The Kansas City Journal of September 4, 1905, (Labor Day,) contained the following editorial, which is suggestive of opportunities for Latter Day Saints:

CHURCH AND LABOR.

Saturday's dispatches from Chicago reported that practically every Presbyterian minister in the United States would preach on some phase of the labor question on Sunday, September 3—yesterday—as the result of an appeal from the department of church and labor of that denomination, which has its offices in Chicago. This was a commendable step, both for the sake of the church and for the welfare of the laboring classes, and it should be productive of good results. There is no denying the fact that the tendency of the age in the church is to deteriorate into a sort of close corporation in which alignments are made along social lines rather than according to the early teachings of Christianity. The consequence is that the church is not the living force nowadays that it formerly was. It does not exercise the influence for good that it once did. It has grown away from the masses instead of towards them. In some denominations, at least, a man's natural religious instinct is chilled by the thought that he will not be welcome in church unless he has a good coat on his back and can pay a considerable part of his year's income for pew rent. Salvation is not free, according to church practice, whatever it may be according to gospel.

As for the preachers, a Kansas City minister gave this interesting analysis a short time ago at a ministers' conference:

"The minister has to associate almost entirely with women and babies, and you would almost expect him to wear dresses.

Is it any wonder that he becomes effeminate? This is no criticism of feminine character, but it is deplorable when a man becomes effeminate in his characteristics. When he does, it would be merciful for some kind providence to chloroform him into another existence and start him out in life anew. Nothing he needs so much as to be with men, as men are. I sometimes tear off this garb and go about as a business man. With this garb on, there is a wall between me and the average man as strong as adamant. What we ministers need and need very much is the company of men, their comfort and knowledge."

The criticism that might be made of this minister's statement is that he does not have to "associate almost entirely with women and babies." Christ did not do so when he was on earth, and if he came again it is almost inconceivable that he would do so now. He was literally the "comfort and knowledge" of men; and if he were here now it is altogether probable that he would spend little time in churches, but much in the slums and among the poor, relieving their necessities and healing the sick in mind as well as in body.

As for the laboring men, there will be little question that they might be benefited by specially directed ministrations of spiritual advisers and the good offices of a gentle and instructive Christianity. There is probably no better or more conscientious body of men than the honest toilers who compose the rank and file of labor unions. They firmly believe that they are not getting their just share of the profits of their labor, and they are firmly determined to secure justice. But in their misguided zeal, and under the influence of corrupt and self-seeking leaders, many of them have wandered far from the divine laws of Christianity, as well as from the human statutes that are based on them. If all these good preachers had chosen as the text for their sermons, "Thou shalt do no murder," they would have struck a blow at the root of the evil of strikes, as exemplified recently in Chicago and elsewhere. However, it is easy to preach, and even a high-class and conscientious newspaper like the Journal can well afford to yield the palm in that respect to the preachers. The thing which is difficult to do is to put preachment into useful practice, and in this regard much closer relations may be profitably cultivated between the church and labor.

The conditions in the world are that the churches are cut off from the people who most need them. Men's intercourse is confined to those with whom they are engaged in the same pursuit or business.

Ministers or preachers, as such, are not welcomed in large manufacturing concerns or by corporations employing large numbers of men. The time of the employees would be used by the ministers in talking to them.

The classes that most need the gospel are the farthest removed from it. These conditions emphasize the fact that the converted men and women of the church, who come in daily contact with men and women of the world, in their work, must be evangelists, teachers, preachers, exhorters, expounders, and inviters, in order to fulfill the call. Let every man that is warned warn his neighbor.

Another thing to be considered is the existence of the Sunday-school and the Religio,—training-schools for Latter Day Saint preachers—male and female. If the members are not being trained to govern their own conduct according to the gospel law, and to teach others to do so, what is the object of these societies?

The demand exists for spiritual laborers in the shops, factories, stores, offices, and all places where men and women gather to make money. The time has come! Let the missionaries in charge encourage the laity to exercise their God-given abilities in the preaching of the word by tracting, by talking, and by every legitimate way possible.

When a brother or sister reviews a Sunday-school he or she is preaching. When a Religion reads an original paper before the society, or gives a talk, he is preaching. What am I doing in writing this article?

In Acts 8:1, 4 our guide tells us:

And Saul was consenting unto his [Stephen's] death, and at that time there was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem; and they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles . . . Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word.

They were men, women, and children,—members of the church, who did not hold either priesthood, as well as those who were active in the ministerial offices.

Therefore, let the brethren in charge make use of the bright, powerful instruments God has placed at their disposal—use the religions. Feed their enthusiasm with the fuel of active participation in evangelism. Hold them up by your faith and prayers on a box at the street-corners of the large cities where they reside,—a half dozen of them every night. We are telling that we have more light and knowledge than all the other sects and religions combined—we should be prepared to prove it.

Josh Billings once said, "I luv a rooster for tew things—one is the krow that is in him, and the other is the spurs that are on him to bak up his krow with."

Send the Religions out. Let them try their spurs.

"POSITIVE RELIGION."

When I opened my HERALD and saw the article under the above caption, imagine my surprise, on reading, to find it drifting into a defense of secret societies. The first thing I wish to notice is the following: "Why should we go about waging warfare against something without either necessity or command to impel us?"

Why should Japan wage war against Russia? Because of the dangerous encroachments of the Russ thereby jeopardizing the interests of the Japanese. I have no connection with any "anti" movement, and what I write is with a view to call attention to the dangerous encroachments of an enemy now in subtle form, now confronting us as a people.

I believe in and teach a "positive religion"; one so perfect in construction that it needs no "outside" help, and which if lived up to will effect our salvation both temporal and spiritual. I believe that everything that is needful was provided for in the gospel of Jesus Christ; and I am opposed to any and every thing that has a tendency to retard our conformity thereto.

I see a "necessity" in lifting a warning voice against the Saints uniting with secret societies, because of the direful results of both the past and present.

Again we quote: "We know brethren who are poor in this world's goods, yet rich in faith towards God and in love for their fellow men, keeping the law of God as best they know how, and who unite with some fraternal and beneficiary society for the sake of the protection it affords their families in case death or disability overtakes them."

Now Bro. or Sr. "Fidelis," can you or any one else unite with some fraternal society, contribute to its maintenance, attend its sessions at various times, in fact maintain your standing, and at the same time keep the first great commandment, "Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind"? They have a tendency to rob us of our affections, and are many times the cause of indifference and apostasy.

I know Saints who belong to a number of societies, but can hardly be induced to attend prayer-meeting, yet they will defend the gospel, help the elders when they come,—but judging by their actions one could not tell whether they belonged to church or not. Others have been known to attend lodge-meeting when the missionary in charge was conducting special services at their door.

I have been told by a member of a certain society that if I would unite I could be a "better Latter Day Saint." Indeed!

Will the society accomplish that which the gospel is designed to do? If the church is unable to care for the poor as the law provides, whose fault is it? If we want our families protected, there are insurance agencies who will look after them—and about as cheap in the end—without any of our time or "mind" more than having our house or barn insured; and those degenerating influences will be avoided.

Again we note: "Does it not then become the ministers, and all interested in the upbuilding of Zion, to lay aside all that will hinder the progress of this glorious cause?" Certainly! The "secret society" with the rest. It is a detriment to spiritual growth in the main, and "hinders the progress of this glorious cause." And that is just why I, for one, am opposed to it.

I know people who have left the church, and their first step was the "lodge," just as many have found their way to the ditch because they took the first drink.

We should live every day as though we expected the Savior to-morrow; and, Saints, if we knew or thought that glorious event would transpire next month, how many would unite with the secret societies in the meantime? Please read Matthew 24: 48-51, and see if a lesson can not be gleaned:

I can respond to the following with a hearty amen: "It is of prime importance for us, as a religious body, to present to the world a better and a higher standard than they already have." But that does not necessitate a descent to their "standard"; and to make our example effective we should practice what we preach, and not wait until such a time as the church is able to care for the poor before lending our support.

I know Latter Day Saints who, after becoming such, left the society because of its blighting influence, while others who were in, the light united with some "order" and, I regret to say, are in the background.

We are living in a day when "perilous times" are upon us, and as a people we should stand aloof from everything of a merely worldly nature.

We do not have to join the "society" to get the gospel before the people. Latter Day Saints can wear as many "badges" and "buttons" as they please; but to my mind they will show their true colors better without either. "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers" is as pertinent now as when uttered; and if Latter Day Saints ever attain the mark of their high calling they will have to "come out from among them" and "lay aside every weight," and "put into practice the gospel plan as revealed to us"; which, if we do, we will not have any time or disposition to help sustain worldly institutions of a discriminating character. They are worldly at the best, and suited to those of the world. The Savior said to his people, "Ye are not of this world"; and to be Christ-like, we should avoid contact with everything of the world so far as it is possible to do so,—especially those things that are a detriment to our spiritual development,—and conform ourselves to that "better and higher standard," the gospel. The more we get of the one the less we can use of the other. "Ye can not serve God and mammon."

A desire to protect his family is a commendable trait in any man; but when the husband and wife are both so engrossed in lodge-work as to neglect their church duties it would look like slighting the protection of the family for eternity.

I have heard Saints say they could not be at church on a certain evening, because of "special work" at the lodge; and I have wondered if they would be included with those of whom it was said, "They all with one consent began to make excuse."

"Let us heed the command to learn each our duty and do it, leaving the consequences with God." Then when the man who is set as a "watchman" sees those under his care being led away by those seductive influences, and fails to warn his flock against the encroachments of the subtle enemy, he fails to "do" his duty, does he not?

Much more might be said. But we insist that "the practical application in our lives of the gospel of Jesus Christ will certainly make us what we should be, a peculiar people, zealous of good works," without the assistance of any secret society or man-made institution. "Our sufficiency is of God."—Paul.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL ON THE BOOK OF MORMON.

The above caption is the title of a pamphlet written by Alexander Campbell and dated February 10, 1831, in which an attempt is made to overthrow the divinity of the Book of Mormon. Were it not for the reason that said tract has been resurrected or republished by what is known as the Anti-Mormon Association, with the same object in view, we should let the matter rest. But in this pamphlet falsehood, error, and misrepresentation are so ingeniously blended together that it becomes necessary to analyze them. Mr. Campbell on page 15 says: "Smith, its real author, as ignorant and as impudent a knave as ever wrote a book." The above thought is reiterated on page 23:

And as Joseph Smith is a very ignorant man and is called the author on the title page, I can not doubt for a single moment but that he is the sole author and proprietor of it.

If the fact of having placed his name as author and proprietor on the title page should produce such confidence in Mr. Campbell that he had no doubt that Joseph told the truth, how is it, when upon the next leaf Joseph writes, "The Book of Mormon. An account written by the hand of Mormon, upon plates taken from the plates of Nephi," followed with an abridgment taken from the Book of Ether, that he disbelieves that? Yet there is no conflict between the two. The definition is given by Webster to the word author, the root of which is, "to increase, or cause to enlarge. The primary sense is one who brings or causes to come forth." Now in this sense Joseph Smith was the author, and he brought or caused to be brought forth this account written by the hand of Mormon upon plates taken from the plates of Nephi. This Mr. Campbell can not believe, but after he puts his own definition on the word author, to mean "composer," then he can believe that Joseph is the composer of that work, although he never said nor intended any such thing. This is one of Campbell's tactics of misconstruing language, by which the unwary are caught.

But unfortunately for Mr. Campbell's followers, he has here made the statement and repeated it, that he did "not doubt for a single moment but that he is the sole author and proprietor of it."

This is contradicted by Mr. Campbell's followers, who would have one, Solomon Spalding, responsible for it; and that Joseph Smith or Sidney Rigdon had stolen it from Spalding's widow. Some, however, have abandoned that theory and invented others; and while Campbell is dead, yet he speaketh, and says he has not the least doubt but that Joseph Smith is the author (composer) of it. Who is right, Mr. Campbell or his followers, or are they all wrong?

He attempts to throw discredit upon the Book of Mormon in regard to the priesthood established among the Nephites, they not being of the tribe of Levi, and says:

So irrevocable was the grant of the priesthood to Levi, and of the high priesthood to Aaron, that no stranger [he explains "stranger" to mean one of another family than that of Levi] dare approach the altar of God which Moses established. . . . This Joseph Smith overlooked in his impious fraud, and makes his hero Lehi spring from Joseph. And just as soon as his sons return with the roll of his lineage, ascertaining that he was of the tribe of Joseph, he and his sons acceptably offer sacrifices and burnt offerings to the Lord.

If the offering of sacrifices and burnt offerings by those not of the Levitical priesthood order, as recorded in the Book of Mormon, is to stamp it as an "impious fraud," would it not also stamp the Bible as a fraud if in it we should discover that others besides those of the Levitical order had offered such offerings and sacrifices? If this is a test of divinity in the one case, it must also be in the other, as it is a poor rule that will not work both ways.

In 2 Chronicles 5:6 we learn that, "also king Solomon and all the congregation of Israel that were assembled unto him before the ark, sacrificed sheep and oxen, which could not be told nor numbered for multitude." Surely, neither Solomon nor all the "congregation of Israel" were Levites, neither priests.

See also 1 Kings 8:25: "And three times in a year did Solomon offer burnt offerings and peace offerings upon the altar which he built unto the Lord, and he burnt incense upon the altar that was before the Lord."

Again we find in Judges 13:19, 23 that a man by the name of Manoah and his wife offered burnt offering to the Lord, and he was of the tribe of Dan, of which the Lord had said nothing concerning priesthood. Neither was Samuel of the tribe of Levi, but an Ephraimite, and yet he was a prophet of the Lord and also offered sacrifices: "And Samuel took a sucking lamb, and offered it for burnt offering wholly unto the Lord: and Samuel cried unto the Lord for Israel; and the Lord heard him."—1 Samuel 7:9. We also find Manasseh, another king, who was not of the Levites, offering sacrifices. (See 2 Chronicles 33:16.) Joseph and Mary offered sacrifices as a token of their first-born, according to the law, and they were of the tribe of Judah.

besides the Levites offered sacrifices, and yet upon this point Mr. Campbell condemns the Book of Mormon [as an "impious fraud," because it speaks of some that offered sacrifices, not of that tribe. Why does he not condemn the Bible on the same ground? Why does he not condemn Abel for offering sacrifices, and that without any command whatever so far as we have any record in the Bible which he professes to believe? Why not find fault with Noah for doing the same thing? Also Abraham offered sacrifices. It may, however, be urged in Abraham's case that he was commanded. Then God's command makes it legal, does it not? If God should command others to do the same that would make it legal, would it not? What about the priest of Midian, Jethro, Moses' father-in-law? He was not after Levitical order, yet he was a priest and offered sacrifice to the Lord, (see Exodus 18:12). Strange Mr. Campbell did not object to priests being in existence before Moses' time, and that too not after the order of Aaron. Melchisedec was another priest who belonged to a different order than that of Aaron, and he was also a priest of the most high God. Paul informs us that Christ was after that same order, and not after the order of Aaron. (See Hebrews 7:11.) Wonderfully strange Campbell could overlook such irregularities as having a priesthood in existence, and sacrifices offered. Wonder what became of that lineage of priesthood, when the other, which was after the order of Aaron, came into existence? It is evident from the writings of Paul that this first priesthood was the greater of the two because Christ was to be after that order. Neither was it confined to any certain tribe, neither do we have any record in the King James translation, which Mr. Campbell professes to believe, that it ever ceased to exist. And if it did not cease to exist, it must have continued; and how does Mr. Campbell and his followers know but that this is the high priesthood spoken of, and the other was an appendage to it, which was to follow in the lineage of Levi? Now if this first priesthood held by Jethro and Melchisedec, and those holding that order (for it is not reasonable to suppose that two would be able to form an order) was not done away, what would hinder Lehi and Nephi and others to hold that priesthood, since they were of the seed of Joseph, and the birthright that did belong to Reuben was transferred to the sons of Joseph (see 1 Chronicles 5:1), and thus they held the preëminence among the tribes of Israel; and why not this higher priesthood, by virtue of which they also held the right to officiate in the lesser priesthood which was after the Levitical order?

While Mr. Campbell is so strenuously contending for the continuation of a priesthood which the Lord hath rejected because of corruption, we again discover his inconsistency in wanting to maintain such a class of men under an imperfect law, but when the more perfect law—the law of Christ—was introduced, then no priesthood is needed at all, and according to his philosophy, law and order in Christ's kingdom can be maintained without any one to maintain it and administer in the ordinances of the gospel. Men must be called of God under Moses, and hold a certain priesthood; but now that is superfluous under the more perfect system. The moral is, that if we want a real perfect government here on earth we take all its officers out. Then what have we left? That is just what Mr. Campbell and his followers have been doing. They have no priesthood. And if they think they have they do not know which it is, whether it is the Melchisedec or the Aaronic; and there never were more than the two in existence.

The Lord says through Ezekiel 34: 10:

Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against the shepherds; and I will require my flock at their hand, and cause them to cease from feeding the flock; neither shall the shepherds feed themselves any more; for I will deliver my flock from their mouth [from the mouth of the priests] that they may not be meat for them.

Again, Micah 3:11 says:

The heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money: yet will they lean upon the Lord, and say, Is not the Lord among us? none evil can come upon us. Therefore shall Zion for your sakes be plowed as a field and Jerusalem become heaps.

Thus we can begin to see why the Lord would cause the priests to cease from feeding the flock; and these evidences accumulate all along the line, and show the condition the priests were in just before, as well as after the Lord led Lehi out from Jerusalem in order that he might preserve in him a righteous people. Hosea 6:9 says: "And as troops of robbers wait for a man, so the company of priests murder in the way by consent: for they commit lewdness."

The Lord again says by the prophet Jeremiah 23:14: "I have also seen in the prophets of Jerusalem a horrible thing: they commit adultery, and walk in lies; they strengthen also the hand of evil-doers, that none doth return from his wickedness. Again the Lord says by Malachi 2:8, speaking of the priests: "But ye are departed out of the way; ye have caused many to stumble at the law; ye have corrupted the covenant of Levi, saith the Lord of hosts." (See also Isaiah 1:28:7; Ezekiel 34.) No wonder the Lord rejected them and had no more delight in their sacrifices and would cause the priests to cease from feeding his flock. Yet Mr. Campbell, regardless of what the Lord has said, wants this corrupt, adulterous, and hireling priesthood continued.

Mr. Campbell denounces Joseph Smith in the most rancorous terms for claiming that another promised land existed to which God led a part of his people Israel, and this would-be restorer of the pure gospel of Christ makes use of the following very Christian-like (?) language as applicable to one of his fellow beings:

This ignorant and impudent liar, in the next place, makes the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob violate his covenants with Israel and Judah concerning the land of Canaan by promising a new land to a pious Jew. If a company of reprobate Jews had departed from Jerusalem and the temple in the days of Zedekiah, and founded a new colony, it would not have been so incongruous. But to represent God as inspiring a devout Jew and a prophet, such as Lehi and Nephi are represented by Smith, with a resolution to forsake Jerusalem and God's own house, and to depart from the land which God swore to their fathers so long as they were obedient; and to guide by miracle and bless by prodigies a good man in forsaking God's covenant and worship, is so monstrous an error that language fails to afford a name for it. It is to make God violate his own covenants, and to set at naught his own promises, and to convert his own curses into blessing. Excision from the commonwealth of Israel, and banishment from Jerusalem and the temple, were the greatest curses the law of Moses knew. But Smith makes a good and pious Jew the subject of this curse and sends him off into an inhospitable wilderness, disinherits him in Canaan, and makes him more happy in forsaking the institutions of Moses, more intelligent in the wilderness, and more prosperous in adversity, than were the Jews in their best days, in the best of lands, and under the best of all governments! This impostor was too ignorant of the history of the Jews and the nature of the covenants of promise to have even alluded to them in his book if he had not supposed that he had the plates of Moses in his own keeping, as he had his "molten plates" of Nephi.—Pages 18, 19.

There are several points in the above in which Mr. Campbell shows far more ignorance than Mr. Smith, regardless of his attainments in acquiring worldly wisdom. And while he denounces Smith as an "ignorant and impudent liar," Smith has shown by this work (the Book of Mormon) the fulfillment of ancient prophecy, which could not possibly have its fulfillment in any other way. We will notice some of Mr. Campbell's mistakes in comparison with Bible prophecies.

It will be seen from the above extract that Mr. Campbell thinks that God had to violate his covenants and promises made to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to give Lehi a new land of promise. Let us see. This old patriarch Jacob, in blessing his son Joseph, pronounced a greater blessing upon him than he himself had received by his father. He so states in Genesis 49:26. Now what was the blessing pronounced upon Jacob? (See Genesis 28:4.) It was the land in which he was a stranger—Canaan. But the blessing of Joseph was to be greater than it. His blessing should reach unto the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills. Now, where was the "utmost bounds," or the farthest distance from where Joseph and Jacob stood? It is only found in the land of America. And this should be Joseph's blessing; hence it was greater or "prevailed" above the blessing of Jacob. This is also in harmony with the blessing given by Moses upon the tribe of Joseph.

And of Joseph he said, Blessed of the Lord be his land, for the precious things of heaven, for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath, and for the precious fruits brought forth by the sun, and for the precious things put forth by the moon, and for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills.—Deuteronomy 33:13-16.

The Lord in plain and positive terms tells us by his prophets that Joseph is to have a land of his own and that it should abound in things most precious. I scarcely thought that, with all the learning of A. Campbell, he was ignorant of the fact that the land of America as a whole is considered to be the most fruitful land on the globe and abounding in a great variety of produce of every description. The Lord promised this land to Joseph's posterity, but Campbell says, Now, you (God) violate your covenants with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob by doing so.

Now whether old father Jacob, and Moses, knew what they were talking about, or not, one thing is certain, they hit it remarkably well, and we do not have to take their word for it; but we will go to others who were in the prime of manhood, and surely they ought to have known what they were talking about. Josephus, a man of more than ordinary ability, tells us in his history, volume 1, page 30:

After this they were dispersed abroad on account of their languages, and went out by colonies everywhere, and each colony took possession of that land which they lighted upon, and unto which God led them, both the islands and maritime countries. There were also some who passed over the sea in ships, and inhabited the islands.

This harmonizes with Isaiah 16:8 and Psalm 80:11. There was a period of over seven hundred years between the three (David, Isaiah, and Josephus), so they could not have held a council in order to fix up this. Isaiah says:

The lords of the heathen have broken down the principal plants [Ephraim and Manasseh, who were the sons of Joseph]; they are come even unto Jazer, they wandered through the wilderness: her branches are stretched out, they are gone over the sea.

Campbell says they are not gone over the sea; they, the principal plants, Ephraim and Manasseh, were not to inherit a land separate from the land of Canaan, although the Lord through his prophets says they were; and that at the most distant point from where he uttered this language.

Mr. Campbell says that according to Smith the Lord disinherits Lehi in the land of Canaan and sends him into an inhospitable wilderness and there makes him more happy and more intelligent. Mr. Campbell is here assuming something that neither Mr. Smith nor the Book of Mormon ever claimed. In the first place he does not disinherit Lehi and Nephi as the progenitors of Joseph; but he simply led them forth to America to take possession of their inheritance which had already been given them through prophecy before Israel ever entered Canaan; but the time of its fulfillment did not come until Israel, together with her priests and prophets, had corrupted themselves that the Lord saw fit to to send them into captivity. Then he called out this righteous man, Lehi, and his family, to flee and take possession of their promised land. This is in harmony with Jeremiah 49:30-32. But Mr. Campbell has told us that he sent him into an "inhospitable wilderness." This is not true. Josephus has already told us that some went over the sea at the time of the confounding of languages, and Jeremiah says:

Flee, get you far off, dwell deep, O ye inhabitants of Hazor [the principal plants], saith the Lord; for Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon hath taken counsel against you, and hath conceived a purpose against you. Arise, get you up unto the wealthy nation [not an inhospitable wilderness, but a wealthy nation] that dwelleth without care [no one to molest them], saith the Lord, which have neither gates nor bars, which dwell alone, and their camels shall be a booty, and the multitude of their cattle a spoil.

The foregoing is very characteristic for several reasons:

1. Here is made mention of a people who were told to flee to a distant land.

2. They were to flee at a time when the king of Babylon should come and take the Jews captive. This is the claim made by Lehi in the Book of Mormon, that this was the time that they were commanded to flee.

3. They were commanded to go not to a wealthy nation, but to "the wealthy nation." This is in harmony with the prophecy by Moses in Deuteronomy 33, that Joseph's land should be a land of most wonderful riches and fertility. It is also in accord with the claims of the book itself, that riches in great abundance existed on the land.

4. They were to flee to a nation which dwelt without care. It is hardly probable that any of the eastern nations could say that, as they were continually engaged in war and conquest. But this was a nation which had sprung up from a few emigrants from the the Tower of Babel, which had no opposition and had been there alone for the space of nearly eighteen hundred years.

5. They were to flee to a nation which had neither gates nor bars. This was not the case on the Eastern Continent, where they fortified their cities against invasion of contending powers, and built great walls with gates and bars to be shut at night.

6. They were to flee to a nation that dwelt alone. This could hardly be said of any other nation than this land of Joseph's, with its everlasting hills stretching from its extreme north to the extreme south, having no connection with any other land.

7. They were to take this nation's camels and cattle for a spoil, and their multitude was great.

8. And the Lord would scatter into all the winds them that are in the utmost corners (the utmost bounds). This would be doing the same thing as when he drove out the seven heathen nations of Canaan to give room for his people Israel.

This does not sound much like it was an "inhospitiable wilderness." The prophet Jeremiah and others knew more of the actual condition of things before they transpired, being thousands of miles away, than did Alexander Campbell and his associates of the anti-Mormon host after the event had taken place, and yet they have within their reach such information from historical and archæological work and biblical sources as to convince any rational minded person, who will but half try to inform himself, that the Book of Mormon is a true history of the people it represents.

Mr. Campbell further infers that this people forsook the institutions of Moses. He admits in other parts of his work that they did not, but continued to "offer sacrifices and burnt offerings."

If Mr. Campbell and followers believe the Bible as they profess, they will certainly also believe the promise made to Abraham that his seed after him should be as numerous as the stars of heaven and as the sands upon the seashore. Yet they expect the Lord to crowd them all on a land a few miles square.

Mr. Campbell continues his logic:

But Smith makes his pious hero, Nephi, six hundred years before the Messiah began to preach, disclose these secrets concerning the calling of the Gentiles, and the blessings flowing through the Messiah to Jews and Gentiles, which Paul says were hid from ages and generations "which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men as it is now revealed unto us, the holy apostles and prophets, by the Spirit; that the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel." . . . Paul says these things were secrets and unknown until his time, but Smith makes Nephi say the same things six hundred years before Paul was converted.

Very, very strange that in his blind zeal to overthrow the truth as contained in the Book of Mormon in reference to Christ and his mission work, that he does not stop to think that he at the same time also destroys the prophecies in the Old Testament in reference to Christ. He seems to entirely ignore or overlook these plain and precious promises in the Old Testament in his zeal to overthrow the statements of of Book of Mormon writers. The only trouble with Mr. Campbell is that he did not understand the quotation he made from Paul's writing; and, misunderstanding it, he builds upon a false basis, hence arrives at a false conclusion. Paul is speaking of the mystery that was revealed unto him, that the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, etc. Paul does not say one word about its not being revealed before his day, because he knew better. He was a man informed in the Scripture. But he says it was not made known, as it is now revealed; that is all Paul said, and all he intended to say.

But let us consult the Bible to see if Mr. Campbell speaks where the Bible speaks; and if we find that the Old Testament writers spoke of the calling of the Gentiles hundreds of years before Christ, why could not Book of Mormon writers also speak of it when operated upon by the same spirit? Paul also states that he said no other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come. (See Acts 26:22.) Now what did they say? Isaiah speaks on this of the mission work of Christ:

I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth.—Isaiah 49:6. Behold I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people.—Verse 22. And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people, to it shall the Gentiles seek.—Isaiah 11:10. (See also Acts 26:22, 23.) And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising.—Isaiah 60:3. And they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles.—Isaiah 66:19. O Lord, my strength, and my fortress, and my refuge in the day of affliction, the Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth and shall say, Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit.—Jeremiah 16:19. And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh.—Joel 2:28. [Not upon the Jews only but upon all flesh.] For, from the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same, my name shall be great among the Gentiles.—Malachi 1:11.

Speaking of the king of Zion, Zechariah says:

And he shall speak peace unto the heathen; and his dominion shall be from sea to sea.—9:10.

Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession.—Psalm 2:8. (See also Galatians 3:8.)

Is it possible that this theologian and would-be annihilator of everything in opposition to his opinion, could be so ignorant, willfully or otherwise, that he did not know that those scriptures, and a host of others, pointed to the calling of the Gentiles, and to blessings to come to them through the Messiah? And when their brethren in the promised land (Joseph's land) speak the same thing they are condemned for telling things which he claims were reserved for the apostles to tell. He says:

The twelve apostles of the Lamb are said by Paul to have developed certain secrets which were hidden from ages and generations, which Paul says were ordained before the world to their glory—that they should have the honor of announcing them.

What nonsense! Paul was not as jealous for honor as that, neither is the Lord any respecter of persons. We have shown that the prophets knew of this long beforehand, and Paul says that he said nothing but what they had said should come; but it was more perfectly revealed now than it was in ages past; that is all Paul intended to say.

Hence, if it was known that the Gentiles should be partakers of Christ's salvation in Old Testament times, and it was not a crime to have it recorded there, by what method can it become a crime in the Book of Mormon, and that book be termed an "impious fraud" because of it? As I have said before, it is a poor rule that will not work both ways. If the Book of Mormon must be branded a fraud for telling it before the time of Christ, why not brand the Bible a fraud also, upon the same grounds?

Mr. Campbell says, "These things were secrets and unknown until his time." I wonder if Mr. Campbell really had a Bible. If so, he either did not read it, or else did not understand what he read.

This is the kind of trash the "antis" are circulating in order to destroy the work of God. But the Lord will care for his work, and with all the attacks of men and devils it still flourishes; and the opposers are caught in their own snares. As the Lord said he would do unto Babylon of old, so will he also do unto modern Babylon: "I have laid a snare for thee, and thou art also taken, O Babylon, and thou wast not aware: thou art found and also caught, because thou hast striven against the Lord."

Although Mr. Campbell has repeatedly stated that Mr. Smith was "as ignorant and impudent a knave as ever wrote a book," yet we discover, even if we should for argument's sake admit that he was the composer of the Book of Mormon, that regardless of his ignorance, he knew more about the Bible and its prophecies, and their fulfillment, which he so wonderfully and accurately records in the Book of Mormon, than did Mr. Campbell with all his learning.

Yet, with all his ignorance Mr. Campbell gives him credit for more learning than it is the good fortune for most men to possess, thus flatly contradicting himself:

This prophet, Smith, through his stone spectacles, wrote on the plates of Nephi, in his Book of Mormon, every error and almost every truth discussed in New York for the last ten years. [Wonderful memory did he have. S. K. S.] He decides all the great controversies—infant baptism, ordination, the trinity, regeneration, repentance, justification, the fall of man, the atonement, transubstantiation, fasting, penance, church government, religious experience, the call to the ministry, the general resurrection, eternal punishment, who may baptize, and even the question of free masonry, republican government, and the rights of men.

All these topics were ably handled by Mr. Smith, and yet he was a very ignorant man. What contradiction and nonsense! Very few scholars ever reach the pinnacle of learning where they are able to master these several topics successfully, and Mr. Campbell says that Smith was "skilled" in these controversies.

Such talk about being ignorant and yet so "skilled" and qualified as to treat these several topics spoken of by Mr. Campbell is too contradictory and unworthy of any special notice.

He next finds fault with the Nephites for practicing the Christian institution before Christ was born. This is only another evidence of his ignorance, or carelessness in reading scripture; as any Bible student ought to know that the gospel was preached before Christ, and the gospel is that everlasting, unchangeable plan established from the beginning, through which God intended to save mankind in order that they might enter into his rest. But Israel not being willing to walk in it, the schoolmaster (the Mosaic law) was added because of a transgression of the other. (See Galatians 3:19:) Paul says:

For unto us was the gospel [not a gospel] preached, as well as unto them [under Moses]: but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it.—Hebrews 4:2. And the Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel [not a gospel] unto Abraham.—Galatians 3:8.

It is evident from the foregoing that the Jews knew about the gospel as we are here told that it was preached unto them. In fact there is no salvation outside of the gospel, as Paul also says in Romans 1:16: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation"; of which Peter also writes in 1 Peter 1:10-12:

Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you: searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow. Unto whom [the prophets] it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things, which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven.

Paul says in Acts 26:22, 23:

Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come: that Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead, and should show light unto the people, and to the Gentiles.

Yet we are told by these wise men of the present age that Paul was chosen to develop something new, to preach a different gospel, and to be the first one to declare the gospel tidings to the Gentiles. How profound! How wise! How learned! In short it is Campbell and company versus Old and New Testament writers.

The people in the time of Christ asked John the Baptist: "Why baptizest thou then, if thou be not that Christ, nor Elias, neither that Prophet?" Baptism was a gospel ordinance, and was had among the Jews, as history shows.

The law of Moses was not a necessary institution to salvation; but it was a law of "sin and death," that whoso broke it should be put to death. It was thus given as a schoolmaster or a punishment to bring them to Christ; but Christ was preached, believed in, and looked for. (See John 4:25, 29; 6:69; 1:20, 25, 45; 3:28; Matthew 16:16, 20; 2:4; 26:23; Acts 26:23; 17:3; 18:5, 28; 9:22; 26:23; 3:18; Luke 23:39; 2:11, 26; 3:15; 22:67; 4:34, 41; John 7:26, 27, 31, 41, 42; 9:22; 12:34; 10:24; 11:27; 20:31.)

These and a host of other places show that the Jews believed Christ was to come, knew about him, believed in a Christ, but were disappointed when he did come, and did not recognize in this Jesus, the Christ, the anointed, because they looked for an earthly ruler.

Then, as believers in Christ, what serious crime could be charged to those Nephites, who were of Jewish origin, to call themselves by his name? We find in the Bible that the Jews were called by various names, such as Pharisees, Sadducees, Essenes, Galileans, etc. Why not concede to the Jews on this continent the same privilege to choose the name by which they desired to be called?

He also objects to Christian institutions being in practice among the Nephites before Jesus was born. Of this Elder H. A. Stebbins says, quoting from Lord Kingsborough's "Mexican Antiquities":

Kingsborough also produces evidence that the ancients practiced the ordinance of baptism and the sacrament of the Lord's supper, but both in a perverted manner.—Book of Mormon Lectures, p. 254.

Why should American archæologists even hint at such a thing if there were no evidence of it? Why should they write of finding plates with Hebrew inscriptions, and containing even the ten commandments, both in part and in full, if that were not the case? And such is the testimony of all the leading archæologists. And why should the ten commandments and other parts of the law of Moses be in existence here on this American continent prior to its discovery, if the people who lived here anciently had no knowledge of the law of Moses? We do not need to go to the Book of Mormon to find out these things; but we can go to our own archæological works, and they tell us, and confirm what was written in the Book of Mormon long before any of these archæological works came into existence. How could Joseph Smith have known these things and inserted them in that book, and yet he be no archæologist, no scholar, "but as ignorant and impudent a knave as ever wrote a book," according to Campbell? How did he know these things, and get them in his book, of which Mr. Campbell says, "There is not the least doubt he is the author"?

Next Mr. Campbell says: "The mariner's compass was known in Europe only about three hundred years ago; but Nephi knew all about steamboats and the compass twenty-four hundred years ago."—Page 22.

I was not aware that Nephi ever laid any claim to knowing "all about steamboats." As to the compass not being known in Europe until about three hundred years ago, I suppose this is intended to convey the thought that it was not known at all before that time. If this is not the intention, I fail to see his point in this. It must be remembered that the Jews were not Europeans, hence this is no evidence that they could not know anything about it prior to its being introduced into Europe. It must also be remembered that Asia was the cradle of civilization, and while Asia enjoyed a degree of civilization Europe was overrun by wild and barbarous tribes. It would almost appear that Mr. Campbell had no access to books to find out whether the compass was a modern invention or not, judging from his statement, which is now being circulated and indorsed by his successors in the war on Mormonism, as reliable, invincible, and beyond dispute.

Let us see what the encyclopedias say on this:

It appears on very good authority that the compass was known in China and throughout the East at a very remote period.—Chambers Encyclopedia.

The origin of the compass is undoubtedly to be ascribed to the Chinese, who more than a thousand years before Christ made use of the loadstone to guide their cars or carriages without the aid of sun or stars. . . . There is indeed every reason to believe that the mariner's compass was not an original European invention, but was introduced from China.—Johnson's Encyclopedia, vol. 2, p. 199.

If there is any reliability in these statements, then we see at once that the compass was known long before Nephi's time, and what then of Mr. Campbell's arguments?

We have already shown from both the Bible and history that some had passed over the sea, hence were navigators; and how could this be accomplished without some instrument to direct their course, when out on the briny deep, with nothing but sky and water in sight, and oftentimes the sky beclouded? Mr. Campbell's argument is contrary to science and reason. If it be conceded that Joseph Smith invented that book, he knew better than that, though an "ignorant, impudent knave." Hence this story of the compass or directors is a point in favor of the truthfulness of the book, rather than against it, because it shows consistency, while Mr. Campbell's argument is inconsistent, in claiming indirectly that navigation can be accomplished without some sort of compass. And now the "antis," following the footsteps of their leader, circulate these inconsistencies in their endeavor to prove the Book of Mormon false, and ask people to accept them.

His next attack is on the grammatical and phraseological construction of it and says, "It has not one good sentence in it, save the profanation of those sentences quoted from the oracles of the living God."—Page 27.

If Mr. Campbell had been consistent he would first have gone over the Bible and pointed out mistakes in grammar and phrases, also contradictions found in it, before throwing any discredit on another work claiming to be of ancient date, and in language imperfect. No perfection of language is claimed by the ones who made the engravings on the plates from which the book was translated.

If the Bible should be measured by the same rule, and condemned by it, the followers of Campbell would find themselves without a foundation—without a Bible. And why not measure it that way, if it be a true rule to measure the word of God by? We will try it:

And surely your blood of your lives will I require: at the hand of every beast will I require it, and at the hand of man; at the hand of every man's brother will I require the life of man.—Genesis 9:5.

Pretty good language! But will the "antis" please explain their speech? The idea of the beasts having hands, and the Lord requiring at their hands the blood of every man! He also will require the life of every man's brother. How is this to be done? I do not know. Perhaps "he who speaks where the Bible speaks" can tell us; because it surely is constructed all right. No mistakes in the Bible! But let us try again:

There went up Moses, and Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel: and they saw the God of Israel: and there was under his feet as it were a paved work of a sapphire stone, and it were the body of heaven in its clearness. And upon the nobles of the children of Israel he laid not his hand: also they saw God, and did eat and drink.—Exodus 24:9-11.

What was that you said, Moses? Moses: I said that my brother Aaron, and Nadab, and Abihu, seventy of the elders, and I saw God, and that he had hands and feet.

We take for granted that this is also the language of Mr. Campbell and followers, who speak where the Bible speaks. Here, then, were seventy and four who claimed to have seen God. Similar claims were made by other ancients; and Moses says that he spoke with him face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend. (See Exodus 33:11.) But this is contradicted by John the beloved disciple who leaned on the bosom of Christ. He says, "No man hath seen God at any time."—1 John 4:12 and John 1:18.

This is likewise the language of the "antis" who "speak where the Bible speaks." Please explain your contradictory statements.

Again: "He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning."—1 John 3:8; and, "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us."—1 John 1:8.

No wonder the "antis" must go to colleges and seminaries to study out such perplexing questions. But surely they will be able to tell us how a man can both see God and not see him, and how he can both sin and not sin. If he sins, he is of the Devil, and if he says that he does not sin, then he deceives himself and is a liar, and the truth is not in him. We can not be saved in our sin, and yet we must be saved. Now, Mr. "Anti," please figure that out for us. You who speak where the Bible speaks must surely know how this is done, for there are no mistakes of grammar or otherwise in the Bible(?)

One more query and we will then leave these puzzles for the present, awaiting some consistent, common-sense answer to them from our would-be spiritual guides, who are trying to tear down our faith without making an effort to give us something better in exchange.

For this Melchisedec, king of Salem, priest of the most high God. . . Without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life.—Hebrews 7:1, 3.

Now, here we have a wonderful character presented to us, a king, and a priest of God, and yet without father, without mother, without descent, having no beginning and no end. Was a great man, (see verse 4). He received tithes of Abraham and blessed him. Where could he have sprung from? Likely the "antis" will know. For surely there is no mistake in grammar or translation of the Bible!

Why do they not try to find fault with Joshua and Habakkuk for saying that the sun and the moon stood still? (See Joshua 10:12, 13; Habakkuk 3:11.) Why not question Samson on his fox story? But no, that is nothing compared to the plain and simple teaching of the Book of Mormon, which is so monstrous that they can not believe it. They can easily believe that Samson slew a thousand men with the jawbone of an ass, and that Goliath's spear was like a weaver's beam, and that the spear-head weighed six hundred shekels of iron, when found in the Bible, but when things not near so incredible are found in the Book of Mormon, they brand the one who translated it a fraud, a knave, and an impostor; errors, imperfections of speech and phrases become a test of its divinity. Rather a peculiar standard to measure truth by!

To notice all of Mr. Campbell's mistakes in his examination of the Book of Mormon, would be useless, as what is here presented is a fair sample. It does not bear investigation; and when exposed to the light, his falsehoods are made manifest, and his inconsistencies laid bare.

Speaking of the prophecies of Joseph Smith, he says: "Smith has failed in every instance to verify one of his own sayings."—Page 30. Let us see. In Voice of Warning, page 147, Elder W. W. Blair sums up his work as follows:

In summing up we find that in his religious efforts he did not introduce "another gospel," nor "preach another Christ"; but he simply preached "him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth"; and under God he restored the very gospel taught by the saints of the first century after Christ, in fulfillment of Revelation 14:6, 7. He organized the church after the primitive pattern, and set in order the ordinances, rites, and ceremonies, as they were in the apostolic age. He proclaimed the same gifts of the Holy Ghost as were promised by Joel 2:28, 29; by the Lord Jesus, Mark 16:17, 18; John 14:26; 15:26; 16:7-11; by Peter, Acts 2:38, 39, and Paul 1 Corinthians 12:1-31; 14:1-40, etc. He prophesied of men in and without the church; of events that pertained to the church in blessing and in cursing; of events to transpire in our own nation and among the nations of the earth—of wars, famines, pestilences, plagues, earthquakes, tempests, destructions, and desolations; of the waves of the sea heaving themselves beyond their bounds; of the rapid increase in pride, of spiritual iniquity, and all kinds of crime and wrong-doing. He prophesied of "great changes in the times and in the seasons"; and of the great incoming of Satanic power, and the rapid spread and general prevalence of demon-spirits power among the nations. He prophesied of the "temptations and great tribulations" and apostasy of the Twelve; and of Brigham Young, that "if he got the lead of the church he would lead it to hell." He prophesied of the rebellion of the Southern States; of their calling on other nations for aid in defense, of the slaves being "marshaled and disciplined for war"; and of the Indians becoming exceeding angry, of their marshaling themselves and vexing the Gentiles with a sore vexation; and of the wars terminating "in the death and misery of many souls." He also prophesied of his own death, of the manner of it, and about the time it would occur.

Yet Mr. Campbell says that Smith failed to verify one of his sayings. Yes, but the Lord verified them. All of these things enumerated in the above, have literally come to pass, as he said they would. How did he know they would? The answer is simple: The Lord inspired him to so forewarn the people that they might flee from the wrath to come. In addition to thus forewarning the people, he translated the Book of Mormon, corrected by inspiration the whole of the Old and New Testaments, put on record over one hundred revelations received from God, wrote his history and that of the church, organized a church of nearly two hundred thousand members, according to the ancient pattern. Surely a great and a marvelous work, and that in the space of fourteen years! In 1829 he predicted that "a great and marvelous work is about to come forth to the children of men." And yet Mr. Campbell says that he failed in "verifying one saying." What has Mr. Campbell done with all his learning that will begin to compare with the work of this "ignorant and impudent knave"? He has been engaged in the infidel-making policy by preaching inconsistencies, while Mr. Smith by his policy has redeemed a great many intelligent, common-sense people from the pitfalls of skepticism into which Mr. Campbell and others had led them.

Then after all, where are the preëminence, the loftier sentiments of thought, the soul-uplifting truths, the intelligence that cleaveth unto intelligence, the restoration of things both new and old? With Campbellism or Latter Day Saintism? Two founders of two religions, one an "ignorant, impudent knave," the other a scholar and philosopher! What is the result of their work? Joseph Smith's work stands to-day based upon God's eternal truth; and the doctrine he presented to the world, and which they said would prove him a false prophet, they themselves are now indorsing and teaching. The Book of Mormon, which they said was the greatest fraud of the age, thousands and tens of thousands now believe and have testimony from God that it is true, and many of Mr. Campbell's followers have accepted it as divine. Joseph promised his followers that if they would obey his teaching God would give them a knowledge whether the work be true or not. There is where the strength of the Latter Day Saints lies. When they receive that knowledge they have then built on the sure foundation.

Though ignorant and unlearned, this man Smith built up a system which causes the whole sectarian world to fear and tremble, so that they fortify themselves by organizing an "Anti-Mormon Association." Why all this, if this work be a humbug? Are they not willing to let the people judge for themselves, whether this work be true or not, and act upon their own agency? Or do they think the people are all fools and have no reasoning capacity? Or are they more interested in the prevention of delusion than the Lord was when the Devil deceived "Mother Eve"? But this carelessness is not to be tolerated any more; the "antis" step right in and say to the Lord: Lord, this will not do to let the people think and act for themselves any longer. Why, these terrible Mormons are everywhere, and they are deceiving the people. And now, Lord, we will just tell the people to stay away from them, not go to hear them; and we will tell them all the bad stories we can think of to make the people think that they are a terrible set of people. We will make the people afraid to go to hear them, by telling yarns about them, and then they and we are safe. You know our bread and butter depends on keeping these cursed Mormons out of our midst. They break up our congregations and thus take away our living.

Thus we see the learned, the strong, the eloquent, and the mighty in this world's wisdom have to fortify themselves against the unlearned, the weak and foolish things of the world in order to protect themselves against being deceived by them. So strong is the work of this "ignorant and impudent knave" that the wisdom of the world can not compete with it. Is it due to ignorance or to the power of God?

What has the other of these two men done? Let history tell in future generations. What has he promised his followers? Did he promise them that God would give them a knowledge that his teaching was true?

* Reader, which position would you prefer to occupy? The one which leads to bondage in not permitting you to think, act, and hear what you please, surrounded by human inventions to prevent possible deception, or the one by which you are fortified by a knowledge from God that you are right, which no man can take away from you? Campbellism offers you the one; Latter Day Saintism offers you the other. Which will you accept? Decide now, and decide according to your best judgment. Eternity depends upon it.

S. K. SORENSEN.

Patriarch Alexander Smith was placed in a peculiar position while in Australia; a brief cablegram came to him ordering him to ordain an apparently dying man to the office of apostle, at a time when, so far as the patriarch knew, the quorum was full. Bro. Smith writes of his experiences at that time in the Autum Leaves for August.

YEAR OF JUBILEE.

Dear Mothers and Sunday-school Teachers: Are you really helping to make this year—the seventy-fifth year since the church was organized, the one hundredth year since Joseph Smith was born—a year of jubilee? Are you encouraging and helping your children to gather up the fragments lying all around them that the empty baskets may be filled and the hearts of many be made glad thereby?

REVERENCE.

At a casual glance, or upon a superficial examination, it may appear to many that small difference exists between the subject we have chosen for present consideration and the one discussed at our last meeting, namely: "Courtesy." Had we time and ability, however, to enter more fully into the discussion of these subjects, we should discover that while the outward manifestations of the two may be and often are similar, yet there exists a fundamental and radical difference.

