OVERZEALOUSNESS ABOUT THE SMOOT INQUIRY.

Albert N. Hoxie of Boston, an elder in the Latter Day Saints' Church which has headquarters at Lamoni, in a recent interview anent the Senator Reed Smoot case, said:

"Forty years the so-called Mormon church of Utah has carried on the awful secrets of the endowment-house. Throats of victims have been cut, hearts torn out, and bodies disemboweled in pursuance of the tenet of the church, which says the only way the wrath of God may be appeased is by the shedding of human blood. I have knowledge in hand that they have offered up human beings in the endowment-house.

"I have written a letter to the senate committee on privileges and elections at Washington," he continued, "advising to call as a witness Joseph Smith, leader of the Reorganized Church, a son of Joseph Smith, the 'prophet.'

"He knows of persons who escaped from the endowment-house and the terrible fate that awaited them and who fled from the State, barely escaping with their lives. These people could tell the committee some interesting facts.

"The practice of sacrificing human beings, I have reason to believe, is going on now, only in greater secrecy than ever. If the proper authorities would go to Salt Lake City armed with government search-warrants and search every building there is no question in my mind that they would run across some startling evidence.

"The committee would be perfectly justified in denying Reed Smoot his seat since as an apostle of the Mormon church his oath of allegiance to his church takes precedence over his oath to the Government."

The foregoing is taken by us from the December 24, 1904, number of the Lariat, a country weekly published at Davis City, Iowa, seven miles east from Lamoni.

If Elder Albert N. Hoxie is correctly reported his utterances are an unwarranted interference with the affairs of the Committee on Elections and Privileges at work on the Reed Smoot case, so far as the Reorganized Church is concerned. The church has not authorized any one to advise the senatorial committee as to the conduct of their investigation, nor has the Reorganized Church by its constituted leading officers ventured to interfere in any wise with the investigation by suggestion, or an offer of evidence.

The brethren at Denver in their zeal ventured by telegram to contradict the testimony of one of the witnesses given before the committee and made statements in regard to the matter compromising the church. Such unasked for statements and offers of evidence or advice to the committee in regard to the case or its conduct could not fail to prejudice the members of the committee against those making them, if it did not prejudice them against the cause, the men making the offers, and the statements, and by this much injure what they sought to advance.

THE Herald Publishing House lost the services of one of its trusted employees when just prior to the holidays Miss Ida E. Fletcher quietly left for Larned, Kansas, where she was married to J. Everett McKim, Sunday, December 25, at the home of Frank Fletcher.

WHEN the hour of trouble comes to the mind or the body, and when the hour of death comes, that comes to high and low, then it is na what we hae dune for ourself, but what we hae dune for others, that we think on maist pleasantly.—Sir Walter Scott.

The elders of the church should know that the men who are acknowledged as the leading officers ought to be and are as much interested in whatever may be going on calculated in its nature to benefit or to injure the cause of the general church as any other member of the organization, and would be as well advised of what might be necessary to be done on the part of the church to advance or protect itself.

The men who compose the senatorial committee are men of affairs, many if not all of them are lawyers, well versed in the rules of law-courts, and judges of the nature and value of evidence and the degree of credibility that should be accorded to witnesses testifying in causes pending before them. Besides this they are schooled in the amenities of social, legal, and diplomatic life.

Such men are not to be approached by undue interference in their duties and business affairs, and though they may not rebuke an interfeerer, they will ignore him to the discredit of himself and his cause.

While we are not parties in the case pending before the committee we are very much interested in what may be developed by this senatorial inquiry; not because of the result to Mr. Smoot, but because of what may be brought to light that will affect the work we are trying to do. Much has already been brought out and become matters of record and much more may be elicited in the further inquiry that may be of great benefit to us. All that is requisite for us to do is to "mind our own business" in the most approved and commendable way, keeping out of any quarrel not legitimately our own, "watching and praying" that "we enter not into temptation," or stretch ourselves beyond our measure.

Besides this, the members of the committee know that there is a Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; it is in testimony before them. They know where its business headquarters is located and who its leading officers are; this also is in testimony before them. If it becomes necessary for the purposes of the inquiry being made by the committee to know anything about the Reorganized Church from any of its membership, the committee will take the proper steps to secure the attendance of those whom they may choose to make inquiry of. If in the judgment of the committee it is not necessary, none will be summoned to be heard.

The leading men of the Reorganization have been on the alert and watchful with regard to this pending investigation: and it seems to us that they may be trusted to act if action is necessary.

Bro. F. M. Sheehy, of the Twelve, attended several of the sittings of the committee during the session of Congress last year; and Bro. F. M. Smith, of the Presidency, and Bro. Sheehy have attended several of the sittings of the committee the present session of Congress. They were there by agreement with the Presidency for inquiry and information.

The telegraphic message sent the committee from the brethren at Denver has been taken by Historian A. Milton Musser, of the Utah church, as having been an official act of the church and by him has been made the basis of a brochure written against the church. Such action of the conference of the Colorado District was not the act of the church, but was one for which the local organization alone was responsible. We thought at the time that it was hardly the proper thing and would do no good, nor be followed by beneficial results; we still think so.

The statements made by Elder A. N. Hoxie, if he is reported correctly, were unauthorized by the church, were ill-advised and can not be productive of any good, but may and probably will do harm.

Joseph Smith, president of the Reorganized Church, has no personal knowledge of things stated by Elder Hoxie. What he may have heard is hearsay only, and of no value as testimony in court. If Elder Hoxie has evidence amounting to proof of the things he charges, he and not Joseph Smith should be a witness. We are in serious doubt in regard to such evidence being in Elder Hoxie's possession, and inclined to believe that what he thinks is evidence are but idle and vicious stories gathered from the awful files of terrible tales told about the "Mormons" by those at enmity with them. A witness, if legitimately in court, would appear at a great disadvantage if testifying to things of which he neither had nor could have personal knowledge, but which were the figments of hearsay. How much more ridiculous and contemptible would be a witness who should attempt to force himself into court upon the same line of hearsay happenings.

While we have no desire to interfere with the freedom of speech, or of the press, or the right of the brethren to express their views and opinions, we object to being in any way made responsible for ill-timed and ill-advised statements such as those made by Elder Hoxie given at the first of this writing; and for the moral effect of such premature effort as was the Denver telegram already referred to.

We assure the brethren that what the Presidency may properly do in any given necessity they will do; but it is manifestly improper for others to put the Presidency in a false light by hasty and ill-advised action, and thus hamper their efforts if necessity should demand action on their part.

Let us be patient and every man act in the prerogatives of his calling and the office in which he is recognized by the church.

ARE MISSIONARIES TO BE TAXED FOR CHURCH USES?

New questions, or the restatement of old ones, are constantly recurring under new shades of understanding or meaning; for instance, the holiday season is approaching and is at hand, and public entertainments are being held and to be held in the different branches of the church. With the occurrence of these the questions arise like this: "Is a missionary supposed to be taxed when he attends the usual church gatherings where door fees are charged?" We suppose that this question arises upon the hypothesis that the missionary minister is necessarily without purse or scrip, in the sense that whatever funds he may have at his personal disposal are the voluntary offerings of individuals to him, or are furnished by the Bishop as a matter of personal expense. The answer to this inquiry must turn upon the question whether it is a necessary part of the minister's duty to attend such gatherings, or whether it is a matter of personal gratification to himself, or a courtesy which he is under the necessity of paying to his family. When this question is answered it may be easier to answer the main one whether the suppositious tax is imposed. The imposition of a tax carries with it the idea that the authority to impose the tax has the power to collect, in a similar way to taxes imposed by the legislatures, the lawmaking powers of the land. This is not conceded.

Further questions arise as to whether a missionary and his family may be taxed in the branch where they live for what may be called local or incidental expenses; as for instance, providing fuel and light for the church-building, caring for and repairing branch property, caring for and entertaining guests at district conference held in the branch or in the district, providing for Sunday-school supplies, song-books, cards, papers, etc., buying prizes for the children to put on the Christmas-tree, and other incidental expenses of the branch, and Graceland College.

Some of these questions turn upon what has already been suggested in regard to church gatherings where fees are charged at the door. The Christmas entertainments are usually the work of the Sunday-school authorities and schools, and it is expected that the children of missionaries attend the schools and as a consequence take part in the yearly anniversary exercises. There is a class of expenses attending such entertainments that are purely voluntary and are usually provided for beforehand by the gathering of the usual Sunday-school collection in classes; and it may be asked whether the attendance of parents and children in the Sunday-school is required of them in the way of a tax upon their time and patience and talent.

The providing for the necessary comfort of the Saints in attending services in the church-building requires the outlay of some expense. It is usually borne by those who are best able in the branch or those who are more willing to pay. It is not levied as a tax pro rata in any branch that we know of. It is supposed that all the members of the branch do what they can from the sources of supply accessible to them. The care of branch property comes out of the general fund collected in a similar way.

The buying of prizes for children for decorating the Christmas-tree is usually done by the general fund raised for the use of the Sunday-school, though the personal prizes for children are purchased by parents or friends and are in the nature of a voluntary contribution which is within the discretion and control of the missionary and his family, and is not dictated by branch authority or church rule.

The two questions, caring for a conference and Graceland College debt or running expense, if there should be a deficit in this regard, may be difficult of adjustment in the way of a question and answer, upon the ground that many are unfavorable to the maintenance of a college, and it is a question of sentiment whether the one who may be opposed should be expected to pay for an object to which he is not friendly. This question we do not anticipate covering by answer in the query column.

Perhaps the whole category of questions hinges upon another, which is this: Should a missionary's family pay tithing on their allowance? It is the understanding that what is known as a ministerial allowance is or should be sufficient to cover the legitimate expenses that may be incurred by the missionary's family. This includes the daily support of food and other essentials to the common life of the average citizen. There are plenty of families who get much less than the missionary's family and who are expected to tithe themselves of their annual increase. This means necessarily what they may by economy, industry, and tact in business affairs accumulate within the year over and above their necessary living. We are aware that there is a sort of sentiment with many that the missionary's family is under the necessity of exercising the most rigid economy and to be examples of sacrifice and self-abnegation, reducing their expenditures to their absolute needs, avoiding all or supposedly nearly all luxuries, in order to keep within the limit of their allowance. We are of the opinion, however, that there is no principle of self-abnegation, sacrifice, or economy the exercise of which is required of or is commendatory in its practice on the part of a missionary or his family that does not bear equally in force upon the breadwinner and family of every household in the church. We believe further, that missionaries and their families whose income is equal to that of the average of other members of the church should bear a commensurate proportion of the incidental expenses of life to which reference has been made hereinbefore. We know it is sometimes supposed that because the missionary's family receive their allowance in money that they should pay out of their allowance as freely as those whose time and talent are employed in the business affairs of life. We are also aware that similar demands are made upon those families in the church whose income is from month to month in cash, for these are expected to answer the calls made upon them from almost every direction. We know this by experience. For now nearly forty years we have been engaged in a work with numbers of the members of the church who have received their pay from week to week, and it has been the almost invariable custom when subscription-lists have been started for any desirable object within the locality where the HERALD Office was located to make their first presentation of their list to the workers at the HERALD Office, and have expected to receive a generous support. We do not complain of this, but use it simply to show that the sentiment that the missionary's family should donate of their stipend when called upon is because that they have at times a little ready money. After all, the question turns upon this: Should the missionary and his family at the close of the month or of the year have been enabled to save a proportion of what they have received, why should they not tithe that increase the same as others who from year to year have by industry and economy secured an increase? The principle is the same.

The rules of economy and right living should prevail among all classes, and principles which apply to one class should apply to another. The rich man of his abundance should pay his proportion of the necessary expenses by tithing himself freely, both within the rule of law and in public and private beneficence besides; the men of competence should also in their career use that which is intrusted to their care wisely and well, that out of their competence they may have wherewithal to comply with the law and help the more needy than themselves. The man of small means should so far as it is possible for him to do so live within the resources open to him, and if need be follow the example of the woman who cast into the treasury all her living. Nor should this man be alone in this devoting his living to the work to which he has set his hand and heart; but the man of competence and the rich man as well when necessity or wisdom demands should devote his all to that which God may require. It is for all to live within the law of self-abnegation and true economy, that out of what any may receive he may do good to his fellow men; and should we all do this, there will be none who will lack sustenance, nor will there be any who in their luxurious living will lord it over their fellows.

It is a fact that the missionary's family should be supplied with what is needful to their proper maintenance while the missionary is engaged in his calling. It is a further fact that no missionary should take advantage of that support which is given by the church to his family and neglect the work of his calling and spend his time unnecessarily about his home to the annoyance and disgust of those who pay into the treasury liberally that which furnishes the means for the payment of his family allowance. No more should be expected of the minister's family than is expected of any other family of similar size and qualifications, but each and every family should do what it can to honor the calling wherewith all are called and to show a proper example to all by whom they may be surrounded.

Those who manage the entertainments held in the churches very often see to it that the missionary elder is furnished a ticket without charge, when he is present in a branch in his mission; and in some places the family of the missionary elder who is absent from his home is furnished with entrance without cost; but this is a matter of courtesy and within the direction of those having charge of the entertainments and is not a matter of church rule or order.

MORE FREEDOM FOR RUSSIAN PEASANTS.

Dispatches from St. Petersburg, for December 26, bring the text of the reform in Russian laws which are to be granted by the Czar, and by which the conditions of the peasantry is to be considerably improved. But the Czar is either so firmly established in the autocratic principle of government that he does not find himself willing to grant what strikes directly at the roots of such a rule; or, there is around him a cordon of sufficiently strong adherents to the old regime, under which rule by bureaucracy is possible, to make the experiment too hazardous to the "right of kings to rule" to venture upon it.

By granting the reforms he has done, and giving a guarantee for a better administration of the laws on a basis of equality for all, he has added to the good work begun some years ago by a preceding ruler in freeing the peasantry from the slavery of serfdom, and by so much he is making better citizens of the men over whom he holds sway.

But, as revolutions never go backward, it must be that in what the Czar has granted he has but paved the way for something better still. If it shall come by the methods of peace then shall the ruler and his people be blessed together, but if the aristocratic and stubborn will bend not to the good of the people, and the enfranchisement must needs come by revolution, then shall the land be drenched with blood, but the people will be free though the ruler may perish.

TEXT OF IMPERIAL UKASE.

The imperial decree, which is entitled "A scheme for the improvement of the administration of the state," is addressed to the senate and is as follows:

"In accordance with the revered will of our crowned predecessor, and thinking unceasingly of the welfare of the realm intrusted to us by God, we regard it as our duty, and the Government's duty, in conjunction with undeviating maintenance of the immutability of the fundamental laws of the empire, to have untiring care for the country's needs, distinguishing all that is really in the interests of the Russian people from tendencies not seldom mistaken and influenced by transitory circumstances."

"When the need of this or that change is proved ripe then we consider it necessary to meet it, even though the transformation to which this leads involves the introduction of essential innovations in legislation."

"We do not doubt that the realization of such an undertaking will meet with the sympathy of the well-disposed section of our subjects, who see the true prosperity of the fatherland in the support of civil tranquility and the uninterrupted satisfaction of the daily needs of the people.

"Placing in the forefront of our care thought for the best ordering of the life of the most numerous of our estates, the peasant population, we may remark that this matter is already under examination.

"Simultaneously with a detailed investigation of the initial proposals of the ministry of the interior, which are being carried out locally, conferences are now being held by commissioners specially selected from among the most experienced of the highest administrative officials regarding the most important questions of peasant life, assisted in their investigation of the general needs of the agricultural industry by the knowledge and experience of local committees.

"We command those to labor to bring the laws regarding peasants into unity with the general imperial legislation, thereby facilitating the task of attaining permanent security of this estate, which, by decree of the czar liberator, is recognized as consisting of free citizens possessing full rights.

"Surveying the wide domain of the people's uttermost needs, we regard as urgent in the interest of the legal strengthening of civic and public life—

"First, the adoption of effective measures for safeguarding the law in its full force as the most important pillar of the throne of the autocratic empire, in order that its inviolable fulfillment for all alike shall be regarded as the first duty by all the authorities and in all places subject to us, that its nonfulfillment shall inevitably bring with it legal responsibility for every arbitrary act, and that persons who have suffered wrong by such acts shall be enabled to secure legal redress.

"Second, that local and municipal institutions should be given as wide scope as possible in the administration of various matters affecting local welfare, and that they should have conferred upon them the necessary independence, within legal limitations, and that representatives of all sections of the population interested in local matters should be called upon, under equitable conditions, to take part in those institutions with a view to the completest satisfaction possible of their needs. Besides the governments and zemstvos district institutions hitherto existing there should be also established in close connection with them public institutions for the administration of local affairs in localities of smaller extent.

"Third, that in order to secure equality of persons of all classes before the law, steps should be taken to bring about the necessary unification of judicial procedure through the empire, and to assure independence of the courts.

"Fourth, that, for the further development of the measures introduced by us for the protection of workmen in factories, workshops, and commercial establishments, attention is to be given to the question of the introduction of state insurance for workmen.

"Fifth, that there should be a revision of the exceptional laws that were decreed at the time of the unparalleled outbreak of criminal activity on the part of the enemies of the public order, the application of which has been attended with a grave extension of the discretionary powers of the administrative authorities."

CORRECTIONS.

In the issue of the HERALD for December 28, in the article, "Concerning Graceland College," the quotation beginning in the third line of paragraph numbered "4," should read "the board of trustees were duly and legally appointed by proper action of the body and were a creature of the body to perform the duties of their office," instead as it appears.

In the article, "Whither are we drifting," page 1212, column 2, line 8, the word not should be inserted after the word do, making the sentence read: "The people often see much that they do not know how to correct."

A GOOD REPLY BY JOSEPH FLORY.

We take the following from the Hanford, California, Journal, of November 29, which we commend to those who may have occasion to get into the papers in defense of the work, as a clear, good statement, and in good form:

THE MORMONS.

Editor Journal: In your semiweekly issues of the Journal for November 11 and 15, was published an article under the head of "The Mormons" written by a member of the Armona Woman's Club and read before the Valley Federation of Woman's Clubs at Visalia.

While the subject-matter of the paper was principally intended as an exposition of the doings, religiously and politically, of the Mormons in Utah (which the writer of this article will leave for them to attend to if they see fit to do so), yet the paper contains statements that will reflect on the intelligence of some who do not indorse the teachings of the Mormons in Utah, and presents in an erroneous light some things believed in by many who are not identified in any way whatever with the Mormons of Utah, as an organization (but are usually called Mormons), and who are believers in the claim made by Joseph Smith, that he had communications with heavenly messengers and that the Book of Mormon is what it claims to be, and not what it is usually represented as being by those who are opposed to the Book of Mormon and Mormonism (so called) on general principles.

There is a church whose distinctive title is the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints (the Utah church is known as the Church of Jesus Christ, etc.) that believes that Joseph Smith was a prophet and that the Book of Mormon is a work of divine authenticity and who agree with the author of the article under consideration that "polygamy is not an essential part of Mormonism—it was an afterthought, not a root, but a graft," and that Brigham Young was the one who did the grafting of that doctrine into the church in Utah.

The following, which is a copy of a leaflet that was circulated in this and adjoining counties some years ago, will give you the attitude of the Reorganized Church on the question of polygamy at that time as well as before and since, and will also show that it was and is a separate organization:

"TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

"Whereas the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is a distinctly separate religious organization from the Mormon church of Utah, and that their headquarters as a church and their publishing house are at Lamoni, Iowa, and

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"Whereas there is a regularly organized branch of said church, composed of some seventy (70) members, who reside in the counties of Kern, Kings, Tulare, and Fresno, California, and

"Whereas there is much misunderstanding and prejudice extant in reference to us as a church and a people, accounted for, at least in part, by the continual confounding of us, as a people, with the Mormon church of Utah, by some at least, of those who have charge of the various newspapers and pulpits of the land, and

"Whereas the representatives of the Utah church also sometimes misrepresent us by stating 'that there is but little difference between them and us as a people,' while there are a number of radical and irreconcilable differences, which, so long as entertained by the respective churches, will for ever debar them from uniting as one church or religious body, therefore be it

"Resolved that we hereby protest against being represented as being one with the Mormon church of Utah, and furthermore, that we protest against B. H. Roberts, an avowed and practical polygamist, being allowed a seat in our national legislature, against which polygamous doctrine and practice the Reorganization is upon record for over forty (40) years as a most uncompromising foe, and be it further

"Resolved that we hereby authorize the secretary of this branch to purchase, as soon as practicable, some of our standard church publications and present the same to the various public libraries of the counties above named, for the use of the general public, and be it further

"Resolved that a copy of these preambles and resolutions be presented to one or more newspapers in each county, also for publication, and also that a copy be presented to each minister of the various churches who are located or are laboring in the above-named counties, and that these preambles and resolutions be spread upon the records of the branch.

"Signed in behalf of the church,

"JOSEPH FLORY, Elder.

"E. S. BURTON, Elder.

"CHAS. W. DEUEL, Priest.

"MATTHIAS CLARK, Teacher.

"JOHN CLARK, Deacon.

"MARY E. TWADDLE, Clerk."

The reason for the title of the Reorganized Church, etc., is that in 1844, when Joseph and Hyrum Smith were assassinated, the original church was largely broken up and a number of aspiring men drew off followers, and became leaders of the several factions claiming to be the continuation of the original church, and in the course of time some who were identified with some of these factions became dissatisfied and they, with others who had stood apart from all of the factions, for reasons to them good, reorganized the church upon the original platform upon which it had been organized, of which Reorganized Church Joseph Smith, son of the martyred Joseph Smith, is now, and has been for forty-four years, the presiding head, all of which time he has opposed much of what has been taught and practiced by the Mormons in Utah.

The writer of the paper published says: "The Mormons teach that the Book of Mormon was written by the finger of God not upon tables of stone but upon plates of gold." We have been acquainted with the subject of Mormonism for thirty years or over, have read their current literature considerable during that time as well as some of their church histories and have never seen the idea advanced that such was the claim, but always understood that it was thus written by a man, a prophet of God, who lived on this continent several centuries after the beginning of the Christian era, and who claims, according to that which is written in the Book of Mormon, that he was commanded of God to write the history of his people on the plates and bury the record in the earth to come forth at some future time at God's command. Joseph Smith claims that they were revealed to him through angelic administration and translated by him through divine aid into our language as we now have it in the Book of Mormon. The Book of Mormon claims to be a history of the civilized nations that have in the past ages existed and flourished upon this continent, of whose existence we have an abundance of evidence, as found nearly all over the American continent, but whose history has not as yet been clearly revealed from their ruins and writings found in them. The Book of Mormon teaches that God communicated with the ancient inhabitants of America and revealed his mind and will unto them—that the gospel plan of salvation was given to them on this continent, even as the eastern hemisphere was thus favored of God in that respect. It records their different periods of prosperity and adversity even according as they were faithful or unfaithful in the keeping of God's commandments. It teaches that the American Indians are a remnant of a once highly civilized people, but who dwindled into darkness and savagery because of unbelief in, and disobedience to God's laws which he had given them. The Book of Mormon teaches good principles and that which is calculated to make mankind better and more godlike. And if all men were governed by its teachings—which includes a belief in God and Christ, all of the doctrines and ordinances of the gospel as taught by Christ and his apostles at Jerusalem—we would have a better nation and people than we now have. The Book of Mormon is not intended to supercede the Bible, but is simply the sacred records of the inhabitants of this continent, who lived here isolated from the rest of the world for many centuries, and to whom God revealed his law as he did to other parts of the earth; and it is interesting, as such, to note the harmony of its teachings with that of the Bible as given to God's people at Jerusalem.

The idea as advanced by the writer of "The Mormons" that the Book of Mormon and the Spalding Romance are one and the same thing, only a change of title, has been so often met and refuted that it seems strange that such a thought should yet be entertained. The Book of Mormon and the Spalding Romance can both be obtained at the Herald Publishing House, at Lamoni, Iowa, for thirty-five cents each, and any one so desiring can procure copies of them and see whether or not there is any resemblance between the two productions. The writer of this communication some years ago placed a copy of the Book of Mormon in the public library at Hanford, where we presume it can be had by any one who may desire to examine the work.

The representative men of the church ever stand ready to defend the claims of Joseph Smith as to his being a prophet of God, and the claims made in behalf of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants and their teachings, against all who may oppose them, and also to prove that the fundamental principles and doctrines of original Mormonism are in harmony with the faith and practices of the primitive Christians.

Respectfully submitted,
JOSEPH FLORY.

THE SAFETY AND SANITY OF ANANIAS.

Many and many a commonplace liar, perhaps excusable, and certainly comparatively innocuous, has been shamefully entreated by public opinion in being compared with the Great Untruthful of all history, Ananias; and many and many a man of the Ananias class has lived out a long life serenely unconscious of his turpitude, looked up to by far less harmful men, and, in turn, looking down upon his betters from the height of wealth or social respectability which his lack of conscience enabled him to maintain.

What was the sin of Ananias, that he should be singled out from the millions of all time as the rightful occupant of the very pinnacle of disrepute? It could not have been merely that he lied. The Psalmist said in his haste that all men were liars. He was led to this sweeping conclusion because he was greatly afflicted. Yet in his calmer and more hopeful mood he does not distinctly take it back, and we are left to infer that even his mature opinion of the honesty of mankind was not at all flattering. Tennyson speaks of his own time—which, probably, was as honest as any—as one in which "only the ledger lives and only not all men lie." In the name of all that is decent, why should we pillory the memory of one unfortunate Hebrew and melt it with our execrations and abuse for twenty centuries?

This fastening upon Ananias as the great liar does Ananias no harm, but it does us much good. When a quality is typified in a person we can understand it so much better and discuss it so much more handily. When we have no actual person to take as a type, we imagine one; and so we have our Drink Demon, our Angel of Peace, our Santa Claus, and all the rest. This raising of Ananias to the had eminence of the Specimen Liar of all ages is another proof of the wisdom of that great humanity that Talleyrand and Lincoln had in mind when they said: "Everybody thinks better than anybody." The world's judgment of Ananias is absolutely wise.

Let us look at the sin of Ananias, that we may know it, abhor it, flee from it.

This man was a member of a communistic society; it is categorically stated in the record that "they had all things in common." They were a little band of enthusiasts gathered about an Idea. Ananias, like some other members of the band, was a land-owner. Like others he sold a piece of land. But he put into the common fund only a part of the price, though he pretended that he offered it all. The leader of the little community, Peter by name, taxed him with his deceit, and Ananias fell dead. Sapphira, his wife, who had been a party to his fraud, not knowing of the discovery, later made the same attempt to deceive the band. She also was stricken, and was buried with her husband.

Surely this was a fearful penalty for a merely venial sin. Look at the case from Ananias' point of view. He was probably a farsighted man, and, as such, he would know that the enthusiasms of the communists would soon wane, and that those who threw their all into the common fund would live to regret, perhaps in age, decrepitude, and poverty, the fearful error they had made in trusting the zealots who had pushed themselves into positions of leadership. He agreed, no doubt, with the tenets of the band; but he was not deaf to the counselings of reason and experience. If we assume that he was a wealthy man, we make his case all the stronger. He was contributing much, receiving little and exercising only partial control; while others gave nothing—having nothing to give—yet demanded as much as he, and had even more to say in directing the affairs of the society. Besides, if he was accustomed all his life to decent surroundings, the breakdown of the communistic organization which he foresaw, and which actually came to pass in a very short time, would mean a fearful fall for him and his family; whereas those who had always been poor would simply return to their accustomed life. He may have had reason to doubt that all the others were actually contributing with perfect honesty to the common fund. In the sales of property and inflow of contributions there must have been cases that looked not exactly right. Would it be safe, would it be sane, for him to give all where others, it might be, were giving only part? Anyway, had not a man a right to do what he would with his own?

If this was the reasoning of Ananias, he deserved his punishment and more, for his very plea was an aggravation of the offense. The strong, earnest man who led the little band of devotees showed the offender in a word or two the nature of his wrongdoing; and it was probably a conscience-stricken and repentant Ananias whose corpse was soon after borne out by the young men. But the communistic leader did not set forth the circumstances. It was not necessary to do so, for all the parties to the discussion knew them perfectly. We must use imagination to see the matter in the light in which it must have presented itself to Ananias himself as judgment was pronounced against him by the leader of the people he had betrayed.

The world of that time was a bad world. We can, without hypocrisy, hope that we of to-day are, on the whole, better than the people of that time were. Religion had been formalized or corrupted; government had become the hiring of the unscrupulous and the crafty; society was little more than communal vice. Every lover of mankind was looking and praying for a remedy for the fearful social diseases of the time.

The little communistic band of which Ananias was a member had the temerity to believe that they had been made the bearers of the message that should save the world. Tremblingly and with an awful joy they were spreading the glad tidings. A part of their message, if not the whole of it, was love,—a love embracing all mankind and knowing no barrier of birth, creed, social condition, or worldly wealth. They had been told, and they believed, that they were the salt of the earth, the light of the world. If that salt should lose its savor, if that light should be hidden, the one chance for the sin-sick world would be lost; mankind would be doomed for ever. They may have been all wrong. But they wished ill to no man, and they had a right to their opinion. They had a right to demand honest treatment at the hands of others, for they were candid in their dealings with all.

Their association was a perfectly voluntary one. If any man wished to remain outside, he was free to do so. The little band had no offices to give, no honors to confer, no wealth to divide. In the world outside were all these things, and the man who loved them was by that fact excluded from membership in the band, unless he lied to get in. Ananias knew all this, and, by his very membership, declared his acceptance of it. If he changed his mind, he could at any time withdraw. But to change his mind and still act in such a way as to lead the others to believe that he was with them in feeling, was to introduce discord with all its fearful consequences. To say that others had already acted with duplicity could not justify him in so acting; for he had not established such a charge against them before those to whom they and he were bound, nor could he say that any promise made to him by the band as a whole had been broken. If he was dissatisfied, his course was to withdraw.

Set in contrast, on the one side the self-abnegation, the pure and lofty enthusiasm, and the fond and exultant hope for humanity, that marked the true men of this little band of brothers, and, on the other side, the cold, calculating selfishness, the half-hearted interest, of Ananias, and we see what the communist leader must have meant when he told the poor culprit: "Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God." Ananias may have been killed by some sudden, subtle bolt from heaven. But, if he did not deserve even a worse fate than that which overtook him, the bursting upon his view of the fearful nature of his sin was enough to end his life.

After centuries had been spent by mankind in the vain effort to found governments upon force, upon law, upon commerce, upon religion, upon monarchy, upon art; and after nation after nation so founded had waxed, waned, died, and been almost or wholly forgotten,—there arose a nation whose corner-stone was declared to be justice. The first words this nation uttered to the world were a declaration of this principle as being so deeply and obviously true that it could not be argued, but must be taken as the ultimate basis of all argument, of all system, of all organization. "We hold these truths to be self-evident," declared this nation as its very first word to the world, "that all men are born equal and are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights." To maintain these rights was the one object of governments as stated at the inception of this nation.

It was a new evangel to a world sunk in war, chicanery, and social mal-adjustments. At that time, the wisest of men were fearful that the "red ruin and the breaking up of laws" of a former day were to come again, and soon. But the utter collapse of government was prevented. The founders of the new state declared, and so did their successors for generations, that the new principle had been the salvation of the world. The new state prospered as no country had ever prospered before. Some of its people, from the very first, distrusted the new principle of justice, and, as time went on, the number of this class seemed to increase. But there were some who declared that every year proved yet more clearly that government for any other purpose than the maintenance of justice would mean early and utter ruin to the state. And, as their country was the only one that had made justice the object of its government, they saw that to make a change and to found the government upon force, conquest, wealth, or any other form of authority, would be to leave the world again in darkness and the nations without a leader. Mankind would go back, and it could then regain its place only after ages of misery, and only by once more "weltering its way through Chaos and the murk of Hell."

This may have been all a mistake. But there is a band of men in the new nation, be they mistaken or not, and be they few or many, who are devoted heart and soul to the idea that absolute justice, and the maintenance of their country as one in which the government strives after absolute justice, is necessary to the salvation of their country and of the world. Ananias and his moral kin are those whom they have to fear. The man who says that he is one of this band, yet holds that freedom is to be given to certain people only when he is graciously pleased to believe them fit to enjoy it; that robbery is to be prevented only by composition with the robber; that justice is to be proclaimed, not freely as a right, but tentatively as a privilege—this man is the Ananias of the band of believers in the new nation and in the new evangel.

When a man can win a woman by declaring that he loves her, not unselfishly but calculatingly, not devotedly but safely and sanely, then a nation may hope to prosper by chaffering and huxtering with justice. Even conquest can not make a nation great unless its people devote themselves to conquest. How then can Justice, whose kingdom is so much harder to establish, make great the nation that gives her half-hearted and cynical devotion? Had the spirit of Ananias animated the early preachers of the gospel of love, the movement would have died before it was born. If those who pretend to love justice are to declare that justice shall be done only when and where it does not interfere with the interests of those who have bought and paid for the privilege of doing injustice, Ananias and his kind are given command of the one movement that is to save the world. "If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness."—A. C. Campbell, in the Public.

No subject is of greater interest or pursued more devotedly by serious-minded women throughout the country to-day than that of child-study. It is a prominent topic at all women's clubs; thousands of mothers are reading all they can find on it. On this score it is interesting to know that Professor M. V. O'Shea, of the University of Wisconsin, has been contributing a remarkable series of articles on child-training and child-study to the Twentieth Century Home. "Teaching children the value of money," "The treatment of evil in the training of children," are among the topics treated. The January issue contains another of the series, "The growth of self-restraint in childhood." A reading of it is wonderfully illuminating in knowledge of many points usually misunderstood by those dealing with children. Every such person should read this article, and she will be grateful to Professor O'Shea and the Twentieth Century Home for the opportunity of becoming acquainted with it. Safe to say, the number will be preserved for this article alone.

Choosing a Wife.

A wise marriage leads a man to the noblest, truest, fullest, and best life. Thousands of men owe all their success and prosperity to their choice of a wife. She has been the good angel of destiny. A man wants a wife who will make something of him, whose influence will ever inspire him to do his best. What kind of a woman should she be?

For one thing, a man does not want a mere toy wife, something too fine, too ethereal for real use. She should be a woman who can bear her share of the burdens, who can endure toil and sacrifice and grow all the lovelier meanwhile.

Again, the wife a man chooses should be a good housekeeper. To some romantic young lovers this will seem a very prosaic feature to put into the picture. But never mind; they will not be many weeks married before they will come down out of the clouds to walk on common earth and then, alas! if the poor woman does not prove a good housewife!

There are women who live in sentimental dreams, neglecting meanwhile the duties that lie close to their hands. Good breakfasts, dinners, and suppers, good bread, good coffee—in a word, good housekeeping. Far more than any young lovers dream does wedded happiness depend upon just such unromantic things as these.

One of Saint Paul's special counsels for young women is that they be "keepers at home," as our common version renders it, and that is good, too; but in the Revised Version it reads "workers at home"; that is, the place of a young wife's most sacred duty is in her own home. No doubt women have a wide field for Christ-like usefulness in ministering to human need and sorrow outside; but in performing such ministry, however beautiful and noble, a wife should never neglect her divinest duties, which lie within her own doors.

Another suggestion is that in choosing a wife a young man should look for a woman of sweet temper. Nothing else can take the place of love in a home, nothing else can supply its lack. There are many women who have so much of the spirit of love and gentleness that they fill their homes as with the fragrance of heaven and the calm and peace of God.

In choosing a wife a wise young man will seek for one who will enter with zest into all his life, who will stand close beside him in the day of struggle and adversity and who will ever inspire him to noble and brave things.

Once more, it needs no argument to prove that a young man should choose none but a good woman for his wife. A worldly man may imagine that he does not want a pious wife; but, if the truth were confessed, even such a man, down deep in his heart, would rather have for his wife a woman who reads her Bible, prays, and lives a godly life, than one who is prayerless, godless, and worldly. Religion adorns and beautifies a woman's character, clothing it with tender grace. Even a prayerless man feels safer in his home if his wife kneels morning and night before God.—Doctor J. R. Miller.

Truthfulness in Little Things.

NEVER DECEIVE OR SCARE A CHILD.—ALWAYS KEEP YOUR PROMISE.

We as parents should never deceive our children. In the beginning the tempter came in the form of a serpent and deceived the woman. Here we see the first-fruits of deception. Eve the first woman deceived by the Devil.

We might cite many cases of deception, in the Bible, prompted by the Devil, but we find Christ always teaching the truth. Tracing the spirit of deception to its author, the Devil, should we as parents follow his example or that set by Christ?

No parent who is trying to raise a family to honor and respect

God's law can afford to deceive his child. Our children may deceive us, but if we desire to gain their confidence and teach them how necessary it is to be truthful, we must be true in both word and deed. We must set them an example worthy of imitation, then call on our heavenly Father to assist us. But should we deceive them, we should then explain to them in simple, childlike language how we have done wrong in deceiving them, ask them to forgive us and see that henceforth we keep watch over our acts and words; for it is as much sin to deceive them by our actions as by word.

The world to-day is full of deception in homes, in churches, in politics, and in every walk of business life. Then let us as parents stamp it out in our homes, and see to it that we do not practice it or encourage its practice.

When we remember that boys and girls make men and women we may well be anxious that every wise effort shall be made to instill into their young minds those seeds of truth and those broad outlines of principle that shall help to form noble manhood and perfect womanhood.

Never scare a child; it is very wrong. The object usually is to secure obedience. If parents desire their children to comply with their wishes and have no control over them only by scaring them, it looks like a weak point on the part of the parent. Obedience should be prompt. There must be no delay. If parents fully realize the true value of this their task would be much easier and their success greater. The habit of free and cheerful obedience trains the will in right doing and thus develops a strong moral character which in itself is independent. Then there is no necessity to scare a child. Too often we tell our little ones the bears will eat them, the rag-man will catch them, or make some terrible impression on their minds that will scare them. This has a tendency to make them obey, but at the same time we are deceiving them.

Obedience secured by fear does not have the good effect that obedience prompted by the sense of duty has. Parents should never tamper with the conscience of their children for in so doing they destroy the very trait of character they should cultivate: that of obeying right because it is right, which is one of the highest motives in life. Of my own observation I have seen parents controlling large families by having secured the obedience of the eldest; the younger ones follow the example set them, making the parents' task easier and that too without practicing deception in any form.

Always keep your promise to your child. Yes, under every circumstance we must keep our promise with our children, or see that we make none we can not keep. We are too apt to promise them without stopping to think whether or not we can keep our promise. Too often we wish them to perform some task, such as go to the store, take care of baby, bring wood, coal, or water, as the case may be. They in compliance with our wish perform these tasks cheerfully, their hopes built upon some promise we have made them, when to their disappointment we fail to keep our promise with them. This has a tendency to weaken the faith of children in the parent, and the next time we need their help and try to secure it by promise to our disappointment we find, by failing to keep our promise, we have destroyed their confidence in us, and it is more difficult to secure obedience.

There are mothers who, when their children are disobedient, promise, "I will tell father." The father may be one who is easily provoked, and in the past may have punished too severely. Mother does not tell him this time and thus fails to keep her promise. The next time she tells the child this it will think, "Oh, you did not tell him the other time; you will not tell him this time."

And again we indulgent mothers too often promise them a punishment, but fail to apply it. Thus we lose control over our children by failing to keep our promise. Let us feel the great responsibility resting upon us as parents. While we realize that we are responsible for their very existence, we should also consider the greater responsibility of forming their character. Let us stop and consider how pure they are when intrusted to our care, and never by scaring or by failing to keep our promise set an example of deception.

Parents, let us then in our homes work together in love for their welfare. The interest of one should be the interest of all. One parent can tear down much faster than the other can build up, but if together we set a godly example, then under trying circumstances over which we have no control, we can place our hands in our heavenly Father's, and seek divine help through Christ our mediator, and we know he will help us.

Let us then take Christ for our example, when we make promises, for we can not find one instance in his holy word where he has ever failed to keep his promise, when we complied with his requirements. Let us as parents follow the advice of the prophet: "Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it."

Parents, we can never pour too much joy into the lives of our children. Making them happy is a very excellent way of making them good. Then let us carry the radiance of our soul in our face, and let the children and the world have the benefit of it. We must never sit down and say there is nothing for us to do, for:

"There's a work for me and a work for you, Something for each of us now to do."

The following is an extract from Doctor Schaffner's article on "Art of teaching," in the Sunday School Times last year. He strikes some very practical thoughts on the art of questioning. The method he refers to as the "Socratic" we do not consider strictly applicable to teaching in the Sunday-school class except in some instances. But the principle which we think the writer intended to make most prominent and emphatic was the art of questioning. How to put your questions in order to bring about the desired results. Study it carefully and you may be able to get some splendid suggestions therefrom:

"One method of teaching, which never will be surpassed, is the Socratic,—the method of question and answer. There never was a better, and there never will be. We want to study this art of questioning, in order that we may wisely adapt our questions to the minds of our scholars. Questions must be short; they must be clear; they must call for certain, specific, comprehensible replies. A question like this will elicit no reply: 'Considering now the fact of the omniscience of almighty God and the fallibility of the human reason, how do you easily explain the question of foreordination and free will?' The result will be no response, but only great astonishment and disgust. I have heard preposterous questions asked of scholars, and then the scholars scolded because they would not reply. Oh, for skill in questioning, that by questioning we may discover ignorance; that by questioning we may stimulate thought; that by questioning we may induce action! He who is a skillful questioner is a skillful teacher.

"I would fain that you might have the privilege, as I have had it, of sitting in secular classes in the Normal School in New York, and hearing model lessons taught by selected teachers on what is called the development plan. The conditions of that plan are as follows: The teacher has never seen the scholars before. The teacher must tell the scholar nothing. The teacher must evolve out of the scholar everything. The teacher must piece together what is evolved, and give it its nomenclature. Those are the conditions, and I have sat entranced at the cleverness of the young women teachers. One lesson, for example, that I heard was this:

"The theme was 'The uses of oils.' There were forty boys and girls from twelve to thirteen years of age in front of the teacher whom she had never before seen. There were spectators present, making the matter somewhat more difficult than it otherwise would have been. She stood before them and said: 'Have any of you ever been sick? Hands up.' The hands went up. 'What was the matter with you, my boy?' 'I had stomach-ache.' 'Yes. Did your mother do anything for you?' 'Yes, ma'am.' 'What did she do?' 'She gave me some medicine.' 'Well, what did she give you?' 'Oh, she gave me some magnesia.' 'Yes. Are you all right again? That's nice. Now what was the matter with you, my little girl?' 'I had stomach-ache too.' 'Well, did your mother give you anything?' 'Oh, yes, ma'am; she gave me castor-oil.' 'Gave you what?' 'Castor-oil.' 'Well, when we give people something to make them well, what do we call it?' 'Medicine.' 'Then castor-oil is used for medicine?' 'Yes, ma'am.'

"Then she wrote on the board, 'Oil is used for medicinal purposes.'

"How many of you have sewing-machines in your house? Hands! The hands went up. 'Can you run a machine?' 'No.' 'Can you?' 'Yes, ma'am.' 'Well, does your machine always go right?' 'No, ma'am; it stuck yesterday.' 'Well, when it stuck, what did your mother do?' 'Oh, she oiled it.' 'Oh, oiled it! What did she oil it for?' 'To make it run smooth.' 'Do they oil all kinds of machinery to make them run smooth?' 'Yes, ma'am.' 'Very well.'

"On the board, 'Oil is used for lubricating purposes.'

"Then she drew out that oil is used for illuminating purposes, and for culinary purposes. She told them nothing; she evolved it, and pieced it together. Finally she wanted to draw out this truth, that oil is used for manufacturing purposes, and there the class stuck. And the cleverness and patience of that woman! How she felt, and tried one way-after another! Finally, the class being really excited to help in cooperation, one boy said that his father kept a paint-shop. 'Oh!' she said. 'Did you ever go to your father's paint-shop?' 'Yes, ma'am. I was there yesterday. I go often.' 'Did anything ever happen to you in your father's paint-shop?' 'Yes, ma'am. Yesterday I spoiled my trousers.' 'How did you spoil your trousers?' 'I sat down in a barrel of linseed oil.' Oh! What was your father doing with linseed oil? 'Well, he keeps it to mix paints with.' 'To mix paints? We call that manufacturing.'

"So she got out the fact from him that 'Oil is used for manufacturing purposes.' But the beauty of it was the deftness with which question was applied to eluce answer, and the cleverness with which it was put together to form great statements with regard to the uses of oils."—Schauffler in Sunday School Times.

WHILE at the great International Sunday-school Convention at Denver, Colorado, in 1902, we saw and heard a man whom we had read about many times. We had read his writings and had considered them very good. We had heard words of praise of the ability of the man. But not until we saw the man and heard him speak did we fully appreciate the true worth he possessed. He is a man of earnestness and ability possessed by few. He cares little for human applause. He is refined and cultured in appearance but unassuming. He impresses one as being completely wrapped up in his work, and we learn to love him for his earnestness and good common sense. He ranks as one of the leading educators and divines of New York City. Has always been prominent in Sunday-school work, especially teaching. In 1903 he contributed to the Sunday School Times, Philadelphia, a series of articles on "Secrets of successful teaching." And from one of these articles we clip the following on blackboard illustration. Let those who have been discouraged because they could not do the work of an artist on the board read and reflect. Any one who will give the necessary thought to it, can do at least fairly good blackboard work:

"Can we do anything with the blackboard? Yes. The blackboard is much abused, and therefore by many thoughtful men little used. But it can be effectively used, I believe, in very simple ways. Many feel that because they can not draw pictures, and make goblets and snakes and crowns and angels, therefore they can not use the board. I can do none of those things,—indeed, I can hardly write straight. Nevertheless, used with the utmost simplicity, the blackboard can be a potency in carrying truth through Eye-gate.

"Take a lesson of last winter on Ruth's choice. That was the theme, and choosing—our choosing—was the application of it. I illustrated that as shown in these rough sketches.

"The first sketch is what we may call the fortification of a man's soul, after the manner of Bunyan in his Holy War, and in that fortification each one sits alone, and in that fortification we find this, which is the dominant factor in all our lives—Will.

"God's command comes to us from outside, and says to us all along the line, 'Thou shalt,' and that appeals to the individual. It appeals to his intellect,—he understands it. It ought to appeal to his affections and engage them. But ultimately it must appeal to his will, for we know that without that nothing is won. Joshua says, 'Choose ye.' Elijah says, 'How long will ye halt between two opinions?' Ruth chooses. 'Thy God shall be my God, thy people my people.' God appeals to every sinner to-day. 'Thou shalt,' and he wants our wills subordinated to his will, and if we subordinate it, our answer is, 'I Will.'

"That was Ruth's answer: 'I will; thou art my God.' But we have the awful alternative, if we do not desire to respond favorably, to add one word.

"There is the sovereignty of the individual. Almighty God says, 'Thou shalt,' and the braggart sinner stands, and, lifting his face heavenward, says, 'I will not.' There is where Decision Day comes in,—when you have your Decision Day. You can make your scholars understand its solemnity by five words on the board, showing them how the right and wrong choice stands before them to-day, and on it their eternity may swing.

"Take another of these blackboard, simple illustrations. They abound on every hand. We have, for example, the story of the trial of our Savior. Jesus is the great character there as he stands before his judge.

"You draw out the facts of the lesson. Then you make them understand that one day that will be reversed at the great judgment, and it will be (reading now upward):

"PILATE BEFORE JESUS.

"On earth Pilate could do as he liked with Jesus; in that day Jesus will do what he wants with Pilate. But never mind about Pilate and Jesus: Wipe out the word 'Pilate,' and substitute the word 'you.'

"Behold, I stand at the door and knock.' Jesus to-day before you,—for your decision. That, too, will be reversed one day, and it will be (again reading upward):

JESUS
YOU

"YOU BEFORE JESUS

for decision. Three significant words! But any one can do such work as this. Nevertheless, you will bear me witness that even to your minds the truth is a little clearer because of the right use of these three words. Change this, if you want to, and put there 'Zacchæus,' and put here 'Seeking,' and put here 'Jesus.' He was seeking to see Jesus, and, when the Master came to the foot of the tree, he looked up, and it was apparent that Jesus was seeking Zacchæus; and now we may read upward again, and we see that it makes

SEEKING

"JESUS SEEKING ZACCHÆUS

for he says, 'Zacchæus, come down; for to-day I must abide at thy house.' Wipe out, now, 'Zacchæus,' and put 'You.' But, if that is true, read upward once more, and you will find that, like the good shepherd, he has gone out long ago to seek you. Oh, there are quantities of these illustrations, these condensations of the story of the lesson and the amplification of the truth contained in the lesson, if only you will seek for them, and select the short and clear ones! Do not multiply things on the board, because then minds get confused. Whatever you are, be two things: Clear, Short."

Marry in the Church.

Dear Herald: May I have space in your columns to ask an interest in your prayers in behalf of my husband? He does not belong to the church. I should like so much to have the elders come here to preach, but I could not conscientiously ask them to come unless I could give them a home with us. Knowing my husband's prejudice I can not do as I would like. Pardon me for speaking of my environments; I do not want to sing a tale of woe, but I want your prayers, for I realize my weakness, and the responsibility that is resting upon me. I am alone, and the only one in my family belonging to the church, and I realize that it will be by the example I set before my family that they will be brought into the church. Pray that the Lord may give me wisdom, knowledge, and patience; everything that goes to make a true Latter Day Saint. I try to speak in behalf of the gospel wherever I have an opportunity.

It makes me feel sad when I read in HERALD or Ensign of dear Saints marrying outside the church, and I wonder if they fully realize the step they are taking. Dear parents, do you talk to your children in a kind way and tell them of the possible sorrow they are bringing on themselves? I am speaking from experience, and have felt constrained to write many times. I have a good home and as good a husband as the average, but in religious matters I have been made to realize my mistake. I am often made to feel that I am a frail bark in mid-ocean with the waves threatening on every side. I do not fear being dashed to pieces. God forbid. But I do feel that I could have saved myself much sorrow if I had known, if some one had told me.

You say when we love truly we can not resist, but I will tell you marriage is ordained of God, and therefore should be held sacred, next to our religion; and if we ask him sincerely if we are taking the right step, he will demonstrate that fact some way.

I have been married thirty-one years. I found my mistake when I had been married only about three months. I was made to feel that I was out of place, but I had made my path of thorns and I must walk in it. There was no one to blame for my neglect of thought but myself. I love my family, and am willing to sacrifice my life for them, but not my religion, for it is truth and I will hold up the banner of Christ to my children and others though all hell tries to prevail against me, God being my helper.

I ask you to pray that my burden may be made lighter and that I may be given strength to endure to the end.

'Neath the Southern Cross.

Editors Herald: I notice that my pamphlet entitled, The Mormons, which is being distributed in Australia, has received quite an advertisement in the Deseret News. Since its publication, last year, the writer has been highly gratified with the good being done by it. We have found copies of it in the most unexpected places, such as doctors' and dentists' waiting-rooms, where none of our people have placed them. This shows a willingness on the part of outsiders to let others know that there is a great difference between the two churches. Since the free advertisement given by the News, additional orders have been coming in from people who knew nothing of the pamphlet before, so our publishing interests here have been helped forward by the action of that paper. The main portion of the News article has been ably answered by the Editor, so we will confine ourselves to the task allotted us by him in the HERALD for August 24.

As to the intent and purpose of the pamphlet, these are plainly set forth in it, as follows:

"This little pamphlet has been written, firstly to warn the people of Australia against the seductive influence of the Mormon missionaries; secondly to draw the line of distinction between the Mormons, who falsely style themselves 'Latter Day Saints,' and the true Latter Day Saints. Many people do not know that there is any difference. Will the reader pass this intelligence on to his or her friends? The Latter Day Saints have suffered much, and have been greatly misunderstood because of being confounded with the Mormon church and its abominable doctrines. Shall we who are innocent either of belief in, or the practice of these doctrines sit idly by and allow the misunderstanding to continue, and have the abominations of Utah laid at our door? Nay, verily! We will spend our time, our money, our all, in publishing these facts to the world, and we call upon all who love truth and righteousness to assist us in this work. Will the editors into whose hands this pamphlet may come please assist us by pointing out this difference in their papers: will ministers who read it make the announcement from their pulpits, and will everybody personally assist us by telling their friends?"—Page 12.

It may be asked, "Why should we warn the people against the Utah elders?" In my opinion that is a similar question to, "Am I my brother's keeper?" We know full well the cunning tactics adopted by them in keeping the objectionable features of their doctrine till the convert goes to Utah, and why should we not expose them to the public gaze? Again, people have told me that they have, in answer to questions, said that the congregations worshiping in some of our churches, here, were "branches" of their church. Besides this, two of their elders some time ago visited a relative of my wife and actually enjoyed her hospitality for different periods of time under the false pretense that they belonged to the same church as I did. Should not people be warned against such tactics?

There is nothing in the tract which is calculated to stir up the spirit of mobocracy, as witness the following:

"One word about the Mormon missionaries before we close. We would advise that they be not persecuted—that they be treated with Christian kindness. 'Let them alone,' the advice of Gamaliel, is good; 'they will assuredly come to nought.'"

The people of Australia do not regard the Utah elders seriously enough to think of mobbing them, and what is more, people who behave themselves never will be treated in that way in this country. The violent language of Doctor Dowie and his ministers was responsible, to a large extent, for the only bad breaks the people of this country have made in that direction. If abuse is the only answer that the big guns of Utah can give when confronted with the quotations found in the pamphlet, I would not like to be in the position of their elders in this country. When they can give no reasonable answer, it is only to be expected that they would advise their elders here to have nothing to do with us. I am proud of the fact that I belong to a church which is not ashamed to have the light turned on its teachings. Whatever may be the case in America, "Mormonism" is a synonym for polygamy in this country.

Since last writing I have moved my family to Victoria, and am now acting as editor of the Standard. Things are looking brighter for the little paper than ever before. It has become a power for good. It is a missionary paper in the sense that about four hundred copies are distributed free to the public each month by our missionaries in the various centers. Thus we have up-to-date literature, suited to the needs of the mission, at a very small cost. Recently we purchased a supply of type, and under the tuition of Bro. Edmondson, the editor has mastered the printers' art sufficiently to do the composing and making up of the pages. Bro. Edmondson then takes charge, makes up the forms, and prints the paper on his press free. We feel that the Lord has sent him to us (he is a recent addition to the church), and pray that He may continue to bless him for his sacrifice and labor. Our present work may not seem to be in harmony with a missionary's duty, but then this is a foreign mission and the conditions at present are such that it can not be avoided. We hope to see the day when the Standard will be under a board of publication appointed by General Conference, and the editor on a ministerial basis as the staffs of the HERALD and Ensign are.

I go to Geelong to-morrow for a few days' labor, then to Hastings for my debate there on the 23d, 24th, and 25th.

Ever praying for Zion's weal, Your brother in Christ,

WALTER J. HAWORTH.

A Misunderstanding.

Editors Herald: Of all sources from which trouble and ill-feeling in the church emanates the inability to properly understand each other, and thereby render correct judgment, is the most prolific. In view of the weakness of humanity to make himself understood and thereby forestall the attending difficulties, the Savior gave this divine rule of correction: "Moreover if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother."—Matthew 18: 15.

Many of the little difficulties which have caused much of the trouble in the church would go no farther than the two individuals concerned should this grand rule always be adhered to.

I was very much grieved by the tone of the article by Bro. D. R. Baldwin, for my intentions and his application of the word wiseacre were as far apart as the antipodes of the earth. Any brother using such harsh and ungentlemanly language toward a brother minister disqualifies himself as a representative of the meek and lowly One. My only thought and application in using the word was to attack that principle which Bro. Baldwin, myself, and all the brethren have to meet, viz., swallowing a camel and straining at a gnat. I have met men who would overlook all the good in a series of discourses and pick out one little word, and hold it up as an answer (?) against your position. This is not the work of a scholar but a wiseacre, and to those fellows, and only those fellows, was my entire article directed. Let me assure the brother that I have the best of feeling toward him and always hope to have, and I admire his excellent contributions to the HERALD.

I can not find better words in which to frame my attitude toward frail humanity than those employed by Bro. F. R. Tubbs in closing his article in late HERALD, and I ask that your humble servant may be given the benefit of those beautiful sentiments.

"In things essential—unity.

"In things doubtful—liberty.

"In all things—charity."

Ever hoping and praying for that grand unity, liberty, and charity which governs the bright and shining intelligence of the upper worlds,

F. J. EBELING.

Saints' Herald: As I am only a lay member, and a sister, I may say what I like, and no one could blame the church. I often sigh for a look at some of the old-time ministers of the gospel that came in my mother's day, declaring they represented the church of Jesus Christ, and defending and proving Joseph Smith to be a prophet. They were not afraid, because they had the Spirit that casteth out all fear. They loved to sing "Zion's noble sons are weeping," or, "I came to the spot where the two martyrs lay," and others I might name. What has become of the composers and ministers? Did they pass away and leave no children? Those that come now to take their places are so fine, almost gilt-edged, and look real well, like they might have been born at Independence, and rocked in Zion's cradle, shielded from every storm; and yet I wonder what good they do, and how long so fair a city can stand the sun's hot, blasting rays in this part of the vineyard, where it seems that every man is for himself; you just stand or fall, live or die, and no difference which. Am I mistaken if I think there is a lack of patriotism? They are glad to get back home and away from us.

MARY A. CARTER.

FRANKLIN, Nebraska, December 20, 1904.

Dear Herald: Bro. Sutton, our worthy missionary in charge and the writer just closed a series of meetings at Fairfield. We went away feeling that we had done some good. Several are investigating. This is a hard place to get the truth before the people because of the amount of prejudice, and the misrepresentations made by D. H. Bays. But the Saints went to work with a zeal that was commendable, and an honor to the cause. Remembering that sacrifice is pleasing to God, they rented the Baptist church in Fairfield, which cost them ninety cents each night, and we occupied fifteen nights. Not only that, but they stood the cost of getting Bro. J. R. Sutton's teeth fixed up, so that he can get at the chicken better now; and the Fairfield Sunday-school made the writer a present of a beautiful Bible. I wish also to mention that Mr. and Mrs. William Croft, non-members, but worthy people whom we look forward to with the anticipation that they will be one with us some day, made us a present of five dollars each. May God bless them all, and reward them with eternal life.

Through the efforts of these dear people we were able to disabuse the minds of the people of some of the misrepresentations, and get the truths of the blessed gospel before them, which we could not otherwise have done. Likewise much good might be done in other places if Saints would put their shoulders to the wheel.

We are now holding forth here in Franklin. The writer expects to remain over Christmas, after that we shall go east. This is my first visit here, and I had the pleasure of meeting with Saints by name of Thomas Andersen. Sr. Andersen knew me when I was a boy in Denmark, when I, together with my parents, attended services held by Bro. P. N. Brix in Aalborg. Some of the Danish Saints will remember this when they read. All of this was indeed a happy surprise to me.

Let us all live faithful to the cause of our Master, for it is those that are faithful to the end that shall be saved. The work that we have enlisted in, there is none better, but in these times of much deception we are to be on the watch, and let us remember the words,

"Let us pray for one another,
For the day is fading fast."

The fact that we are doing our duty, will be to us as an "anchor to our souls, sure and steadfast, which entereth within the veil." Ever watching for Zion's progress, I remain,

Your brother in Christ,

Editors Herald: In reading over a part of section 17, and especially paragraph 18, I find instruction there that to me is not considered of much value in our day, as I have never known it obeyed at any time; and since the work seems to be in such a very bad condition, I am led to believe that such a treatment of God's word by those set over the work is why the church is not being edified as it might be. In paragraph 11, I learn that the teacher is to watch over the church always, and see that there is no iniquity in the church with hardness with each other, neither lying, backbiting, nor evil-speaking. In paragraph 10 I learn that the priest is to visit the house of each member and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all other duties. Now, again, I can see why the church is almost like a body without a spirit. I can not tell who our priest is, if we have one. I notice another code of the law evidently set aside, section 42, paragraph 19. I have never heard any one advocate that part of the law, and I expect that if they, the priest and teachers, could receive a just remuneration for their services, we would hear more from them and less from the elders if the rule was changed. Give to all their dues and perhaps we will be better and more taught, and we would all receive more blessings. I think if we ever are lifted up much in the Lord we will first have to respect the law, and not become a law unto ourselves; and when we attempt to do anything with the Lord's body we should examine the law and see how it should be done. I will be glad when all hardness, lying, and jealousy is put away, and the Lord called on to step in and take the lead indeed. May all Saints pray for this part of the Lord's body.

BOBBIE WILLIAMS.

AKRON, Iowa, December 18, 1904.

Editors Herald: I desire to ask the prayers of the Prayer Union, and of all the Saints, in my behalf, that if it be God's will I may be restored to health, and we will give all the praise to him who doeth all things well.

I also ask the prayers of all that my husband may see the necessity of applying this blessed gospel to his life ere it is too late, as he has now lived nearly two years on borrowed time, and I fear it soon will be too late; also that my children may learn and obey the gospel, and serve their mother's God.

I love to read the dear old HERALD. It brings a feast to my soul in the correspondence, and the good sermons, and—well, it is all good, and how Latter Day Saints can do without the church papers I can not understand. I have been thirty-five years in this church and never missed getting the HERALD unless it was missent or lost some way ere it reached me. And I have taken the Ensign since it was first published.

May God bless his work and all his children is the prayer of,
SR. M. A. CROSTY.

ALBION, Idaho, December 11, 1904.

Dear Herald: As I sit by the fireside meditating this evening over the comforts there are in a comfortable room, while without winter cold is fast closing its grasp on the waning year, I can but think of the comfort and solace which should be found and felt within the fold of the Good Shepherd.

How much influence have I exerted, or can I exert, to make the fold a haven of rest, warmth, and comfort to those at least who are weak and weary of the chilly blasts of opposition, in or out of the fold? Many hungering, thirsting souls come in to find rest and peace. "In me ye shall have peace," said the Good Shepherd. The power to realize this peace, and maintain the equilibrium, comes by education and cultivation, often induced by trials and tribulation from contact with the elements within and without the fold.

It makes little difference whether it be young or aged; if we rub against the barbed wire, by day or by night, in the pasture or out, we will get snagged. Then we say we were not sufficiently careful, thoughtful, or wakeful. It is not enough for us to pray, "Deliver us from evil,"—the snares and quicksands of life. We must be watchful as well, not only where we tread, but in flying words.

I do not claim perfection in this, though I never say or do what I think will offend—even one of the lambs of the fold. Sometimes offense may be taken where none is intended. Not long ago I read a little criticism on the method of raising funds for church purposes made use of in one locality, selling tickets for chances at winning a quilt. I thought there might have been some kind brother there who might have bought the quilt and saved the sisters the trouble of selling it in the way they did. Sr. Corson did just what I expected to do. The humblest member of the fold has an equal right with the highest thereof to censure or criticize what they feel is wrong practice in the church, and no one should take offense. When I can not stand criticism, I need self-examination for gospel grace. It would have made no difference to me if it had been the First Presidency, or Twelve; and I try to enter into the spirit of,

"We thank thee, O God, for a prophet,
To guide us in these latter days."

Sometimes I think of the statement by our prophet, "I do not expect to be dictated to by any man, nor set of men." Just about what a man of God might be expected to say, whether he be president of the church or not.

Moses said he wished all God's people were prophets. There would have been less contention and murmuring in the camp of Israel then, and there would be less now in the fold of Israel. The college debt would have been paid off long ago. All would drink more fully and freely into the "one Spirit." We have a right to expect when the Lord calls men to feed the lambs and sheep of the fold that they sense the responsibility of their duty from the least to the greatest or highest in authority; that they feed them on the sincere milk of the word. But the sheep are not expected to sit like young robins and swallow every morsel (word) coming from those shepherds. "I have made my church in these last days like unto a judge sitting on a hill," etc. "He that hath ears to hear let him hear." While at conference at Independence, 1901, I heard elders criticizing others till I felt like asking, "Where did you lose the Spirit of the Lord, and your callings?"—criticizing the mothers of Israel and Daughters of Zion in a way (to me) so unfair, I wondered where shame had fled. To my mind the sisters needed, and do still, the earnest support of every member in the fold. The greatest enemy to true spirituality is sexual sin. This must be corrected ere Saints can attain to the heavenly pattern, as husband and wife. A true partnership with God can never be effected till fleshly lust is curbed to the platonic or heavenly pattern, and who should take the initiative in this but those most vitally affected, the wife and mother?

I for one hope for conditions when church fairs and entertainments for raising money can be so conducted as not to take on the "appearance of evil," or offend any of our little ones, or cause any to stumble. The opinion of the Editor of the HERALD in such a case was wisely given,—withholding censure or approval, allowing Saints the freedom of adopting their own methods, even to "milking the goats to feed the sheep." When our Methodist friends here have invited me to attend their mid-night socials, sometimes I told them I preferred to pay my mite and not attend. Some of these socials are very entertaining. Every entertainment can not please all, or come up to the standard of approval with all. Saints should always have the prestige of the gospel in mind as much in such affairs as in our every-day conversation and dealing. But for the tireless efforts of the women of Albion, the Methodist people as a church would surely close the door of their chapel here. After all the disturbing causes in and out of the fold, I do feel thankful for the gospel of the kingdom. I have many things besides to be thankful for, in common with Joseph, as given in his Thanksgiving sermon: Even the trusts and combines of capital are efforts to make more stable the prices of the products of the industries they control. If the farmers would unite as a class, so that wheat would command one dollar a bushel, it would be better for the country, too. When prices fluctuate and drop so low there is no margin for the producer, or the manufacturer, the oil of commerce is lacking, and its wheels stop. I feel very thankful that I live in this the ushering in of the golden age. The meek of the earth are increasing, and their joy is in the Lord. It seems an easy matter for some to find fault with conditions, socially, politically, or religiously. This habit grows upon us as we nurse or express it. We get sour because of our condition and environments. It unfits us as messengers of "peace and good will." It does require a constant care to maintain a good, healthy, normal condition of mind and body in all the medley of contention within and without the fold.

Yours for Zion's weal,

CHARLES ALBERTSON.

STEWARTSVILLE, Missouri, December 19, 1904.

Editors Herald: Since writing you from Spickards, Missouri, I have kept up my official visits at other branches. I have been blessed in all my work with the Saints, and received among them with all the kindness I could ask. They have honored me with their presence at the meetings held, and I have indeed been directed by the divine Spirit in teaching them their duties. Am glad to say the teachings have been well received. In many places the Saints are scattered, which makes it inconvenient to attend all the services. The more I labor in my calling, the more I learn to exercise wisdom in looking after the interest of the branches. I am suffering with a severe cold from exposure on my way home in a snow-storm.

I. N. ROBERTS.

BRECKENRIDGE, Missouri, December 16, 1904.

Dear Herald: This is my first attempt to write to the HERALD but I thought I would write a few lines as the Saints never hear from Breckenridge. There are just seven Saints living here. We are beginning to believe that all the ministers have forgotten us, as we have had no preaching here for some time. Bro. Summerfield organized a Religio home class here the first of the year.

I read in the HERALD of places where the "outsiders" call the Saints "Mormons." They called us "Mormons" for awhile but now they call us Latter Day Saints. I read a piece to the young people when at school, the subject being, "The difference between the Reorganized Church, and the church in the West." Since then they never call me a Mormon. I think the piece had a good influence on them.

I ask an interest in your prayers that I may ever live faithful, so that I may be able to do a good work for our dear Master.

NEWTON HOLMES.

XENIA, Illinois, December 19, 1904.

Editors Herald: Thinking that a word from this district would be in order I write a few lines for your columns. I have not seen the other missionaries, Sawley and Higdon, for some time, but presume that since Bro. Higdon has recovered they are working as true yoke fellows in the gospel should. As for myself my health is such that I am not doing as much as I would like, but am trying to the best of my ability to speed the gospel plow. I hope the Saints in the different parts of the field will read the church papers, and by prayer and faith in God keep themselves in gospel lines, whether they hear very much preaching or not. That Zion may prosper and her scattered children be gathered home, is my prayer, in Jesus' name.

CHARLES J. SPURLOCK.

COLDWATER, Michigan, December 12, 1904.

Editor Herald: If you will grant me a little space in your columns, I desire to present a few thoughts: I believe I can truthfully say I love this latter-day work, and have confidence in the God of the same, and no doubt there are others who could bear the same testimony. We are told, "By their fruits ye shall know them"; and when looking over the books of the district, I am compelled to ask myself the question, Are there not others like myself, who have failed by their works to show the faith and confidence, that they should, in such a merciful Being? Let us remember it is not a stated amount that we must all reach in order to receive God's blessings, but it is one of his laws that we must comply with, which reaches the rich and poor upon an equality. The question should not be, What have I or others done in the past? but, What can we do for the advancement of the cause we claim to love? and give according as the Lord has blessed us. Now as the old year is drawing to a close, and you see not only the people of the world, but also Saints standing in groups, conversing, saying, What are you going to get your friends for Christmas gifts? should the question be asked, What is the object of this effort? no doubt the answer would be, It is to show our appreciation of what our friends have done and are still doing for us. We have no desire to discourage Christmas giving, but can we afford to give our time and means to please our earthly friends and forget Him who is the greatest of friends, who gave his life a ransom that we might have life and have it more abundantly and promises many rich blessings along our pathway, and who has said, "Ye are my friend if ye do whatsoever I command you"? He has also said, "If ye love me keep my commandments"; now if we fail to do what he has commanded us, can we truthfully say we are his friends, and that we love him? We find in the record two classes spoken of, one class having made their calling and election sure, the other having been lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God.

May the kind Father help us to make a wise choice as to the class with which we want our lot to be cast. I wish to thank the Saints and friends of our district for so kindly and willingly assisting in helping to raise the amount allotted to our district to cancel the college debt, and will say that we were successful in having the total amount subscribed, and have it nearly all paid in. Some have asked the question, "Do you think the amount raised for the college has hindered the Saints paying their tithes and offerings?" I do not believe it has—at least it should not hinder them. I believe it was the same God who said the college debt should be paid, that commanded us to pay our tithes and offerings, and it does not seem to me that he would make any demand of us that would hinder us from complying with any previous command that he has given. Also, after so prosperous year as we have had, and the little amount that the most of us paid in toward the college debt, I would like to know how many of us think this will be a reasonable excuse, in the day of judgment, for not having paid our tithes and offerings.

As my health is poor, I desire an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may regain my health and accomplish some good.

SAMUEL STROH.

JONESPORT, Maine, December 20, 1904.

Editors Herald: The year fast nearing its close finds me farther away from my birthplace and immediate relatives than I have ever been before.

I have been separated from my relatives by two years of uninterrupted labor in this Eastern Mission. It was a complete surprise to me when I was asked by our General Conference last spring to go to Eastern Maine. I had often read of the beautiful scenery of the old "Pine Tree State," but had only wondered if I should ever be permitted to view it. Pens more able than mine have endeavored to describe what must be seen to be thoroughly appreciated. The coast of Maine is the best place to spend a hot summer that I know of.

While I really desired a change for the good of the cause in the Philadelphia District—yet I felt sad in parting with Saints and friends whose pleasant association I had shared for three years. The "sheep" which had been more or less under my care, seemed somewhat loath to give up the old shepherd; until they heard the new shepherd's voice. It had the right ring and came with no uncertain sound, which, together with the prospect of feeding in a new pasture fed no longer by the vigilance of a wifeless shepherd, seemed to fully reconcile everybody to the change. To be brief, the result was that my successor, Elder Walter W. Smith, was given a "royal welcome," and I was given a "royal send off." Doubtless, I shall never forget the parting words of Bro. A. D. Angus as I was about to board the train in leaving Philadelphia, when he said, "Bro. LaRue, you leave Philadelphia with the good will of everybody."

I was quite inexperienced when Bro. W. H. Kelley "risked" sending me there, and I was glad to be able to get away with at least having done no harm. During that three years of time the cause attained a moderate material progress. The branch at Philadelphia stands second to none in the church, financially and spiritually. "We are workers together with God," and the work done there and elsewhere is justly to be credited to all who participate in the same. The cooperation and united effort of preachers and people is essential to the building up of the cause.

I arrived here on May 15, but was unable to hold services at this place until July 10, being prevented by small-pox, which was raging at that time. Thus far I have preached in Maine at Madison, Stonington, Indian River, Beals Island, Head Harbor Island, Jonesport, West Jonesport, Batson Schoolhouse, Cape Schoolhouse, and South Addison. I have met some of the very best of Saints here in this State whose kindness and hospitality I shall ever remember. So far as visible results indicate my work here has been quite unsuccessful, all sowing with no harvest. If the work is to continue in the onward march every Latter Day Saint in Maine should get in line, close ranks, and keep step to the tune of the gospel. I fear some have got tired of the march and have quit for a rest; some are willing to march but are not so particular about keeping in line; some get out of their own place in the ranks and cause confusion; some say, "the march will ultimately end in a glorious victory, but it's no use, I can't keep in line." So they step aside, lose their place, but the army goes on. Yes, and the army of the Lord will continue the march until victory is the reward. We must forget things that we and others have done and reach forth to obtain those things which are promised; and valiantly and courageously press our way forward to the prize.

A good motto for Saints this New Year would be "Keep in line, brother, keep in line." Brother, if you find yourself out of line get back into it just as quick as you can. By invitation of the superintendent of schools of this town, the Reverend T. B. Hatt of the Congregational Church and myself addressed a mass-meeting of the citizens and public schools held in the opera-house, December 4, in the interest of morality and education. The meeting was well attended and a good feeling prevailed.

I have ever taken much comfort in the words of this old hymn:

"Brightly gleams our Father's mercy
From his lighthouse evermore,
But to us he gives the keeping,
Of the lights along the shore.

"Dark the night of sin has settled,
Loud the angry billows roar,
Eager eyes are watching, longing,
For the lights along the shore.

"Trim your feeble lamp, my brother,
Some poor sailor, tempest-tossed,
Trying now to make the harbor,
In the darkness, may be lost."

We are called to be lights in the world and though a light be small and humble, yet its rays will pierce the greatest darkness. We should keep the lamp clean, trimmed, and burning. We may never realize of what benefit our little light has been. The light of our character and the rays of our influence are being felt and seen every day. How careful should we ever be that the world may see those "good works" by which they will be led to glorify our Father which is in heaven.

W. E. LARUE.

Editors Herald: I was very sorry to think there was talk of closing Graceland on account of lack of funds to keep it running, and I want to do all I can to help pay off the debt. I am a widow and am not in a condition to do as much as I would like, but am willing to do all I am able, even if I do have to sacrifice to help roll on the church institutions. I feel we are in need of the college to educate the young, where they can be under the influence of the church. I have no children of my own to send but as we are all interested in one another we should try to help each other. I have grandchildren and I hope some of them may be able to attend Graceland some day. I am proud to think we have schools for our children and a home for the aged; and I wish we had a home for the poor orphans, so that they would not have to be cast out in the world among strangers, where perhaps they will never have the privilege of hearing the true gospel. I hope some day to see such an institution.

My prayer is that Graceland may be free from all debt before another conference. If all would put forth an effort, and throw in their mite as every true Latter Day Saint ought, the debt would be canceled and some left to help pay the running expenses. It would only take a very little from each one. May Graceland for ever stand and prosper, is the wish of your sister in the faith.

MRS. RHODA L. GOREHAM.

Dear Herald: I have been a member of the church ever since I was nineteen, and have received many blessings. I was once afflicted with rheumatism, confined to my bed, and could not move hand or foot. I was administered to and healed. At another time I had a sore throat, so bad that I could not eat or drink for two days and a half. Bro. H. Hansen administered to me, and while his hands were on my head I felt the swelling begin to go down. He left shortly after administering to me, and before he was out of sight of the house I was well. I have seen others blessed; and I have felt God's influence when I have been in trial. Some trials seem very hard, yet God will make them clear if we remain faithful to our covenants.

It makes me sad to see young people who have been baptized careless and indifferent, and to think that after they have once engaged in the work of God, they can yield to the persuasions of those who lead them to dance, play cards, etc. What is the matter? Have they forsaken God after all his kindness to them? I hope not.

Your sister,
RACHEL CURRIE.

LEBANON, Oregon, December 18, 1904.

Dear Herald: I thought when Bro. Holt left us that I would write you then as we all felt so very lonely; and to add to our loneliness a few days later my two brothers and Bro. Hudson took their departure for Eastern Oregon (Pineville) and will probably be gone all winter. I do wish we could have an organized branch of the church here, but it seems that the people are too prejudiced in this part to even let us have a church-house to preach in. However, Bro. Holt preached a sermon or two at my father's house, and as a result baptized three promising young souls.

Bro. Holt is a lively worker, and a good, common-sense worker, too. Still his eyesight gives him not a little trouble. However, he willingly does all he can, and I often think our ministers must sacrifice so much, and put in a lifetime for the salvation of mankind, leaving home and loved ones for so long, and how can we sit with folded hands, and idly say our circumstances are such that we can not work, so we just simply resign in order that we may devote our time more wholly to this world's affairs. Are we excusable? My conscience answers, No! He that knoweth his Master's will and doeth it not shall be beaten with many stripes. Others' faithfulness will not carry us to heaven. We all have a cross to bear, a sacrifice to make, and a work to do. God is no respecter of persons. He takes all of our circumstances and opportunities into consideration, and does not require impossibilities of any, neither will he ever punish us for that we do not know, but will only hold us responsible for that we have known and willfully neglected. If we always sailed on flowery beds of ease, and never tasted sorrow, we could never know what poor, dependent creatures we are, nor how to praise God from whom all blessings come. Hence we see that misfortune does not always come to injure. Therefore let us strive to be patient in our warfare, that we may be joyous in our triumph. May the vain things of this world never move us, and may we, like Paul, count not our lives dear unto ourselves, so that we may finish our course, and know our own hands have administered to our own necessities, and have helped to support the weak, ever remembering the words of our Lord Jesus, that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

My greatest desire is that I may yet be of service to my Master. I know that he has given me strength and means to help others in the past, and I feel so grateful to know that I have been worthy of being gratified in this one greatest desire of my heart, and stand willing to make any sacrifice the Lord may see fit for me to make that would be of service to his great cause of Christianity.

With many good wishes to all the Saints or any of our dear old neighbors whose eyes may chance to peruse these lines, we remain,

Sincerely yours,

LINA MORRIS HALE.

RICHARDS, Missouri.

Dear Herald: I enjoy the correspondence very much, and some other things in the HERALD are interesting to me. "Freely ye have received, freely give." When I read this quotation I feel somewhat condemned. I have received so much pleasure by reading the letters in the HERALD, and have given nothing in return. I feel as if I had not used my one talent that God has given me, but had rolled it in a napkin and laid it away.

This restored gospel is not new to me, as I became acquainted with it when a little child. Some two or three years before the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum, two traveling elders came through Northern Illinois and stopped over night with my people, who were living at what is now called Amboy. They had never heard of this gospel before. My grandmother was sick with a fever. She had been a member of the Methodist Church for twenty-five years. The elders talked with her, explaining their belief in regard to healing the sick, and she promised them if she was healed through the laying on of hands she would believe and join the church. They administered to her and she got up and helped to get supper, and from that on several joined the church.

At the time of the Reorganization I was acquainted with many of the Saints, but the names now are mostly new to me as I have always been isolated from a branch of the church. When we left Northwestern Iowa four years ago I thought it might be that I would find a home among the Saints. We have been in Vernon County, Missouri, nearly three years and there are branches of the church in every direction only a few miles away, but I have only met three members of the church. We are not settled here, or I would try and find them out. I attended the Cumberland Presbyterian Church to-day. The minister is a learned and able speaker. His subject was about Melchisedec. He said many good things, but of course he does not think we have any priesthood now, only as Christ is our great high priest. We have a Christian Church just across the road, and I sometimes go there; and one thing I am well pleased with in both churches, I never hear a word about any other church. They preach their own belief and let others alone, at least when I am there.

I am trying to let my light shine by right living as best I can and in giving out the HERALDS, and saying a word now and then when and where it is wise to do so.

I could use tracts if I could get them. There were a couple of Utah elders making house to house calls last spring but they did not want anything to do with me, nor I with them. They said the Reorganization lied about them.

Yours in the one faith,

MRS. W. B. BROWN.

FAIRLAND, Indian Territory, December 17, 1904.

Editors Herald: I am at present holding a meeting at this point with fair congregations and some interest. I have spent the last six weeks in this territory, and enjoyed myself very well, and have preached at several different points, assisted by Bro. Riley. We held forth near Chelsea in a Campbellite stronghold, but very few of that sect came out.

On our way to this point we called at Bro. James', who keeps one of the leading hotels at Venita. We were made welcome, took dinner with them, and had a very pleasant visit for two hours with the family, and on parting and shaking hands we felt better in spirit, in purse, and stomach. With a "God bless you," we started on our way of twenty-five miles more behind "Gospel Charley," and landed here safe without upsetting.

H. SPARLING.

TACOMA, Washington, December 25, 1904.

Editors Herald: At last writing I was at Lebanon, Oregon, where I baptized three; from there I returned to Portland, met with the Saints there Sunday, then went to Gurnesey where I held a series of meetings that were fairly well attended, after which I returned to Portland where I met Bro. Griffiths, just as I was about to leave for Hood River and points in Eastern Oregon, who desired me to go to Castle Rock, Washington, and help what I could in a debate that Bro. O. B. Thomas was having with a First-day Adventist there. I was pleased to meet with the Saints again of that place, after a separation of some five or six years.

The fight was on when I arrived, and it called vividly to my mind Elder Garmely's attack on us, when Bro. Chase and the writer were planting the work there. He and his people (the Disciples) surely thought his abuse would be the end of what he was pleased to call "the Mormon delusion," but a real nice little meeting-house—all paid for—and a branch of some forty members is in evidence to the contrary. Bro. Thomas contended manfully for the cause, and I believe the faith of God's children was not injured. They have passed through some trying ordeals, but some are in the work to remain until the appearing of our Master. The wheat is slowly but surely being gathered in.

From there I was called to Tacoma to unite in marriage Gurney Van Eaton and Miss Vivian King. Neither are members of the church but are fine young people, destined, we hope, sometime to be with us. After the wedding I preached a Thanksgiving sermon for the Saints in their new church.

From there I went to Seattle. I there met some Saints of former days: Bro. Clark, at whose house Bro. Chase and the writer stayed before he united with us, also Bro. Davis' family, who are still helping to move forward the cause. The branch numbers about the same as it did when Bro. Chase and I organized it some eight years ago.

I was much pleased with my visit there. At the close of our last meeting as the Saints gathered around, the warm grasp of the hand and words of appreciation of what had been said, with a desire that I might soon return, made one think of ten or fifteen years ago when such was the rule; but the Master said many would grow cold just before his return, and so it is.

From there I went to Roslyn to meet a noble little band of Saints whom I found much cast down and grieved over the loss of some of their members who had moved away, I held meetings there, and did all I could to encourage them. I am in hopes brighter days are in store for them. This is a time when strong minds and willing hearts are needed in this work, for the camps in many places are burning dimly.

Bidding the Saints adieu there, I visited Bro. Hanson's and Sr. Murry's at Elmsburg. Left there in a blinding snow-storm, arriving here during a hard rain-storm, which prevented meeting first night.

It is perhaps needless to say, that in all these places I have been very kindly treated and my wants anticipated and supplied. Thanks to all.

I go from here to Castle Rock, then on to Portland, and from there I think into Eastern Oregon, and possibly Southern Oregon. My field address is still Bandon, Oregon.

BEGGS, Indian Territory, December 22, 1904.

Editors Herald: The people here are very prejudiced. They want no Mormon doctrine. Some are very good people, but are blind. They will not read our books or church papers.

I love this latter-day work, I know it is of God. I never could stand the trials and temptations of life if it were not. I am going to live my religion no matter what comes before me.

We have been tempted this summer by the evil one. People came to me and tried to get me to leave the church and join the Methodists. I said, "No, I am a Latter Day Saint; and if I can't be one, I'll not be anything." Three of my children are also members of the church. On the twenty-seventh day of September, my dear husband was called home. Dear brothers and sisters, how sad I do feel that I could not be present at his bedside. I had gone on a visit to my sister's, and my dear little babe was taken very sick and I could not get home. When I returned home he had been gone one week and one day. It was the saddest thing I ever knew. Oh, how my heart does ache. But I know he is with his Savior, and at rest. He was a good husband, and a loving father. What a blessed thought that we shall know each other there! Brothers and sisters, pray for us that we may ever be found faithful to the end.

Your sister in the one faith,

Discussion at Castalia, South Dakota.

Editors Herald: E. F. Robertson and the writer arrived here the 19th, from Castalia, South Dakota, a little country village about sixty-five miles from this place, where Bro. Robertson met a Mr. S. A. Phillips, in a five-night discussion, the challenge being made by Mr. Phillips.

The questions discussed were, The organization and spiritual endowment of the church; and the claims of the Book of Mormon. On the first proposition, the claim was made that the church was not set up and not in existence in fact until Pentecost; Christ had not been crowned, hence was not a King until after the ascension; in reply Bro. R. read Matthew 2: 1, 2; John 1: 49; John 18: 37; and Zechariah 9: 9, to show that Jesus was a King before his ascension.

He read Luke 16: 16 to show that a kingdom existed prior to Pentecost.

The claim was made that the twelve apostles were needed that the world might have their testimony. Paul was added to the number because God wanted a man of education. A necessary qualification of an apostle was to have seen Jesus Christ. In reply Bro. R. stated, if that was God's purpose the world should have the testimony of twelve apostles; that purpose was not accomplished, for the Bible contains the written testimony of only four of the original twelve. 1 Thessalonians 2: 6 mentions Timotheus as an apostle, who was not converted until 53 A. D., and was then but a young man. Mr. P. was requested to show that Timotheus had seen Jesus Christ, or abandon his position.

The claim was made that Christ was the foundation of the church, and also its head. This leads to the conclusion that either the foundation was on the top, or the church was standing on its head. Mr. P. stated that Bro. R. was a good dodger and compared him with a weasel. Bro. R. replied he would not be chased around the vinegar jug, however.

He was continually demanding a sign, and offered a job of restoring sight to the blind. He was informed that another individual was with Jesus on a pinnacle of the temple and offered him a job also, and was advised to keep out of such company.

Mr. P. stated that the idea of a called ministry originated in the Roman Church. Exodus 27: 1, 2 and John 15: 16 were referred to by Bro. R., showing that it had its origin with God.

1 Corinthians 13: 8 was read by Mr. P. as evidence that spiritual manifestations should be done away. This was met in the usual way: by showing that that which is in part is to give place unto absolute perfection.

On the second proposition the old story of Sidney Rigdon stealing the Spalding Manuscripts and adding to it some doctrinal features stolen from A. Campbell, was presented as the origin of the Book of Mormon, the old claim was made that the three witnesses denied their testimony under oath, saying it was all a joke. This was met by reading different statements from various histories, locating the death of Joseph Smith at different times and places, and making him the author of revelations after the time of his death, showing the unreliability of ordinary histories when they treat on Mormonism. The dying testimonies of the three witnesses were read from the book unsealed, and the affidavits were demanded wherein their testimony was ever denied. Needless to say, they were not produced.

The purpose of revelation was to bring the gospel to the whole world, said Mr. P., and when Peter opened the door of the kingdom to the household of Cornelius this was accomplished, and no need of any more inspired books. Bro. R. showed that very little if any of the New Testament was then written, and if there was no need of more inspired books after the baptism of Cornelius the New Testament goes down as well as the Book of Mormon. Evidences were furnished from prophecy, archaeology, and current history sustaining the claims of the Book of Mormon. These were not met by Mr. Phillips, but he made a vehement attack on the Doctrine and Covenants, trying to prove thereby that Joseph Smith was a false prophet. Not because of false doctrine, but because he had God interested in trivial things, such as telling Joe how to build a boarding-house. Some sport was made of section 9, Oliver's bosom was to burn. Thought he might have had too much spearhead or onions, or perhaps a flea on his back. In reply it was shown that God instructed Moses particularly as to how long Aaron's garment should be made, thereby proving that he did take interest in trivial things. It was also shown by reference to the Scriptures that Oliver Cowdery was not the only man that experienced burning in his bosom when the Holy Spirit was upon him. (See Luke 24: 32; Psalm 39: 3; Jeremiah 20: 9.) Some who were not of us (as members) expressed themselves that the other party failed to sustain a single point against us. We have reason to believe good was done, and we know friends made to the cause we love so well. May God aid his servants in defense of his glorious cause, and may the honest in heart be gathered from among the people of the world.

Yours in the battle for the right,

ELI HAYER.

AVON, South Dakota, December 22, 1904.

From Over the Border.

Editors Herald: To-night finds me at a new place; just arrived this evening, after a tedious ride of one hundred and eighty-five miles from a place called Disley, where I have labored for the past two weeks, and baptized one in a wagon-box, for the want of something better. The circumstances of my visit here at Halbrite are something like this: A few weeks ago I was preaching in the country near Weyburn. A family attended my services by the name of Young who invited me to their home. Mr. Young is a rancher. I complied with their invitation and received from them information respecting the residence of some Latter Day Saints by the name of Comstock in this locality. I left Weyburn and went away. But I addressed a letter to Mr. Comstock inquiring if he was a Latter Day Saint, and if he would appreciate a call from a Latter Day Saint elder. I received an affirmative answer stating that he would meet me at the station if previously notified.

Having finished to my satisfaction my work at Disley I decided to come and put the place and people to the test, having a strong suspicion that they were Brighamites. They live about two miles from town. The train made destination at nightfall, and as soon as time and few baggage arrangements would let us I walked to their place, reaching it after dark. The sun sets here some minutes after four o'clock now. Well, I entered to find Mr. Comstock away for a time, but his wife said he would soon return. I asked them if they recollected the receipt of a letter from one Knisley a few weeks ago, inquiring if they were Latter Day Saints. She quickly returned "Yes," and when I assured her that I was the writer, she grasped my hand and asked me to take off my things, with a smile and a mien that made me feel welcome. Still I suspected their being Mormons. Presently I was quite relieved by finding an Ensign, then a Hope. I ventured to ask, "Who baptized you?" "Elder J. C. Foss." This dispelled the last vestige of anxiety, and I rejoined, "I know Elder Foss, having associated and slept with him in Toronto." Two of them are members, Mrs. Comstock and her husband's father. The latter arrived this evening; he has a ranch a few miles distant among the hills and wolves. I find in him an old frontiersman, a pensioner, a veteran, wounded before the army of the invincible Stonewall Jackson.

This creates another opportunity for an opening. Whatever the result will be remains hidden yet, but some one will either have to receive or reject.

On my way here I fell in with a young Catholic missionary who was enroute to Winnipeg to be created a priest. I said, "You will be in time to hear Father Drummond." Said dignitary is delivering a series of lectures on the immaculate conception of Mary. Pity if somebody did not understand that Mary was conceived without sin! I fell in also with an old Lutheran homespun preacher who so appreciated my attention that he took down my name and address, discounted infant baptism, hoped to meet me again. I found he had a half-fare permit from the Central Pacific Railway and yet was not making an exclusive business of preaching; a thing they have denied us.

It became necessary for me to make connection at a place called Moose Jaw. Think they found a moose jaw there some time. Not often I pay attention to the passengers, but I did so on a very slow passage from the latter place. A party said, "What's your denomination?" "I'm a Latter Day Saint." "Let's see, that's something like the Catholics?" "Perhaps, in a measure, in that many peculiar tenets of our religion are embodied in Catholicism in some form. They have their pope, we have our president; they have their purgatory, we have our intermediate state; they have their apostolate, we have our twelve apostles; they claim the Bible alone is insufficient, so do we. Only they claim the deficiency is supplied by tradition while we claim that it is made up by new revelation, that the unwritten word is unsafe, untrustworthy. The character of our president, our intermediate state, etc., is not identical with those equivalents I point out in their system; but I mean this, that the relation is nearer than between those churches who incorporate those tenets in no form."

"But," continued my inquirer, "if a revelation is to be given now to supply the deficiency you speak of, how is it to be given, and who is it to be given through?" "The same as in Bible times, through whomsoever God may select to reveal himself. It is no harder now for him to reveal himself or to find a servant to speak through than in former times, provided people to-day are as faithful as they were back there." "But those things are done away; we don't see such things now." "That is assuming the very point at issue, the very point to be proved. I may assume diametrically the contrary and in the absence of evidence which may be propounded by either of us in support of his assumption, my assumption is as good as yours. We admit the miraculous ceased but ascribe it as a consequence of the cessation of righteousness on the earth."

ALVIN KNISLEY.

HALBRITE, Assiniboia, December 11, 1904.

Independence Items.

The papers tell us of religious revivals throughout this part of the country, and in Kansas City, Reverend Calhoun is distributing ten thousand song-books to be used in the revival there.

The churches here are varying the usual program this year; the "Christians" will not have a tree, but the children will bring presents for the poor of the city, and the Baptists will have a donation party, and each one is expected to bring an apple and a potato, these also to be donated to the poor.

To incorporate Sugar Creek is a subject much talked about, and it has been the hope of Independence people that when the time was ripe this flourishing oil-refining town, distant about two miles northwest of us, and which has sprung up within a few months, would be included as a part of our city, and a "rich source of city revenue would thus be secured." Several of the brethren are employed there, and Bro. Wesley Ballenger has by perseverance and industry built a fine frame block to be used for stores, situated on the main street.

Speaking in regard to occupation for those who have means, they tell us there are many ways in which to invest in lucrative business hereabout, for instance, in coal-mining, farming, foresting, beet raising; and then, too, we are right in the gas and oil belt. Near the Missouri Pacific depot here, they have been drilling for water for an ice-plant, and, on reaching down six hundred and fifty feet, have struck a gas vein which, if utilized, they say would yield sufficient gas to light and heat the city. A few brethren are engaged in farming, while others, taking advantage of the good industrial conditions here, are employed either at house-building, in the stores, or coal- and lumber-yards, or at the foundry and other works, or else they have positions in Kansas City, Sheffield, or Sugar Creek, on the Muddy. The statement is made that there are thousands of people coming to "the central state" to buy lands "because it has the greatest variety of resources of any State in the union, taxes are low, it is a land of schools and churches, splendid cities, good people, and good laws; and because the lands are cheaper than in any of the adjoining States." Variety of crops, a regular rainfall, mild winters, fine range for stock-raising, abundant supplies of wood, coal, timber, and stone; of streams and springs, prairies, valleys, and timbered hills; healthy climate, good railroads and market facilities are all mentioned as matters of great worth to thinking people coming to the land of the big red apple.

To the Saints who come to invest in lands for a good purpose the promise as found in Jacob 2:5, is applicable: "After ye have obtained a hope in Christ, ye shall obtain riches, if ye seek them with the intent to do good, to clothe the naked, feed the hungry, and to administer relief to the sick and the afflicted."

But what we read is not always pleasant either to think about or to see in print, and it is most deplorable to record an item; for instance, concerning a young sister who, while in domestic trouble, threatened to take her life. Or, as in another case where an unfortunate one, educated on lines contrary to the teachings of the Scriptures, young and unwary, is caught in a snare of the adversary and finds herself expelled from the fold.

And what about our gifted sisters leaving their sacred calling behind and accepting like positions outside the true church for a sordid consideration? Whose duty is it to look after the erring is a question demanding our attention. To quote Bro. C. Scott in a late HERALD, "No divine or just law can be broken, and the penalties therefor fail of their execution. Justice is never forgotten, will never fail, can not be evaded or turned aside;" and speaking of the disobedience of children, he says, "Think of this seriously: . . . those who would point out the dangers that beset you are your friends."

"Open the door of your heart my friend,
Heedless of class or creed,
When you hear the cry of a brother's voice,
The sob of a child in need."

In the book called The Simple Life we read "Fidelity in small things is at the base of every great achievement."

But we must return to items. The Daughters of Zion held their regular session on the third Wednesday in the north room, a very cozy room which has been repainted and furnished for the kindergarten especially. Eleven sisters were present,—a very small proportion compared to the large number of young mothers here who would do well to be interested in such subjects as "Home training."

In all the auxiliaries there appear to be good opportunities presented for extending a helping hand in charitable work, and we read in the Doctrine and Covenants, "No one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity."

The mid-week prayer-meetings on the 14th and 21st were both seasons of peace and comfort because of the presence of the Spirit. The labors of the ministry, of the president of the stake, of the sisters in their faithful service, also all who were engaged in the work for the Master, were commended. Bro. Kemp also spoke of the good accruing from criticism, it being one of the means, he said, for testing that which is genuine.

Last Sunday's prayer-meeting was largely attended and was also spiritual and refreshing to the Saints as was also the church service in the morning.

Bro. A. H. Parsons preached in the evening on the necessity of developing a pure character.

Bro. Garrett in the morning discoursed on the words, "Let your moderation be known unto all men." He spoke of the necessity of moderation in our business and social relations, in the cares of life; and in speaking of amusements he mentioned some of those which are harmless and profitable. In church-work, our moderation should be known in our testimonies, also in the service of song, in which all should engage, not to be seen or heard of men, but that it might be made a part of the worship of the Lord according to Doctrine and Covenants 119:6.

The speaker believed the preacher should use moderation. "There is a time to quit," said he, "as there are many services on the Lord's day, and it was designed as a day of comfort and of rest." He prefaced these remarks by enjoining a consistent walk and conversation, that no reproach might be brought upon the name of Jesus Christ. By starving our spiritual natures, we unfit ourselves for the association of those who have made it the study and sacrifice of their lives to understand spiritual things, and we must acknowledge that we do not occupy the position spiritually that we ought, considering the designs of our heavenly Father toward his people. It was a service from which the Saints went to their homes edified and rejoicing in the work of the Lord.

Extracts from Letters.

Str. Lucy Williams, Looking Glass, Oregon, incloses one dollar, and writes: "Please send Autumn Leaves to W. M. Keeth, National Soldiers' Home, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. He is not a member of the church, but is waiting the opportunity to become one. He would be glad to see any Saints who may live near Milwaukee, and would be glad to know if there is a church near, where he could attend meetings and be baptized."

Elder H. A. McCoy, Audubon, Minnesota: "I go to Minneapolis, Monday, to sit on an elders' court. Bro. Willey goes back to Cormorant where he has done most of his work this summer and fall, and where the best interest has been manifested. Ten have been baptized there, and more are ready. People here are most all Scandinavian, and to reach them one should be able to talk their language, and none of the present missionary force can do that. We sincerely hope this will be remedied at the next conference."

Pastoral.

To Whom it May Concern: At the Kirtland Conference I was assigned to Southern Iowa and Northern Missouri, as a field of labor. However, others have kindly invited me to occupy whenever and wherever I saw fit in their respective missions.

At the best I can do but little, and have made an extra effort to do all that I could before I should be confined at home by the winter. From this time till the convening of the General Conference, I shall probably be able to do little or nothing outside of Lamoni. Those residing at Lamoni, or near by, and desiring patriarchal blessings at my hands can see me and provision will be made for them, if at all practicable. Sr. Annie Allen, who works in the State Bank, does my stenographic work for me, at Lamoni, as a rule, and she is only available outside of bank hours, that is, before 9 a. m. and after 5 p. m., and on Sundays. Sr. Allen is entitled to credit for the cheerful and able manner in which she does her work, and her reports are very correct.

Dear Saints, live near to God, for then only are you safe. Apply for blessings when you feel that you need them, and have fully made up your minds to do God's will as soon as you know what that will is. Do not permit anything which men or devils can do to shake your confidence in the restored gospel, for it is true. Do not be deceived, much less seek to deceive. The gospel is truth, and truth is light. "God doth not walk in crooked paths; neither doth he turn to the right hand nor to the left; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; therefore his paths are straight and his course is one eternal round."—Doctrine and Covenants 2: 1.

At the coming conference, I expect to give blessings at my residence, if the Lord will. Judging the future by the past, the patriarchs will have much more than they can do at that time. If those who wish to secure blessings, at my hands, will send in their applications early, so that I can make a list of them in the order in which I receive them, and begin work as soon as any of them are present, it will be better for me, and, possibly, for them. If practicable, I desire to begin my work as soon as the first convention meets. My leading reasons for this request are:

First, to avoid a rush. I do not want to give more than three or four blessings per day.

Second, to economize time by beginning my work as early as possible.

Third, to make it safer and more pleasant for those who expect to apply to me for blessings.

I have a good, safe stenographer engaged for the conference, and can, therefore, insure good work in that department. As for the patriarch, I shall not recommend him, nor make any promises in his behalf. Those who apply must run their own chances, and I would advise them to "have faith in God," and to apply to the human instrumentality in whom they have proper confidence.

Your servant in the Lord Jesus,
J. R. LAMBERT.

CLERGY CREDENTIALS 1905, SOUTHEASTERN ASSOCIATION.

Ministers interested will note that the Southeastern Passenger Association, covering territory south of the Potomac and east of the Mississippi River, has established a Clergy Bureau, from which credentials covering all lines operating in said territory are issued, instead of issues by individual lines as heretofore. This bureau has been supplied with a copy of the General Conference Minutes of 1904, corrected to date, including lists of general church officers and ministers in charge. The same general rules governing our dealings with other associations will be observed. In effect, all general appointees are indorsed; all local appointees are referred to their respective missionaries in charge for indorsement. Address Joseph Richardson, Chairman, Southeastern Clergy Bureau, Room 729 Equitable Building, Atlanta, Georgia.

Mr. Josef Brunner, who has devoted the later years of his life to roaming the woods of Montana in his nature-study pursuits, makes a bitter attack on both the red and gray squirrel in the January Country Life in America. It is backed by his half-century experience and first-hand observation both here and in the great forest tracts of Germany.

Mr. Brunner writes:—

"I wish to take away for all time the character of the squirrel. He is a thief and a murderer. Admired by ignorant city people and by journalists, he devotes his life to eating the eggs and killing the young of harmless and useful birds which, if permitted to live and increase, would protect the forests from harmful insects. By killing these birds, the squirrel takes rank as a forest destroyer. Moreover, the red squirrel is not the only sinner. In my opinion, the gray is almost, if not quite, as bad.

I have killed many squirrels caught in the act of eating eggs of young birds. Any bird that selects a nesting-place which is also adapted to the use of squirrels is almost certain to be ejected. When a forest has been destroyed by fires, lumbermen, or insects, it is almost impossible for natural reforesting to take place if squirrels are abundant in an adjoining tract, because they eat the seeds. Fifty seeds per head each day would be a low estimate. Yet even this would make 18,250 in a year. And seeds are not the only thing. In winter, the ground is often strewn with twigs which have been stripped of buds by squirrels. The trees attacked are generally situated at the border of a dense forest and would, if left alone, yield the greatest seed crop. A single squirrel thus destroys in one day thousands of seeds in the germ. In Montana I have seen the grays rob birds' nests.

To the average person who regards the spectacle of the race-track with considerable equanimity will come as surprises some facts which David Graham Phillips marshals in an article in the January Cosmopolitan: "There is not a horse that is the better for any purpose but short-speed spurts because of the race-tracks; there is not a penitentiary anywhere that is not the fuller by from thirty to seventy per cent because of race-tracks and pool-rooms. There is not a man anywhere who owes or attributes any part of that in him which is honorable or reputable to racing."

The January McClure's contains a short story by Charles Fleming Embree, sad, but so true that it falls outside the realm of sarcasm. It tells what a mockery was "The liberty of Florantino," a poor little Cuban lad who couldn't find equality or fraternity in our "free" country.

In an Indiana town, the lonely, dark-skinned child goes to public school, brimming over with hope and loyalty—only to be run out with cries of "nigger" by brutal children, egged on by narrow-minded parents.

Next, after learning the carpenter's trade at the State Reform School, he eagerly set to work to earn his living—and found he was not only a "nigger," but an "apprentice and a scab." Wounded in a strike-quarrel, he returns to the Reform School—the only place for him in "this here land o' the free."

In the January World's Work is a curious description of the sounds of battle, written by a correspondent in the far East:

"Only those who lie in the firing-line and hear the constant screech of the shells as they cleave their terrible way through the air above know the true sounds of modern war. The whip-like smack of the bursting shell, the swish of the scattering bullets, are nothing to the mocking screech of these damned messengers of death as they pursue each other, as if in competition to complete the awful object of their hideous mission. The whole welkin is discordant with their tumult; you feel the rush of misplaced air, splinters sing in your ears, the earth is in constant tremble with the violence of the discharge; you feel it pulsate against your cheek pressed to the moist mud of the parapet, and then a bullet saps the life-blood of the comrade whose elbow has touched yours day and night for forty hours. There is a limit to human endurance in these straits."

Six Sayings to Remember.

Out of a large number of quotations selected by its readers the Woman's Home Companion for January prints the following as the six most helpful mottoes for the new year. They are worth remembering:

"There is something better than making a living; making a life."

"Our success in life depends upon our will to do."

"It is never too late to be what you might have been."

"Great principles are in small actions. If we fail in our present circumstances to live nobly, we need not imagine we should have done better on a grander scale. Develop great character in simple duties and in inconspicuous trials."

"To be of good cheer in case of disappointment; exercise greater charity toward the erring, and make more allowance for the opinions of people whose views differ from mine; to smile more and frown less."

"To be honest; to be kind; to earn a little, and to spend a little less; to make upon the whole a family happier for his presence; to renounce, when that shall be necessary, and not be embittered; to keep a few friends, and these without capitulation; above all, on the same grim condition, to keep friends with himself—here is a task for all that a man has of fortitude and delicacy."

Liberty of the Press Unknown in Russia.

Liberty of the press is unknown in Russia. Nor are the burning topics of the day ever dealt with by the journals. Current events of the most intense interest are passed over in silence. Americans may perhaps realize what this means by imagining if they can how they would feel if no newspaper were allowed to publish a true and complete statement of the ravages caused by a complete failure of the crops in five States of the Union where the population was dying of hunger; and if every journal were forbidden to criticize the President, Vice-president, the Secretary of State, the Postmaster-general, and every prominent official. But even the idea which Americans would then form of the condition of the Russian press would be inadequate. Take an instance. In 1901, there was a partial famine. People endured harrowing sufferings, children starved before the eyes of their parents, mothers died leaving helpless children dying, too, yet the press scarcely mentioned the famine. Sometimes, indeed, for weeks it never once alluded to it. Hard-hearted indifference, it might seem to a foreigner; in truth, it was only implicit obedience to the authorities.

And even the most obedient papers may be stopped. The Vyatskaya Gazeta, for example, was read in proofs and approved by the censor before being published. One day, it occurred to the governor to allow the paper to appear but to hinder the people from reading it. Therefore forty-three police inspectors, three hundred and six rural policemen, and eleven hundred and ninety-six police watchmen were dispatched to the huts of the peasants to seek for all numbers of the journal for this year and former years! In a few days he quashed his order. Respect for law is not fostered by caprices of the state.—From "The dawn of the new era in Russia," by E. J. Dillon, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for January.

The Feeding of School Children in England.

The whole matter, therefore, under present conditions, centers around the question of school feeding as part of the school work. I can testify to the wonderful change in the physique of the children—1,200 in number—in the day industrial schools in Liverpool. In swimming competitions they have beaten every school in the city time and again, while in cricket, football, and other outdoor games they have been most successful. They all belong to the lowest strata of society and all live in slumdom. Fed three times a day by the late school board and now by the Liverpool city council, they manifest the benefit of good food regularly supplied.

Concerning the Manchester schools of the same type, it was stated by a witness that of the children who were physically unable to go through a course of drill on entry, only two per cent remained unfit after a few weeks' feeding. It was also declared that one could easily pick out the industrial schoolboy in the ordinary school after his discharge.

The remarkable feature about the Liverpool children is that, despite the fact that they return at 6 p. m. to their wretched homes, they all escaped being afflicted by recent epidemics of zymotic diseases, which was not always the case with other members of the family who were attending ordinary schools and were not fed. To me it is incredible that these children are made strong and healthy, while the girls in a London school for want of food are unable, to the tune of eighty per cent, to take part in a new scheme of drill, which had, perforce, to be abandoned. Ample evidence was produced by heads of schools that the mental powers of the children were enfeebled by want of food; and the whole situation was summed up by Sir Lauder Brunton when he said, in answer to an economic objection, that "there is no more danger in feeding children physically than there is in feeding them mentally." A great evil has to be met and at once, pending the day when royal commissions and departmental committees are formed to inquire into the bed-rock causes of these evils, and not their results. No uniform method of procedure is suggested in the report; but each local authority, once the question is taken up in earnest, will probably work on lines suited to its locality, taking care to avoid demoralization as much as possible.—By Thomas Burke in the January-March Forum.

I Know Quit-to-Bac Will Cure. It is a God-Given Remedy

So says Bro. I. M. Dungan of Woodbine, Iowa. Writing July 3, 1904, says: "After having used tobacco for 30 years I feel that I am thoroughly cured of the habit by the use of your 'Quit-to-bac.' I commenced using 'Quit-to-bac' March 8, 1901, and used two and one half boxes, and have had no desire for the past two months, my health is better every way and I feel like a new man. I feel that I can not speak too highly of the merits of 'Quit-to-bac,' for I believe 'Quit-to-bac' to be a God-given remedy, that it will cure one of the most filthy and useless habits Satan ever invented; therefore I unqualifiedly recommend it to all addicted to the use of tobacco in any form, and will cheerfully answer inquiries from any one as to my case—how I treated myself, etc., if a stamp is inclosed. You are at liberty to use this recommendation as seems best to you. . . . I close with a heartfelt 'God bless you.'" MAN is much like a silkworm. He is a spinner and weaver by nature. A robe of righteousness is wrought out for him, but he will not have it; he will spin for himself, and, like the silkworm, he spins and spins and he only spins himself a shroud. All the righteousness that a sinner can make will only be a shroud in which to wrap up his own soul.—Spurgeon.

TRUE service of the public is not mere office seeking or office holding, for either of them may go with the poorest kind of service and with constant thought of private gain or personal ambition. It is a striving to promote the interests of the great body of the people; a seeking of the general welfare; an effort to make the lives of all sweeter, purer, nobler; it is service of the public and for the public.—Justice Brewer.

A CONSISTENT PLEDGE—JOSEPH SMITH AT AMBOY, ILLINOIS, APRIL, 1860.

"I pledge myself to promulgate no doctrine that shall not be approved by you, or the code of good morals."

This was a part of the remarks made by President Joseph Smith, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, at the conference of that church held at Amboy, Illinois, April 6, 1860.

Some of the writers of the Utah Mormon church have made capital of this pledge made by the son of the Prophet, Joseph Smith, the first president of the church organized April 6, 1830, and use it in an attempt to disparage the work which the son has done in connection with his associates in the church over which he presides. Many of the elders of the Utah church true to the dogma of their teaching to "follow their file leader," have echoed what the writers have written for their direction in argument. Both writers and the elders who have followed them have been guilty of gross forgetfulness and misstatement with regard to the pledge referred to. Neither writers, nor elders in their unfortunate zeal to injure the Reorganized Church and defend their own organization, have given other portions of the same speech with a direct view to which the one they misinterpret was made.

For instance the son of the Prophet distinctly affirmed before that conference that he came to them at the dictation of a power not his own; that he did not come to be dictated to by any man, or set of men; and that if the spirit which prompted his coming prompted his reception he would be with them. Then follows the pledge out of which the writers and elders referred to have attempted to make such a mountainous objection.

In order to understand the pledge and determine its value, it must be remembered that the greater number of the men composing that conference at Amboy, had been members of the church under the presidency of Joseph and Hyrum Smith at the time they were slain; the remaining few being converts to the faith under the preaching of those who held the priesthood and were officers in the church called and ordained under the authority of the prophet Joseph, either by himself or at his direction. They were assembled to do business under the law which directs that elders of the church shall meet from time to time to transact such business as may be necessary. They had openly declared against the rule of "false and corrupt doctrine," and had been specially directed by repeated revelation from the spirit of truth to take the revelations contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as the law to govern them in the principles of faith and practice in the conduct of the officers of the church to which they had given their adherence. He who would have adventured among them as a proposed leader upon his own motion and human will, must needs have been a bold man, in the face of conditions so replete with the presence of the Holy Spirit, "the fear and admonition of the Lord."

All this the young man knew. He had been himself directed to refuse credence to the dogmas and rule against which the body assembled at Amboy had in previous meetings solemnly declared. He had himself openly and repeatedly disavowed confidence or belief in the dogmas and practice of plural marriage and the adjunct teaching apparently growing out of them. It was both right and proper for the son of the Prophet to acknowledge the stand these associates of his father had taken in the effort to oppose the error and reclaim the erring, to save the good in "Mormonism" and let the evil go.

The spirit by which the son of the Prophet was sent to the people assembling at that conference was not and could not be of anti-Christ. It was the Spirit which beareth witness to the truth. If the spirit which directed him to go to them and the one which would direct them to receive him in Jesus' name were one and the same, it was the same which had borne testimony both to him and to them as to what they should do.

These men of Utah who object to that pledge overlook the following facts:

1. That the son of the Prophet was directed to come to them and did not come at his own dictation.
2. That he was not to be at the dictation of any man or set of men.
3. That if the same spirit which directed him to come directed them to receive him, he would be one with them.

These same Utah writers and elders forget and grossly misstate and misrepresent the pledge to which they raise objection.

The Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants had been accepted by the body assembled as being the standards of evidence, faith and doctrine, and religious practice. This the young man knew. He was not well learned in these several books, but had sufficient faith in the beliefs and teachings of his father to take the books named as the standards in common with his brethren. If there is anything extraordinary in the attitude of the son of the Prophet in making the pledge he did it is in the fact of sublime reliance on the religion of his prophet father; the unhesitating confidence that complete knowledge of the work and words of that father would justify the son in the step he was taking. These Utah critics fail to see and credit.

Again; the body had already declared faith in God and in his word. If it continued to walk in the light of God's word, and doctrines presented by the son of the Prophet should be in accord with the word they had accepted, they must of necessity approve of such teaching. If the doctrine presented should be subversive of or contrary to the word of God, they were by solemn affirmation in duty bound to refuse approval of it. This the young man knew. As he would not submit to the dictation of man or men, in contravention of the will of God, he would not ask, nor expect of them that they would do what he would not. This is the letter and the spirit of that first clause of the pledge. The man who gave it was commendable for doing it. It was both courageous and safe. And, so long as the spirit of amity between the man and the body should be preserved in the light of that pledge there would be increasing trust and confidence on the part of both.

The principle of common consent is clearly taught in the revelations to the church, and this principle was observed at the Amboy conference referred to and formed one of the reasons why the son of the Prophet made the statement that he did concerning the approval by them of the doctrines he might promulgate, as they could not be bound, nor could a thing of the kind become a law, until it had been presented for acceptance or rejection. This has been set out in evidence in testimony taken before the senatorial committee in which Joseph F. Smith, F. M. Lyman, and others testified to the fact that whatever was presented to the church must be accepted by it or it could not become a rule governing the people. Why should this principle now be called in question in the manner in which it is by finding fault with the son of the Prophet for yielding to it at the start as he would necessarily be obliged to do in his after dealings with the same people?

The other portion of this pledge providing that the doctrine which might be presented by the son of the Prophet as the leader or presiding officer should be approved by the code of good morals, is a strange stumbling-block to be objected to by a class of people who have been trying for years to introduce and enforce new ethics and a new code of morals. Was it not a meritorious act upon the part of this untried man that he should say to the people at the start that he proposed to abide the arbitrament of the code of good morals? What is meant by these terms? Was it to the effect that he was to submit himself to the guidance of this or that party or clique which possibly might be formed in the church for the purpose of forcing a prearranged code of morals contrary to the standard books which had already been accepted to govern as rules of faith, doctrine, and practice? What source may we look to other than to God and his expressed will to ascertain what would be in accordance with the code of good morals? If we accept the general denominational idea, our moral code is the rule of the ten commandments including the application of the laws of Moses as the exponent of those commandments. Does not the philosophy of the teaching of the New Testament Scripture and later revelations clearly provide that this law became inoperative so far as its binding character was concerned at the advent of the Messiah and the declaration of that better code of ethics found in the gospel? Is it not a fact that the teaching of Jesus Christ is the only true code of morals upon which mankind finally will be tried? Is not this the code of good morals to which not only the son of the Prophet but all others should conform? Why then should he not make an appeal as he did and pledge himself by open declaration that he would promulgate no doctrine among them which should not be approved by the code of good morals?

What shortsighted objection is this then that is urged against the son of the Prophet who presents himself to a people striving to serve God and who had emancipated themselves from the rule of wrongdoing which they believed had enslaved others and had announced themselves as having accepted the teachings of Jesus Christ and the revelations of God found in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the revelations which had been given to the church in the lifetime of the Prophet and which had been duly recorded and published abroad to themselves and to the world? What attitude does this objection place these objectors in? Would they have this young man stand before the world in an attitude of claiming that he might disregard the honor and virtue of his coworkers and demand from them an acceptance from him of that which should not meet their approval under the operation of the standard which they had chosen and to which he had assented and which should not be approved by the code of good morals—the teachings of Jesus Christ, the Father, and the Son.

He had stated to them publicly that he came to them by virtue of direction of the Spirit. This could mean but one thing to them, and that is that the Spirit of Christ as both they and he understood had dictated his coming and had prepared his way before him. If this Spirit dictated to them a reception, it was significant that the Spirit had also prepared them for his coming. If since that period of time he has kept the pledge which he then made and is as yet within the purview of that promise, by what rule of right or consistency of thought can this objection be urged?

It is a fact that in these revelations of God to the church through Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit the elders, priests, and other officers of the church were to teach the things which were given of God in the Bible and the Book of Mormon as they were led by the Holy Spirit. And they were also enjoined to teach only when they were authorized to do so by the Spirit. They were further enjoined that no one should be sent out to teach except he should have authority and had been ordained and it was known to the heads of the church that they had such authority. Still further, every one who should be ordained was to be ordained according to the gifts and callings of God unto him, and by the authority of the Holy Ghost in the one ordaining. Is it likely then that the spirit of unity which should prevail within such an association would not be proof against the entrance of false teaching, would suppress a desire upon the part of any one to endeavor to fasten false theories upon the body politic, and would guide the intelligence of the body itself to prevent general disruption by the introduction of that which was false in theory and evil in practice?

It is further in evidence and strangely overlooked by these objectors that upon that same occasion the son of the Prophet did not ask to be received except as by the ordinances of the church, thus placing himself clearly within the lines of the precept and teaching of the law of God. It should also be remembered further that the revelations to the church which pointed out who should be known as the successor to the Prophet and Seer should teach the revelations which already had been given to the church, and this places the code of good morals within the rule of those articles and covenants of the church which the church and its membership clearly enjoined to observe and keep. What is left of the objection referred to? Instead of being an evidence of weakness, it was an evidence of strength, and the principle announced at that time has continued operative and must continue so until He reigns whose right it is to reign and has put all enemies under his feet.

These thoughts are commended to the consideration of those who may have been troubled by the thought that the sons of the Prophet put themselves under subjection to the dictates and will of a body of men who had joined issue with an apparently stronger majority of those who were with the Prophet and Patriarch at their death. They make the appeal now as they did then to the code of good morals—the Bible, the Book of Mormon, the revelations of God already received by the church, and the manifestation and teaching of the Spirit to them as members and officers in the church.

Elder E. H. Durand reports six baptisms and a growing interest in Southern Ohio, where he has been laboring during the past year.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Is it right to expel members from the church, the president putting the vote and asking for the yes, or no, without holding the hand up? If it is not right is it legal? Or is the putting the hand up for adultery only?

The specific manner of taking the vote in expelling persons from the fellowship of the church, does not make the vote illegal. A vote by either yes, or no, by voice, or by lifting the hand for or against, is legal. The usual form in most branches is by the uplifted hand.

EVIDENCE OF JOHN TAYLOR.

While at work in the mission field in Utah during the summer and fall of 1889 we met and visited John Taylor, of Harrisville, Utah, and in conversation with him learned that he was present at a meeting called by Hyrum Smith some three weeks before the murder at Carthage. We secured a statement of what took place at said meeting, which we give below:

HARRISVILLE, Utah, November 19, 1889.

BRO. JOSEPH SMITH, Lamoni, Iowa;

I was baptized in Salt River, Missouri, in 1832, by Elder G. M. Hinkle; was with the church in its time of trouble in Missouri. I moved to Nauvoo in the spring of 1839, with many others. I was a teacher, and labored in that calling. I became acquainted with Joseph Smith, your father; and your Uncle Hyrum in Missouri, and knew them well, both in that State and in Illinois. I served, also, on the police in Nauvoo.

In July, 1843, with others I went to the Pinerias with my family, remained during the next winter and returned to Nauvoo, some month or six weeks before the death of Joseph and Hyrum.

Some three weeks before the murder in Carthage Jail I was present by the invitation and kindness of a brother, at a meeting of the high priests and seventy, held in the seventy's hall, called by President Hyrum Smith, at which meeting Hyrum addressed those present. During his teaching, which was exceedingly moral and instructive, he referred to spiritual wifery, and in strong and emphatic language denounced it and declared that there was no such doctrine believed in or taught by Joseph, himself, or any of the heads of the church; and authorized those present to so state; and to report to him if they heard any one so teaching such doctrine.

I never heard the doctrine of spiritual wifery, celestial marriage, plurality, or polygamy taught by any one during the lifetime of Joseph and Hyrum and during my connection with the church before their death. Had any such thing been taught I was in as good position to have known it as any other officer in the church outside of the leading men themselves.

In my opinion the character of your father has been injured by charges of impropriety of conduct of which he was never guilty.

Pres. Hyrum Smith particularly impressed it as the duty of all, especially the teachers, to put down any such doctrine, and to report to him any one who should be found so teaching.

Your Bro. in Bonds,

JOHN TAYLOR.

Attest: JOSEPH SMITH, R. J. ANTHONY.

The attest in handwriting of Bro. Smith and Anthony. Taylor's writing different, but am not familiar with his handwriting.

The inclosed statement is corroborated by the statement of Thomas A. Lyne, now of Salt Lake City, Utah, who read the inclosed at his residence, in the presence of his wife, December 12th, 1889, and stated the same substantially, date, place, and teaching of Hyrum Smith.

Attest: Joseph Smith, present at the time.

We knew this Thomas A. Lyne at Nauvoo, both before and after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. He was an actor of some celebrity, and was also an officer in the church. Finding that he was in Salt Lake City at the time of our work there, we visited him, and in conversation with him learned that he had attended a meeting in the Seventies' Hall at about the same time as the one referred to in the statement of John Taylor preceding this. It was with some surprise therefore that upon visiting Bro. Taylor we found their testimonies to agree. After we had secured the statement from Bro. Taylor we took it to this Thomas A. Lyne for his reading and inspection; and while he did not know Bro. Taylor at the time the meeting occurred, he was satisfied that the occasion referred to was the same as the one at which he had been present, and his memory agreed with that of Bro. John Taylor as to the substance of President Hyrum Smith's remarks.

It is true that John Taylor and Thomas A. Lyne are dead; so also is Bro. R. J. Anthony; but we are still living, and there are others in Utah who were acquainted with Bro. Taylor and who will remember hearing him make similar statements to that recorded. It is also true that Zina D. Young is dead; but J. W. Wight, E. A. Davis, Pauline Higgins, and Charles W. Penrose are living; and it is well enough that those who may be interested in the matter shall have these statements to refer to in case question arises in regard to the subject matters named therein.

EVIDENCE FROM ZINA D. HUNTINGTON-YOUNG.

The elders of the Reorganization whose mission has been in Utah and throughout the territory have tried to secure the evidence of persons with whom they could secure interviews touching the complicity of Joseph Smith the Martyr with the dogma and practice of plural marriage. Some of these interviews have been published, others have not. In order that the readers of the HERALD may see the character of some of these evidences, we cite the following:

Copy of an interview had by John W. Wight, elder of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints with Mrs. Zina D. Huntington-Jacobs-Smith-Young, at her home in Utah, October 1, 1898, in the presence of Mrs. Emeline B. Wells, Zina D. Card daughter of Mrs. Zina D. by B. Young, Elder Charles W. Penrose now of the Deseret News staff, Elder E. A. Davis of the Reorganized Church, and Mrs. Pauline Higgins, and Susie Walker, stenographer.

Question. "You claim to have married Joseph Smith?"

Answer. "No, I do not claim any such thing; he married me. The Lord told him to take me and he did so."

Q. "I believe you claim your brother officiated at the marriage?"

A. "He did at the first. When Brigham Young returned from England, he repeated the ceremony for time and eternity."

Q. "Can you give us the date of that marriage with Joseph Smith?"

A. "No, sir, I could not."

Q. "Not even the year?"

A. "No, I do not remember. It was something too sacred to be talked about; it was more to me than life or death. I never breathed it for years. I will tell you the facts. I had dreams—I am no dreamer but I had dreams that I could not account for. I know this is the work of the Lord; it was revealed to me, even when young. Things were presented to my mind that I could not account for. When Joseph Smith revealed this order I knew what it meant; the Lord was preparing my mind to receive it."

Q. "You say that Brigham Young repeated the ceremony after his return from England?"

A. "Yes sir."

Q. "Who first approached you with regard to the subject of plural marriage?"

A. "I was about to say, that is none of your business."

Q. "Now, you will understand, Mrs. Young, that any questions you may deem improper, you are at perfect liberty, so far as I am concerned, to refuse to answer."

A. "All right. Thank you."

Q. "You will remember that you have granted this interview and I am in your house."

A. "Yes."

Q. "I believe you married a man by the name of Henry Jacobs, did you not?"

A. "Yes, sir."

Q. "Can you give the date of that marriage?"

A. "No sir."

Q. "You had a license, I presume, from the state of Illinois?"

A. "I do not know. I knew nothing about licenses."

Q. "Can you tell me where you married Mr. Jacobs; that is, in Nauvoo, or where?"

A. "I can hardly tell you. I do not see what this has to do with my marriage with Joseph Smith."

Q. "Can you tell when you were married to Mr. Jacobs?"

A. "That is no matter."

Q. "Can you tell me how many children were born to Mr. Jacobs?"

A. "I had two sons; both noble boys."

Q. "Do you remember the date or their birth?"

A. "That is no matter."

Q. "Is it not a fact that one of those boys was born after you left Nauvoo; was he not born on the Chariton River?"

A. "Yes, on the Chariton River. That is the reason that he was called Chariton."

Q. "Then it is a fact that it was as late as the year 1846 or 1847 this boy Chariton was born on the Chariton River?"

A. "Yes, sir."

Q. "Then it is a fact, Mrs. Young, is it not, that you married Mr. Smith at the same time you were married to Mr. Jacobs?"

A. "What right have you to ask such questions? I was sealed to Joseph Smith for eternity."

Q. "Mrs. Young, you claim, I believe, that you were not married to him for time?"

A. "For eternity. I was married to Mr. Jacobs, but the marriage was unhappy and we parted."

Q. "You do not remember the time, either with regard to the day of the month, or the year?"

A. "No sir."

Q. "Who was present when you were sealed to Joseph Smith?"

A. "My brother who is dead."

Q. "That is, your brother, yourself, and Joseph Smith?"

A. "Yes sir."

Q. "Was it in Mr. Smith's house, or his private office?"

A. "That is none of your concern."

Q. "You refuse then to answer that?"

A. "Well, anyway, I was in my proper place; at my home."

Q. "You were living with your parents, were you?"

A. "That is none of your concern."

Q. "I presume you are aware of the fact that it is claimed by your church that the marriage with Mr. Jacobs was not an agreeable one?"

A. "That is true."

Q. "After your separation from Mr. Jacobs, whom did you marry?"

A. "I married my father. My mother died, and I went to keep house for my father."

Q. "Do you know, Mrs. Young, that what you did in these matters was contrary to the law?"

A. "There was no law for polygamy."

Q. "Are you aware of the fact that at that time, that is, prior to the death of Joseph Smith, the law of Illinois was against the taking of more than one wife?"

A. "I do not know."

Q. "Do you object to telling the date as to your marriage with Mr. Young?"

A. "I do not remember the date."

Q. "Did you hear the question of plural marriage discussed either privately or publicly, prior to your having been sealed to Joseph Smith?"

A. "No. We hardly dared speak of it. The very walls had ears. We spoke of it only in whispers."

Q. "How, then, could you have been sealed to Joseph Smith without first having heard the doctrine of plural marriage?"

A. "Joseph Smith sent my brother Dimick to explain it to me."

Q. "It is a fact, then, that you were never taught it by Joseph Smith himself?"

A. "My brother Dimick told me what Joseph had told him. I knew it was from the Lord, and I received it. Joseph did not come until afterward."

Q. "You mean by that, then, that after your brother Dimick had returned to Joseph and given him the information that you had accepted such teaching, that Joseph then came to you, prior to having been sealed, and taught you the doctrine of plural marriage?"

A. "I told you that the Lord had revealed to Joseph Smith that he was to marry me. I received it from Joseph through my brother Dimick."

Q. "Who was present at the time that Joseph taught you the doctrine of sealing, besides, yourself and Joseph?"

A. "My brother Dimick."

Q. "Were you sealed to Joseph on the occasion of this visit?"

A. "Yes sir."

Q. "It is a fact then, Mrs. Young, that Joseph was not married to you only in the sense of being sealed for eternity?"

A. "As his wife for time and eternity."

Q. "Mrs. Young, you have answered that question in two ways; for time, and for time and eternity."

A. "I meant for eternity."

Question to Mr. Penrose. "Do you indorse the publication of the Historical Record by Andrew Jensen?"

A. "No. We do not indorse it; neither do we repudiate it."

Q. "Do you indorse the affidavits made by these women?"

A. "I would have to read them to see whether I could indorse them or not."

Question to Mrs. Young. "Mrs. Young, you have stated that you were married to Joseph Smith for time and eternity. Now, how could you marry Joseph Smith for time when at the same time you were married to Mr. Jacobs?"

A. "I do not wish to reply. I only know that this is the work of God upon the earth, and I know by testimony from God that Joseph was a prophet."

Q. "Now, Mrs. Young, you just have testified that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God?"

A. "Yes, sir. I know by testimony that he was a prophet."

Q. "Do you believe that Joseph Smith was a hypocrite?"

A. "No, sir. I do not."

Q. "Do you believe that Joseph Smith was a deceiver?"

A. "No, sir. He was not."

Q. "Could you say why that on the first day of February, 1844, together with his brother Hyrum over their signatures as presidents of the church, they published to the world in the Times and Seasons a notice to one Hyrum Brown, cutting him off the church for teaching 'polygamy and other false and corrupt doctrines?'"

A. "I know nothing about it."

Response by Mr. Penrose. "I have read that. I remember it distinctly."

Question to Mrs. Young. "Are you aware that in the Doctrine and Covenants there was published an article on marriage?"

A. "I do not remember. What is your object in quizzing me like this?"

Response by J. W. Wight. "To establish the truth."

Mrs. Y. "Mr. Wight, you are speaking on the most sacred experiences of my life."

Mr. W. "Mrs. Young, you are at perfect liberty at any time you may desire, to bring this interview to a close."

Mrs. Y. "I do not see why I should be questioned on these sacred matters."

Mr. W. "You do not wish to be interviewed further?"

A. "No, sir."

This interview was secured by request from Elder J. W. Wight, who was desirous of obtaining what evidence Mrs. Zina D. Young, could give touching the plural marriage practice before the death of Joseph Smith; it having been confidently stated to him that "Aunt Zina" knew all about it.

The result shows that Zina D. Jacobs, nee Huntington, was not a wife to Joseph Smith; or if she was it was at the same time that she was married to and living with Henry Jacobs, to whom she bore a son after her alleged marriage with Joseph Smith.

The evidence is like the rest of what has been offered to the sons of the prophet Joseph Smith to silence their opposition to the dogma of plural marriage and convince them that their father taught and practiced polygamy.

The foregoing interview, taken in shorthand, was subsequently written out and the copy submitted to Mrs. Zina D. Huntington Young and her daughter, Mrs. Card, who stated that it was as Mrs. Young had given it. It was also submitted to Charles Penrose, who declined to affirm or deny its correctness. It was handed to us by Bro. Wight for publication if we saw proper. Reference is hereby made upon the authority of Bro. J. W. Wight to Mrs. Pauline Higgins, who is a resident of Salt Lake City, Utah, and Evan A. Davis, of Pittsburg, Kansas, if any one chooses to make inquiry in regard to the correctness of the interview as reported. It must be remembered that this was not an interview of a press reporter seeking for a basis for sensational journalism, but was the candid inquiry of a man interested in the facts which might be brought out in such interview. Every reader must determine for himself as to the reliance to be placed upon the statements made by this witness. It is a little unfortunate that the witness should have been either unwilling or unable to give the dates upon which certain actions which she states had taken place. It remains a fact based upon her own statements that at the time she claims to have been the wife of Joseph Smith she was the wife of Henry D. Jacobs, living with him as his wife, and having children by him as her husband—a most remarkable condition of things under any hypothesis.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The Daily Democrat, Tulsa, Indian Territory, January 3, 1905, has an account of a Christmas entertainment at Bailey's Ranch on Rock Creek, Sr. Eva Bailey having charge of the program. A large tent was used, which held an audience of three hundred. The closing paragraph reads: "These Latter Day Saints, of whom Mr. E. D. Bailey is pastor, came here about three years ago. Now they have quite a membership and all are peaceable and law-abiding citizens. They are not Mormons as some have supposed, but on the contrary are the strongest opposers of polygamy."

It has been claimed by some who are opposing the Reorganization that it can not be the church of Christ because its elders are not persecuted. We call attention to the letter of Bro. James T. Davis, of West Plains, Missouri, Box 590, found elsewhere in our columns, to show that there is still left some portion of the persecuting spirit and that a degree of persecution does follow the elders of the Reorganized Church. It shows also the character of the men who manifest this intolerance. We commend the reading of this letter as an evidence in point.

Brn. U. W. Greene and D. A. Anderson began a series of services in Cleveland, Ohio, January 1. Of this series Bro. Eben Miller sent us the following notice card:

Dear Friend: Elder U. W. Greene and D. A. Anderson will hold a series of Evangelistic services in our church, corner Wade Park and Giddings Avenue, beginning Sunday evening, January 1, and continuing every evening to and including January 8. Each meeting will open with a Special Song Service at fifteen minutes to eight. This will be followed by a sermon on one of the following subjects:

"The hand of God in all ages."

"God's last warning to this generation."

"Original Mormonism vs. Utah Mormonism."

"What is the Book of Mormon?"

"The way called heresy."

"If Jesus Christ should come to Cleveland."

We cordially invite you and your friends.

These cards were made a feature in advertising the labors of the brethren. We trust success attended the effort.

FAITH, HOPE, AND CHARITY.

WRITTEN ON OCCASION OF ST. JOHN'S DAY, DECEMBER 27,
A. D., 1904.

Faith is the lever which moves the masses of mankind to action, that which actuates man to do something in this world, and keeps the wheels of progress moving upward and onward to a finish,—to victory.

Faith has achieved wonderful success in past ages and is doing its part to-day. Nothing of much consequence was ever secured without Faith. Of the three great principles that should govern in this earth on which we live, Faith, Hope, and Charity, Faith is the first. It starts the machinery to work, physically, morally, and spiritually. God implanted it in the bosom of mortal man; it is one of the finest attributes of our being, and greatly to be cherished by all.

Hope is sister to Faith and Charity; she is full of comfort; she is heaven-born; she is meek, and mild, and tender, but never wavering; she may fall, but always to rise again. Hope is most beautiful, but never vain,—modest and pure as the lily, Hope is full of fruition, fortitude, and ambition. She never gives up. Happy are they who possess Hope. She is very life, and health, and peace. None are perfect without Hope. She is our good angel and should never be neglected, but cherished and loved for ever. Hope never falters, but ever willing to lift the vail; never despondent, though in the valley of death; fears no evil. She is like a field of ripening grain waiting for the harvest, a tree of maturing fruit with branches reaching toward the pickers. She is like the moon which is made to govern the night, always surrounded by the starry canopy of heaven; if they disappear it is only to reappear when most needed. Hope is worthy of our most ardent affections and cherished ambitions, of which we should never lose sight, for she comes to us in the hour of deepest despair, giving solace and offering comfort in every time of need. She has reclaimed the reckless and intemperate from an untimely grave; she has lifted the lowly and the humble to places of prominence before God and man. Hope is not bought and sold as a commodity, but is the universal gift of God to our race, for a fullness of which it is necessary to labor through all time.

Charity—other words pale into insignificance when compared with it. Charity is the masterpiece, the crowning glory; the excellence of majesty; Charity has never been surpassed by men or angels. I apprehend it was born of that eternal Being by whom eternity itself exists and will endure when all things mortal shall fade away. No man need go far astray of all that can be comprehended in life, when possessed of charity. Need I say less of angels or Gods? It is sacred. It is divine. It is the embodiment of perfection. The English language is inadequate to even approach its excellency.

Allow me to make here one quotation from Holy Writ, Isaiah 58:7: "Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?"

"To undo the heavy burdens," "to loose the bands of wickedness," "to break every yoke," "and to let the oppressed go free," this is the kind of fast the Lord would proclaim. And Charity is more than this. Christ manifest in the flesh exemplified this principle when he gave his life upon the cross to secure salvation. Never was love more manifest on earth or in heaven than when he offered himself as a living sacrifice for humanity.

Charity preventeth a multitude of sins; it may be compared to the mid-day sun, the glorious orb of day whose rays dart toward every recess of darkness, imparting and implanting his life-giving light. One may say the word Charity is not found in the old Scriptures. Ah! I admit. Neither are the words Holy Ghost. Yet that name represents the third person of the God-head who is the source of knowledge of Christ and of Deity. It is not the word alone for which I contend. It is the divine principle, an attribute of the great Father, who seeks the universal happiness and immortality of man, throughout the countless ages of eternity. I ask, has there ever been any theme of more consequence? I answer, there can be none. Charity is all in all, the climax of perfection.

In conclusion, I give these verses called "Jacob's ladder":

"Abram's God who failed him never,
Guarding, aiding, shielding ever;
Dark as night my pathway be,
If I fail to trust in Thee.

"As peering through the future dim,
To the abodes of seraphim,
Fills my heart with raptures new,
As the gates of heaven I view.

"As on my enraptured sight,
Bursts the rays of heavenly light,
Fills my soul the while I scan,
Love to God, and love to man.

"Steps to heaven, the sacred three;
Faith, and Hope, and Charity,
Faith may perish, Hope may fall,
Charity shall crown them all."

HOW CONCLUSIONS ARE DRAWN.

While in conversation with a gentleman who, in some minor ways, favors the Christian (or "Campbellite") Church, but in reality is more of a Tom Paine man than anything else, the subject of the "Smoot case" came up, and Utah Mormonism was discussed; and among other things the temple work here in the West was mentioned; also that it was secret in its nature, and that it seemed to be the main cord that held the institution together.

We informed him that we should measure them by the word of God, and that the word of God condemned such; for Jesus said, "I spake openly to the world; . . . and in secret have I said nothing."—John 18:20. To this the brother replied, "If the Mormons in Utah would read their Bible they would not follow such teaching as secret oaths, Adam-god, polygamy, and other false and corrupt doctrine, but instead of reading their Bible they read old Joe Smith's works and their Book of Mormon, and that accounts for it."

We again informed him that if the people would read the Book of Mormon it would be impossible for them to hold to such corrupt doctrines, as it emphatically condemned such and taught elevating and divine principles.

First, in regard to secret orders let us see what is taught by Book of Mormon writers:

And the Gentiles are lifted up in the pride of their eyes, and have stumbled, and there are also secret . . . combinations, even as in times of old, according to the combinations of the Devil, for he is the foundation of all these things; yea, the foundation of murder, and works of darkness; yea, and he leadeth them by the neck with a flaxen cord, until he bindeth them with his strong cords for ever.—Book of Mormon, p. 98, small edition.

And again we read of the Gadianton robbers:

They did have their signs, yea, their secret signs, and their secret words; and this that they might distinguish a brother who had entered into the covenant, that whatsoever wickedness his brother should do, he should not be injured by his brother, nor by those who did belong to his band.—Ibid., p. 395.

We might refer to a number of other citations on the subject, but space will fail us in this paper; but we can see from this that the Book of Mormon condemns secret orders.

Now let us see what it teaches on some of the other subjects mentioned by the brother, to see if we can not condemn them in equally as strong terms by its teachings. It does not teach that Adam is God but to the contrary it teaches that mankind should serve "the true and only God." (Ibid., p. 503.) That leaves no room whatever for any other, and it might be well to also notice page 235 as it also makes a plain statement as to there being only one God.

And above all others the Book of Mormon comes out plainly and uncompromisingly on the marriage question, and we read:

And now it came to pass that the people of Nephi, under the reign of the second king, began to grow hard in their hearts, and indulge themselves somewhat in wicked practices, such as like unto David of old, desiring many wives and concubines, and also Solomon, his son.—Page 113.

Here we find the desire of having many wives termed a wicked practice, and if wicked it surely is contrary to the will of God, and the prophet Jacob declared it so in still stronger terms in the next chapter, as follows:

But the word of God burthens me because of your grosser crimes. For behold, thus saith the Lord, This people begin to wax in iniquity; they understand not the scriptures; for they seek to excuse themselves in committing whoredoms, because of the things which were written concerning David, and Solomon his son. Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord, . . . wherefore, the Lord God will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken unto the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination before me: thus saith the Lord of hosts.—Page 113.

Polygamy is here called a "grosser crime," "abomination," and also "whoredom," and it is condemned in the strongest kind of language; therefore, if the people of the West would read their Book of Mormon (as we told the brother) in the place of B. H. Roberts' works, they would be better able to judge right from wrong, and would get a better understanding of the gospel as well.

So, reader, do not condemn the Book of Mormon because some people have done wrong, but examine the teachings of the book and let it stand or fall on its own merits. And when we do that we will see that it fulfills its mission of being a witness to both Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, as it is a witness of his dealings with mankind, and confirms the truth of the other witness, the Bible.

"WHITHER ARE WE DRIFTING?"

This question has very pertinently been asked recently, in the HERALD, and it seems a very proper time just now, the beginning of the new year, to take our hands from the plow and face about and look carefully back along the furrow we have been turning, and take cognizance of the course we have been pursuing, not only individually but collectively; and then, if we are wise, make some calculations as to how we can, by cutting a little wider here and a little narrower there, straighten up the crooked places the next time through. I suppose none of us is so short-sighted or self-satisfied that he can not see some crooked places in the individual furrows he has been turning, and can not also see, in looking over the history of the church, some deviations from the straight course which have hindered the progress of the work. And perhaps we may ask ourselves the question, "Might not our beloved Zion have been redeemed already had these deviations not been made?" Are we learning from the lessons of the past, or will history repeat itself and another scattering take place before we as God's people learn to keep his law? And would it not be a good idea right now to set up a few intermediate flagstaves to enable us to run a straighter furrow this year (1905)?

"Zion can not be built up unless it be by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom," says the writer of the recent article. Are we as members generally, concerning ourselves as we should about this question? And do we know of anything in our present course that will hinder us from enjoying the conditions which a Zionistic community would require?

Such a community is described in the Scriptures, and we are told "they had all things common." Now how do we find ourselves this new year; are we looking for common or uncommon things? Are we willing to live in a common house, wear common clothes, and eat common food? In the sense of ordinary I mean. Paul also gives us to understand that such a community will be coöperative; "colaborers." Are we learning what it means to coöperate with our brothers? Many great minds outside the church are much concerned about this question of coöperation, just as much so as were many great minds concerned about the foreshadows of the restoration. Wesley, for instance, said he thought we were on the verge of such a flood of light as the world had never known. Will the children of this world be wiser in this regard, than the children of light? A writer in the HERALD for November 23, 1904, in referring to the conditions that now prevail under our present system of competition in accordance with our political economy, said: "How long the American Government is going to suffer that kind of corruption I do not know." It would seem reasonable that the present undesirable conditions would continue so long as the system which gave them birth continued, or until a better economy (gospel economy) was ushered in.

Satan is well pleased when he sees men working against each other; but God wants men to work for each other. And I am glad to note the steps already taken by the church whereby it is made possible for brethren to coöperate, not only spiritually but materially and in a business way.

I believe the church is in a better condition now than it ever has been since it was organized. But I think we should be careful and consider well whither we are drifting. Are we coming out of the world or going into it and its ways? "Be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." Are any of us affected with pride, the wrong kind, I mean? Are we following the law as regards dress? If not, do you not think we could come closer together in brotherly love if we did, and a better feeling prevail if we were more uniformly attired, more commonly dressed? Are we remembering that Zion is to be redeemed by purchase? And as good stewards are we doing our duty in appropriating the material things with which God has blessed us to our own selves, having much of the luxury of this life and the seemingly good things of the world, and the world of fashion, to the extent that when the year rolls around we find we have little or no surplus, the tenth of which would not purchase very much in Zion? Are we all trying to be economical stewards?

CONCERNING GRACELAND COLLEGE.

REPLY TO CRITICISMS.

The answers by the Bishop to questions asked of him by brethren and published in HERALD for December 21 have been seriously attacked or treated as having been unnecessary, and he charged with having "raised the issue relating to the college," etc. As this is not the first time the present year, that such uncalled-for charges have been made, it will be well to reply, turning on a little light.

A brother in Australia, one of the parties sending questions referred to, asks for information, stating:

The only ray of light that I have got is a report of one of our delegates to last conference, which has just come into my hands to present to our New South Wales District conference at Christmas. He says, "It is not sound to say the conference act was illegal for it was a suspension of the Articles of Incorporation and not an amendment, all of which conference had a legal right to do." He also says of the action of the board in reopening, "We have an attempt of the 'creature arising above the creator.'"

Notwithstanding this report, and the notice that such was being sent out to be presented to a district conference in a far-away country, where the facts were unknown, making certain that the other side could not be heard, the Bishop is charged with "raising the college issue" because he answered at the request of the Saints. The answers by the Bishop were strictly in line with his church duties, and were called out by parties who had a right to ask for his judgment upon the matter if they wished such.

But who is this "delegate" referred to who is giving instruction so freely to strike down the educational work of the church? If it shall turn out that it is the same party who assumes to correct the Bishop's answers, it will be seen that he has been successful in placing himself squarely upon both sides of the question.

Commenting upon the Bishop's answers he says:

1. The first question and its reply I shall not notice since "there was no attempt to suspend the Articles of Incorporation or any other rule therein by the conference."

This admission, however, is just the reverse of the instruction to the Australian Saints. The Bishop's answers then seem to have already borne a little fruit in stirring up the "delegate's" thoughts.

Now is it the Bishop who answered the questions sent in to him that is responsible for having "raised the issue relating to the college," or is it the party who represents a very small minority of the board of trustees, a one seventh part, and who so persistently works in opposition to the action of the majority of the board? His logic seems to be this: If conference passes a resolution in violation of its own rules and the rights of others, a member must sustain the majority and the wrong done, or be declared in "open rebellion"; but if the board of trustees follows proper law and rule and performs its duty as enjoined under the law, then the minority is not required to respect the decision of the majority, but may industriously scatter far and wide hindrance and opposition to the work of such board. Well, it is worth something to know just where an opponent stands.

2. As was the case with the first answer, the brother admits that the answer to the second question is correct, but he seeks to evade the force of this answer by attacking the board of trustees for not taking up and doing what the General Conference had no right to undertake to do, for want of proper notice.

It is gratifying to note here that the claim that the conference ordered the college closed has been abandoned. Oh, no! "The conference only declared what it favored."

The adopted rule of the church relative to changes in college affairs is as follows:

These articles may be amended at any General Conference of said Reorganized Church, or at any meeting of the Board of Trustees herein named, providing sixty days' published notice of said amendment and the nature of the same be given through the SAINTS' HERALD prior to the time of such annual conference or meeting.

In order for the conference to take any action touching a change in the college status, then, sixty days' notice must be given, setting forth the nature of the proposed change, so the Saints may be advised before their educational work is disturbed.

Now, here is what the conference undertook to do without giving any notice whatever of the action:

Resolved that we favor a discontinuance of Graceland College after the close of its present term, and recommend that the property be turned over to other uses such as may be agreed upon by the Bishopric of the church and such other councils or persons as may be chosen by the General Conference until such time as the General Conference decides to reopen the College.

In face of the prior-adopted rule that notice must be given before any change, the Saints are now asked to accept the position that the conference could pass such a resolution and make it binding upon the church, without giving any notice whatever of such proposed action. Such a position is subversive of the rights and powers of every member of the church and imperils every dollar of property contributed and invested by the Saints for specific church-work. If the conference can do so in this case, it can in any other case where prior notice has been guaranteed in order to prevent undue advantage being taken of the church membership and their rights overthrown.

But it is now claimed that the trustees should have given sixty days' notice and closed the college. This only recommends another usurpation. Are our institutions indeed upon such an unstable basis that the trustees can give notice and close them up upon their own motion? If the trustees can give the notice and close the college in sixty days now, they could have done so in a week after they were first elected in 1896. The conference resolution to close having been passed without right or authority it can be no direction to the board. It would be as proper to say that when the conference under Brigham Young, in 1852, indorsed polygamy in violation of the law of the church that the Saints were under obligation to accept it. The position that the conference can legislate in violation of existing law is absolutely absurd.

The trustees are chosen to carry out the provisions of the incorporation, not to stop the business. They have authority to amend upon notice in some things, but not in anything that would interfere with the running of the college or of carrying out the duties of trustees as defined in the Articles of Incorporation. The limitation to the powers of the trustees is contained in the Articles of Incorporation as well as the law of the State. They are specifically limited as follows, article 5:

They [the board of trustees] shall have power to perform the duties usual to such officers of similar institutions, except as they may be changed herein, and shall provide for suitable buildings, rooms, library, apparatus, incidentals, etc., for use according to the demands and interests of the college work, . . .

Also Article 7:

The Board of Trustees shall employ and provide for such number of professors and teachers and such curriculum or course of study as shall fully meet the wants of those desiring the advantages of a good academical and collegiate education, . . .

Again Article 15:

It shall be the privilege of the Board of Trustees to make such by-laws from time to time for the carrying on of its work and duties and the facilitating of business as are not inconsistent with these articles.

Had the board of trustees undertaken to do what our critic says it should, its members would have been in the position the Bishop suggested in his previous answers,—"in the toils of the law."

The trustees must proceed regularly in their work, or ask legal and proper direction from the body, the church; not assume to themselves the power to change and divert property to other uses than that named in the corporation nor abandon the work of the corporation.

It is assumed again, that since this corporation was created by act of conference, the conference by resolution can direct the abandonment at any time and even without notice. This is a grave error. The rights of property adhering are protected by the law and can not be divested except by following the rules of the law.

Article 1 reads:

The association assumes to itself all the powers and privileges conferred by chapter two (2), title nine (9), Code of Iowa, and such parts of chapter one (1), title nine (9), as are applicable to associations of an academical or collegiate character; and shall exist as provided therein for the period of fifty years from the date of filing of these Articles of Association in the office of the recorder of deeds of Decatur County, Iowa; and said corporation may be renewed at the expiration of fifty years.

The incorporation is firmly planted under the protection of the law and while its articles may be changed at the will of the majority upon the giving of sixty days' proper notice prior to the sitting of the General Conference, this is not true with regard to the attempt to abandon the college and "divert the property to other uses." A resolution to this effect to be valid must be presented by giving the sixty days' notice and then passed in the conference by a three fourths vote. A bare majority is of no more validity than if no vote had been taken.

Is it becoming necessary to quote the law to the opponents of the college that the Reorganized Church has so long affirmed and taught?

Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land.— Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5.

It is one special duty of the Bishop of the church to see that the properties of the church are not diverted from the uses for which they have been donated and properly appropriated, contrary to law. Shall it be said that the Bishop is "headstrong" and "wants his own way" because he insists that the law shall be kept; and by elders as well as the membership?

Again it is asked:

3. Will the Bishop kindly point out what resolution "passed by a prior General Conference," prohibits the right of a conference to pass a vote expressive of its opinion as to the closing of the college?

Answer. The Bishop did not state nor intimate that there was any such a resolution passed. The Bishop's answer was to the question: "Why was it not proper for the conference to pass a vote expressing its opinion without notice being given?"

Now if the brother did not comprehend the question and answer, he should not have undertaken to review the answers of the Bishop. He certainly would not knowingly misrepresent. Any General Conference may act within its power in making changes in the college by giving the required notice; but it can not violate its own laws nor the laws of God in the transaction of business and be right.

The resolution limiting the action of conference touching the college to those where sixty days' published notice in the HERALD prior to the convening of the conference has already been given has been set out in this answer. Will the brother now read it?

4. Under number four, the brother repeats his argument based upon the resolution of the conference closing the college and diverting the property to other uses. As this resolution has been shown to be wholly without authority and void; the doctrine that the "creator" can change things without conforming to law is exploded, and requires no further notice. But the charge is made that the board openly rebelled against their creator (the conference). Oh, no! The conference did not act. The attempted act did not conform to the law and was void. Had proper discussion been permitted at the conference, no action whatever would have been had. First a limit of five minutes was placed upon the speakers and was held to include amendments and subsidiary motions. There was no proper hearing, hence the step in the dark.

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY.

WHY CHINA HATES MISSIONARIES.

In China nothing is more complicated or more difficult of solution, or fraught with more danger, and therefore more urgent of a speedy solution, than the missionary question. It is complicated because it involves not only the question of religion but the question of political rights and social customs. It is a conflict between an uncompromising faith on one side and of an equally uncompromising faith in its ethical phase on the other. It is a conflict conducted by people in pursuance to a divine call to spread the light of the gospel of their Lord in the midst of a people at once the proudest and the most conceited in the world, a people with a devotion to the faith that neither bayonet nor cannon nor even the sacking of their capital is sufficient to shake.

Nothing can be nobler than the motive of the missionary in his willingness to sacrifice life itself in the service of his Master. Yet nothing could be more lamentable than the outcome of missionary effort in China when we remember that for the death of two German missionaries Germany seized Kaiochou and a whole province. And following the maltreatment of a French missionary a French gunboat appeared, demanded and got an enormous indemnity and also extensive mining and industrial concessions.

The Chinese believe in their bible as sincerely as the most orthodox Christian does in his. They believe it contains all the wisdom that is worth learning in this world. To suppose there should be anything else would be equal to telling a Christian that there ought to be another addition to the New Testament. Yet the doctrines of the Chinese bible are denounced, and other teachings are offered that are about as alien to the Chinese mind as air is to fish.

For instance, the command to leave father and mother and to cleave to the wife is alien to the doctrine of ancestral worship, and the nonacceptance of such Christian teaching is accompanied by warnings that pagans and heathens and their souls will undergo the tortures of eternal and unquenchable fires. Do you suppose such condemnations are palatable to the Chinese?

Among the crowds who gather about the missionaries are some characters who are unworthy, and who are known as "rice" Christians, men and women who profess to believe in the teachings of the missionaries for the purpose of obtaining the rice which the missionaries dole out.

The native converts become objects of odium not because of their new beliefs but because they have forsaken native customs and because they refuse to contribute to the religious and national festivals. This latter feature has been made the subject of an edict which suppresses persecution for failure to contribute, but no official sanction can prevent the local ostracism of the people or avert the hate aroused toward the cause of the default—the missionary.

The native convert guilty of misconduct is sure to have the support of the missionary in the lower court, and the gunboat support in the court of last resort.

The assumption of social and official rank by the missionaries is another source of annoyance. Riding in green chairs, the royal color, and reserved only for the officials, was assumed by the missionaries, and by treaty demanded and secured to the missionaries.

These things, I take it, are the chief causes of the outrages and hatred of the Chinese toward the missionaries. Now let us look at the methods of propagandism adopted by the missionaries as viewed from the Chinese standpoint.

In the first place the missionaries have not yet agreed as to the Chinese word to express the single Deity, and, as a consequence, the Jesuits, the English, and the Americans have each employed a different word for the title. The Jesuits employ a word which means "Lord of Heaven." The Americans prefer a word which means "True Spirit," and the English missionaries use a word which means "Supreme Lord."

The doctrines preached are so variant that they must be perfectly bewildering to the Chinese. Not only does this apply within the two great divisions of Christianity, the Roman Catholics and the Protestants, but especially within the denominations of the latter. At work in China are the Episcopalians, Baptists, Methodists, Christian Scientists, the churches of England and of Scotland and of Canada, and lastly the Mormons, if not the disciples of Dowie. Of course these various denominations are not on good terms with each other and are pronouncing anathemas upon the heterodoxy of the others.

A third method that is repugnant is the clumsy style in which the Bible has been translated into Chinese. It is not conducive to wide reading by the intelligent Chinese and it is an offense to all, for none require more grace of diction and beauty of style than the Chinese. The present translation is to the Chinese mind what a philosophical treatise translated into broken English would be to the Anglo-Saxon. Then the customs of the ancient Jews have no interest to the Chinese, and there does not appear any sufficient reason why those customs should be accepted by the Chinese.

A fourth offense is given the Chinese in the employment of women as missionaries. It is unnecessary to state that the position of woman in China is different from what it is in Western countries, or that the presence of women in China as missionaries is a source of much misunderstanding and misrepresentation. Women in China have been rigidly excluded from society for centuries, and how must it appear to them to see women from the West employed as missionaries, walking down the street at all hours of the day, even arm in arm with a man, and hear her urging the adoption of a religion in an attempt at Chinese that is about as good as the Chinese laundryman's English. From a religious standpoint she has about as much effect as Ingersoll would upon a Presbyterian.

Suppose a woman with painted cheeks and dyed hair, with a dress shortened at both ends, came rapidly riding down the street on a bicycle, whatever hurried lie was told about her would be likely to be believed. And that is about the position of the women missionaries in China.

Yet I would not for one moment say that missions in China have been a failure or that they have done more ill than good, for in the diffusion of secular knowledge through their schools and by the establishment of hospitals, and by the example of their noble lives, which are object-lessons of justice and kindness, no sane person will deny that good has been done.

I admire the Christian courage and the ceaseless effort of those who have left dear homes and have planted themselves among the hostile Chinese to give their lives for them. They need no praise of mine, for their memorials are kept in the fleshy tablets of the heart.

In surveying the whole history of missions in China, one does not see a ray of hope until he comes to the Chinese-American treaty of 1903. In that treaty is a clause which takes the first great step toward the solution of the missionary problem in China. In that treaty it is provided that missionaries shall not interfere in lawsuits, and that no distinction shall be made in the Chinese courts to Christian converts. The convert is exempted from contributions to the temples and idols, and the missionary may purchase land for the erection of buildings for mission purposes, but not for the benefit of the individual.

Thus for the first time mission work in China is built upon the foundation of truth and not of fraud.— Doctor Toyokichi Lyenaga, (University of Chicago,) in Chicago Tribune, December 18, 1904.

Method in Teaching.

There is no hard and fast method for Sunday-school teaching. Some teachers think there is. One of the dangers of teachers' helps lies here. Originality is not a universal gift. Imitation is a rather common fault. Of the multitude who try to teach classes each Sunday morning, a large number are not original teachers. Some never will be, and a few could not be under any circumstances. They can not give to their classes anything except what they read for that purpose. Still the fact remains that successful teaching can not be bound by any fixed rules or limited to any special methods.

We could not do without helps. Only a very few are fitted by nature or circumstances for original research. But the majority of those who teach could learn to use helps rightly if they were started right. It is natural to feel that as a beginner you can not improve on the methods of the experienced teacher. Of course that is true. Experience is the finest training for power in any work. However, the experience of another can not take the place of your own. His work may be suggestive; it should be. What he writes should be a help in your work. Do not forget that your class is different from his and also you are different from him. You have a right to use his ideas but they must become yours in the using.

It is folly to cut loose from every one else and work out our own way regardless of aid which is at hand. The world is ours. All that has been done in it, or said or thought, is ours. There is no plagiarism except where there is definite intention to deceive. If a general in the army can choose the methods of Napoleon and then proceed to out-Napoleon Napoleon, no one criticises. He can not succeed except as he makes those methods his own and develops greater strength than that of the great emperor. But the general who simply copies the campaigns of another does not become great. The same plans will not fit the two separate crises. Your Sunday-school class is like no other class. You have a right to use any other methods that have ever been used if you can adapt them to your present need. Otherwise you are at least open to the suspicion that you are saving yourself time and thought by simply borrowing the work of another.

The fact is there are two kinds of teachers. Some are content simply to keep things going. Others are not content except as they find satisfaction in their work. Nothing need be said here of the first class; they do more harm than good. What shall we say of the others?

Experience ought to teach. If we do not learn by experience there is nothing gained from life but variety. No matter if the teacher adopts the finest method of reaching the kind of class he has the experience of teaching will modify that method in practice. In other words, the method becomes his. That is the point. One may start his work with nothing to base his methods upon; another may have many helps; both must develop or stagnate.

No real teacher ever rests content unless he finds satisfaction in his work. That does not mean that he must create a perfect method. There is always satisfaction in development. The ideal teacher is a growing teacher. His own ideals form and become more definite each day and he finds help on every side. His puzzles and mistakes open his vision to the real meaning of what others are saying and doing. He does not take and use what does not belong to him but he acquires from others new ideas and new strength of his own.

Method in teaching is important for there can be no real teaching that is haphazard. My method and yours are important only as they show how we have done our work. No method can make a successful teacher; but every teacher, to the slightest degree successful, makes a new method, his method. If you wish to become a better teacher, you may well study the methods others use as you can not have too much light on your course. But you must give birth to your own method; you can not adopt it. Your own personality must be expressed in the way you do your work, and by the very effort to express yourself in your work power will be developed. Your work is your own. You are yourself. Use all the help you can get but work out your own problems and develop your own powers.—The World Evangel, St. Louis.

Editors Herald: It is not often that we trouble your valued pages, partly because we are always busy and partly because our talents are felt by us to be below the mediocre. We thought to write to encourage the sisters of the church in their helps, governments, and other organizations and those contemplating such societies. Below is the history of the Sisters' Aid Society of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints:

The society was organized January 1, 1904. The first regular meeting or session convened February 18, 1904, at which time the following five signed the by-laws, viz., Mrs. W. B. King, Mrs. D. A. Emslie, Mrs. S. E. Gorbett, Mrs. A. Thornton, and Mrs. A. J. Adams. Srs. H. A. Briggs and ——— Forrester became members at the same time but did not sign the by-laws. The seven each paid twenty-five cents initiation fee and ten cents per week thereafter. The society never increased in membership for the reason, first, there were but few more of this small branch who could join, and second, because in all branches, in all communities either in or out of the church are those who have never seen fit to comprise party or parties to the harmonious whole, who remain passive so far as society progression is concerned. And many such people in the world do not even remain harmlessly passive, but conjure up, with all cunning aggressiveness, how they may block ambition of the real workers in life's onward march.

