congress from the Lebanon district. To him Neal presented his propositions, Orth added one of his own, the fifth, and then handed them to the congressional committee of fifteen which had been named to consider measures of reconstruction.

Orth was a good man to undertake the advocacy of the proposed amendment in Congress. He was born April 22, 1817, near Lebanon, Pennsylvania, descending from an old Moravian family, which came from Germany in 1725. His grandfather, a revolutionary officer, was in charge of the Hessian prisoners captured at Trenton. Orth was earnest, energetic, and aggressive. From 1843 until 1850 he was in the Indiana Senate as a Whig, once its presiding officer and acting lieutenant-governor. At the beginning of the war he commanded the ram Hornet on the Ohio River, and in 1862 was elected to Congress, being returned for fourteen years. He served on many important committees, was afterward minister to Austria and his party's candidate for governor. He died at Lafayette December 16, 1882.

When Neal and Orth had decided upon their plan the latter appeared before the committee of fifteen. It was a remarkable association of men, including such statesmen as Thaddeus Stevens, Roscoe Conkling, Elihu B. Washburne, Justin S. Morrill, John A. Bingham, George S. Boutwell, Henry T. Blow, A. J. Rogers, and Henry Grider, from the House of Representatives, while from the Senate came William P. Fessenden, James W. Grimes, Ira Harris, Jacob M. Howard, George H. Williams, and Reverdy Johnson.

It is a rare tribute to the ability, skill, and lofty purpose of Stephen Neal that the draft of the amendment, in all of its essential features, was adopted and recommended by a committee composed, as it was, of the foremost statesmen of the time, and after the subject-matter had been considered with the greatest care, for the leaders realized that the fortunes and reputation of the Republican party were in the keeping of these men, while the attitude of President Johnson was most antagonistic.

The thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments were adopted as reconstruction measures. The first of these freed the negro, the second made him a citizen, and the third gave him the voting right. When the fourteenth amendment was debated the basis of representation was the principal subject of argument. This is contained in section 2, its object being by appealing to the self-interest of the former slave States to compel them to grant the suffrage to negroes. Strangely enough this provision, which produced such strenuous speeches, has never been enforced along the lines intended, several Southern States having educational qualifications which practically shut out illiterate blacks. But it has established the principle that a higher qualification than that of race must serve as the basis of the voting privilege.

Final ratification of the fourteenth amendment came in 1868. Connecticut was the first to assent, the reason being that its legislature was in session at the time of notification to the States. New Hampshire followed, and then came Tennessee, the first of the Southern States, its action restoring that commonwealth to its former relations with the Union. The action of Congress in readmitting Tennessee because of its ratification of the amendment made evident that none of the Confederate States would be readmitted except by giving assent to the incorporation of the fourteenth amendment. While this condition was never enacted into law, the admission of Tennessee through the gateway of the amendment was a precedent stronger than law. Other States would probably have held special sessions of their legislatures to expedite the adoption of the amendment had such a course been desired. It was thought best, however, that the provisions of the amendment should be completely understood by the people before the formal assent of the States should be urged.

Concisely stated, the fourteenth amendment guaranteed (1) political and civil rights to all persons born or naturalized in the United States; (2) changes the rule of apportionment of representatives and direct taxes, to adapt it to a wholly free population; (3) excludes from office under the United States and in the States those who have violated a previous oath of allegiance, but gives to two thirds of Congress the power to remove this disability; (4) establishes the validity of the public debt of the United States, but forbids the payment by the United States or by any State of any debt incurred in aid of rebellion or any claim for emancipated slaves; (5) gives to Congress the power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of the amendment.

Before the adoption of this amendment the constitutional provision in regard to citizenship was embraced in article 4, section 2, of the Constitution. As this section refers exclusively to State citizenship, Calhoun and his school claimed that there was no national citizenship. The fourteenth amendment, seeking to protect the freedman from hostile legislation, remedies this defect in the Constitution by defining and specifying what shall constitute national citizenship. All persons born or naturalized in the United States are possessed of a dual citizenship—State and Federal. The clause denying to the States the right to make any law which shall abridge the privileges of citizens of the United States or deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, is that upon which the majority opinion of the Supreme Court in the baker case was based.

The baker case, known as the case of Lochner versus the State of New York, involved the statute of New York making ten hours a day and sixty hours a week the maximum time which a man shall work in bakeries. Lochner, a baker of Utica, violated the law and was fined fifty dollars. The judgment was affirmed in the Court of Appeals in New York, Judge Alton B. Parker writing the opinion. Carried to the Supreme Court of the United States, five of the nine justices saw in the law an infringement upon personal liberty and an interference with the right of free contract, and declared the law unconstitutional, basing their opinion on the fourteenth amendment under which "no State can deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. The right to purchase or to sell labor is part of the liberty protected by this amendment, unless there are circumstances which exclude the right." The circumstances referred to in the opinion are those which would justify the State in the exercise of its police powers.

In the case of Caleb Powers, former Secretary of State of Kentucky, and thrice convicted of conspiracy to cause the assassination of the late Governor Goebel of that State, his attorneys, prominent among them former Governors Black, of New York, and Yates of Illinois, base their application for a change of venue from the State to the Federal courts on the ground that the fourteenth amendment was violated when the State court refused to recognize the pardon granted to Powers by Governor Taylor, at the time Kentucky's legal chief executive. Of course there is another side to this, as Powers' pardon was executed before he was charged with the crime and Taylor's alleged connection with the conspiracy necessitated his flight from the State into Indiana, where he still resides, as requisitions for his surrender have been refused. Extremely nice points of law are raised by this construction of the amendment by the lawyers for Powers, and the court's finding concerning the application for a change of venue is awaited with interest by the legal profession.

Judge Neal—he presided over the Boone County, Indiana, court from 1890 until 1896—intended his amendment to conserve the rights of the colored man. He has lived to see it construed so as to apply to a wide range of questions and to hear it again discussed with considerable vehemence. There are those who are already protesting against the view of the majority of the Supreme Court and are inclined to side with Justice Harlan, who, in writing the dissenting opinion in the baker case, said: "Let the State alone in the management of its purely domestic affairs so long as it does not appear beyond all question that it has violated the Federal Constitution. This view naturally results from the principle that the health and safety of the people of a State are primarily for the State to guard and protect, and is not a matter ordinarily of concern to the National Government."

Stephen Neal and the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States will be remembered as the man and measure that in the time of turmoil and perplexity helped to solve one of the most difficult problems presented to modern statesmen.

It is quite a striking coincidence that this fourteenth amendment, originating as it did in a desire to alleviate the condition of the enfranchised negro and framed with that design, should have been so happily conceived and grounded in the basic principle of human liberty, that after almost a half century of passing time white men should find a refuge in law for the defense of their rights in what was intended to protect an inferior race from the political aggression of that same white man. It is but another instance of divine interposition in the affairs of the nation, and an attestation that the fathers and sustainers of the country "built better than they knew."

MAN-MADE CREEDS IN QUESTION.

Doctor George F. Hall, preaching at the Bush Temple of Music, Chicago, June 11, took the following text: "The man without a creed." On this he said:

Of course, one must have a creed—that is, a belief; a church could not exist without something upon which or in which to believe. Now, when one accepts the living, divine, all-powerful, and all-authoritative Christ as his creed, he needs no formulation of bishop, priests, or other fertile-minded ecclesiastics. Man-made creeds divide the people of God. They create strife. A large portion of the energy and strength of the church is spent in waging wars over differences and technicalities which should be barred and forgotten.

How does this sound when compared with the words of the Master, "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine"? and, "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me"? The prophet of God said long ago, by divine authority, that man-made creeds were an abomination before God; but no divine authority has ever commissioned Doctor Hall or any other clerical gentleman to discard "the faith" of the Lord Jesus Christ.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

The Boston Herald for June 11, 1905, has the latest, and as she asserts, the final message of Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy to her followers. It is in the form of a catechism as follows, as given in the Herald:

"Is Christian Science a new religion?"

"Yes, a new old religion and Christianity."

"Does it stand in relation to Christianity as Christianity did to Judaism?"

"Somewhat."

"Are you an interpreter of Jesus' teaching, or have you presented that which is new to his teaching?"

"An interpreter thereof."

"Is the text-book of Christian Science the word of God in the same sense as the Bible is?"

"All truth is of God and Christian Science is eternal truth, demonstrable, based on a fixed principle and rules, and is susceptible of proof."

"Is 'Science and Health a key to the Scriptures,' a fulfillment of the New Testament promises of a latter-day revelation?"

"It is."

"Is Christian Science in antagonism to natural science?"

"No, not to natural spiritual science. There is no material science."

"Does it (Christian Science) discourage the study of natural science for any portion of it?"

"It is gained by study and rightness."

"Does it (Christian Science) deny the existence of disease germs or merely assert man's superiority over such forces?"

"It denies the existence thereof."

"Does Christian Science expect its followers to live immediately as though entirely spiritualized beings?"

"No."

"Is it proper for a Christian Scientist to disregard the laws of hygiene or to merely disregard them if circumstances make it necessary?"

"To disregard all that denies the allness of God spirit and his laws."

"May the Christian Scientist make use of physical culture, use especially nutritive foods, or make use of fresh-air treatment as aids to physical well-being?"

"No, not necessarily."

"Under any conceivable circumstances would a Christian Scientist make use of surgery?"

"Yes, and no."

"In case of infectious diseases, would a Christian Scientist yield himself to the customary treatment of isolation and disinfection?"

"If the law demands it, yes."

"Does a Christian Scientist regard poverty as a manifestation of disease?"

"No."

"Is poverty a disease of society or of the individual?"

"Of both."

"Can the individual, by the use of Christian Science, overcome a worldly defeat?"

"Yes."

"Is there a doctrine taught by Christian Science that evil can be willed against another as well as good?"

"This doctrine is hypnotism. Christian Science can only produce good effects."

"Has an evil mind power against a spiritual life?"

"Evil works against all good, if it works at all."

"Do you regard death as a great world-fear which the human race wills against itself?"

"Yes."

"If the world would abandon the study of disease and crime, and devote itself to the study of wealth, health, and love, would criminals, cripples, and poverty cease to exist?"

"They would."

"Does Christian Science advocate the abolishment of philanthropic institutions, as well as hospitals?"

"No."

"Could society exist without jails and almshouses?"

"Not at present."

THE SECESSION OF NORWAY.

The inhabitants of Norway in their national assembly, known as the Storting, have taken measures to sever the connection between Norway and Sweden, dissolving the union which has existed since 1814. The governments of Sweden and Denmark are not prepared to grant this severance of the Union, though King Oscar, of Sweden, from whose rule Norway has revolted, declares that there will be no attempt to enforce the continuation of the union upon Norway. King Oscar has been asked to grant that one of the crown princes, Prince Carl, of Sweden, or Prince

Waldemar, of Denmark, should be chosen as king; but the Chicago Tribune, of Monday, June 12, prints a cablegram in the following terms:

The dissolution of the union is by the will of a united Norway. The Swedish people, too, wish it, although the method used hurts their feelings. Denmark is with us. There will be no future union of all three. Norway will be a republic if no Swedish prince accepts throne.

From this it would appear that while Norway would be willing to cater to the old world régime of a king in case some prince of the reigning house of Sweden would be permitted to occupy the throne, in the absence of this an effort will be made to secure a republic. The Norwegians are an intelligent race, and surely are equal to the task of governing themselves. The population of Sweden is about double that of Norway, and in case Sweden should undertake to force Norway to remain in the union it would be a long and terrible struggle, and doubtful as to its issue.

Sweden obtained control of Norway by cession from a Danish king, and although opposition was offered by Norway to this action, it was forced to accede. It was then given a constitution and united with Sweden under one king. Restlessness under this rule and agitation for separation began in 1850. This agitation has continued with greater or lesser intensity ever since, until on June 7, 1905, lacking only a few years of one hundred since the union with Sweden, the Storting by resolution declared the union dissolved and established a provisional government with a premier as its head. We can but wish success to the movement in Norway for the establishment of a separate and independent government. It is open to doubt, however, whether the kingly governments in the old world will permit the establishment of a Norwegian republic. It may be, however. Lovers of republicanism should be able to see in this the continued movement of the principles of freedom permeating the old world to the downfall of kingcraft.