Courtesy has reference mainly to our intercourse one with another—stranger with stranger—friend with friend—neighbor with neighbor—and in its fullest exercise embraces an element which is entirely foreign to our present subject, Reverence. And this element, which is condescension, constitutes, perhaps, the most marked feature of difference. There exist, however, other features of vital difference in the two which we hope to present in this reading.

Let us say just here, in passing, that as treatment of subjects, these readings are not intended to be exhaustive, but merely suggestive. Those who prepare them are trusting largely to the discussion of them, for the fuller and more complete development of the subjects, and it is intended this discussion shall be materially aided by the monthly program.

In our last we spoke very earnestly of the benefits sure to accrue to our children from the possession of courteous manners, and while the relation of true courtesy to reverence is very close, yet it is possible for the former to exist in a very high degree of development where the latter is sadly if not entirely lacking. Courtesy pertains more to the outward, and while respect and affection enter largely into its composition, the element of fear—which is prominent in reverence—is wanting.

It is possible that despite the accepted definition of our subject: "To regard with fear, mingled with respect and affection," some may object to the term fear. So long was it the practice of the theologians, before the gospel was restored, to rule the masses by appealing to their fears, that some of us in our abhorrence of this have gone to the opposite extreme and dislike to hear the word used in connection with the worship of God. And yet fear has a legitimate place in the economy of God, and it will be well for those of us who may have been cherishing such feelings to remember that the first admonition or command of the angel who came with the everlasting gospel was, "Fear God and give glory to him," and the Psalmist has said, "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him," and again, "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them."

Promises without number are made to those who fear and obey, and it is only in the sense of applying to all the fear which is to be felt alone by the disobedient, and of failing, in connection with it, to recognize the love and the justice of God, that the thought of fear should be rejected. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom," but it is also written that "perfect love casteth out fear." It may be that we shall never attain to that perfect love until, in a perfected state, we "know as we are known"; and before we reach that time it is right that we should have the fear of displeasing God, even when we recognize him as our loving Father; and we are made better by knowing that fear which is an element of the awe which the greatness and goodness of God should inspire in us.

It is within the memory of the writer when it was the practice of every good Methodist upon entering the house of worship, if the services had not already begun, to kneel for a few moments in silent prayer, before taking his seat, and after sitting down observe the silence and decorum befitting the house of God—the place where his people meet to worship him—and which had been dedicated and set apart for this purpose. Have we as a people improved upon this? As parents and teachers can we be sure that our own want of reverence in the house of God is in no degree responsible for the oft boisterous and unruly manner in which our children deport themselves when there upon other occasions—such as lectures and concerts, and sometimes even at our ordinary meetings for worship? To us reverence is inseparable from fear. Not that fear which is "taught by the precepts of men," but the fear which love and a knowledge of God inspires.

But this reading would fail entirely of its object did we not strive to direct your attention to the need which exists for the cultivation of this virtue in ourselves if we would see it manifested in our children. Bishop Taylor once said of parents, "They must give good example and reverend deportment in the face of their children." If open criticism of others be indulged in in the family, if children hear the possible faults and wrong actions of a visitor brought up for discussion, just as soon as the home door has closed upon him, two evils have been wrought and lasting impressions for wrong have been made upon young and plastic minds. Henceforth the individual so criticized has fallen in the estimation of the child and perhaps even a sadder fact—but fact it is, account for it as we may—is, that the parent has also fallen to a greater or less extent in the child's estimation. It is true the child believes as the parent believes and as a rule will almost every time take sides with father or mother, but let the child be himself crossed by father or mother and, if they are observant of results, they will soon discover a want of reverence toward themselves which was not found in the child before the discovery of the failure of father or mother to themselves obey the golden rule. This simple but all-important fact might be extended to cover every circumstance and each act of a parent's whole life. And what is true of parents is to a greater or less extent true of teachers and of all who come in contact with the child. No truer words were ever written than these:

"You must be true yourself,
If you the truth would teach."

We may be strictly polite toward people for whom we do not and can not entertain a particle of reverence. We owe this politeness, this courtesy, to ourselves—for the sake of our own self-respect—but reverence must come with the draft in her own hand before even a child is prepared to honor it.

But it is not the fact that the draft must be duly signed and attested before it can be honored which should concern us, so much as the questions: Am I honoring those which are so signed and attested? Do I never speak lightly of sacred things? Do I bow my head always during prayer? Do I, by quiet and serious deportment, manifest reverence in the house of God?

Do I reverence age and all things sacred, as well as all who have this claim upon me by virtue of the position which they occupy, and by so doing establish my right to teach my children the duty of "reverence to whom reverence is due"?

Questions for October Reading.

In what respects are courtesy and reverence alike? In what do they differ? May courtesy exist without reverence? Do you think it proper to include fear in the definition of reverence? Do we show reverence enough for the house of God? What should be our conduct there? Where should children sit when in attendance at church services or other gatherings held in the church? Will better order be insured if they sit with parents or older members of the family? How may parents cultivate reverence in their children by example? Is reverence due to any besides the Lord? If reverence or respect for others be lacking in the parents, what will be the effect upon the children? In case there are those who are not worthy of respect, why should we still be courteous to them? Can we afford to be otherwise? Do we examine ourselves closely enough as to our own attitude of reverence? Are we careful enough of our example before the children?

Program for October Meetings of Daughters of Zion.

1. Opening Exercises. 2. Reading and discussion with aid of questions on reading in HERALD. 3. Paper: "In what way is fear a part of reverence." 4. Vocal music. 5. Paper: "The things I consider worthy of reverence." 6. Address: "How may I teach my child reverence." 7. Closing exercises.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

Notice to District Officers.

The following appeal is being sent out by the General Superintendent to the officers of the districts and schools not in district associations so far as known by us. Usually they go to the superintendent though not in every case. They are sent in sufficient numbers to send one or more to each school in the district and some for home class members. But should there not be enough to go round, we will gladly supply more. These appeals should have reached you ere you read this. And if you have not received a bunch of them, write me at once and we will forward same to you. There have been numerous changes in district officers since the first of the year and if you are a newly elected officer, it is very probable that your predecessor has the copies and should forward them to you. We want each district superintendent or secretary to get copies enough to supply every school and home class in their district. Read the appeal and send for copies if not at hand. Address T. A. Hougas, Henderson, Iowa.

LAMONI, Iowa, July 20, 1905.

Dear Fellow Laborer: May I say just another word to you in relation to our Jubilee Fund—the name given our Christmas Offering for the year 1905—the seventy-fifth anniversary of the organization of the church?

We want to make the Jubilee Offering this year at least seven thousand dollars. And to do this we both need and want your active help—the help of every Sunday-school worker. Will you not give it to us that we may rejoice together in the accomplishment of our desires?

Let me say that first and foremost in this matter stands the desire of inspiring our children to put forth an effort—to work for the cause of Christ and by this means bring them closer to his church. We love that for which we labor and in teaching our children that they can help his church we are teaching them to love it. Let us take them into an active copartnership; helping them to "gather up the fragments" while we bring in our tithes and offerings. The church needs and can make good use of this money, but it will give a richer blessing to the children who labor for it than it will to others. Will not you help your children to form the habit of laboring for the cause of Christ?

The days are passing rapidly and Christmas will soon be here. We should make the start at once. In almost every issue of the Hope will be found suggestions of ways in which the children may earn money. The Sunday-school teachers or parents should adopt some systematic way of handling the moneys. Nearly every school has its own plan, most of them good. But whatever that plan may be, it should be properly carried out. Keep it in the minds of the children and encourage them to save their mites from time to time and at the end of the year they will have a nice offering to their credit or in their little banks ready to give. Will not you encourage and help them so to do?

Very sincerely yours,

M. WALKER.

I take great pleasure in indorsing the above appeal and the plan of the Jubilee Fund, and sincerely hope that all parents and teachers will cooperate with Sr. Walker in this effort. It will be for the good of both the children and the church.

Most respectfully,

T. A. HOUGAS, General Superintendent.

Upright.

"Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the end of man is peace."—Psalm 37:37.

A "square" life reinforces square doctrine.

Be upright, downright, square, and consistent.

Do not round off the edges of the truth; have sharp, square angles.

Have the pillars of your own life square, with all sides equal.

Apply the square. The Bible is the rule of life.

The square is made of steel, and every teacher should be as "true as steel," and constantly "on his mettle."

You can not give eleven inches for a foot on Saturday and have it measured as a foot on Sunday.

Aim to so aid the parents that all your pupils shall be "brought up—right."—New Century Teachers' Monthly.

A Convention Calendar.

We wish to establish a convention calendar as a permanent part of the department. It will consist of a line for each district giving date and place of holding next convention. The convention once reported will be kept standing till the time has passed. This will be an item of value and will enable all districts to have their dates advertised in a way that all may know when their convention is to be held.

Nauvoo, Illinois, October 6, 1905, Adrian, Illinois.

Send us your dates and places as soon as fixed and we will give them place. Begin now. Address the editor as at the head of this department.

Her Reason.

A teacher in a Sunday-school in the slum districts of a large Eastern city had the worst class in a school in which there were some very bad boys. This teacher's class of boys were "trying" indeed. They were enough to really test the temper of the gentlest, most patient, and forbearing of teachers. They were so notably bad that one Sunday at the close of the school a fellow teacher who had a class near by said to the teacher of the class of young rebels:

"I don't see how you stand it to stay with that class. It is just dreadful the way those boys act. How do you endure it so patiently?"

"Because I love them so," was the quiet reply.

It was a reply that spoke volumes. It was a reply that betokened the Spirit of the Master in the heart of that teacher. He loved even those who persecuted him and who put upon him the cruel cross of thorns. The teacher who can say out, of the very depths of her heart, "I love them," may hope to win a victory with even a class of the very worst boys, for there is such an irresistible power in love. It counts for more than anything else in the teaching of a Sunday-school class. It will sometimes win victories that can not be won in any other way.—Selected.

Scott-Traum Debate.

Editors Herald: Having returned from the battlefield at Wirt, Indiana, I jot you a few notes. The debate opened July 25, and closed August 5. Three propositions were involved—the two churches, and the Book of Mormon; seventeen sessions in all—six on the first and second, and five on the last proposition. Elder S. W. Traum represented the Christian Church, and Elder Columbus Scott the Latter Day Saints. The undersigned appeared, fully expecting to engage in the conflict, but for some cause, Elder Traum refused to meet me. However, this refusal more fully predicted his defeat.

D. H. Bays was chosen to act as Elder Traum's moderator; S. W. L. Scott acted for Elder C. Scott; Doctor Stocken was selected chairman. The debate was conducted on a high plane. Bro. Columbus opened, affirming the Reorganized Church to be "the Church of Christ in fact, and identical in doctrine, ordinance, and organization, with the church of Christ as established by him and his apostles." We can not present the argument of the affirmative in full, and your readers would fail to grasp its comprehensiveness by a bare specimen. Suffice it to say that the identity of the Reorganized Church with the New Testament church, was solidly sustained, and the prophetic evidences of its establishment in the latter days, and divine authority, were unmoved. In fact, the negative failed to attack, in a legitimate manner, the argument presented, but like some pugilists, he did make a "feint." But we would not underestimate the effort of Elder Traum. He is no inferior antagonist. He is a graduate of Hyrum College, and thirty-eight years of age. He went into the discussion without investigation; in fact, he admitted it was a matter of experiment with him. The prophecies of the Old Testament cited, showing the establishment of the latter-day work, the "setting of God's hand," the building up of the church—"Zion," etc., Elder Traum asserted, lacked the proof, because Joseph Smith's name was not mentioned in any one of them. But the affirmative replied that such an objection would overthrow the work of God nineteen hundred years ago, as the name of John the Baptist does not appear in one of the prophecies held to have been fulfilled by him,—that it is the work he performed which "witnesseth" for him. So of Joseph Smith, the time, the manner, and the work, are witnesses.

The affirmative sustained the propositions: 1. That the church was built and perpetuated by direct, and immediate revelation. 2. That the priesthood—a principle of authority—is found in God's kingdom in all dispensations; and introduced abundant evidence of its recommitment in "the dispensation of the fullness of times" (Ephesians 1:10), the great period "of restitution of all things" (Acts 3:21; Malachi 3:1-3; Isaiah 66:21). 3. That a divine relationship must exist between the divine building—the church, and the divine builder—Christ. 4. That the unchangeability of the divine builder would give his building—the church—the same organic structure of apostles, prophets, and related parts, now, as nineteen hundred years ago. 5. That where the divine building exists, there divine power will exist, quoting, "But if I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you" (Matthew 12:28); that wherever the kingdom of God—the divine building—exists, there will be enough divine power to cast out devils—"For the kingdom of God is not in word, but in power" (1 Corinthians 4:20).

As to the existence of patriarchs in the church, the affirmative urged that the gospel was preached by Abraham, and he (Abraham), ministered as a patriarch under the gospel. (See Psalm 105:8, 15; Hebrews 7:4.) Also, as patriarchs were recognized under the Mosaic regime, and that regime being a "shadow of the good things to come," under the gospel, we can not expect more in the "shadow," than in the "substance"; yet such was the theory of the negative. Elder Traum asserted that the patriarch of the Reorganized Church must have a type-writer, etc. The affirmative read Genesis 48, and asked if the negative could prove that the patriarch Jacob did not have a scribe, adding that somehow that patriarchal blessing had been written, and preserved, and had come down to us. By reference to Revelations 14:6; Matthew 17:10-12; Malachi 3:1-5; 4:5, 6; Ephesians 1:10; Isaiah 1:26; 40:1-5; with numerous corroborative texts, the affirmative built an argument in favor of the restoration which was unapproachable. Not one position taken was overturned by the negative. On the second proposition, during which Elder Traum affirmed the Christian Church to be identical in doctrine, ordinance, and organization with the church established by Christ, the reverend gentleman spent six hours attempting to describe the church built by Christ and the apostles nineteen hundred years ago, and never so much as hinted of the Christian Church of the proposition. Bro. Columbus had to read from Hayden's History, to let the audience know of its beginning at Austintown, Ohio, instead of at Jerusalem; in 1828 A. D., instead of nineteen hundred years ago. The number present was one hundred and ten disciples—all disposed in a circle out on "the green," "each member with his right hand clasping the left of the one next to him." Then "an earnest exhortation," "then prayer," and "a hymn"; and thus was founded on the "Bible above," the great Christian Church. No voice or command of God, Christ, angel, or Holy Ghost, but simply man,—man unaided by inspiration. How vastly different to the kingdom begun by Christ nineteen hundred years ago, when Jesus came into the world invested with priesthood authority from God to properly inaugurate the work: "I can of mine own self do nothing"; "my Father which sent me is greater than I"; "he gave me commandment." Elder Traum's effort was to strip the New Testament church of its official structure, its divinity and power, in order to have it conform to the non-descript at Austintown, Ohio, 1828. Hence his futile effort to abrogate the gifts of the Spirit, immediate revelation, and the inspired ministry God placed in the church, met with deadly blows which he did not, nor could he resist. He had contended all along that "there was no gospel until Pentecost." Then argued that "the Spirit was in the word, written or preached," following these two propositions he stoutly asserted that "the Holy Spirit did not supersede the word or its ministration," thus placing himself at the mercy of his opponent who replied that he (Traum) had opposed the position that the gospel was preached prior to Pentecost, and if the Spirit does not supersede the word, then God sent millions of the race from Adam to Pentecost down to hell, because he would not give them a chance to go the other way—be saved! For it is the gospel that is the power of God to save. The negative had stated that there were but three basic facts of the gospel: the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. (Here Elder Bays nodded his head.) Traum challenged his opponent to produce another. (Bays nodded again.) In his reply, Columbus repeated Traum's assertion and challenge. (Bays nodded again.) Columbus then asked, "Is the immaculate conception a fact?" (Both Traum and Bays shook their heads.) "Then," says Elder Scott, "if the doctrine of the immaculate conception and birth of Jesus Christ are not facts of the gospel, the angels are telling a falsehood, for they say, 'We bring you glad tidings of great joy.'"

Elder Traum affirmed that an apostle must be a witness of the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ, and a witness has work of such kind that a witness can have no successors. His opponent argued that as witnesses they had both predecessors and successors. "To him gave all the prophets witness"; the prophets are therefore predecessors of the apostles as witnesses. Paul said Christ was seen of above "five hundred brethren at one time"; five hundred brethren are therefore successors to the apostles as witnesses of Christ. But the grand point is, "We are his witnesses and so also is the Holy Ghost whom God hath given to them who believe." The Holy Spirit is a distinct and independent witness aside from the written word— "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirits."—Paul.

So the conclusion of the second proposition left the Christian Church clear outside the constitution of the kingdom of heaven with no marks of identity—a complete alien to the commonwealth of Israel.

Elder Traum's opponent admitted the existence and description of the New Testament church, which was organized nineteen hundred years ago by Jesus Christ, the Holy Ghost, and the apostles, with its divine structure "fitly framed together," its divine laws administered by divine authority, its divine authority bestowed by divine revelation, its spiritual endowments of "divers gifts of the Holy Ghost," its baptisms of water, also "by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." All of this is given as characteristic of the church of nineteen hundred years ago, but what about this modern church—this Christian Church of the proposition—this church which was never heard of previous to February, 1828, at Austintown, Ohio; that little movement which trembled into existence on the doubtful subjunctive mode: "If we have authority to preach, we have authority to baptize"? All thinkers could perceive it "weighed in the balances and found wanting."

The third, and closing proposition, was the Book of Mormon,—its divinity. Bro. Columbus affirmed its divinity for five sessions. The claims of the book were set forth, and archaeological evidence adduced, establishing two distinct and highly advanced civilizations on this Western Continent. Scriptural texts supportive of the proposition that the Creator of man, who "divided to the nations their inheritances," and "determined the bounds" of man's habitation, for the express purpose that those nations might "seek" after, and "find God,"—that he (God) had a hand in peopling the Americas, and inasmuch as he was "not willing that any should perish, but that all should live"; it would be out of harmony for him to withhold the means of salvation from these ancient American peoples; and the Book of Mormon comes forth revealing the justice and goodness of God in placing the means of salvation within their reach. Bible evidence was "piled up" to demonstrate that one line of Israel (Joseph's descendants) passed covertly to, and "over the sea"; "over the wall"; to the "utmost bounds of the lasting hills" from old Canaan. After they passed, "over the sea" to "grow into a multitude of nations," there came the prophecies of God writing "the great things of his law to them." The negative hardly noticed the prophetic evidence supportive of the position, and when he referred to Genesis 48:1, he said the "latter days" meant the "last days of the patriarchal dispensation." If this be true, and "the sceptre was not to depart from Judah until Shiloh (Christ) came," etc., that position gives us patriarchs under the Christian dispensation, for the prophecy of Genesis 48 and 49 involves the temporal condition of the twelve tribes, and if the patriarchal blessings were to be realized before the closing of the patriarchal dispensation—in the "latter days" of that dispensation—then the blessing of Judah involving the coming of the "Shiloh," or "Christ" would also be realized, and that would surely give patriarchs existing, as well as priests. Elder Traum busied himself in pointing out some ungrammatical sentences in the Book of Mormon, but when his opponent took the Bible, and produced parallels equally ungrammatical, he dropped the criticism. He then plied what virtue there is in a comparison between the Palmyra edition and the Plano edition of the Book of Mormon. The affirmative had the report of the Committee of 1884, who incorporated into said report the changes said to exist between the two editions—Palmyra and Plano—with direct reference to the original manuscript then (1884) in the hands of David Whitmer. After a comparison of the list furnished by committee, it was shown that the Plano edition conforms to the manuscript, thus proving that these inaccuracies crept into the Palmyra edition in Granden's office in 1830, in setting up the original type for Palmyra edition. It is worse than folly to say the type-setter was inspired; folly to say the English language was inspired; folly to say the printers or even the printing-press was inspired! Errors and imperfections in the language of the book do not alter the inspiration of the matter; for it is the idea that is inspired. Just here, Mr. Editor, permit me to say that an edition of the Book of Mormon, fully conforming to the reading of the original manuscript, is in urgent demand, as the list furnished by committee is but partial.

The question of the annual and diurnal motions of the earth came up for airing. Elder Traum admitted that the ancients knew of the rotary motions of the planetary system in the heavens, but "Professor Alma, and Professor Helaman had beat Copernicus, and Galileo" by asserting "the earth moveth." But it was shown that seven hundred and twelve years before Christ even Bible writers knew that "the earth moves." Isaiah 40:22 affirms that God "sitteth upon the circle of the earth." Here circle implies circuit—that the earth moves in a circuit. From evidence drawn from the great pyramid built 2170 B. C. it was shown that "the making of the sides of the pyramid to record an even fraction of the earth's axis of rotation just as many times as there are days in the year, proves that these builders knew of both motions of the earth, and knew the number of times it revolves on its own axis in making its annual revolution around the sun." (A Miracle in Stone, p. 75.) Here was the knowledge of the earth's diurnal and annual motions in Egypt, whence the language of the Book of Mormon came, chiseled in stone, 3500 years before Copernicus was born; and the discovery of the sphericity of the earth is ascribed by modern science to Thales, 600 B. C.; but here in the pyramid it is more perfectly represented than Thales ever knew, more than fifteen hundred years before he was born. The argument of "the sealed book," the time of its appearance, the manner, and agency of its revelation, was not met. The chief effort of the opposition was to disconnect the people of ancient America from the Hebrews or Israelites by showing a gulf between them in "philology," "ethnology," etc.: "the unparalleled diversity of language among the natives proves the Book of Mormon false; that Short does not classify either Hebrew or Egyptian in his list." But it was shown that Short wrote up his work from the data of the Indians of North America, and was not down in Central or South America to get the facts, like Professor Le Plongeon who did declare the similarity and in many respects the complete identity of South American and Egyptian characters. Moreover, it was noticeable in the "write up" of Mr. Short, that he was prejudiced against the Latter Day Saints. The opposition had his matter all written out, quotations, opinions, of these men, but where we leave the facts to deduce opinions, which set of opinions harmonizes with both Bible prophecy and archaeological facts? Well, numerous points were made, but will not attempt to collate them, to burden HERALD pages, but have given sufficient to show the trend of debate. We think, from experience now, that the opposition intends to "boycott" the scriptural evidence of the Book of Mormon, and retrench on the disconnection of the ancient Americans from the Israelites of the Eastern Continent, on the basis of philology, ethnology, technology, and sociology. They will endeavor to block up the space in chronology for any Book of Mormon civilization, by evolution periods. The Book of Mormon tells of huge animals during the Jaredite period, and the effort of the opposition is to show that the time man and mastodon were contemporaneous was at the close of the glacial period, closing 8000 B. C. If this is true, where does the Book of Mormon civilization come in? Well, let us learn of "things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad," that we may be prepared in all things. —Doctrine and Covenants, p. 238.

The debate was largely attended, especially in the evenings, and after the two first propositions, day sessions were abandoned. The work yet stands in divinity, power, and glory. Saints were confirmed in the "restored gospel," and the failure of those who would dethrone it made palpably manifest. Elder Traum stated he was like the gun the little boy loaded: after one charge was fired, the little fellow said, "Do not be afraid, grandma, there's nine more loads in it." We told him that any time when he wished to fire either one, or the nine loads, our address is Coldwater, Michigan.

Hopefully yours,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

Ohio and West Virginia District Reunion.

The Ohio and West Virginia District reunion convened at Electric Park, Wellston, Ohio, August 18. U. W. Greene, missionary in charge, was chosen to preside, with F. J. Ebeling and S. J. Jeffers as associates. The best of order was had on the grounds throughout.

This park is situated a short distance from Wellston, a city of about fifteen thousand inhabitants, along the Electric Belt Line, and with its large pavilion, spacious grounds, beautiful shade, good water, and several hundred electric lights to illuminate the darkness, it was a most desirable place for our reunion. Ample supply of provision, seventeen sleeping-tents, and one large boarding-tent were on the ground, while the proprietor of the park, J. M. Peters, Saints, and committee did a noble part in making this reunion a success. — The collections and boarding-tent paid all expenses, including elders' fares back to their fields.

Preaching-services were held at ten in the morning, half past two in the afternoon, six and half past seven in the evening. The six o'clock services were held on the steets.

The prayer-meetings at nine o'clock each morning were good, edifying, and spiritual. The Sunday morning service was a spiritual feast to the Saints; the Lord met with them verifying his promises with signs following. Many felt encouraged and strengthened in the warfare. No one can afford to miss such gatherings.

The Sunday-school work was in charge of the first assistant general superintendent, J. A. Gunsolley, who did not fail to make it interesting as well as instructive.

The meetings were well attended from first to last, large audiences each evening, mostly outsiders, many of whom were interested. On Sunday Saints and outsiders from every direction were on the ground. Twelve were added to the church, and others are investigating.

At the business-meeting it was decided to have another reunion next year, time and place were left for the committee to decide.

Through the courtesy of the editor of the Daily Sentinel two columns and a half were devoted to our work, and the proceedings of these meetings were published almost daily.

JEANETTE WILLIAMS, Secretary.

Warning to Religians.

Editors Herald: Permit me through the columns of your paper to express my appreciation of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society as a society. As I view it, it is a great factor for good, and a strong one in connection with the church for the promulgation of gospel principles. It is true that some have not realized its benefits, persons who are professed Latter Day Saints, though its fruits show forth its benefits and value as a soul-winning medium. To protect the Religio society in this Northern Michigan District, I would urge you to be careful when persons come into your community who are opposed to this department of God's work. I have been apprised of the fact that some who are traversing the country in the interests of business by which they are personally benefited, meet with local societies and essay to discourage the same, especially aiming at the program feature. Naturally, these persons claim to be members of the society, but secretly they are opposing it, apparently desiring to remain in ignorance of the education, culture, and spiritual benefits afforded by the society. I would therefore warn Religians to spurn the counsel of such persons. I would also say to the district Sunday-school superintendent of Northern Michigan that the same persons are dictating and misdirecting in Sabbath-schools where they visit, which if hearkened to, would cause dissatisfaction and division.

I am, as ever,

Your brother and coworker in the Religio,

J. A. GRANT, President of District.

ROSE CITY, Michigan, August 11, 1905.

Musings.

All intelligent beings think. We are apt to act as we think. At times we are exhorted, consoled, or admonished by thought-visitors who enter our minds and remain, if we entertain them. If, when such appear that give us strength by encouragement, we note them down and impart to others, we may hope they will encourage and enlighten others as they have us.

We are agents to choose and practice good or evil. If we are inclined in the channel of goodness, our thoughts will be good, and we may be instrumental in aiding others.

I. N. F.

MOUNTAINVILLE, Maine, September 5, 1905.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I have written anything for the HERALD, but will now write a few lines. So many dark clouds float around me that it seems impossible sometimes for them to break; but when I stop and think how our dear Savior had to meet discouragements, and fight many hard battles, and at last was crucified to pardon and set us free, it seems we ought to overcome and look beyond these dark clouds, and go cheerfully to work trying to gain a home where there are no dark clouds or sorrow—where it will be light for ever. I want to try and gain a home where no discouragements can enter; and in order to receive such I must work for it.

I want the Saints everywhere to pray for me that I may be more faithful in the future.

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. W. A. SMALL.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, September 5, 1905.

Editors Herald: Our work here is progressing about as usual. We have had good interest and attendance at services during the summer. Have had rather more visitors during August than during any other time of the year. This was due to the fact that the other churches were temporarily "incapacitated" with the heat, many of them closing entirely during the month. We have made a special effort to make our meetings interesting during that season. Have used several large charts each evening, which seemed to interest and please those in attendance. It occurs to us that our city churches might do well to hold a special revival during the month of August when there is the least competition. We could make the others either stick to their posts or give us a chance.

By the way, have you read the first article in the September Autumn Leaves, "How we reached the people of Toronto"? What do you think of it? It is the record of an actual campaign and you can not fail to get some good points from it.

Yours in bonds,

ELBERT A. SMITH.

MADISON, Wisconsin, September 4, 1905.

Editors Herald: To-day came the closing scene of the Southern Wisconsin reunion, the camp being near one of the notable lakes that almost surround this capital city of the State. There was a pleasant gathering of Saints, "dwelling in tents" for the past ten days.

Bro. J. W. Wight and C. H. Burr, missionaries, and Bro. W. A. McDowell, district president, had charge of the services. The prayer-meetings were excellent in spirituality. The sermons were instructive, and several of them of a very high order of merit in every way.

Three persons were baptized yesterday, and likely the seed of truth was sown in other hearts, to bear fruit in due time. Certainly the membership have taken with them renewed hope and strength, better knowledge of Christ's kingdom and of God's purposes, and many happy memories of their association with each other in the truth, the beauty, and the purity of the gospel work and the gospel call to nobler and better things.

We left Lamoni August 17, and the 19th Bro. W. A. McDowell met us in Chicago where I attended meetings the 20th in the two city branches. On the 27th preached in Rockford to the few Saints of that city and of Pecatonica, and to a few friends not in the church. Expect to attend services at Evansville, Wisconsin, Sunday, the 10th inst., then to Bro. Dutton's, near Janesville, then turn our faces homeward, stopping one Sunday at Burlington, Iowa, as promised Bro. E. A. Smith when we came east.

Your brother in the gospel,

H. A. STEBBINS.

HOPKINSONVILLE, Kentucky, August 11, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have returned from Paducah and Dawson Springs, where I have been for several days, preaching in both places. A few weeks ago my wife and I visited the place where my wife's uncle lives, and at that place I preached eight nights; and about sixteen arose and said they knew what I had preached is the true doctrine of Christ. When the Baptist preachers found that I had gained favor in the eyes of the people, they announced a two weeks' meeting in the same place, and last Sunday they baptized fourteen of my converts. The other day I met two of the ministers, on the train. They shook hands with me and said, "Reverend Graves, we know that you converted the people of Crafton and Egypt; but we Baptist ministers baptized them." They heard me preach on the subject the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, and when they had baptized those last fourteen souls they laid hands on them for the gift of the Holy Ghost. They told me on the train, that it "was a new one on them," but it was right, and they intended keeping it up. This is the first instance known among Baptist preachers in the state of Kentucky, among the blacks.

We have been invited to attend the Baptist Association about eighty-five miles from here, at a place called Corinth, to make a speech at the association, and get our doctrine better before the people. Will attend if we can.

Not many are obeying this blessed latter-day work as yet; but I can see prospects, in the very near future, of this work spreading in the Southern States, and a good and grand work being accomplished among the colored people. The people show a great deal of care for the writer and his wife, so we feel strong in the faith, and are trying to do all the good we can. Dear Saints, we need your prayers in our behalf.

G. H. GRAVES.

DENVER, Colorado, September 4, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have just returned from Colorado Springs where the reunion and conference has been in session since August 26.

This was the first reunion held in the Eastern Colorado District, and it proved a success beyond our fondest expectations. Of course the attendance was not as large as the general reunion in Iowa, but we had about all the tent would accommodate, especially on Sunday. Five were baptized on the last day of the conference. Elder W. H. Kelley was with us and gave us some good advice upon the business of the conference. He will come to Denver, for a few days, and then return to Utah.

Yours truly,

E. F. S.

BRYAN, Ohio, September 8, 1905.

Editors Herald: This finds me at above place suffering considerably from stomach trouble. However, I am fasting, and hope for relief soon. But withal I am hopeful of the triumph of the church. My trust in the Lord increases, as my experience broadens. And as we grow older, our confidence is more confirmed in God and his power. Your brother,

G. A. SMITH.

CENTRAL CITY, Illinois, August 6, 1905.

Editors Herald: I am still rejoicing in the great latter-day work, doing what I can for its advancement. I think there is a brighter outlook for the work here. Just closed three-day meeting by Bro. S. D. Gosstree. I have prayed for the good seed to be sown. I know Elder S. D. Gosstree has sown the good seed in this place.

I was telling some of my friends last winter about the gospel of the Latter Day Saints, and they called me crazy. The other day, since Bro. Gosstree returned home, they say, "I believe that was the best sermon I ever heard."

Always praying for the welfare of Zion,

BRECKENRIDGE, Missouri, September 3, 1905.

Editors Herald: There are but seven Saints in Breckenridge. For the past two weeks we have been enjoying some Latter Day Saint preaching, conducted by Bro. T. J. Sheldon of Stewartsville. We have also been visited by Dona C. Haden, who was indeed a great help in carrying on the meetings, as she is a lovely singer, and a great church-worker. But now both are gone to join with the Saints as they assemble at the reunion at Stewartsville. But if we can get a church we expect to carry on meetings as soon as the reunion is over, as a great interest was taken in the preaching before.

We are isolated from church privileges, and feel it more severely since Mrs. Jennette Martin was taken from us, as she was, it seemed, the main one in carrying on the great work; but we must not feel downhearted for we know God is merciful to his children, and will carry us through to the end. Pray for us that we may live faithful.

We know there's a beautiful city;
And paved are its streets with pure gold;
Not an earthly tongue can describe it;
Its beauty can never be told.

We all know the time is soon coming,
When the faithful will gather there,
To live and to dwell with the angels,
And with them its glory to share.

For Jesus our Savior has spoken;
And given his plan to obey
And we as his Saints must be careful
How we live in this latter-day.

Now let us be true and keep humble,
And then when the Lord comes again,
We may dwell with him and the angels
The noble and good among men.

NEWTON HOLMES.

ANTWERP, Ohio.

Editors Herald: Some time ago I read in the HERALD a letter from a sister, I think, telling of a remedy for the relief of heart trouble. I have a neighbor who is in great agony at times with his heart; and I was telling him I had seen the remedy that the sister offered, and I would look it up; and as I have searched old HERALDS for a long way back and failed to find it, I thought I would write and if the sister is still in the land of the living, we would be glad to hear from her in regard to this remedy. I sometimes loan HERALDS to read, so I may miss it in this way. I also have a daughter who is a twin, twelve years old, who is afflicted with violent bleeding at the nose at times. It will sometimes commence in the night when she is asleep. Doctors can not account for it. Would ask prayers of the Saints in her behalf.

Your brother,
JOHN ERTER.

SASKATOON, Saskatchewan, September 4, 1905.

Editors Herald: What was the Territory of Saskatchewan of two days ago is to-day the Province of Saskatchewan. The bill takes effect which throws off the territorial robe and dons the provincial one; which gives us two less territories and two more provinces—Alberta and Saskatchewan. So, those addressing me their kindly messages of encouragement from the south and east will no longer need to add "North West Territory," unless I get into the very remote north where it still remains territorial or "district."

Local parliaments will be created for the selected capitals of the two provinces and representatives sent there from the various counties into which the provinces are subdivided. This is likely to bring the Mormon question into greater prominence in the Dominion as they have a considerable population in Alberta south yet unvisited by this gospel hermit of the plains. My daily for the 28th ult. says the Mormon people are to build an academy at Raymond, Alberta, for which eighteen thousand dollars has already been subscribed. "The institution is to be known as Taylor Stake Academy, and is to be ready for dedication January 1, 1907." I am not inattentive to their movements and the comment that is made upon them sometimes to our injury by either prejudiced or uninformed writers, and when anything of that description arises in the western press, I am ready with my pen to repress it, to fight it down. That is, where I can do it without entailing too big a loss in the immediate locality where I am laboring, which is improbable.

It does not pay to lose one victory to gain another—to sacrifice Port Arthur to hold some little unimportant garrison. It is possible that we worry too much sometimes about the public misunderstanding us. We think when the decisions of a Judge Philips or a Judge Armour are published abroad throughout the land that it has done us incalculable good. I do not know about that. Perhaps not so much. I can point to no convert I have made by reason of his having read the published utterances of those men at the time they were given. Have not people always been prone to cherish misconceptions of the truth, and will they not up to the time of the end? I dare say the greatest success has greeted my efforts where I have gone into a locality where they knew no more about this church than the figures of dark Africa, and where if they possessed any ideas in its relation they were abjectly prejudicial: people who were tolerably intelligent and who in that domain would rank with most any section of America, but altogether unwashed by the wave of influence we might expect court decisions and the like to bear. The main thing, the chief business, in my ideas is to get the "gospel to every creature" at as early a date as possible and get as many of them in our net as we can. It is a big question whether we would be any better off had we had our say in the parliament of religions at the World's Fair.

At the present moment I sit in a Saints chair; other Saints here from over the boundary; many have heard our preaching and heard of it. Nothing like the effect, the astonishment follows its presentation as across the muddy Saskatchewan where it was entirely new. Ignorance of us is preferable to prejudice against us. Greater, more bountiful may be the fruition where absolute ignorance of us reigns than where we are partially understood.

We should not encourage the nonutility of a good opportunity to correct a general misunderstanding on the part of the public respecting ourselves, but if it be at a cost of the loss of our grip on one single soul, the slackening of our tension in a neighborhood, then we are paying, I fear, a heavier indemnity than is commensurate with the casualties on the other side.

Easily could I fiddle away much of my time in haranguing orange walks, picnics, and other ceremonials. As a consequence "Knisley" might have been in more mouths, might be commented on more; some might even beget a better opinion of the work, but ultimately will any more know the Master and be in touch with him than if the time thus disposed had been put in in solid work? In my case—and I am sure you do not expect me to name some one else for an example—I felt better afterward this summer from not having answered an invitation to a picnic gathering to make an appropriate address—because it would have diverted me from the line of duty. It would have called me aside. Away with the lazy furloughs. The time is too short, the end is too near. It is not our business to make peace with the enemy, but to lick him and drive him pellmell out of his intrenchments. We can not afford to hand down our flag to confer with his envoys at the Portsmouth of compromise, when victory is in sight, when we are so high ready to hoist our flag over his capital and let the prisoners free.

If you will be regaled by good news along church lines, I beg to inform you that I came here July 8, having the address of only one Saint,—all I expected to find. I prayed for guidance, and in answer to my importunities Heaven dealt well with me, as the following circumstances bear witness unto all men of the household of faith.

One day I was in town and a gentleman of the land agency told he knew where there were lots of Latter Day Saints; about nineteen miles southwest, he said. I drove over another day from where I was at work at an opening, and was rewarded by finding nineteen members, nearly all by the name of Anderson from Minnesota.

They were having their Sunday meetings, one held the office of elder, another that of priest. All were hospitable as they knew how to be; as their new surroundings would tolerate. All received me as though I were the only rescuer, and they standing with empty stomachs and tear-stained faces on the shore of exile with eyes cast eagerly toward the land of nativity. These brethren came into the church in Minnesota. I think they are part of the "Pioneers of Ottertail." They heeded some one's counsel about Missouri and fled thither for a season. Later they returned to the Gopher State; next here. Now they have a good farm apiece, excellent land, with good prospects both financially and spiritually, for the several families of them live in the sunny bower of unity that is worthy only of the cause they remember through the mists and intricacies of hardship and disappointment.

Might I say that the article in the late HERALD regarding the gospel being preached to the Jews after Christ's ascension was by Elder Anderson's wife, one of the number.

I preached them a chain of sermons, aroused the neighborhood, excited the ire of some of their friendly neighbors, extended their number by three baptisms, and left them to the care of the local priesthood. Association with the impious, the goddess, and the din of adversity had checked their spiritual momentum, had invoked a chill, a frost, upon some of them, but they seemed revived and the frost somewhat melting away.

One day while I was laboring near Saskatoon I received a letter from Sr. Pearl Van Eaton, who had learned of my presence in that region by means of the local paper, requesting me to call on them. I had not known that there were such people in the world, but I called, to find a pair as jolly as they are tall, she the daughter of Elder Charles Derry of the past and the present. Sr. Van Eaton inquired if I had visited the "Saints over the river" or something of that import. I said I did not know there were any over the river. Yes, she said, there were about fifteen, from Iowa and Minnesota, and some officers among them.

As I write I am "over the river" among them, and I find approximately fifteen which will I expect be increased somewhat by to-morrow this time. Here is Elder Beckman from Iowa, and James Diggle, a teacher. In a few months there will likely be a branch on each side of the river. With the number I have baptized since coming, there are now about forty-five members. Yet I only knew of one member when I came! We welcome your deserters. They swell our ranks and make good citizens spiritually and temporally. In about a week I purpose to return across the river to call on Van Eatons and to spend a brief season in a neighborhood among the newly baptized, leaving the rest to the care of local officers. Bro. Van Eaton—yet unbaptized—is quite a rustler, lately held one thousand acres of good land. He has in the youthful, molding days of his life seen some ups and downs; born in Minnesota, his father slaughtered in the horrible massacre by the anger of the "remnants," the red men, who "vexed the Gentiles with a sore vexation."

In the month of October I expect to return to Ontario, attend conference, and visit home after an absence of two years—by the time I reach there—and increasing the membership of the church in the West by about eighty souls. From the time I left Winnipeg—my fare being paid there by the Bishop—I have not drawn a cent from the church treasury, have traveled many hundreds of miles, paid high Western prices for what I had to buy, avoided collections, refused money sometimes when offered because I had enough for the time being, and am thankful to say I have always had plenty. I have not lacked.

Miscellaneous Department

Release of Missionary.

To the Missionaries and Saints of Nebraska and Black Hills; Greeting: This is to inform you that Elder David M. Rudd has been relieved as missionary in charge and has retired from the missionary field. The brethren of the ministry will please occupy as opportunity offers, and until further notice is given report directly to me at Lamoni, Iowa.

HEMAN C. SMITH, Minister in Charge.

Prayer Union.

Sr. Nancy Walls, of Grinnell, Iowa, asks the prayers of the sisters of the Prayer Union that, if it be the Lord's will, she may be healed of the affliction from which she has suffered so much.

Two-Day Meetings.

Two-day meetings will be held in the Southern Michigan District as follows: Lansing, Michigan, September 23 and 24, 1905; Knox, Indiana, October 7 and 8; Decatur, Michigan, November 4 and 5; Hartford, Michigan, November 11 and 12; all services commencing Saturday at 10:30 a. m. Cordial invitation to all. S. W. L. Scott.

Conference Notices.

Conference convenes with Pana Branch in Central Illinois District, at 10 a. m., October 7, 1905. George L. Hartsell, secretary, 806 East Elm Street, Taylorville, Illinois.

Conference of the Alabama District will meet with the Pleasant Hill Branch, near McKenzie, Alabama, at 10 a. m. on Saturday before the full moon in October. J. R. Harper, secretary.

Eastern Michigan conference will convene with the Juniata Branch, October 7, 1905. All reports may be sent to J. W. Davis, Juniata, Michigan. It will be remembered that board will be furnished at ten cents per meal; sleeping-room free. Wm. Davis, president.

Convention Notices.

Convention of the Northern Nebraska District Sunday-school association will meet at Blair, Nebraska, Saturday, September 30, 1905, at 2 p. m. Topics of general interest to Sunday-school workers will be discussed. All schools should send representatives. LeRoy Wood, secretary.

Correction.

A mistake in date was made in the Utah District conference and convention notices as published last week. The Sunday-school convention meets September 22 instead of the 18th, and the conference convenes the 23d and 24th.

Oklahoma and Statehood.

According to mythology, Minerva had no childhood, but sprang full-armed, a vigorous young woman, from the head of Jupiter. Oklahoma is the Minerva of the States. With her there was no period of slow development. On the day that her borders were opened to the settler she sprang full-fledged, a vigorous young commonwealth, into the Union. And on the day that Congress admits her to statehood she will take rank with the foremost of the Western States. Her population of a million and three hundred thousand,—which is the combined population of Oklahoma and Indian Territory, according to the annual report of Governor Ferguson for the year ending June 30, 1904; it is probably somewhat more than that now,—will place her in advance of at least twenty-one of her sister States, several of them among the original thirteen. Not counting Texas, only two States west of the Missouri will be her equal in number of people—Kansas and California. In old New England, three States,—New Hampshire, Vermont, and Rhode Island,—could be combined and still not contain as great a population as this new commonwealth in the West will have on the first day of its statehood.—From "Oklahoma, a vigorous Western Commonwealth," by Clarence H. Matson, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews, for September.

TRUTH AS A BASIS OF ACTION.

The spirit of the gospel is the spirit of humanity; it is the spirit that conserves the good of all. "Equal rights to all, special privileges to none," was one of the maxims of one of the fathers of the republic, and it has its bearing upon all conditions of society, in church, in state, everywhere. We are instructed in latter-day revelation that because of inequality among the people "the whole world lieth under the bondage of sin." The spiritual side and the temporal side of life are but parts of a great whole; it is necessary therefore that men, women, and children have opportunity to develop by the enjoyment of the right use of both the spiritual and the material. A people can not advance and attain, lacking either of these necessary, indispensable powers. They are the vital forces by which man must maintain life and move and live and have his being. Their right use brings life; their misuse by ambition and love of power based upon selfishness, God condemns, and because of which he has strongly expressed his displeasure. The revelations of God teach us, and repeatedly emphasize the teaching, that the work he has established, and which he designs more fully to establish, is with a view to maintaining a system of government based upon truth and justice, by which, in practical illustration, there shall be given to the world a demonstration of the working power of truth in a redeemed humanity. It therefore affirms truth in the right regulation of all spiritual, moral, and material forces affecting the life of the race, while it negates and condemns and contends against the manifest and manifold systems and practices of error which exist in the world to-day. God never intended that the false in political, social, and economic systems of the ancient and modern world should be rules for the government of the masses; they are the outgrowth of man's fallen and darkened estate and represent Babylon the Great, "which shall fall." He ordained from the beginning a system of government adapted to the government of man's entire complex estate, and has sought to establish the same in every dispensation. In Enoch's time the people accepted the opportunity and rose high enough fully to enjoy its sanctifying and perfecting powers, hence through it "obtained heaven."

It needs no argument to demonstrate from latter-

A PERSON who has wronged another, either by unkind criticisms, slanderous and sneering remarks, evil speaking, etc., will find himself feeling very uncomfortable in the latter's presence. His guilty conscience will make it hard for him to face his sins. This is the condition of the sinner in his attitude to God. When brought face to face with God he drops his head in shame and can not look up till he confesses his sins and receives pardon from heaven.—Word and Work.

day revelation that such is the work of God's people now, in behalf of themselves and of fellow man everywhere. God has spoken to his people and has begun the work of purifying a people to become factors in his system of true government. He has given light to others also; as in the Savior's time, "light has come into the world," and true, noble-minded men and women in America, in Europe, in Asia, and in all lands, in all nations, are moving under the influences of the Spirit of truth to teach the masses and to lead them onward and upward to better things. God has placed the spirit of light upon them and they are working effectually to the overthrow of the old and the bringing in of the new. Like the Jewish system, the old is to be "done away"; the new wine can not be contained in the old bottles, lest they burst; the old garments must not be mended with the new material, "lest the rent be made worse."

"Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined," declared the inspired Isaiah as he looked into the future time when God would establish upon earth a system of government in harmony with his divine character and purpose, based upon purity of heart and administering equality to all, according to the Spirit of truth. In that government there will be oneness of opportunity, oneness of social position, oneness of inheritance of privilege, spiritual and temporal. If laboring now under the inspiration by which such system and condition are to be brought to pass, we shall be able to recognize here and now the inequalities and the wrong principles upon which present conditions in the world are based. By the enlightening power of the Spirit of truth we shall discover the presence of wrong, not merely in localities removed entirely from our immediate, personal sphere of action, but in ourselves, in our own midst, in our own surroundings, in the imperfections with which individually and collectively, as a people or as a nation, we are living and making profession of seeking advancement. The office work of the Spirit of truth is to reveal, to "make manifest"; and an important part of its work is to show the false as well as the true. "The word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of body and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight; but all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do."