Sr. Roxanna E. Anderson was with the society in the early part of the year and helped frame the motto, "Do something for somebody quick." The sisters went to work with a vim; they bought gingham and made at least one hundred aprons and scores of sunbonnets. Having such success selling these articles to the local trade, in May they advertised in Zion's Ensign to send good aprons for fifty cents, and chambray sunbonnets for fifty cents, to any part of the United States, half of proceeds to go towards paying debt of Graceland College. To show how slow the church is to respond: They never sent a single order. The reason is, probably, that live branches have societies of their own, and one can not expect anything from dead or passive ones. But they did rely on orders from the scattered members.

The society had several good socials of different kinds and prospered greatly until July, when they received a staggering blow from which they never recovered, and this is how it happened:

Most of the ladies of the church are not versed very highly on parliamentary law and rules of order, etc. What they do is usually done in a motherly, saintly, godly, and heartfelt way, without stopping to argue the pros and cons. It is hardly to be expected the sisters would know it all when so many of the local priesthood are not informed in such matters. The few branches we have lived in, the sisters were often in trouble with the branch officers, which usually was unnecessary. That is what happened in Seattle. They forgot to consult the presiding officer, a crisis came, the socials were boycotted or blacklisted, the sisters became broken-hearted and work ceased and is now disorganized. There are but five of the sisters left; Sr. Briggs having moved to Bakersfield, California, and Sr. Adams to Vashon Island of this State. Most of them were workers in other organizations. One came from St. Louis, one from Des Moines; and two from Chicago. Below is what they did with their money:

Danish Book of Mormon, a present to Bro. Jessen, $2.00; elders' board, $12.75; elders' car-tickets, $6 00; elders' missionary expenses, $7.00; to Tacoma church, $2 00; grape-juice for sacrament, $0.50; conference ice-cream, $3 00; Graceland College, $5.00; tithing of society, $3.00; loan out on household goods, $10 00; balance on hand in cash, $6.50; incidental expenses, gingham, etc., $17.25. Total, $80.00.

The main trouble came about through the elders' board-bill. They never thought of charging a cent to the elders, but none of the sisters could afford to keep an elder, and very few of them had the convenience or room. So they combined their mites and created the means to keep the elder or elders indefinitely. So here is encouragement for coöperation in branches working in harmony, and warning for the sisters to go slow where friction may occur. In the spirit of love the forces moving for good are quietly and slowly but surely drawn together, but when good will is misunderstood the force for good is scattered and the branch becomes dormant, and often dead, and seldom again is confidence restored, and blighted hopes renewed. Let us hope the good Spirit may bring in peace and harmony, love and unity.

The Saints are still worshipping the Lord in private houses. The Saints of Tacoma have progressed to the extent that they have reared a house to the Lord their God by sacrifice, although about two-thirds smaller in numbers than our own branch. Our Sunday-school could have purchased an organ and have paid for it by an easy system as the majority desired, but the majority do not always rule, and the school is minus an organ, and our purses are probably not any fatter. The same holds good about a lot to build a church on. In fact, many in the church are afraid of the words unity and coöperation. On the one hand is the Spirit calling us higher, to work harder and faster for the glory of Zion, to study, to read, to observe, to push forward; while on the other hand Satan is bidding the church to be stationary, to stop its efforts, to throw aside the golden opportunity of to-day—the great business maxim, "Do it now"—for the never-dawning morrow, to sleep and to die. The Saints are trying to live godly in Christ notwithstanding this is about as bominable and wicked a country as is found on God's footstool. Many noble standard-bearers have been among us this last two years, such as Brn. Griffiths, Roberts, Chatburn, Anderson, Sheldon, Thomas, Bell, and Hölt. The Saints are scattered. Most of the midweek prayer-meetings are attended by the officers only. The pure snow-covered mountains, the vast ocean waters, the stately forests, the delightful sunshine, and gentle rains almost cause the rocks to shout forth in songs of praise, but with the sons of men this last-named substance is about zero. Men are wholly involved in the mad rush for place and earthly substance, or are carousing deep in vice and iniquity, with blunted minds and benumbed intellects.

After penning the above lines I felt like destroying the whole thing and not writing at all or else to rewrite at my leisure. But for several years it has been my good fortune (for which I praise God) not to have leisure. There is so much to read, so much to learn and search for, that work is piled up years ahead till it looks as if one needed a special lease of life to catch up. How grand the truth that we shall not sleep when disintegration frees our souls from this poor human incumbrance. I do not wish it to be understood that I condemn any one for the conditions I speak of by way of explanation. The sisters innocently desired to help keep the elders. The presiding officer held it not lawful, in fact an outrage; yet the Lord commanded the Nauvoo boarding-house to be built (see Doctrine and Covenants 107: 18), which, whether ran by tithing, donation, or what, was nevertheless a form of coöperation. Such was the bright idea of these good mothers of Zion, a place prepared where the elder could come and go, and feel always at home in a quiet place where nature had lavishly enthroned her most stupendous scenery. But human nature is so constituted that all can not yet see eye to eye. Rather than condemn the officer I would rather sympathize with him, and pat him on the back (for who would impugn the honest motives of any?) if it would ease his load or gladden his heart. It is to be hoped the sisters will recover and work with a might while the day lasts. Much more money could have been made had the work continued a full year. More tithing would have gone to the Bishop, and as a consequence more sheaves gathered by keeping an elder in the field; and, finally, Zion be nearer redeemed. When will the priesthood,—the Lord's holy priesthood,—cease from jealousy? When will the Saints cease from complaining and speaking guile? They are losing precious time. Their chances are slipping away.

Silence is golden if to speak would harm. If to speak will inspire to noble deeds, will encourage, strengthen, and bless, speak. The day has come when men will have enough to do to pick their own way, and lock to their own footsteps. If you are a strong climber, help the weak; bridge the crevasse that others may cross.

Editors Herald: I wish to give to your many readers, and to the world, a few facts relating to myself and work in my mission field for the last quarter. I must say there have been many things to encourage me; the dear Lord has given me his Spirit in my work for him, and I have rejoiced in God my Savior, and in the gospel of our salvation. Yet all has not been sunshine.

Bro. Joseph Ensley and I have been laboring together for the last quarter, doing all we could to spread the glad tidings of peace on earth and the good will of him that dwelt in the bush. Joseph and I have done some hard work this quarter. I have preached nearly sixty sermons, baptized one, and expect to baptize more this coming week.

But now, Bro. Editor, I come to one of the most shocking and disgraceful events that ever came under my notice, that is, to be done in the name of religion (or Christianity), and I shall give you the particulars just the way they came about.

The first of this month I sent an appointment to Brandsville, Missouri, to begin meeting on the 2d. But when we arrived we found a Reverend (?) B. D. McDonald, an evangelist of the so-called Christian Church, holding nightly meetings. We were introduced to him by a Mr. Clem with whom we put up for the night; but ere this would-be divine talked with us very long he got the spirit of their church and broke out on "Old Joe Smith was a sheep-thief; yes, an awful bad boy, for he sold hard-cider and gingerbread on the streets of Boston." He said that Joseph Smith taught "rotten doctrine," etc.; and when I asked him how he would prove such things, I was answered, "In discussion, sir." I kindly asked him if he would meet one of our men in debate; he said, "Yes, any time," and told me to write out the propositions. I informed him that I would have them ready for him to sign the next morning; but for some cause he took the eight o'clock local and ran up to West Plains, Missouri, the next morning. I left the propositions in the hands of Mr. Clem, telling him to hand one copy to McDonald to keep, and have him sign the other copy to be handed back to me, and that I would be back the next day to see about making some necessary arrangements for the debate. I also told Mr. Clem that I did not expect to meet the man myself, as I did not have the necessary books at hand.

The morning of the 3d Joseph and I were back at Brandsville, in the house of Mr. Clem. Presently Reverend (?) McDonald stepped in, advanced towards me, reaching out his hand, saying, "Well, you have come to meet the Campbellite preacher, have you?" "Yes," says I, "I have come to see you about this debate." He informed me that he was ready at once, whereupon I asked him for one copy of the proposition. He informed me that I could not have them, telling me that they were there in his grip and that I was not man enough physically or financially to get them. Thinking that he was trying to spread on a little, I told him that we would see, so I began to move as if to take off my overcoat, then we all had a laugh, and I told him that I did not want the papers as I had the original in my pocket. He would not believe it. I asked him if I would show him the paper if he would confess to a false statement. He said, "Yes." Whereupon I took out my day-book and unfolded one of Bro. I. N. White's propositions to Clark Braden, from which I had copied. He tried to patch things up a little, but finally flew into a rage and called me a liar, a Mormon, a polygamist, a s— of a b—, and a fool, and punched me a little in the ribs, whereupon I told him not to do that. Then he pulled open the door and told me to leave the house. I told him that I would go any time Mr. Clem said to. "Get out, d— you, or I will kill you right now," and started to get his revolver out of his grip, when Mr. Clem grappled with him,—begging him to be quiet, trying to tell him that he knew me, and that I was a gentleman, that I had stayed with him before, and preached in the town, etc.; he again shook his fist in my face and calling me the names previously mentioned, said, "Get out of this town or I will kill you; you are a d— deceiver." Then turning to Joseph, he said, "Now you take your chances and get out too, or I will kill you both."

Realizing that I was in the hands of a demon in human shape, and that my life was in danger, I told him (when he started to get his gun again) that I would leave the town. Joseph and I starting out the door, he followed and pushed us off the porch, telling us again, "Leave, or I will kill you," and as we turned the corner of the house I saw him going into the house again, as if to get his revolver, as Mr. Clem had prevented him from doing so up to this time; and just as we got on the outside he came rushing out after us swearing that he would kill us if we did not hurry out of town. We got into a buggy and started off, he following quite a distance making threats against our lives. We drove on to West Plains, and I swore out a writ for him, and the sheriff and detective have been on the lookout for him ever since.

McDonald is also a member of the anti-Mormon missionary gang, under R. B. Neal, D. H. Bays, and others. The railroad agent at Brandsville wired the sheriff that Reverend (?) McDonald got as drunk as a lord and left on the midnight train. I am told that he broke up his meeting, drank a good deal of wine, and had a time. Compare Campbellism and the anti-Mormon gang with that "bad boy" and his "hard cider and gingerbread." No more Campbellism for me, after I have raised the sheepskin and have seen the wolfhair. I am glad that there is something better than the anti-Mormon gang.

OTWAY, Ohio, December 13, 1904.

Editor Herald: I have been opening the work in Scioto and Adams Counties in places where the gospel "as restored by the angel" had not been heard. I have labored in seventeen new places and many have been delighted to hear the sound of the old Jerusalem doctrine; but they have been slow to obey it. After about eighteen months of hard work one man had courage to step out and obey; since then twenty-four others have been added to the church by baptism; and many others are investigating and will come, in time, if the work is looked after as it should be.

Bro. R. Etzenhouser was the first one to join me in Scioto County. He did some good preaching in the Crabtree settlement, and is remembered there by many who heard him ably defend the restored gospel. The writer baptized four, and Bro. F. J. Ebeling, the next to join me at that place, baptized one and made many friends to the work. He also visited this place and did good work, baptizing five; and the writer has baptized fourteen here. Bro. E. E. Long came to assist me and stayed ten days. He did some good preaching, and baptized one. The Saints and friends were glad to have him in their midst. Bro. Long had a rough introduction here. I had an appointment in a new place and he went with me. Some threats were made followed by some very bad behavior. The writer preached and left an appointment for the next night. Bro. Long and some of the brethren went to the place and found a mob at the door armed with stones and open knives swearing vengeance on the one that dared open the door. It was thought best by Bro. Long and others to let them have their way to save trouble, as we had friends there, and if one pass had been made, somebody would have been badly hurt, or perhaps killed; so they left the field and made a successful retreat, three miles, in good order, to the Bending Chapel where the writer had been holding forth to a peaceable and attentive congregation. The Saints were pleased to see the brethren return safe, as they were greatly troubled, for many threats had been made by these toughs,—a Baptist preacher at the head. Their names have been sent to the State's attorney of Adams County to be looked after.

I am not in my field of labor, that is, the Southeastern Mission. According to appointment I was to labor in Ohio District until October 1, then in the Southeastern Mission. I gave notice in due time to all authorities that I was ready to make the change, but to date have not received means to take me to my field of labor, and at present am snowed in in the same vicinity that I was caught in a snow-storm a year ago and where I contracted a severe cold that has troubled me for a year. At this writing have contracted another one, and it is with difficulty that I can speak above a whisper. The change came so sudden, from pleasant to near zero, that I was not able to stand the change without taking on an overload of cough fuel. Will try to reach home this week, and take a rest, as I have not had one since the first of May.

The way is opening all through this part of the district for preaching. The Lord is giving the people a desire to hear, and I find little or no trouble to get places to preach or hearers to listen. It only requires a little effort on the part of the preacher to find openings all over this part of the State. We need not sit with folded hands and expect some one to hunt us up to come and preach the gospel; we must move out into new fields and offer our services.

There was not a Saint in any of the new places in which I have labored. All were strangers, yet I have been kindly received and cared for, and the good Father has greatly blessed me in my work. I have enjoyed greater liberty in preaching the word than heretofore.

These are the closing days of my twenty-five-year experience in this grand and glorious gospel of the kingdom of God's dear Son. The longer I am in the work the brighter it shines, and I love the work all the more. May God speed the right,

At this writing I am kindly cared for at the home of Mr. S. B. Jones, not a member of the church, but a friend. I was taken to his home fifteen months ago when I first visited this place. He and his noble wife and family have always treated me kindly, and to-day four of the family are in the church, rejoicing in the truth. I am proud of the Saints here.

I served my country in the Civil War three years and seven months, and always delighted to be in the front on the firing line. And in this glorious warfare there is no place suits me better than going out and opening the work in new places, yet in some respects it is more pleasant to be with good Saints and have a good time, and have them hand you a few dimes as you need them, and not have to eat five cent meals on account of no means to do better. I hardly ever have the privilege of meeting with the Saints in the branches, and I am of the opinion if there was less branch visiting done by the missionary force, the law would be honored, and the world warned, and the honest in heart gathered all the sooner. There are fifteen or more counties in this district that have never heard a gospel sermon yet.

The work was planted in Ohio more than forty years ago. There are some places in the district where the paths of the preacher have been tramped so long and hard the grass can not grow, yet they seem to like to tread the old paths; and it is as impossible to reach the people in some of these places with the gospel as it is to wet a goose that is full-feathered by pouring water on its back. I think it time for the younger men to venture more, and let the old men stay close to shore. Jackson, Gallia, Lawrence, Vinton, Hocking, Athens, Pike, Meigs, and Highland Counties, and a few other places have been hearing the warning voice for the last twenty years, and they seem to be hardened. Let the Saints look after the work in these places and all make an effort to reach the places that have never heard the good news. I never feel like barking on a cold trail, or building on another's foundation. In this I may be a little peculiar, yet I prefer to do as the law directs, to go out into new fields and leave the branches to the local officers. Others can do as they think best. Some think they can not tramp the country and hunt for places to preach. The way must be prepared before them, and place waiting to receive them, so they can have a good place to put up at. I find plenty of places ready to receive me and give me a good home, and the people seem delighted to have me make my wants known, and more so after learning the good news, and entering the fold.

Well, old age and a feeble body will compel me to take a back seat in the winter months in this changeable climate. I am slow to step back. I do not like to give up the fight; but grit is not all that is needed.

In the faith and hoping to endure to the end,

T. J. BEATTY.

CHESTNUT, Montana, December 25, 1904.

Editors Herald: I have been endeavoring to discharge my duties faithfully as a minister for Christ, never letting an opportunity pass for accomplishing some good, always watching as well as praying that I may have the Spirit of the Lord to direct me in all my work, knowing that this is the Lord's work.

I have discovered that self is the greatest enemy that we have to contend with. When the Lord said, "Watch and pray," he intended that we should watch ourselves and not our neighbor. But it has become a custom in this age to keep a strict watch on our neighbor, and if we see him or her doing something that we think is not altogether right, then we put on our magnifying-glasses and make it as large as we can, then tell every one we meet what a great sinner neighbor so and so is. Of course we would not be guilty of such a thing ourselves.

When we do this, where are we? In the narrow or broad way, doing the will of the Lord or the will of Satan? "If ye love me, keep my commandments." "And this is my commandment, That ye love one another." Can I love the Lord and hate my brother or sister? The Lord said, "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy." Are we merciful when we find fault with every one? Are we justified in judging and condemning our brother contrary to the law, peradventure he may have done wrong? The Lord said that if your brother hath aught against you, go to him and make it right with him; but do not let us go and tell our troubles to others. I have taken the name of Jesus Christ. I was buried with him in baptism for the remission of my sins. Am I to continue in sin? God forbid. As I was buried in the likeness of his death, so shall I walk in newness of life, in the likeness of his resurrection. As my Savior subjected himself to the will of his Father in all things, I must bring myself in subjection to the law of God.

The Psalmist said, "The law of the Lord is perfect." Hence if we will bring ourselves into subjection to this perfect law we shall purify ourselves, even as he is pure. As ministers, we are sent out to preach the gospel, "teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." What effect will our preaching have unless we bring ourselves into subjection to the gospel law, and observe "all things whatsoever" the Lord has "commanded" us, as well as to preach them? I find that actions speak louder than words. As I expect the Lord to forgive my trespasses, I must forgive my brother his trespasses. As I expect mercy, I must be merciful. As I profess that I love the Lord, I must prove it by manifesting my love to the brethren. As I expect to receive the celestial reward, I must abide by the celestial law.

The year 1904 is at an end. What is the record we have made? How much have we improved spiritually? What success have we had in bringing self into subjection to the requirements of God? Where we were weak a year ago, are we strong to-day?

Let us look back over the past, and where we see that we have made a mistake, correct it in the coming year. Let us be coworkers with Christ, and then eternal life is sure.

Yours in bonds,

E. E. WILLIAMS.

HOLDENVILLE, Indian Territory, Dec. 26, 1904.

Dear Herald: Since writing my last letter I have been doing what I could in gospel work, most of the time in company with Bro. Sheppard. We have been able to do but little public preaching during the past three months. A large cotton crop has kept the people so busy that it has been impossible to get them to come out to meetings. Seeing all this loss, I thought I would risk a little, so I attended a Christian Adventist meeting.

The preacher preached on the signs of the coming of Christ. He said in his discourse, that if any one was a believer in Christ's second coming he was an Adventist. He gave an invitation for members. One lady united by letter; her husband requested baptism. The preacher had the two stand up. He then said all Christians regardless of name are invited to come and extend the right hand of fellowship. All went but myself. I sat still. My time came at last. I asked to make a few remarks, and make an announcement. My request was granted. I arose and made my announcement for preaching that night, as the preacher had said in his sermon he was done. I also called the people's attention to the fact that I was a firm believer in the second coming of the Lord, but if I was an Adventist I did not know it, and said in a clear, distinct way that I was certain I did not believe in the doctrine of the mortality of the soul. That was enough. The preacher jumped up, commenced to debate the question, and challenged me for debate. So I spoke up, saying that if he was going to debate the question I would like to have half of the time. So he stopped and we soon arranged for debate, set the time, wrote to Bro. Sheppard to come. He came and did the debating. When the time came to begin debate instead of Mr. Norman as their champion, as we expected, they sent for Mr. Fritz, of Oklahoma, their biggest man. I must say that if Fritz ever made a point I failed to see it. Large crowds, fine attention. Bro. Sheppard was greatly blessed with liberty and power over his opponent. I have witnessed many debates, but this is the most complete victory of any I have ever witnessed. This is one debate that the Lord had a hand in from start to finish. At the close D. B. Bay sent a challenge to Adventists, but he never breathed "Mormonism." We are all feeling happy over the debate; made lots of friends, got the gospel before more people than we could by preaching six months, from the fact they will not come to hear preaching, but they all come to a debate. Debates are a good thing when God is in them; but when he is not, what a failure is debate!

CHEROKEE, Kansas, December 28, 1904.

Editors Herald: Bro. William Kirk, of Sherwin, Kansas, and I have been laboring together in this region of country. We have had splendid meetings in every place visited. We occupied a few nights at Saints' chapel, near Sherwin, Kansas, Sherwin Branch is in a fine condition, spiritually, under the supervision of Bro. Taylor. Christmas eve they had a tree at the church, house overcrowded, tree loaded with presents.

I preached for them twice on Christmas. At night extra seats were brought in, house running over full, many outside at the windows and door, which were open, it being so warm.

Bro. Kirk has a good horse and buggy which we use. If all Saints were as sacrificing as he is, the work would soon spread far and wide. He lives to enjoy the Spirit, and does enjoy it.

In November I held a meeting at Ryan schoolhouse, in Clinton District, near where I obeyed the gospel about twenty years ago. It is near where we were "egged" when we obeyed the gospel. House was filled to utmost capacity; on Sunday night some turned away, could not get in. Every sermon I preached several were in tears. I baptized Mr. Weaver and wife, the wealthiest man in that section; many more almost ready for the water.

God's Spirit has been with me to a great degree in all of my labors this year. Let us all be diligent, working for the Master, laboring to build up Zion by living the celestial law.

DES MOINES, Iowa, December 28, 1904.

Editors Herald: To the church here in the city the closing year has been an eventful one. It has seen us locate in our new church-building and the special blessings of heaven have been bountifully bestowed upon us. The Lord has graciously blessed and remembered us in many ways and we feel that his approving smile has rested upon the efforts which his Saints have put forth during the year. The new building was contracted to be paid for in one year and thus far we have been able to meet our financial obligations, and this has only been by an earnest and united effort on the part of the Saints. Sometime during the coming year we hope to be ready for the dedication of our house of worship.

Christmas day, the Lord's day, was an enjoyable one to the Saints here. On Christmas eve the Sunday-school held Christmas exercises. On Christmas morning the Sunday-school met at ten o'clock and the attendance was up to the average. The election of officers took place and our assistant district superintendent, S. M. Reiste, was present. At eleven o'clock Elder J. F. Mintun preached a discourse very appropriate for the day. At six o'clock in the evening the Religio met. The study of the writings of Alma, the inspired man of God, prove more and more interesting as we continue them. At half past seven in the evening our district president, Elder S. K. Sorensen, was the speaker.

It is pleasing to note the interest manifested by so many of the Saints, and especially those coming into the city. There are some young people in the city attending college and they are regular attendants at the church. Some are teaching in the near-by towns and they come into the city and attend the Sunday services as often as they can. Some come to the city seeking employment and seek the church the first Sunday. This is as it should be.

The work in the district is in fairly good condition. The district conference is appointed to meet at Runnells, February 18 and 19. Let the Saints of the district make note of this.

The missionary force are busy all the time. Elder J. F. Mintun closed a twelve-night debate at Runnells on the 23d inst. with Reverend G. W. Roberts, the man with whom he debated at Marshalltown in September. Elder S. K. Sorensen acted as moderator for Elder Mintun. The holiday festivities are more attractive to the world than the gospel story so that missionary work is checked to some extent during this season.

During the year now drawing to a close we have come up on higher ground as a people. The work in this city has progressed as never before in any one year. The efforts of our city missionary are being felt for good. The press of the city has been very liberal with us and we feel that we have a standing in the city as a religious body that is attracting the attention of the world.

The vision of the work for 1905 opens before us in a broader field, one which will require more active laborers to keep in good cultivation the ground already broken; and rich fields as yet untouched lie all around us.

May the Lord of heaven give us all strength to occupy peacefully before him.

A. A. REAMS.

LOS ANGELES, California, December 29, 1904.

Editors Herald: In looking over my communication of November 30, in your issue of December 21, I feel that possibly an injustice may be done the Bishop in that I should have stated that during the present year the Bishop, after I had stated conditions to him, allowed my family to draw their allowance for three months, though at the time I was looking after other matters, with the understanding that I give as full attention to my church-work as lay in my power. This I endeavored to do. I will say that I consider that this has fully offset any former arrearage. The Saints here have generally known this, as I have publicly so informed them; but others not acquainted with the facts might come to the conclusion that the Bishop had dealt unjustly with me. I do not desire to cast reflections upon any one in anything which comes from my pen, and will never intentionally do so.

In this connection let me say that a perusal of the communication from Sr. David H. Smith, in a recent HERALD, entitled "The longing of thirty-four Christmas-tides," brings almost a blush of shame when we remember that at times in the years which have gone by we have sometimes been led to murmur because our lives have been cast in unpleasant places. No one but God can conceive of the suspense, the agony, the heart-breaks which were bound up in that long, weary wait of our loyal, uncomplaining sister. I would suggest that every one of us cut this clipping out and carry it around with us, and when we become despondent take it up, read and reread it. God bless our sister, and her noble son. May he be so blessed in body and mind that the unfilled ambition of his noble sire may be executed in a large degree in him.

Bro. Joseph Luff is improving slowly. Two weeks ago he preached for an hour standing on one leg, and, as far as the hearers could discern, his physical defect in no sense impaired his mental poise.

Bro. Charles Crumley, who by the way is well liked in this part of the mission, and is a man who evidences continued and steady growth, is soon to take his departure for Northern California. He is to be accompanied by his family, his objective point being Sacramento. We understand this change is made under the direction of the missionary in charge. We commend him to the Saints of the Northern district feeling that the work will be safe in his hands.

The Saints of the southland are much disappointed and pained over conditions necessitating Bro. Scott's hurried departure for home. While much relieved to learn that he is much improved in health, still we can not but feel disappointed in not having his labor from now until spring as we had been led to believe we would.

Bro. J. C. Clapp is some better, and is as eager and anxious for the welfare of the church as ever.

Good reports come from the efforts of Bro. Carmichael in the region of his home branch. He has been holding regular services in a number of contiguous points, and though the audiences have been small, yet some good has been accomplished. He expected to start east in the early part of February.

We have one hundred and fifty of Bro. Joseph Luff's latest books, comprising our share of the "Emma Tilton Memorial," and trust that every member in Southern California will avail himself of the opportunity of circulating these books. A postal card written me stating your wants will be promptly answered.

Our branch solicitor informs me that the Saints the past month have nobly responded in tithes and offerings, wiping out a deficit of over three hundred dollars, paying current allowances, and leaving a balance in the treasury of nearly a hundred dollars. Thus we will commence the new year with bright prospects.

Your brother in Christ,

3720 South Park Avenue.

LOS ANGELES, California, December 30, 1904.

Editors Herald: Permit me through your columns to correct some published mistakes and to answer a lot of private inquiries by letters regarding myself and my recent mishap.

Nearly six weeks of enforced confinement indoors has whetted my inclination for out-door privileges and my anxiety to get back to missionary work, and I hope to venture forth on my crutches in a few more days and start for other parts of this district, to do what I can in my crippled condition. Am the more anxious to do so, because I have lost four good men from my field in the last four months, and one other who was appointed has been prevented from coming this year. I must therefore remain, if only a third or half of an ordinary man's work can be done by me, in my condition. Have already preached once in this city since my accident. I suppose the picture was an odd one, as I stood on one foot, with my other knee flexed and resting on a chair close by, for three-quarters of an hour; but this was all behind the pulpit and only visible to the members of the choir behind me.

When thrown from the buggy during the runaway, my right leg must have in some way been caught between the box and the wheel, or such is the opinion of the attending physician, for the ankle was wrenched and the ligaments on both sides were torn and the tissues contused; so that an attempt to put the foot down resulted in a temporary displacement of the joint bones. Later it was discovered that the main bone of the leg was cracked transversely, about midway between the ankle and knee, though not displaced. I distinctly remember striking on my back, and have had several reminders of it since. My left wrist somehow worked itself into the melee and shared in the consequences slightly. The administration of the elders, after I was brought to my home at Bro. William Crumley's, resulted in the instant and complete removal of the immediate effects on my nervous system and the intensity of the pain. My back and wrist are now back into business after the old fashion, without any serious curtailments, and I hope the foot will have the good sense to follow suit before long. Crutches are not desirable adjuncts, but, like Adam's tumble from grace, are accepted as a kind of necessary nuisance.

Everything in the line of kindly attention and provision for my needs that could be desired has been lavished upon me by Bro. and Sr. Crumley and family, and the many visiting and inquiring Saints, for which they and the Lord have my unstinted gratitude.

Have no time to waste in complaining over the case. It may be a condition of masked good. Am told by some the Devil was after me, and some think it was a providential permission. It matters little to me which or if both are true. I was attending to my duty as a minister. That was my business. Let God and the Devil attend to theirs. If I occasionally must figure in the friction between them, it but reveals interest on both sides—not necessarily a bad sign. I supremely love the former and the work he has given me to do. I distinctly hate the works of the latter and want to help destroy them, and do not think I shall change my disposition along these lines, even though a host of mishaps occur to leave their disfiguring brand upon me. At least such is my earnest hope and sincere prayer.

The gospel work presses more closely upon my heart and commands my affection more and more profoundly as the years pass. Only those ignorant of its blessedness can dislike it. Jesus Christ, as viewed through the philosophy revived by the angel's message in this generation, is a miracle of loveliness—an eternal study—a perpetual revelation of majesty and glory. I shudder from the fear that my life misrepresents him, and would give worlds, if possessed, to know that I always pleased him. But I feel measurably happy in the consciousness that at least he understands me, and 'he remembers that we are but dust.'

May God bless all who are hungering for righteousness, and may he give the world appetite in that line.

JOSEPH LUFF.

Saints' Herald: I notice in the last HERALD, just received to-day, that some one has called in question the quotations I made from the Brighamite records in my tract, Necessity for Reorganization. I want to say that every quotation I made in that tract I took directly from the Brighamite publications. I did not quote from other writers but searched the records themselves. The quotation referred to in the HERALD, I took from a fragment of volume 8, Journal of Discourses. That fragment is now in the Historian's office, at Lamoni, I suppose, as I sent it to the Historian and it was not returned to me. I can assure the brethren that they can use that tract fearlessly and it will not fail them, so far as quotations are concerned, as I was very particular about it. A man does not have to lie about them to make out a case; all he needs is to tell the truth.

Yours for right,

SEMINOLE, Alabama, December 29, 1904.

Editor Herald: I can not say that all the Saints are alive to the work here, but some are looking forward to the time when the Lord will say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Dear Saints, to live just in this life, we should make more offerings to the beautiful work in which we are engaged, which is the true work of God. When we obey the commandments of the Lord, and trust him, and praise his name for every blessing that he bestows upon us, then we will receive spiritual light and knowledge, and can realize the source it comes from. But we never can prove the delights of his love until we lay all on the altar; for the favor he shows, and the joy he bestows are for them who will "trust and obey."

This part of the country is very thinly settled, but if the few here would only respond to the call of duty, the rising generation in this part of the Lord's vineyard could be brought up to a more perfect knowledge of the Lord and his work.

If I know myself I love this work. If we seek the Lord, faithfully, he will guide and direct us to a knowledge of the work that we ought to do. I have sold two copies of the Book of Mormon, and one Instructor, and have distributed some HERALDS and other literature. One man said that he was convinced and satisfied that this is the true and only work of God; and he said that a Baptist promised to come to his house and read all one week with him. I am satisfied that he will be baptized the first opportunity.

That I may remain in the work for good, is my prayer.

JAMES COOPER.

OTWAY, Ohio.

Editors Herald: I take the pleasure of writing a few lines to your valuable paper. I wish to speak in regard to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. It brings joy and comfort and peace to the soul, which the world can never give. I can not praise this work enough. I came into this work the 3d of July, 1903, and am truly glad I have found the true gospel of the kingdom. I was a member of the Baptist Church for about thirteen years before I found the true light; but have had more enjoyment in these few months than in all the rest of my life. We have persecution to contend with, but the grace of God will bring us out more than conqueror. We have no branch here, but think we will be organized soon. We have twenty members and are trusting in God, from whom all blessings flow. We were brought into the kingdom under the hands of Brn. T. J. Beatty, F. J. Ebeling, and E. E. Long.

Pray for us that we may endure to the end; "the same shall be saved." I thank God for the true light of this everlasting gospel, and that the angel flew through the midst of heaven declaring that this gospel should be preached to all nations, and then should the end come. May all of the dear Saints be ready, that this time come not on them as a thief in the night. May God bless and save us all in the kingdom is my prayer.

Yours in the faith,

THOMAS MITCHELL.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, December 31, 1904.

Dear Herald: I am happy to say that after a period of a little over one year in Joseph's land, we are still interested in the great latter-day work. Our confidence in this cause grows stronger continually, and we feel assured that it is no idle delusion, but a solemn reality. We have not always realized our anticipations in the work, but who of us has? There must of necessity be a complete resignation to our surrounding circumstances, and a goodly portion of the Holy Spirit to lead us to say, "Thy will be done."

The year 1904 has been fraught with great events. It is one in which the seeds of great things have been sown, the harvest of which sowing will be garnered by the nations in sadness, pain, and disaster on the one hand, and pleasure, peace, and joy, on the other. The sunshine of prosperity and shade of adversity have been over all; and what shall have been our record for good, for the year that is fast passing away into eternity? Can we truthfully say, We have done our part in every respect? Can we feel satisfied with ourselves, and say, should the question be asked, Yes, dear Lord, we have heeded your instructions wherein you have said, we were to feed the poor, clothe the naked, visit the sick, pay our tithes and offerings; and have failed not to lift our voice of warning in defense of the gospel?

I am very grateful to our heavenly Father that we are spared to live in this day and generation, to walk down time's vista one year nearer the time when we hope, by our faithfulness, to see the glorious advent of Christ.

We all are but weak mortals at the best, but what an amount of good we could do if we only sought and embraced the present opportunities! It has been recorded by the Master that we are to live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Shall this be our motto for 1905, or shall we be willing to have the pleasures of this world for a little season? May we all press forward, forward, in the good work of the Master, laboring together in unity and in love for the accomplishment of God's purposes intrusted to all, that we may be prepared for the coming of our Lord and Savior.

We are indeed thankful for the manifestation of God's love toward us since coming to this place, and from the evidences received we are satisfied that there were other than human agencies working for our good. We are also happy to say that the homesick ones have learned to appreciate this beautiful land, the choice of heaven, having no desire to ever make a permanent home in the land of our birth. Still sweet memories remain with us, of the happy times we have had with our brethren and sisters, both in England and Scotland.

May the Lord bless his people everywhere, and his ministers as they go forth battling against all kinds of obstacles and bearing much for the cause they represent.

Yours in gospel bonds,

1127 West Electric Street.

JOSEPH ARBER.

GALIEN, Michigan, December 31, 1904.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time, since I have written to the HERALD. This is not because of lack of interest, or indifference, but because I did not desire to infringe upon your valuable space.

That your readers might know that the Saints in this part of the field are still earnest and active for the success of this great cause, I write you.

The Galien Branch has now, within its border, three complete church-buildings. A neat little structure at Three Oaks was completed and dedicated a few years ago, largely through the efforts, and generous contributions of our noble and worthy Bro. Cyrus Thurston, who passed to the other side some few months ago.

The 11th of this present month a neat little chapel was dedicated at New Troy. The dedicatory sermon was delivered by Elder I. M. Smith. It was a clear and logical discourse, showing the character of the organization of the church, as organized by Christ in all dispensations. Elder Asa S. Cochran delivered the dedicatory prayer. The music was good. A number of the young people from Galien drove to New Troy to assist in the dedication. Upon the whole the exercises were a success, and the Saints were made to rejoice in the thought that another building had been completed, all obligations against it paid, and properly dedicated to the service of God.

The third building in this branch is located at Galien. It is a beautiful little edifice, and the Saints are putting forth every effort and living in abiding hope that soon the debt which is now against the building will be liquidated; and that the day may soon come when we can meet within its holy walls to set it apart and dedicate it to the services and uses of the gospel of our blessed Lord.

At the beginning of this present year, we had about twelve hundred dollars against it, and we will raise during the year besides the running expenses about four hundred dollars. When we began the year with the idea of raising four hundred dollars this present year it seemed a task too great for the few workers in this branch to accomplish, as we have but a very few active and earnest workers in the branch. Besides doing this, we have helped some on the church at New Troy, and also paid the portion assigned to this branch for the liquidation of the college debt. Neither have the Saints forgotten to pay their tithing and free-will offerings. I believe as this year draws to a close the Saints here will, to a marked degree, be found to be in a better condition spiritually and financially than in the past.

If the amount already received by the Bishop is not sufficient to entirely liquidate the college debt, the Saints here are ready to do their part, for we are deeply interested in the building up and maintaining of Graceland; and it cheers our hearts when we read in the HERALD and Ensign of the contributions of the isolated Saints, from nearly every part of the world where the gospel has been preached, who send in their contributions for the college, accompanied by their cheering words and earnest hope that Graceland may be continued, and that the church may not take a backward step in educational matters. The task of maintaining an educational institution of this kind is not impossible for the church, and is right in the line of building up the great cause of our blessed Master here upon the earth.

If this branch with scarcely more than half a dozen workers can raise nearly four hundred dollars in one year for payment on the obligation against their church at Galien, besides paying their tithes and free-will offerings, who will say that it is impossible for a church with fifty thousand membership to meet the requirements of the college?

We have heard it claimed that Graceland cost too much, and various other criticisms regarding its management. We have heard similar complaints about our little chapel here; but we have tried to do the best we could with the judgment that God has given us, and we propose to move forward with God's help, united, and pay for our little chapel, and we shall hail the day when we can dedicate it and set it apart to the service of God.

I know of no great movements for the advancement and betterment of the human race, but that they have had their difficulties and trials to overcome; and so I feel with Graceland as I do with the church, that in the face of discouragement and of difficulty, let the workers unite and earnestly move forward, and Graceland will triumph and the cause of education and truth will advance to the glory and honor of God throughout the earth.

I am in favor of the maintenance of Graceland, and I join with my brothers and sisters, who have written from various parts of the land, in the hope that her doors may never be closed, but that her work for good may continue.

Elder I. M. Smith has been with us for some time and has accomplished much good by his exemplary life and his clear, logical sermons. With abiding faith in the ultimate triumph of truth and righteousness I am,

In gospel bonds,
E. A. BLAKESLEE.

BRECKENRIDGE, Missouri, January 2, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have often thought of writing a letter to the HERALD or Ensign, but have refrained, thinking I could not write anything that would benefit any one. I was baptized at Armstrong, Kansas, in May, 1892, by Bro. Willard Smith; and sometimes when I think back over my life to the time when I first obeyed the gospel, I think that many times I have been very negligent, that I have not been as faithful as I should have been, but I have never regretted the step taken, as the hymn declares,

"With joy I remember the dawn of that day,
When led by the Spirit the truth to obey."

Neither do I doubt this work, for in the past when I have been faithful and have gone to my heavenly Father in prayer, earnestly, and have asked him for his blessings, I have felt the sweet, comforting influence of his Spirit, that made my heart glad. And of late it seems that many times I have felt the presence of the good Spirit near, and I have felt that none should be idle, but that we should seek diligently to do the will of our heavenly Father; that we should all be united, be one as he has commanded us. And if we will do this I feel that we may indeed receive great blessings.

Dear Saints, I love this work and earnestly desire to be faithful in doing any duty. We are not situated at present so we can enjoy church privileges. I often think I would love to meet with the Saints in a good meeting again. We are not taking either HERALD or Ensign at present, but through the kindness of my aunt have had quite a number of the church papers to read, and I very much enjoy reading the good letters from the brothers and sisters, also the other articles. We have a home class of six members and I think we are doing very well considering that not any of us have ever had any experience in that line.

I realize my weakness and desire an interest in your prayers that I may be faithful to the end, and my prayers shall ever be for God's people.

Your sister in the one faith,
LULA E. PHILLIPS.

WOODBURN, Indiana, January 1, 1905.

Editors Herald: This beautiful New Year's morning I will try to pacify my hungry soul by writing a few lines to the HERALD. It renewed our spirits by seeing Bro. S. W. L. Scott's and Bro. Adam Smith's letters in the HERALD last evening, as we are isolated, the nearest Saints being at Antwerp, Ohio.

The children go to the Methodist Sunday-school and church. They often wish they could go to the Saints' Sunday-school instead. We would like to hear from Bro. E. H. Durand, or J. R. Beckley, or James E. Kelley.

We are living in a German Lutheran neighborhood; their big brick church is just a few rods from our house. When I hear the bell, I often think it is too bad it is not of our own faith. Three of my children and husband have not accepted the gospel yet. I can not see why they put it off so long. Our oldest son was married last fall, and has moved to Traverse City. I wish some one could call on them; I believe they would go to church if they knew where to go. They live on West Sixteenth Street, 325. His name is Edwin Davis. I will close praying that the Lord of the harvest will send forth more laborers, that the gospel may be brought here sometime in the near future. It has never been preached here yet.

Your sister in the one faith,
MRS. A. V. DAVIS.

BELDING, Michigan, January 3, 1905.

Editors Herald: We last wrote you from Lawton, Michigan, enroute to Bronson, Michigan. We occupied the Maccabee Hall at the latter place with very attentive audiences. There is a people at that point who will take hold of the gospel plow after a little. We expect to return there the last of this month. We came to this city of silk December 29, 1904. Began services the same evening in a hall hired by the Saints, but being a city of silk-mills, the denizens thereof are too fine to hear the latter-day evangel; audiences not large save Sunday evenings. We are lodging with Bro. and Sr. Garver, who are staunch Saints, and are looking forward for the salvation to be revealed at the coming of Christ. Their kindness is proverbial, and their house has merited the characterization of "orphans' home." The good Lord will reward them. The branch is presided over by Elder Hill, and Bro. Garver is priest. The silk-mills of this city employ about fifteen hundred ladies, who receive from eighty cents to one dollar and fifty cents a day. Wages of all classes are very low here, and as long as our own American workmen persist in cutting wages down, we ought not quarrel about immigration laws, or "Dago" contract labor. But I am reminded of the "oppression of hirelings in their wages" as a sign of the coming of Christ "near to judgment," and this sign must take its place right along with others. But the saddest and most prominent sign of the near approach of the Savior, is the sleepy, drowsy, and indifferent condition of a large portion of Saints. Is it a fact that the Lord will have to appoint the portion of so many among the objectionable class called hypocrites? (See Matthew 24:45-51.) Saints, do we not by act declare, "My Lord delayeth his coming"? Are we drifting? Do we "eat, and drink with drunken"? Are we looking for the day which hasteth greatly? While the indications are that Gentile times are closing, and the hand of God is spread over all the century, and we the custodians of the "salt" which saves, of the light which illuminates, is it possible that the "salt" has "lost savor," and the "light become darkness"? If so, we will go down in the perishing of mystery Babylon in the hour of God's judgment. "Awake thou that sleepest; arise from the dead, and Christ will give thee light." "Put on the whole armor of God."

Saints, the gospel has been restored by angelic ministration. Its public administration has been to all the world. "The light"—the "fullness of the gospel," has broken "out among the Gentiles," and they "will not receive it." Their opportunities for receiving the light, they will not avail themselves of. What follows? Simply this: "The kingdom of God will be taken away from you, and given to a nation [the Jews] bringing forth the fruits thereof." Such period is now on. One hundred and forty-five thousand Jews are now in old Palestine. Their land has been smitten by the restoration power of God, and it, in its restored condition, stands forth as a pledge of the final restoration of the entire earth. Is there any time for sleeping, surfeiting, or condemnable indifference? "The day of the Lord will come as a thief"—"as a snare upon all the world." Now you do not know of a thief's presence until he has broken open the window, and stands over your bed with mask on, and brace of revolvers flashing in your face—unless you are watching. Yet sedulously and unprepared, will the Lord be ushered in on us, if we permit present conditions to continue. "Blessed is he that . . . keepeth his garments." We are trying to keep up action. Love to all. Malice to none.

Hopefully,

BRADFORD, England, December 20, 1904.

Dear Herald: Feeling blessed by reading your pages I send a little history of the work of the Lord in this part of the world. Something like about fifteen years ago in a soap works at Bradford, Manchester, worked two young men, one a member of the Church of England choir, the other a member of the Independent Methodist Church. A death occurred that greatly affected the choir member, who up to this time, with many of his colleagues, believed it right to do a little concert singing and even racing for a wager. But now there was awakened within a deeper feeling, and inquiry was made about conversion and what it meant. He saw himself a sinner, and Christ his Savior. Then he seemed to see that the clergyman and the Sunday-school teachers were at fault. Trying to reform things got himself a bad name. He gave it up and joined the Primitive Methodists. About this time there came a people with canvas tent into the neighborhood, preaching baptism by immersion. They are known in the sectarian world as the Christian Brethren, but the only title they own is, "Gathered out to the name of the Lord." The Bible being so clear on baptism by immersion, the young chorister was baptized. Ultimately the other followed. The canvas tent was replaced by a wooden one, a little larger. The young Methodist had been sick for a long time, and as a last resource the doctor ordered him to a convalescent home at the sea-side. While away from home a stranger appeared in the neighborhood, a very tottering old man, went to a shop kept by some friends to buy a loaf of bread and began to talk about the latter-day work. Friends, and wife, began to get interested and a meeting was arranged to be held in the shop; and all being women, the young chorister, hearing of it and knowing they were Latter Day Saints, went to the meeting to take care of the sick man's wife in his absence; but the teaching got hold of them all. They were given some literature to read which created a spirit of inquiry. The old man hearing of Bible readings being held in the wooden tent, went and asked several questions, privilege being given. He seemed to be well received, so made arrangements with several of his brethren to come along with him to the meeting, our worthy Bro. Dew-snup, Sr., being one of them. Meantime the story got out that they were Latter Day Saints. Anyhow, they went to the meeting, which was opened, and then some one got up and asked if there were any Latter Day Saints in the room, and demanded an answer. Then they were told to leave the room. Bro. Dew-snup tried to get the reason, but to no avail; they must go out. So out they went, some of the members with them. As they stood in the street the old man said, "Never mind, brethren, the very place will be ours yet," or words to that effect. On the Sunday night following another meeting was held in the shop by the old man and his brethren. The young chorister favored the Latter Day Saints, consequently his name was read out as a heretic. He, however, kept the young Independent Methodist informed of things as they took place, who after a few weeks returned home, and arrangements were made for a meeting to be held in his house, so that he might hear for himself. After this he had a visit from the "oversight" brethren from the tent, and upon questioning them as to authority, and as to baptism being for the remission of sins, was told that he was going to hell fast; and the Sunday following, his name was read out as a heretic.

Both working at the same works, they spoke often through the day to each other about the latter-day work, and compared what they heard with the Bible, and then, when convinced that it was scriptural, gave their names in for baptism. Arriving at the baths Apostle Gomer Griffiths was there and baptized them. On Sunday morning at the confirmation, great was the power manifested; the old man again and again stating that the Lord had told him he would have his work established in Bradford. In a few weeks time there was thought to be sufficient interest in Bradford to organize a mission, and one was started in the little shop. Then a Sunday-school was organized in the young Methodist's house, and the two young men left in charge. In a few months it was thought advisable to look for a room. One was found in the same street as the old man lived, and was taken on a five-year lease, and a branch was organized. The Saints agreed to pay three pence each week, and this was kept up until about eighty pounds were raised. In the meantime the old man had died and his prophecy was forgotten, when one day one of the members of the tent we were turned out of came and asked them if they would buy it. Two of the brethren went to see the tent, and a meeting was called, and they agreed to buy it. While bargaining for it, another man came into the room and offered one pound more than the Latter Day Saints would give. And although the men who asked them to buy the tent professed to believe that they were heretics, no one else must have it. Thus the word of the Lord uttered by a poor old man of which the world thought very little, living in a very humble front room of a small cottage, must be fulfilled. Praise the Lord. Since purchasing the tent the Saints have bought the plot of land on which it is erected, at a cost of two hundred pounds, and spent about fifty pounds in alterations and painting. The last quarterly conference of the Manchester District was held in the same building.

The friends at the shop referred to was the home of our Srs. Knott and Koads. The old man so often referred to was our dear old Bro. Clark; father of our present Bro. Clark of Stockport Road. The young chorister, our dear Bro. Thomas Taylor, missionary and president of the Leeds District. The young Independent Methodist, the writer,

Detroit Items.

The Lord's work is steadily progressing in Detroit, and the Spirit of "Peace on earth, good will toward men" seems to reign in the Evergreen Branch. The Saints have purchased from our Episcopalian neighbors a nice little church-building. It is beautifully situated in the central part of the city, corner Fourth and Hancock Avenues, convenient to several street-car lines. Bro. F. H. Brooks accidentally discovered the chance to purchase the building, and, being one of the trustees, speedily secured it at a bargain. To our faithful sisters is largely due the credit of having the ready cash to secure the prize. In their Ladies' Aid and Willing Helpers Societies, they have labored unceasingly to secure a house of worship of our own, and God has blessed their efforts thus far. We hope to secure the land upon which the church stands, in time.

DETROIT CORRESPONDENT.

Extracts from Letters.

J. L. Mortimer, Millit P. O., Alta.; Northwest Territory: "We had President R. C. Evans in this great Northwest Mission for about a month, and while here he organized two branches, one in Manitoba, known as the Rossendale Branch, and one in Assiniboia known as the Weyburn Branch; he was liked by all the Saints, and a great many of the 'outsiders' expressed regard for him, and many said, 'Surely, he is a man of God.' He did a great deal of good, and gave some grand counsel to the Saints, both for their spiritual and temporal welfare. While here he baptized four, ordained four, and gathered much tithing. Many of the Saints got an understanding of tithing, and have made a start in that way. His work here will never be forgotten."

Charles E. Irwin, Wilburton, Indian Territory: "I have been holding a series of meetings here, assisted by Bro. J. D. Erwin, which have been the means of interesting some of the 'outsiders,' and I trust will be profitable to the Saints. From here I go to Coalgate to hold a series of meetings there. This is a fine climate. The past week has been unusually warm, temperature averaging about sixty. Flies and mosquitoes have been quite numerous. Wilburton is one of the most flourishing towns of the South with a steady growth and about eight thousand population. Christmas day was extremely warm, no fires in the houses, and doors open. This is the climate for cold-blooded Northerners like myself."

Bro. Peter Muceus in a letter to Bishop Kelley dated Christiana, Norway, December 6, 1904: "The Saints are doing well as a rule in this mission, and the work is in pretty fair condition; but in this city prospects are not very bright, still we are hopeful. If I do not succeed in accomplishing much here this winter, I shall not remain, but go on to other places where people will hear. Being bound to this place I can not travel as I would like to do. Hope to receive help by next conference. My family is well and we feel encouraged."

Bro. J. R. Beckley, appointed to the Kirtland District, Ohio, by the last General Conference, has for cause been released from said field by the missionary in charge, Bro. U. W. Greene. Said release is hereby ratified and notice given of such release for the remainder of the conference year, subject to action of the spring conference of 1905.

Independence Stake.

To Branch Presidents, Clerks, and Members at Large in Independence Stake: Your attention is called to the fact that many errors occur in statistical reports, usually traced to carelessness in copying from baptismal certificates to records and from records to letters of removal and vice versa; failure to procure or be furnished by officers with items of baptisms, confirmation, ordination, births, and marriages complete in names, dates, place, and all names of those officiating. This can be remedied by exercising particular care in making out your reports. In taking letters of removal, scan them very carefully; make sure that there is no mistake in them. This will save expense, time, and vexation to those who keep the records. In the environs of Kansas City there are seven branches, viz: Independence, First Kansas City, Second Kansas City, Northeast Kansas City, in Missouri; Armstrong, Cnelsea Park, and Argentine in Kansas, so in making out or taking letters of removal be sure the branch in which you desire to locate is indicated. This is a metropolitan community, a large per cent of members moving from branch to branch as inclination and business pursuits impel them; so to avoid mistakes we should be very careful along above lines. Also be prompt in answering any communications from the stake secretary, W. S. Brown, 2143 Belleview Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri.

Second Quorum of Seventy.

Blanks for reporting will be sent to all the members. All those having changed their address from that given in last circular letter (No. 4) will please inform me of present address. Write me at Holden, Missouri, Box 396.

H. E. MOLER, Secretary.

Correction.

Under extracts from letters, Volume 51, page 1224, we should have named W. S. Jenkins as writing from Cleveland, Iowa, instead of Cleveland, Ohio.

Conference Notices.

The conference of the Oklahoma District will convene with the Canadian Center Branch on February 18, 1905, 10 o'clock a. m. A full report, and a good representation is desired, as there is important business to transact. H. F. Durphy, secretary.

Don't Fret Over the Inevitable.

If we always do our best at a given moment, we must let the event justify our wisdom or accenuate our folly without too much useless lamentation. We are fallible and we shall make mistakes. But we are not making them on purpose, and so we are not to grieve when it is too late, let occur what may. If we had not sent little Eunice to school last summer she probably would not have caught the whooping-cough, and if we had not bought the new house we should not have had to mortgage the old one. If we had kept our wits about us we would not have jumped from the carriage the day the horse ran away. If we had only said no instead of yes one day long ago, or yes instead of no, our whole lives would have been different. In this uselessly confusing round we may circle without ever arriving anywhere. So long as time endures, history will repeat itself, and there will be wasted endeavor and a sense of disappointment in some parts of our life.

Miserable Condition of Factory Workers in England.

But bad as the conditions were inside the factories, they were usually worse in the working people's homes. Housing accommodations were hopelessly inadequate. Whole families huddled together in cellars and attics. Even as late as Queen Victoria's time it is said that in Manchester one tenth of the total population lived in cellars, often reeking with stagnant filth and breeding fevers which kept the physicians of the city taxed to the utmost. The physique of the factory laborers, especially the women, began rapidly to degenerate, and the death-rate became appallingly high. It is clearly within the truth to say that the life of the negro slave in the southern United States was easy indeed compared with that of the North England factory laborer in the first quarter of the nineteenth century. The negro had at least plenty of fresh air, substantial food, and hours for rest, while the factory workmen had none of these. Even the external form of slavery was pretty well duplicated in the terrible traffic in orphan and pauper children by which the operators kept up the supply of cheap labor for their mills. And whereas the epithet "factory girl" had for a time been regarded as little better than one of insult, dire necessity compelled thousands of girls from families hitherto in comfortable circumstances to enter upon the hazardous life of the mills. When the wages of workingmen were reduced to a starvation level they were compelled to consent to the breaking up of their homes and the employment of their wives and children in factories.—From "England and the Industrial Revolution," by Frederic Austin Ogg, in the Chautauquan for January.

Irrigation is Profitable in the Humid Parts of the United States.

The advantages of irrigation in the humid climates, merely as a supplement to rainfall in ordinary or extra dry seasons, are forcibly presented in Bulletin No. 148 of the Office of Experiment Stations recently issued by the United States Department of Agriculture. The reports of a number of irrigation plants in the vicinities of eastern cities go far to show that as population increases and land becomes more valuable the zone in which irrigation can be profitably employed will be extended, as it has been in Europe where the farmers have found that there are few sections where irrigation will not pay simply as an insurance against drought.

The bulletin states that a grower of berries in the vicinity of Poughkeepsie, New York, has found that artificial watering guarantees a perfect stand and rapid growth of newly set plants, the highest quality of product, and maximum crops. Owing to dry weather and high temperature during the season of 1903 his berries had colored and hardened but did not sweeten. The application of 10,000 gallons of water in a fine spray and 25,000 gallons between the rows put the berries in fine condition for picking. He also found that to irrigate after applying chemical fertilizers dissolves and distributes the plant-food and lessens the danger of injury to plants.

To water market gardens near New York City, on Long Island, and in New Jersey, small plants consisting of pumps, storage-tanks, and piping are used with such success that their owners claim large returns on the money invested. One man stated that he would not attempt to garden for profit without such an assurance of plenty of water when needed. Some gardeners buy water from city supplies and find it more satisfactory than to install their own pumping-plant.

Descriptions of pumping-plants of various sizes and styles with their storage basins and distributing pipes are given in this bulletin so that those intending to try artificial watering may profit by the experience of several successful irrigators.

Striking testimony in favor of irrigation is furnished by the careful comparison of crops from irrigated and unirrigated plots of strawberries, asparagus, nursery stock, and onions at the Missouri Agricultural Experiment Station. Not only were yields larger, but in the case of asparagus unirrigated rows were affected with rust while the irrigated plants were entirely free from the disease.

A portion of South Dakota which is noticeably benefited by a supplementary water supply lies in the James River Valley. In the first attempts to utilize this supply of underground water, wells were made so large that the excessive cost resulted in financial loss. Within the last year or two the plan of sinking one and one half to two inch wells has been tried and its success is leading to their extended use. A good two inch well will furnish water for half a section of land. An oversupply of water in the first experiments produced conditions that prejudiced many farmers against the practice, but later tests show that no injury need be feared where water is properly used. All cases of deterioration are directly traceable to an oversupply of water. An excessive amount of water in the soil will smother the rootlets and on evaporation will leave a deposit of salt, so that care must be taken that the soil does not become too wet.

The bulletin as a whole shows the great advantage of irrigation as a means of increasing production and as an insurance against drought, even where the expense of securing a water supply is great.

So says Bro. I. M. Dungan of Woodbine, Iowa. Writing July 3, 1904, says: "After having used tobacco for 30 years I feel that I am thoroughly cured of the habit by the use of your 'Quit-to-bac.' I commenced using 'Quit-to-bac' March 8, 1901, and used two and one half boxes, and have had no desire for the past two months, my health is better every way and I feel like a new man. I feel that I can not speak too highly of the merits of 'Quit-to-bac,' for I believe 'Quit-to-bac' to be a God-given remedy, that it will cure one of the most filthy and useless habits Satan ever invented; therefore I unqualifiedly recommend it to all addicted to the use of tobacco in any form, and will cheerfully answer inquiries from any one as to my case—how I treated myself, etc. If a stamp is inclosed. FALSE RUMOR OF J. W. GILLEN'S DEATH.

Considerable comment was caused in Lamoni this week by a news item in some of the Kansas City papers to the effect that a body in the morgue at Joplin, Missouri, had been identified as that of James W. Gillen, who mysteriously disappeared a few years ago. A fair sample of the news item in various papers is the following from the Kansas City Journal of January 14:

Reverend J. W. Gillen, formerly of Independence, who was found in a morgue at Joplin, Missouri, by his son, A. B. Gillen, was formerly an apostle in the Latter Day Saints' Church. His son claims to have had a spiritual vision of his father which enabled him to locate him, he having been missing for a number of years and was mourned by his family as dead. Reverend Mr. Gillen was one of the twelve apostles in the church of the Latter Day Saints, and in this standing was next to the president, Joseph Smith. It is claimed a divine revelation from God in 1887 raised Reverend Mr. Gillen to the apostolate in the church. He was sent to Europe and placed in charge of the British Isle missions, so great was his power.

Up to the time that he wrote his resignation from the apostolate of the church, a few letters to friends over the country, and then disappeared from the Union depot at St. Louis, where he went, he had stood high in the councils of the church. So sudden and mysterious was his disappearance that a search was made of the entire country by the man's friends and the church, but he was never located. The letters he wrote were on the stationery of a Kansas City hotel. One of the members of the church at Independence yesterday stated that no charges had ever been brought against Gillen and the members were unable to understand why he had so suddenly disappeared.

A special effort to locate the missing man was made by President Joseph Smith, of the Latter Day Saints' Church.

Owing to the fact that nothing definite has ever been heard concerning Bro. J. W. Gillen since his disappearance, except occasional unfounded and unreliable rumors, this news item caused some stir among the Saints here and the friends and relatives of the man who had so mysteriously and completely disappeared, and definite news was keenly watched for. Bro. Arthur Gillen, of Kansas City, went to Joplin, and on the 16th Bro. S. E. Ballou, of Lamoni, Iowa, a son-in-law of Bro. J. W. Gillen, received the following from Bro. J. D. Briggs, of Independence, Missouri, also a son-in-law of Bro. Gillen, dated January 14:

Arthur just home from Joplin, and he found there is nothing in the report, further than that some man, who resembled J. W. Gillen a little, had died there, and Byron felt that as he had not seen his father for so long he might be mistaken if he let it pass without some one coming. It seems he (Byron) had sometime past dreamed that he met his father on Fourth Street, and this story of a "vision," etc., all came from that. He did not identify the remains at all. Some reporter drew from the undertaker the foregoing items, and then, we suppose, enlarged thereon.

PRESIDENT DEWSNUP HONORED. CHANGES IN GRACELAND FACULTY.

On Monday, the 16th, there occurred some changes in the faculty of Graceland College which are noteworthy; that is, the culmination of these changes was reached then.

Last fall President Ernest R. Dewsnap was called to the University of Chicago to deliver a series of special lectures in the line of his specialty, railway economics, and the Graceland board of trustees arranged to grant him the necessary leave of absence. Evidently his work at Chicago was satisfactory to the authorities at Chicago University, for recently he was offered a professorship in railway economics at a salary several times greater than that for which he was serving Graceland. Of this he promptly informed the Graceland board of trustees, and reaching an understanding with them, he has decided to accept the proffered professorship, and on Monday evening left with his family for Chicago.

This does not mean that President Dewsnap has severed his connection with Graceland. He is still in control of the school as president, and will continue to meet with the board of trustees and the faculty of Graceland at their regular meetings, his work at Chicago being arranged with that end in view.

We are pleased though not at all surprised that President Dewsnap is thus honored by Chicago. As an educator he has excellent qualities, and as a specialist in economics he has ability which is now well recognized in the United States as well as in England. At Chicago he will be able to work entirely in his chosen line, an opportunity he would not have for some time yet at Graceland. Retaining as he has the guiding control of Graceland's affairs, while having the opportunity to work in a way which will bring him merited recognition in the circles of American universities, a distinction already enjoyed by him in England, will, we think, ultimately redound to great good to Graceland. This affords us pleasure as well as the fact that we are glad from the standpoint of friendship that the sterling worth of Bro. Dewsnap as an educator is thus so markedly recognized.

This change in the status of our faculty necessitated another. It was necessary to appoint some one as vice-president through whom President Dewsnap could keep closely in touch with the workings of the school, and who will be held responsible under the president, therefor. This appointment fell, very worthily we think, upon Professor R. M. Stewart, a young but enthusiastic and zealous educator who came to us from the State University of Iowa, very highly recommended, and whose good work in Graceland so far has proven the accuracy of the recommendation.

The work in Graceland will go forward for the remainder of the year without a "hitch." As to its work beyond this year we can not at present say. That is contingent upon—well, several factors.

THE AMANA SOCIETY.

In Iowa County, Iowa, there is a body of people about whom there has been much written and said, because of their peculiar beliefs in a religious way, their appearance so far as dress is concerned, and also because of their communistic ideas and practices. We have seen many articles written about them, purporting to give a history of their organization, a description of their belief, etc., but because we know so well how inadequate too many of these newspaper writers are to give a fair account in such matters, because of the unfortunate tendency to the sensational so common to our newspapers to-day, and further because there seems to be in the average man and writer a personal element which will not permit him to write unbiasedly and creates a tendency to make light of what is out of harmony with the writer's belief and ideas, we have not had a desire to present to our readers the articles which we have seen. Last April, however, there appeared in the Iowa Journal of History and Politics, the organ of the State Historical Society, of Iowa City, whose editor is Mr. Benjamin F. Shambaugh, an article over the signature of one of the members of the Amana Society, which gave a brief history of the Society. We at once wrote for permission to reproduce the article for the benefit of the HERALD readers, and from Mr. Shambaugh received a kindly permission so far as the Iowa Journal of History and Politics is concerned. We regret that from the author we did not receive permission to use his name in connection with the article.

Concerning the article Mr. Shambaugh wrote in the Journal: "The unique value of this account of the Amana Society, or Community of True Inspiration, lies in the fact that it is written from the viewpoint and in the spirit of the Community and by a highly respected member of the Society."

We shall take pleasure in presenting this article to our readers soon, probably in next issue, and feel sure that it will be found of considerable interest.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH went to Independence, Missouri, on the 5th inst., to attend the funeral of Bro. Bradbury Robinson. He returned on the 12th, since which date he has been confined to his home by a slight local indisposition. He expected to return to the office on the 17th.

GRACELAND NOTES.

Bro. Robert Owen of Zamboanga, Philippine Islands, manifests his interest in the educational institution of the church by forwarding to Elder R. M. Elvin two dollars and fifty cents to be applied on debt.

The following bishops and agents have sent in good contributions recently:

Thomas Taylor, bishop, British Isles, $94.25.

James Huff, agent, Northern Nebraska District, $110.15.

J. H. Tyrrell, agent, Chatham, Ontario, District, $115.45.

C. J. Hunt, bishop, Gallands Grove District, $321.75.

W. C. Griffin, agent, Minnesota District, $55.

R. C. Evans, agent, London, Ontario, District, $711.02.

William Sparling, agent, North Dakota District, $75.

A. Carmichael, agent, Southern California District, $120.

Thomas W. Chatburn, for Spokane District, $60.

Total receipts on college debt since May 1, 1904, is $10,435.34. If contributions continue to come in as they have in the past month, the college debt will soon be a thing of the past.

Among the late additions to the museum are a stone trumpet from the Nauvoo Temple, donated by the Religio of the Second Kansas City, Missouri, Branch, and an English sovereign by Bro. Daniel S. Jones of Saints' Home, bearing date of the reign of George III.

 EDITORIAL ITEMS.

In the days when the church was in Nauvoo there was a Masonic lodge organized in Nauvoo under a charter from the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Subsequently it became disorganized, and the whereabouts of the records of the lodge is not known. Any one possessing information as to these records will confer a favor by writing such information either to the Editors of the HERALD or to Joseph E. Morcombe, Cedar Rapids, Iowa. There are some historical matters connected therewith which Mr. Morcombe is desirous of tracing.

Elder J. W. Wight lately held a discussion with Elder Popplewell of the Church of Christ, at Hatfield, Missouri, beginning January 2, and closing the 8th. Four propositions, involving the claims of the two churches to be in harmony in organization, doctrine, and practice with the New Testament, also claims of the Book of Mormon to divinity, and the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith were discussed. Elder McClure acted as moderator for Elder Popplewell, and Elder Columbus Scott for Bro. Wight, Doctor J. S. Allison of Hatfield being chairman. Both contestants were commended for their gentlemanly demeanor during the debate. Elder Popplewell did one reprehensible thing in his closing speech, in advising the audience not to read Latter Day Saint literature. Apparently he would seek to place them in the role of those of whom the wise man spake: "He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him."

Elder J. F. Mintun, also, has been engaged in theological combat with W. G. Roberts, of Center Point, Iowa. Mr. Collins, Elder Roberts' moderator, requested that they have charge of the sessions when they were in the affirmative, and this was granted with the understanding that Bro. Mintun and his moderator have charge when they were in the affirmative. "Mr. Collins then stated that they did not believe in the use of the organ," says Bro. Mintun, "and asked that it be not used while he had charge, and the singing can better be imagined than described, but when we began our affirmation we presented a few scriptures as a reason why we believed in the use of the reed and stringed instrument, and the chairman, Mr. Miller, who is an excellent violinist, used the stringed instrument, and different ones presided at the organ." The people during the debate gave good attention, and showed proper respect. The chairman was a man of good judgment, and was not afraid to express his convictions. Bro. Sorensen did well as a moderator for Bro. Mintun.

The Des Moines Daily Capital, January 14, 1905, contains this item of news: "The following has been signed by every priest in active work in the Episcopal diocese of Kansas City: 'We, the undersigned clergy, in view of the magnitude of the divorce evil, do hereby give notice to all whom it may concern that we will not solemnize holy matrimony in any case in which either party has a husband or wife living who has been divorced for any cause arising after marriage.'"

We learn by the Burlington Hawkeye that a new baptistery has recently been installed in the Latter Day Saints' church at Burlington, and was dedicated at the weekly prayer-meeting, baptism being administered at the close of the service. It states further: "The pastor [who is Bro. Elbert A. Smith] reports a decided growth in spirituality and earnestness among the membership during the past few months."

Your earnest prayers with fasting are asked in behalf of Sr. Essie Smith and child, of Mt. Vernon, Washington. They are sorely afflicted and need immediate help.

Much has been written in regard to the mysterious number 666 in Revelation 13:18; but the latest is from the pen of J. W. Chism of the Non-progressive wing of the Campbellite Church of Norman, Oklahoma. Mr. Chism claims to be a Greek scholar and his works are full of quotations from what he calls "the original Greek." Mr. Chism also claims to be a wise man. I quote from his work Campbellism—What Is It? issued in 1901 from the Gospel Advocate publishing house, Nashville, Tennessee. Mr. Chism says: "But, says one, do you profess to be wise? I answer most emphatically: I do." — Page 195. According to Mr. Chism's claims, then, we can not attribute any blunders he may make to ignorance, but to willful misrepresentation.

In the discussions which have been held between Mr. Chism and various elders of the Latter Day Saint Church, he has made the claim that Joseph Smith was the man represented in Revelation 13, by the number 666 and he has gone on record in the work from which we have already quoted to this effect. On page 214 he gives the name of Joseph Smith thus: "J plus o plus s plus e plus ph plus S plus m plus i plus th plus i; Greek value as a number: 10 plus 70 plus 6 plus 5 plus 500 plus 6 plus 40 plus 10 plus 9 plus 10 equal 666. Let him that has wisdom count the number of the beast, then count the image. Beast equals Episcopus, 666. Beast-man, Latinus equals 666. Image, Episcopus equals 666. Image-man, Joseph Smith equals 666. I am yours for the whole truth. J. W. Chism."

Job was far-seeing when he exclaimed, "Oh . . . that mine adversary had written a book." Our enemy has written a book and openly committed himself. You will notice that Mr. Chism adds an "i" to the name of Smith. He claims that this is necessary in order to give a Greek ending to the name. But notice that he does not give a similar Greek ending to the name of Joseph for that would spoil his theory by adding 10 to the number making it 676. He was too "wise" to spoil his theory that way. But it is obvious to every one that cares for the "whole truth," that if it takes an "i" to give Smith a Greek ending it would need an "i" to give Joseph a Greek ending too.

When I first heard Mr. Chism use this theory in his discussion with Bro. C. Scott, I made up my mind that it was not a true one, and I set myself to prove it false. I knew nothing about Greek, and know but little now; but in a second-hand book-store in San Antonio, Texas, I found a Greek grammar written by "Alpheus Crosby, professor of the Greek language and literature in Dartmouth College, second edition, 1847," and giving the Greek alphabet with English or Roman equivalent, also the numeral power as used by the Greeks. An exact copy of this alphabet was made and is inserted here.

I also found other valuable information on the subject by which I discovered several errors in this self-styled wise man's reckoning, and more than ever was I convinced that if he was wise his wisdom was from beneath and not from above.

In the first place Mr. Chism was wrong in regard to his Greek ending of words. Instead of there being but one way to "Greekize" a word there are three. Mr. Crosby says on page 112: "The semivowels Nu, Rho, and Sigma, are the only consonants that may end a word. Any other consonant, therefore, falling at the end of a word, is either (1) dropped, or (2) changed into one of these, or (3) assumes a vowel."

Nu, Rho, and Sigma correspond to the English letters "n," "r," and "s," hence in "Greekizing" the name Joseph we would drop the "ph" and either write it "Jose," or adding one of these semivowels make it "Josés." Any one reading our common Bible would know better than to make the error made by this self-styled wise man, unless they wanted to willfully misrepresent facts. I give some names taken from Watson's Bible Dictionary which correspond to Mr. Crosby's statement in regard to Greek endings:

This completely destroys Mr. Chism's claim to wisdom on the Greek question or brands him as a dishonest controversialist. I am forced to the latter opinion by Mr. Chism's own claims; for he has "most emphatically" claimed to be wise.

But the end of his sophistry is not yet. We could admit all that he claims for the Greek ending and still prove his theory faulty. It will be noticed by a glance at the alphabet of the Greek, with their Roman equivalents, that Mr. Chism is mistaken in his numeral for "s." He gives it as 6 while Mr. Crosby gives it as 200, and "f" as 6; so Mr. Chism is wrong again. It will, however, be noticed that there is a resemblance between the letter "s" in the Greek and the letter "f," or Sigma and Vau in their small form, and I suppose Mr. Chism did not notice the difference. However the small form of the letter "s" is only given in terminals, and as "s" does not occur in Joseph Smith as a terminal, his error is inexcusable, especially in one who is, "Yours for the whole truth."

In the Greek (see Crosby, page 90, 91) two or more letters are united in one character which is called a ligature (tie). "Vau in its usual small form resembles the ligature for 'st.' Hence some editors confound them, and employ 'ST,' as the large form of Vau to denote 6." It seems according to Mr. Crosby that some editors make the error of using "st" to denote 6, but it remained for a Non-progressive Campbellite of the twentieth century to use "s" alone to denote 6.

Again it will be noticed by a glance at the name and numerals given by Mr. Chism that he gives "o" as 70. This is another error or willful misrepresentation. To make out his case he uses Omicron as "o" in Joseph. This is an error. It is true that Omicron has the same form as our English "o," in the Greek, but it has the short sound of "o." To find the long sound of "o" as used in Joseph we would have to go to the last letter of the Greek alphabet which is Omega, the numerical value of which is 800. But Omega as a Greek letter did not look like "o," and of course it would not do for Mr. Chism because it would not sustain his theory.

To give a correct idea of the Greek method of using letters to denote numbers we quote from Mr. Crosby again. It will be noticed that there are but twenty-four letters in the Greek alphabet. The first ones denote the units, the next the tens, and the next the hundreds. But there being but twenty-four letters would not give enough to represent the nine units, the nine tens, and nine hundreds, and a glance at the table will show that 6, 90, and 900 are missing from the body of the alphabet but are given at the end. To explain this Mr. Crosby says on page 96: "In the softening of the language, the labial breathing Vau, and also Koppa and Sampi, which were only rougher forms of k and s (Kappa and Sigma), fell into disuse, and these letters were retained only as numeral characters; Vau and Koppa in their proper places in the alphabet, Sampi at the end. Thus employed they were termed Episema (sign mark.)"

This will explain why the numbers mentioned above are omitted. The Greek alphabet, originally, according to this, consisted of twenty-seven letters; Vau was the sixth letter, Koppa the eighteenth, and Sampi the twenty-seventh. The present form, Mr. Crosby says, on page 97, was used 403 B. C. Hence it was the present form that was used in writing Revelation 13. And in explanation of the method of numbering by letters Mr. Crosby says, page 90: "To denote numbers under a thousand, the Greeks employed the letters of the alphabet as exhibited in the table, with the mark (') over them as á, 1, í, 10, and so forth. The first eight letters with Vau represented the nine units; the next eight with Koppa the nine tens; and the last eight with Sampi the nine hundreds. The thousands were denoted by the same letters with the mark beneath; as é, 5; e, 5000."

Looked at in the light of these facts Mr. Chism is placed in a most unenviable position and he can take either of two horns of the dilemma. He must either acknowledge that he is densely ignorant of that about which he writes and hence an impostor, trying to impose himself upon the reading and hearing public as a learned man, or he must acknowledge that he has willfully misrepresented the facts, presuming on the ignorance of the people to carry his points.

SOME REQUIREMENTS OF SUCCESS.

[Read before Eastern Michigan Religio convention.]

It has been said, "success comes with consciousness of real soul-growth, and extending and deepening of mental powers." The truthfulness of this statement will be realized by the child of God who is developing according to God's law. The privilege of such a growth is open to every Saint, and the earlier we begin it the sooner we learn the meaning of real life; which, as we understand it, means a life of progress-sion, making ourselves more like Christ. This enables us to gather and scatter the greatest benefits in life. By availing ourselves of every opportunity given us for development we become fitted the sooner for successful work. Although the beginning may seem small, the end we know not.

Among the helps offered us for obtaining an education are the Sunday-school and Religio. Both are splendid means for a systematic gospel education, the Religio covering ground that the Sunday-school can not well reach.

The object of the Religio, so says the Constitution, shall be to interest and enlist the energies of all, "especially the young," in the field of Christian usefulness, to promote sociability and the spirit of brotherly solicitude and help ulness among them, and to help to qualify them spiritually and intellectually for service in the church. As Religians, are we sincerely striving for these benefits?

The Lord has placed his seal upon this society and said he would use it for establishing Zion. Out of it he will gather those who shall be warriors in his cause to represent his gospel among men; "for the harvest is indeed great and the laborers are few. Therefore hearken and be faithful, and remember always to be humble. Be not discouraged at the element which may oppose you, for my power shall be with you, and my strength shall be sufficient for you. But you must needs be tested."

The work of the Religio consists of theory and practice—learning and doing,—and when we thus respond sincerely it can not fail to develop ability, and train us for higher service in the church. It requires effort, perseverant, whole-souled effort, if the benefits would be realized.

In attending these meetings, as well as all others, we should be prepared to give and to receive, taking the Holy Spirit with us so that our influence may be felt for good, for "We can only kindle a fire in other hearts, when the living coal has touched our own." Every duty should be performed with sincerity of heart, whether it is preparing a lesson or a special part of a program or casting a vote for an officer. All should be done with an eye single to the glory of God. Our faculties were given us to be used. God desires that we exert ourselves in striving with his help to arrive at wise and intelligent conclusions. But when his counsels are slighted and we follow the dictates of our own will, we can not succeed. God's wisdom is infinite.

As we strive for right and truth, our ability to discern the same will increase; while in yielding to wrong impulses, carelessly or otherwise, our sensibilities are dulled, and we lose power to do right. God knows the motive that prompts us to do our every act, for he beholds us as we really are; and it should be our aim as much as possible to see things in that light and thus make less serious mistakes.

It requires nearness to God to remove the misty veil that blinds our eyes to such an extent.

It may be thought needless to observe the small things, but we realize that it pays to prayerfully and carefully adopt right principles and so form right habits in even the smallest things of life; for they strengthen us to meet the greater tasks, and enable us to accomplish our life's work more successfully.

Each of us have our work in life, and a preparation is necessary. God knows under what influence our life will best develop, and where we can do the most good. There are many different callings in life and many different gifts to mankind; but no matter what our work is, the righteous principles of God, if applied to our own life, will fit us to do our work better and according to God's will.

The Father has made grand promises to his children in every position in life, but to lay claim to these promises we must comply with the requirements, form an acquaintance with God, and continually learn of him. We must not be satisfied with what we learn in the beginning, but keep on gaining wisdom and knowledge; for "whosoever continueth not to receive, from him shall be taken away even that he hath."

Where progress is to be made, effort is to be put forth; the help of God is given only in coöperation with our human aspirations and energy. We must in a measure do our own thinking and learning.

While assisting my youngest brother in his arithmetic lesson the other evening, these thoughts were renewed in my mind. For me to solve his problems would be an easy matter, but that would not teach him the lesson. I can teach him, but he must do his own thinking if he would receive the benefits. A little puzzling is a good thing, for it brings into use his faculties and teaches him his own capabilities. Each lesson thus assimilated adds to his knowledge, and will help him to learn his next lesson. Just so it is in learning the lessons of life. We must pass through experiences to learn our lessons. God in his great love for us can not do the work for us that we are able to do. If we would finally reach the high school we must pass through the lower grades and master the lessons there. We have a just and wise Instructor who helps those who help themselves.

We may not always be able to see the direct benefits of a lesson learned, for it may only be of relative worth; yet it is needed. This comprehended, we will see the need of elementary work in the gospel. Gaining knowledge is not always adding new facts; it may be modifying that which we already have, gaining here a little and there a little. Even as the body through proper exertion is made stronger, so also the mind becomes vigorous by use. It needs proper education and cultivation, to train it to think in harmony with truth. Thus we see how necessary it is to feed the mind with pure and holy thoughts, which we gain by proper study and prayer. The mind has a wonderful capacity for good or evil.

Jacob, "the brother of Nephi," told the Saints of old that there are many ways of committing sin. Therefore, watch yourselves, your thoughts, your words, and your deeds. This applies to us as well, and teaches us that we must be on guard every moment if we would keep within the narrow way.

Many things are cultivated to cause detraction of mind, but everything that threatens to destroy our peace should be taken to God in prayer. There is nothing too great or too small to carry to him. He can solve the knotty problems, and help us bear our burdens, if we ask him in faith. And when we thus ask him for favors, and our prayers are answered unmistakably, our faith and love for him increase; for then we know that he is a Father that can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities.

After realizing the sweet peace that comes from trusting in God, we have sometimes thought, were we now to live in this world of sin and deception without God's Spirit to strengthen, cheer, and guide us, it would seem as though our life were but a small vessel being tossed about on the stormy deep. How thankful then we should be for kind provisions our Father has made. We truly should feel to join the poet in expressing our gratitude:

"I thank my God for gifts divine,
I thank him for this joy of mine,
I thank him for immortal life
And guidance through all earthly strife."

By laying aside every weight that hinders our progress we are able to run the race more lightly and we will advance in righteousness.

Though we are human and learn so slowly, yet we get glimpses of grand heights that we may reach if we continue to grow in wisdom, knowledge, and intimacy with God. Spiritual things are spiritually discerned, therefore we realize that intellectual training alone is not sufficient. The Spirit of God must enlighten our understanding, and we can only possess that Spirit when cultivating Christ-like virtues. We should thus strive to increase our comprehension of truth, for it brings power and blessedness which enables us to stand. It is recorded how saints of old sought these blessings, ever by noble effort, and so must we seek them.

By properly educating ourselves we are made susceptible to the Spirit's leading. Its still small voice speaketh the truth. Jacob says it speaketh of things as they really are, and of things as they really will be. Are we not thankful that it was made possible for us individually as well as collectively to receive knowledge from God? This truly broadens the mind and expands the soul, and brings real life to us. Will it bring true success?

Let us not become weary in the struggle, but strive to stand firm in the strength of God, using every opportunity offered us for development, attaining to the highest conditions possible, spiritually and mentally, so as to be able to render to God intelligent service and accomplish our purpose in life successfully.

"Rise in strength and beauty,
In life's morning glow,
Answer to each duty
Onward, upward go."

PROBATION AFTER DEATH, SIN AGAINST THE HOLY GHOST, AND WHAT AND WHERE IS HELL?

Future probation is a doctrine believed in by Latter Day Saints that seems rather absurd to our religious neighbors of other denominations. Some object to it largely on the grounds that if there is such a thing as future probation it will tend to weaken the present efforts of trying to save the world by the preaching of the gospel. Others object to it because they have not their spectacles off, but are looking down through the tradition of "out of hell there is no redemption," and such like man-made scripture. We have failed to find such quotation, or anything like it in holy writ.

It is not our purpose to enter into the proving of this doctrine in this short article, as we are thoroughly convinced after much study that it is plainly taught in holy writ to be one of the truths that belong to the gospel of Christ. Our purpose is more particularly to say that the writer has preached and talked more on probation after death in proportion to other subjects than he intends to in the future. Not that our confidence is weakening as to the truthfulness of the doctrine, but that it does more or less tend to cause some to be careless while this life lasts. Our opinion is that when wisdom directs, or when questioned on this point, or when led by the Spirit, are the only times to advocate this.

Did it ever occur to you that we hear or read very little of Christ preaching much on future probation? Present revelation says, "Preach nothing but repentance to this generation." Measure this with Paul on the same question, "Now is the day of salvation," "Now is the accepted time." Jesus said, "I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work." "For behold, this life is the time for men to prepare to meet God: yea, behold, the day of this life is the day for men to perform their labors. . . . Then cometh the night of darkness, wherein there can be no labor performed."—Book of Mormon, p. 298. This is to say, whatever condition we are in at death (spiritually), so will the resurrection find us. "If the Spirit of him [God] that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ, shall also quicken [raise you up at the first-resurrection] your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."—Romans 8.

These texts go to show that our development of character must be done in this life, not after death. (Unless during the millennium; those who are counted worthy to come up then may develop in character.) Therefore preaching too much on future probation may not be "meat in due season."

We do not believe in speculating too far into the mysteries of the future, beyond that which God has seen fit in his wisdom to reveal. We have never seen much good result from contention over theories that no one could prove. In fact, on the other hand, we have heard even Saints warm up to cutting and nipping answers, over far-fetched interpretations by private members, on points that no one could settle, and would not amount to a "row of pins" if we could. Such "gender strife" and confusion; and no one is edified.

I can remember on one occasion hearing one of our young missionaries, several years ago, when in conversation with a friend of mine, whom he was trying to convert, while talking on future probation, go so far as to say, "Why, do you believe me? I believe that eventually the Devil will be saved." When we got alone I said to him, putting my hand on him, (knowing he was humble,) "My boy, don't ever preach that doctrine again"; and I cited him to Church History, volume 1, page 301: "Say to the brethren, Hulets, and to all others that the Lord never authorized them to say that the Devil, nor his angels, nor the son of perdition should ever be restored, . . . consequently those who teach this doctrine have not received it of the Spirit of the Lord. Truly Brother Oliver declared it to be the doctrine of devils. We, therefore, command that this doctrine be no more taught in Zion."

The above shows that some of the Saints in Joseph's day were making wild speculations on God's plans, as some are now doing.

We have also heard much concerning the final end of those who sin against the Holy Ghost. Now what right has any one to say more than God has said about their doom? He has said, "The end thereof, neither the place thereof, nor their torments no man knows; neither was it revealed, neither is, neither will be revealed unto man, except to them who are made partakers thereof: nevertheless, I, the Lord, show it by vision unto many; but shut it up again."

Devils made themselves devils, and if men prefer to become devils, and willfully and knowingly persist in fighting against God, let them be devils, and remain filthy still.

This calls forth another subject: What and where is hell? The poet Bobby Burns said, "Where ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise." We plead guilty as to being ignorant, to an extent, about this point, as to whether hell is a place or a condition. The Religio Quarterly claims that hell is not a place but a condition. This statement seemed rather odd to us, for we were inclined to think the church held the view that hell was located somewhere, just as paradise and heaven were said to be a place; but we are willing to learn.

When we joined this church ten years ago we were then of the opinion that hell was not only a place, but a place of literal fire. We soon changed our minds after carefully looking at the general texts used to support the theory that hell contained literal fire as a means of punishment. And now with what small powers of perception we have, and after examining the metaphors and expressions such as, "I was tormented with the pains of hell," we are rather inclined to believe that hell is both a place and also a condition.

"Remorse of conscience, having a perfect knowledge of one's guilt," "Tormented with the view of one's awful state," knowing they deserve to be separated from those they would like to be in company with, "Suffering the pains of hell in mind"; and many such expressions, as the rich man's condition in hell, seem to prove that hell is a condition as well as a place; but such expressions do not in our judgment do away with the theory that hell is not a place, prison, pit, or location.

Both can be true, as we see it. One may be suffering the same degree of punishment while living, which will prove that hell is a condition; yet when the spirit leaves the body, according to the books of the church, "the spirits of the righteous at death go to paradise, and the spirits of the wicked go to prison"; those spirits must be located somewhere if language means anything.

A TILT WITH A SABBATARIAN.—No. 3.

After sending my Sabbatarian friend the letter, of which I wrote in my first account, she continued to send literature, and sent me a card, the points thereon noted. I answered in my second. Shortly after receiving the card, I got a letter of over thirty pages. Remember I had asked her to specify in her letter wherein our "Epitome of faith," and the other tracts, were wrong when "tested by the word." In this letter she urges me continually to "search the Scriptures for your soul's sake." I append my reply:

My Dear Friend: I received your letter, and take pleasure in replying partially to-day; your letter and accompanying notes were so full of points I wish to notice that I may not be able to cover all at one writing. I have read your tracts, and am not yet through with them. I also send you two papers (Zion's Ensign) with an article on "Sabbath-keeping," complete in the two, that came just in time, in answer to my ardent desire for a good, helpful article on that subject. "Prayer," you know, "is the heart's sincere desire, uttered or unexpressed," and though I had not voiced this desire, yet my heavenly Father, who knows our needs before we ask him, fulfilled his promise, as he has done many a time before. "And it shall come to pass before they call I will answer." And you can hardly imagine the joy I felt, on opening the Ensign, to find the first of that article, for I knew it was for you.

Yes; I, too, believe it was of the Lord, that we were thus led to each other; and I shall do my best to make the way of life so plain before your eyes that if you fail to walk therein, you will be without excuse.

I have divided the subject-matter of your letter into points, and will take them up one at a time; and should I chance to overlook any that you desire to have answered, you can notify me and I will reply; and will not dodge behind the parable of "casting pearls before swine" either. I have nothing, I trust, but pearls to offer, and call no one "swine" because they chance to differ from me. At least not until they manifest the swinish nature. I also ask the Spirit, the great teacher, to be my guide; and feel his inspiring presence as I write.

1. You say "Jesus died for the transgression of the law." I wish to ask, What law? You also say, "One Lord, therefore only one law." My friend, it is evident God never gave Adam the "moral law," as contained in the ten commandments. He gave him no laws concerning his neighbor, for he had none. He could not steal from his neighbor, nor kill him, nor bear false witness against him, nor covet aught that was his neighbor's, since he had none. He would not be very apt to make images and worship them as God, since God himself communed with him. Yet your "one God" gave him a law that he has never given to any since; and Adam broke that law; and for the transgression of that law death came. "In Adam all died." The inheritance he left to his posterity was death, and Christ died to redeem mankind from death, and sin, the cause of death; and to "bring life and immortality to light through the gospel." (2 Timothy 1.) And that "through death," (his death,) he might destroy him that hath the power of death, which is the Devil. So you see it was the law Adam broke that brought death. "As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive." He died also to "reconcile us to God when we were enemies." (Romans 5:9.) But what made us enemies? It was Adam's sin, not the law given to Moses on account of sin, "for death," as the result of that broken law, "reigned from Adam till Moses." And mankind, being "enemies," God gave them the law to restrain them, and to "serve as a schoolmaster to bring them to Christ." John said, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."

Notice, it is "sin," not "sins." The original sin! You and I, and every one, must repent of our own individual sins; but we are nowhere told to repent for Adam's transgression. So, little children who have committed no sin are fit subjects for the kingdom of heaven, as our divine Lord said.

2. You say, "The law is God's character." Oh! thank God, I know better than that; for those who look only at the law to find out God's character may well live in fear and trembling. There is nothing there to win love. To be sure it shows one attribute of God's character; his hatred of sin. But if the law shows his character, what does the gospel show us? Christ is God manifest in the flesh; and it is in knowing Christ that we may know the Father. Christ said, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." —John 14:9. He is "the image of the invisible God." (Colossians 1:15.) Not merely physically, but in character, spirit, power, and purpose; and whatever the attributes Christ had were the attributes of the Father. So to find the character of God, let us study the character of Christ, since he says, "I and my Father are one"; not the Mosaic law, which is not a representation of God, but, as Paul tells us, is "a shadow of things to come."

3. I asked if you had "received the Holy Ghost since you believed," and you reply: "I dare not speak for myself. We are not a Holy Ghost people." Oh! I am so sorry for any people, calling themselves Christians, who dare not say for themselves that they have received the Holy Ghost, the seal, the witness that God promised to give to every one that obeyed his gospel. "No right to call yourselves Holy Ghost people?" Why, dear soul, "the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even to as many as the Lord our God shall call," said Peter. That was the promise on the gospel condition that we believe,—"repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Acts 2:38, 39.) And if you had received it, you would certainly dare to say so. And if you have not received it, what is the matter? For, "our gospel" comes not "in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." (1 Thessalonians 1:6.) And, if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his.

4. In speaking of the Old Testament, the old covenant, and the law pertaining thereto, you say, "The old can not be separated from the new." In speaking of the two priesthoods Paul says: "For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law." The "law of Moses" pertained to the Levitical priesthood, "For it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Juda; of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood. And yet it is far more evident: for that after the similitude of Melchisedec there ariseth another priest, who is made, not after the law of a carnal commandment. . . . For there is verily a disannulling of the commandment going before." Notice now, "For the weakness and unprofitableness thereof. For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did." Now the priesthood being changed, we find the law changed too, and after Christ received the Holy Ghost, and entered into this priesthood, you see him setting aside the old law. He fulfilled every item of the old law to the letter before his baptism, even to circumcision; so he was a spotless, faultless sacrifice. Now he begins to offer himself as a sacrifice by setting aside the old and bringing in the new: "Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth: But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil," etc.—Matthew 5:38, 39. Here he clearly separates the old from the new.

When the woman was taken in adultery and brought to him, he set aside the old law in so far that he even said, "Neither do I condemn thee." Yet he showed he condemned the sin by saying, "Go, and sin no more." The old law said, "Love your neighbor and hate your enemy." The new said, "Love your neighbor as yourself," and, "love your enemies." Separated from the old by advancing on toward the true character of God! "Think not that I am come to destroy the law," said Christ, "I came not to destroy, but to fulfill." After fulfilling it, giving something better, leaving the law behind, not destroyed. The road is not destroyed over which we pass to reach home. The schoolmaster is not destroyed that leads to Christ; but having come to Christ and receiving the Teacher he has promised, we have no further need of the schoolmaster.

5. You say each age has its "present truth." Yes, each age has its present truth; but the gospel truth fits all ages. The gospel promise that we should receive the Holy Ghost, if we believe, repent, etc., holds good in all ages, else God is changeable. But there are new phases of truth presented in different ages. I am sure the present truth, or phase of the truth, for this age is this: The church so called has lost its power, and its authority, having a form of godliness, but without the power, and is in a state of apostasy. You will agree with me in this, I think. And you think the remedy lies in putting the patch of Sabbath-keeping on the old garment of Christianity, so called. But it will not do; they do not fit together. "Salt that has lost its savor can not be resalted." The authority and power must be restored, and this is what I mean by the term "the restored gospel," to which you object. (See Revelation 6:14.) Had the everlasting gospel been here, and been preached all the time, there were no need of an angel bringing it to earth again. And Jesus said, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world as a witness unto all nations, then shall the end come." The churches had all ceased to preach "this gospel of the kingdom." Their gospel was, "If you just believe on Jesus, when you die, angels will come and carry you to heaven, away off somewhere 'beyond the bounds of time and space';" all contrary to "this gospel of the kingdom" that Christ and his apostles preached. So this gospel being lost, or hid, was to be restored by an angelic messenger, and Joseph Smith was the humble human instrument God chose to receive this message, and to tell this sin-cursed, creed-bound world the glad tidings that Jesus was to return and to set up his kingdom here; that here on this earth we should reign with him, if so be we obey his gospel and suffer with him. Our reigning with him depends on our character. Not all who are to be eventually saved shall sit with him on his throne, "but to him that overcometh shall it be given." "The nations of them that are saved, shall walk in the light of it"—the holy city where Christ and his bride, the church, the overcomers dwell. (Revelation 21:24.)

And another phase of truth for this age is this: The ordinances of this kingdom must be performed by one having been authorized by the King himself. Christ is the King. "No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron;" the ministry not being chosen for a profession but being called of God, through the prophet that he has set in his church. (See 1 Corinthians 12; Acts 13:1.)

6. You claim, "The fourth commandment was the only proof that God created the universe." Now, do you claim that Abraham the friend of God was ignorant of that fact? And Enoch, who walked with God? Was Isaac and Jacob, and Moses before the law was given? Was Noah, who was a preacher of righteousness? Was Melchisedec, who was a priest of the most high God? Yet to none of these was the fourth commandment given, save to Moses, and not to him until the others were all dead. For Nehemiah says that God came "down also upon Mount Sinai, and spakest with them from heaven, and gavest them right judgments, true laws, good statutes, and commandments: and madest known unto them [so, then, they had not known it before] thy Holy Sabbath, and commandedst them precepts, statutes, and laws, by the hand of Moses thy servant." So, according "to the law and the testimony," which you so earnestly beg me to search, I find they knew nothing of the Sabbath law for themselves before Moses. Abraham called God the "possessor of heaven and earth"; and to him was the promise given that in his seed should "all the families of the earth be blessed." And can you think for one moment that God left him in ignorance of the fact that he was the Creator? The great faith he had in God's promises shows he had much more knowledge of God than is common among some enlightened Christians of to-day; for we find the more we know of God, or the more we know God, the more faith we will have in him. Enoch walked with God; and yet did not know God was the creator (?). We must so conclude if we believe that the fourth commandment was the only proof that God ever gave that he was the creator. Did Adam and Eve know that God was the creator of the universe? Yet they did not have the fourth commandment.

7. You say, "Man has no right to formulate a creed." Certainly a man has a right to specify what he believes. Should I ask you what the Seventh-day Adventists believe, and you should send me an itemized form of your faith, that would be your creed. A man's creed is what a man believes. But a man has no right to formulate a creed, or system of faith, and insist that others shall subscribe to it, but when we find that God has itemized the principles of his gospel, we are safe in taking that for our creed, or standard of faith. (See Hebrews 6: 1, 2, where he gives some of the principles.) We, or any other body of believers, have a right to express our faith in a condensed manner, and to give a short and concise statement of our position. There is nothing in God's word to forbid it. You Adventists have the same right. But no one has a right to compel another to subscribe to those articles of faith. The president of the United States has a right to give a statement of his faith; it may be truth, or it may be error; but even if it is truth, he has no right to compel another to accept it. In fact, he could not. He might compel an outward acquiescence, but invariably there would be "the same opinion still."

8. You say, "We have no right to call ourselves 'saints.'" Well, if you have never received the Holy Ghost, and are not a "Holy Ghost people" as you say you are not, I fully agree with you as to yourselves, for that was what constituted a saint in Paul's time, and as the gospel is unchangeable, the same conditions being fulfilled would constitute us saints now. To what, then, were ye called, if not to be saints? Read Romans 1: 6, 7. Are you of the called of Jesus Christ, or were they at Rome the only ones called? No, God, who is no respecter of persons, as far as the call goes, extends it to all who hear this gospel, but though many are called yet few are chosen, and they are those who obey the call; and to obey the call, they must obey the gospel.

9. So you were so surprised to find from my letter that I belonged to a Mormon church, after reading my poem in which I expressed my belief in the resurrection. Now, honestly, did I say I belonged to a Mormon church? I said I belonged to "the Church of Jesus Christ, reorganized, known as Latter Day Saints." Now if that constitutes me a member of a Mormon church, it only proves that the church of Jesus Christ is now and always was Mormon, or in other words, that a Mormon church is synonymous with the Church of Jesus Christ. Thank you, that is a grand compliment to us "Mormons" so called, but I do not see why you should be surprised to find that a member of the Church of Jesus Christ, or a "Mormon church" as you call it, should believe in the "resurrection of the dead." What else could you expect them to believe? But I think you stumbled over the words Latter Day Saints. Some other time if you wish I will write to you regarding the difference between us and the people you had in your mind as "Mormons."

10. I asked you to point out the items in the epitome of our faith that you found "when tested by the word" were false. Yet in all your long letter you do not mention one. You allude to my request and say, "If I do not answer your arguments it is no sign they can not be answered. You know something is said about casting our pearls before swine." So that is what you were afraid of, was it? Afraid that I was of the swine, instead of the sheep; but suppose that is so, let me ask, what is it that you have been casting before me? Not pearls it seems, and if you did not cast pearls, what did you cast? Truth is the pearl.

11. You say, "One God, one word of truth." Now your "one God" gave a word of truth to Abraham. He also gave a word of truth to Noah, to Moses, and to all the prophets. He gives words of truth to each dispensation. Man has no right, it is true, to add to those words; but God adds when he will. He gives "line upon line, precept upon precept; here a little, and there a little." He reveals one truth for one age to one prophet, and another truth for another age to another prophet; and nowhere has he said he had no more to give.

12. You say the "Sabbath was a perpetual sign." As I noticed that in my former letter, I will only refer you again to the statement that it was only a sign between Israel and God, and was only given "until the seed [Christ] should have come." "The law and the prophets were until John; since that time the kingdom of God is preached." Christ renounced the law after having fulfilled it all, when he entered into the priesthood, which was not after the law, as he was of the tribe of Judah.

13. You speak of the "doing away with our old, fixed beliefs." Well, that is just what I did after God showed me, by his Spirit, what to believe. I hope sometime to tell you how I was led into the faith. God led me by his Spirit.

14. You tell me "we should bow to his will." Yes, and I am so glad I did. He showed me his will, and told me, "If any man will do my will, he shall know of my doctrine"; so trusting his word I obeyed his will, and have the knowledge that this is indeed his doctrine. I praise his name for his leading, his teaching, and also for this "assurance" he gives day by day.

15. "God is calling out a people from all the churches." Yes; the churches of to-day, known as orthodox and evangelical, are the "Babylon"; and God says, "Come out of her, all ye, my people." Many have "come out" but do not know where to go. Christ went to prepare a place. He does not call his people out till he has a place for them. Too many dangers in the wilderness. So he has made ready the place, his fold, his church; and, seeing this, I came out and did not linger long in the wilderness. God help you to see it too. There are many little sects that have "come out of her," who are still in the wilderness of uncertainty and error.

16. As to how I "bear the truth or not" being an "indication of my condition spiritually" it makes no real difference what your opinion may be. If one is truly in earnest in seeking for truth he will not turn away just because "popular opinion" is against what is presented, nor because his "former fixed views" were contrary. So, my friend, the way you may receive what is presented here, will indicate your condition, and so will the way I receive any truth you may present, be an index of mine. I have discovered no truth of which I was not aware before; but truly I have discovered a lack of truth,—that is, of gospel truth. That you are truly sincere I am as willing to grant as you were that I was; but, as I showed you in my first letter, sincerity will not suffice.

17. You say the "servant of God must not strive" as an excuse for not replying to some things in my letter. Now that is a case where the letter and the spirit of the text must differ, for the same verse, 2 Timothy 2: 24, says he must be "apt to teach," and it would be a strange teacher who did not strive to make his pupil learn, did not strive to make the lesson plain, and to show the learner any mistakes he may have made. So then you would have been doing right to have striven to show where those mistakes or errors were that you discovered when "tested by the word." The word strive is used in different ways. Here I think the meaning is to argue just for argument's sake, merely to see which can hold his own the best. We are told to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." (Jude.) "And with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel."—Philippians 1: 27. Also, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate: for many . . . will seek to enter in, and shall not be able."—Luke 13: 24. So mere seeking is not enough. We must strive to win our crown, but no one is crowned who does not strive lawfully. So you see there is a sense in which we must strive, and I hope our striving will be only in that sense.

18. You ask, with no reason for the question, "Where in the Bible is it stated that the Latter Day Saints had a 'positive message to deliver'?" You know I did not say the Bible said so. I said my brother said so. Nevertheless it is so; and there is proof enough in the Bible that they are the people to whom this "positive message" is given. If you ask for proof I will give it later on. Just now I want to ask: If the message any teacher has is not a positive one, of what use is it? Your church, as a denomination, had an original founder, did it not? I suppose you will admit as much. Now what was his message? and was it positive or doubtful? Most of the messages are founded on "ifs," and "maybe sos."

19. You say as to yourself "you need not that any man teach you." Now let us see. Those words John addressed to a spirit-filled people, a "Holy Ghost people" which you say you do not claim to be. Then how can you apply those words to yourself? Oh! the folly of taking words meant for those who were filled with the Spirit, and applying them to ourselves, if we are not so filled. See what he says in verse 20: "Ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things." And in verse 27, the one you quote from, he says "But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you; but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things and is truth, and is no lie," etc. Now that anointing is the gift of the Holy Ghost, which is the Spirit of truth, which writes the law of the new covenant in our hearts. (See Hebrews 8: 10, 13.) So then if you have never received the Holy Ghost you are yet in the same condition Apollos was, (and the twelve whom he baptized,) who, although he preached Christ earnestly, needed some one to teach him, "and Aquilla and Priscilla . . . took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly." (Acts 18: 26.)

20. "Saved by grace," you say. My friend, that we are saved alone by grace is one of the principal opiates Satan has induced the "Doctors of Divinity" (so called) to use to put to sleep the world. It is not true that we are saved by grace alone. It is by grace or favor (for grace means favor) that we are shown the way. But unless we walk in it, the grace will not save us. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Believe on him sufficiently to do what he says. "Repent and be baptized every one of you for the remission of sins." Faith, repentance, and baptism, you see, are necessary in addition to favor. We are to "receive with meekness the engrafted word which is able to save your souls." (James 1: 21.) Also if we convert a "sinner from the error of his way" we "shall save a soul from death." (James 5: 20.) Paul speaks of provoking to emulation them which were of his flesh, that he might save some of them; and he says, "I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some. And this I do for the gospel's sake."—1 Corinthians 9: 22. He knew that only in obeying the gospel could they be saved in the fullest sense of salvation.

21. You ask if I "think you have a right to go out and destroy your neighbors' property, etc., because the law is done away." Now that question is childish, to say the least, since I have shown that this new covenant that Jesus came to establish had its own law, which is written, if we have received the Spirit, in our hearts, as well as in the word. If we are only restrained from doing those things by the fear of the Old Testament law, we are still under the law, and for such "Christ is dead in vain." The law of the new covenant is to "love our neighbors as ourselves," and to "love our enemies," and such love fulfills the law as regards our neighbor. If a man is only restrained from committing adultery by fear of the law, he is an adulterer; or if he hateth his brother, he is a murderer, for "as a man thinketh in his heart so is he." In either of these cases the law of the new covenant has never been written in his heart, or if written he has allowed something to obscure it.

22. You say we should "abide by the written word alone," by which you mean, just the Bible, which is the "stick of Judah." Now when God joins the "stick of Ephraim," to this "stick of Judah," what are we that we should say we will not receive it? (See Ezekiel 37:15-19.) And when "truth shall spring out of the earth," (Psalms 85; Isaiah 45:8) we must not reject it because it may not be had between the covers of our Bible.

23. You speak of our "being known by our fruits." I agree with you and ask you to show any but good fruits that come from the teachings of the Reorganized Church.

24. You say your letter was written by the dictation of the Spirit. My friend, it may have been written by the movement of some spirit; but if the spirit that moved you to write, also dictated the matter, it was not the "Spirit of truth," for in several instances, in addition to the errors I have pointed out, you have referred the text you quoted to the wrong speaker, and even spoke of Daniel in the "fiery furnace." Did the Spirit of truth dictate that? It is one thing to be moved by a spirit to write, and another to have the Spirit dictate what shall be written, and how can one without the Spirit, who "dare not claim to have the Spirit," be dictated by the Spirit?

25. You refer to "deceiving spirits." Yes, that is true, and in the last days, when "the enemy shall come in like a flood," so multitudinous are those evil spirits in the world, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him, and those in whose hearts this Spirit is, have this standard of truth to be guided by. Can such be deceived? "If it were possible they would deceive the very elect." But thank God it is not possible. By the elect I do not mean what a predestinarian would mean, but I may explain that another time.

26. "Only by study of written word," you say, "can we know of things to come." Where in the Bible does it say so? If that be true, the gospel has changed, God's promises have proven unreliable, and we are indeed in a bad case. Christ said, "I have many things to say unto you, but ye can not bear them now. Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come."—John 16:12, 13. Things that were not written because Christ did not speak them, as they could not bear them then! He also said that the Comforter "shall teach you," bringing "all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." Now do you not believe that Jesus spoke many things that are not recorded in the written word? And no doubt his words were often recalled by his disciples. It is quoted in one place that Jesus said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive," yet this was not recorded in the gospels. But aside from this, did the church at Antioch receive the command to set aside "Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I [the Lord] have called them," from the written word? Did not the Holy Ghost speak to them? Are not the instances many where the Holy Ghost directed independent of the written word? Did Peter know by the written word that Ananias and Sapphira had dealt falsely and that they would die? If the early church was so directed and any church of to-day is not so directed or taught, then one of two things is certain, either it is not the church of Christ, or else Christ is not the same to his church to-day that he was then. Jesus is unchangeable, is he not?

27. You told me over and over to search the Scriptures. I think this will prove to you that I have searched diligently, and as the Bereans did, and as I hope you will search, to "see if these things be so."

28. You insinuate that I said, "We need no written word." Now that was a wrong understanding. I did not say so. Get my letter and see. I think my words were to the effect that we did not need to depend alone upon the written word. I am sure that was the thought I meant to convey, and I repeat that we do not. In addition to the word we have the great Teacher, the Comforter, the Spirit of truth.

I think this is sufficient for one time, though I have many more points noted. I will send these and hope you will read in the same spirit you desire me to manifest. And may God guide you into all truth for Jesus' sake. Amen.

AN ESSENTIAL IN THE EDUCATION OF A CHILD.

"Gimme a penny."

Now watch him scamper to the candy-store! That is the way children spend their money nowadays. And we parents look on as unconcerned as though it were not a matter of vital importance, as it is.

Every child should be born right. He should have healthy, sane, and moral parents, and receive proper training in childhood. These are his inalienable rights.

No one will care to dispute the necessity for a child to be trained properly. The result of his life depends largely upon it. Whether he shall be a criminal or an outcast, or a useful member of society, depends very much upon the training received from his parents and others to whom his education is intrusted.

Much has been said about child-culture and the training best calculated to develop the child properly. This subject has occupied the attention of scores of leading writers from the time of Froebel to the present. Such gifted and godly persons as H. Clay Trumbull, Henry Du Bois Patterson, Elizabeth Harrison, Katherine Beebe, and others, have laid us under everlasting gratitude for their wise counsel in the divine art of directing the right growth and development of our children. But I can not understand why more attention has not been given to that phase of training which deals with the right use of money. This subject has been hinted at, but never taken up with anything like completeness.

We should bring such influence to bear on our little ones, as will fix on them the habit of economy, frugality, and the right uses of money and things purchased. In other words we should train them in the art of business and finance, so they may be able to take care of themselves when they leave the parents' home and assume the management of their own affairs.

Nothing is more plainly evident than the fact that children and young people starting out in life are deplorably ignorant of the simplest principles of financial management. What proportion of the boys and girls between the ages of sixteen and twenty-one, who are earning money and meeting their own expenses of living, exercise the slightest degree of discretion in money matters? Scarcely one in a hundred. They trip along, like children following upon the heels of the Pied Piper, entranced by the delightful freedom of being able to handle their own money and buy what they like, without a single thought of their future welfare. They buy whatever strikes their fancy until their money is all gone. The result is that by the time they are full grown and ready to take upon themselves the responsibility of family life, they are completely ignorant of the use and value of money; and not only that, they have fastened upon themselves such habits of extravagance and recklessness of living and buying, that it becomes quite impossible for them to make any financial headway. They live from hand to mouth, making a failure of life, all because their parents did not have the wisdom and forethought to train them as carefully in financial matters as they did in morals, religion, and other branches of education.

We have not yet awakened to the tremendous influence of prodigality and frugality upon our lives from a moral and religious standpoint. A person's happiness and usefulness, his moral and religious status depends very largely upon whether he is a spendthrift or a careful money-saver.

Whoever heard of an embezzler or a thief who was not a spendthrift? Their money is always used recklessly. Defaulters and similar criminals almost invariably play the races, gamble on stocks, or indulge their taste for diamonds, fine horses, and other things of the sort. I doubt if there is one instance in a thousand where a thief saves his money and uses it to accumulate a fortune. Habits of extravagance are a direct source of such crime.

Prodigality causes lying. People who buy more than they are able to pay for get into the habit of misrepresentation without the slightest compunction.

It causes unhappiness. The spendthrift's wants are never supplied, and he is never contented unless an out and out rogue deliberately planning to beat every one he can. I know of nothing that can make an honorable person more miserable than the hounding of creditors, and the knowledge of a debt he can not pay. The life of the spendthrift is a failure in every case. Not only the spendthrift, but every one who does not exercise economy and save money.

Does it not appear to you, father and mother, of supreme importance that your children shall have from your hands such a training in the right use of money, that their future lives may be happy, useful, and successful?

There is a girl of my acquaintance who has been employed in an office for four years. About a month ago she met with an accident that compelled her to give up her work permanently. Her father earns only a laborer's wage and is not able to give her the treatment she needs. The girl earned twelve dollars per week. She lived at home and paid nothing for board, simply buying her clothes and other necessities. When she met with the accident her father told me that she had only her present week's wages.

She had been well dressed, it is true, but no better than the other girls of her set. Yet her expenses had been fifty dollars a month for three years.

I remember meeting her last winter on her way home, a few days before Christmas.

She was loaded with packages and told me with great animation about her Christmas gifts. She had spent about twenty-five dollars. The presents were the most useless articles that one could think of, but the worst thing about it was that twenty-five dollars was ten times as much as she could afford to spend for that purpose.

Now she has met with misfortune and her support is a hardship upon her father and mother, but what about the responsibility of those parents? Why did they not teach their daughter habits of economy, the same as they taught her to tell the truth? Why were they not equally as careful and zealous to train her properly in the right use of money?

As a rule, we fathers and mothers make no pretense of giving our children definite and systematic training in finance. We often tell them not to spend their money for candy and useless things, but such desultory hints do little good. They must be trained in the same manner that they are in school. In no other way can good results be obtained.

If then our children are educated in the right use of money, when ready to leave their homes and do for themselves they are able to commence aright. They will not blunder along, as so many do, until youth is gone, before they learn how to take care of their earnings.

Every child should be taught, first of all, that money represents labor—some service performed. Let this principle be as unalterable as the law of gravitation. They should not get the idea that their parents should "give" them money. Let them render some service to earn at least a portion of what they get; and if you wish them to have more, pay it regularly, as a stated allowance. This is the only plan that will enable them to get a correct understanding of the use of money.

The second basic principle is the right use of money earned. They should be taught to make wise purchases, and to save a portion of all they get. This idea must be so firmly fixed in the child's mind that it will never get away. Let it be as clearly understood as the principle of truthfulness and honesty.

The child should have a bank in which to deposit his savings.

A small one made of metal can be purchased for a few dimes, or if living in a city, can usually be secured without cost from a local bank. It must be definitely understood that he is to deposit a reasonable portion of all the money he gets. Talk about it, interest yourself in it, let the child understand that you consider it something of great importance. Let him know, also, that you are making the right use of your money; that you are saving the same as he. Observe how apt children are to imitate other persons. Take advantage of this principle, and set such an example of frugality before your child that he will be delighted to follow.

Next he should be encouraged to save money for a purpose, but not for the sake of "hoarding," that is, for the money itself. Let the boy save, for instance, to buy a bicycle, a horse, a lot, a watch, or better still, to make an investment. Let the girl save for things that are of corresponding interest to her. I know a boy who thus secured a first-class photographic outfit for the purpose of earning money to take him to college. By the aid and encouragement of his wise parents, his plan was carried out. His education will be doubly valuable on account of his having earned it in his unique way, but what is of much greater importance, is that he had developed a capacity for saving money that may make him rich and happy some day. The experience will be worth more to him in dollars and cents than a legacy.

The girls should also be taught habits of frugality. They will be wives and mothers some day, and can not come up to the full measure of wifehood unless they know how best to save and use money. The happiness and success of their homes depend upon it. Besides, as mothers they can not properly train their children unless they have the knowledge themselves.

It is probably the wisest plan to give each child an allowance, commencing at the age when he begins to learn the nature and use of money. The varying amount of the allowance will be determined by the age and character of the child, and the income of the parents. He must have a small account-book in which to enter the money received from all sources, and every expenditure. At the end of the month he should bring the book to his parents for examination. They should talk over the expenditures in a friendly but business-like way. The parents may counsel the child in regard to the amounts to be spent for candy, fruits, ribbons, and similar knickknacks.

Thus the child is taught gradually but surely one of the most vital lessons; one that will have much to do with his future success and usefulness.

Where the income of parents is small, if the child is inclined to assist in providing for his own maintenance, let at least a portion of his earnings be used to buy his clothes, school-books, and other necessities.

Children should not go on the streets annoying people by asking for small jobs; nor selling worthless articles, as so many are doing in recent years.—Ernest W. Lyman in Kindergarten Magazine.

Bless the Year.

O tender Christ, bless Thou this year!
Bless Thou its dawn and bless
It's noontide and its evening, Lord;
And let each heart confess,

As days, and weeks, and months go by
To help the year grow old,
That of Thy glory, King of Kings,
The half not yet is told.—Mary D. Brine.

SR. JESSIE SMITH of Spokane, Washington, reports that they organized a Sunday-school in their city in November with a membership of about forty, in five classes, with Sr. E. M. Bell superintendent. They make a splendid showing in their report. They have a senior class of ten and a Bible class of sixteen. This is doing well for the adults. We note further that our ever alert and willing helper, Bro. T. W. Chatburn, is teacher of the Bible class. Bro. T. W. is not as young as he once was, but he continues to be found among the pushers.

This school is in the newly organized district known as the Seattle and British Columbia District. We bespeak for them success and wish them all a prosperous and happy new year's work.

SR. E. REHWALD, of Bisbee, Arizona, writes under date of December 30: "The Saints here in Bisbee have organized a Sunday-school with about nine adults, seven children of Saints, and several children of outsiders. The school is in a fair way to progress. We had a nice Christmas-tree and entertainment which was much enjoyed by both Saints and outsiders." Thus one by one the groups of Saints in isolated localities are taking up the work either in form of a school or a home class as may seem best suited to the circumstances. We bid the little band of workers at Bisbee a hearty God-speed, and wish them a very happy and profitable new year's work.

SR. DAVID H. BLAIR, superintendent of the Independence Stake Sunday-school association, writes of the special program work sent out: "We were much pleased to get the programs from you and think it a fine move, for in this we are made to feel some direct benefit from the General Association. . . . Have given or sent to each superintendent in the stake requesting him to give it a trial and report the results at the next stake convention. . . . I for one will be pleased, yes more than pleased, delighted, to hear in this way often."

How to Interest and Teach Primary and Infant Scholars.

The first thought in my mind is, "Suffer little children to come unto me." Then the very next thought is, "When they do come how shall I hold them? Hence, I set my mind gathering up from the storehouse of God's truth.

HOW TO INTEREST AND TEACH LITTLE ONES.

We will first see how to interest them, for we well know all our efforts to teach them will be a failure unless we first get them interested. For we look at a restless child in the class, who is turning and twisting in all shapes, first to play with the contents of his pockets, then pick at the one next to it, then turn in its chair and look over the schoolroom. My first thought is to gain its attention so I must find something that will interest; if we speak to it kindly it does not appear to even hear us; so here we must be in possession of that patience we are commanded to possess. That if our first attempt to gain its attention fails, let us keep trying until we do gain it. If one thing will not do, perhaps another will. It may be a willful child; if so, let us tell it a story, give it pictures to look at; flowers, or fruit. And when you have lovingly studied the child and found what will interest it, then we have its attention and still it is not aware of our object. Then we have something to work on. We can make practical illustrations from what we have gained its attention with; thus we may hold its attention in a way that we may get it interested. And when once interested, (if we have prepared our lesson for the occasion,) we may then be able to teach the child.

But a teacher "workman"

UNPREPARED FOR HER CLASS,

will never be able to properly mold and polish this precious metal. Therefore come before your class with the lesson so well prepared that you will need no Quarterly. Tell the story to the children in a bright way. Do not take any troubles to the class with you. But let your face light up with real pleasure because of your love for the little ones. Be just as interested as you wish the children to be. For as the teacher is, so will the class be. On approaching the class, speak to the little ones, tell them it does you good to see their happy faces, and that you wish them to all look at you so you can see the sunshine in their eyes. This with similar statements at times will draw their attention to you, thus giving you a chance to make an illustration or to impress a good thought. Let them know you are pleased when they answer the questions, and you will find them trying harder next time. A young member of my class not long since, showed his willingness to please. In order to get him interested in his lesson his parents told him how pleased the superintendent would be if a little fellow like him would answer some of his questions. So when the superintendent questioned the class, this little fellow answered so readily and distinctly, that it caused the superintendent to smile. At this the little one said in a loud tone, "I knew that would tickle you."

When your class was first committed to your care

YOU MAY NEVER HAVE MET MANY OF THEM BEFORE.

But if the love of Christ is with you as you teach, soon their eyes and hearts are lifted up to you in loving trust and confidence. The imagination in childhood is very active. And if the lessons are so simplified as to come within the understanding of children, the old Bible stories become a reality to them. When teaching the little ones, let us avoid the use of language and illustrations which are beyond their comprehension. "Except ye become as a little child," is the keynote of success in teaching. No greater wrong can be inflicted on a child than to try to make it exhibit the characteristics of the religious life of maturity either in profession or practice. Be careful in our teaching that we do not worry and crowd the young mind. When necessary, let us wait patiently. Let us teach by our example.

One of the best things in a class is to give them plenty to do. Bring yourself down with the children, reason and converse with them; in short, get them to do as much of the talking as you can. If the teacher does the most of the talking it is apt to become tiresome, and as a rule few will be found listening. If they do the talking you will know their ideas, discover mistakes and can correct them. This will encourage them to do their share of thinking. We develop more by thinking than by listening to what others say. Older minds are more susceptible of obtaining and retaining, therefore do not be discouraged if we can not teach the children all we have learned of each lesson. Be satisfied if we have been able "even by the aid of the Spirit," to establish well in their tender minds one good thought, one truth.

There are some who believe with one who said, for an adult class: but I should like to teach a primary class, because that does not require any preparation." If there are any such here, let us speak an earnest word of admonition. Do you fully realize the importance of the position you hold? It is one of the most important ever committed to man. These "wonderful words of life" are to be impressed by you upon the plastic mind of a little child.

"I HAVE NO TIME TO PREPARE LESSONS

Then there is another class. For when we hear one called upon to help, perhaps to act as teacher, we hear him reply,

"OH, I AM NOT TALENTED."

Do we not know this is finding fault with God? For he it was that gave us the talent that we have. But what is left for us to do, is to accept the position with a determined mind and heart to do the best we can with the talents God has given us, "though it be but one."

We want the approbation of God. We hope to hear him say, "My child, you have done well." Then let us do the best we can with the materials at hand to "build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness."

The Sunday-School Lesson for January 22, 1904.

JOHN.

Golden Text.—"Such as I have, give I thee."—Acts 3: 6.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE LESSON, FOR SUPERINTENDENTS.

The second primary lesson tells the story of Peter and John at the Beautiful Gate of the temple where a man was healed who had been lame from his birth; it tells of the same two apostles being put in prison afterwards and of their being released in the night by an angel who opened the prison doors and set them free.

The first intermediate lesson is based upon the same topics as the second primary, while the advanced intermediates have an additional topic for consideration, the work of Peter and John among the people of Samaria who had received the gospel through the preaching of Philip and had been baptized by him.

The senior lesson covers all these topics of the lower lessons and shows that, according to ecclesiastical history, John's labors were probably in the vicinity of Ephesus after the time of Paul and Peter. It informs us that then Jerusalem was nearing its destruction, and that Ephesus, a leading city of its time, a city of culture, commerce, and religion, became the chief city of the church until the headquarters were transferred to Rome.

The senior lesson also mentions John's banishment to Patmos, a solitary island of the sea, twenty-four miles off the coast from Ephesus. The cause of his banishment was his adherence to the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Attention is also called to the fact that, while some Bible students have doubted that John was the author of the book of Revelation, the Book of Mormon plainly states that he wrote that book of the Bible.

History records nothing with certainty concerning John after his exile on Patmos. The only thing we know is that modern revelation tells us, as was shown in Lesson 3, that John desired of the Lord that power over death might be given him, that he might live and bring souls to Christ, and that this desire of John was granted him in this promise of the Lord: "Verily, verily I say unto thee, because thou desirest this thou shalt tarry until I come in my glory, and shall prophesy before many nations, kindreds, tongues, and people."

In the same revelation (Doctrine and Covenants 7) we read this saying of the Lord concerning John: "My beloved has desired that he might do more, or a greater work among men, than what he has before done; yea, he has undertaken a greater work; therefore I will make him as flaming fire, and a ministering angel; he shall minister for those who shall be heirs of salvation who dwell on the earth."

We are told in the same section that Peter desired that he might go speedily to the Lord in his kingdom, while John desired to have power over death in order to do a still greater work. It was promised to each that he should have his desire. The Master said to them, "Ye shall both have according to your desires, for ye both joy in that which ye have desired."

Those of you who have read Lesson 3 have noticed the suggestion that John's experience was, doubtless, like that of the three Nephites of whom we read in the Book of Mormon. If you have not read what is written of them, you should do so in connection with the study of this question of John's tarrying on the earth until the coming of Christ in glory. Lesson 3 will cite you to the passages in the Book of Mormon which contain reference to the three Nephites whose desire was like that of John. You will read of those men that it was promised to them also, that they should not taste death but should live to behold all the doings of the Father unto the children of men until Christ shall come in his glory with the powers of heaven.

The golden text of this lesson is taken from Peter's words to the lame man at the Beautiful Gate who had asked alms of him and John as they went into the temple at the hour of prayer.

"Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee," were the words of Peter as he pronounced upon the helpless cripple the words of bodily healing, that blessing that far outweighed the gift of silver or gold.

In doing this, he was but following out the instruction of the Master who had sent out his apostles with the command to heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils, and with the admonition, "Freely ye have received, freely give."

Peter and John were poor men, poor for the sake of Christ, as he was poor in this world for the sake of humanity. Theirs was that honest poverty concerning which the Scotch poet writes,

"Is there, for honest poverty,
Wha hangs his head and a' that?
The coward slave, we pass him by!
We dare be poor for a' that."

Theirs was that honorable poverty for which no Saint should ever feel under the necessity of apologizing, especially to other Saints; it was such poverty as the saints of Macedonia in Paul's time endured and of which he made mention in one of his epistles, saying that, even in their deep poverty, they had an abundance of joy and that they abounded in their liberality toward the church and were willing to the extent of their power, and even beyond their power, to contribute to the necessities of the work of God.

And Paul spoke also, in this connection, of the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, though he was rich, became poor for the sake of men, that we, through his poverty, might be rich.

The sacrifice made by Christ was made freely from the depths of his love for mankind. His command to his apostles as he sent them forth was to dispense blessings freely in his name. The healing of the lame man at the Beautiful Gate was one of those free gifts of kindness, bestowed in the name and by the power of the unseen Christ.

It was love in the hearts of the Macedonian saints of long ago that moved them to give to the work of God even from the depths of their poverty, love for God and for his people who had need of material help. Paul said of those people that they first gave their own selves to the Lord and that afterwards they gave to the ministers of the church by the will of God. They first were consecrated to the Lord, and from this consecration of self came their willing contributions to the needs of the work. Thus was Christ consecrated to the work of saving the world of men; thus should we be consecrated to the work of doing good in the earth, and should we be, as they were, so consecrated to the work of God that we are willing, as they were, to do all in our power for its advancement, then we should experience, as they did, an abundance of joy, even though it might be amid the surroundings of poverty in the things of this world's goods.

Such as I have give I thee, should be our sentiment, expressed in actions toward God, toward the church, and toward mankind generally. Such blessings as we have power to bestow upon others we should not withhold. If it be true of us, that we have not silver or gold, then we are free from obligation to give those things, but there is a warning to us in the word of the Lord against hoarding those things up selfishly or using them upon ourselves exclusively. We are bidden to be equal with our brethren, and the penalty of ignoring this requirement of the gospel is that we shall not receive the manifestations of the Spirit of God.

In our Sunday-school work there is everywhere a crying need of capable, faithful, earnest teachers and officers. It is true that the work is doing well in many places, but it is possible to do better in most instances, and every one of us who has time to devote to this work should offer our willing service, feeling in our hearts that such assistance as we can render we will give to the work.

It was John's complete consecration of self to the work of saving men that moved him to desire to have power over death that he might have opportunity to do a greater work for humanity than the ordinary period of man's life permits. There was no thought of self in the request for life. Selfishness has no place in the gospel or in the divine nature; it has, however, a strong hold upon human nature; it is one of the strong opposing forces to the progress of the work of God in the earth. We have great need to root it out from among us.

ANNA SALYARDS.

Letter Department.

Longsight, MANCHESTER, England, Dec. 28, 1904.

Dear Herald: I notice when reading the church papers that the number of letters from the whole number of Saints in Great Britain are very few indeed considering the numbers that belong to the church. There are about forty on the records of East Manchester Branch to which I belong. Since becoming acquainted with the church I have witnessed many changes. Firstly, the dividing of the Manchester Branch into four parts, each one taking up branches in the four corners of this great city, North, South, East, and South Salford respectively. I have seen the gifts of the gospel made manifest many times. Sorry to say that we do not enjoy the blessings as we used to some time ago. I have been a member of the East Branch for over two years, having been born in the North Branch. We have a splendid president in the person of Elder N. J. Weate. A more loving, patient, forbearing, and instructive man can not be found. He sacrifices a good deal of time, talents, and means for the advancement of the work in this little branch. He is also president of the first Religio that the British Mission boasted of, also assistant superintendent of the Sunday-school. I owe much of my knowledge to him and Bro. John Bailey and Bro. W. R. Armstrong; and not a little to our beloved Bro. John Davies, who was missionary last year in this mission. We as a branch feel the loss of our Bro. Thomas Mills, who has gone to Canada. He was one of the hardest workers that we had. May God bless him where he is that some honest souls may hear the joyful tidings through our brother. I thank God for all his mercies, blessings, and favors toward me. I realize my unworthiness to stand as a servant in his church and kingdom set up in these the last days. I ask for the prayers of the Saints on behalf of my wife, children, and self; also for the Saints of the Manchester District, especially the East. There is a work for every member of the church to do, and it will only be by determination and perseverance that we will succeed. We have many noble and good young men who are able to take up the banner of our King and meet all attacks of the enemy of our souls. May God bless all those who will fight the good fight.

Your brother in the fight,

EDWARD MALONEY.

FORT CROOK, Nebraska, January 10, 1905.

Editors Herald: Will say that a number of years ago I was baptized into the church when very young, and have been away from the church and all its associations since 1901. Have been in the far West most of the time, and have had to associate with those who do not think much of Christianity; in fact, never give it one thought we might say. Something has always prompted me to live my religion, and not give heed to the outside world, but I feel that I have strayed far, far away from the fold. It is my intention to be baptized again, as I do not feel satisfied, and can not until I embrace the gospel anew. My wife will unite with me in the church at our earliest opportunity. We ask the prayers of all the Saints that we may hold out faithful, and not fall by the wayside; and that it will be but a very few days until we will both be united with the church.

Yours sincerely,

MR. AND MRS. WALTER LOWE.

STANBERRY, Missouri, December 26, 1904.

Editors Herald: The Reverend Doctor Iliff delivered a lecture here December 19, on "Mormonism versus Americanism," or "Thirty years among the Mormons." The lecture consisted largely of garbled quotations and misrepresentations, especially in giving the history of the early life of Joseph Smith. In fact his argument about Mr. Smith was "if so and so was so and so," and "it is said." What he said of Utah Mormons may be largely true; but that Joseph Smith had anything to do with it we deny. I never listened to such an onslaught and tirade of abuse in my life concerning the Palmyra Seer. Braden may be more unreasonable and say more mean things, but if he can tell more untruths than the Reverend Doctor Iliff it is because he can talk faster. Of course the opportunity did not pass without a few questions being asked, and when Bro. Anderson asked him concerning some of the false statements that he made he had the audacity to tell him that he knew more about our faith than we did ourselves, and invited him to "move on." He erred in dates—said Joseph Smith was killed June 29, 1814, and that the mob rushed into the jail and killed him and his brother, Hyrum, etc.

As to Joseph Smith being responsible for Utah Mormonism and those polygamous outlaws with their harems, we most emphatically deny. Might as well say that the lowly Nazarene was responsible for the deeds committed in the Dark Ages when Catholicism had universal power, when those who did not acknowledge the supremacy of the pope were put to death—all in the name of religion—or that he was responsible for Judas' procedure. Of course the reverend gentleman has been to Utah and "spoke as one having (?) authority," adding quite frequently, "I think I know something about this question." As to Joseph Smith finding "a new gospel," he never made any such claim, only claiming to be a humble instrument in the hands of almighty God in reestablishing the old Jerusalem gospel and authority, which have always been inseparable.

Why lecturers and writers will take Beadle and the unscrupulous Howe as reliable authority is beyond our comprehension. No one would ask an infidel whether the Bible contained the word of God; and why go to one's enemies to get his correct history? The learned historian, Bancroft, says of works written against the Latter Day Saints: "Most of these are written in a sensational style, and for the purpose of deriving profit by pandering to a vitiated public taste and are wholly unreliable as to facts."

But that revelation on plural marriage—that is a stunner. Strange that it should be kept under lock and key till the year 1852, and then be presented to the people for their acceptance with Joseph Smith's name attached to it in order to give it prestige. But there is nothing small about Brigham, as he has an explanation (?) on this wise: "Emma burned the original." If she burned the original how did Brigham Young come in possession of a copy? He tried to make Joseph Smith responsible for this obnoxious and fraudulent revelation in order to satisfy the desires of his wicked and depraved heart. No wonder he said, "If I have any knowledge touching the condition of this people at the present time, and the way they are taught, led, counseled, and dictated by those who go before them to open up the way, it is directly opposite of that we saw in the days of Joseph the prophet."—Brigham Young, Journal of Discourses, volume 1, page 78, September 11, 1853.

When interviewed by United States Senator Trumbull, Brigham Young said, "As to our institutions, we know we are right, and polygamy, which you object to, was not originally a part of our system, but was adopted by us as a necessity, after we came here."—Alta Californian. The Book of Mormon which they profess to believe condemns polygamy. (See Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 6.) See also Doctrine and Covenants, where we have this reading: "Marriage is ordained of God unto men; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation, and that it might be filled with the measure of man according to his creation before the world was made." There is not a word in the writings of the Seer favoring polygamy and some people in the face of this towering and indubitable evidence still maintain that Mr. Smith is responsible for the revelation on polygamy and take the contradictory and unreliable evidence of "sports in nest hiding," which are doubtful as they would be ruled out of any court as second-hand evidence. One thing the Reverend Iliff said to our credit was that the "Josephites denounced the presidency of Young and were, in a degree, law-abiding citizens and chopped off all the evils of Utah Mormonism." Said he had been in correspondence with Bro. Joseph, etc. He failed to point out in what degree we were not law-abiding citizens.

May God help us all to maintain the purity of this blessed work and be humble and faithful to the end, is the prayer of your brother in the true and everlasting gospel,

JAMES D. SCHOFIELD.

MALAD CITY, Idaho, January 3, 1905.

Editors Herald: The first work done since being taken sick, November 28, except to administer to a few who were also sick, was January 1. On that date I preached one funeral-sermon over the remains of two infants. The names of the parents were Mr. and Mrs. Fink and Mr. and Sr. Jones, all living in Malad. Large attendance at the funeral, as there always is here. The people are sympathetic.

I feel decidedly better to-night than I have before for weary weeks. I now hope to be able to manifest activity soon in gospel work. In connection with this fact, I may state another. It is this: I have almost completed arrangements for a debate at Porterville, Idaho, to begin January 17. Is it possible, brother editors, that the mere prospect of a "fight" is invigorating to some people?

Porterville is a settlement just across the Snake River from Blackfoot. Wife and I held a series of ten meetings there. The attendance increased nightly till we had full houses. I attribute the excellent interest awakened there to the assistance wife rendered at the organ and in the song service, largely. She accompanied me most of the summer and fall. We procured a small folding organ, which proved an invaluable aid in street and other meetings. We are indebted to the Saints of Pocatello and Idaho Falls for the organ.

After having held eight services at Porterville, we intended to close our work there on Sunday night. But quite a number had spoken to me about preaching on the "Sabbath" question. Leaving the matter to the audience, it was decided by unanimous vote that I should lecture twice on that subject. This I did, inviting Mr. Croskrey, an Adventist, to attend. He came the last night and reviewed my effort, with my consent, for half an hour. The writer then spoke about twenty minutes. Seemingly dissatisfied with the result of that meeting, Mr. Croskrey announced to the audience that he would secure a minister, who would lecture on that and other subjects. I remarked that I would like to know the date of the lectures, so I could attend them; and, if not asking too much, occupy part of the time. Mr. Croskrey assured me I should have due notice of the date of the lectures. A gentleman in the audience then arose and asked Mr. Croskrey if he would furnish a man to hold a regular debate. He said he would. I accepted the situation and announced to the people we would arrange for the debate.

The lecturer, Elder W. W. Stewart, came to Porterville unannounced. So, of course, I got no notice of the date of his lectures. Upon his arrival, friends sent me word, but I was sick and could not go to Porterville. So I corresponded with Elder Stewart and we have nearly completed arrangements for discussion there. There are four questions. They are in reference to the Sabbath and the spirit or soul of man.

After a protracted correspondence, Reverend E. P. Smith, of Pocatello, denies me the use of the Episcopal chapel to preach in because we differ so widely in our ideas of God and because of the "Inspired Translation." I admitted a wide difference of belief and invited him to occupy our pulpit at Malad and address us upon those subjects, presenting his objections to the Inspired Translation. We offered to heat and light the building without cost to him and entertain him while in our midst, if he desired this. The branch at Malad authorized us to make him this generous proposition. We await his reply.

We spoke six times in the basement of the Baptist church, in Idaho Falls. This was rented for our use by Bro. James Jennings. Bro. Jennings very generously supplied our needs while there. The election occurring about this time, militated against these efforts.

At their invitation, we made our home and "headquarters" with Bro. and Sr. Jennings for several weeks. To have such help was of great advantage to us. It gave an excellent opportunity to preach the gospel in adjoining towns "without purse or scrip." This can be easily done, as the revelations provide. This my experience so far has proven. I have traveled and preached a good deal among strangers, totally unprepared to pay hotel bills. This has been especially true since coming to the Rocky Mountain Mission. I have always been cared for and that without compromising myself in the least.

Not long since a good brother said to me, when I was going to a town to preach where there were no "Josephites" or known friends: "Have you money to pay your board, Bro. Pender?" "I don't want money to pay board. The people there will board me." "But if they don't?" "But they will." And they did, of course.

Professor J. M. Larson, principal of the schools at Clifton, the Mormon elder who opposed me in debate there last winter, is an absconder. He was arrested and said he would go to jail rather than give the bond required. The officers allowed him to procure a horse and saddle and then bade him farewell, with the understanding that he should go to Malad and turn himself over to the authorities of the jail. He has never reached Malad nor been heard from since. When I asked an editor here why the officers did not accompany him he replied: "Oh, the sentiment of the entire community, except one or two, was opposed to his arrest. The injured girl's parents did not wish to create a 'disturbance' over the matter, and so the officers turned him loose."

Your brother,

WILL S. PENDER.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, January 4, 1905.

Editors Herald: On November 10, in company with Bro. E. L. Henson, I started for Northeast Texas. We preached at Bowden, Manchester, Avery, Ima, and Lydia. Of our being assailed at Avery by W. M. Hicks, and of the debate that followed, Bro. Henson has written you. Had we learned of the real character of the man before the debate, as we learned afterward, there might not have been any debate. But not knowing the man, and the Baptist people indorsing him, and our time also being limited, we entered immediately into the debate. But we are satisfied with the results so far as we are concerned. Friends were made for our cause. The abuse and misrepresentations indulged in by Hicks were so apparent, that none but the willfully prejudiced could fail to see it.

But the principal object for which I came into the Northeastern Texas District, did not transpire. I was to assist Bro. Henson in a debate at Lydia with a Baptist preacher by the name of Campbell. Bro. Henson had debated with him at Bowden, Texas, in the summer, and the debate was to be repeated, with an additional proposition, at Lydia, to begin December 10, at half past seven in the evening. We were on hand promptly at that time, but no Reverend Campbell appeared, neither was any explanation received. Bro. Henson wrote to the man asking for an explanation; but, at last advices, he had received no reply. It was plainly "a square back out."

On December 19, we separated, I coming to San Antonio, and Bro. Henson remaining at Avery and vicinity. I found Bro. Henson an agreeable col laborer, and a careful, conscientious worker.

Reaching San Antonio on the 20th ult., I have continued here since, doing what I could find to do. The festivities of the holidays have hindered to some extent. On Saturday, the 7th inst., Bro. D. S. Palmer, president of the Southwestern Texas District, and I, expect to go to Floresville, to hold meetings over Sunday; I may continue longer if interest and opportunity will warrant.

To the Northerner, San Antonio is beautiful even at this time of the year. The plazas, decked with English evergreens, palms, cacti, and roses in bloom, are beautiful indeed. Then everywhere are found trees that are dressed in perennial green.

Of course, I have visited the Alamo, and thought upon its history. Hope to be able to visit some of the old missions while here.

The weather is fine, Christmas and New Year's days were so mild and warm that no fire was needed. Yet we have had a few nights cold enough to freeze ice one half inch thick, where water stood in vessels outside of buildings.

H. E. MOLER.

Various Subjects in One.

At the risk of being accused of wanting to see my name in the paper I write a few lines for publication in the HERALD on various subjects.

1. Differences of opinion on various subjects are from time to time being expressed in our church papers, also in private conversation. Such when done by our brethren or sisters with a view to coming to proper conclusions and not simply for the mastery are commendable and serve as a preventive of monotony, and thus aid the work. On Graceland College our views should be expressed after much thought and prayerful consideration, unbiassed by prejudice.

2. Some one recently writing an article thought we were drifting away from proper channels in the reception and distribution of church funds. Perhaps we are; at any rate we should watch carefully this important point.

3. Who write for publication nowadays? We see but few articles in our church papers from the leading men in the church, except those in the editorial columns by Bro. Joseph. These items from the Editor are very fine, especially the recent one in which we were requested to "mind our own business" relative to the Reed Smoot case; but why do not those of the apostles, such as James Caffall, and others having much knowledge of this work, write occasionally?

4. Indifference in religious matters is characteristic of this age, and the Saints partake more or less of this indifference, which like an armed man takes hold upon us. Let us beware of this subtle power of the Devil. There is but one remedy, viz: faithfulness to Christ the Savior.

5. From current events in our own country and those in other lands we realize that we are living in troublous times. There is great wickedness, wars, and rumors of wars. These things prove that we are living in troublous times of the latter days—the days of wickedness and vengeance. Let us not get hardened to these things, and think it just happened so. Truly, prophecy is being fulfilled before our eyes. Brethren, seeing these things are true, shall we not, as Bro. Joseph says, "mind our own business," and go steadily onward to victory?

LITTLE DEER ISLE, Maine, January 5, 1905.

Editors Herald: If old Brn. Landers, Gurley, Briggs, and Ells were alive, they would sense the awakening of many memories associated with the name "Little Deer Isle."

A short time after the close of the Civil War, Bro. John Landers came to this island and began preaching the gospel to its inhabitants, a humble yet hospitable people, who opened their hearts to the message and accepted him into their homes. The people were poor, and many a night the worthy brother had to reverse matters by placing his head under the pillow to protect him from the cold blasts of wind that swept through the sleeping-room. And, in the quiet hours of the night, with his thoughts many miles away, he could gaze up through the roof and watch the stars shine down on Joseph's land.

The result of this effort was the baptism of Bro. John J. Billings and wife and three others, by Father Landers, as he is known in the East, and elsewhere, I presume. This was many years ago, but the seed sown has never died although the Saints here have passed through periods of trials that would cause the strongest to tremble with fear.

With the gospel came the gifts, and great unity, and love; but owing to exaltation of some, the existence of confusion, and other reasons known only to God, an evil spirit crept in and deceived the people. The result of this mistake is a matter of local history, and will become general as soon as the fifth volume of church history is published. Through this trying scene many of the Saints passed with great fortitude; and confidence in God and his Christ was unshaken.

Bro. Zenas Gurley next came, and his example and words are tenderly remembered by those who knew him. He was fond of reading the Book of Covenants, and it seems the Lord especially directed him so to do, for at that time only one Doctrine and Covenants was known to the Saints, and it was some twelve miles away, in the possession of Elder George Eaton, of whom honorable mention is made on page 199, volume 3, Church History.

Bro. Gurley was sent here to inquire into the peculiar conditions through which the Saints had passed, and when all things were considered, he complimented them on their expression of humility and willingness to do right. Some time later Bro. Jason Briggs came. His counsel was to the line. He magnified his calling as an apostle, and the Saints immediately recognized in him a leader. He allowed no one to drift on the sea of uncertainty. With the sword of truth, he cut off error and unpurged the vineyard of the Lord. He greatly opposed tobacco-using. On one occasion he felt that a certain brother had not been properly ordained, so he reordained him.

Among other names, I hear mentioned Josiah Ells, Thomas Smith, and E. C. Briggs, all of whom have left an example worthy of imitation. They were not above mistakes: like the rest of humanity, but mortals. Bro. Landers taught that all the sacrament should be eaten; consequently the bread and wine were repassed till consumed.

These pioneers of the Reorganization suffered privation that tested energy and zeal. Hundreds of times they returned thanks for sufficient corn-bread and pork to satisfy the demands of hunger. A bed on the floor was the best the homes afforded, in many cases. But they prayed, and worked, and suffered to establish the cause of Christ, and to-day many a young man and young woman fervently thank the great Father for such men, who through much suffering brought to this isle the pearl of great price.

Here, as well as in other places, is fully presented the truth that "he that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved." Awful is the picture, to see old Saints, who have borne the heat and burden of the day, tiring of the struggle and laying down their arms; after the many prayers, the successful passing through of trials, the tasting of God's love and power, to turn from the fountain of life, to wither away and die! It seems that if they could realize what they are doing, what they are losing, the feeling of death would cause them to quake with fear. Satan blinds the soul till his victim is dragged to the lowest pit.

However, a brighter day is opening. The Lord's work is here, and it will remain till he sees fit to gather his people home. The old members who refuse to "line up" shall be brushed aside, and willing workers will take their places in the fallen ranks. The young are rallying about the standard, and in the earnest faces of young men and women, is seen a determination and power that cause Satan to tremble and the angels to rejoice. Gaps made in the priesthood by death and desertion will be filled by consecrated lives that assure the triumph of righteousness.

This past year in Maine has intensified the fact that God's work progresses only when his law is kept. Some have been, others are, laboring under the destructive delusion that mercy will defeat justice, that sympathy can supercede the enforcement of the law. This endeavoring to split up the Lord's statute, this fear of man, has done more towards keeping the branches in a corrupt condition, than any other failing in Maine.

The heavenly Father knows best; we must honor his law or suffer the penalty inflicted on lawbreakers. A disregard of his will results in shame and failure, as the dark days of the disorganization prove. Many of the brothers now laboring in the West will remember Elder John Billings, whose integrity has, apparently, saved this branch from the spoiler's power. While many of his once coloborers have turned back to the beggerly elements of this world, this brother stands firm for truth, and, with his worthy wife hopes to some day (not many years hence) reap the reward of the faithful, with the Saints gone before.

On Christmas a noble young woman of this place was baptized. She graduates from the Eastern Maine Normal School in June. The words of our Savior were fulfilled in her case; as both father and mother opposed the step she took. The kind Father protects his children, and will to the end.

Snow is deep in this section, and the Reach (another word familiar to many elders) is frozen over. We will soon be sailing on ice-boats at a terrific rate of speed.

In the East there is many a heart that thrills at the word Zion, and among the new element is many a face set Zionward. We feel that a power deep and strong and good is being felt in this part of the vineyard, and we know that the result will be glorious in the due time of the Lord.

To this end I wait, pray, hope, and work, trusting in the Eternal One, whose promises never fail.

RALPH W. FARRELL.

Independence Items.

"It is He who leadeth up the sun
And ordereth up the starry influences
And tempereth the keenness of the frost;
And therefore in the plenty of the feast
And in the lifting of the cup, let Him
Have praises for the well-completed year."

The holidays with their festivals and home-gatherings have come and gone.

The Sunday-school children on Christmas Eve participated in the songs and speeches, enjoyed the sight of the lovely Christmas-tree with its tinsel decorations, and the benign old gentleman, round, rosy, and ebullient, heard the jingle of his sleigh-bells, received from his munificent hand the usual Christmas treat, and at the close of the entertainment, happy and hopeful, retired in good season to their homes.

There was a failure on the part of the gas-plant at the opening; but its light shone forth later on. As Wagner hath it, "To give a trifling pleasure, smooth an anxious brow, bring a little light into dark paths—what a truly divine office in the midst of this poor humanity!"

Some of the societies have met also to elect their officers for the ensuing year, the Sunshine Band with its score of members, who have been scattering seeds of kindness, and holly wreaths and flowers, and singing songs to the aged and sorrowful ones; also the Sunday-school and Willing Helpers have met to do business for the year.

Like as it was in Washington on Christmas day, it was cloudy and rather raw and nothing eventful happened. The hour and a half session of the Sunday-school passed in the usual manner.

Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, who subsequently lectured before the Religians and Sunday-school folks, gave an interesting talk, and the secretary with clearness of speech read the school report, which gave general satisfaction; as the record showed a Christmas offering collected of one hundred and thirty dollars and seventy-six cents.

At the opening of the morning services the first strains of the organ filled the church with its rolling cadences of a Christmas "Gloria." Of course the offertory is not a mere musical performance, but is a part of the devotional exercises, and all listened with rapt attention.

But there is generally more or less moving about by a few, and these find themselves not immune to criticism. For instance, while the organist was executing a delicate and pianissimo strain a brother came trotting up the center aisle in order to talk to one of the elders, causing the brother to crouch on the edge of the platform to hear the message; also several stood up to take off their overcoats, while some overlooking the duties of the ushers endeavored to procure seats for themselves, and a couple of young ladies left their seats, not even staying to hear the sermon!

But the merry part of Christmas was reserved for the close of the evening service.

Sunday, the first day of 1905, was fine and the snow, gathered from the late blizzard, had melted away and emotions of praise and gratitude seemed to pervade the hearts of the Saints.

About eight hundred assembled in the basement in the afternoon to celebrate the ordinance of the sacrament. On the platform attending to the blessing of the emblems were Elders I. N. White, R. May, and W. H. Garrett. Eight priests with marked order and precision took up the oblation and passed the bread and wine, and after a short season of prayer, thirty-five engaged in bearing testimony.

Bishop May offered a few closing remarks relating especially to finances, and the Saints were dismissed after having enjoyed a season of great profit and refreshing.

Our last Wednesday evening prayer-meeting was also one long to be remembered.

All seemed to rejoice in the Spirit's presence. Bro. Kemp was again moved upon to speak with earnest words of encouragement to several of the Saints, among them the officials of the stake and branch, the elders, and all the Saints, especially the faithful sisters, mentioning also Srs. Hart and Horton. Every one seemed to partake of the general rejoicing.

Truly we have much to be thankful for, and to urge us on to more devoted efforts in this glorious work.

Extracts from Letters.

Str. J. Williams, Hopkinsville, Kentucky: "Since meeting with Elder G. H. Graves I think I never in all my days heard such gospel preaching. It seems as though it were a new gospel such as I never heard before. I first heard him at another place, and learning that he came to our town I hastened there, and found him, and was baptized by him. I have been in the service of God since I was fourteen years old, and am now thirty-four, and am just hearing the gospel in its fullness. I believe in trusting God for everything, because everything we have comes from him."

Mary Flagg, Castalia, Grand Manan, New Brunswick: "We are isolated from church privileges, and often wish an elder could come here. We would do all in our power to aid them. I can not do without the HERALD, and often when reading the letters from brothers and sisters of far-off lands, I rejoice that I am counted worthy of the name of Latter Day Saint. I desire the prayers of God's people that I may live faithfully to the end."

Josie Hannan, Cross, Texas: "I often receive strength and encouragement when I read of the good that some of the Saints are doing. I feel thankful to my heavenly Father for the many blessings received at his hands, and desire to so live that I may set a good example before my children, that, when grown up, they may obey the gospel, and become servants for Christ. Remember me in your prayers."

W. W. Beal, Eureka Springs, Arkansas: "Another year has passed, and wife and I find ourselves in this place free from snow-drifts and blizzards. We do not know whether there are any other Saints here or not. If there are we would like to have them call at Quinn Cottage and see us. Would be pleased to see any elders who may come here."

D. R. Baldwin, Ravenden Springs, Arkansas: "I am humiliated when I learn that I am guilty of misunderstanding and misapplying Bro. F. J. Ebeling's use of the work wiseacre. I ask the brother's forgiveness."

A. M. Merrill, Independence, Missouri: "I would not like to miss the coming of the SAINTS' HERALD. It is a good friend in many times of need."

Str. L. Luchsinger, Thayer, Missouri: "Thayer Branch spent a merry Christmas at Cane Hill, families and friends bringing well-filled baskets. Bro. James T. Davis and family were permitted to mingle with us. Our aged Bro. Frisbee and companion were unable to be with us on account of poor health. May God bless them in their old age, having so faithfully fought the good fight, alone for many years, and done so much good work in Sunday-school capacity, when, (oh! how sad to think) many could not realize the good work they were engaged in, and rather sought the ways of the world. So our Sunday-school ceased for a time. For two years we have been having union Sunday-school; but it seems that they are trying to freeze us out. By the advice of Bro. Davis we will organize a Latter Day Saint Sunday-school, trusting in God to be with us, to guide and direct us. Zion's Praises are very acceptable. The children love to sing these praises."

Died.

MYERS.—At the Saints' Home, Lamoni, Iowa, January 6, 1905, of paralysis and dementia, Bro. Cyrus H. Myers, aged 69 years, 11 months, and 16 days. He was born in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, January 22, 1835, and was baptized by Bro. G. E. Deuel, March 20, 1861, in Jasper County, Iowa. His wife and children are dead. Funeral-services were held at the Home, sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins.

BELLVILLE.—Near Mondamon, Iowa, December 17, 1904, Stella May, youngest child of Bro. and Sr. Myron Bellville, aged 5 months. A goodly number of friends and neighbors were in attendance at the home and church. Funeral-sermon by Elder J. S. McDonald, in the Saints' Church. Elder John Garner in charge.

HEPPELSTON.—At Akron, Ohio, December 9, 1904, of apoplexy. Sr. Harriet A. Hoppelston was born in Yorkshire, England, September 30, 1812. Married to Mr. George H. Hoppelston in 1860. Four daughters were born of this union, three of whom were present and ministered to their mother in her last hours. In July, 1901, she was baptized by Elder U. W. Greene and was striving to live the faith when the summons came. During her sickness on regaining consciousness she expressed her faith and confidence in God and his work. Funeral from the residence on North Hill, Elder U. W. Greene preaching the sermon.

ROBINSON.—Elder Bradbury Robinson, formerly of Eureka, California, later of Independence, Missouri, was born at Cornville, Somerset County, Maine, January 11, 1822, a son of Bradbury and Hannah (Smith) Robinson. His grandfather, Thomas Robinson, was a native of England and a lieutenant in our Revolutionary War. He married, March 19, 1843, Mary Savage Patton, at Skowhegan Falls, Maine. To them were born six sons and six daughters, six of whom, four sons and two daughters, survive him. He and his wife joined the church at String Prairie, Iowa, in 1862, he being baptized by Elder John Shippy. He lived there for several years, then emigrated and settled at Eureka, Humboldt County, California; thence removed to Independence, Missouri, and at the time of his death was living with his daughter, Mrs. Ella D. Whitehead, where, on January 5, 1905, he went to his rest as a shock of corn fully ripened for the harvest. His wife preceded him a short month, the funerals being just four weeks apart to the day. He was early ordained an elder in the church, and though eccentric and in some things different from his fellow elders, was an upright, faithful adherent to the cause, which he advocated upon any and every suitable opportunity, and in full faith of which he went to his grave. Funeral from the house, January 8, in charge of Elder John D. White. President Joseph Smith pronounced the funeral discourse. Two daughters and one son were present with the family at the time of his death and interment. He lies by the side of his wife in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Even the Prairies Read it.

It was the Christmas Annual of Country Life in America that the Philadelphia Inquirer called in its news columns "one of the most attractive publications ever produced in this country or any other." The account then proceeds to tell of an Eastern man traveling over the prairies of Nebraska who, on approaching a modest farm-house, was surprised to see signs of unusual refinement and culture. The front yard was both tasteful and fruitful, the vines were artistically handled. The traveler found this only the less surprising because he had seen other unexpected evidences of the same spirit in his Western travels. On the center-table of the house he found all the recent numbers of Country Life in America. The hostess assured him that it was the fountain of her inspiration, one that had watered many farms in the vast prairie section,

The puzzling question of how Russian words should be transliterated into English is considered in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for January, 1905, by Mr. Herman Rosenthal, of the New York Public Library. The letters of the Russian alphabet are shown with their English equivalents and the rules presented for the transliteration of Russian words into English, as followed by the best authorities, both in this country and in England.

Cut or Uncut Books.

A gentleman from Kansas, having sent to McClure-Phillips for a copy of Wagner's The Simple Life, wrote back that he was not pleased with it because the book was not finished, the pages not having been cut. He went on to argue "Would you like to have your shoemaker send you a pair of shoes with nails sticking up in them, or your tailor send you a coat without sleeves. Let us try to practice a little Christianity. The MacMillan Publishing Company has played me the same trick, and hereafter I will have to specify that I want a finished book, or I don't want it at all."

Though this comes from Kansas, it is ripe with suggestion; and this voice from the plains of the West is heard with pleasure on the question of machine-made, closely cropped book versus the uncut book with its pleasantly irregular edges.

Rest and Recreation.

Along the line of justifiable extravagance let me make a plea for more recreation for the busy housewife. In caring for her home and loved ones she is too apt to forget the duty she owes herself, and almost before she is aware of the fact she is growing nervous, feels discouraged and irritable. At such a time let her pause and consider not how much she will save by continuing in the same old rut, but how much she will gain by laying aside her work for a time, that she may rest and recuperate. Do not wait until tired Nature calls a halt, but make a practice of taking one or two vacations every year—going where you can really rest, and have time to think not of the work you have left behind (that will take care of itself), but of the benefit yourself and loved ones will gain. These short separations "make the heart grow fonder," and the dear ones will also learn from your absence how necessary you are to them. Time and money spent more freely this way will "really pay in the end." It will mean better health for wife and mother, a larger bank-account and happier homes.—January Woman's Home Companion.

A Woman Revolutionist.

A Russian woman revolutionist whose life has been spent in propagating the idea of revolt—not, however, of Nihilism or assassination—has lately visited New York. Her personality and history are intensely dramatic. She is described by Ernest Poole in the January magazine number of the Outlook as follows: "Daughter of a nobleman and earnest philanthropist; then revolutionist, hard-labor convict, and exile for twenty-three years in Siberia; and now a heroic old woman of sixty-one, she has plunged again into the dangerous struggle for freedom." A most interesting portrait of this woman, Katarine Berezhkovsky, accompanies Mr. Poole's article in the Outlook. Here is a single incident in her career:

"We put on peasant dress, to elude the police and break down the peasants' cringing distrust. I used acid on my face and hands; I worked and ate with the peasants; I learned their speech; I traveled on foot, forging passports; I lived 'illegally.' "By night I did my organizing. You desire a picture? A low room with mud floor and walls. Rafters just over your head and still higher, thatch. The room was packed with men, women, and children. Two big fellows sat up on the high brick stove, with their dangling feet knocking occasional applause. These people had been gathered by my host—a brave peasant whom I picked out—and he in turn had chosen only those whom Siberia could not terrify. When I recalled their floggings; when I pointed to those who were crippled for life; to women whose husbands died under the lash—then men would cry out so fiercely that the three or four cattle in the next room would bellow and have to be quieted. Then I told them they themselves were to blame. They had only the most wretched strips of land. To be free and live, the people must own the land! From my cloak I would bring a book of fables written to teach our principles and stir the love of freedom. And then far into the night the firelight showed a circle of great broad faces and dilated eyes, staring with all the reverence every peasant has for that mysterious thing—a book.

"These books, twice as effective as oral work, were printed in secrecy at heavy expense. But many of us had libraries, jewels, costly gowns, and furs to sell; and new recruits kept adding to our fund. We had no personal expenses."

So says Bro. I. M. Dungan of Woodbine, Iowa. Writing July 3, 1904, says: "After having used tobacco for 30 years I feel that I am thoroughly cured of the habit by the use of your 'Quit-to-bac.' I commenced using 'Quit-to-bac' March 8, 1901, and used two and one half boxes, and have had no desire for the past two months, my health is better every way and I feel like a new man. I feel that I can not speak too highly of the merits of 'Quit-to-bac,' for I believe 'Quit-to-bac' to be a God-given remedy, that it will cure one of the most filthy and useless habits Satan ever invented; therefore I unqualifiedly recommend it to all addicted to the use of tobacco in any form, and will cheerfully answer inquiries from any one as to my case—how I treated myself, etc., if a stamp is inclosed. You are at liberty to use this recommendation as a-gems best to you. . . . I close with a heartfelt 'God bless you.'" FALSEHOODS AND MISREPRESENTATIONS BY THE "GOSPEL MESSENGER."—NO. 3.

Mr. Charles M. Yearout, whose writing in the Gospel Messenger we have heretofore noticed, in his third article published November 19, 1904, endeavors to draw a contrast between what he calls Mormonism and the Bible. His opening sentence is, "Mormon is a Greek word, and virtually means, a masque; a sham; a hobgoblin, or bugbear. Mormonism is this, and nothing more."

To make this he uses a definition in Webster marked "obsolete." The definition as given by Webster is, MORMO n. [Gr. mormo a hideous she-monster, a bugbear.] A bugbear; false terror. [Obsolete] Johnson.

Webster gives the word Mormon as attaching to a genus of sea-birds having a large, thick bill, a puffin, secondary meaning, the mandrill. He also applies the word to the followers of Joseph Smith, with its derivatives.

It will appear from this that the Reverend Yearout convicts himself of being a child to be frightened at a "false terror." Notwithstanding the obsolete character of the meaning which he chose, he seems to have hit it about right, because it has been a false terror to the men of the caliber of Yearout and his like. They have been as unreasoning in their examination and treatment of what the Latter Day Saints have had to present as children and half-witted fools have been who have been frightened by the tales of nurse-maids and the hobgoblins and sprites of fairy-land.

His first effort is to charge that the Mormons teach that Joseph Smith is the Elijah whom God was to send before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord. (See Malachi 4:5, 6.) And he says of it, "This prophecy evidently refers to John the Baptist, and not Joe Smith." We are not aware that the Mormons have claimed that Joseph Smith was Elijah who was to precede the immediate coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord. This shows that Mr. Yearout is as far off as the Mormons in his claim, providing they have made any such claims as he represents. Let those who may possibly claim that Joseph Smith was the one referred to by Malachi answer to the likes of Mr. Yearout. As for us it is enough to know that when that great prophet shall come, he will come in the spirit and power of Elias, one who is sent. It is so far evident at least that the crowning work which that prophet was to do has not been done, for not yet have the hearts of the fathers been turned to the children and the children to the fathers that they might escape the coming and the smiting of the earth with a curse.

The Christian Advocate, January 5, 1905, contains statistical tables showing increase of various church denominations in the United States. The total increase for Adventist denominations is 2,942; only one division (the Seventh-day) reports an increase, however. The Baptists (of which there are thirteen divisions) show a total increase of 85,040. We note that division No. 13 (the unlucky number) is listed under the name of "Old Two-Seed-in-the-Spirit Predestinarian." Of the other denominations the Catholics show an estimated total increase of 241,955; Lutherans (twenty-two divisions), 73,856; Methodists (seventeen divisions), 69,244; Presbyterians (twelve divisions), 36, 175; Friends, 510. The Dunkards show a decrease of 1,000, and the United Brethren a decrease of 6,914. The Latter Day Saints (two divisions) are credited with an increase of 1,178; this, however, is all for the Reorganized Church, as no figures are given for the Utah church. The statistics are given by H. K. Carroll, LL. D., in charge of the Government Census of churches in 1890. Of the Latter Day Saints he says, "Yearly returns are received from the secretary of the Reorganized (or nonpolygamous) Church, but inquiries for statistics of the Utah branch are unsatisfied. Full returns were gathered for the United States Census in 1890; but there is nothing later that is authoritative. They have a large body of missionaries, whose zeal in proselyting is very great. Secretary Salyards, of the Reorganized Church, says that body should not be classified as Mormons. They have no connection whatever with the Utah branch."