The efforts put forth by King Edward, of England, to establish peaceful relations between his own realm and the other governments may have a tendency to unite the crowned heads against the encroachments of republicanism and thus defeat Norway by the moral force of the several ruling dynasties.

Sweden objects to the withdrawal of Norway from the union hitherto existing between the two countries; but a large contingent of the middle and working classes in Sweden strongly sympathize with Norway, and are assuring their friends in Norway that they will not be parties to an effort to force Norway to stay in.

It would certainly appear that the hosts of intelligent immigrants which both Sweden and Norway have contributed to the population of the American Republic in their visits to the "old country" and in their correspondence with relatives and friends left behind them, have sown the seeds of republicanism fairly broadcast, and the incipient crop seems to be near the harvest-time. No better class of citizens ever replenished the "favored land" than has been furnished by Sweden and Norway. If they can not have harmonious union as kingdoms, there might be unity of intercourse as separate identities under their respective forms of government.

Will the United States recognize the existence of Norway as a separate national existence?

SOME ELEMENTS OF SUCCESS.

ADDRESS OF HONORABLE, H. K. EVANS, AT GRACELAND
COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT, JUNE 14, 1905.

I congratulate the people of Lamoni and of Grace-land College upon this, their annual commencement-time, upon the favorable circumstances under which you come up to this, another commencement-week. I am persuaded that we can not know the value to the community, the state, and the nation, of this commencement-time; not only commencement-time of this college, but of the colleges great and small throughout the commonwealth of Iowa. There is no one thing which civilizes and promotes good order and a high state of Christian citizenship as do the Christian colleges. Great credit is due to the community and especially to the church under whose auspices this college is managed, for their sacrifices, for their labor, for their industry, for their thoughtfulness and care, and for their heroic service in maintaining this school and furnishing higher education to the people of this community and State. The college building, grounds, the teachers, and the graduates of this school from time to time are the ever-present evidence of the sacrifice that has been made by the citizenship and by the church, not from selfish, but from unselfish motives, that your children, and your children's children may have the beneficent influence which comes from the collegiate association and collegiate training.

These elements, and the sacrifices, and these results are the manifestations of labor, the result of industry on the part of the active adult generation of people who now live, and is an offering to the children and young people of school age here and the generations to come.

None of these helpful conditions and none of these manifestations or sacrifices which the people of this community and State have offered and are offering so freely for the education of the young people of the State, are the result of chance or caprice; they are the deliberate and thoughtful acts of loyalty and patriotism of the people to the best government known to man.

The true and abiding success is the purpose, or ought to be the purpose in life of every individual. It is the object of every state and of every nation. In order to succeed as an individual or as a community or as a state, there are certain essential elements which must make up and become a part of and be the very life and motive force of such individual, community, or state; and one of these vital elements, and one which is the very motive force of true success, is labor and industry. Labor is the law of life. It is the law of Nature. It is the law of God. As we look about us we see on every hand the natural forces of the world at work. The very elements of the earth are being dissolved in the crucible of Nature. The chemical action of God's eternal law is separating and combining, dissolving and building up elements for the promotion, for the betterment of mankind. God is working through his laws to make and create here a better and more secure physical abiding-place for the highest creation of his mind. He is working through his Spirit, promoting and building up through the laws of his being, not well understood, to make this the happy abiding-place for the highest development of man. We can not look out upon the trees, the flowers, and the insects, upon any living thing, aye, upon any object, animate or inanimate, without at once recognizing that true law of labor declared by God. When we look about us and see on every hand these manifestations of the Father and of his law, which can not be repealed, declaring the necessity, the wisdom, the beneficence of labor; when we find that all nature is battling for the supremacy of the best; we find that the very chemistry of God promotes and develops inanimate things of Nature for the use of man, we can not but recognize the holy office of labor in the world. When man comes to recognize as he should this thought, it is to be hoped that this spirit of labor may more fully be manifested among the sons of man. And it must be remembered that there is an analogy between the inanimate objects of the earth and the lower order of animals of the earth and man from the beginning; and that if God implanted into the very elements and into the birds, the bees, and the insects of the earth that spirit of industry, that while giving man a free will, it certainly was his purpose to inspire and develop in man this same spirit of labor.

Success in this world is never an accident. Just as the working out of God's laws are not accidental, but in accordance with the pre-knowledge of the Father. Success not being accidental, it is within the reach of every man of ordinary intelligence. "What a man does well he succeeds in." The correct definition of success is "accomplishment"; and in determining whether or not we have been successful we should not compare results of one case with the results in the case of any other person. You can not say that the lawyer has had greater success than the blacksmith, because results can not be compared. You can not say that the minister has had greater success than the physician, because results can not be compared. The real test with the professional man, the mechanic, the farmer, or any other person engaged in his occupation in life is, Has this person done well that thing in which he was engaged? Even though the man may have fame as an advocate, or become known throughout the world as a physician, or be rated in Bradstreet as a man of wealth; yet if these things have not come to him as the result of honest labor, or if he has not attained that degree of excellence which his abilities and his opportunities offer him, then he has not been a success. Industry is the key which unlocks the treasure-house which ambition seeks. Any one of fair ability can have any reasonable thing that he desires if he is willing to pay the price.

There is a law of compensation which runs through all the universe. It is in the material of life. It is in the inanimate of the world. It is in the life of the world, and it runs through spiritual life as well. This price must be paid; and one of the things which make up the price of success is labor. We look about us and we see men who have apparent success, and we see men and women who obtain place in the world. We see them engaged in occupations that appear to us to have been gained by accident. We can not understand why they attain these positions while we were left behind. If we but knew the secret history of these people it would not be strange to us, but we would know that through days and nights, and perhaps through years, they had toiled, burning the midnight oil, preparing themselves to satisfactorily fill in every particular and detail the positions which they hold; and it is especially true that after attaining their places they are able to maintain their positions only by labor. A man or woman may be by accident thrust into a place for which he or she is fitted, but prominent place and abiding success in the world never come by accident, but are the result of toil and years of labor and discipline of mind and spirit. Young people are apt to be in a great hurry to go out into the active business and duties of life. They feel that it is important that they should become a part of the active forces of the world. They often, without preparation, seek places which they can not hold, and after an unsatisfactory and futile effort, fall by the wayside, feeling, perhaps, that they have taken up the wrong occupation in life, or that they are by nature unfitted for the work which they have taken up. Now it is true that we can work much better at things we enjoy than we can work at things we do not enjoy. We can more successfully carry on an occupation which appeals to our interest; and in selecting an occupation young people should be wise and thoughtful, and be careful to make no mistake; but after all the great number of mistakes and the great number of failures in this world are to be attributed to one of two things: one is insufficient preparation, which means the lack of labor in the beginning; or if well and thoroughly prepared, then it may be accounted for from the fact that the individual has failed to appreciate the point which I have been making—that industry is the secret of success. And after preparation they allow their former study and knowledge of the work upon which they are engaged to satisfy them, and they do not seek to keep abreast of the times and constantly improve and prepare themselves for higher and more exacting duties.

And it is the result of their failure to continue their work along the lines of their employment and continue to qualify themselves for still higher and more exacting services, they fall by the wayside, and in the course of time they become back numbers and failures in the line for which they have prepared themselves and find themselves at an age in life where they can not take up a new occupation with profit or success.

I have said already that the law of compensation runs through the universe and that you can have that reasonable thing which you desire if you are willing to pay the price. I mean to say that there is not a young man or a young woman within the sound of my voice but what can, by honesty and industry, and by strict application to any given course, attain a reasonable degree of wealth; but in doing so the individual is in danger of subordinating the higher elements of nature to this one desire for wealth, and while wealth he may attain, real success and true and abiding success will not have been attained; the higher sensibilities will have been blunted, the spiritual life will have been weakened, and the social life perhaps will have been blighted and destroyed. Almost any young man or young woman with ordinary ability who seeks fame may have it by the sacrificing of all things to the one ambition, but in order to attain fame the individual must give the days and nights to the particular line along which he is ambitious, they must sacrifice social life; they will, perhaps, be compelled to sacrifice many relations of life which are the purest and best. The young man here who might have political ambition can set his heart upon almost any reasonable place of preferment and attain it by exercising that strong mastery of common sense and discretion and that overshadowing labor which brings success in every field; but before this ambition is attained he will have to pay the price by the sacrifice of many things that are desirable in life. Some of the young men here might have the thought of great scholarship in mind, great success along the lines of education and higher degrees of learning. I have no doubt that any one might write his name high on the scroll of education of the world; but to do so it may mean the sacrifice of life, the sacrifice of real and healthful enjoyments [of] life, and might along these lines weaken and lessen the value of the individual life to the community. So I say that in attaining success we have to pay the price of success, but we should not pay too high a price. Do not pay the price of character; do not pay the price of your good name; do not pay the price of health; do not pay the price of a dwarfed or a destroyed spiritual life. Health, a good name, character, and a sweet, spiritual life, are of more value to the individual than all else. So I say, be willing to pay a reasonable price for success and be willing to sacrifice, suffer, and struggle in order that you may attain that thing which the mind and soul desire; but in doing these things do not pay in excess of their real value to you and to the community.

While I have magnified the importance of industry, and have tried to show that it is in accordance with the laws of God and in accordance with the happiness of man, yet this alone does not bring real success. It takes something to guide and direct the way of labor. The mariner who starts on the great seas of the earth takes with him a compass that he may know at all times the course which he is sailing, and he carries an instrument to locate at every moment of time the exact place on the sea which he occupies; and so the individual in starting out on the sea of life should take with him an instrument which shall at all times direct him in his course. Honesty is the compass which points the way to real success. Without this element in life, without this element in character, no real abiding success can come to any man. We hear much in these days of dishonesty in the business world, and in politics, and in government, but I am persuaded that there never was a time in the history of the world when there were so many honest men in the world and when business was conducted on such honest principles, when politicians were more true to their convictions, or when governments were conducted along a higher plane. It is true that dishonesty exists in every-day life to some extent, and that will ever be until all men shall make as a part of their lives the principles of the lowly Nazarene. And in speaking of honesty in this connection I desire to treat it from the business standpoint. I mean to say to this class of graduates and to those people who may be listening to this address, that if for no other reasons than purely business reasons, no man can afford to be dishonest. Every man desires success; he desires abiding success. No sensible man seeks temporary success with a knowledge that there will be ultimate failure. We look about us and see men who manifest a disposition to be dishonest, to be engaged in sharp practices, succeeding in life; and persons without experience might feel that they would be justified from the standpoint of success alone to pursue the same course; but any man or woman who has lived in this world to the age of forty has seen over and over again the results of dishonesty overtake and destroy the individual; and I am persuaded that disgraceful failure will follow in the wake of the dishonest man, even though he has temporary success. A man who is honest in this world by every honest act builds himself a character, one which appeals to the great body of men everywhere, and as a result of which character, together with industry, is sure of a fair and reasonable return of his labor; while the dishonest man by every act of his weakens his hold upon the community and lessens his own confidence in himself, undermines his character, and destroys his spiritual life; and there can be but one result, and that is ignominious failure and disgrace. So that two elements necessary to real and abiding success in this world are labor and honesty. There is no place in the economy of Nature for the lazy, for the indolent, or for the laggard. They are the men who too often make up the army of criminals, who are the recruits of our almshouses, jails, and penitentiaries.

The age demands activity, and the age demands honesty. The people of this world are worshipers at the shrine of red blood. The President of the United States in his advocacy of the strenuous life is not suggesting anything new, but he is voicing and declaring and is placing before the people the spirit which the people themselves are manifesting. The last half of the nineteenth century, and this, the twentieth century, is different from all the ages which have preceded. The different ages have from time to time manifested different tendencies. Some of these centuries promoted political glory. Others have promoted the church, and still others have been prominent by reason of discoveries, and still other centuries are known by reason of their colonizing; but none of the ages prior to this age have been an age of doing. They have been principally known as the age of thinking, the age of the cloister as distinguished from the age of the workshop. The age of theoretical education as distinguished from the age of manual training; the age of getting slowly and keeping, as distinguished from the age of earning largely, and large and generous giving; the age of building churches, as distinguished from building hospitals, founding asylums, and general eleemosynary institutions. The school and philanthropic enterprises are organized with the thought of work, of practical work. All of these great enterprises are largely the outgrowth of the higher spirit in the church. There are many men in this world who practice only a part of the commandments; they have thoroughly in mind that "The seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work," and forget that which precedes it, which says, "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work." They do not appreciate the fact that it is God's commandment that we work six days and that we do the six days' work before we rest the seventh. I believe that if the clergy could get together the doless, the indolents, and the laggards in the churches of the land and set apart one or two Sundays of each year and could preach to them upon these commandments, "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work," it would be worth the effort.