Another and an important consideration and feature in our work, and allied to all stated in what has preceded, is the principle of humility expressed in the statements of the Savior: "I am among you as him that serveth"; "He who would be greatest, let him be the servant of all." It is in this spirit that men are called and designed to occupy positions of trust in the work of God. The glory which attaches to the personality of Jesus Christ and to God himself, is the glory of work, the glory of service, of humble, unwearying, undeviating toil in behalf of creatures existing in lower estates and quite generally unappreciative. It is in harmony with truth and absolutely necessary to its development in us, and to our enjoyment of inspiration necessary to accomplish our work, that those called to teach and to express truth in all our acts, official or nonofficial, shall actualize and develop the spirit of humility in the fullest degree, if our work shall be effective and acceptable to God. We are taught that the ministry shall be "kindly of heart and of a lowly spirit." We are instructed that official administrations and actions of leading representatives of the church "are to be made in all righteousness, in holiness and lowliness of heart, meekness and longsuffering, and in faith and virtue and knowledge, temperance, brotherly kindness, and charity; because the promise is, if these things abound in them, they shall not be unfruitful in the knowledge of the Lord." Here is the basis of all Christlike action, the spirit of humble, lowly devotion to truth—the basis and preserving force of human happiness present and eternal; for principles which bring happiness in eternity, and only such, will cause happiness in time. It was this spirit which constituted the greatness of the Christ and which gave him such commanding influence and power among "the common people," who ever "heard him gladly." It was a kindly, loving, sympathetic, and healing force which drew them irresistibly to him, and which the Pharisees could not resist, save by maligning and removing him. The spirit of being truly good is the spirit of being truly great; to be truly great is to be truly good. Such spirit will bring oneness, "naturalness," love, good will, and peace into the "family of God" on earth, into the realm of every home and every circle, religious and social. It will remove the cause of artificiality, unnaturalness of spirit and manner, the spirit of coldness and lack of sympathy and cordiality. It is necessary that it be made manifest in the families and in the general association of God's people, especially among all who are called to be examples or instructors to the flock in any capacity. We can not deviate from it in any degree without repelling from us, and from the influences of the gospel entire, those whom we should draw to us and whom it is our duty to bless and to benefit. "Administrators, not masters," is the genuine badge of officialdom or official standing in the kingdom of God. Blessed for good are they who so can administer for Christ, for they will be a power for good among the people of God and in the world. Truth reaches down through all the phases of life and makes men and women manly and womanly. It redeems them from unequal conditions, from pride and stiffness now so prevalent in the world among those who have privileges in education, culture, and enjoyments which the power of wealth brings.

It helps one to see the truth if willing, if desirous of seeing it; but willingness must develop into effort and intention to see it at all cost. It may mean sacrifice of good will; it may mean to be misunderstood and to be regarded with suspicion and disfavor; it may require relinquishment of carnal living in the various forms of devotion to mere pleasure-seeking, selfish gratification, and display; it may bring for a time a degree of ostracism. It may require, as it will insure if adhered to, greater integrity, more seriousness of purpose, more thought, more considerateness, greater recognition of the rights of fellow creatures; in fact it will require all these and more, because truth as applied to human conditions in this world in the work of the church means a manifestation of the truth in contrast to all the wrongs under which the people are burdened. But the fruit of such emancipating effort will be abundant in the spirit of simplicity, humility, purity, justness, and trueness, crowned by consciousness of being in harmony and in communion with God, and without which no one can do a work for God.

All truth is one; truth constitutes the temple of God from base to summit; and when one is enlightened and devoted he will continue to be conscious of added avenues of light and usefulness opening up to his vision and comprehension and will find a satisfaction beyond the power of mortal fully to express, if faithful to the interests of God and fellow man. On the contrary, if he take pleasure in or be satisfied with selfish adherence to popular whim and custom and the voice of mere fixed habit expressed in ease, privilege, pleasure, or anything secured by compromise or evasion at the sacrifice of truth, inevitably he must suffer loss and finally stand revealed an object of pity in his misdevelopment, lack of character, and failure.

Truth requires our best thought and our best effort. "Clear thoughts patiently worked out and freely interchanged before action is called for, are the only means of making that action wise, permanent, and effective." "The simple believeth every word, but the prudent man looketh well to his going."—Proverbs 14:15.

It is not consistent for any one, much less one professing to be an enlightened child of God, that he be governed by impulse, by inconsiderate haste, by mere thoughtless whim or preference, by partisanship religious or political, by any consideration inconsistent with what a man is called to be and what he ought to be. The universe of God presents to us a marvelous manifestation of the operations and results of a master Mind in the admirable, orderly adaptation of means to ends. Nature is a combination of reciprocal forces acting with mathematical exactness in beautiful order and stately harmony: "Whosoever hath seen these hath seen God moving in his majesty and power." The physical frame of man himself exhibits a combination of wonderful adaptations of means to ends which also reveal the marvelous intelligence, the scientific precision of the mind of God, the Creator. The civilization and progress of the race is the result of discovery of and correspondence to the forces, laws, elements, and conditions provided by the Author of Nature for the use of man. Every forward step made is the result of a fuller understanding of the laws of Nature through which, with wonder and admiration, we look up to Nature's God; while every backward step results from failure to see, to know, and to do.

It is not consistent for man or woman, for people professing to love God and to be his children, to be out of harmony with truth, to blunder along when they should see and act clearly. Such condition is "in works denying him." The best minds and the greatest workers for good among humanity have succeeded in their work because their professions of devotion have been made manifest in studious, conscientious, painstaking building upon foundation principles. They have not based their work upon flighty, hasty, inaccurate, inconsiderate action; but have sought by thought, by study, by analysis, by prayerful, close attention to principles and details to learn the basic and accompanying principles upon which their work should be builded. They have been lovers of truth, hence because of adherence to truth, "workers together with God" in theory and in results. Their plans and methods throughout indicate "preparedness," were correct and true, hence could not be moved or overthrown by the shifting, disrupting forces of error; results were satisfactory because they built intelligently, genuinely, solidly, securely, throughout. Their work remains because truth, like its author, is eternal. "As for truth, it endureth and is always strong; it liveth and conquereth for evermore."—Esdras. It must thus be with us as a people if we shall ever succeed; our works must be built upon the true, basic foundation and the structure we rear must contain no faulty material.

The apostle, a "masterbuilder," wrote thus: "According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise masterbuilder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon. For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss."—1 Corinthians 3:10-15.

The apostle Paul was not the author of this general sentiment. As a faithful, reliable servant of God he placed himself in harmony with God, hence was inspired to state what the Spirit disclosed and enabled him to see. In his carnal state he thought otherwise; in his spiritual state there came to him a revelation of the truth. He put off "the old man with his deeds," and persisted in keeping free and aloof from him; he put on "the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him who created him." Once he "spake as a child"; afterwards he "put away childish things."

It is evident that to obtain light, to comprehend truth, it is required that carnality—all that pertains to unregenerate, human nature—be put away and be kept away. "No man can serve two masters"; no one can occupy an attitude out of harmony with truth and receive of the Spirit of truth. Paul could not do it. He declared: "To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace"; "Because the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." Our nearness to God, the nearness of any one to God, and the degree of inspiration any one shall receive from God, depends and is based upon the attitude maintained toward principles of truth; for "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all." He calls men to administer light and truth, not darkness and error.

The Redeemer, Christ, understood perfectly the necessity of overcoming the carnal nature. His life from the beginning was a steady and constant overcoming of the human and approximation to the divine until the culmination of perfect submission to requirements in the giving of his life for the world. He drew nearer and nearer to the Father and his communion and spirituality and clearness of vision constantly increased. He "made manifest" the true course of action for all the servants and for all the people of God. In proportion as we do likewise we shall succeed; in proportion as we do not we shall fail. This the Lord has said in a late revelation to the church, in which he makes declarations based, as at all other times, upon principles:

"They are called to engage in a great work, which shall bring them honor and glory, or shame, contempt, and final great loss and destruction; as they shall in uprightness, faithfulness and diligence discharge their duties acceptably to God, or shall in carelessness, slothfulness, or wickedness fail in their calling and ministry therein . . . as they shall approve, or disapprove themselves to God."—Doctrine and Covenants 124:7.

These are the words of the Lord to the church in our own late days. They are words of solemn admonition and warning, and it will be well if we heed them as containing principles which apply to all; for "all are called" and the interests of the work of truth are "intrusted to all." "For the commandment is a lamp; and the law is light; and reproofs of instruction are the way of life."—Proverbs 6:23.

Our name, our wealth, our social, financial, or official standing alone will not approve us to God nor furnish us passport to the celestial world; "for not he that commendeth himself is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth." "Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man?" "Therefore let no man glory in men," "having men's persons in admiration, because of advantage." "He that glorieth let him glory in the Lord."

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

The formal opening of the fall term year 1905-1906 of Graceland College will take place next Tuesday, September 26, at half past nine o'clock. Bishop E. L. Kelley will be the speaker of the hour.

We wish for Graceland a prosperous and fruitful year in its mission and feel sure that such will be the case if all connected therewith have the hopeful determination expressed by Professor R. M. Stewart in a recent letter received from him, which reads as follows:

"My aims are set high for the coming year at Graceland; and I hope they may be realized almost fully, if not entirely. I have not been satisfied with the life put into its internal affairs, and hope to have the condition materially changed. I am glad of the encouraging news from outside. Lamoni certainly did nobly in their recent offering for Graceland." To these exercises the public is most cordially invited.

"A Harvard professor declares that the Pacific Ocean is the hole left by the moon when it was thrown off from the earth. He is led to this conclusion by the similarity between the volcanoes in the moon to those in the Hawaiian Islands. Now, that this question is definitely settled, let us have peace."

In this issue appears a letter from Elder J. W. Peterson relating to the visit of Emma Smith to Liberty jail, and the blessing pronounced upon Joseph by his father. Who can furnish the information desired?

Word from Bishop E. L. Kelley at the Moorhead reunion states that they are getting along nicely; ninety-three tents on the ground.

CHRIST'S COUNSEL.

SERMON BY BISHOP E. L. KELLEY, AT LAMONI, IOWA,
SEPTEMBER 10, 1905.

I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayest see. As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore, and repent. Behold, I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me. To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

The language is a revelation by the angel to the apostle John on the Isle of Patmos. The record of it you will find from the eighteenth to the twenty-second verses of the third chapter of the Revelation. The instruction is directly to the church, to members of the church. Indirectly the instruction is applicable to everybody—those without as well as those who are members of the church of Christ. It is significant that our blessed Lord after his ascension upon high, and after that he had stated through his apostles to the world that "all power" had been given into his hands, "both in heaven and in earth," that he should condescend to counsel with his children here in this world. We ought to feel that it is a great privilege on our part to accept of his counsel. The highest to which men and women can come, the greatest known, and the only one by whom we may come to the Father at any time! Yet, he is willing to counsel his children, and solicits their time and attention to hear him; and he gives promise that if they listen to his counsel, he will make them rich, he will give them wisdom, understanding; and that the riches that he will give will be everlasting.

It seems to me that all of us ought to be gratified that we have such a great head of the church to look to as this, wherein we are regarded as children in an individual sense. He recognizes each one. He knows our works; and he is ready to counsel with each one as to the best thing for us to do.

There is another significant thought that you will find in the second verse that I have read. It is this: that in his dealings with his children it is not always that he deals with them according as they themselves at the time may think is best. For he says, "As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten." If any of us then get out of the way occasionally, we ought to expect, and we ought to be thankful that our heavenly Father, through the goodness and mercy of this Son, will properly chasten, reprove, correct, and direct us, that we may walk in proper and better ways.

The object of the chastening is not simply to inflict punishment upon the child, for the sake of punishment; or to appease the anger of the parent, so far as the chastening of ourselves here is concerned. And certainly no one would think that the chastening of the Lord was intended to go any farther than the correction of the individual, and the better direction of the child, so that the child would reap the benefit from the chastisement, as a child when he is corrected by his earthly parents should reap, and does reap, if he is properly corrected, the benefit of the chastisement, rather than the parent.

It would be a sad time for all of God's children in this world if they should arrive at that state and condition when God should so far withdraw from them and leave them to themselves, that they receive no longer his chastisements, no longer his reproofs, no longer his corrections. And yet very often we take at heart greatly these things that come to us; and from my observation and experience I actually believe one half, or nine tenths possibly, of the afflictions and the chastisements that come upon the children of God might be avoided if they would be more ready to recognize his voice, and render to him that which belongs to him, while they are performing the work they are called to do in this life.

It is not on account of the fact that our heavenly Father desires to see any of his children get into trouble that chastisements come but he desires to help them out when they foolishly get in, although he may have counseled and directed by the divine Spirit in its operations upon the mind and heart. When this is no longer accepted by the individual, then other measures must be taken by him, or else all of his children would for ever move out of the way and there would be no reclamation of them.

"As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore, and repent." This language was directed to the church in the first age of the Christian Era; and zealousness on the part of individuals at that time was enjoined under the direction of the divine teacher himself. It is not only necessary for men and women to become associated in the church of God, and with the people of God in name and covenant, but it is absolutely necessary that they should be "zealous of good works." That is what the apostle says: "Zealous of good works." And this does not refer simply to our acts from day to day in performing something as it may occasionally come in our way to perform to assist the work of God; but zealousness in the cause of Christ calls forth the fullest service to God, so that our minds and our hearts are taken up with service to him in preference to anything that we may personally prefer to ourselves or those with whom we have to do in this world.

In later revelation the suggestion is made in this language: men should be "anxiously engaged in a good work." Anxiously engaged! Too many in this world think it is sufficient, in the service of God, to perform the service without making diligent and due effort. This will never attain to the rewards promised under the covenant of Christ.

In order to make a goodly warfare, and work out our salvation with fear and trembling, it is necessary that each individual take for himself the counsel of God as it has been delivered in different ages of the world, through his servants, and by his Son, and move forward in that counsel to make the warfare zealously for him and his work; not to be engulfed in what is termed the wiles of this world, the associations of the world, and the pleasures of the world. For if we become so enwrapped and engulfed in these that the greater part of our time is absorbed in such work as that, where is the warfare that we have made? Where is the zealously on the part of the child of God in making the race?

"I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich." The language comes directly to his children who have accepted a position in the church of God; and it calls them to exchange thoughts with him as to what they will do in putting forth an effort in his cause, in order that they might have part and lot in the building and establishment of the cause of Zion. It means that you and I each one have a particular call from the throne of grace; and that he is willing to counsel with us; and that each of us will have something to do; and that we may be wrought upon, moved to action in the right and proper way. And there is no necessity to be misdirected in our life and in our work, if we will counsel with God as we should counsel with him.

In close association with this text is the instruction given to the church at Laodicea. I will turn and read, because possibly it will interest you all, and give you a clearer idea of what was referred to by the Savior when he was counseling his children here to buy of him gold tried in the fire that they might be rich:

"And unto the angel of the church of the Laodiceans write; These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God." Who is it that you have ever heard tell of that can speak with such authority as this, other than Jesus Christ, the holy one? "These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God; I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot; I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth."

What is the reason for such language as this coming from the divine throne to earth, to stir his children to obedience and action? Why, the succeeding verse will soon show you. It was simply on account of existing conditions, as you may read by turning to the first verse of this same chapter: "And unto the angel of the church in Sardis write; these things saith he that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars; I know thy works, that thou hast a name, that thou livest, and art dead."

As children of God in name in this world, we may bear the name and yet we may not be accepted of God in that full sense that he would have us accepted. Men and women are lost who give way in this world to the temptations of the evil one; and the evil one in his temptations and his warfare moves upon the minds and hearts of the people and says to them, "It is not necessary to move forward; go a little slow. You need not push forward in this good work."

God's Spirit never suggested such a thought as that to any one. When we have been urged to slacken our efforts in the way of good, and of forwarding the work of God, we ought to consider that the spirit that gives us such direction is not from God, but it is from beneath. No spiritual light from the grand and eternal throne ever influences his children to slacken their efforts in the way of righteousness and peace, of good works, of moving zealously on. It is the work of the evil one to cry peace and quiet, and all is well, and we need not wake up; by and by we will see that it will be all right.

If, by and by, we shall see that God's work is all right, unless we shall have performed the special work that God has called each one of us to do, it will not be all right with us. There is the necessity on the part of each and every one to perform zealously something in the work of God, and have that work uppermost in their minds and hearts as they move out in the morning, and as they retire at night, so that they are consecrated in their lives to God, and all that they have is consecrated to his service.

Now we expect, by and by, to be the children of God, heirs of God, and joint-heirs with our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. When our Savior performed his work there was a complete consecration. He reserved nothing. He moved forward, and did not retain the right to claim life itself, and was willing at the instance and direction of the divine wisdom, not himself, to perform whatever his Father's will was. And instead of shortening his hand in our behalf, he was willing to be the least of all in this world, when he served in the church militant as a missionary—become the humblest citizen in the kingdom of God, in order that he might show forth the true station of a child of God; manifest in the life that he lived himself what we ought to be, because it is right and proper that we should perform duty for each other rather than, in a selfish sense, duty for ourselves.

In the work of our blessed Lord he moved forward and did not count the cost, neither did he shrink from the duties, and whether by sacrifice or otherwise he stepped forward to perform the work, and thus was commended in his life. The apostle, speaking afterwards with reference to the triumph, says of the Son, "Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed him with the oil of gladness above his fellows."—Hebrews 1:9.

In this world I have witnessed one thing that I am gratified of, and that is that so far as opportunities are concerned, for men and women, there is not such a difference of opportunities among God's children to make the warfare as sometimes we may have thought in our hearts. I apprehend that there are none before me this morning but have as good an opportunity to make the highest and best step that it is possible for any human being to make, and attain the most successful warfare in life that was ever attained by any individual from the time of Adam to the present. Who has had a greater opportunity than you and I? Position in the church does not give the opportunity to make the most successful life. Position in the state does not give the opportunity to make the most successful life. The chief magistrate of our nation may make a failure, worse than you may make, so far as true success in life is concerned. He does not necessarily have to make such, however; but he may make it. You do not necessarily have to make a failure; but you may. God, in the unerring judgment that is to be meted to the human family by and by, will judge every one according to his works. And it is stated by the apostle that "there is no respect of persons with God"; so that it is by our lives as performed under our own direction and choosing here that we shall reap by and by. If this be true, you and I have just as great and good opportunities to make the greatest success in life that is possible, as has the greatest potentate in the world to-day. No congressman, judge, the magistrate of this nation, no czar, or emperor in the nations beyond the oceans, has a greater or better opportunity than do we. Then why should we be slack in our efforts? God is to measure to each in proportion to his activity to duty in the line that he is called to do duty. Duty, so far as things pertaining to this world is concerned, is held as an incidental matter in the law of Christ, and should be held as incidental by each one of us. It is not first. Seek first the kingdom of God, to build up and "establish its righteousness" is one of the first counsels God gave to his children in this world through his Son. And the incidentals of life, the bread for the family, and a home to live in will be added. But we ought not to make these first. We ought not to have them first and uppermost in our minds and hearts.

"Buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich." Those who have refused to wean themselves from the things of this world in order that they may be zealous of good works in Christ are referred to in the same chapter here, and seventeenth verse, as having gathered of the things in this world, but at the expense of neglecting their duty to God; and I will read that verse so that you may have the contrast clearly before you. "Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing." And yet these people had done nothing as they should in the service of God. That is the reason they were declared lukewarm; that God did not accept them; that is the reason that he says, "I will spew thee out of my mouth." While they stood in this condition and ability to help they did not perform zealously their duty under the law of Christ. "Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." They were thus considered lukewarm, having no good works to commend them, they not being zealous of good works. They could stand out and say, Why, yes, we have plenty; but while they had this, they were naked and poor and wretched, and were in need. And yet they were members of the church, had accepted the blessed doctrine of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, were in sufficient standing, so that the Master sends an order from on high and calls their attention to negligence of duty, saying, because they stood in that condition, if they do not repent he could not retain them, he must discard them. That which has nothing to commend it, even though it claim to be one of his children, he must discard. If not he would bring into the presence of his Father those who were not worthy, those whom his Father could not commend.

Sometimes it comes to our minds that, "we would have done a great deal better than we have, but we forgot, we neglected." We say, "It slipped my mind"; "did not occur to my attention"; "just overlooked it." Now, I want for a moment for you to look at the standing of an individual who can come up and say, "I forgot; it slipped my mind." I may take some of these mothers here. They have a dear little child that they love; and the comparison of that in God's word is that although a mother may forget her child, yet God shall not forget or can not forget his children. Did you ever know of a mother forgetting her child,—to feed it, to look after it from day to day, if she were in her proper mind? If she should leave her child so that it was in a state of starvation, had no clothes, had no shoes for its feet, and say, "Oh, well, I had plenty, it is true, but it simply escaped my mind," you would say that mother did not have any love for the child. Suppose that some of these young sisters should have somebody that was paying special attention to them, come around with the plea every once in a while, "I forgot all about you! Haven't thought about you for a week." They would soon say to the young man, "I hope you won't think about me any more at all," would they not?

We come often before God, claiming in our testimonies that we love God. But with all this profession we forget him and his work. If we love him, can we forget him,—if we love his work as we should, if it be first in this world, can we be excused from duty on the plea, "I forgot to do my part"?

"Well," says one, "Bro. Kelley, you don't mean to make it first, do you?" I do not mean to make it first; but Jesus our blessed Lord makes it first for me. I can not perform my duty under the law unless I make first what he made first. I can not make my family first, and God and his work second. If I do that way I am not worthy. Jesus says, He that loveth father, mother, son, or daughter more than me is not worthy of me. (See Matthew 10:37.) Then our first duty is to God in this world after all. "But," says one, "How does that come? Here is a child that is very dear to me, and I would not like to forget any of the little necessities that belong to him." Yes, and God had an only Son—an only Son!—and he gave that only Son that the world might not perish, but have everlasting life. Jesus Christ came into the world, and he was willing to give everything for you and me. He did not withhold his life for my child and your child. When you come to look upon this question as it is placed before us here in the divine word, it claims the highest and the best thought that belongs to any individual in this life, or it is not what it claims to be—the word of God. You and I, however, have proved that it is what it claims to be, that God is in his work in the church. Well, if we have proved this, why can not we grasp it according to the law that is written in the books, the divine word? And why can not we extend that love, and that complete fellowship, and good will to each other in this world, and that zealous service to God that will bring us closely into the communion and fellowship of the disciples of God in fact, so that the fulfillment of the promise can be made, that Jesus spoke of in the thirteenth chapter of John, wherein he says, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."

I am talking this morning with reference to duty in the church, not only of the Saints of Lamoni, but when you hear me you will know what I have been talking, in part, to Saints in every part of the country. If there is anything that we should do as a people, it is to move nearer to God. I do not mean simply the Saints of Lamoni either, but all of his people.

I am gratified in this thought and this knowledge by my travels through the churches from time to time: that the Saints are moving. But they are not moving as zealously as they ought to, as earnestly as they ought to do, as faithfully as they ought. We might be much farther ahead to-day than we are. And we will lose ground unless we become more zealous in all that we undertake in God's work. So that it does not relate simply to the Saints in Lamoni, but to Saints in every part of the world, as I understand that God is no respecter of persons, and that his children in Lamoni, in Independence, and in Kirtland, and every other place in this country, stand upon the same footing, and all of them have like opportunities. And the opportunity is that we may make for ourselves a place and station in the kingdom of God that will be the richest and the highest that is possible for men and women to attain to, whatever the condition in life. And it is possible for us to fail, and not to attain to it. Possible to fail here, down there; possible for those up here in Gallands Grove District, and possible for those at Lucas, and all other places. But while there is a possibility of failing, there is no necessity for it. We may move forward and have success. Each and every place may move forward and have success. The language of our blessed Lord to the church in Philadelphia gives that idea clear here. He says, in giving instruction to the church at Philadelphia, No man can move thee out of thy place. It is true with reference to every place where the work of God is planted in this world at the present time. If the Saints will perform their duties, no man can move them, because God is bound to protect. But if they do not perform their duties they move themselves. The church at Philadelphia in the first century, through the neglect of duty, was overcome, and was moved; but it was because they did not keep within the way of Christ. And so it is with every church and its planting, in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. God can not be partial in his justice and judgments among his children. He must divide to them here and there the measure according as they have zealously wrought. And if all will zealously strive every one will be accepted, and the great triumph that the blessed Lord has promised for his children in the future will be the triumph of each and every one of us. And the only triumph that I am looking for and seeking in this world, is the triumph of the work of God. The highest thing and the best is that I may have part and parcel in that. That is greater than to be the chief magistrate of this nation. It is greater than to be the emperor of Germany, or king or emperor of Great Britain, or any earthly potentate. Why not work to this end then? If we perform our duties in our lonely station, as members of the church, it does not make any difference whether we have any priesthood authority or not; that does not count in this at all. Notice the statement, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne." The brother that sits in the pew may overcome, receive the highest award, and maintain that award and the highest place in the church of God, from our Master by and by. If I do not perform my duty as an officer of the church as faithfully and zealously as does a sister who is a lay member and fulfills her place in the pew, and in the Sunday-school, and in the work that God calls her to do, she will receive commendation higher than I will by and by. It does not belong to place; it belongs to the zealous worker in God's cause. And I am glad that it is so placed, for by and by, although we may have allotments here that are unequal, and unmeritorious to some extent, by and by every one will be rewarded according to the just judgment of God, by that man whom he hath raised from the dead, Jesus Christ.

I believe that this ought to be gratifying to the Saints, and it ought to make us hopeful in the work, hopeful in the sense that there is so much to do, though so few to perform it. There are so few to perform the work of God in certain places that it is absolutely necessary at the present time that I make a change of place in order that I may fill in a niche in the performance of my duty under the law. It was much the same when I came to Lamoni. I was greatly criticized by some of my friends in the East because I came. But I knew it was my duty and came. And when I shall make a change again it is not for my personal ends in any sense; for if I considered my personal ends, and that of my family, I would neither have been in Lamoni nor Independence, nor would I think of moving to either place, so far as personal gain is concerned. Would not consider it for one moment. But for the work of God, to discharge the duty and obligation that I owe to the work, I am willing to move out any time, any place that God wants me to move; and shall not hesitate when I know that it is proper for me to do so. That is all there is to changing.

If some of you will turn and read my article in the HERALD a few months ago respecting this, you will find clearly set forth, I think, that the changing of the Bishop's residence from one place to another should not affect a single one of the Saints so far as their place is concerned, nor the headquarters of the church in any sense. No individual ought to be alarmed but what the work will go on, and will go on properly and rightly if he performs his part rightly.

A few days ago I was talking with one of the bishopric of the stake here. We needed his work; so much was quite necessary to be carried out. He told me very candidly that nothing would please him better than to give his time wholly for that, but his financial interests for the present were such that he could not do it. Is it a fact, my friends, that in our zealous work in this life, we leave our brothers in such a situation that God's work has to suffer, that he may catch up his financial business? I am not blaming the brother. It is necessary for him to do this unless we relieve him properly. I am simply bringing this to the consideration of the Saints. If every Latter Day Saint had performed his and her duty under the law, many things might be done to-day that we have not been able to do. We have needed workers in God's work who are looking after the things of this world.

Now, do you think that it is the best policy for us to make our work in the things of this world, first, and leave the Master's until the last? We will move in the wrong direction as long as we move in that line.

"I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich." There is an opportunity to invest. There have been opportunities presented to the Saints the past year for investments so numerous that it seems that you ought to bring the contrast before your minds,—opportunities in this direction and in that direction, to invest a little means here that you might be rich by and by.

I know where they claim that Saints have invested some fifteen thousand dollars in mines in the West. Opportunity offered them. They think they will get a great dividend after a while; and they think that when they get that dividend they are going to pay a tenth into the Lord's house. Why, they could better invest than that. They could invest where they could get ten thousand times better dividend, and where there is no uncertainty about the dividend.

There is a better investment for every individual in this world to-day held out than investment in a mine in Arizona or New Mexico or Utah or Colorado. The investment or taking of stock is to take counsel with the blessed Lord himself, and then when the returns come in it will make us rich for evermore. Do not all think it would be better to take stock and place your investments where it will do the most good by and by, where your hearts will be zealously looking after it, where your thoughts will be upon that treasure at night when you retire, and where in the morning the first consideration will be upon the treasure you have invested in God's work, invested so that by and by the investment will be returned to you, and return not only twenty or fifty or a hundred per cent dividend during the year, but a thousand-fold? Where do you think a better investment could be made? "I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayest see."

"Behold, I stand at the door and knock," Jesus says. This is sometimes represented by the preacher to refer to the individual outside of the church; the voice of God comes to him and says, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." Why, no. That is a misrepresentation so far as direct application is concerned. The application may be made indirectly to them, to the individual outside of the church; but Jesus says to each and every one of us this morning, "Behold I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, [will counsel with him,] and he with me." He will be permitted, in the counsel that I will give, to invest, and I will make him rich for evermore.

May the Lord bless each one of you. And I trust that in the triumph of Zion and her cause, and all of God's work, not one of his children will fail of receiving the great reward. May the Lord bless us all to that end, is my prayer in Jesus' name. Amen.

GATHERING.

I hear now and then Saints talking about the gathering,—gathering to Zion. Well, I do believe that the Saints that talk about gathering to Zion are the ones most ready.

Away back during the reign of Zedekiah, king of Judah, Nebuchadnezzar besieged Jerusalem and took away the inhabitants thereof captive into Babylonia, known as the seventy years' captivity. The time came, by the divine providence, under Cyrus, king of Persia, that the Jews were to return to rebuild Jerusalem, and settle in their own land. They wept and lamented because of their captivity and for their own land and beloved city where they might worship God. They longed to return. We learn by reading the event carefully, that the ones that longed to return were the ones that did return. Others had become settled in business, had taken up with the customs of the land, were doing well, and were satisfied. Their desires for their own country, Jerusalem, and the worship of God, had become absorbed by their desires for other things.

There has been longer than a seventy years' captivity or dispersion with the people of the latter days. And the time has come and is coming when the people of God are to gather, and to be gathered to Zion and Jerusalem, wherein dwelleth safety and righteousness. And it is the people that long to be there that will be there.

But safety cometh through obedience, and the results of obedience are righteousness. In all things there must be a preparation. In worldly pursuits, to become capable, and before obeying the gospel, the exercising of faith in God and repentance of evil works. So in gathering to Zion, there must be a preparation. We can not jump into that at once, thinking that when there things will have so changed that there will be no evil desires. That is a mistake. Our attainment to perfection is gradual, as we are willing to conform our lives in harmony with the government of God.

Out of the host of Israel that came out of Egypt, two only entered the promised land, Joshua and Calib. If the people of Israel had been permitted to enter the promised land in their rebellious, unqualified condition, the results would have been a worse condition than that already there, under the control of the Canaanites. They would long for the fleshpots of Egypt or some other fancy, according to their carnal proclivities.

If Israel of old could not enter the promised land unless they had arisen above the carnal, neither can Israel to-day. God wants us so to live that he can have confidence in us; then we are his friends. A friend has confidence in a friend. When children obey their parents they have confidence in their parents, and the parents have confidence in their children. So it is with the people of God. If the Saints place their confidence in man, how can God have confidence in them? I care not in what respect that confidence in man may be, God has intended and desired, by the preaching of the gospel, our undivided attention and confidence in him as our Father and provisor.

As long as the people of God, in branches or out of branches, hanker after and mix with the world in the sense that they partake with them, and place their confidence in them, they never will prosper as a people or as branches in the church; for they are and should be a light to the world. And it is largely the cause of so many of our branches becoming divided, and coming to nothing.

If we can not, as a people, in branches live together in peace, in love, and be law-abiding under the government now, how can we in Zion, under the government then?

I believe that the present is more a time of preparation than it is of gathering. And the people that will prepare, come out of Babylon, out of sin, as is written, will be the ones ready when the time of gathering comes. They will not be mixed up in life-insurance policies of a thousand or two thousand or five thousand dollars. They will have none to leave. And their tendencies for worldly pleasures and fleshly lusts will not hinder them. It will not be so hard for them to abide the government in Zion. We are saved when we have overcome the evils of our natures, not till then.

Zion means the beautiful, the pure in heart, the favored of the Lord. If Zion in its collective condition will be the pure in heart, and the people of God scattered are the pure in heart, the impure in heart will not be permitted to dwell in Zion, for that would make it impure.

The Saints who are willing to have the silken cords of different societies, and other worldliness, tied to them, will find that those cords are not easily broken. They will sap the very life and vitality of their spiritual natures, and they, like the five foolish virgins, will have lost the Spirit. And when the time comes for "thus saith the Lord" in the establishment of the affairs of Zion, they will not be able to discern that it is for them to act at once; hence, when they get their eyes opened, they will find themselves left out.

"The just shall live by faith." If our confidence is in God, that he will order and move for the progress of his people, we will find that he is abundantly able and willing whenever his people are ready. And faith in God will cause a longing in their souls that will enable them to obey when the time comes.

ADOLPH E. MADISON.

PREPARATION FOR THE GATHERING.

The injunction of the apostle is, "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith." In the beginning of the gospel in this last dispensation, the idea of a gathering has been and is still very prominent among Latter Day Saints, but do we really know by what means this will be accomplished? By a careful study of the books, and an observation of the existing condition of things, we would be led to doubt.

We will begin our examination by referring to Doctrine and Covenants 38: 7:

And that ye might escape the power of the enemy, and be gathered unto me a righteous people, without spot and blemish: wherefore, for this cause I gave unto you the commandment, that ye should go to the Ohio; and there I will give unto you my law.

This was given January, 1831, just before the conference in April, which convened in Ohio. And in February, 1831, the church received another revelation:

Harken, O ye elders of my church whom I have called: behold, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall assemble yourselves together to agree upon my word, and by the prayer of your faith ye shall receive my law, . . . and ye shall see that my law is kept.

In section 42 the law is given. Paragraphs 8, 9, and 10 treat on temporalities, saying,

If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, . . . I will consecrate of the riches of those who embrace my gospel, among the Gentiles, unto the poor of my people who are of the house of Israel.

Read the whole of paragraphs 8 to 12.

"And again, thou shalt not be proud in thy heart," Question.—Is there any pride in the church? Again, "Let all thy garments be plain, and their beauty the beauty of the work of thine own hands." Do Saints make their own garments? and do they make them plain, or do some have their garments made by a tailor, and made in the latest style?

Again, "Thou shalt not be idle; for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer." Are there any idlers in the church? We know that there are plenty of this class in the world, and that they are divided into three classes: 1. Men that are called capitalists, who have never done a stroke of honest toil in their lives, but simply live, in all the luxury this world can afford, off the labors of others. I hope that there are none of this class in the church. 2. A class of lazy tramps who will not work, but who might be improved under different conditions. 3. A class of men who would work, but under the existing conditions of things can get employment only a part of the time. And I have been and am now acquainted with a few of this class who are members of the church. And I have asked myself the question: Who is to blame? For this condition should not exist in the church of the living God; for we read in section 42, paragraph 14:

Thou shalt stand in the place of thy stewardship; thou shalt not take thy brother's garment; thou shalt pay for that which thou shalt receive of thy brother; and if thou obtainest more than that which would be for thy support, thou shalt give it unto my storehouse, that all things may be done according to that which I have said.

And again:

Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my scriptures for a law, to be my law, to govern my church; and he that doth according to these things, shall be saved, and he that doeth them not shall be damned, if he continues.—Paragraph 16.

And again, every person who belongeth to this church of Christ shall observe to keep all the commandments and covenants of the church.—Paragraph 21.

Harken unto me, saith the Lord your God, and I will speak unto my servant Edward Partridge, and give unto him directions; . . . how to organize this people, for it must needs be that they are organized according to my laws, if otherwise, they will be cut off; wherefore let my servant Edward Partridge, and those whom he has chosen, in whom I am well pleased, appoint unto this people their portion, every man equal according to their families, according to their circumstances, and their wants and needs.—Section 51, paragraph 1.

And again, let the bishop appoint a storehouse unto this church, and let all things, both in money and in meat, which is more than is needful for the want of this people, be kept in the hands of the bishop. . . . And thus I grant unto this people a privilege of organizing themselves according to my laws.—Paragraph 4.

Behold, this shall be an example unto my servant Edward Partridge, in other places, in all churches. And whoso is found a faithful, a just, and a wise steward, shall enter into the joy of his Lord, and shall inherit eternal life.—Paragraph 5.

We find in section 42, and in section 51, the instructions given how to organize according to the law. And in failing to comply with this law they were to be cut off. This law was applicable in all places and in all churches; and this before there was any Zion or stakes of Zion.

Well, was the church cut off for ignoring this law? Turn to section 83, paragraph 8:

And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation.

Question.—If God condemned the church then for failing to comply with the law, will he accept us on any easier terms?

And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written.—Paragraph 8.

Now, this Moses plainly taught to the children of Israel in the wilderness, and sought diligently to sanctify his people that they might behold the face of God; but they hardened their hearts, and could not endure his presence, therefore, the Lord, in his wrath (for his anger was kindled against them) swore that they should not enter into his rest, while in the wilderness, which rest is the fullness of his glory. Therefore, he took Moses out of their midst and the holy priesthood also; and the lesser priesthood continued . . . until John.—Paragraph 4.

But under this priesthood they could not be perfected, neither see the face of God, nor enter into his rest, which is the fullness of his glory, although they were in possession of the preparatory gospel: faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins. Yes, and they had the law of tithing, too; but was God well pleased with them? Read Malachi 3:7:

Even from the days of your fathers ye are gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them. Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts. But ye said, Wherein shall we return? Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, [Not one tithe or tenth, but all the tithes or tenths. What for, Lord?] that there may be meat in mine house, [Is that all? No.] and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it.

Question.—Does latter-day Israel need such a blessing? or are we enjoying the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit as in the days of Enoch, or the Nephites, or the apostles, when every man was equal and received according to his wants and needs, and had all things common— or in other words worked for one common cause, placing all their tithes (tenths) or surplus in the treasury?

Malachi says further, that God would rebuke the devourer and destroyer, that the land might yield her increase. Is there any need of this now? Have we any destroying elements or insects now, that destroy crops? or is it a fact, according to the claim made by our political G. O. P., that God has blessed us with an over-production? We read in the word of God about famines, but I have failed to find in the scriptures anything about an over-production. Yet if this over-production be a fact, what will we attribute it to,—the righteousness of the Saints or the administering the law on economic questions by the G. O. P.? Some one will say, "This is running into politics." It may be, but we naturally have to notice a few things of this character as we pass along, as we know there are a few, at least, who have taken upon themselves the name of Christ, and have been ordained to preach the everlasting gospel, who vote for the "over-productionist."

We are taught in the word of God that we are to be charitable, and are to purify ourselves, and not to be selfish, but to have brotherly love, having the same care one for another. The apostle Paul very beautifully elucidates this in 1 Corinthians 12: 25, 26:

The members should have the same care one for another.

And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it.

This condition can be reached only by the application of the celestial law, the law of consecration. This is the only means that will eradicate selfishness from the hearts of the children of men. Under this law we would all work for one common cause. No man would have any object in trying to cheat some one else; because if by shrewd speculation I cheated my brother out of, say five hundred dollars, this money would not be mine. I would have to place it in the treasury, and it would belong to the whole church.

And again, there shall be another treasury prepared and a treasurer appointed to keep the treasury, . . . and all moneys you receive in your stewardship, by improving upon the properties which I have appointed unto you, in houses or in lands, or in cattle, or in all things save it be the holy and sacred writings, . . . shall be cast into the treasury as fast as you receive moneys, by hundreds, or by fifties, or by twenties, or by tens, or by fives, or in other words, if any among you obtain five talents let him cast them into the treasury; or if he obtain ten, or twenty, fifty or an hundred, let him do likewise; and let not any man among you say that it is his own, for it shall not be called his, nor any part of it; and there shall not any part of it be used, or taken out of the treasury, only by the voice and common consent of the order. And this shall be the voice and common consent: that any man among you, say unto the treasurer, I have need of this to help me in my stewardship: if it be five talents, or if it be ten talents, or twenty, or fifty, or an hundred, the treasurer shall give unto him the sum which he requires, to help him in his stewardship, until he be found a transgressor, but so long as he is in full fellowship, and is faithful, and wise in his stewardship, this shall be his token unto the treasurer that the treasurer shall not withhold.—Doctrine and Covenants 101:12.

This equalizes the wealth, and does away with one class of idlers or loafers that we call capitalists. This is God's method:

I, the Lord, stretched out the heavens, and builded the earth as a very handy work; and all things therein are mine; and it is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine; but it must needs be done in mine own way; and, behold, this is the way, that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my saints: that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low; for the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare; yea, I prepared all things, and have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves. Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.—Doctrine and Covenants 101:2.

This would take the money where it is not used, or where it is used unjustly, and place it where it could be used and used justly. There is land that is growing nothing but weeds, that under God's law would grow crops; and we as Saints would have the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit:

Behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, even as I, the Lord, have appointed, . . . And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God; yea, neither the bishop, neither the agent, who keepeth the Lord's storehouse; neither he who is appointed in a stewardship over temporal things; he who is appointed to administer spiritual things, the same is worthy of his hire, even as those who are appointed to a stewardship, to administer in temporal things; yea even more abundantly, which abundance is multiplied unto them through the manifestations of the Spirit; nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld.—Doctrine and Covenants 70:3.

Is it not a fact that Latter Day Saints ask God for blessings which he has promised, and he refuses to grant them? For instance, how often the elders administer to the sick, and the sick are not healed, and sometimes not even benefited by the administration. The Lord says,

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe.—Mark 16:16, 17. I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise.—Doctrine and Covenants 81:3.

The church in Enoch's day obeyed this law, and they became sanctified; and could behold the face of God, and were caught up to heaven. The Nephites lived under this law for two hundred years, and were blessed with the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit, so much so that they even raised the dead.

The people were all converted unto the Lord, . . . and there were no contentions and disputations among them, and every man did deal justly one with another; and they had all things common among them, therefore there were not rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift.—4 Nephi 1:2. There were mighty miracles wrought among the disciples of Jesus.—Paragraph 4. And many of them saw and heard unspeakable things, which are not lawful to be written: and they taught, and did minister one to another; and they had all things common among them, every man dealing justly, one with another. And it came to pass that they did do all things, even as Jesus had commanded them.—3 Nephi 12:2. (See also Mosiah 9:9.)

This law was executed and observed in the days of Enoch, and among the Nephites, and to a certain extent among the apostles; and it was revealed to Joseph Smith to be the law to govern the church in this last dispensation, and was to be an everlasting law:

This order I have appointed to be an everlasting order unto you and unto your successors, inasmuch as you sin not.

Hence, if this law is not in force now, it is because of sin and transgression; and we are in condition similar to that which the Israelites were in, after Moses and the holy priesthood had been taken away. Yes, we are really worse off; for the remainder of paragraph 5 says:

And the soul that sins against this covenant, and hardeneth his heart against it, shall be dealt with according to the laws of my church, and shall be delivered over to the buffetings of Satan until the day of redemption.

So we understand it was to be a test of fellowship in the church. And again in section 64, paragraph 7:

Behold, the Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind; and the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days; and the rebellious shall be cut off out of the land of Zion, and shall be sent away, and shall not inherit the land; for, verily, I say that the rebellious are not of the blood of Ephraim.

God in his wisdom ordained a plan which, when executed and obeyed, would place his children in advance of all other societies or governments in spiritual things, and also in temporal things:

Wherefore a commandment I give unto you, to prepare and organize yourselves by a bond or everlasting covenant that can not be broken. And he who breaketh it shall lose his office and standing in the church, and shall be delivered over to the buffetings of Satan until the day of redemption. Behold, this is the preparation wherewith I prepare you, and the foundation, and the ensample, which I give unto you, whereby you may accomplish the commandments which are given you, that through my providence, notwithstanding the tribulation which shall descend upon you, that the church may stand independent above all other creatures beneath the celestial world.

The church by obeying this law could, as the scriptures say, stand above all other creatures under heaven. We could produce everything we used or consume. But as it is the church is at the mercy of the trusts and combinations just the same as others. But some may say that the time has not come to execute this law. But the scriptures teach that all other dispensations of the gospel will be represented in this last dispensation. And this law was practiced in the days of Enoch, and again among the apostles, and also among the Nephites, and was revealed to Joseph Smith as early as 1831, before there was any Zion, or stakes of Zion; and it was given for our deliverance from the oppression that has come, that exists to-day, and by which we are being enslaved.

God revealed the law to the church seven times, and they ignored it seven years; then they asked God how much he required of them as the beginning of tithing. God had told them seven times that he required all their surplus, and all their interest; everything above their living was to be placed in the treasury. But they were like the Israelites in the days of Samuel. They did not like liberty and freedom. They clamored for a king, although Samuel told them that if they had a king it would be the means of bringing them into bondage. But, nevertheless, they desired a king, and finally God granted them their desire, and it was but a short time till they were in bondage. The gospel is the plan of redemption, and if put into practice will fully redeem man, both spiritually and temporally. Is not the law of God just as practicable to-day as in any former dispensation? If not, why not?

This law was given for the redemption of Zion, and God said that Zion, can not be redeemed only by the principles of this law, otherwise he will not receive her unto himself. We see very plainly by the word that this law is the law of coöperation, and is being carried on along economic and industrial lines by the world. For instance, note the concentration of wealth by the trusts and combines, thereby fulfilling the sayings of Christ, that the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of the kingdom.

If this law were in operation in the church, it would give every one a chance to be a producer, and land that to-day is growing weeds would be growing crops; and means would flow into the treasury. Selfishness would be eradicated from the heart, and we as a people would have the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit, and there would be no need for special soliciting of money to erect church-buildings, or for educational purposes, or missionary work; for this law of God makes ample provision for all these. Let us examine ourselves to see if we be in the faith.

THE GATHERING.

The gathering together of the Saints, its purpose, and the manner of its accomplishment, are things of great importance to us all. That the people of the Lord, according to revelations both ancient and modern, were to gather together in the last days, is believed in by us as a people. Salvation in its fullest and completest sense, so far as earth-life is concerned, is to be realized when we are gathered together in Zion. So far as we know, it has been left for modern prophets to reveal the location of Zion, and the manner of the gathering of the Saints.

The subject of the gathering was agitated by the Saints a year or two ago to quite an extent; but for some reason but little has been written relative to the matter for some time. While we may have gone to one extreme on the subject then, and possibly extreme views were expressed relative to it, that is no good reason that we should now go to the opposite extreme by remaining silent on the subject. Silence on a subject brings indifference, and indifference brings death,—a thing above all others to be avoided by Latter Day Saints.

The proper presentation to the Saints through the church papers of things of importance, or the discussion of the same in quorum or conference capacity, is not detrimental to the Saints; but a lack of it is a positive injury to them.

I for one therefore would like well to see this subject written on in the columns of the HERALD. Should extreme views on the subject be entertained and expressed just let it be so. How can we come to a unity on any subject unless each one understands the views of others relative to it? One may say, "I would not object to different views being expressed in the HERALD were it not that outsiders see that we differ." Now if outsiders see that our difference is a friendly one, where is the harm? Before one writes for publication in the HERALD he should ask the Lord to help him. If one needs to pray before preaching-service, when but fifteen or twenty persons are to be addressed, then how much more need have we to pray when thousands of minds are to be affected by an article published in the columns of the HERALD!

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

The Things I Miss.

An easy thing, O Power divine,
To thank thee for these gifts of thine,
For summer's sunshine, winter's snow,
For hearts that kindle, thoughts that glow;
But when shall I attain to this—
To thank thee for the things I miss?

For all young Fancy's early gleams,
The dreamed-of joys that still are dreams,
Hopes unfulfilled and pleasures known
Through others' fortunes, not my own,
And blessings seen that are not given,
And ne'er will be this side of heaven.

Had I, too, shared the joys I see,
Would there have been a heaven for me?
Could I have felt thy presence near
Had I possessed what I held dear?
My deepest fortune, highest bliss,
Have grown, perchance, from things I miss.

Sometimes there comes an hour of calm;
Grief turns to blessing, pain to balm;
A Power that works above my will Stills leads me onward, upward still;
And then my heart attains to this—
To thank thee for the things I miss.

—Thomas Wentworth Higginson.

Training Our Children.

Being a mother desirous of training my children to be of the most use possible, I take an interest in all that I see written on the subject, and try to profit by what I read. But, after all, experience is the best teacher, although one can learn a great deal by reading and observing successful mothers.

I find that had we but known, the time to begin would have been when we were young, by forming good, pleasant dispositions ourselves, and choosing companions with good dispositions; for the law of inheritance is a great factor in forming the dispositions of our children. Truly does the Bible say the iniquities of the fathers are visited upon the children even to the third and fourth generation of them that hate me. And on the disposition of a child largely depends its training, though the parent's dispositions and temperaments have as much if not more to do with managing the little one as the child's disposition.

A sister wrote in the HERALD of March 1 that some children can be managed without whipping and some can not. Perhaps that depends on the parent. You know some people have a "way" with them that they can do anything with children easily, while the majority can not. Notice the school-teachers of your acquaintance, and see if this is not so.