He next makes reference to the claim with reference to the dispensation of the fullness of times, as stated in Ephesians 1: 10, 11. And here again Mr. Yearout with particularly short sight claims that this statement refers to Christ and his gospel. We are not aware that any other claim has been made for this dispensation other than that stated by the writer to the Ephesians and the period in which Christ as the Son of God would gather in one all that would be in him at his coming. That Mr. Yearout clearly errs in claiming that the dispensation of the fullness of times was the era of Christ's coming, is seen from the text itself, which we quote:

Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself: that in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him: in whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will: that we should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ.—Ephesians 1: 9-12.

Mr. Yearout closes his quotation at the colon in verse 11, thus destroying the symmetry of the apostle's writing. Had he quoted the twelfth verse, which he should have done, it would have left the reader to know that Paul referred not to himself and his fellow believers existent at the time alone, but that he referred to others who should come after them who should be gathered, as it is clearly seen in his reference in the twelfth verse, that they, Paul and his coworkers, were to be likewise to the praise of God's glory, because they first trusted in Christ. This is further seen by the sixth and seventh verses of chapter 2, wherein Paul says:

And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus: that in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace, in his kindness toward us, through Christ Jesus.

The apostle thus identifies himself and his associate believers with those who in the ages to come in the dispensation of the fullness of times should be gathered in one. Mr. Yearout should know, as all Bible readers and readers of history know, that there was no such gathering in the time of the Savior, nor could be none. That such gathering is finally to take place through the ministration of Christ in his gospel economy, we can have no dispute with Mr. Yearout; for this has been the persistent teaching of what he calls Mormonism from first to last. And if such men as he had been and were as willing to give credit for what is good among their fellow men as they have been to decry them through the spirit of misunderstanding and religious dislike, no such article as this which has been published in the Messenger would ever have been written. Such men have shown no disposition to profit by the well-known injunction of the apostle Paul, to prove all things; hold fast that which is good.

Mr. Yearout endeavors to avoid the influence of the teaching that Isaiah 29: 4, 5, refers to the Book of Mormon as the book that should speak out of the ground, in the following ingenious, but to us erroneous, manner:

This scripture plainly teaches a judgment of God upon the city of Jerusalem in humiliating her into the dust of the earth. The sealed book and ignorant man, referred to in verses 11 and 12, are referred to as predicting the Book of Mormon, and young Smith; but again they are wrong. This scripture simply refers to the state and condition of Israel at that time. The Israelites drew near to God with their mouths, and rendered him lip service, but their hearts were far from him. Verse 13. This prophecy very beautifully represents the sad plight of Israel in A. D. 70, at the destruction of Jerusalem. Israel certainly spoke out of the dust of the earth at that time.

In this Mr. Yearout has followed the abbreviated headings of the chapter, the work of men only. The statement is a prophetic one, and must have been intended for fulfillment after the period in which the prophet wrote it, and was to follow after the accomplishment of events that are clearly predicted by Isaiah and others. And one has only to consider what is stated in the eighteenth verse to understand clearly that it was not the condition of Israel that was referred to: "And in that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book, and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity and out of darkness." In his endeavoring to restrict the prophecy of Isaiah as he has done, he only shows that he is among them who fail to see out of obscurity and out of darkness. It is further in evidence that subsequent to the discovery of this book the words of which were to speak out of the ground, certain events were to transpire in the land of Palestine which would be easily understood: Lebanon would be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field should be esteemed as a forest. Can Mr. Yearout or any other show that such an event as this took place during the time in which he restricts the application of the statement made by the prophet?

Mr. Yearout next attempts to show that Joseph Smith was a false prophet by quoting the statement in Deuteronomy 18: 22, referring to a prophet speaking in the name of the Lord, in which if the thing followed not, nor came to pass, it was the thing which the Lord had not spoken, but the prophet had spoken presumptuously. He states, "Smith prophesied many things which never came to pass. He prophesied that a temple should be built at Independence, Missouri, and that he should dedicate it, and Smith has been dead for years, and there is no temple built yet." We are not aware of the existence of any such prophecy in which it is predicted that Joseph Smith would dedicate a temple built at Independence, Missouri. It would have been more to the purpose if Mr. Yearout had given citation where such prophecy could be found. But is not Mr. Yearout a little "too previous" in his conclusion that the prophecy concerning the building of the temple is false? There is plenty of time between now and the coming of the messenger whom the Lord was to send suddenly to his temple for the erection of a building such as is supposed to have been described as the temple referred to. We advise the gentleman to wait, if he can afford to do so, a few more years for the development of events that time may bring, before he finally concludes that in this sense the teaching of the Prophet is false.

Mr. Yearout proceeds in his statement of apparent conflict between the teachings of the Bible and of Joseph Smith, in the following strain:

The Mormon god is a wonderful, changeable being. He declared in the Book of Mormon that man should have but one wife, and concubines he should have none. In 1831, February 9, and March of the same year, Smith received revelations confining men to one wife; but in 1843 the Mormon god saw fit through his prophet to establish polygamy in his church with a penalty of condemnation to those who refused to accept and abide by the polygamous covenant.

Mr. Yearout is in considerable ignorance if he does not know that the same God who declared in the Book of Mormon that man should have but one wife, also gave revelations through Joseph Smith to the same effect, and that it was not until eight years and two months after Joseph Smith was killed that there was even a semblance of what was called a revelation offered as an excuse for the practice of plural marriage. This took place a thousand miles from where Joseph Smith's bones lay in the grave and under the rule of an ambitious man already steeped in crime against the commands of God. It is because of the unchangeability of God in his dealings with men that we of the Reorganized Church have persistently denied the origin and validity of the so-called revelation. And the God that we worship being the one who declared by the revelator as the one who fashioned the world and all things therein, this charge of changeableness from this reverend defamer comes with poor grace. We have not space to follow this further more than to say, God has not changed, his work has not changed, and the command to have but one wife is still his enactment.

Mr. Yearout errs again in stating that the Mormons claim that the famine for the word of God, as spoken of by the prophet Amos, resulted in bringing forth the Book of Mormon and the Mormon revelations and prophecy, as stated in Amos 8:11. Of this he states, "Unfortunately for Mormonism, there was no famine of God's word during the years 1820 to 1843, the time Joe Smith was getting up his new bible, delivering his many revelations, and establishing his new church." The burden of the message of the prophet Amos in the eleventh verse referred to was like this: "Behold the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord." The prophet in this does not refer to the word of God as Mr. Yearout would apply it as meaning the Bible, but was for the hearing of the word of God preached to them by competent authority to be believed in and to be effective for salvation; and in the very statement made by him, that during the Dark Ages of the Roman Catholic supremacy, when the Holy Scriptures lay buried for twelve hundred and sixty years in the convents and monasteries of Catholicism, is sufficient proof that Joseph Smith was right in making the application of the words of the prophet Amos to these last days; for the attitude of Mr. Yearout and his associates, together with the great mass of sectarianism, clearly proves that there is still a famine for the hearing of the word of God. This famine for the hearing of the word of God not only began long before the birth of Joseph Smith, but it has continued since his death and will continue until men turn from the doctrines of men to the doctrines of Christ as taught by himself and his disciples in the New Testament Scriptures, and as authorized to be taught by him in these last days through the message of an angel.

Mr. Yearout says: "The teachings of the Book of Mormon are not authenticated in history: Nephites, Lamanites, Moronites, pool of Mormon, rivers and cities, are not mentioned or corroborated in history."

This may be so far as Mr. Yearout is acquainted with history, but if he will take pains to read the researches which have been going on for so many years in Central and South America and will examine the Book of Mormon history with one of Bro. George F. Weston's maps before him and a copy of the report of the committee on American Archæology, of the Reorganized Church, he will discover that he has made a blunder in this statement. The very fact that the Book of Mormon proposes to treat of peoples who inhabited this land before the current history of the time began to run, disproves in effect the injurious parallelism which Mr. Yearout seeks to draw between the historic places mentioned in the Bible and those which he says fail to be noticed in history as occurring in the Book of Mormon itself.

Mr. Yearout's next statement is a gross misstatement:

Mormonism teaches that Christ was born, lived and was crucified on the Western Continent, that American Indians are the lost tribes of the children of Israel, and that Christ delivered unto them a plan of salvation—the Book of Mormon.

There is but one truth in the foregoing statement: that is, that it has been taught that the American Indians were a remnant of some portion of the lost tribes. The other portion of the statement is clearly untrue. What Mr. Yearout calls Mormonism accepts the New Testament Scripture as to the birth of Christ, his life, his teaching, his death and resurrection. Its adherents have never taught differently to this; hence Mr. Yearout's argument based upon such a premise falls to the ground.

Mr. Yearout makes a sort of an appeal to the prejudices of the people against what he calls Mormonism by quoting Revelation 22:18: "For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book." His appeal is couched in the following language: "The Mormons have added an entire plan of salvation, purporting to be the everlasting gospel, hundreds of revelations, and many prophecies so called." In this the gentleman is again at sea. The Mormons have not added one single line unto the words of the prophecy found in the book of Revelation—not one. They have insisted, however, that God had the right to add to his work and his word at his will; that he had never lost his interest in his people upon the earth, had never surrendered his right of speech, nor never broken the line of communication between himself and men upon the earth when they were in the line of duty and were willing to hear and obey; and hence any argument based upon the supposition that the Book of Mormon or any of the revelations given through Joseph Smith from God were added to the words of the prophecy referred to, is a mistake.

The next proposition in which the reverend gentleman attacks what he calls Mormonism is with regard to a change in text occurring in "Timothy 5." He says:

In order to make Timothy 5:10 suit their practice, the Mormons have translated: "If she have washed the saints' feet," "If she have washed the saints' clothes." The women of the Mormon church do not practice feet-washing, because the heads of the church have decreed differently.

The reverend gentleman has here attempted a little clerical satire, and in doing so leaves the reader to infer that it was the practice of the women in Timothy's day to wash the saints' feet. There is no such teaching in the New Testament Scripture known to the reverend gentleman nor to any other Bible reader. If feet-washing is taught at all, it is inferred from the example of the Savior in washing his disciples' feet as a sign of humility and the suggestion by him that so they should also wash each other's feet. "If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet."—John 13:14. Read also in the same chapter from verses 1 to 17 inclusive. The reverend gentleman undertakes to cast discredit upon the women of the Mormon church by the suggestion that they do not wash their feet, because the heads of the church have decreed differently.

The next two paragraphs in the reverend gentleman's third article deals with the question of baptism for the dead and polygamy. As we are not teaching either of these practices, we shall not attempt to refute these charges, as they do not involve us of the Reorganized Church in the defense of them; besides that, the citations quoted by the reverend gentleman as against plural marriage or polygamy, we have used and shall use again, and commend him for using them. In this third article, in which he should have contrasted the faith of what he calls Mormonism and the Bible, is simply a tissue of statements made by himself as to what Mormonism teaches, and then a denunciation of it by counter-statement and to a large degree a perverted application of scripture.

WHEN TO STOP DISCUSSION.

Discussion of truth is one thing; argument is another and very different thing. The discussion of a question by two persons whose common and only purpose is to get at the truth ought to be a profitable exercise, and the truth is likely to be revealed in richer measure than it can be when studied by an individual alone. But the moment the discussion degenerates into an argument, the usefulness of the conversation is pretty sure to be lost, for the chief purpose of an argument is to prove that my side is the right side; and two persons on opposite sides of an argument are never likely to get together. It matters little whether I am right or wrong in a discussion; it matters a great deal that I should see the truth, and all the more so if the truth proves that I have been in the wrong. Moreover, the moment it appears that what one is saying is antagonizing, rather than helping the other person in a discussion, that moment is a good time to change the subject; for no good ever comes of a collision between friends.

While we may not accept all of the foregoing, quoted from the Sunday School Times, yet it contains some truth, a consideration of which will be beneficial. This writer might have added that it would be unfair to stop discussion before both sides had an equal opportunity to be heard. It frequently happens, which is perfectly natural, that the one who feels that his position is not being vindicated is the first to cry out against discussion.

We think the Saints need not be alarmed because of the fact that some of our brethren engage in controversy from time to time, nor need they be unduly disturbed because such controversy may appear in the columns of the HERALD. It must not be supposed that because two brethren, whether minister or lay member, engage in discussion and present divergent views, it necessarily indicates that personal grievance is held by either party. On brother, writing, is fearful lest parties to a late controversy have forgotten the scriptural injunction: "If thy brother hath aught against thee, go tell him his fault between thee and him alone," etc. So far as we know neither of the parties referred to by the brother has aught against the other, as far as personal feeling or bitterness is concerned. In fact we have heard expressions quite to the contrary, and believe their aim to be for the establishment of right and truth, relating to a public question, an act of General Conference and subsequent action in connection therewith.

Discussion properly carried on is one of the best means of educating the people. And whether the parties to the controversy are any nearer agreed at the close of their efforts than at the beginning, the careful-reading, thinking class among the Saints will undoubtedly have a clearer perception of the question at issue, and be able to tell where the truth lies. "For it shall come to pass, that the inhabitants of Zion shall judge all things pertaining to Zion," etc., says the Lord, Doctrine and Covenants 64: 7; and in order to be qualified to pass judgment they must have both sides of the question presented. Jesus says, "Judge not unrighteously, that ye be not judged; but judge righteous judgment."—Matthew 7: 2, Inspired Translation. No one having considered but one side of a question is prepared to judge "righteous judgment," hence the necessity of having both sides fairly presented. And in judging a question, after having heard and carefully considered all the bearings of the case, the decision should be based squarely upon its merits, and no one should be biased in his judgment by the fact that this or that man advocates this or that position. It will not do to allow ourselves to fall into the habit of doing as we heard it expressed by one at last General Conference: "I am going to watch Bro. So-and-so, and vote just as he does; for he is always right."

We have no sympathy with the thought that internal conditions should be carefully concealed from the world, and only a polished, placid, calm exterior presented to view. We believe it to be a mistake to "make clean the outside of the cup and of the platter," or to "outwardly appear righteous unto men," until that which is within the cup and platter is cleansed, "that the outside of them may be clean also." This language of Christ's is in force, and is applicable to the body, and to individual members. If the internal condition of the church should ever become such that it would need to be hid from the eyes of the church at large and the world, then the church would be in a sad condition to send out missionaries to represent Christ.

No one, especially Latter Day Saints, should be afraid of the truth. If we have anything in faith, doctrine, practice, or theory that is indefensible, the sooner it shall be discovered and discarded the better it will be for the body.

Then whatever untoward conditions may threaten, let us as Saints, be of stout heart, and unwavering faith in the triumph of truth; and when the time comes for us to make decision, may we "judge not unrighteously, . . . but judge righteous judgment."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

According to the Scientific American for January 21, 1905, there is to be an international organization, which will include the heads of all the powers of Europe, to make excavations at Herculaneum, destroyed with Pompeii by an eruption of Vesuvius in 79 A. D. The king of Italy has consented to be the head of the international committee, which will have headquarters in Rome. President Roosevelt will be at the head of the committee in the United States. King Edward in England, Emperor William in Germany, President Loubet in France, King Oscar in Sweden. It is expected that representatives of every nation will be at Herculaneum, and the work when started will be prosecuted rapidly. Surely it is a day of excavation.

The Manchester (England) Daily Dispatch for January 6, gave, under the heading "The poor bishops," figures showing that the personalty of thirty-nine bishops of the Church of England who died between 1856 and 1885 amounted to over two million pounds sterling, "exclusive of any real estate they may have possessed, and also exclusive of any sums invested in policies of life-insurance or otherwise settled for the benefit of their families." The figures were furnished by Reverend Mercer Davies, formerly chaplain of Westminster Hospital, who took the figures from the records of the probate court. In individual cases the amounts ranged from twelve thousand pounds to one hundred and forty thousand pounds, and the "nominal income" of the various bishops from four thousand to fifteen thousand pounds. It is quite evident the bishops of the Church of England have been well cared for when they were able to leave fortunes, exclusive of real estate, ranging from one hundred thousand to one million dollars.

Bro. LaRue has an article in the Bangor (Maine) News for January 10, 1905, under the heading "Two churches of Latter Day Saints," in which the general attitude of the Reorganized Church is clearly set forth. The article is illustrated by portraits of President Joseph Smith and Bro. LaRue.

The following churches have of late succeeded in either canceling or arranging so that the debts which heretofore have been a burden, have been lifted: St. Joseph, Missouri, entirely paid, original indebtedness about $5,200; St. Louis, Missouri, entirely paid, original indebtedness about $3,500; Des Moines, Iowa, paid $1,500, original indebtedness about $1,700; Spokane, Washington, paid, $2,000. These several branches are to be congratulated upon their good work. Since they are relieved of debt, however, it will be better for them and all others to remain free, if it be possible to do so and yet perform their work.

"CONCERNING GRACELAND COLLEGE. REPLY TO CRITICISMS."

In the HERALD of 11th inst., under the above caption, the Bishop is much exercised concerning my statement that he had "raised the issue relating to the college." All that I meant by that was that he had done so in the sense of entering the HERALD columns.

That "brother in Australia" certainly failed to read the conference minutes as well as the statement published in the SAINTS' HERALD as well as Ensign, in which the action of the committee and college trustees was fully set forth. Or were the statements in these citations so murky as to fail to emit even a little "ray of light"? And after not only the above statements but a long editorial in the HERALD and the publication as to the reopening of the college, after the summer vacation, with the names of the professors, the statement that "the facts were unknown" holds good only in the sense that prior to the report of this Australian delegate the Australian people had not been permitted to hear both sides of the question.

Thus inadvertently the Bishop admits a fact that has grieved some of the HERALD readers—that only one side of the college question (that favorable to its continuance) was being ventilated in the church papers. Yet, all "the facts were unknown" in that "far-away country." But for the facts about this "delegate," providing it is the "same party who assumes to correct the Bishop's answers"—(as though that were an unpardonable crime!) whether any other did, I wrote to the New South Wales conference, "where the facts" favorable to the college were known, as already shown, and I wrote with no attempt at "making certain that the other side could not be heard," but simply as a delegate, and gave my reasons for my attitude.

Suppose I have changed my mind about "suspension"! what then? I believe it is commonly accepted that wise men change, but fools never. But by reverting to the language it will be noted that I was simply noncommittal. That is, since the Bishop had said: "There was no attempt to suspend the Articles of Incorporation or any other rule therein by the conference," I would not notice his reply. By my statement I simply meant to call attention to the thought that the Bishop had thus recorded his conviction as to conference action and I was willing to leave the consequences he had thus shouldered with him, rather than to go on record either pro or con, so that his thought that his answers had "borne a little fruit" was the grasping for a fruitless honor, the emptiness of which he is wholly entitled to.

Had I been the chief and among the first to set the pace on the side of the minority in open rebellion against the majority I would be the last one to use the minority argument! To assume that "the board of trustees follows proper law and rule and performs its duty under the law," is to assume the very thing now controverted, and this method when adopted in regular discussion is not a commendable one, to say the least of it. If I had publicly preached on this controverted question, and that at a reunion where disquieting subjects should be let alone, I would be the last to throw out the thought of "industriously" scattering, etc. This deduced insinuation is, however, as untrue as its premises, for the thought of the minority submitting to the will of the majority had weight enough with me for a time to lead me to assist in the securing of one of the professors and the transaction of business when present at the meetings of the board until my conscience could stretch no farther. "Well, it is worth something to know just where an opponent stands," but to seek to locate such opponent by "jumping to conclusions" is a questionable method. Let me state my own logic, please. Syllogism: Conference is a creator. The individual is a creature. Therefore the individual should obey the voice of conference. Now as to last spring conference: it had a right to legislate; it passed a resolution not "in violation of its own rules and the rights of others"; therefore every member should sustain the action of the conference "or be declared in 'open rebellion.'" "

I admitted the correctness of the second answer so far as I inclosed it in quotation marks. As to attacking the board of trustees let us note that I cited the fifteenth article wherein the board has as much authority as General Conference to amend such articles, and there was no excuse "for want of proper notice" for it had ample time to have given the sixty days' notice, amended the articles, and conformed to the General Conference resolution—that is, closed the college—before time for the fall term to commence. Yes sir, "The conference only declared what it favored," all of which was a virtual though not a mandatory order. But what if that "claim" has been "abandoned"? Even though it might not be an evidence of wisdom to thus abandon a former position it would at least indicate honesty of purpose. No, you rejoiced too soon; the "change of heart" you rejoiced over has not yet been "experienced." Yes, sir! "These articles may be amended . . . at any meeting of the board of trustees" (emphasis mine), providing said board has given the required notice sixty days prior to the convening of the meeting to so amend. The conference must also give sixty days' notice to make an amendment to the articles but not to express what it favors.

In the resolution passed by the General Conference last spring it was only said "that we favor a discontinuance of Graceland college . . . until such time as the General Conference decides to reopen the college." "The saints are now asked to accept the position that the conference could pass such a resolution"—as the resolution neither sought to annul or amend the articles of incorporation—and that it was within the province and became the duty of the board of trustees to see that necessary steps were taken to carry out the provisions of the resolution. This, at most, would have suspended the Articles of Incorporation "until such time as the General Conference" said "reopen."

The reference to Brigham Young and polygamy is against the Bishop's position for those believing in Mr. Young "were under obligation to accept it" (polygamy) as a doctrine of the church but not as a divine principle. In 1898 we adopted in General Conference a statement as to the duties of the deacon which in its entirety I did not then nor do I now believe, yet I am "under obligation to accept it," as the belief of the church, though I do not indorse all contained therein.

Neither articles 5, 7, nor 15, as quoted by the Bishop, deny the board the right guaranteed in the statement "These articles may be amended . . . at any meeting of the board of trustees herein named," etc., etc., the word "these" implying any and all of the "articles." It is not assumed that "the conference by resolution can direct the abandonment at any time and even without notice." But it is assumed that the right to express an opinion in the form of "we favor" always inheres and that all should be submissive thereto though a respectable minority may not favor such opinion, the submission to continue until a change obtain. In Mosiah 13: 4 we have:

Now it is not common that the voice [majority] of the people desireth anything contrary to that which is right; but it is common for the lesser part of the people to desire that which is not right; therefore this shall ye observe, and make it your law to do your business by the voice of the people.

As has already been shown the resolution of last Conference did not contemplate an annulling of the articles but rather a suspension so that title nine (9) chapter two (2) of the Iowa code, section 1651, under the head of "changing name," applies. It is as follows:

Any corporation organized under this chapter may change its corporate name or amend its articles of incorporation by a vote of the majority of the members, in such manner as may be provided by its articles.

This is a "law of the land" and was broken by a refusal to keep the law of God.

Their right to free speech, their right to liberty of conscience, does not permit them as individuals to frustrate the commands of the body in conference assembly. They are sent out as ministers to preach the gospel, and their voices if opposed to what may be presented to the conference should be heard in the conferences, and not in the mission fields, . . .—Doctrine and Covenants 125: 16.

As it is also noted in the same paragraph that none have a right to "throw obstacles in the way" to prevent the paying of "this great debt," I have felt just as much obligated to talk in favor of paying the debt as to talk in favor of that which was presented to and passed by the conference.

No, sir, I am not an "opponent of the college" but am opposed to running in debt. (See Doctrine and Covenants 64: 6; 101: 13.) Let the college get into that condition where an expense deficit does not accrue and then there would be more reason to call its opposers "opponents of the college." We oppose going into debt.

It is well, though possibly dangerous to one's denial, to place his statements in juxtaposition and thus discover just how far that denial will hold good. In his first article the Bishop says:

Because of prior adhering rights guaranteed to the body by a resolution of the body passed by a prior General Conference by unanimous consent and which the conference could not in justice ignore.

In his "Reply" relating to the same thought under the head of "Answer," he says:

The Bishop did not state nor intimate that there was any such a resolution passed.

My question following the numeral "3" shows that I did "comprehend the question and answer" and therefore had a right "to review the answers of the Bishop."

Had proper discussion been permitted at the conference, no action whatever would have been had.

Pure assumption that. Besides it was as fair for the one side as the other that the time limit should be observed. The Bishop not only had his five minute privilege in open conference but appeared before different quorums in their own sessions when this resolution was on trial. The Quorum of Twelve through its secretary and by regular motion and vote handed to the various quorums a copy of the resolution. After being discussed by the several quorums in their own sessions this resolution had a two days' trial in open conference. Why, during such trial, did not some one, acquainted with the Articles of Incorporation, call attention to the sixty days' notice, etc., etc.?

If all this were not a "proper hearing" what can be said to be? Not a speaker opposed to the resolution called attention to either the three-fourths vote or the sixty days' notice, all of which could have been done within the time limit by any one of the speakers, so that the assumption that, "Had proper discussion been permitted at the conference, no action whatever would have been had," comes with very bad grace and more especially so since what are now held to be the vital points were not even mooted.

There was just as much opportunity for "proper hearing" on the one side as the other. The time limit affected the one side as much as the other.

REVIEW.

1. I am still of the opinion that in the sense as implied in my former article the Bishop "raised the issue relating to the college."

2. One side of the question, the side which charged the General Conference of 1904 of having acted illegally, had been heard not only in Australia but in every part of the world where the HERALD is read.

3. That "delegate" was simply giving to the New South Wales conference his reasons for his attitude with the only motive of letting said conference know how he felt, that in the selection of delegates he would not be chosen should his position not be acceptable to that people. There was no thought of "making certain that the other side could not be heard."

4. That the "other side" could be heard, and occupying the attitude that I do, were my reasons for answering the Bishop.

5. No instruction has been given "freely" or otherwise "to strike down the educational work of the church," but rather to keep it intact. Part of the true "educational work of the church" is to "see that my law is kept." It does not consist in book-learning alone. A part of "my law" is to pay our debts, and when the Twelve saw by the Bishop's financial report there was a seven thousand dollars' deficit in the running expenses of the college, it was thought best to obey God's law and seek to get out of debt.

6. The statement relating to suspension in my first article simply and by the proper use of quotation called attention to the thought that the Bishop had committed himself to the thought that no suspension was attempted, but as to my belief in the matter the statement was noncommittal.

7. As to representing the minority of the board, I may say that to all acts of said board I freely submit even though I do not agree with them, unless I believe the board to be acting in rebellion to its creator—the church—in which case I would have to enslave my conscience did I submit.

8. "The brother admits" only that part of answer two as quoted by him, to be correct, and did not seek "to evade the force of this answer by attacking the board of trustees."

9. Yes, "These Articles [of incorporation of Grace-land College, J. W. W.] may be amended at any General Conference of said Reorganized Church, or at any meeting of the Board of Trustees herein named," etc. It is well to note that by the above article the board of trustees, ecclesiastically, is granted power plenipotentiary, and are thereby given coequal authority with the General Conference as to the right to amend the "articles." Whether this extraordinary power was granted willingly or inadvertently is immaterial so far as the fact is concerned—the power is therein granted and the board has a right to so exercise.

10. The imperiling "every dollar of property" is more likely to be realized in an ever-increasing deficit culminating finally in bankruptcy than in suspending college operations "until such time as the General Conference decides to reopen."

11. As to legislating for the church the General Conference is supreme and we must submit to such legislation until repealed. Conference may legislate contrary to the interpretation of the law and yet not be "in violation of existing law."

12. When conference by a majority vote speaks in "favor" of a change, the trustees would "not assume to themselves the power to change" if they sought to execute what the conference favors.

13. It may be a special duty of the Bishop to see that church properties are not diverted from their intended use. The Twelve also have some special financial duties imposed.—(See Doctrine and Covenants 122: 5.)

14. The Bishop's "answer" under numeral three in his last article has been placed beside the corresponding answer in his first article as will be seen in the main body of this article.

15. In the statement: "The attempted act did not conform to the law and was void," it will be well to note that no law has been either cited or quoted prescribing the right to legislate so far as to say what "we favor." Further, if the "attempted act" was so legally weak as to be void why the heroic effort against its adoption? and why was this weakness not pointed out at the time such "attempted act" was being so warmly contested? Still desirous for the right,

A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE AMANA SOCIETY.—1714-1900.

I

ORIGIN AND EARLY HISTORY OF THE INSPIRATIONISTS.

The history of the Amana Society, or Community of True Inspiration, dates back to the year 1714 when J. F. Rock and E. L. Gruber made the first beginning in Hessa, Germany, not as a communistic society, but as a new religious sect, having for its creed the belief that God could now, as well as of old, inspire men to speak and declare his word and will, and thus act as messengers of divine teaching to the world.

These men soon had many followers, who had seen and felt the utter hollowness and formality of the then existing church, and who eagerly embraced the doctrine of Rock and Gruber, of a true and purer religion, of a life after the teachings of Christ, and of a life of simple and conscientious Christianity, with a high standard of virtue and morality, devoid of all that outward display and form, which made up the Christianity of the majority of the people in those times.

J. F. Rock and J. A. Gruber, a son of E. L. Gruber, as well as a number of others, had the spirit and gift of revelation and inspiration, and they went about preaching and testifying as they were directed by the Lord, making extensive travels through Germany, Switzerland, Holland, and other European countries, soon establishing many small congregations of followers of their faith. The most important of these were Himbach, Schwarzenau, Birstein, Ronneburg, Neuwied, Liebloss, and others. Although many thus adopted their doctrine, Rock and Gruber did not make these journeys for the purpose of increasing the number of their followers, but only upon the direction of the Lord, for the sole purpose of leading humanity to a purer and truer Christianity.

E. L. Gruber died in 1728; but the work was continued by Rock, who was now assisted by a number of others, who had consecrated their lives to the same work. The most notable of these were Jonas Wickmark, an attorney and a graduate of the University of Jena, Casper Löw, the brothers Gleim, Doctor J. P. Kämpf, a philosopher and physician of note, and Gottfried Neuman. The boldness with which these men attacked the time-honored custom of the church soon brought upon them the hatred of the clergy, who were not backward in denouncing them and their teachings as ungodly, and complaining to the Government, asking for their imprisonment or banishment. Also many high and noble persons were turned against these preachers, for title and rank proved no barrier for these fearless men, when they felt called upon to testify against their godless and immoral life. All this soon aroused the displeasure of the various governments into which Germany was then divided, and in many places orders were issued for their fining and imprisonment. Many a time were these orders executed, and they had to go to prison or were put in the pillory, exposed to the derision and contempt of the mob. Sometimes they were tied to the whipping-post and whipped; once at Zürich, they were publicly lashed through the streets out of town.

But the preachers were not the only sufferers; their followers also had to feel this persecution, as they would not bear arms, nor serve in war, and also persistently refused to make oath. This refusal they based on the passage in scripture, where Jesus says, Matthew 5:34: "But I say unto you, swear not at all;" and Matthew 5:37: "But let your communication be yea, yea; nay, nay; for whatsoever is more than these, cometh of evil."

Many governments prohibited all meetings of the inspirationists, as they were called, and imposed heavy fines on those who still persisted in holding them. In spite of all this oppression the sect continued to grow, although many had to leave their native land, friends, and all, in order to go to places where the authorities were more tolerant, and where they were allowed to serve God according to their chosen faith. The most liberal government was that of Hussia, where most of the emigrants flocked, and which on that account contained the largest congregations.

A great loss to their cause occurred in the year 1749 when J. F. Rock died; and with his death the gift of inspiration ceased. But his place was taken by others, who followed in his footsteps, and who ministered to the various communities, using for their basis the writings and testimonies of Rock and Gruber and also the Bible. The most prominent of the successors of Rock was P. G. Nagel, a man of education and a graduate of the University of Jena. He also, in conjunction with others, traveled much and continued the work along the lines of the founders. Nagel died in 1779, and from that time on the decline of the Society, which had really commenced with Rock's death, became more rapid, until at the beginning of the nineteenth century but few of the once large congregations remained; even these few had fallen back into the ways of the common world more or less, preferring an easy-going way to the trials and tribulations suffered by their fathers. This was due to some extent to the fact that inspiration had ceased to exist, but also to the general decline of religion in those years. The kings and rulers of the various countries were often engaged in wars, and political events diverted the thoughts of the people from religious matters; the chairs of the higher educational institutions were filled with men of rationalistic inclinations; the students were brought in contact with the liberal ideas of their teachers, and by them these were spread throughout the land.

II

THE REVIVAL OF 1817.

The slow and gradual decline, described above, continued until the year 1817, when a new and greater period dawned for the Society. The old workers had long ago foretold that the good work would not die out, that there would come a time when new teachers would arise and with new life and vigor proclaim the old doctrines. For years the prospects for the fulfillment of these prophecies had been dark and gloomy and many had commenced to doubt their truth. But the time had now arrived, the revival came, and with it new life and zeal was awakened.

The first step in the new movement occurred when M. Kraussert of Strassburg was endowed with the gift of inspiration. He proclaimed God's deep sorrow over the decline and decay of the work, so nobly and faithfully commenced a hundred years before, calling on the few remaining faithful, to begin life anew, by embracing the doctrine of the new as well as the old prophets, not only in words and form as heretofore, but also in spirit. Kraussert's inspirations were recognized by a number of the old members. Others did not accept them as godly, and were thus turned against the revival movement.

A few months later another person received the gift of inspiration. This was Barbara Heinemann, a poor peasant girl, born at Leitersweiler, Alsace, without culture and education. She never had the advantage of schooling, not even being able to read or write. She was earning her living as a servant, and had never paid much attention to religious matters, taking part in the various frivolities of the world, without thinking anything bad about them. One day she became engaged in deep meditation about her past life, and she became aware of her great unworthiness to be called a Christian. From that time on she sought to inform herself of the requisites of a truly religious life; she went to church regularly, also asking the ministers and other people, whom she knew to be pious church-members, how she could shape her life, so as to be more in conformity with the teachings of Christ. But there she met with poor success; most of them smiled at such religious inclinations at her age—the age at which the world lies before the youthful mind as having only joys and pleasures in store. This rebuke from the few, where she could hope for information upon the subject so dear to her heart, left her in a sorrowful state of mind. She was longing for something better, but did not know where to find it.

At that time she had heard of people, who had separated themselves from the church and who held meetings after their own faith and belief. These, she heard, were called Pietists. She at once set about to become acquainted with them, and for that purpose visited a lady, whom she knew to be connected with this sect. After some hesitation she was admitted to their meetings, and thus became a member. It was in the house of one of these Pietists that she first met M. Kraussert, and at once felt that this man's inspirations were godly, and that she had at last found what she was longing for. She now accompanied Kraussert on his visits to several of the congregations of the Inspirationists, and shortly after she also received the remarkable gift possessed by Kraussert. She spoke with great power, using well-chosen language although she never had any training in that line.

About the same time another young member, by the name of Christian Metz, of Ronneburg, received the same gift of inspiration, already possessed by Kraussert and B. Heinemann. These three then were the true founders and recognized leaders of what was called the New Community.

Kraussert soon fell back into the world, because he showed too much fear in proclaiming the word of God, and because he did not want to bear the persecutions which soon followed; therefore Christian Metz and Barbara Heinemann only remained. These two carried on the work in much the same way as Rock and Gruber had done before. The mission-work and travels were largely performed by C. Metz, B. Heinemann staying at home or visiting other places only on special occasions.

C. Metz, usually in company with one or the other of the brethren from Ronneburg, now visited the various towns and places where remnants of the old inspiration community were known to exist, such as Schwarzenau, Himbach, Homburgshausen, Liebloos, Neuwied, and others. There he was variously received; some at once accepted him as a new teacher and prophet, coming as the fulfillment of the before mentioned prophecies; others were filled with grave doubts about the authenticity of his teachings, while still others, although but few, came out openly against him, branding him as an imposter, trying to immitate Rock and Gruber from selfish motives and for personal gain. Some of these doubters afterwards were convinced of their error, and were thereafter among the most active and ardent supporters of the Society of True Inspiration, as it was now called.

The Society now became more and more united, until it finally found itself under a government similar to the one existing at the present day, except that there was no community of goods. The leaders were Christian Metz and Barbara Heinemann, and the word of God, made known through them, was the highest authority in all matters. In addition to this the teachings of Christ and the Apostles, as well as the Old Testament, formed their basis of faith. Elders were appointed in each of the various places, who had to look after the spiritual and temporal welfare of the members within their jurisdiction.

Community of goods had not yet been adopted. There were rich and poor, educated and uneducated, professional men, merchants, manufacturers, artisans, farmers, and laborers among the members of the Society; but the wealthy and well-to-do were ever ready to help along their poor brethren. A fund was established, made up of the voluntary contributions and of legacies left by deceased members; out of this fund the needy could borrow without interest when it was deemed necessary by the elders.

But the Society soon had to pass through the same persecutions and molestations experienced by their forefathers. Some of the clergymen caused C. Metz and B. Heinemann to be repeatedly arrested, and accused them of conspiracy against the church by drawing away their church-members. Usually they were released in a short time as the charges could not be sustained against them.

Another source of endless trouble for the Society were its schools. They had withdrawn their children from the public schools, preferring to instruct them privately by teachers selected from their own number, according to their faith in religious matters. Church and school were closely connected in those times; a large part of the curriculum of the schools consisted of religious instruction, which of course differed from the views of the Society, and therefore they did not desire their children to be taught along two different lines.

This maintenance of separate schools the Government would not permit, and fines were assessed against parents of every child reported absent from school. These fines they willingly paid rather than sacrifice their principles.

This state of affairs continued for a number of years, the governmental molestations becoming more vexatious every year, especially at Schwarzenau, until it became apparent that it was only a question of time when the Inspirationists would have to renounce their faith and return to the fold of the church, or leave their homes and seek refuge where they could follow their religious customs unmolested.

This latter event finally came in the year 1826, when it was no longer possible for the comembers at Schwarzenau to live in peace according to their convictions; and now came the question of a future home for these exiles. This was finally solved in that the Society leased a large estate at Marienborn, with commodious buildings and extensive farm-lands, near Ronneburg, the home of the principal elders. Here all members were given an opportunity to earn their living according to their calling or inclination, each one in turn paying a share of the rent. Thus was established the first refuge for those who preferred to leave everything behind, rather than to become traitors to their faith. Others came from various parts of the country, so that all the available room at Marienborn was soon occupied. Now it became clear, that the fulfillment of the prophecy by C. Metz, that the Lord would soon collect and gather in his faithful servants, was near. Still more were ready to leave their homes, and as there was no more land available at Marienborn, the Society rented a number of buildings, erected and formerly occupied by the Herrnhuter Society, and called by them the Herrnhag. These buildings were large with many rooms; and although not used for many years, they suited the purpose admirably, as they had been designed and built for a purpose similar to the one for which they were now to be used.

This was in the year 1828. It was not long, before the new home was also filled, as many large congregations had moved there, especially from Edenkoben and Switzerland. In 1832 the Society leased the old convent at Arnsburg, owned by the Count Laubach. This was a large building with many halls and apartments, formerly occupied by monks, but now it had not been in use for a long time. In connection with it were large tracts of land and a flouring-mill. All this was soon peopled by members of the Society, for at this time Ronneburg, an old medieval castle and the home of the Inspirationists for over a hundred years, was abandoned, owing to difficulties with the owners.

The wealthier members tried to assist their poor associates as much as possible. They established woolen-mills and knitting-works in order to give employment to those not able or willing to follow some individual business or trade.

In addition to those now living in the three communities Marienborn, Herrnhag, and Arnsburg, (or Armenburg, as it was later called,) there were still many who had remained in their homes, being held there by their business or property, or because their Governments were more tolerant. These kept in touch with the Society, observing all its rules and requirements, and receiving occasional visits from the principal elders. In 1834 the Society had again outgrown its quarters, and more room and land had to be acquired in order to provide a place of residence and means of living for the new members constantly coming to the Society. For this purpose they obtained a leasehold on the convent of Englethal, about thirteen miles from Armenburg, also owned by the Count of Laubach.

This place was also very old, surrounded by a large wall, in accordance with the customs of former centuries. Many of the dwellings first had to be repaired, in order to make them inhabitable. After involving a considerable amount of money and labor, it was finally ready for occupation, and the first members moved there in the fall of 1834, followed by many more in 1835.

The Society now had apparently reached the quiet and peaceful life for which it had been striving for a score of years.

The spiritual management rested mainly in the hands of C. Metz, who was at that time the only one possessing the gift of inspiration, as Barbara Heine-mann had in the meantime married George Landmann and soon after lost her spiritual power. C. Metz made regular calls at the various communities, assisting wherever the local elders needed counsel and advice. He also made a number of journeys to Switzerland, where several of the old Inspiration communities were still existing and from which many later came to the Society.

He was an eloquent and forceful speaker with considerable executive ability. His spiritual testimonies were delivered in a sublimity and purity of language far beyond his ordinary abilities. He also wrote a large number of hymns, many of which are now read and sung in the meetings of the Society. In the management, especially of business affairs, he was ably assisted by P. Mook, William Mœrschel, C. M.

Winzenried, Jacob Dørr, F. Heinemann, G. Døller, and a number of others.

Thus the affairs of the Society were in a prosperous condition, but soon the old troubles commenced again. The Government would not accept the affirmations of the members in place of an oath; but the members of the Society could not be induced to swear. This controversy was revived every time some legal matter came up, putting them to much annoyance and expense. They explained the matter fully to the Government, stating why they did not deem it consistent with their faith to swear. The Government took the matter under advisement, but did not render a decision for a long time. Finally the matter was decided adversely to the Society.

This proved to be an incident of most vital influence on the future of the Society. Some time before the Lord had already revealed through his instrument C. Metz that he would lead them out of this land of adversity to one where they and their children could live in peace and liberty. No intimation had been given when this would happen, but the elders felt that the time had now arrived. So on July 25, 1842, they held a conference at Armenburg to discuss the matter, but could not reach a satisfactory decision. A second conference was held at Engelthal on August 13, in which the Lord directed through C. Metz that several members should go to America, the land of personal and religious liberty, to find a new and permanent home for the Society.

III

REMOVAL TO AMERICA.

The members selected for the journey to America were Christian Metz, G. A. Weber, William Noe, and A. Ackermann. These were given full power to act for all the members and to purchase land where they deemed best.

On the 5th of September, 1842, these men bid good-bye to their relatives, friends, and comfortable homes, to go across the seas for a new land and home, where their trials would be ended and where they would be permitted to live according to their faith and convictions.

As far as Bremen they were accompanied by William Mørschel. Doctor Weber's little son also accompanied them, as he was going with his father to America. After parting with William Mørschel they sailed from Bremen on the 18th of September, and after a stormy voyage of thirty-eight days they arrived at New York, where they at once proceeded to inform themselves in regard to any suitable tract of land which might be for sale in that or the neighboring States. They became acquainted with a land agent, who offered them a large tract of land in Chatauqua County, New York. This they decided to visit, and so they left New York for Buffalo, traveling up the Hudson as far as Albany, and from there on the Erie Canal. At Buffalo they heard of another large tract of land, the Seneca Indian Reservation, near Buffalo, which was for sale, and which seemed more adapted to their purpose, being nearer to the markets and of easy access. So they decided to make a short stop at Buffalo, in order to drive out to this land and inspect it, before continuing on their journey. They were well pleased with the land, part of which was still covered with dense virgin forest, and part was under cultivation by the Indians, who still lived there.

They were inclined to make a purchase here, but decided also to visit the Chatauqua land, and then take whichever suited them best. C. Metz and William Noe were detailed to make the trip. They returned in a few days, stating that they were satisfied that the Indian land was the most suitable. So they entered into negotiations with the Ogden Land Company, the company which had purchased the reservation from the Government. They finally purchased of one of the partners of the company ten thousand acres at ten dollars and fifty cents per acre, the conveyance first to be accepted by all the partners of the company who lived in New York. After a long time of waiting they were notified that the other members of the company were not willing to make the sale on these terms; so new negotiations had to be commenced. They finally came to an agreement by which five thousand acres were purchased at ten dollars per acre, and now the friends in Germany were notified that a purchase had been made and that a number of reliable men should come over to commence the new settlement.

But the Society was sadly disappointed in the hope that everything would go smoothly and peacefully now. Just as soon as the first company of the new settlers arrived from Europe and began preparations for the building of houses, the Indians, who were still on the reservation, commenced to show hostility. They did not want any white men on the land, which had been theirs and their fathers' for ages. Many were in favor of repudiating the treaty by which they had sold their lands to the United States Government. The Society treated them kindly and tried to explain to them that the purchase was perfectly legal and that they were now the lawful owners of the land. Some of the Indians yielded and left for the new reservation provided for them by the Government, but some were stubborn and persistently refused to leave, and it was not until 1846, after the Society had invoked the assistance of the authorities at Washington, that the last ones could be induced to leave for their new home.

At the time of the purchase of the land, the Society had no intention to introduce communism into its organization. The original plan was to hold the land and houses in common, each member's contribution to the purchase-money being secured by a proportionate share in the real estate and also drawing a reasonable rate of interest. This was soon found to be impracticable, and absolute communism was adopted, and to-day is one of the fundamental rules of the Society.

During the years 1843 to 1846 some eight hundred people came over from Germany, and the land which had heretofore been the home of the Indians, covered with virgin forests and untilled plains, soon presented a widely different appearance. The place of old Indian huts and log houses was taken by roomy and substantial, though plain houses; the soil was broken and soon covered with waving grain; two woolen-mills, a flouring-mill, several stores, two tanneries, and a number of other manufactories were established to give employment to all according to their talent and inclination. The Society now fully organized under the name of "Ebenezer Society," which title was used in all business transactions. The houses were not scattered over the entire territory, but were arranged in four villages called Nieder Ebenezer, Middle Ebenezer, Ober Ebenezer and Neu Ebenezer, the prefixes meaning lower, middle, upper, and new respectively. Each village had its store, its meeting-house or place of worship, and its schools, and had its own local government consisting of a board of elders. As the population increased more land was purchased, but of course at a much higher price than it could have been bought at the time of the original purchase.

A number of people also joined the Society from Canada, and as they owned some land there, the Society decided to locate two more villages on it. One was at Caneborough, later changed to Kenneberg by the Society, about forty-five miles northwest of Buffalo, and one nearer the Niagara River, twelve miles north of Buffalo, called Canada Ebenezer. These two Canadian villages were built on the same general plan as the others; each having a small store and some other business establishments, but their principal value to the Society was in the valuable pine forests on the adjoining land. Later, during the time of emigration to the West, large quantities of lumber were cut there and shipped to the settlements in the United States to be sold or utilized for building purposes.

Thus the Society increased and prospered until the year 1854, when its growth had become such that it became apparent that more land would have to be acquired. As all the available land in the neighborhood was held at a high price, the elders saw the advantage of going west and obtaining a tract of land large enough for all times. Another reason for the desire to obtain another location was the close proximity of the rapidly growing city of Buffalo, which had an injurious influence, especially on the younger members of the Society, and it also interfered with the quiet and secluded life of which the colonists were so desirous.

In September, 1854, the Lord gave command through C. Metz that four members should go west and find a new home for the Society, and so C. Metz, C. M. Winzenreid, C. L. Mayer, and F. Weber were appointed for this purpose. They did not know where to go, but as Kansas was at that time the Mecca of the homeseekers, they concluded to visit that territory, and if any suitable tract of land could be found to purchase it for their new home.

They spent about a month in Kansas, traveling in wagons with Indian guides, and endured many hardships, but they could not decide on any purchase. The only piece of land which seemed suitable was a part of the Delaware Indian Reservation, but the Indians declined to sell. So they decided to return to Ebenezer, much discouraged by the failure of their commission. But the plan of removal was not abandoned on account of this failure. In November a new committee, consisting of J. Wittmer and J. Beyer, were appointed to go to the new State of Iowa and inspect the large tracts of government land still to be had there, after which they were to return and report to the other elders. They visited many places in Iowa, but the territory between Iowa City and Marengo seemed to them the most suitable for their purpose. They were especially well pleased with a wide valley about twenty miles west of Iowa City on both sides of the Iowa River. There were fertile rolling prairies, with bluff and woodlands along the watercourses; they saw that the river could be utilized for furnishing water-power for factories, and that the rich prairie soil was ready for the plow and would not have to be cleared of heavy timber as had been the case in Ebenezer.

The committee returned and reported the conditions as they had found them, stating that in their opinion they had found a place well suited to their requirements. This was considered in a meeting of the board of trustees, and it was finally concluded to make the new settlement of the land so favorably reported on by Beyer and Wittmer. It was agreed that J. Beyer, C. M. Winzenreid, J. Wittmer and F. Heine-mann should at once proceed to Iowa and purchase a tract of land of appropriate size. So they returned for this purpose to the locality already visited the year before. A number of farms were scattered over the territory, but there was still a considerable amount of government land to be had, and of this they purchased about thirty-three hundred acres. They experienced considerable difficulty in getting possession of the scattered lots between the lands already purchased. Many of the farmers on hearing of their object demanded high prices; others lived in distant places and had to be visited in order to come to an agreement; but in spite of these difficulties they managed to obtain enough land to enable them to begin the sale of the Ebenezer land and commence the removal to Iowa.

The first village was laid out on a hill north of the Iowa River, eleven miles east of Marengo. It was called Amana, a name taken from the Bible and meaning "remain true." At first only small frame houses were built, but as more and more help came from the East the quarries on the land could be worked and stone buildings erected. In the following years several more villages were commenced at different places on the territory: West Amana and South Amana in 1856, High Amana in 1857, and East Amana in 1860. Up to this time the nearest railroad station had been Iowa City, twenty miles distant, but now the Mississippi and Missouri River Railroad, later named C., R. I. & P., was completed as far as Homestead, a small town south of the Society's territory. All goods from the East would now be unloaded there, and it would also form the shipping-point for the neighboring farming population. The Society saw the necessity of owning this railroad station, and so in 1861 the entire village of Homestead was bought and thus became the sixth of the villages of the Society. In 1862 another village was founded two miles west of Amana and called Middle Amana.

The sale of the Ebenezer land was now almost completed, and the last of the remaining members came to Iowa on December 13, 1864.

By that time the Society had acquired about twenty-six thousand acres of land, approximately the amount owned at the present time. In 1859 the Society was incorporated as a religious and benevolent society under the name of "Amana Society." The purpose sought to be obtained by this organization as a religious society and community is best defined and set forth in Articles 1 and 2 as embodied in its constitution.

The following are the most important provisions of the constitution, Articles 1 and 2 being given in full:

Article 1.—The foundation of our civil organization is and shall remain for ever God, the Lord, and the faith, which He worked in us according to His free grace and mercy, and which is founded upon (1) the word of God as revealed in the Old and New Testament. (2) The testimony of Jesus through the spirit of prophecy. (3) The hidden spirit of grace and chastisement.

The purpose of our association as a religious society is therefore no worldly or selfish one, but the purpose of the love of God in His vocation of grace received by us, to serve Him in the inward and outward bond of union, according to His laws and His requirements in our own consciences, and thus to work out the salvation of our souls, through the redeeming grace of Jesus Christ, in self-denial, in the obedience of our faith, and in the demonstration of our faithfulness in the inward and outward service of the Community, by the power of grace, which God presents us with.

And to fulfill this duty we do hereby covenant and promise collectively and each to the other by the acceptance and signing of this present constitution.

Article 2.—In this bond of union tied by God amongst ourselves, it is our unanimous will and resolution, that the land purchased here and that may hereafter be purchased, shall be and remain a common estate and property, with all improvements thereupon and all appurtenances thereto, as also with all the labor, cares, troubles and burdens, of which each member shall bear his allotted share with a willing heart.

And having obtained in pursuance of the act of the legislature of this State, Chapter 131, passed March 28, 1858, an incorporation as a religious society, it is hereby agreed on that the present and future titles to our common lands shall be conveyed to and vested in "The Amana Society" in the Township of Amana, as our corporate name by which we are known in law.

Article 3.—Agriculture, manufactures and trades shall form the means of sustenance, and out of the income of these the expenses of the Society shall be defrayed. If any surplus remains it shall be applied to improvements, to the erection of school and meeting-houses, care of the old and sick, the founding of a business and safety fund, and to benevolent purposes in general.

Article 4.—The control and management of the Society shall be vested in a board of thirteen trustees, to be elected annually out of the number of elders. The trustees shall annually elect out of their number a President, Vice-President, and Secretary, who shall have full power to sign all public and legal documents in the name of the Society.

Article 5.—Every member is in duty bound to give his or her personal and real property to the trustees for the common fund, at the time of joining the Society. For such payments each member is entitled to a credit thereof on the books of the Society, and to a receipt signed by the president and secretary, and is secured by the pledge of the common property of the Society.

Article 6.—Each member is entitled to free board and dwelling, to support and care in old age, sickness and infirmity and to an annual sum of maintenance, the amount of which is to be fixed by the trustees. The members release all claims for wages, interest and any share in the income and of the estate of the Society separate from the common stock.

Article 7.—All children and minors after the death of their parents and relatives shall be orphans under the special guardianship of the trustees during their minority. Any credits, if not disposed of by will, or any debts left by the parents are to be assumed by the children. Credits of members dying intestate without leaving lawful heirs shall revert to the Society.

Article 8.—Members leaving the Society either by their own choice or by expulsion, shall receive back the amount paid into the common fund without any interest or allowance for the services during the time of their membership.

From the above will be seen that communism is not practiced for temporal or pecuniary purposes or as an experiment to solve great social problems, but is subservient to the great work, and one of the means, better and more ably to perform the inward and outward duties required of man to lead a true and Christian life as commanded by God in His word in the Old Testament and as revealed in the testimonies of true inspiration. Communism as practiced in the Society is based on faith and requires obedience to faith, self-denial, and love of God and man, and in following and adhering to this bond of love and union, which God has tied amongst them, communism will be maintained.

A large part of the land owned by the Society was erected into a township by itself and called Amana Township.

A few words now remain to be said as to the present condition of the Society. The increase in membership has been slow but steady up to a few years ago, but now for several years has been stationary, being seventeen or eighteen hundred. The Society operates two woolen-mills, one at Amana and the other at Middle Amana. At Amana is also located a factory for the manufacture of cotton prints. The power of these four manufactories is furnished by the Iowa River through a canal seven miles in length and by several steam-engines. Besides these there is a flouring-mill at Amana and one at West Amana, also seven stores distributed through the various towns. These stores supply the wants of the members as well as of the surrounding farming population. The Society raises nearly all the agricultural products required for its own use, several hundred hired hands being employed for the heavier work. Nearly all the towns are provided with a water system fed from the canal or by deep wells. Each member is provided with board and dwelling, as provided for in the constitution. The meals are taken in large kitchen houses, where thirty to fifty people eat together, thus making cooking by individual families unnecessary. Children attend school all the year round from the age of five to fourteen. The schools are graded and are conducted by the teachers who are members of the Society. The children are instructed both in English and German; but the German language is used almost exclusively by the members in their every-day work. Religious meetings are held in large meeting-houses, twice on Sunday and sometimes on week days and a short prayer-meeting is held every evening. The services are presided over by one of the elders, of which there are about eighty in all. No one at the present time has the gift of inspiration. Christian Metz died in 1867 and Barbara Landmann in 1883, but the testimonies and writings left by these are read in all meetings.

New members are not admitted except they first give proof of being fully in accordance with the religious doctrine of the Society, and then they usually have to go through a period of probation. The trustees have the power to expel any member whose conduct is not according to the rules of the Society. The fact that all religious exercises are conducted in German makes it necessary that those desiring to become members be fully conversant with that language.

IV

RELIGIOUS FAITH.

(This chapter was contributed by Mr. George Herneman, a member of the Amana Society.)

The confession of faith of the Community of True Inspiration is founded on the revealed word of God, as manifested in the Old and New Testament, on the divine doctrines and teachings of Christ and the Apostles that all men should obey the commandments of God, follow in the footsteps of Christ, and conform their conduct to His teachings and example set before them while sojourning on earth.

They believe in God the Father, the almighty Creator of heavens and of earth, and of all that is visible and invisible, and in his only begotten son, the Lord Jesus Christ, the mediator and savior of the world, the word, who was in the beginning with God, the light of the world, who was made flesh, God of God and son of man, sent unto the world, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish; who suffered great agony, was crucified, died and shed his blood for the remission of sin. And also in God the Holy Ghost, who proceeds from the Father and Son, who is equally adored and honored, who has spoken and operated through the prophets of old, and who even now speaks and operates audibly through the instruments of true inspiration, and hidden inwardly, through the heart and conscience toward repentance and renewal of heart, teaching denial of ungodliness, and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously and godly in the present world, they acknowledge and avow a holy, universal Christian church, and a communion of saints, and all people of every nation, who fear God and work righteousness are accepted with Him. They believe in the remission of sin, the resurrection of the body, and in life blessed and everlasting.

Divine worship is offered in prayer-meetings, where the word of God is read, and admonitions for instruction and useful application are rendered thereon by the elders. No sermons are delivered, nor lengthy discussions of Christian theories indulged in. Prayer is regarded as very essential, a communication of the heart with God. Prayers are said in all meetings, and also at the homes and in the family circle.

Baptism with water is not practiced, but is held to be only an outward form of true spiritual baptism. Spiritual regeneration and baptism in spirit is believed to be the substance of this sacrament. Religious instruction is given, and practical Christianity is taught by the parents and also by teachers to children and young people. The confirmation, or reception into the covenant of grace, occurs at the age of fifteen. It is a most solemn act; conducted in open service, where the vow is made in the presence of the whole congregation, as a covenant of faith with God.

The Lord's supper is celebrated. It is held biennially in the manner as introduced by Jesus amongst his disciples. Feet washing is practiced and solemnly done after the example given by Christ.

They are dutifully bound in faithfulness and allegiance to the authorities, and remembrance is made in their prayers for divine guidance of the Governments and magistrates. They are noncombatants, wars being believed to be against the will of God and the teachings of Christ.

Oaths are forbidden, averments and confirmations are made by affirmation.

In dress and wearing-apparel the many variable styles are not imitated, stress being put on comfort, comeliness, and propriety.

Dwelling-houses likewise are commodiously but plainly built; living-rooms and apartments well furnished, yet all extravagances and luxuries avoided.

Games and all frivolous and worldly amusements are not countenanced, being harmful, diverting the mind from religious matters and from that most important aim of life, to work out the salvation of our soul in this present time of grace, this being the paramount object and aim to which all men should attain, to live in uprightness and virtue, in the fear of God, in the bond of brotherly love and affection, one to another, aspiring to keep the two commandments: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind; and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

On the observance, and in the obedience of these great fundamental laws and principles of true Christianity is based and founded the faith and creed of the Society; these constitute the progress, success, and continuance both as a religious community and as a communistic association, and to this aim also point and tend the precepts and doctrines of the testimonies of true inspiration, conforming to the word of God and the doctrines of Holy Scripture.

This does not imply an ascetic life, cheerless and discontented. There are burdens, cares, and anxieties, but in the relation of every-day life, in the coöperation for mutual benefit, in the solicitude and care for the welfare and happiness of every one and in the interest and sympathy participated in by all, is well manifested that their life is blended with peace and cheerfulness, and that great comfort is found in that bond of love and union, loyalty, and attachment that joins one to another, elders to members and old to young.—Iowa Journal of History and Politics, April, 1904.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

That Baby of Ours.

She's queen of the heart and the household,
This rollicking baby of ours,
And beside her bright throne in the nursery
We spend our happiest hours.
There with our household angel,
Gladdened by smile and caress,
We revel as kings in her beauty
And innocent loveliness.

Her fairy blue eyes bright as starlight,
Her ringlets of gold tinged with brown,
Her smiling red lips and her sweet dimpled cheeks,
Make her queen, never minding a crown.
And that smile, how it lightens our burdens,
What a light heart we carry away,
No queen has more dutiful subjects,
To bow to her sceptral sway.

Each morn ere we start out to labor,
For the needs of this life are not few,
We stop at the door of the nursery
For a look from those bright eyes so blue.
And perchance our darling is sleeping.
We tiptoe up to her bed,
See her smile in her dreams ere we reach her,
And kiss those sweet lips so red.

And, oh, what if God in his wisdom,
Should take our pet home to the skies,
What if death should pale those sweet lips,
And close those pretty blue eyes?
Could we give her up without murmur'ing?
Could we say, "Thy will, Father, not ours"?
Perhaps, but oh, it would be lonely,
Without that sweet baby of ours.

Parental Responsibility.

The responsibility of parents we believe antedates their marriage, and has its foundation in the eternal law, "like begets like," and in the proper combination of natures, attributes, and tendencies in the choosing and uniting as life partners. But as this involves an intricate law comprehended but by the few, and regarded by still fewer, we pass it with a mere mention, to the consideration of parental responsibility as outlined in the program. Parents must provide

FOOD AND CLOTHING.

In this day of substitution and adulteration in all manner of foodstuffs, it is no small task for the parents to place upon the plate of their child just such food as is calculated to produce a healthy growth of body. The God of nature has made ample provision for proper food in kind and quantity, all of which comes from Mother Earth directly or indirectly, and is adapted to the rightful wants of man. Healthful food adapted to normal appetites should be provided. Because of the gross abuse of the law of heredity, many children, without any volition on their part, are in possession of depraved and abnormal appetites, the gratification of which means disease of body, and condemnation to the soul. How prone we are to look upon such with condemnation, instead of with a pitying eye prompted by charitable consideration. In cases of this kind the parent should stultify, if not kill this disposition by wise culture.

Clothing should be provided suited to age and condition. Pride and vanity are the sins of the age, and in no case should a parent encourage either, by permitting such dress as would gratify such desires in the child. In such case the parent must be free from such worldly contamination. The Lord says, "Let thy garments be plain, and the beauty thereof be the beauty of the workmanship of thine own hands."

To me, one of the most handsome dresses I have seen worn by a girl yet in her teens, was made of calico, but the workmanship was exquisite, which with the happy colors made it beautiful to behold.

Children should be neatly dressed and be taught to keep themselves tidy, and to be clean withal. President Joseph Smith says: "Clean rags are excusable, but dirty rags, never."

EDUCATION.

Education does not mean simply the working out of hard problems in geometry, and "telling the stars," or in reveling in the fields of ancient mythological lore, concerning the heathen "gods"; but education is the gathering into one's mind and soul a comprehension of those principles that go to make one virtuous, temperate, patient, godly, charitable, kind; to possess that love that "worketh no ill to his neighbor"; that teaches one how to reverence the house of God as a holy sanctuary, and to reverse his word.

A person may have an education that would enable him to speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and to compute the distances to the remotest planets, and yet, lacking the true education, be cast into outer darkness to expend his eloquence in lofty flights of oratory to his fellows, in telling them the distance they were away from God, and computing the value of the rich inheritance they had lost by not obtaining the proper education. Educate the children aright; let every object-lesson placed before them, every precept announced to them, every example be toward the end to form right habits, pure appetites; and to form a character suited for a heavenly citizenship. As greatly conducing to this we pass to

READING-MATTER.

The public libraries are full of light and useless reading-matter. A librarian being asked why this was, replied, "the public taste demands it." The saloon man may be asked why he keeps liquor, and beer, which poison and destroy the physical and spiritual man, and his answer will be "because the public taste demands it." A healthy and normal and well-developed mind can no more be obtained from trashy and light reading, than a healthy body can be sustained on wind and spiced foam. As you would keep poison from the lips, keep improper literature from the mind of the child.

"PROPER SPIRITUAL AND SOCIAL ENVIRONMENT" is a cogent agency in forming right lives. Unconsciously we are influenced by our surroundings. Take your place in the midst of a carnival, where law is suspended for the time being, and where the baser passions are let loose, see their hideous acts and hear the babel of unmeaning voices; remain for a time and note the effect on the mind and spirit. Then go out on the foothills, or into the mountains, and look out upon nature, pure, peaceful nature; drink in of the blessed and pure atmosphere, listen to the musical voice of the lark, and note the change. How pure, how peaceful it all seems, and is; and how we look up through nature to nature's God, and feel to praise him!

Yes it is the parents' duty to place around their child such spiritual and social environment as will beget a love for God and for man. One of the best agencies in this line is the Sunday-school. Let no small object prevent you from being in attendance at the Sunday-school. Let the children come, and let the parent come also. Our Quarterlies are leading us through the richest fields of spiritual instruction in which all can find food in the divine life. The Sunday-school has grown beyond the narrow confines of infantile comprehension. Its boundaries are so enlarged as to take in the whole field of spiritual instruction. There is room for all; there is work for all; there is food for all, suited to all.

WORK.

Work suitably and wisely meted out is necessary. "An idle brain is the Devil's playhouse," is a trite and true saying. Activity develops and purifies, if exercised under proper laws. Teach the children that the road to true manhood and womanhood is the way of industry and frugality, the way of the cross, as well as the way of pleasantness.

AMUSEMENTS.

When we speak of amusements we touch an important subject. Improper amusements develop an appetite for gambling, which is the ruin of so many men, and women too, for it is not confined to the men. For me to say just what is proper for childish amusement would be perhaps a task beyond my power to perform. I will put a few questions, however, to this thinking audience for answer in the aftermonth.

Do you think cards are proper as a means of amusement? What do you think of checkers, of chess, of dominoes? What have you to say about these modern game-boards such as we see in many homes? How about a game of authors just to pass the time away?

I wonder sometimes how much extra time the Lord has given us, "just to idle away" on some unmeaning game or non-sensical reading. How much have you, laboring father, busy mother, earnest, energetic Saint?

As we contemplate these things we see the force of the saying of the Lord in Doctrine and Covenants, "Great things are required at the hands of the parents." They must be patterns of piety, of good nature, good humor, never lose their tempers, never threaten, never scold, never give the child an occasion to say, "Papa is cross," "Mamma is cross."

As a fitting close to this paper I will read the divine injunction and pray the Father to impress it upon each parent, and all in divine presence: (Read Doctrine and Covenants 63: 4.)

A brother at Shenandoah, Iowa, writes: "May I ask once more, through the columns of your paper, that I may be remembered by the faith and prayers of all the Saints? I have been afflicted now about half of my life up to this present time, which afflictions have added trials and loss to my already pressed condition. Pray therefore, that if it be God's will I may be healed and be permitted to enjoy the remaining part of my life free from present conditions."

In the United States and Canada in 1901 there were packed 8,968,803 cases of tomatoes, each case containing two dozen cans. This was a decrease over 1903 of nearly one million cans. The quantity of corn packed in the same time was a record-breaker, being more than double any previous pack except for 1900. The output reached 11,462,969 cases, against 4,851,146 cases in 1903. These figures are from the American Grocer.

SR. DORA BARKER, Doon, Iowa, sent to the home department superintendent her home class report for last quarter of 1904. Though but two members, she and her mother, they report the full thirteen lessons studied and a splendid contribution. In her letter accompanying the report, she says: "At the close of our first quarter's work in the home department, both my mother and myself think it was a good thing for us to do. We are very glad we began the work and are looking forward with pleasure to a full year's work in 1905." May the Lord bless them in their work.

SR. ELEANOR WHITING, writing from Clitherall, Minnesota, under date of January 9, says: "We observed the 'parents' day program' on New Year's Day for the first time and enjoyed it very much. . . . We feel that we are remembered by a loving Father. The Sunday-school is gaining here in this part of the vineyard, and the workers feel that it has come to stay. . . . I inclose the papers written for parents' day. It is their first efforts at writing. . . . We will observe the day again in two months. There has been a Religio organized here, which means more work, but I am never happier than when working for my Master. And I believe the hand of the Lord is in the Religio the same as in the Sunday-school. We would be glad to have you visit us again. Remember us in your prayers, we need them."

OF THE papers referred to in Sr. Whiting's letter there were five: "Faithfulness in little things," Sr. Hallie M. Gould; "Example the best teacher," Sr. Ella Sherman, and one, same subject, Sr. Kate Botzien; "Always keep your promises," Sr. Ellen Whiting, and one, same subject, by Mrs. Rose Harriman. Sr. Whiting says this was their first effort at writing but the papers would do credit to writers of experience. The whole-souled way in which they went at their work can be felt in reading the papers. May the Lord continue to bless these young but earnest workers and make them useful in their day. The papers will appear from time to time in the Daughters of Zion or Home Columns in the several papers as may yet be decided upon. They are worthy of a careful reading.

Those Christmas Scholars.

Dear Teachers: Yes, I quite agree with you that it is "a lot of bother" to trim and decorate a Christmas-tree and hang on it presents for a hundred or more pupils belonging to a Sunday-school. But there are a great many bothersome things in this world that bring large returns in human happiness, and all this Christmas bother is one of them. And of course I know that there are some children whose interest in the Sunday-school seems to wane with great rapidity after Christmas, but actual observation will prove that the number of these children is not very large, and who knows but that the good seed sown in the few Sundays they may have attended Sunday-school previous to Christmas will bring forth good fruit in time? A teacher told me some years ago that two new scholars once joined her Sunday-school class three or four Sundays before Christmas. She "had her suspicions" regarding the motive that brought them to the school, and these suspicions were confirmed when a boy who was a permanent member of the class told her that one of the new scholars had told him that he and the other boy had joined the class "to git a Christmas present." Now this wise teacher never "let on" that this information had been vouchsafed her. So far from giving the self-seeking lads the cold shoulder, she redoubled her efforts to give them the "glad hand." She went to their homes and had a little talk with their parents, and invited the two boys to tea with her. She exerted herself to the utmost to make them feel that the Sunday-school was a good place for them to be, and they must have come to that conclusion themselves, for neither of them dropped out after the Christmas festivities. It seems to me that the course pursued by this teacher was the right course. Had the boys dropped out after her Christmas she would have had the satisfaction of knowing that she had done her utmost to keep them in the Sunday-school, and she could have felt reasonably sure she had made impressions on their minds they would not be likely to forget. A good deal is said about the children who join the Sunday-school just before the holidays "just to get a Christmas present," and, while it is true that some children may do this, the fact does not lessen the obligation of the teacher to receive them kindly and to use every effort possible to induce them to become permanent members of the school.—New Century Teachers' Monthly.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE LESSON, FOR SUPERINTENDENTS.

This lesson is based upon the first eight verses of the first chapter of John's Revelation.

The second primary lesson opens with an allusion to the time when Jesus appeared to his apostles on a mountain in Galilee and talked with them, directing them to go forth into all the world and preach the gospel to all people, to baptize those who received it, and to teach them to observe all the things he had commanded in his teaching of the word.

It was at this time that Jesus made the promise to be with the people of his church always, even unto the end of the world.

The lesson story goes on to show that this promise was fulfilled to John when he was an exile on the island of Patmos. It tells of his being taken away from the saints who loved him to the lonely rocky island of the sea where he could have no companionship with others who loved the gospel and its author, Jesus Christ.

But the lesson also shows that the power of man could not separate John from the love and companionship of Christ and that Jesus himself appeared to the lonely exile who was suffering for his sake and gave him a wonderful vision of heaven and of the earth as it will be in its glorified condition when it has been made new.

The first intermediate lesson has an introductory statement concerning the persecution of the saints subsequent to the ascension of Jesus and of the banishment of John. Following this, are questions based on the topic, the promise of Jesus to his apostles. The advanced work is questions based on the verses of the lesson text.

The eight verses of our lesson text are introductory to John's narrative of his vision. The senior lesson is an examination of these verses.

Five of the eight verses differ in the two versions, Inspired and King James. Notice especially the differences in verses 4 and 5.

The senior lesson draws out these points, that the revelation is presented as that of John, the faithful witness, who received it from Jesus Christ and his angel to be given to the seven servants over the seven churches of Asia; that Jesus Christ is the Prince of the kings of the earth, that he has loved us and made atonement for our sins; that his blood does not cleanse us, if we do not heed his commandments; that he is coming again to earth and will come in glory accompanied by ten thousands of his saints.

Perhaps the two thoughts of most practical worth to us in this lesson are these: that we are not washed from our sins, if we do not heed the teachings of the gospel of Christ, and that, if we keep his commandments, the promise of Jesus that was to extend to the end of the world, is made to us, that we shall have his presence to comfort us and direct us. And we may add, that we are warranted by the scriptures in expecting to have tangible evidence of his presence with us, as John had on Patmos, though it does not follow that each of us shall receive a manifestation like John's either in kind or in degree of power.

The golden text, "Unto him who loved us, be glory," is taken from John's words as he prepared himself to enter upon an account of the wonders shown him in the vision. If we faithfully follow his narrative of the great panorama that passed before him, in which he heard and saw the manifestations of God's wisdom, goodness, and power exerted in the salvation of men, if we are able to realize only in a limited degree the work of love that has been wrought for us by the Father through his Son, we, too, must exclaim with John, "Unto him who loved us, be glory!"

The memory verse presents to us a most majestic picture, if we pause to consider the import of the words, "Behold, he cometh in the clouds with ten thousand of his saints in the kingdom, clothed with the glory of his Father." John could write of that glory, for he had seen it on the mount of transfiguration and again in the vision on Patmos.

In the Book of Mormon, the third chapter of the first book of Nephi is devoted to the account of a remarkable vision had by Nephi, who lived about six hundred years before the time of John. In his vision, Nephi saw the coming of John. He saw him dressed in a white robe and was told by an angel that he was one of the apostles of the Lamb who should see and write many things that Nephi had seen and things that Nephi was yet to see. He was told that others also had seen those things and had written them, and that they were sealed up to come forth in their purity according to the truth which is in the Lamb, in the own due time of the Lord, unto the house of Israel. You will find this information in verse 52 of the reading cited.

Nephi foretold that the name of the apostle who would write the things he had seen was John.

THE ABIDING ONE.

There is a poem called "The abiding one" which expresses the thoughts that some hearts are like the streets of a quiet village, where the only passers are few and well known, while other hearts are like the crowded market-place of a busy city where countless forms and faces come and go.

The poem speaks of one life into which unnumbered steps had trod, into which there had come the varied tread of friends and foes, coming and going, an inconstant, unstable throng.

But, one day, there came into that life a step, different from others, a step soft and slow, and a voice spoke which said,

"I pass not by,

But stay with thee for ever, if thou wilt,

Amid this constant instability."

Looking up to him who spoke, the heart that had craved from its fellow creatures love it had not often received, found that for which it had longed; it found in his eyes the light of love that had prompted him to die for the world, faithful, never wavering, unselfish love, for the abiding friend who had come into the life was the Savior of men.

And the poem closes with the words:

"Still do the countless footsteps come and go;

Still with a sigh the echoes die away;

But One abides, and fills the solitude

With music and with beauty, night and day."

In our lives, which, it may be, are filled with common prose more often than with poetry, we may have the abiding one, the faithful Christ, for his own promise to his saints is that he will not leave them comfortless, but, amid all the tribulations of the world, will fill their hearts with his peace. Outward conditions can not hinder his coming to us, as they could not hinder his coming to John on Patmos, but inward conditions may hinder, for his pure presence will not come into unholy temples to dwell, and the spirit of truth will not make its abode in hearts that love or make a lie or anything like unto a lie.

John was a faithful witness for Christ. Are we faithful witnesses for him? If we are, we are manifesting in our lives the beauty of his truth.

Editors Herald: A young man I baptized here has returned to his home at Garden City, Minnesota, which he says is fourteen miles south of the city of Mankato. Will any of the brethren in that region take note of this, especially the missionary in charge? The brother's name is Leonard Pettis. He says he will find a home for a missionary and assist to make an opening in his home town. Correspond with him, brethren.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

GUSTROW, Germany, January 5, 1905.

Bishop E. L. Kelley: I thought a few words in regard to the German mission and its needs would not be amiss, that you may know when you come to consider the German mission at the next General Conference. I have endeavored to economize and have got along with as little as I could, but it has cost me more than I had thought it would, for the reason that everything is so much higher than it was twenty years ago when I left Germany. I had calculated on five to six dollars per month for living expenses, but it cost me nearly ten, and it will continue to cost that till we get members enough to support a missionary. The difficulty is that the majority of the people are very poor, and even if they would give they could not do so. They are very much oppressed. Every one who earns two hundred dollars a year must pay a tax. All kind of provisions are very high, much higher than over there. Good meat costs from twenty-five to forty cents a pound. I hope the Lord will open up the way, and will soften the disposition and hearts of the people, that they may accept the gospel. I have been blessed in sowing the good seed, and the Lord has made known to me that there are people in Hamburg, and here in Gustrow who will accept the gospel, I am impressed to confine myself to those two places in the future.

I hope that the church will be in a position to assist me financially, I need ten dollars per month. My clothing is fairly good and I shall try to get along till General Conference time. I expect a little aid from a brother from America, and with a few dollars which I have at present hope to get along till that time. I am willing to labor here, providing the church will appoint, and assist me financially. I realize it will require patience and much tedious work. There are many difficulties to overcome. The people are taken up with the pleasures of the world so much. Halls to preach in are very hard to get, and are very expensive. Preaching is not permitted on the street. The only way is from house to house and in private conversation. Have been in Hamburg eighteen weeks; made many friends. Some are reading our tracts, and are investigating our claims; but it may take some time before the result is known. At the present writing I am here in Gustrow with my brother in the flesh. He is quite taken up with the gospel, I think he will obey ere long; but he is very poor in this world's goods, has a large family to support, and I can not expect to remain much longer. I am thinking of returning to Hamburg as soon as I get the needed aid financially. Any counsel or suggestion from you will be gladly welcomed. I am well and happy in the work. Regards to all the Saints.

In gospel bonds,

MAITLAND, Missouri, January 12, 1905.

Editors Herald: While taking a retrospective view of our labors the past year, we have discovered several irregularities; but hope the all-wise Father (who knows that we, in the main, aim to do right) will forgive all shortcomings, and that we may stand on a par with the average minister in the field. This, however, would be little satisfaction should the majority be in transgression; and so many make a man an offender for a word that should they be the judges perchance we should all be guilty. But "the Judge of all the earth" will do right, and we may risk our case with him, thank him for his leniency during the past year, and covenant with him to do better in the future. He knows our aim. He knows our fears.

In regard to my new mission-field, I will say that I am well pleased with the recent transfer. It takes time to become localized; but I started a correspondence with the officers of the respective branches, and by their earnest cooperation we secure houses to preach in as we move along. The Saints in Nodaway District are especially to be commended for their hospitality and care for the missionary. Those who have not been so fortunate of late years, can easily shed a tear of real gratitude when met with such kindness. This applies to all the branches visited. In addition to this needed feature of progressive missionary work, we have been recipients of the greater blessing in presenting the word; and while, as a rule, the people of the world are slow to hearken to the gospel call, yet we have had fair attendance, considering the places occupied. Evidence of the good seed sown taking root, is extant; we shall rejoice with those who may be privileged to reap. May the Saints live their religion, and a goodly harvest will be the result in due time.

Hoping, with the favor of the Master and the confidence of the Saints, to finish the race with pleasure, I am as ever,

Your colaborer in righteousness,

N. C. ENGE.

PORTLAND, Oregon, January 13, 1905.

Editors Herald: The Saints in Oregon, so far as I have seen, are about like those met with elsewhere; that is, the best people that I meet with anywhere. They are not, however, as numerous as one would like to see; and the material out of which to make more seems to be "few and far between."

The best attendance of nonmembers was in Wallowa County; but it was hard to keep from thinking, Do they comprehend what the preacher is saying?

It has been an interesting, as well as an educational mission to me. I have seen what, to me, is a more convincing testimony in favor of the Book of Mormon, from the general lay of the country, than seen by me elsewhere. What is called lava rock is seen thrown up in mountains, scattered over the face of the whole country, whether on the prairie, or in the heavy pine timber, bearing unmistakable evidence of the upheaval spoken of in the Book of Mormon, as having taken place at the time of the crucifixion of our blessed Lord.

Traveling from fifteen to forty-five miles in stages, and buggy, over hills, and down canyons from five to nine or more miles in length, has been a new experience to me, and at the same time novel and interesting. I well remember the serious, as well as the sympathetic look upon the face of Bro. Heman C. Smith, while talking with him at Kirtland in regard to my taking this mission; Bro. Heman, as well as others, thought that a mission like this would be hard on a boy of my age. But I have this to be thankful for, that I have not as yet traveled with any one who was not ready to complain of being wearied before I was. It has been the burthen of my prayer, that I might have strength of body and mind to declare this "everlasting gospel." The only thing to worry over, if one would allow himself to be worried, is in that there is so much indifference in the world touching the true faith. But said indifference bears witness to the mission of Christ, Moroni, Joseph Smith, and others. The Savior said, "Few there be that find it." Moroni and Joseph said, "The Gentiles will not accept it."

We are having at this writing what we would call in Iowa a "blizzard," which, I am told, is not common for this country.

If not headed off by missionaries in charge, I expect to start in a few days south from here, laboring (inasmuch as I can find anything to do) in this State, until some time in February, thence down through California on my way to General Conference. Allow me to say that some one (and until further proof, we will lay it to Joseph) of the editorial staff hit the right nail, in the right place, touching interference in the "Smoot case." Well, may the HERALD continue to prosper until the coming of the Master and then be the leading journal of the day during the great millennium.

J. C. CRABB.

ST. JOSEPH, Missouri, January 12, 1905.

Editors Herald: "The branches in the Far West District are not in as good condition as they should be, so far as I was able to determine; and while this statement may be humiliating to some, it is, nevertheless, a mild statement of fact, as I see it. There is too much carnality, selfishness, and blindness, to insure success. Too little confidence in the real and true, and too much confidence in appearances. In a word, a great lack of 'faith in God.' Nevertheless, there are noble, intelligent, unselfish Saints to be found in all branches. May God have mercy on the erring ones. 'Come up higher,' is the loving invitation which is still in demand; 'and whosoever will' may come, thank God. It may be that some one of that class which believes it is wrong to criticize, will take me to task for saying these things for publication in the HERALD. My answer is, that if the HERALD does not present, to the church and the world, both sides of the picture, the light and the dark, through its editors and contributors, then its ceases to be a correct representative. Is it right to pander to man's pride and vanity, at the expense of truth and reliability? More than this, from the law ground of expediency alone, a one-sided representation is a failure. The whole truth will come to light sooner or later, and when it does, there comes with it a loss to the cause of truth, and to the people, which can not be told."

The above statement was published in SAINTS' HERALD December 21, 1904, page 1202, signed J. R. Lambert. I confess that if I did not believe that the brother made a mistake in making the above statement, and that the accusation is not correct, I would not reply. I have taken pains to learn the condition of the branches by inquiring of our late district president, T. T. Hinderks, and of Bro. I. N. Roberts, the present district president. Bro. Roberts informs me that he has in the last six months visited all branches in the Far West District, twelve in number, and has held several meetings in each branch, and that he considers that the above does injustice to the branches. Bro. Hinderks makes the same statement.

The good book says that "he that judgeth a matter before he heareth it" is unwise. Bro. Lambert in his letter informs us that he visited four of the branches, and concludes that the twelve are guilty of the accusation, namely, "too much carnality, selfishness, and blindness to insure success. Too little confidence in the real and true, and too much confidence in appearances." In a word, a great lack of "faith in God."

What a dark picture of the branches in the Far West District! But we notice that the brother comes to the above conclusion after visiting one third of the branches, virtually judging a matter before hearing it.

If the brother found that the branches were in the above condition, why not inform the missionary or missionary in charge, or the district officers, so that they could go to work and remove the blindness, and cause that the Saints have more faith in God? Why did not the brother call to mind what his duty was, as it is very plainly stated? (See Doctrine and Covenants 125.) The duty of the patriarch: "He is to be free from responsibility—ministerial—as a traveling minister, and from the care of the local branch or church and district affairs." It further says that he is not to meddle with branch or district affairs. He is not to listen to complaints made by individuals to him; but if persons insist on presenting those troubles he is to request them to do so in writing, signing their names. Then what is he to do in case he sees that trouble exists? Send it broadcast through the columns of the church papers? No, the Lord says in this same section that it is his duty to present it to the branch or district officers as the case may be. I ask, Why did the brother not do so?

The brother says further that some believe it is wrong to criticise. For one I answer that it depends upon how, when, and where it is done. If I were to go to a branch or district that a brother was in charge of, and hold meetings, eat, sleep, visit the Saints, in fact worship with him and the Saints, and I should conclude that the condition of the branch or branches was as the brother states above, what would he consider my duty? To do as he did, or call the attention of the officers to the matter?

In conclusion: I can not agree with the brother that it is the duty of the Editors of the HERALD to present the light and the dark side to the picture. There are pictures formed in the minds of some that I believe it would not be wise to publish. And while I ask no apology from the Editors for publishing the above dark picture of the Far West District, considering that it comes from the pen of one who has spent over a quarter of a century in the front ranks, and should still be a father to the flock, I certainly do believe that injustice was done to the branches of the Far West District by the writer of the article, and that he owes an apology to said district for the hasty and unwise statements made by him in the article.

As a member and officer of the St. Joseph Branch of the Far West District, I wish to say that during the last year thirty have been added by baptism and twelve by letter to the branch. We also have received in cash, as tithes, offerings, oblations, and donations, over two thousand dollars. We have paid off the long-standing debt on our church; also paid for a new heating-furnace, and have installed in the church a good pipe-organ, and we hope soon to have the house dedicated and turned over to the Bishopric. This is valuable property that has cost the St. Joseph Branch over fifteen thousand dollars, paid for by a band of Saints that are poor, not over six of whom have homes of their own paid for. Not much selfishness nor blindness nor lack of "faith in God," in St. Joseph, nor in my judgment in Far West District.

LINCOLN, Nebraska, January 17, 1905.

Editors Herald: My wife and myself came to this city the first of October last, from Oskaloosa, Iowa, since which time I have been engaged in working at my trade, that of a brick-layer. Upon our arrival here I immediately instituted a search for some of like precious faith with ourselves. I succeeded in finding about a dozen Saints. We soon arranged to hold social meetings, which we have continued once a week since.

I attended conference of the Southern Nebraska District on the 15th and 16th inst., at Tecumseh, which was fairly well attended considering all things. The attendance of the priesthood was said by those in a position to know to be unusually large. Was much pleased to meet and renew our acquaintance with Apostle F. A. Smith. Am very favorably impressed with the earnestness of the brethren of the missionary force, and the zeal and kindness of them, together with all the Saints whom I met; and I hereby thank them all for the kindness received. Shall use my best efforts to promote the interests of the work in this city and vicinity.

In bonds,

C. B. BROWN.

Editors Herald: Many of the Saints with the writer wonder what all this controversy means that is carried on in the HERALD about the college. We are wondering if there may not be another trouble something of the nature of the controversy over the question of finance, at which time there was engendered bitterness of spirit and wounded feelings. What appears so strange is the fact that this matter pro and con should be published, to go abroad, all over the church and to the world, that the authorities of the church are having trouble; and in order to come to an amicable understanding the entire matter must become current history.

Dear brethren, why should this be? We are all aware of the opposition to the college that has been manifested by many in the church in the past. But that feeling is fast dying out, as is manifest by the response to the recent call for funds to liquidate the debt. It is surprising to think that about the time the trustees and the Bishop were earnestly planning to lift the college debt, conference should pass a resolution to close the college. It came like thunder from a clear sky; many are holding back, no doubt, on account of existing conditions, uncertain what to do.

It seems strange to many to think that when this controversy arose over the college matter, those concerned did not do as the dear Master commanded, "If thy brother hath ought against thee, 'go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone.'" Had this been done the whole thing could have been settled without all this publicity. Nearly all the parties to this controversy live in the same city, worship at the same altar, and are bound together [or should be] by the strongest tie that binds souls together on earth, hence there was nothing to hinder them from obeying the Master's injunction, instead of airing their grievances in the press of the church. It seems that men who are living in hailing distance of each other, should take this means of settling their differences.

I pray God that this matter may be so far settled that it will not be necessary to refer to it at our coming conference. Great harm has already been done the cause of Graceland by the indiscreet utterances of some of the brethren, and the present controversy is producing the same results. Let all strife and variance cease, and come together, brethren, and let the divine Spirit rule in your hearts; cease all controversy, and let charity, which thinketh no evil, rule in your deliberations, as becometh the family of God.

Yours in hope of final victory,

J. SMILEY STRAIN.

Independence Items.

According to the weather forecast we have had continued cold with a plenty of snow the past few days.

It is said parties will soon begin drilling for oil and gas on property within the city limits.

The absence of gas has affected several of the churches and the city gas is said to have been an uncertain quantity for the past year.

Among the Saints several of the children have been sick, a few of the sisters are afflicted, and a sister and two of the brethren have within a short time passed away.

The church services the past two weeks have been, as usual, full of interest. On the morning of the 1st inst. Bro. Hulmea took for his subject "Samson," giving a forceful and instructive talk to the young people; and the evening discourse was by

Bro. William Aylor on the theme, "The marvelous work," also on "The necessity of the manifestations of spiritual gifts."

On last Sunday in the morning Elder J. D. White preached from 1 John 2: 4, "He that saith I know him and keepeth not his commandments is a liar, and the truth is not in him." Toward evening the snow began to fall and there were indications of an approaching storm; but there was a fair attendance at the church, of young and old, who came out to hear Bro. R. J. Parker. He spoke in reference to life's worthy accomplishments, the question being that all-important one, "Have we counted the cost?" and dwelt upon the rigorous principles and implicit faith in God as instanced in the lives of Jesus, Paul, and Job.

Both the moral sense and the intellectual development of the church here have reached the stage where it is considered necessary to point to the fact that "Out of a membership of over fourteen hundred only a small proportion take the church papers and periodicals. A week or two ago Bro. Alfred White gave his notion as to the effect of this as compared with the almost immoderate reading of the popular literature of the day.

However, there are a few subjects we find discussed in the newspapers which seem to enlist the attention of the Saints, namely, the prospective breaking up of the Indian tribal government—the five civilized tribes—and thus, as they say, "throwing away funds which should supply educational advantages to the young Indians through a series of years."

Then there is another interesting item, that concerning the Jews of Eastern Africa who are colonizing on a fertile tract which the British Government has offered them, and not for speculation but for agricultural purposes, and in order "to shape a Jewish state from which they may ultimately feed Palestine from this healthy colony.

Then the great revivals going on, especially in Wales, seem to be in the Saints' eyes. They can but note the consideration and respect with which the popular newspapers refer to "the inspiration and revelations" of the young revivalist Evan Roberts, and on the other hand the disfavor and even contempt they employ to prejudice the minds of the people against "the Book of Mormon written by a cracked-brained preacher named Solomon Spalding as a historical romance."

In the Kansas City Journal of January 8 we read that Sidney Rigdon "copied it and gave a copy to Smith." "This was the birth of the religion or belief that is on trial to-day." And speaking of the plates this unauthentic and unreliable journalist says, "of course they never did exist."

As one of our State governors intimated recently, on retiring from his office to that of a plain citizen, "the welfare of the State and of society does not depend so much upon the so-called leaders, and those charged with power, as it does upon the life and character of the individual."

So it occurs to some that the stigma of the whole world may be directed against the faithful people of God; upon those humble ones who in the integrity of their hearts abide in the principles of the gospel will the Spirit rest, and no power can prevail to deprive them of the divine favor and protection.

Extracts from Letters.

Elder W. S. Taylor, Sherwin, Kansas: "We had Bro. F. C. Keck with us for the last month, preaching almost every night to full houses of attentive listeners. Afterwards Bro. W. H. Smart and Elder Slover were here, and their efforts gladly received. The Saints here have made great sacrifice to build a church, and now they are blessed in its use."

John R. Neill, Weyburn, Assiniboia, Northwest Territory: "Brn. R. C. Evans and J. L. Mortimer were here about the first of December and organized a branch. Bro. Mortimer is now in Alberta preaching. There are only two families of us holding meetings now, and we are five miles apart. We had the pleasure of hearing the gift of tongues for the first time by Bro. Evans. We have been persecuted considerably, but that is nothing more than we expect, for our Savior said, "I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." How true those words are! Let us be faithful and God will bless us."

Mrs. Carrie L. Roth, Reed City, Michigan: "I wish that all the Saints could have their homes provided with the church books as I think it the best way of bringing our young into the church. It is my desire to have such reading lying around that it will do those that pick it up and read it some good. I wish to put two books in the library here if they will accept them."

DELEGATE CREDENTIALS TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Delegate credential blanks, provided for by action of General Conference, have been sent to presidents or secretaries of the various districts, also to officers of branches not in districts. Said officers of districts and branches are requested to forward credentials of delegates appointed to represent their districts or branches in the coming General Conference, to the Church Secretary, as soon as possible, that a complete roll of delegates may be prepared, as provided for by resolution of General Conference, to facilitate prompt organization and work of that body. Credentials of delegates appointed at fall or winter conferences should be forwarded without delay, and those yet to be appointed, immediately after appointment. It is desired that all credentials be in hand as early in the month of March as possible.

One certificate for each delegation, with number of members in district or branch, and names of its delegates, signed by the president and secretary of district or branch appointing, with name of district or branch and place and date of holding of conference or business-meeting, is sufficient. Separate individual credentials to delegates are not necessary. Please insert total membership, in all cases.

Any failing to receive blanks will be supplied on application to the undersigned.

The rules governing "representation" and the "restrictions of delegate voting" provide as follows:

"Each district shall be entitled to one delegate for every twenty-five members of said district, and one vote in conference for each delegate to which they may be entitled. [Scattered members in districts, including those enrolled on records of disorganized branches, who are not recorded as members of other districts, may be included in the enumeration of membership.]

"The delegates present at conference from any one district shall be entitled to cast a full vote of the district of which they are delegates, unless otherwise instructed by their district conference;

"Provided that in case of a disagreement of views among the members of said delegation (the full delegation not being present), they shall be entitled to cast only their individual votes as said delegates.

"No one delegate shall be entitled to cast, as representative in the same conference, more than twenty votes.

"Each regularly organized branch of the church not included in an organized district, shall be entitled to one delegate, who shall have the same privileges as delegates of districts." However, at the General Conference of 1900 the chair ruled "that a branch of more than twenty-five members is entitled to one delegate for each twenty-five of its membership, the same as a district."

For further information concerning representation, choice, and instruction of delegates, etc., see Book of Rules, chapter 17.

Quorum of Twelve.
NOTICE OF SESSION.

To the Quorum of Apostles of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints: Admonished that the General Conference for 1905 is nearing, this will remind you that at our last session an adjournment was had to meet at Lamoni, Iowa, March 23, 1905. Nothing having arisen requiring a change in this date, the quorum will be expected to meet as per adjournment. A full attendance is desired if at all practical. Convene at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Historian's room, HERALD office, and we can retire to whatever place is provided for permanent meetings.

This meeting is for the purpose of considering such matters as are clearly the business of the quorum in its relations to the work of the General Conference.

Sunday, March 19, is suggested as a day of special devotions and abstinence in seeking the Lord for divine guidance in the work awaiting us in order that wisdom may prevail in our councils, and that needed light, inspiration, and quickened powers may be granted us essential to success in our sphere of action, and the insuring of the confidence and esteem of others of like faith.

Those having business with the quorum may send their communications to Wm. H. Kelley, Lamoni, Iowa, or to Heman C. Smith, or Fred A. Smith, secretaries, at the same address.

WM. H. KELLEY, President.

Ministerial Changes.

Because of severe illness, Elder C. Scott found it advisable to return home from his California field. This will give notice of his release from obligations in California.

Elder T. W. Williams, because of financial and other considerations, in no way reflective upon him or the church or its management, has been advised by me to accept renumeration secular employment offered him, till after next General Conference, in the hope that by so doing he will by that time be absolutely free to honor any appointment the church may make for him. The regrets over the necessity for this advice are mutual between Bro. Williams and myself.

In hope, as ever,
JOSEPH LUFF,
President Pacific Slope Mission.

First Quorum of Seventy.

I have this day sent a blank report to each of the brethren of the quorum who are not under General Conference appointment this year, on which they will report to the quorum, sending the same to me not later than March 15, sending with the report any item of business that occurs to them. All of those under General Conference appointment need not report labor done to the quorum, but will report any item of business that should properly come before the quorum to me by March 15, or as soon thereafter as the knowledge of such business comes to their attention,—the report to the Church Secretary as published in the SAINTS' HERALD will be their report to the quorum of labor done.

Those who will not be in attendance at the April conference will remit quorum dues to me as soon as they determine that they will not be there.

Matters of interest, and of great importance will come before the quorum to be considered, and all of the membership who possibly can should be there at all their sessions this spring. The exact date of convening has as yet not been determined, but as soon as it is notice will be given.

In the service,
J. F. MINTUN, Secretary.

Scattered Members.

The present location of the following members of the Des Moines Valley Branch of the Des Moines District is unknown to branch officers, and information concerning them will be thankfully received by the president: Maryetta Copper, Jerome D. Redfern, Jacob Myers, Ida M. Cook, Maggie J. Ennis, James W., Mary I., and Arthur Meyers, Mary Clark, Getrude Tully, Iva C. White, Alice E. Stone, Josephine Redfern, Fannie Taylor, and Clara E. Pastoral.

To the Ministry and Members of the New York and Philadelphia District; Greeting: As the date for the district conference is set for February 11 and 12, I would further notify you that the conference will be convened on the 11th at 6 p. m. I trust that all who possibly can and especially those of the ministry will be on hand that we may benefit by your advice, as the needs of the district are many and the territory large. There is ample room for every ordained man to labor successfully. "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few." I have sent to each minister of the district, whose address was known, blank report forms, and any one not receiving such blank is hereby notified to write and obtain the same from Bro. E. B. Hull, secretary, 3513 North Smedley Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. We are hoping to have a very profitable conference and a refreshing time, so that on our return to our labors we may feel strengthened and buoyant in spirit that successful work may be accomplished.

There is one thing that I want to suggest to you for your prayerful consideration and that is the necessity of work outside those branches which are provided with efficient pastors. During my presidency I have learned that there are at least two branches of this district in a very weak condition and need assistance which could only be given by the appointment of a special man as president of the district unencumbered with branch duties and the cares of secular employment. My own secular employment and calling effectually prevents me doing justice to the work in these cases. I have done the best I could under the circumstances, but have not by any means accomplished what has been needed, and consequently make the above suggestion. "Let us pray for one another."

GEORGE POTTS, President.

I Know Quit-to-Bac Will Cure. It is a God-Given Remedy

So says Bro. I. M. Dungan of Woodbine, Iowa. Writing July 3, 1894, says: "After having used tobacco for 30 years I feel that I am thoroughly cured of the habit by the use of your 'Quit-to-bac.' I commenced using 'Quit-to-bac' March 8, 1901, and used two and one half boxes, and have had no desire for the past two months, my health is better every way and I feel like a new man. I feel that I can not speak too highly of the merits of 'Quit-to-bac,' for I believe 'Quit-to-bac' to be a God-given remedy, that it will cure one of the most filthy and useless habits Satan ever invented; therefore I unqualifiedly recommend it to all addicted to the use of tobacco in any form, and will cheerfully answer inquiries from any one as to my case—how I treated myself, etc., if a stamp is inclosed. DOES IT COST YOU—

Time to read through the daily and weekly newspapers, the magazines, and reviews, and the special journals that constantly clamor for attention? Can you find time to read enough of them to keep posted even on the important topics of human interest at home and abroad? Does the time demanded by so many periodicals leave you time enough for books?

Does It Cost You—

Money to buy even a fairly representative list of papers and magazines? Can you afford to subscribe for as many as would be necessary to give you a complete survey of the world's politics, art, religion, industrial affairs, literature, etc. Even if you had the time to read them, would you be able to buy several thousand periodicals, domestic and foreign?

Does It Cost You—

Worry to sift out the conflicting rumors concerning the Japan-Russia war, and to try to follow its progress? Or to get at the true state of the Presidential campaign, the chances of the several candidates, the tendencies in the various states, and the probabilities as to the platforms? Does it worry or weary you to "keep posted" in this busy, hustling age when there are so few moments for quiet reading and so many demands for your money?

Why Not Take This Tip—

"The Literary Digest is a time-saver, a money-saver, and a worry-saver," says Edwin Markham, author of "The Man with the Hoe." It gives you in an hour or two, for only ten cents a week, a complete survey of the world. It gives all sides of all questions, and organized information on all topics. At all newstands, every week, illustrated, 10 cents.

INTERESTING REPORT FROM THE BRITISH ISLES MISSION.

Bro. John W. Rushton, in his report for December 31, presents matters of great interest. We give the report and accompanying circular letters to district and branch presidents and elders. These letters are brief and to the point:

To the Presidency; Dear Brethren: I herewith submit to you my report for quarter ending December 31, 1904.

I regret to say that I can not report anything very encouraging. There is an unmistakable spirit of lassitude and indifference among ministry and members alike in many places. I have a feeling that we are on the verge of a crisis of some kind. It is not only in our own church that this indifference to religion is in evidence; but all the churches are bewailing a similar condition of affairs. There is need for a great revival among the people, and judging from newspaper reports that revival has already begun in Wales, where, it is reported, thirty-two thousand converts have been made since it began. Many explanations are offered by different experts, to account for this phenomenal occurrence. Ministers are agreed that despite the excesses and extravagances of emotionalism, there is unmistakable evidence that it is a genuine revival and the spontaneous outcome of the Spirit of God striving with the people. Well, whatever the cause, real, practical good is being accomplished. Men and women are giving up drink, vice, and pleasure and in burning zeal are declaring for God.

I sincerely trust that it may prove to be a "genuine revival" and will arouse the people to a sense of their responsibility. I pray that it may affect our own people as well, for we need a revival very much. Of course we can see in the Welsh religious excitement a recurrence of the reactions which occur periodically, and succeeding a severe attack of agnosticism from which we have been suffering, in common with utter disregard for God and virtue. I believe that God has something to do with this and believe that the revival will present to us opportunities for presenting the truth in an opportune moment when the minds of men and women are disposed to hearken to the voice of the Spirit, and give heed to God's command.

So far as our churches are concerned, the greatest difficulty we have is the inability or unwillingness on the part of the local ministry to perform the work of their office. I have concluded that the present deplorable condition is very largely due to a culpable laxity in the ordination of brethren to the ministry. I do not allege that men have been ordained out of harmony with the will of God, though in some cases I am convinced that this is so; but the greatest evil has been a failure to impress upon these brethren in an effective manner, the grave responsibility of accepting such a calling, and that in doing it means as far as possible and consistent with their circumstances, "God and his work shall be first." The idea seems to be (in practice if not in theory) that they are simply "honorary" officers, and as a result we are hampered with a lot of men without a mission. District presidents complain that when they give an appointment to their district ministry, such appointment is without effect and treated largely with contempt.

In every branch almost, the branch officers with but few exceptions do not attend to the important duties of their calling. We have been striving to counteract this evil, and have addressed the letters which are herewith inclosed to district and branch presidents, the elders, and the priests. We are trusting that this year some better results will accrue. We need to be more deadly in earnest—more wholly consecrated to God. We want a deeper spiritual concept of the gospel. Our people are usually experts in argument and discussion, but fail in spiritual application.

I think we are in a better condition financially than we were, but we have had to secure financial ease by sacrificing missionary effort, which is detrimental to our progress. If you contrast the position of America with Great Britain and then observe the tremendous disparity in the number of missionaries, you will see that something different ought to be done. There are in all the States just over eighty million inhabitants, while in Great Britain we have over forty million, and yet America has in the neighborhood of two hundred and fifty to three hundred missionaries to meet the demands, while for our forty millions we have but five, and these five not supported as they ought to be. I am convinced we as a church will be more successful in our work of saving souls, if we pay more attention to church demands and less to side issues.

In Glasgow we have the branch once again in an organized condition, presided over by Bro. Wilson, who reports regular meetings and increased interest. But in Hamilton interneine jealousy and self-interest is against the progress. I have no report from the president to whom I have written personally for a report, but without result.

Scotland must have missionaries, or we can not hold our own.

Reports from Wales are very discouraging.

London is better than it has been, owing to the faithful work of Bro. W. Newton.

Bro. Pierce reports encouragingly of Plymouth. Exeter is being cared for by Bro. Wilson, a teacher, but this good brother is crippled. There is need of a man there.

I earnestly pray that God will bless us in this new year with better facilities to procure better results. I am very sorry and downcast that I can not present a more favorable report, but I must be honest.

CIRCULAR LETTER TO PRESIDENTS OF DISTRICTS.

At our late mission conference held August Bank Holiday in Manchester we held two special sessions in which the various ministry discussed the conditions which obtained in this mission and the districts of which it is composed.

The prevailing dissatisfaction as to results and methods is my apology for addressing this circular letter to the presidents of the districts, if any should be needed.

We have a right and proper message, and represent a right and proper cause: a message and cause which are equal and adequate to and for every condition with which they have to cope. But despite the rectitude of both message and cause we have not even succeeded in satisfying ourselves, and in the conversations and speeches of the various official brethren in the late conference the conclusions arrived at seemed to be that we needed some method in our work which would dispel the difficulties and remove the ineptitude of our present condition. It has been stated, and probably with truth, that suspicion has been in evidence so long among the various officials of the mission that confidence was discounted, especially between what might be called mission and local authorities.

It is with a view to removing any suspicion that I make the following suggestions so that we can be laborers together in the mission in the spirit of intelligent unity. I suggest therefore the advisability of the district presidents being in systematic and official correspondence with the mission president and advise that each president of a district and of branches not in districts, send me a report as to the condition of the work in their respective districts and branches every quarter, similar to that of the missionaries, on the following dates, July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 30, always promptly as I have to read and study each report and include all the salient features of each report in my official report to the Presidency, which really is a synopsis of all the reports I personally receive.

Second. I suggest that each elder and priest laboring under district appointment send in to the district president a report of work done; also the branch presidents send a report of their respective branches to district presidents every quarter. By this means a sense of duty and responsibility will be realized which can not be maintained without this system.

Third. I suggest the establishment of periodical meetings for the district ministry, these meetings to have for their especial object the consideration and discussion of the various duties, both specific and incidental, attaching to the respective ministers.

Fourth. I recommend the adoption of a plan in which the labors of each district minister are appointed by the district president or presidency. Let it be ascertained by consultation with the branch presidents within the district what parts of the town or vicinity can be reached with ease and let the local ministry be appointed to these district missions to preach and distribute tracts systematically and concentratedly.

Fifth. I recommend the establishing of a district fund which will provide tracts and circulars, also means to accomplish this work in the district.

Sixth. Let it be distinctly understood that any brother accepting ordination to any office in the priesthood is in honor bound to make every reasonable effort to discharge the duties involved in such ordination and that he becomes thereby subject to the direction of the district presidency in righteousness; and further, any elder or priest who persistently, without cause, refuses to do labor under the direction of the president of the district shall not be sustained as a minister, but shall give up his license.

Seventh. Let the district president as much as possible visit and counsel with the branch officers within the district and arrange for meetings with them at convenient but regular periods.

Eighth. Touching ordinations: Let it always be observed that necessity must exist; and secondly, adaptability of the one recommended to the work which will be expected of such a minister.

Lastly, I would recommend that each president encourage fasting and prayer; be particularly observant on the sacrament Sundays in order that spiritual life may be dispensed. Of course there may be many ways in which you can bring about increased efficiency among the district ministry which are not included in this catalogue, but I venture to think a careful and judicious application of these regulations will produce good results. I appeal to you personally and ask you to do the best you can to effect this.

Yours in gospel love,

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

HAMILTON, Scotland, August, 1904.

CIRCULAR LETTER ADDRESSED TO THE ELDERS OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST IN GREAT BRITAIN.

Dear Brother: During our annual conference of this the British Mission convening July 31 to August 2, at Manchester, we had two special meetings of the ministry in attendance in order to discuss the work with a view of discovering some means or methods by which we could increase the influence of the work we represent, and assist the membership to approximate "the high mark of their calling in Christ." After much conversation and discussion the mission president was asked to give some suggestions bearing upon the work of the ministry that would be helpful to them. This was done; but, knowing well the tendency to forget, I take this method of keeping before you some of the most important points which were elicited during our meeting and earnestly ask you to consider them, and as far as possible reduce to practice.

First of all I want particularly to impress upon you the very grave responsibility which is involved in accepting ordination to the ministry, and especially the Melchisedec priesthood. It means that we have been elected and authorized to stand before the people as "God's ambassador" in the stead or "place of Jesus Christ." In this sense we are God's deputies. The importance of the work was singularly and impressively stated by Jesus when he said "Whatsoever ye loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven; and whatsoever ye bind on earth shall be bound in heaven." This signifies the very sacred and awful power invested in these particular men, so called and ordained. Surely we do not need to say how careful we must be in thought, word, and act, so that our power may not be abused; nor that we place ourselves out of touch or correspondence with God, by which alone our administrations are effective and authoritative.

I would say that no man should accept ordination with the idea of holding such an office merely as an "honorary position" or "sinecure." It means work,—hard, unceasing work; both as receiver and dispenser of the bread of life. This is certainly provided for in the command: "Study to show thyself approved of God."

Nothing short of actual impossibility should prevent a minister from the discharge of his duty. Negligence or willful rebellion is bound to bring condemnation.

Many excuse themselves because they do not feel equal to the work. If this excuse is genuine then it should have been made before ordination was effected. If it is not genuine it should not be urged.

The eldership are used principally in branches or in districts. We shall deal with the work of a district elder in particular.

Ordinations should be regulated by necessity and by adaptability under the direction of the Spirit. This being so, it follows that when the brother has been ordained, it is to meet a demand and that demand must be met. If through neglect or rebellion the elder fails to accomplish the work he was ordained to perform, then the work as a whole suffers loss, and that individual must be convicted of a grave wrong. It must therefore be understood that when a brother is ordained he voluntarily places himself before the district as a servant to be used by the district presidency in the way that seems to be the most desirable. Consequently, when the district arranges the work of the elders of the district for the coming quarter, or half year, as the case may be, each one of the appointments ought to be filled without fail, unless prevented by uncontrollable circumstances. In the event of something arising which will prevent filling the appointment the district president ought to be notified at once so that arrangements can be made for a substitute.

In arranging for work in the district, as far as practicable two ought to be appointed to labor together in a locality when it is thought an interest could be aroused, and stick to that place until an impression has been made. Concentration is the first essential to success. The method of working must largely be determined by the circumstances obtaining; but in general, during fine weather, open-air preaching at some likely place where you can gather an audience without causing an obstruction. Many such places can be found in our towns and cities. Always ascertain if it be permissible for meetings to be held there, so avoiding friction with the authorities. Open-air preaching is very difficult; it is all brain work besides being a strain on the physical system. It is well to conserve the energies as much as possible to begin with, and always speak intelligently and connectedly, or in other words, have a message. Many complain that they can not get an audience in the open air, or if they do get one they can not hold it. This is not always the fault of the audience but the fault of the preacher. A man who has a message and can deliver that message, invariably can get and keep an audience. To do this necessitates that, in the language of the Bible "we speak that we do know." Too many fail because they try to speak of something they "do not know." First then, study the gospel, become acquainted and familiar with the principles of the gospel and learn to quote the scripture from memory, as nothing is so tedious as to be waiting for a man to find his text. If you use your Bible, be sure that your Bible is used on more occasions than on Sundays, so that the book will open just where you want it. No occult power is required to do this. It is natural, and comes as a result of continued usage. Let your subject always be, "Christ and his mission"; and the promise is, "If I be lifted up I will draw all men unto me." Do not put yourself before your subject. Let the preacher be obscured in the message, if not entirely eclipsed. Open-air preaching is peculiar in many ways. First, there is stage fright, a sense of awful loneliness; this largely can be overcome with use, but not always. Still, the consciousness of being right, and having a fervent desire to save men and to serve God, will strengthen and nerve you. Take your time in speaking. Do not hurry. Deep, full breathing is absolutely necessary to success as an open-air preacher. Short, spasmodic breathing is distressing to you and to your audience. Articulate very distinctly and clearly. That means pronounce your words plainly and fully; give every syllable its full value. Do not be dramatic or concern yourself about effect or eloquence. The eloquent, effective preacher is the earnest man. Gladstone's secret of success as a public orator consisted in his intense and fervent belief in his message. Never say anything you do not believe; and believe everything you say. You can not deceive a public audience; and if the audience has no confidence in you, you may as well stop at once; you will be a failure. Do not abuse the good nature of an audience. Do not credit the audience with knowing what you have not told them. Be careful to state clearly and fully your premises; if at all possible illustrate in a pointed and lucid manner. Cultivate a witty and happy sense without being mendacious or a buffoon. Above all things be patient and long-tempered. If you once lose your temper or get beyond your own control, you lose your audience and can not control others. "Bear all things" is the best advice open-air preachers can have, whether in interrupted ejaculations, or in even more material obstacles. The public have generally a keen sense of justice and will give all men fair play providing they think they are worthy of it.

Discussion and questions are nearly sure to follow. This I have invariably found is an evidence that some one is thinking. It is here where much toleration, tact, and skill is needed. Not one of this trinity can be purchased nor borrowed. They are only developed by experience. Be courteous, kind, and generous and you are bound to win friends. Do your best to answer a question squarely and straightforwardly. Do not ramble or evade. If you do not know, admit your ignorance. Be sure you act openly and candidly. A public audience will not tolerate the slightest attempt at trickery or juggling. Never wrangle. If your opponent is fractious and unreasonable to such an extent you can not represent your side of the question, in a gentlemanly way simply announce you will make the question (if it is an important one) the subject for your next discourse and so you can gather subjects which will be of current interest. I have been lengthy upon this matter for my experience has been fairly long and varied in this kind of work and these deductions are empirical.

Tracting is also useful and can be made very successful if performed systematically. I find that tracting, however, is simply a means to an end, it opens up personal interviews and brings you into direct contact with the individuals, the end being fireside conversations.

Now when you have persons interested make appointments to meet them continually until they either turn you out, or you turn them into the church. In fact I find that peddling the gospel must be conducted exactly upon the same lines as commercial traveling. First, have a real good thing to represent; second, find out where there is a demand for it (if the demand does not exist create it); systematically keep that article before them until you make them feel they "won't be happy till they get it."

It is marvelous how interesting this work is. You get enthused so completely that you enthuse everybody else. "Be intelligently enthusiastic."

As servants of God do not be jealous. There is a place for every one of you in the church; and more, there is a work to be done that no other man in all the world can do but you. There is room for every man to become a specialist. Let each strive to discover his peculiar "gift" or "talent," and when you have found out what kind of work you can do, get at it, and do so well that no one else can improve upon it. In the language of Carlyle, "Blessed is the man that has found his work, let him ask no other blessedness." A man who has found his work has found his heaven, and his road to fame and fortune.

Be broad-minded in public preaching and relations; also to each other. Do not be narrow. A man with a heart full of love is always full of harmony and peace, a veritable tower of strength. Having confidence in the ultimate success of right and truth, we can always afford to wait the development of time. If you can not persuade a man you are right and he is wrong (and this is what we have to do) by kindness and love in the spirit of intelligent reasoning, you never will succeed by "assault and battery," not even if you press into your service the Devil and eternal torments of hell. Let the love of God constrain now as in Paul's day. A convert to truth by love will last for ever, whereas a convert by fear, only as long as he is afraid. I earnestly recommend to you the necessity of studying everything that is good and likely to be of service to you. A man to be a successful teacher must know something, and if he will not study, he never will preach; or if he does I would not give much for his congregation. To effect this I urge each of you to attend the periodical priesthood meetings which we are hoping to establish in each district. Each of these meetings should be attended by every minister, and in a sense could be made a "school for prophets." You would get better acquainted with each other, become personal friends, get unanimous understandings of the law, and acquire a skill in public speaking and discussion without paying so expensively as you would have to, if you got it from the world. These priesthood meetings could be made very interesting if systematically and energetically looked after. Essays, lectures, debates, and addresses from various brethren could be arranged and a syllabus drawn up; or, any way so long as we get at it. Circumstances would direct the process largely; I simply suggest to you what might be. Strive to cultivate a gentlemanly deportment. Be courteous to each other. Do not indulge in undignified familiarity, which is bound to engender contempt. Learn to speak correctly and grammatically. It is just as easy to say a thing rightly as to say it wrongly. A good habit is just as easily acquired as a bad one.

In conclusion (and, possibly like the lady's proverbial letter, the most important news is always in the postscript), be humble. I do not mean obsequiousness or cringing servility which is so self-advertising, but be really and unconsciously "a servant of all." To this we are called. "He that would be greatest let him be servant of all." Be prayerful. Prayer means desire. If we pray for goodness, be good; to be useful, be useful; to be spiritual, be spiritual. What a man desires and prays to be, he invariably is. Let us be prayerfully desirous of doing good; being righteous and holy. Be diligent. Let no opportunity for doing something to help encourage or instruct our fellow man slip by unimproved; for our diligence in using our opportunities will determine our place and influence in this world and in the world to come. Be clean and pure in thought, and word, and act; for we do not know when we shall be called upon to enter into God's presence to plead for some sick or afflicted brother or sister, or to stand as God's mouthpiece, or perform any act or duty attaching to our calling. How necessary it is we shall be clean and pure, so that we may always be in correspondence in communion with our divine Head.

If you are not already a member of the elders' quorum in this mission, I would advise you to send an application to become a member to the secretary, Elder S. F. Mather, of 15 February Street, C-on-M., Manchester. Submitted in earnest desire to help you,
Your brother in gospel love,

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

"MORMONISM" DISCUSSED IN THE "WEYBURN HERALD."

We have received some interesting clippings from the Herald, published at Weyburn, Assiniboia. It appears that Bro. Alvin Knisley and possibly others of the missionary force have opened up the work with some success at Weyburn Plains. In the issue of the Weyburn Herald for December 23, 1904, there appeared an anonymous article under the caption of "Weyburn Plains Mormons," in which the writer characterized Joseph Smith as a chicken-thief, a polygamist, etc., etc., and then proceeded to stigmatize the elder who brought the work into Weyburn Plains, ridicule the Saints and their beliefs, etc. In the issue of the 6th Bro. Knisley made a short reply, and elsewhere in the same issue was an article signed by Thomas Jordan, who writes from the viewpoint of a nonmember, yet in such a spirit of "fair play" that we here reproduce his letter:

MORMONISM.

To the Editor of the Herald; Dear Sir: Your issue of 23d inst. contains an article attacking the Latter Day Saints of Weyburn Plains and their elder who was instrumental in raising up said congregation. I am not a member of any church, and let me say that if there is anything that would cause me to disbelieve the contents of said article it is: First, because the writer was afraid or ashamed to sign his name to the issue of ridicule, second because having heard the Latter Day Saints, having been acquainted with them for years, having also heard Elder Knisley who is the subject of ridicule in this article, I am able to bear testimony that it is atrociously false and outlandish throughout. Just such modes of warfare, such methods of attack, slandering and mud-slinging is what has always made me think that the Saints had the truth, that they could not be met in any other way. If they are wrong, why not appeal to the Scriptures and show it? Why not give references to the passages of the Bible that conflict with their belief? They are always willing to have their claims investigated, why not come out and meet them? When ridicule and misrepresentation is the only ware and stock in trade of their opposers, the only thing they indulge in, it always makes me think the Saints have something which can not be upset by means honorable and fair.

Let me make a proposal: Let the writer of the article we are noticing or one of their sympathizers agree through your paper, Mr. Editor, to meet a Saint elder in public debate in Weyburn or Weyburn Plains and in oral or face-to-face contest, speech about, thresh out these things, and I will right here agree to be responsible for the furnishing of a hall and an elder to represent the Saints. Now, why not try it? It will give all a chance to know for themselves. With me it is not a question of whether they are Mormons, whether like all other churches they have had some bad members. The question is, do they teach the Bible? What is there in the Bible that they do not teach? What do they teach that is contrary to the Bible?

The writer makes fun of their faith-healing; says they don't always get well, that they have to call the doctor. Very well, does that alter James 5: 14, 15, which teaches healing by faith, which passage always stands at their backs to support them? Do not most of the churches believe in praying for the sick, is it not a fact? The only difference between the Saints then and the rest is this—the Saints practice and stand by what they believe and the others do not.

Again, why is it that people know more about their Bibles after the Saints have invaded a community? All these are questions that are not to be disposed of by a jeer, by a flood of foolish levity; they need serious consideration. I am from Ontario and I know that the Saints there have thousands of members and are law-abiding citizens. As to polygamy they both deny it in teaching and practice. In this particular they vary slightly with their enemies who also deny it but practice it.

No wonder there are infidels when the people who cling the closest to the Bible are denounced and maligned by all others. No wonder Bob Ingersoll said, "The Catholic burned the Lutheran, the Lutheran burned the Catholic, the Episcopalian tortured the Presbyterian, the Presbyterian tortured the Episcopalian. Every denomination killed all it could of every other, and each Christian felt in duty bound to exterminate every other Christian who denied the smallest fraction of his creed. They have imprisoned and murdered each other, and the wives and children of each other. In the name of God every possible crime has been committed, every conceivable outrage has been perpetrated. Brave men, tender and loving women, beautiful girls, and prattling babes have been exterminated in the name of Jesus Christ. For more than fifty generations the church has carried the black flag," etc.

Those who have read both sides of the question know that the class of Saints such as are represented in Weyburn Plains are incorporated on the American side; that they are recognized in the leading history of Canada as distinct from Utah Mormons; that the Supreme court of Toronto a few years ago said they are not polygamists and their doctrine "elementary Christian"; that the laws of Ohio and Missouri have both declared their innocence of the crimes and corruptions that have been imputed to them by your correspondent who was ashamed to sign her (for I am informed it was a woman, a teacher, who has fled the place) name. I stand for fair play and will always interfere on behalf of the oppressed; I do not care what they believe. Latter Day Saints are now in minority and their church in its infancy, and religious fanatics are turning the same hose on them which was turned on themselves a few centuries earlier. In the arsenal of the popular churches, which once bristled with strong and powerful arguments, they have only one weapon left—slander. The official documents of Canada and the States and the most authoritative and standard works of reference extant in latest editions deny the falsehoods and unladylike calumnies of your contributor, who must have some malice personally against the Saints. If it is merely a matter of finding something against the Saints in print, let me tell you that there are things in print against the other churches and their founders that would startle you. They all have their patrons who bow at their shrines and they all have their enemies, have had. Give the popular ones the power and to-day they would punish heresy with whip, rock, and chain. Toward all those who differ from them they love to hate and hate to love. It makes me sick to see the silly twaddle that the Saints have exploded hundreds of times relished by those who hold responsible positions and ought to know better. As a poor sinner who stands for fair-play I subscribe my name.

THE ANCIENT LANDMARK.

SERMON BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH, AT KIRTLAND, OHIO, APRIL 10, 1904.

(Reported by Sr. Eunice Winn-Smith.)

I do not anticipate this morning attempting the elucidation of any particular passage of scripture, but in order that everybody may be provided with a text, in case the question should be asked, I offer you two or three. "Thou shalt not remove the ancient landmarks." This is from the old-time law. "To the law and the testimony." This is from the prophets. "Let no man break the law of the land." This is from modern revelation.

As a representative man of a body of believers, the result of the institution of the only religious faith indigenous to American soil, I believe that as a people, from the principles that we have espoused and the conduct that we should observe under this belief, we have given and are giving to the people of the State and the country the best guarantee possible of our citizenship and our loyalty to the Government. And what I shall endeavor to say will be in proof of this statement.

Our institutions are based upon revelation.

It is a fact that man can not know and does not know him whom we recognize as God unless he has revealed or will reveal himself. And while we may have the contradistinction between revealed religion and the revelations of science, by those who may seek to establish differences, it is and must always remain true that revealed religion is for the safety and enjoyment of the people, and there can not be justly any conflict between true religion and true science. Humanity may differ from Deity—unquestionably does—and human deductions may approach the truth, but not by the results of human reason alone can we reach the plane where we shall comprehend our God. The apostle Paul has well written that when "the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." We can not improve upon that.

I feel pleasure this morning when I reflect that the advancement of thought in religious circles is slowly forcing upon the comprehension of those who are striving in their way for what they believe to be the gospel of the Son of God, the unavoidable conclusion that there never can be a unification of beliefs in this world, until those who profess a belief in God and Christ get back to primitive faith as announced by the Savior himself and his immediate disciples, under the force of divine revelation.

THE TEMPLE AN ANCIENT LANDMARK.

This house is an ancient landmark, as American progress has marked growth and decay. It is a landmark to us in this sense, that it was practically the place where the fundamental principles of the doctrine of Christ, as we understand them, were laid by the voice of inspiration, and we are marked from that time to now by the statement that we believe in the revelation of God to man,—not only the revelation of the past, but continuing revelation; while God has a people upon earth he takes cognizance of them. As scions of this peculiar belief we have been taught by the voice of inspiration the country was kept, discovered, developed under what we may call latter civilization and its constant approaches, for the accomplishment of a specific purpose which had been proclaimed in prophecy, and that under it was to be developed this peculiar phase of man's belief in the Christ idea.

We were further taught that God had raised up wise men to draft the Constitution of the United States, and as a consequence to enact laws under that Constitution that must necessarily concern the accomplishment of the object had in view by him; and I hold, and express it as my private belief, and publicly on this occasion, that every man, every woman who was born into this faith through the influence of the teaching of the gospel of the Son of God—of which our brethren at the close of the prayer-meeting this morning stated we were born into his life and his death—is warranted in believing that when God through inspiration laid the foundation principles upon which this church or religious faith, and its accumulated beliefs and believers, should be founded, he laid them as landmarks from which those who should follow this phase of the Christ idea, should not depart, unless they would be prepared for the dire consequences that must ensue when man rises up against his Maker and departs from His law.

We are warranted, as I believe, to expect that when he had laid down these principles he had given us a guarantee that he himself would never depart therefrom; and that he would give no commandment subsequently that would vitiate, break, or make void those principles which he had assured those early believers were coeternal with himself.

It may appear that in my making the statement "Let no man break the law of the land," I am seeking to find a place in public reputation for the people and for myself, as that which we say and do may be heralded abroad in the press. It would be a mistake to cherish such a supposition for the reason that now for forty-four years I have stood upon the platform precisely in the position that I do now in regard to this subject, and I can only expect to be more widely understood and that would be all.

In consequence of the principle and object which it had been shown to those early believers God had in design, he commanded them to come from New York to Ohio, and they were told that when they reached there he would give his law to them, which should be a law to them suitable to their then condition and in the New Jerusalem; and in the language of Captain Cuttle, "Make a note of that."

THE LAW GIVEN.

They came to Ohio, this building was one of the results. And in 1831, before I was born, the law was given to the church. I have not time to dwell upon every branch of this law, but I must have time, and must take it to point out that which is applicable to the occasion and which is applicable to the position in which we find ourselves in regard to the public inquiry that is going on in the land.

One portion of that law was the one governing man in civil conduct, and let me assure you this morning that I am pleased that in my gospel inquiries, in my gospel presentations to those who have come to hear me from time to time, I have found that in many instances where Christ and God have dealt with men in giving them directions they have given them cogent reasons why the commandments were given, and I am pleased this morning that in the discussion of this topic I find these same cogent reasons from which it has been impossible for me to draw other deductions than I have drawn, touching my duty and the duty of those who may be associated with me in this religious controversy, touching the subject which I represent. For instance, prefacing the law: And that thou shalt escape the power of the enemy and be gathered unto me a righteous people—you shall go and do so and so. Here was the object declared. Here was the opening principle, that which followed they must necessarily conform to, upon the supposition that God would not require of those who were thus being played upon by this new revelation that which if it obtained would bring them into subjection to forces that would prevent the object which he had in view. The Sabbath question came up and so far as the Latter Day Saints were concerned was settled. The question of baptism came up and how to perform it, and that was settled by divine commandment, and the people were told how it should be done. But there was then, there is now that constantly recurring question, resulting in that bad conclusion that we had threatened the integrity of society by attacking the integrity of the family, and as a consequence the discussion of the domestic relation came up. It came up in such an innocent manner that it seems to me that any man who chooses to study ought to be satisfied with the simplicity with which God, through Christ, approached his people and gave them reasons for his law.

There was in existence a body of people who forbade marriage, known as the Shakers, among whom the question of marriage had been substituted by the idea of celibacy, and men were selected to go into that region of country to preach. They very naturally wondered what they should preach and how they should meet that peculiar question, and so it was laid before the Lord, and he answering the question says, "Whosoever forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God." That settled that question. "For marriage is ordained of God to man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh." Now comes the reason: "That the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made." I do not care to go farther back than that, and it seems that the revelator, or rather the Spirit which gave the revelation, did not think it wise to go farther back than that. It was unnecessary for Christ to tell those men to whom this revelation came that it was lawful in the state of Ohio, where the revelation was given, for they knew that, as such law had been placed on the statute-book. It was not necessary to tell them that it was lawful in the state of New York, for that also was on the statute-book. It was not necessary for him to tell them that it was lawful in Illinois, Iowa, and all the dominions of the United States, over which we find provisions of law under which this great project should be concluded, for it was lawful in the statutes of the States. Every man knew that. Therefore, the understanding is clear that it was lawful according to God's law. Here comes a direct commandment: "Thou shalt love thy wife." If there is a man of you present that does not do that, he is not fulfilling God's law, if he has a wife.

THE TEMPLE A WITNESS.

This was a part of the law. It was one of the landmarks established and of which this building is a witness, because this building was erected immediately subsequent to that revelation and under its auspices. I was not old enough to become acquainted with all the private history of the people who were gathered here, but if they were not better husbands and wives after that revelation became paramount as law over them, they were derelict in duty and they must finally abide the consequences of that failure. Now let us see the relation. In order that they might escape the power of the enemy this was one of the provisions by which they might secure the protection, care, and loving kindness of Almighty God, and make effort to secure under the laws of the land the privilege of existing among them as a different religious body.

THE SOLEMN ASSEMBLY.

In 1835, before the departure from this country, before the final culmination of the affairs which compelled them to move from here, there was a solemn assembly held by this people, and men were prompted to draft a declaration of belief under the influence and power of these two portions of law, one found in the forty-second section of our Doctrine and Covenants and the other in the forty-ninth section, and in that declaration they stated that it was their belief that one man should have one wife and one woman but one husband, except in case of death. That was simple and plain. Let me tell you, that declaration of belief remained in the book of Doctrine and Covenants in every successive edition published by what we may call the true church, and the different factions of it (you may call them apostates or what you please) clear down until 1876—forty-one years. Please make note of that. In 1835 the first edition of the book was published, in it was this declaration, held out to the people, and put in the hands of the church—sold everywhere. It was published again, after the death of Joseph Smith, in Nauvoo, in 1846, by the man who afterwards became president in Utah—John Taylor. It was published again in England, under the administration of Orson Pratt, in 1852, '54, and '56; and again in Islington, England, in 1869, under the administration of Albert Carrington. How happens that? Was it because there was a fear in men's hearts to put forth sacrilegious hands to disturb the ancient landmark, which was erected by people professing a belief in God and in direct revelation? Or was it by human carelessness, and for the final condemnation of those who should go counter to that solemn declaration, framed under such peculiar conditions? I leave every man to draw his own conclusions. Mine are that there was a latent effort to disturb; nor was it done until there had been such an increeping of disregard for that public declaration that men were prepared to say that a woman was limited to one husband but that a man might have more than one wife; and it did not say that he should not.

The Lord has not taken pleasure in confirming negatives. "Thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not forswear thyself," shadows forth what he has proposed to declare men ought not to do. These were the things that bring destruction and cruelty and vindictiveness upon the earth. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God," is quite a different declaration. "Fear God and keep his commandments," was the language of the wise man, "for this is the whole duty of man." The revelator, under the influence and power and passion of revelation, says, "Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgement has come." And I thank God that you and I are living in the period of time when the judgment of God is being passed upon the earth—on the things which men do upon the earth.

TWO OR THREE WITNESSES.

Now again, "In the mouth of two or three witnesses, shall every word be established." Here before me, the Bible, is one witness. Here before me is another witness coming from the Hill Cumorah—a witness of such a character that it has named the people among the dwellers on American soil and all over the earth. It has been called "the Mormon Bible," simply because the people professed belief in it; but by the voice of inspiration it was made binding as a part of the law, as the second witness before this people to whom this wondrous revelation had come, restoring the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, as taught in the New Testament Scriptures. No believer in this latter-day work is at liberty to stand up anywhere, and say that this voice of revelation is not a part of that law under which this peculiar development and religious belief should take place and reach its culmination. And that book has been admitted by competent opposing forces to this Reorganization, as emphatically denouncing the doctrine of plural marriage. That is the second witness that I introduce on the stand this morning.

THE THIRD WITNESS.

How about the third witness? The third one comes to us with some peculiarities. Let me introduce them. First, in the creation, after the design had been conceived, after the spiritual conception had been formed, the earth with all that appertained to it was created, and when it came to setting the final example for the establishment of man upon the earth, and giving him final control over the earth and the things that were in it, God, speaking like himself, and comparing his example with that which he had in mind subsequently to reveal, put one man on the earth, and with him a helpmate, that he might keep the commandment given him, to multiply and replenish the earth. As a common reasoner, as an everyday man, aside from my duty as a teacher and a preacher, I can not come to any other conclusion than this: If that was not proper, and if anything differing from that should be in his mind to afterwards prevail, he made one of the most wondrous mistakes it was possible for a God to make; that was, he forsook his principle at the start.

"For this cause shall a man leave his father and his mother and cleave unto his wife." I suppose a good many of you have done that. There was a man away back there in Eden, who, so far as we know, had no father and mother to leave, and did not get Eve out of any man's family leaving them to mourn a daughter gone, so far as the history goes. But this is the peculiar declaration: "They shall be one flesh." It is charged upon us that we render that too strictly, for it does not say that they twain shall be one flesh. But I run down along the stream of time, and come to the period when the One in whose divine dispensation this work was accomplished and without whom there was not anything made,—when he was here the question was put to him directly and he put the word twain in there in this form, as found in the 19th of Matthew and the 10th of Mark, "For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh." He had the right to put it in there and interpret it as said away back yonder in the second chapter of Genesis. We have his authority for it.

This ancient landmark agrees with that which we have gathered from this country, in the Book of Mormon. It agrees with that landmark established by the Savior or by the Redeemer in the commandments given to the church in 1831, and ratified by them and accepted by them in 1835. What grander array of spiritual testimony and commands than that, can any people ask? What right has any man to disturb, or pull up, or break down these ancient landmarks?

Fortunately for us, my brethren, while these have gone in threes, there is something else that has gone in threes, and that was the creations which I referred to, of one husband and one wife. And when they transgressed his commandments and became altogether of the flesh, of evil, God set himself to destroy them; and when he again replenished the world he took Noah and his three sons and gave each of them one wife, eight souls, and he saved them for the special purpose. That is the second material witness in the case, is it not? The creation and the fall. And to us as a people comes the third one, when he led out of Jerusalem the father and sons, he gave each of them a wife, again setting the third seal to the origin of his intention.

Unfortunately we have a class of so-called believers who say that in the Book of Mormon, it was only a "command to that peculiar people, [we will grant that for the sake of the argument,] but that he showed in it at the time, that at some future period in the world's history he would give a different command from that." No careful reader of this book can take the passage altogether as given here in Jacob and reach any such conclusion. And for this reason, the purpose is stated why he led them out, and it is just as plain and palpable as the purpose which was shadowed forth in the plan of Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden; the taking of Noah and his family and the saving of them in the ark, resting upon Mount Ararat, subsequently to replenish the earth. The reason is just as plain as that. What was it? That he might "raise up to himself a righteous seed of the fruit of the loins of Joseph." That was the process by which he proposed to raise up a righteous seed; and in order that his children might not depart from that he tells them fairly and squarely that anything differing from that would be an abomination in his sight. Now how about the ancient landmarks? I am glad that that landmark is with us. The world has never found any better solution of its origin than that given to the world by those immediately connected with its coming forth.

MANUSCRIPT STORIES.

There have been manuscript stories, and there are some of you who might be glad to hear the spiritual development in regard to that institution or the finding of it. At the conference of 1834, at Stewartsville, Missouri, I had a dream. You know Josephs are dreamers. In that dream I saw the manuscript story, and with it I saw the paper that identified it as the writing of Solomon Spalding. The next morning, walking down from where I stayed over night, I met Bishop Kelley and told him the circumstance, and said, "As sure as you and I live that manuscript will come to light, and with it there will be the words of identification. Well, in the year 1835, just a year after the conference, I was in Utah. A school-teacher called Bro. Anthony's attention to a statement that had been published in the Bibliotheca Sacra, respecting a find at Honolulu, by President Fairchild. In that, was found the manuscript story, and with it the identification of it, the three witnesses, Miller and some others,—I don't remember the names and it doesn't matter,—and it got into the hands of President Fairchild of Oberlin, and I am glad that it is lodged so near this early fighting ground, so near this temple, this ancient landmark.

But I must hasten. We have now these three specific testimonies. The spiritual testimonies which I have recited in your hearing. The material testimonies which I have also recited and with which you are all familiar, and if this may be a hackneyed subject the occasion will pardon me for having used it.

THE FALSE DOCTRINE INTRODUCED.]

Joseph and Hyrum Smith were stricken down by death in 1844, fourteen years and two or three months after the establishment of the church. Whatever may have been the circumstances and conditions which brought about such a result it is not profitable perhaps for us to attempt to discuss this morning. It occurred that eight years and two months afterward, a document came to light which prompted or commanded a different understanding concerning the domestic relation. I was baptized in 1843 under the hands of my father. I was never baptized under that specific and peculiar belief. That revelation, if it existed, was under cover. It took eight years and two months for men to acquire a sufficient degree of courage to put it before the public; and when it came, it was said that it would have been dangerous to the life of Joseph Smith for him to declare it. I do not believe that Joseph Smith was such an arrant coward morally, for if he had received a communication from God he would have avowed it, and would have taken the consequences of his avowal. He carried his life in his hand from the time he was mobbed over here in Hiram and left for dead until his body was brought home from Carthage jail pierced by the bullets of his enemies, whether within or without, I am not going to say which it was. But it took eight years and two months before there was sufficient courage to claim that the revelation had been received, and when it was brought forward it was not sufficiently identified as having come through the administration or hands of Joseph Smith. I am not striving to make a special effort in that regard. I am only making it for the purpose of accomplishing my desire and making the points which I set out to make, and they were these:

That marriage covenant, established in 1835, was in every edition of the book of Doctrine and Covenants published and was not taken out until 1876. I was in Salt Lake City at that time, and secured a copy of the first edition, in which I found that revelation authorizing plural marriage, and I found that the other was eliminated from it. How does it happen that for twenty-four years after the alleged reception of that revelation it was kept out of the public documents, and out of the hands of the people and of the church? I am not here to tell why the first was taken out, nor why the second was not ordered put in and declared, but the absence of such action is significant. It was seventeen years from 1835 to 1852, the time of the declaration of the polygamous revelation; and from the death of Joseph Smith until 1852 was eight years and two months. From 1835 to 1876 was forty-one years. It is significant to us. There was a hesitancy in attempting to remove the ancient landmarks, because it involved the breaking of the law of the land, and the breaking of the law of the land could not be safely done until there was an apparent cause for it. They went back and sought the example of those lads that refused to obey the edict of the king left upon record, who were cast into prison for it. The example of Daniel is given us, and the terrible ordeal through which he passed. Now mark you, there is a wide difference between the edict of a tyrant and an autocrat responsible to no one but himself for those laws which he may create and authorize, and the doctrines of a government instituted under conditions that warrant the people in believing that the hand of God was in it to direct. Therefore, the contrast is very striking; for this development of this new faith came under the supervision of direct revelation for the accomplishment of a specific purpose, and they who may seek to take shelter under the command of God must oppose these declarations found in divine writ, which were given to the church, and characterized the landmarks which these people were to observe in their spiritual progress. It was not an edict or law of a nation of autocrats in the union, nor the result of selfish ambition of any ruler. These laws were inaugurated by representatives of the people, chosen under a political government established for the very direct purpose that, under its protecting care, under its forceful example, religious and political liberty might go everywhere; and these laws passed by virtue of this design of the Almighty must continue until he has accomplished that design; and neither you nor I will be excused from observing them; and if we prefer to take that which comes to us and incites or commands us to break these laws or subvert them, or attempt to make them void, we do so at our peril. And that is one of the reasons why we have assumed the position that we have in regard to this peculiarly vexing question. I have treated of it just as carefully as I could do and have been as emphatic as I cared to be.

A word of personal explanation and I will not continue the subject to any greater length.

THE YOUNG PROPHET.

In the book of Kings there is a story told about a prophet, a young prophet, who was sent about a specific work, to carry a spiritual message. He was told while he did it to go neither to the right nor to the left, neither to eat bread nor drink water while he was accomplishing it, and not to return the way he went. He carried the message all right. He brought it to the king to which he was directed. He refused the august invitation of the king to eat bread and drink water with him and gave the reason why he would not. He started back on his way, and called at the house of an old prophet in Israel. The old prophet was not at home, but his sons were. Of course the boys wanted the young man to eat with them, but he refused, giving the same reasons as before. After he departed from the house on his way, the old prophet came home, made inquiry, I suppose, knowing perhaps that the young prophet may have called, and he set out after him and undertook to persuade him to go back. Of course the young man told him what he had been commissioned to do; but under the peculiar, subtle influences of this old prophet, who said to him, "I too am a prophet in Israel," the young man bowed to the gray hairs of the prophet's head, listened to his solicitations, and went back and ate bread and drank water with him. After he had done this the righteous indignation of the old prophet rose against him, and he told him that his bones should not lie in the graves of his fathers. He started out on his journey, he was overtaken by wild beasts, and sure enough his bones were left in the desert.

I was once a young prophet, if I was a prophet at all; I have grown somewhat gray in the service, but the Lord commissioned me with a message in this regard, told me what to do. I have listened to certain pleadings of older prophets who desired to win me from my allegiance, but so far I have not wavered. I have not eaten bread nor drank water, contrary to the command. I have not returned the same way that I went; and I propose to keep right on, so far as I, am concerned, until the time shall come when I lay down the armor of my spiritual warfare to answer for what I have done in the flesh. And when I am called to account, if I will be, (and you know that none of us will escape it,) I am prepared partially, for my defense is this: that here in the word the ancient landmark was laid down, the word was reinstated among the people with whom this work was developed from 1827 until the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith: "Thou shalt take the things which are written in my scriptures to be my law, to govern my church," and this is to continue until he comes to reign whose right it is to reign. Then comes the next declaration, which gives it more than divine sanction: "Behold here is wisdom." I shall set the revelation brought to light from Cumorah's hill, and the understanding that I had of it, from the plain writing of the book, (for it was given to silence contention that men might learn doctrine and know what the holy will of God was,) I shall put that book with the Scriptures, and then I shall place upon them that book, the declarations of the Spirit to the church, giving his will about this life. I am pleased this morning to be able to cite you to the message that we have in the Inspired Translation, which may add indeed a fourth witness; and if we fail to honor the testimony of these four witnesses how shall we escape?

I am pleased to say this morning that by divine providence the manuscript of the Inspired Translation came to the Reorganization, and I am pleased to say that the manuscripts of the Book of Mormon, those that were left in the care of David Whitmer, are also in the care and are the property of the Reorganized Church. Whatever may be said about these records, and if Joseph Smith ever uttered a prophecy to the effect that where the records of the church were, there would the church be, we have obtained the records, one by one, until we have them all. I do not mean the records of the membership, but I mean the records in which the testimony of the prophets is borne, in which the law is found, and which must be a help in carrying out the declaration that the "Law shall go forth from Jerusalem, and the word of the Lord from Mount Zion."

HELL AGAIN.—A REPLY.

There seems to be considerable interest manifested in this subject of late, and two writers have taken exception to a statement in the Religio Quarterly, namely, that "hell represents condition, and not place."

We think perhaps the trouble is because the viewpoint from which that conclusion was arrived at is not understood. The question under consideration was, What is hell essentially; what do the terms in which it is referred to denote, condition or place?

Alma and Zeezrom experienced hell, so the record says, and did not go outside of this world to any other place for it, either. Alma says, "The Lord in mercy hath seen fit to snatch me out of an everlasting burning, . . . I was in the darkest abyss; . . . My soul was wrecked with eternal torment."—Mosiiah 11: 22. All the while Alma lay in his good father's house.

Of Zeezrom we are told: "And his soul began to be harrowed up, . . . he began to be encircled about by the pains of hell."—Alma 10: 5. If Zeezrom made a flight downward to a subterranean fiery lake or cavern pit in the bowels of the earth, the historian does not say so. If he had to make a trip there to get a taste of hell, it must have been a very quick one, for he was baptized in a short time, and no one seems to have noticed his absence. Since no hint is given that Alma or Zeezrom left the surface of this terra firma, had an opinion as some people have of this world, are we not justified in thinking that those two men suffered in spirit, and that the place where each was had nothing to do with it?

To our deductions: Hell, the hell we are talking about, the scriptural hell, is not induced by physical surroundings. It is independent of place. Its cause is within, not without. The consciousness comes to man through his spiritual senses, not his physical.

We have considered the question from the standpoint of Alma's and Zeezrom's cases. Let us take the expressions, "prison," "pit," "lake of fire," etc., next. If hell means a place, how could it be denoted by such a variety of names? Making a comparison, would it be correct to call the house we live in a barn, a cave, a pond, or something else? Just so a pit is one thing, a prison is another thing, a lake is still a different thing, and there are yet other expressions used in referring to what awaits the wicked.

But notice, please, about the terms, that while in the objective sense they vary, and describe different things, as to character there is a unity running through them all; they are expressive of unhappy condition, as of the misery of a man who might be shut up in prison, or cast down in a pit, or thrown into a lake of fire.

Evidently the Almighty did not intend that we should know just what is in store for the unrepentant. Latter-day revelation says no man knows. It has been remarked that figurative terms had to be employed to veil the real situation from our knowledge. In the language of Elder J. R. Lambert: "When we consider these expressions as a whole, and the connections in which they are used, we are forced to the conclusion that they are figurative descriptions of the intensity and exquisiteness of the punishment which shall be meted out to the finally impenitent."—What Is Man? pp. 194, 195.

Men are to be rewarded according to their works. Those who do not obey the gospel and earn salvation will be punished for their sins and rewarded for their good deeds, so the condition will vary according to the lives of the individuals; some will receive more reward than others; some will suffer more than others. We can understand the diversified expressions as representing different degrees of an unhappy condition, but not that they can apply to a place.

You contend, then, that hell will have no place?

My dear critic, no such conclusion can properly be drawn from our position. Do you not see there is a difference between saying that hell does not mean place, and that there will be no place for hell? They are two entirely different propositions. It is a law of necessity that everything must have place. We thought it a self-evident fact that needed no statement, and was always taken for granted.

For pity's sake let no more valuable space be taken to discuss whether there will be a place for hell, or not. Of course there will be, and if any of us should be so unwise as to bring perdition upon ourselves, let us not be alarmed over the fear of having to go, as one writer put it, "nowhere." It will not be so bad as that. We may be sure that some place will be provided where we can pay for our folly. We shall have a home, at least, so let us not worry about that any more.

EDITOR OF THE RELIGIO QUARTERLY.

CONCERNING GRACELAND COLLEGE. SETTLING THE DUST.

Have the HERALD readers ever witnessed the antics of the boys forming clouds by casting dust into the air, so that the passers-by could not get a fair view of them?

Well, now turn and read the article, beginning page 78, of the HERALD for January. Did you ever see a finer exhibition? But what has become of the position taken by the Bishop in his answers to inquiries by the Saints? Notwithstanding the cloud, is there any one who fails to keep them in view? Let us see; they are:

1. "There was no attempt made to suspend the Articles of Incorporation or any rule therein by the conference."

In his first attack the brother says, "The first question and its reply I shall not notice, since 'there was no attempt made to suspend the Articles of Incorporation or any rule therein by the conference.'" But in his second reply he says in explanation: "I was simply noncommittal." But why say anything, if he was "simply noncommittal"? This settles that part then; the answer notwithstanding all that has been said stands unchallenged.

Again he says: "Suppose I have changed my mind about 'suspension'; what then?" That's all right. It is commendable to do so in a proper way. But why use the "old saw": "Wise men change, but fools never." Men who are not wise change too.

How does this "old saw" then help the difficulty? The prediction is ventured that the man who got up the "old saw" originally, first got into a close place and the only way he could get out, was to "saw" out. The Saints in Australia will have a ray of light when they read of the change. It was not the reports in HERALD, but report of the delegate that caused the darkness.

The college exists then by virtue of and under the law, and the law always being "paramount," no change can be made in the college, without changing the laws governing. The laws of the land having force therein, the church can not change, neither can it change the college Articles of Incorporation made by itself, without first giving sixty days' notice of the proposed change and the nature thereof. This is now agreed to. It is also conceded that no notice of any proposed change has ever been given; then no change in the law governing the college has taken place. Anybody in doubt about that? We are now under the law relating to the college without a single change—not even a semblance of change—and the sole question raised by the criticism is, Shall we follow the law, or follow a resolution passed, while ignoring the provisions of the law, and which the critic admits was not "mandatory," of no binding force?

Who is in "open rebellion"; those who insist that the law shall be carried out, or those who wish to substitute a resolution that is admitted to be not binding, for the law?

Jesus was asked, "Why do thy disciples transgress the tradition of the elders? . . . But he answered and said unto them, Why do ye transgress the commandment [law] of God by your tradition?" In the present case it would be, by what we "favor."

The brother seems to have easily overlooked the point in the law made upon this, and it may be restated:

Question.—"Why was it not proper for the conference to pass a vote expressing its opinion upon stopping the college and turning the property over to other uses, without notice being given?"

Answer.—"Because of prior adhering rights guaranteed to the body by a resolution of the body passed by a prior General Conference by unanimous consent and which the conference could not in justice ignore. The church can not afford to set the example of violating its laws. If due notice had been given as required under the rule before any such 'opinion' was asked for it is likely the vote would have been the reverse of what it was, and a contrary 'opinion' obtained. If not, why was the notice not given?"

We were asked to point out this resolution referred to, showing "prior adhering rights guaranteed to the body" and it was set out as follows:

These articles may be amended at any General Conference of said Reorganized Church, or at any meeting of the Board of Trustees herein named, providing sixty days' published notice of said amendment and the nature of the same be given through the SAINTS' HERALD prior to the time of such annual conference or meeting.

This is the resolution that was adopted "by a prior General Conference by unanimous consent" guaranteeing notice be given before making changes.

Our objector admits by his positions that the conference could not take up and make the change by direct action, without giving the required notice. If it could do this directly, it could not take advantage, and do it indirectly by passing a resolution showing "what it favored." If it could not for want of authority do it itself, it could not authorize the board of trustees to do it.

The powers of the board of trustees are specifically limited in making changes, as fully shown on page thirty-four, HERALD, 1905. To stop the college work and turn the property to other uses requires action by the body, not the board. The law touching this is as follows:

POWERS--DURATION. Upon filing such articles, the persons signing and acknowledging the same, and their associates and successors, shall become a body corporate, with the name therein stated, and may sue and be sued. It may have a corporate seal, alterable at its pleasure, and may take by gift, purchase, devise or bequest real and personal property for purposes appropriate to its creation, and may make by-laws. Corp rations so organized shall endure for fifty years, unless a shorter period is fixed in the articles, or they are sooner dissolved by three-fourths vote of all the members thereof, or by act of the general assembly, or by operation of law.—Section 1643, Code of Iowa.

The board of trustees then can not give sixty days' notice and close the college and turn the property to other uses. This settles another point.

3. "The creature and the creator." The board of trustees is admitted to be a legally appointed body by the conference, hence it properly exists, and the action of said board is properly presumed to be lawful, until set aside by a competent court. Not so with the "resolution" referred to of the conference. That is admitted by our critic to have been passed without the notice required by law; admitted not to be "mandatory." It was born outside of the rules of law adopted by the church to govern; hence, is an illegitimate,—not the proper voice of any conference; and while individuals could hold their individual opinions upon the question of the validity of the resolution without action or risk, the board of trustees could not do so; it had to act and act according to its judgment of the law. It did act disregarding the resolution referred to of conference as being without authority of law and void, and legitimately this action must stand, until reversed by a competent tribunal; and every member of the church properly supports the action of their board, until action shall have been entered before the church courts, lawfully questioning the act of the board, and causing the same to be reversed. Any other position than this breeds anarchy and contention in the body. The brother objecting had his remedy if he thought the action of the board was wrong, by appealing to the Bishop's court or the High Council of the church. So had every other member, or quorum, of the church; but no one appealed questioning the act of the board of trustees, or demanded the act tested; and now all, in justice and propriety, should sustain the board, or file complaint before a competent court, charging the board with violating the law. Any other view of procedure would interfere with and destroy the worthy efforts of any board or body of the church that should act contrary to somebody's individual opinion and would paralyze their efforts and would eventually destroy the church. "Our liberties are within the law."

4. The brother says, "No, sir, I am not an 'opponent of the college' but am opposed to running in debt." This is the position of the Bishop and has been for years. After all, will it not be gratifying to find that notwithstanding all that has been written, there is entire agreement upon the question?

Let us examine: Both are in favor of running the college, providing it can be done without running in debt, and neither believes in running deeper in debt each year. Now for the statistics; assumptions are neither profitable nor wise.

March 31, 1901, the total college indebtedness was $27,072.80.

March 31, 1902, it was $20,203.87.

March 31, 1903, it was $15,927.73.

March 31, 1904, it was $14,109.49.

With these figures before the brother and the last General Conference, can he or any one else truthfully say that the college is or has since its completion been running into debt?

But says the opposer, "Let it stop till the debt is paid."

Where is the financial wisdom of that proposition? The college debt can be raised easier while the college is running than it can if the college stops. When the St. Joseph, Missouri, church had a debt of five thousand two hundred dollars to raise and the running expenses to keep up the church amounting to over three hundred dollars a year the Presidency and the Bishopric did not advise to stop holding meetings and out off expenses until their debt was paid. Such a course would have been death to the branch and caused a loss of the property to the church. The branch could run and meet the extra expenses of running and pay off the debt, easier than stop running and pay off the debt. The burden of three hundred dollars running expense upon the few Saints of St. Joseph was twenty times greater than the running expense of the college is upon the church. Sometimes men "strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel."

Responsibility was placed upon the Bishopric to raise the college debt in connection with their other duties. No complaint has ever been entered by the Bishopric of their task. It has said uniformly that it is easier to raise the church finances and run the college, than it would be to stop the college and raise the church finances. It was the Lord, not man, who gave the direction, "pay the college debt." Did he not know when he gave the direction, whether it would injure the church finances to pay the debt? It is the Lord's work, and "giving does not impoverish him," or his people. If the Saints will take the trouble to examine and compare the work of the next financial report of the Bishop, they will note that the districts the present year, which have met promptly their proportion of the college debt, have done the most for the tithe and offering fund. Who are the complainers, those who are helping, or those who fail to help?

A brother over in the Fremont, Iowa, District, a short time ago, who is opposed to the college, said, "The way to kill the college is to refuse to pay the debt." Jesus said, "Pay the debt." The logic is then, He favored running the college.

It is said occasionally the college was started ten years too soon. A more erroneous view could not well be conceived. The truth is that the college was started twenty years too late.

Statistics show that a proper college education increases the power for usefulness of the individual in the proportion of one to five. Many of the Saints who have been cognizant of this fact have sent their children to colleges where the expense was double what it is at Graceland College, and where the children were miseducated and their usefulness to a degree lost to the church. Children of poor parents had no opportunity whatever for a college education. Just the rich. We ought to have a thousand more young workers moving with us to-day than we have, and would have but for the fact that we have neglected some opportunities. To close the college to-day would cut off thirty or more young people who are now at Graceland from the hope of a college education. It would send a number of others to other institutions where they would be miseducated as to the Bible and true religion. It would take away from our church revenues, for parents would have to pay more money for the children at other institutions of equal merit. It would close the institution of greatest benefit planted in "laying the foundation of Zion" and turn our steps backward instead of forward. It would reflect against the wisdom of the church in the past and discourage the faithful worker in Christ. It would bring sadness to the heart of every faithful Saint and reflect on the wisdom of Christ. Satan would rejoice, but who else would be glad?

5. Mosiah 13:4 is quoted as in point. But on which side? "Now it is not common that the voice of the people desireth anything contrary to that which is right." True; but is the voice of the people obtained by taking a vote without giving the notice required in the law to be given so the people can be present?

But the brother attempts to amend the language of the prophet by inserting "majority." Oh, no! Do not doctor it in that way and then attempt to apply it to the case in point. The law in this case requires a "three-fourths vote." "Those who keep the laws of God have no need to break the laws of the land."

Again:

Their right to free speech, their right to liberty of conscience, does not permit them as individuals to frustrate the commands of the body in conference assembly.

But where is the "command" of conference on the college question? Not in the resolution passed without notice. No; the brother says himself that is not "mandatory." But where are the commands of conference? Answer: In the law ratified by the conference which says: "Corporations so organized shall endure for fifty years, unless a shorter period is fixed in the articles, or they are sooner dissolved by three-fourths vote of all the members thereof." This is the correct position. No one should try "to frustrate the commands of the body in conference assembly."

6. Complaint is made that the Bishop preached on this "controverted question," at a reunion. Yes, the Bishop referred to the college question in his discourse at the Plano reunion. This is the only place where such assumptive liberty was taken in the brother's field. On that occasion, just as he was ready to enter the stand on Saturday evening, he was handed the following letter:

LAMONT, Iowa, September 23, 1904.

BISHOP E. L. KELLEY,
Plano, Illinois.

Dear Brother: In case you may wonder at my absence from the Plano reunion, when both the board and yourself thought it extremely desirable for me to address our people there along college lines, I enclose correspondence with J. W. Wight following upon a short note I sent him, requesting him to grant me an hour at the reunion for the purpose of addressing the Saints. My letter I may add was written on one of my official letter heads.

Sincerely but in haste,
E. R. DEWSNUP.

The correspondence inclosed is as follows:

PLANO, Illinois, September 22, 1904.

ELDER E. R. DEWSNUP,

Dear Brother: Your letter just at hand. Three of the committee are here to be consulted and are unanimous against the necessity of your coming, as Bro. Kelley will be here and you can authorize him to speak if you wish and save the expense of your trip.

Yours in bonds,

R. C. EVANS.
F. M. COOPER.
J. W. WIGHT.

Now candidly, did the Bishop put himself forward on the occasion and "raise the college question"? Or was the trouble, if there was any, all on account of the fact that the Bishop did not say about the college what some one wanted to hear. Who was the better judge upon the occasion of what should be said?

7. "Had proper discussion been permitted at the conference, no action whatever would have been had."

This the brother controverts. But what has he to offer? "It was as fair for the one side as the other that the time limit should be observed." But was it fair for either side? Look at the results and answer.

Is it fair for a party who is charged by the church with special duties in a work and who is compelled to give hours and days in the preparation and arrangement of the same to give him the time limit to explain the conditions, of five minutes, that is given to other parties who have had nothing to do with the work and know little or nothing about it? Others may be equally competent, but if they have had no opportunity to become informed upon the work of a department and do not want time shall not the party who does know have time to represent it? or must somebody represent it for him? The position is too absurd to need any argument.

A word of history as to how the college started will be in point here. As early as 1886 or 1887, the question was before the General Conference and committees appointed, but nothing special was done, except to report occasionally at conference, until in April, 1890, when the following was adopted:

Resolved that in the opinion of this conference, the time has arrived when it may be expedient to establish an institution of learning under the control or influence of our church organization, and to this end there shall be a committee appointed (by the body) to receive proposals for a location and take such other preliminary measures as may be necessary; and said committee are empowered after receiving such proposals to make all necessary arrangements for the establishment of such institution.

The committee was duly appointed. This committee reported from time to time, but the work was not pushed, and in April, 1894, the following divine instruction was received:

The Spirit saith further: The twelve should remain at Lamoni, and continue in council with the presidency, and the bishop, and his counselors if practicable, a sufficient time after the adjournment of conference to counsel together, and agree on the things of the law and the general affairs of the church, so that when the traveling counsel shall separate for their several fields, there may be no longer reason for distrust, suspicion, or dissension; and if these officers will so counsel together in the spirit of moderation and mutual forbearance and concession, my law will be more perfectly understood by them and a unity of sentiment and purpose will be reached by them. It is the will of your Lord and your God that this should be done. It should have been done before, but the adversary hath hindered, desiring to prevent the success of my work in the earth.

Upon the assembly of this joint council April 20, 1894, the question of the college was taken up and duly considered by the council and the following action taken:

Resolved that we look with favor upon the effort to build a college at Lamoni, to be controlled by the church.

Resolved, further, that we believe it should be a purely educational institution and free from sectarian influences or bias.

Resolved, further, that we give our hearty support to the present movement looking in the above direction.

This subsequently was accepted by General Conference and authorized incorporated in the Book of Covenants as a part of the law to direct and govern.

Upon report of the college committee to the General Conference, on the 9th day of April, 1895, the following action was taken:

That this conference authorize and instruct the college committee to incorporate as provided by the laws of Iowa, for institutions of learning.

This work was duly reported to the General Conference of 1896 and on the ninth day of April the work accepted and the board of trustees chosen "in pursuance of the provisions in the Articles of Incorporation."

Report and acceptance was duly made of the college work under these articles until April 17, 1900, when after due sixty days' notice had been given the Articles of Incorporation were duly amended according to "the report of the committee, and the amendments were adopted, also the Articles as amended."

The college continued its work under these amended articles, but not without opposition where none should have been had, and on the fifteenth day of April, 1901, the conference was again divinely instructed as follows:

The college debt should be paid, and ministers going out from the conferences held by the elders of my church are not expected or authorized to throw obstacles in the way of the accomplishment of that which has been intrusted to the Bishopric to pay this great debt.

Upon this the college work continued without interruption or any open opposition until April, 1904, when without any notice whatever, the resolution was sprung upon the conference to stop the college and divert the property to other uses; and the liberal time of five minutes given to a speaker in which to discuss the preambles and resolution before the conference.

But our reviewer now pleads the action of his quorum and claims the twelve sent notices to the different quorums that it had passed the resolution a few days before the conference.

Why should the twelve alone meet and pass upon the college question, when this quorum was a part of the "joint council" held under the direction of the revelation and conjointly acted with the Presidency and Bishopric, when the college question was acted upon?

The Lord did not direct the twelve to act alone when this question was taken up in 1894, but to act with the Presidency and Bishopric. To revise or vitiate the action of that joint council would require the joint action of these same quorums. Could the Presidency, Bishopric, or Twelve alone properly take up the work of this joint council and reverse the action? Not by any means. Such an act would defeat the object set forth in the revelation for convening the joint council, and "dissension" would follow. Has it followed? Is it any wonder that the question was not understood?

Men gather light when they "walk in the light." To "walk in the light" is to walk according to the law of God. The Lord help us all so to walk.

Very respectfully,
E. L. KELLEY.

LAMONI, Iowa, January 27, 1905.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

FALL RIVER, Massachusetts, January 11, 1905.

Dear Sisters: It is many years since I have made an effort to do my part to help others, by writing to the Column. I had an experience last month that I decided to write, hoping it might be a comfort to some one.