I have spoken of labor and of honesty and activity as two of the elements of success, but these alone will not bring full abiding success. Labor is the motive force that propels the ship, honesty is the compass that directs it; but a ship with motive force and a compass is not complete. We look about us and see upon every hand men of splendid energy, men of honest purpose, who do not attain abiding success. They have allowed some habit of life to weaken their motive force and destroy their purpose and to shatter and break their high ideal. Good habits is the anchor that holds the life steady and secure midst the temptations of life, midst the storms and perils of the world. Bad habits, like dishonesty, go to the character. It destroys his confidence in himself. It weakens his will; it weakens his physical energy and mental force, and in the end will bring disaster to honesty of purpose and destroy his industry. But I am discussing the subject of good habits purely from a business standpoint, without reference to the religious side. I mean to say that no man can have abiding success unless he has habits such that will meet the approval of the average fair-minded man. I do not mean to say that a man may not temporarily succeed with habits that are not of the best. But I do mean to say that bad habits will not only destroy his business life and health, but will destroy his spiritual conception of things. There is no business man in Lamoni who would select a young man of known bad habits for a place in his establishment where he had to deal with the public; there is no one who would select a young man of known bad habits where he expected to turn over and allow to pass through his hand money in any considerable quantities. There is not an officer, or a director, or a stockholder in one of the banks of Lamoni who would vote for a young man as cashier or clerk or assistant in one of the banks if he knew the young man had personal habits which were not good. So, I say, for business reasons, pure and simple, if for no other, no young man—I do not need to say young women, for they are universally of good habits—I say no young man can afford to have habits that are questionable or of doubtful propriety. Some habits which are regarded as not good to say the least are not destroying to character, still there are many young men who feel that so long as they do not engage in those habits and practices which are destructive in character, they are justified in indulging in those minor habits which are, to say the least, very foolish and unwise. I think all men everywhere agree that the habit of the use of intoxicating liquors is a dangerous one. That even the occasional use of intoxicating liquors is not wise, while the excessive use is destructive of character, of strength, of confidence. So I think I need not offer any argument as to why the use of intoxicating liquors should be avoided and shunned as a serpent. This is almost as true of the use of cigarettes. But certain habits, such as the habit of smoking and taking a social glass, are sometimes urged as productive of success, as being the means of forming acquaintances so as to put a man socially in touch with men with whom he comes in contact and thereby in a position to reach men in a business and social way which he otherwise could not reach. In answer to this I desire to say that I do not mean to condemn as a wrong the use of tobacco. I do not mean to declare that it is a sin. I mean that the clergy shall determine and declare to the people as they see fit and as they believe in the inspired word they should declare it to the people. But I do mean to say, and I want to say with emphasis, that the use of intoxicating liquors and that the use of tobacco in any form is not essential to success, and I doubt whether they ever promote success.

Something like two years ago I had an opportunity to sit at a dinner where there were twelve gentlemen, every one of whom is prominent in state affairs. I will give you something of these men:

1. Is ex-governor of his State and a cabinet officer in the national administration.
2. Had been president of two Western universities.
3. Was an ex-district judge and a regent of a great university and a successful attorney.
4. Was a candidate of his party for Congress.
5. Was a regent of a university and is since a State Senator.
6. Had been a member of the State Legislature and had been mayor of a city and regent of a great university, and is since district judge of his State.
7. Was a legislator of his State and had been a candidate of his party for governor, was then a regent of a university and had been a district judge of his State.
8. Was an ex-State superintendent of public schools; he was then a president of a small college and a regent of a great university.
9. Was president of an insurance company and was then candidate for State Senator and regent of a great university.
- 10 and 11 I do not remember, but number 12 was the clerk of one of the distinguished men I have mentioned.

After the dinner-hour the host, recognizing the quite general practice of men to enjoy a good cigar, offered to these distinguished men the cigars. I am here to say to you that of the twelve men present, eleven of whom, at least, have a State-wide reputation, but one accepted a cigar, and he was the clerk of the most distinguished man of the company. I do not say this to condemn the use of tobacco, but I relate this actual circumstance that these young men in this class and the young men within the sound of my voice may know that of these twelve men, all of whom had attained a place for themselves and by industry and splendid habits had become State-wide in their acquaintance, had all succeeded in life and had done so in spite of the fact that not one of them indulged in the use of intoxicating liquors or in the use of tobacco. These men might have succeeded as well had they used tobacco, but I am persuaded that they would not have succeeded as well had they used intoxicating liquors; and I relate this circumstance to show the fact that doubtful habits are not essential to acquaintance. They are not essential to social prominence; they are not essential to political success, but on the contrary they are more likely to be a handicap and an evil, than an assistance.

The things that I have said have been largely based upon different worldly successes; that success in its material sense as thought of and as we should ever think of it in connection with business and professional success of the world; and these proper subjects of consideration and the practical business success is one which the young men have a right to consider with reference to occupation and duties of life; but let it be said with emphasis, that wealth and position attained do not represent an abiding success in life, but rather the thought, "He who ruleth his own spirit is greater than he who taketh a city." Many men have attained business success by effort; they have attained honorable success by the exercise of industry, of honesty, and by observing good habits. They have made a place for themselves and a name that was honored and respected as a result of the exercise of those qualities. But while men have made an honorable name for themselves in these ways, no man has glorified his name in the effort to do so. Men obtain honorable names by effort, but names that become glorified are not the result of effort at glorification, but they are the result of service to the community. "Whosoever shall save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake, shall save it." This is the thought, that service is the spirit and demand of the age. And the man who has written his name highest on the scroll of fame is the man who has done the greatest service to the world without a desire for glorification. We can not all have our names glorified, but under the definition of success which I have given and which I have tried to discuss, we can all have our names written on the scroll of success. We can have our names written as honorable and faithful workers. We may all be known as men and women who have served our generation with devotion and unselfish purposes and only with a desire to promote and advance the community in which we live and in the spirit as declared by the lowly Nazarene: "If any man desire to be first, let him be the servant of all."

Every man stamps his own value upon himself, and we are great or little according to our will.—Samuel Smiles.

No one else can solve your problem, or work out your riddle. You stand or fall by it. Your happiness, your well-being, your success and your destiny hang upon your carrying out the program the Creator has given you.

THE MORMON PROPHET'S TRAGEDY.

The Atlantic Monthly for December, 1869, published the following article from the pen of John Hay, now Secretary of State, Washington. As an account from the standpoint of a nonmember, it will be of interest to our readers.—EDITORS.

As early as 1838, the prophet Joe Smith seems to have adopted that fascinating theory, "that all pretty women have the right to charm us, and the wife's claim of mere priority should not injure the just pretensions of others to our admiration." Joseph never read Molière,—nor anybody else,—and so he did not copy either the language or manner of the irresistible Signor Tenorio. His lover's-mood was "more condoling," but not less effective for the flavor of cant there was in it. His weapons were direct revelations and promises of mansions in the sky. His wooing prospered in spite of the buxom and protesting Emma, his lawful wife, who exhibited a natural though purely eclectic scepticism in regard to those special revelations.

In the spring of 1844, in Nauvoo, the prophet saw the wife of Doctor Foster, admired her, and, led by his evil genius, marched to conquest and found defeat. Her reception of him was what Jomini would call "defensive, with offensive return." She supplemented Lucretia with Xantippe, and her husband, the doctor, found that something must be done. He talked the thing over with Mr. Law, whose placens uxor had received and declined the same saintly overtures, and they came to the eminently American conclusion that the light should be turned upon such an iniquity. They bought press and types, and appealed to that court of final resort for all Anglo-Saxon blood,—printer's ink.

The first and last number of the Nauvoo Expositor was published upon the 7th of June, and I have had the good fortune to see a copy of this sole edition. The Expositor's motto is, "The Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth." The names of the publishers, printed defiantly at the head of its columns, are William and Wilson Law (who in the advertising page promise to grind the grist of the needy one day in the week toll-free at their mill), Charles Ivins, Francis M. Higbee, (whose betrothed, the bright-eyed Nancy Rigdon, had also been unsuccessfully wooed by the prophet), Chauncey L. Higbee, brother of Francis,—not a Mormon, I believe, but an adventurous young lawyer of Nauvoo, always a thorn in the side of the prophet, and later a distinguished legislator and judge in Southern Illinois,—Robert D. Foster, and Charles, his brother.

The first article of the Expositor is the "Last Man" of Campbell; then comes a solitary horseman riding in the sunset; then a facetious article in praise of cheerfulness, in which occurs a remark showing close and subtle observation. "You never saw a man cut his throat with a broad grin on his face: it's a great preventative [sic] of suicide." These lighter matters disposed of, the Expositor girds on its armor and gives a half-dozen dreadful columns to the preamble, resolutions, and affidavits of the seceders from the church at Nauvoo. This document, though intensely relished at that day, would be very dull reading now. There are only two things worth noting in it,—one, the bold and distinct allegations of the open and cynical licentiousness of Smith and his apostles; the other, the earnestness with which, even amidst the wreck of their personal illusions, the seceders still hold to their faith in the original imposture. It is touching to see how desperately they fight against their own doubts and suspicions of the utterances that proceed from so foul a source. They say: "As for our acquaintance with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, we know no man nor set of men can be more thoroughly acquainted with its rise, its organization, and its history, than we have every reason to believe we are. We all verily believe, and many of us know of a surety that the religion of the Latter Day Saints, as originally taught by Joseph Smith, which is contained in the Old and New Testaments, Book of Covenants, and Book of Mormon, is verily true; and that the pure principles set forth in those books are the immutable and eternal principles of Heaven, and speaks [sic] a language which when spoken in truth and virtue sinks deep into the heart of every honest man."

Mr. Hepworth Dixon, who has the convenient faculty of believing everything that is picturesque, and rejecting unmanageable evidence with an airy tant pis pour les faits, represents the system of polygamy as an emanation of the political genius of Brigham Young, invented as a means of government, and accepted with blind faith by the pure-minded elders of Utah. He says: "Who shall say they are insincere? Young told me that in the early days of this strange institution he was much opposed to plural households, and I am confident that he speaks the truth. Among the Mormon presidents and apostles, we have not seen one face on which liar and hypocrite were written. Though we daily meet with fanatics, we have not seen a single man whom we can call a rogue." It is inconsistent with Mr. Dixon's theory of Smith's mystic fanaticism, to admit the stories of his robust profligacy. So he simply denies them. But no fact is more notorious than that Smith's daily life had established polygamy in Nauvoo long before Rigdon had invented his jargon of spiritual wives, or Hiram received his revelation to justify it. The elders of the church, Brigham and others, clamored rebelliously against the prophet's exclusive license, and together they began cautiously to lay the foundation of the new doctrine, which, properly arranged, should prove a strength instead of weakness to the church. Begging Mr. Dixon's pardon—they were "liars and hypocrites." In the great hierarchy at Nauvoo there were no fanatics; the flocks were sheep; but the keepers were wolves. This doctrine of spiritual wives was the result, not the cause, of the lewd lives of Smith, Young, and their fellow blackguards, and was invented to justify the immorality which the ignorance and credulity of their female worshipers rendered so easy, to serve in the future as a bait for the rascal few, and to blind the eyes of the honest and stupid mass.

In the very year 1844 the attempt was made to ingraft this abomination upon the creed of the church. The affidavits of William Law and his wife, and of Austin Cowles, published in the Expositor, established the fact that Hiram Smith had read to them a pretended revelation of the dogma of "a plurality of wives," and of the sealing up of persons to eternal life against all sin, save that of shedding innocent blood,—innocent blood meaning the blood of Mormons. In the case of Sr. Law, the revelation was strengthened by the assurances of damnation to any woman who objected to her husband's embracing the new doctrine.