But should those favored few think because they can so easily manage a child, that it is a lack of effort, or a fault with others who have more difficulty? Or think because it is easy for them, others can?

Possibly Sr. Gunsolley, who wrote in HERALD of June 28, and Sr. Langton, of May 17, belong to the favored class. I honor such, and would be glad to be numbered with them. But no less do I honor the faithful parent who tries the best means that she knows of to teach her child aright, whether it be whipping or not. And I have yet to see the child that was demoralized by whipping, when the parent observed the injunction, "Be temperate in all things." On the other hand some of the very best people I know were whipped when children. I can not say whether they would have been as good without whipping, but I do know that whipping did not demoralize them.

Sr. Gunsolley says, "The rod only makes the child more rebellious, disrespectful to parents, and in time will drive him out in the world with anything but pleasant memories of home." Dear sister, go among all the people you know and count all you can on whom the rod has had such effect, and see how many or how few they are. In all my experience I know of not one. I have seen disrespectful children, also rebellious, and those driven out in the world, but in almost all of the first two cases they were petted and indulged until they seemed to think no one had quite so many rights as themselves, which sometimes caused them to leave home; but when they were driven from home it was usually from extreme cruelty of the father. While Solomon says the "rod [is] for the fool's back," he also says, "If we spare the rod we hate the child." While our children are not fools in the sense we use the word, yet they would certainly be unwise if we let them grow up without correction. So if the rod will keep the foolishness out of them, then I have no objection to its temperate use.

And as for a child thinking less of its parents because of the use of the rod, this gives me no anxiety for my own children. I am one of nine children, and we were all whipped, and of the eight living ones not one but to-day will rise up and call our mother blessed, and not one but loves the dear old home; and I could find dozens of others of the same mind. So I would say to all mothers not to let some one's prejudice against the rod keep you from enforcing obedience by the use of the best and most effectual means you know of. If by good teaching, example, or milder punishment, so much the better; but whip rather than allow a child to grow up wrong. It is the child's good we are seeking. And in all things be temperate. There is worse punishment than whipping: for instance, shutting up in the dark, depriving of meals, or of pleasures that cause keen disappointment. But whatever means you employ, do not punish in anger, nor for revenge, nor be too severe for age or fault. Do not use threats that can not or will not be carried out.

A mistake I have sometimes seen made is to punish once for a fault because you happen to be in the mood, and then let the same offense go unnoticed at other times. Do not be partial and punish one child and let another go. Children are quick to note injustice. Study the child, and the effect the punishment has on it; for no two children are exactly alike. A word of praise will benefit some children far more than punishment, while it will make others vain and overbearing; also a little blame will make some strive harder to do right, while it will discourage others.

Some speak of "crying" when they punish their children. I always doubted the wisdom of such a course. I imagine it would disgust a child. Sr. Langton speaks of stopping in the midst of her work to play with a child. It might do all right in her case; but I would be afraid to set such an example before my children, for that is their worst fault. They like to play in the midst of their work. And, too, I am a little afraid they might demand my time for their amusement. As it is they always ask me to do so and so for them, "when I get time."

My children are not model children, neither am I a model mother, but I would like to be. And, sisters, you who do not use the rod, please tell us how you manage, and I know there will be many grateful mothers, if they can adopt your method; for I believe there is not a mother in the land who would not be glad to forego that painful ordeal, the use of the rod. I am not one who thinks my way is the best there is; but I do use the best way I know to be effectual. But you whom God has blessed with the faculty to govern more easily, do not deprive the rest of us from the benefit of your experience. There are many other thoughts that come crowding to my mind, but I fear this letter is too long already.

Your sister in the interest of the little folks, TRYON, Nebraska. MRS. BLANCHE E. CLINE.

Dear Home Column: May I chat with you a little while? I wish to thank Bro. William Lewis for the letter he wrote to the HERALD just recently, on the subject of "housekeeping-ology." It is time some broad hints were given. I would love to give a few samples of a young woman living near me; but they are too dirty to put on clean paper: and she looks so very nice when on the street that it would be too great a contrast. Instead of writing filthology, I will tell a dream: I was so very tired when I went to bed, and woke early next morning feeling a little more tired. I turned over in bed and fell asleep again, and dreamed that husband had taken me and the family away for a visit. When we had been there some time I began to feel uneasy that no message came for us to go home. I asked my daughter, "How long have we been here?" She answered, "One week." Then I asked the landlord to make out my bill. He begged us to stay longer, saying, "I am giving you board very reasonable, only charging fifty cents a meal all round." "Oh," I wondered, "how am I ever to pay?" I awoke, and was so well and so rested, just as if I really had been on a long visit. I knelt and thanked God for his goodness to me.

With good wishes to all,
A SISTER.

A Blessing in the Home.

In many a home, that woman of varied endowment, the maiden aunt, plays her quiet role of unrecorded and most valuable service, and her beneficiaries are scarcely aware of her sacrifice of time or personal enjoyment, or of the check she has to put on her individual preferences or opinions in order to carry out the family rule, which she often neither approves nor sympathizes with. She is ever ready to take the helm when illness or absence forces the heads of the homes to yield it to other hands. If she has an independent income, this boy goes to college, and that girl receives the musical education for which she longs. Too often, even in grateful young hearts, no inquiry is made as to what might have come into her single and, in some ways, lonely life had she used the money to gratify herself. She is dear and good and generous—they fully understand that; but where she would have traveled, what she would have taken delight in possessing—books, pictures, a home which was her very own, in which to express herself—they do not think or dream of these. "How could she be happier than she is?"

Beside a sick-bed she keeps her close and tender watch, and when the mother, refreshed by sleep, made beneficial by her perfect trust in the care which supplements her own, returns to her post, she sees with unjealous eyes the joy with which the patient welcomes back the best-beloved. Never to be the very nearest and dearest, and yet gladly and cheerfully to fill all the offices in which many a brave and high-hearted single woman serves her family, calls forth the very highest type of character and belongs to the noblest class of human endeavor.

It would surprise many a household, and even astonish the minds of many a mother, to know how often a lovely and richly endowed sister or daughter shuts the door of her heart against the entreating affection which would woo her to come forth into a freer life and world of her own, and stands valiantly at a post where she feels she is needed. Unrecorded, except in those angelic tablets where we love to believe human endeavor is never without comprehending recognition, to-day, and every day, fair girls mature, but at the most receptive and perfect stage of life's experience see before them the way to their hearts' full satisfaction, and deliberately turn back to keep the cup of joy full for a mother or father, otherwise desolate. "I thought they cared for each other, but I am glad to say there is nothing in it." How often have you heard some dependent mother say this?

Can we not readily bring to mind homes which are absolutely permeated by the patience and enduring love of one strong, devoted heart? Have you not seen flaxen locks grow gray, and the straight carriage of a beautiful figure change to the stoop of an old, bent woman, without one faltering moment of backward look toward a past youth, while the burden of labor and administration and the fond bearing of burdens went on from decade to decade? And yet no man called this faultless woman wife, nor did any child name her mother. Not until the great summing up of human achievements shall be made, will the true estimate of such heroic lives be known.—Mrs. James Farley Cox.

Anchor Egg Separator.

This cut represents the Patent Anchor Egg Separator, a useful and necessary article in hotel, restaurant, bakeshop, drug-store, and household where eggs are used. The separation is complete and instantaneous, not a drop of white remaining in the separator. Does not break the yolk. Is made from a solid piece of metal and is always bright and ready for use. Sample postpaid ten cents.

Directions: Place separator over glass or cup; break egg in separator and immediate and complete separation takes place, the yolk remaining in the separator.

We also offer sachets for ten cents each. These are put up by the St. Louis Sunshiners, and made of best materials, containing the best sachet powder in either white rose or violet; a nice present for any one. All profits obtained from the sale of these articles are for the benefit of our Christmas Offering. Will you help the Sunshiners earn some money for this purpose? To the boy or girl wishing to earn a Sunshine Christmas Offering, one cent each will be allowed on any number of either of the above articles sold. To the one selling the greatest number will be allowed one dollar. Send for samples and try how many you can sell.

Address all orders for the above to the secretary and treasurer,

[We call especial attention to the following article as it is so replete with plain, practical thoughts upon lines that more of us need to think well upon. Read it and then think how you can help the Sunday-school.—EDITOR.]

THE PARENTS' DUTY TO THE SCHOLAR.

While time will not permit me to enlarge upon this subject as much as I wish, perhaps, still I will try to set forth some of the most essential facts, with the hope and prayer that they may be helpful.

IT IS USELESS TO EXPECT

good results from anything, whether of a physical, temporal, or spiritual nature, without work. Parents who send children to the public schools are generally forced, as a consequence, to do many things that are, perhaps, of a disagreeable nature—may be compelled, possibly, to deprive themselves of comforts, and sometimes the necessities of life, to do so. They work that their children may receive a common-school education. And what is true of public schools is equally true of Sunday-schools. If parents would have their children constantly grow and develop spiritually step by step, they must exert themselves with as much zeal as they would manifest in the common schools, although along somewhat different lines. Parents must be just as attentive, just as earnest, just as helpful in regard to their children in Sunday-school work, as in the other, if they would expect as successful results.

I shall now try to set forth some of the many ways in which parents may be helpful to Sunday-school scholars, if they would do their duty to their children, the Sunday-school, the church, and their God.

THE PARENTS THEMSELVES SHOULD BE REGULAR

scholars of the school if they would have their children interested in the work. Oftentimes the good or bad examples parents set before children speak louder than words, and exert a strong influence for either good or evil. Parents ought not to demand or expect children to attend a Sunday-school, when they themselves unnecessarily stay away. The more regular, the more earnest, the more zealous parent-scholars are, as a rule, the more so will their children become; while, on the other hand, if the parents are often tardy, careless, or indifferent to the work, they must expect their children, in a greater or less degree, to become the same. And while stay-at-home parents may insist upon their children attending Sunday-school, there will always be, with them, a certain influence lacking, a certain interest gone, that will prevent their attaining a high spiritual standing in the work, and prevent their reaching the best possible results. A parent's influence is worth volumes of teachers' talk.

THE PARENTS SHOULD BE GOOD SCHOLARS.

I mean by this that not only should they be regular attendants at school, but they should also have perfect lessons. By so doing they will be in a position to help their children in preparing their lessons, and be able to ask questions upon the lesson that will tend to awaken an interest in them for further study, until they will soon be eager to make greater progress in the work, that their child-natures, ever searching for something new and strange, may be satisfied. By thus arousing them they will be glad to study the lesson with you, because you will be so interesting in answering and asking questions that the Quarterlies will be of secondary consideration, and they will thus be thrown more upon their own resources,—which, by the way, is just the condition they should be in. So, let the parent remember that the moments spent in getting perfect lessons is time well spent, and to be sure to impart the knowledge thus gained, so far as practicable, to the child, but in such way as to create a thirst and hunger for independent study.

NEXT IN IMPORTANCE

to good parent-scholarship, the parent must remember to be always helpful. The child may be surrounded in the school by bright fellow scholars, may be taught by a competent teacher, and yet may lack just that knowledge or information that the careful, watchful parent can impart. Teachers can not be expected to be familiar with so many different minds and natures, in so great a degree, as the parents, and consequently can not instruct as well as the parent along some lines. The parent should encourage and aid in the preparation of the lesson; and at the close of the week should act as teacher to see if the child has learned the lesson perfectly. Ask the child the golden text, the memory verse, which should all be committed to memory perfectly; and then go through the lesson carefully. If every parent should follow some such method as here outlined, making suggestions here and there, and giving food withal for further research, what a different and better working school we should see everywhere. And until parents come to see their duty in this way we can never hope for children or the school to reach a higher standard than now exists.

SOME SMALLER ITEMS OF ADVICE

would be to see that the child is always at the school on time, and enforce this law upon the child's mind by setting the example yourself. A tardy scholar, whether young or old, is a needless impediment to the best interests of the school, and should be done away at once. Nothing speaks so much for the methodical goodness of a school as to see all scholars in their places when the time arrives to begin. See also that in entering or leaving the room, and during the school hour. Remember that you are in God's house, with his people, and therefore reverence and respect are rules to be plainly impressed upon the child's mind. Do not require the child to study too long or make the work of lesson-getting a disagreeable task to be dreaded. Sunday-school work, with children, must be conducted along natural lines; and, by your tact as parent, and coöperating in the child's work, lesson-learning should be as enjoyable and delightful a work as the most delightful pastime they enjoy. And it can be made so, too.

In conclusion I would say that rest upon the parent regarding Sunday-school work than upon any officer, teacher, or individual. Like as the experienced gardener can train a tree or vine, while young, to grow in any desirable shape or manner, so the parent can so instruct, aid, and train a child in the Lord's work that it will be obliged to grow and develop, just as the Lord would have it, and be a mighty factor in the young army of the cross, in making the Sunday-school and church stronger and better spiritually.

If you are a member of the church, it is your duty to bring the child up in Sunday-school work, in such a way that it will enter the church as a natural consequence, and because of its own desires. And a child that has been properly cared for and worked with by parents in the Sunday-school, will find the church of Christ the most natural and beautiful high school he could possibly wish to enter.

Parents, if you value your children's spiritual education, the Sunday-school's advancement, and the church's upbuilding, attend to these your reasonable duties, and as a result there will come into your life so much joy, peace, and happiness as to be more than a recompense for any labor you may have bestowed.—Wallace A. Small, for the Western Maine District Sunday-school convention.

RED FORK, Indian Territory, Sept. 9, 1905.

Editors Herald: I closed my debate at Red Fork, Indian Territory, yesterday at five o'clock. The Lord directed it all the way through, which makes me feel happy and rejoice in the great work of God. This makes about forty-three debates I have held, and wish to say my experience has richly taught me that Jesus Christ is running this work, directing his own marvelous work. Saints get it into their heads they can run it better than Christ, but this is the great mistake the human family has made for more than six thousand years.

Debates are like teaching alone in the pulpit. You can not do just as you want to every time, because the Lord knows best, and directs you for the best. If we humble ourselves in his hands, and say, Here, Lord, take me and use me, Christ can very easily confound the wise with the simple and weak.

I met Abe Carlin, Missionary Baptist, four years ago at Central City, Missouri, and the Lord gave us a nice victory. I told Abe Carlin we would give him five years to last against this work. I was called on the second time to meet Abe in Indian Territory the 24th of July, 1905.

The Lord showed me on Saturday night before the debate began on Monday, just how it would come out, and I would meet him one more time. I told some of the Saints I would never have to meet Abe Carlin again, at the close of the Red Fork debate. I told the people inasmuch as Abe Carlin had announced a series of articles in his paper, the Baptist Searchlight, I was not hunting debates, but wherever he assailed this work in the United States I am ready to meet him. Abe Carlin arose and said if we would furnish him a man, honest, and would not trick him, he expected to continue to fight this work; but he did not want to meet me any more. I told him after the close, whenever he wanted another whipping to let me know. No, he did not want another one, thank the Lord.

Let us be humble and prayerful, and God will bring to naught every hand raised against the work. (See Isaiah 54:16-18.)

I find the world ripe for harvest, and the laborers so few. I prefer to do no debating unless the Lord directs. I find great demand now for preaching everywhere in this Southland.

Bro. Earl D. Bailey and Bro. John Harp were with me at Red Fork debate. Bro. Earl D. Bailey I find to be a wise servant of the Lord, indeed; he is of much usefulness to the work. May he be blessed and continue long to help to redeem Zion.

Bro. John Harp and myself held a one-week meeting at Bro. Bailey's home. Bro. Harp baptized three precious souls and left many others near the kingdom, and the Saints rejoicing.

Dear Herald: I have not written to you before, but feel prompted to write now, and express praise and thanks to God for all his goodness and love to us, in these the latter days.

I had a vision in my dreams a few nights ago. It was so comforting and so beautiful that I am sending it to you, hoping it will be a comfort to Saints as it has been to me; for by it I know God is always watching, and will be near us as long as we trust in him.

I thought I had been talking to strangers about the gospel, and I left them and went outside their house; and as I looked toward the west I saw the clouds in the sky open; and I saw a woman come from amidst these clouds, robed in white with a silver vase in her hand, pouring oil on the earth. As she came quite close to me, I looked, and wondered what it meant. As I wondered, I saw a man that represented Christ, and another that represented Satan; they came out from between the clouds, as the woman had done, and they seemed to be racing through the air to the woman, who was pouring the oil on the earth. As they came up to her, she was on the right side of Christ, and Satan tried hard to turn round Christ to get to the woman, who was still pouring the oil on the earth. She did not seem to notice them, but went on doing her work. But Satan could not get to her, as Christ kept between him and her.

About two years ago, or a little more, I saw the same woman in a dream. She came out from amidst the same clouds, but she appeared more beautiful, and her robes were whiter, and the sky was clearer, and there was a silvery light resting upon her. She had a vase in her hand. I was wondering what it meant, when I heard a voice saying, This woman is pouring the oil on the earth for the last time.

The woman was the church of God, and the oil the gospel. I had the interpretation of my dream each time as it came, and I saw in the one a few days ago that the woman was the church here on earth, and Satan was trying to step in to destroy her, and he did try hard; but God was not going to let him, though her robes were not so white as they were two years ago, yet she was still pouring the oil on the earth.

It was a beautiful sight; and I thought I said, "What a lovely vision"; and felt we need not fear. As long as we do what is right, and are true to our covenant with our Master, he will be near us.

I believe this to be just as the church is now; and, dear Saints, let us all be watchful and prayerful, that our robes may be pure and white.

Your sister in Christ,

ANNIE BOE.

ATHENS, Missouri, September 14, 1905.

Editors Herald: I notice in the HERALD for the 30th ult. that reference is made to the affidavit of John W. Rigdon, and dates pointed out when Emma Smith visited her husband in the Liberty jail, subsequent to the time referred to by Mr. Rigdon, one of which was made in company with C. Baldwin's wife. When I was a youth I lived near an old brother by the name of Wheeler Baldwin, who died nearly twenty years ago at the age of ninety-four, so it was said. I understood from the Saints, in and around Stewartsville, that this Wheeler Baldwin was in jail with Joseph at the time he blessed his son and designated him to be his successor. I think his testimony must be in print somewhere,—perhaps taken by John T. Kinnaman, as I heard him refer several times to the testimony of Bro. Baldwin. I think Bro. Baldwin has a daughter yet living,—one he lived with during the latter years of his life,—a Sr. Toppan. Sr. Covington lived but a short way from Bro. Baldwin's and is a woman of excellent memory, and could probably tell when and where his testimony appears.

I am personally interested in getting at the facts, and would be pleased if some of these parties could give us authenticated facts. Perhaps C. P. Faul could look the matter up a little. Or perhaps the senior Editor knows something of Bro. Baldwin's printed testimony. I would like to see it appear in the HERALD for the use of the ministry.

Very kindly,

J. W. PETERSON.

CLINTON, Iowa, September 11, 1905.

Dear Herald: I have been thinking for some time of writing, and will try to find words to express some of my experiences of life, and hope they will be of some benefit to those who read.

I have been sick over three years and six months; have been able to sit up but very little the last five months. I have been tried with very bitter trials other than affliction of the body, but can say with thankfulness in my heart to God that I can see plainer and plainer God's loving hand in trials and affliction, according to my determination to live humble before him. And I can surely see that Satan is putting forth efforts to destroy my soul, and I earnestly plead for an interest in the prayers of the Saints that he may not overthrow me, but that I may continue to get farther and farther from under his mighty power of darkness, that I may not be a stumbling-block, but be an example in humility, even as God and Christ would have me to be.

I have been administered to a number of times but God has not seen fit to relieve me from affliction. It seems as though he is taking that way to remove more of the dross. If I had been more like what I ought to have been in former years, and not drifted along giving over to lusts of the flesh and things that perish, but had served God with full purpose of heart, there would not have been so much dross now. It seems that Satan knows that I am trying harder to live right, and has been taking an opportunity to darken my mind. But I want to say that God has fulfilled his promise to me, as he has to others, by comforting me with his Spirit of light.

"How many times discouraged we sink beside the way,
When all about is darkness; we hardly dare to pray;
But through the mists and shadows, the sweetest voice e'er known,

Says, Child, am I not with thee, ne'er to leave thee alone?"

Oh, what comfort! How one is made to praise God for a taste of his Spirit, for even just a few moments! What a contrast between the light of God and the power of darkness! I am made to see God's hand in my affliction in that I am better able to sympathize with others, and am made more free from selfishness. I can see plainer, as Nephi of old said, "Oh, wretched man that I am"; and as the apostle Paul, "When I would do good, evil is ever present with me."

Dear Saints, if we expect to be blessed with God's Spirit, we must serve him with all our might and with all our mind and with all our strength. Whatever we do, we should do as it were unto the Lord. We can not serve both God and Satan, neither can we serve self, and expect to receive a reward from God.

There are a few Saints here who meet together often; but some seem to be slow to keep this very important command. Those that meet hold Sunday-school every Sunday, and sacrament once a month on Sundays in the Good Templar's hall, preaching every Sunday night and prayer-meeting Wednesday nights at the Saints' houses.

There have been nine baptized here in the last two years. Lately the Saints have been trying to raise money for a church here, and I must say that they are doing exceedingly well considering the few and their financial condition. Quite a number of outsiders, some business men, are helping. They have not far from four hundred dollars at present. I do not think it would be out of the way for me to say that help would be gladly received from any one desiring to help. The president of the branch (Bro. Edward Voelpel) so expressed himself to me, and also others of the committee, that it would be all right to ask help from any of the HERALD readers who feel that they can help; we need it.

I certainly believe that if we had a good place to meet, and had a good street-preacher, there would be a few more honest souls brought into the kingdom here.

Bro. Marcus H. Cook was missionary here during the year of 1903, and the effect of his wise labors has not died out, nor do I believe they ever will. The Saints here have a warm spot in their hearts for him, according to what I have heard some of them say. If Bro. Cook sees this I would like to have him write me as I do not know his address and would like to write to him.

I should have said that we have a chance to buy a church-building and lot, which is in fair condition, at a very reasonable price; in a good location, being in the central part of town facing a park.

I have a strong determination to get nearer to God, to learn his way. I ask the Saints to pray for me that I may be healed, that I may not be a burden to those who are near and dear to me.

Your brother in Christ,

823 Tenth Avenue.

W. ALBERT WILSON.

STEWARTSVILLE, Missouri, September 12, 1905.

Editors Herald: As I have been in the church for about twenty-eight years, and have enjoyed many blessings, and have been healed many times by the power of God when I was sick nigh unto death, I can testify that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the right church. God's power and blessings are in it, and the signs do follow the believer, as promised in Mark 16:14-17. Even the disciples of Jesus did not believe that Jesus had arisen from the dead, and Jesus upbraided them, the eleven, with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen. Dear Saints and friends, it takes believers nowadays as well as in the olden time, and then will these signs surely follow: "In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues," etc.

I, for my part, can say there is nothing that could separate me from the love of Christ. I desire to be faithful to the end, so that I may enter that beautiful home above.

Your sister in Christ,

MARY DOBIE.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colorado, Sept. 11, 1905.

Editors Herald: Last week I was favored with the opportunity of spending a few days in Denver, then the center of the Grand Army maneuverings. Was kindly cared for at the home of Bro. Hamlin. The city was in her gala-day attire, and handsomely received her thousands of visitors, upon whom she made a splendid impression. Words of commendation and praise were heard on every hand for Denver. Of the vast number of veteran soldiers that thronged the streets, it is reported that there was not a drunken soldier seen anywhere. Good for Uncle Sam's boys. Fine example that can be followed with safety.

Yesterday (Sunday) I attended the meetings at the Saints' chapel, including the Sunday-school, and aided in the services, Brn. James Kemp, E. Curtis, and A. A. Baker of the ministry being present, and with Bro. E. F. Shupe took charge of meetings. Being a visitor I was accorded the honor of chief laborer. Some brethren from Kansas and Nebraska were present, names not remembered, and also Bro. and Sr. W. H. Peak of Washington, District of Columbia. It was a pleasant day. Our meetings seemed to be enjoyed. It was a pleasure to see and mingle with the Denver Saints. With others, dined with Bro. and Sr. Bellrose. Sr. Bellrose is a sister of Sr. Will S. Pender, and this helped to insure a home-like visit.

Sunday evening, previous, September 3, concluded our reunion and conference. The reunion was a success, and very much enjoyed by those in attendance. A committee was appointed to arrange for one to be held next year. The business of the conference was transacted with a pleasant feeling. A little partisan feeling was exhibited in selecting a district president, but the Saints have too good sense to allow little differences of opinion to carry them away to estrangement, so good feeling prevailed all through. Five were baptized during the meetings. There are good workers and defenders among the Saints of this district. Meeting here to-night. To-morrow we go to Pueblo, and thence to Salt Lake City.

Fraternally,

WM. H. KELLEY (of Iowa).

ESCATAWPA, Mississippi, August 31, 1905.

Dear Herald: I have been a member of the Latter Day Saint Church several years, and I still feel interested in the work. I have received many blessings from the Lord. I attended our last conference at Vancleave, Mississippi, and we had a real nice time. Elders A. V. Closson, W. L. Booker, and Alma Booker were there and we had good meetings all through the conference. We will hold the next conference at Three Rivers, Mississippi. Bro. A. V. Closson has visited us and preached several times, and I think he did good here in the church, and also in the outside world; but he has now gone back to his home in Independence, Missouri, on account of sickness.

We have a small Sunday-school here. There are not many Saints here, and it seems like most of the young people take more interest in the lodges than they do in the work of God; but I hope they will throw down the lodge religion and take a new step, and try to live near to God; for we feel we are living in the last days.

I hope all the Saints will pray for me that I may hold out faithful to the end; for I shall try to live better in the future than I have in the past.

Your sister in the faith,

MAMIE MILLER.

SALINA, Kansas, August 8, 1905.

Dear Herald: I have not heard a sermon since Brn. Gurwell and Teeters were here, I think over two years ago. I hope we will be able to have the gospel preached here again before long by Bro. Madden as soon as the busy time is over. It is almost impossible to get the people out to hear any one now; but our schoolhouse is open for preaching any time, and any of God's servants will always be welcomed at my home. I love this work, and try to do what I can to help roll the gospel on to the nations of the earth, so the honest-hearted can hear.

Pray for my family, that those who are yet out of the ark of safety may obey the gospel, and that husband may not give up the work, as he has apparently grown to care so little for it, and is careless about doing his duty. I have great faith in the prayers of God's servants, for the prayers of the righteous avail much. Pray for me that I may be found faithful, and not fall by the wayside.

Your sister in bonds,

MRS. ANNIE HARRIS.

BELFAST, Ireland, August 26, 1905.

Editors Herald: I reached Liverpool, England, July 13 in company with Brn. Rushton and LaRue, after a very pleasant voyage on the good ship Ivernia, having embarked July 4, and being out about eight days. On the vessel were six elders bound for foreign missions. Only one became seasick; Bro. Christensen, who was sick the entire voyage. He was bound for Denmark. The others were P. Anderson, J. A. Becker and wife, bound for Germany, Bro. J. W. Rushton, W. E. LaRue for Scotland, and myself for Ireland. We parted at Liverpool from those going to Germany, and in company with Brn. Rushton and LaRue we proceeded to the city of Manchester, arriving at noon, just in time to see King Edward and Queen Alexandra in procession to formally open the new canal dock. The city was beautifully decorated with natural flowers. I never saw such a variety and profusion of handsome flowers before. The people truly did honor to His Majesty. The people of England regard him as the greatest monarch they ever had. I was pleased to see this real devotion, and in accord with the multitude we respectfully lifted our hats as he passed by. After the procession had passed, we wended our way to the home of Bro. James Clark and were made welcome, and received the glad hand of friendship from his wife and daughter, Mrs. Ada Green, and son-in-law, Bro. J. W. Green. Arrangements having been made previous to our landing by Bro. H. Greenwood, district president of Manchester District, for our services, and in harmony therewith, Bro. LaRue and I began a series of meetings at the Northeast Branch over which Bro. Legget presides.

After continuing there for a fortnight we went to the East Branch over which Bro. Weate presides, and on the 5th of August the mission conference convened, Bro. J. W. Rushton presiding with dignity and care. Some of the business of a local nature waxed warm, but everything passed off nicely, and the parting hand was given all around with a "God bless you."

On the 10th of August we parted with Brn. Rushton and LaRue and those kind Saints at Manchester, stopping over at Warrington and forming the acquaintance of Bro. and Sr. Alfred Fysh and several other Saints, preaching for them once. Next morning we arrived at Liverpool and as the vessel would not sail until ten o'clock at night, we spent the day viewing the museum, art gallery, and library, all of which are very extensive and interesting to an American. To see those manuscripts of the Bible, and the letters written by Martin Luther and John Wesley, will never be forgotten by us. Liverpool is a very old and (to me) quaint city. At ten o'clock we went on board the steamer bound for Belfast, where we arrived at nine o'clock next morning, August 11. We hid ourselves to the Young Men's Christian Association building, and made our wants known (a boarding-house). We received a list of six names of respectable people where we might make arrangements for lodging, so I selected Number 39 Posnett Street, Mr. J. E. Bradbury, and made arrangements. Next day we called on the commissioner of police, laid before him our object in coming to Belfast, and he granted me the privilege of preaching on certain street-corners. We, being provided with a large valise full of tracts, began our work. I wish to say that this is a modern city of four hundred thousand inhabitants, seventy-five per cent Protestant. They of course divided among themselves, yet united against the church of Rome. There are several public speakers every nice evening, and Sunday afternoon, handling the question of the apostasy, as it refers to the Roman church; and Oh my! but they are hard on her. Of course there is strife and bitterness stirred up; sometimes I am told riots occur from it. I have seen a few fights during the meetings. Those speakers claim to be preachers; but they are simply agitators, and take up the proverbial collection by which they live. Amid this confusion we will press along, and try to bring about good results by our labors. I think the time is opportune for us to begin a work here. There are seven Utah elders here with a small following, and I by myself. Of course I feel lonesome, as it rains so much, and we do not get the same crowd to talk to even when we do preach. But we hope for good results.

It is hard for this people to see the necessity for a restoration. We expect Bro. Rushton and LaRue to come next week and help awhile; but soon cold weather will be here and then open-air services will be over. What we will do then we do not know. Just now I feel good in the work, and satisfied with my mission so far. If I had a companion to labor with, I would feel better.

Yours in hope,
WM. H. KELLEY (of Indiana).

CORONA, California, August, 26, 1905.

Dear Herald: I have been so greatly blessed within the last six weeks, I feel that I can not retain my happiness and joy, and will try to pen a few of my experiences with God. Praise his dear name! I have had in my twenty-six years of life many sorrows and troubles, and am now undergoing a great trial; but I feel perfectly reconciled to it, as long as God sees fit for me to so suffer it; for I believe in giving thanks and praise to God in all our afflictions. They are for a purpose, though we sometimes do not comprehend the reasons at the time. I have lately come to realize God's power as he deals with his children; and what a sweet consolation is his love and companionship to me!

I was baptized when twelve years old, and always loved God and prayed to him, and believed that I belonged to the right church; but when the subject of religion was mentioned I always became nervous and excited, and could never explain to my own satisfaction, or to those who questioned me, the reason of my hope in the Lord. It gave me great worry and uneasiness; for I had a fair knowledge of the work in reading the church publications. I never attended the church much, and was taken up very much with my work; for I worked away from home after I was sixteen years old, because my step-father mistreated me and I was forced to leave home on account of the extreme unpleasantness.

I say I was taken up with my work. Well, I was in a way, but still I could have given more attention to the church-work if I had chosen to do so; but I was then learning my lesson, as I have since found out. I always defended the work the best I could; but, oh, I would get so discouraged, and be so unhappy at times. Yet, I never forgot to go to God in those hours of sorrow and anxiety. I would pray to him to guide, and to forgive me my many weaknesses.

As time rolled on I became acquainted with a young man, older than myself, and married him. And although I loved him, and he was good to me, yet I was not even so happy as before I became his bride. He was, and is yet, out of the church; and at the time I married my mother cautioned me about marrying out of the church. But I was so infatuated with him I forgot my duty to God. In fact I seemed to forget everything but his love and presence. But, as I said before, I was very unhappy with him; for we were not married long till I began to realize his weakness,—the drink habit. When we had been married three years it seemed to me as if I would lose my reason. I could think of nothing but his welfare; and I prayed earnestly to God in his behalf.

When it came to the point where I felt, if I was not relieved in some manner, I would certainly lose my mind, I went to God again, this time in fasting and prayer. I prayed and fasted for nearly three days. I felt that something must be done, so I asked God if it were his will that my husband should understand the truth, to manifest himself to me in this way: There was a corpse in the next neighbor's house at this time, and I felt that if it were God's will, I knew he could raise up this girl, for it seemed to me nothing short of a miracle would ever arouse my husband's interest; for he would not read, nor let me read or talk to him upon the subject that so engrossed my mind. My wifely entreaties were of no avail on this subject; for he had promised me too many times that he never would drink again. I felt that I could not do anything for him that way. I asked God if it were his will, that my prayers might be answered, and that this girl might be raised up, so that he could see the power of God and realize his goodness to his children.

I had to try many times before I could get up off the bed that morning to attend this funeral, for I felt that I must go and see her; I felt that if I could only have the strength to go to her and look at her closely she would arise. I went with a fast-beating heart to the church, and, oh, the feeling that I had was indescribable; for I had not the strength to go and look at her closely. I turned my head away and walked to my seat and sobbed at my weakness. I thought, "Oh, that my faith could have been stronger." But I felt reconciled to my father's will and did not murmur or complain. I did not then realize that God was answering my prayer; for my husband never drank a drop from that time. And although I had not asked him that blessing, yet it was the thing I needed the most. I wondered at his change, and it was some time before I realized how God had blessed me, his weak and foolish handmaiden.

We afterwards moved to Jefferson, Iowa, and we stayed there through the summer of 1904, and saved enough to come back to Los Angeles, my home. My companion secured his old position again near Los Angeles, and we moved there. Everything went along smoothly enough until I began to go with a neighbor to some meetings in the town, which I could see my husband did not like. I told him I would not go any more, but I still went to my neighbor's house, and we would talk upon the gospel. She rejected my words. I told her that there was a greater light for her, if she wanted to accept it, and then asked God to bless her, and left her.

At this time I was praying very earnestly for my husband for he never was so bitter against religion. If I would mention anything about God or religion he would become angry and say he did not want anything to do with God and religion; and this of course was my hardest trial. I prayed all the more, and I was so interested in his welfare that I told the Lord if I could make any sacrifice in any way to help to save him I was perfectly willing, and as soon as I made this prayer I began to fail; I lost my appetite; I could not eat; yet I felt so happy all the time.

But let me here mention a little conversation between my husband and myself at the dinner-table one day. I said something to him about God, and he says, "Let us not mention religion any more; it is a topic that I do not wish to have mentioned." I says, "Harry, I will not again mention religion to you; but I wish you to know that you never have given me the chance to tell you what my belief in God is; but remember that the God of heaven will punish you if you continue in this manner." He says, "God may punish me in the next world." "But," I replied, "God will punish you in this world. And remember my words, the blow may be a heavy one; but he will punish you just the same." This utterance from my lips was a very startling and unusual one, and unnerved him in such a way that he turned very pale, and great drops of perspiration stood out on his forehead.

Well, I could not eat, neither could he; and I could see and feel the mighty tumult that was raging in his unsaved soul. I told my sister that I felt I was going to die if something was not done, for I was in such a nervous condition that I could not even swallow food but could only drink milk; and I did all I could to try to keep my strength which was fast giving way. I realized that I was very near death. My folks could not believe it, because I was able to be up and around. It gave me no troubled thought, so far as I was concerned; for I wanted so bad to go, longed to go, although if God desired me to live I was willing to still go on with this life.

My husband telephoned for the doctor. The doctor came, felt of my pulse, said it was good; but he was afraid I would not take his medicine. Some one had told him something about my religion, and when he saw he had no influence over me he became angry, and did not come back till my husband went after him, when he said, "I will come as often as your wife wishes me to come." I thought if he was mad about it he did not need to come. I knew his services were useless, because no other than the power of God could save me.

I told my friend who was with me that the only way for me to be cured was by God's power. I told her to go and ask my husband if he was ready to hear me. He was ready to listen. Yes, God works very mysteriously sometimes. My husband came and listened to what I had to tell him, although he never expected to, neither did I expect him to listen so soon. I then asked my friend to send for Bro. Williams to come and administer to me. He could not come very well, so Bro. Clapp came instead and administered to me, asking God to give me faith and courage, the two things that I needed the most. And I feel that God is still blessing me with that faith and courage, else I should surely faint by the wayside; for my trials are very great. Although my husband has acknowledged God, and I think believes in the doctrines of the true church, as far as he knows them, yet he is so indifferent, and will neither read nor mention religion. I fear that if he does not accept the truth, God will yet lay his hand heavily upon him. For God will surely punish us if we continue in the wrong when we realize our duty and do it not. I know this to be true by experience; for I have been punished for marrying out of the fold of Christ. But I am thankful for every trial God has placed upon me that has been the means of bringing me to a clearer understanding of the gospel.

I feel to rejoice as I never did before in the truth of this work; for I know it is of God, and I hope that what I have written may be a help to souls who are struggling on to gain the glorious victory.

In conclusion I wish to repeat these beautiful words which come to me, and which I love to sing:

I know, O Christ, that thou dost see
The hidden motive of my soul,
Each word, each thought, is known to thee,
And thou my righteous Judge must be,
When like a heavy parting scroll,
The quaking heavens asunder roll.

I know thy judgment will be just;
But, Oh! Thy gentleness is great;
Thou knowest that thy child is dust,
I will not faint, O Christ, but trust
In thy dear, loving hands my fate,
Thou canst not leave me desolate.

Find inclosed five dollars for an offering. I have sent this as a sacrifice, for I will be obliged to do without things that I would otherwise have gotten with this money. But I love Christ more than anything else, and am willing to sacrifice anything for his cause. I was willing to give my life for the soul of my companion; and I am yet willing to make any sacrifice for his sake.

May God's blessing rest upon his people. May Zion soon be gathered, is my prayer; for I do long for that glorious day to come, when we will all sing that glad song to the Lamb of God.

Pray for me, dear Saints, that if it be God's will I may be restored to health. But his will be done, not mine.

Your sister in Christ,

COOKES POINT, Texas, September 7, 1905.

Editors Herald: I am at home again. The last time I went out into my field was something over two weeks since; on account of sickness of the people I could not hold a series of meetings anywhere, and I took sick myself. We have lots of bilious sickness in these parts this year. I have had more detriments to hinder me from preaching this year than I have had in one year since I have been in the missionary field. I came home from General Conference this year very buoyant. Soon after I was crippled in one of my legs by a wind storm. I went out in the field at once; my leg inflamed so bad in a short time I was confined to bed and house for about six weeks.

Again I went out in the field, and in a short time I was taken with a severe attack of bilious fever which kept me confined to bed and house about a month. Again I went out in my field and returned a few days since, sick; and when I came home found my wife sick with bilious fever, and since she has had a severe time with other troubles. Besides the above hindrances I have had some sore trials to endure which are very trying, but I am still in the faith, thank God; and when I can I am going to preach the gospel outside of the branches of the church as I am a missionary altogether now, being relieved of the presidency of Texas Central District of late. I intend to serve God for ever, no matter what hindrances come in my way.

Yours in the conflict,

E. W. NUNLEY.

Stewartsville Reunion.

From September 1 to 10, 1905, Bro. B. J. Dice's beautiful grove, situated twenty-two miles east of St. Joseph, Missouri, on the Hannibal Railroad, was the scene of activity, by the Saints from the Far West, Nodaway, and other districts, as they assembled for the thirteenth annual reunion of the Far West, Missouri, District.

Many of the Saints look forward to these gatherings with fond anticipations, when they can meet together to worship Israel's God, have their spiritual strength renewed, greet old-time friends, and form new acquaintances.

We are reminded that many who would like to have this privilege are denied owing to their circumstances.

Some whom we greeted last year have passed the silent river to join the majority, and finally meet in that grand reunion where parting will be no more.

Word comes from the West and the East, from those who have heretofore met with the Saints of the Far West District upon similar occasions, and rejoiced with them; and while hills and valleys do separate them from our presence, yet they desire the Saints of the Far West District to know that they still think of them and the spiritual feasts they have had together, and are hopeful for the triumph of the Lord's work, with those to whom it has been intrusted. We refer to Brn. J. M. Terry, T. W. Chatburn, and William Lewis, who have endeared themselves to the Saints of the Far West District.

Elders T. T. Hinderks and I. N. Roberts were chosen to preside over the reunion. The order of meetings was about the same as is usually carried on at these gatherings, except the fifteen minutes to eleven service for the first four or five days, Sunday excepted, which was devoted to the work of the auxiliaries, Bro. J. A. Gunsolley having charge of this department. He informed us that he will have help next year.

Bro. A. H. Smith and daughter, H. C. Smith, and F. B. Blair bade us good-bye Friday the 8th, and departed for reunion at Moorhead, Iowa. After Bro. Blair's departure Bro. I. N. Roberts looked after the church publications: From the jingle of the "shekels," and the way people carried off the books, I think he filled Bro. Blair's place creditably.

Forty or more tents were on the grounds. The inclemency of the weather several days during the week hindered the attendance to some extent throughout the week. Sundays the attendance was very good.

Saturday was children's day. The young people's prayer-meeting at nine o'clock in the morning, I thought, was the best prayer-meeting during the reunion, a goodly number of the young taking part. At two o'clock in the afternoon the children rendered a very nice program, an outside Sunday-school taking part with them.

Bro. "Charles P." had his hands full most of the time, in looking after the wants of the campers, as well as the fair young maidens,—well, some may not be so young. "Cholly," you know, is quite an adept along this line. However, Charles P. has a large heart, as well as hands, and does his part for the success of the reunion.

All passed off nicely, very little complaining or grumbling about the weather. Saints seemed cheerful, and went away with renewed courage to fight the fight of faith.

It was decided to hold another reunion in 1906.

ONE WHO WAS THERE.

Extracts from Letters.

A. C. Barmore, 65 Nelson Street, Rozelle, Sydney, Australia: "I moved from Brisbane to this city recently. Arrived here the 10th inst. Am receiving some money on our tent fund in response to my appeal in the HERALD and Messenger. Hope to get more."

Dorothy Braun, Loraine, Kansas: "My husband and I are the only Saints at Loraine, and we do not hear any preaching, yet we try to explain the restored gospel as best we can, and ask the prayers of the Saints that we may hold out faithful. The HERALD and Ensign contain all the preaching we are privileged to enjoy."

Normal rates have been restored by all lines between Chicago, Buffalo, New York, Boston and other Eastern points, and the Nickel Plate Road is still prepared to furnish strictly first class service between Chicago and the East, in their three daily through trains to New York and Boston, at rates as low as obtain by any other line. Meals served as you like, in the dining-car, either a la carte, club, or table d'hote, but in no case will a meal cost more than one dollar. Our rates will be of interest to you, and information cheerfully given by calling at 111 Adams Street or addressing John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 113 Adams Street, Room 298, Chicago. 33-36-4t

Graceland Opens.

The attention of the church is called to the opening of Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, for the year 1905-1906, which takes place on Tuesday morning, September 26, at 9:30 o'clock. Unusual interest has been manifested by those in authority to make the coming year one of striking advancement. Everything seems promising, and I am glad to give to the people of the church a most cordial invitation to cooperate with us in furthering the interests of Christian education throughout the borders of the church. Some of you should change your mind and send that boy or girl to Graceland; for you may not have the opportunity again. The sympathy and encouragement of the membership in our behalf assists materially in this effort for humanity.

Bishop E. L. Kelley of Lamoni, so well known throughout the church, will give the address; Miss Grace Meigs of Chicago, the new instructor in vocal music, will be introduced to the students and the community in general at this time in one of her solos; Miss Ida M. Stemmer, director of the music school, will appear in a piano solo and in a reading; Elder F. B. Blair of the board of trustees will lead in the devotional part of the program.

The young people will find me in the office for registration, classification, and enrollment on Saturday and Monday. All should come to the office on these days, as classes meet on Tuesday and all, to get the most advantage, should meet with the class the first day.

Yours for service,

R. M. STEWART, Acting President.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of Kirtland District; Greeting: With love to all and for the work in which we are engaged, let us be workers together with God to establish his church and kingdom, and do his will here on earth, and to prepare a people for his coming, whose right it is to reign. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."—1 John 3:2. On what conditions are we the sons of God? "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."—1 John 1:7. "He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him. But he that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes."—1 John 2:10, 11. "These things write we unto you, that your joy may be full." Now if I hate my brother whom I have seen, how can I love God whom I have not seen? Brethren, let us consider the above and cultivate and nourish the spirit of forgiveness. Let us remember that if we forgive not our brother, our heavenly Father will not forgive us.

We will visit every branch in the district during this conference year, if the Lord wills, and hope all the priesthood, especially those who are presiding officers of branches, will do all in their power to build up and strengthen the branches. Put away every root of envy, malice, hatred, strife, and bitterness from among you, and then see how we will move along in righteousness, the church be built up, the membership increased, and the work prosper every way.

Now to the scattered Saints: Let us hear from every one of you, and will try to find you and do the best to visit or hold meeting in your midst. Send all mail to home address: R. F. D. 1, Ray, Indiana, until we announce mission address.

Your brother in Christ,

G. A. SMITH.

BRYAN, Ohio, September 8, 1905.

The Bishopric.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

The Saints and friends of Northern Idaho District will please take notice that upon the resignation of Bro. James Jennings, former agent, and recommendation of the Northern Idaho District conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Bro. Myron J. Durfee has been duly appointed Bishop's agent in and for said district.

We recommend Bro. Durfee to the consideration and trust of the Saints and friends in and for said district, and trust the Lord will bless those who assist him in performing his work in connection with the financial work of the district, sustaining the work and thus proving that they are disciples indeed.

The thanks of the Bishopric are also extended to Bro. James Jennings for his faithful services as agent, and we trust that he may be blessed in efforts for good in whatever way he may engage for the Master in the future.

In behalf of the Bishopric,
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.
LAMONI, Iowa, September 9, 1905.

Appointment of Missionary.

To Whom It May Concern: Bro. Samuel Stroh is hereby authorized to labor in the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District, and is commended to all with whom he may associate.
J. W. WIGHT, Missionary in Charge.
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

September 12, 1905.

To the Saints and Friends of Northeastern Illinois District: We hereby authorize Elder J. Arthur Davis to labor in the above district for the balance of the conference year, and hereby recommend him for such labor.

J. W. WIGHT, Missionary in Charge.
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

September 12, 1905.

Resolution of Condolence.

Whereas it has pleased God in his wisdom to remove from our midst by death, our worthy brother and colaborer, Elder J. B. Roush.

Therefore be it resolved that in his removal, the church has lost a faithful and efficient laborer, the county a respected citizen, and his family a loving husband and father.

Therefore as we bow in submission to the will of heaven, we extend to the bereaved our heartfelt sympathy, and pray that we may live worthy to meet our brother when the Saints shall receive their reward as the righteous of earth at the coming of the Master to reward us as our works shall be.

Resolved that a copy of this resolution be spread upon the records of the Eastern Colorado District, and also forwarded to the widow of our beloved brother, and to the church papers for publication.

Respectfully submitted,
E. F. SHUPPE,
J. F. CURTIS,
J. N. DUNCAN, Committee.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colorado, Sept. 2, 1905.

Expelled.

Having been informed that John R. Wedlock has been preaching since he was expelled from the church by act of district conference, March 18, 1905, for cause, and of which he was duly notified, the church and public are hereby notified that said Wedlock holds no membership or office in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and that we will not be held responsible for his acts, official or otherwise.

A. M. BAKER, President.
J. C. CHRISTENSEN, Secretary.

Southern Missouri District, September 15, 1905.

Reunion Postponement.

Saints and friends of the Western Nebraska and Black Hills District will please take notice that on account of lack of interest by those of the priesthood as well as of the laity, it is deemed proper by those who have to bear the burden of a successful reunion, that the committee postpone the selecting of a place to hold a reunion for one year, believing this will meet with the approval of nearly all, if not all concerned.