Two years and a half ago I went to the mountains in New Hampshire. I was on a mountain side twenty-two or twenty-five hundred feet above sea-level. From the house could be seen fifty-eight mountain peaks covering a range of many miles. The air was very pure; many of the trees had changed from green to the beautiful autumn tints. The roads were mostly made of rotten stone filled with yellow mica; in other places with white mica, which made them look like streets of silver and gold when the sun shone on them. Early in the morning when the first ray of light began to dawn, you could see Mount Washington, over six thousand feet high, with the sun shining on the peak like a crown of gold. This with many other things made the place beautiful to me. It was grand and inspiring to the natural eye. On December 5, as I lay awake on my bed in the morning, I was carried away in the spirit to the scene I have described. As I stood on the mountain side, a spirit of peace and love enveloped me like a mantle. All care was forgotten, and it seemed as if I were in the presence of the Creator. Everything was so beautiful, so grand that words fail to express its beauty, or the joy that was given me.

I was then carried to a valley at the foot of the mountain. On either side was a high mountain which made the valley dark and gloomy. As I looked a little way from me, I saw a traveler. As he turned I saw a very despondent, hopeless look on his face. In a short time he began to ascend the mountain. I seemed to glide by his right side. After he had gone a little way he began to take deep breaths, as if he realized the air was purer. A little farther up he began to look around as if surprised at the greater light, and yet a little farther up and his face changed to wonder, as if he could not comprehend the surroundings. I then saw he was growing foot-sore and weary. A little higher he began to realize the hand of God, and as he traveled on a look of reverence overspread his face and soon all thought of weariness and pain was gone, and as he reached the top I could see upon his face such a look of adoration, peace, and joy as my own must have worn. I was then made to realize that such was the Christian life.

My prayer is that all that have started to follow Christ, may have strength to reach the top of the mountain, or in other words may endure to the end and receive the reward. * *

Friend and Friendship.

Dryden tells us, a friend is one "Who entertaining for another sentiment of esteem, respect, and affection, from personal predilection, seeks his society and welfare." Rambler says, "There can be no friendship without confidence, and no confidence without integrity," and again Bacon says, "There's little friendship in the world."

I can hardly indorse this statement, but what a sad condition this old world of ours would be in, if this be the case, and surely we do not believe there is no integrity in our noble Christian men and women who are truly worthy of our confidence?

I firmly believe there is more pure, true friendship in the world to-day than Bacon could know. One way and a good way to have friends is to "be a friend yourself." Emerson made a very wise statement when he said, "We do not provide for the greatest good of life. We take care of our health; lay up money; make our roof tight and our clothing sufficient; but who provides wisely that he shall not be wanting in the best property of all—friends?" One that has tested the love and kindness of true friends knows that no love can be more pure, true, tender, and sacrificing. Like as a mother's love for her child, so is a true friend's love. But, alas; "all is not gold that glitters," and we find there are some that, like the one who betrayed Jesus, are false; and, like gold, it is hard to detect the false from the true until they are tried as by fire.

The true friend thinketh of his friend before himself. His sorrow, pain, grief, disappointment, and trials are his to share. He is jealous of his friend's reputation or good name, and no act of his will bring shame on the one so dear to him.

Friendship does not imply that the parties must be lifelong acquaintances. By no means. The acquaintance of yesterday may be a truer friend. Nationality, politics, or religious creed need not stand between friends, if two hearts beat in unison.

I have a very dear friend in a Catholic lady, and, oh, the comfort of a true friend, with a heart overflowing like a fountain of water with sympathy in times of affliction! Alas! too many know the comfort of such a friend when the loved one is called home and the home left so desolate that life seems not worth the living. God seems so far away, and the burden of doubt and unbelief seems more than you can bear. Then the true, loving friend comes to you, and true, tender sympathy helps you bear your burden, and points you to the dear Father, who has said, "Cast all your cares on me."

Who would not have such a friend?

Not long ago I witnessed an incident that while life lasts I shall remember with the same feeling of sublimity I felt at the time. It was a meeting of two friends (true and tried friends), and when the elder, a dear old man of God, took the younger in his arms and kissed him as a mother might her long absent child, I think I never saw a more beautiful sight, or felt more of the divine love of God. But this dear old patriarch loved this younger with the love of the "Friend that sticketh closer than a brother."

Again I ask, who would not have such a friend? I believe it is possible and very profitable. I believe very often God comes to us through a true friend, and I know we may have the friend "that sticketh closer than a brother." He has made every sacrifice for us. He, too, loves us with a mother's love. He, too, thinketh of us first, and has been tested as by fire and found pure gold. In sorrow, grief, pain, temptation he longs to comfort and help us and take us in his strong arms and help us bear our burdens. God help each one to accept this friend who has done so much for us as his own. And at last God grant that in that great day all the true friends may be united.

A FRIEND.

Two Boys Who Meant Business.

This is a true story of two boys who represent the independence and grit of the American spirit.

James Hackett was not in need of additional help, but an indescribable something about the latest applicant compelled his attention.

"So you want work," he said, after a moment's thought.

"Yes sir," came the quick and decisive reply from the lips of the applicant.

"It strikes me that you're pretty young for a lumber-mill-man." Mr. Hackett could not refrain from smiling at the thought.

"I'm eleven, sir, and, if you'll give me a chance, I will show you that I can work."

Mr. Hackett was evidently in good humor, for he called the foreman and told him to give the boy something to do. Thus it was that John Arola gave the first evidence of the character which should some day make him a power in the state of Washington. His mother was dead, and his father away in the woods, thus leaving John and his brother Carl, aged thirteen years, to fight their battles with the world. One day the foreman of the mill said to Mr. Hackett, "That is a bright boy you turned over to me."

"Good," said Mr. Hackett, "raise his wages to one dollar a day."

"He is worth it," replied the foreman.

John was elated at this turn in affairs, but, to the surprise of Mr. Hackett, he requested permission for his brother Carl to take his place at the mill.

"If he is like you, it will be all right," said Mr. Hackett.

"Indeed, sir, he is just as good a worker as I am," said John and his face lightened with a look of pride.

Here was loyalty unadulterated.

Carl went to work. He gave satisfaction. John disappeared, and in the rush of business Mr. Hackett forgot to inquire about him until one day he chanced to meet Carl.

"Where is John?" asked Mr. Hackett.

"Oh!" said Carl, "he is attending school in Aberdeen."

This was a new phase of the case, and Mr. Hackett became intensely interested in the two boys who were not only anxious to earn their living, but who also were planning to acquire an education. By inquiries he learned that the boys were living in a little tumble-down "shack," and that the one who worked in the mill earned enough money to keep both supplied with food and clothes while the younger one attended school. Out of school-hours John did the housework and cooked the meals. Everything about the old "shack" was tidy. Here was honest effort, youthful independence, and happiness. A few days later Carl requested a short vacation.

"What for?" asked Mr. Hackett.

"Well," said Carl, in a burst of youthful confidence, "John and I are building a house."

"You may have your vacation," was all that Mr. Hackett said; but he did a lot of thinking, and, before he went home that night, he instructed the foreman to see that Carl's salary went on just the same. In due time, John and Carl completed their "mansion." It has two rooms and the same number of doors and windows. The roof is well shingled. Carl has returned to work in the mill, and John continues to attend school when not engaged in household duties. In the evening the two lads study and read. They are happy in their independence.—Portus Baxter, in November Success.

A LITTLE boy was asked by his Sunday-school teacher to tell her something about Peter.

"O, yes. Peter, Peter, pumpkin-eater, Had a wife and could not keep her."

"Why do we heap huge mounds of years
Before us and behind,
And scorn the little days that pass,
Like angels on the wind?"

One day seems so small that we think it can not matter much whether we make it beautiful or not.

"And so it turns from us, and goes
Away in sad disdain;
Though we would give our lives for it,
It never comes again."—J. R. Miller.

The "World Evangel" Changes Location.

THE World Evangel, a monthly Sunday-school paper formerly published at St. Louis, Missouri, changes its place of business to Chicago and Winona Lake, Indiana. The latter place will be its permanent address. On the first page of the February number appears the following paragraph: "The next issue of the Evangel will be headed Chicago and Winona, March, 1905. After January 26, all Evangel and personal mail must be addressed Winona Lake, Indiana, where our general offices, general management, editorial rooms, and all our editorial residences will be located."

THE Eleventh Triennial International Sunday-school Convention will be held at Toronto, Canada, June 23 to 27, 1905. Very low railroad rates are usually made to these conventions; last convention was one fare plus two dollars. The conventions are interesting and instructive to Sunday-school workers. Those in reasonable access thereto should plan to attend.

IT IS now nearing the time when we must be thinking about the forthcoming General Conventions and Conference. Reports are necessary and should be made and sent in promptly. A report is due from the school to the district secretary at the end of each quarter. Has your report for last quarter of 1904 been sent in? If not, prepare it and send at once. The district secretary can not make out her annual report to the general secretary till these reports are all in, and this report is now long past due. All district secretaries who have not made and sent their 1904 report should see to it at once. Both forms of blanks can be gotten from the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

Change of Officers.

At this season of the year there are numerous changes of district officers being made and it becomes necessary to have these changes indicated. District officers should notify the general secretary, D. J. Krah, Lamoni, Iowa, of all changes; or, better still, send him a complete list of district officers, with post-office addresses. These he must have before he can send out the necessary matter preparatory to next General Convention. Kindly see to this at once.

A Few Good Books.

The management of the HERALD Publishing House is making a special effort to get some of the church books into the Sunday-school libraries and the homes. The effort is a commendable one as it will put into the hands of the children and youth of the church and others such books as will be good for them to read. Many of our families and schools have these books and other good ones, and many have them not. All ought to have them. There is too much bad or questionable or doubtful literature purchased and read by children. The best costs but little if any more than the bad. And why not direct our purchases in the line to do our children the most possible good? Why not purchase that which is best adapted to our peculiar needs? We give below the circular letter which the Publishing House has sent out and hope that as far as it is practical, the Sunday-schools and families will take notice and make special effort to procure a part or all of the books mentioned for the home or the Sunday-school library:

"Dear Sunday-school Worker: Being engaged in the Sunday-school work we are sure that you are interested in the good of our young people, and therefore we write you. We are anxious to get more of our books into the hands of our young people as we are sure that they will be benefited thereby. We give below a few books that should be in every Sunday-school library, and also in the home of every member of the church who can spare the money to purchase them. You have an ambition, no doubt, to help spread the gospel. If so you can do so by selling these books to your friends. Will you please hand this letter to your superintendent if you are not interested?"

"GOOD BOOKS TO READ.

"Book of Mormon talks, No. 233, fifty cents.

"A very interesting book on the divinity of the Book of Mormon written so simple that a child can understand it and yet older people become interested by reading it. We have reduced the price in cloth to fifty cents.

"Book of Mormon Lectures, No. 234, fifty cents.

"This is an interesting series of nine lectures on the Book of Mormon, is very convincing, and makes an excellent missionary. The price is also reduced to fifty cents.

"The Gospel Story, No. 239, fifty cents.

"A gospel story, richly illustrated for the children. No family of Saints having young children can afford to be without this book.

"With the Church in an Early Day, No. 243, seventy-five cents.

"There was such a demand that we have republished this most excellent book. It is the story of the gospel experience of one of the pioneers of the latter-day work.

The Sunday-School Lesson for February 5, 1905.

Lesson Text: Revelation 9: 9-20.

JOHN'S VISION.

Golden Text.—"Ye are the light of the world."—Matthew 5:34.

In connection with the statement of John in our lesson text, that he was the companion in tribulation of those saints who suffered, the senior lesson quotes from history to show the nature of the sufferings endured by the saints under the rule of Nero. The quotation of the Quarterly is from Doctor Philip Schaff, who quotes from Tacitus, a Roman historian.

Doctor Frederic Farrar quotes the same matter in his account of the first persecution of the Christian church, and adds this: "Imagine that awful scene, once witnessed by the silent obelisk in the square before St. Peter's at Rome! Imagine it, that we may realize how vast is the change which Christianity has wrought in the feelings of mankind! There, where the vast dome now rises, were once the gardens of Nero. They were thronged with gay crowds, among whom the Emperor moved in his frivolous degradation—and on every side were men dying slowly on their cross of shame. Along the paths of those gardens on the autumn nights were ghastly torches, blackening the ground beneath them with streams of sulphurous pitch, and each of those living torches was a martyr in his shirt of fire. And in the amphitheater hard by, in sight of twenty thousand spectators, famished dogs were tearing to pieces some of the best and purest men and women, hideously disguised in the skins of bears and wolves."

In close connection with his statement that he was the companion of the saints in tribulation, John says that he was in the isle called Patmos, for the word of God and for the testimony of Jesus Christ; and this has given rise to the almost universal impression that he was banished to Patmos, an island which was little more than a huge sterile rock in the sea, about eighteen miles in circumference.

He tells us that on a certain Lord's Day (the Christian Sabbath) he was in the spirit and heard a great voice behind him speaking to him. Turning to see who spoke, he saw a glorious personage, "One like unto the Son of man," who stood in the midst of seven golden candlesticks and held in his right hand seven stars.

John says the personage spoke to him, and, among other things, told him that the seven golden candlesticks represented the seven churches of Asia, and the seven stars in his right hand the seven servants (presidents) over those churches.

The senior lesson cites Mark 9:46 (Inspired Version) to show that those men who are appointed to watch over the church are placed in their positions to show light to the saints. This is evidently the meaning of the seven stars seen by John in the right hand of the Son of man; they were the presidents appointed over the churches, to watch over the people and show them light, to transmit to the saints that light which they received from Christ.

The lesson makes allusion to the significance of the seven stars being held in the right hand of the Son of man. Men called to office in the church are upheld, so long as they are faithful, by the all-powerful hand of God. And this is true of all the faithful followers of Jesus Christ, according to his own words, for he says, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand. My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand."

The last line of this quotation is the memory verse of this lesson. It is worthy a place in our memory, and should come to us often with encouragement and the inspiring assurance that the strong hand of our God will sustain us in every time of trial if we are loyal to his truth.

The advanced intermediate work calls attention to the golden text of the lesson, and, in connection with it, refers us to Paul's admonition to the saints of Philippi, to be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom they were to shine as lights in the world.

The words of Jesus and the admonition of Paul should come to us with the same force as if we had been among those to whom they were first addressed. As the people of God, we are called upon to show forth his light in the world, not only by pointing out what is written in the scriptures but in that more effective way, by being living books of truth, known and read of all men. The Lord counsels his elders, and the principle applies to all saints, to make their teaching effectual by their example.

The second primary lesson story closes with these words, "We shine as lights in the world when we are doing right, when we are showing by our example what the gospel of Jesus teaches." Is it not true?

The serious question is, Are we showing forth the light of God in the world? Are we giving thought about us a true conception of what his truth is? Does the uprightness of our lives commend the gospel to the people who know us? Are we people whom the Master need not be ashamed to own as his? Is the light of truth shining out from our lives with a beauty that attracts the honest in heart?

In connection with the thought in the memory verse and in the representation of the seven stars in the right hand of the Son of God, we call attention to the words spoken by the Lord to Alma at the time of his miraculous conversion. It will be remembered that Alma had been going about with the sons of Mosiah, seeking to destroy the church. When the angel of the Lord appeared and spoke to Alma with a voice of thunder, he said, "The Lord hath said, This is my church, and I will establish it; and nothing shall overthrow it, save it is the transgressions of my people."

This should come to us with the force of a very earnest warning. No man can pluck us out of our Father's hand, but we can forfeit our right to his support by transgressing his law. He is strong and able to uphold us; he is loving and will not forsake us; but we can separate ourselves from him; we can forsake him and lose his support by doing so.

Before Jesus came to earth the first time, Alma predicted his coming, saying, "Not many days hence, the Son of God shall come in his glory; and his glory shall be the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace, equity, and truth, full of patience, mercy, and long-suffering, quick to hear the cries of his people, and to answer their prayers."

Consider with this the saying of Jesus concerning himself, "I am come a light into the world."

What was the light that shone forth from him? Was it not that kindness to men, that justness and trueness, that patience, mercy, and long-suffering that characterized his whole life and drew the hearts of men to him as they do to-day when the works of his life are told over again?

And does not this indicate to us what the character of the light is that should shine out from us into this world's darkness?

PETITION.

"More holiness give me,
More sweetness within,
More patience in suffering,
More sorrow for sin;
More faith in my Savior,
More sense of his care;
More joy in his service,
More purpose in prayer.

"More gratitude give me,
More trust in the Lord;
More pride in his glory,
More hope in his word;
More tears for his sorrows,
More pains at his grief;
More meekness in trial,
More praise for relief.

"More purity give me,
More strength to overcome;
More freedom from earth-stains,
More longing for home.
More fit for the kingdom,
More used would I be:
More blessed and holy,
More, Savior, like thee."

ANNA SALYARDS.

Letter Department.

NANTYGLO, Wales, January 5, 1905.

Saints Herald: It is now a little over twelve months since I was forced to quit the mission field. The cause is a far-reaching one in the British Isles. Wales had four missionaries not long ago, just now we have one. I saw by Bro. Rushton's letter in HERALD that some, in Wales, were inclined to criticize "missionary methods." I feel satisfied that there is not a Saint here in our beloved land that would hinder the Lord's work, or discourage the Master's missionaries. However, it is self-evident to any thinking person that one can not do great things in all of Wales. There may be a feeling with some, along these lines, that missionaries should not go near the branches. With such I would differ. It appears to me that under existing circumstances the branches can be, by being the headquarters, of considerable advantage in many ways to the advancing party. For missionaries to tamper in branch affairs, in an organized district, unless asked to by branch or district presidents, would not be to their lasting good. I am sure that it is easier to say than do. I have been speaking to some of the critics of this district, who have said that were the missionaries stopping or staying men for a few months in one place, laboring, preaching, tracting, inviting the people, etc., the spirit to feed, clothe, and give money to the servants of the Lord would germinate in the Saints. This point is worth reflecting upon, as the idler can not be tolerated in any degree.

I would not like to reflect upon any one, but I have known some men whose welcome would be a long time wearing out, or my table or my home comforts be withheld from them. I would mention one, not for his ability as a preacher, but as a constant plodder; tracting, talking to the people, taking the word to the people's homes. Bro. Pierce is one of these. May God bless him. I used to tell him, "Don't go to get wet to-day, brother." I had to warn him of his health, because he wanted to be doing service in all kinds of weather.

I hope no one will judge our brethren of the missionary force by numbers baptized. There is a duty that seems to be lost sight of by many. If they do not baptize a few in a couple of weeks off they go. Our duty as God's servants is to warn the people, preach the gospel as a witness. "If ye go into a city, search diligently; seek out who is worthy," and so on. While we feel better when we are reaping souls, we must take some credit if we testify of the truth; then it is a question between those who reject and the Master who has sent us to tell the sweet story of old.

Wales is undergoing a revival for a few months past. One of the chief figures is a Mr. Evan Roberts, a Welshman. He and others have been so enthusiastic that it is common to read of men prostrating themselves at prayer. People generally go to extremes: sometimes by doing too much, generally not enough. Now and then they get into such paroxysms at prayer that they have to try to hold them down. My opinion is solicited almost every day, as to the great revival. I generally say that some good is done by it, as its exciting influence causes some to cease swearing, others their drunken habits. But do not ask me to say it is of God, or that it is the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The late Doctor Parry, a music doctor, predicted some years ago that the next revival for Wales would be a singing one. I could say much about it but will refrain as it would take up a lot of place in the HERALD. Meetings are held all day long in some instances, and others ranging from seven o'clock in the evening until four the next morning. Gipsy Smith, a renowned revivalist, advised that God intended the night for them to rest. Others say it is not wrong,—Christ prayed all night. This is the "people's revival," as God's first law, "Order," has vanished. Spontaneity among the religious zealots is the keynote to its success.

I am desirous to do what I can for the Lord's work, and am willing to assist any one who comes this way that is willing to labor for the Master's cause.

Your brother and colaborer in the conflict,
THOMAS JONES.

ALLEDALE, Missouri, January 20, 1905.

Editor Herald: I came here on the 14th inst., and began meetings at the church. Bro. G. L. Hallway is with me, our audiences average about fifty—each evening—good number of them Baptist and Methodist. In fact they attend better than many of our own people. It is too bad that some of our own members will absent themselves from the meetings for months, and yet claim to be the children of God. How long, O Lord, wilt thou stay thy chastening hand on the disobedient? Were the Saints agreed and living in righteousness at this place I am satisfied a number would come into the church. There is good order and the best of attention to the preaching. I am informed there are a number of schoolhouses and churches open for our preaching in this section. Where are those elders and priests at Lamoni that say, "I want to do all I can for this glorious work"? The end of the harvest will soon be here; who may abide the day?

Yours in bonds,

D. C. WHITE.

DES MOINES, Iowa, January 18, 1905.

Dear Herald: Your pages each week bear the good tidings of love to your many readers, and as we are made glad we would that many more Saints were constant readers of your columns.

Here in our city there are several families of Saints who do not have you as a welcome guest each week, and we try to place you in the homes of many where you do not go regularly; and when we send you into a home we always feel that you take joy and sunshine into that home with you. We are a firm believer in your mission for good and we hope the time will come when you will go into every Latter Day Saint home throughout the church.

Our Sunday-school officers recently elected are, superintendent, George E. Davis; assistant, Minnie Mather; secretary, Arpha M. Emslie; treasurer, Ray Chandler. The work being done by our Sunday-school is to be commended in every way. It is an organization for good and such it designs to be to the church here. The primary teacher, with her assistant, and her class in the primary room, are now using the new Primary Quarterly and we are safe in saying that the lessons will be satisfactory in every way, and when we get them in book form we will have something complete, permanent, and fully satisfactory for the kindergarten work in the Sabbath-school. And we have a teacher who seems inspired for her work and able to adapt the lessons to the class. We are proud of the primary department of our Sabbath-school.

Our superintendent on last Sunday introduced a very neat frame bearing the names of the four junior classes with the class banner and a thermometer to register each day the attendance and collection. We believe it will prove interesting.

The quarterly report approved last Sunday showed an enrollment of eighty-nine, with eight classes. Funds handed during the quarter twenty dollars and eighty-eight cents. We take forty-five Hopes. In our library we have one hundred and thirty-two volumes. These consist of fifteen volumes of Autumn Leaves, and about all the books published by the church.

On last Sunday we received seven into our branch, six by letter, and one by certificate of baptism. The one on certificate is an isolated brother, as also one of the letters an isolated sister, and our heart yearns for those who are separated from association with Saints. What strength and comfort comes to each soul when Saints are assembled together to worship God. Our branch now numbers about two hundred and sixty.

The Religio is filling its mission with us in interesting and enlisting the young in the field of Christian usefulness. The young men in the church have been placed in positions of responsibility and they are proving faithful to the trust reposed in them. From the ranks of our Religio we fully believe that there are being raised up those who will be warriors in the army of the Lord. At different times we have engaged in the distribution of literature in the city and our young men in going from house to house have at times had opportunity to preach real gospel sermons and engage in strong controversies in defense of our faith. Good to the church will certainly come from this; and development for further service comes to the young men.

The Lord's vineyard is being pruned and cultivated in this, our day, for the last time; and all who are "humble and full of love" are called to enter in and labor with their might. Many here are thus accepting the call; labor is being performed, good is being done, and the approval of the Master of the vineyard is manifested. And yet the field laying open for cultivation is broader than what we have laborers to occupy.

May the Lord of the harvest touch the hearts of the indifferent ones in this city and bring them into full and active service. The year before us is full of hope, and the promises of God are extended to us. The army of the Lord in this city is marching on, and so long as we are faithful, obedient soldiers we feel sure that no power can successfully assail us.

A. A. REAMS.

SEATTLE, Washington, January 17, 1905.

Dear Herald: After holding three meetings in Mt. Vernon I went to the little town of Laconner, alongside of Puget Sound, where I found eight active Saints; and while there held six meetings, using the Good Templars' Hall. Once more I had the opportunity of leading a young man into the waters of baptism. Was then called back by letter to Bellingham, on account of the sickness of Bro. Walter Dancer's wife. From there I came to this great city and enjoyed the meetings and the associations of the Saints over the Christmas-tide. Next, to fulfill my promise, I went to Inglewood, where live our aged Bro. and Sr. Hastings, some thirteen miles across the lakes from this point. Only held one preaching service, and at the close led their adopted daughter into the waters of Pine Lake. I confirmed her and administered the sacrament to them.

Since my return here I have spent considerable time visiting some outsiders that are friendly to us. Among them is Doctor J. J. Black, formerly of Lamoni. I spent two evenings with them at their home, teaching them along the lines of gospel work and duty as demanded of all. I find them interested in the work and it is to be hoped they will become members. Among others are a young man and his wife who attended our district conference here last August. I found them very much interested at that time, and I had a long talk with them, answering many questions, and since that time they are making it a study and have attended a few meetings. While visiting with them last week their infant babe, ailing with cold on its lungs, was presented to be blessed, and after its blessing they demanded baptism, and it was arranged for. These were confirmed at our Sunday afternoon service. I still have others in view to initiate into the kingdom sooner or later. I hope they will be ready at our district conference, which convenes the 4th and 5th of this coming month. So may the good work move on to ultimate success, is my prayer.

T. J. BELL.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, January 21, 1905.

Editor Herald: Being only a lay member and a sister, yet I realize that we are all laborers together in the vineyard of the Lord, and should be very careful what we write, say, or do, as the eyes of the world are upon us, and the weak ones of the church might stumble at some of our words or deeds that seem to them unchristianlike. We should also be careful not to speak slurringly of the messengers that God has called and sent out among the people to preach the gospel, and warn the world for the last time. They make great sacrifice and have much to contend with. We should uphold them by our faith and prayers. If we should see them do or hear them say things that we think detrimental to the church, we should go to them in the spirit of love and meekness and speak to them about it, and not herald it to the church and world the first thing; and we should not speak disrespectfully of the land and place that God has chosen for the gathering-place of his children.

My mind has been drawn out in this direction by a letter I read in the HERALD a few days ago, written by a sister in Blair, Nebraska, in which she desired to see the elders as they were in her mother's day. She says they were not afraid to preach Joseph Smith a prophet; and that they sang such hymns as "Zion's noblest sons are weeping," and "I came to the spot where the two Martyrs lay." She said the elders that went there to preach were fine looking, almost gilt-edged; looked like they were born at Independence, and rocked in the cradle of Zion, sheltered from every storm. Then she says, "But I wonder what good they do, and how long so fair a city [The words a city is an error; it should be lilies. This gives an entirely different meaning and we are glad to make the correction.—Ed.] can stand the sun's hot, blasting rays in this part of the vineyard." She wanted to know what had become of the old-time elders. Had they passed away and left no children? A strange question for a Latter Day Saint to ask. Surely if she reads the church papers, she would read of the Blair boys, the Whites, the Bears, the Chatburns, T. J. Smith's sons, Joseph Smith's sons, several other Smiths' sons, and others too numerous to mention, all young elders whose fathers' were preachers in our mothers' day. I have heard these young elders preach, and can say they are just as staunch defenders of the faith as their fathers were, and stand willing at any time to prove that Joseph was a true prophet.

The Ensign and HERALD are full of letters from all over the world saying what a good work they are doing. This letter from Blair, Nebraska, is the first one I have read in which the writer did not think they were doing any good. She must have seen some of them, for she says the elders that now come among them look fine, almost gilt-edged, looked like they might have been born at Independence. Well, that is all right. The people of Independence are fine looking people,—not only fine looking, but fine Christain people. I know, for I live here myself. We do not sing "Zion's noblest sons are weeping" very much. Do not consider it quite as appropriate now as it was when first composed, as Zion's sons are no longer weeping, neither are her daughters bathed in tears. Their time of weeping has passed. Now they are coming home to Zion with songs of everlasting praise, and sing, "God is marshaling his army," and "A thousand years, children of Zion," etc.

The place for Zion was chosen even in old Joseph's day, and was never to be moved out of her place; and it is growing in numbers, and in the knowledge of God. We have good, noble, and just men, whom God has appointed to lead and counsel us; and I am sure if we heed their counsel we will be able to stand. I hope the sister at Blair will come and visit us and see what progress the church has made, and how the Saints are coming up higher, as the Lord has counseled them to do, from time to time. I know she would not want to drag the church, or elders either, back to where they were in our mothers' day.

I am one of the weakest ones here, but I do love the gospel, and know it to be the truth. I love the Saints here, and I love them wherever they are, and desire to so live that I may always be found worthy to live with the Saints in this life, and also in the life to come. I have written what I have with the best of feelings, and only desire to say a word in defense of the elders and church, especially at Independence. I am,

Your sister in the true faith,

Mrs. J. W. MILLER.

WESTON, Iowa, January 16, 1905.

Editors Herald: I am much interested in Bro. S. W. L. Scott's letter in last week's HERALD, because it speaks so plainly of the condition of things in these latter days, as I see them. A very powerful dream has been given to me twice lately. The last time I was told to tell it to the Saints because it was a warning to others as well as myself that we should prepare ourselves for the coming, soon, of our Savior; for many of the Saints were lifted up in pride and selfishness and their hearts were set on the things of the world, which was displeasing in God's sight. The dream was as follows:

I was in a small house with my mother. A messenger appeared at the door and told me a great flood was soon coming, and we would have to go to a place of safety. He went on to give warning to others. There was a small river just below the house. This is where he told me the flood was coming from. I went to look at the river, to see if we were in danger, but as it was going down rapidly I felt sure the danger was over, and we left the house with a fervent prayer to God that his protecting care might be over our home and we went north some distance, with many others who had been warned. I walked on ahead of the rest till I came to a level place where I could see for many miles around me, and I saw a vast multitude of people that were running to and fro in wild commotion. The Spirit of God now rested upon me in great power, and both of my hands were raised toward heaven, and I cried with power and a loud voice, O ye inhabitants of the earth, Woe unto you, for great destruction and calamities are upon you, for the great and terrible day of the Lord is at hand. But my heart was filled with peace and joy, for I knew I had obeyed the gospel; and I looked forth to the coming of my Savior with joy and gladness. But it made me feel sad for this vast multitude of people, because of the great darkness and the terrible condition they were in because they had not obeyed the gospel, and now it was too late.

Dear Saints, let us strive to live our religion, and to do all we can to bring others to a knowledge of the truth. Let us be willing to sacrifice, and to do all God requires at our hands; for surely the end is nearing, and our Savior will soon be here. Oh, that we may have our lamps trimmed and burning.

I earnestly desire your faith and prayers that if it be God's will I may be healed of a sore affliction from which I have suffered for many years.

Your sister in Christ,

CHRISTINA RASMUSSEN.

MANCHESTER, Texas, January 20, 1905.

Saints' Herald: With a thankful heart I write once more to your columns. I have passed through an ordeal of sickness which brought my body near unto death, but God, being true to all of his promises, heard the prayers of his Saints in my behalf, and my health is about restored. I feel better than I have for two years; and by the help of the Lord I hope to be able to do a great work for the gospel this year. The wonderful year of 1904, with all of its pleasures and sorrows, is gone, and this year brings the question, Where are we? This is a time when the test is applied to men's consciences and souls, the square of truth is laid upon the life of man, and the searchlight of inquiry is turned into the heart, and to every man comes the startling question, Where art thou? This is no new inquiry. Thousands of years ago in the beautiful garden of Eden, abloom with the perfect foliage of beauty, enriched with fruits varied and luscious, refreshed with the river of life, on every side beauty, grace, love, and purity, when sin with its slimy, blighting, debasing presence crept into Adam's heart, God, walking in the cool of the morning, called unto Adam, Where art thou? Why was the question asked? Did not God know where Adam was? In his great love and tenderness he had built this beautiful garden, and placed in it Adam and Eve, who were to inhale its fragrance, feast on its fruits, drink from its life-giving streams and revel in all its delights; and for all this they were to dress and to keep the garden, and not to touch or eat of the fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil only. But yielding to disobedience, sin made Adam afraid and he hid himself from God. My friends, are we hiding from him to-day? Let us ask ourselves this question: Where are we to-day? We are traveling near the end of this dispensation, and our faith is going to be tried as never before; so let us seek a living God. He is ready to hear us. God has not left us; but the people have left him. Listen to what Isaiah said thousands of years ago, chapter 59: 1, 2; "Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it can not save; neither his ear heavy, that it can not hear; but your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear."

Jesus Christ while on earth teaching the children of men made this statement: "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me—shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and I will manifest myself to him."—Saint John 14: 21.

So, kind readers of the HERALD, remember this is the year 1905; and you may think you can live and be saved without a Holy Ghost religion, but it takes that to guide a man into all truth; and before this year is gone the whole religious world will feel the need of God's Holy Spirit, because there are going to be things take place this year that will shake the civilized world.

I go next week to sow the gospel seed in new places. My prayer is that when this year has passed and gone we can say, A great work has been done for the salvation of men.

Independence Items.

The weather of late has been variable, and, as the poet says:

"It blows awhile
It snows awhile
Then blandly smiling, goes awhile.
It's spring and fall
And winter, all,
It's climate, most irrational."

And there are at present several cases of "grip" and a few of smallpox right in our midst. On Sunday, the 15th, there were four out of our fifty-one teachers absent from Sunday-school, and the attendance was four hundred and forty-six, the collection being six dollars and eighty-two cents, a little less than the average, which during the past year was about ten dollars.

Elder Hulmes prefaced his morning's discourse by reading John's second epistle; and, in speaking of the evils of religious intolerance, advocated a broad liberality of sentiment and a free pulpit. The verse, "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God-speed," does not apply to those giving a "cup of cold water," but rather to the teachers of false theories, who would lead men into error. The brother thought this letter was written to some worthy matron of the church, and her children.

In the early afternoon George Alexander, the nine-year-old son of Bro. and Sr. George Edwards, was baptized in the font by Bro. Hulmes and confirmed by him, assisted by Bro. G. E. Harrington. Notice was given that special services would begin the next Sunday evening, in charge of Bro. H. Kemp, to be continued for a week, and perhaps longer.

About twenty Prayer Union sisters met in the north room on Thursday the 12th inst. Attention was called to suggestions published in HERALD, several years ago, in reference to dispensing with officers, organization, etc., but the sisters present thought best to pursue the well-tried ways of the society and elected as officers for the ensuing year, Sr. R. M. Weston (who lately united with us from Michigan) as president, to be assisted by Srs. M. M. Peterson and A. A. Horton. A few of the aged, middle-aged, and young attend from time to time, and the couplet:

"One thing only has been lent
To youth and age in common, discontent," does not apply here. Interest increases, and the blessings of unity and spiritual comfort have always attended these meetings.

The special services were duly opened on the evening of the 22d by Elder Kemp, and thus far have continued as announced with the addition of the prayer-meetings in the afternoons, the latter being mostly attended by the sisters.

Speaking of the big revival now going on; it may be "a bold and unconvincing assertion" some one has made, but they really do say that the evangelists expect to see "a religious move sweep over the entire country next year, which will eclipse any church movement in history."

Reverend Arthur J. Smith, an associate of the prime mover of this crusade, Mr. Calhoun, has been warming up the cold sinners of Independence, and there is a great awakening among the business men of our city, many of whom meet together at the court-house at the noon hour daily. We read that three thousand people announced their conversion last Sunday in Kansas City.

They say, "Whether this quickening of religious interest is the result of concerted action among widely separated religionists, or whether it is merely a matter of coincidence has not been shown."

Our minister stated at the announcement of the special services that they might be considered by some to have been undertaken by reason of the revival-meetings having been decided upon by our coreligionists; but he assured the Saints the idea of holding them was no afterthought with him, for, as he had expressed it, some time ago there appeared to be a necessity for the special meetings, and hence they were decided upon.

In view of existing conditions it looks as though the idea of revivals and special meetings was no thunderbolt out of a clear sky, but was "the result of concerted action" by those who knew "all about it," somewhere and somehow.

Surely we need a spiritual awakening; and may we all, young and old, enter into it and enjoy its blessed benefits.

Extracts from Letters.

John I. Ward, Ubyly, Michigan: "One baptism lately. The work is moving along slowly. I believe the work is of God, and my desire is to live more faithful and help to build up the cause of Zion."

Mrs. M. F. Hill, Belding, Michigan: "I have been in the church two years. In a late HERALD I saw a letter from a sister at Woodburn, and it is like reading a letter from home as I always lived one half miles west of Woodburn. She says she lives near the German Lutheran Church. I would like to know if it is in the town or across the river. Sometimes when I think of what a glorious work we are engaged in, it seems almost too good to be true. Some of the Saints seem to be sleeping, but I do hope they will wake up before it is too late."

"HOW TO STOP POLYGAMY."

Among the rest of those who have appeared in print upon the subject of polygamy in America is ex-Senator George F. Edmunds. He is among the last that we would have supposed should have projected himself into print as he has done upon this subject, he having been instrumental in a large degree for certain legislative enactments seeking control of the situation in Utah and the restricting of the Mormon church in the practice of plural marriage.

This learned gentleman, the ex-Senator, in descanting upon Mormonism, like a good many other writers, has shown himself to be ignorant of some very potent facts in the history of the church. He is so unfortunate as to put himself upon record as revamping the long since exploded Spalding Manuscript origin for the Book of Mormon.

An extract from the Kansas City Journal, of January 5, 1905, upon this subject, evidently framed from what had appeared from the pen of ex-Senator Edmunds, is the following:

Mormonism, with polygamy as a cardinal feature, has more votaries and is more extensively practiced in the United States than ever before. It is an avowed proselytizing faith, and evidently is not without potency in that direction. But although Mormonism and polygamy, except in some localities, such as Independence, Missouri, now seem to be one and the same, this was not always the case. Polygamy was condemned in the original "Book of Mormon." A subsequent "revelation," however, to Joseph Smith in 1843 reversed the earlier commandment, and declared polygamy to be profitable for morals and necessary for large influence in the future heavenly state. It was this declaration that caused the people to rise up and drive the Mormons out of Missouri and Illinois.

The Mormons then fled to Utah and erected an independent commonwealth in the wilderness. In 1862, in order to suppress polygamy, Congress passed an act forbidding polygamy in the Territories. But no conviction was ever secured under this statute. In 1882 Congress passed a new and more adequate act, in 1887 a supplemental act was passed, and then prosecution began in earnest by the federal authorities. This pressure became so heavy that the Mormons asked for an amnesty, which was granted, and the hierarchy pledged the members of the church to a faithful obedience to all laws. In 1894 the statehood bill was passed with certain clauses which, as it was then supposed, would be effective to suppress and prevent polygamy. But the opinion of lawyers and statesmen now seems to be that upon the admission of Utah as a State the Federal Government lost control over her internal affairs.

This is the conclusion reached by ex-Senator Edmunds, who is undoubtedly most familiar with the question. He suggests an amendment to the Federal Constitution prohibiting the practice of polygamy and plural marriages in the United States or in any lands subject to its sovereignty. In view of the dangerous precedent that might be set, if the Federal Government should exercise unwarranted authority in Utah, the course suggested by Senator Edmunds would perhaps be the safest and most practical one to pursue.

So far as the endeavor to overcome the difficulty by amendments to the Constitution prohibiting plural marriages and the practice of polygamy in all the States and Territories of the United States is concerned we may not make objection; but unless the legislators who shall frame the act which will be submitted to the several States for their vote are more careful than the author of the Enabling Act, through which Utah became a State, it is clear that there will still be ample room for an evasion of the law. However careful it otherwise may be the Enabling Act provided that polygamy should be forever prohibited in the state of Utah. This was transferred to the Constitution of the State, and under it Utah was admitted as a State. This was construed to mean the act of marrying more than one woman as wife, and left the practice of polygamy, or the living with more than one woman as wife, open to the action of the State legislature.

If the act which will be submitted to the States for their suffrages in view of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, should be thus carelessly framed, it will have no more effect in stopping polygamy or putting a stop to the disregard of the laws of the United States and the laws of Utah than the clause in the Enabling Act, and the Constitution of Utah, and the State enactments prohibiting and punishing unlawful cohabitation have already had.

This would be a deplorable condition of affairs. And while we are willing to vote for such an amendment, we would like it distinctly understood that it must be so worded that there can be no dubiety in the minds of those who vote in regard to it, and no loophole be left for those who choose to disregard the law of God and the law of men, when seeking to gratify their desires.

We want to go on record beforehand, as this is safest and best.

Senator Edmunds may be right as to this being a sufficient remedy, but it remains to be seen whether Congress will accept such a view and provide for the submitting of such amendment to the action of the States. It would be a pity, if such should be submitted, that it should take on the color of a purely political scheme and be affected either one way or the other by strife between the parties for supremacy. It ought to be lost sight of as a political measure merely, and should be considered as an effort to secure proper government in the territory of the United States in accordance with the institutions which should govern, which are usually known as the institutions of the American republic, or the union of States.

AN UNFORTUNATE BREAK.

Judge Tayler, who has conducted the case for the protestants against Reed Smoot as a senator of the United States, made an unfortunate break in answering questions presented to him by Senator Knox. These questions were:

Do you concede that your argument, intended to establish Senator Smoot's disqualification, applies with equal force to all members of the Mormon church who entertain the beliefs Senator Smoot has confessed?

Do you concede that your argument for disqualification so far as it is based upon Senator Smoot's belief in a duty to obey divine revelation, applies with equal force to all who believe in the duty to obey the divine will, however ascertained?

Would Senator Smoot be disqualified, in your opinion, by reason of being a Mormon, if Mormonism had never been tainted with polygamy?

To these Mr. Tayler replied that the chief charge against Senator Smoot was that he was the integral part of the quorum of twelve, which he declared to be all there was to the Mormon church. The president of the church, said Judge Tayler, was the creature of the quorum of apostles and could be removed by it.

The latter part of the first question and the second question were answered jointly by Judge Tayler by giving what he believed to be the political significance of a belief in revelations. He quoted from the testimony of Senator Smoot and other witnesses concerning their beliefs in revelations, and said that all persons committed to such beliefs were disqualified to sit as Senators. The third question he answered by stating that if no attention had been attracted to the church by violations of the law, it was not likely that religious belief would have been brought into the discussion, but that polygamy was the result of revelations. This immediate contact with God, through personal revelations, he declared to be sufficient to disqualify any person for the position of senatorship, no matter what his creed.

This reply is unfortunate in this: it affects all those of known loyalty to the Government who may possibly believe in revelation, and they are quite numerous now, and daily becoming more so. It affects us of the Reorganization notwithstanding the fact that our belief in revelation commands us to observe and keep the laws of the land. To us it is the answer of a lawyer intent on his success in his case, rather than real justice to men.

As they say in the courts, "the case is now with the jury." It will be some time before the committee will be ready to report to the Senate, and then it will be some time before that body will take action.

Whatever the issue, so far as Mr. Smoot is concerned, the inquiry has resulted in good to the position assumed by the Reorganization, in regard to church doctrine and practice.

What we have done at Washington heretofore, pending legislation by Congress affecting Utah, and what is usually called Mormonism and the Mormons, by some has been ascribed to enmity against the people of the church in Utah, chief officers especially. The same class has attributed the presence of officers of the Reorganized Church at Washington during the inquiry of the senatorial committee to the same cause. This is altogether a great mistake. No such feeling has entered into the course we have taken. We have been standing upon our own defense, which we had the right to do, and which became our duty under the circumstances. We were there to see that our position as representing the church organized April 6, 1830, and its faith, doctrine, and practice did not suffer from our negligence and inattention.

According to the ruling of the Court of Appeals, our contention for the possession of the Temple Lot at Independence was defeated because we had slept upon our rights, not that we did not have the right to what we contended for.

To charge us with malice against persons in our contention for what we believe to be our rights in this case is an error and one that should not be made.

DOCTOR REMSEN AND "THE AGE OF SCIENCE."

Elsewhere in this issue we present to our readers an article taken from a much prized exchange—the Electrical Review. It is a compact abridgment of Doctor Ira Remsen's commencement address delivered before the Worcester Polytechnic Institute last June. Of the writer the Review says editorially: "Doctor Remsen has always something interesting to say, and he is never more convincing than when he is pleading the cause of science."

A short sketch of Doctor Remsen's history will not be without interest to our readers. He was born in New York on February 10, 1846, hence is now completing his fifty-ninth year. His education as a youth was secured in the schools and colleges of New York, he graduating in 1867 from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia. Following this he spent one year in the university at Munich, Germany, doing work in his chosen special line, chemistry, then went to Göttingen university, where in 1870 he received the degree of Ph. D. The next two years he spent in the university at Tübingen as assistant in the chemical laboratory. In 1872 he returned to the United States to accept the professorship of Chemistry and Physics in Williams, where he spent four years establishing the chemical laboratory of that institution. In 1876 he took the chair of chemistry at Johns Hopkins University, a position he has since continued to fill with honor to himself and the excellent institution. In the midst of one of the best equipped chemical laboratories in the country he has carried on persistent work in scientific research, and has given to the world some valuable chemical discoveries, not the least among which is saccharine, a substance estimated at two hundred and fifty times sweeter than sugar, yet which is not injurious to the human system. Along with saccharine he discovered several other allied substances, some sweet, some bitter.

Doctor Remsen has published to the world many valuable articles as a result of his research work, most of his articles appearing in the American Chemical Journal, a paper which he founded in 1879, and of which he has been the editor since the first. Besides his many articles he has written several books on subjects connected with the science of chemistry, and in this country there are possibly no more widely known texts on chemistry than those which bear his name. He is a member of several scientific societies, both at home and abroad, and his eminence as a scientist gives added interest to his paper on "The age of science."

DIVORCE.

There is considerable agitation at present concerning the propriety and rightfulness of divorce laws and their employment for the purpose of separating men and women from bonds that seem to be irksome. It is quite natural to expect this kind of agitation to take place in religious circles, but it would seem that in secular or philosophical spheres there ought not to be so much agitation. But we have discovered sometime since that there is a large amount of wisdom in what may be called lay members in regard to religious practices and personal conduct under religious influences.

Among those who have put themselves on record in regard to this question of divorce is Doctor Felix Adler. In a late lecture delivered before the Society of Ethical Culture he attacked absolute divorce from the viewpoint of a philosopher and morality. An excerpt from the Kansas City Journal reads as follows:

Divorce is never justified under any circumstances. As a remedy for "impossible" marriages he recommended separation, either permanent or temporary, but without the permission to remarry.

"I'm going to ask you to face with me a grim problem," said Doctor Adler. "If I were a praying parson, I would pray first that the respect for the moral considerations involved would not make me hard and unfeeling toward the human suffering involved, also that the contemplation of this suffering would not make one less strong.

"It is not so much for us to determine what the law on the statute books should be, as to determine what should be the public attitude toward the law. There are many things which law permits, but which a person of high moral training will not permit himself."

Doctor Adler denounced the opinion that a lifetime of misery is too great a price to pay for one mistake. "All along the way of the education of the human race," he said, "lie these excessive penalties. If a man makes a slip at the top of the cliff he pays for it. So try to prevent the mistake. Teach young people the ethical grounds of marriage; surround them with more safeguards.

"Happiness is not after all the great end of marriage. Its real end is the promotion of the world's moral growth. Happiness is not, indeed, the great end of any phase of life. It comes as an incident."

It is seldom that we have a sermon from the pulpit on any given subject more forceful than is this from this famous lecturer. The last clause must necessarily strike the common reader with considerable force, and it may be well that the lesson should be learned and the conclusions therefrom become actual facts in the life of the church, using the word in its broad sense.

Latter Day Saints should remember that so far as the domestic relation is concerned the status and duty of husband and wife were clearly set forth at the beginning; and according to the revelations to the church this beginning was before the foundations of the world were laid. No one need go farther back than that. "Multiply and replenish the earth," "subdue" and occupy it, were twin commandments and underlie the entire economy of man's existence, both as a man to overcome and conquer the difficulties of his surroundings, and also as a father of the human race. Nothing can be more specific than this.

Whatever therefore militates against the proper carrying into effect the object designed is necessarily contrary to the will of God; hence every derangement of the obligations which properly should exist between husband and wife must have its rise in either degeneracy of man and his failure to respond to the direct calls made upon him by the condition in which he necessarily must live, or it must arise from selfish desires to change associations which by reason of long continuation have become irksome.

We agree decidedly with Mr. Adler that there is no proper justification to be urged for absolute divorce, with the single exception of absolute infidelity to the marriage bond, involving one or the other of the parties to the marriage contract in crime. There is no other justifiable cause than the one specified in Matthew 19 and Mark 10. There have been statute enactments which have provided for other causes, but these, in our judgment, are decidedly inadequate, and some of them are in their operation more or less vicious, and allow license for the exercise of man's worst nature.

We give this excerpt from the lecture of Mr. Adler in order that it may be taken into consideration by the membership; and that it may be productive of good results is our earnest wish.

WAR, THE "ABOMINATION WHICH MAKETH DESOLATE."

From current newspaper reports it seems that the movement of the workmen and other classes in Russia, looking to the obtaining of greater liberty for the people, probably will be followed by certain concessions from the Czar granting relief from the oppressive enforcement of existing laws on the part of the horde of officers lined up between the Czar (the Little Father) and the subject classes (his children).

The manner in which the cruel measures employed to stop the approach of the workmen to an interview with the ruler, has been received and commented upon in the different nations, has apparently stunned the "autocrat of all the Russias" and brought to his mind the fact that there is a public opinion outside of his realm with which he and the governing classes known as the "beaurocracy" will have to reckon. However, the news now is so conflicting and contradictory that it is not safe to foreshadow what course the Czar will take. He seems to be weak and vacillating, or is so bound by a surrounding army of satellites and relatives who are in a position to dominate and hinder him that he can not make use of the opportunity now offered to him to make his name celebrated as a benefactor of his people. The reform will come by him if he will, without him if he will not.

HEATHENISM IN AMERICA.

Under the foregoing head a Reverend Fulcomer, of Blue Springs, Nebraska, gets after what he calls "Heathenism in America." He seems to hit at all denominations except his own. The article was published in the Christian Work and Evangelist, and was sent us by Bro. Porter Pleasants, of Alturas, California.

HEATHENISM IN AMERICA.

San Francisco may have its Chinese joss-houses, and some other cities may have their Buddhist temples or chapels, but these are not the worst institutions of heathenism in America. At the great World's Fair in Chicago, Vivakananda, of Bombay, could beautifully represent the very best features of Hinduism, and Mozvondar could powerfully defend his Brahma Somaj; but these were by no means the most dangerous speakers in that Congress of Religions.

Even a Nagarkar, who there so eloquently spoke of the Brahma Somaj, declaring that "Vyas and Buddha, Moses and Mohammed, Jesus and Zoroaster all form a homogeneous whole,"—even he was a safe teacher compared to an American who seeks to import heathenism as a substitute for Christianity.

THEOSOPHY.

In Vermont in 1874 Colonel Olcott met Madame Blavatsky, of Northern Russia. The next year these two persons promulgated the new (?) religion of Theosophy; of which one of its more recent exponents writes as follows: "Theosophy is to be found, here and there, in the ancient Aryan literature in the Zoroastrian and other ancient religions and philosophies and in the Greek pantheistic philosophy."

Here then we have an attempt at making a new religion by patchwork, out of three or more antiquated systems of pure heathen mysticism. In her book: Why I Became a Theosophist, Mrs. Besant says: "The next matter impressed on the student of theosophy is the denial of a personal God. Theosophy is pantheistic. God is all and all is God." How different this is from the Christian's faith in a personal God, who is the all-wise Creator of all things, and who controls and overrules all for the greatest good.

This is the "wisdom religion" whose votaries claim that they learn all these wonderful theories from "the Mahatmas." (Who are they?) This is the eclectic religion of America, whose advocates write so flippantly about "the law of Karma." (What law is that?)

This is the religion which denies the personal God; which has no Christ, which calls the Bible mythology; which teaches that human souls pass from one body to another for generations. And one of their authorities says of the finality of the spirit, that at last it will "enter the eternal and final all, and become an integral part of the great abyss of impersonality called God." Is not all this in reality more contrary to Scripture and reason than heathenism itself? And the reader will please note the fact that all these most astonishing assertions in this article are quotations from their own authorities.

MORMONISM.

Here is another mongrel substitute for Christianity, which originated in America about A. D. 1830. This organization calls itself "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." And it claims to be the only church really authorized to perform the divine ordinances, because it has the latest Scriptures.

In the Mormon Catechism, Chapter 3, we read: "Has God given any revelations to man?" "Yes, a great number." "Where have we any account of his doing so?" "In the Bible; the Book of Mormon, the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and other publications of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." On April 5, 1897, in a conference in Salt Lake Tabernacle, Apostle John W. Taylor declared: "Joseph Smith was a prophet; Brigham Young was a prophet; Wilford Woodruff is a prophet—and he can make Scriptures as good as those in the Bible."

The writer sent his money to Salt Lake City and purchased their own publications from their own press, from which the following quotations are made. So when the reader discovers that this is more a system of heathenism than of Christianity, he need not doubt the correctness of his conclusions. In this article we can not give space for a delineation of the origin and tenets of this so-called church. But it is now in order for us to note a few of its anti-Christian and heathen doctrines.

ITS POLYTHEISM.

Their catechism published in Salt Lake City, in 1888, chapter 4, teaches thus: "Are there more Gods than one?" "Yes, many."—Pearl of Great Price, page 32. "And they (the gods) went down at the beginning and they organized and formed the earth."—Journal of Discourses, volume 6, page 5. "The head-god called together the gods, and they sat in council to bring forth the world."—Joseph Smith.

They also teach that Adam is our God.—Journal of Discourses, volume 1, page 50. "He (Adam) is our God, and the only God with whom we have to do." In this sermon Brigham Young says: "When the Virgin Mary conceived, the child Jesus, the Father had begotten him in his own likeness. He was not begotten by the Holy Ghost. And who is the Father? He is the first of the human family." This enables us better to understand their teachings in the Catechism, chapter 5, "What kind of a being is God?" "He is in the form of a man." "Has God a body then?" "Yes, like unto a man's body in figure."

They teach that men become gods, and that their great polygamists shall create worlds, and populate them with their own progeny. In Journal of Discourses, volume 6, page 4, Joseph Smith says: "And you have got to learn how to be gods yourselves . . . the same as all gods have done before you."

In the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, section 132, Smith's revelation concerning the plurality of wives, we find the following assertions: "For behold I reveal unto you a new and everlasting covenant; and if ye abide not that covenant then are ye damned: for no man can reject this covenant, and be permitted to enter into my glory." "If a man espouse a virgin, and desire to espouse another . . . then he is justified; he can not commit adultery." "And if he have ten virgins given unto him by this law, he can not commit adultery." "It is sealed unto them by the Holy Spirit of promise" . . . "and shall be of full force when they are out of the world; and they shall pass by the angels, and the gods which are set there, to their exaltation and glory." . . . "Then shall they be Gods, and the angels are subject unto them." Any heathen writer would have been ashamed to make such a blasphemous promulgation in the name of his Deity.

WORSE THAN PURGATORY DOCTRINE.

We must note one or more of the many flagrant perversions of Scriptures by Mormon writers. In their tract No. 2, "The plan of salvation," Elder John Morgan quotes 1 Corinthians 15: 29, in which the apostle Paul reminds us, that if the dead rise not, then are we vainly baptized in the name of a dead Savior. But this Mormon elder perverts this verse, to make it teach the unchristian and unreasonable doctrine, that a Latter Day Saint can redeem the lost souls of dead ancestors, by having himself baptized for each one of them. He says: "Those that are in the flesh can do vicarious work for their dead, and become saviors upon Mount Zion." "Elijah the prophet having come and conferred the authority to baptize for the dead, Latter Day Saints are assiduously engaged in erecting temples wherein this ordinance may be performed." "The Saints are flocking to the temples of the Lord, and redeeming their dead from the grasp of Satan."

Is it not astonishing how these American human religions out-heathen the heathen themselves? Then, when we think of Christians (?) praying to saints to deliver their dead from the torments of purgatory; priests kissing images, and practicing other forms of idolatry, what is this better than heathenism? And when we meet to pay a last tribute of respect to the memory of a deceased friend, and have to listen to a Christless burial service, which talks about "the grand lodge above," and displays heathen emblems, what shall we think? Ah, yes, when we sit in our orthodox congregations and hear prayers offered, how often we have to think of the Savior's instructions: "When ye pray, use not vain repetitions as the heathen do."

Pursuing the current Sunday-school lessons, we often wonder at the Israelites,—that they so frequently fell into habits of idolatry. But what are we doing in this twentieth century? Ours are indeed "perilous times." Spiritualism is not dead yet. Huxley, Darwin, and Spencer have had their day. German rationalism is revived in the destructive "higher criticism." "Christian Science," "New Thought," "Free Thought," and no one knows how many other cults are coming and going; each leaving its impressions upon the social life of America.

Semi-heathen movements insinuate their literature into our families. Mormon missionaries enter all our homes, and hiding, often denying, their pernicious doctrines, compass land and sea to make proselytes from our churches; and often seem to deceive the very elect. So it really is not an idle dream, to discern an imminent contest between our American Christianity and all kinds of heathenism, right here in our American cities. Yes, even in all our rural districts, these heathenizing teachers are creeping into our homes, and their literature is read in many a family. Surely instruction, warning, and vigilance are now in demand.—Reverend M. Fulcomer, Blue Springs, Nebraska.

It appears from the foregoing that this Reverend Falcomer makes a hit at every denomination except his own. In his effort to discredit the gospel teachings of Joseph Smith he like all others of those attacking the faith resorts to the extremely obnoxious features of Utah Mormonism, plurality of gods, and plurality of wives, or polygamy, quoting from the King Follett sermon, said to have been delivered by Joseph Smith, and the book of Abraham in regard to the council of the gods with reference to the creation of the world, as found in the Utah edition of the Pearl of Great Price. Of this quotation Bro. Pleasants asks, "Did Joseph Smith teach what is represented as his teaching in Pearl of Great Price, that there are many gods, as quoted here?"

We have not a copy of the Utah edition of the work, and can not answer the question. The Journal of Discourses was not published until after Joseph Smith's death, and we can not answer for what may be quoted from it. The compilers of the work referred to as the "Catechism" have left it in such shape that any one like Reverend Fulcomer mixes the sayings of Joseph Smith and Brigham Young up in a way to implicate Joseph Smith in teaching plurality of gods. As we understand it the quotations used are fragmentary, as taken from the book of Abraham, and the King Follett sermon. We accept neither as a standard of reference, or end of controversy, the church never having passed on or approved of either.

We notice, however, that one or two of the witnesses summoned from Utah before the Senate committee, testified that the Pearl of Great Price was one of the standard works of the Utah church.

GRACELAND NOTES.

Elder J. J. Cornish, Bishop's agent for Northern Michigan District, forwards one hundred and fifty dollars, another payment for that district on their proportion of the indebtedness.

Sr. Wolfe, of Oberlin, Kansas, forwards offerings and writes: "Would like to do much more for Graceland. May grace indeed abound within its walls."

Elder Henry Sparling, Bishop's agent for Southern Missouri District, forwards thirty-three dollars and twenty-five cents and writes: "I have about double this amount promised. I shall do what I can for the college. There is not much objection to the college fund down here, but the most of the people are very poor."

Bro. S. B. Hartshorn, agent for Portland, Oregon, District, writes: "I inclose order for twenty-nine dollars and seventy cents for college debt, one dollar more than our apportionment, which was seventy-five dollars and twenty cents. (I sent you forty-six dollars and fifty cents some time ago.) The Condon Branch has raised all but a few dollars, and I feel that they have done nobly. I hope the debt will soon be paid."

Elder A. M. Fyrando, agent, Little Sioux, Iowa, has an additional amount in on proportion of that district and the same will soon be completed.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Some brother has sent us a copy of the News of Toronto, Ontario, for January 21, 1905, containing a statement of an arraignment of the Christian Science system in the court of the Dominion, on the occasion of the death of one Wallace G. Goodfellow, for the responsibility of whose death four members of the cult were arrested and imprisoned on the charge of manslaughter, the result of failure to employ medical attendance, contrary to statute law. There have been three convictions under British laws on similar charges, one in Canada, one in British Columbia, and one in England.

Advices from Bro. R. C. Evans, January 30, show that the Saints at Toronto, Ontario, have hired a large hall, the Majestic, for four successive Sundays. Services begun January 29 with an attendance of fifteen hundred to seventeen hundred people. Besides occupying in the hall each of the Sundays, Bro. Evans will preach in the Saints' church every week-night till the close of the series. He reports an excellent spirit prevailing, good attention, and splendid liberty. He will have the prayers of the Saints for his success.

What a tame world this would be if we had not perpetually the shock of adverse judgment and opinions. Storms root the oak, fire tempers steel, great epochs make history, and adversity well borne makes character.—Francis Willard.

Bro. M. R. Scott, Jr., of Wirt, Indiana, was at Clear Lake, Indiana, February 1, and was delivering some excellent discourses,—so writes Bro. William F. Shaub.

Bro. F. E. Cohrt closed a series of meetings the latter part of January in the Manteno Methodist church. He baptized eight on Sunday the 29th. Also took one subscription for the HERALD.

The Lamoni Sunday-school will render a parents' day program at the Brick Church next Sunday, the 12th inst., at eleven o'clock, instead of the usual preaching-service. Parents are invited to take the front seats. Several interesting papers are promised.

"BE AT PEACE AMONG YOURSELVES."—1 THESSALONIANS 5:13.

This being the season when much is said about "On earth peace, good will toward men," it may be well to consider our status as a body of people united under the auspices of him who brought this glad message to mankind, the Lord Jesus Christ. We have the disposition, so far as our understanding and capacity enable us, to be optimistic regarding our position in the religious world; we are encouraged by the favorable reports of the ministers from their various fields, by the especial interest shown in localities where the gospel is being preached for the first time, and by the liberality on the part of the membership in meeting the financial obligations.

Reflection on these things brings comfort and satisfaction, and confirms our confidence in the ultimate triumph of the work in which we are engaged.

On the other hand there are a few things, a consideration of which brings pain and regret; and we fervently wish they were otherwise, and believe they could be improved if especial efforts were made in that direction.

Locally we note among the Saints the absence to some extent of the full fellowship and confidence in each other that should characterize them, manifesting instead what appear to be petty animosities, jealousy, and perhaps even strife.

Also in the HERALD of late the tone of certain articles has been indicative of the necessity of our coming up a little higher. While the columns of the HERALD are open for discussion, and quite properly so, that the membership may learn the different sides of the various questions that are written about, yet it appears to us that some are inclined to go to extremes, advocating what resembles personal opinion without scriptural warrant; even sometimes to enforce their argument indulging in the use of sarcasm and irony; and in one case now in mind the name of the Deity was used in a few lines to ridicule the writer's opponent.

We should regard each one as having the right to his own opinion, when such opinion is not enforced to the extent of interfering with the right and privilege of others, and be more ready and willing to make allowance for the peculiarities and even frailties of each other. There are many minor questions about which a great deal is said and written that neither edifies nor instructs, rather provoking strife and enmity, which were better never to have been brought up for discussion.

We would not advocate the "let well enough alone" idea, not trying to make all possible progression. We are heartily in favor of living up to the highest light attainable on all subjects of interest to the church; but if a kindlier tone should be exhibited in the controversial articles we are confident that it would have a salubrious effect upon the membership; and if it is impossible to discuss in a gentler vein the progression gained is too dearly bought. We do not expect perfection on the part of our brethren but we are of the cheerful opinion that were each of us to work for it, better conditions would prevail.

The powers of earth are traveling slowly, though we hope surely, in the way that will, they expect, eventually lead up to universal peace, when engines of devastating war may be transformed into implements of peaceful husbandry. We may form our respective opinions as to whether this disarmament doctrine will ever evolve into a reality; but, be that as it may, the idea is ennobling and elevating, showing that some of the leading minds of the world feel the need of getting farther removed from the barbarism that has so long prevailed.

The Savior called his disciples the light of the world and at this time the question suggests itself: What should be our position in the world as a church, and how are we demonstrating to the world that we are its light?

We surely can not do so other than by presenting a higher and better standard of action than they have. We can not afford to exhibit any traits that are not in keeping with our profession if we would be leaders in disseminating the gospel of peace, for our teachings will surely have greater effect if backed up by actions in keeping therewith.

On those trivial questions that can hardly be definitely answered we ought to let each hold his private views, and those holding what seem peculiar ideas should be careful not to invite discord by trying to fasten them upon others who see things differently. We apparently need to learn more fully that living in peace and harmony with each other should be considered prior to that of converting our brother to views held by us that are contrary to his.

It may be true that so long as the brethren's opinions differ in regard to certain questions we are not prepared to live in a gathered condition, and that preparatory to such event we should hasten to become agreed upon those differences; but we wonder if the present mode of conducting ourselves toward those who differ from us will speed us on to unity. And if it will not we had better desist from our present course and bend our energies in ways that may bring better results.

The comforting thought, regarding the unpleasant side of affairs, is that those who persist in indulging in the things referred to are few, no doubt a safe minority, and we cherish the hope that it will still diminish.

In presenting these thoughts we have endeavored to say nothing that will disquiet the most sensitive, and trust that the vision which prompted them will disappear and that as a church and also as individuals we may be foremost in doing whatever will hasten the spread of the gospel message, and in our association together do nothing that will mar one another's peace and happiness, and while making intellectual advancement remembering that:

The wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy. And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace.—James 3: 17, 18.

FIDELIS.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

I shall endeavor to treat this subject from an ethical rather than a judicial standpoint, though I firmly believe that the lax laws governing marriage and divorce in this country are ruining thousands of American homes. Marriage is a sacred ordinance by our Creator. "Whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh."

The writer having heeded this scriptural injunction early in life, can state after sixteen years' experience that she is still an advocate of marriage. But let the young men and women, who contemplate marrying out of the church, consider the matter thoughtfully, trusting not to themselves alone, but praying earnestly that God may guide them aright. There should be a calm and quiet constancy in marriage of the same faith, for we may gather strength and life from the virtue of religion alone, which imparts to us resolution and fortitude; for the gospel enables us to bear tranquilly and even gladly the trials of our state, such as for instance the faults each may discover in the other, the difference of temper and character, the weight of a mother's cares, the anxiety for the children, the reverses of fortune, and the sorrows of life. Truly it is a serious step for a young woman to marry out of the church; and we believe still worse for a young man, for the hand that rocks the cradle has great influence in the home.

Minds that do not agree as to the observances of religion will mar many pleasures of the home. Think of the many times you may have to attend church alone, the tithing that should be paid, and the hindrance to the proper religious education of the children. These reasons alone should cause one to turn with fear from such marriages. We all know it is at times difficult to walk the narrow way under the most favorable environments, and surely one needs the help and encouragement of his companion. Therefore be not hasty in choosing your companion for life. Examine yourself and see if you are prepared to assume the new responsibilities. Young men and women who have had no control exercised over them, are not prepared to submit to the restraint the obligations of marriage impose. Let the sons and daughters be educated for the duties of matrimony, and there will be less cry for divorce.

Marriage should not be lightly or blindly assumed. It is too eternal in its responsibilities; but I do think it is a privilege extended to us which if we accept and strive to improve as well as we can in all humility and trust, will bring us up higher and fit us to receive and appreciate a greater glory. We all know that added responsibilities mean added cares; but they also mean added reward if faithfully performed. Causes which would necessitate a divorce are to be deplored. And while we believe there are causes where a divorce is justifiable, we do think the general happiness of married life is secured by its indissolubility. When people understand that they must live together except for the reasons given by our divine Master, they will learn to soften by mutual concessions that yoke which they know they can not shake off; for necessity is a powerful master in teaching the duties which it imposes.

Turn with me to 1 Corinthians 7: 10, 11, and we find: "And unto the married I command, and yet not I, but the Lord, Let not the wife depart from her husband: but and if she depart, let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away his wife," "What therefore God hath joined together let not man put asunder."—Mark 10: 9. (See also Matthew 5: 31, 32; Mark 10: 11, 12.) We believe a better understanding of divine law, and less knowledge of divorce law will bring peace, joy, and contentment to the home.

Dear Saints, the hope of this church is in the children. From the pulpit alone, Zion can never be redeemed. We must raise up a people pure and spotless. We must nurture them in the true principles in order that they may become indeed the "bride" adorned when the bridegroom cometh,—Zion the pure in heart, not just in deeds. Which of us has a heart into which enters no impure thoughts? Then let us be faithful in caring for the lambs the Father hath intrusted to our care, that they may pass through this life of probation with integrity and honor, that some day when we shall be called to give our account it may be one of faithful discharge of privileges, of opportunities recognized and well improved. May the dear Lord guide and bless us all.

A SISTER.

CONSECRATION AND EQUALITY AMONGST CHRIST'S MINISTRY.

As Bishop's agent I am supposed to teach the law of consecration and equality. And for awhile, or until quite recently, I was satisfied that I understood the church teaching. But things have transpired of late, which have compelled me to believe I either am not in harmony with the church or the church is failing to enforce the law as the books teach it.

We are told in Doctrine and Covenants, page 101:

And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, . . . And again, if there shall be properties in the hands of the church, or any individual of it, more than is necessary for their support, [italics mine,] after this first consecration, which is a residue, to be consecrated unto the bishop, it shall be kept to administer unto those who have not, from time to time, that every man who has need may be amply supplied and receive according to his wants.

While this no doubt refers to the whole body, yet it undoubtedly refers to the ministry in particular. And the ministry are supposed to be supplied according to their needs, from the church treasury, on a basis of equality. Now as to what constitutes this equality is where there seems to be room for argument, on the part of some. But to the writer the word equal means an equality in all things both temporal and spiritual.

Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1, says:

That you may be equal in the bands of heavenly things: Yea, and earthly things also, for the obtaining of heavenly things; for if ye are not equal in earthly things, ye can not be equal in obtaining heavenly things, for if you will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourselves by doing the things which I have commanded you and required of you.

Now the things required are that we must become equal in earthly things. How shall this state be obtained? If one comes to Zion he is required "to lay all things before the bishop in Zion," and to take his inheritance, as the law directs. Does not this word all include his surplus property? And is not money, houses, or land, surplus? The church is furnishing his family with an allowance supposed to be equal to his wants. That being the case, by what law does an elder, after coming to Zion, and supposed to have consecrated all his surplus, still have another surplus left which he may invest in bank-stock, mercantile business, or build houses for rent, and receive interest or a profit therefrom in addition to the allowance his family receive from the church? I must confess I do not understand that to be equality in earthly things.

I lately asked some questions along this line of one that should know. I was answered about as follows: That as his family wants were more than the church at present allowed, it was necessary to have something to fall back on. But I ask, What has my brother elder, that has no other income but his allowance, to fall back on? I ask again, By what rule should one elder's family consisting of the same dependents, require more to live on than those of his brother in the same city? There must be a scarcity on the part of one, if the other has only just enough.

If the present standard of elders' allowances is too low, which most all elders will admit, then raise that standard sufficiently to meet the wants in full—that as the Lord says, Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1, "Every man equal according to their circumstances." It seems to me that the Lord has made ample provision for the wants of each. Then why should it be necessary for any elder to keep back part of his surplus for cases of emergency?

Does it not imply a lack of faith in the law, or else in those administering the law?

Is it not a fact that the Bishop is always ready to meet an emergency as far as he is able? And would he not be more able if all coming to Zion would lay their all before him as the law directs?

I can see why it is necessary for a brother in business to have enough reserve to carry on his business successfully. But I fail to see where the missionary has need of any such reserve to carry on his work.

The Lord again has said, Doctrine and Covenants 51: 2: "And let every man deal honestly, and be alike among this people, and receive alike." Now how can we be alike if one elder is living in a ten-room house, and is able to live in style and comfort, give his children a college education, and otherwise provide for their future, simply because he has a private income, other than the allowance his family receives from the church? while another elder lives in a two-roomed house with only his family allowance to live on, which the other admits is too low? To my mind there is not much "likeness" or equality in that method. Neither do I believe that is the order of Zion. Then again, those of us that live outside of the limits of Zion, shall we not give the Bishop a complete list of all our property, and if we have a private income sufficient to cover all our wants while we labor in the ministry, what more are we entitled to? If we have partly enough, then let the church supply the balance; then we are all on equal basis. This to my mind is the law that God enjoins upon us as ministers of Christ. Shall we not set an example to the flock and thereby be counted worthy to represent this divine law?

HENRY SPARLING.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

The following table of the number of baptisms is compiled from the Church Recorder's reports to General Conference:

Year.	Number of Baptisms.
1891.....	1,723
1892.....	1,722
1893.....	2,239
1894.....	2,427
1895.....	2,782
1896.....	2,592
1897.....	4,161
1898.....	2,765
1899.....	1,844
1900.....	2,522
1901.....	2,316
1902.....	2,335
1903.....	2,498
1904.....	2,535

Total, 34,451. Average per year, 2,460. From 1891 to 1897, the number baptized was 17,646 for seven years; and from 1897 to 1904, for seven years, the number was 16,805.

The number of missionaries has been steadily increasing so that at present there are about twice as many as in 1891; and the increased number of local workers and the great number brought into the church through the influences of the Sunday-school and the Religio is also to be considered. These figures indicate that it takes more than double the work it did fourteen years ago to accomplish the same results in making converts. Also, as the number of our own children that become members is larger now than in the past the number converted from the world must be proportionately smaller.

The writer of this paper does not possess sufficient knowledge of the forces that oppose the work to be able to give a satisfactory solution. Others whose experience and knowledge exceed mine can better essay the task. Some of the Saints, in private conversation, have expressed opinions on the subject and a few will be stated, but the writer neither approves nor disapproves of them, only desiring to state them with the hope that it may suggest to HERALD readers a consideration of the question, and perhaps give us all the benefit of their experience and meditations:

1. Exclusiveness and lack of sociability.
2. In methods of work, clinging to the past and not using present-day methods.
3. Lack of the true aggressive missionary spirit in the ministry and members.
4. The Smoot and Roberts cases in Washington causing a feeling of disgust to come over the public.
5. A need of a spiritual endowment to better fit the ministry for their work.
6. A trial of our faith, "The darkest just before the dawn."

Yours in hope,

EDWARD RANNIE.

THE AGE OF SCIENCE.¹

BY IRA A. REMSEN, PH. D.

As much of the time of those who go forth from this institution to-day has been spent in the study of the sciences, it has seemed to me fitting to ask your attention to some considerations suggested by the phrase, "this is the age of science." I do not remember ever to have heard this statement questioned, much less denied, nor do I remember ever to have heard it satisfactorily explained. It sounds simple enough, and does not appear to call for explanation or comment, and yet I think it worth while to examine it a little more carefully than is customary, to see in what sense it is true. For in a sense it is true, and in a sense it is not true. The statement raises two questions which should be answered at the outset. These are, first, what is science? and second, in what sense is this the age of science?

First, then, what is science? Surely there can be no difficulty in answering this, and yet I fear that, if I should pass through this or any other audience with the question, I should get many different answers.

A certain lady, whom I know better than any other, has told me that, should she ever be permitted to marry a second time, she would not marry a scientific man, because scientific men are so terribly accurate. I often hear the same general idea expressed, and it is clear that accuracy is one attribute of science according to prevailing opinions. But accuracy alone is not science.

Again, there are those who seem to think that science is something that has been devised by the Evil One for the purpose of undermining religion. This idea is not so common as it was a few years ago, when the professors of scientific subjects in our colleges were generally objects of suspicion.

Probably the idea most commonly held in regard to science is that it is something that gives us a great many useful inventions. The steam-engine, the telegraph, the telephone, the trolley-car, dye stuffs, medicines, explosives—these are the fruits of science, and without these science is of no avail. I need only say now that useful inventions are not a necessary consequence of scientific work, and that scientific work does not depend upon useful applications for its value.

Science, then, is not simply accuracy, although it would be worthless if it were not accurate; it is not devised for the purpose of undermining religion; and its object is not the making of useful inventions. Then what is it? One dictionary gives this definition: "Knowledge; knowledge of principles and causes; ascertained truth or facts." . . . "Accumulated and established knowledge which has been systematized and formulated with reference to the discovery of general truths or the operation of general laws." . . . "Especially such knowledge when it relates to the physical world, and its phenomena, the nature, constitution, and forces of matter, the qualities and functions of living tissues, etc."

One writer says: "The distinction between science and art is that science is a body of principles and deductions to explain the nature of some matter. An art is a body of precepts with practical skill for the completion of some work. A science teaches us to know; an art, to do. In art, truth is a means to an end; in science it is the only end. Hence the practical arts are not to be classed among the sciences." Another writer says: "Science and art may be said to be investigations of truth; but one, science, inquires for the sake of knowledge; the other, art, for the sake of production; and hence science is more concerned with the higher truths, art with the lower; and science never is engaged, as art is, in productive application." Science, then, has for its object the accumulation and systematization of knowledge, the discovery of truth.

Second, in what sense is this the age of science? In the first place, it is not true that science is something of recent birth. Scientific work of one kind and another has been in progress for ages—not in all branches to be sure—but nature has always engaged the attention of man, and we may be sure that he has always been trying to learn more about it. The science of astronomy was the first to be developed. Astrology was its forerunner. Then came chemistry in the guise of alchemy.

To make clear the nature of this obstacle, it will be best to make a comparison. A child learns a great deal in regard to his surroundings in his earliest years before he goes to school, and without the aid of his parents. He is constantly engaged in making observations and drawing conclusions, and his actions are largely guided by the knowledge thus gained. After a time school life begins, and the child then begins to study books and to acquire knowledge at second-hand. This is an entirely different process from that by which he gained his first knowledge. The latter is natural, the former artificial. Then, too, he soon discovers that many things he sees call for explanation, and he is led to wonder what the explanation is. If he has a strong imagination, as most children have, he will probably think out some explanation. He finds that he can use his mind, and that this helps him in dealing with the facts in nature. Now comes the danger. It being much easier to think than to work, the chances are that in trying to find the explanation of things, he will give up the natural method and be satisfied with the products of his imagination. He will gradually give up dealing directly with things, and take to thinking alone. When this stage is reached his knowledge will increase very slowly, if at all.

Whether this picture of the development of a child is in accordance with the facts of life or not, it gives an idea of the mental development of mankind. First came the period of infancy, during which observations were made and much learned. Efforts were early made to explain the facts of nature. We have remnants of these explanations in old theories that have long ceased to be useful. They no doubt served a useful purpose in their day, but gradually one of the most pernicious ideas ever held by man took shape, and I am willing to characterize it as one of the most serious obstacles to the advance of knowledge. I refer to the idea that it is a sign of inferiority to work with the hands. This idea came early and stayed late. In fact, there are still on earth a few who hold it. How did this prove an obstacle to the advance of knowledge? By preventing those who were best equipped from advancing knowledge. The learned men of the earth for a long period were thinkers, philosophers. They were not workers in Nature's workshop. They tried to solve the great problems of nature by thinking about them. They did not experiment. That is to say, they did not go directly to Nature and put questions to her. They speculated. They elaborated theories. During this period knowledge was not advancing rapidly. It could not be. For the only way along which advances could be made was closed.

Slowly the lesson was learned that the only way by which we can gain knowledge of Nature's secrets is by taking her into our confidence, as it were. Instead of contemplation in a study, we must have contact with the things of nature either out of doors or in the laboratory. Manual labor is necessary. Without it we may as well give up hope of acquiring knowledge of the truth. When this important fact was forced upon the attention of men, scientific progress began and continued with increasing rapidity. At present the old, pernicious idea that a man who does any kind of work with his hands is by virtue of that fact an inferior being—that idea is no longer generally held. It has been disappearing rapidly for some years past, and with its disappearance the development of science has kept pace. Which is the cause and which the effect it would perhaps be hard to say. At all events the growth of every department of science has been more rapid within the last fifty years than during the preceding fifty years, though we should be doing gross injustice to our predecessors were we to belittle their work. Many and many a great discovery in science preceded the present age, but from what I have already said, you will see that the reason for calling this age in which we live the scientific age is found in the fact that scientific work is much more extensively carried on at present than at any time in the past; and, further, the world is beginning to reap the rewards of this work. So striking are some of these rewards that they appeal to all. The world is dazzled by them, and is to a large extent unable to distinguish between the scientific work which has made these rewards possible and the rewards themselves. The idea is prevalent that scientific work is carried on in order that rewards in the shape of practical results may be reached. I have no desire to bring my fellow workers in science into disrepute, but I will try to make it clear to you that one may be engaged in scientific work all his life, never thinking of what the world calls practical results, that he may in fact not achieve a single result that can be called practical, and yet not waste his time; and that one may hold such a worker up to admiration without running much risk of being taken for a fool.

During the latter half of the last century there lived in Sweden a poor apothecary who, in his short life, probably did more to enlarge our knowledge of chemistry than any other man. Throughout his life he had to contend with sickness and poverty. He was obliged to carry on the business of an apothecary in order to keep the wolf from entering his house—he never succeeded in keeping it from the door. His great delight was to investigate things chemically, and to find out all about them. It is simply astounding to the chemist to find how many discoveries of the highest importance he made. But I have not mentioned his name. I refer to the immortal Scheele. He died in the year 1786 at the age of forty-three, yet he will always be remembered, and those who know most of the work he did will respect him most.

Though Scheele was an apothecary, his chemical work was not practical in the ordinary sense, and it was no doubt often difficult for him to explain what he was doing. His most important discovery was that of oxygen—a discovery that was made at the same time (1774) by the English clergyman, Priestley. Chemists know that this is one of the most important discoveries ever made in the field of chemistry, and, filled with this conviction, in 1874, one hundred years after the discovery was made, the chemists of the United States made a pilgrimage to Northumberland on the Susquehanna to do honor to the memory of Priestley, who there spent the last years of his life.

But why was this discovery so important? Oxygen, to be sure, is the most widely distributed and the most abundant substance in and on the earth; it plays a controlling part in the breathing of animals, and in most of the changes that are taking place upon the earth; a knowledge of it and of the ways in which it acts has done more than anything else to give chemists an insight into chemical action in general; and therefore has contributed more than anything else to the development of chemistry. All this is no doubt true, but are these results practical? Could we go out into the world and form a company and sell stock on the basis of such a discovery? Or could the discoverer in any way realize in cash? The average man of the world would say, "No! there is nothing in it. It may be well for a few men who have not the power to compete with their fellow men in the busy marts to devote themselves to such useless pursuits. Possibly something may come of it in time, but better something practical, something that can be converted into hard cash. That is the best, and the only fair test by which we can judge whether any particular piece of scientific work is or is not of value."

But I have already said that the discovery of oxygen was the most important discovery ever made in chemistry, and I might have added, the most valuable. In what then did its value consist? In the fact that it led to a more intelligent working with all things chemical. Operations that had before this discovery appeared mysterious suddenly became clear, and every one engaged in chemical work was helped in many ways. If it is not enough for us simply to gain a clearer insight into the processes around us, if we must insist upon more tangible reward, no doubt it could be shown that the discovery of oxygen has contributed largely to the material welfare of mankind—not directly perhaps, but by enlarging our knowledge of chemistry, so that it may be said that most discoveries made since 1774 have been in a way consequences of the discovery of oxygen. Indirect results are often of more value than direct ones.

This is the lesson that we learn over and over again as we study the great industries. Rarely have they been the results of work undertaken with the object of attaining the practical. Look at the beginnings of electricity. A piece of amber when rubbed attracts bits of pitch. A frog's leg twitches after death when touched in certain ways with metals. That was all. Are such things worth investigating? No doubt the practical man said: "No; stop trifling: do something worth doing." And if he had been permitted to have his way, all the wonderful results that depend upon the applications of electricity would have been impossible. In every line, much study, much work, and much investigation are absolutely necessary before enough knowledge can be got together to make profitable, practical applications possible. During this early preparatory stage the work is of no direct interest to the purely practical man; and yet without this work the applications which he values would be impossible. Scientific work in its highest form does not pay directly. Those who devote themselves to the pursuits of pure science do not, as a rule, reap pecuniary reward. They probably enjoy their lives as much as if they did, though it is often difficult to make them believe this. But because it does not yield immediate reward to the worker, should the work stop? Surely not. Our only hope of progress in intellectual as well as practical matters lies in a continuation of this work. And even though not a single tangible, practical result should be reached, the work would be valuable. Why? Because we are all helped by knowledge. The more we know of the universe the better fitted we are to fill our places in the world. All will concede that proposition. But if that is true we have the strongest argument for scientific work, for it is only through such work that we are enlarging our knowledge. There is no other way of learning. Somebody must be adding to our stock of knowledge, or what we call progress in intellectual and material things would stop. It also seems probable that moral progress is aided by intellectual progress, though it might be difficult to make this perfectly clear. I believe it is so; though of course it does not follow that every individual furnishes evidence of the relation between intellectual and moral progress.—Electrical Review, July 23, 1904.

THE EDUCATIONAL VALUE OF WORK.

Doubtless the majority of civilized people hold in their thoughts the idea that work is a drawback to human happiness, a primal curse upon the human race. In reading the biblical accounts of the expulsion of Adam from the garden of Eden, I am struck by the wording of what is usually denominated the curse, which reads, "Cursed is the ground for your sake." I wonder if that does not mean that the ground is doomed to be torn and harrowed by the hand of man in order that man should grow and unfold into a higher life than he possibly could were the earth to bestow on him all of her gifts without toil. Experience seems to demonstrate that this is the case. It is the necessity of the struggle for life that develops man. The races that have risen the fastest in the scale of development have not been those of the lands where life can be maintained without toil, but those who have been driven by direct need to constant effort to secure the necessities of life.

If we can learn anything from God's dealing with his human children we must certainly learn this lesson: that work is one of the greatest blessings, and to deprive any human being of an opportunity to work is to do him an injustice.

By work I do not mean the never-ceasing drudgery which the demands of a complicated civilization have brought upon us; but the work that furnishes occupation for hands which might otherwise be idle, and a stimulus for brains that otherwise might be concocting mischief. When the millennium comes, I imagine we shall be liberated from the slavery of toil, and blessed with the freedom of congenial work.

One mistake of parents is in not seeing the benefits of work for children; work suited to their years and strength, and which shall teach them self-reliance, develop skill, give them a sense of their own value, and an idea of the dignity of labor.

One of the first impulses of the child is to do something. When he is taking his toys to pieces, we call him destructive. It may be possibly the constructive impulse that is moving him. We have given him everything in so complete a form that he has no outlet for his own constructive energies, except in destroying the perfect object and remodeling it after his own designs. We should be much wiser to give him constructive material, and allow him to give expression to himself in the use of his material. Thus we should give him work to do that would develop his faculties, instead of stultifying them by our mistaken kindness.

What we call the play of the child is, in fact, his occupation, his work. Very early in life he manifests a desire to aid us in our work, and we will be wise to heed this desire and gratify it. Nothing gives the child more real satisfaction than the idea that he is helpful.

What we call his mischief may have had its origin in the sweetest impulse to be of use. I remember reading about a little fellow who undertook to dust a room in mamma's absence, in order to help her. In his unskilled awkwardness, he broke a valuable vase. He was sorry for this, but to his mind it was not as important as the fact that he had worked and helped mamma.

As I recall the incident, the mother was wise enough to see the real motive, and did not blame the child for the accident, and did commend him for his helpful spirit, though I believe she incidentally suggested that it would be better for him to work under his mother's direction than of his own undirected impulse. It would take much true wisdom really to feel and to act as if the spirit of the child were of more real value than the broken vase, which, after all, was but a thing.

Very young children can be made to feel that they are helpful, and with careful teaching soon become so. I can remember when my little boy of three helped me to make the beds, and felt a great sense of importance at being allowed to stand on the farther side and pull the covers straight as I threw them over to him; and he was even more particular than I that every wrinkle should be smoothed out and the quilts tucked in properly. The daily task was to him then a great pleasure; it has since proven a very valuable education.

I can remember, too, how in my own childhood my earnest pleas to be allowed to help were repulsed with the words, "Oh, you are in the way. I could do it a dozen times while I am showing you how." Since then I have heard many mothers say the same thing, and perhaps add the stinging words, "Oh, you are very anxious to help now, but when you are big enough to really be of some assistance, you won't want to help then."

This often has proven a true prophecy, but the child was not to blame. We can hardly expect that he will continue to proffer aid that is always repulsed, or later desire to do things he was not permitted to do in former years. Now that he has grown older he has grown into new interests, his activities have been developed in other directions; no wonder that he does not wish to retrace his steps and begin the things he should have learned years ago.

Many mothers, looking upon work as an unqualified evil, perhaps because of their own overburdened lives, refrain from calling upon their children for assistance, and justify themselves by the apology,—“I want them to have a good time, and they will never be young but once. They will have plenty to do when they grow older.”

This is reasoning from false premises. In the first place, a reasonable amount of suitable work really adds to the pleasure of the child; it is, in reality, play to him, for play is his business. Again, by learning the routine involved in the performance of his work, he is cultivating certain brain cells, and when in maturity this certain task becomes a part of his duty, he performs it with care, if not wholly automatically; so the wear that comes with the acquiring of a new degree of skill in the doing of an unaccustomed work, is avoided, and his maturity rendered at least more comfortable.

The girl who, in childhood, has learned how to perform the daily tasks of the home, finds her introduction into the responsibilities of the housekeeper shorn of many of its terrors.

Manual training in the school is of value in giving dexterity in the use of tools, and so fitting the child to take up any form of labor with ease and pleasure.

“A good time” in the life of the child consists largely in doing. Unguided and undirected, as in his play, this doing is of great educational value; guided and directed, as in some work that is suited to his years and strength, it has a more definite value.

Surely no one will suppose that I am arguing for putting children to the task of routine work, day after day, for the sake of making use of their strength for the benefit of some one else. My aim is to indicate that for their own good, their own development, they should receive such training in work at home as will lead out their own powers of mind and body, and teach them the skill and helpfulness which will be of great value to them in maturity. In teaching children to do certain little home duties, we may be lessening the amount of work done by the mother, but helping mother is not our primary object. It is the child's, not the mother's, interests we are considering. The actual help given to the mother may not be worth considering, but the spirit of helpfulness engendered is of incalculable value, and its value to the mother herself will be more and more patent as the years go on.

The little boy not taught to bring in wood and water for mother in those years when his help is a hindrance, will be apt to sit still in his manhood and see mother or wife perform such tasks without once imagining that he has any responsibility in the matter. The mother who refuses to let her little girl play at scrubbing the floor, because she is "such a nuisance," need not be surprised if her young lady daughter complacently plays the piano in the parlor while mother scrubs and drudges in the kitchen.

G. Stanley Hall says, "No kind or line of culture is complete till it issues in motor habits." This is one great educational value of work, that it does create motor habits, and so renders the labor of maturity less toilsome because of acquired manual skill and trained motor impulses. It trains the body to be the responsive instrument of the mind, for, as Hall again says, "When things are mechanized by right habituation, there is still further gain, for not only is the mind freed, but this stratum of motor association is a plexus that determines character."—Mary Wood-Allen, M. D., in American Motherhood.

Questions on "The Educational Value of Work."

What is the general idea in regard to work? What does experience seem to demonstrate? What is the difference between work and drudgery? What are the benefits of work for children? What is one of the first impulses of the child? What is the effect of giving a child playthings that are absolutely finished? What may be the origin of mischief? What is the effect of refusing the proffered aid of the child? How may the mother, through a mistaken idea of kindness, interfere with the child's development and his enjoyment? What is the value of manual training in school? Of what does a good time in the life of a child largely consist? What should be the purpose of home tasks? Whose interests are we primarily considering, mother's or child's? What effect has work upon the habits of the child and why is this beneficial?—American Motherhood.

Morals and Publicity.

These are the days when the simple, unaffected person who is honestly endeavoring to lead a sober, decent, upright life and who sometimes repines over the lack of worldly reward, needs to be morally encouraged and assured that his is the happy lot.

He is liable to conclude from the current news that he is alone in his devotions at the shrine of virtue and that the majority of his fellows, including even those of renown, are not concerning themselves with moral peccadilloes.

The newspapers indeed are at present rare reading.

Take the Chadwick case, for instance: Here was a woman who, although apparently identical with that person who as Madade Devere was once before in prison, had no difficulty in so working on the greed and the perfidy of men as to live for years in luxury on the fruits of criminal misappropriation of the savings of bank depositors.

Then there comes the story of Nan Patterson. How many of those who have followed the daily accounts of the trial of this young woman have been able to see the real hideousness of the life that she had been leading prior to the killing of Cæsar Young? How many, furthermore, are able to detect the false note in the more or less maudlin sympathy that has been expressed for the woman in many quarters?

When we have finished the story of Nan Patterson, we turn to that page of the paper devoted to the celebrated Bostonian—the fearless tribune of the people, Thomas W. Lawson. Mr. Lawson assures us that nine out of ten of our great men of affairs, the financial potentates of the country, would not know the Ten Commandments if they met them on the street, and that the most distinguished of them all, a man who has for years appeared to the ordinary lowly citizen as a pillar of society and a model of benign piety, is as mild a man as ever scuttled a ship or cut a throat. In the romantic pages of Lawson, legislators are invariably booblers, judges are shockingly human, and great financiers are invariably sharks, or at the very least bo-constrictors. Verily, our confidence in our brother is shaken by the frank state's-evidence testimony of Lawson.

After Lawson, we have the Morse-Dodge scandal, which is momentarily the leading sensation in New York. Here was a pretty, vain woman, whose determination to have luxury at any cost has led to all sorts of complications, legal and social, and whose former husband is said to have confessed to District Attorney Jerome that he had perjured himself in order to enable a rich trust magnate to supply her with what she wants. The woman, the man, and the trust magnate are now all in the toils.

As if this were not enough, along come the Reverend Doctor Irvine and the Very Reverend Bishop Talbot, with criminations and recriminations of such a character that the mystified reader feels like throwing up his hands and asking "What, and who next?"

But let us not become morally panic-stricken. If we stop for a moment to think, it will occur to us all that there are still hundreds, even among our limited personal acquaintance, of whose integrity and fidelity and simple faith in the wholesomeness of moral obligations we can not entertain the slightest doubt.

Most men and women are plain, trusting, amiable, honest, and honorable, doing fairly well their duties toward themselves and their fellows.

Nor is the world getting worse. If we had the space for the argument, we could prove to the most dubious reader that it is getting better.

If it seems at times to be going to the bad, remember that you do not hear of the vast multitude who go along from day to day performing their lowly duty. It is the wrong-doers that we hear about, mainly. Furthermore, it is of ALL the wrong-doers that we hear. Few of them escape the modern lime-light. With the countless multiplication of magazines and newspapers, the slightest misdeed that is at all out of the ordinary becomes the world's common property. Behold how great a scandal one small sin maketh!

It is well to take note of this fact—that all these things we have been discussing are evidence not of decadent morality, but of the tremendous searching power of modern PUBLICITY.—Selected.

Theme: Home Training.

Hymn 260 Saints' Hymnal; prayer; roll-call of members; response, quotation from the book of Doctrine and Covenants containing instruction in regard to work; paper, "Manual training schools and what they are accomplishing," followed by discussion. Reading and discussion of "The educational value of work" from the Home Column; business; hymn 273; dismissal prayer.

As the time approaches for our General Conference we may read with interest of our less favored brethren in the islands of the sea and the toil and sacrifice and discomfort they undergo to attend their conferences. Sr. Burton's story of a "Tuamotus Conference" reaches dramatic pitch in the February Autumn Leaves when she describes how they lost their way on the trackless ocean, owing to the stubbornness of an incompetent native captain.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.
Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

REPORTS continue to come in from districts and schools that have used the convention programs or parents' day programs sent out by the General Sunday-school Association giving very favorable and encouraging reports of their success, some even expecting to repeat the effort. This is very encouraging to us and we hope it will be to others to make the effort to use the programs if they have not done so yet. But we regret to learn that some of the districts have not received the programs sent them. Why this should be we do not know. Possibly you have changed officers and the retiring officer has not forwarded the matter. Or it may be that some officer has mislaid them after receiving them. But whatever may be the cause of not receiving the printed programs, if you do not have them or need more copies than we sent, write us and more copies will be gladly sent you. We are anxious for this work to get into the hands of every district and school. And if you have not received your copies yet, send for them at once. Let us get the work under way before the next General Convention.

IN ORDER to introduce the work referred to in the foregoing paragraph, we will probably have a session at the forthcoming convention or during the General Conference if time can be allowed for it. But we are not prepared to make definite announcements concerning it now. But the more the districts and schools can do in this line previous to the General Convention the better they will appreciate and enjoy the work to be done at that time. And those who have not undertaken it may be interested therein and do the work later.

Look for Object-Lessons.

Not every lesson can be illustrated by objects, but many can, and in these object-teachings there is very great power. An object taken into the class will command the attention of even the most careless scholar. For example, a handkerchief soiled easily, but not so easily cleansed, will set forth the ease with which a soul is marred by sin but with difficulty purified.—A. F. Schaufliker, D. D., New Century Teachers' Monthly.

The Bible and Good Citizenship.

This note, sounded by Doctor I. H. Hughes, in the Awakener, should thoroughly arouse every one who has the spirit of patriotism and the spirit of Christianity within him:

"Five hundred thousand children in the state of New York never go into a Sunday-school, and perhaps the same proportion all over the country. They do not get any knowledge of the Bible; they haven't got it, and we need not expect very great improvement in any direction until the word of God is put in the hearts and consciences of the people. The strange indifference of the people to these alarming conditions is something that is worthy of our thought. Wherever the river flows you can see the mark of it by the green on either bank; and if you will read history you will find that wherever the Bible has been read by the people it left its mark in good citizenship."

Parents' Day at St. Joseph.

[Sr. Phoebe Woodside sends us a report of their parents' day exercises, January 15. We are obliged to slightly condense it but it is full of good news to all. We hope it may stimulate other schools to go and do likewise.—Ed.]

It is with a deep sense of pleasure and devotion that I make a feeble effort to relate the account of our parents' day exercises held at Zion's Hope Sabbath-school, on Sunday morning, January 15. This school has had but four sessions, in the new location, near the former so-called Aspey Mission.

We wish to let the old workers know we are still alive in the work, and feel that we have returned home, after a few months trial in other localities without apparent success.

Through the untiring efforts of Bro. Robert Garlich and a small corps of Sunday-school workers we undertook to make our celebration, on this particular occasion, a success; and we feel that it was in the true sense of the term. Everything moved on without the least hesitation.

There were three papers, carefully composed by three of the sisters interested in the growth and prosperity of the work.

Sr. Gearhart dwelt upon the subject, "Children under home influence." Her discussion was full of love and enthusiasm for the work.

Sr. Vina Mason occupied ten minutes, taking for her theme, "Example the best teacher," which she handled in a very creditable manner, bringing out many commendable points.

Your writer made a feeble effort to bring out the importance of "Truthfulness in little things," with three attributes. One anthem entitled, "Shall we stand at his coming?" was sung, also a duet, by Sr. Mason and the writer, entitled, "Must I go and empty-handed?"

Last but not least, was an impromptu speech by our worthy and esteemed superintendent, Bro. Garlich, on whom a great care and responsibility rests, and who is ever responsive to duty's call. May he ever be instrumental in educating the children of our Sabbath-school.

Our service was closed after singing, "God be with you till we meet again," and all returned to their homes feeling that a very profitable session, as well as a pleasant one, had been enjoyed by all present.

The Sunday-School Lesson for February 12, 1905.

THE CHURCH IN EPHESUS.

Golden Text.—"To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God."—Revelation 2: 7.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE LESSON, FOR SUPERINTENDENTS.

The second primary lesson tells us first of the time when Paul visited Ephesus, the leading city of its time in Asia Minor.

When Paul visited the city first, he found the people worshipping the heathen goddess, Diana, in a fine and costly temple. This temple was a very magnificent one and served not only as a place of worship but also as a treasury for the deposit of a large part of the wealth of Western Asia.

Though the temple was so notable for its richness and grandeur, the image enshrined in it was only a rude wooden one which was believed by its worshipers to have fallen from the sky and was consequently an object of great veneration.

Paul came to Ephesus preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ. He taught that men should worship the living God and that they should not worship idols that are made with men's hands. He formed a branch of the church in that city and made that place his headquarters for three years; though at times there was great opposition to his teaching.

The primary lesson speaks of a letter that Paul wrote once when he was absent from Ephesus, in which he told the saints of that branch that he had heard of the great love they bore one another. He told them of the satisfaction it gave him to hear this report.

Afterwards, when John was on the Isle of Patmos, he received a message for the church in Ephesus. He received it from Jesus. But this message was one of warning to the saints of Ephesus, because they did not love each other as deeply as they should have done. With the years that had passed since Paul wrote his letter in which he rejoiced in the love that was among the saints, there had come a change over that branch, and, while they still were to be commended for many good works, they had need of the warning Jesus sent them in the message of John; they had need to cultivate a deeper love than they had; they had need to return to their first love.

Have we this need also?

The first intermediate lesson covers the ground of the primary, and adds the warning of Jesus that, if the saints did not repent of their error and return to their first love, their candlestick would be removed out of its place, and they would no longer be recognized as his people. And the comment is added that, if we would have the approval of the Lord, we must keep his commandments, the greatest of which is the command to be full of love.

The advanced intermediate work calls attention to the golden text and refers to Revelation 22: 1, 2, 14 to show that those who enter in where the tree of life is to partake of its fruit must have prepared themselves to do so by living in obedience to the law of God, and that the chief command of the law is that we shall manifest love for all people by the good we seek to do them.

The memory verse says that he that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love.

We recall that Jesus taught that some applicants for admission into his kingdom will be denied on the ground that they have never known him. In the light of our memory verse it means those who have not had in their souls the wisdom that enlightens those who have the Spirit of love and truth in their hearts. It means those who have never been born of God.

In addition to what has already been brought out, the senior lesson teaches the following points:

The presence of Christ is with his faithful church. This thought is based on the statement in the first verse of the lesson text, that Christ walks in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks.

The power of Christ upholds his faithful servants. This is based on the statement in verse one that Christ holds the seven stars in his right hand.

He is great who serves his fellow creatures. The president of the branch in Ephesus is called the angel of the church in the King James Version, but in the Inspired Version, he is called the servant of the church. The word angel comes to us from a Greek word that means an agent or messenger. The president over the church of Ephesus was an agent of Christ, a representative of Christ, one set to serve as Christ served his brethren, not one placed with arbitrary authority over the saints to rule them as a person of superiority. How closely humility is associated with love! How essential it is to true greatness? The great must be humble and full of love. If they have not these qualities, they are not great, no matter what position they may occupy. The president of a branch should, indeed, be an angel to the church, a ministering servant of wisdom and love.

Works alone will not save us. The Saints of Ephesus were laboring; they were active; they were holding to the church and bearing many things with patience; and yet they had fallen away from their first love. They seem to have been repeating the error of the Jews, in clinging zealously to the church and doing outward works, while their hearts were not warmed with the Spirit of Christ, that Spirit that fills with love the hearts in which it abides.

This is an error that has been made in all ages of the world; it is an error we may make by thinking that an observance of the outward forms of religious service will commend us to God. But the Lord requires a service deeper than this; he requires the hearts of men; he requires that we shall take upon us his nature, and as we take upon us his nature by doing the things he has taught us, right conditions will obtain among us, and healing, good will, and peace will come to us "as a cherishing fountain."

The temple of Diana at Ephesus was esteemed one of the wonders of the world. It was said that the sun in all its course saw nothing more magnificent. It had one hundred and twenty-seven columns, each the gift of a king, and thirty-six of them were enriched with ornament and color. Its folding doors were of cypress wood; the part which was not open to the sky was roofed over with cedar; and its staircase was formed of the wood of one single vine from the island of Cyprus.

The national devotion to this temple was great. Once when it was burned, the ladies of Ephesus contributed their jewelry to the expense of restoring it.

And yet the image enshrined in it was only a crude wooden object.

So may there be the great outward fabric of a church; so may there be great manifestations of devotion to it and of sacrifices for it; but when one penetrates the outward ceremonies to find what is at the heart, there may be only the substance of an idol enshrined there.

And so with the church of Ephesus there seems to have been the outward structure of a church; there seem to have been devotion to its ceremonies, sacrifices and labors for it, but there seems to have been lacking the spirit of love necessary to give life to all its works and to make acceptable its sacrifices.

"Homer tells us that in the heroic age of Greece there was a champion who was small of stature but full of fight, who had in his little body a great soul."

In the church, be its numbers many or few, there must always be a great soul, there must always be the Spirit of Christ, that presence that gives light, life, and love to its people. We must not be like the glittering temple of Diana, outwardly magnificent but containing in its sacred room only a lifeless image; when one penetrates to the center of our faith, he should find there the living Christ.

WISAWASA, January 16, 1905.

Dear Herald: To-day finds me in the beautiful home of Mr. William Bonsteel, just on the boundary line between Old and New Ontario, on Lake Nipissing. New or Northern Ontario, as it is sometimes called, includes all the territory from the boundary of Quebec on the east to that of Manitoba on the west, and from the Georgian Bay and Lake Superior on the south to James Bay and the Albany River on the north. Within these limits are comprised over a hundred millions of acres, while within Southern or Old Ontario there are not more than twenty-five millions. Wide fields are opening for missionary work in this vast country and between New Ontario and the great Northwest. A great many missionaries will be required in Canada to meet the demands, and no doubt the gospel may spread from those places to every country under the shining blue. This may appear at first sight an extravagant statement, but when the vast area of untilled lands are taken into consideration and the great influx of settlers every year from nearly every country on the globe, it is not only possible, but quite probable that such shall be the case. In this new country greater sacrifices have to be made, as the missionary has to travel a great deal on foot, and the winters are very cold and the snow very deep, which makes it arduous to get around. In New Ontario the people are generally poor but very hospitable, and very generously share with the weary traveler the best they have got. Mr. Bonsteel is one of the early pioneers and knows something about the hardships of the early settler, but now enjoys all the comforts of the well-to-do tiller of the soil. I was surprised on arriving here to find it forty-two below zero. I arrived at Callander, a small town on the Grand Trunk Railway, at nine o'clock in the morning, to learn that Wisawasa was three miles away in the hills on Lake Nipissing. On my way out I met Mr. Bonsteel, but not until I had walked a mile and a half out of my way. He directed me to his home, as he was on his way to town. I was greatly surprised to find that Mrs. Bonsteel was a relative on my father's side.

Our work is going ahead nicely at the Sault and on the Manitoulin, and we look for a great ingathering in those places in the near future.

On the twenty-sixth day of June, 1901, Elder S. W. Tomlinson and the writer arrived at Manitowaning, Manitoulin Island, and preached the first sermon that evening ever preached on the Island by our people. The most cruel and unrelenting opposition was waged against us, but the truth triumphed and about one hundred of the honest in heart have been gathered into the fold; and last summer the writer had the pleasure of assisting in the erection of a nice little church which was not quite completed when I left in September, but has been since finished, Elder Walter Bennett assisting in putting on the finishing touch.

The London District conference is to be held there next June, and we look for a good time, as President R. C. Evans will be present, and as he has not up to the present made a visit to those northern parts. We look for a general revival all along the line; but few of the Saints here ever met him and will no doubt be delighted to hear the silver-tongued orator, Canada's own boy.

G. C. TOMLINSON.

CHICAGO, Illinois, January 24, 1905.

Editors Saints' Herald: The Northeastern Illinois District conference, with the Sunday-school and Zion's Religio-Literary Society conventions, held with the Central Chicago Branch, January 19 to 21, were quite well attended, and the work done was characterized by unity. While discussion was given free scope, the vote was generally quite unanimous. A number of papers were read at these conventions, discussing a number of important subjects, and "the soul of wit"—brevity—was not the least of their commendable features. It is very encouraging to note that we have such a goodly number of young and youthful people engaged so unitedly in these auxiliaries for good in this great later-day work. While their work was executed with dispatch, it was carefully considered.

A nice literary program concluded the Religio session on Friday evening, consisting principally of music and pantomimes.

Some coming ministers here will yet do good work for Zion if the frost does not cause their hands to grasp too rigidly and continuously to the cold iron—"this world." How it paralyzes the hands that seize it now!

A resolution was offered and discussed favoring holding the General Conference of 1906, at Chicago; some vigorous remarks favoring the motion were offered by several of the speakers revealing that sentiment favoring it was quite general. A committee was appointed to look into the probable cost of holding a General Conference in Chicago in the near future. Graceland College,—its condition, the paying off its debt, and the probabilities and possibilities with relation to its future came in for consideration. The matter was investigated in the most pleasant spirit. And some light was elicited for our consideration.

I was denied the privilege of singing, preaching, or participating in conference deliberations, owing to hoarseness, consequent upon a cold caught on the train coming to Chicago. Am not fully over it yet. It is a great denial to me to be unable to sing the beautiful songs of Zion,—as well as to declare the lovely gospel story. The sociability of the Saints at Chicago and in the district toward each other and the visitors is marked and commendable. Hearts that shine out with fervor, warmth, and good will,—true sociability. How graphically it contrasts with the effects of a dark, cloudy, and chilly soul, cold in itself, and cold toward others. How such dispositions hang like chilling shadows on the pathway of life. A full faith in God, Christ, and the gospel, and a willing, cheerful, anxious desire to fulfill our whole duty to God and our fellows, will fill the soul with divine light, which will shine out to all, and banish the chilly shadows, disperse all clouds, and act as an infallible remedy for dark spiritual damps.

Saints, shall we try this remedy? Christ is always light in darkness, is he not? Come out of the shadows into the light and get the energy, life, and warmth of God; and then see how exhilarated you will feel as you go forward singing: "Walking in the light."

My address while in the city will be No. 252 Walnut Street, Chicago, Illinois, care Bro. Richard A. Penney.

Yours hopefully,

C. SCOTT.

Editors Herald: Please give me a little space to express a few thoughts on the subject of "Two by two let them be sent." A great deal has been said of late years, in the papers and otherwise, about sending the elders two by two. One elder appeared in the HERALD as saying it was very necessary for the church to adhere to the pattern in sending out her missionaries—"Two by two let them be sent"—and gives for one of his reasons, that one might watch after the other and keep him straight. In other words he was to watch the other fellow and see that he did not give way to temptation.

I believe it is always safe to be governed by the written word in our work. We are told in the Doctrine and Covenants to observe the pattern already given, "Two by two let them be sent."—Section 115. In this revelation I understand it was intended for the Twelve in going to the different nations to open up the work, and cite as proof section 104, verse 12: "The twelve are . . . to build up the church and regulate all the affairs of the same, in all nations; first unto the Gentiles, and secondly unto the Jews." So I can see the need of the Twelve, in going to the different nations, to go two by two; but I fail to see the need of the elders, traveling as missionaries here in the States, mostly around branches and districts, to travel two by two. Luke tells us the seventy were sent out two by two, but to my mind they are, in the power of their administration, apostles, sent under the direction of the Twelve, in building up the church and regulating all the affairs of the same in all nations. (See section 104, verse 13.) And so I think that when the Seventy are sent by the Twelve to other nations it is proper to send them two by two; but when they are laboring here in the United States, traveling from branch to branch, as a great many are doing, I see no need of them traveling two by two,—nor do they travel that way much. My experience is that not many can, long at a time, on account of jealousy among them.

Adam, according to the Inspired Translation, was sent out as a preacher, and was sent alone, no one along to watch after him. Enoch was a man whom the Lord sent to do a great work, and he did that work as a missionary, and nothing said about his traveling companion, except that the Lord was with him. And let me say right here, He is the one I want to travel with me above all others.

Next notice Moses, when the Lord sent him to Egypt to lead the children of Israel out of bondage. "Well," says one, "you have forgotten that the Lord sent Aaron with Moses." Yes, He sent him, I know. But let us examine the matter a little and see how the Lord came to send Aaron. You must remember that the Lord has suffered some things to be done that were not so from the beginning: The Lord suffered Moses to give the people a writing of divorcement on account of the hardness of their hearts. But from the beginning it was not so. And now, concerning Moses, the Lord commanded him to go down into Egypt and deliver the people,—not a word about sending some one with him. But here comes in the human part of it. Moses objected to the plan of sending one at a time to preach to the people, and began to put in his excuses, and to tell the Lord he was slow of speech, and so on, showing very plainly his lack of faith in God to loose his tongue that he might accomplish the work that God had commanded him to do. Will any one say that Moses could not have accomplished that work if he had had the proper faith? But Moses did not want to go by himself; so the Lord suffered Moses to take Aaron along with him in order to get Moses to go.

The writer I referred to above would have us believe that it was best to send Aaron along with Moses to keep him straight, or to see that Moses did not give way to temptations. To my mind the sending of Aaron with Moses did more harm than good, and I will tell you why. It developed in Moses that principle of contending against God, and wanting his own way about almost everything. You see it cropping out in his smiting the rock, and in throwing down the tables of stone when he found the children of Israel dancing around the golden calf. Another reason why I think Aaron was a drawback, and the sending of him was more productive of evil than good, is in the instance of Aaron making that calf. Do not understand me to say God did not recognize Aaron's work when he was working in harmony with God's will. But the thought is, Aaron caused more trouble to Moses and the children of Israel than would have come to them had Moses gone at the first command of God, without Aaron. Some of us sometimes think we see signs of the golden calf worship yet.

I will mention Noah, a preacher of righteousness. Was the "two by two" pattern observed in the sending of Noah? No. Time would fail me to tell of the many prophets that God has sent to the world, one at a time, not two by two.

John the Baptist was sent from God, and he said one would come after him. This proves that an elder sent of God can labor by himself acceptably. Christ has promised to be with his servants in all the world. The Lord commanded the elders once not to journey in one another's tracks. I am sure I could call to mind where a John traveled some years ago, and since his day fifteen or twenty others came after him. Why do they not observe the pattern already given: Two by two let them be sent; also the pattern not to journey in one another's tracks?

Some of us after we have been sent out by the Twelve have observed a new pattern that does not agree with the written word. We have journeyed in one another's tracks till the trail is well beaten. Let me say, if some of us will just take the pains to lay down our work by the written word we will see that it does not fit the pattern very well.

May the time soon come when the servants of God will see eye to eye, laboring together to assist in the building up of the kingdom of God in the earth.

Your colaborer,
C. L. SNOW.

BOLCKOW, Missouri, January 24, 1905.

Editors Herald: Once more after a long while I beg leave to submit a few lines to your splendid pages from Nodaway. You come laden with good news to me every week as does also the Ensign.

Last Saturday and Sunday our district Sunday-school association met in one of the best conventions we have experienced for some time. There were twenty-five attendants from other parts of the district outside of the Bedison school, where the convention convened. The Bedison school attended en masse, and many of the neighbors and friends. There were three excellent papers read.

Sunday at ten o'clock we had a very spiritual session of Sunday-school. At eleven o'clock Brn. N. C. Eage and W. E. Peak spoke a half hour each. In afternoon we experienced a good prayer- and testimony-meeting.

May God grant unto his children a portion of the Holy Spirit that we may be led in wisdom's ways, that our interest may not slacken for his work but increase day by day, our faith grow stronger, and all of his children be bound together with the cords of love.

To-night Boreas is singing a requiem to the memory of the deceased autumnal zephyrs. He makes one's mortal nature shudder to listen to his tuneful (?) lays.

What are we doing, dear brethren, during the long wintry evenings? Do we idle the time away or are we striving to inform ourselves of the things that are written for our learning?

Yesterday and to-day I have been visiting the Saints at their homes, as priest, in company with Bro. K. C. Kundson, teacher. I rejoice in God and thank him that the Spirit is sent down to accompany us. At one place God acknowledged us as his servants by the spirit of prophecy through a brother, telling us to visit his wayward children, and he would be with us. This encourages me. Let us go on, dear Saints, "in faith go on. Fear not, the cause is good." Let us feel very deeply concerned in the Master's cause, and hold up the gospel banner to all by living a righteous life and labor where duty calls.

Nodaway District has a good many young people, both children and youth, whose intellectual and spiritual welfare I am interested in, as well as that of all Saints. I desire to see them grow up in usefulness, in this grand latter-day work.

As district superintendent of the Sunday-school, I am trying to labor to the good of all, that we may have a stronger organization. May God help us in my prayer.

Your brother in Christ,
W. B. TORRANCE.

Is He Guilty?

In the HERALD for January 25, 1905, pages 92 and 93, is found a letter from Bro. William Lewis of St. Joseph, Missouri. The whole letter is devoted to a criticism of statements made by J. R. Lambert and published in HERALD of December 21.

I thank the brother for quoting the objectionable paragraph correctly (with the exception of a few typographical errors for which I do not hold him responsible), for it will enable the reader to compare my statements, as a whole, with the character of the strictures made thereon.

I wish to say, in the first place, that I have had no quarrel with the missionary, district, or branch authorities of Far West District, nor with any of the members. I have a high regard for the ability and worth of Brn. John Davis, assistant missionary in charge; Temme Hinderks, former district president; I. N. Roberts, his successor, and William Lewis, president of St. Joseph Branch. I frankly concede the importance of the work these men are called to do, and am anxious they should perform it. Will they please let me do mine?

I mention this matter in this way, because of the peculiar statements of the brother's letter, and not because they have, to me, made any objection to my letter.

My statement does not necessarily contain any reflection on mission, district, or branch authorities, and I had no intention, or thought, of reflecting on any of them.

What motive could I have had in writing as I did, other than the best good and most complete salvation within the reach of the Saints? I meant it for good, and only good. Had it been received and considered, by all, in the same spirit of love and good will that prompted its writing, as I am satisfied it was by some, only good and spiritual gain could have resulted therefrom.

But, on the other hand, if the pastors and shepherds of Far West District suffer themselves to be misled, fail to recognize existing conditions, and, unwittingly, help to rock a certain class to sleep in their cradles of carnal security (?) they will, thereby, assist in perpetuating conditions which are as dangerous as they are undesirable. Believing that the brethren who object to my published statements mean well, as I know I do, I pray, earnestly pray, that the purpose of Satan, in this thing, may be overthrown.

There was nothing personal in my statement. I am not aware that I interfered, or "meddled" with branch or district affairs. Does the brother believe that the patriarch, who goes into his field of labor as an evangelical minister, is prohibited from stating, in a kind and proper way, what he believes to be existing spiritual conditions? If so, how can he do his work as a "revivalist" among the Saints, and "a father to the church"? And if not so, why did the brother refer to and quote from section 125, Doctrine and Covenants?

The brother quotes that which has no application to the case in hand, and then asks why I did not report to the branch or district. My answer is, because I had nothing to report. I was not dealing with any trouble in branch or district. No one had presented his troubles or complaints to me, and I was very glad he did not. Does the brother claim the patriarch may not counsel and advise the Saints unless he is, at all times, requested to do so? If he does, then the child can always dictate when and upon what matters he will receive advice, and thus he has more to do with shaping or limiting his development than the father!

Think of a father having no right to counsel and advise with his children, or warn them of danger, unless he is invited to do so!

But let us see where this revelation places the brother who quotes it approvingly. In the very paragraph from which the brother quotes (Doctrine and Covenants 125: 4), we have the following:

"When traveling and preaching, holding revival meetings, he is to labor in connection with the branch and district officers, not subject to the ministerial control of the missionary in charge, except he should transcend his bounds and teach false doctrine or be found in transgression."

To whom, then, is he accountable in case "he should transcend his bounds and teach false doctrine or be found in transgression"? To the missionary in charge, of course. Why, then, did not Bro. Lewis, or any other district or branch authority who thought the patriarch had transcended his bounds, or taught false doctrine, or transgressed, report him to the missionary in charge? This is the legal way—hence the way of light—and the way to find out whether the patriarch owes an apology to the Saints of the Far West District. If he does, the apology will be forthcoming at once.

Did I not give due credit to those who fed and lodged me? Yes, in the same letter. Did I say that any of the Saints who fed and lodged me, were among the number who are too carnal, selfish, and blind? No, never hinted such a thing. If the Saints will please bear in mind that my statements have no application to those who know themselves to be innocent, they may save themselves some unnecessary worry. I am sorry the brother mentioned this, for it implies, if it means anything, that the Saints who extended to me their hospitality, are on a much lower plane than I believe them to be, or that his statements do not correctly represent them.

I feel sure that none of the Saints with whom I associated attempted to bribe the patriarch, in any sense; but if they did, they missed their man.

The brother says I have drawn a dark picture. Possibly I have, but is it any darker than the one he draws of the conduct of the patriarch? The material and vital question in both cases is, is it true? My picture would not seem so dark if the brother would consider both sides of it, but this he does not do. Only one side, and the dark side at that! He says he does not agree with me in the thought that both sides should be presented (for which I am sorry), but he does believe, as I understand him, that the light side should always be presented when the picture is described. And yet, in this case, he leaves out the light side and presents the dark! Surely, this is a case where theory and practice diverge.

In that dark picture for which the brother thinks I ought to apologize, are found the following words, which he has entirely ignored in his comments: "Nevertheless, there are noble, intelligent, unselfish Saints to be found in all the branches."

It was the privilege of the Saints, after reading my statement, to locate themselves in one of these two classes—the one to which they properly belonged. My statement does not attempt to deal with the comparative numerical strength of these two classes. Why does the good brother deal this way with my statement, and at the same time accuse me of being "hasty and unwise"?

There is nothing in my statement than can possibly harm the Saints, but it might accomplish much good, if it be true. Besides, is it not unfair that for a decent and kind expression of fact, as I saw it, and a little advice based therein, which the brother will hardly claim to be unwholesome, that I should be virtually called upon to prove just how bad the Saints of Far West are?

I am quite willing to admit that I may have lacked wisdom in failing to state that in my judgment Far West is no exception to many other districts, and probably not so bad as some. I believe the conditions mentioned by me are more or less true of nearly all the branches in the church.

Were the statements made by me false? If so, there is no good reason why anybody should flutter, but me, and I can assure the brother, and all concerned, that when this is established, I will gladly hasten to make due apology for my mistake.

But how, or from whom, did the brother learn that my statement does injustice to the branches? He says: "I have taken pains to learn the condition of the branches by inquiry of our late district president, T. T. Hinderks, and of Bro. I. N. Roberts, the present district president. Bro. Roberts informs me that he has in the last six months visited all branches in the Far West district, twelve in number, and has held several meetings in each branch, and that he considers that the above does injustice to the branches. Bro. Hinderks makes the same statement."

In the first place, it is a little strange that the brother should get most of his information from others, without having visited the branches himself, and yet I know nothing about eight of these branches, and am "virtually judging a matter before hearing it," because I have not visited them!

What are the facts in the case? I have visited the Stewartsville Branch three times, St. Joseph twice. These are two of the principal branches in the district, and I believe their numerical strength exceeds the total of all others. There are three other branches located within a few miles of Stewartsville. Could I not learn something about them while there? I have attended two of their district conferences, one in June and one in October. Have attended three successive reunions, at Stewartsville, where the Saints assemble from all parts of the district. The brother acknowledges that I had visited four branches, including, as I suppose, Cameron and Pleasant Grove.

But this is not all. At the June conference, Bro. Hinderks told the Saints that he thought some other one should be chosen to preside who could give more time to labor in the district, which, he said, was needed. He renewed this request at the October conference, and Bro. I. N. Roberts was chosen to succeed him. The statement made by Bro. Lewis, that "Bro. Hinderks makes the same statement," is misleading, I think, for he has certainly not visited the twelve branches of the district, and "held several meetings in each branch," within six months. I doubt whether he has visited the twelve branches within the last year, possibly not within two years; and if not, then he is, to an extent, according to the brother, in the same deplorable condition as the patriarch, that is, "virtually judging a matter before hearing it."

More than one half of the six months in which Bro. Roberts visited and preached in the twelve branches, was prior to his election as district president. In October, and before his election, he told me that the district was in a bad condition, and when I spoke of some conditions I had noticed in the branches visited, and that I had not visited the other branches, he assured me by saying that they were in no better condition. After his election, he said he dreaded his work, because of the bad condition of the branches. I learn by letter from a member of the Stewartsville Branch, whose veracity will not be questioned, that on New Year's night, at Stewartsville, this witness being present, Bro. Roberts preached "a good discourse" in which he referred to a discourse of his delivered one week earlier, in which, it appears, he had spoken of the bad condition of the district. He defended his position and referred to and quoted from my objectionable statement in support of it. The next morning he called on this witness, and when asked if he did not think I had told the truth (referring to my statement,) he said "Yes."

I now call attention to my statement which seems to be misunderstood, and therefore, misconstrued. "The branches in the Far West District are not in as good condition as they should be, so far as I was able to determine."

This is my leading statement, and the only one that applies to branches, as such. What is there in this statement that is objectionable or untrue? Who will say that his branch is in as good condition as it ought to be? And even then, the statement is modified by the clause, "so far as I was able to determine"; a statement to which my critic has never once referred!

The statements which follow this leading one, apply to individuals, as such, living in the different branches. I also say, that this is "a mild statement of fact, as I see it." Am I compelled to see through somebody else's eyes, or keep silent? "There is too much carnality, selfishness, and blindness, to insure success. Too little confidence in the real and true, and too much confidence in appearances. In a word, a great lack of 'faith in God.'"

I mean by these statements, that the "great salvation" can not be secured by those who are thus seriously affected; but do not mean, by any means, that they are wholly carnal, selfish, blind, and unbelieving. Also, that these conditions, existing in the church to the extent that I believe they do, must be removed, or greatly lessened, before Zion can be redeemed.

To call a decent expression of this view meddling with branch affairs, for which apology is asked, is a little peculiar to say the least.

The brother concludes by presenting what he considers proof that there is "not much selfishness nor blindness nor lack of 'faith in God' in St. Joseph nor in my judgment in Far West District."

Of course, he will not contend that this proof applies to any other than the St. Joseph Branch. So far as the other eleven branches are concerned, it is simply and only his opinion. Now I believe that opinion to be an erroneous one, but will not ask the brother to apologize for having expressed it through the HERALD. Why does he want me to apologize for mine?

The evidences adduced are by no means conclusive; and so far as proving, by them, that my statements are false, they are a decided failure. I do not question the good motives and work of the St. Joseph Saints, but the simple facts that there have been accessions by baptism and letter, over two thousand dollars paid in tithes, offerings, oblations, and donations, (by about seven hundred Saints,) are not the kind of evidences, by themselves, that sustain the claim made.

By arrangement with the Bishop (and I think an action of the body), the St. Joseph Saints have been permitted to apply a portion of their tithes and offerings on the indebtedness of their church. Evidently, as in most other cases, the burden has been borne by comparatively few, and even if it were conclusive evidence of the high spiritual standing of those who paid it (which it is not), what about the many who do not bear these burdens? It neither proves them to be good, spiritual Saints, nor does it prove them to be bad. We are compelled to look for other and different evidences. (See Matthew 23: 23.)

I attended a business-meeting at St. Joseph, last October, which, by request of Bro. Lewis, was presided over by Bro. I. N. Roberts. I noticed, in particular, the spirit of the meeting, and the character of some of the things over which there was so much unpleasant contention. The next day, or the second day, I spoke to Bro. Roberts about it, incidentally, and told him I was greatly disappointed in that meeting. He acknowledged the conditions I spoke of and seemed to see the matter just as I did. I also spoke to Bro. Lewis, the president, telling him what I thought, and that it was a surprise to me. He acknowledged the conditions named, saying, "Yes, there is too much of that." Now, this concession of Bro. Lewis, as an answer to what I said to him, is a virtual acknowledgment that the conditions mentioned by me were, at that time, true so far as the St. Joseph Branch is concerned.

In conclusion: We are drawing near the end when Jesus, our blessed Lord shall come in glory to receive his people unto himself. Are we prepared? Are we trying ourselves by the standards of the gospel, collectively and individually, or are we simply using the standards which pass among men? Of that time Jesus says: "Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom. And five of them were wise, and five were foolish."—Matthew 25: 1, 2. (See Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10.) "Nevertheless—when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"—Luke 18: 8.

At the present time, then, which position is the more likely to be true, my brother's, or mine? Which is the safer position?

With the best of feelings towards the Saints of Far West, and all others, I subscribe myself,

Your servant in the Lord,

J. R. LAMBERT.

NEPHI, Utah, January 27, 1905.

Editors Herald: While at Provo last Saturday and Sunday I improved the opportunity to attend the conference of what is called the "Utah Stake of Zion." It was quite largely attended, owing no doubt partly to the investigation that has been going on before the Senatorial committee in Washington as it evidently agitates the minds of the people some, and they perhaps came together to hear what their chief shepherds had to say about the matter. Also, their principal church school, the Brigham Young University, is located there, having according to the report of President Brimhall an attendance of twelve hundred pupils. This host of young people were also quite a factor in augmenting the attendance.

There were present of chief church officers besides stake authorities, including patriarchs and bishops, President Joseph F. Smith, Apostle John Henry Smith, and Presiding Patriarch John Smith. It was evident that nearly all the speakers were imbued with the spirit of fight, saying they were in the conflict for final victory, never intending to surrender. They believed the Devil would continue his opposition as long as the priesthood was upon the earth, and men clothed upon with this authority are found doing their duty.

President David John in his brief opening remarks, referred to their trouble, saying the church had been assailed from without; and nearly all who made a report or a little speech took up the theme and in some way mentioned the work of their enemies. Patriarch O. B. Huntington wanted all to know of his loyalty to the "living oracles," saying: "If my bishop or the president of the stake tell me to do a thing I will strive with all my effort to do it, for it is the same as if the Lord himself had spoken." He suddenly stopped, and then said: "I don't know how this would be taken by the committee in Washington could they hear it; neither do I care." Elder John S. Boyer also urged loyalty to the priesthood. He thought the hand of God was in the investigation, and did not expect that the committee would render a decision to unseat Senator Smoot. After some boasting by an Elder Jones, about their prosperity, their fine homes, and the changes that have been wrought since the first settlement of the country the choir sang: "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning." This seemed to me akin to blasphemy.

John Henry Smith took up the same topic, saying he was glad to hear of the faith of his brethren. He told them to be of good courage, as no weapon formed against them would prosper. He believed in dictation by the servants of God when the same is in harmony with that which is right, which had been the case with the men in authority among the Latter Day Saints. He said: "No one presiding over you has ever counseled you to do wrong. No one has ever counseled you to be a falsifier! No one has counseled you to debauch woman!" He claimed the priesthood was the key of life given of God for the exaltation of his sons and daughters. He thought that Brigham Young was one of the grandest statesmen among the great men of the earth. In the broad sense of statesmanship he had no superior, and no one surpassed him in ability. He eulogized all the eading men among the pioneers in this mountain country, who had taught them lessons in husbandry and all species of industry that would bring unto them from the elements that which is for the blessings of life. He said: "I might continue standing before you singing the praises of these heroes of the mountains. The handwriting on the wall made by the divine One says that they were the choicest of the sons of God. Their names to me are an inspiration in every line of life." He thought the men at the head of church affairs now were as good and worthy as the heroes of the past, being true to God and true to their country.

I attended all the sessions of the conference with the exception of Sunday forenoon when I met with the Saints there in their regular service, and was prevented hearing Patriarch John Smith and President Joseph F. Smith, who were then the principal speakers. But in the meetings I attended I heard but little that could be called gospel, and but little said concerning God and Christ, and I do not remember that the law God has given for the government of his church was mentioned at all. None of the books were opened; the speakers seemingly had no use for them. Their all seemed to be their great men holding priesthood and their loyalty to that priesthood, their marvelous prosperity, and how they have been and still expect to be hated of the world. I would not wish to be understood as though I heard nothing good. I want to do them justice. They did advise the people to be honest, to get out of debt and stay out, to help the poor, to deal justly with one another, and to pay their tithing.

The business of the conference was all disposed of in a few minutes at the beginning of the afternoon meeting on Sunday and merely consisted in sustaining the authorities. It went like clockwork, the secretary reading off the names proposed to be sustained and everybody voting in favor. I have frequently attended their conferences, but I have never seen a dissenting vote on any question. It looks like a farce to me, for if any should vote contrarywise he would evidently be regarded as an apostate or as a crank or demented person.

To me one most amusing feature was when Joseph F. Smith was presented to be sustained as prophet, seer, and revelator in all the world; notwithstanding he testified before the Senate committee that he had received no revelation, yet he promptly voted for himself. President Smith made a few closing remarks before adjournment. He sought to justify his connection with the many large business concerns that he is interested in, saying it was only the enemy that is finding fault, "We must fight on and not recede; let the enemy rage and howl." He could say his prayers just as well now, be just as honest, and tell the truth just as well as before he was so connected.

This may not be of interest to many of the HERALD readers, but I forward it as some of the crumbs picked up at one of the feasts here in "the fat valleys of Ephraim."

I am looking for Bro. John E. Vanderwood to join me shortly, and we anticipate making a tour among the settlements further south. The work is moving only slowly, but we feel confident of final victory for the cause acknowledged and preserved of the Lord.

In gospel bonds,

H. N. HANSEN.

BRANCH REPORTS.

This is to give notice to district presidents and clerks who have failed to send to this office the branch reports that have come into their hands, that we need them. Some of them have been retained a long time. If any here mentioned have been sent in time to reach here before February 3 then they have been lost in transit, for they have not arrived. Where district clerks have kept reports in order to obtain corrections before sending will say not to wait longer than March 1, as we wish to put on record all past changes, both gains and losses, as far as reported.

Those whom it may concern please note the following delinquencies: No reports of the branches in the Spokane District, Washington, have ever come to hand from the date of district organization. The first conference was held a year ago this month and another in June, but not a report has arrived. Therefore we urge that complete copies of the different branches in that district be forwarded immediately so that they may be copied upon the general records in time to include them in the annual report made to the General Conference about March 20, each year.

The October reports of the Massachusetts District have not been received, nor those of the Nadaway District for either May or October. The North Dakota reports from the June conference are not yet in, nor those of Southwestern Oregon for August, Portland District for December, Montana for November, nor the Northern Michigan for October.

Whoever has the aforesaid branch reports in their hands will confer a favor by forwarding as soon as possible, and if help is needed to correct them we will do our part to obtain correct items.

According to notices published in HERALD and Ensign there were four districts that held conferences in January and there were appointed thirty three districts to hold sessions during February, also eight in March, and a few others not yet published dates of. Thus it will be seen that many reports will be due between now and March 20, and if the brethren will forward the branch reports as early as possible it will be a favor to this office.

Where reports need correcting please write to the clerks, but do not return reports to them, for usually there is a long delay and sometimes the reports never come back.

Correction.

In article entitled "Concerning Graceland College. Settling the dust," on page 108, column 1, paragraph 4, in the second sentence, the word not should be inserted after the word could, making the sentence to read: "If it could not do this directly, it could not take advantage and do it indirectly," etc.

Notice of Amendment.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION AND ASSOCIATION OF GRACELAND COLLEGE.

Proposed to amend article one (1) by inserting after the word years and before the word from: "unless otherwise ordered by General Conference." And also by striking out the words, now concluding this article: "the expiration of fifty years," and inserting in lieu thereof:—"such time as the General Conference may decide," so that as amended the article will read:

"Article 1.—The association assumes to itself all the powers and privileges conferred by chapter two (2), title nine (9), Code of Iowa, and such parts of chapter one (1), title nine (9), as are applicable to associations of an academic or collegiate character; and shall exist as provided therein for the period of fifty years, unless otherwise ordered by General Conference, from the date of filing of these articles of association in the office of the recorder of deeds of Decatur County, Iowa; and said corporation may be renewed at such time as the General Conference may decide."

It is also proposed to amend paragraph three, of Article 15, by striking out all between the words Church and It, so that as amended it will read:

"These articles may be amended at any General Conference of said Reorganized Church. It shall be the privilege of the Board of Trustees to make such by-laws from time to time for the carrying on of its work and duties and the facilitating of business as are not inconsistent with these articles."

The above amendments will be moved in open conference on the afternoon of April 10, 1905, or on such subsequent day of the 1905 General Conference as shall be thought best by the mover or to be most consistent with the general interests of the conference or the work connected therewith.

Done this third day of February, 1905.

Died.

STULL.—Sr. Susan Stull passed beyond January 15. She was a Saint when Joseph the Seer was killed at Nauvoo. She and her parents went as far as Page County, Iowa, when the followers of Brigham Young started for Utah. She was rebaptized October 29, 1900, by W. M. Aylor. She always had faith in the latter-day work and was acquainted with Joseph the Seer, and always held him in the highest esteem. Susan Stull was born near Cincinnati, Ohio, November 30, 1828. She was the mother of thirteen children, nine of whom survive her.

HAINES.—Cora Haines, daughter of Bro. Curtis Randel. Cora always lived a faithful life and died firm in the faith, in hope of a glorious resurrection. Elder W. S. Taylor in charge of funeral; sermon by Evan Davis.

BATH.—Ethel, wife of Bro. John Bath, died January 26, aged 24 years and 24 days, she was a good Saint and will be greatly missed by Saints and friends. Funeral in the Saints' church at the Columbus Branch. Bro. Evan Davis preached the sermon; W. S. Taylor in charge.

COOP.—At her home at Decatur City, Iowa, January 24, 1905, after a lingering illness, Sr. Susannah, wife of Bro. Philip N. Coop. She was born in Harrison County, Iowa, September 15, 1871, married to Bro. Coop November 26, 1902, and with her husband was baptized at Lamoni, March 27, 1904, by Elder J. L. Detrick. She leaves a husband, three brothers, and two sisters. Funeral from the Saints' church, Lamoni, January 26, in charge of William France; sermon by President Joseph Smith.

STARKEY.—January 28, 1905, twelve miles from Chico, California, Allen Thomas Starkey, son of Bro. and Sr. A. M. Starkey, aged sixteen years. Death caused by accidental shooting. Funeral-exercises conducted by J. S. Hommes; sermon by J. C. Crabb.

GURWELL.—Sr. Sarah Ellen Gurwell was born at Evansport, Ohio, April 6, 1840, married to William Gurwell, March 4, 1862. To them were born four sons and six daughters; nine of whom survive the deceased. In her early days, she joined the United Brethren Church. August, 1868, was baptized into the Reorganized Church, and lived a faithful life, seemingly never losing an opportunity to do a kind deed. January 7, at about 7.10 the sister left the house to go to the church; but not finding it open, stepped in at Bro. Cornelius', close by, and remained till 7.50, when she started home seemingly in good health. A few moments later Bro. Cornelius heard a faint call from the yard; a quick response to the call, found Sr. Gurwell lying on the ground. She was carried into the house and Bro. F. G. Heitricks and members of her family quickly summoned, but at 8.20 she breathed her last. Heart trouble was the cause. Elder I. N. White was called to officiate at the funeral. Time had to be given for the children to get there; this delayed the funeral till the 11th. Elder Bender and wife did not arrive till the next day, and the remains lay in state at the home till they arrived. Her life was a shining example of the power of the gospel. The Spirit had left its heavenly imprint, and a stranger, to whom it is not given to know the secrets of the Lord, could have recognized the lineaments of one of his children. The church was well filled; and indeed, when her mortality last entered its portals, never were more sincere mourners. Her children are models of gospel training, showing forth that the gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation.

McClures for February.

The February McClure's gets right to the spot—we should say the three spots—on our national character: "Business government," "Violence and lawlessness," "The smothering corporation." Real conditions these, stirring events, that make you think hard, interpreted and analyzed by experts, with practical suggestions of hope.

There is plenty of fiction in the number, both moving and exciting, but the most startling narrative of all is Lincoln Steffens's damning account of Rhode Island politics. How votes, legislation, the honor of the State, are pawned by those who should guard its interests, and how every American is keenly concerned in the story, through the prominence of Senator Aldrich of Rhode Island in national politics, Mr. Steffens tells with astonishing directness:

Another right-arm jolt is that administered to the friends and the institution of "lynching in the North," by Ray Stannard Baker. No more lenient, no less blunt than when he wrote last month of the South, Mr. Baker describes conditions in two "lynching towns" he visited—Springfield, Ohio, where he found disgraceful inefficiency of officers and supineness of citizens; and Danville, Illinois, where he found a hero. In its impartiality and dramatic interest, this is one of Mr. Baker's best articles.

The following letter is typical of the three hundred received by Mr. W. S. Harwood in reply to his inquiries among the leaders of Canadian politics on the question of annexation. It is quoted from his article "Canada's attitude toward us," in the February World's Work:

"Honorable James T. Schell, member of the House of Commons for Glengarry, Alexandria, Ontario:

"Compare Canada to day with the United States in 1820 and everything is in favor of Canada. Compare her to-day on the per centage, or on the per capita basis, or on any other basis except bulk basis, and everything is in favor of Canada.

"We do not want your negro problem, your south of Europe immigration, nor your laws, nor your disregard of law and order, as shown in your South and Southwest. Canada is now growing fast and drawing her immigration from Britain, Sweden, Norway, Finland, Germany, and the United States. Ninety-two per cent of our immigrants are from the north of Europe and the United States. Your immigrants are eighty-four per cent from the Latin races. We have three-fifths of the wheat area of North America; rich in minerals, timber and fisheries; with free lands, free schools, a free people, with the best administered laws in the world. Before 2,000 A. D. the Northern States will seek annexation to Canada. No; leave Canada alone; we are going forward under better conditions as we are."

Advice to Would-be Stenographers.

I called on the principal of a most flourishing business school. I wanted a stenographer for some special work.

"I could not recommend one girl on our list to-day. Not that these girls are incompetent stenographers," he added, hastily "but I know that for general dictation like yours they lack the knowledge of English."

"Then what are they fitted for?"

"On, they take what we call cheap positions, for five or six dollars a week. They learn by experience. At first they are given copying and unimportant dictation. If they are under the right sort of man or woman, some one who is patient, they gradually acquire a knowledge of their own language, or at least as much of it as bears on their employer's business. The great trouble is that girls try to build a knowledge of stenography on wabbling foundations in English. After having wasted their time in the public schools, they expect us to make up all their deficiencies while teaching them stenography. Girls are pushed into business at too early an age. They should have at least one year in the high school before studying stenography."—February Woman's Home Companion.

Every woman who is proud of her home wants to know all that she can about proper and correct methods of furnishing. She will find a most useful article on this score by Esther Singleton on "Furnitures of noted periods" in the Twentieth Century Home. Such subtle distinctions as those between the Louis XVI, Directoire and Empire styles are carefully explained.

The Chicago Daily Review is the only Chicago daily you can get for one dollar a year, 75 cents for six months, fifty cents for three months. All important news, a daily magazine feature complete market reports. Send a dollar to Daily Review, Coca-Cola Building, Chicago, Illinois.

The index to the Electrical Review for 1904, issued with the closing number of the year, occupies eight pages of closely printed matter, and a glance at its contents shows the wide scope of the field covered by that excellent magazine. The magazine seems to grow constantly in interest and value.

The Shakers represent one of the many peculiar religious movements of the world. In material ways, at least, the Saints may learn some lessons from them. A graphic account of their history and customs appears in the February number of Autumn Leaves. It is illustrated with several halftones of members and scenes at "Mount Lebanon."

DOES IT COST YOU—

Time to read through the daily and weekly newspapers, the magazines, and reviews, and the special journals that constantly clamor for attention? Can you find time to read enough of them to keep posted even on the important topics of human interest at home and abroad? Does the time demanded by so many periodicals leave you time enough for books?

Does It Cost You—

Money to buy even a fairly representative list of papers and magazines? Can you afford to subscribe for as many as would be necessary to give you a complete survey of the world's politics, art, religion, industrial affairs, literature, etc.? Even if you had the time to read them, would you be able to buy several thousand periodicals, domestic and foreign?

Does It Cost You—

Worry to sift out the conflicting rumors concerning the Japan-Russia war, and to try to follow its progress? Or to get at the true state of the Presidential campaign, the chances of the several candidates, the tendencies in the various states, and the probabilities as to the platform? Does it worry or weary you to "keep posted" in this busy, hustling age when there are so few moments for quiet reading and so many demands for your money?

Why Not Take This Tip—

"The Literary Digest is a time-saver, a money-saver, and a worry-saver," says Edwin Markham, author of "The Man with the Hoe." It gives you in an hour or two, for only ten cents a week, a complete survey of the world. All the leading dailies, weeklies, monthlies, and quarterlies of America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Australia contribute their best to its pages. It gives all sides of all questions, and organized information on all topics. At all newstands, every week, illustrated, 10 cents.

I Know Quit-to-Bac Will Cure. It is a God-Given Remedy
Bro. J. M. Dungan of Woodbine, Iowa. Writing July 3, 1904, says: "After having used tobacco for 30 years I feel that I am thoroughly cured of the habit by the use of your 'Quit-to-bac.' I commenced using 'Quit-to-bac' March 8, 1901, and used two and one half boxes, and have had no desire for the past two months, my health is better every way and I feel like a new man. I feel that I can not speak too highly of the merits of 'Quit-to-bac,' for I believe 'Quit-to-bac' to be a God-given remedy, that it will cure one of the most filthy and useless habits Satan ever invented; therefore I unqualifiedly recommend it to all addicted to the use of tobacco in any form, and will cheerfully answer inquiries from any one as to my case—how I treated myself, etc., if a stamp is inclosed. FALSEHOODS AND MISREPRESENTATIONS BY "THE GOSPEL MESSENGER."—No. 4.

And even things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped? For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?—1 Corinthians 14: 7, 8.

It is fair to presume that those who are publishing the Gospel Messenger assume to correct the errors of those from whom they may differ in this religious controversy. The title itself is suggestive, and would carry the inference that it is not intended that anything false or erroneous shall be found in its pages. If the contrary should be made to appear it will put this doughty champion of sectarianism in the attitude of a pipe or a harp that gives no distinction of sound, or one who blowing the trumpet gives an uncertain sound, thereby confusing the people.

Mr. Yearout's fourth article opens with the following statement:

As I view it, a darker blot never stained the pages of American history under the guise of a new-found religion, nor a poison more deadly to virtue and good government than the fangs of Mormonism, as fastened into the religious body. It was a festering sore that bred theft, murder, and many other evils.

If the reverend gentleman had stopped his criticism by making it to apply to those things of later development in what he calls Mormonism, we should pay but little attention to it; but when he proposes that the new-found religion with which the history of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints began, bred theft, murder, and other evils, we necessarily join issue with him, because we know better. In order to make this appear to his readers he cites the action of the United States Government against the evils of polygamy, "as fostered and practiced by Mormons under the guise of a religious belief; claiming they were conscientious in so doing." We referred in our last article to this matter of plural marriage and disclaimed the necessity for a defense of the matter from us, because we were in no way responsible for it. That we are not alone in the belief that polygamy did not grow out of the original faith as proclaimed by Joseph Smith as a legitimate result, we give the following from a late writer in the Pennsylvania Grit, of January 8, 1905, Mr. Arnold C. Grosvenor:

Smith did not "discover" that it was necessary for the communicants of the new religion to practice polygamy. It remained

"IT MAY be proved with much certainty that God intends no man to live in this world without working; but it seems to me no less evident that he intends every man to be happy in his work. It is written, 'In the sweat of thy brow,' but it was never written—in the breaking of thine heart'—'thou shalt eat bread.' I find that no small misery is caused by overworked and unhappy people, in the dark views which they necessarily take up themselves and force upon others of work itself. I believe the fact of their being unhappy is in itself a violation of divine law and a sign of some kind of folly or sin in their way of life. Now, in order that people may be happy in their work, these three things are needed: They must be fit for it; they must not do too much of it; and they must have a sense of success in it."
 —Ruskin.

O'Haver 1-505

for Brigham Young to add this feature and that of blood atonement, for which the nation owed him a debt which should have been paid before he died. . . .

Upon Brigham Young rests the responsibility for polygamy and blood atonement in the Mormon religion, neither of which was in the original creed. He introduced them about 1850. [1852.]

Also the following from the Saturday Evening Post, of Philadelphia, for February 4, 1905, by H. C. Williams, under the caption of "The Mormon system":

But an empire demanded a population, and the adoption of a polygamous code would supply this ad libitum. It was supplied by Brigham Young and his lieutenants with an ingenuity that included every subjective emotion of the human mind, and nowhere, save perhaps by the Egyptian priesthood, has more effect been applied in systematizing superstition than is displayed in the details of the Mormon creed. . . .

Generally speaking, only the pioneers who came to Utah between 1848 and 1852 were Americans. The implanting of polygamy, which was foreign to the religion of the first prophet, Joseph Smith, and which was a political afterthought, turned American blood away from the institution, and the bulk of the population has since mainly been drawn from the artisan and peasant classes of England, Wales, Scotland, and the Scandinavian countries.

Mr. Yearout, pursuing this thought that Mormonism proper is such a pestiferous seed and productive of so much wrong, writes as follows in the second paragraph of his article:

If it be right to obey conscience in all things, as many claim it is, then Mormons were right in obeying their conscience. The Mormon prophet received the polygamous law from God and enjoined it upon the Saints. And it was declared by revelation that "Joseph Smith was with the Father in the beginning," and that in him should all the kindreds of the earth be blessed. (Doctrine and Covenants 93: 23; 124: 58.) Thus it will be seen that Joseph Smith, the Mormon lawgiver and prophet, is placed on an equality with the blessed Son of God. "Joseph Smith, the prophet and son of the Lord, has done more (save Jesus only) for the salvation of men in the world than any other man that ever lived in it."—Ibid., 135: 3.

As before, in his articles, Mr. Yearout has in this used the Utah edition of the book of Doctrine and Covenants in its division into paragraphs, and has grossly misquoted from it, in order to make his argument appear plausible. He has quoted from section 93, paragraph 23, "Joseph Smith was with the Father in the beginning." There is no such quotation or statement in the book. To show how grossly he has misconstrued what he calls Mormonism, we give the opening statements of the revelation, section 93, as follows:

Verily, thus saith the Lord; it shall come to pass that every soul who forsaketh their sins and cometh unto me, and calleth on my name, and obeyeth my voice, and keepeth my commandments, shall see my face and know that I am. And that I am the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world; and that I am in the Father, and the Father in me, and the Father and I are one: the father because he gave me of his fullness, and the Son because I was in the world and made flesh my tabernacle, and dwelt among the sons of men.

The only possible warrant that this Reverend Yearout could have had for the statement which he has made as a quotation is found in the twenty-second and twenty-third paragraphs of the revelation, section 93, which reads thus:

And now verily I say unto you, I was in the beginning with the Father, and am the first-born; and all those who are begotten through me are partakers of the glory of the same, and are the church of the first-born. Ye were also in the beginning with the Father; that which is spirit, even the Spirit of truth. And truth is the knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come; . . .

Man was also in the beginning with God. Intelligence, or the light of truth, was not created or made, neither indeed can be.—Ibid., paragraph 29.

From this it may easily be seen that Joseph Smith neither did say of himself, nor was it said for him, that he was with the Father in the beginning, any more than he taught that Charles M. Yearout was with the Father in the beginning; for the expression, "man was also in the beginning with God," covers the race; and the only special individual mentioned in the revelation is Jesus the Christ. And the testimony of the revelation is substantially that which was borne by the apostle John, and is in this language:

And he bore record, saying, I saw his glory that he was in the beginning before the world was; therefore in the beginning the Word was, for he was the Word, even the messenger of salvation, the light and the Redeemer of the world; the Spirit of truth, who came into the world because the world was made by him, and in him was the life of men and the light of men.—Ibid., paragraphs 7-9.

John's testimony is this:

In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. . . . In him was life; and the life was the light of men.—John 1: 1, 2, 4.

One thing is certain, that Reverend Yearout has forsaken the spirit of the text, both in John's gospel and in this revelation which he misquotes, and that is the Spirit of truth; for nowhere in the revelation appears the language he attributes to him. He further distorts the language by claiming that it makes Joseph Smith to be on equality with the blessed Son of God, for the reason that it was Abraham to whom the declaration was made that in him should all the nations of the earth be blessed, and as it was said unto Abraham, so it should be said of Joseph Smith. It is quite too early in the history of these latter days for Reverend Yearout or any other would-be critic of him and his work to determine what may be the final result of a message which was given to Joseph Smith and by him to the world. There has never been an effort made by Joseph Smith or any of his followers to make him the equal of the Son of God.

Mr. Yearout again distorts the record by making it appear that the statement that Joseph Smith had done more than any other man for the salvation of men, by misquoting a statement made by Willard Richards, who was with the Prophet in the jail when he was murdered, and who wrote the eulogistic account of it after the Prophet's death, and which was published in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants under the title of "Martyrdom of Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum." There is no claim made that this was a revelation from God, but it was simply a statement made by a man who was with him at the time of the assassination, was a member of the church, and the only one of four who were present on that occasion who was not hurt, each of the other three having received four bullets each, and two of whom, Joseph and Hyrum, were killed. He misquotes the statement, thus: "Joseph Smith, the prophet and son of the Lord;" whereas the paragraph referred to reads thus: "Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer of the Lord." Why this reverend gentleman should resort to such misquotations as that for the purpose of destroying the character of the revelations as containing no truth, is a mystery to those who believe in fair dealing.

Mr. Yearout refers to the claims made by many that it is right to obey conscience in all things. He knows well that such claim has been made and is even now made; and he may be following his conscience in thus distorting and misquoting; but if that be so, it is evidence that his conscience has not been brought under the divine influence of that which teaches men to speak the truth of each other. Joseph Smith did not receive the polygamous law from God, as he states; neither did he enjoin it upon the Saints.

In the presentation of the Smoot contest in the senatorial committee there is a petition to the President of the United States for amnesty, and the third paragraph of that petition, referring to the doctrine of polygamy, recites this:

That doctrine was publicly promulgated by our President, the late Brigham Young, forty years ago, and was steadily taught and impressed upon the Latter Day Saints up to September, 1890. Our people are devout and sincere, and they accepted the doctrine, and many personally embraced and practiced polygamy.—Proceedings, Smoot Case, page 18.

This bears date Salt Lake City, December, 1891. Forty years back would bring it to about 1851. In fact, it was August 29, 1852; so that the contention of Messrs. Grosvenor and Williams, which appears heretofore in this article, is correct, and the statement made by Mr. Yearout to which we have referred, implicating Joseph Smith as the one who enjoined this upon the Latter Day Saints, is a gross mistake.

Mr. Yearout states that Joseph Smith taught that the Bible was an imperfect book and that all Christian churches were wrong: Will the reverend gentleman please reconcile the contentions among the different churches, including his own, as to which is preëminently the church of Christ? By his contention as a follower of those who publish the Gospel

Messenger he tacitly and practically contends that all others are wrong. If any one of them was right why does not the reverend gentleman belong to that one? Is he not aware that wiser men than himself, more noted in the religious conflict of the age, have publicly declared by resolution that the creeds are abomination before God? What more than this could Joseph Smith have said? And he said that only because he was told it by revelation; and the force of it was verified upon him in the statement that his name should be had for good and evil among all nations, that by the righteous it should be had in honor, and by the wicked in reproach. Mr. Yearout is a striking evidence of the truth of this prophetic statement.

Mr. Yearout is wrong again when he undertakes to state that Joseph Smith taught that the church of Christ had been swallowed up in worldlyism and that the gates of hell had prevailed against it. Joseph Smith taught in this regard only what is said in the Scriptures, and the statement of the Savior made in Matthew 16: 18, "And the gates of hell shall not prevail against it," has not yet had its final completion. The conflict is still going on, and will continue in all probability until he comes whose right it is to reign and puts all adverse authorities under his feet. Neither is it true that the teaching of the prophet had or has a tendency to embitter the people against Christianity. The effort was and has been to teach Christianity as Christ himself taught it, and for this reason Joseph Smith and the church with him were commanded to teach the principles of the gospel as they were found in the New Testament Scriptures as they were taught by the Holy Spirit. So far as the Bible being an imperfect book, he is a venturesome man who now asserts and attempts to stand by the assertion that it is a perfect book. Witness the efforts at revision, the higher criticism, and the attempts by many learned men to relegate the whole Bible to the workers of fiction. When Mr. Yearout and his companions of the different churches shall agree upon the statements of the Bible and reach a conclusion among themselves as to what is and is not taught in the Bible, it will be time for him to berate Joseph Smith for assuming the attitude he did.

Mr. Yearout states further that the Book of Mormon flatly contradicts the teachings of the New Testament, as he has attempted to show in his third article. He failed signally to do this in his third article; nor can he show a single instance in which the doctrine and teaching of the New Testament Scriptures is vitiated, broken, or denied by the teaching of the Book of Mormon. He further states that Mormons teach that no man has a right to preach the gospel nor officiate in its ordinances unless he has been commissioned to do so by some high official in the Mormon church. The teaching in this respect is practically this: That men who are authorized to preach the gospel of the Son of God are those who are called by the Master himself; that this call shall be recognized by the church, and that the person so called shall be ordained by some one in authority; and that the fact of this person having authority shall be known to the church, and that he has been regularly ordained by the heads of the church. It is first paramount in importance that the individual shall be called of Christ, and that before the church can be compromised by the teaching of any man, his call must be first indorsed and recognized by the church by ordination. We presume to say that this is practically the teaching of the church to which Mr. Yearout belongs and of which he is a representative. If it is not, pray by what authority is he officiating?

Mr. Yearout deals extensively in assertions respecting the Saints having been guilty of theft and the shedding of human blood in Missouri and Illinois. He states that they were driven out of these States because of their murdering and stealing. This is not true; there was no shedding of blood in Missouri on the part of the Saints except that which was done openly in the sort of guerrilla warfare which prevailed at the time and in self-defense. It is a pitiful confession of the weakness of the State organization for the execution of its laws when men like Mr. Yearout make such statements as the foregoing. If theft and murder were committed by individuals, the Saints were not so numerous nor so powerful that they might not have been reached by law; and General A. W. Doniphan, who was an attorney at law in Daviess and Jackson Counties, Missouri, where the Latter Day Saints attempted to settle, stated distinctly that not a single individual of the Mormon church was prosecuted for crime to his knowledge while he was a resident in those counties and practiced law therein.

Of the Mountain Meadow Massacre we have nothing to say further than this: It was a grievous outrage, and it is a pity that only one of the conspirators and guilt-laden perpetrators of it, and he not the most guilty, should have been punished for it. No person can defend that butchery. It deserves all the hard names that the Reverend Yearout or anybody else can say of it. The Reorganized Church, which is teaching the faith as it was held by the church from 1830 to 1844, is not responsible in any sense for any shedding of blood that may have occurred after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith after the hegira west had taken place. We make no apology for them who committed those crimes, but have ever denounced unlawful violence and disregard for the laws of the land, no matter by whom these were done.

Mr. Yearout says that in 1831 Joseph Smith used the following words, in getting possession of the land of Zion in Missouri: "Wherefore the land of Zion shall not be obtained but by purchase or by blood, otherwise there is no inheritance for you."

To this he adds, "If you can not buy it, kill the people and take it; but the Missourians had some knowledge of the use of firearms too, and they put the Saints to flight that were not killed." Why could not this reverend gentleman have given the whole statement instead of giving it fragmentarily, as he has done? Had he done this it would have shown at a glance that it was a revelation to the church and that there was no bloodthirstiness in it; for it immediately declares, after what he has quoted:

And if by purchase, behold, you are blessed; and if by blood, as you are forbidden to shed blood, lo, your enemies are upon you, and ye shall be scourged from city to city, and from synagogue to synagogue, and but few shall stand to receive an inheritance.—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 30, 31.

Is any one foolish enough to believe that language having the force of a revelation from God as this had to the people to whom it came, would have been so utterly disregarded of the commandment as to have undertaken to dispossess anybody by force of arms from their lands? No such attempt was ever made, not a resident of the State was ever driven from his home and his lands taken from him by any single member of the church or any body of them. On the contrary, the Saints were driven en masse from the State by force of arms in the midst of winter, dispossessed of their lands and plundered of their personal property, their leaders imprisoned without just cause, and finally being sent from one county to another on the pretext of safe-keeping on an unsigned mittimus they were allowed to secure an opportunity to escape by connivance with their guard. Subsequent attempts on the part of the authorities of Missouri to secure extradition papers from the Governor of Illinois upon the grounds that Joseph and Hyrum Smith were fugitives from justice, were denied by the Executive of the State with a full knowledge of the facts in the case. In the light of this plain statement of facts, how does that vicious statement of the Reverend Yearout sound, "If you can not buy it [the land], kill the people and take it"?

With reference to what Mr. Yearout has said in regard to Zion not being possessed, the temple not built, the world not subjugated, we have only this to say, that he has been like himself in charging what the teaching of Joseph Smith does not warrant and distorts the record. The contest for the possession of property in Independence, Missouri, was not between the Brighamites and the Josephites, as Mr. Yearout states. The parties to the suit were the Church of Christ, commonly called Hedrickites, and the Reorganized Church, commonly called Josephites. The result of this suit was that before the courts of Missouri the Reorganized Church won their contention, but the Court of Appeals defeated the purpose of the suit upon the technical ruling that the church had slept upon its rights, or what is termed in law, laches. The moral and spiritual contention was determined in favor of the Reorganized Church, practically conceding the right to the possession of the property to the plaintiff, but denying the benefit of that right because they did not begin their suit soon enough.

At the close of his article Mr. Yearout makes this statement concerning Joseph Smith: "He could not even punctuate a simple sentence in plain English, or write the English language correctly." He does this for the purpose of throwing discredit upon the Book of Mormon and the claim of Joseph Smith to having translated it, and quotes from what he calls "Book of Mormonism." There is no such book that we know anything about.

He further misleads the reader by using this expression: "The author of Book of Mormonism says." He assumes that this author was Joseph Smith. This is not true. The quotation which he attempted to make and which he misapplies to Joseph Smith is found in the first chapter, first verse, of the first book of Nephi, Nephi being the author of the words which Mr. Yearout applies to Joseph Smith; and yet he follows this up by saying, "Joe Smith knew absolutely nothing about the language of the Jews and of the Egyptians, and as a matter of fact he could not translate a book into English from the Egyptian language, in which he knew not a syllable."

This is almost practically what has been claimed for the translation itself of the work known as the Book of Mormon, but which this writer pleases to denominate the "Book of Mormonism." Suppose that Joseph Smith was the ignorant man that Mr. Yearout claims he was; that he could not write the English language correctly, nor even punctuate a sentence correctly, the fact stands out clear that the Book of Mormon is in existence and that no tenable account of its origin other than that which is given by Joseph Smith and his associates has been so far presented to the public.

We conclude that this writer, Mr. Yearout, has clearly mistaken his vocation and has followed in the footsteps of the hundreds of those who have written on the subject of Mormonism, not telling the truth, garbling from the works of the church and the sayings of its ministers, misunderstanding and misapplying and misquoting, for the purpose of maintaining his assumption in regard to it. We have used the Utah edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants in our article, as this is the edition which Mr. Yearout has used. The language of the text quoted is alike in both editions, the difference being in the numbering of sections and paragraphs; section 63 is alike in both books; section 93 is section 90 in the Lamoni edition; section 135 is section 113 in Lamoni edition. We trust that those who have been reading the Gospel Messenger may take the pains to verify the statements we have made, and if they do so, they will have need to exercise charity in regard to this clerical writer, Mr. Charles M. Yearout; for we have seldom seen an attack made upon the church containing more misrepresentation and viciousness than this gentleman has displayed.

CHURCH LOSSES—MEMBERSHIP.