It is true that Joe Smith after the publication of these affidavits took fright at the storm of disgust they produced, and desisted from the attempt to inculcate the new doctrine. But he never distinctly denied the authenticity of the revelation. On the contrary, during one of those singular trials in his own municipal court, he stated squarely, "Bro. Hiram is a prophet of the Lord; and when the Lord speaks let the earth tremble." In all Smith's curious history, there is no fact more clearly established than this effort to legalize and consecrate his immoral life. It formed the first link of that chain of circumstances which within a few days dragged him to his doom.

It was clear that a crisis had arisen in his fortunes. A clearer-headed man than he might well have hesitated as to the course most expedient to pursue. To disregard this sudden and vigorous attack might prove fatal to his prestige. We may smile at the lame grammar and turgid rhetoric of the Expositor, but it was a better paper than Smith's organ, the Neighbor. Parmi les aveugles le borgne est roi. A little brains went farther in Nauvoo than anywhere else on earth. Contemptible as the Expositor was, Smith could not despise it. To resort to violence might lead to bloody reprisals. But his rowdy instincts decided the question. He procured from his corrupt and servile municipal court an order declaring the new journal a public nuisance. A party of his myrmidons destroyed the press and piéd the offending types.

This act was Smith's death-warrant. Thereafter the mob could say to the prophet, The villany you teach me I will execute.

Smith's official paper, the Neighbor, gave a full account of the proceeding. The article ends in these words, which bear a curious family likeness to the protests for ever made by slaveholders, and other enemies of the human race, against the reprisals of law and justice. They want nothing more than to be let alone. "And in the name of freemen, and in the name of God, we beseech all men who have the spirit of honor in them to cease from persecuting us collectively or individually. Let us enjoy our religion, rights, and peace, like the rest of mankind. Why start presses to destroy rights and privileges, and bring upon us mobs to plunder and murder? We ask no more than what belongs to us,—the rights of Americans."

Foster and Law fled, like the vanquished Marius, to Carthage. Although the county authorities, who had been elected on the Democratic ticket and had received the solid Mormon vote, were disposed to deal as gently as possible with the autocrat of Nauvoo, they could not refuse the warrants of arrest for which the fugitives applied. These were granted against Joseph and Hiram Smith, and sixteen others of the rioters. But when the deputy sheriff went to Nauvoo the Mormons smiled at his simplicity, and went through the form of arrest, habeas corpus, trial, and acquittal before that singular municipal court of which the prophet was judge, jury, counsel, and prisoner, with a promptness and celerity that astonished the officer. They then sent him back to Carthage, with significant admonitions.

These occurrences gave rise to an excitement in the county which one regarding the matter calmly from this distance finds it difficult to account for. Public meetings were held in every precinct. Volunteer companies sprang up everywhere at the tap of a drum. There was drilling on every common, and hoarse eloquence in all the schoolhouses. Expresses were riding on all the roads with imperfectly defined purposes. The brigadier-general commanding the militia ordered a levy en masse in the adjoining counties. The newspapers of the county grew hysterical with exclamation-points and "display-type." The Warsaw Signal, published at the headquarters of the anti-Mormons, by Mr. Thomas C. Sharp, was simply frantic in its issue of the 12th of June. Here is an extract. I regret not to be able to give the eccentricities of lettering by which the words seem to shriek on the page. A letter from Foster relates the destruction of the Expositor press. The Signal adds: "We have only to state that this is sufficient! War and extermination is inevitable! CITIZENS ARISE, ONE and ALL!!! Can you stand by, and suffer such INFERNAL DEVILS! to ROB men of their property and RIGHTS, without avenging them? We have no time to comment: every man will make his own. LET IT BE MADE WITH POWDER AND BALL!!!!"

This fine frenzy of the Signal was not on the whole unaccountable. At a public meeting in Nauvoo, the day before, Joe Smith alluded darkly to other sinners that might tempt his wrath too far, and, in that crimson rhetoric peculiar to the latitude and hour, denounced the ultimate pains upon all who "were not willing to wade knee-deep in blood to do his bidding." His brother Hiram, being only chief priest and deputy prophet, was less reserved. He promised full immunity to any adventurous saint who should go to Warsaw and do so and more also to the heretic Signal, adding, with a brilliancy of wit unusual to the guild of prophets: "If long-nosed Sharp don't look out, he will git a pinch of snuff that will make him sneeze!" In this flash of intolerable brightness, the genius of Hiram closed its work in this world. He never made another speech.

Of course the destruction of the Expositor was not enough, of itself, to kindle so intense a popular passion. It takes a great deal of hammering to heat an iron bar, but it reddens very rapidly at last. For four years the entire county had been kept in a state of unwholesome excitement by these people. After all that may be said of the faults of both sides, it is impossible to deny that the Mormons were bad neighbors. The large majority were ignorant, honest, hard-working folk, who were harmless and peaceable. But the thieves and vagrants, who in other communities are feræ naturæ, were in Nauvoo patronized and protected, for several reasons. The city charter, granted by the legislature in a sordid subserviency, gave to the municipal court a wide jurisdiction. The accused Mormon always appealed to this court for protection against the persecuting Gentile, and he always got off scot-free. Smith rather enjoyed defying the outside world, and perhaps felt also a secret sympathy with loafers in trouble. For years scarcely a criminal had been brought out of Nauvoo. The evil was growing every day less endurable. The Mormon vote, being always cast solid, was all-powerful in the county and of no slight importance in the State. It was invariably cast for the Democratic ticket, as is the Fenian vote to-day. And, like the Fenian vote, it had a demoralizing influence on both parties; the one making dishonorable advances to gain it, and the other making humiliating concessions to retain it. By this means the Mormons ruled the county. The sworn officers of the law connived at the high-handed contempt with which the mayor and common council of Nauvoo treated the laws of the State.

Intoxicated with so abnormal a power, surrounded by knaves that flattered him and dupes that worshiped him, Smith began to develop vices that were truly royal. He appropriated the exclusive right to deal in real estate, to sell liquor, to marry, and to give in marriage. He was too ignorant to look far beyond his own horizon. "He thought the rustic noises of his burgh the murmuring of the world."

He discovered in 1844 that the other presidential aspirants were all unsatisfactory, and announced himself in the Nauvoo Neighbor as candidate for the Presidency, and a creature of his, named Bennet, for the Vice-Presidency. He went so far as to have views, and to publish them. He sent out missionaries to advocate his claims. He still nominally adhered to the Democratic party, however, and is credited with the paternity of a poem published in the Neighbor, which concludes with these luminous lines:

"O, sustain ye Democracy throughout the land,
And ever go forth at Jehovah's command.
And while the old farmer yet swings the flail
Or follows the plough,
Good Democrats tread, O, tread on the tail
Of that Old Coon now!"

Of late he had grown more violent and open in his lawlessness. He had sent a band of his followers into Missouri, to kidnap the witnesses in a case where a Mormon thief was to be tried. He had brutally assaulted and beaten a county officer in the streets of Nauvoo. He stood indicted in the courts for perjury, in having sworn to a purely imaginary charge of murder, against a gentleman whom he wanted to drive out of Nauvoo. That absurd ecclesiastical court of his had repeatedly discharged men accused of grave offences, and warned the officers against any attempt to rearrest them.

It was this arrogant sense of his own power that at last destroyed him. At first he treated the sheriff's warrant with contempt. At the second summons, he told the officer he would go the next day with him to Carthage. He did not keep his appointment. The officer went back to Carthage alone. But a day or two afterwards, the Smiths came riding into Carthage unattended, except by their common council and the others accused of riot, and gave themselves up to the county authorities. They were taken before a justice of the peace, and entered into recognizance to appear at court. They were at once discharged; but the Smiths were immediately rearrested on a charge of treason,—levying arms against the government of the State,—and recommitted to the county jail.

The prospect was still not bad for them. The sheriff was their friend. They were sure of a favorable jury. The governor—a man of the best intentions, that accomplished nothing but patching the infernal pavement—had come over to Hancock County to preserve law and order. The Smiths were sure of a speedy trial and acquittal. And the whole tiresome play was to begin again. There was only one way of getting out of the groove. The Deus ex machina, who alone could settle matters, was the mob.

There was a large body of militia at Carthage, and a small regiment at Warsaw. The governor, not knowing how to employ their idle hands, ordered them to rendezvous at Golden's Point. He sent Singleton to Nauvoo to take command of the legion raised by Smith. Singleton, on his arrival, found two thousand men armed and equipped. Though a little dismayed by the apparition, he inspected them and reported to the governor.

During this day or two the governor seemed plagued by the foul fiend Flibbertigibbet. He changed his mind every hour, with the best intentions. When the troops had started for Golden's Point, he began to doubt, as he well might. They were going to Nauvoo to search for "bougs" (a noun which in that day was used to denote an ingenious imitation of the current coin, manufactured in the city of the Saints), and to overawe the Mormons by a calm display of force. What if they searched for other things, and did not content themselves with a calm display? These thoughts so agitated Governor Ford, that he wrote an order on the 27th, countermanning former orders, and disbanding the militia. He then mounted his horse and rode to Nauvoo, to deliver a firm and paternal address to the Mormons. All this was done with the best intentions.

On the morning of the 27th of June, the regiment of Colonel Levi Williams started from Warsaw, in obedience to the call of the governor to rendezvous at Golden's Point, a settlement in the vicinity of Nauvoo. They went out in high glee, fully expecting to march to the city of the Saints, and not doubting that before they left it some occasion would arise which would make it necessary to remove this standing scandal from the face of the earth. There were none but words of law and order on their lips; but every man clearly understood that Nauvoo was to be destroyed before they returned. A public meeting in Warsaw had unanimously "Resolved, that we will forthwith proceed to Nauvoo and exterminate the city and its people"; a manifesto which seemed too peppery even for the palate of Mr. Sharp, editor of the Signal, who, when he published it, added the saving clause, "if necessary." "Of course it will be necessary," said these law-abiding militia-men as they marched out of Warsaw on the Nauvoo road.

Order reigned in Warsaw—for the men were all gone. The whole male adult population, with trifling exceptions, were in William's regiment. Among the captains were William N. Grover, afterwards a distinguished lawyer of St. Louis, and United States Attorney for Missouri,—an eminently respectable and conservative man; Thomas C. Sharp, editor of the Signal, who also on this day sowed the last of his wild oats, and was afterwards principal of the public school, and greatly esteemed as county judge; Jacob C. Davis, then State Senator, afterwards member of Congress from that district.

They arrived near noon at some deserted shanties, about seven miles from Warsaw, that had been built and abandoned in that flurry and collapse of internal improvements that passed over the State in 1838. There they were met by Mr. David Matthews, a well-known citizen of Warsaw, who had ridden rapidly from Carthage with an order from the governor, disbanding the regiment. The governor, fearing he could not control the inflammable material he had gathered together, had determined to scatter it again.

Colonel Williams read the governor's order. Some of the anti-Mormon warriors, blessed with robust Western appetites, looked at the sun, and concluded they could get home by dinner-time, and under the influence of this inspiring idea started off at quick-step. Captain Grover soon found himself without a company. Captain Aldrich essayed a speech calling for volunteers for Carthage. "He did not make a fair start," says the chronicle, "and Sharp came up and took it off his hands." Sharp, being a spirited and impressive talker, soon had a respectable squad about him. Captain Davis, on the contrary, was sorely perplexed. It was heavy weather for him. He was a professional politician, and dearly loved both Mormon and anti-Mormon votes. He was so backward in coming forward that his company left him in disgust, and followed the fiery Grover, whose company had gone home to dinner. Davis still could not make up his mind to go home, but "got into Calvin Cole's wagon and followed the boys at a distance"; so that he had at last the luck to be in at the closing scene, and the honor to be indicted with the rest. The speeches of Grover and Sharp were rather vague; the purpose of murder does not seem to have been hinted. They protested against "being made the tools and puppets of Tommy Ford." They were going to Carthage to see the boys, and talk things over. Some of the cooler heads, such as Doctor Hay, surgeon of the regiment, denounced the proceeding and went at once back to Warsaw.

While they were waiting at the shanties, a courier came in from the Carthage Grays. It is impossible at this day to declare exactly the purport of his message. It is usually reported and believed that he brought an assurance from the officers of this company that they would be found on guard at the jail where the Smiths were confined; that they would make no real resistance,—merely enough to save appearances.