Your servants for Christ's sake,
J. L. DETRICK, Chairman Committee.

Two-Day Meetings.

When planning a business or pleasure trip from Chicago to Buffalo, New York, Boston or any eastern point, you should investigate the satisfactory service afforded by any of the three express trains operated by the Nickel Plate Road. Colored porters are in charge of coaches, whose duties are to look after the comfort of passengers while enroute. THE BONDAGE OF PRIESTCRAFT.

The following from the Salt Lake Tribune, if not overstated, and we have reason to think it is not, reveals to some extent the deplorable condition of the people in the West:

There is not a Mormon in the world who has not in the last few years heard or uttered words to this effect: "Never mind, they are our leaders; and they are called of God and the people to their high station. If they commit error and injustice, it is not for us to criticise. Let us do our duty humbly and obediently. If they wrong us, the Lord will reward us in his own due time. It is dangerous for us to criticise them in any way, because criticism may lead to apostasy; and therefore it is better to do as the will of God directs—reverence and obey the authorities—and we are sure to be right in the long run."

To what a state of abject servility must a people have descended who can so debase the principles of liberty and freedom as to utter the above! That "they are our leaders" does not exempt them from obligation to observe the principles of truth and justice; and even a call from God would not be sufficient reason for the exercise of tyranny, nor should a people because of it submit to an erroneous and unjust policy without a protest. A leader is to lead, not to drive. Christ is the perfect example of a leader. He taught the way of righteousness and then by his own life showed the people how to walk in it.

While we are rightly commanded to forgive all men, not only their unintentional errors and mistakes, but their deliberate trespasses inasmuch as they repent, and also in the absence of the fruits of repentance upon their part, yet we are not commanded to sustain any man in a course of continued carrying out of policy that is out of harmony with, or in flagrant violation of the laws of the land, the rules of the church, or the code of good morals. No man is entitled to be sustained under such circumstances, and no one is bound to sustain him. And yet such demands are frequently made, and are acceded to. For instance, witness the testimony of Reed Smoot at Washington:

The Chairman.—Have you protested against his [Joseph F. Smith] living in polygamous cohabitation?

Senator Smoot.—I have not.

The Chairman.—Have you in any way sought to bring him to trial for those offenses?

Senator Smoot.—I have not.

The Chairman.—Do you intend to?

Senator Smoot.—I do not.

The Chairman.—Do you remember how many children he said had been born to him since 1890?

Senator Smoot.—I think he said eleven.

The Chairman.—And by all of his five wives?

Senator Smoot.—That I am not positive of.

The Chairman.—Now, with the full knowledge of these facts, testified to by him, you sustained him in October last?

Senator Smoot.—I did.—Proceedings before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, vol. 3, p. 237.

Did Smoot testify thus, and would he carry out the intentions expressed, for policy's sake? Was it with a desire to retain the good favor of the president and officials of the Mormon church? What can be said of a man who will deliberately uphold, condone, and defend that which he knows to be criminal? The picture is not a pleasant one. And it is absolutely impossible for us in any sense to uphold, defend, and keep in the background that which is wrong and immoral and should be discountenanced, without getting into line with men of the Smoot character. It may be taking but a little step to keep some wrong in the background, but if it retards a full restitution and a complete repentance, it works an uncalculable injury, and may for ever cripple the usefulness of the one whose welfare is sought. And after the first step is taken it requires but another to reach the point where evil and crime are cloaked and covered up, and without hardly knowing it the conscience has been withered until it is willing to indorse the defense of anything for policy's sake, or that business interests or social name may not suffer loss; and the owner of such a conscience ceases to be a free man. He is an object of pity; not one who should be dealt with in an unforgiving spirit, but nevertheless one whom the people should respectfully decline to sustain in any position of honor or trust.

"Criticism may lead to apostasy." It also may lead and has led to excommunication. But apostasy from error and evil should be welcomed by the critic; and excommunication from the support of and the implication in crime and immorality, should be gratefully received. However, there is a vast difference between heartless criticism of an honest effort, whatever the mistake, and criticism of deliberate wrong-doing for policy's sake or for business reasons.

"Therefore it is better to do as the will of God directs—reverence and obey the authorities—." This is a very specious plea, by whomsoever made. Nowhere is there a word of divine injunction to reverence and obey, or have confidence in, or uphold ecclesiastical authorities, of whatever name or nature, who are not also commanded to make themselves worthy of confidence and trust or reverence. To expect respect and confidence from others, while acting in a manner to entirely forfeit all right to receive is preposterous. Confidence and trust are inspired in the heart of an individual when he sees in another the manifestation of the Christ character, when he sees a strict adherence to that which is right, when he sees a consistent and determined resistance of everything that is wrong, whether in the world, in the church, in the family, or in his own life. Witnessing the opposition to evil in the world, and the indorsement or commiseration of the same in the church, does not beget trust. To controvert wrong in the lives of the brethren, and palliate the same in those of the near kinship circle or family, does not beget confidence. Excusing in self what is condemned in all others, does not beget reverence. The mere fact that a man may have been called of the Lord, of itself is not sufficient to warrant or demand implicit trust, confidence, and reverence from any one. He is only entitled to this by a demonstration in life and character that he is worthy of it.

The Lord does not force any man upon a people with the command to reverence and obey, nor even to trust implicitly until he shall have approved himself to them, and manifested that he is worthy of confidence. This thought is made clear in Doctrine and Covenants 122:5. The Lord in explaining why he placed the Twelve under responsibility, in connection with the Bishop, to execute the law of tithing, says:

The one whom I had called to preside over the church, had not yet approved himself unto the scattered flock; and I gave this command unto the quorum next in authority in spiritual things that the scattered ones, and those who had been made to suffer might have assurance that I would not suffer that he whom I had called should betray the confidence of the faithful, nor squander the moneys of the treasury for the purposes of self.

This shows that those whom the Lord calls are expected first to approve themselves to the people in order that they may receive that trust, confidence, and reverence that is due.

The extent to which the Mormon people have been brought under bondage is to be regretted; but they have no one to blame but themselves. However, those who are in a position to comprehend the awfulness of such a condition should draw a lesson from it. No church can foster the violation of the principles of truth and justice and right-doing and long escape the depths of degradation to which the Utah church has fallen. May the Lord deliver the Reorganized Church from the possibility of such a calamity.

L. A. G.

THE absurd fallacy, "you must honor the priesthood," meaning Joseph F. Smith, is being seen through nowadays by the youth of Zion. Recently a Mormon boy, not yet out of his teens, told by his father that he must honor Joseph F.—the priesthood—asked, "If Joseph F. is the priesthood how was he conferred on Joseph, the Prophet, when he wasn't born?"—Utah State Journal.

A TESTIMONY.

Shortly after publishing John W. Rigdon's affidavit we received the following unsolicited testimony as to the Prophet's successor, and the doctrine of polygamy. We cheerfully give it place:

Dear Herald: On reading a late HERALD and Ensign I felt impressed to write the following, for surely there must be others who will remember it as well as myself. At the October conference of 1855, in Brigham's discourse, he said, "I am not a prophet, nor the son of a prophet; but Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and his son, young Joseph, will take his father's place. The time will come when he will roar in these mountains like a lion; then, I, your humble servant, will step aside."

Some time afterwards in a discourse he said, "There are some who don't believe I am a prophet; and some of you sisters don't believe in polygamy. Ask the Lord."

I thought to myself, That is good advice, I will do it. Having heard him acknowledge he was no prophet, that did not trouble me, but I had a great desire to know concerning polygamy. I prayed earnestly, feeling that if I knew it was right I would never oppose it. As I sought the Lord before retiring I had the assurance that I should receive an answer that night. Falling asleep, I appeared to be in a large field of beautiful wheat, the heads just beginning to turn ripe. As I gazed upon the scene, the clouds began to gather over the field till it was quite dark, and the rain descended in torrents, beating the wheat to the ground. Feeling very sorrowful I said, "What does this mean? Is there going to be another famine? Only a little of that wheat can be saved, and that will be somewhat mildewed." I looked up and a personage stood by my side whose countenance looked so pure, but in great trouble. I thought he was sent for my guide. We walked along the road for quite a distance, he with his head bowed down in an exceedingly sorrowful manner. At last we came to a large building. Looking up at him, I said, "This is Brigham's," to which he most solemnly and slowly replied, "This is an abomination and a whoredom in the sight of your heavenly Father." Every word seemed to penetrate my very being, and I awoke.

C. ACKERLEY.

HE DID IT.

In an article called "The truth about Mormonism," published in Out West, Joseph F. Smith of Utah, after speaking of the death of the Prophet and his brother, says: "Brigham Young succeeded to the sacred powers and presidential position held by Joseph Smith. Choosing two counselors, he reorganized the first presidency, filled the vacancies thus occasioned in the quorum of twelve, and otherwise set the church in order in its new gathering-place."

Yes, He did it. He assumed the leadership of the church. Previous to this the Lord had chosen the leader. He chose two counselors. Previously they had been designated by revelation. He filled the vacancies "thus occasioned" in the twelve. Prior to this the Lord had revealed and directed important work of this kind. But now Brigham Young does it all.

Of the factions that were led away after the death of the Prophet and his brother, how many relied upon revelation in designating men who should occupy as president, counselors, and apostles? Every one departed from the established precedent. All went so far from God that he could have nothing to say or do in the work of "organizing and setting in order."

To the Reorganized Church alone belongs the distinction of adhering to the early practice. The Reorganization alone has continued in sufficient nearness to receive the manifestations of his will from time to time, designating the men to occupy as leaders, choosing counselors, organizing and filling vacancies in the Quorum of Twelve, and regulating the affairs of the church.

When any church wanders so far away from heaven that God has nothing to say with regard to who shall occupy as leaders and "special witnesses," it is entitled to the allegiance of no man who believes in God, and men of sound judgment should refuse to lend their aid in support of such an institution.

L. A. G.

THE Elders' Journal, edited and published by Elder Ben E. Rich of the Utah church, in its issue for September 15, under the heading, "John W. Rigdon's testimony confirmed," produces the testimony of Orange L. Wight, son of Lyman Wight, who claims to have visited his father many times in Liberty jail. He states that he can not recollect of ever hearing the subject of an ordination mentioned, and adds: "My father, Lyman Wight, nor my mother, never alluded to it during their lifetime in my presence, so I take it for granted that Joseph, the son of the prophet Joseph Smith, was not ordained to fill the place of his father, in the Liberty jail."

Taking the statement just as it is worded, it is undoubtedly all true, as the son of the Prophet makes no claim of an ordination in Liberty jail. But the intention is to invalidate the claim that the son of the Prophet was blessed by his father in the jail. Notice, too, that Mr. Wight takes it all "for granted."

However, if we should "take it for granted," which we do not, that Lyman Wight did not witness the blessing in the jail, yet he is on record by his own writing as witnessing a blessing shortly after the release from jail that is sufficient in connection with other evidences to establish the fact that the Prophet blessed and set apart his son to take his place after his departure. These evidences are clearly pointed out in True Succession in Church Presidency, by Heman C. Smith.

We commend the following piece of divine writ to Joseph F. Smith, and to all the offending hierarchs, and to the Deseret News: "Where there is no vision the people perish; but he that keepeth the law, happy is he."—Utah State Journal.

JOSEPH F. SMITH CHALLENGED TO PROVE HIS RIGHT TO LEADERSHIP.

Among those who are succeeding in making themselves prominent in the fight against the pernicious practices of the Mormon "hierarchy" is a young man of more than ordinary pluck, by the name of John H. Scott.

Mr. Scott has lately written an exposure of the priestcraft of the Mormon church, and has issued a challenge to Joseph F. Smith to meet him in discussion at the October conference. The Utah State Journal has the following to say, editorially, of Mr. Scott and his work:

The State Journal in this issue prints the most remarkable address to the prophet and the "Mormon" people that has ever been given to them in the history of the church.

The document is a clever and effective essay on priesthood and priestcraft, and as such should be read by every "Mormon"; and besides is a clear-cut challenge to Joseph F. Smith to defend his title as God's prophet with the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as the basis of authority.

John H. Scott is a young man, about twenty-eight years of age, a devout Latter-day Saint, who believes that the "Mormon" leaders should exemplify in their lives—public as well as private—the priesthood which they claim God has bestowed upon them; and that the church should be led out of commercialism, which means strife, and discord, and selfishness, and cruelty, and poverty, and crime, as the inevitable concomitant. He is unpretentious, humble, sincere, earnest, devoted, pure, a typical follower of Christ, as may be seen in his admonitions to the Deseret News, the Tribune, and to those who feel it to be their duty to oppose Joseph F. Smith.

This man Scott can not be ignored. Joseph F. Smith refused to meet him privately; he must meet him publicly (at the Sunday morning session of the October conference) or, as Mr. Scott says, Joseph F. Smith will for ever disgrace Mormonism and dishonor his claim to divine leadership.

There are so many good points in Mr. Scott's article which are worthy the consideration of all thinking people, that we reproduce it below entire. It has the right ring, is straightforward and manly; and in our judgment those to whom it is addressed will manifest slinking cowardice to ignore it. They may consider it their duty to stand upon their "dignity," and refuse to meet him upon the grounds that he is an apostate, a mischief-maker, and beneath their notice, but such action will only increase the dissatisfaction, distrust, and contempt that is finding lodgment in the minds of people who have been duped. Mr. Scott writes as follows:

Since addressing the Mormon people through the columns of the Salt Lake Tribune, many sincere and thinking people have said, "We admit that what you say is true and scriptural, but you have no authority to set yourself up to instruct others until called upon by those in authority over you, and even though the leaders may be going astray, it is not for you to correct them."

In some of my former articles I have stated that false doctrines exist in the Mormon church, and the above expression is one of them which I will prove.

The church teaches that the Constitution of the United States of America is of divine origin, and it provides religious liberty, free expression of thought to all American citizens. By the former doctrine a man who has a truth or principle to proclaim that would bring light to error or falsehood among his leaders, could wait for ever before they would call upon him to express himself. All true principles will exalt humanity, and all false doctrines will debase it.

But the condition has arisen in the Mormon church, in which any one who has a truth to proclaim that will benefit those who accept it, must wait until given authority by the leaders before he may express himself publicly. And they are very careful to see that he is not given authority, if his proclamation should show up their departure from the truth.

Past history has manifested the same opposition to progress by those whose inferior methods and doctrines were put in the shade by new light. The above doctrine has been one of the most effectual in suppressing progress, and is diametrically opposed to the constitution of the land and to the truths of the scriptures and to all common sense and reason.

In the Mormon church there are honest, virtuous people being ostracised and excommunicated for even advocating truths that their standard church works contain. The three standard church-works, viz.: Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, all teach the principle that he who knows how to do good and waits until commanded is under condemnation, and that all men should be anxiously engaged in uplifting humanity of their own free will. But in the face of their own church works and in defiance of religious liberty provided by the Constitution, they have virtually set up this heresy, "You mustn't proclaim any elevating principle or quote scriptures that show the departure of the file leaders from the truth until called upon by those same men." There are numbers of honest, sincere, and industrious people throughout Mormondom who will not read a book or pamphlet written by one of their own number unless it has the indorsement and approval of the first presidency, regardless of the fact that it contains the teachings of their own accepted church works. They submit their free agency and reason to the judgment of three men.

What would they think of a man who told them that they must not accept an improved washing-machine, mower, or new school system until it is first indorsed by the first presidency? Would they not think him a fool? Yet at the same time they will reject any facts and principles that would alleviate their burdens of life, if understood, because some of their leaders are incapable of discerning reform from inertia, and do not give their approval. Their own books teach that "cursed is he who putteth his trust in man," and "to the law and to the testimony, if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them." And yet they will ostracise a man who points out from their accepted scriptures those truths which condemn them and their leaders, and raise the cry, "But we have the living oracles," "Obey the priesthood," even though it departs from the written law. Oh, you foolish people; how long are you going to submit to priestcraft? Is it to be supposed that the leaders of any organization would sanction or approve the exposure of their departure from the truth?

How long are you going to shut your mouths for fear of men, when you daily admit that all is not well in Zion? I desire to warn you that if you will not stand up as men and as American citizens for the cause of truth and liberty, you will bring the sword of this whole nation upon you. Is there not a man of foresight among you? Have your prophets and your wise men become so blind that they can not see the calamity that you are all being led into? Are we Mormon people going to stand as a monument of priestcraft to the world for ever? How long, I say, how long will you, you who boast of your freedom and liberty, permit men to intimidate you by threatening your church standing? Have you so little knowledge of heaven's truths that you do not know that any power or influence which prevents or suppresses men from speaking freely from the depths of the soul is nothing more nor less than priestcraft of the gravest type, and is in violation of the heaven-inspired Constitution, and is no more the priesthood of God than darkness is light?

Let me again warn you that if you continue to permit your leaders to excommunicate any man for merely proclaiming truth of any form or nature, even though it condemns your sustained leaders, I say again, you will bring the wrath of this whole nation down upon you. Neither will God recognize any men who uphold priestcraft contrary to the constitution, for according to your own books their priesthood ceases when they do those things.

It has become the custom to excommunicate any man who persists in proclaiming truths, even though taken from the Mormon church works, if they condemn the leaders. He is then ostracised and pointed at as being an apostate, and a rumor is circulated that he has committed some gross sin, or that he is insane; while at the same time they will not meet him with the scriptures or prove his reported immorality.

I have many friends throughout Mormondom; some are prejudiced because of the stand I take, and many are unbiased, for they admit that I have told the truth.

I have charged the church with upholding priestcraft, of false doctrine, and of departing from the written word of God which they profess to believe. And as evidence it remains a fact that the whole system of Mormonism is in a fever of discontent and back talk by industrious and virtuous men, who are afraid to stand up as American citizens and say what they think for fear of those over them.

My charges are grave. If they be false it should be brought to light to all the world. And if they be true it should be made known. A standard church work, the Doctrine and Covenants, counsels its adherents to meet their enemies both in public and in private. When I called upon Joseph F. Smith he rejected that counsel, turning me from his door without a hearing, telling me that I was an apostate. I admit being an apostate from priestcraft, but I deny apostasy from true religion, which is the cause of truth and liberty, the poor, the widow and the orphan, and the laws of virtue and chastity, and loyalty to the constitution of the land. Therefore—

Joseph F. Smith:

I do hereby challenge you, as representative of the church, to meet me before the whole church assembled in conference, at the Sunday morning session next October, to prove your divine leadership and the fallacy of my charges and statements, both by scripture, ancient and modern, and by sophistry and reason. Bring all your wise men, your seers and prophets, your facts and learning. And I, with other church-members, will meet you in the name of Israel's God, and in the name of truth and liberty, as provided by the Constitution, and I will prove my stand both by reason and the scriptures. And God and all men who love truth shall judge between us. Reject this challenge and you will disgrace Mormonism and dishonor your claim to leadership before the whole world.

Mr. Smith, if you are a prophet of God, his power will be with you, for you have the promise: "Take no thought what you shall say and what you shall speak, for he will give you mouth and wisdom that your enemies can not gainsay or resist." Therefore you need have no fears. Prepare for the issue; I will meet you there, and either you or I shall hold our peace for ever.

To the people I will say: The church belongs to you, not to your leaders only. Allow me the privilege of expressing myself. I will either prove my stand or bring everlasting contempt upon myself. Mormonism must either rise or fall. To those who have malice toward Joseph F. Smith: Cease ye to hate him; his burdens are great. And if there are any who would resort to disorder or riot: Remember that Uncle Sam is not far off, and might make you feel sorry. Truth can not be crushed by violence.

I will also ask the Tribune to cease cartooning Joseph F. Smith.

And last, but not least, let the Deseret News take down its motto, "Truth and Liberty," and cease to pose as a church organ, or else open its columns to all the people of the church and to any who have a truth to proclaim.

For the honor of the State, for the sake of decency, let the internal controversy of Utah cease.

Remove the cause and the effect will vanish.

Awaiting the issue, in the cause of truth,

JOHN H. SCOTT.

SALT LAKE CITY, September 8, 1905.

To Joseph F. Smith and to the Mormon People:

The accompanying article on priestcraft and a challenge to defend my stand at the coming conference was written on September 8 and submitted the next day for publication, but owing to pressure it received no attention until after Joseph F. Smith had departed for Mexico.

I desire that it be distinctly understood that neither the writer nor the Tribune had it published in Mr. Smith's absence to gain any advantage over him, but it would have been published before if possible. Inasmuch as the Deseret News stated that Joseph F. Smith will not return for two weeks, I ask that the challenge be accepted before his return, as he can himself decide this as well as others, which he must decide before returning to Salt Lake City, and I ask this in order that the people may be prepared for the occasion.

If Mr. Smith remains away during conference or fails to accept this, I shall be justified in assuming that he ignores the right of the people of the church to a hearing.

JOHN H. SCOTT.

—Utah State Journal, September 18, 1905.

It is noteworthy that while the language used in the foregoing is severe, it contains no word of bitterness or hatred, but rather counsels considerateness and cessation from malice.

Speaking of the challenge the Tribune for September 19 says:

The Tribune urges that the Mormon priests accept this offer, and divide the time fairly between Scott and his associates and the prophet and his apostles. Let them take the law and the testimony, as so frequently demanded by reformers within the church; and by the law and the testimony of the Mormon church let the Mormon prophet stand or fall as such. Then at least his own people will know whether to abide with him or to remove him.

Surely the great Joseph F., clothed in dignity (we do not mean indignity), surrounded by his priests and debaters like unto Penrose and Roberts, is not afraid of young John H. Scott and the members of the church who wish to engage on his side of the controversy!

For declining to take Mr. Scott's advice to stop publishing cartoons of Joseph F. Smith, the Tribune gives the following reasons:

First, the public delights in the visage of the prophet, seer, and revelator as portrayed by our artist.

Second, many graphic truths are thus presented which it would take volumes of words to portray so forcibly to the human mind.

Third, the Mormon people thought that any one would be struck dead who made any fun of their prophet. They accepted him as seriously as he pretended to accept himself. The Tribune received a communication in writing, and many oral messages, to the effect that if our offenses of cartooning were continued any longer, the Lord would avenge himself by smiting the artist and others with instant destruction. For several months now we have every day disproved that threat—not as daring the Almighty, but as confirming our belief that Joseph F. Smith is just a mere man: a little more of a liar than most men; a little more of a lawbreaker than most men; a little less of soul and more of body than most men; but just a mere man after all.

What the outcome will be of the move to gain freedom of speech, and an opportunity to have both sides fairly presented to the people, is difficult to foresee; but if those who are clamoring for free speech are successful, it could but result in opening the eyes of the honest investigator.

THE GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST.

A TESTIMONY.

Having read the different opinions on the "laying on of hands" and the "gift of the Holy Ghost," I wish to give a little of my experience. I do not understand all the office-work of the Holy Ghost, or when one receives it. I have not given these things much thought, being so perfectly satisfied with my own experience.

However, the day I was baptized into this church, I knew only one family of Saints, had heard only one sermon, and been inside a Saints' church only one time, and as I look back over my life, I can not recall a day that I ever felt more sad, discouraged, and entirely forsaken by God and man, than I did that day, feeling worse after I was baptized and confirmed than before. But out of respect to the cause I had embraced only that day, and the family with whom I lived, I said nothing of my feelings. When I went to my room that night I felt very gloomy indeed. Upon retiring I knelt at my bedside to pray, as was my custom in the past, and as I knelt there I could not think of a thing to say. I was so sad; it seemed strange to me that words had left me. Then in a moment the thought came to my mind, Ask God to forgive your sins. I at once proceeded to do so, when like a flash something seemed to say within me, "You have no sins to forgive, now, they have been pardoned, wiped out by the blood of Jesus." I was motionless with amazement, dead as it were to everything except the peculiar sensation that was working in mind and body. It seemed there was a light within me, by which I was made to understand I was pure, clean every whit, newly born. I had the sensation of feeling clean in body, and light as air. It was something wonderful; I can not express it. I knew beyond a doubt. I felt all I understood, and knew in my soul that I knew it, and I can not explain to others just how marvelous it appeared to me, in words or through the medium of the pen.

The thought came to me: If I have no sins to forgive there is no need to pray to-night. Then the same voice within said, "Thank God for this, and ask him to keep you free from sin in the future." I seemed to fully comprehend that there would be a warfare with the prince of darkness, that God is able and willing to help us to conquer if we only ask him. My tongue was loosened, and I poured out my heart to God in thanksgiving and praise for washing me clean, and implored him to help me live faithful to the end.

I have never before written of this matter, fearing some would think I was boasting; but far be it from me to boast. I speak of these things in humility of spirit. Some may think God is especially favoring those that have so grand a testimony; but not so, dear Saints. It is because of their extreme weakness.

When I embraced the gospel, but for one thing I would have been as rank an infidel as Bob Ingersoll—made so by the false lives of some of the members of my church, and the betrayals of friends (church members too). I needed some other evidence besides man's. I wanted to serve God if there was one, and if the Bible was true. I believed what was in it, but man's word for these things was not sufficient. Hence I was very weak. I do thank God for such an evidence and wish I might help all the world to know for themselves, as I know of this work.

I did not comprehend all I felt that night, for I thought I had no evidence from God that this was the true gospel. The next night through administration I had a testimony by divine revelation that this was the gospel of Jesus Christ. The very heavens opened to my vision, and I know that Jesus is the Son of God, that the plan of salvation is true, and that Jesus will come to claim his own in due time.

I hope and pray every one of us will be found with oil in lamps and vessels when that time comes.

HELEN LOGAN SHERWIN.

TULSA, Indian Territory, September 7, 1905.

A CLOSING ARGUMENT.

In the HERALD of August 30 appears an article under the double-headed caption: "Do the gifts and blessings cease as we attain toward perfection?" and "In review' reviewed." In nearly every instance where the brother has attempted to state my position he has succeeded in misstating it. Will the brother kindly point out in any of my statements where I have stated that the gifts and blessings would cease before the attainment of perfection?

The brother quotes from my article: "My view as stated in the sermon under criticism is, that they will cease [spiritual gifts—F. J. C.] (see 1 Corinthians 13), but not until perfection shall have been attained, some time after the coming of the Savior." Commenting upon this, the brother says: "We hope our brother will 'stand by his gun,' and not seek to evade the issue." I have this to say: I hope my brother will not seek to raise false issues and then attribute them to me. He says: "The question before us is, 'Do,' or 'shall the gifts and blessings cease as we attain toward perfection?'" This issue was born in the brother's own brain, as I shall show you by his own words. He proceeds: "His 'view' 'as stated in the sermon under criticism' was, that 'the world is growing better; we are becoming more perfect; and as we advance toward perfection, there would not be the need of gifts that existed before.'" The brother is getting a little nearer to a correct statement of my position. He tries again as follows: "But that which we took exception to was his teaching that we were getting so far advanced that we did not need the gifts promised to the believer to the extent that we formerly did." This attempt to state one of my positions is nearly correct as far as it goes. The brother did much better in his "Answer to 'A reply'" in HERALD of July 19, wherein he fairly represents me on this point, as follows: "The thought was suggested 'that the reason the gifts are not enjoyed in some localities [among some individuals—F. J. C.] to that extent as formerly, may be because we are getting nearer perfection and hence do not need the manifestation of the gifts to the extent that we did in our earlier experience in the church!'" This gun, as the brother calls it, I will stand by, and it is far different from his attempts to state the thought. In my judgment, it is supported by stubborn facts as they actually exist within the purview of a vast majority of the Saints; and it is also, we think, supported by the unanswerable logic of Paul's positive statement that when perfection shall have been attained, "that which is in part shall be done away"; not only the three gifts he happened to mention in the particular verse, in which he says they shall cease, and be done away—that is, prophecy, tongues, and knowledge—but all the gifts under discussion by the apostle in the Corinthian letter are undoubtedly referred to. Included in these are healing, casting out devils, wisdom, faith, discerning of spirits, etc. No miraculous gift of wisdom, faith, knowledge, healing, casting out devils, new tongues, prophecy, etc., all referred to by Paul in this same letter, will be needed by those having attained unto perfection. Hence Paul says they will cease. The brother's argument and logic continues then for ever, and he can not divide them up to suit his own notion. Notice his remark upon my statement that the gifts would cease some time after the coming of the Savior. He says: "For while we do not believe this is correct, such teaching would not necessarily do any harm." If he wishes to abandon this absurdity—that is, that the gifts, including tongues, prophecy, casting out devils, knowledge, etc., will continue after the attainment of perfection, I am quite willing that he shall do so, but he has not abandoned it yet, and he continues to contend for it to the very last paragraph of his last article.

These signs and spiritual gifts are all necessary here and will all exist in the church so long as it is imperfect; and all will be done away when perfection "is come." The brother wants me to fix the time when they will cease. Paul has fixed the time. The moment an individual reaches perfection these gifts will cease to follow such individual. All knowledge and wisdom will be in his possession, and no miraculous transmissions of the same, by means of the gifts, will be possible, to say nothing of being necessary. Such individual can not be ill; he can not receive the gift of new tongues: he will not need the gift of prophecy, any more than my brother now needs a revelation to inform him that two times two equal four.

The brother remarks: "If, in his sermon, the brother had simply made the statement that miraculous gifts should cease 'when perfection has been attained, some time after the coming of our Savior,' and no reference made to their ceasing now, we in our first article would not have referred to the sermon. For while we do not believe this is correct, such teaching would not necessarily do any harm." And yet, the brother finds fault with me, in the light of his statement just quoted, for ridiculing his idea that devils, healing, the gift of tongues, etc., will be in the perfected state. But why talk about a reference made to their ceasing now? Can the brother find in his first statement of my position, which was fairly correct, any reference to their ceasing now? As stated substantially by the brother himself, my position was that in some instances the nonreception of the gifts might be accounted for, on the grounds of their not being needed, rather than lack of faith, or worthiness. Why does the brother evade this real issue? I may not have added in words the last thought, namely, that one reason why gifts are not received is because of unworthiness, because I consider that so simple that it would be superfluous to assert it. I have been raised in the church, and I have never heard a member dispute that very simple proposition. Commenting upon my "view," viz: that in some instances the gifts may not be needed to the extent as formerly, the brother writes: "We believe it to be not only an erroneous doctrine, but a dangerous belief to any one who accepts it." This "dangerous belief" is very much in harmony with the dangerous doctrine of Joseph Smith the Martyr, which he received from God, and set forth in Doctrine and Covenants 58:6, which reads as follows:

For, behold, it is not meet that I should command in all things, for he that is compelled in all things, the same is a slothful and not a wise servant; wherefore he receiveth no reward. Verily I say, Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves. And inasmuch as men do good, they shall in nowise lose their reward. But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with a doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned.

My "view," I think, is in complete accord with the above, and one way to wrest it out of harmony therewith is to misstate it. As God's children advance in knowledge and wisdom, they will not need so much assistance in the way of gifts and commandments, but will be able to do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness. And that many of the leading workers of the church are thus able, and are so laboring, is an existing fact, as stated above, and not a theory; and their not receiving gifts so often as in earlier experience, or so frequently as some others do, does not prove unworthiness or unbelief by any means, but just the contrary may be true.

We endeavored to state this thought logically as follows: The necessity for miraculous gifts will decrease in proportion to growth and progress toward perfection. I am of the opinion that this will stand the test of fair and unprejudiced criticism. The exception to this rule would be in the case of special endowments to particular persons for specific purposes. He quotes 1 Corinthians 13:9, 10: "For we know in part and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come that which is in part shall be done away." The brother reasons upon the above as follows: "Are prophecy, tongues, and knowledge good, or any part of perfection? Will there be any good thing lacking in the perfect state? In other words, can there be perfection unless all that is good, combined, still exists? The answer to these questions must be apparent to every Saint." I think so, too, with possibly a very few exceptions. Here the brother again gets the spiritual gifts of prophecy, tongues, and the gift of knowledge in the perfected state. Prophecy, tongues, and knowledge are certainly good as a means of advancement, but after the end has been reached—perfection—then the means which were necessary to assist in reaching the end will be useless and will cease to exist because of their very nature. As well argue that a bridge must exist always, in order to render a man perfect, because of having been used in crossing a stream on a journey to Zion; or that the clothing, food, wine, and bread, in sacrament-service, the buildings in which we worship, and all other good things, which assist in our worship and growth, must be dragged into heaven for the same reason.

There are thousands of good things and measures which assist the Saints in growing to the full stature of manhood in Christ, including the gifts, which will be done away and cease to exist. But thus the brother reasons to save his theory. He refers to my former argument as follows: "He admits there will he knowledge, but says that I 'failed to discriminate between knowledge which is to remain after "perfection has" come, and knowledge transmitted miraculously, or in spiritual gifts.'" Exactly; and the brother still fails to see the difference, it seems. He proceeds: "Paul made no discrimination, and why should he ask us to go farther than Paul?" Answer.—Because Paul probably never dreamed that any of his fellow ministers would ever occupy the absurd position, that if knowledge, prophecy, and tongues, transmitted in miraculous gifts, should cease, then "there would be no knowledge" in heaven and no language in which to talk, and all would be dumb and idiotic in celestial glory. Knowledge in the abstract, as we said in a former article, is not miraculous; and it requires no gift of tongues, prophecy, or any other spiritual gift to keep one perfect after having reached that condition. But on the contrary, when any of these gifts are bestowed, such bestowal proves beyond the shadow of a doubt the imperfection of the recipient thereof. I stated this thought in a previous article as follows: "If the gift of knowledge is bestowed, is it not because of a lack of knowledge? Clearly the lack of knowledge—ignorance—renders the gift necessary." And so, disease—imperfection—renders healing necessary. The brother in a previous article denied this self-evident fact, and permitted himself to declare that "just the contrary is true." In his last effort he struggles to extricate himself from this ditch into which he has fallen, and like the man who sought to rescue his wife from drowning, but "pushed her further in," he succeeds in making it worse, if that were possible. On this matter he reasons thus: "It must be apparent to our brother, and all others, that after having received the gifts, we are not as ignorant as we were before. Then the logical conclusion would be, that 'the reception of miracles and spiritual gifts is an indication' of our enlightenment, and that we are made more nearly perfect thereby; and 'just the reverse' of his theory is still 'true.'" Comment is useless. The brother should have said means, instead of indication. The brother continues: "Now let us again call his attention to the fact that Paul nowhere says that 'miracles shall cease.' This is all an assumption upon his part, based upon his idea of that which is in part being done away." Let us see. Paul says prophecy, tongues, and knowledge shall cease. Prophecy, tongues, and knowledge are miracles. Therefore, miracles shall cease, and Paul said it. And yet my brother says that this is all an assumption upon my part. I have also shown that Paul was speaking of all the gifts, and mentions all of them severally, in this same letter. In a former article I wrote as follows: "Now surely, the brother can not think that in celestial glory there will be devils cast out of the saints; unknown tongues, prophecy, serpents, poisons, healing, etc., and yet this is the 'false position' in which he has placed himself by his arguments above." Commenting on this the brother says: "The 'arguments above' were contained in Mark 16:17, 18. He may call it a 'false position,' but I can find a better name for it. I do not think any one could justly draw the conclusion that I quoted the foregoing citation as applying to the perfect state. I quoted it as applying to this life, to show that the signs would follow the believer whenever and wherever a true believer may be found, no matter what may be his attainments toward perfection." Now who is weakening? If he did not quote the foregoing to show that the gifts will continue, he has quoted others and made statements and arguments to this effect, as I have already shown from his own language, and will show again before we are through. But his statement is too sweeping as applied to this life. Notice, he says whenever and wherever a true believer may be found, these signs, Mark 16:17, 18, shall follow. The book of Doctrine and Covenants, page 120, teaches that it is given to some to believe the testimonies of others. Such a statement is an arraignment of many of the best members of the church. If the brother had said that the gifts shall be found in the church, he would have been within proper bounds. Mark says they shall follow the believer. He also says "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved"; but every one knows some will not be saved because of apostasy and other reasons.

The brother says, "I can conceive of the possibility of angels becoming devils by failing to keep the law of heaven, and by the exercise of their agency, (as it happened once before,) and if so they would be cast out." Now my brother is bound to have the devils there in celestial glory, and they must be cast out of something at all hazards. But pause just a moment. Were those angels perfect? If so, how could they have fallen? There can be but one answer, and we are discussing the perfect, and not those of a lower order.

He asks: "Does not my brother believe there will be tongues, or at least a tongue, in celestial glory?" Is the brother weakening? Oh yes, there will be a tongue, but not the "gift" of tongues, either new or unknown. He remarks: "However, if our brother wishes some evidence of healing in the celestial city, we refer him to Revelation 22:2: 'And the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations.'" Now the brother has the sick in addition to devils over there. There is something almost grotesquely fatuous about the tenacity of the brother in clinging to his dogma. And now, behold, the nations are all sick! I think it is my privilege or duty to follow his false logic to its absurd conclusion. If he does not mean it, why does he attempt to place me in error for teaching the contrary?

I dreamed a dream the other night,
When everything was still;
I dreamed I went to heaven,
And the nations there were ill.

The people called the elders,
Who responded one and all;
And, with leaves anointing them,
They healed both great and small.

Then up spake Father Abraham,
In "tongues," which were quite "new";
And the brethren sat and wondered
What the meaning was thereto.

But lo! a good old sister
Arose in perturbation,
And stated to the multitude,
She had the interpretation.

But we desist, for fear some may think that our muse is bordering on the sacrilegious. I hold the gifts as sacred; but the idea that they will be enjoyed in the celestial city is to my mind most ludicrous, and our little poem is offered to help in showing this to be true.

The brother contends specifically that the gifts of prophecy, tongues, and knowledge will continue for ever. As to the other, he "seems to be weakening." He distinctly says in the language I have quoted from him at the beginning of this article, in criticism of my statement that the gifts will cease some time after the coming of Christ: "While we do not believe this is correct, such teaching would not necessarily do any harm." He also quotes Moroni 10:1, 2, where all the gifts are mentioned, and says they will continue after the coming of Christ as we shall presently show. The brother says:

In an article under the caption of "Turn on the light" in HERALD for August 9, page 779, another brother adduces a quotation that is well worth reproducing:

"And that all these gifts of which I have spoken, which are spiritual, never will be done away, even so long as the world shall stand, only according to the unbelief of the children of men. . . . And now I speak unto all the ends of the earth, that if the day cometh that the power and gifts of God shall be done away among you, it shall be because of unbelief."—Moroni 10:1, 2.

The brother commenting on this, said: "Will not the world be standing at, and after the coming of Christ? If so, then according to Moroni the gifts and miracles will be on the other side. . . . Was Moroni right or wrong? I think he was right." Here again the brother argues that all these gifts which Moroni mentions will continue, and Moroni mentions in the context of the quotation, casting out devils, healing, tongues, interpretation of tongues, and in fact all the gifts. If he does not wish to make such an impression, why quote such passages, and publicly brand my "views" as heresy, that is, that the gifts will cease after the attainment of perfection? Our brother in Utah made a mistake in confusing the meaning of the words, As long as the world shall stand with the words as long as time shall last, and now this brother has made a like mistake. They are both in the same boat, and their little bark is hopelessly befogged. Yes, Moroni was right, but the understanding of the brother as to Moroni's teachings seems to be right wrong. I cited, in a former article, passages of scripture showing that this wicked world will not stand for ever. In the Instructor are a number collated which show that there will be a new earth, and that the former will not even come into mind. They are so familiar to the Saints, I shall not take space to insert here.

My brother says: "He reproduces my quotation from Doctrine and Covenants 34:3, then adds: 'What does the above prove? Simply that these miracles will be found in the church while in an imperfect condition, when they will be needed.' Well this is a pretty fair concession, but why did he not tell us when the church would be perfect? Will it be before Christ comes? If not, then what becomes of his theory and teaching that miracles and gifts are to cease now, as we advance toward perfection?" Here, again, the brother attributes to me a theory, which theory is a little infant of straw which emanated from his own fertile imagination. I again kindly request the brother to point out a single statement in any of my articles to the effect that miracles and gifts are to cease now, or at any time prior to the attainment of perfection. The brother has not done so, nor can he do so. It would seem that a minister of the gospel would use great care in stating his opponent's position, rather than great carelessness. Even reputable lawyers are careful to follow this rule. The brother proceeds: "After giving us a definition of the word miracle he says: 'so long then, as man remains ignorant, God will be a God of miracles, because man can not comprehend, and "mysterious are all his ways."' I suppose he means by this that when man becomes more enlightened God will cease to be a God of miracles." It is hard for me to decide whether the brother is in earnest or only joking. I have stated again and again that when an individual attains to perfection God will cease to be miraculous to such individuals, in my judgment, and my brother supposes that I mean when a man becomes more enlightened, God will cease to be a God of miracles.

The brother says: "If God continues the work of creation of worlds, would not that be miraculous?" I answer, No, not to those who have attained all knowledge. The brother reasons thus: "Will there or will there not be in the perfect state that which we now call the miraculous? If the answer is, No, then God will not have as much power as he now has." The brother is wrong again. Man will not have as much ignorance as he now has. God's power will remain the same. He proceeds: "But if the answer is, Yes, then we agree that there will be, during the state of perfection, that manifestation of power which we now call miraculous; no matter about what we shall call it when we reach that state. Let the brother take either the one 'horn' or the other." I see no horn to take. My brother seems to be impaled on both horns. He says, after having reached the full knowledge of God's power or works, they will still be miraculous, but please remember, that miraculous means mysterious, unaccountable by known laws. After all law is known and mystery has been dissipated, the brother contends that God's work will still be miraculous—that is, mysterious and unaccountable by anything we may know, although we shall know all things. The brother's position is true as regards the imperfect only. He argues as follows: "The better a child can walk' the more capable it becomes of walking." Yes, and the less assistance it needs. He goes on, "The more advanced we are (spiritually), the more capable are we of receiving and appreciating the greater gifts, and thereby continue our advancement toward perfection." This is true, and it is not true. I cheerfully agree with the brother so far as this thought may be applied to particular persons for specific purposes, but as a working rule of universal application it happens to be disproved by the facts. But speaking of greater gifts, the apostle says the greatest is charity. Doctrine and Covenants 108:6 is cited to show that greater miracles will attend the gathering of the people from the north than attended the deliverance of the Israelites, and indeed greater than all the miracles of the past, although my brother seems to have forgotten this latter part of his contention. My remark concerning his former quotation is true—not a hint of any miracle is found therein. He now seems willing to content himself with furnishing a citation which has at least a hint of miracles in it, but nothing is found therein to warrant any one in imagining that such miracles will be greater than those incident to the deliverance of the children of Israel. It is said in this reference that they shall smite the rocks, ice shall flow down, an highway shall be cast up in the midst of the great deep; their enemies shall become their prey, water shall flow from the desert, and hills shall tremble. This revelation does not prove any miracle. I frankly concede that such is hinted, but it requires some speculation to determine from this revelation "just how they shall come down," as the brother says it "plainly shows." Smiting the rocks may be done with a hammer and a drill; the flowing of the ice does not necessarily prove miracles. It is flowing now in icebergs. The casting up of a highway in the midst of the great deep proves no miracle, as a highway is now cast up in the form of ice; and the Lord has cast it up too, as he sends the rain. Their enemies becoming their prey will not necessarily be brought about by great miracles. By the way, who are their enemies? Are they the polar bears, or the Canadians? The flowing of water from some desert does not prove miracles. Springs burst forth quite often in such places; but suppose it is miraculous, is the breaking out of a spring in a desert more miraculous than the mighty power displayed in the deliverance of the children of Israel? Hills shall tremble. Earthquakes shake hills occasionally, and the brother can not prove that earthquakes will not be the cause of the trembling spoken of. Now, are these greater miracles than attended the deliverance of the Israelites? It requires considerable speculation or imagination to so believe. Perry may discover them too, or some other explorer may do so.

The brother advises: "We suggest that before speculating as to some 'natural' means of the return of Israel from the north, and of Perry's success in bringing them back, it would be well for our brother to examine the revelations of God to this church." We have patiently examined those cited by the brother, with some others, and find him to be in error. In his weak attempt to refute my statement that the Lord worked miracles through wicked men and animals (see Numbers 22:27), he argues that neither Balaam nor the ass did the miracle, but God performed the miracle by and through the angel, Balaam and the ass being subjects upon whom the miracle was wrought. Granted. That is the thought substantially as I stated it, but I had always supposed until now that the Lord, also, had something to do with the working of miracles by and through others, both in ancient and modern times. I see advertised in the papers quite often, where some man claims the power to heal, and tell fortunes, etc.; but up to the present I have taken but little stock in them.

Concerning my explanation of 3 Nephi 4:1 he asks, "Why did not the brother say that Nephi was mistaken?" Answer.—Because Nephi is not the name of the individual who made the mistake. The brother tries to help me as follows: "Here is a question the brother might ask himself and answer in his own mind, that may help him on this point. Did Paul, after receiving spiritual gifts and blessings, know more or less than he did before?" I answer, Presumably more. He continues, "If he knew more . . . then the reception of these gifts was an 'indication' of his enlightenment, rather than his 'ignorance.'" Oh no, the brother should have said the "means" of his enlightenment. If the brother would get a little pocket dictionary and look up the definition of the words indication and means, it might help him some. My reference to the possibility of Perry discovering the north people seemed to arouse some feeling, as the brother exclaims, "Oh, yes, 'if!' 'If' the Devil had not sinned, he might have remained in heaven. 'If' my brother's theories are not wrong, they may be right." Exactly; I cheerfully concur in the above statement; but patience, brother, patience. I think I have shown some; and besides, Perry may fail to find them—still, some wretched explorer is liable to reach the north pole yet, and will very likely discover about all that is there. The brother quotes from my article as follows: "Man is changing and evolving toward perfection wherein he shall receive of the fullness of God's glory." Upon this truth he comments: "He uses the term 'man' indefinitely, as applying to all men—or mankind. Is it possible that he believes that all mankind are 'evolving' towards 'perfection and fullness of God's glory?'" The veriest novice should know that I meant nothing of the kind. But notice how consistent the brother is. He immediately writes, with almost the same stroke of the pen, these words: "Surely the trend of human inclination to-day is not in that direction, the increase of crime and wickedness seems to lead men [italics mine—F. J. C.] in just the opposite direction from God. . . . All this plainly shows that at the time of, and prior to the end, men will be going farther and farther away from God, instead of evolving towards a fullness of God's glory." Now what would the brother think if I should pursue his methods of criticism, reasoning from his use of the word man? Let us see where it would land him. He uses the term man indefinitely as applying to all men or mankind. Is it possible that he believes that all mankind are going in the "opposite direction from God," and that at the time of, and prior to the end, all mankind will be going farther and farther away from God? The inevitable conclusion of this course of reasoning, which all can see is mere sophistry, is that all mankind shall be lost.

Thus the brother struggles to find something to criticize in my "views" and plunges all mankind into the vortex of irretrievable ruin, including himself, in order to make a point in this discussion. His case is indeed desperate.

I hope that some good may grow out of this discussion, but fearing some may look upon it as controversy, I think I shall have no more to say on the subject at present. Before closing this article, however, I wish to acknowledge the contribution by our sister of Macon, Missouri, which was so ably written. I refer her to this effort as an answer, in part, to her article. I trust others have been interested, and I close my part of the investigation, with brotherly love and charity for all.

DEATH VALLEY A CRATER.

The generally accepted theory in regard to Death Valley—that mysterious depression in the earth's surface that has claimed as its victims so many seekers after the golden treasures which are supposed to exist therein—is probably erroneous and must be discarded, if we accept the version of the origin of the valley as given by James T. Tyler, in the San Francisco Call, who says:

"There is a decided difference of opinion between one mining man and the geological survey in regard to one of the queerest, hottest, and most disagreeable parts of the United States. Death Valley, Inyo County, California, is the bone of contention and it will be something for scientists to study before the inwardness—and outwardness—of this strange region is given its proper place in geological records.

"Already the Government surveyors have said, 'This is a dead sea, a dried-up lake such as might have been in its day of moist existence a counterpart of the Great Salt Lake.' Gradually its waters receded, exposing to the hot southern desert sun the sands that are declared to be several hundred feet below the sea-level.