Under the head of "Leakage from churches," one of our exchanges, the Hollister Bee, Hollister, California, in a late issue has the following, which we quote with a view to an article in the HERALD for February 8 by Bro. Edward Rannie, in which he presents the number of baptisms during some fourteen years of the past, showing a very apparent falling off in the number of baptisms and making quite a pertinent inquiry as to the why of this falling off, and giving certain suggestive reasons, for which he does not stand sponsor, but which he says are presented by others. We suggest in connection with what he has presented that those who are possibly thinking of offering some further reasons or enforcing those which have been given, will take this clipping into consideration. We should really like to see certain writers of the church give short articles on the topic:

Statistics furnished by a New York correspondent to the Baptist Standard show that in two of the five boroughs of that city Protestant Christianity has lost ground, numerically speaking, during the last year. Another New York pastor was reported recently to have said in a public address that in four blocks comprising a city square over thirteen hundred people were found who had formerly been church-members, but who do not now even attend church services. The Standard comments on this "unpleasant reading":

"These depressing conditions are not peculiar to New York, for pastors and Christian workers in all parts of the country have much the same story to tell. Not only is there no general and widespread spiritual awakening, but the church loses each year by desertion many of those who have been brought into its membership. Almost every city parish has within its boundaries as many people who have formerly been identified with church-work and are now divorced from it as there are members in good standing in the churches of the neighborhood. If the time-honored doctrine of the final perseverance of the saints is true, either a multitude of unsaved people have been brought into our churches, or men and women can go a long way in indifference to Christian work and worship without endangering their eternal welfare.

"Men and women who have been church-members, and, in many cases, active workers, are disassociating themselves from organized Christianity, and in such numbers as may well compel the solicitous attention of those who desire the perpetuity and growth of the church. The numbers reported in the annual minutes of our associations as 'dropped' or 'excluded' represent but a fraction of the real loss. Almost every church carries on its list of members those who have gone out from us in everything but name. It is generally admitted that the real, working force of the average church is only about one-half of its nominal membership, and sometimes it is not even that. After having made all proper allowance for ill health and nonresidence and old age, we are compelled to admit that there are many members in our churches who contribute nothing in toil or money or prayer to the promotion of the kingdom, and who give little or no evidence of having any interest in religious matters."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The church library has recently received from Bro. W. H. Smith, of Providence, Rhode Island, several valuable accessions to its collection of books. He sent to Lamoni a box of books, some of which went to the college library, the remainder to the church library, the latter institution receiving the majority because most of the books were of a religious character. Bro. Smith has the thanks of the library authorities, and we trust his worthy example will be emulated by others.

Card from Bro. Joseph Luff, February 2, indicates that he is suffering from reaction resulting from his injuries by the fall he had, already known to the Saints. His difficulty is in the form of nervous disability and heart trouble. He was to start home the 6th with Bro. A. Carmichael, who is coming east to attend upon his work as one of the auditors of the Bishop's, HERALD, Ensign, and college accounts.

Bro. C. C. Joehnk wrote Bro. Heman C. Smith, January 9, 1905, from Güstrow, Germany. He was visiting from house to house, not being able to secure public places to speak in. He wrote in good spirits, but realized that the work was difficult. He wrote, "I have enjoyed the Spirit of the Master, and am glad that I am permitted to help in so great a work."

A sister in one of the small branches in Canada shows her faith by her works and sends us four new HERALD subscribers, and says that she has five more to send soon. If we had such a worker in every branch the publishing department would make rapid advancement.

A short time ago we published in our columns an article on "The Amana Society," a communistic body located at Amana, Iowa. That the society is in trouble appears from the following clipping, taken from the Burlington Hawk-Eye, of February 5, 1905:

"A sensational suit has been begun against the Amana Mennonite Society. Judge S. H. Fairall, of Iowa City, in behalf of the taxpayers, alleges that the organization is one of the greatest communistic bodies in the United State not paying taxes. As a result of this complaint Judge Byington, of Iowa City, has ordered County Attorney Wallace to bring action involving from two million to four million dollars."

That some of the South American states are rapidly developing and growing in economical value, (that is, in available natural products,) is shown by the following figures on the output of rubber of Bolivia alone. In 1890 the amount passing through the custom houses of Puerto Perez, Villa-Bella, and Puerto Suarez, was 294,000 kilograms, valued at $1,260,000 in Bolivian money; in 1891, 345,000 kilograms, valued at $1,350,000; 363,400 kilograms in 1892, at $1,422,000 value; 1893, 394,818 kilograms, value $1,504,940; 1894, 632,500 kilograms, $2,475,000 value; 1895, 820,410 kilograms, $3,070,300 value; 1896, 140,712 kilograms, $4,853,560; 1897, 1,674,216 kilograms, value $6,551,280; 1898, 3,155,955 kilograms, value $13,556,593. Since 1898 the increase has doubtless been equally rapid, and shows the rapid development of the rubber industry as well as the growing importance of one of the South American states.

The Spokane, Washington, Review for January 31, 1905, has the following notice of the church effort at that place. Success, Bro. T. W.:

"The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which has a congregation of sixty-five here, is completing its church on Third Avenue and Smith Street, in Union Park. The church has three corner lots which were bought a year ago. The church-building is thirty-six by eighty-two feet in size, and besides the main auditorium there are the lobbies, the baptistry, and the Sunday-school rooms. The little flock, under the leadership of Reverend T. W. Chatburn, has raised seventeen hundred dollars in cash, and has expended nearly as much labor on the building. The church is complete except for the finishing and plastering of the auditorium and the vestibules. The Sunday-school rooms and the baptistry are occupied. Reverend Mr. Chatburn estimates the value of the building at three thousand dollars and there is not a cent of debt.

"Reverend Mr. Chatburn is one of the 'Seventy' in the hierarchy of the church. He has jurisdiction over Washington and a part of Idaho which comprises the Northwestern mission with a membership of about one thousand. The Spokane District, with one hundred and thirty-five members in the territory immediately around here, will have a quarterly conference Saturday and Sunday, to elect delegates to the national conference at Lamoni, Iowa, the headquarters, April 6.

"The Reorganized Church has no use for the Brigham Young Mormons, and repudiates polygamy."

The Review of an earlier date, November 8, 1904, also, has a letter from President Joseph Smith, in partial review of some statements made by William H. Stalker, in a political speech, published in that paper October 18, 1904, which needed correction. We thank Bro. Chatburn for both clippings.

The Lamoni Sunday-school parents' day program announced last week was postponed on account of the inclement weather.

"IF GOD BE FOR US, WHO CAN PREVAIL AGAINST US?"

SERMON BY ELDER J. F. M'DOWELL, AT DOW CITY REUNION,
SEPTEMBER 19, 1904.

(Reported by Belle Robinson James.)

I believe it was the apostle Paul who wrote: "If God be for us, who can prevail against us?" There are universal forces in this world, the action of which may not be stated; there are tracings of the divine nature which may not be obliterated; there are sounds which may not be hushed; and there is a work being effected, the onward, progressive tendency of which may not be impeded, as a church in organic form, that had its inception and institution under the direct ministry of God. Being of God, it is a divine institution; and as Divinity has always succeeded in whatsoever line of work he has undertaken, we may expect that the work he has attempted in this age will finally be accomplished.

One thought has always favorably engaged my attention; it is this: that whatever God has set his hand to do shall be done irrespective of human opinion or the expression of adverse thought on the part of mankind. From the reading of the sacred records, I have not been able to discover that God at any time has conferred with man as to just how he should set about to do something for mankind, the better course to be pursued, or the methods to be adopted most likely to effectually consummate the object for which he purposed working among men. With this idea in mind, we should seek to keep constantly in memory that man can not stand in the pathway of God, to turn him aside, neither can man suggest unto the Almighty anything by way of improvement upon his plan. Whenever we admit that God is in a work we admit that that work is divine, that Infinity has pledged himself to carry unto a successful consummation the work he has begun.

I do not know that I shall be able to tell you anything new, but I want to refer to an event that transpired away back in the early twenties of the preceding century. You know what I refer to, about a boy,—you have heard about him many a time, and no doubt mention shall yet be made of him many times in the oncoming days,—he made an announcement that he had seen somebody, and when he informed the people they were disinclined to believe it; they thought he was mistaken, but at the same time the announcement coming from a very obscure source, (obscure at that time but very widely recognized at the present time,) caused the unrest of many millions of people, the disconcerting of many aspirants. However, we Latter Day Saints like the idea, not exactly of disturbing people but the idea of God attempting to do something. So far as any direct intervention of his power is concerned, he had of long time been practically inactive, that is, in a certain line of work; but he suddenly became active, and the world was in a state of slumber; they were in a comatose condition. And when this word came of a boy having seen somebody superhuman, it pricked the consciences of men and they were aroused from their slumbers and began to wipe their theological eyes and to touch around the foundations of ecclesiastical institutions in order to ascertain what had occurred, and whether this little incident was likely to be like a stone "dropped in the water" until the "waves circled round with the shock," and they should touch upon the shores of mortality throughout the domain of this world and finally have something to do in the revolutionizing of religious and social, and (shall I say?) political institutions. Nevertheless, it is our belief that God raised up wise men to frame the Constitution of this Government, and provided that this Government should be the seat of civil and religious liberty; and all those who resided within the confines of this country had settled down to a conviction that liberty of a very high order had been instituted among men. And after this Government had been established, after the disturbances of the revolutionary periods had passed, and things were again settling down to a state of political and social quietude, there was the sounding of another tocsin, in another tower, proclaiming a liberty to be associated with the great civil liberty of this Government and to walk hand in hand together as the emancipators of the human race.

The announcement of the Son of God that if the truth shall make you free, that if the Son shall make you free, you shall be free indeed, came again unto the world. Here again resounded an emancipation, in the line of religious life, that men's consciences, which had so long time been under the tension of religious bondage, should now be relaxed and men made free in the divine sense, so that the lesson of liberty which should be learned from the teaching of the gospel would be of so very much higher character that it would enable mankind, wherever they should come in contact with this message, to recognize that Almighty God was not the institutor or founder of monarchical systems in civil government; neither was it the intention of the divine mind that men's consciences should be bound by creed proscription and their thinking done by a few; and what they should believe as the right thing and the true thing should not come as a statement to mankind from human lips; that God had reserved unto himself the infinite right to tell men what they should believe, the believing of which should benefit them for time and for eternity. The great religious institution of the Almighty does not dabble (shall I use the phrase?) with the things of mortality alone, but reaches out into the great beyond, and while here seeks to frame and fashion lives that shall pass on into a state of immortalization crowned with what God terms eternal life. And I do not know what that means—we shall live eternally; life immortalized implies that, but the other is something that crowns the immortal condition.

There were some people who believed that boy. Quite a number believed him,—half a dozen or more. Then there were others who believed what he had to say, and thus swelled the number; and with the increase of number came a certain degree of potency, and many people were gathered, some of them from the more ordinary walks of life. They had become vested with a power that, when they advanced toward other people it either repelled or attracted; it had its positive and negative force. If the parties to whom they advanced liked it, they were attracted, if they did not like it they were repulsed. While many thousands were attracted, many millions stood half way, and others went away altogether; but some of those folk builded a temple in Northeastern Ohio and I was in that house last April. Those people entertained a hope, the word they had heard preached created within them a hope, and there were certain aspirations awakened within their minds and they anticipated something; they were very strong believers in God; very strong. Yes, so much so that God had not seen such faith, no, not among modern mankind. They builded the house, with this hope burning in their breasts. Great promises were made, and they expected to realize them; but adverse conditions obtained and the promises failed of complete verification and so there was a disruption, and the people were scattered abroad when their earthly shepherds were slain.

But last April while I was in that building, I cast about, looking at its peculiar form of construction, and my mind reverted to the record of incidents which had occurred at the time of its dedicatory services. And one morning I went into the hotel across the way from the temple, and tarried with some friends in a room at the east end of the hotel. Presently the hour of dismissal arrived and the people came thronging out through the portals of the structure, and I said to some friends in the room: "Come to the window and look at the Mormons coming out of that building. You can see by their appearance that they are an ignorant set, easily duped, and a class that might be likely to fall in with something of that sort." Then I laughed, because I did not mean it; but that is what somebody might have said, and I said it for them, that was all. I thought of an old gentleman and his son who had visited the house a number of years ago when I was there, and I was standing near the entrance to the auditorium on the north side. They were up toward the rear end on the south side, and the young man said to the old man, who I presume was his father, "Well, what do you think of it?" "Oh," said he, "I think it stands as a monument to their folly." He did not know I heard him, because he spoke in a subdued tone, but I heard, and, as you are aware to-night, I have not forgotten. I thought of that as I saw those people coming out and I said to myself, "Hopes presumably blasted have been revived; the 'folly' of the work of constructing this building has seemingly disappeared, and those people have passed into the embrace of death with the hope of good things to come; yet people of another generation have heard the same message and within them is created the same hope and they entertain the same aspirations and have an expectancy of realizing the same promises as given to their predecessors." It did my heart good to know that, to know it because of the thronging multitude which was now passing through the portals of the old time-revered building.

The institution we represent is an aggressive one, (there was a party said to me that her husband asked the question, "Why do your preachers preach as though they were defending themselves? Who is attacking them in this town?" "Why, nobody, directly, but everybody indirectly"); for there is a power in the world that is ever seeking to make an onslaught, and is making an onslaught upon our faith; and as truth stands in opposition to error, therefore truth must array itself on the side of the defensive against the accusations of error and its encroachments to within the precincts of its realm. That is what Jesus Christ thought about it and you know that his ministry went out as a set of revolutionists. Nowadays they would call it in political matters, "alarmists." (Some of you that complain too much about things that you think are going wrong, they call you "alarmists.")

Now this work is in danger (?) Did you Latter Day Saints know that? I am going to tell you because I heard it. This institution is meeting with an opposition arraying itself in great form, swelling itself with a constant process of egotistic inflation until likely we shall hear the sound of a "burst" sometime, I fear. There is a little paper published down at Grayson, Kentucky, by R. B. Neal, and I read in a recent issue, this month or last month, that some good man sent in two dollars. He was to pay for subscriptions to four different people with these two dollars, and the man suggested that a year's subscription be sent to Miss Helen Gould of New York City, and Bro. Neal wishes Miss Gould's attention called to the fact that she is a subscriber and a helper of the great "National (spelled with a capital N) Anti-Mormon Missionary Association of the Churches of Christ." (Now somebody makes fun of the name of our church, the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," but if that does not beat our name, what does?) He says, "If Miss Gould gets awakened to the importance of the mission of the Helper," she will contribute of her paltry millions—(he did not say paltry millions)—

she will contribute of her money and it will go out into the world and "the Mormon elders will soon be out of a job." I wonder if that will happen before next April! Why bless their dear souls! I laughed when I read that. I did not feel a bit scared. Then in another place in his paper he tells something about Mr. Smith. He says:

"It is Smith against Smith—that's what it is. Let the elders come up and solve the problem, but they will back out." And as soon as I read it, I "backed out." Ha, ha! I tell you the mighty armament, the construction of the fortress being builded by this great "National Association" is of such tremendous proportions, and their gunnery of such terrible power, that the great so-called Mormon institution, when all the guns get in operation, is bound to go down (?) I wonder if God knows anything about that! And I say it reverently, and not irreverently. We believe that God is in this work. And the hand of puny man and his pen and his printing-press, standing arrayed against the infinite God, what can they accomplish? "If God be for us, who can prevail against us?" Paul said that in his time when the forces of opposition were everywhere arrayed against the work of the Nazarene; and the great cause of Almighty God was not a popular movement at that time and neither is it a popularized movement in this our time.

Mr. Campbell, in a book entitled Companion of the Christian Preacher, cites on page 83 of his work, about the persecutions brought to bear by Celsus and others in the early times of the history of the Christian church, and he quotes from Jerome and other writers of the church of Christ, and he says that the only knowledge that people now have of the work written and published in those times against the work of God are the few quotations employed by Christian apologists answering them in their works; and the thought dawned upon my dull power of comprehension that maybe in the kindly providence of Almighty God all that would be left of the works published against this church of the Almighty would be the quotations from those works in the publications of this church when the others had passed into oblivion—into a state of eternal nothingness; they would only be preserved as having been the excerpts that were put into the printed matter of our own church.

Why, the fact that men do not believe that this is the work of God never phased me for a moment of time, nor the fraction of a moment. Last July I was conveyed to Moorhead, Monona County, on the 10th of July and on the 13th of July there sailed into the port of Moorhead a "warship" with the initials "A. C.," and upon the hurricane-deck stood Captain Wilson and Rear Admiral Braden, with their field-glasses sighting around on the waters of the harbor for that little "Mormon" battle-ship; and that night the guns were spiked (they had thirteen-inch (?)—I know they have in the navy of the United States). The gun was "spiked"; it weighed two hundred pounds anyway, and when it was fired you could hear the report about forty feet distant. It kept firing for eight consecutive sessions, and all the time the balls passed and scattered around but none of the Latter Day Saints were harmed, because we just let them fly. And when the bombardment had ceased, it was "the same old story told in the same old way" that we had heard years ago, for Mr. Braden is a nonprogressionist in his method of attacking "Mormonism." He thinks "Mormonism" stands still, like himself and his theories; and he is like a circus, in his attack, for you know some people say "when you see a circus once you see it all the time." That is, you do not need to go again for it is the same performance. That is the way with Mr. Braden; when you once hear a "performance" you really do not need to go again, it is the same old "performance" every occasion; but it seems to grow a little bit weaker lately. Now, our cause was not injured there, not at all. Well, it never is when people hear him! ha, ha!

I have got a little document here. It is very important. I am trying to take care of it. This is another gun—not very large; but this comes from another fort. (You will pardon me for being personal, because this is personal; I have to read it.) This is published by the board of the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America, so you see it goes out into this country and elsewhere. C. Owen is the treasurer of the board, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York. This is an address—three little pages—by a learned man, a brainy man; for you can tell from what I shall read from it that it is the production of an educated brain. The gentleman's name is Sheldon Jackson, and he stands before a large assemblage of educated people; people who charge upon this work of God that the class of people who are adherents of this faith are an "ignorant class." He told some things before that "educated class," the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, at Los Angeles, California, in 1902:

It is a good time for the church to look forward and gird up her loins for a twentieth century effort to capture the United States. There are three great religious systems that have set themselves to accomplish this, the Mormon system, the Papal system, and the Protestant system. If the Protestant system prevails, our own free institutions will be perpetuated. [No doubt of that.] If the Papal system prevails, we will have liberty but under Tammany flavor. [Bro. Jackson seems to think that Catholicity is democratic, of poor Tammany flavor.] If the Mormon system prevails the president, prophet, and revelator of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will be in the White House at Washington; Congress will be disbanded [Think of it] and the Twelve Apostles of the Mormon church will dictate the laws and govern the land. To-day the Mormons gather more converts in the United States [Now here is where the whole difficulty lies, they do not care about it only it is doing something] to-day the Mormons gather more converts in the United States than either the Roman Catholics or the Presbyterians. The Presbyterian Church sends twenty-two missionaries to the Mormons and the Mormons send two thousand through the United States. [Quite a disparagement in numbers. I should think it was time the church should awake.] They have churches and congregations in every State and Territory of this nation to-day except Alaska. [I suppose it is a little too cold up there.] They have divided up the States into districts, placed a missionary in charge [See! he understands a little about how it is done] of each district and are carrying forward with their missionaries a systematic house to house canvas for converts. [You see that refers to somebody else by the name of Mormon; we are all clubbed together.] They are successful, [That is what distresses and perplexes and disturbs their equilibrium, and injects a sort of a fear into their otherwise would-be-cased hearts,] and if left alone they may yet overthrow the liberties of this country. [What do you think of that? If Mr. Jackson has read of our belief regarding the foundation of this Government he knows that no one class of Latter Day Saints believe any such thing, that is, that they would attempt, if the possibility should lie within the reach of their grasp, to destroy the liberties of this country.]

You may think this is a wild statement, but go back seventy-five years in Western New York. See that tramp outfit encamped by the creek. The dilapidated country wagon with its battered, canvas-covered top, the broken-down team grazing near by, and the poorly clad women of the party going to a neighboring farm-house for milk and food, testify to the poverty and low-down condition of the family. [Yes.] And then, if you could look seventy-five years ahead and discover that they would have in this country nearly half a million of believers, you would say it is impossible; but it is not impossible, it has been done, it is an actual fact to-day. Doctor Holmes [whoever he might be] in his inspiring address this morning tells us that the great danger of the American Republic is commercialism. [But he thinks not.] Ask Mrs. Damon R. James, and she will tell you that thousands upon thousands of the best citizens of the land have been petitioned to petition Congress for a law prohibiting polygamy. [Why, I think we have done that.] The Mormons are getting a stronghold upon the foreigners, and they are everywhere. [Is not that terrible! But they will take in not only foreigners but worse than that, American citizens, yes, Americans are actually believing this story. It is not so bad about foreigners, that are a little thick-headed anyway; but the idea of a clear-headed Yankee taking up with them! That is getting bad.] They are not only taking foreigners but Americans. They are going into the Presbyterian and other churches and taking out from congregations their communicants; and there is not a year passes that people born, bred, brought up, baptized, and received at the communion-table of the Presbyterian and other churches are not giving up the faith of their fathers and going into the Mormon church.

Now, is not that "awful"? That is what God said they would do. Did you never read in the prophecies of Jeremiah where it is said that the time would come when the people would say, "Our fathers have inherited lies and things wherein there is no benefit;" and they would go away from it and go into the "Mormon" church? Did you never read that in Jeremiah? They would go to something else. Jeremiah did not call it Mormonism. I want to stop here and make a comment. Some people argue, "Who joins your church? People of small mental caliber, easily duped and deceived, easily deluded, they are the kind that join your church." Where do we get them from? Mr. Jackson says we get them out of the Presbyterian and other churches. I did not know they had any of that kind in there. I thought they were all brainy folks.

Thousands of American citizens are joining the Mormon church and that church confidently looks forward to the time when they shall be in full control of the United States; for they believe that they have had a revelation from God to that effect.

Sometimes our opponents tell us that the revelations given by the Mormon God to the Mormon people do not amount to anything, that the Mormon God is all a myth; and yet here they claim that they have had a revelation from God that he is going to give them the United States, and Mr. Jackson is just a little bit afraid maybe it might happen.

They believe that they have been promised by their Mormon God that the President of the Mormon church shall be President of the United States.

I never heard anything like that, and I do not believe he ever did unless somebody wrote it aside from a Latter Day Saint; that the United States, this country, from ocean to ocean, from Alaska to the gulf, shall be given to the saints of God. Oh, well, so far as "the saints of God" are concerned, whoever they might be, the Bible says that the kingdoms of the world will be given over to somebody after a while; not going to stop from Alaska to the Gulf of Mexico, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean in this country. (See Daniel 2: 44; 7: 18.)

If there is an elocutionist here I wish he would read the next six words. I have tried to read these six words and give them the proper elocutionary accent and expressions, but probably I have not fully succeeded. I will have to practice a little more, because these six words are expressive of great fear, anticipation of danger immediate (if not immediate, not very remote) and wonderful anxiety productive of distress of mind. They read thus: "Is there no hope, no relief?" Then he recovers from the spasm, and now he sees a little ray of light:

God has placed relief in your hands. [Now what is he going to do with you Latter Day Saints?] Send the gospel, [that is what he is going to do, send you the gospel,] and it will disintegrate Mormonism. Let the church wake up, supply the Home Board of Missions with the necessary funds for increasing mission work many fold; the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ is the only solvent that will disintegrate the Mormon system and save the land to the American people.

When they come to you with the gospel, listen to it. But I want to say, in all kindness of feeling, that they will certainly have to resort to something different from what they have ever yet attempted before they get at preaching the gospel as it is written in the books. Calvinism is not the gospel!

Now these forces, peculiar as they are, are at work in the world, and every step we take is encompassed with fear (?) and every thought of triumph is clouded—only it is not because God is the founder of this work. "Every step taken has been maintained," as I remarked to a friend the other day, never a step retraced, all vantage-ground occupied and fortified securely. That is what gives alarm in the world; because it carries with it a prestige, an infinite solidity which causes it to stand as firm as anything which Almighty God could make permanent by the touch of his infinite power. All these little efforts are insignificant in contrast with that which looms up before us as the work of God. The openness of this work, its constant invitation to investigation, its constant recourse to placing in the hands of the people its literature printed in a language not mystic but clearly stated, not covered up in word-shrouding to conceal a fact that otherwise might appear, but in clearly set terms that portray the beauty of its excellency, the sublime simplicity of the plan of the Almighty, therein lies its strength. And as history has recorded it as a fact that the feet of the Son of God walked on this earth, that there fell from his lips the words of eternal life, of love, of compassion, of pity, and of desire for the welfare of the human race—as long as we recognize that to have been a fact, and the foundation of this work is made up of the material that he furnished, interwoven and intermeshed with the divine ideas of the Father and of the Son, the great superstructure reared upon that foundation according to the model supplied by the Infinite shall stand when all things human and satanic have passed away, when the stars shall fall and the moon shall wane and the sun itself with all its present power of effulgence shall vanish before the oncoming light of the infinite God, when the song of eternal triumph shall be sung and the act of coronating the Son of God as King of kings and Lord of lords shall have taken place, and the world shall be glorified unto God, and his people celestialized in his immediate presence, when all things sublunary shall have passed away, and things that to-day satisfy the glory of this terrestrial condition shall be supplanted by the beauty, the enchanting painting of God himself in the beautifying of Mother Earth and the enclothing of his people with that vestment of everlasting life. Toward this grand consummation is the work of God, implanted in this world in these latter days, marching on, regardless of the sneers of the ungodly, the misapprehensions of the misguided of humanity, and the blurred vision of those whose consciences have been blinded to the truth; and the words that fall from the tongues of men whose consciences have been stultified beneath the touch of error and of darkness and of superstition shall be heard no more.

In this work we rest our hope; and sometimes in declaring the beauty of this truth it has seemed to me that I could feel the touch of the eternal rock of truth so solid, so firm, so sure, so immovable does it appear under the impress of the Spirit of him who has authorized the cause we have espoused, who has favored humanity with a restoration of the gospel of his Son.

THE DUTY OF SAINTS AS I VIEW IT.

We read in Genesis 1:29, Inspired Translation:

And I, God, created man in mine own image, in the image of mine Only Begotten created I him; male and female created I them.

And we are informed in the same chapter that God made the earth and placed man upon it, and gave him dominion over it, and all things that were on it. Now, while God gave man dominion over the earth and all there was upon it, yet the earth was the Lord's:

The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof; the world and they that dwell therein.—Psalm 24:1.

Then it is clear that men are stewards under God, and, as such, must answer to him, or give an account for their stewardship.

Those who obey the gospel are still further under obligations to God, because they have personally agreed to do his will, and assist in saving the world; for which they are assured they shall have full compensation,—in this world a sufficiency to supply their needs, and in the world to come a fullness of life and happiness, and possess all things with Christ and God. But in order to obtain this perfect condition, they must observe the law governing in that condition. That law is the perfect law of liberty, or the gospel law. Hence the Lord says:

And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the laws of Christ, must inherit another kingdom.—Doctrine and Covenants 85:5.

And again, verily I say unto you, That which is governed by law, is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same.—Verse 8.

In order to reach this condition we will necessarily have to make a complete sacrifice, and work on the same principle our elder brother did, even the Christ. His work was altogether an unselfish work, and after having done all that he did, he said, "Father, glorify thou me with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." Paul said in his time concerning the gospel work: "For we are laborers together with God; ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building."—1 Corinthians 3:9.

Again in our time the Lord said through Joseph, Doctrine and Covenants 119:8:

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.

From this it is made clear that all alike are to be workers with God to establish his kingdom and build up Zion. There is no difference in minister or member. This is in harmony with Doctrine and Covenants 70:2, 3, where the Lord says of those working in the literary department:

Nevertheless, inasmuch as they receive more than is needful for their necessities, and their wants, it shall be given into my storehouse, and the benefits shall be consecrated unto the inhabitants of Zion, and unto their generations, inasmuch as they become heirs according to the laws of the kingdom. Behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, even as I, the Lord, have appointed, or shall hereafter appoint unto any man. And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God; yea, neither the bishops, neither the agent, who keepeth the Lord's storehouse; neither he who is appointed in a stewardship over temporal things; he who is appointed to administer spiritual things, the same is worthy of his hire, even as those who are appointed to a stewardship, to administer in temporal things; yea, even more abundantly, which abundance is multiplied unto them through the manifestations of the Spirit; nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld.

With this scripture before us, we certainly will be able to see that God requires every man employed in church service or work, to receive like compensation. The minister in the field gets only family support, and his own necessary expenses. The man in the HERALD Office, or Ensign Office, college, or any other place employed in church-work, should work in like manner. It will be impossible for full confidence to be placed in the management of church affairs until the Lord's plan is observed. Where is the justice in a minister laboring in the field with a debt on his home, and no extra allowance to meet it, and one laboring in the office with an extra allowance to meet his obligations? We should treat all alike.

It may be said the man at home puts in more time than the minister. This is not necessarily true of the faithful minister; for he always has something to do that is necessary to be done, and if he accumulates in excess of his necessities he should, under the law, consecrate it for the building up of Zion, just the same as the man working in temporal things.

And again, if the satisfaction of being at home with one's family, and the extra opportunity a man has to attend to home affairs, does not make up for all extra time, home is not properly appreciated.

Again, it may be said, we can not get competent men to work in that way. This I am not willing, as yet, to believe. I think we have enough competent men in the church (that are in the faith) to work in any place the Lord's work may need them. The man that pretends to believe this work in which we are engaged to be the Lord's work, then will not do what may be required of him according to the law, is not in harmony with his profession. All should "labor together with God." "But the laborer in Zion, shall labor for Zion; for if they labor for money, they shall perish."—Book of Mormon, p. 99, par. 15.

According to what we have cited in this article, every one should be a laborer with God for the building up of Zion. That should be the chief ambition of every one. All should fare alike that work for the church, minister and member. The quorums of the church should keep this law and see that it is kept, especially in the stakes.

It is the duty therefore of every Saint to observe the whole law of God, pertaining to temporal as well as spiritual things, as set forth by the chief quorums of the church. And if the proper officers will adopt the Lord's plan and insist on all others working the same way, the Saints will soon fall in line, and we will see the work prosper as it never has hitherto, in my opinion.

When the Lord's policy is adopted, the college can run and the poor be educated as well as the rich. The missionary will go out with confidence. If he is in debt let him stop and pay it; or if the church requires his time, let the church assume his indebtedness, or give him sufficient allowance so he can meet his obligations. Let every man make all the money he can in righteousness and consecrate all he can spare for the Lord's work. This is certainly the duty of all Saints, and I am unwilling to sustain or employ any Saint in church-work that is not willing to work in the Lord's way; and I do not want the church to sustain me where I am, if they are not willing to work in this way; for any other policy will fail.

It may be said those doing job-work can not work that way. That is not true. No difference how they work, nor how much they make, if they pay their tithing and consecrate all above their necessities, the law is kept. If a minister collects more than his necessities require, he must turn it over to the Bishop, and the law says the same of every other man. There is no respect of persons with God.

I know from what is said to me by Saints in my visiting among them where I preach, that if we could see the Saints in the stakes observing the law of consecration strictly, it would do more good throughout the church in a financial way than all the preaching we can do. It is my opinion that it is a mistake for any general church officer, or stake officer, who does not comply with the financial law as defined by the three quorums, to continue to encumber the office. He ought to resign, and let the place be filled by a man who is in the faith.

It may be said by some, "I will keep and teach the law as I see it." That is not proper; for a man that can not see the law, or teach the law, as defined by the quorums whose duty it is to teach and define the law, can not represent the church,—he only represents himself, and should not occupy in an office where the church should be represented. He may say the Lord put him there. Yes, and the Lord says if he is not faithful he shall not be sustained; and no man is faithful as an officer that does not teach the law as held by the church, wherein she has spoken. If we do not move harmoniously with law we can not build up Zion, and can only bring condemnation on ourselves as a church.

I think we ought to be able in four years to find out whether we are prepared to live under stake organization and keep the law or not; and if not we had as well say so. To teach a thing and not practice it is to destroy confidence and injure the work.

Let us now take our bearings and see where we stand. If the hastening time has come let us not hinder the Lord's work by our selfishness. If I can not see or understand the law with the opportunities I have had, I am certainly the wrong man for the place I occupy, and I should be released and another put in my place; for no man should desire to occupy any office to the disadvantage of the Lord's work. And let the church be the judge.

Knowing that God has established this work, and feeling confident of its final success, I believe the Lord will give us the opportunity to do the work required. And if a man will not try to do his part, but becomes an obstruction in the way of progress, when it becomes necessary God will remove him out of the way. He will, however, hold us responsible for our opportunities.

I pray that the Lord may bless this article for the good of the church, and that we may all strive to see and do our whole duty, and receive the reward of the faithful. Amen.

G. H. HILLIARD.

"CONCERNING GRACELAND COLLEGE. SETTLING THE DUST."

"The HERALD readers" will readily discover that something was in the Bishop's eyes and even more than "dust." In fact it must have been about the size of a "beam"!

Notice the following: In HERALD of January 11, page 33, he quotes from "a brother in Australia," as follows:

"The only ray of light that I have got is a report of one of our delegates to last conference," etc. In HERALD of February 1, page 107, we are told that it was the "report of the delegate that caused the darkness." Either the Bishop's eyesight has been sorely affected or else his memory has become deficient.

Again: In HERALD for December 21, page 1186, the Bishop says: "Because of prior adhering rights guaranteed to the body by a resolution of the body passed by a prior General Conference by unanimous consent," etc. In December 28 HERALD, page 1210, I asked, "Will the Bishop kindly point out what resolution, 'passed by a prior General Conference,' prohibits," etc. In January 11 HERALD, page 35, after quoting my entire question, the Bishop said:

"Answer. The Bishop did not state nor intimate that there was any such a resolution passed." In HERALD of February 1, page 107, the Bishop again gives the entire question and answer and on the following page he quotes a part of Article 15, of the Articles of Incorporation of Graceland College, and says: "This is the resolution that was adopted 'by a prior General Conference by unanimous consent,'" etc.

If "the Saints in Australia" had depended on such conflicting statements it is little wonder that "The only ray of light I have got is a report of one of our delegates to last conference."

If the Bishop keeps on at this rate it will take more than one "old saw" to "saw" him "out" of his predicament, and he will need to do more than throw "dust" to blind the eyes of those honestly seeking for truth.

1. "There was no attempt made to suspend the Articles of Incorporation or any rule therein by the conference."

Now do not get too exultant over the answer standing unchallenged, for that answer puts you in an unenviable position. If the church made no such "attempt" in its General Conference capacity what is all this opposition you are making made for?

2. "The second answer given, viz., 'The college is a creature of the church by virtue of and under the law,' the brother says, 'I most certainly agree with.' That settles this point."

The Bishop is too anxious to settle points.

Here is the way I said it:

"2. That the college is a 'creature of the church' is admitted by the Bishop; and that 'the law is paramount, and must be followed or death and evil is the result,' I most certainly agree with." By the use of quotation the Bishop makes me to say what I did not say!

That the college is a "creature of the church" I believe, but that it is so by virtue of and under the law I do not believe. It is only so by virtue of church enactment in a legislative sense, but when it comes to the law God has given I do not believe there is any provision for a nonsectarian school.

It has not been "admitted" that the "resolution" is not "binding" but that it was not "mandatory"—that is, not "commanding."

Book of Rules, page 8, says that an assembly expresses its will by "order, resolution, or vote." Will the Bishop argue that resolutions and votes are not binding? If so, what is the use of passing other than an "order" which is a command or "mandatory"? Better amend the Rules of Order if resolutions and votes are "of no binding force." Or is this the reason why no attention has been given to preamble 4 under "No. 351" of "General Conference Resolutions" and the second resolution under same number? They are:

4. Whereas we believe that the editorial or other management of the HERALD is not comprehended in their official calling, but is an added burden, imposed without command of the Spirit, or being necessary under the law,

Resolved that the Board of Publication be requested to act in accord with the foregoing and release said brethren from all obligations connected with the editing of the HERALD.

But what excuse can there be for not complying with the resolutions under "No. 379," the first of which is made "mandatory" by the second, as follows:

Resolved, further, that the Board of Publication be instructed to carry this resolution into effect in its management of the HERALD Office.

The law of God was cited by the first resolution as follows:

Nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld.—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3. (See also 72: 4.)

Sure enough, "Why do ye transgress the commandment [law] of God by your tradition?" In this "case" it must be that we do not "favor" this law even though it be God's law.

Some of us who get less than half of others whose families are the same in number but the ages of the children will not nearly aggregate with ours feel that this monetary disparity does not fulfill the law.

"Who is in 'open rebellion,' " sure enough?

3. Those "prior adhering rights" did not prohibit the conference from passing a "vote expressing its opinion" as to stopping the college and the "brother" has not overlooked it but has already shown that such opinion but expressed the will of the body, which "will" the board of trustees had it in its power to execute.

Under the head of 'Majority present, a church quorum,' we have this:

That at all regular meetings of branches, and local, district, and general conferences, the vote of the majority of those present and voting at such meeting, shall be regarded as deciding what is the will of such branch or conference, and an expression of it.—Rules of Order, pp. 19, 20.

The last General Conference thus expressed its "will" and did not need to "authorize the board of trustees" to execute that "will" as said board had "prior adhering rights guaranteed to" it by virtue of what the Bishop calls a "resolution" but what in reality is a part of Article 15, of Articles of Association. And the refusal of their board to execute in harmony with both this "will" and its "prior adhering rights" puts it in "open rebellion" to General Conference "will."

I am sincerely glad the Bishop has quoted section 1643, Code of Iowa, for it is in harmony with just what we have contended for:

Upon filing such articles, the persons signing and acknowledging the same, and their associates and successors, shall become a body corporate, with the name therein stated, and many sue and be sued.

Now for analysis: Who signed these "articles"? "Joseph Smith, E. L. Kelley, D. F. Nicholson, secretary, William Anderson, Dan Anderson, E. O. Blakeslee, Robert Winning, Ellis Short." These articles were "filed for record on the sixth day of June, 1895, at half past three o'clock in the afternoon, and recorded in Book 86, pages 240 to 246. J. J. Evans, Recorder."

The above-named signers became "a body corporate" and their successors retain the position of such "body corporate," the present membership being Daniel Anderson, chairman, F. B. Blair, secretary, I. W. Allender, R. M. Elvin, J. A. Gunsolley, F. M. Smith, and J. W. Wight; and were Graceland College to be sued it would be in the name of these parties and the corporate name of the institution.

This "body corporate" "may have a corporate seal, alterable at its pleasure, and may take by gift, purchase, devise or bequest real and personal property for purposes appropriate to its creation and may make by-laws." All these privileges the board of trustees by its own history has shown that it considered to be its own prerogatives, and in such conclusion it was certainly right. The board, then, is the "members thereof" of this "body corporate," and can, therefore, by "three fourths vote" not only amend but even "dissolve" the Articles of Incorporation, and more especially so if the General Conference has already favored such an action.

As to the fifty-year clause the law simply provides that any corporation can not endure beyond that period without reincorporating. The "body corporate" shall have power to continue the thing incorporated for a period up to but not exceeding fifty years, "unless a shorter period in fixed in the articles, or they are sooner dissolved by three fourths vote of all the members thereof."

While the articles as now existing say fifty years, it is yet within the province of either the General Conference or the board of trustees to so amend as to shorten that period by giving a sixty days' notice of such intention.

That they might hire Professor Dewsnup the board of trustees did give the required "notice of amendment," of the "Articles of Incorporation and Association of Graceland College." "Proposed to amend article 8 by striking out the words 'for the ensuing year' after the phrase, 'the selection of professors and teachers, so that the article would read," etc. This was signed by Daniel Anderson, chairman, and I. W. Allender, secretary, board of trustees, and may be found in SAINTS' HERALD, volume 49, page 1189.

This amendment it seems was made but failed to become operative because of not being recorded. Since they so amended when the amendment met with their approval, the board, as all the time contended, could have given the required notice and have so amended as to have suspended the college "until the General Conference said reopen." But instead they declared in favor of continuing the college, the continuance, however, being "contingent upon the debt against the college being paid." And yet they have continued the college without the debt "being paid." That the Bishop's contention, action by "the body," is wrong, is obvious. A sixty days' notice of amendment would not give time to hear from Australia so that if it should happen that their vote would be the pivotal vote, no action could possibly accrue for lack of that vote, though sixty days' notice had been given.

"The board of trustees then can . . . give sixty days' notice and close the college," and had this been done the committee appointed by General Conference could have turned "the property to other uses." So the Bishop's point is not settled.

4. As the board is the "creature" and the conference its "creator," it strikes me that the latter will be a proper "tribunal" to say whether it is willing to continue the integral parts of that board or not. And "any other position than" to comply with conference enactment, "breeds anarchy and contention in the body." The action was not contrary to "individual opinion" but contrary to what the General Conference by a majority vote enacted.

To make his parallel between the St. Joseph church and college hold good he must put secular education on a par with spiritual development. Unfortunately, however, there is no way to substantiate the truthfulness of the position without we first try the closing down until debt is paid. The fear of its being closed without seems to have stimulated activity in the paying of the debt, for never before in its history for the same period of time has there been such a strenuous effort to liquidate the debt. One even went so far as to tell one district in open conference that they were "under a cloud" because they had not paid the assessment and could hardly expect the General Conference to grant their request to hold its next sitting in their district unless they paid their college apportionment!

5. Yes, the Lord said "pay the college debt," and such debt should be paid. Unfortunately we have added to the debt that then existed a running expense deficit of several thousand dollars which the Lord did not tell us to do!

By saying "pay the debt" he was virtually saying do not add any more to it.

Whatever some brother in Fremont District said do not try to make the reader believe that I am opposed to paying the debt. My position is that the conference had perfect right to speak as it did and that it was the duty of all to comply with conference enactment and that if mistake were made, (which I do not for a moment believe,) the only place to rectify such mistake was in General Conference capacity, and that the board erred in trying to do a thing it had no business to do. To make the "logic" (?) hold good it must be proved, not asserted, that refusal to pay the debt would be the easiest way to close and that paying such debt would cause the running of the college. But even then Jesus could easily have added and "run the college." I could get even better logic by saying because he did not so add that therefore he is not in favor of running the college.

If Mosiah did not mean majority by the expression

"voice of the people" why did he say that it was "common for the lesser part of the people to desire that which is wrong"? Why use the word "lesser" if "greater," its antithesis, were not in his mind? So there is no attempt "to amend the language."

The Bishop certainly must have had something in his eyes, for my reference to his preaching at a reunion related to "industriously" scattering and not to "raising the college question." Had the Bishop seen the letter written in answer to the one signed by Evans, Cooper, and Wight, he might have thought it would be better to confer with the signers before discussing on the subject, as said letter was not at all conciliatory.

7. The affirmative was satisfied with the "results" though burdened with the five minute limit. But the trouble seems to be that the Bishop did not have time to tell us all he knew! It rather strikes me that he ought to have been able with his superior qualifications as a result of giving "hours and days in the preparation and arrangement" to have told more in the five minutes than us poor fellows who "know little or nothing about it!" After all it is but a literal begging of the question: for before the various quorums where he was invited to appear he was not restricted to the five-minute limitation and ought to have shed forth sufficient of the inherent as well as acquired wisdom obtained by "hours and days in the preparation," to have stimulated thought and given knowledge sufficient so that during the two days in open conference some of the opponents to the resolution might have said something about the sixty days' notice, etc., and imparted to us who knew "little or nothing about it." Yes, I do think the Bishop's "position is too absurd to need any argument." But we had this same thought presented at a district conference by one of the famous "six."

8. "Our reviewer" does not claim that "the twelve sent notices to the different quorums," but here is what I said: "The Quorum of Twelve through its secretary and by regular motion and vote handed to the various quorums a copy of the resolution." Quite a difference in what I said and what the Bishop says I said.

Both the Presidency and Bishopric had a copy of this resolution, as well as every other quorum present, and not one of these quorums ever asked our quorum not to present it to the conference or said anything about the "sixty days' notice" to us. The first counselor to the Bishop without any notice to the quorums, presented in open conference a resolution touching equality of finances. In fact the right to present a resolution inheres with any individual or quorum—the passing of that resolution belongs to the conference and that is where the responsibility attaches.

It was the conference that passed the resolution, and everybody knows that it would have amounted to nothing beyond the mere fact of quorum action had the conference not have adopted it. Why then seek to attach blame to the quorum when the blame belongs to the conference alone, if any blame attaches? Good deal like throwing "dust," is it not?

Suppose the "joint council" did take action, such action was invalid until adopted by conference. Suppose then that this same "joint council" had taken action and passed this same resolution, would that have made it valid? Not by any means! It would have needed to have gone before the conference just the same. The General Conference, then, was responsible for the passage of that resolution, and this effort to bring the Quorum of Twelve into disrepute is but an "exhibition" of "forming clouds by casting dust into the air."

"To revise or vitiate the action of that joint council would require" action by the General Conference, and not the "joint action of these same councils."

HAGAR EPISODE.

The digression of Sarai and Abram from the original marriage law and approved morals perhaps may reflect to advantage by the scriptural account in its simplicity.

The scribe who writes up the record of events furnishes the links that connect and explain the statement of the several parties who figure in the episode.

Moses.—"Now Sarai, Abram's wife, bare him no children: and she had an handmaid, an Egyptian, whose name was Hagar. And Sarai said unto Abram, Sarai.—"Behold now, the Lord hath restrained me from bearing: I pray thee, go in unto my maid; it may be that I may obtain children by her.

Moses.—"And Abram hearkened to the voice of Sarai. And Sarai, Abram's wife, took Hagar her maid the Egyptian, after Abram had dwelt ten years in the land of Canaan, and gave her to her husband Abram to be his wife. And he went in unto Hagar, and she conceived: and when she saw that she had conceived, her mistress was despised in her eyes. And Sarai said unto Abram, Sarai.—"My wrong be upon thee: I have given my maid into thy bosom; and when she saw that she had conceived, I was despised in her eyes: The Lord judge between me and thee.

Moses.—"But Abram said unto Sarai,— Abram.—"Behold, thy maid is in thy hand; do to her as it pleaseth thee.

Moses.—"And when Sarai dealt hardly with her, she fled from her face. And the angel of the Lord found her by a fountain of water in the wilderness, by the fountain in the way to Shur, and he said, Angel.—"Hagar, Sarai's maid, whence comest thou? and whither wilt thou go?

Moses.—"And she said,

Hagar.—"I flee from the face of my mistress Sarai.

Moses.—"And the angel of the Lord said unto her,

Angel.—"Return to thy mistress, and submit thyself under her hands.

Moses.—"And the angel of the Lord said unto her,

Angel.—"I will multiply thy seed exceedingly, that it shall not be numbered for multitude.

Moses.—"And the angel of the Lord said unto her,

Angel.—"Behold, thou art with child, and shalt bear a son, and shalt call his name Ishmael; because the Lord hath heard thy affliction. And he will be a wild man; his hand will be against every man, and every man's hand against him, and he shall dwell in the presence of all his brethern.

Moses.—"And she called the name of the Lord that spake unto her, Hagar.—"Thou God seest me.

Moses.—"For she said,

Hagar.—"Have I also here looked after him that seeth me?

Moses.—"Wherefore the well was called Beer-lahai-roi: behold, it is between Kadesh and Bered. And Hagar bare Abram a son; and Abram called his son's name, which Hagar bare, Ishmael. And Abram was fourscore and six years old when Hagar bare Ishmael to Abram."—Genesis 16: 1-16.

"And Ishmael his son was thirteen years old, when he was circumcised in the flesh of his foreskin. In the selfsame day was Abraham circumcised, and Ishmael his son."—Genesis 17: 25, 26.

"And Sarah saw the son of Hagar the Egyptian, which she had borne unto Abraham, mocking. Wherefore she said unto Abraham, Sarah.—"Cast out this bondwoman and her son: for the son of this bondwoman shall not be heir with my son, even with Isaac.

Moses.—"And the thing was very grievous in Abraham's sight, because of his son. And God said unto Abraham, God.—"Let it not be grievous in thy sight, because of the lad, and because of thy bondwoman; in all that Sarah hath said unto thee, hearken unto her voice; for in Isaac shall thy seed be called. And also of the son of the bondwoman will I make a nation, because he is thy seed.

Moses.—"And Abraham rose up early in the morning, and took bread, and a bottle of water, and gave it unto Hagar, putting it on her shoulder, and the child, and sent her away: and she departed, and wandered in the wilderness of Beer-sheba. And the water was spent in the bottle, and she cast the child under one of the shrubs. And she went, and sat her down over against him a good way off, as it were a bowshot: for she said, Hagar.—"Let me not see the death of the chi'd.

Moses.—"And she sat over against him, and lifted up her voice, and wept. And God heard the voice of the lad; and the angel of God called to Hagar out of heaven, and said unto her, Angel.—"What aileth thee, Hagar? fear not; for God hath heard the voice of the lad where he is. Arise, lift up the lad, and hold him in thine hand; for I will make him a great nation.

Moses.—"And God opened her eyes, and she saw a well of water; and she went and filled the bottle with water, and gave the lad drink. And God was with the lad; and he grew, and dwelt in the wilderness, and became an archer. And he dwelt in the wilderness of Paran; and his mother took him a wife out of the land of Egypt."—Genesis 21: 9-21.

Paul.—"For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid, the other by a free-woman. But he who was of the bondwoman was born after the flesh; but he of the freewoman was by promise. Which things are an allegory: for these are the two covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children. But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all. For it is written, Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not; break forth and cry, thou that travailest not; for the desolate hath many more children than she which hath a husband. Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise. But as then he that was born after the flesh, persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now. Nevertheless what saith the scripture? Cast out the bondwoman and her son: for the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the freewoman. So then, brethren, we are not children of the bondwoman, but of the free."—Galatians 4: 22-31.

Will now put the allegory of the fruitage of the flesh, and of the Spirit in parallel contrast:

FLESH.

Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these, Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like: of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God.—Galatians 5: 19-25.

SPIRIT.

But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law. And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts. If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit.—Galatians 5: 22-25.

A careful examination of the foregoing scripture touching upon the episode of Abraham and the Egyptian maid at the suggestion of the unfortunate and disappointed Sarah, certainly furnishes no authority for turning the truth of God into a lie, that crime be exalted into a virtue.

The Home of the Blessed.

Around about me is a world,
A world I can not see;
Its boundaries are infinite,
Its breadths encompass me.

The wonders of this blessed land,
Where joys eternal dwell,
Are too exalted for the words
Of mortal man to tell.

The air so pure is undefiled
By erring mortal's breath:
An angel guards the city's gates
And mortals call him Death.

I do not fear the sentinel,
I know my Lord is King.
O grave, where is thy victory?
O death, where is thy sting?

Psychology Applied to Sunday-School Lessons.

It has been said by some of our leaders that the Sunday-school is distinctly and primarily a school. This is true but if we stop here we may be misled. It is not a school for the simple teaching of Bible verses or the verbal learning of truths, but primarily and distinctly a school for the purpose of educating the child in the religious life. If we accept this, we accept the truth that there is a process by which the child is brought to God. It is in our failure to clearly realize this truth that we have made mistakes in the past.—Selected.

BRO. W. B. TORRANCE, superintendent of the Nodaway, Missouri, District under date of February 7 wrote: "Our last convention was one of the best to my mind that I have been permitted to attend in the district. We took up the first section of the program that you sent me. Sr. Hawley wrote on 'work,' Bro. R. K. Ross on 'Parental responsibility'; Bro. W. T. Ross was assigned 'Courtesies and obligations,' and Sr. Annie Ivie 'Recreations and amusements.' . . . Brn. E. S. Fannon, J. W. Powell, W. E. Peak, and N. C. Enge made talks on the subjects of the papers." This is a good report, brethren. Keep the good work going.

BRN. C. H. BARTON AND HAROLD PALMER, superintendent and secretary respectively, of the Manchester, England, Sunday-school, in a report under date of January 21, show a substantial gain for the school. It has been one of the weak schools numerically, they say, and they are now much pleased that it is progressing so nicely. They show an enrollment of thirty-seven, a gain of two. The average attendance has increased from twenty-five to thirty-one in round numbers. The finances are in good condition, there being two pounds, four shillings, and three pence in the treasury. They held forty-seven sessions during the year, a good showing. We hope they may continue to do well.

BRO. W. A. SINCLAIR, superintendent of the Massachusetts District, writes: "I like the ideas set forth in the programs accompanying your last letter and shall try to have them used by the different schools in the district. I wish you would send me about a dozen more of the 'parents' day' programs that I may be able to put one in the hands of each superintendent in the district. The work seems to be moving along nicely in our district, especially in the home department."

Thus one by one we hear good reports from the districts. And by constantly keeping it before the workers we hope to interest some who have not as yet given this work a serious thought. If you have not the programs referred to, we shall gladly furnish you.

Duty in Action.

"He who has well considered his duty will at once carry his convictions into action. Our acts are the only things that are in our power.

"The man whose first question, after a right course of action has presented itself, is 'What will people say?' is not the man to do anything at all. But if he asks 'Is it my duty?' he can then proceed in his moral panoply, and be ready to incur men's censure, and even to brave their ridicule. . . .

"Duty is first learned at home. The child comes into the world helpless and dependent upon others for its health, nurture, and moral and physical development. The child at length imbibes ideas; under proper influences he learns to obey, to control himself, to be kind to others, to be dutiful and happy. He has a will of his own; but whether it be well or ill-directed depends very much upon parental influences.—Samuel Smiles, on "Duty."

The Singing of Doris and Deborah.

BY D. L. HART.

Doris has a lovely voice. It is so clear and true and resonant and sweet that every stranger who chances to hear it remarks upon it. Though she is only thirteen years old, she sings at every concert, and her solos are highly praised.

Deborah has just an ordinary voice. The critic who would pick flaws in it, could find a dozen at least. But Deborah never fails to sing. She begins with the first word of the hymn and sings till the last. If the Sunday-school music falters and dies down, Deborah's voice goes on until every little child catches the tune from her and the chorus swells in renewed enthusiasm. If the superintendent makes a suggestion about the music, she leads all the rest in following it.

She never sings solos. She never sits in the choir. But from her seat in the congregation she sings with all her might, and what we would do without her in the Sunday-school and Junior meetings I do not know. Even in the church we miss her when she is not there, and when she chances to be at church prayer-meetings—she can not always go, for she is only a school-girl—the minister smiles when the singing begins, for it seems to go so much better than usual. You see she sings so heartily that she sets everybody else to singing. Indeed, we never knew what a dismal failure Sunday-school singing may be until the time when Deborah had the measles.

Doris has a much better voice than Deborah's, but it does not make so very much difference in the Sunday-school singing whether Doris is present or not. If she chooses, she can sing beautifully and lead all the rest, but so often she does not choose. Sometimes the organist plays too fast to suit her, and she stops singing. Sometimes again the playing is too slow for her fancy, and there is the same result. If the superintendent criticises the singing in any way, she will not open her mouth again. She is really a dear, good girl, as pretty and attractive as you could find anywhere, but oh! she is not half the help that Deborah is! Doris sings beautiful solos, but in Sunday-school work the singing all together three or four songs each Sunday counts more than the most melodious special pieces. I would not, on any account, undervalue Doris' work, but Deborah's faithful, unpraised singing is worth more, infinitely more.

May we not, as Sunday-school teachers, take a lesson from these two Sunday-school pupils? So many of us are not brilliant successes along that line, we wish some brighter, more intellectual, more magnetic teacher might be in our place. But the brilliant, intellectual, magnetic people who will work in Sunday-school are all too few, and sometimes—don't mention that I said it—I have known them to begin with immense enthusiasm that promised wonderful results, and give up at the first discouragement. It is the steady, faithful, conscientious work which plods straight ahead through discouragement and encouragement, that makes the Sunday-school a success.—Selected.

The Sunday-School Lesson for February 19, 1905.

THE CHURCH AT SMYRNA.

Golden Text.—"He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death."—Revelation 2: 11.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE LESSON, FOR SUPERINTENDENTS.

The senior lesson calls attention to the fact that, of the seven churches of Asia, to whom John was bidden to write, only two were not reprov'd in the message of the Master to them. Smyrna was one of the two that was commended and not reprov'd.

The saints of Smyrna seem to have been very poor people, and the Master's assurance that he knew their works and their tribulation and poverty intimates his sympathy for them. Not only did he know that they were poor, but he knew also what poverty is, for he himself, the Lord of all, had in his earth-life no place that he could call home; he had not where to lay his head except as he shared the hospitality of others.

Added to poverty, the saints of Smyrna had suffered tribulation, doubtless such tribulation as Christ himself had suffered for the sake of his truth. In this, too, he knew how to sympathize with them.

And the message to them conveyed the information that bitter persecution awaited them still in the future, and they were encouraged not to fear the things they must suffer.

The senior lesson gives us some information gleaned from history concerning the persecutions suffered by many of the early churches. It refers to the martyrdom of Polycarp, who was once bishop of Smyrna.

Our hearts must be saddened as we read of what those saints of former days suffered as a consequence of their loyalty to the truth of Christ, and, on the other hand, we must rejoice to read in the record of those times that those martyrs for the gospel's sake were not left alone in their sufferings, but that they were strengthened by the Lord and given power to bear what otherwise must have been unbearable.

The prominent topic in the intermediate and second primary lessons is also brought out in the senior. It is this, that the saints of Smyrna, though poor in the things of this world, were declared by the Lord to be rich, meaning that they were rich in those qualities that fit saints to enter the kingdom of God. They were spiritually well developed.

The senior lesson presents the following teaching points:

The poorest of us may be rich in heart and mind.

This is based on the statement already referred to that the saints of Smyrna, though in poverty, were rich. They were poor in the sight of men; they were rich in the sight of God. Men may monopolize the wealth of this world, but it is not possible for any one except ourselves to exclude us from those spiritual riches that never perish, those riches that we may accumulate day by day by cultivating the virtues of perfect character.

God judges us, not by our profession, but by what he sees in our hearts.

This is based on the declaration of Jesus to the saints of Smyrna that he knew the blasphemy of those who said they were Jews but were not. The searching eye of God looks through our outward profession and sees what we really are. It is but wisdom in us to strive to be what we would like to appear to be.

Trials come upon the good as well as upon the evil.

The saints of Smyrna were commended by the Lord as faithful to him, as rich in spiritual graces; yet further trials were to come upon them, under which they were encouraged to be strong. From the furnace of affliction the faithful saints come forth purified as gold refined in the fire. By sorrow many have been "purified and made white and tried"; and many others yet shall be.

It is common for us to mourn under what we consider trials, but, if we could see with clearer sight, we might be able to discern the blessing that often comes to us in the guise of adversity, and we might be able to esteem

"That sorrow—whose employ
Is to develop, not destroy—
Far better than a barren joy."

There is a difference between the suffering of the wicked and the suffering of the innocent. Cain groaned under the weight of the sentence his sins had brought on him, "My punishment is greater than I can bear"; but Paul, the afflicted, faithful servant of Christ exclaimed, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

Paul had learned the lesson that the sorrow that develops us spiritually is better than the barren joy that leaves us undeveloped; he had his thorn in the flesh, for the removal of which he had thrice besought the Lord, but when he learned that this disability, whatever it was, was left with him that he might be made perfect in the strength of the Lord, he cheerfully submitted himself to the discipline of the Master whose wisdom he did not doubt, saying, "Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me."

SIMPLICITY IN OUR WORK.

My attention was called to a suggestion in last week's Sunday-school department concerning the introduction of object-teaching in our Sunday-school work. The thing I noticed was the simplicity of the object named as an example of the articles that may be used. It was a handkerchief, one of the most common things, an object every teacher would bring to class with her. The suggestion was that it could be used as an illustration of the ease with which a thing, clean and pure at first, may be soiled, and of the effort necessary to make it pure again.

One of our primary lessons some time ago contained the thought that a nice exterior does not always indicate a true heart and that we should make ourselves right in heart as well as in outward appearance. An interested teacher, alert to find means to illustrate the lesson, was paring apples on Saturday morning and found one very fair and rosy on one side but with a worm-hole on the other side. Before she had thought of the use she could make of it, she had cut it in two, but, nevertheless, it was used as an object of illustration and very nicely, too; for the two halves were held together until the teacher had talked about the beautiful outward appearance, and then the heart of the apple was exposed to show the condition there.

And the teacher made use of even the worm-hole on the otherwise fair exterior of the apple. She told the children that, when there is sin in the heart, it always shows itself somewhere and in some way outwardly, that it is not fully concealed.

If we do not make the mistake of thinking object-teaching to be the doing of wonderful and remarkable things, we may not find it difficult to do such work in our classes. Simple, plain, practical work is what we need and want, and it is the kind of work most of us can do, if we are content to work in this way.

The following story is related of Michael Angelo, the Italian artist and sculptor. It is said that he was one time passing a quarry where large blocks of marble were being taken out. Looking at one of the blocks, he saw an angel confined in it. He ordered the block of marble taken to his studio, and there he set men to work with chisels, and, perhaps, other sharp and hard tools to cut away the rough corners he saw surrounding the angel.

After much carving, cutting, and polishing, the beautiful marble angel was perfectly free from the stone surroundings that had hidden it before from the eyes of men, though the master sculptor had seen it possible in the rough block as it came from the quarry.

And so God sees in us possibilities of development that we do not know. He sees us not only in the rough, but he knows to what degree of perfection it is possible to bring us. And, like the sculptor, he sees it necessary to hew and polish away our crudities, to subject us to things not easy to be borne but calculated to develop in us the divine nature, if we will submit ourselves to his discipline and work with him.

" 'Tis not with angry stroke, but kind,
The sculptor hews the marble stone;
His blows, their scars, if we will mind,
But loose the angel there confined—
An angel from a shapeless stone."

ANNA SALYARDS.

Letter Department.

MONTOUR, Iowa, January 30, 1905.

Editors Herald: After the holidays I commenced a series of meetings at Nevada the 4th of this month, with the finest kind of interest. People were just hungry to hear the truth. Two obeyed the gospel,—a man and his wife. There are others almost ready for the water, who I believe will come into the kingdom soon. At the last night of my meeting a man by the name of Butler Pool arose and said he had a word to say, and it was this: "This man has been here for two weeks now, and has not asked for a cent, and if he has no objections I am going to pass the hat." He did so, which resulted in two dollars and thirty cents for the preacher. He said that was a bait for me to come back again.

On the 18th I took train for Montour to assist Bro. J. S. Roth in a series of meetings. Bro. J. S. had been holding meetings here about two weeks before I came; large crowds and excellent interest has continued throughout our entire services. We closed our meetings last night, with the understanding that we will come back again as soon as possible, and I truly believe there are several that will obey the gospel in the near future. This is a new opening and should not be forgotten. There is only one Latter Day Saint here but she is a Saint indeed, and her husband is kind-hearted though he does not belong to the church. He is a believer now, and is very favorable to the latter-day work, and of course this makes a home for the missionary and a good, pleasant one, too.

It has been very pleasant for us here, as the outsiders come right forward and assist in singing. In fact they have done most all of the singing for us while here, and are true friends to our work. We will leave to-day for Colo and stop over night with Bro. Lihommedien's folks, thence to Eagle Grove to hold a series of meetings.

I have truly been blessed in my weak efforts to present the way of life and salvation, for which I am very thankful to our Father in heaven. I feel that I am one of the weakest of God's children, but am trying to do the little good that is allotted me to do; and I am willing to labor where I can accomplish the most good, and I have about come to the conclusion that I had better go at local work and get out of the way of more able men. I do not want to hinder this latter-day work in the least, and am willing to labor anywhere the Lord wants me to. I hope the Spirit of God will direct me in this matter; for I do not want to make a mistake. I do not feel like throwing off the armor, but am willing, and will do all I can wherever I am. I know this is the work of God, and I want to be faithful to the end. Remember me, brethren, in your prayers. In bonds,

N. V. SHELDON.

MALLARD, Iowa, January 30, 1905.

Editors Herald: Since last writing I have done some labor at Lanesboro where I enjoyed the assistance of the local officers and the hospitality of the Saints. The services held seemed to be enjoyed by the most of those who attended even while preaching on the general apostasy of the early Christian church and the restoration of the gospel through the medium of an angel and divine revelation given to the Palmyra Seer by the Spirit of God, and the organization of the church in fulfillment of the voice of inspiration and the direct command of God in latter days.

Some seemed very near the kingdom of God but for reasons best known to themselves were not baptized. I wish such persons well and pray that the Spirit may impress upon their minds the necessity of an early obedience to the full plan of salvation.

From there I returned home and assisted Sr. Butterworth to nurse four sons through a siege of measles, and feel to thank God for his assistance and blessings. All came nicely through the disease though the weather was cold.

Other trouble pressed itself heavily upon the heart and mind and made the writer again to realize that every heart has its pain, and every family its sorrow. The accidental death of my brother Clair's son, Ward, a bright and happy boy of seventeen years of age, is but another instance of the kind referred to above. The blow fell like a thunderbolt from the clear sky, carrying sorrow and mourning to the home and entire community. Words of humans are too weak to carry to the bereaved hearts the comfort and help needed. God only can comfort under such circumstances, that the burden and sorrow may be lifted, and the inspiration necessary furnished to enable those who thus suffer to see through the veil and behold the peace and rest enjoyed by those who have crossed the river of death.

Coalville was next visited, where I preached a number of discourses and gave four blessings, which I was able to write up from a few notes taken in longhand in two instances and two without notes of any kind, so that the parties seemed to be satisfied with their blessings as reproduced and written out. I have learned that by the assistance of the Spirit such work can be done, though it would be much more convenient and rapid if one had a competent stenographer. I mention the above fact for the benefit of those in my own district who may wish to know.

While at Coalville I baptized Bro. and Sr. Llewellyn, the fruits of the labors of others. They experienced the joy of their first love in the witness of the Spirit, which I hope may abide and grow stronger until it becomes perfect.

I came to this place on the 23d inst. and commenced work on the 25th, and will continue a few days longer if it seems best to do so.

The kindness that characterizes those who obey the gospel and walk in the light of the Spirit is commendable in all who are exercised thereby. It helps to establish and perpetuate that condition of life referred to by Jesus when he said: "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye also love one another."

Jesus watched and prayed, labored and died to help and bless poor, weak, and suffering humanity and bring about that happy condition of things that is to be realized when the Savior's prayer is fully answered which says: "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven." God honors, helps, and comforts those disciples who watch, pray, and labor to bring about the desire of the divine will. For such there is much peace, joy, and happiness in this present life, made still more enjoyable because of the indwelling assurance of the Spirit that eternal life shall be theirs when their work is done. As we look forward to that land of peace and rest that is to be inherited by the people of God, there is much joy in anticipation; but even that is but small in comparison with the joy of participation, when all shall be crowned with the glory of God.

To this end may we all wisely and perseveringly labor until the Master shall say it is enough.

Yours in gospel bonds,

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

OOLAGAH, Indian Territory, January 31, 1905.

Dear Herald: The 18th of January Bro. F. M. Slover and I began a debate at Hartford, Kansas, where our work had never been presented, none of our people living there. Our opponent was J. M. Martin, of the Non-Progressive Christian Church, each disputant affirming the church he stands identified with. The writer did the debating, Bro. Slover acting as moderator. He rendered me valuable assistance in the debate. God's Spirit was with us to enlighten our minds until every position taken by us stood as solid as a rock. We did it with the Bible and the aid of inspiration; to God be the glory.

I had a burning fever the first part of debate. Bro. Slover administered to me and it left me. We met much prejudice in first part of debate, but before it was half over it gave way, and at the close I received many compliments for doing up our opponent. We left many friends.

We presented to the people much of our doctrine. There was so much Bible truth presented, our opponent did not have much time to throw dirt. A large per cent of the people were on our side.

I have preached three times since coming here, in a private house,—a Baptist's house. About forty out. To-night I begin a series of meetings at Oolagah in the Methodist church. We are among the Lamanites. I am busy in the restored gospel; no place to stop.

In gospel bonds,

F. C. KECK.

Editors Herald: With glad feelings I pen a few lines concerning the labors of one of God's servants. Elder James Moler has been visiting the branches of the Clinton District, with a message from God, i. e., "Come up higher."

The sermons were in plain yet cutting, axe-like language, as in Matthew 3: 10, or the sword of the Spirit as spoken by Paul. As a nail driven in a sure place was the sermon on latter-day apostasy.

The Smoot case was mentioned; the "denominations" were asked who would claim Brigham Young as having been a member of their church. All were glad that he was never a member of their church, but that he and his church certainly filled the description given by 2 Peter chapter 2 and Jeremiah 17: 5. The first three verses of 2 Peter chapter 2, with Acts 1: 16 were used to show that he and his church had the truth and belonged to the true church at one time, but by their baptism, reorganization, doctrine of polygamy, blood atonement, Adam-god worship, going to the salt land, etc., they fulfilled the scripture, repudiated the doctrine of Christ, his church, and its governments.

So the work of God rolls on, nearer and nearer to its great destination foretold by prophets, "Sung of by saints in days of old." May its light grow brighter, its power greater till it becomes "terrible as an army with banners."

A BROTHER.

SPokane, Washington, January 23, 1905.

Editor Herald: There is a little band of Saints here still trying to hold up the banner of truth; we are only a few in number in this city of sixty-five thousand inhabitants, yet we feel and know the Lord is mindful of us. While none have been added to our number this last year, some are interested and we are hopeful. A good work has been done here the past year, in the way of building, and in various other ways for which we are thankful. We owe a great deal of credit to elder T. W. Chatburn. Through his faithfulness and labor, as well as others, and through the kindness of Bishop E. L. Kelley, they have been able to erect a church-building in Union Park.

We have a Sunday-school which is progressing nicely with good interest. One drawback here with the Saints has been that they have had no suitable place of worship, but this summer we will be able to invite our friends and neighbors to the new church.

The investigation of the Smoot case at Washington is bringing to light, and before the public, the difference between the Reorganization and the Utah people. But here like many other places it is hard to get people to believe that we are not all the same. We credit the editor of the Spokeman's Review with publishing the following lines, in speaking of the Smoot investigation: "The little branch of Mormons or Latter Day Saints here in the city of Spokane are of the Reorganization and had no part whatever with the Utah people. They claim that Joseph Smith did not teach or practice polygamy, but such doctrine and heresies were brought forth by Brigham Young and his followers."

The Lord works mysteriously his wonders to perform. With the great confusion of churches we see, some are on the verge of uniting. The "daughters" are becoming so weak they can not stand alone. The little stone cut out without hands must fill the whole earth.

My desire is to go on in this grand work knowing that it is of God. Although we meet with many trials and temptations in this life let us set our aim on eternal life and all work for that end with prayer and patience.

Your sister in the one faith,

1801 East Olive Avenue.

EMMA M. BELL.

PLYMPTON, Massachusetts, January 25, 1905.

Editors Herald: A typical north western blizzard is raging this morning—the cold wind is swirling the snow round and round and piling it into drifts making traffic almost impossible—delaying trains and putting electric cars for a time out of service, in these parts. How different this place looks to-day with this storm raging than it did five months ago when the Saints were living under canvass and trying to keep cool under the stately pines by the calm, cool Silver Lake that served for our bathtub during those warm days. Now its surface is covered with a thick coat of ice and the large ice-houses which were being emptied during the summer months are now being replenished for summer's needs.

But the saddest part of my reference to Silver Lake is the fact that the beautiful grove which has for the Saints such sacred memories—has to submit to the woodman's axe—and the beauty of our camping-ground will be a thing of the past. Saints from far and near who have had the pleasure of visiting this ideal spot will be sorry to hear of its destruction. We are thus reminded that here we have no abiding city. But old Massachusetts has a remarkable supply of lovely spots for camping and our committee will doubtless find some suitable place for our next gathering.

I came here yesterday to hold service in the hall where Bro. C. H. Rich and the writer held forth some four years ago. There were no Saints here then and we had to pitch our tent very early in the season when it was quite cool and very wet—and we foraged for Quaker oats and condensed milk left over from the reunion the year before. So that we had our meals served in the following order: In the morning "porridge hot," at noon "porridge cold," and again in the evening "porridge" nine hours old. To-day we have no need to pitch a tent for a habitation for the gospel leaven has been working and homes for the missionaries are open. Bro. J. H. Holmes and wife were baptized at last reunion, and Bro. J. C. Owens at the same time. Both at that time were station agents only about one mile apart. I am staying with Bro. Owens whose estimable wife is very friendly towards the church and is of the seed of Ephraim, I fully believe. I am to bless their firstborn before leaving,—a little two-month-old daughter, also two children of Bro. and Sr. Holmes. Bro. N. R. Nickerson has held two meetings here and has appointments out for future work.

In October I was requested by our missionary in charge to go to Maine to labor among the Saints of Stonington, Mountaineville, and Little Deer Isle. I left about November 1, arriving at Rockland about half past nine same night, there being no connection for Stonington until next day at two o'clock in the afternoon. I stayed over at Thorndike Hotel for night, and left for Stonington on the little steamer Vinal Haven. The wind was blowing almost a gale. The boat has always been considered unsafe in a storm because of its peculiar build, being top-heavy. It seemed impossible for it to survive the terrible strain; women were screaming and fainting in their fright, and men's faces paled. And these were people who faced all kinds of danger on the sea, being almost born on the water. They understood the danger and therefore feared. I was lifted up bodily from the seat upon which I sat and landed on my back near the gunwale of the boat. I said in my mind, is this to be my last trip? Is this boat to be my coffin? And the still voice of the Spirit said to me "Are you not on the Lord's business?" I replied, "Yes." "Well," again came the same voice, "can not he take care of you?" I said, "Yes, he can," and with that came a calm indescribable.

The tempest did not cease its fury, neither did the boat cease to roll, and from a human standpoint of judging it seemed it must turn bottom up. But all the way I could sing amid the tempest, "Praise the Lord." I never got such a shaking up on the sea before and was not even seasick. Some were so ill with fright that they had to receive special attention. I could have told them the boat would get into port safe but was not instructed to do so as I was only assured of my own safety.

My work among the Saints in Maine was generally of a very pleasant character, especially in Stonington, and the Master was truly good to me and his people while I was among them. Almost every night while among them we had meetings, not always preaching; we held quite a number of priesthood meetings, parliamentary drills, Religious meetings, for we organized a society in Stonington with great promise of success.

What is badly needed in Maine is a good spiritually minded high priest, who can give his attention to the work in strengthening the Saints, and keeping before them all the time their duties. Splendid results would follow work of this kind. There are some good people interested in our work, who would certainly come into the church if some one could be located in Stonington and confine his labors to the two islands and thus keep up the interest. The local men in charge are doing well—but serious obstacles are in the way of some performing the work they desire to do. Some of the priesthood are slothful and are stumbling-blocks to others, especially to the young. Bro. R. W. Farrell was with me for about three weeks and our associations were pleasant and profitable.

May the year be one of great blessing to the church. War, strikes, revolution, and general disorder are rife in the world. What will this year chronicle? Let peace reign in Israel.

Your brother in Christ,

R. BULLARD.

"Shivering graybeards shuffle and stumble,
Righting themselves with a frozen frown,
Grumbling at every snowy tumble;
But young folk know why the snow came down."

The Saints were called a day or two ago to lay away to rest the remains of a Bro. Enoch Brown, one of the Lord's poor ones, who had in his last hours passed through trials distressing to contemplate. Also the little daughter of Bro. Jack Totty died recently. Their remains were interred in Mound Grove Cemetery.

There have been severe cases of la grippe and pneumonia, and several of the aged ones are afflicted; among them our faithful brother and companion, for whom we ask the prayers of the Saints.

Quite a number have met with serious accidents, —our young brother, Georgie Worrell, Sr. W. H. Garrett, and H. Newkirk; and Sr. Eibel Etzenhouser narrowly escaped drowning last Monday night while out with a party skating on Crisp's Lake. They are all doing nicely.

An item we wish to call attention to is the receipt of a letter written by a sister residing at Sarvis Point, Missouri, on the subject of a proposed farming enterprise, and addressed to the general recording secretary of the Daughters of Zion. The sister's proposition possibly may be considered the clarion call of what might prove a golden opportunity; but we inclose the letter, as it is intended for the investigation of the Daughters of Zion "committee," with the request that it be carefully perused. Learning of this farming project reminds us of what has been said in regard to the tillage of the soil,—that it is the kind of labor which is the "recognized foundation of civilization," and a general detachment from it is "an element of social weakness." And so we can fall in line with our sister long enough, at any rate, to consider the enterprise, which she speaks of as the establishing of an orphans' home, an agriculturist institute, based on the farm and kindred industries, which of course would be self-sustaining.

The adaptability that the women of the church have acquired in the management of the home both indoor and out, in city and on the farm and ranch, also in the training of children, in housework, in cookery, and all the domestic arts,—all have tended to develop them as successful workers in just such a plant as an orphans' home.

And there are doubtless those who are fully capable of leading in all departments of the work.

This, our sister's idea, may not contemplate a short road to wealth; but by the faithful carrying on of some such enterprise the women of the church might be enabled to leave their children a most worthy heritage.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

February 3, 1905.

SARVIS POINT, Missouri, January 24, 1905.

Dear Sister Horton: I understand that the Daughters of Zion are contemplating building an orphans' home, and desire to tell you what has been on my mind for some time, and you can present it to the committee and see what they think about it. I have been thinking that this is the best country in Zion's land to build the orphans' home, where it will be self-sustaining, and not a burden to the house of God in any way. A suitable tract of land could be obtained, I think, with all the stock thrown in, at a very reasonable figure. There are nine hundred and twenty acres of land that could, I believe, be bought for nine thousand three hundred dollars. This tract comprises five farms, all having houses and orchard except one of forty acres. There is plenty of timber for all purposes. Four hundred and twenty-nine acres are in cultivation, perfectly level and free from stone; and there are two or three hundred acres which are not in cultivation, perfectly level. This is the healthiest country that I ever lived in, pure water, and air free from contagion. There are blackberries in summer, by the acre, to keep children busy. This land is seven or eight miles south of Seymore, our nearest railroad town. If six hundred Saints would give twenty-five dollars apiece it would make fifteen thousand dollars. I would head the list with twenty-five dollars, and I think I could get others. There are quite a number of Saints four miles south of here.

Your sister in Christ,

MARY A. ATWELL.

Extracts from Letters.

Mrs. James Schfield, 1129 West Avenue, Buffalo, New York: "I hope conference will see its way clear to send an elder to this city, to try to open the work here. Our home is always open to any of the ministry at any time. I do miss meeting with the Saints very much, and pray earnestly that the way will open for the work to start here. We occasionally go to Niagara Falls to meet with the Saints. I am strong in the faith, although comparatively alone. I hope sometime to have more of my loved ones with me."

Thomas Mills, Westville, Nova Scotia, Canada: "My wife and family landed safe in Joseph's land. Though they had a very rough passage, they feel none the worse for it now. We are striving to do what we can to spread the gospel."

James Cooper, Seminole, Alabama: "I am deeply interested in this beautiful work, which is the work of God. If any Saint has a copy of the HERALD containing the account of the scourge that appeared at Powell's Point, Milton, Florida, written by Bro. S. D. Allen, please send it to me."

Mollie Reed, Stonewall, Indian Territory: "It will be three years the first of March since I was baptized by Bro. J. F. Grimes. I was thirteen years old the first day of February. Many people in this country say they want to hear our elders preach, and one man last night expressed his marked appreciation of Bro. Aylor's preaching."

I. C. Willis, Moline, Illinois: "Bro. Russell and Bailey have been holding a series of meetings at Carbon Cliff, nearly every one in the little city hearing the word. Bro. Russell became ill and Bro. Thorburn took his place. Sold twelve Zion's Praises, and three copies of the Book of Mormon. Two names for baptism. More favorable to the cause."

RAILROAD RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Preliminary notice is hereby given that reduced rates on the certificate plan, to the General Conference and Conventions of Auxiliary Societies, to be held in April next, at Lamoni, Iowa, have been secured from the Southwestern, Western, Central, and Trunk Line Passenger Associations—including territory from Buffalo and New York on the east, to Denver, Colorado, and Texas points on the west and south. In addition, the regular rate of two cents per mile—the equivalent of the certificate rate—prevails in Trans-Continental territory to Missouri River points, from the coast and extreme West.

The New England and Southeastern Associations declined because of limited attendance. When our people in the South-east—south of the Potomac River and east of the Mississippi—can guarantee an attendance of fifteen to twenty-five on certificate plan, the rate can be obtained for them. The New England Association will grant the rate on a guaranteed attendance of about twenty-five.

ENROLLMENTS IN QUORUMS.

A large number of applications for enrollment in quorums of elders, priests, teachers, and deacons remains in hand. Until such time as additional quorums are organized, or the system of quorum organization reorganized, and quorums organized in the various missions, stakes, or districts, it is probable that but few who desire enrollment can be accommodated, and that largely by the filling of vacancies in existing quorums. Those desiring to make application will be supplied with application blanks on request to the undersigned.

I Know Quit-to-Bac Will Cure. It is a God-Given Remedy

So says Bro. I. M. Dungan of Woodbine, Iowa. Writing July 3, 1904, says: "After having used tobacco for 30 years I feel that I am thoroughly cured of the habit by the use of your 'Quit-to-bac.' I commenced using 'Quit-to-bac' March 8, 1901, and used two and one half boxes, and have had no desire for the past two months, my health is better every way and I feel like a new man. I feel that I can not speak too highly of the merits of 'Quit-to-bac,' for I believe 'Quit-to-bac' to be a God-given remedy, that it will cure one of the most filthy and useless habits Satan ever invented; therefore I unqualifiedly recommend it to all addicted to the use of tobacco in any form, and will cheerfully answer inquiries from any one as to my case—how I treated myself, etc., if a stamp is inclosed. You are at liberty to use this recommendation as seems best to you. I close with a heartfelt 'God bless you.'" Three boxes Quit-to-bac postpaid only $1.50 guaranteed to cure or money refunded for the asking. Address, (Bro.) B. F. ORDWAY, Peoria, Illinois.

JUST CONCLUSIONS REACHED BY PUBLIC WRITERS ON THE RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE INTRODUCTION OF POLYGAMY INTO THE RELIGIOUS CONTROVERSY IN AMERICA.

The question as to the responsibility for the introduction of polygamy or plural marriage into what is known as Mormonism is a subject of controversy. We have long been contending that a proper understanding of the history of the past position occupied by the man would show that Joseph Smith the Seer was not responsible for its introduction. We give conclusions reached by different writers as follows:

The Saturday Evening Post for February 4, 1905, published at Philadelphia, has a striking article on "The Mormon system," by H. C. Williams. We select from this article the following. After referring to the spirit of adventure and religious fervor that led the people to Utah after their expulsion from Illinois, Mr. Williams says:

But an empire demanded a population, and the adoption of a polygamous code would supply this ad libitum. It was supplied by Brigham Young and his lieutenants with an ingenuity that included every subjective emotion of the human mind, and nowhere, save perhaps by the Egyptian priesthood, has more effort been applied in systematizing superstition than is displayed in the details of the Mormon creed.

In this statement he has unconsciously voiced the sentiment which has entered into the argumentative effort made by those who have practiced polygamy in Utah to sustain it and give it credence among the people. We refer to it in passing, as a great mistake. It is true that an empire would need a population. It is not true in America that the introduction of polygamy necessarily gave this population. Mr. Williams has fallen into a similar error to the one which our polygamic defenders have been in ever since their attempt to establish it in the West.

The population of any community is not to be rated from the number of husbands, but from the number of wives. And it being a fact undisputed and undisputable that the number of men in the territories including the Mormon church from the time of its settlement in 1847 up to the present time has been in excess of the number of women, hence the increase of population must be reckoned from the mothers and not from the fathers. The same number of mothers, under a system of monogamy, would give an equal or greater number of progeny than plural marriage has done. Here is an instance: President Brigham Young left a will devising property to nineteen wives and forty-seven children,—two and one half children to the mother. The population outside of polygamous Mormonism in Utah shows the usual percentage obtaining as the rule in the Western and Middle States, in the estimating of population, of five to the family, father and mother and three children. A family, according to this will of President Brigham Young, shows only three and one half, mother and two and one half children, and the nineteenth part of the husband. This gives only three and one-half to the family but leaves out the man as he can not be rated with only one family. There has been no greater increase in population from polygamy, counting the number of mothers and comparing them with the number of mothers in other localities, than can be shown to exist in monogamy, so that the premise borrowed from the argument of persistent officials and others in defence of polygamy by Mr. Williams fails. No need to refute the argument.

Mr. Williams further says that of those who came to Utah, the pioneers only were Americans; and that the introduction of polygamy was an afterthought. This agrees with the statement made by President Woodruff and others, Joseph F. Smith included, in appealing for amnesty to the President of the United States, that the introduction of it was in 1852.

Generally speaking, only the pioneers who came to Utah between 1848 and 1852 were Americans. The implanting of polygamy, which was foreign to the religion of the first Prophet, Joseph Smith, and which was a political afterthought, turned American blood away from the institution, and the bulk of the population has since mainly been drawn from the artisan and peasant classes of England, Wales, Scotland, and the Scandinavian countries. . . . At least it was with oracular indefiniteness that Joseph Smith¹ answered Senator Burrows a few weeks ago—that while “the suspension of the practice of polygamy was the result of a revelation, and it would require another revelation to put it in force, the revelation would not act unless the people should receive it. Nothing is forced upon the Mormon people.”

The Pennsylvania Grit, a paper published at Williamsburg, Pennsylvania, in its issue for February 8, 1905, has an article under the caption of “Stirring events in the early history of the Mormons,” including “the tragedy at Nauvoo, inception of the doctrine of blood atonement, and the Mountain Meadow massacre.”

Included in the recital of the murder at Carthage Jail, the county-seat of Hancock County, Illinois, the writer of this article, Mr. Arnold C. Grosvenor, exonerates Joseph Smith from the origination of plural marriage in the following manner:

Smith did not “discover” that it was necessary for the communicants of the new religion to practice polygamy. It remained for Brigham Young to add this feature and that of blood atonement, for which the nation owed him a debt which should have been paid before he died. . . . Upon Brigham Young rests the responsibility for polygamy and blood atonement in the Mormon religion, neither of which was in the original creed. He introduced them both about 1850. . . . The 50's were strenuous years for Mormonism, marked as they were by the Mountain Meadow massacre, the most terrible blot on Mormon history; the rebellion against the United States government; the upbuilding of the doctrine of blood atonement; the “reformation” movement, which was as bad as Mormonism itself; the enforcement of polygamy, and many other things.

These writers have placed before the people a plain statement from their convictions upon the examination of the evidences presented to them. We give them to the readers of the HERALD, believing that they are of value, and will show the present trend of the public thought in regard to this vexing question.

TO STIR UP YOUR PURE MINDS.

“This second epistle, beloved, I now write unto you; in which I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance: that ye may be mindful of the words, which were spoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us, the apostles of the Lord and Savior.”—2 Peter 3: 1, 2.

“Let the brother of low degree rejoice in that he is exalted, but the rich, in that he is made low.”—James 1: 9, 10. “The poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low; for the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare.”—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2. “My brethren, ye can not have the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, and yet have respect to persons.”—James 2: 1.

Even though they may have their names on the church record, if they have respect to persons they are lacking in the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ. James says they can not have it.

“Now if there come unto your assembly a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in also a poor man in vile raiment; and ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and say unto him, Sit thou here in a good place; and to the poor, Stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool; are ye not then in yourselves partial judges, and become evil in your thoughts?”—James 2: 2-4, I. T.

God does not discriminate against the poor because of their poverty. It is righteousness that counts with God. Riches can not buy favor with him.

“Hearken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him? But ye have despised the poor.”—James 2: 5, 6.

It seems to be human nature to despise the poor, especially when one has become possessed of sufficient of this world's goods to cause him to feel independent. It frequently happens, too, that the one who despises his poorer neighbor, has gained his worldly riches by questionable means which the despised, poverty-stricken individual would scorn to use. No wonder that God chose the poor and made them heirs of the kingdom which he has promised to them that love him. Where did man get his right to hoard up riches while hundreds and thousands are in destitute circumstances?

"Woe unto you rich men, that will not give your substance to the poor, for your riches will canker your souls; and this shall be your lamentation in the day of visitation, and of judgment, and of indignation: The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and my soul is not saved!"—Doctrine and Covenants 56: 5.

Peculiar conditions confront us in the world to-day. The rich are becoming richer; the poor are becoming poorer and more numerous. Wealth is being concentrated in the hands of a few, while the number who are in abject poverty is steadily increasing. Social and economic conditions and business methods are responsible for this to a great extent.

The wealth in the hands of the few is so manipulated that the accumulations to the rich are increased and multiplied, while the poor are oppressed and their opportunity to accumulate a small proportion of this world's goods is being limited more and more, on this side and on that, in every conceivable way, as the cost of living is advanced, until they are powerless to lay in store the small portion that should rightly belong to them. There is only one sure remedy for these conditions. That is a just application of the law of Christ. Under the law of God one man would accumulate property no faster than another; all would accumulate alike, and there would be no poor among them. The man whose vocation brought larger profits than another would have more surplus to consecrate for the good of the work, but his accumulations for individual purposes should be no greater than those of his brethren. These heavenly conditions under the law can not obtain until all the Saints are willing to do Christ's bidding. Until then, suffering, privation, and want will be the lot of many in the church, as well as those of the world; and until the Saints are willing they will not be prepared for the coming of the Lord. However, those who find it hard to obtain the necessary things of life, because of surrounding conditions which they are unable to control and overcome, should endeavor to cultivate a spirit of contentment. Poverty is no excuse for the cultivation of a spirit of covetousness. The admonition of John the Baptist to the soldiers is condemnatory of anything of that kind: "Do violence to no man, neither accuse falsely; and be content with your wages."—Luke 3: 21. Greed is as unworthy in one person as another whether poor or rich. Unto the poor the Lord says:

"Woe unto you poor men, whose hearts are not broken, whose spirits are not contrite, and whose bellies are not satisfied, and whose hands are not stayed from laying hold upon other men's goods, whose eyes are full of greediness, who will not labor with their own hands!"—Doctrine and Covenants 56: 5. The Lord does not love a poor man's laziness and greediness.

But comfort to those who are trying to be contented with their lot is found in the following words: "Blessed are the poor, who are pure in heart, whose hearts are broken, and whose spirits are contrite, for they shall see the kingdom of God coming in power and great glory unto their deliverance; for the fatness of the earth shall be theirs."—Doctrine and Covenants 56: 6.

The words of the psalmist also create for them calm trust in the Lord: "Yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread."—Psalm 37: 25.

A WAR VETERAN.

It is not every day that we can chronicle the record of a veteran of the Mexican War while the soldier is still living. But we have in the person of Bro. B. S. Shaug, a veteran of both the Mexican and the Civil War, or the War of the Rebellion, the remembered animosities of which are fast dying out.

The North and the South fought side by side across the arid plains of Mexico, under Scott and Taylor against Santa and his generals, into the capital city, a victorious contingent of six thousand "Americanos," a war spectacle unparalleled since the days of Thermopylae.

The veterans of the Mexican War are now very few, and we gather the brief record of Bro. Shaug's career from a copy of the Eldon, Iowa, Weekly Forum, for February 3, 1905, sent us by the brother himself thinking that it would be interesting to many if not all the HERALD readers:

A GREAT WAR RECORD.

Among the veterans of this vicinity, of men who are able to quote some interesting war history from actual experience, is Doctor Bennett Stone Shaug. Mr. Shaug served in both the Mexican and Civil Wars and holds in his possession honorable discharges from both, which show an excellent war record in both instances.

Doctor Shaug was born in Mason County, Virginia, July 22, 1826, and has been a self-made man to the present day. In the year of 1841 he entered as clerk in the drug business at Cincinnati, Ohio, and later engaged to a river transportation company to float a flatboat cargo to New Orleans. In those days the transportation business on the river was far different from what it is to-day. Barge-loads of cargo, many very valuable, would be floated down the river with nothing to guide them but a clumsy wooden oar. Often these crafts with their valuable cargoes were floated on rocks or caught in storms and swamped. It was on one of these boats that Doctor Shaug made his trip to New Orleans in the early days of river craft, and he can tell some very interesting features concerning incidents which were actual experiences to him on that trip.

At New Orleans he engaged on a steamboat as cabin-boy and remained there until the spring of 1845, when he came to Farmington, Iowa, where he received two years' schooling. On the nineteenth day of April, 1847, the Des Moines river froze over and it was on this day that he enlisted to serve as a private soldier in the war with Mexico. His regiment went into camp at Fort Madison and later at Jefferson Barracks, remaining here until they were ordered to New Orleans to be shipped by water to Mexico, arriving at Vera Cruz on the third day of June, 1847. After the war he was sent to Covington, Kentucky, and honorably discharged on the fourth day of August, 1848. From Covington he returned to Farmington, Iowa, and took up the study of medicine.

When the late Rebellion broke out the doctor again took up arms and on the twenty-sixth day of February, 1864, enlisted to serve a period of three years or during the war. In this war he received the promotion to assistant surgeon and had under his charge five hundred men at Little Rock, Arkansas. He was honorably discharged on the ninth day of August, 1865, at the expiration of the war.

Doctor Shaug has earned a war record that few men living to-day in this vicinity can boast of, and one that is a great comfort for him to reflect on in his present retiring years. While he has reached the age of seventy-nine he is still active and in good health and is capable of taking care of his business affairs. At his office he holds the honorary discharges which tell in detail of the battles he participated in, they read as follows:

"TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

"Know ye, that Surgeon Bennett Stone Shaug, enlisted from Van Buren County, Iowa, April 19, 1847, and was mustered into the United States service as private of Company K, fifteenth regiment Ohio volunteer infantry, to serve five years, or during the Mexican War. The regiment was assigned to Ohio Brigade under General Marshall and participated in the following battles:

"Contreras, August 18, 1847; Chemulusco, August 19, 1847; Chapultepec, September 13, 1847; Mexico, September 14, 1847; Heralaulto, October 13, 1847; Atliteo, October 19, 1847. Was promoted to Commissary Sergeant and honorably discharged at Covington, Kentucky, August 4, 1848.

"Enlisted from Van Buren County, Iowa, February 26, 1864, and was mustered into the United States service at Camp McClellan as private of Company B, 3d regiment Iowa volunteer cavalry under Captain McKee and Colonel Bussey, to serve three years or during the war. The regiment was assigned to cavalry corps army of the west, and participated in the battles at Madison, April 20, 1863; St. Francis River, April 29; Big Creek, April 23; Lagrange, May 1; near Helena, July 4; and Jackson, Mississippi, July 9-16; Guntonon, Mississippi, June 10, 1864; Ripley, June 11; Tupela, July 14; Old Tonen, July 15; Campaign against Price in Missouri, including battles at Independence, Missouri, October 22; Big Blue River, October 23; Osage, October 25; Wilson's raid into Alabama, including battles at Elenezer Church, April 1, 1865; Selma, April 12; West Point and Columbus, Georgia, April 14; and Macon, Georgia, April 19, 1865. Promoted to Assistant Surgeon. Honorably discharged at Atlanta, Georgia, August 9, 1865, on account of close of war."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

According to the census report for 1900, volume 2, page 205, only about one third of those who live in the large cities own the homes in which they dwell. In thirty-eight of the larger cities of the United States, only about three hundred and thirty thousand homes are owned free of debt and mortgage, while there are over three hundred thousand mortgaged homes, and over one million two hundred and ninety thousand rented homes. It is no doubt true that many of these renters are abundantly able to own a home of their own, but that a large proportion of them find their means inadequate even to furnish themselves a rented home is evidenced in the fact that in 1903, in the Borough of Manhattan alone, part of New York, sixty thousand four hundred and sixty-three families were evicted from their homes, unable to meet the demands of the landlords. It is said that "one in every ten persons who die in New York, is buried at public expense in the Potter's Field." It can not be expected that we will have a perfectly contented and happy nation as long as such conditions exist, and unfortunately, they seem to be growing worse instead of better.

Quite satisfactory additions to the library of Grace-land College have been made during the year 1904. The number of volumes in the library at the close of the year was two thousand eight hundred, of which about six hundred were pamphlets. More than nine hundred bound volumes and about three hundred and fifty pamphlets were added during 1904. A large proportion of these were Government publications, but many persons interested in the college sent in one or more books. The largest individual donation during the year was from Bro. Wallace E. Nelson, formerly of Nebraska, but now living in Canada, who sent some forty volumes. More donations of this kind would be appreciated.

A Prayer.

When our souls, crushed down with sorrow,
Dread the living through the morrow,
May that morrow's rosy breaking
Find our trust, O God, unshaken.
Find us watching, through our sadness,
For the time we'll hear with gladness:
"Weary children, enter in."

If Thy blessings Thou art sending,
And our hearts with joy are bounding,
Thankfully Thy gifts receiving,
May we, "Humbled by thy giving,"
Yet look onward to that dawning,
When, our faces homeward turning,
To thy joy shall enter in.

Thou, who gavest all life's beauty,
Thou, who teachest all life's duty,
When by clouds of doubt surrounded
May our faith on thee be founded;
Looking forward, nothing fearing,
To the time we'll hear the cheering—
"Well done, loved one, enter in."

MORE ABOUT THE PIONEERS OF OTTERTAIL.

Having been asked to furnish an account of the present condition of what is known as the "Cutlerite" church, in addition to what has been printed from my brother Chauncey's writings, I shall endeavor to give briefly the main points in which our belief differs from that of the "Josephites," with scriptural proofs for the same.

While we believe in the gospel as taught by Jesus Christ when he was on earth, also in the church as established through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith, we believe as this gospel was preached to the Gentiles, was rejected by them, the prophets slain, and the church had run into wickedness, that they bound up the law and sealed up the testimony, and that the gospel should be preached no more to the Gentile world—that it is a mistake for any one to do so.

In Doctrine and Covenants 85: 23, we read:

Therefore, tarry ye, and labor diligently, that you may be perfected in your ministry, to go forth among the Gentiles for the last time, as many as the mouth of the Lord shall name, to bind up the law, and seal up the testimony.

And in section 45, verse 4, we read:

And when the time of the Gentiles is come in, a light shall break forth among them that sit in darkness, and it shall be the fullness of my gospel; but they receive it not, for they perceive not the light, and they turn their hearts from me because of the precepts of men; and in that generation shall the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

We have no faith in the calling of any of those claiming to be the rightful leaders of the church after the death of the Prophet, except that of Alpheus Cutler, who was appointed by Joseph Smith to carry the gospel to the Lamanites. Just why this attempt was not successful we do not know, but we believe it will be taken to them at some future time, that they will receive it, and will be the ones to build up Zion.

We believe Independence, Missouri, to be the place where Zion is to be built up, but that any attempt on the part of the Gentiles in this day to accomplish that work will not be pleasing or acceptable to the Lord; for after the building of the temple at Independence was hindered, according to Doctrine and Covenants 107: 15, the Lord said:

Behold, it behooveth me to require that work no more at the hands of those sons of men, but to accept of their offerings; and the iniquity and transgression of my holy laws and commandments, I will visit upon the heads of those who hindered my work.

That the Lamanites will be the ones to build up Zion we gather from various passages in the scriptures. In the Book of Mormon Christ says:

At that day when the Gentiles shall sin against my gospel, and shall be lifted up in the pride of their hearts above all nations, and above all the people of the whole earth, and shall be filled with all manner of lyings, and of deceits, and of mischiefs, and all manner of hypocrisy, and murders, and priest-crafts, and whoredoms, and of secret abominations; and if they shall do all those things, and shall reject the fullness of my gospel, behold, saith the Father, I will bring the fullness of my gospel from among them; and then will I remember my covenant which I have made unto my people, O house of Israel, and I will bring my gospel unto them; and I will show unto thee, O house of Israel, that the Gentiles shall not have power over you, but I will remember my covenant unto you, O house of Israel, and ye shall come unto the knowledge of the fullness of my gospel.—3 Nephi 7: 30. Large edition.

According to the account of Joseph's blessing as recorded in Genesis, his descendants were to inherit this land, and that will be fulfilled when the Indians, the descendants of Lehi, recover their possessions here. However, as the Lamanites were allowed to join the church while the gospel was being delivered to the Gentiles, so also, if during the time it is being preached to the Lamanites, any Gentiles hear it and wish to come in and be numbered with them, they will have the privilege, for Christ said:

If they will repent, and hearken unto my words, and harden not their hearts, I will establish my church among them, and they shall come in unto the covenant, and be numbered among this the remnant of Jacob, unto whom I have given this land for their inheritance, and they shall assist my people, the remnant of Jacob; and also, as many of the house of Israel as shall come, that they may build a city which shall be called the New Jerusalem; and then shall they assist my people that they may be gathered in, who are scattered upon all the face of the land, in unto the New Jerusalem.—3 Nephi 10: 1.

While we, as a church, do not expect to accomplish any great work now, we believe the Lord will, in his own time and in his own way, bring about the restoration of Israel, and restore this land to its rightful owners, the Lamanites.

AS SEEN BY OTHER EYES.

The writer of the foregoing article says:

We believe as this gospel was preached to the Gentiles, was rejected by them, the prophets slain, and the church had run into wickedness, that they bound up the law and sealed up the testimony, and that the gospel should be preached no more to the Gentile world—that it is a mistake for any one to do so.

We look upon this theory as wrong for the following reasons:

1. It is based upon a wrong premise. They must have supposed that the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith at the hands of a mob was conclusive evidence that the Gentiles had rejected the gospel. There is no evidence to support the theory. The prophets were not slain nor the Saints scattered because of the rejecting of the gospel by the Gentiles. We must look somewhere else for the reason; and we do not need to look far before we find it, if we are willing to take the word of God as revealed to us. The Lord told the Saints in Missouri, plainly, that if they failed to comply with his laws he would not suffer them to pollute his holy land. They failed and were driven out. (See Doctrine and Covenants 88: 8.)

Again the Lord spoke to the Saints at Nauvoo, in 1841, as follows:

If my people will hearken unto my voice, and unto the voice of my servants whom I have appointed to lead my people, behold, verily I say unto you, they shall not be moved out of their place. But if they will not hearken to my voice, nor unto the voice of these men whom I have appointed, they shall not be blessed, because they pollute mine holy grounds, and mine holy ordinances and charters, and my holy words, which I give unto them. And it shall come to pass, that if you build a house unto my name, and do not the things that I say, I will not perform the oath which I make unto you, neither fulfill the promises which ye expect at my hands, saith the Lord; for instead of blessings, ye, by your own works, bring cursings, wrath, indignation, and judgments, upon your own heads, by your follies, and by all your abominations, which you practice before me, saith the Lord.

They were moved from their place, which is strong evidence that they did not hearken unto the voice of the Lord, nor the voice of his servants; but they polluted his holy grounds, and brought cursings and indignation and judgment down upon their own heads by their follies and abominations. This is the reason they were moved out of their place, is the logical conclusion. This is the reason their enemies were given power over them. This is the reason the church was rejected with her dead,—not that the Gentiles had rejected the gospel. The real, deep, underlying cause lay with the Saints, not with the Gentiles.

2. The time had not yet come for the gospel to go to the Jews, or the times of the Gentiles were not yet fulfilled, as will be seen by reading Luke 21:24: "And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Jerusalem was trodden down of the Gentiles for years after the prophets were slain, and is under Gentile rule to-day. The Jews, it is true, are gathering back in rapidly increasing numbers, and the signs of the times indicate that Gentile times are nearly full,—much nearer than they were sixty years ago, but there is not a shred of evidence that Gentile times were fulfilled in 1844. The same thought as expressed by Luke is found also in Doctrine and Covenants. Speaking of the destruction of Jerusalem the Lord says, "When that day shall come, shall a remnant be scattered among all nations, but they shall be gathered again; but they shall remain until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." The remnant is among the nations, and only a beginning has been made in the gathering that shall take place. Gentile times are not yet fulfilled.

3. The fact that Alpheus Cutler may have been set apart by Joseph Smith to take a mission to the Indians is a small thing upon which to base the belief that the time had come to turn to the house of Israel with the gospel. Other men had been sent on missions to the Indians years before Alpheus Cutler went. In 1830 a revelation was given instructing Parley P. Pratt, Oliver Cowdery, Peter Whitmer, Jr., and Ziba Peterson to go into the wilderness among the Lamanites, and yet there is no intimation that the time had come for turning from the Gentiles to the Jews. Oliver Cowdery, with Parley P. Pratt, took a mission to the Lamanites in 1831 in harmony with a revelation commanding it; but was that a sign that the gospel was now taken from the Gentiles, and should go to the house of Israel, and that it would be a mistake to preach to the Gentiles any more?

Speaking of a conference held in 1830, Times and Seasons, volume 4, page 172, says:

At this time a great desire was manifested by several of the elders respecting the remnants of the house of Joseph, the Lamanites, residing in the West; knowing that the purposes of God were great to that people, and hoping that the time had come when the promises of the Almighty in regard to that people were about to be accomplished, and that they would receive the gospel and enjoy its blessings.

Many have been hoping the same thing ever since that day, but evidently the time has not yet arrived when this work is to be accomplished. The writer of the article under review says he does not know just why the attempt to carry the gospel to the Lamanites was not successful. Was it not because the time had not come for its accomplishment, and the Lord was not directing in the movement? No better reason could be found. The very fact that the gospel has not yet gone to the Jews ought to suggest the thought that the time had not come in 1844.

4. There is absolutely nothing to support the thought that when the time does come for the gospel to go to the Jews, it will be a mistake to ever preach to the Gentiles again, if opportunity offers.

5. The revelation says that in the generation "when the time of the Gentiles is come in," and the light breaks forth among them, which shall be the fullness of the gospel, "in that generation shall the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled." That does not necessarily mean that it shall be fulfilled in fourteen years after the generation begins. It may be along toward the close of the generation; and the generation is not ended yet.

We accept the revelation to the ministry directing them to labor diligently that they might be perfected in their ministry, as quoted in the foregoing article, "to go forth among the Gentiles for the last time." That is just what the "Josephites" are doing. That is just what the "Cutlerites" have failed to do. This is not another time, not another dispensation; but it is the last time, the last dispensation, the dispensation of the fullness of times. The law is not bound up yet, so that language is still in force.

The revelation was given in 1832, and those particular men, if the ground is taken that certain ones were specified for a certain mission, took several missions during the twelve years subsequent to 1832. They were undoubtedly sent out several times after that, so that the word time must mean dispensation.

In our judgment no other reasonable conclusion can be reached.

The writer next says:

We have no faith in the calling of any of those claiming to be the rightful leaders of the church after the death of the Prophet, except that of Alpheus Cutler, who was appointed by Joseph Smith to carry the gospel to the Lamanites.

Why make a statement of that kind? Does setting a man apart to carry the gospel to the Lamanites constitute him a rightful leader of the church? or indicate that he was a lawful and legal successor to Joseph Smith the prophet? Did the fact that Pratt, Cowdery, Whitmer, and Peterson were sent to preach to the Indians place them in line of succession, and rightful heirs to the promise: "In thee, and in thy seed, shall the kindred of the earth be blessed"? No, no.

In Doctrine and Covenants 107: 13, we read: "And now I say unto you, as pertaining to my boarding-house, which I have commanded you to build, for the boarding of strangers, Let it be built unto my name, and let my name be named upon it, and let my servant Joseph and his house have place therein, from generation to generation." Why was Joseph and his house to have place therein from generation to generation? Because of his calling, his blessing, which was also to be placed upon his posterity after him. The next clause explains it: "For this anointing have I put upon his head, that his blessing shall also be upon the head of his posterity after him." His blessing! What was that? He was to be called "a seer, a translator, a prophet, an apostle of Jesus Christ, an elder of the church," (section 19: 1,) and "I have given him the keys of the mysteries and the revelations, which are sealed, until I shall appoint unto them another in his stead" (section 27: 2).

There is no need to undertake a lengthy explanation concerning the one who was appointed to take the place of the Prophet as his successor. It was well understood by the church at Nauvoo that his son, Joseph, would be his successor. Later it was taught by "Brighamites," "Cutlerites," and "Strangites" that Joseph would yet take his father's place. For this they waited, ostensibly. And he did take his father's place by direction of the Spirit to him, telling him where to go. Alas! "Brighamites," "Cutlerites," and "Strangites" refused to believe it. And why? Simply because he did not come to them. This is the excuse they will have to offer at the judgment-bar: "Well, we thought he would come to us, but he did not, so we concluded we would not go to him."

The fact that the enemies of the Saints came upon them and hindered the building of the boarding-house, that it was never finished, in no way affects the statement that "his blessing shall also be upon the head of his posterity after him," nor the promise, "In thee, and in thy seed, shall the kindred of the earth be blessed." Neither does this promise to his posterity and his seed mean that his blessing should go from Smith to Cutler, and from Cutler to Whiting, and so on.

The writer of the article under review further says:

We believe Independence, Missouri, to be the place where Zion is to be built up, but that any attempt on the part of the Gentiles in this day to accomplish that work will not be pleasing nor acceptable to the Lord.

He quotes the revelation relieving those of the responsibility of the work, who had put forth an effort but had been hindered by their enemies; but there is nothing in the revelation to indicate that the work would not be required at the hands of the Gentiles, so called, afterwards, at a time when their enemies should not hinder.

And is it true that the Lamanites are the ones to build up Zion? Let us see what the Lord has said; and as we read it, comfort comes to our hearts, and assurance is given that the word of the Lord will be fulfilled. In a revelation given in 1833, speaking concerning those who were driven out of the land of Zion on account of their failure to keep the law, (to which we have already referred,) the Lord said:

Therefore let your hearts be comforted concerning Zion, for all flesh is in mine hands: be still, and know that I am God. Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy; to build up the waste places of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4.

That is what many of them and their children are doing; they are being gathered in from the places to which they were scattered and led. "And all this," as the Lord says, "that the prophets might be fulfilled."

To support the thought that the Lamanites will be the ones to build up Zion the Book of Mormon was quoted. But please notice that the quotation, after mentioning the abominations that may and will no doubt prevail among the Gentiles, uses this language: "And if they shall do all those things, and shall reject the fullness of my gospel, behold, saith the Father, I will bring the fullness of my gospel from among them." We have shown, however, that the Gentiles had not rejected the gospel in 1844, and indications are that Gentile times are not yet quite fulfilled. Then you see, if Alpheus Cutler was the rightful leader of the church, and all others were wrong, that the "Cutlerites" have lost sixty years of valuable time. And sixty years of idleness, in the closing dispensation, the last time, when the Lord will cut short his work in righteousness, when he has commanded his servants to lift up their voices, and to cease not to cry repentance unto this generation, would forfeit their right to any claim to be his church, if nothing else had. They have evidently forgotten the language of God: "Wherefore, if ye believe me, ye will labor while it is called to-day," and "Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man)," or they have not believed all that is written.

The writer further says:

According to the account of Joseph's blessing as recorded in Genesis, his descendants were to inherit this land, and that will be fulfilled when the Indians, the descendants of Lehi, recover their possessions here.

For two thousand years the descendants of Joseph, (Nephites and Lamanites) were sole possessors of this land. Joseph's blessing was being fulfilled then, in part at least. By some means the idea, whether correct or not, obtained in the early church that the Lamanites were descendants of Ephraim. I remember, when a boy, hearing a hymn sung by the "Cutlerites," from their hymn-book, in which the poet (W. W. Phelps was the author) incorporates that thought, and it impressed upon my mind, as perhaps upon others, the idea that the Lamanites were descendants of Ephraim. The first verse of the hymn reads as follows:

"O, stop and tell me, Red Man,
Who are you, why you roam,
And how you get your living;
Have you no God, no home?"

In the third verse the question is answered thus:

"I once was pleasant Ephraim,
When Jacob for me prayed;
But O, how blessings vanish,
When man from God has strayed!"

But here is where the Book of Mormon and the poet clash, as will be seen by the following:

And Aminadi was a descendant of Nephi, who was a son of Lehi, who came out of the land of Jerusalem, who was a descendant of Manasseh, who was the son of Joseph, who was sold into Egypt by the hands of his brethren.—Alma 8: 1.

Jacob said, "Let them grow into a multitude in the midst of the earth." And when Joseph remonstrated with his father and asked him to put his right hand on Manasseh's head, for he was the elder, Jacob said, "I know it, my son, I know it; he also shall become a people, and he also shall be great; but truly his younger brother shall be greater than he." Manasseh did become a great people in the midst of the earth. But his younger brother, Ephraim, was to become greater. Has he become greater? When and where? Can any one tell? Has it happened in the past? Is it fulfilled in the present? Is it to be fulfilled in the future? Who will answer? Jacob continued, "His [Ephraim's] seed shall become a multitude of nations." The prophet Hosea says: "Ephraim hath mixed himself among the people." Ephraim is mixed among the people and is a multitude of nations. Was it in this way that he was to become so much greater than Manasseh? Moses in blessing the tribe of Joseph said, "His horns are like the horns of unicorns; with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth; and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh." Does this foretell the gathering; when the people will be pushed together? If so, then Ephraim shall predominate over Manasseh ten to one. That does not look like the Lamanites will have it all to do in building up Zion.

Ephraim is mixed with the people, thus becoming a multitude of nations, and in order that he may be gathered out the gospel must be preached to the nations, and in this way Ephraim may become the first-born, according to the covenant, being the first to receive the new birth in this last time.

To impress the thought that Ephraim will occupy an important place in the building up of Zion I quote as follows:

And they who are in the north countries shall come in remembrance before the Lord, and their prophets shall hear his voice, and shall no longer stay themselves, and they shall smite the rocks, and the ice shall flow down at their presence. And an highway shall be cast up in the midst of the great deep: Their enemies shall become a prey unto them, and in the barren deserts there shall come forth pools of living water; and the parched ground shall no longer be a thirsty land. And they shall bring forth their rich treasures unto the children of Ephraim my servants. And the boundaries of the everlasting hills shall tremble at their presence. And they shall be filled with songs of everlasting joy. Behold, this is the blessing of the everlasting God upon the tribes of Israel, and the richer blessing upon the head of Ephraim and his fellows. And they also of the tribe of Judah, after their pain, shall be sanctified in holiness before the Lord to dwell in his presence day and night for ever and ever.

Ephraim must be gathered out of the nations before he can fulfill this important office. Note that while all the tribes of Israel are to be blessed, yet the "richer blessing" is to "be upon the head of Ephraim and his fellows." How can this be accomplished if Manasseh only, (the Lamanites,) are to build up Zion, and the gospel is to be preached only to Judah (the Jews), while Ephraim, mixed among the nations, is denied the privilege of hearing the gospel?

POINTS TO REMEMBER.

1. That the Gentiles had not rejected the gospel in 1844.
2. That the church was rejected because of its wickedness.
3. That Alpheus Cutler was only set apart to take a mission to the Lamanites.
4. That his setting apart covered no more ground than that.
5. That no record made before the Prophet's death even hints that Alpheus Cutler would be the Prophet's successor.
6. That the Lord told Joseph Smith his posterity should inherit his blessing, and promised that in him and his seed should the nations be blessed.
7. That all evidence found recorded prior to the Prophet's death supports the belief that his son would be his successor.

8. That responsible parties testify that the Prophet did bless and set apart his son to take his place.

9. That in the establishing of the church by Christ and the apostles, when the apostles turned to the Gentiles with the gospel they did not cease to preach to the Jews if opportunity offered.

10. That it is by no means a foregone conclusion that when the time comes in this last dispensation to turn from the Gentiles to the Jews with the gospel, it will be wrong to preach to the Gentiles if opportunity offers.

11. That descendants of Manasseh are found among the Lamanites upon this land, and, according to the Book of Mormon, upon the islands of the sea.

12. That the descendants of Ephraim are mixed among the people, a multitude of nations.

13. That Ephraim is of the house of Israel.

14. That the gospel is preached to the Gentile nations to gather out Ephraim.

15. That Ephraim is greater than Manasseh.

16. That in the gathering there will be ten of Ephraim to one of Manasseh.

17. That the richer blessing shall be upon Ephraim, and he will have an important part in the building up of Zion.

18. That this land is inhabited by descendants of Ephraim and Manasseh to-day.

19. That the "Cutlerites" have disregarded the admonition to labor "while it is called to-day," in the work of gathering out the house of Israel from the nations.

20. That the "Josephites" have put forth a constant effort to heed this admonition.

THOUGHTS ON LEGAL JURISDICTION AS I READ THE LAW.

An important question was asked, and also answered, in the SAINTS' HERALD, December 24, 1902:

Has the president of the church, who is also the president of the standing High Council, the right to decide what cases shall come before the High Council?

The answer to this was, "Yes." And the questioner was cited to Doctrine and Covenants 99:14. By reference to minutes of last General Conference, page 707, I find that the majority of the committee on an appeal case were in doubt as to whether the president had or had not that power.

As I read the law, I have failed to find where such power was delegated to any one in the church, or such provision made in the law of God. The revelations God has given for the government of his church give no man the preeminence over his fellow man, officially; or exemption from the law that was given to govern the church in its quorums and councils.

Joseph Smith was the man the Lord chose to give laws for the establishment of his church again upon the earth. They were as much for his guidance and government as for the lowest official in the body of Christ. To him with others it was said: "Ye shall see that my law is kept." It seems that an honorable responsibility was placed upon him as the mouthpiece of God upon earth. Section 19 says: "Behold . . . thou shalt be called a seer, a translator, a prophet, an apostle of Jesus Christ; an elder of the church."

To the church it was said, "Thou shalt give heed unto all his words, and commandments, which he shall give unto you, as he receiveth them, walking in all holiness before me."

See, he had no power to change or modify; no right to add to or take from; the intent and meaning must be as he received it from God; nothing more, nothing less. This gives validity and force to the law we find so well set forth in section 1, paragraph 5:

Behold, I am God, and have spoken it; these commandments are of me, and were given unto my servants in their weakness, after the manner of their language, that they might come to understanding; and inasmuch as they erred it might be made known; and inasmuch as they sought wisdom they might be instructed.

Before the organization of the church, quorums, councils, and conferences were indicated as being necessary for instruction, and the building up of the church. In section 16 we find the Quorum of Twelve with their office and duty partly set forth.

Section 17, paragraph 13: "The several elders composing this Church of Christ are to meet in conference once in three months, or from time to time, as said conferences shall direct or appoint; and said conferences are to do whatever church business is necessary to be done at the time." These references show the importance and necessity of these quorums, councils, and conferences meeting together for instruction and the transaction of church business. These are elders' conferences called together for mutual benefit and instruction. The high councilors are elders in the same sense as the apostles, and it is as much their duty to meet in these conferences as the Quorum of Twelve. Their business is of equal importance in settling important difficulties in the church so that unity and peace may increase. Again we quote:

Hearken, O ye elders of my church whom I have called: behold, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall assemble yourselves together to agree upon my word, . . . that ye may know how to govern my church.—Doctrine and Covenants 41:1.

Behold, I give unto you a commandment, that when ye are assembled together, ye shall instruct and edify each other, that ye may know how to act and direct my church how to act upon the points of my law and commandments.—Doctrine and Covenants 43:3.

Appoint among yourselves a teacher, and let not all be spokesman at once, but let one speak at a time, and let all listen unto his sayings, that when all have spoken, that all may be edified of all, and that every man may have an equal privilege.

And when these councils meet together to transact such business as may come before them according to the spirit and intent of this law, it will be seen that no man has the preëminence. While some are wisely assigned and called to responsible positions in the church, God has set bounds in the law for their government, so that all things are to be done by common consent and the prayer of faith. There is no preëminence in these organizations; all are equally necessary to constitute a perfect system. A president is appointed to observe proper order and extend due courtesy to all concerned.

In section 99 there is no preëminence given the president over the councilors, in the conduct of the council, as we understand its details.

We ask what preëminence does the president of the high council have over his two counselors? Read section 99, paragraph 6. What preëminence does he have over the twelve councilors comprising the High Council? See 99:8. Is there any rule or law in section 99, or any of the church articles and covenants, that gives the president of the High Council any preëminence over the twelve councilors; except as found in section 99, paragraph 10? How many councils are provided for in section 99? Three. 1. The High Council of the church. 2. The Bishop's council is indicated. 3. The high priests abroad have power to call a council according to this pattern when parties request it. Its decisions are open to appeal; and it is left to the judgment of the high priests as to whether it is necessary to call such a council. This is a court of expediency whenever necessary, has no present existence as a council, never has had in the history of the Reorganized Church. Then, by what law can the president be justified in rejecting an appeal to the High Council? All the evidence given is that found in section 99, paragraph 14, and that is limited to this local council of expediency; has no relation whatever to the high council of the church. If the reader will refer to section 99, paragraph 6, he will find directions as to who shall preside in conducting the council; paragraph 7. The method of conducting the council and the duties of the counselors; paragraph 8. The counselors decide whether the case is a difficult one; paragraph 9. After the evidence is heard, the accuser and the accused have spoken, the president gives a decision according to his understanding of the evidence in the case; and then calls upon the twelve councilors to sanction his decision. A careful reading of this section strikes me that the councilors have as much or more power than the president in the conduct and decision of the council; the majority of the council have power to determine or decide the case; because of a possible error in the decision or understanding of the president. We find the law governing appeal cases in section 104, paragraph 35. If there is not satisfaction upon the decision of the Bishop, or judges, it shall be handed over and carried up unto the High Council of the church. There is no discretionary power given to either president or councilors. (See paragraph 36.)

There is no person belonging to the church exempt or excluded from this council of the church; except as found in paragraph 37. If a president of the high priesthood transgress he shall be had before the common council of the church,—the Bishop and twelve high priests as councilors.

It would appear inconsistent with the law God has given, wherein we are told there is a possibility that a president of the high priesthood may transgress, and yet permit him that is as liable to fall as the councilors, or any other officer, to hold the keys to open or close the door against any appeal that may be presented to the high council of the church. We find no record or provision in the law of any power invested in the president over the twelve councilors to deny or reject an appeal, or close the door of the High Council against an unfortunate, dissatisfied member of the church.

The majesty of the law demands that inasmuch as there is not satisfaction in the decision of the Bishop or judges, it shall be carried up to the High Council of the church. The president has no discretionary power to object or reject according to this rule. The appeal must be acted upon. This divine Lawgiver is no respecter of persons or appeals, and to be in harmony with divine law we must be doers of the same. The Lawgiver said, "Ye shall observe the laws which ye have received and be faithful."

I wish here to say in reference to section 104, paragraph 37, that I hold that it is not personal, but applies to the president of the Twelve, or president of High Priests. They are both presidents of the high priesthood; and any of them may transgress. In that sense I have quoted the law. Officers may possibly fail to understand their office and duty and thereby fail to come up to the standard; or may overreach and go beyond their office and duty, and thus become transgressors, because not properly observing the law.

Legal jurisdiction is to keep within the bounds of the law prescribed. The High Council must be governed and conducted according to the pattern given in section 99, or its decisions are null and void.

The Bishop's council or the common council of the church must be composed of a bishop and twelve high priests, as councilors. This council has jurisdiction in all cases where the presidency of high priesthood transgress.

The case in section 42, paragraph 22, to be tried before two elders, refers evidently to a bishop's council as applied to branch members. The law says it is necessary that the Bishop be present also. This council has legal jurisdiction when a bishop recognized in the law as a judge in Israel to sit in judgment upon transgressors is present. It is the duty of a bishop to preside according to his office, "to sit in judgment upon transgressors, upon testimony, as it shall be laid before him, according to the laws, by the assistance of his counselors . . . among the elders of the church. This is the duty of a bishop . . . ordained to the high priesthood. . . . Thus shall he be a judge, a common judge among the inhabitants of Zion, or in a stake of Zion."

These councils are appointed by the divine Law-giver with this injunction: every member of this church transgressing or being overtaken in a fault shall be dealt with as the scriptures direct. These councils are appointed of God, and the officers invested with power to administer justice between man and man; both are recognized in the law as having legal jurisdiction when faithfully observed.

I have written these scattering thoughts hoping they may afford a little ray of light. My only hope is that every officer will learn his duty, and act in his own office as the law directs, that the system of church government may become perfect.

I fully indorse the recommendation of the majority of the committee on the protest and appeal case, as reported in conference minutes, 1904, as follows:

"We, therefore, recommend that this Conference provide for the calling of such [general] assembly" of the quorums, for them to decide whether the presidency holds the right to deny appeals from parties that have failed to obtain satisfaction in both elders' and Bishop's courts, "because there is a principle involved that is of the utmost importance in obtaining justice to all and injury to none."

Hoping this question may be settled according to truth, equity, and justice,

GEORGE DERRY.

A CONVERSATION.

Friend.—"Bro. R.," (a Baptist minister,) "please let me introduce you to Bro. W." (an elder in the Saints' church.)

Reverend R.—"Glad to meet you. Are you located here in Kansas City?"

Elder W.—"Yes, sir. I live at No. — Street. Please accept my card with a statement of belief on back. I am laboring here as missionary."

Reverend R.—"Have you been here long?"

Elder W.—"Yes, sir. I have been preaching here in the city and in this district for about twenty-five years. Before that I preached for six years in Colorado. I was the first missionary of our church to Colorado, and prior to that I preached in California. Where are you located?"

Reverend R.—"I am the pastor of the Baptist Church, No. — Street. Every Baptist Church is independent and has no general combined organization. Three Baptist members can get together and organize a church and proceed just as the Bible teaches. All the Baptist Churches teach as the Bible directs. Whatever the Bible says is what we teach."

Elder W.—"You think then, that the Baptist Church is the church of Christ?"

Reverend R.—"Yes. I know the Baptist Church is the church of Christ because it is in harmony with the Bible."

Elder W.—"The Saints' church which I represent is very much different from the Baptist Church, and I am quite as positive as you are that the Saints' church is the church of Christ. Now the Bible is like the plans and specifications by which a house is built, or a historical description of a house. Now the church of the Bible is a united church of all the churches established by his authority and had ministers to look after them in all the world and these ministers are twelve in number. Have you these in your church?"

Reverend R.—"Yes, sir, Jesus put them in the church and they have done their work, and we carry on the work, and the Baptist Church is the continuation, as he, Christ, established it; and we are making progress, calling upon men everywhere in all the world to believe in Christ and be saved."

Elder W.—"The Bible reads that God set in the church first apostles (twelve), next prophets, and so on, and that the quorum of apostles was to be perpetuated is clearly to be seen from their own acts. Let me illustrate. This Government of ours is a republican form of government, and there was set in this Government first a president, also senators, congressmen, etc. These are general officers. Then this Government is divided up into States, each having a governor and minor officers. Now George Washington was the first president. When his term of office expired, and if there had not been some one to fill his office, also all the lesser offices, what would have been the result?"

Reverend R.—"Your illustration has no bearing upon the church."

Elder W.—"Let us see if it does, or does not. The Bible tells us that Judas died and his death made a vacancy in the quorum. Now we read that the apostles petitioned God for instruction. (See Acts 1: 24-26.) Matthias was chosen to fill the vacancy, just as John Adams was chosen to fill the vacancy of the presidential office when Washington's time expired."

Reverend R.—"Oh, your private interpretation is altogether incorrect. Judas betrayed Christ and he was rejected of God and one had to be appointed to fill that place. Judas being ignored of God one had to be appointed in his stead to fulfill prophecy."

Elder W.—"Let us go a little further and if you will give me your ears and mind I will show you that you have been educated and taught in a school by teachers not sent of God. Next we read that James was killed. Now we have another vacancy in the quorum, and we read that Saul (afterwards called Paul) and Barnabas were appointed as members of the quorum of twelve apostles."

Reverend R.—"Where do you find it recorded that Barnabas was ever an apostle?"

Elder W.—"Acts 14:14."

Reverend R.—"I do not accept your private interpretation of the Scriptures at all. I know the Baptist Church is right and teaches just as the Bible teaches."

Elder W.—"But look here, Bro. R., I have not said anything that I believe only as I find it in the plans and specifications. It is a plain statement of history. We read of about twenty men who in turn filled the office of apostle. It seems to me you ought to be able to see that the Baptist Church is not God's church. Next we find that the law of the church, generally called "the gospel," is preached by John, where it is recorded that he preached baptism for the remission of sins. Now the Baptist Church don't believe that; but we Saints do."

Reverend R.—"Yes. You believe your interpretation of it."

Elder W.—"I have not presented any private interpretation but have stated plain facts of history as we read it in the Bible. We do not believe in private interpretation, because Peter says that scripture or prophecy came not by the will of men, but holy men of God spoke as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost; for that reason no man has a right to place his private interpretation on scripture. Notice Jesus tells his apostles to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature; but before you go, first go down to Jerusalem and there wait until you are endowed with power from on high, for thus it is written, that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in all the world beginning at Jerusalem. We read in Acts, second chapter, that they did as commanded, and when they received the endowment they began to preach under the influence of the Holy Ghost, and Peter convinced them that this Jesus was the very Messiah for whom they were looking. And so powerful was his argument that they were convinced of the truth and asked what they must do. Now mark well, as the prophets had spoken, how repentance and remission of sins should be preached in all the world beginning at Jerusalem. Peter, a holy man, moved upon and appointed of God for this very purpose. Hear his answer to the inquiry, 'What shall we do?' 'Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.' Now, Bro. R., you know the Baptist Church does not believe that; but we, the Saints' church, do."

Reverend R.—"You have quoted that passage, and I can quote you a dozen passages that prove that remission of sins is not through or by baptism, but we receive remission of sin through faith, 'For by grace are we saved through faith [not baptism]; and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God; not of works [something we can do], lest any man should boast.'—Ephesians 2:8, 9. Again it is written, 'If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved.'—Romans 10:9-10. Now don't you see we are not saved by something we can do? But salvation is a gift from God. All we have to do is to believe God raised Jesus from the dead and 'thou shalt be saved'; again the 'word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart; that is, the word of faith which we preach.'"

Elder W.—"I agree with you in the quotations you have made that faith is necessary; yes, it is like the foundation of a house; without faith we can not please God. Jesus also says that he who keeps not his commandments is not his disciple, but he that believes on Jesus his love is manifested in obedience, for faith without works is dead as the body without the spirit is dead. Salvation requires faith and works just as Jesus said: 'He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.' Salvation comes through obedience, and obedience through faith, just as I said, faith is like the foundation, and obedience like building, and living in the house. In the second chapter of James we read that there is no living faith without works. 'Show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show you my faith by my works,' says James. Let us have the Bible and read it; it will settle the question and we then can see which is right, the Baptists or Saints' church."

Reverend R.—(Rising up from his chair and emphasizing with his hand.)—"No, sir. I don't want the Bible brought; I don't believe in debating and this debate must stop or I will withdraw at once."

Mrs. R.—"You will see, Bro. W., when you get to heaven we'll be there too."

Elder W.—"I hope you will be, but if you are it will be because you believed the teaching of Jesus and was obedient to his commandments."

Only a Dream.

Once I dreamed I stood in heaven
When our prayers were heard,
And I saw our gracious Father
Gently heed each word;
Saw Him bless the sweet petitions
Mounting upward to the skies
From the hearts of little children,
Sent on wings of faith to rise,
Then I saw his sweet face sadden
At a burdened prayer,
Heard a strain of heavenly music
Fill the holy air.

Close He drew me to His bosom
 "Child," He said, "the prayer,
 That thou heard, was thine own missive
 Uttered in despair,
 'Twould have led thee through green meadows
 Forth to fountains sweet,
 'Twould have stilled thy heart's deep anguish
 Given thee rest complete,
 But thou didst not trust thy Father
 Who at all times knoweth best,
 In whose dear arms everlasting
 We all times may rest."
 Then I woke and pleading, whispered
 "With true faith my whole soul fill,
 But above all, Father, teach me,
 Sweet submission to thy will."

Managing a Husband.

Young wives who have husbands that are difficult to get along with, listen to my story, and perhaps you may get a hint that will help brighten up your homes.

A few years ago I married a man, who was almost ideal in character as far as honesty, industry, and purity of morals were concerned. But his disposition was sadly in need of improvement, for he had a quick temper, was impatient and harsh when things did not go to suit him. He had his own ideas how things should be done, and would accept no excuse for carelessness, and could not think a woman ever need neglect anything for lack of time, or for any other cause. I was forgetful, (though I always meant to do necessary things,) so probably needed some kind of reminder, but I thought I got more than my deserts, when he would come from his work and not finding everything in apple-pie order, or something undone, would scold and growl, and declare that but for him everything would go to wrack and ruin, and say that that was the way I always let things go, forgetting in his ill-humor that such had not happened before in a long time. He called me to account for everything I did that did not just suit him, until I felt that I was indeed in bondage. But I would not have you lose sight of his good traits, for if his ill-humored spells were quick in being aroused they were as quickly over when he would be his own good self that I fell in love with in the days that were gone. He was affectionate, kind, and tender-hearted, very companionable, and I enjoyed his fullest confidence. He provided as well as his circumstances would allow. And I loved him with all the devotion of my heart. Oh, yes, I loved him and were it not that it might help some others, I would bury this, my early experience in wedded life, in the dead past. This very love is what made his conduct toward me so hard to bear. For what would I not have done for him?

I helped to build up our new home and tried my utmost to make him happy. I did whatever my hands found to do, both indoors and out, and was true and faithful to him, so his harshness when I displeased him shocked and wounded me, it was so different to what I expected of him, or thought was justly due a wife, whatever her faults might be. It seemed like lack of love and respect, so almost heartbroken I would cry and be as miserable as one could well be. At first this affected him and he would coax me in a good humor again and apologize, and tell me to pay no attention to him, as he was hasty and did not mean to hurt me. But he was no gentler the next offense. After awhile he got tired of coaxing, and called me a baby, and foolish to cry over such a little (?) thing. So I quit crying and resolved to stand my ground, and let him know that I had as much right there as he had. I would do as I pleased and he had no right to call me to account for my shortcomings, as I did not call him to account, and he fell as far short of perfection as I did. I only carried out part of the program, however. I used my tongue freely, but did not do as I pleased always.

But oh! did woman ever make such a mistake? If I was unhappy before I was more than miserable now, (I mean of course when things went amiss—when everything went well I was happy). I tried to reason with him, and though I did not get angry, he did, and my words only aggravated him, so we both said so many unkind things that it was very like quarreling. Then I always felt ashamed and remorseful afterwards. So this way of managing proved a failure and I saw that this state of affairs would never, never do. There was a possibility of losing each other's love, and who knows but the breaking up of a home, for such disasters have had just such beginnings and we had children to train up, and what would their future be with such an example before them? So I took another course as I saw that if I said unkind words to him, he felt under no obligation to spare my feelings. But on the other hand he would not pose as a tyrant, so here was my chance for a change of program. So with many prayers and many conflicts with self I made up my mind to let him have the quarrels to himself. I simply went on my way doing as near right as I knew how, doing nothing intentionally to ruffle his feelings or temper, and when he did get angry and say harsh or unkind words, I just quietly listened to him and said not a word in return; but if he asked a question I answered him civilly, but otherwise took no notice of what he said. I did not show fear of him or try to hide my shortcomings from him, or rush around to wait on him to keep him in a good humor, but went about in as cheerful a frame of mind as possible, doing my duty as I saw it; and if I fell short of what he expected of me I silently bore with what he said, and neither pouted nor cried. Nor did I show by my actions that what he said was even resented. I treated him with utmost respect and kindness.

Was it easy? It looks easy enough on paper, but in reality it was hard, very hard. His harshness seemed unjust and words would rise to my lips to either defend myself, or remind him that he did not do any better than I did. But I held back the unkind words and found that it paid better than anything I ever tried before. For after he had his say it was all over with and soon forgotten, at least as far as I was concerned. I still continue to do this way. The result has been that he grew less harsh till now he scarcely ever says an unkind word to me, and we have grown nearer and dearer to each other. It has improved his general disposition. He is proud of how well we get along, and does not seem to know how it all came about, and I am too happy and contented to care whether he knows or not. This new state of affairs did not all take place in a day. No, indeed. It took weeks and months of patient forbearance. But think of the reward! Love, kindness, thoughtfulness for each other's comfort, and he never imposes on me, but seems always planning something for my pleasure or comfort. We have grown to understand each other better, consequently I have tried to do more like he wished me. So perhaps I am a better woman and he sees fewer shortcomings in me than he used to. It was the grace of God that helped me.

There are other men in this world like my husband. Some I believe could be made kind and gentle and considerate by such treatment. I do not know whether all could be or not, but this I know, that any woman who pursues this course of conduct toward her husband will keep her self-respect whatever his course of conduct towards her may be. She will not belittle herself by quarrelling, or sow seeds of discord for future regret.

At any rate it will not make a man any worse, and if there is any manhood about him he is bound to respect you whether he loves or not. And God could not disapprove of such a course.

Do not say, sisters, you can not keep still when you are spoken to unkindly, for with God's help you can, though it may take all the self-control at your command. Remember that a home filled with peace and love is one of the greatest blessings on this earth, and our children in days to come will look back on their childhood home with reverence, if we choose to make it one of peace and love.

A SISTER.

Father and Son.

Much has been said about "mother and daughter" and I beg a small space to discuss "father and son." I ask, why should not fathers be to their sons what a mother is (or should be) to her daughters? Why should not the father share equally in parental responsibility with the mother? Why is it that usually the son must go to the mother for sympathy and love? I know and am glad that this is not always so, for I know some fathers are as tender, loving, and full of sympathy as a mother. But all have seen fathers who, while proud of their sons in a way, did not seem to think they should have a thought, desire, or ambition, above what they desired them to have, and these same fathers will insist on making a farmer (or whatever his own occupation is) out of a son, when the boy's life and soul is in his books, music, or something else. Watch this brave young boy choke back a tear of disappointment, after trying so hard to accomplish the task given by father to be told he "never could do anything right." Then when the young heart can stand it no longer, he takes it to "mother" who dares not take the loved one's part (though her heart aches for him) for fear of disloyalty to the husband, who, she knows, is in the wrong.

Why will fathers insist on training their sons to their own occupation in life, which the boy may be wholly unfitted for, and all his ambitions and desires be for something else?

God gave us our children, not for slaves or playthings, but to rear to make the best of their natures and dispositions in both spiritual and temporal things of life. And I beg of you, father, if God has given you one son or many, study their natures, see what they are best fitted for, what their aspirations and longings are. Take them into your confidence, and by this you will gain theirs; and if you are situated so you must have their help, talk it over with them and tell them all your affairs, and agree, if they will do their best to help you, you will do your best to help them in their chosen vocations. Make them feel that you have their interests at heart, and that you are a partner. But help and encourage them to make good men of themselves, whether farmers, ministers, or whatever vocation they may choose.

Give the boy a chance. Do not be too hard on him. Do no memories of your own boyish days and great anticipations remind you that your boy is a living, loving human being, not a machine? He has a sensitive, loving, loyal heart. Take him to your heart. Win his love. Do not keep him off at arm's length, but make him feel free to tell you all his longings and vexations and be sure of sympathy and encouragement in return. There are too few encouraging words said to the boys. Some (not all) seem to think that a boy's place is to be ready at a word to run errands for any one who may choose to ask, without even getting thanks for his trouble. We should use just as much courtesy to our son as to our guest; and what heartaches could be saved if we tried to fill our boys' (and girls, too) young lives with sunshine and keep them near our hearts. The remorse is hard to bear if by our own doing the lifework of our boy is a failure; or if the dear one's young life is cut off when just budding in young manhood and we feel that we had not been to him all we should have been to fill that life with sunshine. Oh, the anguish to feel by our cruel words or unjust criticism we have taken one pleasure from the dear young life that has gone out!

God help every parent to be more careful, more prayerful, and more tender and loving of our own, so when they leave the home nest they will be well fitted for the duties of life; or if God calls them home they may take their "home on earth with them to heaven."

THE CHURCH AT PERGAMOS.

Lesson text: Revelation 2: 12-17.

Golden Text.—"To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna."—Revelation 2: 17.

Pergamos seems, from what we are able to glean from history, to have been a leading city in Asia Minor, a city of wealth and luxury, where those things abounded which, in the eyes of the world, are the refinements of life. It was the residence of a line of Greek princes, and it was the presence of their splendid court that made Pergamos the city it was, the chief city of Asia in magnificence and in the show that earthly riches are wont to make.

Wealth, learning, the so-called refinements of social life were there; splendid temples were there to pagan deities; and, as an accompaniment to those temples, there were carnality in its gross forms, licentiousness of life, and the superstitions of idolatry.

In the estimation of men, Pergamos occupied a high position. In it there was such elegance, beauty, and learning as the civilization of the age had attained. But in the sight of God, who sees more clearly and truly than we do, it was the seat of Satan. Well might John afterwards, in his epistle to the saints, warn them against the pride of life, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, for had he not learned from the lips of the Master himself that Satan sometimes has his dwelling in those places where men have surrounded themselves with physical and intellectual beauty and culture, where they clothe themselves with soft raiment and live sumptuously, but know not God?

In this princely city of Pergamos there was to be found also in John's time a band of saints who held fast the name of Christ amid all that might tend to draw them away. These saints, in common with saints in all ages, suffered persecution from the unbelieving element about them. One of them, Antipas, suffered as a martyr for the gospel's sake.

But though Jesus himself commended the saints of Pergamos for faithfulness to his cause, saying that they had held fast his name and had not denied his faith, it is from the same source that we learn that some of them had participated in the evil practices of their heathen neighbors. While the branch as a whole had been faithful, there were individual cases in which Saints had permitted themselves to be overcome by the temptations of their surroundings.

The sins mentioned against them were of a licentious nature, the doctrine of the Nicolaitans being one, of which the Lord spoke saying that he hated it.

This gives us opportunity to remark that the Lord hates all such uncleanness and that, according to his own word, recorded in the Book of Mormon (page 116, paragraph 6), he takes delight in the chastity of his people.

The licentiousness that was common in Pergamos in connection with its idolatry and that has existed in other places in the past as well as in modern times is abomination in the sight of God. It does not exist among those who hold fast the pure gospel of Christ; its presence is always an indication of darkness and superstition of mind.

On that page of the Book of Mormon to which we have referred, we read these words of the Lord concerning a certain people, "This people begin to wax in iniquity; they understand not the scriptures; for they seek to excuse themselves in committing whoredoms, because of the things which were written concerning David, and Solomon his son. Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord."

Those people of whom the Lord spoke, as well as those saints in Pergamos who went into error, did not understand the scriptures, or they could not have conceived that such impurities of life could be approved by a pure God; they did not understand that he would be in violation of his own law in commending such departures from rectitude. And there are those in our own time who are making a similar error.

The saints in Pergamos who had partaken of those evils referred to were commanded to repent of their sin.

The saints in that city, as had been shown, had much to contend with, but they were encouraged to strive to overcome. It was promised that those who did overcome should eat of the hidden manna and received a white stone with a new name written in it which no man could know save those receiving it.

We understand from this that God will give spiritual food to those who overcome sin. To those who seek to live above the carnal nature, there will be given strength from the Lord. As the wind bloweth where it listeth and we know not whence it cometh, so is it with the hidden strength that they receive who strive to walk in the path of purity. Men may not perceive the source of the strength by which they are sustained; it is hidden from all except those who see with the eyes of faith.

We understand that God will take into close relationship with him those who overcome the human tendencies to love the things of this world unduly, that he will teach them hidden wisdom.

The saints of Pergamos may appear to us as a particularly notable example of those who found it necessary to exercise spiritual strength in overcoming their temptations to participate in the evils of their surroundings, but all saints find it necessary to learn the lesson of self-control and of abstinence from those things that are worldly in their tendencies and that war against our highest good. There is no exception; we all must learn to discriminate closely between good and evil; we neglect to do so at our peril.

Paul said, "I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection: lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway."

Of such Shakespeare exclaimed, "Brave conquerors! For so you are, that war against your own affections and the huge army of the world's desires."

In seeking to keep the body under, we have need to be careful not to go to the opposite extreme and lose the lawful pleasures of life. With Theodore Parker we say:

"I commend no sour, ascetic life. I believe not only in the thorns on the rosebush, but in the roses which the thorns defend. . . . God, when he made man's body, did not give us a fiber too much, nor a passion too many."

We have been endowed with the capacity for enjoyment which it is lawful for us to indulge to a proper degree. The Lord has placed in the earth an abundance of good things for our use, and that man had some perception of the joyousness that should characterize the lives of God's people who wrote,

"Ten thousand thousand precious gifts
My daily thanks employ;
Nor is the least a cheerful heart
That tastes those gifts with joy."

With prudence and thanksgiving, with generous love to God's creatures who have with us equal right to his earthly blessings, we may take the gifts of God and yet be conquerors over self.

ANNA SALYARDS.

Letter Department.

Editors Herald: I often notice in reading the dear HERALD that brethren use rather sharp words in replying to some articles. I was just reading an article where a brother says he was pained by his views being misunderstood and criticised by another. Why is this? There is a cause, a reason. My education is very limited. I practically learned little of grammar or the correct use of our language. I remember well on one occasion a few years ago that the Spirit came to me while I was alone and apparently enveloped me; and I was instructed to purify my language, to cast out all useless, worthless, and slang words and expressions. Here is a thought. If it was not pleasing to God for me to use idle, valueless words or slang phrases, is it pleasing to him for you? Reader, consider this and answer for yourself.

The misunderstandings, I believe, are sometimes due to this class of language and the balance is due to an imperfect understanding of our language and the usages of the same. This is my personal opinion. Since English is the church language I will hail the day with gladness when the HERALD will add a department to its columns giving the correct use of our language, by showing the correct use of each word and the meaning thereof. Are we aware that the adding of a letter or two or dropping the same will change a word's meaning when the pronunciation is scarcely altered? Are we aware that a word placed at a given point in a sentence will be correct and grammatical, and that the same word changed to another point will also be correct, but its meaning will be reversed and the sentence changed? I make no claim to being a scholar, and am aware that I possibly have grossly erred in the use of words in this article; but while I may not use the proper words to express my meaning at the present time, I do not intend to stand still but to try to advance and learn the pure and correct use of all things. Did it ever occur to you that when the Savior said, "Be ye perfect even as God is perfect" (these are not just the exact words but this is the meaning in simple prose) that he did not mean we would ever be Gods, but that he wanted us to be perfect men; and to be perfect beings we must be perfect in thought, in word, and in deeds. We must be perfect in the use of our language and in our every action; for it is in this sense that God is a perfect God.

A SERVANT.

STONINGTON, Maine, February 3, 1905.

Dear Herald: I am one of the children of the church that by reason of age and physical debility has not the enjoyment that many have of often meeting with the Saints in church worship. But I take great pleasure and delight in reading my dear HERALD and Autumn Leaves. My heart has been made glad so often by the good news of the progress of the gospel and the beautiful letters that sometimes tell of isolated ones being comforted and blessed by the Holy Spirit even though far from church privileges and comparatively alone. I love also to read the experiences of the elders in their travels, and just now have been reading the beautiful experiences of Elder Parsons in the last Autumn Leaves.

I am alone for the most part in my comfortable home close by, the water which now is silent under a thick body of ice. Often some of the Saints drop in and we talk of the gospel. Often I have been blessed by the administration of the elders and I have felt to be content in the hands of the Lord. Once, some two years ago, I had a narrow escape from death. As it was, I had a bad fall from a carriage and was severely injured, striking partially upon my head, which rendered me insensible for many hours; and after I did recover my consciousness was not right in my mind until weeks afterward, when I was administered to by Elder Davison. Although I am not entirely well and perhaps never will be in this present world, I am able to enjoy many things that I otherwise could not have.

I am led many times to think of the experiences of those who first brought the gospel to these parts. As myself and husband, Elder George Eaton, were closely connected with the early work of the church here, we being the first to obey the gospel, and my husband immediately becoming engaged in the work, it is all stamped upon my mind as the great leading feature of my life. Elder George Linsley, a young man, gifted more in song than in preaching, first preached the gospel on this island, though by some it is thought Father Landers was first. It was in the early autumn of the year 1865 that Bro. Linsley came here from Grand Manan where he left the old veteran and labored here for a few months. In March of the following year the dear old man of sacred memory was brought here by my husband and his first work was to restore through the ordinance of the church a sick woman who was very near death's door. His voice was heard in many places declaring the restored gospel with power, and many gladly accepted the truth and obeyed the gospel in baptism under the hands of my husband. Father Landers baptized none. We think Bro. Farrell must certainly have been wrongly informed in some things that appeared in a late letter in the HERALD, for we do not know when and where those men were not well cared for on this island, as to having plenty of food and good places to stay. The homes of those who cared for them were not all equipped with the modern improvements found in some houses to-day, but they were good and comfortable, and freely opened to those men of God. The Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants which were the dear old man's constant companions, with the Bible, were once the property of the prophet Joseph, and when leaving they were presented to my husband, and now I have them in my possession; and many times I take them, all worn and yellow with age, and read what inspired them in their noble work, and think of the message that never will grow old. Though books, and those that read them, may wear out and pass away from this life, yet the seeds planted by them will spring forth like their bodies in the resurrection, into a new life which will be eternal.

We are blessed many times by visits from the traveling ministry, and our local workers are strengthened and helped, and our branch is still prospering in the good work, though having passed through many trying scenes and seasons.

May the Lord bless and prosper the whole household of faith, until we shall all meet in his kingdom upon the new earth, where sin and sickness will not be known.

Your sister in the gospel covenant,

HANNAH EATON.

BOISE, Idaho, February 6, 1905.

Editors Herald: In company with Bro. A. J. Layland and in his commodious spring wagon we left Logan November 18, for the West. From the 20th to 25th was spent in Malad and vicinity, then on to Malta where we tarried four days, holding a couple of meetings in my brother Leonard's hall. We also held meetings at Elba, Conor, Albion, and Oakley, as we worked our way through Cassia County. Enrolled a number of home class Sunday-school workers at Malta and Albion.

December 11 to January 10 was spent in the vicinity of Hagerman. A Religio organized there and some preaching done at different points.

At the home of Bro. Alexander Hoffman, near Mountain Home, we remained four days, holding as many meetings in their little schoolhouse, and preaching the funeral-sermon of their youngest child, George, who died September previous, aged six years. He seemed to be recognized by all who knew him as too good for this world.

January 16 found us twenty-five miles out from Boise. After a refreshing sleep in our wagon, and a hasty camp-fire breakfast, we were again on our way at daylight and camped for dinner and feed in sight of the capital city, driving in soon after noon, and establishing ourselves at the home of Sr. Montrose in South Boise. We found a few Saints alive in the work, and after holding meetings at the homes of Sr. Montrose and Mr. William Coleman for a few evenings, we drove ten miles to the home of Bro. James Cato, where we were hospitably entertained for nearly two weeks, storms and mud making it impracticable to do much in the way of holding meetings.

At Meridian we made application for both the South and North Methodist churches, the only church-buildings the city affords, but were unconditionally refused and the North man gave our work an airing the following Sabbath. While he admitted a difference between us and the western Mormons, it was principally in that we "were the narrow edge of the wedge." He warned the people against going out to hear us, after making further attacks upon the Book of Mormon, and when one of their members suggested that he discuss the issues with us he expressed himself more willing than we would be. However, he confessed to his people the following Sunday that he had refused a challenge from us for a public discussion, but we had refused to discuss with him privately.

We returned to Boise on Friday and are continuing our meetings in private homes.

We have enrolled at Mountain Home, this place, and Meridian about sixty members for home class Sunday-school work.

We find ourselves, here, three hundred and fifty miles from Logan, and the time at hand for us to begin the return journey that we may be in Blackfoot City by March 3 for our district conference.

In bonds,

S. D. CONDIT.

DAVIDSON, Oklahoma, February 5, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have labored the past year the best I could for the advancement of the cause we love so much, and can say truthfully that the Lord has blessed me in my labor in presenting the work; but I have not had as much success in baptizing as I have had in the past years. Still I feel satisfied that I have sown the seed that will bring fruit in the future.

I have opened up the work in new fields, and have been kindly treated. I have not had much opposition, as a rule, and, best of all, I feel that the good Lord is pleased with my labor; and I have a greater desire to continue then ever in my life. I have been alone in my labor most of the past year, with the exception that for two months I had the blessed privilege of laboring with Bro. S. S. Smith.

I am sorry to say that the spiritual condition of the Saints in this part of the Lord's vineyard is at a low ebb, and it makes me feel sad to see the Saints lose energy. But I hope and pray that the work may revive here as well as elsewhere; for our success depends largely on our every-day walk and living up to the discharge of our duty by observing the law. I can get more places to preach in than I can occupy, and large audiences at most places. Hoping and praying for success in all our labor,

Your brother in bonds,

B. F. RENFROE.

OTWAY, Ohio, February 4, 1905.

Editors Herald: I wish to correct a mistake of mine in a previous letter. It was July 3, 1904, instead of 1903, that I came into this work. I am still trying to live in the service of my Master. I am truly glad that the true church of Jesus Christ still exists. God says he is not the author of confusion, so there is but the one true church. Paul says, "By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." Christ says, "I am the vine, and ye are the branches." Some people say the "branches" are the different churches. If that be true why do they not all bear one kind of fruit? "By their fruits ye shall know them."

My prayer is that all the dear Saints may live so that when the Lord comes with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, that they may be ready to meet him in a cloud. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power." It is with joy and peace to the soul that we look beyond to the time when Christ will come and begin his thousand-year reign with his Saints. "This world will be blessed by and by." Then there will be a new heaven and a new earth, and God will come down with the holy city, the New Jerusalem. If there were nothing more than the thousand-year reign it would be worth living for.

May God speed the time when every house will become a house of prayer, and every heart a fit temple for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. The writer truly desires to see the time when we shall all come to a unity of the faith. "One Lord, one faith, one baptism." Bro. E. E. Long came into our country January 24, and did some good preaching for us.

May the Lord bless and save us in his kingdom.

Yours in the one faith,
J. T. MITCHELL.

IRONTON, Ohio, January 30, 1905.

Dear Herald: I have been here and out in the hills of Lawrence County for three weeks; have held about twenty services. Expected to baptize some yesterday, but sickness and other causes prevented. There are several that have declared their intention of obeying. One is a man who has belonged to the Utah church for some time. There are two elders of the Utah church in the city. I have met them a few times but they do not want to talk on the doctrines of their church, and complain of me telling the people the difference in our beliefs. But they had been telling before I came, where they thought it would benefit them, that we were all the same. I have been after them in some of their house canvassing, and explained the difference. Expect to leave here to-day, but if all is well will return soon.

Wishing and praying for the good of all, I am, as ever,

S. J. JEFFERS.

WHEELING, West Virginia, January 20, 1905.

Editors Herald: Bro. G. T. Griffiths first came here in 1883 to open up the work. There was one family of Saints here, known as the Ebeling family, who reside here yet. Sr. Ebeling was a widow with seven children; all have grown up to be men and women.

Bro. G. T. opened up the work in the old Boggs Run School-house. Many threats were made, but these did not scare Bro. G. T.; faithful labor was done and good accomplished.

It does the young Saints good to hear the old, feeble Saints bear their testimony of the past twenty-one years; and also to hear the middle-aged give their experience. Bro. G. T. organized a branch May 31, 1883. One week later a move to build a new church was started; a building committee was appointed to collect money for the new church fund. The debt was one thousand and fifty-four dollars and eighty-six cents. There was a membership of about sixteen, and it was not very long until the debt was paid.

We have had as our branch presidents the following: G. T. Griffiths, R. S. Salyards, L. D. Ullom, A. N. Teargarden, and O. J. Terry, all of whom have been faithful shepherds.

On August 29, 1883, the little band organized a Sunday-school. Sr. Hattie Griffiths was one who helped to carry this work along. The Sunday-school has been progressing ever since. Some of the older ones have dropped out of the harness and the young have stepped in.

We have sent a few missionaries out. Elder F. J. Ebeling, who is now laboring in Ohio District, was one who was brought up from the vile places, as I may call them. Also Bro. L. D. Ullom, who is in the Pittsburg District. The branch has had the pleasure of having sent out the youngest missionary in the church, Myron E. Thomas, now a student at Graceland, ordained a priest in his fifteenth year, took a mission at the age of seventeen. Be faithful, Myron, to your calling.

All the officers of the branch are doing all they can for the progress of the work. We have an interesting Religio. We also have a choir which does its part on all occasions. Of course, we have our little troubles sometimes, but we can say that we have the good will of the "outsiders," who are willing to give a helping hand to assist us. We have had many elders to give us a helping hand, and tell us to be faithful. If Bro. J. F. McDowell sees this, he will remember when he painted the gospel ladder on the wall of the little church that stood on the river-bank, twenty years ago. It can be said of it as of Paul, Well done, thou good and faithful servant.

God has deemed it wise for us to build a new church up in the city, in a better locality. We have purchased a lot, and have it paid for; we expect to build this spring. The community, in and out of the church, are all in favor of the new church. The "outsiders" have given us a helping hand. The Wheeling Register printed the cut of our new church and gave us favorable mention in its columns.

When the time comes for us to leave our little church on Water Street, our minds will go back to the many years of worship and the many good, spiritual times we have had there. We look around and see the seats we have occupied for twenty-one years; it seems as though we were leaving a friend. But, on the other hand, we are glad to go up in the city to reach the people. We look back over our branch record and see so many names there. Some God has called on before for some reason we can not understand, and we see some who have drifted away from the work, which makes us feel sad.

We hope that when we get into our new church we may be as faithful as the sixteen were when they built the old church. It seemed strange to us when Bro. G. T. Griffiths told us it was God's will we should purchase a lot between Thirty-seventh and Forty-fifth Streets. There were no Saints living near the place where we were counseled to build; we wondered why that was.

Our little church stands in a place called Benwood, and we were counseled to buy a lot in Wheeling, the town above. At this time the Saints were living in Benwood. Since then, the steel trust has bought most of the town where the Saints lived, which sent the Saints up into Wheeling, out of the dirt and noise. The Saints are now buying all round the church lot. God does all things for the best. There now are about one hundred and ninety-two members in the branch. A good many are scattered. We hope that by the time we worship twenty-one years in our new church, that we may see that we have made some progress; if it be God's will that we should live that long. May we as the Wheeling Saints be faithful that the world may see that we are children of God, is the prayer of,

A WHEELINGITE.

Editors Herald: As I look out upon Mother Earth this eve, clothed in her dress of white, to the human eye it is a scenery grand to behold. So all along the year, as the different seasons come, they bring with them their own natural beauty; and even now, while winter is upon us with its cold and chilly blasts, and we look at its beauty on one side of life, on the other distress is all around us. How many a little soul is being pierced to the marrow with the intense cold because of the lack of proper apparel! How many lie down each night on a bed of want! Oh, were it possible that I could feed each hungry soul, provide them with warm raiment, and in every sense lighten the hand of want! Oh, that we had more cheerful givers in this great, wide world of ours! We are all needy creatures. Not a moment of our lives passes by but that we are needful of the all-wise One's help. As we lay our weary bodies down on a bed of rest, whose help are we looking forward to help us through the silent hours of slumber? Not our own; but the all-wise Parent, the Father of us all, who cheerfully aids and sustains us all through the changing scenes of life. We are but creatures weak and small! We are so prone to wander in by and forbidden paths! Each day we are drifting, drifting out, as it were, on the great sea of life. How many of us will anchor safely over on that beautiful shore? a place in readiness, awaiting the pure and good.

"Jesus, Savior, pilot me
Over life's tempestuous sea,
Unknown waves before me roll
Hiding rocks and treacherous shoal
Chart and compass come from thee;
Jesus, Savior, pilot me.

"When at last I near the shore,
And the fearful breakers roar,
Twixt me and the peaceful rest,
Then while leaning on thy breast,
May I hear thee say to me,
'Fear not, I will pilot thee.'"

So day by day as our lives pass by, page by page our life's book is being filled. It will be only a few short days with the youngest of us, until the last page will be filled, and then this life-book will be closed. We can see those around us whom we love, whose silvery locks and tottering feet denote to us that not many days more will pass by until the great summons to them will be given, "Child, come home."

"Speak gently to the aged one,
Grieve not the care-worn heart;
The sands of life are nearly run,
Let them in peace depart."

Dear Herald: It encourages me to read the letters in the HERALD. As a branch we are moving along; some are alive to the gospel work while others have fallen asleep seemingly. I would like to see God's work move on, for I know it is true. I have been blessed in many ways, and my prayer is that I may live worthy of the blessings. One dear sister here is afflicted; I hope the Saints will pray for her that if it be God's will she may be healed. We feel that we need her help and that her companion in life needs her help. I also beg an interest in the prayers of all God's people, that I may always be found faithful and be worthy, when Jesus comes, to live with him. My prayers are always for God's people.

Your sister,

ANGUS, Iowa, January 29, 1905.

Editors Herald: On the night of the 27th inst. I had this dream. I thought I stood out in the open air with some others, and as I looked up at the clouds I noticed one white, fleecy-looking cloud hanging very low in the heavens, so low that I wondered. And while I looked I saw it open and a personage in the form of a man appeared. He held the cloud apart with each hand as one would part a window-curtain while looking outside. I seemed to know it was our Savior coming. He seemed to hesitate for a moment, looking on each side of him and then down toward the earth, then started to ascend. He was dressed in a long white robe with flowing sleeves. His arms were bare nearly to his elbows. His feet and limbs were bare to his knees. As he slowly descended I noticed he carried a chain in his hand. It was an ordinary looking chain about five feet in length and the links about two inches long.

His face wore a very earnest, determined look. He came down to the earth but was lost to my view by the houses that were between us. I awoke and dropped to sleep again. I dreamed again of seeing the same personage, still carrying the chain. There were three others with him in my last dream.

They seemed to be very attentive to him and helped him upon some kind of a conveyance, I did not know what, for I never saw anything like it. There were no horses to it or any visible means, to me, to cause it to go. But it moved along lively with all four upon it.

I thought in my dream when they started that he would soon call us to judgment, and I began to wonder if I would be counted worthy. It seemed that everything that I had ever done that was wrong came to my mind, yet I felt no fear, but a calm, peaceful feeling came over me. This is the third time I have dreamed of seeing the Savior come, but this last one seems to be more plain and has left a deep impression upon my mind.

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. PAULINE RUBY.

MCTAGART, Assinibota, Canada, January 22, 1905.

Editors Herald: So many write to learn our opinion of the great Northwest. I really think it is a fine country for a farmer. Land is selling very well; crops are good, generally, but last year it was so dry that farmers reaped only about half a crop. The best crop in the neighborhood made about fifteen bushels per acre, and it is worth ninety cents now.

There are not many homesteads left that are surveyed out, but there is lots of land not surveyed yet. The winters are mild generally, and it thaws out about the first of April.

Wages are good. Father got forty-five dollars per month last year and is going to commence the first of February for fifty dollars.

There is a branch of Saints here, (some of the best,) in all nineteen members. Seven families are coming next spring and more are inquiring about the country.

The work is rolling along smoothly, and prospects are fair. Brn. R. C. Evans and J. L. Mortimer were here and organized our branch. Bro. Alvin Knisley made a good opening here.

Yours in the one faith,
A. R. TOOVEY.

HAILEYVILLE, Indian Territory, January 22, 1905.

Dear Herald: I have asked myself the question: Are the Saints doing their duty toward the church? I hope and pray that we may remember the words of our Lord: "Will a man rob God?" How do we rob him? In tithes and offerings. Is not this a law and commandment as well as any other? I think so. He that breaks one of these least of the commandments is guilty of all.