This message was not communicated to the men. They followed their leaders off on the road to Carthage, with rather vague intentions. They were annoyed at the prospect of their picnic coming so readily to a close, at losing the fun of sacking Nauvoo, at having to go home without material for a single romance. Nearly one hundred and fifty started with their captains, but they gradually dwindled in number to seventy-five. These trudged along under the fierce summer sun of the prairies towards the town where the cause of all the trouble and confusion of the last few years awaited them. They sang on the way a rude parody of a camp-meeting hymn called in the West the "Hebrew children":

"Where now is the Prophet Joseph?
Where now is the Prophet Joseph?
Where now is the Prophet Joseph?
Safe in Carthage Jail!"

The farther they walked the more the idea impressed itself upon them that now was the time to finish the matter totally. The unavowed design of the leaders communicated itself magnetically to the men, until the entire company became fused into one mass of bloodthirsty energy. By an excess of precaution, they did not go directly into the town, but made a long detour, so as to come in by the road leading from Nauvoo.

The jail where the Smiths were confined is situated at the extreme northwestern edge of the dismal village, at the end of a long, ill-kept street whose middle is a dusty road and whose sides are gay with stramonium and dog-fennel. As the avengers came in sight of the mean-looking building that held their prey, the sleeping tiger that lurks in every human heart sprang up in theirs, and they quickened their pace to a run. There was no need of orders,—no possibility of checking them now. The guards were hustled away from the door, good-naturedly resisting until they were carefully disarmed. Their commander, Lieutenant Frank Worrell afterwards gave this testimony on the trial, which we copy for its curious and cynical bonhomie:

"I was one of the guards at the jail. Saw Smith when he was killed. Saw none of the defendants at the jail! Suppose there were one or two hundred there. They stayed three or four minutes. They formed in front of the jail and made a rush. Knew none that came up. . . . Heard nothing that was said. . . . Saw Smith die,—was within ten feet of him. . . . Perhaps a minute after he fell I saw him die. . . . I was pushed and shoved some fifty feet. . . . Did not see Sharp, Grover, or Davis. It was so crowded I could not see much. I know about one third of the men in the county, but none at the jail. I might have been some scared."

It would be difficult to imagine anything cooler than this quiet perjury to screen a murder. Yet the strangest part of this strange story is that Frank Worrell was a generous young fellow, and the men with whom he carried out the ghastly comedy of attack and resistance at the door of the prison—Sharp and Grover—were good citizens, educated and irreproachable, who still live to enjoy the respect and esteem of all who know them. There is but one force mighty enough in the world to twist such minds and consciences so fearfully awry, and that is the wild suspicion bred of civil strife. A few months of this miniature war in Hancock County had sufficed to possess many of the prominent actors with the spirit of demons; and in the mind of any anti-Mormon there was nothing more criminal in the shooting of Smith than in the slaying of a wolf or panther.

This jolly, good-natured Worrell was himself murdered by Mormon assassins not long after. He was riding with a friend. A shot was heard from a thicket. "That was a rifle," said the friend. "Yes, and I've got it," said Worrell, coolly. He fell from his horse and died. I have seen, as a child, his grave at Warsaw. A rude wooden head-board, bearing this legend, "He who is without enemies is unworthy of friends,"—not very orthodox, but perhaps as true as most epitaphs.

While Worrell, little thinking of his tombstone, was struggling with his friendly assailants, as many as the narrow entry would hold had rushed into the open door and up the cramped little stairs. Smith and his brother had been that day removed from their cells and given comparative liberty in a large, airy room on the first floor above. This afternoon they were receiving the visits of two Mormon brethren, Richards and Taylor. They heard the row at the door and the rush on the stairs, and instinctively barred their door by pressing their weight against it. The mob fired at the door. Hiram Smith fell, exclaiming, "I'm a dead man." Taylor crawled under the bed, with a bullet in the calf of his leg. Richards hid himself behind the opening door, in mortal terror. He afterwards lied terribly about the affair, saying he stood calmly in the center of the room, warding off the bullets with a consecrated wand.

Joe Smith died bravely. He stood by the jamb of the door and fired four shots, bringing his man down every time. He shot an Irishman named Wills, who was in the affair from his congenital love of a brawl, in the arm; Gallagher, a Southerner from the Mississippi Bottom, in the face; Voorhees, a half-grown hobbledehoy from Bear Creek, in the shoulder; and another gentleman, whose name I will not mention, as he is prepared to prove an alibi, and besides stands six feet two in his moccasins.

Smith had two loaded six-barrelled revolvers in his room. How a man on trial for capital offenses came to be supplied with such luxuries is a mystery that perhaps only one man could fully have solved; and as General Deming, the Jack-Mormon sheriff, died soon after, and left no explanation of the matter, investigation is effectually baffled. But the four shots which I have chronicled, and two which had no bullet, exhausted one pistol, and the enemy gave Smith no time to use the other. Severely wounded as he was, he ran to the window, which was open to receive the fresh June air, and half leaped, half fell, into the jail yard below. With his last dying energies he gathered himself up, and leaned in a sitting posture against the rude stone well-curb. His stricken condition, his vague, wandering glances, excited no pity in the mob thirsting for his life. They had not seen the handsome fight he had made in the jail; there was no appeal to chivalry (there is chivalry on the borders, as in all semibarbarous regions). A squad of Missourians who were standing by the fence levelled their pieces at him, and, before they could see him again for the smoke they made, Joe Smith was dead.

Meanwhile, the Carthage Grays were approaching. They had been called out half an hour before, and formed on the Court-house Square, by Captain Robert Smith, with great precision and a deliberation that give rise, under the circumstances, to somewhat wide conjecture. Captain Smith had not previously been regarded as a martinet, but this afternoon he could have given points to a Potsdam corporal. He stopped his company half a dozen times, to remonstrate against defects in their alignment; and it was owing to his extreme conscientiousness about discipline that they arrived at the jail when all was over. Let me add that Captain Smith (for it seemed fated that everybody connected with this affair should have greatness thrust upon him) became in the great war General Robert F. Smith, and marched his troops from Hancock County to the Atlantic with more speed, if less science, than he displayed in leading his squad that day from the Court-house to the jail.

The moment the work was done, the calmness of horror succeeded the fever of fanatical rage. The assassins hurried away from the jail, and took the road to Warsaw in silence and haste. They went home at a killing pace over the wide, dusty prairie. Warsaw is eighteen miles from Carthage; the Smiths were killed at half past five; at a quarter before eight the returning crowd began to drag their weary limbs through the main street of Warsaw,—at such an astounding rate of speed had the lash of their own thoughts driven them.

The town was instantly put in such attitude of defense as its limited means permitted. The women and children were ferried across the river to a village on the Missouri shore. The men kept guard night and day in the hazel thickets around the town. Everybody expected sudden and exemplary vengeance from the Mormons.

Nothing of the kind took place. The appalling disaster that had fallen upon the church gave rise to no spirit of revenge. It was long before the Mormons recovered from the stupor of their terror and despair. A delegation went to Carthage to receive their dead. They brought them home and buried them with honors becoming the generals of the legion. The seceders, panic-stricken, fled from Nauvoo and never returned.

The reaction now began. At the August elections, the Jack-Mormon ticket, as it was called, bearing candidates favorable to the Mormons, was chosen by an unexampled majority. The press of the State was unanimous in its condemnation of the Warsaw men, with a few exceptions, when special correspondents had visited the county. These were almost invariably apologists of the killing. It is curious to note the sudden change of the anti-Mormon journals from the fierce and aggressive tone which they held the week before, to the sullen attitude of self-defense they assumed the week after the Carthage tragedy. Here is an extract from an article by Sharp in the Signal, which may show how much easier it is to kill a man than to justify the killing:

"The St. Louis Gazette says that the men that killed the Smiths were a pack of cowards. Now our view of the matter is, that instead of cowardice they exhibited foolhardy courage, for they must have known or thought that they would bring down on themselves the vengeance of the Mormons. True, the act of an armed body going to the jail and killing prisoners does appear at first sight dastardly, but we look at it as though these men were the executioners of justice; and their act is no more cowardly than is the act of the hangman in stretching up a defenseless convict who is incapable of resistance. If any other mode could have been devised, or any other time selected, it would have been better; but as we have heard others say, we are satisfied that it is done, and care not to philosophize on the modus operandi."

It was impossible that the matter should be allowed to pass entirely unnoticed by the law. Besides, Governor Ford, who considered the murder a personal disrespect to himself, was really anxious to bring the perpetrators to justice. Bills of indictment were found at the October term of court against Levi Williams, Mark Aldrich, Jacob C. Davis, William N. Grover, Thomas C. Sharp, John Wills, William Voorhees, William Gallagher, and one Allen. They were based on the testimony of two idle youths, named Brackenbury and Daniels, who had accompanied the expedition from Warsaw to Carthage on the 27th of June, and had seen the whole affair. Having a natural disinclination to work, they lived as long as they could by exploiting this rare experience. Their evidence being worse than useless in Warsaw, they went to Nauvoo, professed Mormonism, and had their board paid by the faithful, to secure their attendance at the trial. Brackenbury formed an alliance with a sign-painter, who executed in the highest style of Nauvoo art a panorama of the prophet's Death and Ascension, which they exhibited to the great edification of the Mormons and to such profit that the artist soon died of the trembling madness, and Brackenbury fell heir to the canvas and the fees. Daniels collaborated with a scribbler named Littlefield a most remarkable pamphlet on the same subject, stuffed full of miracles, and inventions more stupid than the truth.

Murray McConnell, who appeared in behalf of the governor to prosecute (and who was himself mysteriously assassinated twenty-four years later,—as if a taint of blood were on all connected with this drama), made an arrangement with the defendants' counsel, by which the defendants agreed to appear voluntarily at the next May term, the State not being ready with its evidence. But towards the end of November, the vote of Davis becoming inconvenient to the leaders of the Senate, this convention was violated, and orders made for writs instanter against Davis and the rest. They were treated with contempt. Davis kept his seat in the Senate, and when the sheriff came to Warsaw he was received with that jocosely discourtesy which so often in the West indicates a most sinister state of public feeling. He could find no trace of the men he was looking for. Nobody had seen or heard of them for weeks. In every shop he entered, he saw a loaded rifle, or a man oiling a gunlock or molding bullets. In the morning, when he mounted his horse to ride away, he found his mane and tail shaved bare as the head of a dervish. Hurrying out of the hostile neighborhood, he passed a crowd of grinning loungers.

"My horse was in bad company last night," he said, with a wretched attempt at good-natured indifference.

"Most generally is, I reckon," was the unfeeling retort; and the chief executive officer of the county left the mutinous town to itself.

The next May, all the defendants appeared, according to agreement, to stand their trial. They began by filing their affidavit that the county commissioners who selected the array of jurors for the week were prejudiced against them; that the sheriff and his deputies were unfitted by prejudice to select the talesmen that might be required. They therefore entered a motion to quash the array of jurors, to set aside the sheriff and his deputies, and to appoint elisors to select a jury for the case. After argument, this was done. The elisors presented ninety-six men, before twelve were found ignorant enough and indifferent enough to act as jurors.

A large number of witnesses was examined, but nothing was elicited against the accused from any except Brackenbury, Daniels, and a girl named Eliza Jane Graham. The two first had been lying so constantly for some months professionally, the one in his pamphlet, the other in his raree-show, that they had utterly forgotten where they started from, and so embroidered their original facts with more recent fiction, that their evidence went for nothing. Besides, the showman Brackenbury thought that the pamphleteer Daniels had received more attention than himself from the polite world of Nauvoo, and was consequently stung by jealousy to contradict in his evidence all that Daniels had sworn to. The evidence of Miss Graham, delivered with the impetuosity of her sex, was all that could be desired—and more too. She had assisted in feeding the hungry mob at the Warsaw House as they came straggling in from Carthage, and she could remember where every man sat, and what he said, and how he said it. Unfortunately she remembered too much. No one accused her of willful perjury. But her nervous and sensitive character had been powerfully impressed by the influence of Smith, and, brooding constantly upon his death, she came at last to regard her own fancies and suspicions as positive occurrences. A few alibis so discredited her evidence, that it was held to prove nothing more than her own honest and half-insane zeal.

The case was closed. There was not a man on the jury, in the court, in the county, that did not know the defendants had done murder. But it was not proven, and the verdict of NOT GUILTY was right in law.

And you can not find in this generation an original inhabitant of Hancock County who will not stoutly sustain the verdict.