"But there is a practical mining man, a rough and ready mining engineer, a man who has made a study of rocks and strata and all that, who presents to us an entirely new version of the creation of this uncanny region. This gentleman is Colonel Edward Brown, of Colorado, who has recently been detailed by the Santa Fe Railroad to investigate the Tonopah and Gold-field district of Nevada with a view to ascertaining its permanent value as a mining center. The Santa Fe road may some day wish to extend its road into Nevada, and it will certainly do so if conditions justify. Incidental to the trips to the mines the colonel traveled into the great Salton Desert and skirted the edge of Death Valley.

"Not being satisfied with the report that the Government surveyors had made regarding the silent hollow, where not an animate thing exists except the horned toad and the occasional lizard, the expert determined to investigate for himself.

"'Death Valley is not a dried-up inland sea or lake, in my opinion,' said the colonel. 'It is an extinct volcano; one that was so immense that when it was active it could not have reared its head above the earth's surface less than forty miles. It was one of the great phenomena of prehistoric time—time when men did not people the world, but when all things were abnormal, according to our latter-day ideas.

"'Giant trees and giant reptiles; giant mountains and giant birds that flew around their miles-high peaks,—this was the condition of the period of the life of the Death Valley crater.

"'Why do I draw these conclusions? Well, there is nothing to show that a lake or an inland sea ever existed where is Death Valley. The bottom of the valley is surfaced with a layer of ashes in which is nothing of the sediment such as develops after evaporation of a body of water. The edges of the valley are layers of ashes, and there are traces of these deposits for a hundred miles from the depression.

"'Another remarkable proof that the valley was once a great volcano is the deep springs extant there. Many of these are found in the valley, and some are apparently volcanic vents. I had my men fasten a rope about my waist and I cautiously approached the edge of one of the springs. It was a peculiar hole, with steep sides that were likely to give way under foot, being decomposed, loose material. Fifty feet below the edge was a body of blue water, so clear that when I threw a stone into it my head reeled as I watched it go down, down hundreds of feet into the bottomless funnel.

"'The water of the springs is impregnated with poisonous chemicals, and few of the springs near the valley can be utilized by man or beast.

"'When this monster mountain was belching forth showers of lava and stones it must have shaken the world. It slowly burned out, crumbling away with the centuries. It made a desert of everything within a radius of two hundred miles of the place.'"

DO NOT TALK TOO MUCH.

"In the multitude of words there wanteth not sin."—Proverbs 10: 19.

"By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."—Matthew 12: 37.

"Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt."—Colossians 4: 6.

Most people talk too much. Avoid reckless, indiscriminate speech. Some one has said:

"Choose to listen rather than to talk;

"For silence is preferable to speech.

"It is wiser to talk too little than too much;

"And to speak well than to say too many things.

"Aim at speaking rather to the purpose than often.

"Reflect before speaking.

"Know how to speak by silence.

"Restrain the tongue when the heart is agitated.

"Be silent when you feel too great a desire to talk.

"Speak after others.

"Never against others.

"Always well of others.

"Always with modesty.

"Never against the truth.

"Always with discretion.

"When vanity has found entrance, purify the intention.

"Let the tone of your voice be neither too loud nor too low.

"Never seek information through curiosity.

"Leave it to the world to talk of the world.

"Complain of nothing, neither of persons nor of things.

"Do not speak much of yourself nor of your affairs.

"Say little of your works, less of your troubles.

"Confide these to very few persons.

"Utter no useless words;

"But harmless trifles may serve you as recreation if spoken in God's presence and for him."—Selected.

A LITTLE SOMETHING ABOUT JAPAN.

The area of the empire of Japan is about 161,000 square miles, less than 3,000 square miles larger than California. Japan proper lies between the same parallels of latitude as the Mississippi Valley States. Japan consists of the four large islands of Formosa and the Pescadores, and some 4,000 small islands. The coast-line is 18,000 miles long. In 1900 the population was 47,646,810, the males exceeding the females by 600,000. As the average annual increase is 500,000, the present population must be close to 50,000,000. In 1900 there were 12,000 foreigners in Japan, of whom a quarter were American and British, and more than half Chinese. Farming is the chief occupation. The average farm is of two acres. Lafcadio Hearn says: "The vast rice-crop is raised on millions of tiny farms; the silk-crop in millions of small, poor homes; the tea-crop on countless little patches of soil." The exports of silk amount to about one fifth the entire export trade. There are rich oil and coal fields in Northern Japan. Formosa has valuable gold-mines. A greater wealth is its 1,500 miles of camphor-trees. In 1902, Japanese exports were $130,000,000; imports, $135,000,000. More than 4,000 miles of railroads. Here are the daily wages, in cents, of certain occupations: Female weaver, 10; female peasant, 9.5; compositor, 17; carpenter, 27; shoemaker, 23.5; dyer, 14; coolie, 16.5. Guilds and trades-unions abound. Strikes occur. More than 1,000 newspapers and magazines. Japanese postal service "beats" the American; includes, besides the American "features," parcels post, postal savings, universal free delivery.—Everybody's, September, 1904.

THE FUNNY SIDE OF LIFE.

Humor is something that is appreciated by practically every American. This fact is demonstrated by the vast number of humorous publications which thrive in various parts of the country, as well as by the truly wonderful mixtures of grotesque figures and indescribable colors accompanying the Sunday papers and bearing the label of "Comic Supplement," says the Birmingham, (Alabama) Advance. But while Americans are as a unit in their appreciation of humor, there is a wide diversity of opinion as to what constitutes humor. There are some who seem to think that the height of fun is to blow up somebody with a cannon cracker or cause some one to walk blindfolded out of a second-story window. Others regard it as extremely funny to circulate false reports calculated to get a man shot or put behind the bars or to cause a run on the bank.

Humor is something that should be harmless always. No joke should have a sting nor should any so-called humorous feat be performed that will leave some one crippled for life. The more we see of the funny side of life the longer we will live and the more pleasure we will find in living. But let's not be led into thinking that it's funny to do things or say things that bring sorrow or humiliation to others.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

YEAR OF JUBILEE.

Dear Mothers and Sunday-school Teachers: Are you really helping to make this year—the seventy-fifth year since the church was organized, the one hundredth year since Joseph Smith was born—a year of jubilee? Are you encouraging and helping your children to gather up the fragments lying all around them that the empty baskets may be filled and the hearts of many be made glad thereby?

The Baby's Toys.

Home on a visit, I'm looking around me,
Looking for keepsakes of old home days;
I've found an old chest, and its contents surround me,
Reminders of children and dear childish plays.

School-books and such like I find quite a number,
A drawing-book, box full of bright-colored toys,
A wall-pocket, carved while the rest were in slumber,
By father, so thoughtful of our childish joys.

Oh, here is something, wrapped like a treasure,
Now I unfold it and tears quickly start,
Mingled the feeling of pain and of pleasure,
Stirred are the memories deep in my heart.

A little green tub with its hoops painted brightly,
Filled full of playthings that little ones love;
Baby hands held them and tossed them so lightly;
Dear hands, at rest, where the grass waves above.

A shell-box I open, and weep o'er the contents:
A few bits of candy, some buds of white flowers,
And leaves of geraniums, that still shed their rare scents,
Bring fresh to my heart that sad parting of ours.

Dear little baby, short was your life here,
Gentle your influence shed out so sweet,
Keen was your suffering borne with such patience;
May we at last in his kingdom meet.

ELLA J. GREEN.

The Toys.

My little son, who look'd from thoughtful eyes
 And moved and spoke in quiet, grown-up wise,
 Having my law the seventh time disobeyed,
 I struck him and dismissed
 With hard words and unknissed,
 His mother, who was patient, being dead.
 Then, fearing lest his grief should hinder sleep,
 I visited his bed,
 But found him slumbering deep,
 With darkened eyelids and their lashes yet
 From his late sobbing wet.
 And I, with a moan,
 Kissing away his tears, left others of my own;
 For, on a table drawn beside his head,
 He had put within his reach
 A box of counters and a red-veined stone,
 A piece of glass abraded by the beach.
 And six or seven shells,
 A bottle with bluebells,
 And two French copper coins, ranged with careful art
 To comfort his sad heart.
 So when that night I prayed
 To God, I wept and said:
 Ah, when at last we lie with tranced breath,
 Not vexing thee in death,
 And thou rememberest of what toys
 We made our joys,
 How weakly understood
 Thy great commanded good,
 Then, fatherly not less
 Than I whom thou hast molded from the clay,
 Thou'lt leave thy wrath and say:
 "I will be sorry for thy childishness."

—Coventry Patmore.

Mothers' Home Column: I note your request for a reply to "What shall I do with my boy." My experience may or may not benefit, but I am willing to impart any knowledge to help whom it may.

I am a stepmother of seven children. I resolved to be a child among them after a fashion, or a companion,—to be kind, but just as firm as kind, and just as kind as firm.

I have been told by several that when my children are asked how they like their mother, they say, "All right, for when she says a thing she means just what she says; so we know what to depend on."

I believe if you win their confidence you can do so much more with them. Before my youngest boy (who was less than six years old when I took him) could read I did not let him go out to play; I would rest him and myself by playing crokinole, flinch, or hide-and-seek, and when we had rested I would call order, and we would talk, or I would teach him his Sunday-school lesson, or look at pictures in religious books, or find some good and interesting thing to amuse him.

I have Bro. J. J. Cornish's three charts. The children like to look at them, and ask questions; and we invariably get a good and new thought before the charts are put away. One can interest children so much better with illustrations and the charts. I find them a great help. They seem to love to spend their Sunday afternoons with me.

My little boy is eight years old now, and reads finely. He often gets a book and wants to read to me while I sew. I am trying to choose a nice library for him, and train his mind in the right way.

God bless the mothers, the shepherds of the flock.

Your sister,

GEORGIA KNOWLTON.

BERKLEY, Virginia, September 10, 1905.

[We welcome the above letter. - It is the first response to our request; and while the Sabbath question is not elaborately treated, it certainly contains much food for thought. We commend to parents as worthy of more than a passing notice the following: "I resolved to be a child among them, after a fashion, or a companion,—to be kind, but just as firm as kind, and just as kind as firm."]

Let us have an exchange of thought upon this important matter.—EDITOR.]

"It is the Hand of Christ."

It was the Sabbath for the semiannual contributions to the missionary society, of which announcement had been made a week previous. According to her usual custom, Mrs. Whitcomb expected to put fifty cents into the box. If the amount seemed small to others, her conscience was quieted by a thought of two dollars paid annually to the Ladies' Missionary Society, which was auxiliary to the other.

"There are so many objects for benevolence, so many calls nowadays, one must plan justly for all, and not rob Peter to pay Paul," was a favorite saying of Mrs. Whitcomb. One habit of this lady was to overlook a collector's book before pledging a first subscription to any cause. If the amount credited to most subscribers was fifty cents or one dollar, she accepted this as the limit of payment for herself, without any comparison of her ability with the majority of supporters. No special pleas, no suggestions to "double contributions," or presentations of present needs, moved her to increased and occasional large-hearted giving. "One must never be governed by impulse in these matters," was often urged in explanation; "in charity, as in everything else, I am controlled by judgment and experience."

It was most fortunate that the "regular fee" paid by his wife was not infrequently supplemented by Judge Whitcomb with substantial donations. These were always signed "from a friend," to escape the imputation of prodigality and unsound judgment from his better half. To prevent unwarrantable liberality, the judge's wife often took the precaution to sound her husband upon his intentions shortly before a stated collection, and advised as to the amount to be given. Knowing his special leaning toward missions, the prudent lady felt some misgivings upon the Sabbath in question; so, as they were about starting for church, she casually reminded her husband of the collection—as if there were any need—adding, "I have some change in my purse if you have none."

The judge had on the previous evening taken special care to empty his pockets of all coin, in anticipation of the coming collection, for how could he drop change into the box if he hadn't any? The good man had been reprimanded upon several occasions for depositing a bill. "It is as well to give dollars where your name is signed, and there is some accountability, but small coin will do for the box," had been the instruction.

In deep chagrin the would-be generous man turned to his wife, unequal to the emergency. She guessed the secret, but purposely misinterpreted his silence, and bantered him upon forgetting his favorite collection, adding, "Never mind: I have enough for us both. How much do you want?"

"Oh, I have money enough with me, but you can let me have a half dollar if you like," was the reply, made with such apparent sincerity that the schemer was puzzled. The silver piece was handed over with much self-querying: "Does anybody suppose he'll really give only a half dollar? There is hope of reformation in the most stubborn if John is at last become prudent."

The choir usually rendered some incomprehensible "voluntary," but the opening of service that day was very unusual. A simple gospel hymn was sung. From a sweet voice the words directly fell upon Mrs. Whitcomb's ear:

"I gave, I gave my life for thee,
My precious blood I shed;
I gave, I gave my life for thee,
What hast thou given for me?"

The prayers which followed were embodiments of two petitions: that the people might be able and ready to make large and grateful return for the blessing of salvation, and be enabled to regard the Lord's work with a spirit purified from selfishness and avarice. After the reading of the notice the pastor said: "The collection to-day will be taken after the sermon. Let us, my dear people, consider together our duty and privilege in the matter of giving to the Lord. Let us look at the urgent need for increased liberality in every part of the vineyard, and then make unto the Master a free-will offering, both sweet and acceptable."

Thinking of her husband's unaccountable conduct, of the opening hymn, with its refrain still echoing through her mind, and of the unusual postponement of the collection till the close of the service, Mrs. Whitcomb did not pay much heed to the discourse. Meditation during the sermon is ever a potent soporific; and such it proved.

It was most natural that her waking thoughts should follow Mrs. Whitcomb in sleep, and that she should, in dreams, see good old Deacon Beman come down the aisle to gather the tithes into the storehouse. The dreamer very vividly went through the form of taking a half dollar from her pocket and lifting it to the extended box—when, lo! it was a box no longer! With chilled heart the lady saw the hard, lifeless wood assume the appearance of living flesh. It was a hand now, and from its pierced veins flowed drops of blood. Looking up, she beheld a form like unto the Son of God, with a face which betokened a knowledge of grief and acquaintance with sorrows. Almost paralyzed with remorse, the sleeper cried: "Have mercy upon me, oh, Lord! I am not worthy to put aught into my Savior's hand."

With pained and pleading look these words were spoken:

"I gave my life for thee;
Wilt thou give naught to me?"

Quickly the half dollar was thrown away by the trembling listener and a coin of gold was laid instead upon the bleeding palm. As the shining bit touched the wound the flow of blood was lessened. In the attitude of divine benediction the Lord Christ thus spoke: "Disciple, thou hast wrought a good work upon me. The tears of my people must be wiped away; the nations must be purged from sin; the gospel of good tidings must sound in every ear before this bleeding wound can be wholly healed. Blessed be those who hasten on the day."

Deep organ tones awakened the sleeper when the collection was about to be taken. Clutching at her husband's arm, Mrs. Whitcomb whispered eagerly:

"John, you won't put in that fifty cents, will you? Why, dear, it is the hand of the Lord!"

In bewilderment the Judge looked at his bewildered wife, who pleaded again:

"I mean the contribution-box, John; it is the hand of Christ, our Lord! Could you lay a few cents upon it?"

"No, wife," was the joyous reply. "I will give fifteen dollars."

"Very well; and I'll give as much more."

Was it his wife who thus spoke—the same who had outwitted him in the morning? Yes, the very same woman, renewed. She had seen the Lord and heard his words. She had learned the deep meaning of the Savior's "inasmuch." Never again would "good judgment" keep her from ministering to her crucified Redeemer through the poor, the sorrowing, and the benighted. The contribution-box had been transformed: but still more wonderful and blessed was the transformation that had taken place in one of the king's daughters.—Selected.

Prayer Union.

Prayers are asked in behalf of William Weise, who is mentally unbalanced, that he may be healed, and his heart changed toward God and his truth. Prayers are also asked for Fannie Mackleroy, who is confined at the Osawatma State Asylum.

Sr. Hattie Fletcher, Stonington, Illinois, earnestly desires the prayers of the Saints in behalf of her brother who was hurt in a mine about the 16th inst., and up to the 23d had not regained consciousness. He has a wife and two little children dependent upon him.

The Prayer Union, specially, and all Saints congregated for prayer, in general, are asked to remember in their supplications Elder C. J. Spurlock, that he may be relieved of the severe affliction of his left eye, and that his general health may be improved.

Jubilee Fund.

Bro. M. R. Shoemaker of Beardstown, Illinois, is the first to report having received the Jubilee Fund appeals sent out by Sr. Walker through the General Superintendent's office. Sr. Bertha Harper of McKenzie, Alabama, is next. They have both received and mailed them out to their respective schools. Many others have doubtless done the same though not reported to me. Any district or school not having received an installment should write the General Superintendent at once and others will be gladly mailed to you. We want to make this a complete success and to do so we must get the appeals to the school and get the schools to working upon the matter.

A VERY NICE PLAN

for schools located sufficiently near to nut-bearing groves is to take a day for an outing for the entire school, gather and hull the nuts and sell them, and place the proceeds to the credit of the school in the Jubilee Fund. It will help the school as a school by giving them a pleasant outing and will assist to swell the fund. Give this plan a serious consideration.

The secretary of the Iowa State Sunday-school association reported to the State convention in June, 1905, 4,447 schools, 45,845 officers and teachers, 307,534 scholars, making a grand total of 353,179 attending the Sunday-schools of the State. The average attendance per day was 226,608. There were 515 home departments with an enrollment of 16,359. Twenty-five hundred and sixty-nine are taking the teachers' training course to fit themselves for their work. Of the total number enrolled in the schools 12,760 had united with the church. This is about one in each twenty-five. And when we consider what a large percentage of the scholars already belong to the church, it is a splendid showing.

The Sabbath School.

There are thousands of schools dotting, like beautiful flowers, the broad face of our land, and they are the glory and crown of our national greatness. But their purpose is intellectual or secular development, dealing with every department of our national and domestic life, and in this they are a grand success. But the human heart and mind need a higher education, a spiritual development—a calling out of those higher and purer graces and excellencies latent in every human soul; and, as with the intellectual, the best time to commence the education is the morning of life, so with the spiritual development.

We can not begin too soon to sow the spiritual seed in the human heart. To this end our great Father has always enjoined upon his people the duty of instructing their children in those things that pertain to their spiritual and eternal welfare.

In the morning of time our first parents must have taught their children the things pertaining to their spiritual duties, for we find both Cain and Abel offering up sacrifices emblematic of the infinite sacrifice to be made by the Son of God.

Of Abraham God said, "I know him that he will command his children after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord." After God had delivered his statutes through Moses unto Israel, he said, "Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children." Again, "Ye shalt teach them to your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." The foregoing scriptures show that God recognizes the great necessity for instilling into the child's mind those things that are of the greatest importance to him.

And as he has always required an intelligent service from his children, and as he has commanded his church in these last days, that "inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ, the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized: and their children shall be baptized for the remission of sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of hands: and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord" (Doctrine and Covenants, p. 173), it follows that in order for children to truly repent, and intelligently be baptized, they must first be taught the nature of, and the necessity for the performance of these duties and ordinances. Here comes in the necessity for the Sabbath-school to second the efforts of the parents, or supply the lack of teaching caused by their negligence, who do not heed their command—and I fear their numbers are many, even in the church of Christ. And such must come under condemnation, nor will sending their children to the Sabbath-school relieve them of their individual, parental duties in this respect. God will require it at their hands.

In the providence of God the Sabbath-school has been established that the children may be properly instructed in the things that appertain to their spiritual welfare; and it is truly a nursery to the church of Christ, in which the gospel seed is sown, and the tender plants are watered and nourished by loving hands. Of its benefits to the rising generation, eternity alone can tell.

A word to those who sow the good seed and nourish the tender, budding plants. What manner of persons should they be? They must be God-fearing persons who love God and his truth above all things. And, moreover, they should have the truths they attempt to teach grounded in their own hearts. You can not sow that which you do not possess. The husbandman must have within his grasp the pure grain, or he can not scatter it on the tilled soil; so, in the heart and hand of the Sabbath-school officer and teacher must the gospel seed be found. He must sow in faith and in love. He must not sow in his own strength; he must seek divine aid, or his work is in vain. Hence, he must be a praying man. The fruits of righteousness must be developed in his daily life, or he has no claim upon the Holy Spirit's aid; and without that the teacher is as helpless in his class as the preacher in the pulpit who is destitute of the Spirit's aid.

Patience is an indispensable qualification in the Sabbath-school. Kindliness of heart must shine in the countenance and be echoed in every word. A smile may win a stubborn heart, but a frown never can; harsh words embitter the soul, but kind words encourage the drooping spirit and open the heart to the reception of truth. Discernment is indispensable to success. He is a wise teacher who can adapt his teaching to the different phases of mind before him. Careful study of the human mind, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, will enable us to adapt our teaching more successfully than all the philosophies of human origin. The teacher must explore the realms of truth for himself. He must know, or verily believe, the truths he seeks to teach, and not be content with another's researches.

A prayerful spirit, with full dependence on God, will insure success in every proper effort.

Be of good courage! "Cast thy bread upon the waters, and thou shalt find it after many days." "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand; for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether both shall be alike good."

A word in conclusion to the children. Be punctual in your attendance at the Sabbath-school. (This is good for officers, teachers, and pupils.) Punctuality insures confidence, and, with due perseverance, will be a great aid to success. Children, love your teachers; esteem their labors. They are working for your good. Do not find fault with them, nor talk of them unkindly. Do not sulk if they reprove you; they mean well to you. You do not know the sacrifice they make to be with and bless you every Sabbath—theirs is a trying situation. You will understand it better when you become teachers. Let them see that you appreciate their kindly labors to do you good. Speak to them and of them respectfully. Study well your lessons. There are priceless gems of truth in every one. Be willing to be corrected when wrong. The study and right understanding of God's word will be an endless benefit to you. It will be a firm foundation for your present and future lives. It will be a source of comfort in every trouble. It will be a safeguard against the evils of the world. It will be a light to your feet and a lamp to your path. Cultivate a humble, teachable spirit. Avoid self-conceit. It is the humble soul that God delights to bless.

And now, may the blessing of God abide with the officers, teachers, and scholars of the Sabbath-school, and crown every effort for good with abundant success, that all may have a glorious entrance into the holy city, where they can bask in the smiles of our gracious Redeemer. Amen.

Independence Stake Reunion.

The second annual reunion of the Independence Stake was held at Pertle Springs, Missouri, which is a beautiful location indeed. The stake presidency and missionaries in charge were chosen to preside, and the writer was chosen to act as secretary. It lasted from the 2d inst. to the 10th, in which time was included the holding of the stake conference and also two days were devoted to the Sunday-school and Religio work under the able management of Sr. D. H. Blair. Bro. J. A. Gunsolley was present and rendered much valuable service by his wise counsel and advice along practical lines. The more we see manifested the working of these two organizations, the greater our heart swells with gratitude for this great latter-day work; and as we continually drink in the Spirit and influence that is found in these helps, we are made to know that many are walking in the light, especially of the young, as a result of these organizations.

So much rain and cloudy weather seemed to militate against the interest of the meetings, yet they were spiritual and very beneficial to those who are determined to walk in the light.

The ministry were blessed in presenting the word to the joy and comfort of the Saints; but the number of outsiders in attendance were few.

It was decided to hold another reunion next year, and the arrangements for the same were left in the hands of the officers of the stake.

Your brother in the faith,

Northeastern Missouri Reunion.

The first reunion of the Northeastern Missouri District was held on Bro. W. W. Walker's place, three and one half miles northeast of Huntsville, Missouri, from August 25 to September 3, 1905. Bro. J. A. Tanner was chosen to preside,

Some disappointments were experienced; chief among them was the failure of our tents to arrive till the reunion had been in progress five days. But all bore it cheerfully, and as the Greenleaf Chapel was just across the road from the camp-grounds, the sisters occupied it for their sleeping-quarters, while the brethren used the big tent.

God blessed us richly with his Holy Spirit, and all were made to realize that the reunion in this district was a move in the right direction.

It was unanimously agreed to hold a reunion next year. The district president was chosen president of reunion committee with power to choose other four, and to fill any vacancies that might occur. All expenses were paid, and all parted with a full determination to be present at our next reunion, if possible.

The Lamb's Wife.

The idea is entertained by many teachers of the present day that Jesus Christ is the Lamb of God. And in the long lapse of time, twelve hundred and sixty years from the time that the church was driven into the wilderness by the beast there the Lord fed her, as he said he would, for a time, times, and a half a time. And as the church went into the wilderness with apostles, prophets, evangelists, and teachers, the church, the Lamb's wife, must come out of the wilderness with all of the officers,—his legal body,—before the Lamb could marry her; and hence we find it recorded, dear Saints, that ye are the body of Christ on earth, the Lamb's wife, not wives.

"Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready."—Revelation 19: 7.

Dear Saints, are you the Lamb's wife? Then lift up your drooping heads and rejoice until the time when you will receive the Lamb of God and the great marriage feast shall be prepared, and you be heirs, and join in that celestial choir, and be filled with rapturous song at the marriage feast, when the church will be married, never more to be separated from the Lamb, and loved ones. Therefore rejoice and be glad, and give honor to him.

Are you ready? Are you clothed with pure and righteous works which shall entitle you to the marriage supper of the Lamb? Have you on the wedding garment, pure and white, with no dark spots?

Your names may be cast out as evil-doers, but let your march be onward, with a final triumph over all opposition, and eternal life will crown your efforts. Remember that the Lamb of God never was divorced from his legal wife. But as the beast united state and church together under the ten kings, the apostles, prophets, seers, and revelators were killed, the remainder driven into the wilderness, and there she remained until the angel restored the gospel, and the church was established, and the Lamb's wife bidden to make herself ready.

Hail the dawn when the Lamb shall appear, and the marriage be consummated, and ten thousand times ten thousand voices shall ring hosannahs to God!

There never was but one legal Lamb of God, and but one legal wife. Jesus will never marry five hundred wives (churches).

Saints, Will You Help Us?

The Ladies' Aid Society of Waterloo, Iowa, are piecing a quilt to be given to the Aid Society of Holden, Missouri, to help them pay for their new church. We are working names on the white pieces in the blocks; and in the center piece of each block we have the words Saints, Elders, Priests, etc; and those who are not members: Friends; and Saints' children: Hopes. We charge ten cents for each name and after paying for material we will use the money left over to help pay the expense of presenting the gospel to the people of Waterloo, or in whatever way may seem best. We will be glad to have all the names we can get, so as to get our quilt done as quickly as possible.

Should we get more names than we need for this quilt, we will make another for the Saints' Home. In sending names please state whether Saints, friends, elders, etc., also to what quorum they belong, if any. Thanking you in advance for whatever aid you may give us, I remain,

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. BELLE GOODRICH, Secretary.

A Word From Wales.

"Gallant little Wales" continues her protest against the Education Act of 1902, by which the voluntary (day) schools are being supported by government grants. Thus religious denominational schools are being fostered, and in many cases forced upon the Liberals and Non-Conformists. The Catholic and Episcopal Churches seem to be hand in glove together, and realize their dependence on each in order to keep an ascendancy over the united forces of the Non-Conformists and Liberals. Catholic and Episcopal Churches together form an invincible phalanx.

This bill of 1902 affected England and Wales only. This question, the government fostering religious teaching in day-schools, is far-reaching in its effects and consequences. In this connection it should be said that up to 1903 the total number of children in schools was 6,795,484, and of these more than half went to voluntary schools, and 8,069,629 to "board schools." In about 8,000 places in England and Wales the church school is the only school, and attending these are nearly 1,000,000 children. Of this the late Lord Salisbury said, "It is a grievance."

Under the new regime we may expect many competent teachers and principals will be left unemployed because they are not members of the dominant church. Mr. John Morley, M. P., has this to say on this subject: "My own view has been, ever since I began to think about public things, that you will never come to a wise settlement until you have removed altogether the hand of the state from religious instruction. Religious instruction is a thing for the parents. It is not a thing for the state; and I for my own part can never be cordial towards any policy, any changes in policy, which do not recognize the principle that the state is concerned with secular things, and has no concern with the religious things. I hope I have not thrown a firebrand. I am sure it will come to that."

"Nonresistance," "passive resistance," is being resorted to. Many, for conscience' sake, refuse to pay the school tax in support of the present system. Many thousands of summons have been issued for nonpayments, and compulsory sales have resulted. Some have gone to prison. And now as a climax to all this, the lord chief justice, and Justices Kennedy and Ridley have decided that all who refuse to pay the school tax can not vote at a parliamentary election. Thus they are being practically disfranchised. Selfishness is more than a menace in either church or state. Wales is largely nonconformist; that is, they are not members of the state church, which is the Episcopal, yet they have to pay (and have for generations past) to support it. The Welsh people from some cause have humbly submitted to impositions placed upon them. Until recently English judges have sat in Welsh courts who were unable to understand the witnesses, and the same thing is now being practiced to some extent, while Welshmen and Welsh talent have been ignored. And English priests, and deans, and bishops have been placed in Welsh communities of Welshmen. However, Wales begins to realize her condition. She has in the past been sending English noblemen to represent her in the House of Commons (bearing the relation to the people as our Congress), and is doing so now to some extent. She has been sending those who were not residing within her territory to represent her interest. A change is taking place, and Welshmen are forging their way to the front. Members of parliament receive no pay for their service to the state. Hence poor men can not afford to accept an election unless their constituency provide a fund for their support. I believe Scotchmen should represent Scotland, and Englishmen England, and Irishmen Ireland, and Welshmen Wales.

At present there is a depression in the coal trade, and the prices for mining have reached the minimum. A new agreement must be reached by the first of next January, or else there will be trouble. The mine-owners are accused of purposely reducing the prices with a view to getting some advantages when the next agreement is made.

The Germans are selling their coal at a very low price, with a view of crowding the English and Welsh coal trade out of the Mediterranean. Competition is keen. The great developments that are being made in France and Germany will certainly interfere with British coal trade for the future.

This people are a pleasure-seeking people. Nearly all classes are allowed holidays, from one to six weeks or more; and receive full pay the same as when working. This applies to several classes of wage-earning servants, but not to those who work by contract—that is, with reference to the pay.

Now the holiday period is nearly over, we may expect the religious revival will commence. Mr. Evan Roberts, the apostle of the revival work in Wales, is in what may be denominated the quiescent state just now. His last active missionary work was done in North Wales. We hear of his attending prayer-meetings where he may be staying; for his presence gives more or less inspiration wherever he may be. I believe that there will be an effort put forth the coming fall and winter to rekindle the fires of the revival, and doubtless will meet with some success. But I believe the climax was reached last winter.

Our British Isles Mission conference held at Manchester, is said to be the most largely attended conference ever held. The Sunday-school procession, headed by a good brass band, and a grand silk Sunday-school banner, with the picture of the descending angel restoring the everlasting gospel, was impressive. Let us be thankful for the Sunday-school and appreciate the good it is doing, has done, and will do, if the willing workers continue in the good work.

We are making some progress in Wales. We can report but few baptisms. However, there are some that are nearing the kingdom. In the face of much discouragement we are trying to be hopeful; and do believe that sometime in the future many, yes, thousands, of the Welsh (and English too) nation will obey this gospel.

There are many things that can be written of this country that would be of interest, and in some instances exemplary, to our people.

E. B. MORGAN.

187 Severn Road, Canton, CARDIFF, Wales, Aug. 31, 1905.

DES MOINES, Iowa, September 19, 1905.

Editors Herald: The district reunion held at Runnels closed August 27. The next reunion is to be at Rhodes, the time of holding same being left in the hands of the committee. Not all of the Saints of our district are alive to the value of these reunions, and they do not make the necessary sacrifice to attend. The isolated Saints, who are deprived of association with God's people, are greatly benefited by attending the reunion. Saints in their branches have the privilege of associating with their members frequently and by this association develop the spirit of brotherly love that will bind God's people together, and they should be interested in attending the reunion, and thus develop the spirit of brotherly love in a wider acquaintance with God's people; and from these district reunions we look forward to the gathering in Zion, and thence to the great reunion of all God's people. We need to make the sacrifice to attend these annual reunions, and when we more fully gather to Zion the spirit of sacrifice then required will not seem so great.

At the close of the reunion one district tent was taken to Chelsea and a series of meetings held, and the other taken to Montour. Elder J. S. Roth went to Moorhead to attend the annual reunion, and then continued his labors with the tent. Elder Heman C. Smith was present at the reunion, and the Saints were all pleased to meet him.

It is understood that the next district conference will not be held until after the first of the year, but the time and place is not yet decided upon.

The branch presidents' quarterly reports to the district president and thence to the minister in charge were introduced into our district for the third quarter of the year, and they contained a large amount of information of value to those having oversight of the work. They will be continued each quarter.

The district Sunday-school association is making an effort to take up a line of normal work in Bible study during the year.

The work in the city is progressing, to some extent, against the many obstacles to be contended against in a large city. The church-building is being painted, and we will soon be ready for the dedication. We look forward to this event with pleasure. Several have united with the church during the summer,—some by letter, and some by baptism.

On last Sunday the spiritual gifts were manifested to the comforting of the Saints. We were chastened for our lethargy by the voice of the Holy Spirit, and the statement made that some things were withheld from us at the present time, that would be given us later. Also another one of our Religians was called to the priesthood by the spirit of prophecy. On Sunday, September 3, Bro. Henry T. Watson was ordained to the office of priest, and thus commissioned to represent Christ wherever his lot is cast. The home of Bro. and Sr. W. T. Lane was recently saddened by the death of their baby, aged about two years.

In gospel bonds,

A. A. REAMS.

BEMIDJI, Minnesota, September 16, 1905.

Dear Herald: Away up north among the jack-pines is a small branch of Saints, known as the Bemidji Branch, and your humble servant represents one of them. Although on account of the long distance I am deprived of the privilege of meeting with them, I am not discouraged as to the faith, and my desire is to help on the good work.

I ask the prayers of the Saints that my husband, who is afflicted with some kind of a growth in the stomach, may be raised to health and strength if it be the will of God.

Though afflicted I am not cast down, for his "rod" and his "staff they comfort me."

Your sister in the one faith,

SABRA A. NYE.

NEVADA, Iowa.

Editors Herald: Some will be pleased to know we have a nice Sunday-school here, with W. C. Hardy at the head. We have nineteen members here and five at Colo, a distance of seven miles. Expect more in the near future. Several who do not belong to the church take active part in the Sunday-school.

Mrs. W. C. HIDY.

WETUMKA, Indian Territory, Sept. 18, 1905.

Editors Herald: Bro. T. J. Sheppard came to our place the 26th of August and began meeting the next night. We obtained an arbor from the Indians, and held meetings for nine nights and one Sunday. Bro. Sheppard had to go to Haleyville, on Sunday the 3d, to join a young couple in the bonds of matrimony. But the day that he went away Bro. E. L. Henson came and continued the meetings until the 5th, when Bro. Sheppard came back, bringing Bro. S. W. Simmons with him. Bro. Simmons preached twice, and Bro. Sheppard and Henson occupied until the 11th, when the former went home to prepare to meet an opponent in Oklahoma. Bro. Henson continued the work here until the 18th. One has been baptized, one more is ready but is waiting for her husband, and he is almost persuaded. Several more are convinced. The attendance was small, but all were attentive. Bro. Henson said he would try to get Bro. Sheppard to come back as soon as the debate is over. If he does we may get several more. May God speed his work is my prayer.

In bonds,

THOMAS N. SMITH.

GUILFORD, Missouri, September 20, 1905.

Editors Herald: How often I look with longing to see letters in the HERALD from people with whom I am acquainted. And I thought a few lines from Nodaway District might not be amiss. Can say the Guilford Saints, or most of them, are trying to keep the camp-fire blazing.

I attended the last week of the reunion held at Stuartville. Large crowds were in attendance most of the time, especially Sunday and Sunday night. The preaching-tent was packed full, and many stood up inside while a large number were outside listening. I believe much good was done. I heard some outsiders say that this was the first "Mormon" meeting they even attended, but it was just fine, and they wished the reunion had lasted longer. I for one can say that I received much benefit, and feel well repaid for going.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

MISS MARY E. NELSON.

SEMINOLE, Alabama.

Editors Herald: There are a few Saints here who are trying to make their calling sure, while there are others who have too much to do—so much that they do not have time to go to church and Sunday-school. They are entangled with too many of the worldly things that please Satan. I believe that there is a chance for this branch to grow. I feel that God has manifested his power to the Saints here. While we have many things to encounter in this life, thank God we have the promise of not being left comfortless. I believe that there can be much good done by those who have taken the responsibility of cultivating the Lord's vineyard, realizing that it takes the best efforts that we can put forth to keep the vineyard clean. I have nothing of much importance pertaining to the general affairs of life, only there is yellow fever near us but not severe. Bro. Closson was with us some time ago, and did much good in strengthening the Saints, and we look for him this month, or next anyway. I specially request that you will pray for my wife. She is afflicted with something in her head, and asks the Saints to pray for her. She was administered to by Bro. Closson for a pain in her side and was healed.

JAMES COOPER.

CANTON, Ohio, September 10, 1905.

Dear Herald: I thought a few lines from this part of God's vineyard would not be amiss, as a few of us are striving to do all we can to establish the work of God. We now have eleven members. There were four baptized in five weeks,—all heads of families. I baptized two the 20th of August. Bro. A. R. Manchester and Bro. Arthur Keeler, both of Akron, Ohio, were at Canton last Sunday. The writer did the preaching, and the brothers I have mentioned laid on hands for confirmation, and then administered the sacrament, and we had prayer- and testimony-meeting. This is the first time sacrament was ever administered in Canton, as a branch, and we had a refreshing time, as the Lord blessed us all to the confirming of our souls and we felt edified by the Lord's Spirit though the house was crowded. We expect to rent a house up-town in the near future. At the closing exercises the brothers mentioned above blessed three children. We expect to have a branch organized here in Canton in the near future. May God speed his work, is my prayer, in Jesus' name. Let us all put our shoulders to the gospel wheel and hasten this work. Let us get near to God, that we may have more power from on high.

In gospel bonds,

ISAAC TRUE.

DERBY, England, August 25, 1905.

Editors Herald: We came to reside here about five years ago, where I am informed a branch of the church once existed, but from some cause or other not a vestige of it remains; hence, when we arrived we found none holding this precious faith. We set to work and conversed with the people whenever we had an opportunity, but not until April last did we see any result of our labors. But I am pleased to say that then two honest souls were led to unite with the church, which gave us much joy. We meet for worship in each others' houses, every Sunday, and are now going on our way rejoicing. We need not say how Satan raged, and the people imagined vain things, when these two converts cast their lot with us. The old story that we are connected with "Brigham Young's" delusion was scattered broadcast, chiefly by professing Christian people. But by God's help we are enabled to stem the tide, and have succeeded, I believe, in removing a deal of prejudice.

The writer has been a member of this church for upwards of seventeen years, and is still desirous of plodding on in it, doing what little he can to help it forward, though it may be against great odds. Truly the Lord is with this people. We are cheered by the "Joyful news, from far arriving,

How the gospel wins its way;
Those enlightening,
Who in death and darkness lay."

We feel encouraged to go onward, determined to overthrow error and establish the truth, God helping us.

There are upwards of one hundred thousand inhabitants in this town. Truly the harvest is great and the laborers few. There seems a brighter outlook for the future. We need the prayers of the Saints, as we are called upon to pass through peculiar trials; especially our dear Bro. and Sr. Meredith, who have just united with us. Our constant prayers are for the welfare of all the Israel of God.

In gospel bonds,

100 Havelock Road.

JOSEPH ECCLESTONE.

WAKELEE, Michigan, September 8, 1905.

Editors Herald: In company with Bro. Francis Granger, we started for this angle of the district, August 16. Have kept busy in the work, "opening up" two new points, and endeavoring to "strengthen the things that remain" in the old ones. Spent a portion of the time around Decatur preaching seven times, and visiting Hartford in the meantime, preaching at that point once. On our return via Lawrence, we visited with our nephew—Marion Thompson and family—very pleasantly; also Mr. Braybrooks, formerly of Lamoni, where eleven of us dined, and otherwise spent the time, we trust profitably. The two-day meetings at Nicholasville were excellent in spirit. The enlightening influence of heaven was pleased to call on us, and all had a time of rejoicing. An incident that brought sadness however, occurred sixteen miles away, and the Saints at Dowagiac were quite disappointed. We allude to the death of Bro. Floyd Finch's wife at that point. May heaven bestow the needed solace.

Closing the services at Nicholasville, we came to this point, and occupy a neat little church, called Oak Grove, built under the lead of a Reverend Mrs. Garretson, whose ambition led her to form what she called "the Little Prairie Ronde Christian Association." It commenced with some show of interest; but alas! like every other move without God in it, came to nought, and the little church abandoned except by theological birds of passage, and the occupancies are few and far between. We have held forth two evenings, and have appointments over Sunday.

Bro. Granger contracted a severe cold on his lungs, and hanging on to the cause as long as he could, found it wise to return home, and "do something for it." Now I am "sort-o-lonesome," being alone. We are trying to keep up action, and to raise the fallen, cheer the faint-hearted, and direct the interest and energy of the people to the true riches—the true and permanent inheritance. But the religious indifference predicted is upon the world. The masses seem stupefied, and pounding away with a silver mallet is not effectual; an iron sledge-hammer is required. The Holy Spirit's work of "guiding into all truth" seems far away, and will remain far away from both Saint and sinner, as long as the former holds envy, spite, and the spirit of faultfinding in his bosom, and the latter runs confused in the wards of Babylon. The promises of Jesus Christ are redeemed only in the currency of coöperation—centralized effort—"one body," and obedience to the commands of God. But, "Lord, are there few that will be saved?" "Strive to enter in, at the straight gate"—answer is enough.

Hopefully,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

Independence Items.

Within the last month has ended the Russo-Japanese war, which is a welcome news-item for all of us, and, as the papers state, with this happy conclusion the name of Theodore Roosevelt and of America will be "inseparably and gratefully linked for all time."

Not unto man, however, but unto Jehovah is due the honor of urging on mankind, in every sphere of noble action, to glorious deeds of peace and good will, for, according to the words of the latter-day prophet, "God does inspire men, and call them to his holy work in this age and generation as well as in generations of old, showing that he is the same God yesterday, to-day, and for ever."

Another name which is especially honored in Missouri may here be mentioned,—that of Governor Joseph Folk, because of his action in regard to "the enforcement of laws against wickedness in general, and Sabbath desecration in particular"; and we as a people may, as well as he, indorse the sentiment expressed by the President, "Let reverence for law be taught in our schools and colleges, be published from pulpits, proclaimed in legislative halls, and enforced in our courts; in short, let it become the political religion of the nation."

One of the old landmarks where, it is alleged, justice was in times past meted out in Independence and Jackson County,—the old courthouse,—still stands on the corner of Lexington and Lynn, and the inquiring visitor is given a good idea of the olden style of Missourian architecture.

It is a very low frame structure with the chimney built from the ground up, on the outside. The dingy room where the court held its sessions seventy-five years ago is eighteen by twenty feet in size, the log walls being now covered in more modern fashion; but the old dark corner-closet where the records were kept, and also another musty "cubby-hole," used for books, under the chimney-place, are still there.

The ceiling is very low, and adjoining this dusky room is one smaller, dim with weird reminiscences, where the jury oft retired, or the town marshal held private interview. Our townsman, Mr. Ott, who has bought the property, has decided to donate it to the county to keep, if desired, as a relic of the past.

During the greater part of August the weather continued oppressively humid, but the season has been marked for its excellent crops of grain and corn, potatoes, both sweet and Irish, melons, and other vegetables and fruits in abundance, mostly apples and grapes. Later on there will be "a right smart of papaws and persimmons, and we all are mighty glad," they say.

Surely, as Moses the prophet declared to Israel concerning Palestine, "this land of hills and valleys is a land which the Lord thy God careth for; the eyes of the Lord thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year even unto the end thereof."

But the storm-king got to raging one afternoon during this spell of heat and did much damage to the peach-orchards of several of the brethren as well as others. A sixty-foot electric light tower also was blown down, the telephone-wires throughout the city were thrown out of commission, and as to man and beast, everywhere, there was a general stampede for quarters.

The Saints, however, held services during the month with their wonted good interest and fair congregations.

About the 23d of the month there were heavy downpours, and it was noted frequently that the black clouds emptying their precious freight "the greater part o' nights" would in the morning by the "electric radiations" of Old Sol be entirely allured away.

Commotions in the earth took place also, and there were, we hear, about this time slight disturbances by earthquake in the Missouri towns of Rolla, Moberly, and Houston.

By the way, the scientists tell us that "it is an old, hoary-headed superstition that the sun is hot!" "The sun is the great central arc dynamo and electric heart of the solar system. It sends forth cold currents of electricity!" While the enormous fund of general information seems to be daily added unto, by the wise men and writers of the age, and important and unexpected events are transpiring one by one, the Saints, with an eye to the great consummation of our Father's mighty plan, are looking intently and with joy and rejoicing for the fulfillment of the Scriptures.

During the last few weeks the burden of instruction to the people from the sacred desk has been faithfully borne by Ern. Hulmes, Garrett, Peak, Bond, and Alfred and Ammon White; and the Saints are incited by words of inspiration to a higher life, a life in harmony with the gospel of peace and salvation.

At a special business-meeting held on the 14th ult., delegates were elected to attend stake conference which was held on the 9th inst. at Pertle Springs, Missouri, a summer resort.

The young people reported having had "a good time," and the older Saints brought home the tidings of excellent, spiritual meetings and, although the weather was unfavorable, of fairly good attendance.

At the business-meeting mentioned it was decided to place the matter of completing the work on the church-building in the hands of competent men who will push the business as fast as means can be obtained. This is being done.

Let us all endeavor to do something for the Master, and so prepare for lasting joys in Zion with the pure and the good, for "The glory 's in the gaining and the Guerdon 's in the strife,

And the joy of doing something
Is the robe and crown of life."

A reunion was provided for in 1906, the time to be left to the reunion committee, J. O. Dutton, H. D. Stevens, Guy Johnson, Frank Richards, and G. J. Brookover, who were empowered to collect money looking to the enlargement of the district tent. District officers were elected for one year as follows: J. O. Dutton, president; G. J. Brookover, vice-president; C. B. Woodstock, secretary; E. W. Dutton, sustained treasurer. The following resolutions obtained: "Resolved that the reporting of missionaries to the district conference be discontinued, as they are required to report to the missionary in charge. Resolved that the district president be authorized to procure blanks, as provided by the Quorum of Twelve, for local officers to report to branch presidents, and branch presidents to the district president, and district president to the district conference." A vote of appreciation was tendered W. A. McDowell for his faithful service as district president. Adjourned to meet with the Flora Fountain Branch the first Saturday and Sunday in February, 1906.

Eastern Iowa.—Conference convened with the Green Valley Branch near Onslow, Iowa, Warren Turner in chair. Branches reporting: Muscatine, Viola, Fulton, Green Valley, Waterloo, Clinton, Oran Center. Elders reporting: James McKiernan, Warren Turner, J. B. Wildermuth, F. B. Farr, John Heide, William B. Weston, Jesse F. Rulon, C. G. Dykes; Priests D. L. Palsgrove, J. W. Wilson, H. D. Miller, L. B. Moore, R. Smith; Teachers J. A. Goodrich, W. N. Potter; Deacons E. Hinds, S. C. Darrow. Election of officers: F. B. Farr, district president; J. B. Wildermuth, vice-president; John Heide, treasurer; Robert Smith, secretary. Adjourned to meet sometime in February, 1906, date and place to be set by district president and minister in charge. Robert Smith, secretary.