I have been in this church four years and did not even try to pay my tithings, and I thought I prospered; but oh, how bad this mind of mine was blinded. But presently the Lord led me to see the need of trying to keep the whole law, and my testimony is this: After I paid my tithing the good Lord fulfilled his word wherein he said, "I will pour you out a blessing," more than you can receive. He has fulfilled this promise. God is not changeable. Pay your tithing, Saints, and test him. Do you not read and hear of the missionaries that are constrained to stay at home and work? Who are to blame, are we? Let us ask ourselves the question. Only too sadly comes the answer, "Yes." Then wake up and do your duty that the gospel may go where our Savior commanded it to go. Do not be foolish virgins. Have oil in your lamps. When the temple is to be built will we shirk then as now? May God open our eyes to the work before us.

This is Sunday evening; I have just returned from prayer-meeting. At no time in the past have we been blessed so abundantly. We had the spirit of discernment and prophecy, and all present were in tears, both Saints and friends.

S. W. Simmons was present and long will he remember the meeting that we had. I wish that all the Saints would set forth a solid effort to live an exemplary life. How much faster would the gospel spread among the honest in heart.

When I see Saints neglect their duty my mind goes back to a letter I received from a brother stating that he and family had not had church privileges for ten years. And those that have them now fail to use them. May God arouse an interest in his people, both spiritually and financially, for the work's sake.

In bonds,

JOHN S. WHITE.

CENTRAL CITY, Illinois, February 4, 1905.

Editors Herald: I am much interested in reading the HERALD, Zion's Ensign and Autumn Leaves. I feel as if I could not do without the papers, for we have no branch here. Bro. Spurlock was here about six weeks ago. We tried to get a place in which to preach but failed, so we had meeting at my residence. I think there is a broad field of labor here and trust that some of the elders will come.

My heart is filled with peace and joy for I know that I have obeyed the gospel, and I feel better than I have for two years for I realized that I was away from God. And how thankful I am that my feet are standing on the solid rock, Jesus Christ! By the help of our heavenly Father I hope to do much good in the uplifting of Zion's dear Saints.

I desire your prayers in behalf of my mother as she is in very poor health at this time. Mother is in her sixty-ninth year and has been a Latter Day Saint since she was sixteen. Many of the Saints are acquainted with her. Her name is Minerva Gatt; maiden name, Minerva Haws. Mother would be glad to hear from any of the elders.

May the Lord help each and every one of us to do our part in the uplifting of Zion, is my prayer.

Your brother in the gospel,

L. L. GATT.

BUFFALOVILLE, Indiana, February 9, 1905.

Dear Herald: Notwithstanding the fact that our religion is a very unpopular one, especially in new places where people's minds have been poisoned with the vile stories which the world has invented in order to turn men's minds from the "way of truth," I am glad I am one of that little band of people known as Latter Day Saints.

Here as in other places where our doctrine has not been preached, the adversary has chosen to prejudice the minds of the majority against us, but we believe prejudice is giving way somewhat, and some say they are very anxious to hear our preaching. The Baptist people closed their doors against us, but I have learned that they have them closed against every other class of religionists. But some of their people say they do not approve of this and say they will go and hear our preaching if they have a chance. One of our Lutheran neighbors told my husband that he was sure we could get their house for preaching whenever they did not have it in use. The Methodists opened their doors for us when Bro. M. R. Scott was here almost a year ago. I do not think we would have any trouble getting a school-house, and there are two private houses open for preaching if we should fail in getting any other place. We will do what we can to get a good place for preaching if any of the elders will let us know when they can come. We are anxious to get our doctrine before the people, for I believe as I always have believed, that there are some who will accept the truth.

A short time ago my mother-in-law had a dream in which she thought one of our elders (Bro. M. R. Scott, I believe) was here and a vast multitude was assembled and were starting for the river when a huge monster without any definable bodily parts, and which did not touch the ground, appeared before them. The elder who was leading the multitude became frightened and turned back. One of the multitude wished to examine the monster but was forbidden because it was thought useless as the monster had no distinct bodily parts and was floating in the air above the ground a short distance.

I do not know whether the dream means anything or not, but as none of our elders have been here for so long, I have wondered if it were possible that they have become frightened at the sectarian monster without bodily parts and substantial footing. I hardly believe this is the case. But we have asked them to come so many times, and we get almost discouraged sometimes; and when we are asked when our preachers are coming again we do not know what to say.

We do miss church privileges so much since we moved away from the branch to which we belonged! Those who have them do not appreciate them, often. It is a great privilege to have a chance to meet together often, and one to be thankful for; and those who can should "not neglect the assembling of yourselves together."

I am glad that the Lord blesses the isolated Saints, though, whenever he or she is found worthy. Although I feel very unworthy many times, I know the Lord blesses even me, and I have seen my prayers answered many times. I wish to live right and ask the Saints to pray for us that the Lord will help us to bring our two little boys up in the way they should go.

Your sister,

ANNA M. CUMMINGS.

SPRINGFIELD, Missouri, February 4, 1905.

Editors Herald: This is a fine winter day. The earth, wrapped in her mantle of pure white, looks grand. Oh, how I enjoy a winter like this. The beautiful snow lies six inches deep in this city of springs. As I have not noticed a letter from here for quite a while, I thought perhaps some one would like to hear how the work is progressing in this part of the vineyard. The church, Sunday-school, and Religio are alive and working zealously. Aid society is working like bees, aiming to paper our church, and build a vestibule and belfry, as a non-member has promised to donate a fine bell as soon as the belfry is completed.

I am rejoicing in this latter-day work. I am thankful for having learned the true way. It is my earnest desire to overcome and to obey the command, "Come up higher," that I may be instrumental in doing much good in the Master's work. I realize the eve is fast approaching when our efforts will have ceased. I hope to be one of the number with the redeemed of Zion.

While sitting here, looking out over the snowy scene of mid-winter, I am led to think of the winter-time of human life, of the many hoary heads in their silvery whiteness nearing the grave without obeying the true gospel. How I yearn to do something to cause them to know and understand the necessity of this latter-day message. It seems strange to me that people will read their Bibles daily until they are fifty, sixty, yes, even eighty years of age, and can not be made to understand the true meaning of the Scriptures. Ever praying for the success of this latter-day work, I remain,

Your sister in the one true gospel,

M. LUCY BRASHEAR.

CANTON, Illinois, February 12, 1905.

Editors Herald: As I was transferred from Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District to the Kewanee District last November, I desire to state some of my experiences in my new field.

At Davenport I found Bro. F. A. Russell at the depot to escort me to his hospitable home; announcements for preaching Sunday were at Moline, Illinois, and Davenport, Iowa, and I was expecting to have Bro. Russell to introduce me around, but Saturday night he got a dispatch to come to Grinnell to administer to the sick so I was deprived of his company, but I found a good substitute.

Our meetings were not very largely attended but I felt blessed in presenting Jesus Christ and him crucified to them. Monday morning I left for Savanna, about fifty miles up the river; found the Saints there had a very nice little church of their own, built by Sr. Artwell's husband. He does not belong to the church. We are sure the good Lord will bless him for his generous gift. We found at Savanna some very zealous Saints doing what they can to spread the angel's message; but they need help and encouragement.

My next place was Gilchrist. Here I found a noble band of Saints, most of them young in the work and fired with the spirit of the gospel. Here Bro. Berve met me and we held eleven meetings in all with good interest. Leaving there I came to Kewanee and found a welcome among the Saints.

I came to Canton yesterday and am at present domiciled at the comfortable home of Bro. and Sr. Jones. There are but very few of the old-time Saints left in this place.

I can say that this blessed gospel is still dear to my heart, and I want to manifest to God, and demonstrate to the world that I love it by living it.

Your brother in Christ,

GEORGE W. THORBURN.

STILLWATER, Oklahoma, February 8, 1905.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I have seen anything from this part of the field. Sorry we can not report the work in Oklahoma in a more prosperous condition, but there are things in places that are not as flattering as they might be. Still in other parts I hear the work is prospering. Bro. H. O. Smith has just closed a very successful series of meetings at Terilton, so he writes. Bro. W. Mayloe is here now waiting for the cold wave to pass by to start a meeting here. He will try to begin to-morrow night. There has been a great deal of preaching here, so the prejudice is most all removed from the minds of the people, and we hope to do the people good this time.

As I am still Bishop's agent for the Oklahoma District I make an appeal to the Saints for help in the way of tithes and offerings as they are always acceptable this time of the year. For some cause or other, some of our tithing payers have neglected us the past year, but we write this to encourage them. You know the promise is that those who endure to the end shall be saved; and we are all workers together. And they who pay their tithes to assist will reap their reward as well as they who preach the word. There is one thing more of which I desire to remind the Saints, and that is a matter of personal expenses. The elders must travel about from place to place and must have expense money, and they have no other way to obtain it only as it is handed to them by the Saints. So remember, Saint, you are expected to assist the elders. This part of the work has been badly neglected in places.

In bonds,

S. J. HINKLE.

RUMSEY, Minnesota, February 9, 1905.

Dear Herald: I have been a reader of your columns for many years and have received much good instruction therefrom. I have often thought I would like to write but knowing my inability have refrained from so doing. But if I can not give any instruction I can at least thank those who have written what seems to me for my special benefit. I enlisted in the cause of Christ sixteen years ago last month, and the more knowledge I obtain of this grand and glorious work the better I love it. We do not have a chance to hear much preaching outside of conference and reunion, as we are living about thirty miles from the portion of our branch where regular services are held. I am desirous of doing something to help build up the work of Christ in this part of God's vineyard, and have engaged in the Sunday-school work that my children may have a better knowledge and understanding of what God requires of us. We were very much encouraged by a visit from Bro. C. E. Willey a short time ago. He was with us two Sundays and made some interesting remarks to the children which did us all good. He also preached eight sermons. One noble soul is investigating the truth of this latter-day work, and the result we are willing to leave with God. A good feeling prevails in the neighborhood with the exception of one member of the schoolboard who tried hard not to let us have the use of the schoolhouse to hold service or Sunday-school in, but the others interceded for us and so the good work rolls on, and we are willing to say with Christ, Father, forgive him for he knows not what he does.

My husband took Bro. Willey to Fergus Falls, February 6, where he took the train for Pipestone. May God bless his effort.

My aged parents are living with me, and both are stricken with affliction, my mother not having been able to sit up for a year; but thanks be to the goodness and mercy of God she is able to sit up and walk a few steps. She has been treated by four different doctors and two specialists all of whom pronounced her case incurable. But when we come to God in faith believing, he will not turn us away empty-handed. They have recently organized a Religio society in our branch and though it is too far for me to attend the meetings yet I am interested in any part of God's work that will interest the young and educate them for the service of God. I love this work and ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may be faithful and ever willing to do what I can for the Master's cause.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

MRS. EVA B. ELLIOTT.

Independence Items.

The Federated Aid Societies of this city are taking measures for the relief of the poor, the work to continue through the winter months.

The handsome intramural cars with their through service from Independence to the down-town Kansas City district will soon be started. They are elegantly appointed with large windows and panel mirrors and carved wood-work. The forty-two cars each have a seating capacity of fifty-two. They will commence operating Sunday, the 19th.

Several elders of the Utah church visited our church-building, temple-lot, and other places of interest on the 15th inst.

Railway traffic has been interfered with by the extreme cold and snow, of which there were nine or ten inches on the level, and during the coal famine which lasted several days coke in large quantities was hauled to all points from the gas plant and Sugar Creek.

In Kansas City the saloons seem to be doing more charitable work than the churches by way of feeding the poor. Free food was supplied to thousands of unemployed men. There was no traffic in liquor and the hungry ones had all they wanted of good, substantial food.

Doctor J. E. Roberts of that city said from the pulpit last Sunday in reference to the modern church:

"There are not six people in this audience that can define the doctrinal position of any one of the churches." And in reference to the revival movement he declared the old-time revivalist did not need singers, choirs, and neighborhood visitors: he did not need "cards in the street-cars and in the store-windows," nor a press agent. He had behind him the belief that he had "a divine commission to snatch men like brands from the burning, and he snatched them."

There is considerable adverse criticism among the ministers on all sides.

A leaflet called "Zion's Redemption," written by Elder Alfred White, is put into circulation, having been published in Autumn Leaves, December, 1890, and republished in Ensign later, and now it is again issued in simple form.

In the Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania, Record of January 25, 1905, under the heading "Paper prepared by Mrs. T. B. Roberts (wife of the pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church) on Mormonism: well acquainted with the institution and its inception and progress," appears an example of ignorance concerning the subject on which the speaker makes strenuous efforts to enlighten her audience. This lady was addressing the Women's Missionary Society assembled at Binghamton, New York. One passage we will quote from her speech: "Joseph Smith was well known in that section of the country, known for his fondness to deceive. His mother was a fortune-teller, and his father illiterate, superstitious, and intemperate. . . . From such a one we can expect nothing more than that the writing of the Book of Mormon was a plagiarism. The dictation given was from an historical novel written by Solomon Spalding, entitled Manuscript Found to which were added by the would-be prophet some verses of scripture to make it seem like a revelation."

So here we find another instance of where the blind lead the blind. This good minister's wife ought to enlighten herself on these important topics, before attempting to inform others. And then she goes on to talk about the evils practiced in the Utah church as having sprung from the teachings of the founder-prophet Joseph Smith. Another subject in which she misrepresents and needs to peruse authentic history in order to learn and present the truth, and not that which is false and pernicious.

The Daughters of Zion met on the 15th inst. The readings were on the subjects, "Financial responsibility from a scriptural standpoint," and "Children of the Fall River strikers." Collections taken up for the benevolent work undertaken amounted to two dollars and thirty-five cents.

The Willing Helpers at their annual business-meeting which occurred January 4 elected officers and committees for the ensuing year. There are forty enrolled members. The special donations to society amounted to twenty dollars; the treasurer had on hand thirty dollars and eight cents. To the building committee a donation of forty-one dollars was made, making a total of one hundred and sixty-six dollars donated to that committee for the year; also to the benefit of the poor, seven dollars and seventy-five cents, leaving a balance on hand of one dollar and eighteen cents. The sisters met weekly, and by persevering effort and industry have the pleasure of placing on record the following output: Shirts made and sold, 49; aprons, 128; comforts made to order, 11; quilts, 14; carpets, 2. This was the work done during the banner year of the society, and by continued effort the society hopes to accomplish much good the ensuing year.

May the good work go on, and the labors of the faithful receive an abundant reward.

Bro. George Pilgrim, one of the church pioneers here, is very low with pneumonia at this writing. ABBIE A. HORTON.

Extracts from Letters.

W. R. Rush, Stillwater, Oklahoma: "While striving to support our physical bodies, we should also be interested in our spiritual welfare. Each week we should closely read and study the church papers. Wherever our minds and studies are there our hearts will be. It seems to me if I understand the law that it requires something more than an outward show to please God and be beneficial to the upbuilding of his kingdom. God requires the heart and soul."

C. L. Snow, Let, Tennessee: "This is a new place some three hundred and fifty miles from where I live. Came here last year and baptized eight. I returned a few days ago, and found them all strong in the faith. The Utah elders have been staying with them, and as usual trying to deceive. They told the Saints there was no difference between them and us, and that the leaders of the Reorganized Church had been writing to the leaders of their church, asking them to let the Reorganized Church come back to them, and the elders had notified us that we could come back by baptism, and they were sure the two churches would soon be united. So you see what I am having to contend with. The Bishop's last 'reply' is so clear to my mind, that all, I believe, can see that the Bishop is right in his views on the college question."

Agnes Fouts, Byrnsville, Indiana: "We have a nice branch here and are getting along nicely. We have prayer-meeting twice a week, and a nice Sunday-school, and all seem interested in the work. We desire the prayers of the Saints that we may live faithful, that it may be said of us, Enter into the joy of the Lord."

E. H. Durand, McLaney, Ohio: "The interest in this part of the State seems to be on the increase. I am now in an entirely new place by invitation of Bro. Ward and family of Sand Run. His family are the only Saints in this part as far as known. Bro. Ward has tried to let his light shine, and a few are inquiring."

Joseph Ferris, Oakland, California: "We have heard many favorable comments about the elders who have labored in California, and some who are now laboring in the gospel cause here, from nonmembers. One lady who could not see the lovely side of the Saints she was acquainted with, said, 'If they were all like their minister, they would be all right.' We felt pleased that she did not attack the elder."

Martha Salisbury, Benan, Iowa: "Our branch is doing very well. We have a nice Sunday-school, and some outsiders are investigating, and I think will obey before long. When we moved the branch meetings I was quite discouraged, but the Lord spoke to us at a prayer-meeting and told us to sow the seed in hope, and wait for the harvest, and this has helped me to be more patient."

J. S. Hommes, Chico, California: "We would feel lost without the church papers. The many good things we find in their columns truly encourage us on in the great conflict with the world, the flesh, and the Devil. 'Onward and upward,' should be the battle-cry. No time for rest this side of the millennium. Our venerable Bro. Crabb is with us in Chico at present conducting a series of meetings. Bro. C. Scott, H. L. Holt, and J. M. Terry were with us and their sermons will long be remembered by the Chico Branch."

A. A. Reams, Des Moines, Iowa: "There never was a time when there was so manifest in the city of Des Moines the exhibition of different kinds of influence in the way of magnetic healing and faith-cures, as at present, and the power is over the land as well as in the city here. If all these miraculous manifestations are from God it would seem that the divine Father has changed his manner of work. This exhibition of power is an omen that the work of the church is to be more and more opposed, and the minds of the people led away from receiving the truth. It is necessary that the Saints take the utmost care that they be not deceived during these perilous times, and that they may be able to stand as lights to the world. The Saints here, as a body, have their eyes turned toward Zion in her redeemed condition, realizing that the enemy must be driven out; but sad it is that some of the soldiers of the cross, even here in the city, are not in the marching ranks; some are not exactly satisfied with the line of march, and so leave the fighting line when we are face to face with the enemy."

I Know Quit-to-Bac Will Cure. It is a God-Given Remedy

So says Bro. I. M. Dungan of Woodbine, Iowa. Writing July 3, 1904, says: "After having used tobacco for 30 years I feel that I am thoroughly cured of the habit by the use of your 'Quit-to-bac.' I commenced using 'Quit-to-bac' March 8, 1904, and used two and one half boxes, and have had no desire for the past two months, my health is better every way and I feel like a new man. I feel that I can not speak too highly of the merits of 'Quit-to-bac' for I believe 'Quit-to-bac' to be a God-given remedy, that it will cure one of the most filthy and useless habits Satan ever invented; therefore I unqualifiedly recommend it to all addicted to the use of tobacco in any form, and will cheerfully answer inquiries from any one as to my case—how I treated myself, etc., if a stamp is inclosed. You are at liberty to use this recommendation as seems best to you. . . . I close with a heartfelt 'God bless you.'" Three boxes Quit-to-bac postpaid only $1.50 guaranteed to cure or money refunded for the asking. Address, (Bro.) B. F. ORDWAY, Peoria, Illinois.

IS THE COLLEGE WANTED? A FEW FACTS.

It may be true, if stated, that the college action before the conference was had by the voice of uninstructed delegates, so far as instruction came from branches and districts by official action instructing delegations how to vote, for or against the establishment of an institution of learning; but there had been a constant agitation of the question of an educational institution from 1886 up to the time of final action. That the question was forced upon the conference unannounced and without proper instruction upon the part of all who may have been in attendance as ex officio members and delegates, is not correct, nor can any argument be maintained from such an assumption. Those who were in attendance at the conference at the time final action was had were prepared, or should have been, by previous consideration of the question, to act for the church in that matter as in all others that were presented before that session of conference. Further than that, a committee was appointed, and this committee reported their action from time to time, as was required, and continued. If the movement had been considered premature or was improper, there was plenty of time to have discovered what the just objection was.

The character of the institution was determined after a full examination as to whether it should be devoted to religious instruction, or be an educational institution free from sectarian influence or bias. This was discussed and determined by a body of the leading men of the church. The objection was raised, and was accepted as good, that a college for the purpose of educating men for the ministry, through the process of religious instruction, was contrary to the genius of the latter-day work, and this objection was extensively stated both in public and in private during the time that the college question was being considered prior to final action. It would appear, then, that the fact that no previous instructions had been had upon the part of branches and districts touching how the delegates should vote upon this question ought not to be given weight.

Every question upon every movement of the church in its practical workings, the propagation of the gospel, etc., is necessarily a financial question. Moneys are received and expended for the general authori-

BRO. A. N. HOXIE writes us that he was not correctly reported in the interview of the reporter, to which we alluded in a late editorial. He states that he did not say what it was reported he said. We are pleased to note this.

Latter Day Truth

ties of the church engaged in missionary work. There is no previous submission of these movements with the estimated amount of cost presented to the church from time to time, nor are branches and districts expected to instruct their delegates as to how they should vote upon the question. We see no reason why an educational movement should be any more a matter of instruction because it involves an expenditure of finances than any other movement of the church which involves like expenditure. The demand that the people as a whole should be consulted and instructions received from them to guide their delegates has no precedent, and takes the form of the initiative and referendum. Even now upon many of the great questions which are pending before conference, delegations are sent to conference simply instructed thus far, to cast a majority and a minority vote as the sentiment of the delegates themselves may deem best.

That the church has a right to consider and determine matters of the kind found in this college question is clearly within the province of the organic and constitutional law of the church, the provisions of the law providing for the purchase of lands for the public benefit of the church, the building of houses of worship, and building up the New Jerusalem. And upon one occasion commandment was given with regard to the establishment of schools, and it is clearly within the province of the church to authorize the establishment and maintenance of schools within the confines of the church at such places as they might deem to be wise for the express purpose of educational studies.

It was fully understood that the college was to be an educational institution, and it was to be nonsectarian. This was conceded by the great majority of those who discussed the question, and it was upon this that the character of it was determined. We see no reason why it should not be within the province of the church, now, in the prosecution of its work, as it has ever been. The church was commanded to seek learning out of the best books concerning countries, laws, governments, kingdoms, etc., by which they might be provided against the day of necessity. And there is no reason why such a rule might not prevail, leaving the educational portion respecting the gospel, the news of the kingdom, its laws, governments, etc., to be taught in the branches and districts where the ministry is laboring.

There was a school established at Kirtland, and it was prosecuted for a time, in which the languages and other branches of learning were taught; and we believe that this was held in addition to, or in connection with what was known as the school of the prophets. The school of the prophets was especially to be established, when established, for a solemn assembly, in which a teacher was to be chosen from time to time, and they were to gather from each other words of wisdom, and were to teach each other. In section 85, paragraph 36, the church was commanded to seek diligently to teach one another words of wisdom, and to seek out of the best books words of wisdom, and to seek learning, even by study, and also by faith. They were to organize themselves, prepare every needful thing, establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God, and that for the especial purpose of procuring that which should qualify them for their work in other places. There was to be a presidency over the school of the prophets, and this presidency was to be provided for as will be discovered in paragraph 39 of the same section. Our understanding of this is that it is quite different from an ordinary educational institution, such as was contemplated and took form in the council held in 1894.

That the church has been unrepresented in regard to the college is a mistake. Under our republican institutions what the church has done by its representatives has been done by the body. The delegates have been chosen, and are now, in addition to those who are ex officio officers, for the purpose of gathering each year for the transaction of such business as may require action. The law of common consent in a representative body such as our conferences now are does not require a previous submission unto the people for instruction upon their part on any measure that may be presented, unless measures should have been taken beforehand, and then it is optional with those who appoint their delegates. To suggest that the conferences as now constituted do not properly represent the church is an error.

It is our belief that the church may and should properly sustain an institution of learning out of the general funds of the church, and that the Bishop would be authorized under the law to meet such necessary expenditure as might be incurred by the action of a properly chosen board of trustees. We believe that the throwing the onus of support of an institution of the kind upon the voluntary contributions of the people outside of the methods authorized in the law for the financial support of the church is a mistake, notwithstanding that it has been done and that, after the church had authorized the erection of the college, and had appointed its committee of workers by suggestion and otherwise in argument, the demand was made that the institution should not be supported out of the tithes and offerings gathered by the Bishopric for the general functions of the church, thus throwing the college upon the patronage of those who might see the necessity for and utility of such an institution.

It is true that solicitation has been made both for funds and for pupils. That the institution has not been largely sustained is not the fault of the friends who have been earnestly endeavoring to keep it running; for they have done all that lies in their power to secure a proper support of the institution. That there has been a failure to support it financially and with pupils does not necessarily argue that the institution is not needed, or that it should not be further prosecuted. All institutions of the kind, to a greater or lesser extent, have suffered a similar lack over all the country. Some of the best institutions we have at present in existence are even now clamoring for more extensive contributions for their support. Is it to be supposed that had the institution been of a different character and for the education of the eldership, or men to take the place of the eldership in missionary work, that there would have been any better support for it? Is it not a fact that if the church should undertake an establishment of that kind that those who attended it would not feel any obligation to pay any portion of the expense, but put themselves entirely upon the funds of the church itself, and what kind of patronage would that be? If it be granted that the secular education obtained in Lamoni is no better, of its kind, than that obtained at any other institution of learning, is it not advisable that within ourselves we have under our own control an educational institution of the kind that Graceland is? And is it not also advisable that it be of such a character that it may receive the patronage of those without, and thus in a sense bring them within the radius of the influence of the church in its missionary effort in the branch where the college is located?

Suppose that the scholars have been but few, and that the list of the alumni is not large, if it is a fact that any portion of those who have been in attendance have been successful and are now engaged in work for which they have been fitted by the education received at Graceland, it is a commendation for the church and the founders of the college itself, together with those who have been engaged in the faculty work.

It is not true that God and the restored gospel are shut out of the institution of Graceland College. The chapel exercises are of such a character that the Bible, the character of God and of Christ are accepted, and those who occupy the forum from time to time teach the word as they may understand it. Our elders have occupied the place upon invitation of the faculty. Our leading men have been heard there, and our own men have had charge of the institution and its exercises.

An active and organized effort against the continuation of the college will, to a great extent, defeat the consummation which has been devoutly desired, that in due time those young men and women, members of the church, children of members of the church, may receive the benefit of such an institution, without the expenses which commonly attach to an attendance at institutions of learning.

The question may be asked, and is asked, Why should not these receive education at an institution of the church? The question is easily answered: It can not be done unless there is a sufficient element in the church who are willing to contribute voluntarily to such institution with that purpose in view. And it seems vain to ask the question why the church does not make such an establishment and still the objection be urged that the funds of the church ought not to be used in that direction.

If an institution such as is contemplated in the school of the prophets which has been referred to, were established, it would have to be provided for out of tithing, offerings, and the funds of the church, and would not be at liberty to demand or request contributions from the outside beyond such givings as may be couched in what is known as the law of tithing.

Wisdom and learning are not always to be rated by the number of dollars that the attainment of them may cost. If there has been a scant support in the way of pupils from the membership of the church, will not the persistent effort made against the continuation of the college still reduce the number of pupils, and will not such finally result in the wiping out entirely of an institution of that kind? Who will have the courage to attempt a revival of it in the face of such opposition as that?

What process is legitimate to secure the patronage of the people of the church to an institution of learning? If you make it a school to teach the dogmas of the church, what may be called the gospel, how many will go to the expense of sending their children from home to learn what it has been claimed may be taught from the pulpit by the ministry in the branches and districts where missionary labor is performed?

Allow that there are fifty thousand members of the church, and five to the family will give ten thousand families. There ought to be out of this number of families a sufficient number of pupils to endow an institution like Graceland with a sufficient membership of pupils to meet the running expense, if there were a sufficient agreement upon the part of those who desire their children to be educated. Say one half of these and we have five thousand, a tenth part of the membership, and in these families there may be individuals who need an education. If those who are able to send their children to a college or an institution of learning, were willing to patronize Graceland, an institution of their own, of the church, in which there ought to be a pride in its success, there would be no difficulty in the premises whatever.

Suppose there were but twenty-four pupils benefited by the expenditure of two thousand dollars last year, it is but eighty-three and one third dollars per scholarship. If the attendance of pupils were increased to four or five times that number it would make the expenditure much less. This ought to be done. If a proper response had been had to the efforts of those who have been striving to maintain the institution it would have been done.

In the face of the opposition which has been raised against the continuation of the college there is no encouragement upon the part of those who may have hitherto thought to send their children to Graceland to do so; and many will be hesitating and waiting to see whether the institution will live or not. If it does not live, how long will it be before the church can secure an institution such as may have been thought advisable by some to take its place? We are satisfied that the people would not patronize an institution in which the church literature only, and the gospel should be taught as the burden of the curriculum, and such an institution would have no influence whatever upon those who might be outside of the church membership, although friendly to it, as many are at the present time.

Individuals have been sent to the college who have come, and after attending it awhile have united with the church, though they were not taught in the college the rudiments of the church literature. This number should be increased; and by a proper effort to support and sustain the work upon the part of all it could be done and would be done. Those who have the matter in charge, have accepted scholarships and permitted the admission of children of men in the ministry without the payment of tuition. This we understand they are still prepared to do, and as rapidly as it is possible for them to do the number will be increased. This is but right, and this is the effort that those engaged in the work have been earnestly attempting to provide for, that the time might come when the institution would be sufficiently sustained to warrant more extended privileges unto the children of those men who are engaged in the ministry, and who may desire an education of the kind that may be obtained at Graceland.

The bright boys and girls of the really poor people within the reach of the college have not been deprived of the necessary means to educate them there, as can be shown by a proper examination of the college record. It is a mistake to say that the only ones who are the recipients of the benefits of Graceland College are the well-to-do people of the church alone; for it is a fact that a good many of those who are thus well-to-do, and able to educate their children, have availed themselves of the objection, the smallness of the college and the smallness of the village, to send their children elsewhere, where there is a larger clientage, and of course better facilities in some directions for specific education along different lines.

The support of the college does not come in its bulk from the poor, that is to say the poor referred to as the poor class. The liberal donations from those who have been able and are able have been and are being received and it is upon these that the greater dependence lies. It is upon the hypothesis that those who are accounted rich shall give of their means for the final carrying into effect the educational institution in the church that the poor and worthy poor may receive its benefits, has been constantly in view by those who have been working for the success of Graceland College. We make no excuse for the mistakes that may have been made in its financial management by which it became involved in debt. It is sufficient for us to know that the Lord said that the church should pay the debt, that is to say, that the debt should be paid, and he said it to the church, hence the effort of the Bishopric to equalize the proportion was legitimate and proper. If there is to be a cessation of the effort it ought not to occur until after the debt is paid, no matter about the sentiment that may be involved in regard to the poor being excluded. There has been no such intention, and if final success is had the college itself will be open to the children of the poor men who may desire an education. And if we had proper means to accomplish it to establish a dormitory where the students could be boarded at small cost either to themselves or the church it would greatly facilitate the object which has been had in view.

Those who are friendly to the college ought not to be expected to do what man can not do, especially if they have to meet constant recurrence of opposition. An argument against the institution based upon the thought that it is for those who are prepared to help themselves only, is to our understanding a mistake; and the best way to keep the institution unprepared to help those who need help is to destroy its standing and its influence. If this is done then there will be no help for the institution. The very argument based upon that thought suggests that an institution of the kind should be maintained at the general expense of the church coffers from the tithing funds gathered for the general expense of the church, and subject to the direction of the conferences. It is finally expected that persons may receive financial help in settling themselves in a way to maintain themselves, from the general church coffers, these coffers to be replenished by that which is gathered according to the rule of the church known as tithes and offerings. Why should there be any exception in favor of an institution of learning, either the school of the prophets or any other?

Graceland College was instituted, as it was supposed, to come out in an opportune time for the furthering of the general educational interests of the church. There is nothing unchristian in its organization. It is organized according to the laws of the state of Iowa. It exists under those laws, and the object sought to be accomplished by its institution has been steadily in view to be conserved by those who have had the matter in charge. It has been under the supervision of officers of the church chosen from time to time at the conferences, and as good men as we have had have been chosen to occupy these places. There is true Christianity in the effort, and it is intended to help those who need help just as rapidly as it is possible to do so.

The law of the church requires that men who are sent out to represent the church in the interests of the gospel, are those who are called by the Spirit of revelation and are ordained unto that office by virtue of the Holy Ghost which is in those who ordained them. To institute a college for the purpose of educating men for the ministry would meet such a combination of opposition as to prevent the accomplishment of it in any event. But if the college has and does receive the support which it is entitled to, then it will be but a little while (and it should have been now) when all that is requisite in regard to it would be within its reach.

So far as safeguarding the interests of its patrons on the campus and elsewhere, we believe that this is as well done at Graceland as anywhere else, so far as lies within the reach of the community, and those engaged in the work. As to whether it may possibly ever become an ideal school up to the requirements of some may be an open question. But we can already point to individuals who have graduated from Graceland, and contrast them very favorably with many of those who have been graduated elsewhere, and see no reason why the extremes of deformity and depravity of Aaron Burr, Benedict Arnold, and Doctor Webster should be thrown in as standards of what colleges for educational interests may have done.

We may point to a great many wise men who have been the result of a collegiate education, and who now stand among men everywhere as proper representatives of true manhood and of Christian principles so far as they understand the gospel of the Son of God.

There are already men and women who have graduated from Graceland who stand as the peers of any in individual righteousness and spiritual force. It is not needful to name them; but these ought not to be deprecated by improper comparison with those who have been abnormalities in society rather than those of normal development.

We have already given place to articles upon this topic of Graceland upon both sides of the question, and seeing that conference is now so near we deem it proper to close the columns of the HERALD to further agitation of the subject, especially by those who have already written upon it.

Bro. R. C. Evans was at last writing, (February 19, we assume) continuing the effort begun in Toronto, Ontario, some month or so ago, with good prospects for results. The services in the church on week nights were being well sustained. The meetings in the opera-house on Sunday nights fell off to some extent during the extreme cold for the 5th and 12th, but the attendance for the 19th was larger than at any previous service. Bro. Evans was in excellent spirits, tired but jubilant and enjoying his work. The collections were sufficient to meet the expense of the opera-house rents.

In this issue will be found a letter from J. W. Williams who follows up the thought suggested by Bro. Rannie in a recent issue, and suggests the reason, according to his understanding, for the apparent small returns for labor done by the ministry in later years. If Bro. Williams is correct in regard to his estimate of the proportion of inefficient workers, it is time for the church to awake. That he has some ground for his views we are inclined to believe because of complaint from other parts of the country by private letter. It is just possible that some of the missionaries would do well to consider carefully the statement of the Savior, "The Son of Man came, not to be ministered unto, but to minister," and "I am among you as he who serveth." He is the pattern. If any of the missionaries have formed the idea that their labor consists in being ministered unto, petted, pampered, and made much of, they have evidently mistaken their calling, and the church would be benefited, spiritually and financially, by setting them to work at something else.

A prominent Sunday-school worker of New York not long ago made an address to Sunday-school workers in Brooklyn in which he made the rather startling statement that "God is driving the boy out of the Sunday-school." The Philadelphia North American quotes him as saying:

"God is driving the boy out of the Sunday-school. We have made the Sunday-school to attract the boy God has made. The boy of energy and fire wants an outlet for his energy. Now, which is more important; the boy as he is or the schools as they are to-day? The boy is vastly more important. There is no period more critical than the period of adolescence. It is the storm and stress period of a boy's life. You can not present a Christianity that is made up of 'don'ts' to a boy. He wants to know of something he can do, not of a lot of things he must not do. Do not paint Christ as an effeminate being. Paint him as a great strong character, always up and doing. That is what will appeal to the boy. Do not paint heaven as a place of eternal rest. No boy would like to go there.

"Give the boys a room by themselves. They do not wish to stand up with a lot of little girls dressed in white, wearing pink ribbons, and sing, 'I'm one of Jesus' little Lambs.' They repudiate that sentiment at once. Give them young men to teach them. I would not give a boys' class to a woman teacher once in a thousand times."

Is the foregoing true of Latter Day Saint Sunday-schools?

GRACELAND COLLEGE.

There are some features touching the Graceland College question that ought to be ventilated more fully before the people; questions that have been touched upon but slightly, or which have been passed by unnoticed altogether.

Does the church, as a whole, want the college? Uninstructed delegates fastened the college upon the church in the first place, and at the end of the first decade of its life, high church opinion is divided upon the question as to what the church wants, touching the closing or continuance of Graceland College as now conducted.

A question like the college question, that is financial as well as educational, and that requires taxation of the people in order that it may live, demands that the people of the church, by a majority vote through their authorized, instructed representatives, shall say what must be done in the premises, and their will is the law that must govern in the case.

General Conference has the right, doubtless, to legislate along lines expressed in the organic and constitutional laws of the church, but when it comes to the question of sustaining, financially, a secular educational institution, unprovided for in the revelations and laws of the church, then it is for the people to say, whose money supports the institution, by vote and voice, whether they want an institution of that kind or not.

This idea rests upon the "Magna Charta" of our liberties,—the law of common consent. It rests upon the eternal principle of right, "that taxation and representation are inseparable." We do not mean a representation that misrepresents, or that may misrepresent, but a representation to whom and through whom the people have spoken and declared themselves unequivocally.

"COLLEGE PROGRESS."

Articles of Association and Incorporation of Graceland College were adopted by the General Conference, 1895. Since the school was opened church papers, church authorities, and all, have exerted themselves to the utmost to solicit money from the people of the church for the payment of college indebtedness, and to solicit patronage for the school, inviting the Saints to send their children to Graceland College to be educated. After all this solicitation for money and pupils what have we done? We have increased our deficit for running expenditures; with "fifty-three students, twenty-four of whom were from outside of Lamoni." So writes a brother under date of August 18, 1904. The brother procured his information, he says, from President Dewsnup. My informant is all right upon this point, for he is no less than one of the bishops of the church.

We have now the practical fact, that during the last General Conference year thousands of dollars were expended, with a large deficit at the end of the year, in order that twenty-four pupils outside of Lamoni might attend Graceland College and obtain a secular education, which in itself does not benefit the church any more at large than a secular education obtained at Chicago University; for, if these twenty-four pupils learned anything touching our faith, they must learn it outside of Graceland College, for God and the restored gospel are shut out of that institution by the articles of its incorporation.

How does this kind of a school compare with the kind founded by command of God, known as the school of the prophets? The gospel was the basis of that school, and its life-giving principles were taught therein, as well as secular matters.

It may be said that Graceland benefits the educational interests of Lamoni. Is the general church to be taxed for the benefit of the resident pupils of Lamoni? If so, why not tax the church for the benefit of the resident pupils of Independence, Chicago, or any other place where Saints have children to educate?

The question is, Of what secular, educational, or spiritual benefit is Graceland College to the whole church? In the face of a deficit of two thousand dollars last year it benefited twenty-four pupils out of a church membership of over fifty thousand people; less than one pupil to every two thousand members, outside of Lamoni. The only trouble about the college is the simple fact that the people will not patronize it, and until they do it is bound to be a failure.

Who does Graceland College benefit under the present rules? Here is a man,—many men,—living away from advanced educational privileges. He has a bright family of children whom he desires to educate. He is devoting his life to preaching the gospel. His family receives a small stipend, just sufficient to satisfy their necessary wants. It takes car-fare, board money, tuition fees, and many extra expenses for his children to enter Graceland College; and he can not meet the financial demands, and as the result Graceland College is closed against the children of the man who sacrifices most for the cause of the Redeemer. The bright boys and girls of the really poor people of the church are excluded from the college because invalid parents or poor management deprives them of the necessary means to educate them there.

The ambitious boy who works out his own salvation along educational lines, or the well-to-do people of the church who have money to educate their children away from home, are the only ones in the church that Graceland College benefits. That makes it a class institution, favoring the wealthier class as against the poor. Yet the poor washwoman, or the poor widow is asked to pay her proportionate share of the college indebtedness, while her own bright children are to be deprived of a college education in the church because of poverty. Then you propose to take money from the poor—too poor to send their children to college—to help liquidate debts incurred in educating a class in the church who were able to pay their own way in other secular educational institutions without involving the church in debt. God's plan takes from the rich and gives to the worthy poor. The rule is reversed in this case.

A system that makes such conditions possible is wrong. We have then an educational institution that is prepared to help those who are prepared to help themselves; but is unprepared to help those who can not help themselves, and who need help.

How much of Christ's religion is in a principle that provides for us to help those who are able to help themselves, but cuts off the ones who need help? We do not ask God to help us to do that which we can do ourselves. It would be a manifestation of laziness if we did. When we come to the limit of our powers, which is every day, we look to him who is the helper of the helpless. He intervenes when and where we need help. In these experiences we learn that our heavenly Father cares for us and that he is the true source of all real happiness. True Christianity is to help where help is needed. Nothing else is Christian. In this true, practical sense, Graceland College is not a Christian institution; it is purely secular, and caters to the interests of the wealthier class of church people, as against the worthy poor.

When it exhibits Christian helpfulness to those who need help, when it has a department in which the gospel is taught, when it can supply the educational wants of young men ordained to the priesthood free of charge, when it can educate the children of the men who devote their lives to the work of God without compensation, when it safeguards the moral interests of its patrons both on the campus and elsewhere, then, and not till then, will Graceland College become the ideal school of the church, in which will be combined the intellectual, ethical, and spiritual forces that make for individual righteousness and greatness in goodness, rather than that intellectual deformity that has given to the world its Aaron Burrs, Benedict Arnolds, and Doctor Websters.

Let the church make the college a representative Christian institution in the practical sense of helpfulness, then appeal to the charity of the church membership, and the result will be different.

ALL THINGS WORK TOGETHER FOR GOOD.

SERMON BY HEMAN C. SMITH, AT LAMONI, IOWA,
FEBRUARY 5, 1905.

I will invite your attention to-night to the reading of a portion of the eighth chapter of Romans commencing at the twenty-fourth verse:

For we are saved by hope: but hope that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for? But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it. Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which can not be uttered. And he that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God. And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called: and whom he called, them he also justified: and whom he justified, them he also glorified. What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us? He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things? Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth. Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? As it is written, For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter. Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Thus reads the eighth chapter of Romans beginning at the twenty-fourth verse and reading to the conclusion of the chapter. I desire to invite your especial attention to a statement made in the twenty-eighth verse:

And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.

The more any one will consider this statement, the more he will examine it, the more thoroughly will he be convinced of its truth, and the more beauty, grandeur, perfection, and harmony will he see in the statement made. Not only is it true within the limitations spoken of by the apostle Paul, that all things work together for good to them that love God; but, though not to the same extent, it is largely true of others as well. All things work together for good to those that do not love God. Not to the same extent, not as fully, not as completely as within the limitations spoken of here, but it is largely true of all the creatures of God.

And if we could only properly comprehend the good, and also comprehend the evil that surrounds us, and make the right application always of the things that we come in contact with, we would be far better off than we are. It is largely the result of ignorance upon our part that we do not comprehend in all things the love of God as expressed in his work and his overruling power towards his creatures.

We are surrounded with life and with death, and there is not a single influence existing in the world, in the opinion of your speaker, but what contributes either to life or death,—is either contributing largely to our physical life or physical death, the perpetuation of the one or the hastening of the other. And other influences also have their effect upon our spiritual life, our spiritual death, either to the perpetuation of the one or to the hastening of the other. Other influences and combinations of influences abroad in the world have their effect on our moral life or moral death. There is nothing that exists in the universe with which we come in contact, but what contributes to the one or to the other. And the man or woman who passes through this world careless of influences, regardless of effects of those influences, is very likely to have more to contribute to his death than to his life, to the hastening of the condition of decay, the passing out of the condition of life into a condition of death. And the individual who is careful and wise, and thoughtful, will be enabled to take such advantage of influences existing in the world as will contribute to life, and to the life that is more abundant, and to the increasing of the power of life which is given to all mankind.

And so I would remark that we are living under influences and in conditions that require our careful thought and careful attention all the time. It requires even more wisdom than we have. It requires that we shall be in such close contact with the forces of intellectual power that are higher than ours that we may receive from time to time instruction and intuition by which we may be able to grasp conditions that surround us, and to choose the better part, and to have those things that God has created contributing to our good all the time instead of to our decay, our death, and our destruction.

And while we are contending with these influences we must have this thought impressed most forcibly upon our minds, if we are thoughtful, that there is no element in all nature that acts independently of itself. The very atmosphere we breathe is composed of different elements, acting in harmony or coöperation together. The universe around us is composed of different elements that are working together in harmony for the good of mankind, and for the bringing about of such conditions as will be desirable, not only to men, but that will receive the approbation of our heavenly Father. The very kingdoms that we have divided this universe into are dependent upon each other. We talk concerning the mineral, the animal, and vegetable kingdoms, but there is no one of them, as I said awhile ago, there is no one element in nature that is independent. There is no combination of elements that is independent. There is no organization of elements that is independent. Whenever there may be a group or organization it is dependent upon other groups and other organizations, and none of them acts independently within itself. Each is dependent upon the others. This mineral kingdom as we call it, we may have thought is independent of the vegetable and the animal; but it is not. What a barren, unsightly thing it would be if alone. But when it receives into its bosom the germ of life contained in the vegetable seeds, warms it until it begins to swell and bursts its environments, and grow, it not only clothes itself with beauty and with grandeur and loveliness, but it contributes in return for the good that it receives from the vegetable, to the vegetable, and helps the vegetable in perpetuating its kind. So each is dependent upon the other. And the animal kingdom is also dependent upon the mineral kingdom for a home in which to dwell, and upon which to move; and is dependent upon the vegetable kingdom for sustenance. It also contributes to the vegetable kingdom by careful cultivation and causes the vegetable kingdom to become more perfect,—better results to obtain than when the hand of the animal, especially of man, is not directed to its cultivation and its perpetuity.

So, as I said, in all the universe God has made nothing to be independent; and yet we find men sometimes who think they are independent. I occasionally come across men in my travels who think they are independent thinkers. I have heard them talk about being independent in thought; that they rely upon no person for their conclusions, or even for their thought. To hear them talk you would suppose they thought—I honestly believe some of them do think so—that the thoughts that come to their minds are born right beneath those little skulls of theirs; that there is no thought that ever comes to them but originates in that little gray matter beneath their skulls. They call themselves independent. Yet their thought is constantly dependent upon other things and other persons; and if they can not recognize that they are not in harmony with nature, for the great throbbing heart of nature proclaims to us everywhere, and in every phase of its life, that the principle of coöperation, or working together, is the plan that God has devised for the perpetuation of all things worthy the possessing, and the elevation and purification of mankind as well.

We are dependent, too, upon the things that surround us for our thought. We can not escape it. Our environments suggest thought, and we can not separate ourselves from it.

When the weather is beautiful, and the fields are in bloom, and all nature is clothed in verdure and beauty, and we are out viewing the landscape, and viewing the beauties of nature, our thoughts are different, quite different from what they would be to-night. The environments are different, our thoughts consequently a great deal different. And if there is any inspiration, if there is any thought that is to come to us from our surroundings, it comes to us when we are the most comfortable, and when we are the most in harmony with our surroundings. When these organisms of ours suffer the least from the conditions that surround them, when everything is pleasant, inspiration is the brightest, thought is the keenest, and our conceptions are the most reliable.

So we are dependent upon the very things that surround us; and were it not that I could see, I would not think as I do now. It is what I see that suggests thought to my mind oftentimes. I would not, if blind, have the same thoughts that I now have. I might have others equally as good in some directions, but I would be a changed man in my thought. If I were changed in my physical senses, if I could not hear, if the harmony of sound never greeted my ears, I would not have the same thought that I do now. There are thoughts awakened in my heart, in my mind; my soul is stirred by the things that I hear, the things that I see, the things that I taste, the things that I smell, the things that I feel. So I am not independent. I can not be independent. Not only am I not independent of the physical universe around me, I am not independent of my fellow men. I am subject to the influences of the minds that are around me. I concede that some men are more independent than others; that some drift with the tide; that some entirely give up to the thought of another, and when the thought is expressed they have no ability within themselves to resist it and think for themselves.

A comparative independence, I believe, is possible and praiseworthy; but absolute independence does not exist. Absolute independence of thought, absolute independence of action exists nowhere among all the creatures of God. We are dependent. And as I said in regard to the elements with which we are surrounded, there is no element that acts independently of itself. There is no organization of elements that acts independently of itself, unless you include the universe within that organization. Unless the whole of the complete universe of God as created be included, there is no independence there. And I doubt it then.

So in regard to man, There is no independent man. We talk about men who are independent in thought, and we talk about men who are independent in fortune. When a man has accumulated to himself a large amount of this world's goods we say he is independent. But he is not. His money would do him no good if there were not somebody else there. Somebody has to use it. He has to purchase with it. Somebody must do the labor that he has placed himself in a condition that he does not need to do. He is dependent upon the labor of others. He is dependent not only upon the labor of others, but he is dependent upon the thought of others.

We are neither intellectually, physically, or in any other way independent. We are a part of the whole. God never intended that any part of his creation should be independent of other parts of his creation; but that all should work together. And hence he has ordained all things that contribute to our good. The things that he has ordained for the purpose of serving us, the elements that we are surrounded with, that we may analyze and choose, are also acting upon the same principle that they work together for good to them that serve God, first. Largely they may to them who do not serve God. They are in the fullest sense of the word serving those who love God, because those who love God understand how to use them better.

There are a great many things in this world that seem to be evil to us, and we would like to avoid them, but if we could avoid them probably we would be worse off than we are. We would not be in nearly so good a condition if we could avoid all we desire to avoid, as we are to-day. Suppose we could avoid sorrow. Suppose we could avoid witnessing the suffering upon the part of our fellow creatures. Suppose that we never saw an individual in pain; we never saw an individual in want. If all we come in contact with, and all that we love, all the individuals who are near to us, all our friends, and especially those who are connected with us by birth and are attached to us by nature, were in pleasant circumstances, and free from every pain and sorrow, what would be the condition with us? The grosser parts of our nature would be developed. The animal part of our nature might be developed. There might be a contributing to the development of the animal pleasures and gratifications of life largely, and we might never be touched in the tenderest parts of nature. The sympathies of men would never be aroused. The pity of men would never be developed; and the tender part of the heart might never be touched by the conditions surrounding us. And the things that we desire, the things that we long for, the comforts and the satisfaction that we would like to enjoy, would leave us undeveloped creatures.

I would not undertake to account for every instance of pain. I would not say that every pain that comes into the world has an effect for good. I would not say that every sorrow that touches the life of man has an effect for good. But the presence of pain in the world is good. The presence of sorrow in the world is good. There may be instances of it brought about by conditions that no lessons are learned from. But if it were not doing good, I have that faith in God, I have that confidence in God's love, I have that confidence in his wisdom, that I do not believe that pain would be permitted to remain in this world to afflict God's children. I do not believe that sorrow would be allowed to encroach upon the creatures of God, if there were not good in it. I can see where the good comes in sometimes. We learn from it. The child that has not learned that fire would devour the flesh might play in the bright shining coals on the hearth until the hands were consumed. Pain, blessed pain, comes to the rescue, and the hand is withdrawn before it is devoured, and the child learns to dread the fire.

So we see we may learn if we will, if we are wise enough to learn. And these things, as I said before, teach us, develop us, where nothing else would teach us, develop us in the better and kinder and gentler parts of our nature.

There is a time coming, we hope, when pain and sorrow will not be needed; but if it ever comes it will find us in a condition that we do not need them. They will be here as long as we need them. When we are developed, when these natures of ours are fully brought up to the condition that God intended they should be in, when we are developed in the full, when our souls are enlarged and we are made to comprehend the goodness of God, and all its beauty and loveliness, and our characters are formed after the perfect pattern, then we will not need pain; then we will not need sorrow; and that is the time when these things are to be taken away, and every tear shall be dried, and every pang of pain shall be rebuked, and there shall be nothing to hurt or destroy among all the creatures of God. May God grant that these agencies of our development and growth may not pass by unheeded, but may they do us the good that is intended until we shall pass beyond the need of them, and enter into the presence of God, into conditions where life shall be enjoyable, more so than it is here. But until that time shall come, all things shall work together for good to them that love God, who are the called according to his purpose.

Not everything shall be pleasant. Not everything shall be agreeable. That would not be the best for us. But the pain of yesterday with the comforts of to-day, the reverses of to-day with the triumphs of to-morrow, the good (that we call good) that we have experienced in the past, with the evils (as we interpret them) that we are suffering to-day, all work together for good to them that serve God, who are the called according to his purpose.

And when these things shall have had their proper work, then will come the time that the things that are disagreeable shall be taken away, because they will have served their purpose. And may it be with us, while we pass through these trials, surrounded with death, surrounded with life, surrounded with influences that beget life and influences that beget death, may it be with us as Paul assured the Saints it would be with them, if faithful; that nothing shall separate us from the love of Christ, neither tribulation, nor distress, nor persecution, nor torment, nor nakedness, nor peril, nor sword, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, etc., shall separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus.

Evil must come,—what we call evil,—to counterbalance, to bring into equilibrium the conditions that surround us, so that we may, if properly using, properly applying that which God has created for our benefit, be fully developed, fully prepared, that we may be full-grown men and women in Christ Jesus, nothing lacking, rounded out in character, so there will be nothing we may need to qualify us to stand in the presence of God. This, as I said before, must be done upon the principle of coöperation, as everything else is done. All the universe should act in harmony. Sometimes there seems to be a little conflict, a little friction, caused no doubt by circumstances or conditions which we could not fully explain or fully understand, but these conditions are abnormal. So in our lives there seems to be friction. But good comes of it at last, if we are only wise. And as these things work together in harmony, God intended that his creatures should work together in harmony.

That is the purpose of the church. That is the only purpose of the church. I do not think that the church is necessary as a thing to be gained, simply that we may become members of it. Membership does no good unless we make or avail ourselves of the privileges of membership. The fact of membership does no good. The privileges of membership are what are good. And God has given to us an organization called the church because under the rules governing, under the government existing in the church of God there may be influences brought to bear (as we can not act alone) that conjointly with him we may act for our best good, and to the best effect in developing these characters of ours and making them more like God and more like Christ. The man who simply has a membership and does not avail himself of the privileges of membership has not gained anything in this world by being a church-member. He has simply occupied an anomalous position. It is the man who by association with his brethren, the man who by obedience to the law, by having deference toward his brethren, by counseling together as the law of God directs, by each one occupying the place and ministry where God has placed him, being recognized in that position, and the influences going out from that administration affecting all the body.

The church organization is a grand thing. I would hate to see it abandoned; and yet if it does not occupy, it is not good for anything. God has seen fit to reject the church once or twice in the past, twice we believe, not because the church was not a good thing, not because it was not designed that the influence of church organization should be grand and good, and help and elevate mankind, but because the church did not occupy. By allowing things to be indorsed that were contrary to the law of God, and because of these things becoming so strong that they permeated the body to the extent that the good there was in it was overcome, then the church was rejected. God grant it may never be again. But if conditions demand, it will be. God never changes; therefore as a church we should be careful.

We can not be independent, even as a church, of the world. We are commanded to come out and be separate, and this is all right in a sense; but as long as we are in the world, we are subject to the influences of the world. Unhappily we may be too much subjugated to them sometimes. We may not choose wisely. We may allow conditions to obtain that will influence us in the wrong direction, and instead of drawing the world to us, have ourselves drawn toward it, and the church ceases to occupy where God intended it should.

And not only does the principle of coöperation hold good among men, and they required to labor together, but to labor together in unity and in love, and try to build each other up. Just as soon as one man tries to hurt another, and one organization tries to hurt another, that man or organization is out of harmony with God. As long as we are trying to do good we are in harmony with God. When our desires at least are good although we may be mistaken in policy, our desires are all right. And if we can only be wise enough to make our policies right we shall succeed. But we are to be in harmony with God, too. And the law directs that we should coöperate with God. He does not work alone in this matter; and we can not.

We talk sometimes about this being God's work. I do not know but I have said it in the past, for I was not as careful about what I said once as I am now, and maybe I am not careful enough yet. I do not know but I have said in the past that I knew this work was of God. Do not be shocked if I tell you I do not know it now. I do know that God is in the work; but I do not know that all this work is of God. I do not believe it is. I believe that man has to work here as well as God; and that this work is a combination of the divine and the human. I trust the humanity will be swallowed up in divinity. I trust that the part that is human may be overcome, and that by coöperation together with God the weakness of man may be overcome so that he may be strong enough to coöperate with God upon a higher plane by and by.

But I am glad this work is partly of man. I am glad this work is not altogether perfection practically. I do not mean the theory, when I say it is not all of God. The theory is of God, properly understood. But I mean the practical workings of this church are not all of God. There is individuality and there is weakness here. I am glad of it. I am glad God has not chosen perfect instruments to do his work. I am glad he has not all infallible instruments. If he had he would leave me out, and I do not want to be out. I want to have a part in this work. I love it that well, that I do not want to be separated from it. I am glad as I said before that he has chosen fallible instruments to carry on the work; and the work practically is not all God's work, but God's work and our work. I hope the fallible part may become less and less fallible, and that humanity will be swallowed up in divinity by and by. And that is the plan by which God has undertaken to work in this church. Always was—this coöperation together with man. He did not do it alone. He knows we can not. And he does not propose to. He asks us to be coworkers with him.

Let me read one or two thoughts connected with this subject, as found here in the word of God. There is one statement made by the apostle Paul that I think will be suggestive right upon this point, found in the ninth verse of the third chapter of 1 Corinthians. He says: "We are laborers together with God." Speaking of the ministry no doubt. God and they were working together. "Ye are God's husbandry." That is the church. He compares the church to the husbandry; the ministry to the laborers in the field. The work was to be done conjointly by God and the ministry in cultivating the great harvest-field in preparing for the future crop that was to be garnered in the by and by. "Ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building." The ministry working together with God, as expressed here, were building the church of God. Possibly the ministry may not always do perfect work. As I said before, it is a good thing I think that we have the weakness of men here. It would be of no use as a church if we did not have weakness in it. That is what the church is for, for the perfecting of the saints. That is one of its purposes. If they were all perfect, the purpose of it would be done away. We want it because there is weakness here. And because it crops out we need not be discouraged. If we see things being done occasionally that are not altogether right according to our conception, first consider that our conception may be wrong, second, if it be right, you need not be surprised at seeing weakness pointed out. As long as God has set his hand to perfect weak things, and as long as they are weak their characteristics will be shown.

In reading the history of the church in the past, I have been strengthened more than discouraged by seeing the weakness of men cropping out, seeing the acts of men that looked to me weak. Whenever I have read in the history and have seen it recorded that men did so and so that was manifestly weak, so weak sometimes that it surprised me, I have said,

"Men like you could not have formulated this latter-day work, and could not have brought into existence such a theory of perfection as that. Somebody else has been there besides you." I could not possibly attribute it to such men as that. They could not have done it.

We could not do the work we are doing to-day, either, we could not hold the organization together under present conditions, if somebody else was not here besides us. We are laborers together with God. "Ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building."

Again the apostle said at one time, "We pray you in Christ's stead [for Christ] to be reconciled to God." We are acting for Christ, acting in harmony with him. I want to give you an illustration. Even the sins of men can not be forgiven, or they can not overcome them, or wipe them out themselves. God does not forgive them, either, without their coöperation with him. That is the way I read the book. The forgiveness of sins is done upon the principle of coöperation. I read here in the first chapter of Isaiah where a man is commanded, it would seem, if we take that verse alone, to wash himself, without the promise of help. He says: "Wash ye, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow." There a man is commanded to wash, and be clean. He is not told anything about God cleansing him there. You would think, if you were to read that passage alone, that it was within his power to cleanse himself, that God demanded him to do it. Then you might turn over to the seventh chapter of Revelation, and you would determine by the reading of that that the man had done just what he was commanded to do. For there the revelator said he saw a throng beneath the throne of God, and this throng was arrayed in white robes. They were the ransomed ones. "And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they? And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said unto me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." That looks just like it does in Isaiah. In one place the man is told to wash, and here it says he did wash, and has made his robes white in the blood of the Lamb. We might build a theory right away upon that and say a man might cleanse himself, if we did not read too much. But if we should turn to the first chapter of Revelation it would spoil that theory, for there we are told that Jesus Christ appeared to John on the Isle of Patmos. John spoke of what he saw and witnessed there, and the things that he heard from Jesus Christ: "Who is a faithful witness, and the first-begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth. Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood." It says there Christ did it. The other place says that they "have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

Which is true? Both. You can make both true only upon the principle of coöperation; that Christ and men work together in doing that, so that in working together, God and man coöperating together, man's sins are remitted. And if the remission of sins is brought about through the principle of coöperation, then every other act that man is required to do in the service of God is brought to pass through the principle of coöperation. Man may, in his attempt to coöperate with God, make mistakes; may not do his work perfectly. We may be discouraged because we see that he does not. But if he is continuing to improve all the time, then the work is having an effect upon him, and his coöperation with God is doing him good. And as I believe I have before remarked in this place, I do not believe that a struggling soul will ever be lost. I do not believe that an individual who is making efforts will ever come to naught, and his efforts be of no avail. The man that ceases to try, drifts over the line that separates the human from the beast and is lost. But the man that is making an effort, though it may be a weak one, he may make mistakes like we do physically sometimes when the road is slippery, he may fall down; but if he uses the strength that is his, and gets on his feet again, if he only is striving all the time, somewhere, somehow, sometime the mighty hand of God will be placed beneath him and he will be placed upon his feet, and will be able to stand there, too. There is no question about that in my mind. Coöperation with God will bring about these results, and no other principle will.

My mind was directed to this subject to-day by the remarks of one of the speakers, and I want to invite your attention again to a statement made here in a revelation of God given in 1887 which was referred to, right in harmony with this principle of coöperation. "Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may." That is the principal work of the church, to prosecute the missionary work. There is no other to be compared with it. And all others should sink into insignificance when compared to it. But who are to be the missionaries? We read in the statement of the apostle Paul the principle expressed which called the ministry coworkers together with God. He did not carry it so far as this revelation goes, though I believe that the revelation is correct. If the principle involved is true in regard to the ministry it must be true in regard to others. He said to the ministry, "We are laborers together with God." And to the church, "Ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building." And here the principle is carried farther in the instruction to the church to prosecute the work. We are told, "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all." What is the work intrusted to all? As expressed there it is the prosecution "of the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may." I am not going to tell you how you who labor in the affairs of business and of work can labor together with God in the prosecution of the missionary work. The reason I am not going to tell you is because I think you know. And it will be useless for me to tell you how you can do it, if you want to do it. If you want to help, you will find the way.

This is the most cheering thought that I have contemplated for a great many years, that is, that all are called of God. And it throws light upon another revelation, to me,—a revelation that I used to be troubled about; at least I used to be troubled about the application of it. It reads that he "who desires to thrust in his sickle and reap the same is called of God." I saw that applied when I was a boy, and sometimes since I have been a man. If a man had a desire it was evidence of his call, and if he is called he should be ordained. The desire was all that we needed in the church to convince that the man ought to be ordained to some office and sent out. I never could see that. It never looked right to me. This throws light upon it. It says, "Let him thrust in his sickle and reap." It does not say, Give him a sickle to reap with. It conveys the idea that he already has his sickle, and he should use it if he has the desire. This throws light upon that by saying, "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them." If a man has a gift of God, if he is a good business man or skilled workman, it is his gift of God, and he is called to use that gift. He has the sickle. Let him use that gift,—thrust in his sickle and reap,—use the gift that God has given him and help prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as it is possible to do under conditions existing.

I am glad that the man who goes forth to toil in the morning, and by using the physical powers comes home at night weary, worn, and tired, can have the consolation that he has been called of God to work that day, and is just as much in the purview of his calling as the man who stands behind the sacred desk. I am glad that the man who has engaged in business, whether he stands behind the counter or at the anvil, may know that every movement that he makes in business affairs, God has called him to do it, and he is working in harmony with the calling. He is given a gift. God says, Thrust in your sickle, according to your gift, and reap. And when you are doing it you are doing a God-appointed work.

I am glad the wife and mother who cares for the home, sacrifices the society of her companion whether he is in the ministry or whether he is in business, or wherever he is, who is looking after the interests of home, trying to care for the things that are brought there for their comfort, trying to rear the children and teach, admonish, instruct, and direct them, can realize when her day's work is done that God called her, and she is acting in harmony with her calling. And a higher calling no mortal ever had. I care not what high-sounding title you may attach to the man's position in this church, he has no higher calling than that of a husband and father. He has no higher calling than has his companion, as wife and mother. That is one of the most sacred, one of the highest callings that God ever called an individual to, and God has called all. We are all called. God be praised for that. And the principle of coöperation with God, coöperation with each other, coöperation in the family, coöperation in society, coöperation in the church, coöperation in the nation, coöperation with all the good influences known, that we come in contact with, will make better the world, will make better the church, will make better society, and will make more sacred the hearthstone, which ought to be the most sacred place on earth.

Much as I love the church, much as I have sacrificed and am willing to sacrifice in her interests, if I had to make choice to-night as to whether we should abolish the family or the church, I would not hesitate a moment. I would say, Let the church go; we will keep the family. We will keep sacred the one institution that can possibly prepare man to become useful in the church and in the nation and in society. Destroy that fundamental organization and you destroy all others. That is the foundation. That is why the church was rejected in the past, because it destroyed the family institution, and the sacredness and the sanctity of the home went out. And then the church went with it. So if we could have but one, we would take the family. Thank God we can have both. And if one is properly used, and the influences are properly outlined, and conditions there made what they might be, it will be better for the church, better for the world.

Coöperation from start to finish is God's plan. All the elements, in fact, in the atmosphere, in the water, in the vegetable kingdom and animal kingdom, and all that surrounds us, wherever our eyes may look, wherever our thoughts may wander, all are to work together in harmony and work together for good. God has so ordained. Man works with man. Man should work with God. And upon the principle that we are laborers together with God we will succeed.

I love the thought of that prayer offered in Gethsemane, where the Master prayed that "all those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are." Then his mind taking a wider scope than that, and praying not only for his life companions, he said, "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word." That means you and me. We believe on him through the words of these men. "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." That will be the result. Ah! I like to think of that union. I like to think of that blending together. God in Christ, and Christ in man, all working together in perfect harmony.

Let harmony have its perfect work. Let joy, and peace, and consolation attend us. If in our struggles and weakness we falter and fall, let us struggle to our feet and go on, assured that the powers of heaven are enlisted in our behalf, if we strive to do right; wisdom, and light, and intelligence, and the higher and better conceptions of truth will be ours as we make the struggle. And as we increase our diligence and our zeal in striving to serve God we shall surmount the obstacles that stand before us, sometime. I know not when, whether it shall be in my time or not, but I would like to see it. But if it be not in my time, sometime the banner of King Immanuel will be carried by faithful hands on heights where now we dare not tread, and the work will go on. The work of truth planted in the earth will never be lost until victory shall be won, and every struggling soul that desires right and works for the right is saved.

May God grant that we may make the best of our opportunities, that our glory may be complete.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

VAIL, Iowa, January 28, 1905.

Dear Sisters: I have been thinking for some time of writing a few lines to our dear Home Column. I do not suppose I will write anything that will be of much interest to others, but I wish to thank others for the encouraging words written. They have been a source of much comfort and help to me. I enjoy reading the articles written concerning the responsibility of parents, as I have two dear little ones, whom I wish to raise up in the ways of the Lord. I realize we can not guard our little ones too closely or teach them too carefully, as sin is upon every hand. We can not be too careful about setting them a good example, for they will soon notice whether we practice what we preach or not. And if we do not we have lost much of our influence over them. If we neglect either, it is better to practice than to preach; however, both are necessary. But we must remember to season both with love. Show your child by your actions that you love him, as well as by words. Make him feel that home is not complete without him. Be careful to have your child's confidence; be interested in his play as well as his work, then you can help him in choosing good companions. Teach him to ask God to help him at all times. We mothers who live so far from Sunday-school that we can not send our little ones, need not let them go untaught. We can gather them around us and teach them ourselves. When my little ones came I lived where I could not send them to Sunday-school, but I could not bear the idea of them not knowing about Jesus. I made up my mind to teach them myself, God being my helper. It has been about seven years since we began our home Sunday-school, but we are progressing nicely. I must admit it was a great cross for me to make the start. Sometimes it just seemed as if I must give it up. But I believe God has, and ever will be with us when we try to do our duty. To-day I have an intermediate as well as a primary class, and they are anxious for Sunday-school time to come. What the results will be God alone knoweth.

Dear sisters, pray for me, for I sometimes feel as though I were the weakest of God's children. Many times I have felt like giving up, but I know God will help me if I but put my trust in him. He is the great Judge; when we stand before him we will be judged with a righteous judgment, and not as man judgeth. Ever praying for the good of all, I remain, ISABEL E. LEISE.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column: I am always anxious to hear what the sisters have to say concerning children as I have four little boys ranging from one to eleven years. I am sometimes amused at the advice to not whip your children. I try to look from all sides and notice the different turn of children. Some can be managed without whipping and some can not. I have learned by experience that where there is more than one child they will have their little quarrels and troubles, and a mother should rule wisely as a queen over her household. Are we not all working in the vineyard of the Lord? Have we not tender branches placed in our care to dress and train up as we should, pleasingly in the sight of our heavenly Father?

I read in Chronicles, chapter 11, that it pleased God for Solomon to ask wisdom from on high, how to rule his subjects, Now do not you think here is the key for us who have little kingdoms to rule? wisdom to walk as we should before our families and neighbors? That has been my prayer ever since I have had a family. I endeavor to keep myself pure so that the Spirit may guide me in all things, and when it is necessary to correct a child to do so with firmness, at the same time let the child know you are grieved to have to correct him.

Just this morning I had to whip one of my boys hard. He had got into a quarrel with his brother and when I rebuked him for it he dared me to correct him and told me to whip if I wanted to. Now, dear sisters, what would you have done under such circumstances? I took a leather strap hanging near by and gave him a good whipping. I then cried harder than he did. I washed his face and sent him to school and told him to be a good boy and mind his teacher, that the best and easiest way through life was to do right as the way of a transgressor was hard.

Did I do right, dear sister? I hear the answer from every wise, cool-headed mother in the land, "You did." Does not the Lord correct us when we do wrong? Has he not always corrected his children in the past, and some severely too? Now do not think from this that I am always whipping my children for I am not, and only use the rod when I have to. I always endeavor to keep a cool head, and I love my children so dearly that I would lay down my life for theirs. I have seen little trees grow up with knotty and gnarled limbs and dead branches. They were a sight to see and any good householder or gardener would hew the trees down to get rid of them that they cumber not the ground. Is it not much better to trim, straighten, and train our trees that they may be beautiful and ornamental and bear much fruit for the master? Such is within our power, shall we act wisely? *

Put Yourself in Their Place.

"O men who are good, who are honored and great,
Be kind to your brothers of lower estate;
If masters, then be not in tasking severe,
If rulers, then rule men in love and not fear.

And if ye be fathers, wise, learned, and strong,
Lead the little ones tenderly, slowly along;
Ere you sneer at the humble, or punish the base,
Pause and think for a while—put yourself in their place.

"Fair lady so haughty, so chaste, and so cold,
Kept safely from sin in love's sheltering fold:
Ere you turn from your frail, erring sister with scorn,
Think how she was tempted and how she was born.
Her ruin may date from a smile or kind word,
The first that her poor, hungry heart ever heard;
Then pause ere you taunt her with sin and disgrace.
How if you had been tried? Put yourself in her place.

"Proud man, whom the white robes of ermine enfold,
As you weigh others' sin in the balance you hold,
Ere you crush the last spark in a heart doomed to bleed,
And turn from a brother in hour of sore need,
Ere you prison for life a poor mortal to dwell
With the ghosts and the sins that people his cell,
And spring from his memory to stare in his face,
Pause and think for a while—put yourself in his place.

"Put yourself in their place; yea, have mercy on all
Who through good or through evil are tempted and fall;
Upon all God maketh his warm sun to shine, Dost know whose soul shall be greater, the sinner's or thine?"

Then fear thou to judge lest ye stand at the heavenly door,
To see harlots and publicans go in before,
And cover with guilty confusion your face,
And cry when too late to be put in their place."

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

Sr. VALENTINE WHITE in a letter of February 13, says: "Hyde Valley Sunday-school rendered a parents' day program, January 22. Five papers upon the subjects assigned in the programs followed by ten- and fifteen-minute talks. Songs, solos, and a quartet were sung. The whole program was a success. And I hope that other programs will be sent out for the schools as these programs tend to develop the latent talents in the scholars. Some said, when their subjects were given them for their essays, "I can not write an essay on any subject. I never did such a thing in my life." But when they read their essays they were pronounced very good. And this is why I say that such things tend to develop the Sunday-school scholar and worker. I hope the association will continue to send out these programs.

"On Friday evening the 10th, the district Sunday-school convention assembled at the brick church, with Sr. Carrie Lewis, district superintendent, presiding. The sessions were peaceful and harmonious and we felt that we had been benefited by attending the same. And a greater incentive to increase our efforts in the coming year along the line of Sunday-school work was created."

BRO. HORATIO W. HOWLETT, in a letter to the home department superintendent says: "Our home department has been in existence one year. We have forty-six members, four classes, and seven visitors. One thousand and two lessons were studied. Collections, thirty-four dollars and forty cents; expenses, twenty-four dollars and twenty-seven cents, with one year's Quarterlies paid for in advance. During the past year one new school has been formed from the home department. One scholar who does not belong to the church studied the entire fifty-two lessons. . . . I have been blessed in the Sunday-school work. It has fitted me for greater responsibilities that now rest upon me in the branch. Bro. George D. Sinclair, a noble and efficient worker, is now superintendent of our Sunday-school. . . . Will try to do what I can for any and every organization for good in the church."

SR. DORA M. FERGUSON, Ellsworth, Michigan, writes: "My husband and self and three of our children belong to the South Arm Branch. We live in the country about seven miles from the church. In the winter it is impossible for us to go to Sunday-school and in the summer we can not attend regularly. We keep the Quarterly and try to keep in line with the work. I have two younger children who can not belong to the branch. I wish to give them all the advantage possible to keep them in the faith. Would you advise our joining the home department?"

[We surely do advise joining the home class, and will say to any other isolated family, join the home class.—ED.]

"To the Workers of the Alabama District: Dear Saints and Fellow Workers: Being one of the isolated ones I wish to write you and let you know I have not forgotten you. And since being elected assistant district superintendent I have done all that I could for the work, though that is but little. You all know that when one is prevented from attending the Sunday-school regularly he is not so well fitted for the duties of a superintendent's office. Our district superintendent has been unfortunate in the same way but I am certain she has done the best she could.

"I wish to remind you all that our next convention is near at hand and I want everybody to make preparation to attend. Also pray that the Lord will bless us while together in convention.

"Let us look forward to the time when we can have the home department work established in our district, for I think we can do a great deal of good in that way. I hope that steps in that direction will be taken in our next convention at Lone Star. Let us all be thinking about it and be ready to decide whether or not we want it or are ready for it. It is time we were improving our Sunday-schools down here. But do not understand me to say that we have not made any improvement, for I know that we have been improving for the past two or three years. But it is now time to take another step in advance.

"I hope to meet a large crowd at the convention and let everybody be on time and we will have a good time.

"Your brother in the work,

"JOSEPH S. WIGGINS."

Has Your Sunday-School a Home Department?

If so, it needs your help; if not, why do you not start one? Have you not a friend who would be in the Sunday-school if he could, and another who could and should be there, if he only would? The home department is for them. Get them to sign a card agreeing to study the lesson thirty minutes a week, furnish each with a quarterly and a report envelope, and you have a home department.

No red tape, no systematic canvass, no visitors who will not visit, no flourish of trumpets. Just a little faith, a real desire to help, a quiet word with a friend. This kind of a home department never fails. Its soul grows with its body. It is sure to win. When you hear of a home department that is not a success, you may be sure that its body is too big for its heart; it has too much machinery and too little power—too many “workers” doing too little work.

More people are sick with the palsy of sin, than are possessed of its demons. They merely refuse to go to Jesus, rather than cry out against him. You can bring them to him through the home department, easily and effectively. And they will thank you for it. When you get a member, pray for that one; pray for more—and then go after them. They are waiting for you. If you find a palsied one whom you can not lift alone, get friends to help you, but do not do it officially—work humanly. Live your love. Expect every member to help the department in some way—and show him the way. Better have this kind of a home department with five members than one machine-made, with five hundred. It is the hand-made, heart-filled article that wears best in spiritual things.

Every Sunday-school should have a home department, and have it now. Will you not act for your school?—Harley Barnes, State Home Department Secretary, in World Evangel.

FULTON, Kentucky, January 12, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have been reading the HERALD to-night and notice a calculation of the number of baptisms during the last fourteen years, by Bro. Edward Rannie, in which he seems to wonder where the trouble lies, that there is not a more rapid increase in converts and ventures to give the private opinions of a few of the Saints as a probable solution of the mystery (neither approving nor disapproving.) I believe I can submit a cause for the trouble in a manner that the most simple will be able to see. The brother says it takes double the amount of work it did fourteen years ago to accomplish the same result, “according to these figures.” But we can not count from “these figures.” We must calculate according to the real work done, and not allow the same amount of work for slothful ministers that those zealous, persevering servants of God did farther back. The main reason, to us, is that we have too many elders who go out as missionaries, away off perhaps, and they will pace from one old “cold” branch to another the year round, and visit the most popular, entertaining Saints who have most to eat, and make great ado over them, and never carry the “glad tidings” to the world,—do not get out and face the “foe,” like Paul of old. But if the Saints will carry them from place to place and get out the appointments, then of course they are ready to tell what they know, (or what some one else knows and they have memorized,) and have another item to report. But, who could not do that? Some, perhaps one third of the missionaries in the field to-day, will go out in the world and get the work before the people, as many as they can, and the remaining two thirds will run from branch to branch, where they can shun the burden of the “cross.” The result is they half do the work which the Lord intended for the branch officers, and the branch officers do nothing much. Better be governed by the law, then the work will move out.

I have heard our ministry quote the prophet Micah, chapter 3, trying to apply it to the sects of Babylon, but in the day it was spoken it was to those slothful ones who had changed the rule of Israel from the one given by the Lord, and had allowed the “hire” and reward to rule them; and evidently their preaching, their divining, and their judging was done with an eye single to the money. And we need not think it a great wonder if such come again. The same prince is at work to hinder God’s work to-day, and my brother or sister, do not think it blasphemy if I say I am watching for such.

I love this grand work and would to God it could soon be proclaimed to all people, but a balky horse sometimes does ten times more harm than good, even though he does have on the “harness,” (good one too) and is curried and amply fed. Take out the cold collared, balky fellow, lay his nice harness up and turn him out, and the true worker will do more work with less trouble.

May God direct us all to his glory and our good is my prayer in Jesus’ name.
J. W. WILLIAMS.

St. JOSEPH, Missouri, February 21, 1905.

Editors Herald: Just received my reply to Bro. J. R. Lambert’s of February 8, returned by you, as you thought not advisable to continue the controversy further. I wish to say that I believe it was a mistake to publish part of the first letter of Bro. Lambert’s, and possibly it would have been better had I not replied to it. Had it not been for the closing statement in the brother’s last letter in which he referred to the business-meeting held in St. Joseph, I would not have sent my last. I thought then and do now that injustice was done by trying to impress the readers with the idea that I virtually acknowledged that so far as the St. Joseph Branch was concerned the conditions referred to by him were true, which I do not.

I still believe that I should have been heard on this point. However, I shall say no more, but suggest that if any one sees, when with us, that we are in the condition referred to, they will kindly call our attention to it while on the ground; then we shall not have to take up space in the HERALD. I believe, as the good book says, that the “rebuke of a friend is better than the kiss of an enemy,” providing it is done at the proper time and place.

Respectfully,

WM. LEWIS.

ROSETTA, Idaho.

Editors Herald: In Doctrine and Covenants 28: 13 is something I do not quite understand. I wish some one that understands would explain: “For power is not given unto Satan to tempt little children.” We are to learn from one another. I have asked the Lord that I might understand this. It reads as follows: “But, behold, I say unto you, that little children are redeemed from the foundation of the world through mine Only Begotten; wherefore they can not sin, for power is not given unto Satan to tempt little children, until they begin to become accountable before me; for it is given unto them even as I will, according to mine own pleasure, that great things may be required at the hands of their fathers.”

I understand it all except this: “For power is not given unto Satan to tempt little children.” I do not wish to deny the scriptures, but I will write the way I believe. All good comes from God. All trouble, evil, and all that is bad, comes from Satan. I believe that man is born unto temptation, that a baby has its troubles as well as older people, that Satan has power, or takes power to tempt every living thing upon the earth. We know that children are not accountable for sin until they become accountable. If Satan has no power to tempt children then they are not tempted, and if they are not tempted then they have no temptation, and if they have no temptation then they have no feeling, and if they have no feeling, then they have no trouble, and if they have no trouble then of course they are not tempted. I think parents are accountable for the sins of their children until the children reach the age of accountability. When children are sick that is temptation to them. Therefore I think children have their troubles and temptations. I think Satan has power to tempt all living creatures upon the earth, but those that do not know good from evil are not accountable. If you can explain this I will be glad. Wishing all of the workers for the Master’s cause abundant success I am,

Your brother in bonds,

STEPHEN DRAZEY.

[For the very reason that children are not accountable until they reach an age where they may know good and evil, and thus become responsible for their actions, they can not sin; and for the same reason Satan is not permitted to assail them by temptation. To be tempted implies the power to choose between actions; where there is not intelligence to choose, sin is not imputed for making a wrong choice. It is just upon the part of God to withhold Satan from exercising his power over little children through temptation before they are accountable. The language of the revelation seems quite plain—"power is not given unto Satan to tempt little children." "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 18: 3.—ED.]

HARVEY, North Dakota, February 15, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have for some weeks been promising myself to write to the HERALD to let you know how goes the gospel warfare on North Dakota's snow-covered prairies. Most of the Saints, though many are isolated, are alive to the great latter-day work, and make welcome the missionary to their homes, in his travels, as agent of the Lord's great work.

I began meeting, last evening, in a small town called Manfred, a new place in gospel work. We had nearly a house full and we expect to continue the rest of the week or longer. Bro. Lars Lectum lives within eight miles of the town, and serves as an anchorage to which we tie our little gospel bark. He is the only Saint in this vicinity, a man honored by all who know him.

At Sykerton I visited Bro. J. W. Peek, wife, and baby daughter. The young parents seemed happy, and upon their return to Missouri, I trust will long have something by which to remember Dakota, (the baby girl,) and what keepsakes these baby boys and girls make!

I held several meetings at Leeds. Attendance was not large, but we enjoyed telling the gospel story and those who listened seemed to enjoy hearing it. We try to keep the gospel camp-fires burning, when once they are lighted.

During the winter I have visited besides the places already mentioned, Esmond, Lawton, Langdon, Starlie, Lansing, and Dunsenith vicinities, and have found some interest in each. My prayer is that the dear Lord may help them to keep the gospel banner floating, above the filth of a sin-cursed world.

I often think of the message, "The field is white for the harvest." Satan is stealthily massing his forces and I fear in ways we often are not noticing. Let us be vigilant. Look at the world. Suppose Christ were to come to-morrow, how many would be ready to mingle with angels and Saints of ages past? Are you, dear Saint? The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few. I pity the world in its blind, self-righteous condition, depending on the prosperity of the world and the learning of men to carry them through future centuries. Many of the popular ministers of to-day are trying to take the world for Christ, but instead the world is taking them. Better to have taken a few and have been sure.

If all goes well I expect to visit Medina, Page, and Clifford before the winter breaks. I hope the General Conference will be a profitable one.

Your brother in the Master's service,

LEONARD HOUGHTEN.

BOWDEN, Texas, February 6, 1905.

Editors Herald: I was baptized last summer by Elder E. L. Henson, one of the ablest elders in explaining the truth that it has been my lot to hear. The work is not moving along as I would like to see it, yet a few are trying to keep the camp-fire blazing.

I have read some very beautiful articles on the subject of perfection in the HERALD this year. I am clinging to the idea of a perfect life in Christ, in this life. I do not see why we can not be perfect and I can not see why it is not required of us, when he has so commanded us. A perfect life in Christ means to add all of the Christian graces to our new life after we obey the first principles of the gospel—being born again.

I have a brother in Murphysboro, Illinois, and if any of our elders in that part should read this I would be glad if they would call on him and try to show him the beauty there is in the true gospel of Christ. I am sure he is in earnest about his work, being a Salvationist, although very reasonable about our doctrine; and I want to get some one more able to explain to him than I. His name is George Combs.

I am enjoying the truth, I love every part of it, and am growing in knowledge every day. I am realizing the fulfillment of the words of our Savior when he said that whosoever obeyed the will of the Father should know of the doctrine.

I close, wishing success to the HERALD and its many readers.

MRS. M. M. AARONS.

LEAHY, Washington.

Editors Herald: While reading the letter in HERALD for January 26, the questions came to me, Why so much criticism? Are we not commanded to lay aside all malice and envy, even as we are commanded to let our clothes be plain and the adornment the work of our own hands? Why not let our houses of worship be plain but neat, and the extra money it costs to build fine worldly churches be put in the treasury of the church to help support the missionaries and their families? Is it acceptable to our Father for a few poor Saints to build a four- or five-thousand-dollar house of worship, when a two-thousand-dollar one would seat as many people?

Ever in the one faith,

HELENA, Montana, February 10, 1905.

Editors Herald: While on the way to Bozeman, Montana, on the morning of the 2d inst., just before the train pulled into Billings, the thermometer reported thirty degrees below zero. I dreamed that W. W. Blair came on the train to see me. He was in an ecstasy of feeling, all animated and singing. He seized me by the arms just above the wrists with each of his hands, and I took hold of his in like manner, and we stood facing each other and joined in singing three hymns, under a most felicitous influence; and at the close of the last hymn he bowed and stepped off the train as he repeated, "Not forgetting Columbia." We both seemed to be going in the same direction, only he did not need to ride in a coach. This was rather a strange presentation, and I gathered that it bodes good though not fully understood.

At about three o'clock in the afternoon I arrived at Bozeman, and soon after found a home and friends at Bro. Thomas Reese's; among the number was Bro. J. D. Stead. Later met a number of the well-known Saints of the place. Meeting had been announced for evening, and here we met a number of the Saints from Deer Lodge and other points, who had come in to attend the Sunday-school convention and conference. Bro. Stead and the writer occupied as interestingly as we could, with seeming interest to those present. Saturday, the 3d, was occupied with Sunday-school work, and Saturday the business of the conference was transacted.

After visiting a number of the Saints, Bro. Stead started for Racetrack, and on the evening of the 9th I left for Helena, Bro. and Sr. Reese and Maggie bringing me to the depot. Good fortune favored me again, for Mr. Wilson of Helena was on the train, whom I soon found. We arrived at Helena about ten o'clock. Bro. Wilson brought me home with him where we both received a welcome from his pleasant family. So here I am, the thermometer seventeen degrees below zero. It does not take any coaxing to keep me indoors.

Fraternally,
WM. H. KELLEY.

CHATHAM, Ontario, February 10, 1905.

Editors Herald: I came to this place the 28th of January and have been laboring during my sojourn with the Saints and friends of this city. Have been blessed with the Spirit of the Master for good among his people.

The work seems to be moving onward. A handsome church has been erected, and the Saints deserve credit for their efforts in this way. They have an organ which helps the singing very much. The building is lighted with electric lights. A great change has taken place since the writer, Brn. A. Leverton and R. Coburn organized this branch, February 21, 1886. The few Saints were told at the time that it was only the commencement of a great work that should be done in this community. The branch was started about two and one half miles below this city. Meetings were held in the city from time to time until the branch was moved to the city. The outlook to my mind never was better than at present for a good work being done.

In gospel bonds,

SAMUEL BROWN.

GRANNIS, Arkansas, February 13, 1905.

Editors Herald: This leaves me shut in at this place, unable to do anything this kind of weather. If all Saints would do their part in warning their neighbors by talking the gospel and giving out tracts, not forgetting the elders, but sending car-fare with the invitation to come and preach for them, it would not be long till the gospel would be preached in many places where it is unknown to-day. Very often the elder writes to know of chances for preaching only to be answered that it will do no good, too much prejudice. This discourages the elder. We should remember that by faith the worlds were framed by the word of God. Oh, I long to see the Saints live their religion, especially in attending to their family service and branch meetings, and the paying of tithing. Saints, please help us in 1905 with a renewed effort in securing openings, helping the elder pay his railroad fare, etc. I know you love this work. Will you please send the gospel to others?

I have labored in several new places in my field. Have met with considerable success; baptized twelve; some very remarkable cases of healing; one in particular. At Stringer, Arkansas, a little child was brought to me during service, supposed to be dying by some. In the presence of about seventy-five I explained to them this ordinance of the gospel and proceeded to administer. As soon as the oil was administered the child went to sleep to the astonishment of all. Some said, "He chloroformed it." Others said, "He has hypnotized the child." The mother of the child had been baptized a few weeks before by the Baptist people, but she and her mother received the gospel with such joy that they were both baptized into the kingdom of God.

Yours hopefully,

J. W. JACKSON.

CENTER, Texas, February 6, 1905.

Editor Herald: I left home on the 24th of January, arriving here the 27th. Bro. L. S. Moore soon obtained the use of the Christian church to hold services in. We commenced meetings on Monday night after I arrived. The weather was very disagreeable. The turnout would not justify a continuance, so we moved our place of meeting to the home of Bro. Moore where we had small turnouts but good interest for two nights, having one application for baptism. I believe there are some good Saints here that will be gathered in time. Bro. and Sr. Moore are doing what they can to advance the work. They spare no pains to make a missionary comfortable, and he is about as near home at their house as he can be away from his own home.

I am feeling well spiritually. Never felt better. Would like to do more preaching, but opportunities are scarce in Texas outside of the branches. What we need is some new ground-breakers. I hope this conference will furnish us some missionaries who will push out and open new places. Bro. John Harp has done some of this kind of work this year.

E. W. NUNLEY.

SCRANTON, Pennsylvania.

Dear Herald: I have known this great work five and a half years, and what a change it has wrought in my ideas of things spiritual. I was a member of the Baptist Church eight years, becoming a member of that church when I was fourteen years of age, and was kept from evil, to an extent, through the good teachings I received; but I can truly say, that when I obeyed the gospel in its fullness at Nantyglo, South Wales, and received the imposition of the hands of Elders John and Thomas Jones, I received the holy unction from above which gave me a witness of the Father and the Son, and did let in a flood of light and assurance concerning the sayings of the Lord and the holy prophets and apostles, causing me to understand the saying of Christ: "When he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth, . . . and he will show you things to come." What an able leader and guide if we will only follow in humility the light it gives us continually. And such a perfect comforter! I have full confidence in the glorious triumph predicted for this church, whether I shall partake of that triumph or not. Pray for me.

We have a branch of about thirty-two members at Scranton, with hardly half that number in attendance, which is due to indifference, in a large measure, while the standard of living of some is low. There is a splendid chance to proselyte in this city, as I know quite a number that feel favorable to our work. We think that some of the higher authorities should interest themselves more toward this branch, and vindicate the dignity of the church, and come to the help of those faithful ones who are striving in longsuffering to uphold the banner of Immanuel in purity.

Your brother in the gospel of Jesus Christ,

GEORGE MORRIS.

Detroit Items.

The semiannual meeting of the Detroit Branch took place on Wednesday, February 15. A good feeling prevailed.

By request of the district president, Elder William Davis, the name of our branch was changed from "Evergreen" to "Detroit."

Allow me to correct an error which occurred in your issue of January 11: The Ladies' Aid Society donated the money to purchase the church, not the Ladies' Aid and Willing Helpers.

DETROIT CORRESPONDENT.

Extracts from Letters.

Elder Edward Rannie, Muscatine, Iowa: "A strange and somewhat peculiar condition of affairs, religiously, exists here. During the past summer efforts were made to reach the people by personal invitation, distributing of tracts, and newspaper notices. The press has been very generous to the ministry here, the hall is in a convenient and pleasant place, the Saints have a good name among their neighbors, the church has not been disgraced by acts of unrighteousness, and yet it is impossible to get people to come and hear. Hundreds pass by the hall during services, many have made their personal promises to come, even asking when the service would be held, yet during the entire conference only two that were not members were present. Is it possible that in a city of sixteen thousand so few can be found who will listen to the angel's message, or has not God's set time to feel after them yet come?"

J. W. Whitley, Salem, Oregon: "I have not had very good health for some time. I desire the prayers of my brethren that my health may return. I would like to see a good elder sent to Bridgeport."

W. S. Hodson, Fanning, Kansas: "My address has been changed from Leesville, Louisiana, to Fanning, Kansas. Saints take notice and do not depend upon writing me at Leesville."

E. B. Hull, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania: "We think the amalgamation of the two districts (New York and Philadelphia) will be a great benefit to the work in this locality. It brings us together oftener. The work in the two larger branches is growing. Since Brooklyn and Philadelphia have erected church-buildings many strangers have visited us that could not be induced to come to our meetings in halls. We hope for the onward move of Zion's work in this locality in the future."

RAILROAD RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE AND CONVENTIONS.

Western and Southwestern Passenger Associations.—The Western Passenger Association, territory from Chicago, Peoria, and Burlington on the east, to Cheyenne, Wyoming, and all points in Colorado on the west, has granted the usual rate of one and one third fare, round trip, certificate plan, to "General Conference Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints and Conventions Auxiliary Societies, Lamoni, Iowa," April, 1905. The Southwestern Passenger Association, the territory of which includes Southern Missouri, Arkansas, Indian Territory, Oklahoma, and Texas, has concurred in said rate, and on the same terms.

Going tickets may be purchased from April 1 to 7 inclusive; and return tickets may be purchased as late as April 24. Under the rule governing, passengers pay full fare on going trip, and a certificate corresponding to such fare paid must be secured with every ticket; where through tickets to destination can not be secured, passengers must secure certificates showing each separate fare paid, and which when presented to the Church Secretary at Lamoni, Iowa, and showing payment of fare to that point, will entitle the holders to return tickets over same route as going trip at one third regular fare. Going tickets are limited or unlimited, according to rules of roads selling same, but return tickets are subject to continuous passage.

"No certificate will be honored which was issued to cover the sale of more than one single trip ticket." Reduction does not apply to ministers or children traveling on half fare tickets.

Those traveling on special party or club rates, will note the following: "Reduced rates on the certificate plan become effective only when evidence is presented to the Joint Agent of the terminal lines at the place of meeting showing that one hundred persons have actually been in attendance holding certificates reading for tickets over terminal lines to the meeting-point, and when such certificates are stamped by him with his office stamp and his written signature affixed thereto; except that where parties or clubs traveling in a body purchase round trip party tickets to the place of meeting from stations from which the local one way rate is more than fifty cents and at not less than the rate announced on the certificate plan for the particular meeting in question (instead of one way tickets at regular rate) and present to Joint Agent certificate from selling agent to that effect, they will be counted by the Joint Agent in reckoning the attendance at any meeting." It is important to us as a body that any club or party traveling on such rate shall secure certificate referred to and present same to the undersigned, that the church and its meeting may be credited by such attendance.

As heretofore, the rate is conditioned on the attendance of one hundred persons holding certificates. However, no trouble is anticipated in obtaining the requisite number.

The following railroads concur in reduction in the territory named: Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fe; Ahnapsee and Western; Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern, from Pana to Beardstown inclusive—certificates will be of Central Passenger Association form; Chicago and Alton; Chicago and Eastern Illinois—direct Chicago-St. Louis line; Chicago and Northwestern; Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy, lines east and west of Missouri River, including all points in Wyoming and Montana; Chicago Great Western; Chicago, Milwaukee, and St. Paul; Chicago, Peoria, and St. Louis; Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Omaha; Colorado and Southern; Colorado Midland; Copper Range Railroad; Denver and Rio Grande; Duluth, South Shore, and Atlantic—certificates will be of Central Passenger Association form; Florence and Cripple Creek; Frisco System; Great Northern, from Aberdeen, Huron, Sioux Falls, Watertown, and Yankton, South Dakota, Appleton, Duluth, Granite Falls, Hutchinson, Marshall, and Pipestone, Minnesota, and West Superior, Wisconsin; Green Bay and Western; Hancock and Calumet—certificates of Central Association form; Illinois Central; Iowa Central; Kansas City Northwestern; Kewanee, Green Bay, and Western; Leavenworth, Kansas, and Western; Midland Terminal; Mineral Range—certificates of Central Association form; Minneapolis and St. Louis; Missouri, Kansas, and Texas; Missouri Pacific; Northern Pacific (from Duluth, Minnesota, Ashland, Superior, West Superior, Grantsburg, Iron River, and Washburn, Wisconsin); Quincy, Omaha, and Kansas City; Rock Island System; St. Joseph and Grand Island; Union Pacific; Wabash; Willmar and Sioux Falls; Wisconsin Central.

"Where the journey is made over more than one line, it is usually necessary for the passenger to purchase separate local tickets of each road's issue between points traveled thereon, and procure certificate thereof for each of the lines in this territory over which he travels in going to the meeting, as through tickets are not always sold, and it is not always practicable for the various lines to honor each other's certificates. Passengers should, therefore, ascertain from the ticket agent what portion of their journey can be covered by the certificate obtainable from him and procure certificate filled out to correspond with the ticket purchased. Failure to procure or present certificate invalidates any claim for reduction in return fare."

Passengers from Louisiana—outside of territory from which reduction applies, will see the advantage of buying tickets and securing certificates at points in Texas or Arkansas from which the rate applies.

Trans-continental Association.—Territory west of that designated in the foregoing. The chairman states: "I beg to advise that your delegates may avail themselves of the regular nine-months' rates which are in effect daily from Pacific Coast points to Omaha, Nebraska, Council Bluffs, Iowa, Leavenworth, Kansas, Atchison, Kansas, St. Joseph, Missouri, Kansas City, Missouri, St. Paul, Minnesota, and Minneapolis, Minnesota, and which approximate two cents per mile in each direction, or about one fare and one third for the round trip.

"The nine-months' rates do not apply to intermediate or interior points, but only to what is known as the eastern gateways of the association, such as those named. Should it happen that your delegates apply at a station on Pacific Coast from which the nine-months' rate is not in effect, which may be the case at very small unimportant stations, the agent will cheerfully ascertain and advise them the nearest point to his station from which such rate does apply. He will also advise your delegates as to the eastern points to which it will be most advantageous for them to purchase nine-months' tickets in rebuying to place of meeting.

"Please note that our lines sell only from the states of California, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, and west of and including Mission Junction, British Columbia, including also what are known as Kootenay common points—Nelson, Rossland, Sandon, Kaslo, and Grand Forks, British Columbia."

Passengers from said territory will note that they may secure the benefit of reduction on certificate plan from said Missouri River points to Lamoni, Iowa, and return, by securing certificates therefrom and by reaching said Missouri River points from April 1 to 7. They may secure more favorable rates than the nine-months' rate referred to where such lower rate may be in vogue on any individual or combined lines. Previous inquiry of agents will determine.

Respectfully,
R. S. SLYARDS, Church Secretary.

I Know Quit-to-Bac Will Cure. It is a God-Given Remedy
 So says Bro. I. M. Dungan of Woodbine, Iowa. Writing July 3, 1904, says: "After having used tobacco for 30 years I feel that I am thoroughly cured of the habit by the use of your 'Quit-to-bac.' A WORD TO THE WISE.

Now and again in the HERALD there are controversies on different topics between men who may read the same books and still see the things treated of in different lights and so reach conclusions more or less widely apart.

There are those who reap benefits out of these controversies. They have the faculty to weigh and judge of what they hear and read, and observing the apostle's rule, "examine all things and hold fast that which is good," gather good from what other men have thought and said.

There are those, however, who think and believe that some one ought to be sufficiently well informed and wise to settle every agitating question to the satisfaction of everybody, with a word.

The following letter from a good brother will illustrate the situation:

Editor Herald: Please have them get hell located as soon as possible and have the controversy ended. There are so many disputes between elders in the HERALD that it is not fit to hand to outsiders; and I heard one brother say that he is so disgusted with the wrangle, that he will not take the paper any more. And now it is getting in the Ensign. I do not see why such things can not be settled in private. I would sooner we did not have any hell at all than to have them finding fault with it through the church papers. Decide among yourselves as soon as possible and give us the pure gospel.

Yours for "peace on earth and good will among men."

It appears that the controversial articles of some of our writers with regard to the location of hell, and the possibilities of its being a condition as well as a locality, is disturbing some who think the agitation unnecessary.

It is clear that he who loves God, receives and obeys the gospel, lives up to his privileges in the good graces of the Son of God, will be received into the paradise of God at his death of the body, and finally be ushered into the realms over which the Father and the Son preside and rule, in continued immortality and eternal life.

It is equally clear that he who holds himself aloof from the office-work of the gospel for the cleansing from sin, the purification of the body from imputed sin by baptism, and the sanctifying work of the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of truth, will not reach a condition in this life which will entitle him to an entrance into the realms where God and Christ are, and become

OWING to a failure of some of our contributors it will be necessary for us to postpone issuing our historical number of the HERALD for at least one week. a citizen of that realm in an endless life of happiness and glory.

It also is clear, that he who may have an opportunity while in the flesh to bring himself into subjection of the "law of life" which must obtain in the realms of immortality, and obstinately and persistently rejects that opportunity, refusing to submit to the offered mercy, can not, must not expect to dwell in the company of the good in the world to come.

It also is clear that he who in addition to rejecting the gospel law of life, does wickedly, becoming wicked and ungodly, must face the awful penalty of entire and perpetual banishment from the company of the good, worlds without end. Whether this banishment includes the final punishment which is as a "lake of fire," or is a dread confinement in "outer darkness," who cares to know by research or experience? It is a condition and in a place from which the wicked may not hope to escape.

No minister for Christ is authorized to offer celestial glory to the wicked and finally impenitent. They are in God's hands and he will do his will concerning them according to his justice.

The Devil may be overcome and cease to be a devil, but who is authorized to say that he will ever so far recover the ground he has lost by his long career as an antagonist of the Son of God, the corrupter of human kind, that he will be granted the glory to which the obedient Son has become entitled, and be permitted to take a place by the side of that Son in immortality and eternal life? We know of no one who is authorized to teach such final salvation of the wicked, nor do we know of any one authorized by the church of Jesus Christ to preach progression after death in such way as to warrant any man in the belief that a second opportunity to hear and obey the gospel will be afforded to those who hear it in the flesh on earth and reject it. We know of no warrant in the word that authorizes the teaching of probation after death in such way as to justify any man in the hope that he may reject the gospel message here, and after death receive it and obtain the celestial reward of immortality and life eternal where God and Christ are. Of these Jesus said: "If any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not: for I came not to judge the world, but to save the world. He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day."—John 12: 47, 48.

"Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."—Galatians 6: 7.

The search after the location of hell in controversy in the HERALD, is in effect like "contending about endless genealogies and words to no profit," to such as our brother, and he may be right.

TO STIR UP YOUR PURE MINDS.—NO. 2.

And they began to establish the church of God more fully; yea, and many were baptized in the waters of Sidon, and were joined to the church of God; yea, they were baptized by the hand of Alma, who had been consecrated the high priest over the people of the church, by the hand of his father Alma. And it came to pass in the seventh year of the reign of the Judges, there were about three thousand five hundred souls that united themselves to the church of God, and were baptized.—Alma 2: 1, 2.

The church in this seventh year of Judges reached the highest point of power and glory since its establishment, the result of years of labor upon the part of Alma's father and his associates. It is remarkable how soon it could turn from this happy condition to one of error and darkness. The very next year the members of the church fell into wickedness because of pride, envy, strife, and malice until they were worse than those who did not belong to the church, and their example began even to lead unbelievers into greater wickedness than they had practiced hitherto. Alma immediately left the judgment-seat and put his whole time to the ministry, and after six years of putting in order, ordaining, and baptizing, "the establishment of the church became general throughout the land, in all the region round about, among all the people of the Nephites." (Alma 11: 6.)

There was some trouble with pride in the nineteenth year, but Helaman by vigorous efforts in preaching and appointing priests and teachers succeeded in restoring peace and order in the church which lasted four years, when another period of retrogression set in. It is wonderful how soon the Nephites forgot that they had been purged from their old sins. It was not until the thirty-fifth year that the evil was overcome and the church of God again established and regulated throughout all the land, and the people began to prosper, as they always did whenever they returned to God. This continued to a greater or lesser extent until the forty-ninth year, when they prospered exceedingly, more than had ever been known before; even the high priests and teachers were astonished beyond measure, and tens of thousands were baptized. But in the fifty and first year pride began to enter, and one part of the church began to persecute the other. At the end of three years these contentions and dissensions had increased even to bloodshed. So we might continue to follow up the periods of prosperity and the periods of decay, and note the long years of labor and suffering required to bring the church to a proper condition, and the ease with which it departed from righteousness.

The latter-day dispensation also furnishes us an object-lesson. The church established in 1830 reached the height of its prosperity in about ten years, then disintegration set in. And for forty-five years the constant struggle has been to regain lost ground. And now, since high ground has been reached, and success and prosperity are assured if only a faithful, unwavering adherence to right and truth is maintained, great care should be exercised and the things that lead downward guarded against, lest another period of decay set in and history repeat itself.

It is interesting to note some of the characteristic features of the Nephite church when in prosperity and when in darkness, and it may help us to judge of our own condition. One of the chief characteristics of the church when in favor with God was that they were all equal, "the preacher was no better than the hearer," they all labored every man according to his strength. They imparted of their substance to the needy, the sick, and afflicted. They did not wear costly apparel, yet they were neat and comely. And whenever the church arrived at this stage of perfection they were blessed abundantly in flocks, and herds, grain, gold, silver and precious things, silk, fine twined linen, and "all manner of good homely cloth." But they were very humble. They did not send away any who were naked, or hungry, or thirsty, or sick. And they did not set their hearts upon riches, but they did wax stronger and stronger in humility by fasting and praying oft. So long as these things were found in the church it prospered and was abundantly blessed of God.

But how soon all this was changed when the church began to drift into darkness! Inequality asserted itself. They began to be lifted up in pride, because of their riches, their fine silks, and all manner of precious things which they had obtained by their industry. And they began to wear costly apparel, and they set their hearts upon riches and the vain things of the world. They became scornful, and would even stoop to persecute those who did not believe according to their own will and pleasure. They were filled with envy, malice, strife, and pride beyond those who did not belong to the church, and became a stumbling-block to them. They despised the poor and needy, the naked, and hungry, and those who were sick and afflicted.

Here are two paths presented. One brings success and favor with God; the other failure and disfavor. Which way are we tending? To suffer those evil things which worked ruin to the Nephite church to find place in the hearts and minds of the Saints to-day, will lead to failure as surely as it did in the days of Alma and Helaman. The Nephites never reached such a state of perfection that they were past danger from these things from within, and so the church to-day is in danger, and the only safety is to constantly guard against these things, the chief-est of which are pride and inequality.

SUCCESSFUL ESSAYS ON THE ORIGIN AND HISTORY OF THE BIBLE.

Some time ago Miss Helen Gould, of New York, offered prizes in money for the best three essays on the "Origin and history of the Roman Catholic and Protestant versions of the Bible." The prizes have been awarded to the following named persons:

To Reverend William Thomas Whitley, Baptist minister of Preston, England, first prize, one thousand dollars.

To Reverend Gerald Hamilton Beard, Congregational minister, Burlington, Vermont, second prize, five hundred dollars.

To Mr. Charles B. Dalton, teacher, of New York city, third prize, two hundred and fifty dollars.

A SURPLUS OF MEN IN UNITED STATES.

The Chronicle of Chicago, Illinois, in its issue for January 22, 1905, has the following brief of information compiled from a bulletin issued by the census bureau. It is suggestive reading:

Men are in the majority in the United States to the extent of 216 in each 10,000 of the population, according to a bulletin issued by the census bureau. In 1890 the excess of males was 242. The divisions of continental United States with the smallest proportion of males are the District of Columbia (47.4 per cent), Massachusetts (48.7 per cent) and Rhode Island (49.1 per cent); those with the largest are Wyoming (62.9 per cent) and Montana (61.6 per cent.) A curious divergence of sexes appears in the returns for city and country districts. In the cities having a population of 2,500 or more in 1890 there were 6,929 more males than females; in 1900 this proportion had been reversed and the females in cities of this size were 201,959 in excess. As against this change the excess of 1,519,559 males in country districts in 1890 became an excess of 1,840,280 in 1900. Among the negroes there are a few more females than males; among the Indians a few more males than females. About five-ninths of the immigrants are males.

The excess of males in the total population is offset to some extent by the longer age of females. In the period from 83 years of age to the end of life the absolute number of females is larger than that of males and also in the period from 16 to 25, although the census experts ascribe the latter superiority to falsified returns rather than to an absolute majority. The death-rate of males in the registration area in 1900 was 19 per thousand and that of females was 16.6. The difference in the death-rate is least between the ages of 5 and 14 and greatest at the extremes of life. There is a period between the ages of 5 and 21 when the death-rate of females is in excess of that of males. In spite of the fact that four fifths of the childbirths occur between the ages of 20 and 30, the death-rate of women at that time is smaller than that of men. In 1900 the median age, the age which exactly divides the total population, was 22.85 years, an increase of nearly 7 years in the last century. The productive age group in the United States, that part of the population between 15 and 60, comprises nearly three fifths of the population, a larger proportion than is to be found in most European countries. Nearly one fourth of the population is less than 10 years of age.

Bishop William Anderson desires that those contemplating coming to General Conference and who wish provisions made for board or lodging, or both, will make their wants known to him as soon as possible. Do not neglect this, but write to him now, and provisions will be made for all.

A GLIMPSE AT NATURE AND REVELATION, OR, SOME INFIDEL OBJECTIONS CONSIDERED.

In this the twentieth century of the Christian era, while the great world swarms with nearly two billions of population, one fourth of this vast concourse of beings profess belief in Christ—Catholics, Greeks, and Protestants. And this after more than eighteen and one half centuries of so-called Christianity! And while faith in God, among the latter minority, is ostensibly maintained, the authority of the Bible—the oral revelation of God—is being dethroned. We are forcibly reminded of Bishop Newton's deduction in his illustrations of the prophecies,—that the unhallowed alliance between kings and priests of church and state is destined to be overcome, or destroyed, by a momentary triumph of infidelity. Or, to come nearer to his own language, that "before the millennial order of society can be introduced, there will be a very general spread of infidelity." This we believe, for the sacred volume intimates, in harmony with present growing conditions, that "because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." (Matthew 24: 12.) "Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"—Luke 18: 8. "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead."—Luke 16: 31. The disposition is to believe not even the supernatural things of God. "But the . . . unbelieving shall have their part in . . . the second death."—Revelation 21: 8. They "shall be damned." (Mark 16: 16.)

Whatever may be the cause of this tidal wave of infidelity or unbelief, we think it not due to the weakness or the paucity of the evidences of the almighty hand, or the divinity of the gospel, but rather to a profession of it unauthorized by, and incompatible with, the sacred volume. The apostle Paul warns the people that there is danger of being "spoiled" by the introduction of "philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world." (Colossians 2: 8.) One of Bacon's maxims will apply closely: "The worst of all things is deified error." One such error that has reigned on the throne for ages, embalmed in the shrines of all nations is: "Reason tries to show God,"—abstractly, and independent from the claims of the record, or in contradiction thereto. Thousands of years ago inspiration said: "But there is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding."—Job. This should have given the believing world to understand that the knowledge of God comes to man by revelation. "Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God."—1 Corinthians 2: 11.

But after "reason," as coronated Goddess, has led the world into the labyrinthian fields of metaphysical abstraction in vain endeavor to lift the veil, and reveal the "Great First Cause," she returns to proclaim results, and we are once more greeted with: "reason tries to show God, but fails!" Failing to find (by "wrong paths") the God connected with the splendid universe, with man and his wondrous endowment, she "changed the glory of the incorruptible God into" one "without body, parts, or passions," and to harmonize (?) such a God with the Bible facts of creation, or the process of creative acts, being impossible, reason with sweet witchery and white wing soars aloft and proclaims "evolution" as a substitute for Bible facts. Now we maintain that the Bible has for its basis of divinity the present existing tangible facts, as so many corner-stones to its foundation,—i. e., the stupendous facts of creation. These facts present themselves in the following order: 1. Light. 2. The planetary system. 3. The fowls of the air. 4. The animal kingdom. 5. The vegetable system. 6. The finny tribes of the deep. 7. Man, and his race. Seven circular fortifications defending the citadel!

The "architype" must exist in the mind of the architect before he begins to build. Arguments preponderate in favor of a proposition when facts are submitted. The Bible discloses the facts of creation. In the beginning the universe hung in sable drapery, enveloped in curtains of rayless and profound darkness, with all its latent beauties. In majesty and august potency, Deity stepped forth in bright divinity, into vast infinity, surrounded with the original elements of uncreated worlds. Amid the chaotic mass, and by his mighty projecting compass of survey, he threw the outlines over the rayless expanse of darkness. He circumscribed and mapped the vast plains of the revolving universe,—thus stood the architect with the "architype," so magnificent in mind, the great and grand problem of creation, generation, formation, organization, crystallization, etc. Listen to the voice of truth and power as its first fiat came rolling in majesty and wisdom from the lips of Deity.

Then the radiant morn of creation broke,
The world in the smiles of God awoke.

1. "Let there be light," was the fiat, and, as a result of creative power, light was born,—"and there was light." The realms of darkness and death were moved to their depths. The creation of light was a fact spoken into existence six thousand years ago. We look forth, and light is an existing fact to-day. This corner-stone has never been moved out of creation by the combined powers of infidel logic and darkness. Again, the present existing fact of periodical darkness is another evidence—it being the absence of light. "And God called the darkness night." When have any of the forms and phases of skepticism set fire to and burned up the curtains of night? We look forth, and darkness is an existing fact to-night.

2. "The planetary system presents incontestible evidence of Bible divinity. The volume testifies that six thousand years ago God "created two great lights,"—the sun and moon. As in grand pieces of machinery there is one large wheel as the center of motion propelled by some superior power, and a score of wheels of less magnitude are set in motion, propelled by the larger one, and when the larger one stops, all the lesser wheels cease to revolve, so the sun moving in its own orbit in the solar system, being propelled by a superior power, is the grand radiating source of action, light, heat, and attraction, in our solar system, of all the revolving planets, whose centers of motion being sustained, are propelled by the action of the superior, and when the superior stops, all the primary and secondary planets cease to move. It is a principle in astronomy that revolving bodies whose centers of motion are not sustained, must inevitably fall. Each one of the secondary planets whose center of motion is sustained by the next larger planet, is dependent on the superior power of the one above it, and so of all the endless profusion of resplendent orbs. Now if all the primary planets whose centers of motion are sustained by the action of the next larger would inevitably fall, and so on up to the center of the solar system, we turn and ask: What superior power sustains the center of motion in the solar system, whose center is without magnitude, and circumference comprehends the largest revolving planet in the universe, whose center of action if not sustained by some superior power would fall with all the planetary hosts? By what power, we ask, is that greatest of all planets sustained? This intelligent architect we call God. He by that bright planetarium lit up the path of infinity with pure, unclouded emanations of light. When have the phalanxes of unbelievers "roused all nature at will," and by celestial storm chased the systems of stars and suns from heaven's bright stadium? When? We look forth, and note these present existing facts, testified to by the Bible six thousand years ago.

3. "The fowls of the air," as one of the existing facts of creative power stand a living, flying, moving testimony of the divinity of the Bible. The fledged and fledgling, the winged millions, the animal and vegetable kingdoms, the tribes of the deep, and man, all stand forth as unimpeachable witnesses of the truth of the Bible. In regard to all their classification, the volume of Nature discloses a perfect system of the laws of organization in the structure of the universe; that in all the physical world, God operates by system. He works from centers, develops details from units, and therefore, the species follow the laws of the genus in the vegetable, animal, and even the spiritual systems. The theory with which the popular systems of orthodoxy are being honeycombed, in reference to the creation, simply makes the first few chapters of Genesis an allegory, and slaughters the simple laws of our existence. But if the history of man's creation and fall, with related circumstances, is all allegory, if an allegorical garden, allegorical apple, allegorical serpent, with an allegorical expulsion from the allegorical garden under allegorical sin, be the alpha and omega of interpretation, then the remedial system—the gospel—is an allegorical one with an allegorical Christ, suffering allegorical death, on an allegorical cross, being buried in an allegorical tomb, resurrected to allegorical life, all to redeem allegorical man from the original allegorical condition, and I do not wonder that a Chicago divine should say that the "theory had been pursued so far, that we were nearly all allegorical fools!" Clearly, then, if there was no real garden of Eden, no literal forbidden fruit and temptation, and no actual transgression and expulsion from Eden, as religious evolution claims, there was no fall of man to be atoned for, no necessity for a Redeemer, or Savior, and all our hopes of a future life based on the teaching of the Christian system are a fabrication grown out of ignorance and fraud! Just how such preachers as Professor Witherow of the Southern Presbyterian Church, Joseph Cook of Boston, President McCash of Princeton, or the late H. W. Beecher, and countless numbers of recent change, could have accepted evolution, repudiating the account of the creation of man as set forth in Genesis, and still shed tears of joy over the hope of a future life for our departed friends, all growing out of the fall in Eden, and the bogus consequent atonement and redemption described in the New Testament, is quite a mystery.

We now state the theory of evolution, as given by Darwin and others, and accepted by so many popular religionists: "Organized forms have been evolved from jelly-like matter, in the sea, simple, homogeneous, without organism, without parts, without life." We note at once, that this theory fails to account for "life," either animal or vegetable. Nothing has been adduced to show that life has ever been produced from cold, inert, dead matter, spontaneously, but it is a fact susceptible of simple demonstration that matter decomposes and disorganizes at once, after life departs! If evolution has been going on for countless ages, why has no specimen of a being in a state of transition been found in air, earth, or water? Not even a fossil remain to hint at such a theory. Has it been suspended? We mean the theory. During the six thousand years of recorded history men, beasts, birds, fishes, reptiles, insects, and vegetables have continued their forms and functions according to the Bible. The laws of genus and species have been carried out. Not a shade of difference in the mind or instinct, has been noted. In every clime, and every age and government, mode, or social condition, men are men, animals are animals everywhere, except under the teaching influence of men beasts are beasts. It will be noted that the first concept of organization is, that the archetype of the structure to be organized is in the mind of the agent or creator. It is equally true that a class of organic laws must be at hand that will, with mathematical precision, produce the contemplated result or organization.

Now a law can not enact itself. Law being a rule of action, implies an antecedent lawmaker as its origin. Nature or the Universe does not originate law, yet the evolutionists so affirm. Nature is governed by law, by active law, from the creation of a world down to the minutest atom. If the evolutionist theory be true, imagine a law executing itself, and finding for its center of operation a senseless, inert piece of matter, and reeling into existence the sun, the moon, the stars, or man with will power and intelligence! As laws do not execute themselves and without an executive department are inoperative, we ask, Who is this wonderful executive? We call it God! The distinct sameness of genus and species for the six thousand years of recorded history develops the following points: 1. The genus generates its class or kind. 2. The genus generates its life or nature. 3. The genus generates its image—likeness—complexion. 4. The genus generates its organization. First, the species partake of the class or kind of the genus. Second, the species partake of the life or nature of the genus. Third, the species partake of the image or likeness of the genus. Fourth, the species partake of the organization of the genus.

It will be seen that the "class," "life," "image," and "organization" are transitive, pass over from the genus, and are made to reappear in the species, manifesting in four points. The laws governing the system of Nature being active, are therefore in force, producing all the wonderful and entire phenomenon discoverable in the universe. All of which implies a superior, wise lawmaker, or executive—the great conservator of order throughout the realms of Nature; and we say it is God. Again, if living beings began from a flock of albumen floating in the sea, as the evolutionists assert, it will be a very difficult task to find a way to introduce them to air and land-life, for all propagation of living beings on land and in air is by sex, and aquatic inhabitants are not constructed like land animals, therefore the change from water to air-living beings would be very troublesome to conceive. Neither will it do to say that a power exists, called "natural selection," which means that there is a constant change toward higher conditions by throwing off useless particles of matter and the accretion of such as will improve their form, for this gives them selection but no selector. They may call it "the survival of the fittest," but all can see that this position endows the "jelly-like" matter with discrimination, and the power to perpetuate such discrimination through millions of years, removing just the right particle to be removed, at just the right place, and just the right quantity, so as to not render imperfect the organization, and then "selecting" other particles, just the right ones, in just the right quantity and finding the right place for them not to burden the organism, but carrying it on toward the completion of the new form. And mark you, all of this is performed without mind or plan! What a wonderful world of chance! And why is this the popular solution of the problem of creation? "Oh, just because the Bible account in its literal sense is too miraculous!" Indeed, is our credulity to be tested thus? Is it possible to believe in millions of miracles through millions of years, by virtue of millions of changes of "jelly-like" matter, and with one fell swoop denounce one Bible miracle? A species may be improved by careful breeding, in the line of its own instincts, habits, etc., but never across the line into another species; but these improvements are contingent on care, skill, etc., and never affected by "natural selection." Even races coeval with man have come down from the earliest date unchanged, except by intelligent skill. The little king "natural selection" seems to have abdicated!

If man was evolved from a moneron—flesh of albumen—without organization, without life, and came up through intermediate changes, taking on instinct at one change, intellect at another, and all without his choice, it follows that man is not responsible; it destroys virtue and vice. Man would be no more to blame for taking the life of his fellow with arsenic, than arsenic would be to blame for being poison. But evolutionists must not blame us if they feel guilty, when doing wrong, even if no one knows it. But man having been formed by infinite wisdom for a design, that wisdom has not, in the annals of six thousand years, thought proper to change the reproduced and reproducing organization.

Now as to the creation of the earth, one class of evolutionists assert that, far in the depths of eternity, one atom of matter attracted another, and that one another, and so on, until the present formation of the earth obtained; that therefore the earth is its own creator. Now it is an axiomatic truth that organized substance can not be the cause of itself. The theory presupposes the substance to exist, and not to exist, at the same time, which is the climax of absurdity. The same is true of unorganized substance. The theory endows senseless matter with intelligence before it exists; bestows upon it the understanding of all the primary and physical laws of the science of physical organization, which is a transparent absurdity. The organization would have to exist in order to create itself. It would have to not exist in order to be created. If the atoms of which the earth is composed were infinitesimal, each one individual atom would possess the same degree, or equal power of attraction; then when would we get the combination? Imagine fifty men sitting in a circle, with equal strength and power, hands clasped, pulling against each other—each exerting the limit of power, and that power equal; when would the line break, bringing the fifty men to a common center in one consolidated mass, or organism? But oh, evolutionist, admitting the absurdity of this process, who gave those atoms their original existence? Who made the atoms? The Bible answer is, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth"; not creating them from "nothing," as is vainly taught, but out of preëxisting elements. A child might ask its father, "Father, who built this house?" The father answers, "The carpenter, my child." Now the child might suppose the carpenter built the house out of nothing, when in fact, the material originally existed in the forest, awaiting the skillful hand to fell the trees, and convert them into lumber.

Now, it is a fact of easy demonstration that matter can exist both visible and invisible, to physical sense. A chemist can place a piece of literal visible silver into nitric acid and the visible silver dissolves—disappears, becomes invisible. But is the silver gone for ever? Very truly, no. Put in some pieces of copper, and the silver reappears—is visible. Shall we deny the infinite chemist of the Universe the power to perform in a more scientific process what we ascribe to a finite man who is "crushed before the moth"? Matter and spirit, we are told, are eternal. They are the eternal, essential elements of all existence. Nothing is elementarily annihilated. But if one force in the Universe can put physical matter into invisibility—disorganize it, another can return it to visibility—reorganize it.

Sir William Thompson, F. R. S., says: "The earth is filled with evidence that it has not been going on for ever."—Geological Time, p. 16.

Reginald Stuart Poole, M. R. S. L., etc., says: "The Biblical cosmogony stands alone, as of all ancient accounts of the origin of things the only one which is not, on the very face, irreconcilable with the truths of natural science. The cosmogonies of the Egyptians, Chaldeans, and Greeks are utterly irreconcilable with natural truth; yet more, hopelessly opposed to it; whereas that of the Hebrew Scriptures has not been proved to this day to contain an insurmountable difficulty."—The Genesis of Earth and Man, pp. 8, 11.

Professor Henry Drummond of Glasgow, Scotland, says: "Evolution has discovered nothing new," and it "is as yet unproved." But I may be told, "that the votaries of science are not yet unanimous." Very well, would it not be wise then, for theology to wait, until science can agree? But in the meantime to remember that the great judicial, legislative, and executive power back of the universe is found by inspiration—divine revelation! The idea of a God is in the world—has been from time immemorial. We have been informed that "it came into the world through imagination." But it is impossible for imagination to create a single new idea. The creation of supernatural ideas connected with such as God, priest, altar, sacrifice, is impossible for imagination, and is derivable only from an immediate and direct revelation. Imagination may combine, transmute, augment, and diminish the materials afforded us by sense and experience, even to new modifying of the different ideas presented to it, but it has no creative power! Now as "reason has tried to find God, and failed," and as imagination can not originate the idea of God,—it also fails, how is he to be found?

Evolution has given the world what is tantamount to a new bible, and as such is not a revelation from any deity. We are told that the idea of a God did not enter the world by "reason," and it did not enter the world by revelation, but that idea is now here in the world; how did it get here? Perhaps we have ventured far enough on this main objection for the present.

We will turn our attention to a few criticisms offered by a gentleman of high standing in a popular church, recently. The criticism affects the historic portion of the sacred volume. Mark you, the systems of "evolution," "higher criticism," etc., have forced men into infidelity as to the Old Testament, and as yet they fail to see the relation of the New-Testament Savior to the Edenic sinner, although sprinkled in infancy to escape the consequences of Adam's "allegorical" (?) sin! This gentleman said: "It is recorded in Genesis 14:14, that 'when Abraham heard that his brother was taken captive, he armed his trained servants, born in his house, (318,) and pursued them unto Dan.'" It was claimed that there was no such place as Dan, until the tribe of Dan built the city of Dan four hundred years after the event of Abraham pursuing them there. Now in looking this matter up, taking a little trouble to investigate ancient geography, we find the following facts: In the midst of a rich plain between the southern part of Mount Herman, and the mountain of Naphtali is a low, cup-shaped hill called Tel el kadi, and from its western base gushes forth a great spring which is the principal source of the river Jordan. Both fountain and stream were called Dan. (See Jerome, Adamnanus, William of Tyre, Burchart, and Robinson.) It was doubtless to this river that Abraham pursued his foes. If it be claimed that this fountain and stream did not exist until after the time of Abraham, we must assign a much greater antiquity to Abraham than Christianity claims. This objection is very similar to the claim that the New Testament contradicts itself by saying in one place that Christ ascended from the Mount of Olives, and in another that he ascended from the village of Bethany. And yet this statement is jubilantly handed around among a certain class, in sublime unconsciousness of the fact that the village of Bethany is located on the Mount of Olives. The next is a quotation from Kings, and another from Chronicles, the one text saying that King Ahaziah began to reign when he was twenty-two years old, and the other that he began to reign when forty-two years old. Gesenius, the Hebrew scholar and critic, whose lexicon and text-books are authority throughout the five continents—whose scholarship no one will dare to dispute—claims in relation to this matter that twenty-two is the correct number to assign as his age, while the mistake of forty-two in Chronicles was “the mistake of the copyist of the Hebrew numerals, as the two characters look very much alike.” (See also Inspired Translation, 2 Chronicles 22: 2.)

THE QUAIL STORY.

The next “puzzle” found in this chapter of criticisms is the “quail story” told by Moses so long ago, and which has worried some critics ever since they heard of it. “And there went forth a wind from the Lord, [not from the land, as is sometimes quoted], and brought quails from the sea, and let them fall by the camp as it were a day’s journey on this side, and as it were a day’s journey on the other side of the camp, and as it were two cubits high upon the face of the earth.”—Numbers 11: 31. The claim is made that according to the Bible story the quails came from the sea, and it is wisely (?) suggested that had they been called whales, it would be more reasonable. Now the quails were doubtless on their spring journey of migration northward, and beaten down by the wind which the Lord sent. Sykes says: “They arrive in spring on the shores of Provence so exhausted by their long flight, as to be taken by hand.” It will be observed that the birds are spoken of as being two cubits high, and not two cubits deep. If you should affirm that you saw a flock of geese fifty feet high, you would be averse to being accused of saying “the geese were packed all over the earth fifty feet deep.” Yet the meek man, Moses, has repeatedly been misrepresented in just such way. Natural History 10: 23, discloses the fact that enormous flocks of quail are seen in the spring and fall, after they have crossed a large surface of sea, resting upon the islands of Malta, Sicily, and Crete. Pliny asserts: “They sometimes light on vessels in the Mediterranean Sea, and sink them.”—Natural History 10: 23. We have never heard even an infidel question Pliny! Audubon describes a flock of pigeons covering “at least one hundred and eighty square miles of surface, and so deep as to obscure the light of the sun, ‘as if by an eclipse,’ impregnating the great ocean of air around them with their peculiar odor. The noise of their wings was so great that the report of guns could not be heard, and when they alighted, trees six feet in circumference were broken off near the ground.” (Birds and Bird Life, pp. 148–152.) This is quite a “bird story,” but even skeptics find no difficulty in believing it. If such a story were in the Bible instead of a scientific work, what an outcry and laugh would reverberate among the hosts of unbelievers. “At all times their flight is very low, just skimming the surface of the ground, especially when fatigued.”—Natural History of the Bible, p. 272.

SAMSON.

The narrative of the Hebrew athlete was pronounced a “little too large.” “And it came to pass . . . that he cast away the jaw-bone out of his hand and called the name of the place Rameth-lehi; he was sore athirst, . . . But God clave an hollow place that was in the jaw [margin, Lehi] and there came water thereout.”—Judges 15: 17–19. Now, both Studor and Doctor Smith say: “Lehi (jaw-bone), a place in Judah on the confines of the Philistines’ country between the latter and the Cliff Etam.” Studor further says: “It was the wall of rock—an opening in which was called Mahtesh, and from this the fountain sprang or was discovered after the place had been named by Samson.” So instead of water gushing from the jaw-bone of the beast, it gushed out of the wall of rock, shaped like, and named, Lehi (jaw-bone).

FOXES.

One more incident in the life of Samson has been a source of great annoyance to tender critics. His very original method of burning a field of dry grain they have never been able to understand. Well, there is a practice still in vogue in the far-away Orient of tying the tails of two foxes together and attaching a lighted torch to them to heighten the interest in a circus performance. Burchart claims that “the custom was derived from the Phœnicians—that it is done in memory of the damage once done to a harvest in that way and is clearly traced to the history of Samson.” (Hieroz, part 1, book 3, chapter 13.) A custom perpetuated is as strong a proof of the historical fact, as the continuous celebration of our national anniversary is of the Declaration of Independence.

THE RESURRECTION OF CHRIST.

Among all the intensely interesting facts, varied topics, and brilliant compartments of revealed truth, mutually operating as coefficients in the formation of Christian character, few, if any, claim interest equal to that with which this subject before us is invested. The historic evidence establishing this fact reaches us, as everything of cotemporary date must,—mellowed and obscured by the dark hue of ages. But we present a proposition at the outset, which furnishes a base for evidence existing, extrinsic of the fact which can, nevertheless, be brought to bear legitimately upon the proof of the occurrence. It is this: that evidence which can be judged of by the senses, and which has been submitted to the inspection of the multitude, in every aspect and variety of familiar exhibition, and faithfully preserved and handed down to us in the authentic records of history, must be positive in its nature, and will be so regarded by every master of the laws of evidence. Should we reject the truth of this proposition, away goes universal history into the files of fiction, and memoirs of the successful actors in the great drama of life become a cheat—a fable; the laws of faith or belief totally subverted. Now we do not propose an extended notice of objections, but simply a specimen. Jesus Christ dies, and is tenderly, by loving hands, reposed in the tomb. He had said he would arise, and that he would rise the "third day." And accordingly his resurrection was vigilantly guarded against both by Jews and Romans, and every possible measure of prevention was duly adopted and resorted to. The authority of the Sanhedrim was interposed. The proconsular seal of the Roman Empire told the intruder that death would avenge its violation. Sixty soldiers armed with spear and javelin were present to do duty. His disciples had yielded to grief and came not near his tomb—sad hour for disciples! But these sixty soldiers were accustomed to arms. They were bred in a camp, and surely sixty living men, of such discipline, could prevent the escape of one dead man—could they not? But on the morning of the third day the Lord is risen! Now let the objector account for the fact, and inform the world how it happened. As would be expected, the military guard fled, and proclaimed everywhere the fact. Truth forced upon their understandings made them honest for a time, and they told the story as the event occurred. But they were bribed, yet it seemed too late for the success of the forgery. Their defeated rulers paid them to come into court and swear to a fact that should have taken place while they were asleep! And we learn from Josephus and Tacitus that the penalty was death for a sentinel to sleep on his post. Think of witnesses coming into any well regulated court and for a given sum of money solemnly depose that certain persons had done thus and so, while we slept! Such are both pliant and purchasable. If they are necessary to establish the position of skepticism, honest men can well afford to have no business with such.

We know it has been assumed, in prejudice, and plead in bar, that Christ appeared only to personal friends after his resurrection. This is not correct; he first appeared to the legionary guard, who were present by appointment. They were banded and sworn to prevent his escape, yet powerless; one and all saw him achieve the wondrous victory over death, and disappear. Now here are three score of his enemies who were witnesses, before his disciples were, and these sixty enemies were the first asserters of the fact, and we are allowed to use their original testimony, given when no suspicion or improper motive existed. Both Jews and Romans had confided the whole case, publicly, to the military guard, and declined further relation to it. When, therefore, the risen Christ appeared to the guard, he vindicated his mission before the proper representatives of both Roman and Jewish authority. And while it is affirmed that "God raised him up the third day, and showed him openly; not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God" (Acts 10: 40, 41), we see in this "open" manifestation of the "risen Lord" a reference to those not his special friends. Certainly he was not seen by all the nation, and had he been, it would have falsified the statement, "Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."—Matthew 23: 39.

First, he appeared to the military guard.

Second, to Mary Magdalene at the sepulcher very early.

Third, to "other woman" of the first Christian family.

Fourth, to Cleophas and another disciple, six miles from Jerusalem.

Fifth, to Simon Peter who was almost a statue of grief.

Sixth, he appeared to ten of the disciples in the guest-chamber.

Seventh, he appeared to the eleven on the eighth day after his resurrection—the first Christian Sabbath.

Eighth, he appeared to seven of his disciples soon after at the Sea of Tiberius.

Ninth, he appeared again to "the eleven apart" in a mountain of Galilee.

Tenth, he appeared to "the eleven again" under circumstances of solemnity and distinction, just before his ascension.

Eleventh, he appeared to "more than five hundred" in a "mountain of Galilee," placed in nomination by him for this purpose.

Twelfth, yet again he appeared to "the eleven" on Mount Olivet, who saw him break the laws of attraction, and ascend.

Thirteenth, he was seen by "James the less," James the Just belonged to "the eleven"—was a member of the college of apostles, and his testimony is merged in theirs.

Fourteenth, he was seen by Stephen the proto-martyr.

Fifteenth, he was seen by Paul, who seemed "born out of due time."

Sixteenth, he was seen by John in Apocalyptic vision.

Seventeenth, he was seen by angels who saw him rise, and afterward witnessed and published his ascension and predicted his coming again as the "same Jesus," and in "like manner" as he then departed. They have left their testimony on both sides.

We have the testimony of at least five hundred and eighty witnesses who saw the Lord after his resurrection,—many of whom had only been separated from him about thirty-six hours. Sixty of these were his sworn enemies. Four at least of these witnesses were from heaven—angels. The fact of his resurrection was attested by "earthquake" and commotion—a variety of argument intelligible to all, and resisted by none who witnessed it. Even the imperial labarum and guard sank powerless to earth. "Many bodies of the saints which slept, arose, came out of their graves," appeared in the streets of the once holy, but now "desolate" city; offered their resurrected bodies as proof of the fact and part of the spoils gracing his triumph. The solid rocks burst asunder, were rent in twain and hurled from their firm foundation. They lie scattered in broken fragments as monuments of agonized nature; as silent witnesses of the heaving sighs and convulsive quakings and dreadful groanings of the earth, while by wicked hands the now risen Lord was slain. We are told by the skeptic that "the sun being darkened as with sack-cloth of hair," was "occasioned by an eclipse." Glad they admit the testimony as to "darkness"; and as evidence they do admit it, we offer their attempted solution of it—i. e., it was "caused by an eclipse." But was it? Let us see. Our Lord was crucified at the time of the "Passover." He was "eating" the "Passover" with his disciples when he was betrayed and arrested. (Luke 23:1, 13, 15, 21.) The Passover was a fixed institution, to commemorate the deliverance of Israel from Egyptian slavery, and the sparing of their first-born, when the destroying angel smote the first-born of the Egyptians. "Thou shalt keep this ordinance in his season from year to year."—Exodus 13:10. The season was the month Nisan, from the fourteenth to twenty-first day. The paschal lamb is the leading feature in this ceremonial institution. "The lamb slain" typified "the Lamb of God." Christ "our Passover is sacrificed for us." (1 Corinthians 5:7.) He was crucified at the hour of the morning sacrifice. The crucifixion ended at the hour of the evening sacrifice. Now from a calendar of the Jewish year, corrected by Rabbi Schindler of Boston, that "Passover" was at "the full of the moon,"—and our noted astronomers affirm that "there can be no eclipse at the full of the moon." This is affirmed by F. W.

Dyson, Royal Observatory, Greenwich; Professor James E. Harlan, vice-president Cornell College; W. S. Franklin, professor of astronomy, author of Elements of Physics, Iowa Agricultural College; W. H. Pickering, Astronomy Special. Again: An eclipse never exceeds twelve to fifteen minutes, whereas this continued three hours.

But it is urged, apart from the historical question at issue, that "the resurrection of the dead is a natural, or physical impossibility." If this be true, our Savior is still in the custody of the tomb. A moment's consideration will satisfy us that the objection is not strong; for certainly, he who originally produced, as admitted by the objector, the body from the dust of the earth, having purposed it, could as easily give its reproduction the same origin. Its reproduction from the dust of the earth at the resurrection carries with it no impossibility not involved in its original production from the same source. It may be observed that the beautiful flora of the fields chill and die under the icy breath of winter, but they revive and live in bloom and beauty under the vernal equinox. The sun, moon, and stars set, but rise again, and shall not the reversal of the common law of humanity, in the case of Enoch and Elijah, who, in conformity with the divine arrangement, were permitted to overstep the grave, and reach the abodes of the blest without tasting death, furnish presumptive evidence that the sinless Lord could not long be holden of death, or remain in the custody of the tomb. While the two translated worthies are not introduced as types, yet they demonstrate the final indissolubility of the body, and preintimate its resurrection from the dead.

We will now approach the chief arguments of the most recent society who reject all "miracles as incredible," and their assumption as "foolish, because absurd." They assume that the course of Nature is tied down and controlled by definitely fixed laws unalterable even by the lawgiver himself, and that all miracles are breaches, and, of necessity, directly violative of them. Now, that the objection may have force, it is indispensable that the objector produce the code of which he speaks, and show beyond doubt that miraculous interposition is precluded from the government of Nature; otherwise, it may develop that such interposition by the lawgiver, in suspending, or modifying his own laws, may be one of the very laws referred to by the objector. What will the infidel do with the following deviations from the "tied down" and "fixed laws" "controlling Nature"?—

1. The career of the comet.
2. The devastations of the whirlwind.
3. The convulsions of the earthquake.
4. The burst of the volcano.

These are all constituent parts of a regular system; let the objector show that miraculous interpositions are less so. The one is not more remarkable than the other. God being the author of Nature, and the sole ordainer of her laws, whatever he may do, can not possibly offer violence to either. "But," says another, "it is more probable that the witnesses would be deceived themselves, than that the Almighty would transgress or depart from the established laws of Nature." Yes, that was Mr. Hume's position, and let us see. If we look at the evidence they furnish, their manner of furnishing such, we shall be satisfied first, with regard to their undoubted sincerity; second, their mental competency; third, their divine commission. Deceived they were not. The supposition is an outrage upon principles of certainty. They had been in personal association with Christ for more than three years, and this would enable them to know him beyond deception.

They saw him frequently, at different times and under different circumstances at each time, after his resurrection for forty days. This gives them at the least calculation, forty-two months of intimate acquaintanceship. He ate with them, and drank with them. He conversed and conferred with them. He wrought miracles in their presence. They "handled" his person and felt his wounds, and when he separated from them, he did it before their eyes, all in the broad daylight of heaven. When the other "Comforter" came and took up his abode with them, it furnished additional witness,—“We are his witnesses and so also is the Holy Ghost,” testifies Peter.

Their competency may be seen, when we examine the immortal, classic productions in the sacred volume. Their sincerity may be noted by the things which they suffered. All admit them to be men of sense, and it is not reasonable to assume that men of their caliber labored, suffered, and sacrificed, without even the hope of earthly emoluments, in the immediate prospect of the ax, the cross, the stake, the stocks, the stripes, and were not sincere. It will not do to say they were trying to deceive others; for if they were deceivers, they knew that it was within the power of even the children of Jerusalem to throw them upon the people as purjured villains. Besides, they did not go out to seek a barbarous, or an uncultivated people to publish the chief fact of the Christian religion; this is the sure resort of deceivers. But they go to the classic Greek, the cultivated and polished, also the haughty, Roman, and there raise the banner of the cross, and seal their testimony with their blood in some instances. True, their mission was "in all the world," but they made no speciality of the rude, the unlettered, or barbarous.

But, it is objected further: "We can not believe the record, however accredited, upon a subject so momentous; we can not believe without ocular evidence." They mean that they will not, instead of "can not." To say they "can not," proves them ignorant of the principles of human belief as connected with historic credibility. They have no ocular demonstrative evidence of the existence and exploits of such men as Charlemagne, Hannibal, or Cæsar, and never can have any. If they believe at all, it must be upon the basis of the kind of evidence by which the resurrection of Jesus is established. They have no ocular demonstrative evidence that Nineveh, Babylon, or the city of Dan ever existed, and yet no sane mind affects to doubt, unless he be like the infidel disciple Pyrrho, who affected to doubt everything—even his own existence, and would not go around a precipice, but whose friends were compelled to seize him before he tumbled into a forced demonstration. Hume's and Berkely's disciples reduced doubting to a science, and taught it as an art. The Alps mountains were "a train of ideas," and a thunder-storm was but "excited sensations." Another consideration: the destruction of Jerusalem did not occur immediately on the ascension of our Lord, but was deferred forty years. Had it occurred immediately, the infidel world would to-day plead that war, bloodshed, the sacking of the city, pillage, earthquake, ravage, famine, starvation, and conflagration would have destroyed all authentic evidence of the great question. It would have been impossible for it to have been written and preserved, and such objection would have weight. But for forty years the city stood, in at least comparative quiet, and during that period the question of the Savior's resurrection was before every tribunal of the land. Notorious in all Judea, reported to the Roman senate, discussed in the city of Corinth, which Cicero styles lumen totius Græciæ,—"the eye of all Greece," also at Athens, it became a recorded fact uncontradicted by any historian of antiquity, and this testimony comes down to us in due historical form. Seven or eight allusions to persons, customs, and usages, which the sacred writers never explain, are found in the narratives of the trial of Jesus, and will bear examination with the authentic records of secular history. Chalmers has noticed them, and we deduce the following:

1. The Evangelists say, "They brought Jesus to Pontius Pilate." Both Tacitus and Josephus assert that Pontius Pilate was at that time governor of Judea. A sentence from him was necessary before they could proceed with the execution, and history asserts that the power of life and death was usually vested in the Roman governor.

2. The record says that Pilate scourged Jesus before he gave him up to be crucified. We learn from ancient history that this was a very usual practice among the Romans. The account of an execution generally ran in this form: He was stripped, whipped, and beheaded, or executed. According to the Evangelists we learn,

3. "His accusation was written on the top of the cross." Suetonius and others say: "The crime of the person to be executed was affixed to the instrument of his punishment." The sacred historians say,

4. This accusation was written in three different languages. Josephus tells us it was quite common in Jerusalem to have all public advertisements written in this manner. The Evangelists say,

5. Jesus had to bear his cross. Other sources of information state this as the constant practice of the times.

According to the Evangelists, the body of Jesus was given up to be buried at the request of friends. History bears out the thought, that unless the criminal was infamous, this was the law or custom with all Roman governors. The New Testament writers state that "they gave Jesus vinegar to drink mingled with gall." History informs us that "it was common custom among the Jews to administer a stupifying potion compounded with sour wine, frankincense, and myrrh to condemned persons to alleviate their sufferings or render them insensible to pain." Doctor F. M. Farrar says that "Wealthy ladies in Jerusalem provided this stupifying potion at their own expense, and they did so irrespective of their sympathy for any individual criminal." The sacred record continues: "And parted his garments, casting lots." History affirms that "the condemned person arriving at the place of execution, was stripped; the garments being the perquisites of the soldiers who performed the disagreeable work." (Dictionary of the Bible, p. 514.)

Again the Evangelist: "And sitting down, they watched him there." History corroborates: "According to custom, a party of four soldiers were appointed to watch the body to prevent its surreption. But for this guard, the persons might have been taken down, and recovered, as was actually done in the case of a friend of Josephus."—Idem., p. 514.

John the beloved, chapter 19, verse 39, says: "And there came also Nicodemus, . . . and brought a mixture of myrrh and aloes, about an hundred-pound weight." Pliny says: "Take into account the vast number of funerals that are celebrated throughout the whole world each year, and the heaps of odor that are piled up in honor of the dead."—Natural History 12:18. Plutarch on the death of Sylla, says: "So great a quantity of spices was brought by the woman, that, exclusive of those carried in two hundred and ten great baskets, a figure of Sylla, at full length, and of a licitor besides, was made of cinnamon and the choicest frankincense."—Sylla, C. 38. In all of this detail, we perceive nothing like a forced introduction of any one circumstance. And it is difficult to conceive, in the first instance, how the inventor of a fabricated story which he knew must become notorious would hazard such a number of circumstances, each of them supplying a point of comparison with other authors, and giving to the inquirer additional opportunity to detect and expose the imposition.

Prophecy, relating to Christ in detail: The confinement for three days and nights "in the heart of the earth," of the Christ, was marvelously prefigured by the mysterious detention of the prophet Jonah for the same length of time in the stomach of the fish. The borderers of Israel along the Mediterranean shore, who heard the story, and still less the mariners who threw the prophet overboard, never supposed that this circumstance, deemed so trivial, was to become so big with meaning in the infinite plan of the all-wise One, by symbolizing the term of Jesus Christ's exanimation, and the time of his resurrection from among the dead. But we are met right here by the objection that, "Science determines that the throat of whales, sharks, and allied species is too small to admit a man." Well, if this be true, and "the throat" not susceptible to distension ordinarily or by miracle, then Jonah was not in the "belly of the fish," and the fact of "Christ in the heart of the earth" may be denied in relation thereto. Now, the Bible statement is, "the Lord had prepared a great fish"—ketos—which may signify any sea-monster. Professor H. B. Tristram says: "Various species of shark, several of which occur in the Mediterranean, have been repeatedly known to swallow a man whole."—Natural History of the Bible, p. 293. Reverend William Houghton, M. A., F. L. S., says: "The white shark, which attains sometimes the length of thirty feet, is quite able to swallow a man whole." Mr. Couch, in his History of the Fishes of the British Islands, says: "The formation of the jaws and throat of this (white) shark, renders this a matter of but little difficulty." Ruysch says: "The whole body of a man in armor has been found in the stomach of the white shark." Captain King, in his Survey of Australia, says he "caught one which could have swallowed a man with the greatest ease." Blumenbach says that "a whole horse has been found in a shark." (Dictionary of the Bible, p. 3509.) Professor Couch says: "It is no uncommon thing for sharks to throw up again whole and alive, the prey they have seized."—History of Fishes, vol. 1, p. 33. Darwin is quoted by Houghton in Dictionary of the Bible as saying: "I have heard from Doctor Allen Farres, that he has frequently found a diodon floating alive and distended in the stomach of the shark, and on several occasions he has known it to eat its way out, not only through the coats of the stomach, but through the sides of the monster, which has been thus killed." The Bible says: "The Lord spake unto the fish, and it vomited out Jonah upon the dry land," and let the skeptic impeach the testimony of this fish, if he can.

As to the birth of Christ, and allusions to his life, we present the following:—

Prophecy, Micah 5:2. Time, 710 B. C., K. J.: "But thou Bethlehem . . . be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come . . . that is to be ruler in Israel." Fulfillment, Matthew 2:1: "Now Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the king."

Fulfillment: "And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him." John 3:34: "For he whom God hath sent speaketh God's words: for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him." Luke 4:18: "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor."

Fulfillment, Matthew 9:13: "I will have mercy, and not sacrifice: for I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." Chapter 11, verse 28: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." John 6:37: "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out."

Prophecy, Isaiah 42:21: "He will magnify the law, and make it honorable." Fulfillment, Matthew 4:17-19: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets: I am not come to destroy but to fulfill. . . . Whosoever therefore shall break one of the least of these commandments and shall teach men so, he shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven."

Prophecy, Isaiah 50:4: "The Lord God hath given me the tongue of the learned, that I should know how to speak a word in season to him that is weary." Fulfillment, Matthew 7:28, 29: "And it came to pass, when Jesus had ended these sayings, the people were astonished at his doctrine: for he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes." Matthew 13:54: "They were astonished, and said, Whence hath this man this wisdom, and these mighty works?" John 7:46: The officers answered, "Never man spake like this man."

Prophecy, Isaiah 50:6: "I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair; I hid not my face from shame, and spitting." Fulfillment, John 19:1-3: "Then Pilate therefore took Jesus and scourged him. And the soldiers platted a crown of thorns, and put it on his head, . . . and they smote him with their hands." Mark 14:65: "And some began to spit on him, and to cover his face." Matthew 27:30: "And they spit upon him and took the reed, and smote him."

this the carpenter, the son of Mary? And they were offended at him." John 8:48: "Then answered the Jews, and said unto him, say we not well that thou art a Samaritan, and hast a devil?" John 1:11: "He came to his own and his own received him not." John 19:6-15: When the chief priests therefore and the officers saw him, they cried out, saying, "Crucify him, crucify him. . . . Away with him, away with him."

Prophecy, Isaiah 53:3: "A man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief." Fulfillment, Mark 3:5: "Being grieved for the hardness of their hearts." Luke 19:41: "He beheld the city and wept over it." Luke 22:44: "Being in an agony, his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground." John 11:33, 35: "He groaned in spirit, and was troubled." "Jesus wept."

Prophecy, Isaiah 53:4: "We did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted." Fulfillment, Matthew 26:65, 66: "He hath spoken blasphemy . . . he is guilty of death." John 19:7: "We have a law, and by our law he ought to die, because he made himself the Son of God."

Prophecy, Isaiah 53:7: "He was oppressed, and he was afflicted; yet he opened not his mouth." Fulfillment, Matthew 27:12-14: "When he was accused, he answered nothing. Then Pilate said unto him, Hearest thou not how many things they witness against thee? And he answered him to never a word." Mark 14:61: "He held his peace and answered nothing."

Prophecy, Isaiah 53:7: "He was taken from prison and judgment." Fulfillment: "The chief priests and scribes did not cast our Lord into prison, and then after a time give him a fair trial, according to custom, but without delay they delivered him to Pilate, and urged his immediate execution." Both the prison and judgment were ignored. See also Thomas Scott, D. D., note in loco.

Prophecy, Isaiah 53:9: "He was with the rich in his death." Fulfillment, Matthew 27:57: "When even was come, there came a rich man of Arimathea named Joseph . . . begged the body of Jesus, . . . wrapped it in linen . . . laid it in his own new tomb."

Prophecy, Isaiah 53:9: "Because he had done no violence, neither was deceit found in his mouth." Fulfillment, Luke 23:14, 15: "Ye have brought this man unto me as one that perverteth the people: and, behold, I, having examined him before you, have found no fault in this man touching those things whereof ye accuse him; no, nor yet Herod: for I sent you to him; and, lo, nothing worthy of death is done unto him." John 18:38: "I find in him no fault at all." 1 Peter 2:21, 22: "Christ suffered for us, . . . who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth."

Prophecy, Isaiah 53:10: "When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin." Fulfillment, Matthew 26:38: "My soul is exceedingly sorrowful even unto death." John 12:27: "Now is my soul troubled, but for this cause came I unto this hour."

Prophecy, Isaiah 55:4: "Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people." Fulfillment, John 18:37: "For this cause came I unto the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth."

Prophecy, Zechariah 11:12. Time, 518 B. C., K. J.: "So they weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver." Fulfillment, Matthew 26:15: "And he said unto them, what will ye give me, and I will deliver him unto you? And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver."

Prophecy, Zechariah 11:13: "And the Lord said unto me, Cast it unto the potter: a goodly price that I was prized at of them. And I took the thirty pieces of silver and cast them to the potter in the house of the Lord." Fulfillment, Matthew 27:3, 5, 6, 7: "Then, Judas, which betrayed him, repented himself, and brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders, and he cast down the thirty pieces of silver in the temple. And the chief priests took the pieces of silver, and said, it is not lawful to put them into the treasury, because it is the price of blood. And they took counsel; and bought with them the potters' field, to bury strangers in."

Prophecy, Zechariah 13:7: "Smite the Shepherd and the sheep shall be scattered. Awake, O sword, against my Shepherd." Fulfillment, Matthew 26:47, 56, 57: "And while he yet spake, lo, Judas one of the twelve, came, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves from the chief priests and elders of the people. And they laid hold on Jesus, and led him away to Caiphas. . . . Then all the disciples forsook him and fled."

Prophecy, Zechariah 12:10: "They shall look upon me whom they have pierced." Fulfillment, John 19:31: "But one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side."

Prophecy, Psalm 34:20: "He keepeth all his bones; not one of them shall be broken." Fulfillment, John 19:32, 33: "Then came the soldiers, and break the legs of the first, and of the other which was crucified with him. But when they came to Jesus, and saw that he was dead already, they brake not his legs."

The foregoing constitute only a few out of numerous points of prophetic detail, centering in the person, character, death, and resurrection of Christ. We ask, How can the skeptic of any grade dispose of this chapter of prophecy? That it existed seven hundred years before Christ is as certain as that the poems of Homer or Hesiod had an existence before the Christian era. It was found in the Chaldee and Greek languages hundreds of years before the dawn of the Christian era. The translation of the Old Testament into Greek commenced two hundred and eighty years before Christ at Alexandria; this would be more than three centuries before the commencement of the public ministry of Jesus. The statement of the prophecy is minutely correct, and the writing and deliverance to the world of Isaiah, fifty-third chapter, centuries before the birth of Christ, stands a demonstrated and admitted fact before the world. And the records which thus speak of this personage prophetically, were to be kept by the Jews and held sacred by the opponents of the Christian institution. So the documents could not be interpolated. So precise were the Jews in the copies of their scriptures, that some of the Rabbis assert all the words, and even letters, used in their sacred books, were numbered. Hence, as certain as his birth, character, crucifixion, and death are true, so certain did "the captain of our salvation" rise in grandeur over the wreck of death's proudest hopes, and in triumph bore to his ascending car the captivity of a dying world. Stupendous event! Having entered the dark dominions of the dead, rendered grateful the retreat of the tomb, he planted the flower of immortality in the very moss of the sepulcher. He exhibited the supremest test of the divinity of his mission and the truth of the system he came to ratify, clearly and triumphantly authenticated by the public seal—the out-pouring of the Holy Ghost in the Jewish metropolis on the day of Pentecost. Before the ascension of Jesus from Mount Olivet, he told "the eleven" witnesses not to depart from Jerusalem to proclaim the doctrine of the resurrection until "power from on high" had visited them. Such "power" as would be adequate to confirm such proclamation.

The commemorative day had arrived—"was fully come." One hundred and twenty disciples were present—convened in "one place" with "one accord." This is the memorable day on which the first sheaf of wheat was to be waved, or carried overhead as a thank-offering for the new harvest. There seems to be a coincidence in time and the performance of the ancient symbol—the very day commemorative of the Savior's resurrection as the "first fruits of them that slept." On this day, when representatives from more than fifteen nations were assembled with the disciples to take part in the great festival to celebrate the resurrection, "the sound of a mighty rushing wind" was heard. They flock from all quarters to this place. They see tongues of lambent flame encircling the apostles—emblems of foreign tongues by the Holy Spirit. Not only the citizens of Jerusalem saw and heard; but “devout men from every nation under heaven”—of all languages. They heard the Galileans proclaiming in “every man’s” vernacular, “the wonderful works of God.” The Holy Spirit in Peter explains: “This is the operation of the Spirit which your prophet Joel said should be poured out on all flesh, in the last days; Jesus promised us this ‘power’ to attest his resurrection from the dead. Let all the house of Israel know assuredly that he is received into the heavens, and that God has made that Jesus whom you with wicked hands by Roman soldiers slew, both Lord and Christ. He has received this gift from the Father to bestow on us, in your midst. It is a token of divine approbation. It is a supernatural attestation that he now lives. It is a confirmation that we not deceived.” I have paraphrased Peter’s remark, to develop the special case. With full conviction of what they heard and saw, “pierced to the heart” the polyglot crowd exclaimed, in more than fifteen different dialects: “Men, and brethren, what shall we do?” Peter answers the penitent question, by commanding them, (and he is under the power of the Paraclete,) to “Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of the Lord Jesus for the remission of your sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit.” Three thousand of them forthwith were baptized, and were filled with joy, and peace, and hope, praising God.

Now permit me to inquire, are not these, out of every nation under heaven, splendid vouchers to the truth of the resurrection of Jesus? Will the open and emphasized testimony of three thousand, one hundred and twenty persons, many of them embittered enemies previously,—I say, will the witness of this multitude in attestation of a fact happening on as public occasion as a national celebration, be admitted as good and reliable in the courts of skeptics? The apostle’s explanation of the healing of the cripple at the beautiful gate of the temple, establishes a relationship of our physical and eternal condition, with the resurrection of Jesus Christ. “Rulers of the people and senators of Israel, if we are this day examined about the benefit conferred upon the cripple, by what means he has been restored, be it known to you, and to all the people of Israel that by the name of Jesus of Nazareth whom you crucified—whom God has raised from the dead,—yes, by him, this man stands before you sound. This is the stone which was set at naught by you builders, that is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other name under heaven among men.” That a signal miracle had been performed, they could not deny. They agreed to severely threaten them to “speak no more in this name.” Peter proposed a question. They have not as yet answered it,—“whether it is righteous in the sight of God, to obey you rather than God.” Decide if you please. But they continue to proclaim “this name.” They continue to do in “this name.” Peter is imprisoned. The angel of the Lord leads him out. They called the apostles before them the second time, wanted to know why they had disregarded their threats. Peter says: It is necessary to obey God rather than you. No apology. But he must attest the all conquering fact: “The God of our fathers has raised up Jesus, whom you slew, hanging him on a tree. Him has God exalted at his right hand to be a prince and a Savior, to give repentance to Israel and the forgiveness of sins. And we are witnesses of these things and so also is the Holy Ghost.” The Holy Ghost a witness? It is promised “unto all whom the Lord shall call.”

No wonder Paul could say, “we are encompassed with such a cloud of witnesses.” The apostle proceeds to establish a necessary connection between Christ’s resurrection and our own: “As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.”—1 Corinthians 15:22. “If Christ be not raised . . . they which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.”—Verses 17, 18. “For since by man came death, by man (Christ Jesus) came also the resurrection of the dead.”—Verse 21. “If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable.”—Verse 19. “But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen.”—Verse 13. “But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept.”—Verse 20.

Then, on the morning of the Passover, we see him agonizing, bleeding, and dying unconsolated by friends, insulted by foes, drinking the cup to its bitterest dregs—all, with the vision of man’s immortality and eternal life, before him, through the mists of death, on and up, through clouds, to the throne and palm. And having placed his feet on the neck of the king of terrors, and everywhere compassed humanity with the light of life, he proclaims the victor’s notes: “I am he that was dead, but am alive for ever more, Amen! And have the keys of death and hell.”

A SEEDLESS, CORELESS, BLOOMLESS APPLE.

Every one is familiar with the seedless or navel orange, but the seedless apple is a new fruit on the market.

This marvelous improvement in the common apple, fulfilling in letter as well as in spirit the jest of the schoolboy, who proclaimed that “there ain’t going to be no core,” would seem to indicate that eventually the new apple will monopolize the markets of the world for reasons which the appended data clearly point out.

By way of illustration, it may be said that the seedless and coreless apple follows closely the analogue presented by the seedless orange, and is in fact a prototype of the latter. When the seedless orange was introduced to the public, it was regarded in the light of a horticultural wonder, for if there were no seeds, by what uncanny method was their kind propagated?

Shrouded by a mystery such as this, it required some little time for the matter-of-fact virtues to impress themselves and the real merits of the fruit to become known; but, once eaten, its subtle qualities were forgotten, and its advantages were quickly appreciated, and from that day to this the old-fashioned variety, with its multiplicity of seeds, has suffered severely, having almost been driven from the market, and left all but out of the race. Now let us ascertain the real difference between the two varieties of oranges, as the comparison will serve a useful purpose when the old and the new species of apples are being similarly considered. The reason that the seedless oranges are preferred to those containing ovules, is not because any saving is effected, but simply that the seeds are in the way. The ordinary apple presents a wholly different aspect, for the seeds are inclosed in hard pockets that represent at least one fourth of the apple, and which can not be utilized in any way as an article of food; whereas in the seedless variety these disagreeable features are entirely eliminated. Still, what is more to the point of economy, apples without seeds are also wormless, for it is well known to growers that worms in apples obtain their subsistence not from the meat, but from the seeds; hence it is evident that if a worm was hatched in a seedless apple, it could not live.

The beginning of the seedless apple dates back only a few years, and therefore its history is necessarily brief. All the credit for the propagation of the apple thus far belongs to Mr. John F. Spencer, of Grand Junction, Colorado, who, struck with the success of the seedless orange, believed that similar results could be obtained with apples.

After several years' experimental research he succeeded in producing five trees that bore seedless, coreless, and wormless apples, and from this little group there has budded two thousand more trees, which at present constitute the entire seedless apple stock of the world; and from these two thousand trees all the rest of the world must be supplied. It is estimated that these will have produced about three hundred and seventy-five thousand nursery trees by the fall of 1905, and that the following year at least two million five hundred thousand trees will furnish the supply.

There are many striking peculiarities in the development of the seedless tree, as well as in the fruit.

As an instance it may be cited that the tree is blossomless; and while there is a stamen and a very small quantity of pollen, exactly as in the blossom of the ordinary apple-tree, yet the blossom or flower itself is missing. . . .