There was very little excitement about the matter. The Mormons were not vigorous in the prosecution. Their leaders were already involved in the squabbles and intrigues of the succession. The prophet's brother, William Smith, was an aspirant. But he was a weak, indolent, good-natured sensualist, and was readily bought off and suppressed. He carried on for some time a flourishing trade in "patriarchal blessings." He had probably never heard of Tetzal, and yet the old Dominican himself could scarcely have systematized his traffic better. He advertised in the Neighbor: "Common blessings, fifty cents; Extraordinary blessings, one dollar; Children, half price; women, gratis." Rigdon made a desperate stand for the prophet's mantle. But he was defeated also, and, being recalcitrant, was solemnly "given over to be buffeted of the Evil One for a thousand years." The coolest and most unbelieving of them all succeeded to the autocracy. Brigham Young, whether guided by instinct or reason I do not know, avoided the fatal mistake of Smith, who turned back from Missouri to Illinois, and the crazy fantasy of Rigdon, who would have gone from Illinois to Pennsylvania. Tribes and religions can not travel against the sun. Young, during the troubled year that followed, exerted himself to gather all the reins of government into his own hands; and there was not in all the slavish East a despot more absolute than he when at last he started, with his wives and his servants and his cattle, to lead his people into the vast tolerant wilderness.

The only man who never makes a mistake is the man who never does anything.—Theodore Roosevelt.

Procrastination.

Alas! how neglectful,
Unfeeling we tread!
How careless, forgetful,
Of benefits fled!
When the hopes we have tasted
Are lost, we deplore,
And sigh for time wasted
We ne'er may see more!
Resolving—repenting—
Still day after day,
While angels lamenting
Drop tears on our way.

Could man read Time's pages,
Record every scene,
He'd find, through life's stages,
How oft he had been Too full of inventions
To satisfy thought;
Too rife with intentions
That dwindled to nought.
Still taxing to-morrow,
Still wasting to-day—

Dropped tears on his way.

Some of the Duties of the Sisters.

We may surely claim that woman always has exercised and does still exercise a great influence upon the affairs of this life. And all through we find it has been either for good or evil. Many good and noble men have attributed their success in life to the influence of their mothers, sisters, or wives as the case may have been. On the other hand, do we not find many wretched homes from the result of a bad wife? Also the Bible and history presents to us many incidents which show to us the use and abuse of woman's influence. For instance, we find in the Bible such women as Dorcas, Priscilla, and many others whose lives exerted a great influence for good and on the other hand we have the bad influence shown to us in women like Herodias and Delilah. Then in history we have recorded the good lives of Lady Jane Grey, Anne Askew, Hannah Moore, Lady Rachel Russell, Queen Victoria, and many others. Also in our own church books do not we find the good life recorded of the wife of the Martyr, our beloved President Joseph Smith's mother?

Seeing then that we can be of good use in the work of Christ, it is expedient we try to learn what is our duty and how to perform the same, thus preventing any evils that may occur from the neglect of any duty devolving upon us as sisters.

We will now divide the sphere of sisters' influence into three parts, viz.: The home, social life, and church life.

The home life we all know stands the first in importance. While the husband is the head of the house, the wife is largely responsible for what takes place in the home and if she be a true Christian, in nine cases out of ten, that home will be a good Christian home. If she be clean and tidy in person and in her home, the husband will be proud of his home, and be glad to be in the company of his wife, otherwise, if she is untidy and lets her home get disorderly, he will seek pleasure and comfort elsewhere. We should be just as anxious to appear attractive in the eyes of our husband after we are married, as we were before, yea, even more so. Then let us not forget to be lovable and kind; we can always rule better by love, than by being ill-tempered. Children will follow the example of mother and in gentleness and love she can train the little ones to be orderly and clean.

How nice it is to have the confidence of our little ones. Whatever their little trials may be they can confide in mother, and she can use her influence for good or evil over their young lives.

Then there is a chance of using her influence on others that come in her way when the husband is at work. Instead of gossiping with her neighbors about other people, she can drop a kind word here and there like good seed. But if a woman is not a true Christian we often see such sad results from the evil of gossiping. Then there is undesirable reading, which does not tend to help one but invariably causes her to neglect her household duties. Then let us as sisters try to build the home up, and thus be true helpmeets and companions to our husbands. O, if sisters could and would be true to their vocation in life, and exert their influence for good in home life, they would remove much of the evil that now exists.

Example is better than precept, and if the sisters in the home will but set a good example in love and gentleness, the brothers will be helped by their good life. Much more could be said on the home life of sisters, but we must leave that part of the question and look at the social life of women.

Have we not heard people say "If there were no bad women, there would be no bad men"? Now while that may be an exaggeration, there is a great deal of truth in it. Even among our every-day acquaintances we can be influential for good or evil, not by indulging in little chats about this person or that one, but let us mind our own business. We can be kind and thoughtful to each other; and when it is within our power to assist those who need assistance, let us like true Christians do all we can for each other, and thus prove the truth of our professions.

Then we have the church life. Here we have a great sphere of usefulness. Certainly we can not occupy the pulpit, but there is other work quite as effectual for us to do. We seem to forget sometimes that prayer is the only telephone to God and surely we are not debarred from praying, even as we sit in our seats. So I think we have a very important part to perform, if we will only do it.

Then there is the arranging of household duties, so as to not prevent the husband from attending meetings and other church duties that may be devolving upon him as a servant of God. Let us also see that our little ones attend Sunday-school; for let us be assured, if they are taught this work from the cradle, when they grow up to manhood and womanhood they have no traditions to fight down like some of us have had (and it is a hard task at times). So let us look to our little ones in this respect.

Now I think if we prayerfully consider our position in home and church life, we must come to the conclusion that we can be a great influence for good, if we in gentleness and love do our duties as sisters in the church and as good wives and mothers in the home; and thus may it be said "the heart of her husband doth safely trust in her."

May God bless us with more of his Spirit is my sincere prayer.

Lessons Without Words.

Two boys went out of a store just ahead of me a few days ago. Usually there is a pretty steady current of people in and out of that place, and a sign requests the outgoers to keep to the right—there being two storm-doors side by side.

One boy took the right-hand door and the other boy took the left; whereupon the former said to the latter, "Why didn't you come out this side? Don't you see the sign—'keep to the right'?" This brought a contemptuous, "Uh-h-h-h, I don't care for the signs," from the other boy.

The difference of spirit in those two boys, as revealed in this commonplace incident, is as wide as east from west, as a mob from an army. Looked at as a tendency, the course of one symbolizes order, the other, chaos. Order stands for character, and chaos for moral disruption and social disintegration.

Now if there is one lesson which a primary school is in duty bound to inculcate it is the lesson of order. And this is a lesson without words, for it is one that is absorbed from environment, caught up by suggestion, and lived into through the feeling sense rather than simply housed as phrases in the intellect.

Every teacher believes in "good order," but perhaps we do not often think of order as moral—if not spiritual. Let us look at it for a few minutes. Alexander Pope, one of the most incisive of English philosophical poets, says, "Order is Heaven's first law." And Carlyle says, "Man is the missionary of order; he is the servant not of the Devil and chaos, but of God and the universe." Note that here, the spirit of evil and chaos (or disorder) are linked as one, while the universe—the work of creation which God saw as "good"—stands as the type of order.

But what is order? Our conceptions of it are usually too small and limited. When I was a school-boy it seemed to consist chiefly in sitting still with folded arms or stepping noiselessly in line. Good enough these, as far as they go. But order is simply the right thing in the right place at the right time. The primary school, like a Kindergarten (though not a kindergarten), ought to be regarded as a little community. Any one who is out of order tramples on somebody's rights—produces a discord, robs others of opportunities, and therefore is immoral. Benches, chairs, books, clothing, our bodies and limbs, and our minds are all subjects of order or disorder.

Punctuality is a matter of order; so is attention; so is a kind and gentle spirit of obedience. A child who is accustomed to a disordered, helter-skelter home can not but be influenced by an orderly hour even though only once a week in the Sunday school.

"Order is Heaven's first law," and it is one of the laws that continues all through life. It is one that begins to be apprehended at birth and tightens its grip with practice. And yet the lesson of order is one that does not need to be talked so much as done; it needs less to be heard than seen and felt.—Patterson DuBois, in World Evangel.

Editors Herald: The Historical HERALD is before me. It is a fine number and should do our cause much good. Both from the literary and mechanical standpoints its producers have done well. The various articles are safe and solid, leaving little to be desired from our standpoint. From the viewpoint of the "outsider" it might have been more intelligible had it been "edited" so that the articles might have been "fused into one coherent whole." Where articles are prepared by so many men this is impossible under the system of editing which prevails among us, so the fault can not be laid at the editors' doors. Anyhow, each article is good enough to stand by itself, and I should be pleased to see illustrated HERALDS similar to this one oftener.

Australia was not represented in an article of any kind, but this was the result of an oversight which is rather common. We are at least one month's journey from headquarters and it should be noted that we should have at least three months' notice when anything is to be forthcoming from us.

The work here is steadily moving onward. Times are hard and we labor under rather discouraging conditions at times. Church finances are rather unsatisfactory. In New South Wales most of the Saints are doing their duty faithfully along these lines; but in Victoria things are not quite so good. Many do their best, and with these no complaint can be found. There are, however, a few prominent men who have an idea that tithing should not be paid except where Saints are in a gathered condition. Reference to General Conference resolutions, numbers 174 and 210, will show that the church has legislated to the effect that the law of tithing "is binding on the church in its scattered condition." Some of the brethren referred to have done some harm to our financial prospects by talking directly opposite to this. What should be done with church officers who behave in this way? Bishop Kelley is to furnish us with some articles on finance for the Standard shortly. Will he please write something from this standpoint?

Bro. Jones, of Adelaide, has been laboring here for about three months. He is an efficient worker, possessing to a marked degree that rare gift of being able to approach and interest people in their own homes. He is a veteran "tracter," and we believe that, if faithful, he will do a magnificent work for the Master in this direction. He is also an able and taking speaker—just the kind of man to represent us in a new field like Adelaide, South Australia.

Have been compelled to take a spell from preaching for a while. Singing and preaching in the open air has made my throat very bad, and it would be both painful and unwise for me to preach either inside or outside while this continues. In the meantime will be kept busy with the Gospel Standard, visiting, and "tracting."

Editors Herald: Being privileged to visit the Gallands Grove District conference at Dow City, and the Little Sioux District conference held at Sioux City, it may be well to give some report of them. The one at Dow City was fairly attended, conducted in good order, no dissensions. Reports of ministry showed commendable zeal. Branches were reported by their officers in fair condition, with room for improvement, as there always will be, until "That which is perfect is come" to us all. Religio and Sunday-school departments gave evidence of good work being done. National memorial services were observed by the conference people uniting with other churches in this laudable work of honoring the memory of the dead and living defenders of our sacred liberties, our brethren having a prominent part in the exercises, which were held in the Methodist Episcopal church. Elder J. C. Crabb was chosen president of the Gallands Grove District. Bishop Hunt gave instructions and answered questions pertaining to tithing and consecrations. All felt that the field was large and the laborers few, and that continued diligence, increased wisdom, and divine knowledge, with holy zeal, were very necessary for the prosecution of the work intrusted to our care. Those who ministered in word were Elders Crabb, Hunt, and the writer. We were assured, through the gifts of the Holy Spirit, that God was watching over us, and that we should be blessed according to our faithfulness. I need not add that God is always pleased with his children when they work together in unity, with their eyes single to his glory, which is their well-being.

On the 1st of June I attended the conventions of the Religio and Sunday-school departments of the work at Sioux City, also on the 2d; heard some excellent papers read by members of those departments, and thought I saw evidences of improvement, which is always gratifying. On the 3d, conference opened with Elder Pitt in the chair, and J. D. Stuart as secretary. The business was promptly transacted and in good order. The reports of the traveling ministry showed zeal, and earnest desires for the spread of the truth, but lamented the scarcity of laborers in this part of the vineyard. Reports of branches showed a fair degree of spirituality; but less attention to the world and more to heavenly things would enable us to advance to higher degrees in the divine life. Local officers in some branches were doing well, and a desire to reach out to other places, and there plant the standard of truth, was evident; may such holy zeal spread and increase until the work is done. Elder R. Wight called his fellow-laborers together to consult upon the best means to forward the cause of truth, and to make proper division of the labor. In this he was earnestly seconded by the district president and the traveling and local ministry. I did not see or hear a jar; all seemed to work in harmony for the one grand purpose, the spread of the gospel. Those who ministered in the word during preaching-services were Elders Case, Wight, Crabb, and the writer. In our prayer-service two were ordained to the ministry, young men of good promise, and if faithful and diligent will be blessed in their labors.