Seattle and British Columbia.—Conference convened at Tacoma, Washington, on the 2d and 3d of September, 1905. President Joseph Smith and G. T. Griffiths were called to the stand to associate; William Johnson in the chair. Ministry reporting: Joseph Smith, G. T. Griffiths, W. S. Pender, William Johnson, L. G. Holloway, Frederick W. Holman, James S. Rainey, John Holmes, Frank Holmes, Henry Stade, George M. Appleman, P. J. Bebe, Isaac McMullen, A. W. Gorbutt, Alexander Clark, John Stade, James Davis, John N. Sanders, Thomas Holmes, and Harry A. Jones. Verbal reports: D. W. Davis, J. L. Ritchie, W. S. Gladwin, W. J. McKim, William K. Norris, and Sherman Wightman. Bishop's agent, Frank Holmes, submitted report showing on hand, January 1, 1905, $204.40; subsequent receipts, $464.72; expenditures, $490.23. Graceland College account: Receipts, $74.70; remitted to Bishop, $68.50. Branches: Seattle, Roslyn, Tacoma, Chilliwack, and New Westminster reported; no report from Castle Rock. Subject of dispensing with semiannual conference, and replacing with a midsummer mission reunion was brought up and discussed, resulting in the appointment of the missionary in charge and all branch presidents as a committee, with instructions to extend an invitation to Spokane, Portland, and Southwest Districts to join this district in a reunion to be held either on Puget Sound or Columbia River, as per subsequent arrangements. Adjourned to meet with the Seattle Branch, first Saturday and Sunday in February, 1906. Frederick W. Holman, secretary, 1202½ Seventh Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

Eastern Wales.—Conference convened in the Saints' hall, Tutnalls, Lydney, June 10 at 7.45 p. m. E. B. Morgan chosen to preside, assisted by T. Gould. B. W. Gould was chosen by secretary to assist. Reports from ministry: E. B. Morgan, T. Gould, T. Jones, T. Griffiths, James Evans. Lydney Branch and Cardiff Branch reports received. Bishop's agent's report: Receipts, £5, 9s, 8d; handed to Bishop Taylor, £5, 5s; stamp, 10½d; balance in hand, 3s, 9½d. District secretary reported: Balance in hand, £1, 10s, 2½d. Treasurer's receipts, £4, 0s, 2½d; expenses, £2, 10s. A resolution to consider the district president's report was adopted. The report called attention to an action by the sub-missionary in recommending for the mission field an elder who was laboring under district appointment, without the district officers being acquainted was made. A resolution of disapproval of said action was ultimately carried by 6 to 5, two of the brethren opposed to resolution desiring their names recorded in protest, viz. Brn. E. J. Trapp and T. Jones. By request of the secretary a committee was appointed to correct discrepancies in statistical records. Election of officers resulted in the reinstating of the retiring officials without exception. Resolved that the next conference be held at Nantyglo, the date to be left to the president. All church authorities, by resolution, were sustained. Bro. T. Jones was appointed to represent the district re-Lydney grievances at the next British Isles Mission conference. The consideration of J. W. Rushton's circular letter was deferred until our next conference. By resolution the conference and incidental expenses were ordered paid out of district fund. B. Green, secretary.

West Virginia.—Conference met with the Mt. Zion Branch at Goose Creek, September 9, 1905. U. W. Greene chosen to preside, with G. H. Godbey associate. E. E. Long chosen secretary pro tem. Elders reporting: Joseph Biggs, J. L. Williams, G. H. Godbey, E. E. Long, D. L. Shinn, John Carpenter. Branches reporting: Union Grove, Clarkesburg, Wayne, Harmony, Cabin Run, Mt. Zion. It was moved and carried to accept reports, and the district secretary be authorized to make any necessary corrections. Bishop's agent reported as follows: On hand last report, $53.34; receipts, $69.25; expenditures, $97. The following delegates were appointed to the next General Conference: C. J. Goodnight, E. E. Long, G. H. Godbey, U. W. Greene, B. Beall and wife, D. L. Shinn, Mollie Kidd, O. B. Thomas, Clara Williams, Aaron Russel, L. D. Ullom. Moved that the delegates attending be empowered to cast full vote. The district officers were all sustained. Bro. B. Beall was ordered to the office of elder. One was baptized.

Convention Minutes.

Mobile.—District Sunday-school met in convention with the Bluff Creek Branch, August 11, 1905, A. V. Closson presiding. Schools reporting: Perseverance, Theodore. Adjourned to meet Friday, before the next conference. All schools please send reports to secretary two weeks before convention. Edna Cochran, secretary, Van Cleave, Mississippi.

Nodaway.—Convention met Friday, June 16, 1905, at 2 p. m. Officers reporting: W. B. Torrance, W. T. Ross, E. P. Hawley. The following schools reported: Sweet Home 63, Long Branch 50, Pleasant Hope 24, Guilford 50. Adjourned to meet with the Long Branch school at 2 o'clock Friday, October 6. Eliza Byergo, secretary.

Eastern Iowa.—Sunday-school convention convened with the Green Valley Branch, near Onslow, Iowa, September 1, superintendent, Warren Turner, in charge. Six schools reported, namely, Muscatine, Waterloo, Zion's Hope of Clinton, Fulton, Oran Center, and Green Valley. Convention adjourned to meet one day previous to the next district conference. Cora E. Weir, secretary.

Seattle and British Columbia.—The Sunday-school association met in convention in the Saints' church at Tacoma, Washington, Friday, September 1, 1905; Bro. J. S. Rainey presiding with Bro. F. W. Holman secretary pro tem. Two business sessions were held during the day, with entertainment in the evening by Tacoma school, assisted by visiting members. Two new schools, New Westminster and Nanaimo, British Columbia, became members of the association. Bro. Rainey's resignation as district superintendent was accepted, and Bro. William Johnson, of Nanaimo, British Columbia, elected to fill vacancy. Bertha E. McCullough, secretary.

Appointment of Missionary.

To the Ministry and Saints of Nebraska; Greeting: This is to inform you that since my notice of the release of Bro. D. M. Rudd we have been so fortunate as to secure the services of Bro. H. N. Hansen, and he is hereby appointed associate minister in charge for Nebraska, and those parts of North and South Dakota south and west of the Missouri River.

Reports and calls for labor will therefore be made to Elder H. N. Hansen, Council Bluffs, Iowa, Rural Delivery Number 2, instead of directly to me. Respectfully submitted,

HEMAN C. SMITH, Minister in Charge.

JOSEPH SMITH, for Presidency, concurring.

MOORHEAD, Iowa, September 16, 1905.

Release of Missionary.

This is to certify that Bro. George Winegar, who was appointed at the last General Conference as a missionary to the Spokane District, has withdrawn from the missionary field on account of ill health in his family. He will, however, continue to labor as a local elder, as circumstances permit.

T. W. CHATBURN, Missionary in Charge.

SPOKANE, Washington, September 1, 1905.

Southwestern Iowa Reunion Association.

At the last reunion of the Fremont District, August 11 to 20, 1905, the question arose as to whether the Southwestern Iowa association had been discontinued; if so, when and by what authority. After considerable discussion, a motion to continue the Southwestern Iowa reunion association prevailed.

For the benefit of those interested, I submit a few resolutions as found in the district record minutes.

When the district was first organized the resolutions were not recorded in book form, but were published in the SAINTS' HERALD, and a few of those resolutions were afterward transcribed from the HERALD into the record as I found them, bearing date of November 13, 1875.

HERALD, volume 5, page 171, May 7, 1864: "Resolved that the district of country assigned to the presidency of Wheeler Baldwin, be called the Southwestern District of Iowa."

On page 104 of the record I find: "Resolved, that the resolution calling this district the Southwestern District of Iowa, be rescinded,

"Resolved that we call this the Fremont District. Moved that a committee be appointed to determine the boundaries of the district, and that J. V. Roberts and S. S. Wilcox be that committee."

On page 106 I find: "Committee on boundary.—'We, your committee, fix the boundary of the Fremont District to include the counties of Mills, Montgomery, Taylor, Page, and Fremont, in the state of Iowa, and that portion of the state of Nebraska lying south of the Platte River.

"S. S. WILCOX

"JAMES V. ROBERTS."

"Report received, adopted, and the committee discharged." The above extracts are true copies of the records, and show the state of affairs existing in the district at the present time.

C. W. FORNEY, Secretary.

THURMAN, Iowa, September 16, 1905.

When planning a business or pleasure trip from Chicago to Buffalo, New York, Boston or any eastern point, you should investigate the satisfactory service afforded by any of the three express trains operated by the Nickel Plate Road. Colored porters are in charge of coaches, whose duties are to look after the comfort of passengers while enroute. Special attention shown ladies and children, as well as elderly people traveling alone. No excess fare charged on any train on the Nickel Plate Road. American club meals, from 35 cents to $1.00, served in Nickel Plate dining-cars. One trial will result to your satisfaction. All trains leave from La Salle Street Station, only depot in Chicago on the elevated railroad loop. Call on or address, John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 113 Adams Street, Room 298, Chicago. Normal rates have been restored by all lines between Chicago, Buffalo, New York, Boston and other Eastern points, and the Nickel Plate Road is still prepared to furnish strictly first class service between Chicago and the East, in their three daily through trains to New York and Boston, at rates as low as obtain by any other line. Meals served as you like, in the dining-car, either a la carte, club, or table de hôte, but in no case will a meal cost more than one dollar. Our rates will be of interest to you, and information cheerfully given by calling at 113 Adams Street or addressing John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 113 Adams Street, Room 298, Chicago. 33-36-4t

Died.

MCLEOD.—At Merline, Ontario, William Earnest McLeod. Was confined to his bed twelve weeks, being administered to a number of times. His suffering was greatly relieved, and he passed away without a struggle. He leaves a mother, three sisters, and one brother to mourn his departure. The funeral-sermon was preached in the Methodist church by Elder Samuel Brown, from John 11:24, assisted by Reverend Thompson, pastor of the above-named church. The brother was born April 6, 1881, at Phillipsburg, Kansas, and baptized August, 1889, at Tilbury, Ontario, by J. A. McIntosh. Died September 10, 1905.

SEARS.—Luther Sears, aged 90 years and 8 days, of East Dennis, Massachusetts. He was baptized June, 1887, and was true to his covenant. "Uncle Luther" was feeble for about one year before passing away, and a great care to his daughter, Sr. Abbie W. Chase, who faithfully performed her duty. He leaves two sons and two daughters. Three children have passed away and his companion bade him good-bye about fifteen years ago, to whom he longed to go. He passed suddenly away September 15. Funeral services at the home of his daughter Abbie. Sermon by R. Bullard.

THOMAS.—Elder John H. Thomas, born December 10, 1822, at Rockingham, North Carolina; died September 14, 1905, at Chicago, Illinois. Buried at Castana, Iowa, September 17, 1905. Funeral-sermon preached by Elder J. C. Crabb at the house of his daughter Sophia Day. The brother was loved and respected by all who knew him.

EVANS.—Mildred Fern Evans was born at Osceola, Nebraska, September 18, 1893, and died in the St. Joseph Hospital at Omaha, August 19, 1905, at the age 11 years, 11 months, and 1 day. She was very cheerful and patient in all her suffering; and expressed a desire for baptism as soon as able. Burial was from the Presbyterian church in Waterloo, Nebraska, sermon being preached by D. M. Rudd.

MCKNIGHT.—While she was on a visit to her parents in Oregon, also to attend the Portland Exposition, Sr. Mattie C. McKnight was found dead in bed. She had been suffering from liver and stomach troubles. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church in Seattle, and was a member of the First Kansas City Branch at the time of her death. Was a kind and good wife, a great temperance worker, and was territorial delegate from Oklahoma to the Woman's Equal Suffrage Association at Portland when she died. She leaves a husband and one son to mourn her departure.

TYSON.—Ellen Boughen Tyson was born December 23, 1838, at East Walton, Norfolk, England. Came to United States at twelve years of age and was married at Belvidere, Illinois, in 1857, to Abiathar Tyson. There were born to them twelve children of whom eight are now living. She died September 2, 1905, at Elmwood, Nebraska, where she had lived since 1866. She became a member of the Reorganized Church about thirty-eight years ago, and her life was one of faithfulness to the end. Funeral-services at the Christian church by Elder Charles Fry, assisted by Reverend Standard. Interment at Elmwood.

PROUTY.—At North Weymouth, Massachusetts. Sr. Sarah A. Prouty, aged 75 years. She was a faithful Saint, and received from her Master the comfort and hope which makes the passing away of this life a welcome. She was baptized May 26, 1878, by Elder E. N. Webster. She leaves husband and one son to mourn their loss. Many friends gathered to pay their last tribute of respect at the home of her son Charles. So we are called to part from old friends. May we clasp hands at the first resurrection. Elder R. Bullard officiated.

GOODRICH.—Elizabeth Goodrich, wife of Elder J. L. Goodrich, departed this life September 4, 1905, at her residence near Byer, Ohio, after an illness of about two weeks. Husband, two sons, and two daughters besides several grandchildren and relatives mourn their loss. She was born March 10, 1849; baptized November 19, 1883, by Elder T. J. Beatty. She lived a faithful, consistent, saintly life. She had the hope of a glorious resurrection with the just; a few days previous to her demise she expressed herself as being willing to go. Funeral-sermon by V. M. Goodrich, assisted by T. J. Beatty and L. R. Devore.

HANNER.—George Bennett, in Cincinnati, Ohio, September 2, 1905, by a frightful fall of five or six stories from a building. Born January 3, 1891, at Louisville, Kentucky; baptized July 3, 1894. Funeral-sermon by Elder H. E. Moler. Interment in Spring Grove Cemetery, Cincinnati, Ohio. A very sad death. Bro. George was a lover of the church and Sunday-school.

EDEKER.—Joseph M., son of Bro. and Sr. F. M. Edeker, of Harp, Alabama, died August 24, 1905. He was playing in the cotton and fell in a hole and was smothered. Was born March 23, 1901. Funeral in charge of Archie Booker; sermon by M. M. Turpen.

BABBITT.—August 24, 1905, at Scofield, Oklahoma, Sr. Matilda Babbitt; born May 3, 1883, at Lathrop, Clinton County, Missouri; baptized August 10, 1896, by A. Nessar; confirmed by A. W. Head, at Clarkdale, Missouri. Husband and three children left to mourn their loss. May God bless the bereaved ones.

Brother!

Do you want work that pays?

Easy work that you can do in your spare time? If so, send for my thirty-two-page book telling "How to make spring-beds to order" and "How to get orders," etc.

It's free for the asking.

I furnish material needed from our factory at Peoria, Illinois, at price that leaves you a big profit for your work. You can make it pay to hire agents to take orders, and you to put up the beds and make collections, sharing profits with your agents.

Below are two sample testimonials, selected from the many received. More will be sent with book.

If others can do so well, why not you? Brothers living in the country and small towns, having a horse and buggy, are especially invited to write me.

Yours truly,

B. F. Ordway.

R. F. D. 1, PASADENA, Cal.

F. Gayoso, of Tyler, Texas, writes: "I am not dissatisfied with your springs or you in any way. I know that I handle the best spring and that is Ordway's Portable Springs. I have been at it over twelve years and expect to continue as long as I can get around, and as for yourself, I can say truthfully that you have been more prompt and kind and considerate in all your transactions with me during and over twelve years than any one I have had dealings with. I feel kindly and grateful to you, and hope you may live long, growing in business and prosperity, enjoying health and blessings that it is possible for you to enjoy, and finally find a resting place with Jesus. God bless you and yours."

E. W. Snyder, of Tunnelton, West Virginia, writes: "I received your outfit all O. K. and have canvassed two days and took thirty-six orders. I have sold as many as six at a house. They sell on their own merits."

Three days later he writes: "I received the set of springs all right and adjusted them to my bed, and they are all O. K. I called in the town sergeant as he was passing, to see them, and he said that they were the best springs he ever saw, and is going to resign and work for me, for there is $100.00 a month in it for a man if he is a pusher. You will find order for thirty-five sets springs and thirty-four slat locks. I can sell as many springs as two or three men can set up. . . . It is no trouble to get orders at all. One man can take as many orders as two can adjust, I believe, so there are three of us going at it the first of the month. . . . It is the best paying business I ever got into. I have been engaged as mine foreman at $95.00 per month, but can make far more selling springs. All you have to do is just watch me this summer."

Home Made

Have your cake, muffins, and tea biscuit home-made. They will be fresher, cleaner, more tasty and wholesome.

Royal Baking Powder helps the house wife to produce at home, quickly and economically, fine and tasty cake, the raised hot-biscuit, puddings, the frosted layer-cake, crisp cookies, crullers, crusts and muffins, with which the ready-made food found at the bake-shop or grocery does not compare.

Royal is the greatest of bake-day helps.

THE LABORERS.

In the Inspired Translation we find this parable:

For the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man, a householder who went out early in the morning to hire laborers into his vineyard. And when he had agreed with the laborers for a penny a day, he sent them into his vineyard. And he went out about the third hour, and found others standing idle in the market place, and said unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard, and whatsoever is right, I will give you: and they went their way. And again he went out about the sixth and ninth hour and did likewise. And about the eleventh hour he went out, and found others standing idle, and said unto them, Why stand ye here all the day idle? They said unto him, Because no man hath hired us. He said unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard; and whatsoever is right ye shall receive. So when even was come, the lord of the vineyard said unto his steward, Call the laborers and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first. And when they came that began about the eleventh hour, they received every man a penny. But when the first came, they supposed that they should have received more; and they likewise received every man a penny. And when they had received a penny, they murmured against the good man of the house, saying, These last have wrought one hour only, and thou hast made them equal unto us, who have borne the burden and the heat of the day. But he answered one of them, and said, Friend, I do thee no wrong; didst not thou agree with me for a penny? Take thine and go thy way; I will give unto this last even as unto thee. Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? Is thine eye evil, because I am good? So the last shall be first, and the first last; and many are called, but few chosen.

This is a parable concerning the application of which diverse opinions have been held. The most universal opinion has been that the early morning, third, sixth, ninth, and eleventh hours represented different periods of a man's life; the early morning and third hour representing the very early life and childhood, the sixth and ninth hours represented youth and middle age, and the eleventh hour old age. Going to work in the vineyard is represented as entering the Christian life,—accepting Jesus. Consequently those who embrace Christianity, (following out the application of the parable,) when the time of reward comes will receive every man alike, whether giving themselves to Christ in childhood or in old age.

Objection has been strenuously urged against this interpretation upon the ground that it does violence to the plain teaching of the Scriptures, that every man will be rewarded according to his works:

And the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.—Revelation

20:12. Death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works.—Verse 13. I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins, even to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings.—Jeremiah 17:10. Thine eyes are upon all the ways of the sons of men, to give every one according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings.—Jeremiah 32:19. For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works.—Matthew 16:27. Every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor.—1 Corinthians 3:8. For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad.—2 Corinthians 5:10.

And the argument is made that to reward the man who had labored but one hour equal with the one who had labored a whole lifetime, would be a violation of the plain statements of holy writ, consequently the application made, largely by the sectarian world, must be faulty.

By many making this objection the theory is held that the first, third, sixth, ninth, and eleventh hours represent dispensations,—gospel dispensations in the world's history. The early morning was in the morn of creation, and the gospel was preached to Adam and his immediate posterity. Adam and his co-workers obeyed the gospel, accepted the Messiah who was to come. The third and sixth hours represent the gospel dispensation to Noah or Abraham and Moses. And it is true there is scriptural evidence that the gospel was preached in all these ages. The ninth hour represents the setting up of the kingdom of heaven in Christ's time,—the Christian era. The eleventh hour is the restoration of the gospel by the hands of the angel to Joseph Smith in the evening-time of the world's history,—the dispensation of the fullness of times. This is quite a theory, even if we do get a little mixed on Noah and Abraham. But this theory, separated from the first, does not harmonize fully with the parable. For instance, the sixth verse reads, "And about the eleventh hour he went out, and found others standing idle, and said unto them, Why stand ye here all the day idle?" A strict application of the second theory would say that these men had stood there idle from Adam's day on down till Joseph Smith's time. It does not look reasonable. This verse surely fits the first theory better.

"And when they came that began about the eleventh hour, they received every man a penny." They could have worked before if they had been "hired," but as it was they began about the eleventh hour. When the first came and received only a penny they murmured, saying, "These last have wrought only one hour, and thou hast made them equal unto us, who have borne the burden and heat of the day." Does any one suppose that those who labored a lifetime in the morn of creation are going to murmur because those who labor a lifetime in the closing dispensation receive eternal life with them? But if the first had given a life's service, and the last but a few years they might have some reason for murmuring. This favors the first theory also. Curiously enough opponents of the first theory and exponents of the second say absolutely nothing with regard to what is to be done with those who obeyed the gospel in middle life or old age in Adam's day, in Moses' day, in Christ's time. So when we come to examine closely we can hardly condemn the first theory and accept the second, for the second seems but to be the first made to apply to all the dispensations of gospel truth from the morn of creation down, instead of the Christian Era alone. We can hardly make anything else out of it. If the second is right the first must be, and if we accept one we will have to combine the two.

How then can we harmonize the teaching of the parable with the doctrine of rewards according to works? It may be done in this way by exponents of either theory. He who, in any dispensation or at any period of his lifetime, becomes convicted of sin, truly repents, truly yields obedience to the requirements of the gospel, receives remission of his sins, walks in humble submission to the leadings of the Holy Spirit, has demonstrated by his works that he is entitled to a portion of the celestial glory; and being quickened by a portion of the celestial glory, he shall, as promised by the Lord, receive a fullness:

The earth abideth the law of a celestial kingdom, for it filleth the measure of its creation, and transgresseth not the law. Wherefore it shall be sanctified; yea, notwithstanding it shall die, it shall be quickened again, and shall abide the power by which it is quickened, and the righteous shall inherit it; for, notwithstanding they die, they also shall rise again a spiritual body: they who are of a celestial spirit shall receive the same body, which was a natural body: even ye shall receive your bodies, and your glory shall be that glory by which your bodies are quickened. Ye who are quickened by a portion of the celestial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness.—Doctrine and Covenants 85:6.

If a man's works entitle him to a portion of the celestial glory, (the most faithful will likely be entitled to only a portion, by their own works,) and the Lord grants a fullness, is that a violation of the law laid down that every man shall be rewarded according to works? If a man's works entitle him to a portion of the terrestrial glory, and the Lord in his loving kindness grants a fullness of that glory, is that out of harmony with the law of reward for deeds wrought in the body? So then, if the man who begins early in life, by reason of faithfulness gains a portion of celestial glory, and the man who begins in middle life, or late in life, by reason of faithfulness earns a portion of the same glory, and the Lord grants a fullness to each, is there injustice in that?

Do we hear some one say that such teaching will cause carelessness, and that men will put off obedience thinking they can, just before shuffling off this mortal coil, lift up their eyes and cry, Receive me, Lord, and enter right in and receive their penny? Oh no, their works would not entitle to celestial glory, and the Savior says: "That servant who knew his Lord's will, and prepared not for his Lord's coming, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes."—Luke 12:56, Inspired Translation.

But there is a question whether the above applications separately or combined, are just exactly what was intended by the One who uttered the parable, and we submit the following application for examination, consideration, and possible criticism:

The kingdom of heaven represents the church in any dispensation. The laborers are ministers. Christ used the term laborers in referring to the ministry: "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."—Matthew 10:44. "Many are called" to obedience; "but few chosen," comparatively, to labor as ministers. The penny represents the reward for labor as a minister. As a man, he will be rewarded for good works besides. The "hours" may represent dispensations, or periods in life. As an illustration: We have in mind two brothers who heard and accepted the gospel in early manhood. One was called to act as a minister. The other lived as faithfully as a member. Twenty-five years later he was called to act as a minister,—in the eleventh hour apparently. Why was he idle all these years? "Because no man hath hired us." He had not been "called." Will he not be entitled to his penny as well as the one who was "hired" twenty-five years sooner? Certainly, even if he works but one hour. It was not his fault that he had not been hired before; he had just been waiting in the "market place." While each, if faithful, may receive a penny for ministerial service, each will be rewarded according to works as a man.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Those concerned please take notice that President Frederick M. Smith's address is changed to 523 East Fifth South Street, Salt Lake City, Utah. Do not neglect to use street address, as there are other Fred Smiths in Salt Lake City.

The business department is in receipt of a letter inclosing a dollar bill and fifty cents in stamps from some one who failed to send his or her name and consequently no credit can be given. The envelope did not bear a postmark. Too much care can not be taken in the transaction of your business with this office.

"Daniel Murray, long an assistant in the library of congress, is preparing a historical review of the exploits of negroes and persons of mixed blood in literature and other fields. Mr. Murray said in a recent interview: 'To the great mass of readers it will be news that Robert Browning was an octroon. The same may be said of Alexander Hamilton. Alexander Poushkin, Russia's greatest poet, was a quadroon.'"

"Chinese editors are polite. An author who had submitted a manuscript received it back, but not with an ordinary 'rejected with thanks' note, but with this characteristically polite letter:

"Illustrious Brother of the Sun and of the Moon: We have perused your manuscript with celestial delight. By the bones of our ancestors we swear that we have never met a masterpiece like it. If we publish it his majesty, the emperor, will command us to take it as a criterion and to print nothing that does not equal it. Since that could never be possible in ten thousand years, we return your manuscript, trembling, and asking your mercy seventeen thousand times.'"

John H. Scott, who so eloquently plead for an opportunity to prove to the Mormon conference that Joseph F. Smith has no right to pose as a prophet of God, is reported to have been disfellowshipped by the Mormon church. The conference convenes October 6, consequently it was necessary to rush matters in order to get him out of the church before that time. The Tribune says: "So much for Scott. He has joined the long caravan of those who journey away from the parching deserts of the Mormon church toward better climes, better soil, and better fruitage."

The publishing department will be represented at the Shenandoah conference, October 6 and 7. The Saints attending can secure the books of the church or pay their subscriptions at that time.

The board of trustees of Graceland College have established a boarding-house for young men where board and room can be had for two dollars a week. This low rate should insure an added number of students.

The Pastors' Union of Oak Park, Illinois, has nearly ready an interwoven harmony of the gospels in a single narrative at a price permitting its use as a tract. A united effort of the pastors in that suburb of Chicago last Easter resulted in the wide distribution of a smaller pamphlet, which was adopted in many other communities. Copies of this new book, containing two hundred and twenty-six pages, with information concerning the plan for its use, will be sent postpaid for fourteen cents.

PRESIDENT OF REORGANIZED CHURCH VISITS SALT LAKE CITY.

President Joseph Smith in his tour of the Northwest reached Salt Lake City in time to participate in the conference, September 23 and 24. He was interviewed by a representative of the Salt Lake Tribune, and a report published in the issue for September 24, from which we take the following:

Joseph Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa, eldest son of Joseph Smith, prophet of the Mormon church, and himself the head of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with his wife and three children, arrived in the city yesterday and are the guests of President Smith's son, Frederick M. Smith, 523 East Fifth South Street. President Smith has just made an extended tour through British Columbia and the Northwest and is on his way home. He will preach this morning and to-night at the chapel of his section, East Second South Street.

President Smith is seventy-three years old, but a man who is excellently preserved for one of his age. He stands over six feet [we think about five feet nine inches.—EDITOR] in height and is a man of patriarchal appearance. He is a man of pleasing address and speaks with fluency and decision. For fifty years he has been the head of the Reorganized Church. . . .

In a talk with a representative of the Tribune yesterday, President Smith spoke freely regarding conditions affecting the church of which he is the head, and of the situation in Utah.

POLYGAMY THE REAL TROUBLE.

"To deal with any situation," said President Smith, "requires first an interest in whatever the situation may be; second, a knowledge more or less thorough not only of the situation, but the causes which led up to it and the consequences which may follow a solution of the difficulties there may be in the situation or attendant upon it. The situation in Utah is of a complex character. It may not be necessary for the present to declare a conviction as to the origin of the main question in the difficulty, as it will be sufficient to state that, whatever its source, polygamy has been the principal cause of the conditions existing in the State, both in regard to the economic question involved, and the religious and spiritual. Whoever may have been the human instrument in the introduction of plural marriage into the tenets and practices of the Mormon church, it is safe to say that it is wrong. In order that this may be seen fairly, it is only necessary to premise that the church, at its institution, was based upon, fostered, and flourished by inspiration or revelation from God. One of the primary and fundamental principles enunciated by this principle of revelation was this: 'He that keepeth the law of God hath no need to break the law of the land.'

"From this it is clearly deducible that, granted the voice of inspiration, the people to whom this commandment came were justified in believing that God would at no time thereafter give a direction to the same people to whom this commandment came, the carrying into effect of which would lead them into either covert or open disregard of the statute enactments of the different States in which the church was to be built and perpetuated."

"What relation does the situation in Utah bear to the principle you have just stated?" was asked President Smith.

CONFLICT WITH GOVERNMENT.

"It has this relation to it: A course of procedure and practice brought the people of Utah face to face with the Government upon a question of an infraction of its laws. In this practice they claimed exemption from punishment upon the plea that it was a part of a religious confession of faith. The practice obtained and continued for a number of years before a public enunciation had been made; but in due time it was not only publicly enunciated, but became a rule by custom, and local laws were enacted legitimatizing some of the otherwise evil consequences of the practice. Those making claim for immunity from the operation of laws passed by the general Government upon an issue joined in the courts were forced into the condition of criminality for a breach of statutory law. It thus, in a sense, ceased to be a source of contention between different bodies of believers in so-called 'Mormonism,' particularly between the dominant church in Utah and the Reorganized Church, led by the son of the Prophet, Joseph the Seer."

REJECTED BY JOSEPH'S SONS:

"This latter body contended that no matter with whom the dogma and practice originated, it was wrong and productive of evil fruits; and the sons of the Prophet refused credence to the tenet and practice, notwithstanding the oft-repeated statement that their father was the one who introduced the precept and authorized the practice. The sons of the Prophet claimed the right then, as they do now, to accept, sustain, and maintain to the extent of their ability the original tenets of the church as proclaimed by Joseph and Hyrum Smith and their coworkers during the formative period through which the church passed from 1827 until the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith; and the further contention that whether Joseph Smith had been the human author of polygamy or not, the document claiming its divine authorization had never been legitimately accepted by the church according to the well-recognized principles of its organic law, even as such organic law has been stated by the dominant church in Utah."

THEIR ATTITUDE NOW.

"The attitude of the sons of the Prophet and their associates at the present time is this: That the question of the origin of the dogma and practice of plural marriage is almost, if not entirely, removed from the field of controversy by the actual facts of history and the statement of some of the leading officers of the dominant church in Utah upon this consideration, that if the origin of polygamy was divine, the authority for its practice was much obscured by the manner of its introduction; and accepting the statement made before a high tribunal by leading advocates and exponents of the theory and its practice, the document relied upon as divine authority and sanction had not received the legal sanction of the body itself upon whom it was to be effective. And that subsequently, when the church was in sore straits because of the courts taking cognizance of the practice being unlawful, intercession was made with reference to it of Him who was held to be its author and who had given it divine sanction, and upon this intercession he had authorized the cessation of the practice. So far, then, as divinity was in the question, if it was a virtue to obey it in the first instance it was doubly a virtue to have obeyed it in the second instance, which should have been a relief to the situation. Upon the consideration that the institution was human when found to be in conflict with law, it should have ceased then; so that whichever horn of this dilemma may be relied upon by the parties to this controversy, pro and con, as to its origin, that taken by the sons of the Prophet was conceded, and the question now is: Is it wrong?"

A PRECEDENT IN POINT.

"When the elders first went out preaching, one of the standard arguments was, briefly stated, this: No matter what may have been the religious belief of our fathers and grandfathers, or their fathers and grandfathers, if their belief should be found to have been erroneous, their sons and grandsons were under no obligation, either to their fellow men or to God, to continue in fellowship with such errors. Upon the consideration that if our forefathers did carry grist to the mill with the corn in one end of a sack and a stone in the other, it was no reason why their sons and grandsons should do the same thing. Hence, no matter who may have held to an erroneous theory or practiced an erroneous practice, such procedure was not and is not binding upon their children nor their children's children. And the sons of the Prophet come to the people of this valley, who claim to be the people of God, and proclaim privately and publicly their adherence to the primitive faith as instituted by their father and his coworkers, based upon the word of God as stated to them by the voice of inspiration to be contained in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the revelations to the church given through Joseph the Seer prior to his death and acknowledged to be such for many years after the death of the revelator. They contend, and are willing to stand by their contention, that there is now no special reason for continued controversy as to who may be in fault for the wrong and for the results which followed."

POLYGAMOUS LIVING WRONG.

"The duty of the people now is to follow the voice of inspiration out of their trouble, accept in good faith the announcement made in the manifesto by President Woodruff, that the practice should cease, with the understanding certified to before the court of chancery that it was to include both the solemnization of plural marriages and the continuance of living in polygamy."

"Is there a certainty of continued legal opposition?" was asked.

"The answer to this question can be but one: There is! It may not be called a danger, it is a certitude; and the longer a deference to the laws is withheld the more certain and vigorous will be the prosecution of offenders, and the more direful will be the punishment, possibly not upon individuals, but upon the community as a whole. The fact is, a continued violation of the laws of the land must bring the people into not only disrepute, but will array all the elements among the law-abiding against the offenders, and they will necessarily become outlaws to the commonwealth. No plea for loyalty under such conditions can be allowed. Besides this, a continued violation of the law of God, clearly made manifest through revelation, must inevitably bring upon the offending host the indignation and wrath of an offended God. The prophets of old foresaw this in their time and warned the people to whom they were sent against their offenses, and told them clearly what would befall them. And as surely as the ways of God have not changed, so surely will continued disregard of his expressed will bring professing Israel under the rod."

OBJECTS OF REORGANIZERS.

"The objects of the sons of the Prophet, briefly stated, are these: Having in view the inviolate character of the law of God, given to Israel, ancient and modern, they accepted the faith of their father, as laid down by him in the acknowledged standard works of the church, and can in no sense be called apostates. Doing as their father did, they placed their condition and their cause before the God of revelation, and their work was pointed out to them. They believed that there was good in what was called 'Mormonism.' They believe so yet. It has been the basic principle upon which they have placed their life work. They have not been led by personal ambition, the love of wealth, or the pleasure of dominating in creed-making. They have had no ambition for the exercise of priestly power. They were told by the voice of inspiration formally declared in revelation to the church that in time they were to have no king."

CONSENT OF THE PEOPLE.

"Arguing from this basis, . . . no man was to be intrusted with unrestricted kingly powers; that notwithstanding the church was a theocracy in its spiritual phase, the human right to act in the church was derived from the consent of the people, precisely as the people at the foot of Sinai accepted the law given through Moses, lifting up their hands in approval thereof. They detested priestcraft and all that accompanied its exercise. They were born citizens of a great republic, the creation of which among men they believed to have been by direct design of God, and that the laws under which the church was to develop were the result, to a greater or lesser extent, of inspiration from the righteous Lawgiver, and were to continue operative in their force and unspent in their power until the rule of God should prevail universally by the establishment of the reign of righteousness of him whose right it is to reign. And that not until that time would the people of God be exempt from an adherence to and an observance of the laws under which the nation was to grow into prominence."

NO MIXING IN POLITICS.

"Their work does not lie along political lines, and at the same time there is more or less of political significance in the simple provision that men must live in the observance of the laws. Whatever is subversive of the institution under which the church was to develop and to continue on to final triumph, must be eliminated, no matter whence it arise or who may be responsible therefor. Hence the Reorganized Church, with which the sons of the Prophet stand allied, stands to-day as the exponent of the primitive faith, acknowledged of God. And it is their province, made their duty under the law—the law of spiritual development and continued growth—to examine faithfully and critically every phase of so-called 'Mormonism,' and to resist and denounce every innovation that is calculated to destroy the effective law of Christ unto the development of spiritual characters, worthy of inheritance with the righteous, the good, the redeemed of earth. They stand for the liberty of conscience in spiritual matters, subject only to the prohibitive enactments of the law of God. They represent to the people the faith as published in the lifetime of Joseph and Hyrum Smith without modification or apology, and wherever they may be heard, they ask for a hearing and plead with the people to arise in their God-given right and assert the dignity of manhood with the intent and purpose to answer individually for the responsibilities placed upon them by creation."

WHY HE COMES HERE.

"If it be further asked why these representatives of the Seer are attempting to interfere with the religious people in the valleys of the mountains who are professedly the church of Christ, the answer must be, they have the inherent right as legal members of the original body to protest against that which is wrong and which in any sense vitiates the original proclamation or intervenes to prevent the accredited ministers of that faith to reach the people. The latest revelation to the church during the lifetime of the prophet clearly stated that by a certain course of conduct they should find favor with the people. The Reorganized Church has compromised no principle of the gospel in their promulgation of the original faith; nor have they forfeited their right to citizenship by disregard of the law, hence they come among the people to invite them to a consideration of the positions which they occupy.

"It required courage upon the part of the sons of the Prophet to take the stand they did. By them who are hostile to the original faith and who have been its avowed and active enemies, they were charged with the perpetuation of a fraud and a deception which their father had foisted upon the world. By some who were professed friends of their father they were charged with apostasy, and that they were trying to break down that which their father had died to build up. This is not correct; neither of the above accusations contain truth."

MUST CEASE WRONG-DOING.

"It will require equal but no greater courage on the part of those who may now by investigation find themselves to have been in error and the participants in wrong-doing, either themselves as wrong-doers or sufferers in the wrong-doing of others, to take open ground against the further continuance of such wrong-doing; but they must do this if they shall be permitted to partake of the glory which has been promised and which was the legendary teaching of the earlier and more successful preaching of the faith. The decadence in spiritual power must be overcome. This can only be done by a putting away of the wrong-doing on the part of those who may be doing so and the public and continued protestation against the wrong-doing in others, no matter whom they may be, whether leaders or humble followers. There is virtue in resistance to wrong and evil. It may require leaders. These leaders will be found. They already exist. But leaders, however strong they may be personally, however right they may be in principle, can not help those who will not help themselves. Jesus said long ago that if the blind follow blind leaders they will all fall into the ditch together. There are none so blind as those who are blinded by selfish ambition or the improper pursuit of worldly advantages and wealth. The next to these in blindness are those who willingly lend themselves to the schemes of such ambitious men."

SUGGESTION OF REMEDY.

"The sons of the Prophet suggest as a remedy what one of them did in these valleys in 1885: that those upon whom the evil consequences must inevitably fall make outspoken and persistent remonstrance against the adherence to practices which are abhorrent to American institutions, subversive of the good of the community, and contrary to law, coupled with a demand that those who were practicing that which brought reproach upon the whole body should cease from such procedure at once and for all time. The remedy now lies with such. It can not be done by one or two. It must be done by conjoint effort, and the voice of inspiration pleads with the people and exhorts to this course. Those who live outside of Utah and know the conditions obtaining are aware of the fact that there is a continued increase of deprecation of the course which has been pursued by the church in Utah, and of an almost absolute loss of confidence in the affirmation of loyalty to the Government and of honesty of purpose among the leading spirits of the people.

"It can be remedied, and it ought to be."

The above statement merits a careful reading by all of us. The forceful truths adduced we should not only apply to the people in the West, in our opposition to their wrong-doing, but should make continuous use of them against wrong-doing everywhere, not only in the world but within our own ranks, if such, now or in the future, be found to exist. Truly, "there is virtue in resistance to wrong and evil," and we are commanded to "add to your faith virtue."

President Smith addressed a large audience Sunday, the 24th, and of this the Tribune for September 25 says:

Sledge-hammer blows in the battle for loyalty to the Government, for obedience to the laws of the land and of God, for that freedom and independence which gives to the humblest individual in the church the courage to call even the highest of the church leaders to task for violation of the laws, were dealt last night in the address by Joseph Smith, eldest son of the Mormon Prophet, and President of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

President Smith spoke extemporaneously for three quarters of an hour, holding the large audience to the closest attention—an audience that filled every available foot of space in the chapel, crowding the hall and the open doors, and many of whom were utterly unable to gain admission to the room.

The address, which was clear-cut and trenchant throughout, covered three main questions: The duty of obedience to the law of God and the land, the evil repute that comes upon the people when the church leaders violate the laws, and the necessity of that awakening to courage and freedom that will give the men and women of Utah power to say: "The laws must be obeyed; the violators, no matter how high their position, must be punished."

President Smith said in part:

"I come to you in the spirit of the gospel which says: 'It is written.' I hold no man's person in admiration, admiring none, no matter what his station, above the degree to which the merit of his character entitles him. I hold no man in fear; I have no fear except that I may fail in my duty to God. I do not come in enmity to man. I war against iniquity in high places.

"I believe that God inspired wise men to write the Constitution of the United States; that in his purpose in working out the destinies of the world, he directed the making of the laws under which this nation is administered. We can have no king here; but republican institutions must prevail until the coming of Christ."

LEADERS MUST OBEY LAWS.

"He that teacheth the laws of truth hath no need to break the laws of the land, and no man of intelligence who lives in defiance of the laws of God and of the nation can get upon his knees and look up to his Maker, expecting to receive divine guidance for himself or his people. 'If that be treason, make the most of it.'"

DISLOYALTY TO GOVERNMENT.

"We are brought face to face with this condition: There is here a standing out against the Government of the United States. God never intended that we should stain our garments with disobedience; that we should fill our hearts with disloyalty. Seventy-five years have gone by since our church was organized, yet only a very small portion of people among the nations of the earth have heard the message of the gospel. It is an awful condition, yet I do not seek to cast the blame upon any one man. I stand by that which bears the seal and signet of God. I plead the sacred character of the law.

"If perchance, some one should say: 'The law has been changed,' then I cite you to the warning of the apostle Paul: 'If an angel from heaven offer you any other law than this, let him be accursed.' There are tests to be made and nothing that is said to be revealed of God is binding upon the people until those tests have been applied. The gospel can never do anything for us if we strike against the institutions of our country.

"The work of the missionaries sent out has been like throwing dust into the air. All barriers must be removed; all the walls must be torn down; all must live in obedience to the laws, before we can succeed in disseminating the gospel to the world."

MUST NOT BE SLAVES.

"How many of you dare to stand up in your congregations and publicly oppose one of your leaders for a known violation of law? Are your men and women free? Do you dare to take to task the highest officers of your church? You will never be free until you have the the American right to vote 'No' in accordance with the courage of your convictions without endangering your church and rendering yourselves liable to the social and spiritual ostracism that comes now on those men who dare to bring accusations against their church leaders."

CONTRAST CONDITIONS.

"In the land of my church, if my people found me in any lapse of virtue, I would be brought before the bishop's court and have my license to preach the gospel taken away. I would never dare to put in jeopardy the virtues of any woman of my church.

"So long as these barriers of disloyalty and violation of the law remain you can not go abroad and receive the prestige which the people of this State deserve. You can not disguise the fact, the world is every day losing confidence in Utah. I have asked the question, What would happen if you dare to complain of the church leaders for infraction of the laws? and the answer is: The complainant will lose his place in the church.

"That is not the gospel. The gospel is free. The man must be blind and deaf who can not see that the teaching of the gospel is to deliver up to the laws those who set the statutes of the State at defiance. I warn you that nothing but the truth can in the end prevail—that you can never find salvation for yourselves and the State until you acquire that quality of heroism that will cause you to rise up in your courage and say: "This can go no further. We will be free." "

At the conclusion of the services the benediction was pronounced by Elder Kelley and the announcement was made that the services would continue through the week, President Smith to remain several days, although the exact length of his stay has not been determined. A prayer-service will be held this morning at ten o'clock, and there will be preaching at eight in the evening.

At the service yesterday morning President Smith preached on "The validity of the gospel" and at the conclusion of both meetings held informal receptions, at which he was greeted by hundreds. He is genial and unaffected in his manner, without a trace of the austerity of false dignity often seen in those who occupy positions of great power.

POLYGAMIST ROBERTS THERE.

Among those who listened to the evening address was Brigham H. Roberts, he of three wives, who followed the sermon with careful attention. Charles A. Smurthwaite of Ogden, who was last spring disfellowshipped from the Mormon church for daring to oppose Joseph F. Smith's ecclesiastical-commercial rule, was also in the audience.

Original Articles

"IS THE SPIRIT OF GOD AND THE HOLY GHOST
ONE AND THE SAME?"

Whatever may be the characteristics of other worlds, this world is certainly a world of surprises. One of the surprises is contained in your issue of August 9, in which is a reply to my article in HERALD for July 12, in which the author kindly furnished me with thirty-seven lines of scripture with notes on the same, after saying on page 780, four lines from the bottom of the second column, that he did not intend to "introduce passages of scripture to overburden" my mind,—discovering how I read them.

He has also presented me with a parable which, to employ his own words, he has "fixed up" for me; but the value of both these possessions, namely, the thirty-seven lines of scripture and the parable, is seriously discounted by the fact that less than seven and a half per cent of the scripture, and none at all of the parable, have the remotest bearing upon the question at issue: as I have never denied either publicly or privately, by either tongue or pen, that God the Father sent his Son to the earth, or that his Son delivered the words which he received from his Father, or that he called, chose, and spoke to his twelve apostles, giving them instructions prior to his crucifixion, etc.; this being the sole purport of the passages furnished by the brother on page 781 for my especial benefit and behoof, while the real question at issue, namely, "Is the Spirit of God and the Holy Ghost given by the laying on of the elders' hands one and the same thing," is conspicuous by its entire absence from the brother's letter from beginning to end. The question between us is in reality one of the profoundest biological and psychological problems in this mundane universe, namely, the question of Holy Spirit power, personality, and operation; and especially the question of the birth of the Spirit in an individual; and yet the brother seems to have (despite his advanced years) no deeper sense of the vast importance and profundity of the problem than to indulge in jibes to the effect that I am wearing (or rather am incumbered with) a pair of the old style of "sectarian spectacles." As a matter of fact I do not wear spectacles at all, and if I did they would not be "sectarian" ones, for during the entire period of my sojourn among the "sectarians" I was never indoctrinated into the tenets of either spiritual birth, as I now see it, or of the doctrine of the laying on of hands for any purpose whatever. Later on the brother somewhat unkindly suggests (because I do not happen to agree with him) that I have no confidence in the word of God, or of his Son Jesus Christ, or in the record of his beloved disciple John. (See page 780, bottom of column 1, and the first two lines of column 2.)

Since when has it been a mark of want of confidence in Jesus Christ to doubt the word and commandment of William Hawkins? Personally, I am thirty years Bro. Hawkins' junior; yet I have lived long enough to believe and acknowledge that those who differ from me in doctrinal or other points are just as honest, just as sincere, and just as reverential towards the word of God, and the God of the word, as I claim to be myself.

As for the cry of "sectarianism," I have yet to learn that, because "sectarians" believe that nine times eleven are ninety-nine, or that seven times nine are sixty-three, it is therefore wrong.

If reverence for God's house (or what they believe to be his house), if sincere devotion to his holy day, if a quiet and reverential behavior during the exercises of divine worship, and a respectful courtesy one toward another, even in business-meeting, is displeasing and reprehensible in the sight of God,—then would the stigma of "sectarian" or "sectarianism" be a most serious reproach; but I have yet to learn that these things are abominations in God's sight, even if certain of their creeds and doctrines are erroneous.

But, dear brother, the very first rule of logic teaches that "every question in dispute must be decided upon its own merits, irrespective of the question as to whether this, that, or the other church or political faction indorses it or otherwise."

Had I been moved in my researches after truth—whether in science or in religion—by mere names, I should never have become a Latter Day Saint at all, for all my friends (save the mark) did all they could, as soon as they heard I was investigating this great and glorious evangel of the latter days, to deter me by the continued repetition, in every variety of keynote and inflection, of the parrot cry of "Mormon, Mormon, Joe Smith, imposture, delusion, false prophets," etc.

I trust I can humbly and reverently say that none of these things moved me in my researches after truth and the vast grandeurs and glories of the unknown; for I regard truth as so divine, so sacred a thing, that I can not afford to suffer it to elude my grasp; or to permit the least one of the glorious avenues by which the truth is to be found to be closed and barricaded by any such "No Thoroughfare" notice-boards as "sectarianism," or any such party-cry of human barriers against the pursuit and discovery of truth.

Let me now state clearly and distinctly why I can not subscribe to the hypothesis that the Holy Ghost and the Spirit of God, given of God in the laying on of hands, is one and the same thing; and also why I wrote in my article of July 12 that my entire sympathies are with the brother who says so logically, so temperately, and so reasonably, "I can not help believing that the Spirit of God was within us at the time of the baptism of water."