The only thing that resembles a blossom comes in the form of several small green leaves that grow around the little apple to shelter it. It is this lack of blossom that makes it almost impossible for the codling moth to deposit its eggs, and this practically insures a wormless apple. As it is the blossom of the common apple-tree that is attacked by cold and frost, the seedless apple-tree is immune, and the late frosts that play havoc with the apple-grower's purse by denuding his orchard may now become a thing of the past, and at the same time prevent worry and increase profits.

The seedless apple-tree has a hard, smooth bark, and may be grown in any climate; the meat of the new apple, like that of the seedless orange, is very solid, and in both there is a slightly hardened substance at the navel end. Through long development this has almost disappeared in the orange; and while it is more or less prominent in the seedless apple, it has been materially reduced in the last generation of trees, and all sizes tend to show that it will grow smaller with successive generations, as the navel end of the orange has grown smaller.

The apples, which are of a beautiful dark red color with yellow strawberry dots, are of a goodly size, and have a flavor similar to the winesap.—A. Frederick Collins in Scientific American for February 4, 1905.

The Boy and the Boy's Father.

The boy's mother is holding indignation meetings in Carnegie Hall, New York, and passing resolutions against the prevalence of youthful vice. Or, she is smashing saloons in Kansas because they are boy-traps. Or, she is working with might and main in some other State, against the deadly cigarette, or for temperance education in the public schools, all in the interests of the boy. Where is the boy's father? Why isn't he heard from?

Pulpit and press are deploring the fact that the most energetic, ambitious, masterful boys are breaking away from the leading-strings of the church. There has never been less truth back of such statements than in these days of Christian Endeavor, but there has always been enough truth to compel attention to the strength of the leading-strings. What is the boy's father doing to make them unbreakable?

Too often he is turning the entire religious training of the boy over to the boy's mother. The boy's mother is his Sunday-school teacher. The boy's mother or sister or aunt is his Junior superintendent. We have mothers' associations or clubs in many of our churches, for the study of the laws of heredity and environment, and the science of child-culture.

But what are the fathers' clubs discussing? Expansion, the steel trust, and municipal reform, or they are retailing threadbare jokes. The boy, himself, is too apt to be a joke to his father.

Usually the boy is expected to imbibe his business and political views from his father, and his religion from his mother. His father may ask him, sometimes, if he has studied his Sunday-school lesson. When the period of adolescence comes, no wonder that the boy begins to regard religion as something belonging to the other sex and to "kids." Later, he may appreciate in its true worth his mother's religion of quiet, unswerving, enduring trust and devotion; but just now it seems womanish and unworthy. He longs for action. He dreams of deeds of daring. He is impressed most powerfully with enterprises into which his father and other men throw their constructive genius and energy.

The boy's father is a prince of merchants or contractors or mechanics, but a torpid church-member; and in the boy's home manly religion is not as much in evidence as the daily paper or the trade journal. The boy's father has a business to build up for the boy.

But many a father has built up a business for the boy, and has forgotten to build up the boy for the business, as his godly father built him up. And when he is ready to add "& Son" to the name of "Smith" or "Brown" on the business sign, the "Son" is too busy sowing his wild oats to honor the ceremony with his presence.

The boy's father would better leave behind him a good son than a great business. Any father could better afford to have carved on his tombstone, "Here Lies the Father of Dwight L. Moody" than to leave a twenty-story building or a great railroad, named after himself.

The next quarter of a century is going to witness one of the most tremendous and desperate struggles to save the boy from the whisky bottle, the gambling mania, the octopus of social impurity, and the clutch of gold-greediness. The meetings in Carnegie Hall, the blows of the hatchet in Kansas, the anti-cigarette league, are but straws. The boy's mother is in the fight already. But it is time the boy's father was aroused. Shout it above the jingle of the telephone bell; above the clatter of the car wheels; above the chatter of the clubs, and so loud as to break the spell of the newspaper and novel: "The boy needs his father!" He must get from him a virulent, aggressive type of piety. He must see in him his ideal of courageous citizenship and staunch loyalty to honor. A hundred devoted mothers could not do this for the boy, though they gave their lives.

Does the boy's father hear? Is the boy's father ready to meet the emergency?—Christian Endeavor World.

The Sunday-School Lesson for March 12, 1905.

THE CHURCH IN SARDIS.

Lesson text: Revelation 3: 1-6.

Golden Text.—"He that overcome, the same shall be clothed in white raiment."—Revelation 3: 5.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE LESSON, FOR SUPERINTENDENTS.

The second primary lesson tells the story of the condition of the branch in Sardis, where there were only a few who had maintained the purity necessary to commend them to Christ. It tells that the people of that branch were called saints, that they had been baptized into the church, and had taken upon them the promise to keep the commandments of the Lord, but that only a few had kept that promise, and that Jesus said there were only a few of them who had not defiled their garments.

The lesson improves this opportunity to teach them the necessity of being clean, in body and clothing, but most of all, in spirit. It calls attention to the promise in the words of the golden text, that those who overcome shall be clothed in white raiment, and, in connection with it, speaks of the purity of the home of Jesus and of the white raiment of the angels who sometimes minister to men from heaven.

And there is another important thought in the lesson story, that we should learn from the example of the few pure-hearted saints in Sardis to do right, even if we must be different from the majority of the people about us, even if we must stand alone among them.

Children in school, or on the streets, or in places of public gatherings often fall into temptation and enter into the wrongs practiced by the majority. They do things under the wrong influence of young companions which they would not do under other circumstances; often they do those things from the fear of ridicule.

Some of the questions in the second primary lesson touch upon these things. We children of larger growth have need to study such questions as these to strengthen both our children and ourselves, for do not we yield in more things than we ought to the popular notions, do not we deviate sometimes with the multitude about us and swerve from the straight line of God's truth, which, like a rod of iron, firm and unbending, never varies from its straight course?

The intermediate lesson calls attention to the saying of Jesus to this church in Sardis, as to the other churches, "I know thy works." It refers to our proneness to forget that God sees all our doings. It points out the fact that Jesus declared the works of Sardis were not perfect before God.

The query rises in the minds of some, "What would the Lord say of us, should he speak of the nature of our works?"

There need be no question with any one of us concerning our own works. If we are sincerely trying to live up to the commandments of God, we are aware of our effort; if our own hearts condemn us for things we are not doing, God is greater than our hearts and will also condemn our indifference or disobedience. If we honestly live up to all the light we have, our heavenly Father will not permit us to remain in darkness but will point out to us the way of truth. "He will be very gracious unto thee at the voice of thy cry; when he shall hear it, he will answer thee. . . . And thine ears shall hear a word behind thee saying, This is the way, walk ye in it."

The intermediate lesson also brings to our notice the statement that the saints of Sardis had the name of being alive. If we bear in mind that there were but few who were approved by the Lord, we must conclude that the majority of those called saints in that city had little more than a nominal membership in the church. Jesus spoke of some who were ready to die; he referred to their weak spirituality. He referred to them as those who remain, and we might infer from this that others were already spiritually dead.

This lesson also directs us to the promise of Jesus concerning those who overcome. In addition to saying that they shall walk with him in white, being clothed in white raiment, he promised not to blot their names out of the book of life.

This reminds us of that time when Moses went to the Lord to intercede for his disobedient brethren after they had made the molten calf. In his pleading he asked the Lord to forgive their sin, and offered, if it were necessary, that his name might be blotted out of the Lord's book instead of the names of those who had sinned. But the Lord answered him, "Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book."

The senior lesson shows that the Lord did not condemn the entire branch at Sardis because some were spiritually dead and others very weak, neither did he approve the entire body there, because there were some faithful ones in it. He stated the case just as it was; he condemned what was wrong and approved what was right. We do not always do so. We sometimes are too pessimistic and sometimes too optimistic. At times we see everything in very somber hues, and at other times we see them in a brighter light than facts justify. But we should learn to see truly, to discriminate clearly between good and bad.

The saying that the church at Sardis had a name that it lived suggests the thought that it is possible for us to have a reputation for being what we are not. This is not always because we deceive others with regard to what we are doing, but it is sometimes because they are not able to estimate correctly. The works of the people of the church in Sardis were not perfect in the sight of God, yet there were those with whom it had the name of being alive. Some evidently did not see that its works were not of the light.

And so we need to have a care concerning our own works. It is possible for us to be actively doing something connected with the church, and yet we may not be doing the work of God. We have need to remember that it is not the outward service we may render, but the spirit in which that service is done that makes it perfect, or imperfect in the sight of God. The Lord found it necessary to warn us with the restoration of the gospel that it is an impossibility for us to assist in his work if we are not humble and full of love, if we have not faith, hope, and charity, if we are not temperate in all things.

When we examine our works, let us see if this is the spirit that is manifest in the things we are doing. If this spirit does not characterize our works, then they are not perfect in the sight of God, no matter what praise they may elicit from men.

The scriptures warn us frequently against pride and excess of ornamentation in dress, but our primary lesson to-day suggests to us that we should avoid the opposite extreme also. We are as far out of the way when we are untidy and unclean as when we are clothed extravagantly. The senior lesson suggests to us that, if we desire to walk in white with Jesus in the eternal world, we must seek to walk in white in this world, to keep the whole being pure, both spirit and body.

"Let thy mind's sweetness have its operation upon thy body, thy clothes, and thy habitation."—Herbert.

"Even from the body's purity the mind receives a secret sympathetic aid."—Thompson.

One of the best thoughts in the lesson is suggested by the statement that there were a few righteous saints in Sardis. Teachers should use this topic to encourage the disposition to be loyal to truth and right, even should the majority about us be going wrong.

The question with us should not be, What is popular? It should be, What is right?

"Keep me, O Lord,
Trustful and lowly;
Fill me with love
Tender and holy."

GALENA, Indiana, February 13, 1905.

Editors Herald: In the Helper for January, 1905, is a "rap on the knuckles" of Reverend R. B. Neal, from the inside, under the caption, "A peculiar problem," as follows: "A brother writes from Scottsboro, Alabama: 'I notice in the Gospel Advocate of January 29, that Bro. R. B. Neal is laid up with a lame leg, and that he will devote more time to the anti-Mormon department of his work; and in the Christian Standard of January 17, he says that he has led a class-meeting for the Methodists and organized a Christian Endeavor Society. I find as much authority in the Bible for Mormonism as I do for class-meetings and Christian Endeavor societies. I suppose the poor old brother has to write against something; and as the Mormons have very few friends in the country where he lives, it is safe to fight them. No doubt that, when he is able to be out again, he will go to work organizing societies and attending class-meetings. Such people will do very little good or very little harm, whether in the house with a lame leg or out of it with a lame mind.'"

The above reminds us of the fable of a farmer who had a combative sheep, which was making him much trouble by fighting everything that came in its way. So as fighting was his alpha and omega, he determined that he should have it. He got a hickory maul, tied it to a limb and started it swinging. The old pest thinking it was a banter, backed, and took it a tilt. The farmer, satisfied that the sheep had found his match, said he would return next morning to see how he was making it with his opponent. On his return he found the old sheep had butted himself all away except about two inches of his tail and that was still in motion. The analogy: Campbellism has had its sway, tearing down and trampling under foot, but at last it has struck the maul of Mormonism, and has completely demolished itself, all but its tail, R. B. Neal and the "antis." R. B. Neal has better success in leading class-meetings than in fighting Mormonism.

GLENS FERRY, Idaho, February 14, 1905.

Editors Herald: Since I last wrote I have been busily engaged in mission-work, having for a coworker Elder Silas D. Condit. After leaving Logan, Utah, we went to Malad City, Idaho, where we held several preaching-services. We also preached a few times at Elkhorn. But having decided to labor in the Lower Snake River country during the winter months we did not tarry long in the Malad Valley. On the 25th of November we started for Malta, intending to visit Saints at Black Pine, but upon arriving at the Black Pine settlement we found the Saints had moved to other parts so we drove on to Malta, where we tried to tell the gospel story to Saints and friends. From there we drove to Conor and Elba, preaching at both places, then on to Albion, the county-seat of Cassia County, Idaho, where we preached in the Methodist Episcopal chapel a few times, also held preaching-service in the Mormon meeting-house in the country a few miles distant.

I wish to state that the Saints of the Rocky Mountain Mission in nearly all places in which we have labored have generously supplied us with money to defray our traveling expenses. We can not mention them by name, but can assure them all that we hold them in grateful remembrance for their loving kindness to us.

From Albion we drove to Locust, near Oakly, Idaho, where we preached to a small audience in the Locust Schoolhouse. While here we tarried with a friend, a Mr. Alvin Tanner, who is known as "the farmer poet." From here we drove to Hagerman, a distance of about eighty miles. Receiving notice from the United States land department to appear before the land commissioner in Uinta County, Wyoming, on land business, I left Bro. Silas to labor alone at Hagerman and vicinity, while I went to Wyoming, to attend to the business mentioned. While in Wyoming I did some preaching, and also visited Saints and friends in Western Wyoming and Southeastern Idaho. Did some work in the interest of the Sunday-school, adding nineteen names to the home class department. Returned to Hagerman December 24, where I found Bro. Silas doing all he could to arouse a greater interest in spiritual things among the people. We continued here until the 10th of January, preaching in schoolhouses, and doing what we could to instruct and assist the Saints in carrying on the good work. From Hagerman we went to Mountain Home, stopping at Glens Ferry enroute. At Glens Ferry we found Bro. Albert Collins, who is the only Saint living in that vicinity. At Old Mountain Home, on Rattlesnake Creek, we preached four sermons in a schoolhouse, and did what we could in the interests of the Sunday-school.

On January 16 we started on our way, camping at Indian Creek over night. The next day we arrived at South Boise. Here we tarried until the 23d of January, preaching in Boise and South Boise, hunting up Saints and friends, and doing such ministerial work as we found necessary. After a diligent search we succeeded in finding fourteen members of the church in Boise. On the 23d of January we drove to Meridian, where I left Bro. Silas to look after the work there, while I went, by rail, to Caldwell, to learn what could be done in that part of the country. Conditions not being favorable, I did no preaching, but devoted my time to hunting up Saints and friends, visiting with them, and trying to do them good. Found only two Saints in Caldwell, viz.: Sr. Davis and Cox. But hearing that a Mr. Ode who lived in the country nine miles northwest from Caldwell was a member of the church I walked down to his home, and found he was a brother indeed, and well spoken of by his neighbors. Finding conditions were not favorable for gospel work in their neighborhood I returned to Meridian, where we continued our efforts to present the gospel to the people until the 3d of February, when we drove back to Boise and renewed our efforts there until the 9th inst., doing what we could to strengthen the faith of the Saints and preach the gospel to those who desire to know the truth. We left quite a number interested, and we believe that some who attended our services there will obey the gospel law in the near future.

For the past thirty days there has been much cloudy, wet weather, both rain and snow, and the wagon roads are in a deplorable condition, and we have been hindered in gospel work to a considerable extent. While at Bro. Alexander Hoffman's home at Old Mountain Home on our return trip, we had the pleasure of leading his five children into the water of baptism, and left them rejoicing in the hope of eternal life. Came to Glens Ferry to-day.

As ever in the true faith,

ever it so happens that a district begins to fall behind in tithes and offerings, it is generally due to one of two causes, either a loss numerically or spiritually. For every true, spiritual-minded Latter Day Saint is always looking about to see where it may be possible for him to do something to help move this glorious work along. But when the fires of holy zeal begin to burn low in the souls of God's people, then complainings, evil surmisings, and a never-failing amount of excuses as to why they can not be at the place of meetings; a failure to keep up family prayers only when the preacher comes, and then only to show the preacher respect, and not for any especial favor they expect to receive from Christ, and many other things too numerous to mention.

But one more I will mention and it is a disgusting feature, more especially noticed among some older Latter Day Saints: To always be ready to give encouragement when it is least needed, when some noted minister of high standing comes among them. But when some dear brother who is stationed among them, who has been called by Christ to be the shepherd of their branch, is to speak, these notable preacher-followers are especially conspicuous by their absence. I have this to say to those parties, whoever they are, that unless they repent they will be condemned before the throne of the just One "in that day," for having not given or shown due respect to the bearers of his holy priesthood, who are worthy howsoever humble they may be.

Bro. Waldsmith informs me that this district has done quite well in tithes and offerings; but that some of those who are best able to pay tithes are not complying with the law as Christ directs.

Why is it that those who claim to be Latter Day Saints will ignore his law? Can they consistently expect Christ to answer their prayers? Jesus says in Luke, sixth chapter, "Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" The day of calamity will surely come to those who fail to do. Dear brethren and sisters, let us all try to see our duty and do it.

In hope of eternal life,

J. R. SUTTON.

NEBRASKA CITY, Nebraska, February 14, 1905.

Editors Herald: On last Saturday I came to this place from Union, Cass County, where I had commenced a series of meetings, intending to hold for a week or ten days at least. But owing to the extremely cold weather together with much snow and drifting, I was compelled to close my efforts at that time. I felt sorry to have to close, for there is such a manifest desire among the people there, both of the church and of the world, to hear the gospel that I feel quite sure a good work could be done there. I shall try to return to Union sometime after the snow blizzards are past and do some work there. It will be necessary for the ministry in this section of country to stay in the cities and do all they can until such time as the weather shall be a little more favorable for work in the country.

I will remain here until Thursday, then go to South Auburn, thence to Tecumseh, Nebraska; and I desire that the brethren of the ministry shall send their reports to me the first of March, at Tecumseh, Nebraska, in care of W. F. D. Brandon.

This district contemplates holding a reunion another year, and W. M. Self, A. E. Madison, and the writer were appointed a committee to look up the matter, and make a report to the district conference to be held in May, 1905. We hope and trust that should the district decide to hold a reunion next fall, the Saints will spare no effort to make the reunion a success. I feel that a reunion in this field would be a good thing; for the more we can get the Saints together in gatherings of such kind the more spiritual they will be as a result. I have noticed that whenever and wherever we find a good, spiritual Latter Day Saint family, we feel assured that they are ready and willing to meet every reasonable demand made of them by the church. Extracts from Letters.

Bro. E. L. Kelley wrote us from Fall River, Massachusetts, February 21, 1905: "The present writing I am in Fall River, Massachusetts, where the district conference has now completed its work and adjourned. Have a pleasant stopping-place with Doctor J. Gilbert. The conference was fairly well attended and a very pleasant one, Bro. F. M. Sheehy present and presiding. One week ago attended the Philadelphia conference where they had a very pleasant gathering. Bro. George Potts and associates presided there, but Brn. F. G. Pitt and W. W. Smith were present of the missionary force. Brn. John Zimmerman of Philadelphia, and Bishop R. Bullard of Arlington, Massachusetts, were present in their respective fields looking after the finances, the latter assisted by Brn. M. H. and W. C. Fisher and Charles Lake; Bro. G. H. Smith of the missionary force and a goodly list of the eldership, consisting of Brn. Robley, Gates, Sinclair, Ames, Whipple, Pearce, Howlett, Gilbert, Bradbury, Bussiel, etc., supporting the work of the session. If I do not have all the names just right or the office of the individual, you will doubtless know the men any way and be glad to know they are warring for the work. Preached in Brooklyn on my trip, staying with Joseph Squire, Sen., and Captain Potts. I am glad I came east; I find some very important work for the Bishop's department to be done. Bro. Fred M. Smith of Presidency made a good record for the cause, and also himself as a worthy worker in the vineyard, both in the Philadelphia and Massachusetts districts the past season. If he does as well every place he goes among the Saints to labor the church can well afford to have him out. Bro. R. C. Evans' visit was also appreciated, but you know this is so common, as he has traveled so much, we do not say much about it. I speak here to-night, New Bedford Wednesday, Attleboro Thursday, Fall River for court Saturday, Providence Sunday, and Boston Sunday week, where they have opening of new church-building. My Westward trip will not begin till March 6, you will see. All moving fairly well."

Bro. U. W. Greene, wrote from Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, February 28: "My recent trip through the Ohio District enabled me to get closely in touch with the situation there. The work which for many years has been at a standstill and practically dead is changing for the better. Throughout the Hocking Valley an increasing interest is manifest both among the members and those not of the faith. The brethren are doing well and God is blessing their efforts. Our hearts thrilled with joy under the Spirit's power. I see that which leads me to believe the coming year will be productive of much good. The conference in Columbus was the best one I have attended in the mission. We received good reports in all the leading papers. Bro. A. B. Kirkendall was elected president, with Bro. S. J. Jeffers and H. E. French counselors. Columbus Branch is in excellent spiritual condition and growing. Bro. French is developing into a splendid pastor. Bro. A. B. Kirkendall has been tendered the nomination for probate judge of Vinton County. I have advised him to accept it, believing it for the best for him and the church. Pittsburg has been passing through trial for a long time. Last night Bro. J. A. Becker was unanimously chosen to preside. He has been here as a missionary for some months and is doing well."

Cato of Fairland, Indian Territory, was read by the secretary: Appeal from the refusal to grant letter of removal from the Pleasant Grove Branch. The matter was referred to the district officers, they to investigate and report to the conference. Conference requested the Pleasant Grove Branch to enroll the names of Bro. and Sr. Jacob Taylor, of Maysville, Missouri, on their branch record, and then the secretary of said branch to issue letters of removal to this brother and sister. Whereas the Bishop has consented to sell the Gospel Hill Church, and the fund obtained thereby be applied toward the building of a house of worship in Cameron, Missouri, providing that the Far West District conference approves of the sale, therefore be it resolved that we authorize and empower the president, missionary in charge, and Bishop's agent, to take this matter under advisement as in their judgment might be best with consent of Bishopric. Carried. Moved and carried that a committee of one consisting of district president be appointed to take under advisement the joining of Avenue Branch to the Far West District. A collection was taken to reimburse C. P. Faul for cost of blank ministerial reports. Adjourned to meet with Kingston Branch, June 10 and 11.

"Each person desiring the excursion fare must purchase a first-class ticket (either limited or unlimited) to the place of meeting, for which he will pay the regular fare of not less than 75 cents," and secure certificate with every ticket purchased. "If through tickets can not be procured at the starting-point, tickets should be purchased to the nearest point where such through ticket can be obtained, and there purchase through to place of meeting, and a certificate from the ticket agent at the place where each purchase is made should be requested."

Persons holding certificates showing payment of full fare to place of meeting are entitled to return tickets at one third regular first-class fare, on presentation of same to Church Secretary and Joint Agent for vising and stamping. Return tickets may be purchased as late as April 24. "No certificate will be honored if issued in connection with children's half-fare ticket, on account of clergy, charity, employees, or at less than regularly agreed first-class fare." Certificates are not transferable. "No refund of fare can be expected because of failure to obtain certificates" and to have them properly signed and stamped by Church Secretary and Joint Agent. It should be remembered that certificates dated later than April 7 are not good for return fare at reduction. Return trip is over same route as going trip, and for continuous passage.

MINISTRY EAST OF CHICAGO.

The Division Passenger Agent of the Burlington Route informs me that he thinks those of our ministry holding clergy credentials in Central and Trunk Line territory will have no trouble in securing half-fare rates over the Burlington enroute to General Conference. We can not guarantee the rate, however, but think no one would have any trouble in obtaining it on said road. The Western Passenger Association does not issue trip permits, but does issue time or annual clergy credentials to those in said territory. For rates over the Burlington, apply at Chicago office.

I Know Quit-to-Bac Will Cure. It is a God-Given Remedy

So says Bro. I. M. Dungan of Woodbine, Iowa. Writing July 3, 1904, says: "After having used tobacco for 30 years I feel that I am thoroughly cured of the habit by the use of your 'Quit-to-bac.' I commenced using 'Quit-to-bac' March 8, 1904, and used two and one half boxes, and have had no desire for the past two months, my health is better every way and I feel like a new man. I feel that I can not speak too highly of the merits of 'Quit-to-bac,' for I believe 'Quit-to-bac' to be a God-given remedy, that it will cure one of the most filthy and useless habits Satan ever invented; therefore I unqualifiedly recommend it to all addicted to the use of tobacco in any form, and will cheerfully answer inquiries from any one as to my case—how I treated myself, etc., if a stamp is inclosed. You are at liberty to use this recommendation as seems best to you. . . . I close with a heartfelt 'God bless you.'" Three boxes Quit-to-bac postpaid only $1.50 guaranteed to cure or money refunded for the asking. Address, (Br.) B. F. ORDWAY, Peoria, Illinois.

FINANCE SYSTEM NECESSARY.

It would have been remarkable, had it so happened, that in the gospel restoration there should have been no provision for a system of finance.

In all associations and organizations among men in which there is an expenditure of moneys for the benefit of the objects for which those bodies are designed and formed, some order or system, more or less simple or complex, is a necessity. The church and its work is no exception to this rule.

All churches existent in civilized communities have a system of organized effort to maintain their necessary expense account by voluntary contributions from the membership. Perhaps the only departure from the rule of voluntary giving is the payment of rent for pews, sittings as they are called; which involves the offering at auction sale certain of the more desirable pews, chairs, benches, or seats, bringing into rivalry the rich members of the congregations who from family desire or the pride of wealth bid and pay large sums for the exclusive privilege of using the seats they rent and keeping others out—of course.

This is a case of voluntary giving; for there is no compulsion exercised on the part of the vestrymen or church trustees to force men to buy pews, but it is in a measure an appeal to the selfish and innate desire for the exclusive use of things attaching to the possessor of position and riches, and really has not at bottom as a basis a love for the Master, or a desire for the advancement of the truth or the good of others.

A struggle for the best seats among Latter Day Saints would be an anomaly, and need not be looked for in any of the branches of the church; even those officers who are in charge and are expected to take chief, or prominent seats in the assemblies, do so with becoming modesty and a degree of mental protest beautiful to see.

The "ways and means" to collect funds for the necessary expenses of carrying on gospel work is a source of anxiety to many. It is clear that from the Bible much is left to inference, from the Master's securing the tribute money from the fish's mouth, to the laying at the apostles' feet the whole of one's possessions under the threat, implied from the visitation of the penalty of sudden death upon Ananias and Sapphira; all the way to Paul's injunction to every one to set aside from their store according as the Lord had blessed them for their weekly giving, all voluntary, with the risk of possible loss by reason of failure to please the Lord against the day of judgment of unchristian and ungodly things.

The state of Idaho will throw open for public entry, on March 23, seventy thousand acres of irrigable land under the Twin Falls Canals. The State will also place on sale twelve thousand acres of school lands on March 22 in the same tract. The land is sold at fifty cents an acre by the State and the perpetual water rights cost a total of twenty-five dollars an acre, the payments extending over ten years. Inquiry about these lands may be made at the office of the State Land Board at Twin Falls, Idaho.

The founding of any system of finance upon what is written in the New Testament scripture alone must result in continued conflict of opinion more or less strained as each disputant views the other's expressed convictions.

Indeed, so far as any direct guide to a correct system may be concerned, the question of finance is left by the New Testament in some such condition as the form of baptism and the formula of words to be used by the administrator; the kind of bread and wine to be used in the sacrament and the method of its administration; the blessing of children; the anointing with oil, and some other things which latter-day revelation has crystalized into practical form and usage.

It would seem then that we are justified in the belief that when the Lord saw fit to set at rest various matters respecting church affairs, doctrines, ordinances, practices, etc., he would not leave out so important a part as the finance system must have been known to him to be. This conceded it must follow that there would be some revelation by reason of which the scriptural references to finance of both the Old and the New Testament could be harmonized. We believe this has been done, and it is found in the law of tithing. The law of tithing is a regularly systemized order of voluntary giving, coming under four heads, surplus, tithing (tenth), offerings, and consecration, all based upon the will and ability of the giver, and exercised without the restraint of authoritative extortion by the church or its officers.

THE "HELPER" CALLS FOR HELP.

The Helper in its issue for December, 1904, has this at the head of its editorial column:

"We must have $500 to get our paper and tract plans in shape to battle Mormonism. This is a small amount, considering the magnitude of interests involved in the fight.

It will be remembered by those who know that this Helper paper, published at Moorhead, Kentucky, is an organ instituted for the express purpose of opposing what is known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints from its inception to all classes of believers, whether in Utah, Iowa, or elsewhere, in the interests of the so-called Christian Church (or Campbellites), and is the child of a side issue formed from among some of the delegates to and hangers-on at a convention of the official members of the said Church of Christ (or Campbellites) held at Omaha, not long ago, which convention in its official character neither ordered nor indorsed the organization of such side issue.

At the left of the name of the paper called the Helper, is its title, "A monthly official organ of the National Anti-Mormon Missionary Association of the churches of Christ."

This organization in its official roster is composed of the following named persons: James W. Darby, president, McArthur, Ohio; W. T. Hilton, treasurer, Sioux City, Iowa; R. B. Neal, general secretary and field agent, Grayson, Kentucky. Its Board of Management are J. F. Ghormley, Portland, Oregon; D. H. Bays, Collins, Iowa; Clark Braden, Grand Valley, Ontario; R. Bruce Brown, Yale, Michigan; R. B. Neal, Grayson, Kentucky; and John T. Bridwell, McArthur, Ohio.

Under the influence of Paul's admonition to "examine all things, hold fast that which is good," the brethren of the Reorganized Church are subscribing for and reading whatever books, journals, papers, pamphlets, and tracts, are written and published against the latter-day work. This anti-Mormon organ is one of them, and is one of the most radical and virulent in the catalogue. Its motto is, "Our aim: To be good and to do good." However, it does not live up to the light of its motto; for its pages are filled with falsehoods and misrepresentations of the most dangerous sort. It could not be otherwise with such men in its list of managers and contributors, and under its anti-Mormon organization.

The truth has outlasted several things of the sort, and we suppose there is no reason for fear that our work must go under from such an assailant. We still trust in the statement of one able to make good: "Whosoever shall fall upon that stone shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder."—Jesus, Luke 20: 18.

A LETTER.

We give space to the following letter which we take from the Deseret Evening News, for March 2, 1905, of course not vouching for its correctness, having no way of verifying the statements. The writer has failed to remember correctly some of the names he gives. "Jack" Davis, we believe should be "Jake" Davis, as Jacob Cunningham Davis was one of the most prominent anti-Mormon agitators, and was of the number ostensibly tried for complicity in the murder of the Prophet and his brother and acquitted. William A. Smith may have sent the paper to the attacking company by the man on the white horse, but the name of the captain of the Carthage company left in charge by Governor Thomas Ford was R. F. Smith. We knew the A. (Alexander) Simpson, who was a resident of Carthage for many years.

Mr. Editor: As your paper has quite a circulation in this congressional district, I hope you will find room in your paper for these lines. My reasons for writing it is to let citizens of this and the adjoining counties know who they are voting for when they are voting for Tom Sharp, of Warsaw. I have been tending court here for several days past, and I find that there are some that calculate to cast their votes for Sharp. I will now give my reasons for voting against Sharp.

I came from Iowa to Warsaw, Illinois, three weeks before the murder of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. I was a young man not over twenty years old, and had not much experience in life. Sharp and some others persuaded me to call my name Boggs, a son of Governor Boggs, of Missouri. I agreed to do so, and then Sharp circulated all kinds of mean tales about the Mormons. He often said in my presence that there was a young man that Jo Smith had his father shot, which had a great influence to raise the prejudices the people against the 'Mormons.' He also persuaded me to join the company that was gathering there to meet the Governor's troops at Carthage, which I did.

The time came when we had to march to Carthage. We marched about six or eight miles, and met a man with orders from the Governor that we were not wanted, and to return to our homes. This word enraged Captain Sharp, as he was called, very much. He said all might go home that wanted to, but he would go to Carthage if he had to go alone. He said Smith ought to be killed, and if he could raise men it should be done before night; he was in jail and now was the time. He then asked how many were in the company that would go with him to Carthage to commit this disgraceful deed. Clark Burrs, Snar Redman, and Hoakes Middleton were the first to join Sharp. He then asked if the rest were all cowards. At that about fifty or sixty went over to him, and I went with the crowd. Jack Davis said he was no coward, but he would not go in such a company in a thing of that kind. He and several others went back. We then organized and moved for Carthage, and waited for Williams to return, as he had gone on to see if there were any there who would oppose us.

When we got to the timber a man came to us on a large white horse. He brought with him a note to Sharp, stating that he would not meet with any opposition. This paper was signed by William A. Smith, the man that had charge of the company which the Governor had left at Carthage to protect the Smiths till the day of their trial. Sharp sent this man back to know if the guard at the jail would oppose him. The Captain of the guard sent him a note, stating that their guns were all loaded with blank cartridges, and to fear no danger. This paper was signed F. Worrill.

We then marched to the jail, overran the guard, rushed in the jail. The door of the room was closed by the Smiths so hard that we could not enter. One of our men shot through the door and a man fell back to the floor; I suppose dead, as he never made any attempt to rise. The door flew open; I saw two men in the room. We shot at them several times. At length one of them fell on the floor. The other jumped out of the window. I ran down the stairs to see where he was: When I got to him, he was trying to get up. He appeared stunned by the fall. I struck him on the face and said, Old Jo, damn you, where are you now? I then set him up against the well-curb and went away from him. Hoke and some other persons shot him. Whether it was Sharp or not I never could exactly learn, but I presume it was, as his gun was empty. We then left the jail. When we got a few rods from the jail, Sharp ordered all the guns loaded that were empty, and he loaded his.

I never can forget the frightened family that was in the jail. To think a set of men would go in the house where there were two women and several little helpless children, and commit the willful murder. It is too bad to think of it, and I wish I could never think of it. Clark said before we got to the jail he wished he could let the jailer know what they were going to do. Sharp said they were Jack-Mormons, and it made no difference. I was led in this mean act by Sharp and others at Warsaw. I can only wish they had given me good advice, in place of that they gave, as it has caused me to be an unhappy man ever since, when I hear it mentioned.

When I went to Smith, after he fell out of the window, I dropped a pewter file out of my hand and left it there. It belonged to a man by the name of Phelps, as I understand by some of our gang, though he was not one of our gang. While we were in the timber the man on the white horse brought a letter to Sharp, how to manage when he came to the jail, and stated that there were four men in the jail and to spare none of them, that they were all four Mormons. This letter was signed A. Simpson. I could give the names of several more, but I will not do it at present.

Yours truly, I will give my true name,

FRANK J. CANNON DISFELLOWSHIPED BY THE UTAH CHURCH.

The following appeared in the Chicago Tribune for March 7, and if true indicates that there is likely to be trouble in the dominant church in Utah. For, if the charges made by Mr. Frank J. Cannon are true, the proof should be presented and known to the body at large.

If Mr. Cannon was one of those of the younger element in the Utah church who in good faith assured the Government and the public of the United States that the church had abandoned the practice of plural marriage, he has the right to insist that the pledge given should be kept in good faith, and should persist against the continuing conditions which must inevitably result in bringing the church more and more into disrepute, and invite disaster. The younger element, upon whom the maintenance of the honorable and amicable relations of the state of Utah to the family of States must fall, ought to stand by Mr. Cannon if his statements are correct. If they are true he can not afford to retract, or refuse to make good by sufficient proof. Honorable men in and out of Utah have a right to expect this.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, March 6.—[Special].—Because he wrote two editorials for the Salt Lake Tribune attacking President Joseph F. Smith of the Mormon church Frank J. Cannon has just been "disfellowshipped" or excommunicated by that body. The editorials accused Smith of encouraging polygamy and serving Mammon rather than God. Charges affecting the handling of the tithing fund also were made.

Cannon was conspicuous as a bolter from the St. Louis Republican convention of 1896 on account of the silver issue and helped frame the Democratic national platform last year. He is the son of the late George Q. Cannon, the famed Mormon leader, and until recently was editor of the Salt Lake Tribune.

In addition to being excommunicated, it is understood great pressure has been put on the executors of the will of George Q. Cannon to induce them to cut off the inheritance of the son according to the terms of the will, on the ground he has become an apostate.

The first editorial appeared on January 22 and was entitled "An analysis of the church." The second appeared on February 1 under the heading, "An address to the earthly king of the kingdom of God."

In the latter Cannon makes a series of charges. He accuses President Smith of trying to build up his personal power by the sacrifice of the interest of the church. He charges violation of agreements with the United States Government and accuses the president of "taking the daughters of his subjects and bestowing them upon his favorites." He also alleges President Smith has "taken property which belonged to the widow and to the orphan and has absorbed it into the possession of the crown," and has oppressed poor members of the church to enrich himself.

The first editorial charges President Smith with building up an alien monarchy, hostile to the principles of the American Government.

Formal charges against Cannon were filed by Elder William G. Rackham of the Fifth Ward in Ogden, where Mr. Cannon's residence is. The two editorials are offered in substantiation of the charges of unchristian conduct and apostasy. A hearing was held on February 24 in the vestry of the Fifth Ward meeting-house in Ogden, before the ward bishopric.

Cannon filed a comprehensive written answer, in which he admitted writing the editorials and declined to retract them. He declared the course of President Smith, if continued, would be sure to work great hardship on the Mormon people, and he maintained that all his charges against Smith are true.

On his examination Cannon said:

"I do not think Joseph F. Smith is a prophet of God; I think his idol is Mammon."

He also declared his belief that Smith is leading the Mormon people falsely.

A unanimous decision against Cannon was rendered.

Mr. Cannon declines to discuss the matter, but a friend speaking for him, said he was one of the men who made the pledge on behalf of the church that the organization would abandon polygamy and cease to interfere in politics. He felt the present leaders of the church have been, and are, violating that pledge, and that he believes it was his duty to protest against their course.

The action of church authorities in "disfellowshipping" him, said the friend, is taken as an indication that free speech is to be denied a member of the Mormon church. Mr. Cannon, he declared, will continue his course in opposition to the acts of the authorities, which he believes are against the best interests of the Mormon people in general and in violation of the good faith of the church.

It is reported other prominent Mormons may follow Cannon's example and revolt.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Will Judas be permitted to sit upon one of the twelve thrones to assist in judging the twelve tribes of Israel, or will Matthias take his place?

From what we gather as stated in the history of the choosing of the twelve disciples, and the betrayal of Jesus by Judas, we must conclude that whatever may have been the character of Judas before and at the time he was chosen with the others, or what the motive actuating him at the time he took the money from the priests and by a kiss indicated to those who sought to arrest him who Jesus was, the fact remains that the betrayal was an act of treachery and was a disastrous end to the trial Judas was subjected to, and completed his probation against himself putting him within the meaning of the twentieth verse of Acts 1: "And his bishopric let another take." Judas could not by his self-destruction atone for his act, nor reinstate himself in his office and calling as an apostle.

We believe that with the choosing of Matthias as the result of submitting the choice between Joseph and Matthias to the direction of the Lord, the office of apostle and the right to all that appertained to it in this world and the world to come—"here and hereafter"—passed to Matthias; and as this would involve sharing in the honors to be conferred upon the twelve as a body including the "sitting on twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel" it will be Matthias and not Judas who would occupy the seat Judas would have been entitled to had there been no slip upon his part while acting in the office.

What the judgment may be which finally will be accorded to Judas as a person irrespective of the office he held and which he so ignominiously relinquished, remains in the mind of the Great Judge. Jesus evidently forgave Peter his temporary departure from his integrity, but we have nothing on which to predicate the surmise that his forgiveness was extended to Judas. We are inclined to the thought that the sin of Judas was one which lay in the province of the Father at the time and Jesus left him to his fate. In this connection it is our belief that the Lord will give to every man who may be called into place in the church a fair and open opportunity to approve himself; if he does this all the promises will be fulfilled to him, including power, honor, and glory, with eternal life; if he fails to do it, he will forfeit the power, honor, and glory, though it may be in the design and mercy of God to grant some sort of salvation from the second death in a condition tolerable, if not a contented and happy one. Of this we can not and do not say as it still remains in the direction and control of God.

"Then gently scan your brother man,
Still gentler sister woman;
And if you know they're going wrong
To step aside is human.
As to the balance, let's be mute,
We never can adjust it;
Of what is done we may compute,
But know not what's resisted."
—Burns.

When two members are guilty of like offences, say apostasy, is it proper to try them both at once on one charge, and when the court of elders finds them guilty, to disfellowship them both by one action?

No, each offender should be tried separately; each one may so demand; final action should also be taken separately. This is according to common usage.

In case of apostasy from the church where the party unites with another, making it the branch versus the individual, has either the branch or branch president under the law, the right to appoint the court of elders to try the apostate?

In such a case the branch may appoint, or in case the emergency is urgent the president of the branch may appoint. In such a case neither the branch nor its president is such a party in interest as is named in chapter 13, section 150, as disqualified; they do but represent the church as officers, and if they may not appoint such a court, neither could the church, or any other officer for it. If a branch, or its president, is in doubt about the right to so appoint, or there is serious controversy over it, the branch may request the president of the district to appoint.

A PLEA FOR CONSISTENCY.

Speaking for myself and for such others of our faith as I have come in close contact with, there is much of a discouraging nature for the younger generation of God's people.

There is a great deal of outside opposition to the work; not only open antagonism, but cold-chilled indifference, which naturally is sad to consider. That of itself, however, is not sufficient to dampen one's ardor, but, if all internal affairs were sound, would rather tend to invite the employment of all one's energies toward improving the external sentiment.

This is the discouraging thing: That among the chosen people, especially in higher offices, there is no lack of individuality. That element of human character is greatly to be desired in a commercial career, as it qualifies the possessor many times to make greater progress than his fellows who possess only mediocre ability. In commercial life every man is for himself only. In spiritual matters, however, where ministers arise and claim to be led (as they should be) by the Holy Spirit in their teaching, too much individuality means too little spirituality; too much man results in too little God. I have heard ministers refer to debates in which they have engaged or sermons they have delivered, in the sense that they were personally responsible for and to be congratulated upon the great victory or forcible presentation. I have never been impressed with that idea. I like to think good sermons are spoken with the spirit of inspiration. If they are not, I do not care to hear them, for I am capable of coming to my own conclusions with respect to general matters, and my ideas are as likely to be correct as those evolved in the mind of any one else uninspired.

Men are men. All of them are human. The clergy as well as the laity err. They are all subject to the same temptations and are solicitors of the same power. However, to the degree that a man severs all ties that connect him with temporal labors, and consecrates his services to his Creator, to that degree is he entitled to greater guidance, protection, aid, and counsel from on high. Those who are not called to spiritual work and who are obliged to labor daily, look to those who walk in greener fields for guidance, counsel, and aid, and they should obtain it.

There is nothing vague about intelligent service of the Lord, as I look at it. The Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants are full of assurances and promises, consequent upon certain labor performed. If we expect the reward without laboring for it, we are foolish. If we finish part of a task and then ask for full compensation, we are unreasonable.

I am trying to convey the idea that our spiritual condition is in direct proportion to our individual desires and efforts. I believe it is not possible for a man to live in harmony with law without receiving full benefit therefrom. The opposite must therefore be true.

I have an office associate who is a very consistent Christian, so far as a certain denomination is concerned. He is so consistent that his efforts, if applied along true gospel lines, would certainly assure him great blessings. I desired to interest him in our beliefs but found it necessary to make some alterations in my own personal character before I could with good conscience approach him on the subject.

A lay member of our faith can not honestly hope to convince an outsider of the power of this gospel unless his own character is far enough above that of the stranger to cause him to realize that his claims are well grounded. In like manner, I believe the active ministers of the faith can not honestly hope to work a remarkable change in the personal life of individual Saints unless the ministry are themselves the living exemplification of the truths they endeavor to present.

The policy of "Do not do as I do, but do as I say" is susceptible of logical demolition. I would feel condemned if I essayed to tell others to avoid the use of tobacco, if I used it myself; the same with regard to strong drinks or hot ones; and also concerning the keeping of other and greater commandments which I might be breaking. If I were careless in my communication with God through prayer I should feel very guilty in urging unceasing prayer upon my brethren, and if I studied but little, would my conscience be clear in instructing others that they must be diligent in their study of the word?

Ours is in distinct contrast to the modern easy-going creeds of the world; therefore we should have no easy-going ministers, who are inclined to flatter but loath to admonish and instruct. We need instruction and advice from those whom we can see have sufficient faith in what they teach to apply the same remedy to themselves.

We speak of our example with regard to its effect upon those outside the fold. What about its effect upon our brothers and sisters? If they think certain elders can enjoy the Spirit and at the same time be careless, no amount of talking will destroy that impression, and they will have less respect for the officer or less regard for their own religious duties. Actions have a louder voice than words.

Again, what is the effect, in a branch large or small, of dissensions among the priesthood who may be members of that branch? Suppose different officers are abnormally developed along certain different lines and each tries to impress the laity that his views and his hobby should be accepted as most essential; what would likely be the result? What fact would be most indelibly impressed upon the membership? Would all feel gratified at such evidences of discord and thank the Lord that these men had such strong minds that they could not look upon the same thing in the same way? Or, would every one understand such disruptions to be an evidence of humility and of a desire to serve God to the sinking of self which every consistent Latter Day Saint possesses?

In every branch with which I have been connected, there have been members, in and out of office, who were partial to this officer or that officer on account of certain actions or characteristics which appealed or did not appeal to them. Had the officers acted alike there would have been no occasion for prejudice.

It does not take a wise man to create contention, but if a man is wise he can often prevent it. Some notoriety can, no doubt, be acquired, by getting up in meeting and averring "I'm agin it, whatever it is," and prominent men have often been misled, by the coterie that gathered around them, into the belief that they had accomplished some great good by coming out "courageously" to the front and making it known as widely as possible that they and the "obstinate" brother were unable to bring themselves into such a state of subjection that they could go together in impartial prayer to God for guidance or revelation.

Sinking of self is a necessity, a crying need, with some of us. It is a hard condition to attain. But hard though it be, if a man is a true servant of God he will attain it, and the sooner the better it will be for all concerned.

The Saints are, or should be, of a receptive mind, eager to be taught; they admire certain men for manly attributes they seem to possess, and they will sometimes follow such men into deep water. Brigham Young's personality evidently appealed strongly to numerous people, and yet his strength of mind and executive ability did not signify that he had divine guidance.

We want no Brighams in the Reorganized Church—whether their hobby be polygamy or anything else calculated to cause division in the ranks. We want no Reorganized-Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ. We want no personal opinions of men with strong minds but weak judgments. We do want God's counsels and commands to be made known to us through mediums that do not contaminate it.

All this comes under the heading of "Consistency." If every member of our church were consistent there would be no way of hindering the latter-day work, and it would increase in numbers very rapidly. A good way to bring about this condition is to have a consistent ministry: a humble, prayerful, studious, meek, Christlike corps of men who are not strongly imbued with the idea that "wisdom will die with them."

Is this condition impossible for all? I realize and am very thankful indeed that many of the priesthood are living conscientious lives and are rejoicing in the fruits; many of the members are doing the same thing; but these results are open to all, and before all the members can enter into enjoyment of them, all the priesthood must.

If any elder, or greater or lesser officer, thinks he can not live a consistent Christian life, living up to all the light we have, keeping all the laws and preaching by inspiration, then it would seem incumbent upon him to resign his office and become one of the laity until he can get himself into shape, because it is he and not the Lord that is at fault, and he can not afford to run the risk of presenting man's ideas and of setting an undesirable example to those under his charge.

It is a laudable ambition to live as close as possible to the principles of the church of Christ of nineteen hundred years ago; in the Doctrine and Covenants, however, a warning is given to beware of contentions, such as existed among the priesthood of the church then. Contentions have a demoralizing effect upon all directly or indirectly concerned, and for that reason they should be avoided.

In a great corporation, when handling matters of importance, differences of opinion between the higher officers never are allowed to appear. If they are not agreed on certain policies they get together and settle the matter out of court, and do not advertise down the line the fact that there is a discord. They understand good discipline can not be maintained where there is clashing between officers. They do not work each man for himself, but all together for the best interests of the concern. We who claim higher motives should certainly be willing to do as much!

It is well to bear in mind that two men, on diametrically opposite sides of a controversy, can not both be guided by the same spirit. If one has the Spirit of God the second must be led by another power, or else the Spirit is divided against itself.

Most arguments are conducted from the standpoint that there are but two sides to any question; but, as one has aptly said, "some questions are hexagonal." If you think you must exercise your "right" to disagree with another, do not do it, but look for a basis of common understanding and agree with your brother in the way, and do not, as has so often been done, indulge in disgraceful and demoralizing conflict, whether in church papers or outside, which causes sorrow in heaven and happiness in hell.

So long as we trust in God for the proper guidance of our church in its affairs, just that long will he be pleased to guide it, but when we find fault with the administration and try to take matters into our own weak hands for adjustment, then he is justified in withdrawing for a season to allow us a fair opportunity to demonstrate our superior mentality.

One of the saddest things that those of our peculiar belief are sometimes called upon to witness is that of strong-minded men of our own faith taking the stand for the purpose of destroying the standing of other men of vigorous brain. It is sad for us especially, because we have so much to say about other denominations quarreling and contending within themselves. We surely can not throw very large stones if our part of the house is built of glass.

Unity of character; unity of understanding; unity of action. These we should all strive for, and striving does not mean to forget about it when the opportunity arrives to perform our part.

We, better than any other people, understand what is required of men; we have been enlightened and are being enlightened constantly as to what we should do; saints in olden and present times have suffered and perished for the faith we assume, and yet many of us have fallen into that state of deep sleep that is so deadly, and when the golden chariot of progress wakes us we roll rocks in its path.

Let each one of us, Saints, pray earnestly and as we never have done before, for the upbuilding of our precious and beautiful faith; let us not allow petty misunderstandings to destroy our work; let no man come between us and our hope of salvation.

Let us pray for those upon whom rests the responsibility for the spreading of the gospel, and having prayed, let us hold up their hands in times of trouble and in times of peace, that the adversary, working in cunning ways, may not hinder them.

Let us also pray for the active ministry in all its departments, that it may be actuated only by high motives and influenced only by the divine Spirit; that it may be enlightened through the study of the Scriptures and by prayer, so it will be a means of enlightenment for all its charges.

It does not matter what our intentions may be, if our actions and speech cause strife we have been unwise. There must be at least two parties to any dispute, and it is our individual duty to know that we, and not the other party, are influenced by a power from a source higher than the top of our heads—be they bald or otherwise.

Let each one of us be a factor for good in the Reorganized work, and not "a cipher with the rim rubbed off." We can not be a factor for good without being of some use to our God, and we are of no use to him if we work contrary to his will. Work is not always beneficial—it must be along proper lines. It is not only intelligent work that is required, but intelligence that is not ashamed to yield to spiritual direction.

Let us endeavor to be consistent. There are very few of us who can not improve in this direction. We make great claims, when conversing with outsiders, of the powers of our faith, and yet comparatively few of us enjoy those powers, simply because we will not;

it requires too much sacrifice or would disarrange our personal habits that are dearer to us than spiritual blessings!

I look for the time to come when we will all be of one mind concerning these things, and if that condition materializes before outside pressure and persecution force us to sit up and take notice, then so much more to our credit. Any one can yield under severe pressure. What is our determination?

GOD'S JUDGMENTS.

There seems to be a tendency at the present time to look upon God only as a God of love and mercy and fail to recognize that he is a God of justice as well. It is true God's "mercy is great," "for thy mercy is great above the heavens," "the earth, O Lord, is full of thy mercy," and "where the Lord is there is mercy." "He delighteth in mercy," and is the "Father of mercies"; yet it is the "merciful" that "shall obtain mercy," while "he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath showed no mercy." Where people prove themselves worthy of his mercy they shall surely find mercy; but when men are brought back into the presence of God by the resurrection, "to be judged according to their works; according to the law and justice," they will receive just what they are worthy of and no more. "For behold, justice exerciseth all his demands, and also mercy claimeth all which is her own; and thus, none but the truly penitent are saved. What, do ye suppose that mercy can rob justice? I say unto you, nay; not one whit. If so, God would cease to be God."—Alma 19: 12, 13.

Alma's son, Corianton, could not understand the "justice of God, in the punishment of the sinner." He was like some seem to be to-day in this matter, for Alma said to him, "For ye do try to suppose that it is injustice that the sinner should be consigned to a state of misery."—Verse 10. Alma could not think his son actually thought so; he only tried to think so. So it is, I think, to-day with people who try so hard to eliminate from the gospel story the idea of future punishment, while it is so plainly and frequently taught in the scriptures. Alma undertook to teach his son the necessity of punishment for the disobedient, by rehearsing the account of Adam's transgression, and sin coming into the world by disobedience of God's commandment, and how it became necessary for God to shut Adam out from the tree of life, lest he should partake of its fruit and live for ever in his sin. And as no unclean thing could abide in God's presence, he had to be banished from his presence and a time of probation fixed in which man could repent of his disobedience.

For, except it were for these conditions, mercy could not take effect except it should destroy the work of justice. Now the work of justice could not be destroyed: if so God would cease to be God. And thus we see that all mankind were fallen, and they were in the grasp of justice; yea, the justice of God, which consigned them for ever to be cut off from his presence. And now the plan of mercy could not be brought about, except an atonement should be made; therefore God himself atoneth for the sins of the world, to bring about the plan of mercy, to appease the demands of justice, that God might be a perfect, just God, and a merciful God also. Now repentance could not come unto men, except there were a punishment, which also was as eternal as the life of the soul should be, affixed opposite to the plan of happiness, which was as eternal also as the life of the soul. Now, how could a man repent, except he should sin? How could he sin, if there was no law? How could there be a law, save there was a punishment? Now there was a punishment affixed, and a just law given, which brought remorse of conscience unto man. Now if there was no law given, if a man murdered he should die, would he be afraid he should die if he should murder? And also, if there was no law given against sin, men would not be afraid to sin. And if there was no law given if men sinned, what could justice do, or mercy either: for they would have no claim upon the creature. But there is a law given and a punishment affixed, and repentance granted; which repentance mercy claimeth: otherwise, justice claimeth the creature, and executeth the law, and the law inflicteth the punishment; if not so, the works of justice would be destroyed, and God would cease to be God.—Verses 11 and 12.

I do not see how I can make the matter any plainer than Alma makes it. Just so surely as there is a God, he has given laws to govern his creature, man. And, as Alma argues, if there were no punishment there would be no law. This is true in all things. A law on our statute-books would be useless if there were no punishment. There could be no love if there were no hatred. If the planetary system failed to follow the laws God has given, chaos would ensue.

Alma tells us that God's punishment is "as eternal as the life of the soul," and is "affixed opposite to the plan of happiness, which was as eternal also as the life of the soul." Just as surely as we may attain to eternal happiness by obedience to God's law (which implies that we must live up to all of his laws), just so surely will our punishment be eternal, if we fail to repent and secure a remission of our sins.

This statement is not like some in the Bible that have been misconstrued so as to limit the duration of punishment; but just as long as the soul shall exist, so may its punishment or happiness be. Some have, seemingly at least, strained every passage in Holy Writ to prove that punishment will some day be all done away, that death and hell will be destroyed, "Cast into the lake of fire." And they argue there is no lake of fire, so, of course, there could be no more a place of punishment; and then they quote the statement: "And there shall be no more death."—Revelation 21:4. As death not only relates to that of the body, but also to the condition of being separated from God, if we would take this quotation in the fullest sense and apply it to every soul, we might as well include the Devil too, for he was banished from the presence of God. Then we surely would have what some term "a hell redemption doctrine." But I see no grounds for it. The quotation above referred to only relates to the "new heaven and a new earth." Nothing said about the "lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death."

The first death, both physical and spiritual, is brought to an end when the new earth comes. The physical death is brought to an end by the resurrection of all, both good and bad; and "death and hell" have "delivered up the dead which were in them." (Revelation 20:13.) So all come back to the presence of God. After the judgment the incorrigible are returned to the "lake" that is called the "second death."

Therefore God gave unto them commandments, after having made known unto them the plan of redemption, that they should not do evil, the penalty thereof being a second death, which was an everlasting death as to things pertaining unto righteousness; for on such the plan of redemption could have no power, for the works of justice could not be destroyed, according to the supreme goodness of God.—Alma 9:5.

Everlasting, Webster defines: "Lasting or enduring for ever, immortal. 2. Continuing indefinitely." Then the "everlasting death as to things pertaining unto righteousness," or "second death," above referred to, was, as before stated, "as eternal as the life of the soul," and "on such the plan of redemption" can "have no power." There can be no hopes then of their salvation.

Helaman says that it was expedient that Christ should die to bring about the resurrection of all.

That thereby men may be brought into the presence of the Lord; yea, behold this death bringeth to pass the resurrection, and redeemeth all mankind from the first death; that spiritual death for all mankind, by the fall of Adam, being cut off from the presence of the Lord, or considered as dead, both as to things temporal and to things spiritual. . . . But whosoever repenteth not, is hewn down and cast into the fire, and there cometh upon them again a spiritual death, yea, a second death, for they are cut off again as to things pertaining to righteousness.—Helaman 5:6.

Christ's atonement only offers redemption from the "first death," temporal and spiritual, and brings us back into God's presence; but if we die the second death we are cut off from the efficacy of that atonement, cut off from any promise of redemption; and, as Paul says, "If we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin."—Hebrews 10:26. Christ's blood can no longer reach us. These writers agree.

The phrase, "death and hell" is defined by Nephi thus:

This death of which I have spoken, which is the temporal, shall deliver up its dead: which death is the grave. And this death of which I have spoken, which is the spiritual death, shall deliver up its dead; which spiritual death is hell; wherefore, death and hell must deliver up their dead.—2 Nephi 6:4.

According to this, the second death, being spiritual, would also be termed hell. So we have not gotten rid of hell after all. The revisers of the Bible eliminated hell from the Bible and used hades instead, and some critic remarked that they had "knocked hell out of the Bible." Some would like to do the same with the whole gospel story; but it is like the fellow's ghost that would not "down." It must give up its dead, as the Revelator said: "Death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them."—Revelation 20: 13. Yet, after the judgment, those who come out of death and hell that are not worthy of any glory, "they who remain [after those worthy of glory are selected out] shall also be quickened [resurrected]; nevertheless, they shall return again to their own place [hell] to enjoy that which they are willing to receive, because they were not willing to enjoy that which they might have received." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 6.)

It is not the conditions or places, then, designated "death and hell," that are "cast into the lake of fire," which "is the second death," but the inmates. Hell, lake of fire, pit, and prison are synonymous, when used in relation to future punishment. Hades is only the Greek word for hell, untranslated.

We are asked, "Is hell an actual lake of fire?" Our answer is, that "the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made." (Romans 1: 20.) Christ, himself, in speaking of heavenly things, could only compare them to natural things: so he and his apostles and prophets in speaking of God's punishments could only compare them to earthly things. So we find them using the various terms already noted. When Christ said, "Whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire [fire of Gehenna]" (Matthew 5: 22), he did not mean that they were in danger of being thrown into the "valley of Hinnom, south of Jerusalem," where a constant fire was kept burning to consume the carcasses of animals, and dead bodies of malefactors; yet, that was what the word Gehenna meant, literally. The spiritual punishment referred to was represented by that which in nature most nearly represented it. James says, "The tongue is a fire, . . . and it is set on fire of hell."—James 3: 6. He could not describe the bad influence of an unruly tongue in better language; yet, it was not literal fire. So Mormon in describing the torments of "the damned souls in hell," says:

Behold, when ye shall be brought to see your nakedness before God, and also the glory of God, and the holiness of Jesus Christ, it will kindle a flame of unquenchable fire upon you. O then ye unbelieving, turn ye unto the Lord; cry mightily unto the Father in the name of Jesus that perhaps ye may be found spotless, pure, fair, and white, having been cleansed by the blood of the Lamb, at that great and last day.—Mormon 4: 5.

Alma says, in speaking of the resurrection:
And we shall be brought to stand before God, knowing even as we know now, and have a bright recollection of all our guilt.—Alma 8: 10.

Again, Mosiah said:

Therefore, if that man repenteth not, and remaineth and dieth an enemy to God, the demands of divine justice doth awaken his immortal soul to a lively sense of his own guilt, which doth cause him to shrink from the presence of the Lord, and doth fill his breast with guilt, and pain, and anguish, which is like an unquenchable fire, whose flames ascendeth up for ever and ever. And now I say, that mercy hath no claim on that man; therefore, his final doom is to endure a never-ending torment.—Mosiah 1: 11. And if they be evil, they are consigned to an awful view of their own guilt and abominations, which doth cause them to shrink from the presence of the Lord, into a state of misery and endless torment, from whence they can no more return.—Verse 16.

This is sufficient to show what God's judgment will be in the future state of those who die in rebellion to God's laws.

Some have felt the powers of that second death in this life. Jude speaks of them thus: "Trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots; raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever."—Jude 12, 13. The pains and agony of the second death were surely what Jesus suffered, when "being in an agony he prayed more earnestly: and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground."—Luke 22: 44. Alma had a foretaste of that awful condition, when brought to a knowledge of his real standing before God, after being in rebellion against God and the church for some time. He describes it thus:

Yea, I did remember all my sins and iniquities, for which I was tormented with the pains of hell; yea, I saw that I had rebelled against my God, and that I had not kept his holy commandment; yea, and that I had murdered many of his children, or rather led them away unto destruction; yea, and in fine, so great had been my iniquities, that the very thought of coming into the presence of God, did rack my soul with inexpressible horror. O, thought I, that I could be banished and become extinct both soul and body, that I might not be brought to stand in the presence of God, to be judged of my deeds. And now, for three days and three nights was I racked, even with the pains of a damned soul.—Alma 17: 2.

After Alma's terrors, described above, he finally remembered the promise of a Savior to take away the sin of the world, and he relates:

Now as my mind caught hold upon this thought, I cried within my heart, O Jesus, thou Son of God, have mercy on me, who art in the gall of bitterness, and art encircled about by the everlasting chains of death. And now behold, when I thought this, I could remember my pains no more; yea, I was harrowed up by the memory of my sins no more. And O, what joy, and what marvelous light I did behold; yea, my soul was filled with joy as exceeding as was my pain.—Verse 3.

He first tasted God's justice, and then after due repentance and calling on God in the name of the Christ, he was permitted to taste of his mercy.

Those whom the Revelator speaks of that "hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the presence of the Lamb," (Revelation 6: 15, 18,) must have been brought to a bright recollection of all their guilt, and their conscience must have kindled a flame of unquenchable fire upon them.

Now let us, in the words of Alma, "deny the justice of God no more, do not endeavor to excuse yourself in the least point, because of your sins, by denying the justice of God, but do you let the justice of God, and his mercy, and his long suffering, have full sway in your heart; but let it bring you down in the dust in humility." (Alma 19: 13.)

Sometimes we hear sermons on the subject of God's eternal judgment, in which the speakers give nearly their entire attention to God's eternal mercy, and offer more mercy to the sinner than God ever promised, and almost entirely ignore his judgment. Sometimes they mention the great gulf that was fixed between the rich man and Lazarus, but before they get through they have Christ bridge the gulf; and, in the minds of the people, they leave the bridge there, so the rich man and all other sinners can leave there and slake their thirst when they please. Many, I believe, after hearing such sermons, conclude that the minister has represented God correctly; and, as Nephi said:

There shall also be many which shall say, Eat, drink, and be merry; nevertheless, fear God, he will justify in committing a little sin; yea, lie a little, take the advantage of one because of his words, dig a pit for thy neighbor; there is no harm in this. And do all these things, for to-morrow we die, and if it so be that we are guilty, God will beat us with a few stripes, and at last we shall be saved in the kingdom of God.—2 Nephi 12: 1.

Mormon also speaks of them and says:

There shall be murders and robbing, and lying, and deceiving, and whoredoms, and all manner of abominations, when there shall be many who will say, Do this, or do that, and it mattereth not, for the Lord will uphold such at the last day. But woe unto such, for they are in the gall of bitterness, and the bonds of iniquity.—Mormon 4: 3.

Now for the benefit of those who have believed this "false, and vain, and foolish doctrine," as Nephi calls it, that God will "justify committing a little sin," and that we can go on through life sinning at pleasure, and at the most, "God will beat us with few stripes, and at last we shall be saved in the kingdom of God;" let me say you are only deceiving yourselves. God will not tolerate sin or a continual disregard to his laws. We can not make amends in the next world wherein we knew what our duty was in this life and failed to do it. "Now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation."—2 Corinthians 6: 2. We must do our work, "While it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work."—John 9: 4. If we want to be saved in the kingdom of God, receive celestial glory, we must be worthy of it here. We shall receive that glory by virtue of our "works done in the body," not out of it.

Amulek in speaking to those who disregarded the gospel in his day, after they had received a full knowledge of it said, "I know that these things were taught unto you, bountifully; before your dissension from among us," giving them to understand that the only opportunity they would have for repentance was in this life. He said, like Paul:

Behold, now is the time, and the day of your salvation; and therefore, if ye will repent and harden not your hearts, immediately shall the great plan of redemption be brought about unto you [they had previously obeyed the gospel]. For behold, this life is the time for men to prepare to meet God: yea, behold, the day of this life is the day for men to perform their labors, . . . therefore I beseech of you, that ye do not procrastinate the day of your repentance until the end; for after this day of life, which is given us to prepare for eternity, behold, if we do not improve our time while in this life, then cometh the night of darkness, wherein there can be no labor performed. Ye can not say when ye are brought to that awful crisis, that I will repent, that I will return to my God.—Alma 16: 30.

Please read the context of all these quotations. They perhaps will make the matter plainer than I can. Let us see to it that we do not "put off till to-morrow what we can do to-day," for we "know not what a day may bring forth" but let us be "also ready."

The reader may have noticed in the quotations used, that God required that man "should do no evil, the penalty thereof being a second death," and "if we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins." And God said through Mosiah:

When the knowledge of a Savior shall spread throughout every nation, kindred, tongue, and people. And behold, when that time cometh, none shall be found blameless before God, except it be little children, . . . they shall be judged, every man according to his works, whether they be good or whether they be evil; and if they be evil, they are consigned to an awful view of their own guilt and abominations.—Mosiah 15: 16.

Then if we do evil, or sin willfully after we receive a knowledge of the truth, or after a knowledge of a Savior shall have spread through every nation, we will be liable to be cast into the lake: and if our sin is willful, there will be "no more sacrifice for sin." Now if our preaching leads any to decide and act as above mentioned, how shall we stand before the great Judge? When they learn from that unchangeable God, of justice as well as mercy, that he will lay "judgment . . . to the line," will they not rise up against us and charge us with their downfall? It is a serious matter. But, says one, "We better err on the side of mercy than justice." True, but is it mercy to misrepresent God's justice? We better err on the safe side, and if God's mercy should prove greater than we represented it, the sinner will lose nothing or we either. If he does fear and tremble a little more on account of our preaching, he will possibly draw a little nearer to God, which will serve him better.

I offer this as a word of caution, as, in my mind, there has long been need of such caution. I fear much harm has been done in the past by such carelessness; else, why so many who believe our work and do not accept it? In bonds of truth,

THE VALUE OF MOTHERS' ASSOCIATIONS TO THE NATION.

The thought that Mothers' Associations may be of value to the nation is, as a rule, farthest from the mind of the ordinary individual. The nation is something grand and glorious; it has power and prowess; it can contract big debts, build battleships, declare war and appropriate millions of dollars for that purpose. What connection can there be between the great and glorious nation and a little company of woman met together to discuss the comparative merits of infants' foods or styles of babies' clothing?

It is true that the nation is a magnificent abstraction, but it is made up of concrete individuals. The health of the nation is but the sum of the health of its individual men and women; the morals of the nation but the aggregate of individual morals. Nation could not war against nation if there were no individual soldiers, nor collect war revenue were there no individual taxpayers. The men and women who in the future will constitute the nation are to-day the very babes whose interests the Mothers' Associations are discussing. Upon the results of these discussions will depend to a great extent the national warfare; for the way the babies are fed, clothed, trained, and developed will determine the trend of the national life.

The workers or the invalids, the sober, honest, industrious citizens or the sexual perverts, the drunkards or the criminals of the future, are to-day babies in the arms of their mothers—babies, plastic, impressionable, to be trained or molded to a very great extent, as these mothers shall have skill and power.

It has been said that a nation rises no higher than its mothers. The saying does not mean that the purposes of the mother will make the nation's standard; but it means that their actual ability, their knowledge of child nature and child training, and their power to use this knowledge in building brain and character for these future citizens, will determine the future standing of the nation.

When parents truly realize that the seeds of national greatness are sown in the home, they will begin to magnify the office of parent. When motherhood is recognized as a power second to none in the uplift of the nation, then will the mother receive due honor, and the nation will see to it that she shall be assured the right surroundings, the needed education, the essential protection. Until that "great and happy day" shall come, mothers must work as best they can in the molding of the nation through the care of the children.

A mother's association does not mean a meeting of women to gossip concerning the disobedient, willful children of other people, or to criticise the educational methods of other parents. It means a meeting of women for the study of principles which they may apply to their individual problems in their own homes, and it is wise to keep the statement of these principles impersonal as far as possible, and to draw the illustrations from imaginary individuals rather than from examples in one's own or neighbor's families.

The duty of the mother's association is first to educate women as to the dignity of motherhood as a profession. "A profession," says the Standard Dictionary, "is an occupation that properly involves a liberal education, special mental and other attainments, and special discipline, as acting, engineering, etc."

It seems that motherhood might be included in the "etc.," although not usually dignified by so high a title. It is generally supposed that the coming of the babe brings with it a fullness of capacity as well as a wealth of love; that the untrained girl, receiving into her arms her first-born, receives at the same time a new endowment of knowledge and of judgment that will enable her to give the child due care and training.

It may seem complimentary to say that women know all things by instinct, but after all it is not true. Maternal love may give us a certain deftness in the personal care of the child, a peculiar insight into the needs of the child, and an intense longing to meet those needs; but love, untaught and undirected, does not preclude our making serious blunders which are detrimental to the welfare of our children and bring us many a heartache.

Some women are good cooks, who have learned by experience, but they could tell you of much good food spoiled in the process of learning. There are women who are natural nurses, and who can take better care of the sick than some doctors, but a medical education would have given them the doctor's authority as well as the nurse's skill.

Motherhood is a profession, and though women can worry along in it and meet with tolerable success, they can do better work if trained for it. The material they are working on is too costly to be spoiled while they are learning. We shudder as we read of the oculist who, complimented on his surgical skill, said, "Yes, but I spoiled a peck of eyes learning to operate." But eyes are not as valuable as whole children. How many of these have been spoiled, body and soul, while the mothers were experimenting on them, trying to gain the skill to bring their children up properly.

Motherhood is a profession, demanding a wider range of knowledge than any other. It is a well-known fact that in no other period of human life are there so many fatal diseases as in childhood. This is due in part to the natural susceptibility of children, but largely to the ignorance of mothers. If a woman were to be a doctor of other people's children, she would study at least four years; but she will enter upon the physical care of her own without one particle of knowledge of symptoms or treatment of diseases, even without a knowledge of the ordinary laws of hygiene.

If she were fitting herself as a lawyer, to help settle the disputes of men and women, she would spend years in preparation; yet one renowned diplomat says that to arbitrate between nations does not require the diplomacy, the knowledge, the patience, the profound insight into human nature, that is required in the settlement of conflicting claims of the children of a household.

The clergyman, after his mental preparation, takes a year or two in study of the method of presenting spiritual truths; but to lead the minds and affect the hearts of adults does not begin to call for the spiritual insight, the consecrated effort, that is needed in answering the queries and directing the developing moral nature of children.

Herbert Spencer says: "Youths preparing for the practice of sculpture have to acquaint themselves with the bones and muscles of the human frame in their attachments and movements. This has been found needful to prevent those many errors which sculptors who do not possess it commit. . . . In painting, the necessity for scientific knowledge is still more conspicuous, . . . but is it not an astonishing fact, that though on the treatment of offspring depends their lives or deaths, their moral welfare or ruin, yet not one word of instruction on the treatment of offspring is ever given to those who will be parents? . . . If a merchant commenced business without any knowledge of book-keeping, we should exclaim at his folly and look for disastrous results; or if before studying anatomy a man should set up for a surgical operator, we should wonder at his audacity and pity his patients; but that parents should begin the difficult task of rearing children without ever having given a thought to the principles—physical, moral, or intellectual—which ought to guide them, excites neither surprise at the actors nor pity for their victims.”]

☞ Jean Paul says: “The most essential things for the child are determined in the first three years. Each new teacher affects less than his predecessor; and regarding the whole life as a period of culture, we dare assert that he who, in his mature age, journeys over the whole world, derives less for all he sees than he did from his nurse. Upon the earliest years, therefore, should be bestowed the most care, since here a little strength wisely employed may accomplish more than the greatest skill in after-years.”

We will all admit the truth of these statements of the philosopher and educator; can we then declare that mothers need no special training?

What profession has a wider scope than that of motherhood.

Acting is defined as a profession, demanding special training; yet acting is but depicting life as it is, its faults, its follies, or its sins, painting them in vivid colors true to nature. Motherhood deals with life in its potentialities, aiming to correct its faults, to overcome its follies, to prevent its sins, and to choose the colors which shall glow upon life's canvass. Acting imitates; motherhood creates. Which needs more special preparation, which wider knowledge, which deeper insight into the possibilities of the human heart?

Each profession in turn might thus be taken up and its analogue be found in the work of the mother. Yet not only is her work analogous to the professions; it is in reality laying the foundation for all professions. The artist with the brush must be able to see colors truly and to distinguish between the most delicate shades; yet if his eyes have not been trained to see with accuracy in childhood, no later training can make good the deficiency. The writer must have a pleasing use of words; yet if in his childhood he has been accustomed to hearing ungrammatical forms of speech, it will be almost impossible for him in his later years to eradicate those errors. The lawyer must be able to reason logically, yet one whose childhood was given up wholly to impulse, who never heard those around him consider the reasons for a given action, will be continually in danger of allowing himself to be governed by impulse rather than by reason. The diplomat needs to have that breadth of mind which shall enable him to see things from the standpoint of the other man; but if in his childhood his mind was never turned to regard the rightfulness of the other side of a quarrel, it is more than likely that his services to his government will not be of inestimable value.

Already the nation has begun to realize its need of men with especial ability for governmental service. Indeed this recognition has gone so far that there is discussion of the advisability of establishing a college for diplomats. This will naturally lead to the idea of special training for statesmanship, for statesmen are more needed than mere diplomats.

But what are the greatest needs of the nation? Is it not men and women of character? What are the dangers which most threaten the welfare of the nation? Do they not arise from greed and lawlessness? The occurrences of the last year have aroused the public mind to a realization of the evils that may arise from the greed of organized capital, grasping after that which does not belong to it, and the lawlessness of organized labor, striving to obtain by force that which it believes to be its own. Social reformers and practical politicians are uniting in an effort to discover a remedy for these evils. Their search is superficial, and will not be successful unless they penetrate to the root of the natural life in the home. It is in the home that greed and lawlessness are first manifested, and here they are either strengthened or eradicated. The child who is allowed to disregard parental authority will have but little regard for the majesty of the law. The child who is allowed to appropriate to himself everything he desires will find it difficult, in his maturer years, to recognize the rights of others.

Training simply in diplomacy will avail the country little; character-building is what is needed, and the father and mother in the home are the great character-builders. The nation would build more wisely if, instead of establishing schools for diplomats, it would found training-schools for parents.

The nation does not as yet realize its great responsibility, but the American Mothers' Association of the United States, with a purpose restricted only by the limitation of individual efforts, is ready to make good, so far as in it lies, the nation's failure, and to help our mothers to become the nation's real builders and defenders.—Mary Wood-Allen, M. D., in American Motherhood, November, 1903.

Sunday-School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

Voting for District Officers.

A brother asks if in conventions of small districts where the delegate system has been suspended under article 10, page 11, it is proper to elect their district officers and delegates to General Convention by the ordinary way of show of hands or acclamation.

Paragraph 2 of article 5 reads: “In the election of officers of the district association and of delegates to the General Association, the vote shall be taken by the ‘yeas and nays’ each delegate casting one vote for every ten members or fraction thereof of the school he represents.” Article 10, page 11, reads: “Any district association convention, where the membership is under four hundred, may upon a two thirds vote of the delegates present, change from delegate to mass convention.” It may seem at first glance that there is a confliction between the two articles. But we believe that the intention of article 10 is to allow small district conventions to change from delegate convention and allow all the workers present to take part in the transaction of the business. In order that this may be done it is necessary that the schools shall send delegates to the district convention who shall organize the convention just as if no suspension of the rules were possible. Then when fully organized they may if the district enrollment is under four hundred resolve into a “mass convention” by a two thirds vote of all delegates present. By this act they have waived their special rights as appointed delegates and given a portion thereof to other workers present. And from the further fact that the expression “the vote shall be taken by the yeas and nays” refers to the manner of voting only, and not to who shall vote, as only delegates can vote in a delegate convention anyway, we believe that the same authority that allows them to give their rights to others changes the rule and removes the necessity for a delegate vote for the election of officers and delegates. Further, we know of no rule or law that would empower a “mass convention” to resolve itself into a delegate convention. Hence, after the convention becomes a “mass convention,” it must so continue to the end of the session when it is resolved by statute.

Hence we believe that a convention properly changed under the article above referred to, is authorized to elect its officers and delegates by other than delegate vote.

SR. CARRIE M. LEWIS, superintendent of the Far West, Missouri, District association in reporting on the program work says: "To-night I will hurriedly write you to say I have long since sent out the programs and have heard from about half of the schools that have rendered the parents' day program or are preparing to do so soon. All seem to be highly pleased with the idea of both programs. For my part I think they are fine and that they will certainly be a benefit in awakening deeper thought. . . . At Stewartville we divided the program into two sessions, having Sunday-school with the first session, omitting review. It was all interesting, good talks, good papers, and a good time, I thought."

"YE JOTS" man in the Ensign seems to object to being mixed up in a report with other districts or schools, preferring to stand on his own foundation. Well, Bro. T. W., we made the blunder and are ready to be forgiven. Go ahead with your good work and we will try to keep things straight after this. But you do not know how I do wish we had a thousand men as good as you to keep this work pushing right along. There would be more done than there is. Yes, Bro. "Ye Jots" has ever been an energetic and aggressive worker in all branches of church-work. Where a good cause needs a champion, you will find T. W. there at work. When there is proper opportunity to say a word for the good work, you will hear him speak. He is not afraid of what he believes and advocates. What and all he needs is an opportunity and he will endeavor to do the rest. May he be blessed.

The Bible in the Kitchen.

The home department of the Sunday-school is trying to do for busy housekeepers what this one did for herself. Her family was large and her "help" small. Some one asked her how she became so familiar with the Bible. The Christian Endeavor World gives her answer:

"You see, I have a great deal of time to myself. After the children are started for school I am alone all day. And I know that at six o'clock there will be eleven hungry people who will look to me for a good dinner, so of course I have to spend a good deal of my time in the kitchen. Years ago, I foresaw that the largest portion of my waking hours would have to be spent there, and I felt lonely and wanted a companion.

"So I covered my Bible with slate-colored cambric, and took it to the kitchen with me. After a while my husband put up a shelf on purpose for it, and made a little wire arrangement to hold it open, and we have had real good times together, my Bible and I. I can keep at a verse here and there, and keep thinking it over as I go about my work, and think of all the other verses I know that throw light upon it.

"It is wonderful how many verses one knows that fit in, if we just give them time to find their places.

"Ironing days are especially nice; it is long, slow work, you see, that doesn't take much thought, because I know exactly how to do it, and I can give my mind to some Bible subject that needs studying."—World Evangelist.

Is the Home Department a Success?

The home department of the First Methodist Episcopal Church at Crawford, Nebraska, now has two hundred and fifty members, the largest in the state of Nebraska and second largest in the United States.

I have heard the criticism that it will injure the Sunday-school; but I will say that there is no work that will so build up a school as the home department. I have a number of people who took the quarterlies, became interested, and resigned their membership and began attending the Sunday-school; but it has not taken a single person out of the school. People like to have the books, and say they do not know how they could get along without them. It increases the influence of the church and encourages people to read their Bibles.—Selected.

One Teacher's Method of Study.

Dear Teacher: Are you among those teachers who sometimes say:

"Well, I just can not get the scholars in my class to study the Sunday-school lesson?"

Do not be discouraged if you are in that category, and do not give up trying to induce your boys or your girls to study the lesson. Have you ever tried studying the lesson with the members of your class? I know a teacher in my Sunday-school who sets apart every Wednesday evening for the study of the lesson with the fifteen boys in her class, and she tells me that there are rarely fewer than ten of the fifteen boys present, and for three successive Wednesday evenings every boy in the class was present.

This study of the lesson is done in the home of the teacher unless it happens that the teacher and her boys are invited to the home of some one of the boys. This not infrequently happens. One evening a boy quite surprised the teacher by saying:

"My mother said for me to tell you that she would be glad to have the class come to our house next Wednesday evening to study the lesson."

This opened up new vistas of hospitality, and three of the meetings in a single month were at the homes of the boys in the class. Study and sociability are combined at these meetings. An hour is spent in the study of the lesson, and the next hour is given up to sociability. There are refreshments, but they are limited to cocoa or lemonade and inexpensive little cakes. It goes without saying that the teacher who established this method of inducing her boys to study the lesson spends no little time in fitting herself to be the leader of this study class.

If you think that this study and teaching of the lesson left nothing for the class to study or the teacher to teach on the following Sunday, you are very much mistaken. Every boy went home with some "looking-up" work to do before the class met to study the lesson on the following Sunday. Questions were sure to arise, and references needed looking up; additional information was desired on this or that point; "connecting links" were to be found, and there was always plenty left for the class to consider on the following Sunday, when the class met in the Sunday-school room.

I believe that this method of inducing boys to study the lesson will "work" every time it is tried. The average boy is not likely to sit down alone in his home and spend time studying his Sunday-school lesson of his own accord. But if he can study it in the way I have described, the lesson takes on a degree of interest and importance it does not have under ordinary conditions. Do give this happy method a "try," and see if the result is not helpful and gratifying.—H. H. H., New Century Teachers' Monthly.

The Sunday-School Lesson for March 19, 1905.

THE CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA.

Lesson Text, Revelation 3: 7-13.

Golden Text.—"Hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown."—Revelation 3: 11.

The second primary lesson has two topics in its lesson theme, that the saints of Philadelphia had kept the commandments of Jesus, that they were loved by him. It teaches that God will love us, if he sees us keeping his words with the same faithfulness as those saints of Philadelphia did.

It shows that Jesus encouraged those saints to continue, that he bade them hold that fast which they had, that no man might take from them their crown. This is the golden text of the lesson. It is explained to the children,

The lesson text mentions the city of God, the New Jerusalem. The second primary lesson speaks of the beauty and joy of that city and teaches that those who hold fast their crown by keeping the commandments of God shall have a dwelling-place in it.

The outline of the intermediate lesson contains the three topics we have already seen in the second primary lesson, that the church of Philadelphia had kept the word of God, that it was loved by him, and that it was encouraged by him to hold fast to the truth.

The introduction of the lesson contrasts this faithful church with the church in Sardis, where only a few of those called saints were true to their covenant to serve God.

Jesus stated concerning this church in Philadelphia that he loved it, and the lesson suggests that this was because of their obedience to his commandments, for it is in harmony with his saying to his disciples that, by keeping his commandments, they should abide in his love.

Verse 7 of the lesson text shows that the message of Jesus to the church in Philadelphia opened with these words: "These things saith he that is holy, he that is just and true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth."

The lesson calls attention to the statement of Jesus that he is the Holy One; it comments upon his power to shut the door of the kingdom against those who are not holy and to open it to admit those who are holy. It suggests that, by keeping the commandments of God, we fit ourselves to enter through the door.

The advanced intermediate work is based upon verse 12 of the lesson text, where it is stated by the Lord that he that overcomes shall be made a pillar in the temple of God; that upon him will be written the name of God and the name of the city of God, the new Jerusalem, which cometh down from God out of heaven; that the new name of Christ will be written upon him.

The lesson seeks to make clear from this that those who overcome by keeping the commandments of the law of God will be parts of that great number of holy people who shall form the kingdom of God, his living temple; it states that the name of God is declared in one of his revelations to us to be Man of Holiness and that the New Jerusalem is also called the Holy City in other parts of the Scriptures. The name that will be written on those who overcome will be a name that signifies holiness.

The promise in the last line of verse 12, that Christ will write his new name on those who are admitted to his kingdom, calls forth the suggestion that we bear the name of Christ now in the world, a name of scorn and reproach among unbelievers, a humble name, not revered in the places of earth's pride and pomp; but that, in a time to come, those who are in truth entitled to bear that name shall wear it as a crown of honor and real glory. If we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him.

The senior lesson contains the thoughts that have been pointed out as contained in the simpler lessons; some of those thoughts are enlarged upon.

In 2 Kings 18: 18, we read that, in the time of King Hezekiah, there was a man named Eliakim who was over the king's household. We understand from this that he was a man in authority under the king. In Isaiah 22: 20-22, we read a prophecy concerning one who should hold such a position of authority, of whom it was said in verse 22 that "the keys of the house of David" should be laid upon his shoulder. The heading of the chapter in which this occurs in the King James Version says this prophecy prefigures the kingdom of Christ. In the text of our lesson this week, Jesus refers to himself as the one who "hath the keys of David." The meaning evidently is that he is a steward over his Father's kingdom, as such having power to open the door to those who are worthy or to close it to those who are not worthy.

Eliakim, the steward over the household of Hezekiah, the king of Judah, was introduced to illustrate the position of authority held by Christ over the kingdom of God. As Eliakim held the key of the king's house, so Christ holds the key of his Father's kingdom.

THE OPEN DOOR.

After saying to the saints of Philadelphia that he held the key of David, signifying his power to open or to close the door of the kingdom of heaven, Jesus said to them further that he had set before them an open door, which no man could shut.

The reason for this statement is found in the same verse; they had kept his word. To them the door of the kingdom was open, as it will be open to all others who are living in the same condition of obedience to the law of God.

Yet it is to be noticed in the lesson text that those saints of Philadelphia were not perfect. Jesus said they had "a little strength." They had not reached the fullness of spiritual strength. This is evident, also, in the warning of the golden text, the language of which occurs in the text of the lesson. The saints of Philadelphia had need to continue in the way of obedience; they had need to hold fast that spirituality which they had; they had need to press forward in the way of truth until the time should come when they should enter in through the open door into the kingdom of God.

The way to that door is the straight, narrow way of truth. It is that way in which they walk who have the Holy Spirit for their guide; for it leads into all truth. When we have entered in through the door, then we shall have reached that realm where there is the perfection of truth.

But for us now, who like the saints of Philadelphia have but a little strength, the wise thing to do is to press forward doing the work of life that is committed to us, being careful in all things to be loyal to the truth. In this way we shall add to our spiritual strength, we shall develop in our understanding of the principles of righteousness. Stronger, wiser, better, happier; such will be our growth, if we do the common things of our daily toil according to the law of God, but there can be for us no such growth and no entering through the door, if we do not apply the principles of truth in the ordinary work of life, if we do not deal with our fellow men according to the law of kindness and justice.

"No cunning finds the key of heaven;
No strength its gates unfolds.
Alone to guilelessness and love
The gates shall open fall,
The heart of pride is nothingness,
The childlike heart is all."

THAYER, Missouri, February 28, 1905.

Dear Herald: This leaves me busily engaged in the gospel work. I stepped over the State line into Arkansas and held a few meetings. So I am ready to make apologies for transcending my bounds to the proper authorities. Bro. J. F. Cunningham went with me, as he has a whole host of relatives and friends. It is encouraging to see the local priesthood ready to magnify their calling. There is a faithful band of Saints in this Cane Hill Branch. Most of them are willing to deny themselves and walk in the light. From here I go to Pomona, to West Plains, and on to Springfield, where our conference convenes March 18. May God bless all his Saints and cause them to awake. We have two hustlers here at Thayer in the persons of Bert and Will Bootman.

MINERSVILLE, Utah, February 21, 1905.

Editors Herald: This finds us at the battle's front striving to hold aloft the banner of King Immanuel. Elder H. N. Hansen and the writer have labored together for near four weeks in Beaver County, and have preached at Milford, Adamsville, Greenville, Beaver, and Minersville, with a fair attendance and interest, notwithstanding the stormy weather.

More liberality has been manifested on the part of our Utah friends in this county than the writer has ever met with elsewhere and that is encouraging.

We have the honor of being the first "Josephites" to preach at Minersville. Some of the brethren made an effort to reply to us in their Sunday services and succeeded in presenting in a very abrupt way some of the arguments of B. H. Roberts.

The one grand mistake that is made in the West is that the people acquaint themselves with such works as Succession, by B. H. Roberts, and the Historical Record, by Andrew Jensen, etc., but their Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants is not consulted in the matter; they seem to forget the all-important point that "the Lord is our lawgiver." If the people could be led to see the necessity of holding to the law of God instead of the opinions of men it would be but a short time until all would rally under the banner of King Immanuel. But until the Lord moves upon the minds of the people and removes that darkness the progress will be slow. Paul may plant and Apollos may water, but it is God that giveth the increase.

May the time soon come that all will see the requirements of the law of God and comply therewith to the end that all may be made free, is our prayer.

SHELANDOAH, Iowa, February 23, 1905.

Editors Herald: I find another article in the HERALD about Father Cutler. Now I happened to know him well. I have a letter from Abe Kimball, son of Heber Kimball by a daughter of Father Cutler, giving his last talk with Father Cutler, I think the year before Cutler's death, stating Brigham Young to be the man, not he, to lead the church, and he knew it all the time, but he, Cutler, did not want to follow but wanted to lead. I knew Abe Kimball. He was raised in Manti until he was about sixteen or eighteen years old, by Father Cutler, and he was a truthful boy. Can send the letter to you so you can publish that part of it if you wish.

I attended the Cutlerite meeting before the Reorganization came here but never joined them—had no faith in Father Cutler.

Your brother in Christ,

E. S. WILCOX.

[Bro. Wilcox sent us Abe Kimball's letter referred to above, from which we copy the portion given below.—EDITOR.]

"One day while there grandmother and family, which included myself were all invited to Uncle Sherman's, of course grandfather could not go, from his chronic affliction, as you are already aware. Before we set out he said to me, Abe I wish you would remain a few minutes after the rest are gone saying he would not detain me long. I remarked all right. As soon as the folks were all gone he commenced asking me questions concerning some men he was acquainted with in the Valley, Mr. Schofield and others. Something I could give but little information of. He remarked, You have seen your father of course? I replied, Yes. He said he was glad of it. He then wanted to know if I had been baptized. Answer, yes. Have you had your endowments? I replied I had received them. He expressed himself much pleased, by continuing, You left here and went to Utah without my consent which is all right now, but I never intended you should know who your father was. And for this reason I suffered you to be prejudiced to the extent you have been. Now it is my place to remove said prejudice from your mind. I know that Brigham Young is Joseph Smith's legal and lawful successor, and always did know it. But the reason I am where I am I could not be led but must lead. I have run my race, and must meet my fate, and I know what my doom is, as I died once as dead as any one dies. And I went to the land of spirits and saw the crown I should wear if I remained faithful and the condemnation I should meet if I failed. I begged to stay. I was informed I could not remain now but must return and warn sinners to repent. And the first word I spoke on returning was to Sidney Rigdon who was bending over me, Sidney repent of your sins or you will be damned. (I guess you have heard him tell this part yourself.) He then continued, I know that Mormonism is true. I know that Heber C. Kimball is your father and Isaac's, and he is a good man. Now I want you to take Isaac and return to your father. And remain true to Mormonism and never yield the point for it will save and exalt you in the kingdom of God and all who will live it to the end of their days. He then wept like a child which caused my eyes to moisten. After recovering himself he continued by saying, Now my boy I want to ask one favor of you, and that is that you will never reveal what I have told you to-day to the people I lead while I live, as you boys are going away and I depend on the people for my support. I promised him I would do as requested. He then released me to go visiting. Now Mr. Wilcox and friends, I am in a shape that I may be called to meet my God any minute, as disease is preying upon my poor body and I am near a skeleton, and my flesh may soon be devoured by worms. But I bear testimony to you before my God that the statement I have made of Alpheus Cutler's confession is correct as near as I can word it."

MCKENZIE, Alabama, March 6, 1905.

Editors Herald: I see by the closing paragraph of your editorial in last issue, that your wisdom has decided that the columns of the HERALD shall now be, or at least should be closed to further agitation of the Graceland College subject. Hallelujah! We are so glad to hear it.

This writing finds us at this place in the pleasant home of Bro. "Jeff" Hawkins. Have just arrived after a ride of some thirty miles in a "jolt wagon," from Lone Star Branch, where we held the quarterly conference of the Alabama District, the 4th and 5th of the present month. There was a very small attendance of the membership, and a smaller one of the ministry. Only two elders were present at the business session, myself and Elder Perry Booker, a colored brother, and the only native elder of the colored race we have in this mission. Judging from his report of work done, Elder Booker is quite active and diligent in his efforts to get the gospel before his people, and hold his little band together. He has appointments for preaching most every Lord's day, and carries on a Sunday-school in his branch. But lest some over-sensitive person should get a false impression, and one not intended to be conveyed, I will state that Elder Booker did not occupy a place or take any part in the conference out of harmony with his station or the customs of the country. There is with me what seems to be a natural inclination to give "honor to whom honor is due," that's all.

"The Lone Star Branch" is the first one organized in this Southeastern Mission. It was organized shortly after the war, and its membership have passed through scenes varying from heavenly joys to discords and strifes of the very opposite nature. Some of the old-time members have passed on to the land beyond, leaving good grounds for friends to hope and believe they are sleeping the sweet sleep of the just. But there has been sown by some one (or ones) seeds of vice and destruction that are now producing a plentiful harvest. By death, removals, and the forces of evil, coupled with inactivity and general neglect of duty by ministry and members, for the last three or four years especially, the branch to-day is on the verge of ruin, and surely tottering to a Babylonish fall except she repents. Nevertheless there are a few there yet who are striving to hold on to the rod of iron, and such should remember that "He that endureth to the end the same shall be saved." Bro. Archie Booker, the priest, Bro. R. B. Booker and wife, Rebecca Booker, are in the faith; and, in their way, doing what their circumstances permit. May God sustain them by his grace.

On Sunday evening just before time to open the seven o'clock service, a young brother came into the church-house with his arm and hand covered with blood. It was the result of a wound made by a pistol-ball, fired by one who like himself was under the influence of strong drink. This of course created a scene, one lady becoming almost hysterical, fearing lest her brother, who, she was told, was in the fray, had been killed. This report, however, proved untrue.

It was quite pathetic to see Sr. Martha McPherson, formerly Sr. Manning Harp, weeping aloud because of the reproach brought upon the church at the place of her birth, and where she had spent most of her life trying to sustain it. Others too, were weeping over the disgraceful affair, but we opine his Satanic Majesty laughed, and we were made sensible of the presence of his power.

Years ago the neighborhood was largely under the influence of the church; the spiritual gifts were enjoyed, and it was a much more pleasant place to live in, or to visit. Now the influence of the church is lost and the conditions are anything but pleasant. Instead of the Spirit of God and the spiritual gifts, it is spirits of the distillery and such things as usually come with them. While the influence of the church was felt and respected peace and good will were also felt, as also gifts of God's spirit. Since the influence of the church is gone, drunkenness, strife, quarreling and most every evil work abounds; yet some people seem to think the influence of the church is bad. Will any of them, from the above facts, learn wisdom and be instructed? All this change has come as a result of failure to observe the church "articles to do them," and to obey the law given to govern the church, which law is none other than the law of God. Will any other branches or individuals be warned by this sad recital? I am aware that this letter, if published, will make gloomy reading. Why write it then, do you ask? Just to record another instance where failure to honor God's holy law has brought ruin where blessings might have been enjoyed by those who are now being visited with sore cursings. "He that hath ears to hear let him hear."

But the picture in Nature is brighter than the one I have thus drawn. Smiling spring is here. The birds are happy and seem to be trying to show stupid man how to "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Some of the few peach-trees, in the small orchards, are in full bloom; and the fresh, green grass is beginning to wake up. Farmers are busy "bedding" their land for cotton, and hauling fertilizer to persuade the land to grow it. Twenty-five per cent less cotton, thirty-three and one third per cent more money next year, is about the way most of them figure. My sympathy is with them but I do not forget that the trusts or their managers can figure too. May the right prevail in all things. Peace be unto Zion and her children.

In gospel bonds,
T. C. KELLEY.

MOUNTAINVILLE, Maine, February 20, 1905.

Editors Herald: As I pause for a moment amid the ever-changing scenes of every-day life and look about me on what has taken place in the past and what is taking place now with others as well as with myself, I can realize, in a sense, something of the unbounded, unfathomable love and mercy of the dear Father above. Daily I am becoming more and more convinced of the fact that there are blessings, hidden though they may be, all about us and on every hand. The trouble with us as human individuals is, that we do not look close enough to find them. We are apt to look for great things oftentimes in this life when we should be content with the little blessings God has, in his great mercy and love, showered upon us. And I believe that it is by our being grateful and thankful for these that greater and richer blessings follow. Let us look about us at all times and

"Count your many blessings, name them one by one
And it will surprise you what the Lord has done."

Do we say we are poor, or neglected, or sick, or in trouble, or have no other blessings for which to be thankful? As well might we say because the sun is hidden behind the cloud for a while we have nothing more to be thankful for. No, thanks to the dear, loving Father above we may always, under every circumstance and condition of life, find a silvery lining in the darkest earthly cloud if we but look for it and humbly trust and obey.

So, dear Saints, when we sometimes feel discouraged with our lot and condition, and feel that we can not count our blessings because of their absence, let us at once realize the truth that there is no human individual but who has much to be thankful for and many, many blessings to enjoy, and realize that the greatest blessing of all is to have a kind and loving heavenly Father to aid and assist us in our hours of discouragement and sorrow. Remember

"There is never a day so dreary
But God can make it bright
And unto the soul that trusts him
He giveth them songs in the night."

Personally I can say that I am still standing firmly in the ranks of the Master, and intend to so stand until I shall receive an honorable discharge from this life and work by the Great Commander. The longer I work in the Lord's vineyard the more firmly convinced am I of the truthfulness of the great work, and that Latter Day Saintism will yet fill the whole earth.

Asking the Saints' prayers in my behalf, and praying for you in return, I remain,

Your brother in the faith,
WALLACE A. SMALL.

RHODES, Iowa, February 15, 1905.

Editors Herald: The Rhodes Branch, once known as the Edinville Branch, numbers I believe some thirty or forty members; but there are only about one third of that number living in this vicinity, the others being scattered members. There are only fifteen members here, and ten of those represent five families, the other five belonging to one family.

We hold sacrament- and social-services once a month, when Bro. W. C. Nirk gives the Saints good instruction. We also hold Sunday-school and Religio at the home of the writer every Sunday.

Bro. Nirk is one of the old pioneers of the Des Moines District; but he can no longer travel to and fro sounding the gospel trumpet as in days of yore. His health is failing, and although he never fails to meet with the Saints and assist in the Sunday-school and Religio, there are times when the weather is severely cold that the walking of three blocks taxes his strength to the utmost.

We have had very little preaching here since the reunion in 1903. We do not consider this due to neglect on the part of the missionaries, however, but because of a lack of a public place in which to hold services. For this reason we hoped the brethren might decide to locate the 1905 reunion at this place for the work's sake. The two reunions held here, we had a splendid attendance and a good interest. While there were no baptisms save those who were converted before they came, (and I believe that has been the case at all the reunions held in the district,) the gospel was presented to a large concourse of people,—the seed was sown; and who shall say what the harvest shall be, or might be, if the seed was properly nurtured?

Some years ago, before district reunions became so general—before the Saints of the Des Moines District ever talked of having a reunion, the writer was feeling much discouraged on account of the indifference of the people. We had rented a hall and gotten a good speaker, Bro. C. Scott, to come and hold a series of meetings. One evening when I entered the hall and found only two persons besides the Saints, and thought of the great masses who were feeding upon husks, with the bread of life within their reach, I could not keep back the tears, and I questioned what more can we do?

That night, or about this time, I dreamed that a person came to me and told me that the only way we would ever be able to get the gospel before the people in this vicinity, would be by holding a reunion. In the same dream I saw we had a reunion here, but I was not permitted to see the result. It was some years before I saw the fulfillment of this dream; but from that time I looked forward to the time when we would have a reunion.

Our first district reunion was held at Runnells; the second at Colfax, and the third at Rhodes in 1901. It was a very dry season and a number of districts recalled their reunion appointments on this account. As the time drew near for our reunion and our district president, Bro. McCoy, told us that from all he could learn from traveling over the district, there was no one planning to attend the reunion, and it was his opinion that it would be a failure, etc., my faith began to fail, and I thought if we attempt to have a reunion and it is a failure it will be a detriment to the work. We also heard at the very last moment, so to speak, that Bro. F. A. Russell, whom we had depended upon to take charge of the singing, would not be here; then, indeed, our hopes sank to zero; but we ceased not to pray that the Lord would not forsake us, and he did not. A goodly number of Saints attended, and great crowds of outsiders from town and country and neighboring towns.

Brn. D. C. and J. D. White were present rendering excellent help in both the singing and preaching, Brn. Ward Christy and J. D. White being in charge of the singing. Many of the outsiders spoke favorably of the singing. And as I sat and listened to the beautiful gospel story so ably presented by the servant of God, and saw the great sea of upturned faces drinking in the words of truth, my heart swelled with gratitude to God, and I felt rebuked for my lack of faith and slowness to believe his promises. All this, together with the fact that the work has been attacked by the preachers from both the churches of this place just after our reunions, makes us think that there are some honest souls in this vicinity for whom Satan is contending. But the work is in the hands of God and there we wish to leave it.

We were sorry to note from Bro. Christy's report in HERALD that the district was not responding to the call for Graceland. When Bro. Christy called on us last spring for our proportion he was quite hopeful for success; said up to that time the Saints had done well. I am thankful to say that the little band of Saints here cheerfully responded to the call, paying nearly twice as much as were their dues. If there were any who could not pay anything, there were others who made it up. And this is not the only donation that has gone from the little band of Saints here to Graceland. I only speak of this in justice to the Saints here, and that your readers may know where we stand.

I receive much comfort and spiritual strength from the church papers. Some of the written words of the brethren and sisters appeal so strongly to my own feelings that they seem to have been written expressly for me, and no doubt they fall upon hundreds of hearts with the same balm of comfort and peace.

My heart went out in sympathy to Bro. and Sr. Butterworth of Dow City, when I read of the tragic death of their son. But I trust that they may be able to see the hand of God in even so great a trial. Those who are taken thus early in life escape much of hardship, trial, and perplexity that those who remain will have to pass through.

One writer in the Ensign has expressed such beautiful thoughts along this line. She says: "Not a trial is sent but as a regenerating and perfecting agent. From the death-like stroke of afflictions,—from the deep humiliation which covers us with sackcloth and ashes,—from the misfortunes that strip us of all,—the spirit that can be purified rises stronger and gladder, with upward-looking and chastened hearts. "Those terrible bereavements—the snapping of these holy links that convulse our spirits and cast us prostrate on the earth in despair, are only permitted to give birth through this agonizing travail to some new and holier state; to produce some great calm growing out of the mind's tempest,—when the voice of the Lord has spoken to the raging waters and wild winds of the soul, and said, 'Peace! Be still!' But all these heavenly ends are frustrated if we destroy the possibilities of happiness implanted within us by idle repining."

Then let us accept whatever may come to us in life, whether joy or sorrow, whether withered hopes and frustrated plans, or sweet peace and accomplished desires, as directed by the hand of Him who heareth the raven's cry, and noteth the sparrow's fall—who seeth the end from the beginning,

"And nothing does nor suffers to be done,
But we would do ourselves,
If we could only see,
The end of all he does,
As well as he."

In gospel bonds,

MATTIE HUGHES.

COALGATE, Indian Territory, February 21, 1905.

Editors Herald: I am glad to report that the conference of the Northeastern Texas and Choctaw District, held at Coalgate the 18th and 19th of this month, was a grand success, notwithstanding the continued cold weather, and the five or six inches of snow that lay on the ground, which kept many people away that would have attended. The district Sunday-school association, that met the day previous, was also a success, giving a splendid entertainment on the evening of the 17th.

It is quite encouraging to see the number of young Saints at this place taking hold of the Sunday-school and branch work. It is an easy matter to see that good results will follow such efforts. We were blessed in having with us our missionary in charge, Bro. H. O. Smith, who at two priesthood meetings, held during conference, gave us much good instruction and counsel.

The musical talent of the branch was quite noticeable during the conference, rendering some of the most beautiful and soul-cheering hymns found in the Hymnal and Zion's Praises. Our Sunday-school here, of which I am superintendent, is getting along very nicely. Though I am young in this work, also in years, I know it is of God, for I have had the assurance. May God bless his people wherever they be, is my prayer.

Your brother in the faith,

HENRY McCLAIN.

WEST SULLIVAN, Maine, February 25, 1905.

Editors Herald: It seems from a letter in the HERALD of February 22, that Sr. Hannah Eaton, of Stonington, Maine, has seen fit to correct me in something I never said. If the worthy sister will read my letter, published in the HERALD of January 18, she will observe that I confined my account to the introduction of the gospel to Little Deer Isle. I am quite confident that the parties from whom I obtained my information will, if necessary, affix their affidavits to my statements concerning Father Landers, his baptizing, his oftentimes repast on "corn-bread and pork," etc. I have no apology to offer for truth, and I write this little note to assure the readers of the HERALD that I value their confidence too highly to lose it by writing for their consideration that which is not correct.

Kindly,

RALPH W. FARRELL.

LONDON, Ontario, February 27, 1905.

Editors Herald: The burden upon the minds of the local ministry has been for some time past how to increase the spirituality of our branch! It is through my own pondering over this matter that the following questions have been suggested to my mind: What should be the deportment of each Saint from the time they enter God's house until they are once more out upon the street? Can a church be considered very spiritual; and could it reasonably hope for or claim blessings from God, the majority of whose male members walk right into God's house with hats on, and put them on again while rising from their seats, and who, during the services, converse with each other upon anything and everything that may come into their minds; and if they listen at all to what the preacher is saying, it is to criticise, misinterpret, and ridicule? Is there anything recorded in history which would teach us what the deportment of the early saints in the house of the Lord was? Would it be profitable to draw a comparison between such a church as I have spoken of, and for instance, a congregation of Romanists, or Church of England worshippers? What do you understand by the commandment: "Ye shall . . . reverence my sanctuary"?—Leviticus 19:30. And by this, "Keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear, than to give the sacrifice of fools"?—Ecclesiastes 5:1. Is the following quotation from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants? "Appoint among yourselves a teacher, and let not all be spokesman at once, but let one speak at a time and let all listen unto his sayings, that when all have spoken that all may be edified of all, and that every man may have an equal privilege."

Are there any other passages in the Doctrine and Covenants or in the Book of Mormon giving instructions along these lines?

I would love to see a good, emphatic article upon these questions from the Editor himself, or some other authoritative source.

Yours in the true faith,

P. H. PHILIPIN.

JONESPORT, Maine, February 28, 1905.

Editors Herald: The winter has been of long duration and very severe in this distant corner of the United States.

The conference of Eastern Maine District met on the 18th inst. at Indian River. The weather was very unfavorable but, notwithstanding, we had a fair attendance and the meetings seemed to be heartily enjoyed by all.

Uriah M. Kelley and myself were the only ones of the eldership present. Elder Kelley was sustained as district president and Bishop's agent. He is well and favorably known in Eastern Maine, and is much respected by the people in and out of the church.

My time here has about expired and I expect to leave on March 7 for the West, stopping en route at Boston, New York, and Philadelphia.

The religious statistics for the United States as compiled by Reverend H. K. Carroll, and published in the Literary Digest for February 4, reveals some interesting facts. I one time heard a reverend gentleman in his argument urged against us in public debate, make this statement: "These different bodies of Latter Day Saints should get together and agree on what they believe and then come and tell us what it is."

The statistics mentioned above refers to the Latter Day Saints as "two bodies." By a study of this statistical table we shall see that the Latter Day Saints are not nearly so much divided in factions as are most of the other denominations.

The Adventists are divided into six bodies, Catholics eight bodies, Baptists thirteen bodies, Lutherans twenty-two bodies, Mennonites twelve bodies, Methodists seventeen bodies, Presbyterians twelve bodies, Dunkards four bodies, and Friends four bodies.

Some of our enemies will not acknowledge that there are two bodies of Latter Day Saints, but they will readily concede the facts concerning the divisions among other churches.

We hope such facts will continue to be published until the people will understand that there are two separate and distinct churches of Latter Day Saints, and to assert that this is not true will be to give utterance to that which is founded solely upon ignorance of established fact.

The true Latter Day Saints must stand by the truth, and they may never be expected to agree with those who, though they call themselves Latter Day Saints, yet have manifestly perverted the truth in teaching and by practice. The genuine and counterfeit are seen in many things, and it should be esteemed as no strange thing that there should be genuine and counterfeit Latter Day Saints.

I shall long remember the Saints and friends in this district for their kindness to me, and for pleasant association with many of them.

In hope of eternal life,

W. E. LARUE.

FAIRVIEW, Michigan, February 14, 1905.

Editor Herald: I have been reading a letter from Seattle, written by a brother who speaks about the little band of sisters there who organized an aid society, with the view of helping the gospel. Mrs. A. Thornton, who is my twin sister, being a sister in the flesh as well as in the one faith, will remember when she and I stood alone here in the gospel, often the only two who attended the Prayer Union and prayer-meetings, and well do I remember the day she went to be baptized, facing all the opposition she well knew she must meet in her own home, as well as elsewhere. How we would work and plan to get away to our little meetings! We had great trials upon us here, and I have all confidence in the little band of Saints left. Of course when the trials were the heaviest, quite a number could not withstand the scorching heat, and dropped by the wayside. But we know God's mercy is great and we are trusting and praying that they will take root again and be fruitful trees. There have been some good people gathered in our branch the past year and I have every reason to believe that they will be an honor to God as well as to the church.

I have not been to meeting this winter as it has been so cold, and I have so far to go; but my mind and heart is with God's people, if I am not; and God's Spirit we can have anywhere. I have never been in a position to help in the gospel financially as I should like, but I believe the Lord is answering my prayers, and I feel the time is not far distant when I can help more. I wonder sometimes if I had the wealth of a Gould, or Vanderbilt, would I be willing to help as I think I should. I pray that God will help me to be humble and use wisely moneys placed in my hands with an eye single to his glory. I want to be faithful in all things. Sometimes I grow weary of my mistakes and failures, but never of the gospel. The glorious plan of redemption is one of the most beautiful themes, to my mind.

I am looking forward to the time when, if faithful, we will all be in the redeemed Zion where we will be free from the temptations and cares of this life. My prayers and thoughts are ever for the gospel, and God's chosen people.

SR. LIBBIE ALBERTSON.

DES MOINES, Iowa, March 2, 1905.

Dear Herald: In the interest of the grand work we all love so well I write that it may be known that I am yet enjoying the bright hope that is a heritage of the children of God.

Since the debate that I held with W. G. Roberts, at Runnells, Iowa, I have seen a report that "Mormonism got a backset in that debate." I waited till I could visit the place of conflict and ascertain what effect the debate really did have, and this time arrived when in attendance at the district conference held there in February; and I am happy to report that if the effect of that debate is called a backset, the church can grow on many more of them. The Saints all seemed to be rejoicing over the results of the debate, and the attendance at the debate not of the faith that I could see in Runnells, or hear from, were free in saying that Mr. Roberts did not present any argument that stood the test of investigation, and that our work did not suffer from the debate, but that Mr. Roberts had proven himself anything but a Christian debater. Considering the weather and roads there was a fine attendance at the conference, and a very peaceful and profitable time was enjoyed.

Just previous to the district conference I was called to Dow City to speak words of comfort to the relatives and friends of Sr. A. F. Rudd, the mother of Sr. C. E. Butterworth, and found my wife very ill, which necessitated my staying at home for about ten days, when I left her feeling some better, and improving. During that time the babe of Bro. James Donaldson was buried, and a great deal of sickness, such as never was witnessed in that part of the country before, was raging, and many deaths occurred, principally among the aged and children. There were not enough well persons to care for the sick.

Last week Bro. J. S. Roth held some meetings at Hastie, but on account of bad roads the meetings were brought to a close, and he is now in the city on his way home, to await an improvement in the roads. Many of the Saints in the city were glad to see Bro. Roth once more.

It has been decided to begin a missionary effort at the church in the city next Tuesday. The interest in the city is improving, greater spirituality being enjoyed than ever before, and a great longing is taking hold upon the young to rise higher in intellectual attainments, and better prepare themselves for greater usefulness in the church. All the departments for good in the church are being represented in the city, and all are working together for the glory of God; and all are doing equally well in their sphere of work. Elder Ward Christy will help with the special missionary efforts, and we hope to have others of the brethren call in for a night or more while they last and minister for us. Cottage meetings have been held in two places this week, but on account of the roads not many have been in attendance, but an interest shown by those present.

The improved appearance and nature of the Autumn Leaves is noticed by the Saints here.

Elder Frederick M. Smith stopped off with us for several days on a trip to secure literary material of value to the church, and preached for us twice on Sunday, which was of interest to the Saints that could attend. His visit to the city was much appreciated, and we hope to see him again soon. The most cordial treatment was shown him by all whom we met, and willing assistance was offered him in his work. It was quite noticeable that he did not shrink to represent the church and his relationship with it wherever he was, and none treated him with any less respect that could be observed. God is truly giving the church and her representatives grace in the eyes of the people, in perfect harmony with his promises.

My faith grows brighter every day, and the demand for a better understanding among ourselves as representatives of the faith is more apparent. My anxiety to see this unity of understanding grows day by day. The intellectuality of the Saints is outgrowing their spirituality, but if both could grow in equal proportions, what a happy condition would exist. May God speed the day.

Your brother,

J. F. MINTUN.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, March 4, 1905.

Editors Herald: There could not, to my mind, be a better and more truthful answer to Bro. E. Rannie's inquiry of a few weeks ago as published in SAINTS' HERALD, as to why it is that with double the missionary force in the field the additions to the church are no greater than they were fourteen years ago, than is given in a letter extract from him in HERALD of March 1, 1905.

Bro. Rannie says: "A strange and somewhat peculiar condition of affairs, religiously, exists here. During the past summer efforts were made to reach the people by personal invitation, distributing tracts, and newspaper notices. The press has been very generous to the ministry here, the hall is in a convenient and pleasant place, the Saints have a good name among their neighbors, the church has not been disgraced by acts of unrighteousness, and yet it is impossible to get people to come and hear. Hundreds pass by the hall during services, many have made their personal promises to come, even asking when the service would be held, yet during the entire conference only two that were not members were present. Is it possible that in a city of sixteen thousand so few can be found who will listen to the angel's message, or has not God's set time to feel after them yet come?"

The same conditions, to a greater or lesser extent, prevail throughout the world, and are growing worse each succeeding year. Men are constantly growing more indifferent to the gospel message. Business and pleasure occupy almost entirely their attention to its exclusion.

There may be, and no doubt are, other causes leading up to this undesirable result, but the writer regards the one given as predominant.

T. J. SMITH.

Independence Items.

The father of his country, they tell us, was a landed aristocrat and a powerful leader of industry; and it is said that the colonists knew whichever way he went the great and moneyed interests would follow; so England saw that the Revolution was "no irresponsible uprising of a mob, for the richest and most influential colonists were at the head of it."

Looking down the stream of time, there comes to view another colony,—some of the children of the forefathers, who amid many hardships came, with their prophet-leader, to "the waste places of Zion," and this historic place. They came to plant the seeds of the gospel fullness, of a truer independence and a loftier citizenship, and with no prestige of wealth or power to develop a people who should be loyal to both the laws of God and man. They had more to combat than military forces, for they had to meet in warfare legions of spirits filled with superstition and fierce prejudice.

But they went forward with Christian fortitude, and though men say they were utterly defeated, their memory and patient suffrance are, in the minds of Latter Day Saints, crowned with honor and reverence.

Of late the Saints' meetings have been somewhat diminished in attendance on account of the exceptionally cold weather and abundance of snow, but very favorable comment concerning the discourses by Brn. Bond, Carmichael, Garrett, and Russell has been heard.

There is frequently heard the complaint that the pleasure of meeting with the Saints in the lower room is very much lessened because of the heaviness and impurity of the atmosphere; but according to the recent answer of a celebrated doctor to the question, "Can we live without poisons?" the "fresh-air cranks" have received a set-back by the conclusive theory of Doctor Mosso of Turin who says the element which is found in close rooms is conducive to health and is what the chemists call carbon dioxide: it is thrown off from the lungs in breathing. He says a certain amount of this "poison" is necessary to health and even life. So let us who get nervous in the crowded meetings, snatch up our coat, hat, and rubbers, and leave for the out-door air, take comfort and a little carbon dioxide gracefully.

As to general news, the Missourians who are looking for a chance to better their fortunes are told to look out for opportunities offered through the full turning over by the Government of the productive gas and oil fields of the Osages in the fine agricultural lands of Northeastern Oklahoma.

The "Amerindian" races are fast becoming a civilized and a "delightful people."

The cold snap of recent date they say has killed almost the entire peach crop of this State. In some localities the temperature fell from twenty to twenty-five below zero. Apples and small fruit, such as raspberries and blackberries, are not much damaged.

A lot of land formerly occupied by the "Mormons" at Council Bluffs has been discovered to have no owner, and although valued at several thousand dollars was never claimed. The owner of a lumber-yard adjacent has been paying taxes upon it, as it is said, through the carelessness of the assessor.

The sermon on polygamy, by R. C. Evans, as published by the Ensign recently, has been forwarded to Mrs. T. B. Roberts, Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania, whose address on Mormonism as published recently contained a few misstatements in regard to the origin of that tenet.

A certain college professor has been arousing the ire of the higher critics by saying, "Our Bible is but the mould of two thousand years ago into which were poured the fundamental principles of religion." President Schurman, of Cornell, goes on to state that "there is no history in the Bible because the Hebrews never wrote history." Our critic thinks that first clause is all right excepting the "but" and does not like students of a college to hear such a puerile statement as is contained in the last clause because if true it is unimportant. Wonder what he would say of what is contained in "the three books." Whether they be history or not may the light reflected from their pages be shed abundantly abroad, and the honest in heart find the Savior's instruction therein to be "plain to their comprehension and conclusive to their judgment."

Concerning the afflicted ones among our number, a few have recovered, but one or two of the Saints need an interest in our faith and prayers. Mention may be made of our beloved Brn. Joseph Luff and B. L. Ballenger, of the south side, also Srs. Eunice Hart and F. E. Lytle, all of whom have been sorely afflicted for quite a while back.

Later. We hear Brn. S. Pilgrim and Joseph Luff are improving. ABBIE A. HORTON.

February 22, 1905.

The Independence Stake Sunday-school association is holding its convention at the Stone Church with about the usual number, nearly sixty, in attendance this morning, Sr. M. Blair presiding, Pearl Gardner secretary. The home department was reported as being in excellent working order. The Sunshine Band was also represented by its leader, who has charge in this city of about forty little ones, and in a well-written paper Miss Florence Sterrett gave a history and outline of work done here.

There is a perceptible improvement in the attendance at the mid-week prayer-meetings and on Sunday afternoons the lower room, where they are held is generally crowded.

Lately several of the sick and afflicted have sent in requests for prayers and the testimonies given have referred to individual progress, increase of spiritual power of the elders in administering to the sick and the overcoming of evil influences.

Two deaths have occurred lately.—Sr. Elizabeth Christmas, who was well known both here and in Kansas City, Elder F. C. Warnky preaching the funeral-sermon; also Bro. Isaac Eldredge, who has spent nearly four years with the Saints here and was at his death well advanced in years. Bro. Hulmes was in charge of the obsequies.

Bro. May two Sundays ago preached in the morning on the subject of equality, quoting many passages from the Inspired Translation, also Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. He referred to the different conditions among the Saints, the necessity of keeping the whole law, their duty as to building up the work and at the close of a profitable and forceful sermon took up the subject of Graceland College for which donations were solicited.

On Monday evening, February 27, a meeting was held in the lower room for the purpose of considering the subject of coöperation, this being the second of the series. Several of the brethren presented their views, among them Brn. Peak and May, who with Brn. Gunsolley and Lightfoot occupied the platform, also Bro. Clow, who in a lengthy address set forth his interpretation of the Scriptures on the subject of Usury, and Brn. White and Winning who spoke favorably of the Saints' coöperative company, brought out the thought that "the corners" are not held by the producer nor the consumer, but by "corporate greed and domination."

Doctrine and Covenants, section 101, was read and interpreted by some of the brethren, and while some thought all business interests should be kept entirely apart from the domination of the church, others believed its officials were duly appointed to govern and protect its membership and "have the lawful and special watchcare of all its interests" as well as to teach its doctrines and administer its rites.

Many topics of interest are presented which enlist the Saints' attention; but the things that closely pertain to the work are dearest to their hearts. A few of our people have been greatly afflicted and Bro. and Sr. Luff, also Sr. McCauley, with others, are enlisting the sympathy of the Saints because of their serious physical condition. ABBIE A. HORTON.

Extracts from Letters.

Grace C. Diggle, Nutana, Saskatchewan: "We have been in the beautiful Saskatchewan Valley for nearly a year and thought we would let the elders know that a few Saints are here but so far apart that it is only possible to meet in summer. We live four miles from Haultain Siding and one mile north of the Assiniboia on section ten, township thirty-five, range four."

Sarah E. Rush, Lexington, Tennessee: "The HERALD has been a welcome visitor to our home for a long time, and I have received much encouragement from it. We are strong in the faith and trying to live our religion as best we can. We had a letter from Bro. Snow yesterday and were indeed pleased to learn that he is coming here in March. The people here say they want him to come and preach a month. I long to see some way provided by which we may have the privilege of living near some of our faith. We are talking of changing our location another year."

Mary Nash, Thamesville, . . . : "I have been a member of the church about fifteen years, having joined when I was a little girl about ten years of age; but I seem to have been asleep all that time. Now, I thank God that I feel very much awake. I am married and have four small children, but am very sorry to say my husband is not a Saint. I am trying to bring my children up in the right way, and with God's help I think I shall. To the young Saints I say, Take warning. Do not marry outside of the church. It is a mistake, as I know well to my own sorrow. I ask the prayers of the Saints for my father, James Perritt, that he may recover his health and hearing. I desire to be remembered in your prayers."

C. J. Spurlock, Bungay, Illinois: "Our late district conference at Springerton passed off quite pleasantly. Among other important things transpiring was the marriage of our collaborator, Elder F. L. Sawley, to Miss Ella Leatherman, the ceremony being performed by Amos T. Higdon. Five delegates were chosen to represent us at conference. Brethren and sisters who expect to attend General Conference, let us prepare ourselves in heart for that event, that God may use us to his glory and honor, and that we may not be used as tools of Satan to build up his kingdom."

L. C. Donaldson, Riverton, Iowa: "We are still battling for the truth in church and Sunday-school work. Bro. D. R. Chambers held meeting north of Riverton with large attendance and good order."

N. S. Dunnington, Shinnston, West Virginia: "I was locked out of the Union church at Enterprise, three miles below here, but I preached at the home of Sr. Leason's son-in-law, who told the people that they could lock me out of the church, but he carried the key to his house and they could not lock me out of his house. I met Bro. S. O. Foss at Shinnston, and he preached eight times in the opera-house where I had been preaching."

F. C. Warnky, Kansas City, Missouri: "Everything moving along nicely. We are beginning to be understood in our true light here in the city. Many people are looking upon us favorably, and are willing to listen to us. I look for a good harvest here this summer."

A. Holbrook, Eaton Rapids, Michigan: "Sometime ago an elder wrote us. I think his name was Granger. We have moved four miles from Eaton Rapids, and I have lost his letter. If this brother should come, and will notify us, we will meet him at the station. I have a son in Seattle, who has obeyed the gospel, and I would be glad to have some of the elders call on him. His address is E. B. Holbrook, 4713 Eleventh Avenue, Northeast Seattle, Washington."

C. J. Hunt, Harlan, Iowa: "I am holding a series of meetings here with fair interest. A Reverend Helmick, Methodist, of Salt Lake City, lectured on Utah and Mormonism here last Saturday night. I called on him soon after his arrival and requested that a distinction be made between us and the Utah faction. He said he would favor us and did so. His lecture was quite fair all the way through. He told me that he remembered hearing our own Bro. Chase expose Mormonism on the streets of Salt Lake City. I had two articles published in the papers before the lecture setting forth some points of our faith and assuring the people that B. Young was the author of polygamy in America."

She was born in Essex County, England; came to America in 1856 and went to Utah. Married Bro. Stuart in 1858. They came away in 1861 and lived in Canada till 1871. Then to Atchison, Kansas, where they united with the Reorganized Church. She was baptized by Bro. George Thomas, September 10, 1871. From 1881 to 1889 they lived at Alliston, Ontario, then came to Lamoni. Funeral sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Bro. J. R. Lambert.

WOODS.—Mary Bates was born in Staffordshire, England, in the village of Bucknol, September 5, 1825. She was married to James Wood in 1842. To this union were born eleven children, three sons and eight daughters, seven of whom have preceded her to the other world. The four surviving children are John Wood of Eldorado Springs, Missouri, Mrs. Fannie Gilmore, Coalgate, Indian Territory, James Wood, and Mrs. Emma Worden of this place. She was the grandmother of forty-one children and the great-grandmother of thirty children. Her husband preceded her in death sixteen years ago. She united with the Latter Day Saints church in 1868, and was a faithful member up to the time of her death. She with her husband came to America in 1851. Thirty-six years of her life were spent near Stewartsville. She died at her home in this city January 13, 1905. The funeral-services were conducted by Elder T. T. Hinderks, and the remains were interred in the McKee Cemetery two and one half miles north of town.

SPARLING.—At Sherwood, North Dakota, February 9, 1905, Martha, second daughter of William and Emma Sparling. She suffered fifty-six days in patient resignation. Was interred at the home farm, ten miles north of Mohall. Owing to severe weather, forty-three below zero, only a few Saints and friends were present. Exercises conducted by B. E. Bergersen. Her passing away was very peaceful and quiet.

YOUNG.—Eva Young, daughter of Mr. Charles and Sr. Eva Young of Riverside, Rhode Island, passed away Sunday, February 5, at 4 a. m., after several weeks of severe sickness. She was five years and six months old, and her loss is deeply mourned by her parents. But their trust is reposed in God and they hope to see her again in the resurrection of the just. Was accidentally drowned through his yacht capsizing whilst sailing from Iremantle to Mandurah, Western Australia, December 24, 1904. James was the third son of Elder E. G. and Mary Barry Jones. He was not a member of any denomination but we have reason to believe would have become a member of the Reorganization had his life been spared. James is survived by his sorrowing wife, mother, three brothers, and four sisters besides a host of friends.

PETITT.—Addie Pettitt, born February 19, 1862, at Boonville, Missouri; died at Holden, Missouri, January 25, 1905. Baptized December 22, 1889, at Knobnoster, Missouri, by J. H. Wells. Funeral-sermon by George Jenkins, from Job 14: 14.

She united with the church August 19, 1897, being baptized by John T. Kinnaman, and remained faithful to her covenant to the last. Funeral by O. H. Bailey, February 24, 1905.

VINCE.—Charles H., was born in Zone, Kent County, Ontario, August 15, 1873, and united with the Latter Day Saints when fourteen years of age, and lived a consistent member until the time of his death. He united in marriage to Miss Lecoq in 1899, and was a resident of Walkerville at the time of his death. He leaves a wife, father, mother, two brothers, and two sisters to mourn their loss. The funeral-services were conducted by Elder S. Brown of Stevenson.

JACOBS.—Bro. Odin Jacobs was born December 1, 1820, at Ombo, Norway. Died at his home in Radcliff, Iowa, January 27, 1905. Came to America with his widowed mother at the age of fifteen years. Stayed in the state of New York one year, then to Illinois, near Norway, LaSalle County. From there he moved to near Leland and settled on a farm, where he resided until the year 1888, when he moved to Iowa, near Radcliff. Bro. Jacobs was married in 1848 to Rebecca Buland. To this union eleven children were born, of whom eight have gone over to the other side before him, while S. C. Jacobs of Leland, Illinois, Mrs. W. H. Grover of Creston, Illinois, and Mrs. S. L. Iverson of Radcliff, Iowa, and his aged companion remain to mourn his departure. But what is their loss is his gain. He united with the church in 1867, being baptized by Zenas H. Gurley, Sr.; ordained elder by same the same year. Presided over the Leland Branch until all the members moved away and the branch became disorganized. Bro. Jacobs was a firm believer in this latter-day work and faithful in keeping the law of tithing to which he attributed all his success and prosperity temporarily. Funeral-sermon by Elder Thomas Hougas at the Lutheran church at Leland, Illinois. Interment in the cemetery southeast of Leland.

I Know Quit-to-Bac Will Cure. It is a God-Given Remedy

So says Bro. I. M. Dungan of Woodbine, Iowa. Writing July 3, 1904, says: "After having used tobacco for 30 years I feel that I am thoroughly cured of the habit by the use of your 'Quit-to-bac.' I commenced using 'Quit-to-bac' March 8, 1904, and used two and one half boxes, and have had no desire for the past two months, my health is better every way and I feel like a new man. I feel that I can not speak too highly of the merits of 'Quit-to-bac,' for I believe 'Quit-to-bac' to be a God-given remedy, that it will cure one of the most filthy and useless habits Satan ever invented, therefore I unqualifiedly recommend it to all addicted to the use of tobacco in any form, and will cheerfully answer inquiries from any one as to my case—how I treated myself, etc., if a stamp is inclosed. SAFEGUARDS IN CHURCH GOVERNMENT. ARE THE PEOPLE SAFE?

The one thing most to be feared in a kingly government is kingcraft; in an ecclesiastical government is priestcraft.

In a kingly government, if the king is a good man who loves his subjects and is willing to share in the adversities incident to the condition of his kingdom in relation to other kingdoms and nations in its time and place, has the interests of all his subjects at heart and unselfishly gives his attention and efforts to alleviate their distresses, improve their characters, and enhance their every good, then in such a case a kingly rule may be tolerated. But when a king is too susceptible to love of display, love of power, intent upon gratifying himself in ruling for his own benefit and aggrandizement, too intolerant, careless of and indifferent to the good of others, the rule of a king becomes unbearable.

A king is liable to be surrounded by a band of courtiers more or less subservient to his will according to their nature and the object held in view by them in regard to their own interest and advancement.

The pageantry of the court of an earthly king is dazzling. Strong and good men see in it the hollow mockery of human interest and frailty; weak and unstable men take part in it to gratify their lust of the eye and desire for the spectacular; bad men bow to the king and mix in the pomp and revelry to cover up evil designs and forward their own selfish ends. The free man, in view of the instability of human affairs in a kingly rule resulting from the liability of humanity to err, and the corrupting influence always attendant upon a kingly court, can have no desire for such a rule. Added to these things mentioned is the almost universal liability that the possession and exercise of irresponsible power results in fixing upon the mind of the occupant of a throne that "the king can do no wrong," and turns a good man bad and makes a bad man a wicked one; under the rule of such the liberties of the people are insecure, repressed, or altogether disregarded.

An ecclesiasticism in which there is a centralization of power in a ruling head may be as dangerous to the liberties of the people in a spiritual sense as a kingly rule of despotism may be to political and temporal welfare. Priestcraft is subversive of the good of those over whom it rules. The idea that the priesthood can do no wrong, or that all the words and acts of a spiritual ruler are directed by divine wisdom and power, is a dangerous fallacy, and wherever either becomes a rule of acceptance of what is said or done and forms a basis of action on the part of the people bad results are sure to follow. Just as a king may become corrupt and turn his rule into unequal and evil ways for self-aggrandizement and oppression, so may evil creep in and take captive the priestly ruler and make merchandise of the people's rights and subvert their liberties to selfish ends.

History confirms these propositions.

In the restoration of the gospel by the discovery of the Book of Mormon and the revival of the principle of revelation, the Lord has been mindful of the results to his people of the rule of kings and priests in wickedness. Whatever may have been the rules of organization and procedure in church government as set forth in the Bible and in religious bodies, abundant safeguards have been provided to secure the people against encroachment on the part of irresponsible rulers. There is no need to discuss the "divine right of kings to rule." The Lord has said "in time ye shall have no king on this land." This takes this danger out of the way. Is there danger from priestcraft? Joseph Smith, the Seer, wrote, "If any man exercises his priesthood in any degree of unrighteousness," "amen to that man's priesthood." This shows that God does not intend that what he conferred to bless men should be used to subvert their faith or destroy their liberties.

One of the earliest revelations given at the very beginning recognized the necessity for distinctive organizations within the body; holding one common priesthood—right to act—and having different offices acting in harmony each with every other for the establishment and carrying out of one common object.

Of necessity, there are presidents, or presiding offices, growing out of, or appointed of, or from among those who are ordained to the several offices in these two priesthoods. Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the presidency of the church. The twelve traveling counselors are called to be the twelve apostles, or special witnesses of the name of Christ, in all the world; thus differing from other officers in the church in the duties of their calling. And they form a quorum equal in authority and power to the three presidents previously mentioned. The seventy are also called to preach the gospel, and to be especial witnesses unto the Gentiles and in all the world—thus differing from other officers in the church in the duties of their calling; and they form a quorum equal in authority to that of the twelve especial witnesses, or apostles, just named. And every decision made by either of these quorums must be by the unanimous voice of the same; that is, every member in each quorum must be agreed to its decisions, in order to make these decisions of the same power or validity one with the other.

Nothing could be plainer than this. In order to the proper carrying on of the work a division of responsibility and authority in labor was a necessity. To preserve the liberties of the people over whom the men who might be appointed or chosen by themselves to preside, instead of there being but one in whom authority is vested without the responsibility of answering to any for official action, and whose priesthood is made superior to that held by others, there are three who are to be chosen and appointed from among those holding a priesthood the same as themselves, neither lower, nor higher. These by the choice which their fellow members in the priesthood with them are invested with the duty of presiding—having chief official charge—for the accomplishment of the common object of the whole body. They are made a responsible quorum upon whom the dignity of office rests only as they discharge the duties placed upon them in faithfulness and honor. By the investiture of presiding authority they are authorized to represent the body in accordance with the fundamental institutions and spiritual constitution of the church under the divine instruction of the Holy Spirit.

In order that the people may be safe from the undue advantage of the position accorded to this leading quorum in case ambition seize them or any one of them to the overriding of the integrity of the others, two other quorums composed of larger numbers are provided, the members of which quorums hold the same priesthood as these presiding officers, each quorum being invested with equal authority in decision, so that if the three presidents should attempt to take from the people any, or all the liberties that membership in the church entitles them to, it is in the power of the Twelve and Seventy to check such ambition and secure the people from imposition.

Should either quorum attempt to introduce into the corporate body false doctrine, or to institute what would vitiate the spiritual life of the people, whether such effort arose from the spontaneous action of the quorum, or was the result of the ambitious efforts of one to serve the ends of selfish desire to rule, such attempt may be met by the other two and must fail of effect.

There are three in the first quorum, twelve in the second, there may be thirty-six, or four hundred and ninety members in the third. In the church as now organized there are about one hundred and thirty in the Seventy, one full quorum and one nearly full. No measure tending to the subversion of the liberties of the people, originating in either quorum, could possibly pass the scrutiny of the other two, unless there should be such collusion between the membership of all of them as is inconceivable under the light of present information and personal integrity known to exist in these several quorums. We know of no body of religionists having an organized existence the membership of which is so amply safeguarded against extreme imposition from misguided or ambitious men as is the Church of Jesus Christ organized April 6, 1830, by virtue of divinely enacted organic laws given to govern its spiritual existence and continuation.

JOSEPH SMITH,
President Reorganized Church.

SOME FACTS CONCERNING EMMA SMITH.

In the fourth volume of our Church History, page 267, after speaking of the death of Emma Smith, which occurred on April 30, 1879, we find the following:

Soon after the death of her husband a report was circulated that she had renounced the faith her husband taught, and had expressed lack of confidence in his claims. The New York Sun for December 9, 1845, contained a letter over her signature giving expression to these doubts. She promptly wrote the following reply and forwarded it to the Sun:

“NAUVOO, December 30, 1845.

“To the Editor of the New York Sun; Sir: I wish to inform you, and the public through your paper, that the letter published Tuesday morning, December 9, is a forgery, the whole of it, and I hope that this notice will put a stop to all such communications.

“EMMA SMITH.”

Whether this was published in the Sun or not we do not know; but it was published in Times and Seasons, for January 15, 1846. (See volume 6, page 1096.)

There are those who have constantly made effort to besmirch the name of Emma Smith and to detract from her dignity and strength as a character connected with the history of the church. They have attempted to use the letter in the New York Sun, for December 9, 1845, against her, but neglected to state or use her denial.

Our Church History states that this denial was printed in Times and Seasons, for January 15, 1846; but that the historians did not know whether it was published in the Sun or not. While in the East last fall we improved the opportunity of looking this up, and searched through the libraries of New York City for a file of the Sun covering that period, but did not find numbers of the Sun for the years 1845 or 1846 except in the Congressional Library at Washington. In the New York Sun, for December 19, 1845, we found the following:

THE MORMONS—EMMA'S LETTER.

To the Editor of the New York Sun:

Sir: You have intimated that I pronounced the letter of Mrs. Emma Smith, widow of Joseph the Prophet, published by you some day since, genuine. When young Mr. Beach presented that letter to me for my opinion of its character, I told him that I had no other means of judging of its authenticity than that it expressed facts respecting myself which were known to no other person than Mrs. Smith, and, consequently, that it must have emanated from her, or some person in her confidence.

That the letter expresses the true sentiments of that very talented lady, I think quite probable; but as regards her saying there are no schools in Nauvoo, I presume she means at the present time, when everything there is in disorder. I can myself bear testimony that not long since there were several schools in Nauvoo, in successful operation, including a very superior one, conducted by Mr. Orson Pratt, brother to the celebrated Parley P. Pratt.

This Mr. Orson Pratt is a most amiable gentleman and excellent mathematician, who, as a professor, would do honor to any college or academy in the United States.

You will please to recollect, however, that there is a split, or rather some little trouble in the church, as William, brother-in-law to Mrs. Emma Smith, who, together with Emma, wished to scatter the Mormons from Nauvoo to their various homes throughout the different States, has been cut off from the church, and Emma, together with her whole family, will, no doubt, share the same fate. The line of the PROPHETS is to be by inspiration, and not by blood, as "he who holds the keys of the kingdom" will hold the prophetic office throughout all time.

“He that despiseth little things, shall perish by little and little.”—Solomon.

Mrs. Emma Smith does me injustice in charging me with any intention to do her the smallest injury by my urging the Mormon people to move to California, for, most assuredly, it is the best possible measure they can adopt.

When, according to Emma, I shall have been "crowned Emperor" of the Mormon people west of the Rocky Mountains, perhaps that talented and accomplished lady may be disposed to join the Mormon court. As soon, therefore, as the authorities of the church announce to me my election to the Imperial purple, I shall cause to be made a magnificent imperial crown of gold, set with brilliants, for myself, and another, still richer, rayed, like the sun, for the Prophet of the Lord!

Recollect that the Mormon government is a pure THEOCRACY. Jure Divino will, therefore, be my model.

But, without undertaking to advocate the cause of Mormonism—for it needs no special pleading of mine, excepting with an eye to the Diadem—I would just say, that Emma's disbelief in the revelations of her husband, if such is the fact, does not militate in the least against their truth. The members of our own families are always the least disposed to give credence to anything we may propose or assert, of a supernatural or extraordinary character.

The biographer of Milton, the author of the immortal Paradise Lost, assures us that his daughters often wished their blind father dead while dictating to them that great poem; nor had the wife of Socrates much respect for his mission or morality, still Socrates was a great master, who had, besides Xenophon and Plato, many able and learned disciples.

With great respect,

Your humble servant,

JAMES ARLINGTON BENNETT.

Note.—In addition to the above, you will, no doubt, permit me to say, that I have four fine farms, of one hundred and sixty acres each, first-rate prairie, for sale, low, lying along side of the Illinois and Michigan Canal. My brother, the Reverend Leonard Bennet, resides in the same neighborhood.

J. A. B.

Arlington House, L. I., Dec. 14, 1845.

It is quite evident from the foregoing that the editors of the Sun had received Emma Smith's letter denouncing the one published in the issue of December 9 as a fraud, and they in turn had referred the matter to Mr. James Arlington Bennett, as one who had been corresponding for the Sun a great deal on the subject of Mormonism, having recently visited the frontier West and having written several letters concerning Nauvoo and the Mormons.

In the Sun for January 25, 1846, we found the following:

ARLINGTON HOUSE, State of Long Island,

February 16, 1845. [1846.—F. M. S.]

Mr. Editor: The following letter is offered for publication in strict justice to Mrs. Emma Smith, of Nauvoo, who appears to have no knowledge of the author of the letter published by you some time since in her name, censuring the publication of letters sent by me from the West, in relation to the Mormon leaders. From this letter I am fully persuaded that the lady is incapable of betraying any confidence reposed in her.—She must look for its author among some of the seceders from the Mormon Church.

Respectfully your humble servant,

JAS. ARLINGTON BENNETT.

"NAUVOO, December 20, 1845.

"General Bennett, Sir:—The apology I have to offer for addressing you this time is the unexpected appearance of a letter published in the New York Sun of Tuesday morning, December 9. I never was more confounded with misrepresentation than I am with that letter; and I am greatly perplexed that you should entertain the impression, that the document should be a genuine production of mine. How could you believe me capable of so much treachery, as to violate the confidence reposed in me, and bring your name before the public in the manner that letter represents? If you thought I had committed such a breach of trust, you certainly valued my integrity much less than I did yours. Should you be now satisfied that I am not unworthy of your confidence you will please to give me your opinion, if any you have formed, as to what quarter I am to look for the author of that forgery. By so doing you will greatly increase my obligations.

"Yours with great respect,

"EMMA SMITH."

It thus appears that while the editors of the New York Sun evidently failed or refused to publish Emma Smith's letter dated December 30, 1845, and directed to them, they did publish the letter which was written to Mr. Bennett and which denounces as a fraud the letter in the issue for December 9, in language about as strong and comprehensive as is found in the letter dated December 20, written to the editor of the New York Sun, and also published in the Times and Seasons for January 15, 1846.

FRED'K M. SMITH.

INTERVIEW WITH JAMES H. KENNEDY.

While in New York City last fall the writer had the privilege of meeting and conversing with Mr. James H. Kennedy, author of Early Days of Mormonism. We had read Mr. Kennedy's book on the early days of Mormonism, and were interested in learning from him if he still held to some of the positions maintained in the book, and especially as to the character of Joseph Smith. We thought that possibly some of his subsequent readings and research relating to the subject since the publication of the book had had some bearing on his attitude.

From our conversation we learned that his attitude had to some extent changed, and hence we asked him for a statement concerning this. This statement he willingly consented to make, and is as follows. We have pleasure in presenting this to our readers, as it will be of great interest especially to those who have read Mr. Kennedy's work:

So much has appeared in the way of additional light on the life and character of Joseph Smith, the founder of Mormonism, during the last decade and a half, that were I to rewrite to-day my book, which gives a history of the church during the first fourteen years of its existence, I would feel inclined to deal a little less harshly with the character and methods of the first Joseph Smith, president and prophet of your church. While it would be impossible for me to believe that the "Book of Mormon" was a divine revelation to Smith, it is within the range of possibility that he may have regarded his mission as one of divine origin, and been actuated by a spirit of loyalty to what he regarded as the mission of his life. Still, there are many things in his career which would not permit one to take that position without some form of mental reservation.

Joseph Smith lived in an age in which religious enthusiasm and credulity were carried to an extreme limit, and there were many others besides himself who believed that a time had returned when divine interposition in the affairs of men was to be resumed. I would not say that he was any more or any less inclined to impose upon the religious credulity of other people, than were some of the orthodox denominations around him.

As I have said already, some portion of the stigma that is attached to his name, has been removed by the fuller light of the last dozen years. In my opinion, Brigham Young was the originator of the theory of plural wifehood or polygamy. No matter what may be said of the personal life of Joseph Smith, I do not believe that he was the author of the revelation ordering plural wifehood, that was promulgated by Brigham Young. The evidence now on hand is very much in favor of the theory that Young wished to introduce this doctrine after reaching Salt Lake City, and in doing so, reverted to the authority of the first Joseph Smith, as making his case much stronger than it would otherwise have been.

Mr. Kennedy's book, Early Days of Mormonism, was published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York, in 1888, and deals with the history of the Saints at Palmyra, Kirtland, and Nauvoo.

Upon the adjournment of the joint council, the Board of Trustees of Graceland College at a special meeting, all the members being present, adopted the following:

PREAMBLES AND RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas the conference in session at Kirtland, Ohio, took action favoring the closing of the college without regard to a provision in the Articles of Incorporation requiring sixty days' notice in case of change of said articles, thereby doing injustice to a number of students and to parties who had purchased scholarships and made donations, when a year's notice would seem none too long to take such action in a matter so important, and

Whereas the sacrifice made in closing the college at this time is entirely too great, both by losing the services of President Dewsnap by reason of his educational standing; together with the extra expense of securing a president who, if his equal, would cost us several thousand dollars more for the term for which he has been engaged, and the discouragement it may cause to the many who have given it their aid in many ways, and who have cause to fear the stability of an institution which may be closed with scarcely a moment's notice, and

Whereas a resolution was presented later in the conference than the foregoing, by the Quorum of Twelve, favoring the running of the college as soon as the debt was paid, the board believing such to be the sentiment of the church membership generally, and that the closing of the college at the end of this year will present almost insurmountable obstacles to its reopening, and having an assurance from the Bishopric that active measures will be taken at once looking to the immediate liquidation of the debt,

Therefore be it resolved by the Board of Trustees of Graceland College in special session assembled on this twelfth day of May, 1904, that we immediately proceed with the work of procuring and electing members of the faculty, the distribution of catalogues, and the performing of such other duties as are prescribed by the Articles of Incorporation to continue the college in session for the next year; it is understood, however, that such action is to be taken contingent upon the debt against the college being paid.

DANIEL ANDERSON, Chairman Board of Trustees.
FRED B. BLAIR, Secretary Board of Trustees.

The Bishopric took action as follows:

The foregoing, showing the situation and needs of the college, indicates clearly the present duty of the Bishopric in connection therewith, for we are not only to do what we can to forward every proper undertaking for the good of the church and its membership, but we are instructed by resolution of conference to carry out the divine injunction to "pay the college debt."

We have therefore arranged to present the work of the payment of the debt in a systematic manner, apportioning the entire undertaking among the districts of the church so that each shall be called upon to bear but its own burden in this matter, and when the duty shall have been discharged such district membership will have fully performed its part.

Already members in several of the districts have asked us to let them know what would be their part in this undertaking, accompanied with the assurance that they would do their utmost to perform their part at once.

With the foregoing explanatory statement the Bishopric will state to the several bishops and agents of the church the amount to be raised by their respective districts under the apportionment, with instructions to arrange with other officers of the districts and branches to place the matter before the Saints at the earliest practicable time, and report the results to the Bishop of the church.

In the work then of the liquidation of the entire college debt we ask the help and co-operation of every officer and member of the church, and trust that the Spirit and blessing of the Lord may be with each one in his or her effort, that whatever is pleasing to him that should be done in the matter may be done speedily and well.

The instructions will be forwarded to each district immediately and notice will be given of the action of each district in the order in which the same is received.

Hopefully in the promises of the gospel, we are in bonds ever,

of the Bishopric.

Accordingly the school was opened as usual in September, 1904, and despite the terrible handicap of the agitation due to the passing of the resolution favoring the closing of the school, did fairly well as to enrollment of students. The wide territory from whence these students are drawn (and this despite the claim made by some that Graceland is chiefly local in its benefits) is graphically illustrated by the accompanying cut, in which are shown representatives from territory ranging from Massachusetts on the east to Arizona on the west, and Assiniboia on the north to Texas on the south.

In giving the foregoing history of the educational movement in the church, we have confined ourselves to presenting documentary extracts from official records.

Other phases of the question could be taken up with interest and profit, but such must be reserved for future issues of the HERALD.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH.

How far in the past unseen influences were at work to bring about conditions and influences favorable to the establishment of the church in the last dispensation, it is impossible for us to determine. But we see indications in history that the influences of inspiration were suggesting to different minds the coming of such an event. An utterance of Martin Luther as recorded in D'Aubigne's History of the Reformation, volume 2, page 105, is an instance in point: "I can not tell what to say of myself. Perhaps I am Phillip's [Melancthon's] forerunner. I upon his mind that he concluded to put the promise to the test, and retiring into the woods he prayed for the desired information. He relates that while praying, and after a season of darkness, he beheld a glorious light descending until it had settled in the air above him. In it were two persons, one of whom introduced the other as his son, and directed the young man to hear him. Eagerly the inquiry was made concerning existing churches, and he was informed that none of them were fully acceptable to God, but that he had been selected as the human instrument to begin a great work that should have for its consummation the organization and establishment of the kingdom of God on earth.

Subsequently, on September 21, 1823, he had another ministration of divine direction, in which an angel of light appeared to him and gave him instruction calculated to prepare him for future work. This messenger also informed him that some gold plates upon which was recorded the history of the people once inhabiting this continent, now called America, were deposited in a hill near by. These he subsequently obtained by the consent and direction am preparing the way for him, like Elias, in spirit and in power."

Also several statements made by the great reformer, John Wesley, from which we select the following:

The times which we have reason to believe are at hand, (if they are not already begun,) are what many pious men have termed, the time of "the latter-day glory";—meaning, the time wherein God would gloriously display his power and love, in the fulfillment of his gracious promise that "the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth, as the waters cover the sea."

What could God have done which he hath not done, to convince you that the day is coming, that the time is at hand, when he will fulfill his glorious promises; when he will arise to maintain his own cause, and to set up his kingdom over all the earth?—Wesley's Sermons, vol. 2, sermon 71.

However, the first direct information given of the purpose of God in this important work, was in the year 1820, when Joseph Smith, having been greatly exercised in mind over religious questions, and seeking earnestly to find the truth, was confronted by the contradictory teachings of professors, and was reading the promise in the Epistle of James, "If any of you lack wisdom," etc. It had such an impression of the messenger, and was permitted to translate them by the power of God. This translation was published under the title, "Book of Mormon."

While viewing the plates prior to his taking possession of them, the angel was with him, and gave him instruction calculated to qualify him for the important work to which he was appointed. He states: "I found the same messenger there and received instruction and intelligence from him at each of our interviews respecting what the Lord was going to do, and how and in what manner his kingdom was to be conducted in the last days."

We are not aware that this information received from the messenger has ever been given to the church or the world in detail; but it evidently prepared the mind of Joseph Smith for the events that were to transpire in the establishment and development of the kingdom of God on earth so far as he was permitted to participate. Some of the leading events in this development are: Conferring the Aaronic priesthood upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery by the administration of John the Baptist.

of whom it was said that he held the keys of that priesthood; and subsequently the restoration of the Melchisedec priesthood under the administration of Peter, James, and John, who held the keys of that priesthood in the former dispensation. By virtue of the authority thus conferred, the organization of the church was begun at Fayette, Seneca County, New York, on the sixth day of April, 1830, there being but six members present. By the voice of the membership, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were accepted as ministers and teachers.

Previous to this time information had been received of a future organization which was not possible at that time for lack of material. This is a very peculiar instance. They had publicly proclaimed that the church, whensoever organized, would be organized according to the ancient pattern, with apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers, etc. Now they assumed to organize when the material was not at hand to perfect the organization, thereby manifesting strong confidence in the declaration previously made; for had not the material been forthcoming, their former inspiration would have been found wanting.

Subsequent events demonstrated that their confidence was well founded; for men of strength came forward and united their destinies with this infant organization, until in due time the material was at hand to fill the quorums and present the organization as previously provided for, before the world.

As early as October, 1830, a communication was received, directing Elders Oliver Cowdery, Peter Whitmer, Jr., Ziba Peterson, and Parley P. Pratt, to undertake a mission to the Indians, or Lamanites, as they were called, in the western country. They immediately started upon their journey, visiting some of the tribes of Indians on the way. They proceeded as far as what is now Eastern Kansas, among the Delawares. Here they were kindly received and much interest was manifested by the Indians in the message which they bore. But they were finally prevented from continuing their missionary work through the influence of sectarian missionaries.

We have no record of any great work being done among the Indians by these men; but on their way they stopped in Northern Ohio, in the vicinity of Mentor and Kirtland, and there accomplished quite a remarkable work among the white people, notably the followers of Alexander Campbell. Elder Pratt states that they had baptized one hundred and twenty-seven souls within two or three weeks after their arrival, and that this number soon increased to one thousand. Among these were several men who afterwards became prominent in the church, namely, Sidney Rigdon, Isaac Morley, Frederick G. Williams, John Murdock, Lyman Wight, Edward Partridge, and Newel K. Whitney. Elder Rigdon, who was a prominent minister in that region of country, was baptized on November 14, 1830. This created quite an excitement among what were known as the Disciples of Christ, as he had been an elder and prominent minister among them. It also resulted in considerable persecution from that source, the effects of which have not been entirely obliterated to this time.

As a result of the work done in and about Kirtland, it was decided to remove the headquarters of the church to that place, which was soon after accomplished, Joseph Smith arriving there about the first of February, 1831. In this vicinity the church made rapid progress, so far as acquiring numerical strength is concerned, and also in its organic development. In 1833, and doubtless as one of the results of the instruction before referred to, and also of additional light received at the time, the First Presidency of the church was organized, consisting of three members. Joseph Smith, who had previously been ordained president of the high priesthood in a conference of high priests, elders, and priests, held at Amherst, Ohio, January 25, 1832, was made the president, with Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams as counselors.

In 1835 the Quorum of Twelve Apostles was organized at Kirtland.

The First Presidency's duty was to preside over the whole church in a general way. The duty of the twelve apostles was to have charge of the missionary department of church-work. Their authority extended in all the world, either to go themselves, or to send and direct others in the proclamation of the word.

As an auxiliary to the Quorum of Twelve in this missionary work, the Quorum of Seventy was organized soon after the organization of the Quorum of Twelve; whose jurisdiction was to be coextensive with that of the Twelve, under whose direction they were to labor; and provision was made for the organization of seven quorums of Seventy if the labor in the vineyard of necessity required it. Provision was also made for local organizations, with stakes and branches. These stakes, when fully organized, were each to have: A president and two counselors, a high council, composed of twelve high priests. This was to be a judicial body, having the decision of cases arising within their jurisdiction which came to them by appeal. The stakes were also to have a bishopric, composed of a bishop and his two counselors, having control of the financial concerns.

The general church organization was also to have a presiding bishop, assisted by two counselors, having charge of the general financial concerns of the church.

Provision was made for the perpetuity of records and the recording of events of importance, by the appointment of a general church recorder, and a general church historian.

As a monument to their industry, devotion, and sacrifice, as well as an evidence of their honesty, there stands on the hill at Kirtland to-day the historic building known everywhere as the Kirtland Temple; not a remarkable building as compared with modern buildings, but a wonderful structure compared with buildings in that new country at the time of its erection; and more wonderful still when it is considered that the people who built it were a people of very limited means, and that they were persecuted, and every effort made by those around them to thwart their purposes.

The corner-stones of this Temple were laid on July 25, 1833, and it was dedicated March 27, 1836. Thus in less than three years, notwithstanding their poverty and persecution, they erected this building. It is built of stone, plastered without and within, three stories high exclusive of the basement. The first and second stories are auditoriums, each fifty-five by sixty-five feet on the inside, exclusive of the vestibule on the east, through which is the entrance to the building and in which are the stairways. The third story is divided into small rooms. The outside walls are about two feet thick. The outside of the building is fifty-nine by seventy-nine feet.

In October, 1834, they began the publication of a church paper called the Messenger and Advocate, at Kirtland, Ohio, which was continued for several years. Other publications were also issued from Kirtland, including the first edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

Soon after locating at Kirtland revelations were received providing that the principal place of gathering would in the future be in the West, with Independence, Missouri, as the center place. A portion of the church emigrated there as early as 1831, bought, and entered from the Government a great amount of land, which they improved to such an extent as to excite the jealousy of neighbors. They published also from Independence a periodical called the Evening and Morning Star. They also began the publication of the revelations received by the church under the title of "The Book of Commandments." The members of the church were principally from the Eastern States, while those among whom they moved were largely from the South. The prejudice that existed between these two sections of the country at that early day, and which finally culminated in the Civil War, served to make the breach wider and wider, until the friction became so great that the citizens of Jackson County, using the religion of the Latter Day Saints as a pretext, arose and expelled the Saints by force from their homes, destroyed the printing-press, scattering the contents of the printing-office in the streets just at the time when the Book of Commandments was in press, so all that was ever preserved of this book were some of the loose sheets gathered up by individuals which never had the advantage of being compared with the originals and thus corrected, and hence never received the indorsement of the church as a publication.

The expulsion from Jackson County took place in the latter part of the year 1833, and the Saints found shelter in the adjoining counties, principally in Clay, where they lived in harmony with their neighbors for some time.

Finally, though there was no outbreak of hostilities, more or less friction occurred, principally on the account of the efforts of the citizens of Jackson County, striving to stir up strife; and so it was mutually agreed that the county of Caldwell should be organized for the purpose of permitting the Saints to colonize there, they to purchase the land from the settlers who were in that territory. The act of the legislature providing for the organization of Caldwell County was approved December 29, 1836, having been introduced in the legislature by Honorable A. W. Doniphan, of Clay County. The Saints had previously commenced settling in the county, and they continued so to do until a large part of the territory was occupied and cultivated. Here Joseph Smith and other authorities of the church finally removed, and the headquarters of the church was established at Far West, the county-seat of Caldwell County. For several years peace and prosperity reigned; but persecution again arose, the causes of which we have not space to present in an article of this kind, but which finally culminated in the Saints being driven from the State by order of the Executive, L. W. Boggs, in the winter of 1838 and 1839. This was the cause of much suffering on the part of the people who, in many instances, had their homes destroyed. They were driven out in the inclemency of winter, to make their way as best they could out of the state of Missouri. The majority of them settled in Illinois, in the vicinity of Quincy, finally purchasing a site including the village of Commerce, where they laid out and settled a city subsequently known as Nauvoo. Prosperity again attended them, and several thousands of the members of the church gathered from all parts of the United States and foreign countries, until it was estimated that in Nauvoo and vicinity there were about thirty thousand members.

Extraordinary privileges were granted to the city of Nauvoo by a charter from the state of Illinois, and for the organization of what was known as the Nauvoo Legion, a military body.

Their old enemies from Missouri still harassed them as much as was in their power, kidnapping some and taking them back to the state of Missouri, maltreating them, making requisition on the Governor of the state of Illinois to get Joseph Smith and others into their custody. These latter efforts were unsuccessful. Much was done towards stirring up the people of Illinois to jealousy and persecution. This, together with possible unwise conduct upon the part of the Saints in some instances, brought about open hostilities again, which resulted in the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, at Carthage, Illinois, on June 27, 1844, and in the final expulsion of the Saints in 1845 and 1846.

During their sojourn at Nauvoo they established a periodical known as the Times and Seasons, which was first issued in November, 1839, and continued until February, 1846. Numerous other publications were issued.

On the sixth day of April, 1841, the cornerstones of the Temple were laid at Nauvoo, which was in course of construction for several years but was never entirely completed, though it was inclosed and covered, and was probably at the time the most magnificent building in the state of Illinois.

At the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, divisions at once arose, and various opinions were entertained as to the policy to be pursued. Several men more or less prominent in the church, either from conviction or ambition for power, aspired to the leadership. The most prominent, so far as results were concerned, were, Sidney Rigdon of the First Presidency; Brigham Young, president of the Quorum of Twelve; and James J. Strang, who claimed to have been appointed by Joseph Smith and ordained by angelic ministration.

The names of several others, however, were brought forward in the controversy; but these three gained the greatest number of adherents. This question of leadership was one of the principal points of controversy. Some doctrinal points also entered into the consideration, prominent among which was polygamy, which was doubtless advocated by the followers of Brigham Young, secretly at first, openly afterwards. It has been asserted by some writers that this doctrine was proclaimed by all these divisions of the church, which is evidence that it originated before these divisions. This reasoning would doubtless be legitimate, if the premises were correct; but it is not true that polygamy was taught by all of these divisions of the church.

The organization under Sidney Rigdon, on March 15, 1845, at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, passed the following preambles and resolution:

Whereas the connection which has heretofore existed between ourselves and the people calling themselves the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints renders it necessary that we publish to the world a succinct statement of facts relating to the position we now sustain to God and our fellow men; and

Whereas in consequence of the rejection by that people, of what we undoubtedly deem to be the order of the church and kingdom of God, and the introduction of doctrines and practices clearly inimical to the law of God, and altogether subversive of the laws of the land, abrogating the marriage contract, and substituting under the professed sanction of Heaven, a system of extreme licentiousness, uprooting every legal restraint, and eminently calculated in its very nature to produce the entire destruction of every virtuous tie, and pouring contempt upon every holy principle contained in the revelations of God to his

GRACELAND COLLEGE.

creature man, and must inevitably entail upon that people abject wretchedness and woe, subjecting them to the righteous condemnation of every virtuous intelligence, whether in heaven or on earth; and

Whereas the better to conceal the justly odious system of polygamy, duplicity, hypocrisy, and falsehood are inculcated as virtues, the most sacred obligations constantly violated, and families and individuals plunged into irrevocable ruin and despair; therefore

Resolved that we hold no fellowship with the people calling themselves the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and can have no communion with them, unless they repent and obey the principles of righteousness and truth.—Messenger and Advocate, vol. 1, p. 176.

Though James J. Strang ultimately indorsed polygamy, it was not until years after the division. Then it was claimed that he received the doctrine from a translation of plates found at Voree, Wisconsin. He and his adherents first condemned the doctrine. In a conference held by them at Kirtland, Ohio, August 7 to 10, 1846, they adopted the following:

Resolved unanimously. That we utterly disclaim the whole system of polygamy known as the spiritual wife system lately set up in Nauvoo, by the apostates who claim the authority there, and will neither practice such things nor hold any fellowship with those that teach or practice such things.—Voree Herald, September, 1846.

This was subsequently affirmed at a conference held at Voree, Wisconsin, October 6 to 19, of the same year, as follows:

The proceedings of the special conference, at Kirtland, of August 6, 7, 8, and 9, were presented by President Strang.

On motion of General Bennett, resolved unanimously, that this General Conference cordially approve of the reorganization of the stake of Kirtland, and of the proceedings of its special conference.—Voree Herald, October, 1846.

James J. Strang wrote an article on the subject which was subsequently published in Zion's Revelle, August 12, 1847, in which he says:

I have uniformly and most distinctly discarded and declared heretical the so-called "spiritual wife system" and everything connected therewith. It is a well-known fact several men of talent and influence have separated from me and from the church of God, merely because I would not in any manner countenance such a doctrine. One of them, Reuben Miller, has, in a pamphlet extensively circulated, given as a reason for separating from the church and becoming a Brighamite that I did not believe in the "spiritual wife system." I have recently refused to ordain a man to a high and responsible office, although a warm personal friend, and after he had been sustained by the unanimous vote of a General Conference, for no other reason than that it was discovered that he believed in "spiritual wifery." I now say distinctly, and I defy contradiction, that the man or woman does not exist on earth or under the earth who ever heard me say one word, or saw me do one act, savoring in the least of spiritual wifery; or any of the attending abominations. My opinions on this subject are unchanged, and I regard them as unchangeable. They are established on a full consideration of ALL the Scriptures, both ancient and modern, and the discipline of the church SHALL conform thereto.