A word as to the work in Sioux City. Through the perseverance of James M. Baker and his fellow laborers there, (and I believe that means all the Saints there,) they have a very commodious house of worship. It has to be paid for, and they are hard-working people and need help. A city of thirty-five thousand souls is worth looking after, and every proper effort to throw the searchlight of the gospel of Christ into these precious souls should be seconded by all who can aid. The Saints there are in earnest, and are helping themselves, and hence are worthy of help. The city papers there are giving good help in publishing notices of our work, and willingly draw the line between the Reorganized Church and the Utah church, and very cheerfully published a resolution reaffirming the true position of the Reorganized Church on the marriage question. I am no eulogist, but I think it proper to say that the General Conference acted wisely in reappointing Elder Baker to the work in that city. Both he and his wife have done and are doing a good work there. Sioux City may "not know the day of her visitation," but I believe that no effort within the reach of possibilities will be left unmade to properly warn its inhabitants.

I am still trying to keep my feet on the rock of eternal truth, and my feeble efforts are for the promotion of righteousness, that when the Master comes he may find a people prepared and that I may enjoy some humble place among them.

Yours for truth,

WOODBINE, Iowa.

CHARLES DERRY.

FARWELL, Michigan, June 9, 1905.

Editor Saints' Herald: Although not a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, I wish to say a few words through the columns of your paper. I had often heard the Saints' church spoken of, and several years ago I was slightly acquainted with some of its members; but I had never attended their meetings, or understood the principles of their religion, until last winter, when a minister of that denomination came to live near us. We soon found them to be good neighbors, and we enjoyed many pleasant evenings in their company, during which the main theme of conversation was the teachings of the Bible. I was surprised to find how many Bible truths fell from the lips of our neighbor.

I had never united with any church, because I never found one which seemed to "fill the bill," so to speak. I told my neighbor that I never found a church that I thought was built on the Rock (Christ), for they were not built, or carried on, on the same principles that his was. That if one felt a desire to lead a better life and to unite with some church, the first thing a book is placed before them, in which they must write their name, and they were taken in on probation. If they prove faithful—or in other words live up to the rules of the church a certain period of time—then they are taken into full membership. I could not believe in that, because Christ did not ask any one to put his name on a book, or to come in on probation. He said, "Come, follow me." That precious invitation was given to all, clear down to the end of time—the time of our probation here; for as I understand it we are all here on earth on probation—placed here by the Father on probational terms. He has given us his law, by which we are to live, and if we prove faithful our probation will end when our blessed Savior comes to receive his own. I said I did not believe there was a church on the face of the earth that did not require you to place your name on their book, as a declaration of your intentions and sign of your membership in their denomination. "Yes, there is. I can show you one," he cried earnestly. "The Saints' church does not ask you to put your name on a book." "What do they teach?" I asked. "Faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands," he answered. Then he gave me their doctrine complete, and I must say that it is exactly as I believe, and have believed for years, ever since I could read the word with understanding.

I believe in exactly the same organization that existed in the days when Christ set up his church here on earth. I believe that according as our faith is, so shall our gifts be, whether of healing, visions, prophesying, or whatever it may be. I think that if we step into each gospel truth as we see it, and live it to the best of our ability, our blessings will be that much greater, in proportion to our faith. The Saints call me a "dry-lander," but—God being willing—I shall obey soon. I have had a long siege of sickness, but am recovering. In closing I wish to say that I have heard, in times past, many things detrimental to the doctrine of the Latter Day Saints, but I find that those statements were not truthful.

I ask that I may be remembered in your prayers.

McKENZIE, Alabama, June 7, 1905.

Editors Herald: We left our home (Boonville, Missouri,) May 31, over the Missouri Pacific for St. Louis, arriving at six o'clock; ate our lunch in depot and left at twenty minutes of eight over Mobile & Ohio, for Montgomery, Alabama; after a dusty and tiresome ride of twenty-four hours we arrived. Sr. Tucker remained at depot while I went to secure lodging for the night. In one hour I was again at depot, having secured a nice room in private house for fifty cents per day and night, with privilege of eating our lunch in our room. I readily told the lady who I was, and what my business. She wished me well, but thought I would find it difficult to get a house in the city, as they were all taken; and that any kind of a cottage would cost not less than fifteen dollars per month, which on investigation the next day proved to be correct. We spent two nights and a day in the city, visited the capitol, where we saw some of the relics of war, and Mr. Jeff Davis' room, his bed, wash-stand, bowl and pitcher, and some other pieces of furniture; and left the following morning over the Louisville & Nashville for Greenville, hoping to meet with success there; but learned from a man on train there were no houses to let in the town; so we came on to the little village of McKenzie, where Bro. and Sr. Vickery have offered to rent us a pair of rooms at a very reasonable price, at least telling us the rent would not be very much. Our goods are on the way and will have to be forwarded from Montgomery on their arrival there. It will be some twelve or fifteen days before our goods arrive.

We were somewhat successful in selling some of our goods and renting our home in Boonville. The Lord heard our prayers and favored us. I also had the pleasure of baptizing Sr. Tucker's sister, who lives in Boonville, ere we left. Sr. Mary McMillan is a noble woman. I also baptized one of her little nieces at the same time; is a sweet little girl.

We secured a permit for myself and Sr. Tucker from the Southeastern Clergy Bureau without any trouble; and could have secured a rate-ticket to St. Louis, but did not have time to wait for it after we rented our home.

Many thanks to the Bishop, Brn. Salyards, Gunsolley, Hougas, and Krahl for their kind assistance.

In bonds of love,

Editors Herald: Inclosed you will find a clipping from a newspaper, which is, I think, valuable to us as a church and ought to be published in HERALD so that all can have access to it. We (Bro. Wildermuth and I) have just opened up Eastern Iowa tent-work at Canton to good crowds and attention. Many calls for preaching and prospects are for a good year's work in this district. In the faith,

WONDERFUL BURIED CITY.

MOST EXTRAORDINARY DISCOVERIES IN MEXICO—REMAINS OF ELEPHANTS FOUND SHOWING USE IN ANTEDILUVIAN TIMES.

"Doctor Nicholas Leon, archæologist and ethnologist of the National Museum of Mexico, has returned to the City of Mexico after a stay of two weeks in the state of Coahuila, where he made several important investigations of the recent finds of cities and animals of antediluvian times. In giving an account of the trip the doctor said:

"The discoveries made at Paradon, in Coahuila, are the most extraordinary that have been made in Mexico, and possibly anywhere in the world. The excavations made so far show that a large city was buried not far from the present town of Paradon by an immense amount of earth, which was evidently washed down from the mountains by flood. How long ago the catastrophe occurred can not be determined.

"Portions of buildings so far unearthed show that the city—at least the largest of the cities that were covered by the debris of the flood, there being at least three cities destroyed—was very extensive. The indications are that there were many massive structures in the city and that they were of a class of architecture not to be found elsewhere in Mexico.

"According to the estimates of the scientists under whose directions the excavations are being made, the city in question had a population of at least fifty thousand.

"The destruction wrought by the flood was complete. All the inhabitants of the cities were killed, as well as all the animals. Skeletons of the human inhabitants and of the animals are strewn all through the debris, from a depth of three feet, showing that all the debris was deposited almost at once. Measurements show that the debris is on an average sixty feet deep where the largest of the cities stood.

"Most remarkable of the minor finds made at Paradon is that of the remains of elephants. Never before in the history of Mexico has it been ascertained positively that elephants were ever in the service of the inhabitants. The remains of the elephants show plainly that the inhabitants of the buried cities made elephants work for them. Elephants were as much in evidence in the streets of the cities as horses. Upon many of the tusks that have been found were rings of silver. Most of the tusks have an average length, for grown elephants, of three feet and an average diameter at the roots of six inches. Judging from the remains of the elephants so far unearthed, the animals were about ten feet in height and sixteen to eighteen feet in length, differing little from those at present in existence.

"The flood which destroyed the ancient cities did not have any connection whatever with the Deluge, as far as can be learned by scientific investigations. The Coahuila flood was confined to the district in which the cities that were destroyed stood.

"The flood resulted from an immense cloudburst, perhaps the most extraordinary that the world has ever known, from the bursting of some great natural reservoir in the mountains, or from some cause as yet inexplicable.

"The suggestion which has been made by some investigators that the cities were destroyed by landslides does not hold good, according to the government geologists."

BOWDEN, Texas, June 5, 1905.

Editors Herald: I feel blessed with the spirit of truth. I want to say I know this is the work of God. We have been experiencing some wonderful things this year. We have had the words of prophecy among this people, but none seem to take any thought; they see and realize that there is something coming but they do not know what course to pursue to escape. I was much astonished last evening. I attended a prayer-meeting and the minister gave a talk and it seemed as if he knew there was some evil ahead, but how to make the escape he did not say; he admonished his members to come together often in mighty prayer to God for this community. I felt just like I could in my weakness show them the way, but as I look back and see the golden opportunities this people have had I think it is enough, though my heart goes out in mighty prayer for them, as I know there are many near the kingdom here. If the Saints would put on the whole armor of God and go to work in earnest we would be blessed wonderfully. Dear Saints, arouse to the work of the Lord and do your best this year, that we may be more acceptable to God the Father than we have been in the past.

I want to say, awake and trim your lamps and get to work. There is work here among those who have professed Jesus as Christ and taken his name on them as his saints. We know there is trouble in this life for all people, but nothing can separate us from the gospel of Christ. Paul says there is nothing that can separate us from this love, and if we have this love we will not indulge in the sinful things of this world.

I want to ask the Saints of the whole church to pray for me that I may live and raise my children in the way that will be well pleasing in the sight of God.

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. M. M. AARONS.

ST. CLAIR, Michigan, June 13, 1905.

To the Saints Everywhere: We, the Saints of St. Clair, Michigan, have returned to our homes from attending conference at Detroit, Michigan, which will be long remembered by those who attended the Sunday morning meeting. Many Saints of the district attended, among whom we were glad to see Brn. Lake, Barr, Bailey, Davis, and many others whose faces were not so familiar. Sr. Johnson, formerly of Flint, now of Lamoni, was also present in the interests of the HERALD.

Dear Saints, the command is to "come up higher." Do you realize it? Can you realize how much it means? The almighty God speaking from his white throne in heaven to sinful mortals on the earth to strive to come up to share his glory! What a marvelous condescension and what a glorious privilege is yours, ye saints of God! Then see well to it that you do not fall short of it. What are all the pleasures and allurements of this world compared to the gift of eternal life? They will look very insignificant to you in comparison in the day when he "cometh to make up his jewels" if you have bartered your privilege of eternal life for the empty husks of pleasure and sin. Satan is laying many snares and pitfalls for the feet of the Saints. But God has told his people to "stand in holy places." There is power and protection in secret prayer. Dear Saints, remember that Satan can have no power over you if you come often to our Father in secret prayer. Paul says put on the whole armor of God that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the Devil: for we wrestle not with flesh and blood but against principalities and powers. The enemy of your souls is always alert.

Dear Saints, be clean, be pure. What are you doing in secret, oh, saint of the most high God? Do the angels veil their faces and blush in burning shame as they behold your deeds, or do they rejoice as they attend you and see that you are striving to overcome? Oh, dear Saints, think what it means "to overcome." "He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment, and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life." Oh, my brothers, my sisters, strive to be faithful that we may abide the day of his coming, which is very near. "Stand in holy places" that those terrible words may never pierce your hearts, "Depart from me ye that work iniquity." Oh, the darkness of that terrible despair, that wail of anguish when you see what you have lost!

Young Saint, be faithful; stand firm; set your face like a flint against evil and all the wiles of the Devil; the powers of darkness are combined to overthrow you; there are many temptations for the young; but the prize is only for the faithful, at the end—

"He has gone as he said to prepare,
For the faithful, the tried, and the true,
A mansion more glorious and fair
Than the children of earth ever knew."

Dear Saints, it is a struggle, a warfare; there is "no discharge in this war"; we must continue the fight, or the enemy will get an advantage, but we know "our Father is at the helm" and the gospel ship will at last sail into port, and if we are faithful we will be part of the crew.

MRS. ARCH MCKENZIE.

SPRINGFIELD, Missouri, June 13, 1905.

Editors Herald: I am still striving to do the Master's will and am doing what I can to spread the restored gospel among the children of men in this part of the regions around about. The Saints here are in a better condition both spiritually and financially than ever before. We are making an effort to do missionary work here in the queen city of the Ozarks. The writer has been preaching some on the streets; others of the priesthood are making appointments for preaching in private houses and schoolhouses, and thus the good work moves on. We hope before the summer is gone to bring many into the kingdom and by so doing to help carry out the great commission that was given nearly nineteen hundred years ago and has been given again in this the eleventh hour dispensation.

We feel thankful for the many blessings received since we have been engaged in this great latter-day work and also feel more of the great responsibility that is resting on God's servants. Since I was called to the eldership I have never found a place to stop and say that I had done all I could, for I find the more we do for the Master the greater the opportunity becomes. Some think it a burden to work six days in the week and then spend four and five nights and one day in every week in God's service, but I deem it a great pleasure to do even so little for him who has done so much for the children of men.

As the elder in charge here, I feel thankful for the spiritual condition of the branch, for the interest the Saints are taking in the prayer-meetings, and for the many grand testimonies of both old and young. While we have much to be thankful for we have some things to feel sad over; one thing is the loss of our sub-missionary, Elder Sparling, who was sent to a distant field of labor in the West. While we have other good, earnest workers here in Southern Missouri in the persons of Brn. Baker, Davis, Bootman, and Bruner, still we feel the loss and companionship of Bro. Sparling. On the eve of his departure the Saints to the number of forty or fifty repaired to the beautiful home of the brother and family and spent a pleasant evening in talking of the past, present, and future, and also indulged in the bountiful repast furnished by the good sisters. As all things earthly must end, this evening was no exception to the general rule; so with prayers and good wishes for the brother and family we wended our way back to the car line in time for the last car, feeling that it is good to be a saint of the latter days.

If it will not make our message too long we would like to take a retrospective view of our brother's work here in Southern Missouri. Beginning some fifteen years ago with ten Saints he saw the number increase to about six hundred in a fair working condition. Of course he had the help of some noble workers and all deserve credit, for there were many things hard to bear and overcome. May they all be blessed in this life and in the end receive the reward that is promised for the finally faithful.

Before I close I want to tell of our Sunday-school. Our little church is almost too small for the number we have, and still they come. May the good Lord inspire our minds that we may be able to teach them the way of life and salvation that they may all finally be adopted into the kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. My prayer is for the building up of the kingdom and the redemption of Zion.

Your brother in Christ,

J. W. QUINLY.

CONDON, Oregon, June 7, 1905.

Dear Herald: I have spent two weeks with the Saints here and I am sure they are a noble band of Saints. They have proved by the kind invitations to their homes, and the help I received on leaving them, that they are truly God's disciples.

I did not have large congregations, but the Saints turned out well. I had good liberty as a whole, and I believe the Saints are feeling better from my visit. Two were baptized by Bro. Snively, the branch president, on Sunday, the 4th, and we had a very spiritual time at sacrament and confirmation in the afternoon. I feel pleased with the Saints here, especially with the officers. The Ladies' Aid Society has a noble band of workers—equal to any. I find that the aid society here, as elsewhere, is the main "pack-horse" for the branch. I have enjoyed my visit very much and I hope I have done some good.

I truly believe that this is the dawn of better times for this branch. I hope I shall be as well impressed with the whole field.

My mission address is 824 Gantenbein Avenue, Portland, Oregon.

HENRY SPARLING.

SHARON, Pennsylvania, June 10, 1905.

Editors Herald: On my way to my field of labor, I stopped in Southern Illinois and visited some of the places where I had preached many years ago. At Kibbie and Bellair I held a series of meetings with Bro. A. T. Higdon, one of the missionaries in that district: six services at Kibbie and seven at Bellair. Bro. Higdon baptized six—five at Kibbie and one at Bellair—during the meetings; and I felt that much good was done by way of strengthening and encouraging the few Saints, at those two places. Bro. Higdon is a young man, young in years and young in the work; but he is doing a splendid work for the Master in that district, especially among the young people. I was pleased to note the zeal of some of the young men whom he had brought into the church, at Tunnelhill, Illinois, among whom were Lloyd Moore, Bert Grace, and others. I trust the Lord may bless, cheer, strengthen, and guide them by his Holy Spirit, and that they may become faithful and efficient workers for the Master. My stay in Southern Illinois was short, but, with the exception of heartaches for some who were sick and others whose souls were crushed and bleeding because of the loss of loved ones, I had a pleasant visit. The reaper Death has visited many homes in the Tunnelhill Branch, within the past year, and a number of once familiar faces were missing in the gatherings of Saints and friends. May the Lord comfort and sustain the bereaved ones, and may a happy reunion be theirs on the other side.

At present, I am at Sharon, Pennsylvania, at the home of Bro. T. U. Thomas. Under direction of our minister in charge, Bro. U. W. Greene, Bro. Arthur Koehler and I are to take charge of district tent. I have not yet decided where my field address will be; but, for the next four or five weeks at least, letters addressed to me at 224 West Spruce Street, Titusville, Pennsylvania, will reach me all right.

I am feeling well and hopeful, and feel that I shall like my field of labor when I get acquainted.

In gospel bonds,

ISAAC M. SMITH.

DAHINDA, Illinois, June 10, 1905.

Editors Herald: The Kewanee District conference, which convened at Dahinda, Illinois, June 3 and 4, was a splendid success. The spirit of peace and brotherly love was manifest in all the sessions. A large delegation was present and all were made welcome. On Saturday and Sunday basket dinners were served at the church and all who participated in them seemed to enjoy the occasion. Surely it was a good way to promote sociability. On Sunday afternoon the Saints' chapel, at this place, was dedicated, the sermon being preached by Elder J. W. Wight; Elder D. C. Smith had charge of the services. The dedicatory prayer was offered by Elder Amos Berve, after which the branch president, Elder Smith, presented the deed for the property to the Bishop's agent, Bro. William Norris. The Spirit was present, melting many to tears—

"Softly the summer rain falleth,
Bathing the grasses and leaves,
So doth the Spirit of God come
To the heart willing to receive."

At the close of the afternoon services the congregation repaired to the creek, where the ordinance of baptism was administered by Elder F. A. Russell to the following named candidates: Bro. and Sr. Geo. Pugh, of Viola; Bro. Louis MacIntyre, of Gilchrist; Bro. Thomas Dawson, of Dahinda, and Sr. Filetta Dawson, of Dahinda. They were confirmed before the evening services.

Elder Bailey discoursed in the evening, Bro. Norris in charge. Sr. Celia Andrews sang the solo, "Good-night, God bless you everywhere." Conference was then adjourned by singing "God be with you till we meet again." Elder G. W. Thorburn has remained here this week holding services each night. On Thursday of this last week another was ushered into the kingdom through the door of baptism,—Sr. Minnie Cook—and we understand there will be still another one to-morrow. Thus the work gains slowly, but we hope, surely, in this place.

May we each one realize the duties and responsibility resting upon us to that degree, that there may be manifest in our lives an example which shall be worthy of imitation. Let us have more patience, kindness, respect, and above all, more charity in our hearts for each other. Then we can be more united in faith and works.

Your sister in the gospel,

CARICE B. HAYES.

Extracts from Letters.

In a personal letter to Bro. Joseph Smith, dated June 13, Bro. S. W. L. Scott wrote: "Conference at Galien, June 3 to 5, was good. Sunday services, a little different than expected, the eleven o'clock hour occupied in funeral-service. A young man was crushed between cars at Chicago. We were requested to preach the sermon, which we tried to do in presence of a full house. Special car from Michigan City came out bearing four hundred and twenty persons, we were informed; this included the K. O. T. M. order, of which deceased was an honored member. Dinner was served in basement of the church by Saints, one hundred and four persons partaking of the repast. Three young people were baptized on Monday afternoon, D. W. Ellis officiating. Conference will meet this fall with the Saints of Knox (Indiana) Branch. I expect to visit Flint and vicinity this week. Weather cool. Much rain. Farmers in arrears with work. May God renew your life, and grant you abundant blessings."

Bro. Columbus Scott, Wirt, Indiana, writes June 12: "Saints seem alive to the work, and one was baptized at New Trenton by Bro. Marshall on the 4th inst. We look for good to be done in this part of the vineyard this year. I was much encouraged at the late General Conference and expect good results to flow abundantly from it. The steps taken looking toward the redemption of Zion (its beginnings) ought to thrill the hearts of Saints everywhere, and move them to greater faithfulness, exertion, and duty. God's work in all the world is moving on—influences everywhere seem to be conspiring to hasten its completion. May our Father bless his saints."

Bro. G. T. Griffiths writing from Kirtland, June 11, says: "I leave home the last of this week and will be out there [Northwest field.—Ed.] soon. Address, Box 23, Castle Rock, Washington.

President Joseph Smith contemplates stopping off at the following places on his western trip: Bozeman, July 8 to 12; Butte, July 13 and 14; Spokane, July 15 to 19; Seattle, August 1 to 7; Vancouver, August 8 to 31. During this time he will visit New Westminster, Chilliwack. Between the 1st and 11th of September, he will visit Tacoma, Castlerock, and Portland. I suggest that the conferences of Spokane, Seattle, and British Columbia, and Eastern and Central Oregon Districts be postponed and dated on the days when Bro. Smith passes through those respective places. This will give the Saints of the mission an opportunity to make President Smith's acquaintance. I feel confident that you will all be delighted to avail yourselves of this privilege, and give our worthy brother a royal welcome. G. T. GRIFFITHS.

Died.

ADAIR.—Near Farmington, Kentucky, June 4, 1905, Bro. James H. Adair, aged 73 years, 10 months, and 29 days. He leaves to mourn his faithful companion and three children, and a host of relatives and friends. Was married to Mary L. Sugg, January 17, 1867. United with the church November 6, 1881; was ordained an elder August 6, 1887. He was a faithful and persistent worker for the Master's cause though often under trying circumstances, manifesting to the very last a desire to keep the whole law. Was buried near the Saints' church at Oakland. Funeral-service conducted by Elder J. R. McClain.

HUDSON.—At Lebanon, Oregon, May 17, 1905, as a result of being crushed in the machinery of a paper-mill, Bro. Ogden Hudson. He was born at Des Moines, Iowa, and at his death was 45 years of age. He came from Sterling, Colorado, to Lebanon two years ago and was working with a brother-in-law, R. M. Goodrich, in the paper-mill. Owing to some derangement in the machinery, Bro. Hudson was cleaning out the carrier, after finishing which he went to the back of the pit to remove some debris that had accrued there. His associate, Mr. Goodrich, not seeing Bro. Hudson in the pit, started the machinery, which resulted in the crushing of Bro. Hudson. The coroner's jury found that he came to his death by accident while in the discharge of his duty, no blame attaching to the company or to others connected with the mill. His sister, Mrs. Hatty Boyd, writing from Snyder, Colorado, states that Bro. Hudson was baptized at Stelling, Colorado, in December, 1892, by Bro. John Kaler; was ordained priest of Cedar Branch by Elder James Caffall; about 1896; that he was a consistent member of the church and died full in the faith. No braver death can man die than to be stricken while in the discharge of his duty, and of such as Bro. Hudson it may well be said, "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints, but in the death of the wicked he taketh no pleasure." Bro. Hudson leaves a wife and one child, whose loss, though severe, may be his infinite gain. He rests from his labors and his works do follow him. Funeral-services conducted from the Baptist church, June 19, by the pastor; remains laid to rest in the Masonic Cemetery.

KENNICUTT.—Pearl Belle Kennicutt was born June 12, 1884, at Arlington, Nebraska; baptized May 27, 1894, at Omaha, Nebraska, by O. H. Brown; died at Minot, North Dakota, April 26, 1905. She leaves three brothers, three sisters, and her father. She was patient in her afflictions and firm in the hope that she possessed.