Charles J. Strang, now of Lansing, Michigan, in a letter written July 18, 1882, quotes his father as follows:

As for those who, as gospel ministers, have assumed to teach such damning, soul-destroying doctrines (that deceit, fraud, lying, perjury, plundering unbelievers, polygamy, fornication, and adultery are required by the command of God in the upbuilding of his kingdom) in the name of God and the Lord Jesus Christ, may their bones rot in the living tomb of their flesh; may their flesh generate from its own corruptions a loathsome life for others; may their blood swarm a leprous life of motelike ghastly corruption, feeding on flowing life, generating chilling agues and burning fevers. . . . And I prayed unto God, saying, Oh, God, curse them not, and let me not raise my voice against my fellows! But he said, Curse, curse, curse! I will altogether curse, until they return to me, for they have perverted my law and deceived my servants; unto the Destroyer shalt thou deliver them, for their prayer is sin.

Charles B. Thompson and his adherents were also a faction of the church, and they indorsed the following:

And, behold, polygamy, or a plurality of wives, is an abomination before me, and is for ever forbidden, in this my Holy Presbytery of Zion, saith the Lord Jehovah.—The Law and Covenants of Israel, pp. 184, 185.

Jackson Goddale, one of the First Presidency of the faction called Brewsterites, wrote as follows, July 29, 1849:

The above is sufficient to silence every one that would dare to teach the doctrine of polygamy and at the same time pretend to believe in the Book of Mormon. And I believe that there is not one of the different and conflicting parties into which the church is divided, that teach or believe the doctrine of polygamy, except that which has gone west under the guidance of Brigham Young; and yet they are accusing all of being apostates that can not and will not follow their teaching in all things.—Olive Branch, vol. 2, p. 20.

The Bickteronites, another faction, published the following as one of the articles of their faith:

We believe that a man shall have but one wife, and concubines he shall have none; for I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women, and whoredoms are an abomination before me: thus saith the Lord of hosts. Again in the second chapter of Malachi, verse 15: "And did he not make one? Yet had he the residue of the Spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth."

So far as our investigations are concerned, (and we think they have been quite thorough,) we have yet to find that polygamy was indorsed during or in the first three years after the death of Joseph Smith by any except adherents to the claims of some of the members of the Quorum of Twelve. So, if the argument be correct, the only common origin that can be adduced from the premises, is that it originated in the Quorum of Twelve. Other factions, for instance the Cutlerites, and the Hedrickites, and Whitmerites, and others have denounced it in the most positive terms.

The result of these conditions was the scattering of the members of the church until only a few of the branches existing at the time of the death of Joseph Smith retained their identity. These subsequently united with others who had been convinced of error in other factions and formed an organization in 1853. Soon after this organization was effected, the following was received as the word of the Lord on this subject:

Polygamy is an abomination in the sight of the Lord God: it is not of me; I abhor it. I abhor it, as also the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, and the men or set of men who practice it. I judge them not, I judge not those who practice it. Their works shall judge them at the last day. Be ye strong; ye shall contend against this doctrine; many will be led into it honestly, for the devil will seek to establish it, and roll it forth to deceive.

They seek to build up their own kingdoms, to suit their own pleasures, but I countenance it not, saith God. I have given my law: I shrink not from my word. My law is given in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, but they have disregarded my law, and trampled upon it, and counted it a light thing, and obeyed it not; but my word is the same yesterday as to-day, and for ever.

On the subject of succession the Reorganization took the position that the successor of Joseph Smith must of necessity be of the seed of Joseph Smith in fulfillment of the law and promises of God. This was controverted by other aspirants, and the position was taken that at the time of the controversy over leadership at Nauvoo in 1844, the subject of lineal priesthood was not once mentioned, nor the son of gang of demons in human shape. Thus you see sir, that the church is left without an earthly head unless the promise of the Lord shall be fulfilled, which saith, that if he removed Joseph he would appoint another in his stead. But as this has not yet been done, what is the church to do? Now, sir, if I have been correctly informed, some of the members of the church at Nauvoo want Stephen Markham for their head, and others Sidney Rigdon, and others President Marks, and others little Joseph, and others B. Young, and others some P. P. Pratt; and if they can all have their choice, we shall soon have a multiplicity of churches of Latter Day Saints.

This establishes beyond controversy that the claims of Joseph Smith, the son of the prophet, were presented immediately upon the death of his father.

THE SAINTS' HOME.

Joseph Smith mentioned as the legal successor. But the publications of the times show that at least two of the Twelve soon after the death of Joseph Smith advocated this doctrine, namely, William Smith and Lyman Wight. But the question as to whether or not he was so mentioned, is definitely and finally settled by a letter recently coming into our possession, written on the sixteenth day of August, 1844, just eight days after the memorable meeting in which the question was discussed, written by James Blakeslee to Jacob Scott of Nauvoo, from Hampton, Rock Island County, Illinois, in which the writer says:

But alas! what a change one year has made, even the space of about one year, or a little more, has successfully introduced into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, a sufficient amount of false doctrine to deceive and lead away nearly all the church at Nauvoo, while the prophet and patriarch of the church have been barbarously murdered by the hand of a

Joseph Smith, the oldest son of the prophet, became identified with this Reorganized Church in April, 1860, and was chosen as president. The organization has continued to the present time, combating earnestly polygamy and other false and corrupt doctrines taught by some of the factions of the church, greatly increasing its membership and its influence, establishing churches in nearly all of the States of the Union, in Canada, the Sandwich and the Society Islands, Australasia, the British Isles, Germany, Scandinavia, and elsewhere. This progress has been obtained under peculiarly trying conditions, the bitter opposition of the sectarian world on the one hand, possibly made more intense by the immoral practices of some calling themselves Saints; and the opposition of the other factions of the church, who have waged a relentless and bitter warfare upon the positions taken by the Reorganized Church.

But the history of this growth and development of the Reorganized Church, of the struggle had against different influences, is too well known to require a detailed account.

The headquarters of the church is at present at Lamoni, Iowa, where resides the president of the church and nearly all the other general officers, and where it sustains a publishing house from which the SAINTS' HERALD, the church organ, is issued; also a magazine called the Autumn Leaves, a Sunday-school paper called Zion's Hope, and where the standard books of the church are published and kept on sale, as also numerous tracts explanatory of the faith.

It also sustains a publishing house at Independence, Missouri; whence Zion's Ensign is issued together with other church literature.

At Lamoni is also located a home for the aged, known as the Saints' Home; also Graceland College, which was erected by the church as an institution of learning.

POLYGAMY IN THE UNITED STATES—HAS IT POLITICAL SIGNIFICANCE?

(Copyright 1903, by North American Review Publishing Company.)

BY JOSEPH SMITH, PRESIDENT OF THE REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

[The following article from the pen of President Joseph Smith appeared in the North American Review for March, 1903, being written specially for that magazine. Permission to reprint has been kindly granted us by the North American Review Publishing Company. The article will be of special interest to our readers, especially in the light of the recent developments of the Smoot investigation at Washington. The article, it must be remembered, was written before the beginning of that investigation.—F. M. S.]

It may be presumptuous for a political layman to undertake to decide what questions are political or economic, and what their political significance may be in American politics. In order to determine whether the fact that polygamy exists in the United States has political significance or not, it may be necessary to give a brief resume of the history of the church organized by Joseph Smith and others on April 6, 1830.

That church, known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; whose members are by the outside world called Mormons, was organized in the state of New York, the statutes of which forbade bigamy or polygamy, and made provision for punishing any infraction of monogamic institutions. The church flourished in New York, Ohio, Missouri, and Illinois for the fourteen years during which Joseph and Hyrum Smith were connected with it, always under the legal enactments which recognized monogamy as the American ideal of the domestic relation.

So far as the adherents of the new church were concerned, having professed belief in direct present revelation from God, they were compromised by such declaration in an obligation to observe and keep "the laws of the land"—that is, to avoid doing that which would bring them under the just punishment of statutory enactments adopted by the legislatures of the several States in which the church might have existence. The organic law of the church provided, among other things, for a rule to govern the marriage relation, in the following terms:

Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shalt cleave unto her and none else.¹

Whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made.²

Under the institution of this rule, the church in 1835 adopted a certified statement of belief, in solemn assembly, as follows:

Marriage should be celebrated with prayer and thanksgiving; and at the solemnization, the persons to be married, standing together, the man on the right, and the woman on the left, shall be addressed, by the person officiating, as he shall be directed by the Holy Spirit; and if there be no legal objections, he shall say, calling each by their names: "You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives." And when they have answered "Yes," he shall pronounce them "husband and wife" in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by virtue of the laws of the country and authority vested in him.

All legal contracts of marriage made before a person is baptized into this church, should be held sacred and fulfilled. Inasmuch as this Church of Christ has been reproached with the crime of fornication, and polygamy, we declare that we believe that one man should have one wife, and one woman but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again.³

This church rule was in force unrepealed and without modification at the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, which occurred on June 27, 1844. Whatever may have been the originating causes of the difficulties which the church met in Kirtland, Ohio, from 1831 to 1837, it may not be necessary to state, except that, so far as is known, polygamy was not one of the charges upon which its members were arraigned before the public. Their settlement at Independence, and in Jackson County, Missouri, began soon after their removal from New York to Ohio, and the settlements at Kirtland and Independence were to a greater or lesser extent simultaneous.

made in the leading journals of the time, and by such men as General A. W. Doniphan, General Atchison, and others who were acquainted with the people, polygamy had no political significance as a disturbing element; for it is known that it did not exist in the church at that time. Evidently, one leading cause of complaint against the people was the dislike which their religious neighbors had to the claim made by the church to the reception of a direct revelation from God. This with a good number of their coreligionists in the State brought them into disrepute. It is evident, however, that the chief cause of complaint was the fact that the greater number of the membership were from the East, and naturally were anti-slavery in political sentiment. Indeed, one declaration in their formulated presentation of faith and belief was to the effect that it was wrong for man to hold his fellow man in slavery. At that time Missouri was a slave State, and anything that was opposed to the principles of slavery was looked upon with dislike, and subjected the holder of such opinion to the open and often violent censure of the pro-slavery element of the State. It was assumed that whoever was opposed to slavery would not make a good Democratic citizen; and from these two elements—religious hatred and political dislike—there arose the persecution which in 1833 brought a portion of the citizens, in disregard of law, into conflict with the fast increasing citizenship brought into the State by their church belief and church relationship.

It may be taken for granted that there were unwise men on either side of the question, and from the condition of the public mind at the time it was not strange that persecution and unlawful violence against the Mormons gave rise to the spirit of resentment and reprisal for wrongs inflicted. In this instance, the question of the existence of plural marriage, either as a church tenet or church practice, did not enter into the controversy.

After the expulsion from Jackson County, Missouri, the people scattered north and east, and an attempt was made to provide for their continuance in the State by setting apart a county for their sole occupancy. This failed, and in 1838, the disturbances having been renewed, the church was expelled from the State; but again the subject of polygamy was not one of the moving causes.

Joseph and Hyrum Smith having been taken prisoners by State military authority in November, 1838, were turned over to the civil authorities for trial. The trial was put off from time to time; and after being confined in jail for some months, they were sent from one county to another, under an officer's care, upon an unsigned mittimus. While on the way, by connivance with the guard or otherwise, they secured an opportunity to escape, which they availed themselves of. They reached their families at Quincy, Illinois, and, with thousands who had preceded them in leaving the state of Missouri and other thousands who came after, they made a settlement at Commerce, afterwards called Nauvoo, Hancock County, Illinois.

The persecution which had been waged against them in Missouri followed them to Illinois, and Joseph Smith was subjected to vexatious prosecutions under one pretense and another; but at no time was he charged and made to answer before the courts for immorality, nor was polygamy made a part of the complaint against him at the time of his incarceration and death. After his death the church broke up into different fragments, one of the larger of which followed the lead of Brigham Young, first to Council Bluffs, commonly called Winter Quarters, thence to the valley of Salt Lake in the Rocky Mountains; and it was not until August, 1852, eight years after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, that plural marriage or polygamy was proclaimed as a part of the belief of the church in the valleys. Thousands of those who had been members in the church before the death of Joseph Smith refused to accept the dogma and the rule of Brigham Young connected with it.

As early as 1866, inquiry was made in Congress as to what measures might properly be instituted to eliminate polygamy as a vexatious question from the consideration of Utah affairs. The chairman of the territorial committee, Mr. Ashley, of Ohio, asked of a person who was a member of the church during the lifetime of Joseph Smith and interested in the question, what measures he would recommend for adoption by Congress in reference to the practice of polygamy. The answer to this question was, that so long as Congress persisted in treating polygamy as a religious tenet and within the meaning of the Constitution, which provided that Congress should neither prescribe a form of religion nor proscribe persons for the practice of their religion, nothing could be done with the subject under discussion. It was further stated to chairman Ashley that the Government, both national and State, had failed unmistakably in enforcing existing laws, either for the Latter Day Saints or against them, the result of which had been to undermine the confidence of the people in both the lawmaking and the law-enforcing powers; that if existing laws had been properly enforced against them if they had been transgressors, that would have been sufficient to prevent the practice of plural marriage from growing into a menace, as it has been called, against the American home. If the laws had been enforced in their behalf, there would have been greater respect for both the laws and those whose duty it was to enforce them. It was a confession of weakness either to hold or to state that so small a number of people could continue to violate the laws of both State and nation, as it was alleged they had been doing, and escape the just punishment of wrong-doing because of the inability of the Governments to enforce their laws; especially so, as by one of the fundamental principles of the church the members thereof were held directly responsible to "keep the laws of the land," the divine revelation which they believed in distinctly affirming:

Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until he reigns whose right it is to reign.⁴

No effectual law was passed at that time; but from one stage to another, under first one administration and then another, the whole matter appears to have been trifled with so that no effective legislation was enacted. The sending in of Johnston's army, the resistance of the Utah people to the invasion, the abandonment of the city by President Young and his followers, and the hegira south, the entrance of the army, the establishment of a military post at Camp Douglas, the appointment of governors, the making of territorial laws, all went on under seeming acquiescence upon the part of the Government, until the passage of the Edmunds Bill, by which polygamy was made a crime and an active prosecution began under that law. Under the operation of that hundreds of polygamists, including many leading men of the church, were arrested and punished by fine and imprisonment, the result of which was that after a time judges and officers became disgusted with the apparent futility of endeavoring to establish the supremacy of law by such means.

Following this active effort to secure a proper respect for the law and institutions of the country, an attempt was made to secure statehood for Utah. Efforts had already been made in the same direction, but without avail. By a Manifesto issued by Wilford Woodruff, acting president of the church in Utah, in the fall of 1890, there was proclaimed what was understood to be an abandonment of polygamous marriages; or, as stated upon oath, before a commissioner of the United States Court, the practice of polygamy was abandoned.

Upon the strength of this abandonment, Congress passed a bill, under the care of Senator Edmunds, including an Enabling Act, by which Utah became a State, with the peculiar clause, both in the Enabling Act and in the Constitution of the State, that polygamous marriages were forever prohibited.

It is not a little singular that the construction put upon this phrase, "polygamous marriages," should have left the question in such a condition that persons who had married polygamous wives were left to continue their connection with those wives, at the sufferance of a clause in the State regulations punishing such associations as "unlawful cohabitation."

All through these efforts made in Congress, certainly from 1866 up to the passage of the Edmunds Bill, there had been evasion of responsibility for enforcement of law, a continued persistence on the part of those practicing plural marriage and a perpetual shifting of position. To what may this be attributed? Utah had been for many years possessed of the number of inhabitants requisite to constitute a State. Territorial laws had been passed by the territorial legislature in which marriage had been made a creature of church domination entirely, and the status of woman as a wife and as a widow had been left to church settlement, without interference on the part of the United States. The attention of Governor Murray had been called to this peculiar condition, and he had reported the same to Congress, and yet no further attention had been paid to it. There was persistent effort upon the part of the citizens of Utah, including the church, to secure statehood. Even the women of Utah held conventions from time to time, and so far as they could, made provision for its being received into statehood. There was evidently a hesitancy upon the part of Congress or some parties in Congress to permit the entrance of Utah into the sisterhood of States while yet polygamy was an acknowledged tenet of the church. The two parties were quite nearly balanced during the most of this time, and the accession of two senators from the state of Utah could easily have turned the balance of power at times. A curious observer might have asked the question and doubtless did, why was this not done? The answer is, evidently, that the party to be injured by such increase of power in the Senate was hostile to such action. Why should the treating of polygamy as a crime against the laws and institutions of the United States, which it clearly was, have been so long delayed, and the persistent apparent recognition of it as a religious tenet and within the limits of the constitutional privilege thus either positively or tacitly admitted? How does it happen that at each attempted successful effort at legislation something has intervened to prevent that legislation or to change its application or operation, until finally either by an oversight on the part of Senator Edmunds who drafted the bill, the Enabling Act, or the cunning of those who formed the convention that framed the Constitution under which Utah was admitted, polygamy is made to mean simply the act of marrying more than one woman, and not the living with more than one woman at the same time as wives, which is the plain and most direct construction given to the word polygamy by the lexicographer?

An attempted explanation upon this point by Senator Edmunds, after such construction was put upon it, leaves the fact that persons practicing polygamy—living with more than one woman at the same time as wives—are to be dealt with under the statutory provisions regarding "unlawful cohabitation."

⁴Doctrine and Covenants 58:5.

Joseph F. Smith, present president of the Utah church, states in substance that they have submitted to the action of Congress after a long contest in the courts; and this long contest in Congress and in the courts has left the condition of affairs like this: There are quite a number of men, leading ministers and officers in the church in Utah, who are living with more than one woman as wives, and are having children by them it is to be presumed. They are punishable under State law only for unlawful cohabitation, and the penalty for such conduct is a fine so slight that some of these men can easily pay the penalty as often as their infraction of the law results in tangible evidence of their offense by the birth of offspring, it being quite out of the question under ordinary circumstances to prove unlawful cohabitation without such evidence. Besides this, it is quite within the possibilities that plural marriages may be performed in the temples in Utah without the officers of the courts obtaining any proofs of such marriages. And further than this: persons may be married in other places than Utah who may already have wives in Utah, and, removing within the State, may live with two or more upon the strength of such marriage, without involving themselves or the church in a breach of the clause which says, "Polygamous marriages are for ever prohibited." And it might be impossible to obtain proof of such marriages.

The election of Brigham H. Roberts to Congress a few years since brought the question directly home to the American public: "Shall a polygamist be permitted to hold a seat in the legislative halls of the nation?" This question was decided negatively, and Mr. Roberts failed of admission. The question arises again, when it is contemplated that Reed Smoot, of the Apostolic quorum of the Utah church, shall be admitted to the office of United States Senator. As we understand it Mr. Smoot is not a polygamist, and ought not to be excluded on this account; nor can he justly be excluded upon the plea that he is a Mormon.

Utah is now a State having all the characteristics that appertain to one of the sisterhood in the American Republic. The animosities which were engendered during the time when the people were divided in politics into what was known as the Liberal, upon the one hand, and the Church Party, upon the other, have apparently died out, and their causes have passed into oblivion. If, therefore, there should be no revival of the vexing question, there is little reason to apprehend that it will again become a disturbing element in the politics of the State. There is, however, a strong feeling on the part of the public outside of Utah against the church, not altogether based upon the polygamic question, but upon the supposition that the Mormon people are making an effort to secure political control not only in Utah, but in others of the Western States, though they may in time secure such conditions by State enactments as will permit them to throw off the mask of acquiescence in the national legislation by which they are now under obligation not to continue polygamous marriages, and to reinstate the practice as a church dogma.

It is this effort to secure political supremacy or balance of power that is ostensibly held to be the reason of the hostility to Utah now apparent outside of the State. This hostility is being emphasized by a crusade fostered by some of the prominent churches of the land, assisted by a Woman's League of which Miss Helen Gould is a prominent member and active worker, and which is seeking to secure the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the practice of polygamy or plural marriage in the States and Territories of the Union.

If the object which is had in view by this active crusade is indicative of anything, it is indicative of the fact that polygamy in Utah has significance in the politics of the United States.

It is to be hoped by every one who is favorable to the establishment of right conditions in the United States, that, should there be submitted to the various States a proposition for an amendment to the Constitution forbidding the practice of polygamy or plural marriage as above stated the framers of it shall not be so careless as to leave so transparent a loophole of escape from obedience to its requirements as was left in the Enabling Act by which Utah became a State, and which has been perpetuated in the Constitution under which she was admitted into the federation of States. Should such a thing occur in spite of such amendment to the Constitution, and should the plain and most obvious meaning of the word polygamy fail to be understood as meaning the living together with more than one woman as wives, as is now the condition in Utah, there would be added reason for believing that undue influences had been at work to secure favorable legislation in the halls of Congress, with a view to the continuance of such conditions and to the prevention of carrying into effect the public opinion of the majority of States. Such a result as this certainly ought not to follow.

With a view to calling the attention of the reading public to this phase of the question, this article is written, and an earnest wish is expressed that statesmen and politicians shall not again be fooled or outwitted into permitting such a political menace to continue.

JOSEPH SMITH.

THE one prudence in life is concentration; the one evil is dissipation; and it makes no difference whether our dissipations are coarse or fine. Everything is good which takes away one plaything and delusion more, and sends us home to add one stroke of faithful work.—Emerson.

SHORT HISTORY OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

At the organization of the church, April 6, 1830, there had been no direct statement publicly made that there was to be a presidency composed of three; but the inference was that Joseph Smith was to occupy the highest position, as he was called the first elder of the church, and Oliver Cowdery was called the second elder of the church. This could not have had reference to the chronological order in which they were ordained; for according to the history Oliver Cowdery was ordained before Joseph Smith.

It is not only possible but quite probable that Joseph Smith had received more instruction in regard to the organization of this quorum than is published in history, for he relates that at the time the messenger appeared to him prior to his receiving the plates of the Book of Mormon, he instructed him as to what the Lord was going to do and how and in what manner his kingdom was to be conducted. Again he states, as recorded in the seventeenth section of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, Church History, volume 1, page 67, "In this manner did the Lord continue to give us instructions from time to time concerning the duties which now devolved upon us."

What this instruction was we are left only to conjecture; and we think it quite probable that the First Presidency and its duties were more plainly revealed to Joseph Smith and his coworkers than is expressed in writing.

The first direct statement pertaining to this office is found in the Church History, volume 1, page 244, where a statement of Joseph Smith is quoted to the effect that on April 26, 1832, at a General Council of the church held at Independence, Missouri, he was acknowledged as president of the high priesthood according to a previous ordination at a conference of high priests, elders, and members, held at Amherst, Ohio, on January 25, 1832.

In March, 1832, subsequent to the ordination of Joseph Smith and prior to his having been acknowledged in that position by the council in Missouri, Frederick G. Williams was called by revelation to be a counselor to Joseph Smith. (See Doctrine and Covenants, section 80.) One year later, March, 1833, a revelation was given declaring that Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams were to be accounted as equal with Joseph Smith in holding the keys of the kingdom. (See Doctrine and Covenants, section 87.)

On March 18, 1833, Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams were ordained counselors to the president of the high priesthood. Thus the First Presidency was formally organized. These ordinations took place in the School of the Prophets, and they were ordained under the hands of Joseph Smith. The First Presidency continued as first organized until 1837. At a conference held at Kirtland, Ohio, September 3, Joseph Smith was sustained as President, and he presented the names of Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams as his counselors. Elder Rigdon was sustained, but Elder Williams failed to receive a majority vote.

On November 7, 1837, at an assembly held at Far West, Missouri, Joseph Smith was sustained by the church in Missouri and again presented the names of Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams as his counselors. Rigdon was again sustained and Williams was rejected.

The reasons for the rejection of Elder Williams do not clearly appear in the history. At the time of Elder Williams' rejection in Missouri, Elder Hyrum Smith, brother of the President, was nominated for counselor in the place of Elder Williams and unanimously approved. He was therefore acknowledged as one of the Presidency, which was Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, and Hyrum Smith, and so continued until 1841.

In a revelation given January 19, 1841, Hyrum Smith was released from that position in order that he might occupy as Patriarch of the church instead of his father, the first Patriarch of the church, and Elder William Law was appointed to succeed him.

In 1844 William Law with others became disaffected and was expelled from the church with other dissenters.

Shortly after this, on June 27, 1844, Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum were assassinated at Carthage, Illinois. By this event the First Presidency of the church became disorganized; and when the church was reorganized in 1853, the position was taken that the lawful president of the church must be of the lineal descent of the first president; and Elder Jason W. Briggs was appointed and sustained as representative of the lawful heir until such time as he should occupy the place belonging to him under the law.

On April 6, 1860, at a General Conference held at Amboy, Illinois, Jos. Smith, the oldest son of the first president of the church, presented himself to the Reorganization and was accepted, and his position as president of the church was acknowledged. He was accordingly ordained under the hands of Z. H. Gurley, Samuel Powers, and William W. Blair, apostles; and William Marks, high priest. In accepting the position he stated that he had for some time past received manifestations pointing to the position which he was about to assume, and added: "I have come in obedience to a power not my own, and shall be dictated by the power that sent me."

President Smith presided without counselors until the April Conference of 1863, when by revelation William Marks was designated as a counselor and was accordingly ordained by Joseph Smith, J. W. Briggs and E. C. Briggs.

The First Presidency continued with but two members until May 22, 1872, when William Marks died. President Smith then acted without counselors until the April conference of 1873, when by revelation William W. Blair and David H. Smith, the youngest brother of the president, were chosen as his counselors, and ordained under the hands of J. W. Briggs, E. C. Briggs, and Josiah Ells, apostles; Isaac Sheen, president of the Quorum of High Priests, and I. L. Rogers, Bishop of the church and president of the Aaronic priesthood, it having been specially provided by the revelation that these parties should be ordained by the apostles; and that the president of the Quorum of High Priests, and president of the lesser priesthood should assist.

A short time subsequent to these ordinations David H. Smith became incapacitated for service, but continued to be acknowledged in that position by the church until April conference of 1885, when he was by command of the Spirit released. This left but two members in the quorum, and in this condition it continued until April 18, 1896, when Elder Blair died suddenly while on his return to Lamoni from the Kirtland, Ohio, conference.

At the April conference of 1897, at Lamoni, Iowa, Elder Alexander H. Smith, who had been temporarily acting by consent after the death of Elder Blair, was by revelation called and set apart as counselor to his brother, and was ordained under the hands of President Joseph Smith and others. Elder Edmund L. Kelley, Presiding Bishop of the church, was also called by revelation to act temporarily as a counselor and was blessed to so act under the hands of Edmund C. Briggs and others.

The quorum thus continued until the General Conference of 1902, when President Joseph Smith presented to the conference a vision in which he saw seated with himself in the assembly his eldest son, Frederick M. Smith, and R. C. Evans of the Quorum of Twelve. The conference, after indorsement by the several quorums, recognized this as sufficient authority for ordaining them as counselors to the President of the church. They were accordingly ordained on April 20, 1902, Frederick M. Smith under the hands of J. W. Wight and President Joseph Smith; Richard C. Evans under the hands of President Joseph Smith and J. W. Wight. They have since been sustained in that capacity, so that the Presidency at the present time is composed of Joseph Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa, president; Frederick M. Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa, first counselor; Richard C. Evans, of London, Canada, second counselor.

The members of this quorum are designated in revelation as apostles and high priests, presidents of the high priesthood, and the First Presidency over the entire church.

ORIGINAL MANUSCRIPT OF BOOK OF MORMON.

The Original Manuscript of the Book of Mormon is the property of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and is in its possession. It was delivered to a committee of the Reorganized Church consisting of President Joseph Smith, Bishop E. L. Kelley, and others, by Mr. George W. Schweich, grandson of David Whitmer, at Independence, Mo., in April, 1903; Mr. Schweich becoming the custodian upon the death of David Whitmer, DAVID WHITMER.

David Whitmer, the faithful custodian of the Manuscript, and one of the Three Witnesses to the divinity of the Book of Mormon, and who testified to seeing the angel with the plates and who declared the record to be true, etc., is thus reported concerning his reception and custody of the Manuscript. We quote from the History of the Church, volume 4, pages 446 and 447:

On April 25 [1884] Elder Whitmer was visited by Elders E. C. Briggs and Rudolph Etzenhouser. The following account from the pen of Elder Briggs is interesting both for testimony and historic incidents:

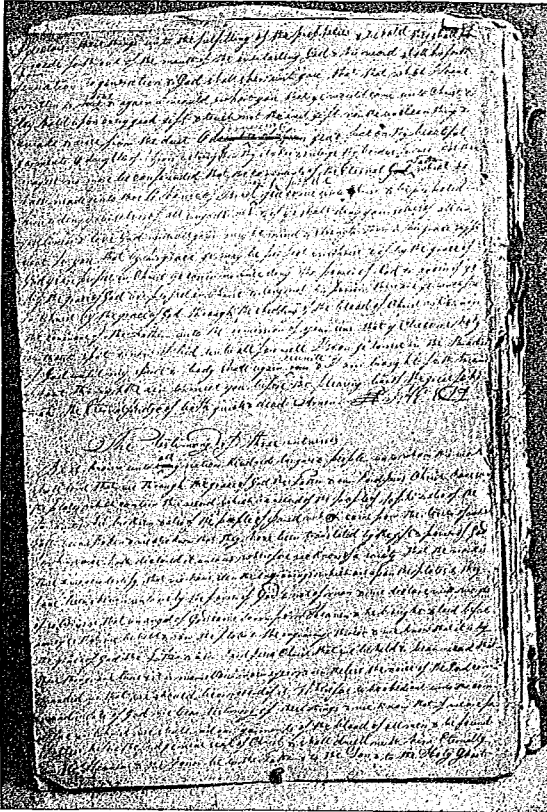

"The following are some of the facts as stated to us: Oliver Cowdery's name being mentioned we asked as to his last sure they are left in good hands." I now see why they should be preserved."

David Whitmer received the Manuscript from Oliver Cowdery and was its faithful custodian until his death.

The Manuscript is complete as published, including the testimony of the Three Witnesses, the Eight Witnesses, the Title Page, Certificate of the Clerk of the Court granting copyright, and the Preface. The chapter headings and the volume of the work are complete. The handwriting is mostly that of Oliver Cowdery. General Doniphan, who identified the writing as that of Oliver Cowdery, in a letter to Bro. Heman C. Smith, stated that "the manuscript was almost entirely written by Cowdery. The other parts were written by Emma, wife of Joseph Smith, and Christian Whitmer, merely to relieve Cowdery when tired." (See Church History, vol. 4, p. 451.)

The Manuscript is written on paper about the size of foolscap, on both sides, and shows the printer's statement. In response we were told, that it was reaffirmed, accompanied with a solemn charge to keep the manuscript as he had.

"'Would you like to see them?' I replied that we would. He stepped into an adjoining room and in a few moments brought them to us. They were large sheets of foolscap paper, were rather brown, or yellow colored, not so clear and white as the paper nowadays; written closely in a fine hand, with capital letters in all proper places, and well preserved. He then remarked: 'I was present when Joseph gave these manuscripts to Oliver, O, it was such a solemn charge. He (Joseph) said, 'I feel it in my bones that there will be a division in the church, like it was with the Nephites and Lamanites, and if these manuscripts are not preserved, I fear that the church may be injured, and when you deliver them up to others, be marks and quotations quite plainly. Though complete, it shows the effects of age and handling. The ink is good and the reading is not difficult. It is the only manuscript of the Book of Mormon in existence. Major Bidamon, who married the widow of the Prophet Joseph, while tearing down a portion of the Nauvoo House found deposits in the corner-stone; among them was evidently a manuscript of the Book of Mormon. Portions of it were taken out, of which he gave President Smith a part, and the latter understood Major Bidamon to say that he had sent portions of it to Joseph F. Smith, of Utah. It was all badly damaged, so much so that it soon crumbled and faded out. The portion given to President Joseph Smith, of the Reorganized Church, was a part of the book of Jacob. It is supposed that this manuscript taken from the corner-stone of the Nauvoo House was a copy, made for precautionary purposes by the Seer and his assistants while the original was being published.

HISTORICAL SKETCH OF THE QUORUM OF TWELVE.

As early as June, 1829, nearly a year before the organization of the church, provision was made for the selection of a quorum of twelve apostles, and Oliver Cowdery and David Whitmer were chosen by revelation to select those who should occupy in that position and given instruction as to how they could know them. But the quorum was not organized or its members selected until 1835, for the evident reason that the men who were to occupy had not yet united with the church. At the time the first selections were made, in 1835, Oliver Cowdery stated: "Our minds have been on a constant stretch, to find who these Twelve were: when the time should come we could not tell; but we sought the Lord by fasting and prayer, to have our lives prolonged to see this day, to see you, and to take a retrospect of the difficulties through which we have passed."

The selection of the first quorum occurred February 14, 1835. Martin Harris had been selected, by what authority is not clear, to assist Oliver Cowdery and David Whitmer, and took part in the choosing. The selections made at this time were: Lyman E. Johnson, Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Orson Hyde, David W. Patten, Luke S. Johnson, William E. McLellin, Jno. F. Boynton, Orson Pratt, William Smith, Thomas B. Marsh, and Parley P. Pratt. Three of them were ordained on that day under the hands of Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris, and six were ordained the following day. Orson Pratt, Thomas B. Marsh, and Parley P. Pratt were not present. On February 21 Parley P. Pratt, having returned, was ordained under the hands of President Joseph Smith, David Whitmer, and Oliver Cowdery. Orson Pratt and Thomas B. Marsh were subsequently ordained, the exact date not being known to us.

Subsequently they were arranged to rank according to age. They then stood in their order as follows: Thomas B. Marsh, David W. Patton, Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Orson Hyde, William E. McLellin, Parley P. Pratt, Luke S. Johnson, William Smith, Orson Pratt, John F. Boynton, and Lyman E. Johnson.

Thomas B. Marsh was chosen president and the quorum remained as at first organized until 1837. John F. Boynton was disfellowshipped in 1837, and Lyman E. Johnson, Luke S. Johnson, and William E. McLellin in 1838. In a revelation given July 8, 1838, John Taylor, John E. Page, Wilford Woodruff, and Willard Richards were called to occupy the places made vacant. (See Church History, volume 2, page 166.)

On December 19, 1838, at Far West, Missouri, John E. Page and John Taylor were ordained under the hands of Brigham Young and Heber C. Kimball; and on April 26, 1839, at the same place, Wilford Woodruff was ordained; and at the same time George A. Smith was ordained an apostle to fill the place of Thomas B. Marsh, who had previously apostatized.

By what authority George A. Smith was chosen we have never been able to determine. Willard Richards was at the time of his call absent on his mission in England and did not receive ordination till April 14, 1840, at Preston, England, at the time that the majority of the quorum visited that country.

On October 25, 1838, David W. Patton was killed by a mob at Crooked River, Missouri. His successor was not named by revelation; but permission was given on January 19, 1841, for the selection of another, the language of the revelation being, "David Patten I have taken unto myself. . . . But verily I say unto you, another may be appointed unto the same calling."—Doctrine and Covenants 107:40. Acting upon this instruction, the General Conference held at Nauvoo, Illinois, October 7, 1841, selected Lyman Wight to fill the vacancy.

At the council of the quorum held at Preston, England, on April 14, 1840; Brigham Young was selected as the president of the quorum to succeed Thomas B. Marsh. This selection was approved by revelation on January 19, 1841. (See Doctrine and Covenants 107:41.)

The quorum continued without further change until the death of Joseph Smith in 1844. The rejection of the church as an organic body carried with it the disorganization of the quorums; and hence at this time the Quorum of Twelve became disorganized. Nine of them claimed the right of the quorum to preside after the death of Joseph Smith; but three, namely William Smith, John E. Page and Lyman Wight, demurred.

The quorum remained disorganized until the reorganization of the church in 1853. By command of God previously given, a committee of three, namely, Cyrus Newkirk, Ethan Griffith, and William Cline, were selected at the April conference of 1853 to choose seven men to constitute the majority of that quorum. They selected Zenas H. Gurley, Sen., Jason W. Briggs, Henry H. Deam, Reuben Newkirk, John Cunningham, George White, and Daniel B. Rasey. Jason W. Briggs was at this time chosen president of the quorum. Henry H. Deam and John Cunningham were expelled on October 6, 1854; and on the 7th of April, 1855, David Newkirk and Samuel Powers were selected to fill the vacancies and were ordained under the hands of J. W. Briggs, D. B. Rasey, and Z. H. Gurley.

October 7, 1858, William W. Blair was ordained at Zarahemla, Wisconsin, under the hands of Jason W. Briggs, Samuel Powers, and Zenas H. Gurley. October 6, 1860, James Blakeslee, Edmund C. Briggs, and John Shippy were selected as members of the quorum and ordained by W. W. Blair and Z. H. Gurley.

George White, who had previously disappeared and whose whereabouts were not known, was dropped from the quorum April 7, 1865, and David Newkirk was dropped at the same time for inactivity. And at the same conference, April 8, 1865, Josiah Ells and Charles Derry were chosen for membership in the quorum and were ordained at the same time by Joseph Smith, Z. H. Gurley, Sen., and James Blakeslee.

James Blakeslee died on December 18, 1866; Zenas H. Gurley August 28, 1871; and Samuel Powers on February 17, 1873.

At the April conference of 1873 President Joseph Smith presented a revelation which was accepted by the church, providing for the ordination as apostles of William H. Kelley, Thomas W. Smith, James Caffall, John H. Lake, Alexander H. Smith, Zenas H. Gurley, Jr., and Joseph R. Lambert; and also for the release of Reuben Newkirk and Daniel B. Rasey. Those called by this revelation were ordained at Plano, Illinois, with the exception of James Caffall and Zenas H. Gurley, Jr., who were not present. The five who were present were ordained under the hands of Joseph Smith, J. W. Briggs, and W. W.

Blair, on April 10, 1873, at Plano, Illinois. James Caffall was ordained at Council Bluffs, Iowa, September 5, 1873, by W. W. Blair, J. W. Briggs, and Joseph Smith; and Zenas H. Gurley was ordained at Plano, Illinois, April 9, 1874, by Joseph Smith, W. W. Blair, and J. W. Briggs.

This revelation of 1873 also provided for the ordination of William W. Blair of the quorum as a counselor to President Joseph Smith, thus removing him from the quorum. This revelation also confirmed the selection of Jason W. Briggs as president of the quorum.

On April 6, 1868, John Shippy was expelled; and on April 8, 1870, Charles Derry resigned; and on April 15, 1885, Josiah Ells died. On April 10, 1886, Jason W. Briggs and Z. H. Gurley, Jr., were released at their request. The quorum had no regular president subsequent to the release of Jason W. Briggs until 1890, when Alexander H. Smith was selected and ordained as provided for in the revelation given April 8, 1890. He was ordained to this position at Lamoni, Iowa, April 15, 1890, by Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair.

At the April conference of 1887, President Joseph Smith presented a revelation providing for the ordination of James W. Gillen, Heman C. Smith, Joseph Luff, and Gomer T. Griffiths as members of the apostles' quorum. These were ordained, with the exception of Elder Smith, who was absent, on the 13th of April, 1887, at Kirtland, Ohio, Elder Gillen under the hands of W. W. Blair and James Caffall; Elders Luff and Griffiths under the hands of Joseph Smith and W. H. Kelley. Elder Heman C. Smith was ordained at Independence, Missouri, on March 30, 1888, under the hands of Joseph Smith, E. C. Briggs, and William H. Kelley.

On May 27, 1894, Thomas W. Smith died at Independence, Missouri. At the April conference of 1897, Isaac N. White, John W. Wight, and Richard C. Evans were selected by revelation to occupy positions in the quorum. They were ordained at Lamoni, Iowa, on April 12 of that year, Isaac N. White by Joseph R. Lambert and others; John W. Wight by William H. Kelley and others, and Richard C. Evans by John H. Lake and others. This revelation also provided for the ordination of Alexander H. Smith as counselor to President Joseph Smith, thus removing him from the quorum; and also for the selection of William H. Kelley to succeed him as president of the quorum, who was accordingly ordained April 14, 1897, by A. H. Smith and others.

At the April conference of 1900 the resignation of James W. Gillen, which had been previously written, was accepted by the quorum, since which time his whereabouts have not been known.

On the 17th of April, 1901, at Independence, Missouri, Peter Anderson was ordained a member of the quorum, having been nominated by President Joseph Smith in accordance with the direction of the Spirit, by Joseph Smith and W. H. Kelley.

At the April conference of 1902 President Joseph Smith presented a vision which was accepted by the several quorums of the church and subsequently by the General Conference, in which Frederick A. Smith, Francis M. Sheehy, Ulysses W. Greene, John W. Rushton, and Cornelius A. Butterworth were seen sitting in an assembly with the Quorum of Twelve. This having been accepted as sufficient authority for their ordination, the ordinations were ordered; and with the exception of Elder Butterworth they were ordained on the 20th of April, 1902, Frederick A. Smith by Peter Anderson and G. T. Griffiths; F. M. Sheehy and J. W. Rushton by G. T. Griffiths and Peter Anderson; U. W. Greene by J. W. Wight and Joseph Smith. Cornelius A. Butterworth was ordained on April 23, 1902, at Somerville, Victoria, Australia, by Alexander H. Smith.

By the authority of this same vision, Richard C. Evans was ordained a counselor to President Joseph Smith; and by the same authority Edmund C. Briggs, John H. Lake, and Joseph R. Lambert were ordained patriarchs, or evangelical ministers. James Caffall was also designated for ordination as a patriarch but declined to accept.

The quorum as at present sustained by the church consists of William H. Kelley, president, of Lamoni, Iowa; Heman C. Smith, secretary, of Lamoni, Iowa; Joseph Luff, of Independence, Missouri; G. T. Griffiths, of Kirtland, Ohio; I. N. White, of Independence, Missouri; J. W. Wight, of Lamoni, Iowa; Peter Anderson, of Stanberry, Missouri; F. A. Smith, assistant secretary, of Lamoni, Iowa; F. M. Sheehy, of Somerville, Massachusetts; U. W. Greene, of Kirtland, Ohio; J. W. Rushton, of Hamilton, Scotland; C. A. Butterworth, of Geelong, Victoria, Australia.

The members of this quorum are recognized in the law as apostles and high priests, as a second presidency of the church, and authorized to regulate and set in order the affairs of the church in all the world, and as having general oversight of the missionary work.

When infant reason grows apace and calls
For the kind hand of an assiduous care.
Delightful task! to rear the tender thought,

To breathe the enlivening spirit, and to fix
The generous purpose in the glowing breast.

SHORT SKETCH OF THE WORK IN MANITOBA AND THE NORTHWEST TERRITORIES.

Manitoba and the Northwest Territories of Canada are rapidly becoming important parts of the dominion. Several Saints going to different parts, made repeated requests that missionaries be sent to preach the gospel there.

Elder R. C. Evans, having charge of the work in the dominion, decided to send them help and requested Elder Frederick Gregory to make the first missionary effort in that land.

R. C. EVANS.

Elder Gregory was born in London, Ontario, August 15, 1871; baptized April 10, 1888; ordained priest June, 1891; elder, July, 1893; seventy, June, 1898. He became a missionary in June, 1893, and has been actively engaged in the Canada Mission constantly since that time. He was blessed under the hands of President Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans, and left for Manitoba and the northwest in June, 1900. He remained in that field seven months, returned home for two months, then returned to his mission, remaining there for five months. During these twelve months he labored in Carberry, Dauphin, Gilbert Plains, Spy Hill, and several other places, baptizing twenty-four; organized the Spy Hill Branch, and ordained Selby Carter priest, and John Carter teacher.

Bro. Gregory is remembered in the Northwest as a man of sterling ability and true Christian character. His love for the work is still talked of around the winter fireside; how he walked hundreds of miles fording streams in cold weather, with his clothing and books on his head. He is still an active missionary in Ontario, and editor of Canadian Messenger.

FRED'K GREGORY.

Elder W. L. Bennett and Alexander McMullen were the next missionaries to perform labor in the Northwest and Manitoba. W. L. Bennett was born in Canada; baptized in Canada, March 31, 1892; ordained priest October 2, 1898; elder, June 17, 1901; became a missionary June 11, 1901. He left Ontario for the Northwest field October 21, 1901.

Elder Alexander McMullen was born in Canada; baptized in Canada August 29, 1897, left Ontario for British Columbia, in 1898, where he assisted much in the preaching in that country. He was ordained priest November 7, 1900; ordained elder September 1, 1901; labored as a missionary in British Columbia from April 1, 1901, till November 1, 1901, when he joined Elder Bennett in Manitoba.

These two young men labored wisely and well, enduring many hardships while they faced the blinding storms as they walked many weary miles over that new country. They preached for, and slept with the "shanty boys," in their lumbering camps, and labored in Ashville, Athelbert, Swan River, Spy Hill, Cowan, and several other places, walking over six hundred miles. They had a discussion with a Presbyterian preacher, Bro. McMullen being the disputant, and the history of that debate would make an interesting chapter. The truth won favor. They left Winnipeg May 10, 1902, and both have since done missionary labor in Ontario.

W. L. BENNETT.

Elder James L. Mortimer was the next missionary to labor in that country. He is still there, and in charge of the field work. J. L. Mortimer was baptized July 30, 1888, in Canada; ordained elder September 13, 1888. Since that time he has devoted nearly all his time to missionary work. He left Ontario for the Northwest field, October 19, 1902, and with the exception of two short visits home he has devoted all his time to the work in the Northwest field.

Twenty-five hundred miles from home, and too sick to walk. An actual experience by one of our Canadian missionaries.

He has traveled extensively through Manitoba, Assiniboia, and Alberta, baptized a number, organized Sunday-schools and Religios and is loved and honored by all the Saints and has made a host of friends outside of the church.

He has traveled thousands of miles on his bicycle and hundreds of miles on foot. At one time he was taken sick, while on the plains. He lay for four hours unable to move, finally crawled on hands and knees to the trail, thinking if he died his body would be found if near the trail, but he was blessed, received strength and took courage as an instance of God's care.

Elder Alvin Knisley was the next missionary to the Northwest. Bro. Alvin Knisley was born in Canada; baptized in Canada September 20, 1891, ordained priest in 1893, and elder in 1902. During part of the years 1894 and 1895 he labored in the Ontario field. He re-entered that field in 1901, remaining there till November, 1903, when he entered the Northwest field, since which time he has devoted all his time to the work there, preaching, writing, and living in the defense of the great Latter Day work.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

He has preached in Trehern, Manitoba, Weyburn, Assiniboia, and several other places, sold about one hundred dollars' worth of church literature, given thousands of tracts away; baptized fifty-one, and is at present making a masterly defense of the work through the press.

Samuel W. Tomlinson was the next missionary to visit Manitoba and the Northwest. He was born, baptized, ordained priest and elder in Canada, has traveled for many years in the Ontario field. He left for Manitoba in November, 1903, since which time he has done some splendid work in Spy Hill, Assiniboia, and other points.

We regret that we have no items or dates to submit regarding his labors, but he is known as a careful, diligent, faithful missionary.

R. C. Evans was the last missionary to go to the Northwest field. Bro. R. C. was born in Canada, October 20, 1861; baptized in Canada November 5, 1876, ordained priest, 1882; elder, 1884; seventy, 1886; apostle, 1897; Presidency, 1902.

By reason of repeated requests and by duty's call he left London, Ontario, November 7, 1904, for the Northwest in company with J. L. Mortimer. He visited Winnipeg, Trehern, Ashville, Spy Hill, Weyburn, and intended to make Bonnacord and Millett, but was called East on important church-work, reaching Ontario the 11th of December. During that hurried trip he preached three times each Sunday, and every night, save those spent on the cars, except two, baptized four; ordained one elder, one priest, two deacons; organized two branches, and did such other work as duty seemed to require at his hand.

We have now in Manitoba and the Northwest a membership of two hundred and twenty, six branches, two elders, three priests, four teachers, two deacons, and three missionaries.

THE SCANDINAVIAN MISSION.

[We were disappointed in our efforts to secure a longer article on the work in Scandinavia; but Bro. Anderson informs us that the necessary data are difficult to secure. We trust, however, that by the time our next special issue on historical matters appears, we may be able to present more on this matter. —EDITORS.]

The Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints has never prosecuted missionary work very extensively in the Scandinavian countries. Missionaries were appointed to that field in the sixties, but for some reason did not reach there. Bro. Frederik Hansen, willing to do his part, proceeded as far as England, but his traveling companion did not come, and feeling himself incompetent to undertake the work alone he returned to America.

Along in the seventies Brn. H. N. Hansen, M. Fyrando, and Peter N. Brix were appointed to labor in Scandinavia. They were in a degree successful: several united with the church as a result of their labors in Denmark, some of them coming to this country on the return of the two first named brethren. Bro. Brix remained in Denmark, and labored principally in and around the city of Aalborg, where he died in the spring of 1885. Quite a number united with the church as a result of his labors; but the work not being continued at that time, and several of the members emigrating to America, few only remain.

Bro. Fyrando also labored some in Sweden and Norway, but with what success I am not informed.

In 1892 John Walstrom, Marce Sorensen, and Peter Anderson were sent to the Scandinavian Mission. They first located in Malmo, Sweden, the two last named laboring in Denmark, occasionally making a visit to Sweden. They remained two years, during which period but few accepted the work, but parts were reached where no labor had been done hitherto, especially in Denmark, and thousands of tracts were put in circulation.

PETER ANDERSON.

In 1900 missionaries were again sent to the Scandinavian field, Bro. N. C. Enge and M. P. Hansen. The latter died shortly after reaching Norway, and was buried at Arendal. In 1901 Peter Muceus was appointed to that mission, the next year Peter Anderson was again sent to Scandinavia, and last year Bro. John H. Hanson was sent to Sweden. Considerable work has been done by these brethren, assisted by a few local helpers, mainly by Brn. N. Kronberg and A. Sojland, in Norway, and C. A. Swenson, in Sweden. As a result, we now have members at Egersund, Christianssand, Grimstad, Porsgrund, Christiana, and Bon, Norway; Goteborg and Billesholms Grufva, Sweden; and Aalborg and Frederikshavn, Denmark, the largest membership being at Bon, Porsgrund, and Goteborg.

At present there are but three General Conference appointees in that mission. Our work there may be said to be yet in its infancy; but the outlook and conditions there now are such that we may reasonably expect that in the near future a grand work will be accomplished in Scandinavia, providing the field is supplied with suitable laborers and properly cared for.

PETER ANDERSON.

ZION'S RELIGIO-LITERARY SOCIETY.

The society was organized in 1893, at the General Conference held at Lamoni, Iowa. The elements entering into its organization had been forming for a number of years. The young people of the church, moved by a desire for better culture and higher degree of education in the affairs of the church, had undertaken in different localities to satisfy this desire by forming themselves into societies for general improvement.

JOHN C. HITCHCOCK.

Through the medium of the Autumn Leaves, a magazine for the youth of the church, edited and published by Sr. M. Walker, a suggestion that a general organization be effected was circulated, until a call was made for delegates from these societies, to meet at the time of the General Conference of 1892 at Independence, Missouri. Such a meeting of delegates was duly arranged for and held in the basement of the Stone Church at Independence, Missouri, and a committee was appointed to draft a constitution and by-laws and plan of organization and report one year hence. The committee were J. A. Gunsolley, Lamoni, Iowa; G. J. Whitehead, St. Joseph, Missouri, and C. R. Duncan, Lebeck, Missouri.

This committee set about to gather suggestions and collect material for a constitution and plan of organization, soliciting from the various societies, and met in February, 1903, to formulate a report. Bro. Duncan was not able to be present at this meeting, but the rest of the committee enjoyed the presence of the Holy Spirit guiding and approving of the effort to a goodly degree.

At a meeting held during the General Conference in April following this committee made its report, which was adopted, and an organization was effected by electing as officers: President, E. Etzenhouser; first vice-president, Fannie Jones; second vice-president, Mamie Collins (Moxon); secretary, J. C. Hitchcock; treasurer, May Cooper (Mather). At the suggestion of Bro. F. M. Sheehy, of Boston, the name Zion's Religio-Literary Society was chosen.

The plan of work outlined consisted of four departments, Religious, Missionary, Temperance, and Literary. The officers elected met June 10, after the organization at St. Joseph, Missouri, to make arrangements for carrying out the provisions of the society; and after considering various plans it was decided to publish programs and outlines of study in a small periodical called the Program, the first issue of which was published in July, 1893, with Mamie Collins, editor, at a subscription price of twenty-five cents per year.

The following superintendents were appointed in charge of the four departments: Religious, G. J. Whitehead; missionary, Etta M. Izatt (Hitchcock); temperance, George H. Gates; literary, Frances M. Walker (Davis). One week of each month to be devoted to each department, in the order here named. The second issue of the Program, August, bears the name of J. F. McDowell as editor.

Quite a remarkable growth in numbers and interest marked the first year's experience. The first annual convention made some changes in the officers, the election resulting in choosing Harry E. Jarvis, president; J. A. Gunsolley, vice-president; J. C. Hitchcock, secretary, and Russell Archibald, treasurer. Some changes in program work were also made by subdividing each department into senior and junior, with a superintendent for each, making eight separate programs. This multiplying of programs was quite antagonistic to the idea of unity, which it was intended to promote by our work, and when we look back to it now, it seems so strange it was not apparent at once that this would be distraction rather than concentration of effort. But then our vision backward is much better than our vision forward; and then, too, we were "on trial."

Historical Department superseded the Missionary this year, with F. M. Sheehy in charge of the new department.

At the convention of 1895 J. A. Gunsolley was elected president, and F. E. Cochran vice-president, the other officers being re-elected.

During the convention year 1895 and 1896 there were no particular events of importance to record, but nevertheless it was a period of much concern as affecting the policies of the future. Insidious forces unobserved to the casual eye, but portentous to those upon the watchtowers, were doing much, the result of which meant disaster, unless diverted or checked. A marked tendency toward entertainment and amusement to the detriment and almost abandonment of study, marked the work in different localities. The true original spirit of development the periodical would not have to be discontinued. While the condition seemed to prevail, growth in membership continued steadily forward and many encouraging reports were received.

When it is remembered that our course of study was divided into four departments, and each department subdivided into Senior and Junior, usually independent of each other so far as subject-matter is concerned, and that so little attention was being given to study, it may be imagined, for it could only be imagined, how much was being accomplished by study.

Many of the earnest workers became discouraged, along useful lines had been superseded by a spirit of sensationalism so characteristic of the age. So widespread did this become that it was evident to the careful observer that unless radical changes should be made, sooner or later we should be compelled to surrender to the spirit of the world.

Owing to the fact of the General Conference of 1896 being held at Kirtland, Ohio, it was found that our executive officers could not attend, and hence it was decided by the executive to not have a convention, and that the officers should hold over.

The tendency to set aside the study for entertainment continued to grow, and was indicated by a falling off in the patronage of the Program until it became a serious question with the executive whether among them some members of the executive, and had concluded that unless a decided change for the better could be instituted it was useless to continue their efforts.

Such was the condition and feeling when the convention of 1897 assembled. A suggestion that we defer the consideration of business and petition the Lord in fasting and prayer for light and guidance received unanimous approval; and accordingly the morning session of April 3 was set apart for that purpose. An hour of solemn waiting before the Lord with united purpose had its ample reward. Words can not express the joy felt as the Holy Spirit filled the room and hearts of the humble seekers for divine guidance. Doubt fled, hope revived, confidence and faith were inspired. Determination succeeded discouragement, and the whispering of the "still small voice" seemed to be to each individual, "Onward and upward."

The business of the convention went forward with dispatch. A committee¹ on improvements was appointed which recommended a continuous course of study for each of four departments, suggesting for Religious Department, Book of Mormon and archæology; for Literary, travels and such other matter as might be required; for Temperance, music and temperance in all things; for History, church history to have special consideration. This recommendation was adopted.

It was decided to publish programs hereafter in Religio Department in Autumn Leaves, and Sr. Louise Palfrey was appointed editor. The Program was discontinued, the first appearance of lessons in Autumn Leaves being June, 1897, under head of "Religio's Arena."

The new life soon permeated the locals, and a return to the original idea was made in most cases. This change resulted in many places in a marked falling off in membership, having dispensed largely with the amusement feature. Some locals were almost broken up, because they could not hold their membership. Soon, however, the improved conditions were appreciated, and the worthy members gradually returned, and the work took on a settled shape, and the spirit of study and development grew and increased.

The officers elected at the convention of 1897 were: President, J. A. Gunsolley; vice-president, F. E. Cochran; secretary, J. C. Hitchcock; treasurer, Russell Archibald. Superintendents appointed were: Religious Department, Louise Palfrey; temperance, Josie V. Phillips; historical, Duncan Campbell; literary, Elbert A. Smith.

By invitation of the Sunday-school Association officers a program was arranged for a joint Interstate Institute held at St. Joseph, Missouri, December 26 to 29, 1897. This was the second one held by the Sunday-school, but the first in which we had participated. The session proved to be of much good, not alone for the work done at the session, but more for the encouragement given to similar work in the various districts. As a means for the better education and equipment of Religio officers and teachers, it has been found that institute work is the most direct and practical and efficient. A second joint institute was held at Independence, Missouri, December, 1898; and since the holding of these, many districts have held district institutes with good success, in conjunction with the Sunday-schools. It is the practice of the districts, more or less, to hold joint conventions also, thereby securing a better attendance.

At the convention of 1898, a goodly degree of the Holy Spirit was enjoyed, and some material changes were adopted. The Constitution and By-laws were revised providing a single course of study, and after quite a spirited discussion, Book of Mormon and archæology was adopted as the course for our study at present.

Provision was also made for district organizations, and all officers re-elected except vice-president, Ammon White being chosen to this office.

The single course has proved eminently successful, providing for one prayer-meeting a month along with consecutive lessons for study.

There was no convention in 1899, as conference had adjourned for two years. Treasurer Russell Archibald resigned the latter part of the year, and S. A. Burgess, of St. Louis, was appointed to the vacancy.

The word of the Lord came through some of the faithful brethren and sisters giving encouragement and recognition, and promising blessing to the faithful workers. At the St. Joseph Institute, Maysville reunion, and at the convention of 1900 at Lamoni, such words were received.

The General Conference of 1900 provided that the society should be consulted in the appointment of the editor of Autumn Leaves, and the Board of Publication also made an allowance for the editor appointed by us in charge of the official department, the "Religio's Arena."

A greater effort was made to have the society work represented at the reunions than hitherto, resulting in a better understanding of the character of the work and in the formation of many new societies.

A Home Department was instituted to carry the work into the homes of the Saints, and Sr. Marie H. Clark, of Chicago, (now Sr. Morgan, of Independence,) was given charge. This department has developed satisfactorily and is an important feature of the work.

A bureau was also established under the management of Sr. Marie H. Clark, for receiving and distributing literature for missionary purposes.

On September 21, 1900, our beloved secretary, Bro. John C. Hitchcock, departed this life. He had been secretary of the society from the beginning, and had served faithfully and devotedly to the end. None knew so well as he the discouragements and trials of our beloved society. None were so energetic and persistent in promoting its welfare as he. While others slept, he planned and worked; often after a day of hard work, tired and weary, he would be found at his desk writing to some struggling society, or some discouraged officer, persuading to further endeavor. As an officer he was devoted, prompt, careful, and efficient, in the full sense of the terms. He endeared himself to all who had an intimate acquaintance with him. The Religio work as representing the interests of the young was very dear to his heart. But the Lord saw fit to call him to higher duties, to larger fields, to a full fruition of that for which he had prepared himself, leaving to us a noble example of a life of devoted service worthy of emulation, and well-begun work for our hands and hearts to carry forward to higher and greater achievements.

His faithful companion in life, Sr. Etta M. Hitchcock, was appointed by the Executive Committee to act as secretary to fill the vacancy.

Following the convention of 1901 held at Independence, at which former officers were sustained, Bro. J. R. Epperson, Des Moines, Iowa, was appointed superintendent of the Gospel Literature Bureau, and Sr. Dora Young, Holden, Missouri, superintendent of Home Department, Sr. Marie H. Clark having resigned. Of the work of Sr. Clark, it may be said that from a small beginning it developed through her untiring efforts, her push and energy, into two distinct departments of work which are doing great good among our people. Under her successors they have continued to grow, until now throughout the church they are recognized as essential factors in the work of the society.

At the convention of 1902 at Lamoni Bro. W. J. Mather, Lamoni, Iowa, was chosen treasurer, Bro. S. A. Burgess having declined re-election. A decided step forward in our study work was taken at this convention, when the publication of a lesson quarterly was authorized. The need of such a help had been growing and had been discussed more or less for some time previous. The first issue with Sr. Louise Palfrey, Macon, Missouri, as editor, appeared for fourth quarter, October, November, December, 1902, printed at Herald Publishing House; and the success hoped for it has been more than realized, the circulation being three thousand at a subscription price of thirty-five cents a year, ten cents a quarter.

A revision of the Constitution and By-laws was undertaken at the convention of 1903, at Independence, Missouri, making a number of changes of more or less importance; such revision, however, was not completed until the 1904 convention at Kirtland. During this year (1903) the society published and placed upon sale a book entitled The Divinity of the Book of Mormon Proven by Archæology, a students' handbook in Book of Mormon study. The manuscripts for this book were written by Sr. Louise Palfrey and first published as a series of papers in the Autumn Leaves. The author kindly relinquished her right to the society as a gift.

At Kirtland convention, 1904, S. A. Burgess, St. Louis, Missouri, was elected to the new office of general librarian created by the revision of the Constitution and By-laws. Bro. J. R. Epperson had sent in his resignation as superintendent of the Gospel Literature Bureau, because of business demands upon his time, and delicate health; all old officers were re-elected. Sr. Dora Young having found it impossible to continue in charge of the Home Department, declined reappointment, and Sr. Catherine Haines, Independence, Missouri, was appointed to the work. Another change in our general staff was the appointment of Elbert A. Smith editor of the Religio's Arena. There were no other changes in the general officers and superintendents for the year.

The foregoing is the history of the society briefly sketched. In approaching our twelfth anniversary we number, at a conservative estimate, about six thousand members. Local societies exist in Australia, Society Islands, England, Canada, and many States, with a goodly number of districts, and a respectable Home Department. The official organ is the Religio's Arena in Autumn Leaves, and the official course of study the Religio Quarterly. Religio Departments are maintained by Zion's Ensign, Glads Tidings, Canadian Messenger, and Australian Banner. Our course of study is primarily the Book of Mormon and Archæology, and all the books of the church, and other good literature as attendant study. We have grown in the good graces of the members of the church and the ministry until we are in demand as a feature of reunion gatherings, and many missionaries, we might almost say all, are active workers in our ranks. Hundreds can bear testimony that they have received real pleasure and satisfaction in the approving influences of the Holy Spirit while engaged in the work of the society.

So may it be ours to labor on in humility and love, not forgetting the source of our strength or the defense of our safety, sending forth from our numbers such light and lights as shall truly be an auxiliary—a help—in lightening the dark places of ignorance, prejudice, and superstition, until the Light of the world shall burst forth from the clouds in his fullness and beauty to emblazon the entire earth.

SOME people, like the bee, seem to gather honey from every flower; while others, like the spider, carry only poison away. One person finds happiness everywhere and in every occasion, carrying his own holiday with him. Another always appears to be returning from a funeral. One sees beauty and harmony wherever he looks, his very tears affording him visions of resplendent rainbows as the sunbeams of Hope fall upon him. Another is blind to beauty; the lenses of his eyes seem to be smoked glass, draping the whole world in mourning.

SKETCH OF SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEVELOPMENT IN THE CHURCH.

The church was organized in 1830, when the Sunday-school work had been well established among the sectarian churches. As early as 1784 Raikes described his Sunday-school movement in the Gentleman's Magazine, attracting much attention. The work was begun and spread very rapidly in other places, so that by 1789 there were about three hundred thousand scholars in Great Britain. In the United States the first organized movement was in 1786 by the Philadelphia society for the support of Sunday-schools. Schools were also started in other States; at Boston in 1791, in Virginia in 1786, in New York in 1793, etc. In 1816 the New York Sunday-school Union was formed, and in 1824 the American Sunday-school Union. In 1832 the National Sunday-school Union was organized, which later, in 1875, developed into the International Sunday-school Union, from whence comes the great international system of uniform Sunday-school lessons. In 1833 was formed the Sunday-school Association, an organization maintained in connection with the Unitarian Church. These unions supplied the schools with literature and lessons of various kinds, thus unifying and simplifying the work to a considerable extent. But at this time and until about 1860 the work of the Sunday-school consisted chiefly in teaching ordinary reading and writing in connection with scriptural quotations and questions from church catechisms, the better class of lesson helps being introduced later on, including the international and interdenominational uniform lesson system adopted in 1872 by the National Sunday-school Association somewhat forgetting the injunction to "prove all things, and hold fast that which is good." They seemed to avoid anything for which there was not a direct command either in the Scriptures or in the revelations given the church. Then, too, the unsettled condition of affairs which prevailed a great deal of the time, persecution from the outside world, and the work of proselyting so extensively and so successfully carried on may have been influences that caused the Sunday-school work to drop into insignificance. And so, while it is doubtless true that several Sunday-schools were organized and maintained for a shorter or longer period during the first organization, no systematic effort or general working system was adopted, and but little can be learned of the methods employed or the results of their work.

But it was never intended by God that the work of building the church and spreading the gospel should entirely obscure the work with the rising generation. In June, 1831, but little more than one year after the organization of the church, God commanded W. W. Phelps to "assist . . . in selecting and writing books for schools, in this church, that little children also may receive instruction before me as is pleasing unto me." (Doctrine and Covenants section 55, paragraph 2.) And in November of the same year he commands that parents shall teach the principles of the gospel and teach them to pray and walk uprightly or the "sin be upon the head of the parents." (Doctrine and Covenants section 68, paragraph 4.) Just what was done during the time of the old church organization to comply with these commands we are unable to say. No books were written that we know of. And while it is very probable that many did comply with the command to teach their children, it is quite certain that some neglected their duty in this respect, for they were openly rebuked therefor. (See Doctrine and Covenants 90:6-9.) The few short years of prosperity for the church soon passed and all progress came to a sudden end for a while. And we must look to the time after the reorganization of the church for the next appearance of the Sunday-school.

After the reorganization of the church many problems presented themselves to be solved by those upon whom the responsibility of conducting the affairs of the church rested. Many had been their trials, their sad experiences and their sore disappointments. Many were disappointed, many deceived and led astray, and many in the throes of serious doubt. A few remained faithful to their trust, and still others returned thereto. And as the church again resumed its task of spreading the truth and building up Zion, one of the pertinent thoughts would naturally be to fortify ourselves as a church by teaching the young and rising generations the principles of truth that they might not be deceived by conspiring men. And for this purpose of teaching the child and youth, the

With these environments naturally, then, we might expect to find the Sunday-school work soon established among the Saints of the early church. But not so. God had spoken and had told the young man that the churches "were all wrong," and that "their creeds were an abomination in his sight." Hence they went from the one extreme of accepting all that was sectarian to the opposite extreme of accepting nothing that had a form of sectarianism about it,

Sunday-school seemed to present itself as a practical means to the end sought.

A very flourishing Sunday-school was carried on in Nauvoo, Illinois, in 1863 and 1864 under the care of Bro. Joseph, Alexander, and David H. Smith, the latter acting as superintendent.

"In February, 1864, a branch was organized in St. Louis. The same spring the Sunday-school work commenced here. The branch president, Charles Hall, was superintendent. That Sunday-school, the 'Zion's Hope,' is still with us. It was this Sunday-school that gave name to the Sunday-school paper in 1869, Zion's Hope."

Another school was being run in Sandwich, Illinois, in 1865. And still other schools may have been maintained but we have not reliable data from which we can draw the facts.

At the General Conference in April, 1868, a "motion prevailed, recommending to the publishing committee the issuing of a Sunday-school paper, monthly or semimonthly. (General Conference Resolutions 101.) The paper, Zion's Hope, was first issued July 1, 1869, as a child's paper, Bro. Mark H. Forscutt as editor. He was succeeded after some time had elapsed by Bro. Henry A. Stebbins, and he in the early 80's by Sr. M. Walker, who has since retained the editorship-in-chief. It was but a small sheet at first but has twice been enlarged. The paper has served not only as a child's paper, but, at times, as a lesson sheet for the Sunday-school lessons. Further mention of this will be made. It was at first a small paper and its circulation was small. But it has passed through years of development and grown in favor till now it enters hundreds of schools and thousands of homes of Latter Day Saints, there to do its part in the work of building up the young mind and character.

During the first decade after the reorganization of the church, the Sunday-school had gained a place among the working forces of the church. Good results from the efforts in these lines were being felt, and the leading quorums of the church were lending their influences to encourage and establish the work more generally. In the Church History, volume 3, page 416, we find that as early as May 4, 1865, the "First Presidency and the Quorum of Twelve recommend," "that in all branches of the church where it is practicable, there be Sunday-schools established." "That the above resolution be published in the HERALD."

General Conference passed a resolution April 10, 1871, "That as the Sunday-school cause forms an important feature in the great work of the last days, the officers and teachers thereof are hereby sustained in their calling to care for the lambs of Israel's fold."—Conference Resolution 128.

October 9, 1876, General Conference reaffirmed the resolution passed in 1871, adding: "Resolved that we request the presidents of branches, throughout the world, to use their utmost endeavors to organize Sunday-schools in their respective branches, and to make reports to their several district conferences of the condition and progress of said schools; and that districts make reports to the annual conference; and that presidents of districts and the traveling ministry be also requested to use their influence to establish and sustain Sunday-schools."

Looking further to the progress and development of the Sunday-school work a resolution was passed by General Conference, September 6, 1881, "That a committee of three be appointed to take into consideration the feasibility of some general plan of conducting Sunday-schools, and if found feasible, report said general plan to the annual conference; and "That they also take into consideration the feasibility and practicability of using one page of the Hope as a lesson sheet, or of using an extra sheet for such purpose."—General Conference Resolution 243. The committee appointed were E. Robinson, J. F. Mintun, and William Clow. They reported to the conference of 1882.

Prior to this, probably in 1869, Sr. M. Walker had prepared the "Intermediate Question Book," a book intended for the use of children in the Sunday-school. It was published by the church, and in a few years the edition was exhausted.

In April, 1884, General Conference passed a resolution "That the Board of Publication be requested to take such measures as they shall deem proper to furnish Sabbath-schools suitable lesson papers, and if practicable, to reduce the size of the Hope, make it a weekly, and publish through it the lessons, and W. C. Cadwell, Sr. Alice Cobb, and D. F. Lambert, be a committee to prepare and furnish said lessons for publication." These lessons were published from week to week in the Hope.

A little later Sr. M. Walker prepared a "Primary Question Book," and together with Bro. Henry A. Stebbins prepared the "Compendium." The Compendium was published by the church in 1888, and the Primary Question Book in 1889. These with the Intermediate Question Book, a second edition of which had been issued in 1886, with the Bible, constituted the lesson equipment of the schools till after the organization of the General Sunday-school Association in 1891. However, a great many of our schools procured and used the International Quarterly, and used them till superceded by the Gospel Quarterly.

As the work progressed, it became very patent to the workers that there was much lacking to make their work efficacious or their system complete. And they conceived the idea of association as the best means to the desired end of improvement. Various claims of priority in district organization or association are made but from the reliable data at hand we conclude that the following are among the earliest efforts in that direction:

St. Louis district makes the claim of "first." Sr. Etta M. Hitchcock in an article on district history found in HERALD for 1904, page 1008, says: "In June, 1879, the first district association was formed, of St. Louis, Belleville, Cheltenham, Alma, and Caseyville Sunday-schools; William Jaques was district superintendent; Jos. E. Betts, Jr., was district secretary. Was this the first district association?"

By reference to HERALD of May 26, 1888, we see that a constitution and by-laws for a district association was adopted by the Southern California District at a meeting March 3, of same year. J. R. Badham was elected superintendent, Sr. Vina H. Goff, assistant superintendent, and J. B. Morris, secretary.

By reference to HERALD of August 18, 1888, you will see that the Gallands Grove, Iowa, district effected an organization on June 16, of the same year, with J. M. Baker superintendent, Charles J. Hunt assistant superintendent, and Sr. Fannie Pett secretary.

The Decatur District, Iowa, followed in March, 1889; Fremont District, Iowa, in June, 1889, and Little Sioux, Iowa, in March, 1890. Others followed in quick succession, but this is the last we have reliable data of till after the General Sunday-school Association was organized.

Still further was this idea of association carried. The districts sought counsel not only among themselves but from other districts. It was felt that an association of the district associations would be beneficial to the workers and the work. General Conference recognized the conditions and the needs of a special and systematic effort being made along these lines and looking to this end passed the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas the Sunday-school movement in the church, which is becoming an important part of the work of the body of Christ, has now arrived at that period of its existence that it invites and needs assistance and encouragement as well as recognition in a more general and definite way, therefore, be it

Resolved that this conference appoint a committee whose duty shall be to devise ways and means towards the further establishment of the Sunday-school work, with a view to making it a department of regular church-work and care.—General Conference Resolutions 339.

The committee consisted of Brn. F. M. Sheehy, S. B. Kibler, R. S. Salyards, Srs. Marietta Walker, and Belle Robinson. They took the whole matter under advisement and decided to formulate a constitution and by-laws for a permanent organization, to submit to a convention for which they issued a call. The ratio of representation was fixed at one delegate for each ten members, no school or district to have more than five delegates. Delegates were sent from Decatur, Iowa, Independence, Missouri, Southeastern Ohio and West Virginia, Massachusetts, and Far West, Missouri, districts and from schools at St. Louis, Missouri, Kirtland, Ohio, Jonesport, Maine, Blakes Mills, Ohio, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, Nebraska City, Nebraska, Green's Landing, Maine, Sand Run, Ohio, London, Ontario, and Galien, Michigan.

Pursuant to call the convention assembled in the Temple at Kirtland, Ohio, Saturday morning, April 4, 1891, at ten o'clock. They were called to order by Elder F. M. Sheehy. After singing, prayer was offered by R. S. Salyards. The chairman then stated that the convention had been called by the General Conference committee appointed at the Lamoni conference of 1890 to devise ways and means for the development of the Sunday-school work with a view to making it a department of regular church work and care. A permanent organization of the convention followed. F. M. Sheehy was chosen chairman, R. S. Salyards, secretary, and T. W. Williams, assistant secretary. The constitution and by-laws prepared and proposed by the conference committee was presented, considered section by section, and, with very slight changes, was unanimously adopted.

Officers for the ensuing year were elected. E. A. Blakeslee, Galien, Michigan, was chosen general superintendent; Sr. M. Walker, assistant superintendent; Gomer Wells, Knobnoster, Missouri, secretary; and Sr. Callie B. Stebbins, treasurer, Lamoni, Iowa.

A committee to select a suitable song-book for the Sunday-schools was appointed as follows: Sr. Lucy L. Resseguie, J. T. Evans, Ralph G. Smith. Sr. Walker offered a department in Autumn Leaves for Sunday-school matter; and Bro. F. G. Pitt stated that the columns of the Ensign were open to the Sunday-school workers as they saw fit to use. These offers were accepted and work carried in these periodicals for some time. A committee on "lesson helps" was ordered, and the chair appointed J. A. Gunsolley and Sr. Anna Stedman Salyards the committee.

The work of the convention was recognized, and the officers of the association sustained by the General Conference following. And thus was the splendid work of the General Sunday-school Association fairly begun.

Bro. E. A. Blakeslee continued as general superintendent five years, when he was succeeded by T. A. Hougas, of Henderson, Iowa, who has since continued in the office. Sr. M. Walker was continued as assistant superintendent four years, and was succeeded by Sr. Anna Salyards. She was succeeded by F. E. Cochran in 1897. In April, 1898, a change in the constitution created the office of second assistant superintendent. Bro. J. A. Gunsolley was chosen first assistant superintendent, and has continued in that office since. Charles Crumley, of California, was chosen second assistant superintendent. He was succeeded in 1900 by F. M. Pitt, Chicago; he, in 1901, by George H. Gates, of Providence, Rhode Island. In 1902 the office again went to California, Bro. A. Carmichael being elected. He was succeeded in 1904 by E. H. Fisher of Boston, Massachusetts, who still holds the office.

Bro. Gomer Wells was elected secretary of the General Association at the organization, and was continued in the office until he went on his Australian mission in 1893. Bro. W. N. Robinson was chosen to succeed him, and served until 1901, at which time Bro. D. J. Krahl, the present incumbent, was chosen.

The office of general librarian was created in 1898 and has been filled successively by Sr. Mamie Allen, S. A. Burgess, and Sr. E. Etzenhouser. The office of treasurer has been held by Srs. Callie B. Stebbins, Lucy L. Resseguie, Cassie B. Kelley, Brn. A. B. Hanson and John Smith. The convention of 1904 ordered a home department superintendent appointed. Mrs. T. A. Hougas was selected to fill that place.

If we were asked what, in our opinion, of all that the General Association has done or provided has been the most potent force for good to the Sunday-school movement, we should unhesitatingly answer, "The Gospel Quarterly." It has done more to mold the thought of the masses of the church, to influence the minds and characters of the young and rising generations than any other one element of our environment. These are very broad assertions, but after years of very careful thought and oversight of the work, they have become firm convictions.

The committee appointed at the Kirtland convention to consider the subject of lesson leaves made report. The report was considered and resulted in a resolution "to publish our own lesson leaves, with King James' translation of the Bible as a basis and the Inspired Version to be cited where difference occurred." The officers of the association were constituted a ways and means committee for the publication of said helps.

In obedience to the instructions of the convention, the general officers secured the services of Sr. M. Walker, J. A. Gunsolley, and Sr. Anna Stedman Salyards to compile and edit such work. The first issue of the Gospel Quarterly was given to the schools in September, 1892. A senior and an intermediate grade were at first issued, the intermediate including a primary lesson also. This arrangement continued for two years, when a primary grade was added edited by Srs. L. L. Resseguie and Viola Blair. However, we should add that after the first year Sr. Anna Stedman Salyards was editor of the senior and intermediate grades. She has remained editor or editor-in-chief of the Gospel Quarterlies ever since, except as we shall note. Elder Duncan Campbell was chosen editor of the intermediate grade July, 1897, and continued therein five quarters. He then became assistant editor of the Gospel Quarterlies and continued as such one year. During one year the lessons in the Primary Quarterly were written by several of the primary workers and edited by the editor of the Quarterlies. But this was found impractical, and thereafter the lessons were written by the editor.

ANNA SALYARDS.

These three grades have met with much favor and have done a splendid work. But there was yet a grade not provided for. The first primaries or infant classes were too young to be handled practically in the regular Primary Quarterly grade, and a demand from primary workers called forth an action in general convention appointing a committee of primary workers to prepare and publish a series of lessons suitable to this grade. The Study Hour was the result. But it failed to be properly supported and was abandoned. The same general scheme, though with new and revised lessons by another committee, resulted in a series of lessons which were published in connection with the regular Primary Quarterly for one and one half years. These same lessons are now being revised and put into permanent form by the committee. This committee consists of Srs. Christiana Salyards, Margaret Blair, Ruth L. Smith, Eva M. Bailey, and Viola B. Blair.

The Quarterlies have met with favor from the beginning. They have ever been self-sustaining, financially, and more too. With the growth of the Sunday-school work, the circulation has been constantly on the increase so that now all grades combined have passed the twenty thousand mark.

At the end of the first year a "revising committee" was appointed by the general convention to revise all Quarterly lessons before going to print and to correct any errors in historical or doctrinal matter. These committees have changed from time to time, but have invariably consisted of competent and prominent elders of the church whose judgment and knowledge of the doctrines may be relied upon. They have done their work carefully and promptly. And few, indeed, are the errors that have crept into the work of the Quarterly.

As has been mentioned, several persons have from time to time been connected with the compiling of the Quarterly, but most of the credit that can be to mortal given for the success and quality and plan of the work must be ascribed to our faithful, earnest, and competent editor-in-chief, Sr. Anna Salyards. It would seem that God had chosen her for that work, and we hope and pray that he may sustain her therein as long as it is his will that she should do the work.

In the fall of 1896 the workers gathered at the Woodbine reunion, Iowa, planned to hold what they were pleased to call an "Interstate Sunday-school Institute." It was held at Council Bluffs, Iowa, in December of same year. These institutes were gatherings from several States of the workers to discuss practical questions in a practical way. The next year another institute was held at St. Joseph, Missouri, and a year later than this at Independence, Missouri. These institutes served a dual purpose: that of teaching what the workers needed to know and to introduce institute work into the district conventions. The general institutes were discontinued, but the district institute is growing in popularity.

From the sale of the Quarterlies the General Association accumulated funds in its treasury beyond its needs. And at the convention of 1896 at Kirtland, Ohio, it was voted to donate to the general church treasury four hundred dollars. Also, the convention at Lamoni, Iowa, in April, 1902, voted to donate five hundred dollars to the surplus fund of the church, and five hundred dollars to Graceland College debt, making a total of fourteen hundred dollars in all donated to church-work.

At the first annual convention in 1892, one year after the organization of the association, the secretary reported fifteen district associations, comprising sixty-seven schools; and eight schools not in districts. The number of officers and teachers not given, but the total enrollment was 3,905. Balance in the treasury $62.51. After twelve years had elapsed our general secretary reported to the convention of 1904, fifty-three district associations, a gain of thirty-eight. These comprise four hundred and twenty-six schools, a gain of three hundred and fifty-nine. There were 2,142 officers and 1,712 teachers. The total enrollment in districts and schools not in districts was 18,818, a net gain of 14,913, an average gain of one hundred and twenty-five per year for the twelve years. There was a balance in the treasury of $477.89, as against $62.51 in 1892.

Figures show the numerical increase, but it is more difficult to show the advancement that has been made in lines that can not be reckoned in figures. We must see to be informed. We must experience the present conditions and contrast them with what was fifteen years ago, to appreciate the improvement that has been made by the faithful band of Sunday-school workers. We say faithful band and we believe they are deserving of the tribute. There are and always will be some negligent or indifferent ones, but there are many who earnestly and sincerely apply themselves to the work for the work's sake and the good that they can do. And the good that they have done for the young and rising generation and also for the older generations eternity must reveal. God knows our hearts, and he will reward every faithful worker with the full measure of his just reward.

INDEPENDENCE BRANCH, MISSOURI.

The Independence Branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was organized at the court-house May 25, 1873, just forty years after the Saints were driven from the State. The children of Israel, under Moses, wandered forty years. Henry Etzenhouser was ordained a priest and placed in charge, assisted by Peter Johnson Hole who was ordained a teacher.

In the spring of 1874 the meetings were discontinued for a few months, but were resumed in the fall of that year, and George W. Pilgrim, being ordained an elder, was elected president of the branch. In the summer of 1874 a Sunday-school was organized at the home of Elder John W. Brackenbury, with fifteen members.

From the re-establishment of the branch in 1873, until the Independence Stake organization April 24, 1901, the branch was presided over by the following brethren: Priest Henry Etzenhouser, Elders George W. Pilgrim, John W. Brackenbury, F. C. Warnky, Alexander H. Smith, F. G. Pitt, Joseph Luff, John A. Robinson, George E. Harrington, and William H. Garrett. The stake organization necessitated a change by the law as expressed in Doctrine and Covenants 125:10, placing the center of the stakes at the points named, and providing for a president and two counselors, as expressed in revised Book of Rules, to have charge of the branches at the places named (see chapter 15, paragraph 170, page 105), showing among other duties of the stake presidency that of presiding over the branch in "the city of the stake," or "seat of organization." In accordance with this principle, Bro. William H. Garrett, who at that time was president of the branch, resigned under the rule providing for a stake presidency duly elected, and ordained, composed of three high priests, and Bro. George H. Hulmes president, and William H. Garrett and John D. White counselors, assumed charge as a presidency or pastorate. The presiding priest is John W. Layton, Lester Brackenbury presiding teacher, and B. C. Smith presiding deacon; each being assisted by a large corps of assistants in their several duties.

The branch has rapidly gained in membership, until it now numbers over fourteen hundred and forty members, having gained about four hundred since the stake organization in 1901. The Sunday-school has increased from a membership of fifteen in 1874, till now the enrollment is six hundred and fifty-three members, which includes a home class department of eighty-nine members. The collection of the school aggregates about five hundred and twenty-five dollars per year. The following are its present officers: Superintendent, Elder Earl Corthell; assistant superintendent, Lester Brackenbury; secretary, Mrs. Flo McNichols; assistant secretary, Rowland McNichols; chorister, E. C. Harrington; organist, Mrs. R. Brocaw; assistant organist, Mrs. J. C. Gardner; treasurer, John Charles May; librarian, Leonard Harrington; superintendent of primary department, Mrs. B. C. Smith; secretary of primary department, Tessie Smith. Our school is divided into fifty-two classes, which includes Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and Church History classes, as well as the Bible or Quarterly classes.

The local Zion's Religio-Literary Society was organized September, 1893, with a membership of forty, present membership being two hundred and eighty-six; officers for 1905 being as follows: I. N. White, Jr., president; W. A. Bushnell, vice-president; Mrs. Pearl Gardner, secretary; Leonard Harrington, treasurer; Clifton Resch, librarian; Harold Bullard, chorister; Paul Craig, organist. Average attendance one hundred and fifty-four. Total number of classes eighteen. There is a flower committee sustained by the Religio, whose duty it is to secure and distribute flowers to the sick and for the pulpit, and as otherwise needed. Young Srs. Bessie Nesbit and Emma Criley constitute this committee. The Religio also sustains a relief committee to assist and visit the sick when other help can not be had.

The Ladies' Mite Society was the first auxiliary organized after the Sunday-school. Sr. G. W. Pilgrim was presiding officer for a long time, Sr. J. W. Brackenbury, secretary, and Sr. Mary Page Eaton, treasurer. Very much good resulted from their labors.

The Hawthorn Society, another auxiliary, was organized with Sr. A. L. Newton, president. They contributed loyally to the building of the Stone Church, the corner-stone of which was laid April 6, 1888, by Presidents Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair. This society added much to the splendid accomplishment of the branch membership in that great work. The last work undertaken by them and carried to a successful culmination was the building of the fine pipe-organ at a cost of about twenty-five hundred dollars, and presenting it fully paid for to the branch.

The Willing Helpers, now numbering about forty members, are also doing an excellent work in assisting the poor and engaging in many useful ways to assist the church. Sr. J. M. Braidwood is president, and Sr. Abbie Horton, secretary.

The Daughters of Zion number about fifty-five members, and are very active in their useful and growing work. Sr. B. C. Smith is president, and Sr. Abbie A. Horton is secretary.

The Prayer Union meets at half past two Thursday afternoons; Sr. Weston, president, Sr. Abbie Horton, secretary.

The Gleaners, another auxiliary of young helpers, with Sr. Nettie Kemp, president, and Sr. Edna Yingling, secretary, has an enrollment of about thirty-five members.

The Sunshine Band, under the leadership of Sr. Flo Sterrett as president, and Sr. Birdie Sterrett, secretary, is a junior band of those who visit the sick, and also distribute flowers and the cheering sunshine of helpfulness where they find opportunity.

GEORGE H. HULMES, Stake President.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, February 17, 1905.

ST. JOSEPH BRANCH, MISSOURI.

[We gladly give space to the following excellent description of the pretty church-building, in St. Joseph, Missouri, from the pen of Bro. Robert Winning.—Eds.]

The church-building at St. Joseph, Missouri, is located on the east side of Seventeenth Street near Faraon, cornering on the alley. The building is very strongly constructed; pressed brick front; red brick throughout, laid in red mortar. The walls are surmounted with ornate galvanized cornice and finished in white stone. From above the entrance springs the base of a tower, finished by a neat cupola. Main floor stands about six feet above the sidewalk; a grassy plat in front; entrance approached by one broad step from sidewalk, then a beautiful tessellated pavement of white and red stone; then an ascent of easy steps to a broad platform step, or landing, all protected by strong iron railings from sidewalk to massive double doors entering into vestibule, from which are convenient stairs to the basement and to the gallery across the front of the building. To the left, double baize swinging doors lead to open vestibule, from which opens a handsome retiring-room, occupying space equal in size to the first vestibule. To the right through a rounded archway we enter the main auditorium—a lofty room—the side walls are eighteen feet to beginning of ceiling, which then gracefully slopes upward to a central level, occupying two thirds of the width with excellent effect.

CHAPEL AT SAINT JOSEPH.

The walls and ceilings are roughly floated and frescoed, the front of gallery and all other woodwork of red oak beautifully finished. The choir platform raised two steps, with a curved formation, is railed off, giving a fine effect to that side of the building. Two lofty windows on each side and in the upper gables (recessed) circular windows. Three openings in front, each describing the segment of a circle, and forming a transom. These transoms each bear an open book, the leaves white, with seals hanging therefrom. The book over the door has in red letters thereon "H. B." and the windows "B. M." and "D. C." respectively—"the three books." Stained glass on all windows worked out in beautiful and harmonious designs, so grouped as to exemplify the numbers "3," "7," and "12" throughout. The circular window in north gable shows a wreath of grape-vines and grapes, with sacramental cup inclosed; that on the south the sun shining forth in its glory from the east, its golden rays spreading out in every direction, toward the west the crescent moon, above and westward the stars of differing magnitude and glory, and in the center a cross, blood red, surmounted by a crown. Pulpit- and platform-chairs, opera-chairs for auditorium, all match the woodwork. Midway of the ceiling hangs a large sunburst of gaslights, surrounded by chains of faceted crystals and dangling crystal pendants. In front and rear gallery rooms and vestibules neat and appropriate gas-fixtures. The floors are neatly carpeted.

The basement, a commodious room divided as above, and with lavatory accommodations for women and children, accommodations for cooking and entertainment preparation at one end, and doorway at the other end leading to furnace and fuel-rooms; platform is central and on north side, under which the iron baptismal fount six feet by nine and one half feet. The walls and ceilings, plaster and woodwork are painted with oil paint. The windows of figured ground glass; the basement is entered from the north; a brick walk leads from the sidewalk; thence by steps down to the basement level; thence, leaving ample room, by other steps to original level and the rear of the lot. Over the doorway and covering the steps on each side is a long and handsome portico.

Diagonally across the street from front of church-building is an electric standard fixture, which at night bathes the building in a flood of light.

A complete, homelike, commodious structure throughout, in a good and constantly improving neighborhood.

Elder Mark H. Forscutt, if I mistake not, made first opening in preaching at St. Joseph, early in the seventies. John Burlington and Albert Bishop met with him, and a little later meetings were held in the house of Albert Bishop (on Eighth Street), who kept open house, Sr. Bishop never tiring in her helpful way in caring for everybody.

Elder E. C. Brand came along about 1873, preaching in the circuit court-room, then using the old Roman Catholic chapel on the northeast corner of Sixth and Felix. He visited at the home of John Burlington, who had previously been baptized. He broke ground for others to follow and cultivate. President William W. Blair came preaching in 1873, and possibly before; but in the summer of that year he baptized several in Roy's Branch, a creek north of the city, among them Robert Winning. President Joseph Smith, too, come along about this time. The writer well remembers him at the house of Albert Bishop; cheery, unassuming, hearty, companionable, and instructive.

The church, small in numbers, rich in faith, advanced slowly but surely.

Bro. T. W. Smith and his wife Helen labored faithfully among us along about 1876-7, meetings held in an upper back room northwest corner Fifth and Francis, where the writer first met William Lewis, and was peculiarly impressed by the calm, gentle earnestness of his voice in prayer.

Meetings for a while were held in a room in the hook and ladder house on south side Francis Street, between Fifth and Sixth.

About this time, 1876, John Burlington was ordained an elder and elected president of the branch. He was faithful, earnest, and true. Membership was added to from Boston, Massachusetts—George C. Smith, Senterlow Butler, John C. Gardner, Charles Eldredge, William H. Soule, with their families, the Steffes, the Isleibs and others who came, influenced largely by T. W. Smith's writings on the gathering.

Mark H. Forscutt was a frequent and welcome visitor, preaching in rooms on west side Fifth, between Francis and Felix, and later in hall in Tootle's Opera House building. The church was compelled to make many moves. Met in room in court-house for a time, but finally, during the time of Mark H. Forscutt's appointment as a missionary to St. Joseph, the Saints gathered around him (he was a father to the church) and one brother and sister (husband and wife) started the work of church building by proposing to give ground for church-building site in an eligible location, valued at the time at seventeen hundred and fifty dollars, provided the rest of the branch would subscribe double that amount. William Lewis had by this time moved to St. Joseph. Brn. M. H. Forscutt, Robert Winning, William Lewis, John Burlington, Jr., and William H. Soule were appointed a building committee. Committees were appointed on subscription. George W. Best had dropped down among us, working for Father Burlington's Transfer Company. All worked with a will. Brick building decided upon. John Krahl took the contract at six thousand dollars independent of the excavation, and did work so excellent as to make it a monument to his memory.

Before yet the floor in basement had been laid, Bro. Forscutt baptized three in the new church font.

Excavation and other expenses rolled up; the Saints subscribed about thirty-eight hundred dollars—indeed, over-subscribed, and many were unable to meet their agreements made in good faith. Contracts had to be met and money was borrowed, first through the State's Savings Bank, by Brn. Burlington, Winning, and Forscutt; later this was paid through new loans obtained at lower interest rates. But with possession, the ardor of the Saints had slackened; the beautiful church was theirs, complete, and they did not seem to feel the strong necessity for continued action.

Gradually, however, the necessity for united action became apparent, and in April, 1900, an appeal was made to the General Conference to so order matters that all contributions made by the Saints of St. Joseph should be credited by the Bishop, and aside from an amount equal to the tithing previously paid annually by the members of the branch and its running expense, all should be applied on the debt.

The Presidency and Bishopric, as a committee, developed a plan to cover this; and, stimulated by the encouragement thus given, all becoming of one purpose and mind, the debt was reduced about two thousand dollars the first year; and so the work rolled on. Some of the old, sustaining members removed in 1889 and 1900 from the city, although still helpful, but those remaining have taken up the task and the work has been onward.

Many trials were experienced during the progress of the work in St. Joseph. Brave, strong, gentle, loving Father Blair did much in the troublous times to make for peace, his memory endeared to us thereby. Difficult to name all who contributed to the up-growth and progress of the work; but we may name as missionaries: Elder Hiram C. Bronson, J. Frank McDowell, John M. Terry, and his dear good wife did much to sustain and strengthen. John T. Kinnaman came to us, towering over every one in height, impressive in his earnestness; James Caffall, too, manly and upright; I well remember one saying of his "The faithful performance of present duty is the legitimate stepping-stone to future greatness." The Kinnamans,—Carl, Milton, Sadie,—with their families; the Blairs; David Krahl in Sunday-school; Herbert Ennis—we can not name them all; so many have been helpful.

God bless them all; and may the work which they so faithfully assisted in become an honor unto them—a blessing to those who remain to follow after.

ROBERT WINNING.

FORTUNE, good or ill, as I take it, does not change men and women. It but develops their character. As there are a thousand thoughts lying within a man that he does not know till he takes up the pen to write, so the heart is a secret even to him (or her) who has it in his own breast. Who hath not found himself surprised into revenge, or action, or passion, for good or evil, whereof the seeds lay within him, latent and unsuspected, until the occasion called them forth.—Thackeray.

THE BRANCH AT ST. LOUIS.

The St. Louis Branch was organized February 7, 1864, by William Anderson, of Montrose; and Henry Cuerden, and the Sunday-school was started the same spring. For nearly twenty-five years services were held in rented halls, but efforts were made from time to time to secure a more permanent location, which resulted in the little chapel, 2518 Elliot Avenue.

The early Saints were earnest, and many of the gifts of the Spirit were enjoyed by them. But in the ensuing years there had been dark times as well as bright; times when there were serious losses of attendance, and even serious losses of membership. At one time in 1878 the branch was only saved from disorganization by the vote of the presiding officer. But after moving into their own chapel in October, 1888, there was a steady growth in numbers and in spiritual force.

Bro. Joseph dedicated the chapel on June 5, 1892, assisted by Elders Luff and Gillen. The St. Louis Mite Society was organized by the sisters in 1881, and from that time on has done a splendid work both in substantial aid to the poor and the missionary force, and also in helping pay for both the chapel and this present church-building.

The Young People's Mutual Improvement Society was organized in 1892, and has continued since 1893 as the Zion's Religio-Literary Society. The increased activity of the young people, the increased attendance at services, and the neighboring conditions soon showed the chapel to be not wholly satisfactory; but time was taken for deliberation, so it was not until July, 1900, that the present site was purchased, and by September was made ready for habitation.

In the few years that have passed the church has been paid for, and extensive permanent improvements made, in addition to heavy running expenses. It is our hope to have this building dedicated and set apart in the very near future. As the church owns the corner lot, to the left of the accompanying cut, we are not only reasonably free from interruptions, but also have a fine lawn, which makes the building look quite picturesque in summer and fall.

There is a little justifiable pride, we hope, in this church-building and the steady effort that has cleared it so promptly from debt. But we are more proud of the growth that has been made spiritually and intellectually; of our large and active membership of young folks. For we are converted to this faith, that the prosperity of the true church is not to be measured by piles of brick and stone, however numerous, however magnificent, but must be measured by the intelligence, spirituality, and influence for good of its membership.

PHILADELPHIA BRANCH, PENNSYLVANIA.

The Latter-day work was introduced in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in the early thirties, and a large branch was built up under the ministry of Benjamin Winchester, which flourished until the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith in 1844. During the dark and cloudy days that followed the branch fell apart for want of care. A number of minor organizations, however, were maintained for some years.

The first representative of the Reorganized Church to visit Philadelphia was W. W. Blair, in 1864. At this time he found a branch of Brighamites, one of CHAPEL AT PHILADELPHIA.

Rigdonites, and a branch presided over by James Logan. He also found a large number of old Saints not associated with any of the factions. He was kindly received by all, but was not able to accomplish anything by way of organization. He visited Philadelphia again in 1865, accompanied by James W. Gillen. They labored diligently among the old Saints, but the time for organization was not yet ripe.

In July, 1867, Bro. Blair, accompanied by E. Robinson, came to Philadelphia for the purpose of having the Inspired Translation stereotyped. While here they labored among the Saints, setting forth the claims of the Reorganized Church. On August 21 he rebaptized and reordained Elder Nathan H. Ditterline, and on August 22 the Philadelphia Branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was organized, at the home of Bro. N. H. Ditterline, No. 1220 Darien Street. It consisted of the following members: John Stone, Elias Lewis, Nathan H. Ditterline, Joseph H. Lightkep, Philip W. Ewing, Elizabeth Ditterline, Mary Jane Lewis, Sarah Ann VanHorn, Sarah Ann Lightkep, Annie Louisa Ditterline.

Elder Nathan H. Ditterline was chosen branch president, and was continued in that office until his death in 1872. He has been succeeded by the following: Elders John Stone, Sr., William Small, Joseph Stewart, Hosea H. Bacon, Alonzo H. Parsons, George W. Robley, Frederick G. Pitt, George H. Smith, William Earl LaRue, and Walter Wayne Smith.

The report of the branch for 1869 showed a membership of twenty-six; in 1870 there were thirty-two; and in 1872 there were forty-six members. The work continued to grow spiritually and numerically until in 1883, when, under the ministry of Elder Z. H. Gurley a second branch was organized in Philadelphia, known as the Olive Branch. This branch was disorganized in 1884, the greater part of its members being enrolled again in the Philadelphia Branch. The branch made little progress from this time until the year 1890. In 1892 Elder A. H. Parsons was sent to labor in the city, and he has been followed in this work by Elders Robley, Pitt, George Smith, LaRue, and Walter Smith. The work has steadily grown under the ministry of these men, and God has watered the planting.

After meeting in hired halls and private houses for thirty-four years, the Saints were able, by dint of sacrifice and diligent labor, to open for public worship on December 1, 1901, the Saints' chapel, corner of Howard and Ontario Streets. The branch numbered at that time one hundred and five; the report for 1905 shows a membership of one hundred and forty-eight, with a flourishing Sunday-school, Religio, and Daughters of Zion organization.

Officers of the branch for 1905 are: Walter W. Smith, president; Archibald D. Angus, priest; Ogden T. Christy, teacher; Edward A. Lewis and Walter H. Lewis, deacons; Elsworth B. Hull, clerk; Orrin K. Fry, chorister; Miss Clara Zimmermann, organist.

KEWANEE BRANCH, ILLINOIS.

In the year 1863 Elders Shippy and Gillen came to the little village of Kewanee and found a few of the old Saints who had received the gospel in their native land, and still remained faithful to the same. This membership the elders organized into a branch, April 19, 1863. The branch had no permanent place of worship, the services being held in various homes, until 1868, when the first church-building was erected. It was known as the "Old Ship Zion," and located one mile north of the village. In this they continued to worship until 1878, when the Methodist

KEWANEE CHAPEL.

Episcopal Church building in the village was purchased. In this they worshiped until 1885 or 1886, when the Primitive Methodist Church building was purchased, in which services were held until June, 1897, when it was sold. Steps were immediately taken to build, which resulted in the erection of the brick church-building in which they are now worshipping. The success of this enterprise was due largely to the untiring efforts of the trustees upon whom was placed the responsibility. They were untiring in their work; and, cheered by the hearty co-operation of the Saints who made great sacrifices, and assisted by nonmembers who admired the persistence of the Saints, the trustees culminated their work when the building was dedicated on December 15, 1901, and placed in the hands of the Bishop, free from all indebtedness. The present valuation of the building is estimated at five thousand dollars.

At the commencement of the work here much opposition was encountered, which years has gradually changed to indifference. The prejudice which existed has been removed by the consistent lives of the Saints. The spiritual growth of the branch is due to the efficient work of the officials, assisted by frequent visits from those of the missionary force, the latter becoming less frequent as the work has developed and demands elsewhere increased.

From the organization of the branch to the present there has been enrolled three hundred and eight names. Of these thirty-five have died, forty have been expelled, and ninety-four have been granted letters of removal, leaving a present membership of one hundred and thirty-nine. These are endeavoring to bear aloft the banner of King Immanuel. The branch is now in a fully organized condition. A missionary has been stationed here the past year, and by the united efforts of the officers and Saints the work is in a fair condition spiritually and financially. Twelve have been added during the past year, others are near the door, some are investigating, and as a whole the future is bright.

AMOS BERVE.

THE CHURCH IN DES MOINES.

The work of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in Des Moines, Iowa, was begun soon after 1860. At the General Conference of October, 1862, Ebenezer Page and John

THE DES MOINES CHURCH.

Swain were appointed to labor in Guthrie, Dallas, and Polk Counties, and in this year C. G. Lanphear labored in this part of the State. At the October conference of 1863 Elder J. A. McIntosh was appointed to labor in seven counties in Central Iowa, one of which was Polk County. At a special conference held the same year William Stevens was appointed to labor in Des Moines and vicinity.

On July 11, 1864, a branch was organized at Fort Des Moines, called the Polk County Branch. There were seven members. One member, Sr. Elizabeth Sayer, now Sr. Elizabeth Sheeler, is still a member of the Des Moines Branch. Eber Benedict united with the church in Des Moines, in 1863, and later united with this first organization, and is yet a member of the Des Moines Branch.

In 1866 and for several years subsequently Gorden E. Duell was the general missionary to this part. The first organization of the church in the city lasted but four or five years. Since that first organization there have been members living here, and the church has been known in the capital city of Iowa all these years. All meetings of the church were held in private houses and hired halls for a number of years.

A second organization of the branch in Des Moines was effected in 1875, with John Watkins as president, and at the June conference of 1882 the branch reported forty-nine members. In 1882 a church-building was erected on East Sixteenth Street, the home of the church for twenty-two years. The general missionaries assigned to the district have all labored much in the city, and the local branch has furnished some men for the general mission field.

In 1890 the branch was disorganized by act of the district conference, and on June 8, 1891, J. R. Lambert, minister in charge in the district, effected a reorganization, with James McKiernan president. The December report of that year showed eighty-eight members. During the ten succeeding years the growth was steady, and for the past four years the growth has been very rapid. Since 1900 all have seen the necessity of a larger house of worship and near the close of the year 1903 steps were taken towards securing such place, the result being the purchase of the present church-building, shown in the accompanying cut. The building was occupied by the Saints April 3, 1904. It is a frame structure, with seating capacity of three hundred and fifty, located at the corner of East Fourteenth and Lyon Streets, and is valued at about four thousand dollars.

A Sunday-school organization has been in active working order in the church for over twenty years, and has an enrollment of over one hundred at the present time. The Religio took up the work here at the time it was first organized in the church, and has now forty members enrolled. The Ladies' Aid Society was organized several years ago, and has been in active working order most of the time since. In the past year the society has paid a total of two hundred and sixty-seven dollars and twenty cents on the church debt.

The General Conference of 1904 appointed J. F. Mintun, of the seventy, to labor in the city and surrounding suburbs.

In the past two years a special effort has been made through the press of the city to call the attention of the people of the city and of the State to our work as a church, and in every instance the utmost kindness has been shown by the city editors.

The present membership of the branch is two hundred and sixty-eight, with one hundred and fifty members living in the city. The officers serving the branch in 1904 were: President, Elder E. O. Clark; priest, J. R. Epperson; assistant priest, T. P. Cook; teacher, C. F. Merrill; deacon, F. Chandler.

THE POET WHITTIER ON MORMONISM.

[Recently in reading on the subject of "Mormonism" or Latter Day Saintism at the Iowa State Library, a library quite strong in periodical literature, we found the following article in a volume of Littell's Living Age, published in the fore part of the year 1848. We feel sure our readers will be interested in learning at least a little of what Mr. Whittier thought of "Mormonism."—F. M. S.]

A MORMON CONVENTICLE.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

Passing up Merrimack Street, the other day, my attention was arrested by a loud, earnest voice, apparently engaged in preaching, or rather "holding forth," in the second story of the building opposite. I was in the mood to welcome anything of a novel character, and following the sound, I passed up a flight of steps, leading to a long, narrow, and somewhat shabby room, dignified by the appellation of Classic Hall.

Seating myself, I looked about me. There were from fifty to one hundred persons in the audience, in which nearly all classes of this heterogeneous community seemed pretty fairly represented, all listening with more or less attention to the speaker.

He was a young man with dark, enthusiastic complexion, black eyes and hair; with his collar thrown back, and his coat cuffs turned over, revealing a somewhat undue quantity of "fine linen," bending over his coarse board pulpit, and gesticulating with the vehemence of Hamlet's player, "tearing his passion to rags." A band of mourning crape, fluttering with the spasmodic action of his left arm, and an allusion to "our late beloved brother Joseph Smith," sufficiently indicated the sect of the speaker. He was a Mormon—a saint of the latter days.

His theme was the power of faith. Although evidently unlearned and innocent enough of dealing in such "abominable matters as a verb or a noun, which no Christian ear can endure," to have satisfied Jack Cade himself, there was a straightforward vehemence and intense earnestness in his manner, which at once disarmed my criticism. He spoke of Adam, in Paradise, as the Lord of this lower world—"For," said he, "water couldn't drown him, fire couldn't burn him, cold couldn't freeze him—nothing could harm him, for he had all the elements under his feet. And what, my hearers, was the secret of this power! His faith in God: that was it. Well, the Devil wanted this power. He behaved in a mean, ungentlemanly way, and deceived Eve, and lied to her, he did. And so Adam lost his faith. And all this power over the elements that Adam had, the Devil got, and has it now. He is the prince and power of the air, consequently, he is master of the elements and lord of this world. He has filled it with unbelief, and robbed man of his birthright, and will do so until the hour of the power of darkness is ended, and the mighty angel comes down with the chain in his hand to bind the old serpent and dragon."

Another speaker, a stout, black-browed "son of thunder," gave an interesting account of his experience. He had been one of the apostles of the Mormon Evangel, and had visited Europe. He went in faith. He had "but three cents in his pocket" when he reached England. He went to the high professors of all sects, and they would not receive him; they pronounced him "damned already." He was reduced to great poverty and hunger; alone in a strange land; with no one to bid him welcome. He was on the very verge of starvation. "Then," said he, "I knelt down and I prayed in earnest faith, 'Lord, give me this day my daily bread.' Oh, I tell ye, I prayed with a good appetite; and I rose up, and was moved to go to a house at hand. I knocked at the door, and when the owner came, I said to him, 'I am a minister of the Lord Jesus Christ from America, I am starving—will you give me some food?' 'Why, bless you, yes,' said the man, 'sit down and eat as much as you please.' And I did sit down at his table, blessed be God; but, my hearers, he was not a professor; he was not a Christian, but one of Robert Owen's infidels. The Lord reward him for his kindness."

In listening to these modern prophets, I discovered, as I think, the great secret of their success in making converts. They speak to a common feeling; they minister to a universal want. They contrast strongly the miraculous power of the gospel in the apostolic time with the present state of our nominal Christianity. They ask for the signs of divine power; the faith, overcoming all things, which opened the prison doors of the apostles, gave them power over the elements, which rebuked disease and death itself, and made visible to all the presence of the living God. They ask for any declaration in the Scriptures that this miraculous power of faith was to be confined to the first confessors of Christianity. They speak a language of hope and promise to weak, weary hearts, tossed and troubled, who have wandered from sect to sect, seeking in vain for the primal manifestations of the divine power.

In speaking of Mormonism as a delusion, I refer more particularly to the apocryphal Book of Mormon. That the great majority of the "Latter Day Saints" are honest and sincere fanatics, I have no reason to doubt. They have made great sacrifices and endured severe and protracted persecution for their faith. The reports circulated against them by their unprincipled enemies in the West are in the main destitute of foundation. I place no dependence upon charges made against them by the ruffian mob of the Mississippi Valley, and the reckless slave-drivers, who, at the point of the bayonet and bowie-knife, expelled them from Missouri, and signalized their Christian crusade against unbelievers by murdering old men, and violating their innocent wives and daughters. It is natural that the wrong-doers should hate those whom they have so foully injured.

The Prophet himself, the master-spirit of this extraordinary religious movement, is no more. He died by the hands of wicked and barbarous men, a martyr—unwilling doubtless, but still a martyr—of his faith. For after all, Joe Smith could not have been wholly insincere. Or, if so in the outset, it is more than probable, that his extraordinary success, his wonderful power over the minds of men, caused him to seem a miracle and a marvel to himself; and, like Mahommed and Napoleon, to consider himself a chosen instrument of the eternal power.

In the "Narrative of an eye witness of the Mormon Massacre," published in a Western paper, I was a good deal impressed by the writer's account of the departure of the Prophet from "the holy city" to deliver himself up to the State authorities at Warsaw. It was well understood, that in so doing, he was about to subject himself to extreme hazard. The whole country round about was swarming with armed men, eager to imbrue their hands in his blood. The city was in a fearful state of alarm and excitement. The great Nauvoo legion, with its two thousand strong of armed fanatics, was drawn up in the principal square. A word from the Prophet would have converted that dark silent mass into desperate and unsparing defenders of their leader, and the holy places of their faith. Mounted on his favorite black horse, he rode through the glittering files, and with words of cheer and encouragement, exhorted them to obey the laws of the State, and give their enemies no excuse for persecution and outrage. "Well," said he, as he left them, "they are good boys, if I never see them again." Taking leave of his family, and his more intimate friends, he turned his horse, and rode up in front of the great temple, as if to take a final look at the proudest trophy of his power. After contemplating it for a while in silence, he put spurs to his horse, in company with his brother, who, it will be recollected, shared his fate in the prison, dashed away towards Warsaw, and the prairie horizon shut down between him and the city of the Saints for the last time.

Once in the world's history we were to have a Yankee prophet, and we have had him in Joe Smith. For good or for evil, he has left his track on the great pathway of life; or, to use the words of Horne, "knocked out for himself a window in the wall of the nineteenth century," whence his rude, bold, good-humored face will peer out upon the generations to come. But the Prophet has not trusted his fame merely to the keeping of the spiritual. He has incorporated himself with the enduring stone of the great Nauvoo temple, which, when completed, will be the most splendid and imposing architectural monument in the new world. With its huge walls of hewn stone—its thirty gigantic pillars, loftier than those of Baalbec—their massive caps carved into the likeness of enormous human faces, themselves resting upon crescent moons, with a giant profile of a face within the curve—it stands upon the highest elevation of the most beautiful city site of the West, overlooking the "Father of Waters";—a temple unique and wonderful as the faith of its builder, embodying in its singular and mysterious architecture, the Titan idea of the Pyramids, and the solemn and awe-inspiring thought which speaks from the Gothic piles of the Middle Ages.—Howitt's Journal.

LIGHTS ON THE OTHER SHORE.

"The lights on the other shore are getting nearer and nearer; they do not look far away now."—Uncle William B. Smith.

An aged man stood where the world-ways met
The incoming tide of Eternity's years,
His steps had grown slow and his eyes were wet
With the dew of humanity's tears;
But his heart was strong and his hope secure,
And he sang with a confidence steady and sure;
"O, the beautiful lights, on the other shore,
Out on my path they are shining so bright;
The beautiful lights that now beckon me o'er,
They do not seem far from me here to-night!"

His gaze grew more fixed as he raised his hand
To shadow his eyes as he looked again;
For it seemed to his soul that the far-away strand
Shone free from the sadness of sorrow and pain.
Near and more near seemed the lights on the shore,
Brighter and clearer than shining of yore:
"O, the beautiful lights shining out from th' shore,
Over my pathway so shimmering bright;
The beautiful lights inviting me o'er,
So bright, they are nearer than ever to-night."

So this aged man sang, as lifting his head,
His feet still fixed on the shores of time,
He gazed on the glow the distant lights shed,
Hearing th' music of the far-away chime;
His heart grew light, he was cheerful and strong,
Knowing the summons was coming ere long:
"O, the beautiful lights on the sands far away,
Shining across from Eternity's shore—
The beautiful lights still cheering the way—
O, beautiful bells still calling me o'er!"

THE CHURCH AND EDUCATION.

The history of the idea of a school or an institution of higher learning in the church is almost as old as the church itself, as may be gathered from the revelations as given to the church since its foundation in 1830, the necessity for study and development along the lines of education being repeatedly set forth. In 1831 W. W. Phelps and Oliver Cowdery were directed by revelation to print and select and write books for schools in the church. In 1832 the elders in this church were instructed to "teach one another in all things pertaining unto the kingdom of God"; and the enumeration of these things which "pertain unto the kingdom of God" shows that there is no limit to the research which must be made to fulfill the instruction.

E. R. DEWSNUP, M. A.
President of Graceland College.

In the early days of the church there was an effort made to found a university at Nauvoo, the necessary charter for which was granted to the city of Nauvoo by the state of Illinois. Section 24 of the charter of Nauvoo reads as follows:

The City Council may establish and organize an institution of learning within the limits of the city, for the teaching of the arts, sciences, and learned professions, to be called the "University of the City of Nauvoo," which institution shall be under the control and management of a Board of Trustees, consisting of a chancellor, a registrar, and twenty-three regents, which board shall thereafter be a body corporate and politic with perpetual succession by the name of the "Chancellor and Regents of the University of the City of Nauvoo," and shall have full power to pass, ordain, establish, and execute all such laws and ordinances as they may consider necessary for the welfare and prosperity of said university, its officers, and students; provided, that the said laws and ordinances shall not be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, or of this State; and provided, also, that the trustees shall at all times be appointed by the City Council, and shall have all the powers and privileges for the advancement of the cause of education which appertain to the trustees of any other college or university of this State.

The charter was dated December 16, 1840, and on the 3rd of February, 1841, the council met and in accordance with the privileges granted in the charter authorized the organization of the University of Nauvoo.

In the biography of Joseph Smith for Tuesday, August 10, as recorded in Church History, volume 2, page 541, we find mention made of the University of the City of Nauvoo, as follows: "The department of English Literature and Mathematics of the University of the city of Nauvoo is in operation under the tuition of Professor Orson Pratt."

Subsequently to the establishment of the University of Nauvoo, the Presidency issued the following call, which will be read with interest in this connection.

TO THE SAINTS ABROAD.

The First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, anxious to promote the prosperity of said church, feel it their duty to call upon the Saints who reside out of this county, to make preparations to come in, without delay. This is important, and should be attended to by all who feel an interest in the prosperity of this the corner stone of Zion. Here the Temple must be raised, the University built, and other edifices erected which are necessary for the great work of the last days; and which can only be done by a concentration of energy, and enterprise. Let it therefore be understood, that all the stakes, excepting those in this county, and in Lee County, Iowa, are discontinued, and the saints instructed to settle in this county as soon as circumstances will permit.

—Times and Seasons, vol. 2, no. 15, June 1, 1841.

The first effort that we know of in the Reorganized Church looking toward the organization of a church school was made in 1869 at the annual conference which convened at St. Louis, Missouri, April 6, when the following preamble and resolution was presented and passed:

The need for an educated, intelligent, sincerely devoted body of seventies to promulgate the gospel, and high priests to preside over the churches, has been, and now is, felt very sensibly by very many who have the salvation of souls and the prosperity of the church at heart.

Etiquette is not taught in the camp, nor the art of war in the nursery, neither are priests educated at Oxford, nor rabbis with the Jesuits; nor can we reasonably expect a plentiful supply of genuine Latter Day Saint elders to be furnished by the schools of the Gentiles; as well might we look for the sturdy oak in the hothouse and the orange in Lapland as for thorough, devout, self-abnegating elders from the popular schools of fiction and fashion; 'tis contrary to the common course of nature—the child clings to the breast from whence it derives its nourishment, and the faith of the pupil is tinged with the mind of his professor.

Church property contributes to the stability of the work, and we need a school wherein to educate our own young men.

As discipline detracts not from the courage of the soldier, neither would a proper ministerial education detract from the piety and earnestness of the ambassadors of truth; but on the contrary would give confidence, couple wisdom with their knowledge, and judgment with their zeal.

Following this preamble and resolution we have the following suggestion:

A quarter section of land could be purchased, and building erected, and the land fenced and broken, professors elected, and the land worked conjointly by professors and students. Four or five hours a day of close study is sufficient, six or eight hours a day of farm labor would contribute to the health of body, and by this means a school could be made both efficient and self-sustaining.

In keeping with the above, I respectfully offer the following: Resolved that this conference recommend for the consideration of the Twelve and the general church authorities, the feasibility and advisability of establishing a school for the education of our own young men, with a view to the ministry; and that the question be brought up at the next sitting of the General Conference.—Church History, vol. 3, pp. 520, 521.

It will thus be discovered that early in the history of the Reorganized Church there was an effort made to establish a school of learning wherein the young men of the church might be better prepared for the active work of the ministry. It is noteworthy that whoever the one was who made this suggestion, his foresight is really remarkable; for he briefly outlined a policy by which a school might have been made to a goodly extent self-sustaining. In each of our States to-day we have our agricultural colleges which are following lines similar to the one suggested at the conference in 1869. Farm work is carried on by the pupils of the school, and in a large measure the school is self-sustaining; though in our State schools the extent to which science and other branches in which large laboratories are required are taught requires the expenses to be considerable more than they would be along the lines of theology and allied subjects.

Nothing further was done toward looking to the establishment of the school to be sustained by the Reorganized Church until 1890, at the spring conference of that year, when there was a resolution adopted to the effect that in the opinion of the conference the time had arrived when it was expedient to establish an institution of learning under the influence or control of the church, and a committee was appointed and empowered to receive proposals and make arrangements for the establishment of such an institution. This committee was continued for several years, there being some changes made in the personnel of the committee at subsequent conferences.

In 1894 there was a joint council of the First Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric held in the editorial rooms of the HERALD Office on Friday, April 20. There were present Joseph Smith, W. W. Blair of the Presidency; Alexander H. Smith, E. C. Briggs, James Caffall, W. H. Kelley, J. H. Lake, J. R. Lambert, Heman C. Smith, Joseph Luff, and Gomer T. Griffiths of the Twelve; and E. L. Kelley, G. H. Hilliard, and E. A. Blakeslee of the Bishopric. It was reported that by unanimous vote the following was adopted by that joint council:

Resolved that we look with favor upon the effort to build a college at Lamoni to be controlled by the church. Resolved further, that we believe it should be a purely educational institution and free from sectarian influence or bias. Resolved further, that we give our hearty support to the present movement looking in the above direction.

In the minutes of the conference of 1895 we find that on April 8 the college committee reported that ground had been donated by Bro. W. A. Hopkins and Srs. M. Walker and M. A. Wickes, and that some twenty-six acres had been purchased from Bro. Hopkins, making sixty-six acres in all devoted to college purposes; and that steps had been taken looking to the erection of the college building.

At the session of April 9, the same year, it was resolved that the conference "authorize and instruct the college committee to incorporate as provided by the laws of Iowa for institutions of learning." And two days subsequently a board of directors was created looking to the running of a school after same had been duly incorporated.

At the conference of 1896, on the 9th of April, the Graceland Board of Trustees made report, from which we extract the following:

Since last conference work on the new college has progressed quite favorably. About eight hundred shade-trees, of various kinds, were purchased and planted. . . .

After considering various names it was decided to call the college grounds, "Graceland Addition to Lamoni," and the building, "Graceland College." The streets were renamed, . . . and Articles of Incorporation adopted and filed. . . .

It was hoped the sale of lots would build and equip the college; but being disappointed in this so far, your committee have been obliged to borrow some, which has been expended in material and labor.

was chosen chairman, William Anderson treasurer, and D. F. Nicholson secretary.

The same year the Board of Directors reported in part as follows:

Our first meeting was held on June 6, 1895, in Lamoni, Iowa, at which time the board was organized by the selection of Joseph Smith as president, and D. F. Lambert as secretary. In pursuance of the provision in the Articles of Incorporation, the following assignments were made by lot: P. P. Kelley, E. L. Kelley, and J. H. Hansen, for the three years' term;

A GROUP OF STUDENTS FROM SEVERAL STATES NOW IN GRACELAND.

Minnesota Iowa Arizona Ohio Oregon Michigan Nebraska New York West Virginia Illinois North Dakota Missouri Massachusetts Canada Michigan Texas Arizona Illinois

November 12 the corner-stone was laid with appropriate ceremonies, before a large concourse of people.

The estimated cost of the building is ten thousand dollars. It is insured for three thousand dollars, which amount will be increased as the work progresses.

Cold weather and lack of funds stopped work early in December. The basement is completed, the walls are up to the second floor, and it is the expectation of the committee to have Graceland College completed ready for occupancy next September. . . . The lots [laid out in the addition] have been appraised by competent judges of real estate and their prices set at from two to three hundred dollars each, on easy terms of payment. Only a few lots have yet been sold, and your committee earnestly request that fifty members of the church who want to aid the cause of education will each purchase one lot. . . .

At a meeting of the committee held May 2, 1895, the members were chosen by ballot to serve terms as follows: E. L. Kelley, Dan Anderson, and Robert Winning, one year each; Joseph Smith and William Anderson, two years each; Ellis Short and E. A. Blakeslee, three years each. Joseph Smith

J. R. Smith, A. H. Smith, and D. F. Lambert, for the two years' term; and Joseph Smith, W. W. Blair, and E. A. Blakeslee, for the one year term.

At this meeting committees on scholarships, course of study, and teachers were appointed; and a resolution adopted providing that the college should open September 16, 1895. A faculty was afterwards secured, consisting of T. J. Fitzpatrick, professor of sciences and mathematics; J. T. Pence, professor of languages; J. A. Gunsolley in charge of the commercial and shorthand departments; and Miss Nellie Davis in charge of instrumental music; and the college began its work September 17, 1895, in rented rooms provided by the trustees.

The total enrollment for the year is thirty-five, which, all things considered, is a fair showing. . . . We wish to further report that in order to properly and efficiently conduct the work of the college the coming year, it will be necessary to secure a professor of German and French, and also a professor of English literature, in addition to the faculty now employed.

The board also respectfully urges upon the attention of conference, that in order to make the college work a success, a strong united effort must be made in securing students. This effort can be made very largely by the traveling ministry, to whom we must look for loyal and persistent work in this respect. Enterprises of this kind can not be sustained without substantial aid; and the aid which the directors expect and need, is in securing a wide circulation of college literature, especially the forthcoming catalogue; and also in securing students for the college. For both these we must largely look to those whose constant and wide travel gives them the best opportunity therefor;—that is, the traveling ministry. The interests of general education and the interests of the church are identical; and hence an earnest effort made by the traveling ministry in behalf of Graceland College, can be made with the most complete and commendable consistency. We respectfully ask that the conference properly instruct the ministry upon this important matter.

We have made arrangements for issuing at an early day, blanks for scholarships, by the use of which all will be given an opportunity to assist in maintaining the college. A circular letter will also be issued, explanatory of various matters of interest connected with the college work.

At the conference of 1897, at the business session of April 11, the Board of Trustees reported that in the past year Graceland College had been completed, and that on January 1, 1897, the new building had been dedicated with appropriate ceremonies. Since that date the school had been held in the new building with about fifty students in attendance. The suggestion was made that more students were needed. They reported that in building the institution of learning the Board had been compelled to run in debt, but that they expected to pay the debt from the sale of lots and from private donations.

The Board of Directors the same year reported in detail the personnel of the faculty, the enrollments in each department, cost for running, etc.

At the conference of 1898, session of April 14, some proposed amendments to the by-laws of Graceland College were considered, discussed, and afterwards adopted, which provided for merging the two boards into one. After being adopted the following resolution was carried:

Resolved, that we proceed to the choosing of successors to the retiring members of the college boards, with the understanding that at the convening of the next General Conference we desire all the members of both boards to resign, with the view to the choosing of but one board thereafter.

On the 16th of April, 1898, the following was adopted:

Whereas, the financial report of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College shows a large indebtedness, to the proper payment of which the church is morally in honor bound; and believing that the church should use that department of its working forces which the law creates to be the financial agents for the accomplishment of its financial ends; therefore, be it

Resolved that the Bishopric be hereby authorized and instructed to devise and make such arrangements for the collection of means as may be adequate, and out of such means so collected, and such funds of the church as are not otherwise appropriated, liquidate the indebtedness, and provide for the further carrying out of the desires of the church heretofore expressed in conference enactments directing the establishment of an institution of learning to be maintained by the church.

At the conference of 1900, session of April 11, the Board of Trustees of Graceland College reported, offering the resignation of all the members of the board. The Board of Directors made report in part as follows, covering two years:

The board fully organized consisted of nine members: viz., Joseph Smith, E. L. Kelley, William Anderson, I. W. Allender, G. H. Hilliard, P. P. Kelley, O. H. Riggs, J. H. Hansen, R. S. Salyards. A vacancy occurred, and has since existed, by the death of P. P. Kelley.

The board organized by making choice of Joseph Smith, president; R. S. Salyards, secretary. Joseph Smith resigned as president of the board in July, 1899, and J. H. Hansen was appointed to fill the vacancy.

In June, 1898, a college faculty was employed for the year, as follows: E. R. Dewsnup, president and professor of history and literature; T. J. Fitzpatrick, professor of natural sciences and mathematics; M. F. L. Fitzpatrick, professor of French and German; J. T. Pence, professor of Latin and Greek; J. A. Gunsolley, principal of commercial department; Ella F. Rieh, instructor in shorthand and typewriting; Ruth Lyman Smith, instructor in elocution and physical culture; A. H. Mills, instructor in instrumental music; Viola Blair, instructor in vocal music.

Later in the year, and to decrease expenses, Professors T. J. Fitzpatrick and J. T. Pence were released, and Miss Eleanor Hatch appointed professor of classics, and J. A. Gunsolley, librarian.

E. R. Dewsnup continued until the close of the year's work, June, 1899.

The faculty for the year 1900 consists of Professor R. A. Harkness, president; Eleanore Hatch, professor of classics; F. M. Smith, professor of natural sciences and mathematics; J. A. Gunsolley, principal of commercial department; Alida Logan, instructor in shorthand and typewriting; Ruth Lyman Smith, instructor in elocution and physical culture; A. H. Mills, instructor in instrumental music; Viola Blair, instructor in vocal music; J. A. Gunsolley, librarian. Ruth L. Smith resigned before the opening of the year.

In 1898-99 E. R. Dewsnup as president made several trips, soliciting students and contributions for the college. J. H. Hansen, president of the board, and Professor G. N. Briggs, of Lamoni public schools, did considerable canvassing in the interests of college work during the summer of 1899. Professor Harkness has done effective work in the same line since his connection with the college.

Several worthy young people, in the church and out of it, have been furnished free tuition, on account of the scholarships donated by subscription; some have also been admitted on partial payment of tuition. It has been the policy of the board to favor worthy students so far as necessary. . . .

At the last meeting of the board a resolution was adopted indorsing the proposed amendments to the Articles of Incorporation providing for but one board of management.

Said meeting also authorized the president and secretary to tender the General Conference the resignations of the members of the board in harmony with the action of last conference requesting both boards to resign with a view to choosing one board.

On April 17, 1900, the Articles of Incorporation of Graceland College were so amended as to provide for the handling of the business of the college by one board of trustees; and according to such provisions a new board was elected.

It is interesting to note that on the same day that this college board was elected the following resolution was discussed and lost:

Whereas there is a large and increasing indebtedness now against Graceland College, as shown by the treasurer's report for this current year, 1900; and whereas there is no prospect before us as a church of anything save a constantly accumulating debt if its doors are to be kept open; therefore be it resolved that at the expiration of the present term the college be closed until this debt be cancelled or provided for.

The vote on this was 51 in favor, 167 against. We make the following extracts from the report of the Board of Trustees made to the conference of 1901, April 12 session:

On April 24, 1900, the board organized with seven members as follows: William Anderson, chairman; I. W. Allender, secretary; Daniel Anderson, treasurer; J. H. Hansen, R. M. Elvin, J. A. Gunsolley, and William Leeka. The term of office of the following will terminate at this conference and the vacancies thus caused will need to be filled: William Anderson, William Leeka, and J. H. Hansen. The term is three years.

The faculty for the past year consists of R. A. Harkness, president; Miss Emma Le M. Reppert, Fred M. Smith, and Eleanore Hatch, in the collegiate department. Fred M. Smith resigned May 9, 1900, and Miss Hatch resigned before the opening of school in September. Miss Reppert assumed her duties September 11. J. A. Gunsolley is in charge of commercial department. Miss Alida Logan was in charge of shorthand and typewriting department until close of winter term, at which time she resigned, and Miss Esther Reimers was engaged to succeed her. Mrs. Audentia Anderson in charge of instrumental music, and Mrs. Ruth Lyman Smith in charge of elocution and physical culture.

The contemplated amendments to the Articles of Incorporation have been prepared and are referred to the conference for its action thereupon.

If the treasurer is made solely responsible for money, donations, etc., received, we take this opportunity to request that all persons remitting or paying same will do so direct to the treasurer.

At the conference of 1902, the Board of Trustees reported in part as follows:

The faculty for the school year 1901-1902 consists of H. S. Salisbury acting president; Mrs. Mina Cook Hart for the year, and Miss Mabel Horner for the winter term in the college department; D. L. Callison in the business department; Esther Reimers teacher of shorthand and typewriting; Mabel Horner of elocution; and Mrs. Audentia Anderson for the first part of the year in instrumental music and Mrs. Delia B. Davies for the latter in vocal and instrumental music. . . .

The board is hopeful that sometime there will be provided by endowments, bequests, or some such effectual means, funds by which the general expenses in connection with running the college may be met, and its perpetuity assured. Meanwhile we feel compelled to impress upon the church the fact, that until that time arrives they may expect an annual deficit. It is folly to entertain for one moment the thought that the mere matter of tuition will at any time provide for necessary running expenses, and the idea is not encouraged by the common experience in connection with the higher institutions of learning.

We feel it our duty to arrange salaries on a "ministerial basis" as advocated by the church when competent persons can be engaged who are willing to make the necessary sacrifice. But when such is not the case we should not be thus limited. The first consideration, it seems to us, should be an able and efficient corps of teachers, a successful school, and an educational system in connection with the institution which will make it worthy the name of college.

We excerpt from the report of the Board of Trustees made to conference on April 8, 1903, the following:

The board organized on April 22, 1902, as follows: Daniel Anderson, chairman; I. W. Allender, secretary; R. M. Elvin, John Smith, F. M. Smith, J. A. Gunsolley, W. A. Hopkins. Bishop E. L. Kelley was elected treasurer. There will be two vacancies on the board to be filled at this conference, R. M. Elvin and I. W. Allender retiring.

The faculty for the school year 1902-1903 consists of C. O. Taylor, acting president, to January, 1903, and C. M. Barber for remainder of the year in that office, and Mrs. Mina Cook Hart and J. P. Anderson (with Mrs. Evelyn Gurley Kane and L. F. Affhauser assisting) in the college department; L. F. Affhauser in charge of the business department; Miss Esther Reimers in charge of the shorthand and typewriting department; Mrs. E. G. Kane teacher of elocution, and Mrs. Delia B. Davies teacher of vocal and instrumental music.

The board believed that there should be some action taken at this conference to put some one in the field in the interest of the college that the church and the public may become better acquainted with the necessities and the affairs generally of the college, and that the work may be carried on continuously and more systematically, and respectfully request that this matter be given serious consideration.

On April 9, 1904, the Board of Trustees again made report to General Conference, which consisted very largely of the report of President Ernest R. Dewsnup to the Board itself. We make extracts as follows from this report:

Undoubtedly, so far as Graceland College is concerned, its raison d'être must be found in its collegiate or university work—the ultimate success of this alone justifies the sacrifices made to develop the institution. At present the college department, as will be gathered from the previous statistics, is in a semi-moribund condition, due to the general indisposition of both parents and young people in the church to see the advantages of higher education. It is to be hoped that this condition will not last, and that the majority of our students will take regular four year courses, leading to a degree.

A comprehensive scholarship scheme has been inaugurated which should help the institution both financially and numerically. Still, I can not help but feel the desirability and necessity even of the church recognizing its own offspring in a more complete way than it has done heretofore. I refer now to the church as a body and not individually. An annual endowment of two thousand dollars per annum, added to the amounts accruing from scholarship and tuition fees, would enable the college to offer suitable facilities of instruction in all branches of educational work, to provide itself with useful equipment, and would afford it an opportunity of rising to a more respectable (educational) position among the collegiate institutions of the land. Scientific equipment and apparatus, large additions to the library, further facilities for the commercial school, and many other improvements are absolutely needed, and unless the church faces the matter squarely in the face and realizes that, in catering for the higher education and better moral training of its young men and women, it must incur financial responsibilities that should be openly recognized and provided for by the annual setting apart of at least such a sum as I have named, the college may drift aimlessly along for another decade as it has largely done during the decade it has almost completed.

The Board added the following:

The report of the Bishopric to January 10, 1904, will show still unpaid on the college debt eight thousand five hundred, and thirty-nine dollars and thirty-nine cents. This includes interest, insurance, and miscellaneous expenses.

The report of the treasurer of the Board of Trustees will show to same date a deficit in running expenses of six thousand, three hundred and thirty-six dollars and seventy-six cents.

By arrangement with the Bishopric as authorized by the last General Conference, Elder Joseph Luff was selected to enter the field in the interests of the college. The board understands, however, that he confined his efforts solely to the liquidation of the so-called "original debt."

There seems to be room for a misunderstanding with regard to this debt, for many seem to have accepted the idea that because a sum equal to or greater than twenty-five thousand dollars has been paid, with which it was designed to cancel the debt by means of the twenty-five dollar subscriptions, that therefore there is no farther obligation resting upon the church.

While it is true that the debt, including the running expenses, has been and is continuously being reduced, still the deficit is yearly being added to the debt which also carries with it, interest.

The actual debt, then, to January 10, 1904, according to Bishop Kelley's reports in his dual official capacity, was fourteen thousand, eight hundred and seventy-six dollars and fifteen cents.

The board desires to see some provision made for regular running expenses, so that there will not be a deficit to be added every year to the debt, and approve President Dewsnup's scheme for five-year scholarships, which is now under way, and believe it to be good policy for the church to appropriate two thousand dollars per annum as recommended by him.

The board also asks that action be taken at this conference, that through the Bishopric, the ministry (each member in his respective field) may be authorized to keep the church informed concerning college matters as far as practicable, and that each elder be requested to secure if possible, at least one student for the college (preferably for a four year term), this being in line with President Dewsnup's desire that the attendance of students should be with the idea of preparing for a degree.

We also respectfully request that necessary time be granted that a representative of the board may present certain matters to the conference.

Whatever steps the Board of Trustees may deem it advisable to take with regard to this college work, there can be but little accomplished if any apathy exists concerning it generally throughout the church, and whether it is to be sustained, commended, or condemned, we fervently hope the church will give the affairs pertaining to the college greater and more serious attention.

At the session of April 12, 1904, the following preambles and resolution were presented from the Quorum of Twelve:

Whereas the maintenance of Graceland College is proving to be a serious burden in a financial way and is likely to so continue; and,

Whereas there seems to be but a minority of the members of the church who favor its continuance; and,

Whereas the operation of a college of its character does not lie within the direct line of our appointed work as a church; therefore,

Resolved that we favor a discontinuance of Graceland College after the close of its present term, and recommend that the property be turned over to other uses such as may be agreed upon by the Bishopric of the church and such other councils or persons as may be chosen by the General Conference until such time as the General Conference decides to reopen the college.

This provoked considerable discussion, and the vote was not taken until the afternoon of April 14. A yea and nay vote was called, resulting in the adoption of the resolution by a vote of 851 for, and 826 against. On April 14 members of the Board were elected to fill the place of those retiring. Subsequently to conference the Bishopric and Board of Trustees as a joint council took under advisement the question of carrying out the resolution, and, according to the SAINTS' HERALD for May 18, 1904, took the following action:

On May 12, 1904, the Bishopric of the church and the Board of Trustees of Graceland College, to whom was referred the matter of the use and disposition of the property of Graceland College by resolution of the General Conference at Kirtland, held a joint meeting in the rooms of the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, and after due and careful consideration of their powers and duties in the premises adopted the following as a basis of work:

First: That the Board of Trustees of Graceland College was by the General Conference at its last session appointed a committee to act with the Bishopric in caring for the property of Graceland College as shown by minutes of said conference, pages 705 and 706, and following the passage of a resolution of said conference, page 698 of minutes, to wit:

"Resolved that we favor a discontinuance of Graceland College after the close of its present term, and recommend that the property be turned over to other uses such as may be agreed upon by the Bishopric of the church and such other councils or persons as may be chosen by the General Conference until such time as the General Conference decides to reopen the college."

Second: That the resolution favoring the discontinuance of Graceland College was acted upon without any notice whatever having been given that the same would be presented for action, as is required by the Articles of Incorporation of Graceland College which reads as follows:

"These articles may be amended at any General Conference of said Reorganized Church, or at any meeting of the Board of Trustees herein named, providing sixty days' published notice of said amendment and the nature of the same be given through the SAINTS' HERALD prior to the time of such annual conference or meeting."—Article 15 of Incorporation Act.

Third: That the resolution referred to of the General Conference can not properly be considered an order for the closing of Graceland College, for the same would be contrary to the Articles of Incorporation, and the former action of General Conference requiring sixty days' published notice before action upon such a resolution, and therefore absolutely void; but, that it was simply the expression of the sentiment of those present at the conference upon the question, without the authority of an action to close the college.

Fourth: That this council, after due consideration of the question of closing the college and diverting the property to other uses than that of a college, which is duly provided for in the Articles of Incorporation, believe that it will actually cost less to run the college the ensuing year than to discontinue the running of the same; besides, it will so disturb the educational work, already in operation at great sacrifice and expense, as to make it doubtful if the college could ever recover from the effects of so stopping it.

Therefore after a full and respectful consideration of the feeling and sentiment expressed in the resolution by the General Conference, it is the sense of this council that its members in their respective capacities and duties as members of the Bishopric of the Reorganized Church, and as trustees of Graceland College, use every legitimate effort practicable to solicit and collect the means to liquidate the full indebtedness now against the college, and, should the means be furnished, continue the running of the college according to its Articles of Incorporation, and the trust reposed by the church.

E. L. KELLEY, Chairman of Council.
FRED'K M. SMITH, Secretary of Council.

I Know Quit-to-Bac Will Cure. It is a God-Given Remedy
 So says Bro. I. M. Dungan of Woodbine, Iowa. Writing July 3, 1904, says: "After having used tobacco for 30 years I feel that I am thoroughly cured of the habit by the use of your 'Quit-to-bac.' I commenced using 'Quit-to-bac' March 8, 1904, and used two and one half boxes, and have had no desire for the past two months, my health is better every way and I feel like a new man. I feel that I can not speak too highly of the merits of 'Quit-to-bac,' for I believe 'Quit-to-bac' to be a God-given remedy, that it will cure one of the most filthy and useless habits Satan ever invented; therefore I unqualifiedly recommend it to all addicted to the use of tobacco in any form, and will cheerfully answer inquiries from any one as to my case—how I treated myself, etc., if a stamp is inclosed. You are at liberty to use this recommendation as seems best to you. . . . I close with a heartfelt 'God bless you.'" Three boxes Quit-to-bac postpaid only $1.50 guaranteed to cure or money refunded for the asking. Address, (Bro.) B. F. ORDWAY, Peoria, Illinois.

ONE of the amusing things we notice from time to time is to see a person pick up a late issue of his paper which contains an article written by himself, read that particular article with an expression of unmixed pleasure, possibly turn and reread it, then throw the paper aside with an air that seems to say: "That's the only thing in the paper worth reading; the best thing that's been in print for some time, — since I wrote my preceding article, in fact."

If those who have a talent for writing would exercise it as they may be led, they would see how hard it is to resist the temptation to do that very thing. The HERALD will welcome short articles upon gospel topics.

Editorial.

THE MINISTER SHOULD CONTINUE HIS WORK.

"Many interested, and if the work is followed up a good work will be done here."

This is the burden of quite a number of the letters and reports from elders in the local and ministerial fields, after laboring in certain localities where they have secured openings, either in branches or near to them.

It is not our intention in this writing to throw doubt upon, or discredit the faith or the labor performed by the elders who thus write; as the good will of coworkers demands that all are to stand equally fair in the esteem of each other in regard to devotion to the Lord's work. However, we desire to present a few thoughts in regard to the statement itself and its possible results.

We take it for granted that the closing sentence is correct and that the elder who writes this way has been faithfully engaged in his duty to present the gospel while he has been laboring in the place of which he makes the statement that a good work can be done if his labors are followed up. He had been blessed of the Spirit in obtaining an opening, and in presenting the word of God as given in the Scriptures afterwards, and this gave him comfort and joy. That he is qualified to estimate the degree of interest manifested in his services is conceded, or confidence in him as a minister is misplaced; hence we must take what he writes as a proper basis upon which to judge the propriety of following up his effort.

Here arises the difficulty in some, if not all the cases occurring and which come to our notice by letter and report. Why does the elder leave the place where so good an interest has been awakened? How does it happen that just as it begins to appear that the labor is to be followed by accessions to the church the elder declines to make further appointments, closes up his books and goes away, finishing his work by writing to us, either before he leaves or soon after he reaches a new place, that there is a good interest and prospects fair for a "good work" if his labor is followed up?

Again, two or three queries applicable to such a situation of things as suggested by the sentence quoted are unavoidably presented to one who will think about it. The first of these is, Was the elder qualified to make the opening and to arouse the interest which he represents as existing? This must be answered, Yes. Is he capable to judge of the conditions under which he labored, the temper of the people, and whether they would be willing that the work should be followed up? Already this is conceded. Is the forecasting of the situation by the elder the result of his reasoning upon it, thus reaching conviction, or is it the result of a manifestation of the Spirit, of intuition, or revelation? These queries answered, the last in either way, then another follows. If the elder was qualified to secure the opening, to excite the interest until the situation is ripe for fruition, and to judge that a good result would follow if the work was continued, why is he not qualified to keep the work going and why does he forsake an opening so promising to an uncertainty—that of one being sent to complete the work?

Is the responsibility of the elder discharged when he writes to the Editor that he has prepared an opening and it should be followed up or loss may occur? Or is he free of blame when he writes in like manner to the president of district, the missionary in charge, or the Presidency? We are strongly inclined to think not. For these reasons: The elder who is qualified to secure an opening, create an interest warranting a continuation of labor, is also qualified to know that the chances are that neither the president of the district, the missionary in charge, nor the Presidency has any fellow laborer available to drop his own work in his immediate field to follow up the work left undone by the elder, however willing either of these authorities might be to send one. We are of the opinion that there is not one elder in fifty laboring in the field, who is qualified to do as is suggested, but who knows pretty nearly all the laborers in the field in which he is at work, and is acquainted by reputation and the general reports with all who are at the disposal of the general officers of the church; and hence must likewise know that there is no probability that any one will, or can, be sent to take up the work abandoned by him and thus do the "good work" referred to. Why, then, should he impliedly ask what he upon reflection would know could not in the nature of the case be granted, and by writing to president of district, missionary in charge, or the Presidency throw the burden of loss to the work upon one or the other of these several authorities?

The deduction almost is inevitable, that the elder who has created the situation by his labor, and is satisfied by his conviction, or the evidence of the Spirit to him, that the following up of the work done would be productive of good, and that it ought to be done, really is the minister who should follow up his own work. Our advice then would be that an elder should not make so extended a list of appointments as would result in his having to leave a prospect for doing good of the nature mentioned in the quotation.

We have advised this heretofore, but almost it seems that some of the letter-writers either have forgotten the advice, find it not consonant with their wisdom, or have dropped into the rut of stereotyped repetition of a wise saying which they can not expect to have immediate or lasting effect.

CONVICTION—CONVERSION.

In a late sermon an elder discoursing on conversion, suggested by the text, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven," said: "Conviction is one thing, conversion is quite another." Conviction is a result of reason and judgment: conversion is the result of a change of purpose and intention carried into a change of conduct. A man may be convinced of his need of reform, change of personal conduct from the pursuit of the unfruitful and evil to that which is better and nobler, but unless such change occurs he is not converted.

The gospel is intended to produce both conviction and conversion; to inform the judgment and to move the heart; both are necessary to a godly life.

"WHO MAKE AND LOVE A LIE."

If President Joseph F. Smith has stated in public what it is currently reported he has, that in the statements made by him when a witness before the Senatorial Committee, whose sittings for inquiry have lately been finished, the report of which in regard to the unseating of Senator Smoot is awaited, he testified to that which was not true, he has done an unfortunate and an unwise thing. There may have been some moral bravery in doing as he did in stating that he was breaking the law of the State, the law of the United States, and the law of God by continuing to live with his five wives; and such boldness may have made some admirers of the President of the Utah church; but, when that president publicly states that he lied when he gave his evidence before the Senatorial Committee, those who may have admired him for his avowal of his guilt will not, can not admire him as a confessed perjurer. It may be said that President Joseph F. Smith did not make oath to what was false, as he was not sworn, that is, no judicial oath was administered to him, but, when a witness chooses to affirm that privilege is granted by the courts; the form of the affirmation is much like this: "I do solemnly affirm subject to the pains and penalties of perjury, that the testimony I shall give in the case now pending . . . shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." If President Joseph F. Smith faced the committee on such an affirmation, and gave false testimony, can it be called anything but perjury? We think not.

We were surprised when he testified as he did; we now are more surprised to learn that he has said that he affirmed what was not true. What can honorable men in or out of the church think of such a man? What reliance can be placed on what such a man declares? If he sought by falsehood to avoid falling into a "trap" set for him before the committee, by confessing that he did so falsify he has assuredly fallen into a more open and dangerous one.

THE CAUSE WHY FRANK J. CANNON WAS DISFELLOWSHIPPED BY MORMON CHURCH IN UTAH.

The two editorials written for the Salt Lake Tribune which formed the cause why the church in Utah disfellowshipped Elder Frank J. Cannon, and to which we referred in a former HERALD we give below:

"ANALYSIS OF CHURCH."

The exclusive character of the Mormon faith and practice—as exemplified by the utterances and acts of the hierarchy—is such as that most observers are extremely puzzled in their efforts to make any accurate description.

The result is that one phase of the matter, which probably attracts first attention and becomes understood, is taken as a type of the whole, and is so treated. Hence the many partial apprehensions, which are really misapprehensions, of the subject; and hence the almost violent antagonism between two commentators, each of whom may have reason for his view, while both stand in direct opposition to each other.

This difficulty arises initially; and it must be the Tribune's work, in the brief space of this article, to attempt to establish some landmarks to aid thinking men in making an accurate boundary line.

First, let us get the personal element out of the way. The Mormon leaders are like other men. Some of them have been magnetic, auto-hypnotic; some of them have persuaded themselves and others that they were inspired; some of them have been brave, simple souls, willing to live and die for a chosen faith; some of them have been large-minded men, natural founders of empires, natural social leaders and philosophers; some of them have been cruel, arrogant, bigoted; some of them have been narrow, avaricious, lustful of power. In the main, all of the leaders have been men of strict character; sober, honest, and—with the exception of the peculiar offenses associated with polygamy—careful in their relations with the other sex. Of the mass of the Mormon people it can truthfully be said that no more thrifty, industrious, and useful lot of people ever came into any one community; they have practiced all the virtues as they have understood them; and with the exception noted above with regard to the leaders—the teaching and living of plural marriage, polygamous cohabitation, and their inevitable attendants—their lives have been pure.

With all these affirmative virtues, it is easy to see how they have derived, as they deserved, so much of praise from the world. But the religion was founded, and is now operated, upon an entirely archaic and utterly impossible proposition. As it is of less value to describe the past than to deal with the present (and assuming that the leader of to-day, Joseph F. Smith, is seeking to re-establish in exactitude the rule of his uncle and father, who founded and died for the faith), let us view the religion as he would have it in theory and practice if he could.

This is the dispensation of the fullness of times. It is a preparatory period for the second coming of Christ, who is to return to earth and rule in glory over all nations, kindreds, tongues, and peoples. There having been universal apostasy from the simple truth as he left it, it is necessary to restore that truth by revelation, that men may be imbued with it, and be prepared by it, for the advent of their divine ruler. All sects of the earth, while possessing and living possibly some truth, are acting without authority. Thus we have a prophet, into whose hands is committed the authority of God to prepare the world for the glorious return of his Son. Naturally, no other government, by church or by state, is legal. Through the prophet, God has declared that the powers of this world shall crumble and that his kingdom is set up, never more to be thrown down nor its power given to another people. Under these circumstances, it is impossible to divide the spiritual from the temporal, since all the commands of God through the prophet are spiritual, and since his decree to his followers must be both spiritual and temporal; the first for their spiritual enlightenment and preparation; the second that they may so develop their temporalities as to be fit subjects of and princes in the kingdom of God until and when his son shall come.

To warn the world and to aid in preparation, the president has two associates, who, with him, constitute the first presidency. Then there is the quorum of the apostles—the twelve—and this quorum holds, when it is unanimous, co-ordinate authority with the first presidency. Minor officials, who need not be mentioned, are ordained to various callings.

The president is the only man authorized to deliver God's word to the world, and his declaration is absolute.

These men, some of them, expect to live to see the coming of the Savior, and to take part in his rule of righteousness upon the earth—so soon shall be the day of his coming.

The authority is boundless and eternal. Even after the termination of their earthly career, they are to have certain celestial power and place as the apostles of the Son of God.

With such faith, how little must seem all the mere earthly authorities; how contemptible and paltry, as well as false, must seem all earthly denominations!

This president, and his two counselors, with the apostolic quorum and subordinate officials, followed by hundreds of thousands, are merely making preparation for that great and awful day of the Lord when he shall come in his splendor; when the wicked and unbelieving shall fall or flee in terror from his face; and when these, his elect, shall stand with him to judge and govern the whole world under the rule of the kingdom of God which they have established.

In the meantime, the prophet and his subordinates receive one tenth of all the annual increase of all the faithful members of the church, being a slight return to the work of God for his blessings upon them. All that they possess is a part of his kingdom, and he leaves to their stewardship nine tenths of what their industry produces each year; and takes but one tenth for the purposes of his kingdom, under the direction of his prophet.

Taking the foregoing as the basis, it is easy to discern how an avaricious bigot not controlled by high intellectualities, not controlled by delicacies, having several wives and many children, and holding an old grudge against the government of the United States, could, with the power of a State at his command, set up and maintain an alien government within and against the republic of the United States.

And that is exactly what Joseph F. Smith, prophet of the Mormon church, has done and is doing.—Salt Lake Tribune, January 22, 1905.

AN ADDRESS TO THE EARTHLY KING OF THE KINGDOMS OF GOD.

When there is committed supreme rulership to the hands of a king, and when he brings to his companionship and support a set of ministers—any one of whom may be called, on occasion, to deliver his will to subjects, either residing within the monarchy or elsewhere—it becomes of vital importance to the subject that the prince be both wise and tender toward his people, and that his ministries shall emulate, even if reverence will not permit them to excel in, these high qualities.

You, sir, are a sovereign of absolute authority. The written constitution under which your predecessors reigned has, by steady avoidance, disuse, and misconstruction by the courts of your appointment, been so changed and so weakened as that it has no longer either definite provision or binding force. Your predecessors were required to adhere to the word of God, whose kingdom they administered as earthly kings. Your prelates have so mystified that constitution, upon which the people depended for their protection, as that the mere subject dare no longer quote it lest he be deemed guilty of treason to the crown; and you have so definitely declared that the God whose kingdom you rule as earthly monarch does not announce any will to you, that your own personal purpose becomes both the law and the constitution.

This would be a most dangerous state for a kingdom where the ruler is both a good and a wise man; it becomes doubly menacing when the ruler is not known to possess intellect of a high order, and when he has not been renowned for any other goodness than that of announcing his own personal purpose and then living accordingly.

Even this situation, bad as it is, becomes worse if the ministry, selected to aid the purposes of the crown, is composed of men who repose themselves entirely within the favor of the throne and forget the rights of the people of whom they should be at least defenders, if not advocates.

In a monarchy such as this, the ministry should be the connecting link between the throne and the subject. It is indeed unfortunate when, with no constitution to protect the mass and a ruler with no deference to God to guide him in the performance of his duty to his subjects, the ministry is either so corrupted by favor or so weakened by fear that it inclines entirely toward the throne and leaves the subjects utterly at the mercy of royal whim. A careful scrutiny of the history of peoples demonstrates that under such sad combination of circumstances the king, unless he be an especially good man, amenable to the softer influences of humanity (and neither the friends nor the enemies of your majesty have ever charged this kind of weakness upon you), is certain to make wider and wider demands upon the life and property of his subjects and to grow more and more impatient of any resistance to his will. And, too, under such circumstances, it has been noted by patriots of all times that the ministry serving under a monarch who is unrestrained, and over a people who are rendered supine or helpless, take their advantage in still more complete aggression upon the subject's rights.

It is with no ill will toward your majesty that this address is directed to you. Your rule is absolute; I wish it might be glorious. You are the highest of earthly potentates, in that you hold the authority of the creator of the world, and rule in his name; I would that your reign might be so filled with the excellencies which we ascribe to him as that all your subjects might be safe and free and happy, and that all the rest of the world, gazing on the splendor of this kingdom, might desire to join its prosperous and contented people. But unfortunately, and even at the cost of my favor in your court, I must address to you these words of reproach. Having cast aside the constitution, you have cast aside the principles which it represented; having selected a servile ministry, you have not permitted the voice of your subjects to reach your ears; having been gluttonous of power and impatient of any assertion of claim against your sovereign will, you rule by affrighting the courage and conscience of all. As earthly king of the kingdom of God you have loosed yourself, and at your pleasure you have loosed your ministers, from all bonds.

I charge you with these acts, which are violative of the written constitution of the kingdom of which you are the ruler:

1. That you have disdained the laws which your predecessors established, and which you interpreted. And there can come no greater disaster to a kingdom than that its chief citizen (its ruler) shall refuse to obey the law which has been decreed from the throne. For if he will not obey, how can he presume that others will heed?

2. I charge you with the selection of ministers who are merely the creatures of your own favor, possessing neither the ability to administer nor the confidence of the people to justly strengthen their power. Some of these were unknown when you designated them for places in your cabinet. Some of them were known and detested. And yet you forced them upon the kingdom.

3. I charge you with having made treaties upon which the safety of your subjects depended; and with having ruthlessly violated, and with having directed your ministers to violate, these treaties, leaving us to danger of war with powers better equipped for earthly struggle.

4. I charge you with having taken the bodies of daughters of your subjects and having bestowed them upon your favorites. And you have done this, sometimes by the secret method which left you free to deny your part in the tragedy; and sometimes by the open method when you could cajole the fathers and brothers into silence by some offer, or frighten them by some threat.

5. I charge you with having taken the property which belonged to the widow and the orphan and having absorbed it into the possessions of the crown. And you have done this, not only by your personal autocracy directly, but by referring cases to your ministry who, because of previous instruction, have determined the controversies against all justice and in your behalf.

6. I charge you with having departed from the constitution, which provided for a tax which your subjects were able to bear; and having instituted in lieu thereof a system of elaborate exactions so appalling in their total as that your subjects are going into poverty in order that the crown lands, palaces, jewels, and vestments may become richer and more sumptuous.

7. I charge you with having provided, at the public cost, for worthless and indolent, if not dissolute, princes of your house, and with having added such emoluments to their positions as that they have been thrice paid for services; and with having uttered your edict of protection, so that no misconduct could remove them.

Can you deem it a happy and fortunate lot for a kingdom when the ruler's highest ideals are the gain of mere earthly wealth to contribute to the magnificence of the crown's possessions; the maintenance of a ministry servile in all things; the living of a life of luxury with many wives in many palaces; the multiplication of many children, who, as princes of your house, are to be maintained (judged by the examples so far afforded) at the public charge; and the steady retrogression of the hope and ambition of the subject? Do these things make a prosperous and a happy kingdom? Or do they make hell on earth and indicate the decay and the ruin of the kingdom of God, over which you rule with bigotry, with gluttony of power, with insensate self-esteem?

History will answer, if you will not, the questions of

HAZING IN THE SCHOOLS.

A brother sends us the following clipping from the Chicago Tribune of March 11, 1905.

Some time ago an attempt was made at hazing Kingdon Gould, son of the railway magnate and financier, which attempt failed because of resistance on the part of the young man in self-defense.

At first it was thought that young Gould would not return to the school, but from the clipping we give it appears that he did, and incidentally submitted to the hazing process.

NEW YORK, March 10.—[Special.]—Kingdon Gould has been hazed.

Since his return to the Columbia campus after his trouble before the Christmas recess young Gould has been regarded by students as a protege of the faculty. There exists a sophomore class organization known as the "Black Avengers," constituted for settling just such problems as young Gould's case presented.

Not many nights ago when it became known Doctor Butler was about to leave for Montana, Gould was accosted by a young man as he was going from the university grounds to his fraternity house. The young man asked him some questions about the next day's lectures and the two walked on, two other students joining them.

The newcomers did not bother to ask questions. One told Gould he was "pinched." Gould was informed he had his choice of accompanying them then or of giving his parole to meet them at a stated place and hour that night. He accepted the latter and kept his agreement.

A lecture on the proper conduct for freshmen was administered to Gould. Then he was asked to spell "money," after which he was forced to relate the genealogy of the Gould family and expound the police regulations as to the carrying of concealed weapons.

After these preliminaries, it is said, Gould was blindfolded and set astride a barrel with a broom in his hand and told to give an exhibition pony polo ride. A sudden kick sent the barrel from under its rider, and he was declared unhorsed.

With two toothpicks in his hand and a shingle to sit on Gould was compelled to play varsity oarsman. There were a few other things, all of which he did.

The campus report to-day has it that the young man took his medicine well.

SAN FRANCISCO, California, March 10.—Made a cripple by hazing, Albert De Rome entered Police Judge Morgan's court on crutches to-day and secured warrants for the arrest of the Hopkins Art Institute students who made him the victim of their sport. The accused are Jackson Hatch, Jr., A. P. Hunt, and Curran C. Herrison. The hazing was done on November 19, 1904.

WASHINGTON, Pennsylvania, March 10.—[Special.]—A score of hazers are to be expelled from Bethany College to-morrow for their course in initiating Wade H. Stewart of Parkersburg, West Virginia, into a Bethany College fraternity. They took him to an abandoned coal-mine, beat him, and dragged him through mud. He is in a serious condition from pneumonia.

Hazing is not a relic of barbarism, but is a vicious outgrowth of scholastic and class exclusiveness, a sort of physical barnacle fastened on the curriculum of the schools of the country, including the military schools at West Point and Annapolis. Some of its evil results are seen from the two instances which follow the notice of the hazing of young Gould. Of course if it is necessary that any shall be subjected to the ungentlemanly and senseless indignity of hazing, the son of the rich and notable man in community as well as the son of the poor and unnoted should be victims.

No self-respecting board of directors, or managers of any public school, college, seminary, or university should encourage, tolerate, or submit to the unmanly, senseless, and humiliating practice of hazing. The entree into college life is hard enough for a sensitive, high-minded, and bashful boy without his being subjected to the irritating and disgraceful humiliation of rough horseplay, from already installed students, the result of which is so often fatal to mind or body of the victim.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The Boston Evening Herald for March 6, 1905, contained the following editorial paragraph: "N. B.—For Boston churches, chronic complainers of small congregations. The Latter Day Saints, or anti-polygamous Mormons, have from the neglected and unchurched families of Somerville gathered together a happy and large religious society, and in a few months' time dedicated a new and substantial house of worship. Had not the evangelical missionary bodies previously condemned the field as barren and unpromising?"

"The library has lately received from the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints four volumes of the official Church History. These are of special interest at the present time, as they are written, so far as can be judged by an outsider, in a fair and impartial spirit. The story of this church in its early days, the troubles in Missouri and at Nauvoo, Illinois, the murders of Joseph and Hiram [Hyrum] Smith, and the subsequent movements, all make matter well worth careful reading by others than members of the organization. The history of the Grand Lodge of Iowa, in its first volume, will show that the Mormons had much influence at about the time of organization. There were two Mormon lodges in the Territory—at Montrose and Keokuk. And while these were not admitted to take part in forming the Grand Body, yet the presence of their representatives at Iowa City was responsible for some very peculiar actions. These Mormon Masons were the victims of unreasoning prejudice and popular passion and it is hoped that our historian may search out the real truth. For a number of years brethren hailing from the disrupted lodges at Montrose and Keokuk, and even from Nauvoo, were freely admitted into Iowa lodges. In fact a number of those from Nauvoo were petitioners for dispensation and established a lodge at Augusta, being most heartily recommended by No. 1, at Burlington. Our historian has found much in these volumes of Church History directly to his purpose."—Quarterly Bulletin of the Iowa Masonic Library, for February, 1905.