In the first place, (although Bro. Hawkins appears to have entirely overlooked this point,) the Hebrew original for the "Spirit of truth" or "Spirit of God" spoken of as "He, the Spirit" in John 16:7-15, (where the personal pronoun is repeated no less than nine times,) is not the same word at all as in John 3:8: "The wind bloweth where it listeth, . . . so is every one that is born of the Spirit"; for in this latter verse (as in those other passages I enumerated in my last letter, where the Spirit given through the laying on of hands is mentioned) it is pneuma, meaning wind or spirit, while in John 16:7-15 it is ruach-ha-elohim, meaning God the Spirit; thus pointing in the most solemn and efficacious manner to a personal being, a personal Holy Spirit, separate and distinct from, and yet, in essence, one with God the Father, and his Son, the second sacred personage in the holy Trinity; "three persons in one God-head."

Bro. Hawkins seriously misunderstands my position if (as I gather from his last letter) he thinks I believe in only two personages, namely, the Father and the Son; for I believe in the third person (or personage) as reverently and as decisively as I believe in either God the eternal Father, or in his Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, who was "nailed to the accursed tree" and crucified for the sins of Adam, and of a guilty and ruined world beside; for is it not written in the Scriptures, "who his own self bare our sins [not simply Adam's transgression] in his own body on the tree"? (1 Peter 2:24.) And again, "The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all," and "with his stripes we [not Adam alone, but we also] are healed."—Isaiah 53:5, 6.

Thus I have spiritual and scriptural warrant for believing in a personal God, the Father, and a personal God, the Spirit, no less than in a personal Redeemer of mankind; the only difference being that while the Savior was a visible, real, and tangible Comforter, one that could be "touched and handled and felt," (Luke 24:39; 1 John 1:1,) the "other Comforter" (or Paraclete) whom Christ promised to his disciples that the Father would "send in his name" (or place) would not be seen and tangible (like he was). And for this reason the "world can not receive him," because it "seeth him not, neither knoweth him"; but the disciples would know him, for he "dwelleth with you, and shall be in you," as the Lord had prophetically promised unto them. (John 14:17.) But the Holy Ghost given of God by the laying on of the elders' hands is the same word, pneuma, as in Acts 2:2: "And suddenly there came from heaven a sound as of a mighty rushing wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting."

It is most abundantly and fully demonstrated by the scriptures of truth that this Spirit of God, this pneuma, is "poured forth" both by God the Father and God the Son, and also by God the Holy Ghost; hence, I spoke in my last letter of the Holy Ghost the "giver" and the Holy Ghost the "gift," though it is much to be regretted that our English Bible translators employed the same word—Holy Ghost—for the giver as they have in speaking of the gift or gifts of the Holy Ghost, though, as I have intimated in an earlier portion of this letter, the two words are vastly different in their Greek and Hebrew originals, and were obviously so understood, not only by the immediate disciples and apostles of our beloved Lord and Master, but by all of the early Christian fathers, such as Cyprian, Origen, Iræneus, Polycarp, Tertullian, the "Shepherd of Hermas," the earlier bishops of Herculaneum and Nicea, Edessa, and many others that I might name.

I now invite your numerous readers' kind attention to a totally different and distinct phase of this profound and all-important subject. The brother remarked in his earlier letter that no person can or does receive the Holy Spirit till the actual baptism of water and the laying on of hands. To this I replied in my letter of July 12 saying, "If there is no life in the natural born child till it comes to the actual moment of birth, is it not a dead child? Ergo, if the 'Spirit of life' is not within us till we come to the actual birth of water, then, obviously and incontrovertibly, there is no life in us either." To this palpably plain and self-evident proposition, Bro. Hawkins offers neither rejoinder nor reply.

But I ask the brother in all kindness, in all seriousness, and all sincerity, Is there any analogy to support such a hypothesis in the entire field of Nature, from the lowest and feeblest microcosms that exist, to the most highly developed and highly organized members of either the animal or vegetable kingdoms of this lower world?

Is any such thing known in the entire domain of natural history or biology as for a dead, lifeless plant or tree or animal or even insect to come to life and germinate upon its being baptized (or immersed) in the element of water?

Never was such a thing known in the history of science, or in the entire history of the world.

Does not all Nature cry aloud with one unanimous and authoritative voice, "No, there must first be life in the plant or seed or tree or animal, or else would ten thousand baptisms avail nothing"?

The fact is, dear readers, "there can be no life without antecedent life," as all science distinctly and conclusively shows.

Therefore for an elder or priest to baptize any person into whose heart the Holy Ghost (the life-spirit) has not already found an entrance, is simply to baptize a dead body; that is, spiritually "dead in trespasses and sins," as saith the apostle Paul in Ephesians 2:1.

But we, as Latter Day Saint elders, are distinctly commanded to baptize none such applicants. They must first show that they have received of the Spirit of Christ leading them to repentance for all their sins. (See Doctrine and Covenants 17:7.)

In other phraseology they are to "bring forth fruit meet for repentance," as saith the Baptist. (See Matthew 3:8; Acts 2:34-38; 22:20; Book of Mormon 475, 1, 2, large edition.)

Can a dead body bring forth fruit of any kind? let alone the beautiful and precious fruits of "repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ." (Hebrews 6:1.)

The Book of Mormon also most solemnly inculcates the command (or assertion) that none are baptized save they came down into the depths of humility and repented of all their sins with a pure desire to forsake the same. (See Book of Mormon 381:50; 423:1; 258:125-127; 475, 476, large edition.)

Bro. Hawkins now enlarges upon his original statement by remarking (on page 781, lines 18-20) that

"the Spirit of God will not enter into a man and dwell there unless he has been purged from his sins, by the operation of God's law," etc.

The second portion of this thesis may be quite correct, but the first part stands in serious need of proof and demonstration from God's holy word.

I have searched long and earnestly but can find no such statement that the Spirit of God "will not enter into a man," but I do find a distinct and unequivocal intimation that the Spirit of God can not dwell in unholy temples. (See Book of Mormon 197:17.) By this affirmation I understand that when the Spirit of God has entered into a man and by loving pleading and persuasion has importuned of him to leave his evil ways, to cease to do evil, and learn to do well, if that sinner shall turn from sin and the error of his ways, it shall come to pass, as saith the prophet Ezekiel: "If the wicked turn from his wickedness, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall live thereby."—Ezekiel 33:19.

He may then rightfully and justly be baptized by one having authority from God, for the "washing away of his sins." (Acts 22:16.) And thus a cleansed and renovated body being the fit and appropriate receptacle of the new-born soul, or spirit, (as shown in Matthew 9:17 and Ephesians 5:23,) the elders of God's church will lay their hands upon his head, after solemn prayer and supplication before God, (see Acts 13:3,) that he may be confirmed, or, as saith the apostle Paul in Ephesians 1:13, sealed with that holy Spirit of promise, unto the day of our Lord Jesus Christ, when, if found faithful, he shall be received into the everlasting habitations of the Father (see Matthew 25:34). At the time of the "sealing" or "confirmation" it is usually shadowed forth by the power and gift of the Spirit of God in prophecy, what shall be the special powers, gifts, and prerogatives of the newly born child of God, provided he continues to walk in God's holy laws and ordinances till the end of his days, be they short or long. Thus your readers may judge for themselves as to the virtue and veracity of Elder Hawkins' assertion that the Spirit of God can not enter into a man, for here is an example typical of thousands more, where the Spirit of God has not only entered into the man, but dwelt, and is still dwelling within him.

Whereas, I claim that the Spirit of God not only can, but does enter into a man, to plead within him to turn unto the living God, saying, "If ye will return, return unto me, saith the Lord."—Jeremiah 4:1.

But my Bible tells me that the Spirit of God will not dwell in unholy temples, meaning that if the man, instead of doing as the one I described before, deliberately hardens his heart against light, love, truth, and holiness, the Spirit of God will not always strive with that man. (See Genesis 6:3.) It will not remain with him after he has thus deliberately and willfully rejected his kind and gracious overtures of mercy, for the reason that it can not "dwell in unholy temples," but will take its departure, grieved and sorrowful; and that man is left to darkness, misery, and despair, and (to employ the impressive language of Christ) the "last state of that man is worse than the first." (Luke 11: 26.)

But to class every soul of man as Elder Hawkins does, (at least I suppose he is an elder; I have no personal knowledge of the brother,) to classify, I say, every soul of man who has not actually been through the baptismal waters as "worldly" and "unholy in God's sight" (see HERALD No. 26, page 637, column 2, line 12 from bottom) appears to me not only a violation of the direct language of Christ in Luke 6: 36 but a distinct impugment and imputation upon the love and mercy of that merciful being who "causeth his rain to fall and his sun to shine on the just and the unjust, the evil and the good." (Matthew 5: 45.)

Moreover, what about those who, being under the strict dominion of unyielding and unmerciful parents, husbands, or guardians, are denied the opportunity (despite their earnest and tearful pleading) of being "buried beneath the liquid wave" by those holding God-given priesthood and authority, simply because of that foul stigma, "Mormon"? Bro. Hawkins' harsh dictum would sweep all such heart-broken and troubled souls into the very same vortex and maelstrom of misery and destruction as the most obstinate and gospel-hardened sinner in this world or in the world to come, simply because they have not been baptized.

I have the greatest respect for age and experience, but I must respectfully decline to receive or indorse any such unjust and unmerciful dictum, even on the ipse dixit (or bare word) of Methusaleh himself.

I ask for chapter and verse, and until that is supplied, I can not in truth and justice accept any such hypothesis upon the unsustained and unsupported word of any man, however much I may respect him as a man, or esteem him as a brother. In doing this I am no more than fulfilling the Lord's most solemn injunction, as recorded in Thessalonians 5: 21, "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."

In conclusion, the brother asks me who is doing the extensive proselyting business I referred to. My answer is, That same energizing, life-giving Spirit that is going to new-create and purify the entire earth, when the wolf shall lie down with the lamb, and the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the mighty deep, and when none shall say, "know ye the Lord," for all shall know him from the least to the greatest. (See Isaiah 11.)

Ever praying for the spread of eternal truth, I remain,

Your brother in bonds,

F. R. TUBB.

The wise virgins represent the church of Jesus Christ, the foolish virgins represent the apostate church. The ten virgins are practically two virgins, one wise and one foolish, both of whom made their appearance in five different dispensations. It is like this:

The householder went out early in the morning to hire laborers into his vineyard; he made an agreement with them, and they went to work. (See Matthew 20: 1.) Jesus said that this parable represents the kingdom of heaven, as also does the parable of the ten virgins. Now we take it that the agreement he made with the laborers was that they were to organize, maintain, and defend the church; their wages to be paid when the day was finished. In the agreement, no doubt, the householder was to furnish all the necessary means for the success of the church, which means are represented in the parable of the ten virgins as lamps and oil. But by and by the laborers in the vineyard, who constituted the church, failed to make use of the lamps for the good of the church. When the householder saw that, he withheld the supply of oil, and then we have the apostate church—the foolish virgin. She has the organization—the lamp—but no Holy Spirit to enable the organization to do its work, no oil to make the lamp effective; and thus the laborers, who constituted the church, genuine or apostate, the wise and the foolish, died, or, as Jesus said about Lazarus, went to sleep, and the first dispensation was closed, its work passed into history.

The third, sixth, ninth, and eleventh hours have the same history. The genuine church was rejected at Nauvoo (see Doctrine and Covenants 107: 11); the wise virgin of the eleventh-hour dispensation went to sleep then; the foolish virgin fled to the mountains, where she still holds her lamp (organization), but lacks oil.

At midnight the cry is to be made, "behold the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." It will not be made by the wise virgin (the church) but will be made to her. We think it will be made by the voice which John saw came out of the throne of God. (See Revelation 19: 5.) We think that voice will have authority to call from her sleep the church in all dispensations and make payment to the laborers of the vineyard as per agreement when they were hired (viz: a part in the first resurrection), and then the marriage of the Lamb has come, for his wife has made herself ready and she will be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white, which is the righteousness of saints. (See Revelation 19: 8.) Thus all saints in any dispensation shall form the bride, the Lamb's wife.

As to the foolish virgins calling upon the wise for oil and afterward trying to purchase elsewhere, that can be accounted for in like manner as the rich man calling on Lazarus to aid him. The rich man thought Lazarus could aid him; the foolish virgins thought the wise ones could aid them. Lazarus and the rich man and Abraham were in the same country, in spirit state, and could see each other, and converse with each other, so perhaps are now the ten virgins. And in the country where the rich man was a gospel dispensation has been delivered (see 1 Peter 3:19 and 4:6), so no doubt there is a legitimate source from whence the foolish can obtain oil.

But what about the Reorganization? The Reorganization has not gone to sleep. The parable deals only with the virgins who are asleep at his coming. Paul says we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed. (See 1 Corinthians 15:51.) We hope that the Reorganization will be ready for the change.

Again: Every man in his own order: Christ the first fruit (of the resurrection) afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming (the living). (See 1 Corinthians 15:23.)

For proof: "This we say unto you by the word of the Lord that we who are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep," (1 Thessalonians 4:15,) for "the dead in Christ shall rise first" (1 Thessalonians 4:16). Those dead in Christ are the ones spoken of in the fifteenth verse as remaining and being asleep. After they have risen then shall the ones who are alive be caught up together with them into the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air. (See 1 Thessalonians 4:17.) Then will take place the marriage of the Lamb, and this body of people who meet him in the air is his wife, who has made herself ready. (See Revelation 19:7.) Paul says, "and so shall we ever be with the Lord." (1 Thessalonians 4:17.)

TWO BY TWO:

In query column of HERALD, page 850, we have the question concerning ministerial travel, relative to purse, scrip, and two coats, as well as two by two. These are presented in one commandment under four propositions, viz.; money, food, clothing, and duality. Each proposition seems equally imperative in importance and comes under the proviso, "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise."—Doctrine and Covenants 81:3.

The Jerusalem missionaries were sent to their labor with these words:

Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.—Matthew 10:5, 6. Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses: nor scrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves: for the workman is worthy of his meat [supplies?].—Matthew 10:9, 10.

Another of the evangelists puts it thus: "He said unto them, Take nothing for your journey, neither staves . . . scrip . . . bread . . . money; neither have two coats apiece."—Luke 9:3. These are the accepted commandments of the Master, and as such are heavily laden with portentous results to the household of faith—not the nations. Hear him:

If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him. He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings: and the word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me.—John 14:23, 24. I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I shall say, and what I should speak.—John 12:49. He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him at the last day.—Verse 48.

These are ominous words and fraught with momentous results to those to whom they were delivered,—not for time only, but a criterion of judgment in the day of final reckoning. The commission of those Jerusalem apostolic messengers does not state any record of promise that their necessities should be supplied, but they returned rejoicing (see Luke 10:17) and said they "lacked nothing." (Luke 22:35.)

Those were stringent measures, but none the less imperative, depriving them of monetary values for emergency market and exchange, denying the ration for their haversacks (scrip, or bag—Webster; 1 Samuel 17:40), forbidding them to provide staff, emergency coat, or shoes—all of these were carefully and specifically named and required to be observed and carried into effect by the contracting servants, and were carefully written in the contract by the inspired scribes for our learning "that we, through patience and comfort of the scriptures, might have hope."

We may not seek indulgence in a license coined from an emergency counsel held for an especial occasion of an entirely different nature from the one just treated of. I refer to Luke 22:36, 37: "But now, he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip: and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one. For I say unto you that which is written must be accomplished in me." (See Isaiah 53.) This was spoken with reference to an ordeal of sorrow, death, and bereavement—a sad and mournful scene to be enacted. An armed mob was to be met—men prepared soul and body to withstand the victim and his followers. Human elements were about to meet, and a possible contest for the mastery—purely mundane in character. "Swords and staves" are not the instruments of Christian warfare, even in self-defense. (See John 18:36.) "All they who take the sword shall perish with the sword."—Matthew 26:52, 53. Therefore those instructions given on the eve of the great tragedy are of no import in effecting the great spiritual commission given to the apostolic ministry, as is significantly hinted in the phrase: "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee."—Acts 3:6; and that other significant statement of Paul: "I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel . . . these hands have ministered to my necessities, and to them that were with me."—Acts 20:33, 34.

Sometimes it seems a serious matter for the outgoing missionary to resolve to leave his second coat at home when starting out to prosecute his mission; especially in countries subject to sudden and severe climatic changes, and the enforcement of the raiment proposition as it appears in the commission is not compulsory nor requisite in other climes, especially as the Judea mission field is supposed to be in a mild climate, adapted to the wearing of light apparel. But this does not appear to be correct, for in the early stages of humanity a solemn and unchanging promise was made to the inhabitants of the earth, comprising eight propositions, viz: that (1) seed-time and harvest, (2) cold and heat, (3) summer and winter, (4) day and night, shall not cease. (See Genesis 8:22.) These four duals are to abide while the earth continues. Hence this mild-weather idea is not admissible, as is distinctly indicated on the face of scriptural history, by which we are reminded (see 2 Samuel 23:20, and 1 Chronicles 11:22) of the existence of snow, which is not an indication of tropical warmth; and if we follow Paul in his mission work we will find him and his fellow travelers seeking winter-quarters in a milder part (see Acts 28:2; 36:22; Titus 3:12), while the kings of Judea found comfortable lodging in their winter palaces (see Jeremiah 36:22), and to cap the climax John speaks of the inhabitants at Jerusalem hovering over the fire because "it was cold" (see John 18:18), and Jesus himself finishes the story of cold prospects by charging his disciples to pray that their flight from Jerusalem be not in winter (see Matthew 24:20.) Job, David, the prophets, and Bible historians seem all to have been familiar with the existence of snow, cold, hail, ice, and frost, which leaves but one logical conclusion, viz: that no part of the mission instructions were left optional to the disciple, nor subject to the conditions of wind or weather; and this conclusion is emphasized in the Master's parting words, "teaching them [the nations] to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." (Matthew 28:20.) And, "if a man love me he will keep my words, [John 14:23], . . . the Holy Ghost . . . shall . . . bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you." (Verse 26.) "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you."—John 15:14.

The Doctrine and Covenants is not less conspicuous in this matter, and indeed, being the "discipline" for this generation, is a more direct monitor to the ministry of this age than is the New Testament Scriptures. It offers no apology, but steps into the arena as from the mouth of God with the declaration:

I am God, and have spoken it; these commandments are of me, and were given unto my servants in their weakness, after the manner of their language, that they might come to understanding; and . . . be instructed; . . . and receive knowledge from time to time.—Doctrine and Covenants 1:5.

Cowdery was admonished thus:

I have manifested . . . by my Spirit in many instances, that the things which you have written are true; . . . I give unto you a commandment, that you rely upon the things which are written; for in them are all things written concerning the foundation of my church, my gospel, and my rock; . . . build up my church upon the foundation of my gospel and my rock, the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.—Doctrine and Covenants 16:1.

Again:

Require not miracles, except I shall command you; except casting out devils; healing the sick; and against poisonous serpents, and against deadly poisons; and these ye shall not do, except it be required of you by those who desire it, . . . for ye shall do according to that which is written.—Doctrine and Covenants 23:6.

These admonitions are terse and pointed, with no option in the hands of the missionary. The words of Jesus to his disciples were unwritten until they (evangelists) wrote them, and they had to rely on the Spirit of truth to bring to their minds the things taught them. And when the nineteenth-century seer came on duty, much of the written word of the gospel had to be reproduced and brought to mind by the same Spirit and rewritten; therefore the modern gospel worker has little excuse for neglecting the words of instruction so carefully given, and the pertinent remark that the things which are written must be relied upon. This is enforced by the declaration, "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise."—Doctrine and Covenants 81:2, 3.

Former-day evangelists were forbidden to provide staff, monetary exchange, lunch, and clothing, which requirement, nor any part of it, was not recalled, nor annulled at any time, by any action of the lawgiver; but when the gospel plan was reestablished in the nineteenth century the same provisions were reproduced to the seer and six ordained companions thus:

This revelation unto you, and commandment, is in force from this very hour upon all the world, and the gospel is unto all who have not received it. . . . From you it must be preached unto them . . . I give unto you this commandment, that ye become even as my friends in days when I was with them, . . . I suffered them not to have purse or scrip, neither two coats; . . . any man who will go and preach this gospel of the kingdom, and fail not to continue faithful in all things, shall not be weary in mind, neither darkened, . . . take no thought for the morrow, [for food, drink, or raiment] . . . let the morrow take thought for the things of itself.—Doctrine and Covenants 83:12-14.

If the gospel mission is of the same import now that it was nineteen hundred years ago, then the same requirements are obligatory on its ministry, to abide as long as there are any to receive it. The accentuating of a dual mission of "two by two" as found in Doctrine and Covenants 115:7 can not be construed to annul the details set forth in the former instructions; especially those given to the church in section 83, September, 1832.

In July, 1830, Joseph and Oliver were given a special mission in charge of the church work, and they—especially Joseph—were to be supported by the church as present necessity should demand; and if any others were so supported by the church it was only such as had been ordained prior to that time. But in the absence of record, definite provision, or reliable tradition, it is not presumable that the eldership in any sense became the wards of the church before the established custom of the Reorganized Church was introduced and became the practice.

Good evidence of this is found in the statement of the second son of the Prophet, now first patriarch in the Reorganization. From the recital of incidents occurring in connection with his appointed mission to Utah in 1866, and published in Autumn Leaves, volume 11, number 4, pages 147 to 152, I quote:

I had been educated to believe the law required the elders to go "two by two," and to start out literally without means enough in hand to buy a meal of victuals. I had so gone twice before on short missions, . . . Bro. Anderson [his companion in travel] and I had some talk about taking two coats, and in packing my valise I was in doubt; I had no overcoat, but I had a light alpaca frock coat, which I put in my valise thinking it would be nice to wear indoors.

Again he says, after starting a few rods on his journey:

I remembered that I had fifty cents in a forgotten wallet in my pocket. I set my valise down in the road and returned to the house and gave it to my wife. I am thus particular, to show how the earlier missionaries understood the law, and were willing to abide by it.

A few furlongs from his home he must cross over the Mississippi River, which would cost him the fifty cents he had just surrendered to his wife. Nothing daunted he resumed his course and met a boy, who, unasked, voluntarily went to the river and in his own skiff set him over the river, free of charge, where he found "a few of the Saints had met in prayer-service, and to see us off. Here once again the question of two coats was sprung and discussed, and an appeal to the law was made, and we were convinced that two coats were prohibited. . . . Bro. William . . . had obtained a nice, warm, new overcoat; but he folded it up and sent it right home . . . and my poor little alpaca came out of my grip and was also sent back."

The narrator says that while they were weeping their good-byes at the house of prayer, and preparing to shoulder satchels and trudge on, some one with a team halted in front, and bade the travelers get aboard, which they did, and they were landed among friends several miles on their journey. Here a collection was taken up for them and, after the hospi-talities of the night, they were driven to a railway station where they boarded a train which landed them, without charge, at Ottumwa, Iowa. The contribution fund paid hotel expenses and stage fare to Leon, Iowa, leaving fifty cents for lodging. Supper was voluntarily offered them, by a traveler, and accepted as the gift of God.

Morning found them refreshed—with empty stomachs and no money. Addressing themselves to their journey on foot, they humbled themselves in prayer, and were soon led to shelter, food, and rest; after which, resuming their journey, they were picked up by a friend—unknown to them—and set down among brethren. From thence they were sheltered for many miles during a cold rain-storm in a covered wagon; from thence they made Council Bluffs by wagon: and traveled other fifty miles on the running-gears with a plank for support. Here, team and provision were furnished for the plain's trip. With that outfit they reached the last town on the frontier (at that time), Columbus, Nebraska. Here their team was changed for a better one, with which to prosecute their mission to the land of salt.

"The law of the Lord is perfect," it is said, and it is its own interpreter. When the Master says do not take money, rations, raiment, staff, or shoes, nor make provision for the morrow, to his select servants, they can not obey part only and expect full reward; it is only those who observe to do all things whatsoever he has commanded them that are entitled to the blessing. Those two young men who resolved to search the commandments, and obey them, braving the elements and facing the dangers of a barren, wild wilderness, were blessed at every turn so far as we have followed in their travels toward Utah. Forty-two years of ministerial labor, experience, and observation impels the writer to bear testimony that obedience to the word and the letter of God's law—past or present—has always brought the blessing promised, and inspires him with confidence that he is doing a work in this age which will bear fruit in eternity.

The requirement, "two by two," is not more binding that the inhibition of purse, scrip, staff, and two coats. The servant may get his reward for going "two by two," but if neglecting to do the other four parts of that commandment he must assuredly expect to lose four fifths of the promised blessing.

When the gospel fell into the hands of scheming managers, "baptism," the first external sacrament, was tampered with, remodeled, and mutilated until it lost its effect. "Laying on of hands" produced no results, and the enumerated blessings of 1 Corinthians 12 proved of no avail and were finally abandoned. It required centuries of slow-plodding generations to disannul the spiritual force of the gospel precepts; but this—our age—floats in a swifter current, and can accomplish in a few years that which required our forefathers centuries to complete. Priestcraft never crossed the portals of the church until that unhappy period when Constantine became convinced—without conversion—of the virtue of Christianity, assumed the control of the church, lifted its ministry into popularity, and required the church to support them. Then retrogression grew strong, and foreign elements were introduced, and the pure principles eliminated—the gospel languished and the people mourned. (See Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, Fourth Century, part 2, chap. 2, par. 8, etc.)

The Book of Mormon gives us a noted example of the results of a church-supported ministry. A large man of muscular frame went to and fro in the land "declaring that every priest and teacher ought to become popular: that they should not labor with their hands, but should be supported by the people"; and in his contention with a good man, who sought to defend God's law, the big man in anger drew his sword and slew his victim on the spot; and was promptly arrested and taken before the judge, who said: "This is the first time that priestcraft has been introduced among this people. And behold, thou art not only guilty of priestcraft, but hast endeavored to enforce it by the sword; and were priestcraft to be enforced among this people, it would prove their entire destruction."—Alma 1:3.

Brethren, we all crave the blessings which God has promised to the children of men; but he requires an act of duty on our part, before the gift can be ours. That duty is implicit: Obedience to the "words" Jesus uttered, to live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. For nineteen hundred years the injunction has never been withdrawn wherever the gospel mission has been in force. The church was rebuked in September, 1832, for allowing their minds to be darkened "because of unbelief" and treating lightly the things received, bringing the whole church under condemnation, under which they must remain until repentance and remembrance of the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments, not only to say, but to do, according to that which God hath written, in order to bring forth fruit meet for the Father's kingdom; otherwise a scourge and a judgment will be poured out on the children of Zion; for "shall the children of the kingdom pollute my holy land?" Beware how you treat the precious things intrusted to your keeping. Yes, the commission of September, 1832, is still in force, but not in practice;—for which reason many minds are darkened, and numbers of workers are compelled to retire from their fields under afflictions hard to bear.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Poor Tired Mother.

They are talking of the glory of the land beyond the skies,
Of the light and of the gladness to be found in paradise.
Of the flowers ever blooming, of the never-ceasing songs,
Of the wand'ring through the golden streets of happy, whiterobed throngs;
And, said father, leaning cozily back in his easy chair
(Father always was a master hand for comfort everywhere):
"What a jovial thing 'twould be to know that when this life is o'er
One would straightway hear a welcome from the blessed shining shore!"
And Isabel, our eldest girl, glanced upward from the reed
She was painting on a water jug, and murmured, "Yes, indeed!"
And Marion, the next in age, a moment dropped her book,
And a "Yes, indeed!" repeated with a most ecstatic look,
But mother, gray-haired mother, who had come to sweep the room,
With a patient smile on her thin face, leaned lightly on her broom—
Poor mother! no one ever thought how much she had to do—
And said, "I hope it is not wrong not to agree with you.
But seems to me that when I die, before I join the blest,
I'd like just for a little while to lie in my grave and rest."

How May I Sow Seeds that Will Bring the Best Results in My Child's Life?

Men glory in raising great and magnificent structures, but it is a greater and more glorious work to build up a man.

Parents are not conscious how early the seeds of vice are sown and take root. It is, as the gospel declares, "while men slept the enemy came and sowed tares." If this, then, is the error, how shall it be corrected, and what is the antidote to be applied?

Not without design has Christ commanded, "Feed my lambs," meaning to inculcate upon his church the duty of caring for the children of the church and of the world at the earliest possible period. Nor can parents, and all well-wishers to humanity, be too earnest and careful to fulfill the promptings of their very natures, and the command of Christ in this matter.

Influence is as quiet and imperceptible on the child's mind as the distilling of dew upon flowers and shrubs. Not all at once does any heart become bad. Children are more easily led to be good by examples and tales of well-doing in others, than threatened into obedience by records of sin, crime, and punishment. Then on the infant minds impress sincerity, truth, honesty, benevolence, and their kindred virtues. Let these seeds be planted while they know no evil, nor have opened the way by sin, to be made acquainted with misery.

Teach them as they advance in years, that good character is above all things else and can not be injured except by our own acts. See that they keep good company or none. Association with persons of decided virtue and excellence is of great importance in the formation of character. Good company and good conversation are the very sinews of virtue.

Good company is that which is composed of intelligent and well-bred persons, whose language is chaste and good; whose sentiments are pure and edifying; whose deportment is such as pure and well regulated education and correct morals dictate, and whose conduct is directed and restrained by the pure precepts of the gospel of Christ.

Family worship is included in the necessities of our children. The restraining influence of a little prayer taught by mother when a child has often preserved men from ruin and infidelity. See that they attend meeting and Sabbath-school when possible.

Teach them to employ the hands, and to cultivate the mind never to be idle; that an honest, industrious boy is always wanted; his services will be in demand; he will be respected and loved.

There should be home amusements, fireside pleasures; quiet and simple they may be, but such as shall make home happy, and not the irksome place which will cause the youthful spirit to look elsewhere for joy. The reason so many become dissatisfied and run to every place of amusement, making every effort possible to get away from home at night, is the lack of entertainment at home. Music is invaluable as a home enjoyment.

Good books also are invaluable as a moral guard to a young man. It makes him scorn what is low, coarse, and vulgar. To read with profit, the books must be of a kind calculated to inform the mind, correct the head, and better the heart. Of all the books ever written none contain so instructive, so sublime, and so great a variety as the books which contain the word of God.

Then, day by day, along our way,
The seeds of promise cast,
And ripened grain, o'er hill and plain,
Be gathered home at last.

Oh, what a responsibility, to form a creature, the frailest and feeblest that God has made, into the intelligent and fearless sovereign of the whole animated creation, the interpreter and adorer and almost the representative of Divinity!

N. INSLÉE.

A Mother's Opportunity.

This earnest word from Mrs. Sangster touches upon a living need of our homes:

We live in an age when people largely do as they please about the outward observances of religion. Children are conspicuously absent from church services. Their attendance upon the Sunday-school is supposed to absolve them from sitting in the pew. They prefer occasionally a separate church from their parents; they like another preacher, or are anxious to go where their companions do, or they drift about from church to church. Thousands of children in Christian households are practically nonchurch-goers, forming no habit of worship to hold them as with a grip of steel in later years. We need go no farther than this to discover the reason for the wide-spread and increasing desecration of the Sabbath, for the Sunday golf, tennis, and tea-drinking in summer resorts and country homes, for the social use of Sunday as a day of visiting and receiving in town life, and for the opening of museums on Sunday. It is because we are degenerating in our homes, and leaving God out and bringing up our children without much reference to him, that we are losing our old character of a Sabbath-keeping people.

The mother and father—for here they may walk hand in hand—who are as solicitous that their children shall be regularly in the pew as in their seats in the school-room, will so bring up their children that they may fear God and keep his commandments.

[I commend to the mother in her home the work of keeping herself very close to her Savior. If her whole soul be full of the sunlight of his presence, if she have the Christ love and the Christlife in her heart and in her face, she will certainly win her dear ones to the shelter and refuge which are so dear to her. It is the mother's highest duty and dearest privilege, by example and precept and ceaseless prayer, to lead her little flock into the fold of the good Shepherd.—EDITOR.]

What the College Did for a Family.

One Saturday evening in the spring of 1874 a Methodist preacher entered a farming community in Southern Ohio and stopped for the Sunday at a Methodist home where there were five bright children. No one now remembers the sermons which the minister preached on Sunday. During his visit in the home, however, he won the hearts of the children and talked with the parents about sending them to college. Monday morning the farmer sent his oldest son to carry the minister to the railway station. On the road the minister learned that the boy expected to remain upon the farm. He earnestly advised him to go to the Ohio Wesleyan University.

The minister's words produced such an effect upon the boy that he thought much upon the conversation during the summer, and at last spoke to his father upon the subject. The father and mother took counsel together and thought that by great self-denial they could start the son to college, and that fall the farmer's boy entered the university. His story of college life turned the thoughts of all the other children in the direction of the university, while the change produced in his spiritual life encouraged the parents to make greater sacrifices and to plan for the college training of the other children. After eighteen years of self-denial the five children in that household had graduated from the university. One of the daughters went back home to teach in order that she might live with her father and mother. The other daughter is a professor in a Methodist college. One of the sons is a useful pastor in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and two of them are professors in leading Methodist universities. Financially, these children earn enough each year to pay for the old farm two or three times over. Intellectually and spiritually, their lives are infinitely richer than they could have been without an education. Best of all, the farmer's children have lifted to a higher mental and spiritual plane and have helped to mold thousands of young people who are now in every part of the United States and of our globe. Only eternity will reveal the blessings which came from that minister's talk with the farmer's boy one Monday morning in 1874 and from the sacrifices of that father and mother, continued for eighteen years while educating their children.

The doors of the same university still stand open; the farms and villages and cities produce the same bright, conscientious young people; the ministers have even a broader vision of the responsibilities and glories of the coming century. Are there not some thousands of young people who have the same courage in their hearts and thousands of parents who have the same devotion in their children's highest interests which characterized this Ohio family in 1874?—Reverend Doctor J. W. Bashford, in Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

SR. MOLLIE DAVIS, superintendent of the Spring River, Kansas, District, writes concerning the Jubilee Offering: "Have received and sent to the several schools the copies of the appeal you sent me but have not sufficient copies to fill the demand, will you please send as many more as you have already sent. Will do all I can to get our district to reach the standard of excellence in the undertaking."

SR. Carrie M. Lewis, superintendent of the Far West, Missouri, District association, writes concerning the same matter: "Upon my return from the Stewartville reunion I found a parcel of circular letters from you awaiting me, but not enough to go around, as we have fourteen schools in our district and a number of home classes. I can very nicely use a dozen more if you have them to spare.

"Yesterday I took one to our school at Stewartsville and Superintendent Worden thought best to first present it to the teachers' meeting at six o'clock in the evening, which was done, and a few suggestions offered as to how best to go to work with it that our school might be successful in raising a little toward the Jubilee Fund. It will be presented to the school next Sunday and an occasional reminder be given afterwards that it may be kept fresh in our minds. I trust Sr. Walker may realize her fondest hopes in the amount sought to be raised this year."

Still another section heard from. Bro. T. W. Williams, who is in charge of the Sunday-school association in the Southern California District, writes: "I have just received your circular letters on the Jubilee Fund, and have forwarded same to the various schools. We will do our part. . . . Bro. Kelley says he can always depend on California doing her part. We have done much more than that."

These clippings all have the ring of a hearty cooperation and hearty sympathy with the movement. We are very glad to note it and feel very much encouraged in the undertaking. We hope to hear from all districts that we may know that you received the letters and how well you are succeeding with them. What are the prospects? It is a worthy cause and we feel justified in putting forth our best efforts to further it. Please let us hear from you. And if there are any district superintendents who have not received a budget of the circular letters, let us hear from you. We want to send them to you. Also any isolated schools or home classes or individuals will be gladly supplied if they will write us their names and addresses. We have plenty of them yet, enough to supply all demands.

Come, let us live with our children,
Earnestly, hollyly live,
Knowing ourselves the sweet lessons
That to the children we give;
Fresh from the kingdom of heaven
Into this earth-life they come,
Not to abide; we must guide them
Back to the heavenly home.

Come, let us live with our children,
Lives that are noble and true,
Letting the love of the Father
Shine forth in all that we do.
Sent, in his infinite wisdom,
That we may teach them aright,—
Ours for to-day,—we must guide them
Up to the heavenly light.

Come, let us live with our children,
Tenderly, watchful, and near
To these young lives now unfolding,
Ready with counsel and cheer;
Giving them strength for life's battles,
Helping, when evil betides,
Building so well that they shall be Temples where he abides.—Selected.

The New Sunday-School Periodical.

On the last page of the Quarterly cover you will see an announcement of the forthcoming Sunday-school periodical, the "Sunday School Exponent." Read it carefully and kindly help us to advertise it. It is to fill the demand for a teachers' quarterly, and also a Sunday-school organ. It will contain as full and complete lesson helps as a teacher's quarterly, or even better. These helps will be prepared, as stated, by the editor of the Quarterlies, Sr. Anna Salyards. Having worked out and written the Quarterly lessons, she is preëminently fitted to prepare suitable extended helps to the teachers, scholars, and officers. Perhaps she will furnish us a paragraph upon this subject a little later on.

The other or remaining part of the issue will be devoted to such matter as usually goes to make up a current periodical: Field notes, editorials, original articles, questions and answers, etc. A normal department for the study of the science or art of teaching and the make-up of the Bible. A library department for the library interests. A home department page and a "business end" page for the respective interests. This is only a very brief synopsis of the contemplated contents. A better and more extended explanation will be given later. We just want to call your attention to the matter now and ask you to consider it. And remember that every department will be edited by a specialist in that line.

WAMSLEY, Ohio, September 10, 1905.

Editors Herald: The work is at a standstill here just now. At first it was like the seed that fell in stony ground. It came up and grew rapidly for a while, then the hot sun withered it. Some fell in good ground and brought forth fruit.

I was ordained a priest under the hands of Bro. T. J. Beatty, July 18, 1905. We are still unorganized, but we have a good Sunday-school, which was organized July 16. The truth moves slowly; the people are slow to accept it.

I am glad that I have found the straight road that leads to everlasting life. Let us try to be numbered with the few. May we do all the good we can, and as little harm as possible. He that "knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." (James 4:17.) "Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith."—Hebrews 10:22.

We should be careful what we do and teach. What we do should be done with an eye single to the glory of God, as we find in Romans 8:14: "As many as are led by the Spirit of God,—they are the sons of God." And we find in one place something like this: Speak the truth and lie not. "Lying lips are abomination to the Lord: but they that deal truly are his delight."—Proverbs 12:22.

We are persecuted for the cause of Christ, and that sometimes makes one feel downhearted and discouraged. But it ought to make us stronger. It is a witness that we are in the straight road that leads to everlasting life and "few there be that find it." "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake."—Matthew 5:11.

We must let our light shine. We must not put it under a bushel. We must practice what we teach. There is a great responsibility upon us. Paul says if he preached to please men he should not be the servant of Christ. (See Galatians 1:10.)

Let us stand firm in the faith that we may be of one mind. Paul says again: "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment."—1 Corinthians 1:10.

May the Lord help us to do his will is my prayer.

J. T. MITCHELL.

JOPLIN, Missouri, September 14, 1905.

Editors Herald: The Spring River District reunion, held in Cunningham's Park, at Blendeville, beginning August 18, is a thing of the past—not so, however, the lessons learned, the influences and results of the meeting, which will remain with us, we hope, as a lasting token that much good was done. An increased interest and attendance at our sacramental-services the following Sunday, with testimonies given by several who had hitherto kept silent, showed revived interest and renewed resolves to press on in the gospel work, and rejoiced the heart of the faithful branch president, Bro. J. L. Lancaster, and others. The singing at the reunion services under the skillful leadership of Bro. Frank Chatburn and Sr. Davis was indeed inspiring and many resolved to be more faithful, and try to "walk in the light of God." Bro. Keck was here, there, and everywhere, supervising the arrangements, and keeping everything moving.

The order maintained was almost perfect, and the mayor of the city, who was there on Sunday afternoon, remarked to my husband that the Latter Day Saints were a quiet, orderly people, and they could have the use of Cunningham's Park for a reunion whenever they wanted it.

One unpleasant feature was the refusal of the Joplin Daily Globe, having the largest circulation in the city, to publish a statement made to them in reference to the reunion, and notice of it other than a bare announcement which by mistake (?) was put in the Galena, Kansas, items. Some thirty or more of the Saints becoming cognizant of the facts, quietly transferred their subscriptions, giving their reasons for so doing, to the Daily Herald, whose reporter was on the grounds, and represented us very fairly. After the subscriptions were changed, and the reunion over, the Globe tried to make it appear that it was merely a mistake or oversight, but up to date has printed no explanation.

I have read Sr. Alice Corson's letter, in a late number of SAINTS' HERALD, in which she seems to be somewhat discouraged, because she does not seem to be convincing any one of the truth of the restored gospel message. Many feel like she does, the writer especially; but all we can do is to "sow beside all waters," knowing that it is not always those alone at the front, who are in the thick of the battle, where the victors' shouts are heard, who will receive the plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant"—but the private soldier, in enforced inactivity, but who is holding himself in readiness; and his Commander knows he is ready and eager for the fray and will reward him at the end for his loyalty and obedience.

I want all the Saints to pray for me, that God will heal me of partial deafness so that I can the more effectively work for God and the upbuilding of his kingdom on earth.

Your sister in the gospel,
JENNIE W. LIGGETT.

McKENZIE, Alabama, September 9, 1905.

Editors Herald: The latest from McKenzie. Mr. Mahan returned, trying to sell a book which he told the professor of the school here would most assuredly down the Mormons, and that he ought to purchase one of them, for it was just what was needed to down them with. It was just the thing.

The professor replied, so I am told, by saying: "Life is too short, and my time is too precious to waste on such books as that."

Another Campbellite chimed in: "Oh, yes, you are one of them." Professor.—"What's the matter with you? What are you opposing these people for? Don't they believe in God? Aren't they good citizens? Why don't you let them alone?"

This same "Mahan" was talking to one of our merchants here one day about the Mormons, when the merchant replied by saying, "If you were trying as hard to fight sin and the Devil as you are the Mormons, you would be doing far more good than you are."

Well said.

The truth seems to be marching steadily on, regardless of opposition and the source from which it originates.

It is possible we may have to move to Escambia County, Alabama, near Steadham Post-office; as we will be more centrally located there, and may be able to keep up the work at that place by holding regular meetings and starting a Sunday-school.

We may not be as conveniently situated there as here, but the Lord's will be done, and not ours. Where we can accomplish the most for "Zion" is where we want to be.

D. E. TUCKER.

MANCHESTER, Texas, September 18, 1905.

Editors Herald: A few lines from a country where the judgments of God are resting very heavily at this time: I have just returned from a trip down in Wood and Upshur Counties, about one hundred and fifty miles south of this place. The gospel has never been preached in that country before. A man by the name of B. C. Shields wrote for me to come down there. He belonged to the Utah church; but after he read the testimony of Joseph F. Smith in the United States Senate, he became dissatisfied; and in fact he never did believe that polygamy was right. So we went down and told him about the true succession of the church. When we reached the vicinity where he lived we tried to get an arbor where the Baptists were holding a meeting, but were refused, and so we went to Pine Mills, a town of about one thousand inhabitants, and got the Christian church (quite a good building) and started a meeting. Only a few came out at the start, as the Mormons had been all through that country and the people had become very prejudiced; but they soon found that we did not belong to that people, and the crowd began to increase. About the time we had reached a fine interest I received word to come home, that my wife and little daughter were very sick. I told the people I would have to close the meetings; but the man who wrote for me said we could not leave until he was baptized; so we went to a pool near by and baptized him and his wife and son, Bro. P. B. Bussell doing the baptizing. He was with me helping in the preaching.

I was told by some of the citizens of that vicinity that B. C. Shields was one among the best men in that country. His father is a physician, seventy-three years old. He told me he wept when he heard that Joseph Smith was killed, though but a young man. He always believed that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. I think he will obey the gospel soon.

I was made to know while there that we were laying a foundation for a good work. The Utah people have a colony of about one hundred people, and I want to return soon, and visit the colony.

Easton, Texas, is a land of desolation. It rained one hundred and twenty-five days out of one hundred and eighty. Farms are overgrown with weeds and grass, and thousands of families are wondering where they will get bread another year. Sickness and death are throughout the country. This did not come unexpectedly to me, for the Lord by his Spirit showed me how it would be, five years ago; and we warned the people. But, as in all ages past when God raised a warning voice, the people disregarded it. Since they see it they begin to cry out for the gospel; and my prayers are that the final result will be favorable for the truth, and that a grand work for the gospel may be done in the near future.

We are near the sundown of this dispensation, and God is going to do a work among the nations of the earth, as never before. And I think we ought to say like Paul of old, Seeing we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us.

My wife and daughter are getting better, and I hope to be in the field again in a few days. My health is not good, though improving, and I feel that the Lord in his own due time will give me health and strength to do a good work.

May God bless his servants in all the earth to do the work whereunto they have been sent that Zion may soon be built up and the church make herself ready for the coming of the Lord, —which is so close at hand. I thank God almost every hour for the great knowledge he has given me of the future.

Your brother in the gospel,

E. A. ERWIN.

BOYD, Oregon, September 18, 1905.

Editors Herald: In HERALD for September 28, 1904, page 904, in an article, "Adam's grave," there is a quotation from a certain Book of Jasher. The same quotation is brought in question by Bro. W. N. Dawson, in HERALD No. 52, of 1904. Now what and where is this Book of Jasher? Is it in print and where can a copy of it be secured? I find only two references made to it in the Old Testament, viz.: Joshua 10:13; 2 Samuel 1:18.

One noted man says: "It was probably a collection of songs of a more or less national character, of which one or two extracts are preserved in Joshua and 2 Samuel, and all copies now in print purporting to be the Book of Jasher are forgeries."

If it is genuine I would like to secure a copy; and if it is authentic it certainly will not conflict with the Scriptures. Awaiting further information, I remain,

A brother in gospel bonds,

W. J. BREWER.

COVINGTON, Kentucky, September 18, 1905.

Editors Herald: It seems that these two cities are fast developing, but not in ways of righteousness. The gospel message does not seem to meet the approval of the people. We had good street-preaching by Elders Metcalf and Moler, but it had the usual effect, and judging from the way the public took hold, it suggests that another Sodom and Gomorrah are rapidly developing. It seems that few cities take such little interest as Cincinnati, Ohio, and Covington, Kentucky. Everybody is interested in something other than religion, and especially the religion of Jesus Christ. But this does not discourage us. We feel that the road to success is not always to be found easily; but at times we must travel over many hilly and rough places before we discover the successful path. And if the rocks were ever piled up anywhere, we are sure that this is the place. For a time we thought we had safely landed on the successful road, but just at that time a death occurred in the family of Sr. Wilkinson, and shortly after this the families of Sr. Wilkinson and Sr. Pittman moved from the city. Following this came the death of the fifteen-year-old son of Bro. Hanner. We mourn the loss of this young man, just in the prime of life, just taking an active part in the work of the Lord. This was a sad blow to the family, as well as the remainder of the body. All feel the loss. When one member suffers all suffer. It is at this time we realize the force of this passage of scripture. So, Saints, we feel the need of an interest in your prayers.

From your brother in the Lord,

HARRY PASSMAN.

SEILING, Oklahoma, September 18, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have long thought of writing, expressing my gratitude for the kind consideration of the church in releasing me from the duty of a traveling minister, because of my age. Near forty years I have labored in the Master's vineyard, and still desire to end my days in his service, always preferring to go amongst strangers rather than to preach in the branches.

Attended the Red Moon reunion, September 1, some seventy-five miles distant. Had a good attendance of Saints and others, considering the very wet weather, and very good spiritual meetings. Six were baptized.

Went, Saturday last, seventeen miles northwest. Preached after Sunday-school in the schoolhouse near Bro. Clark Smith's. He and Bro. Grant Moore went with me six miles north in the evening to a Holiness prayer-meeting, that was well attended.

I got permission by unanimous vote to preach. Had very good liberty, and good attention, and Bro. Moore and I are to begin a meeting there the first Saturday night in October. It looked very stormy at close of meeting, and we were until near midnight reaching Bro. Smith's, over the rough roads; and then the storm broke in all its fury while trying to get the team out. Yet I feel very well to-day. This is a very healthful country, and is blessed with good crops this year; yet we long for the time when we can "gather with the Saints home to Zion."

As ever your colaborer in gospel bonds,

D. S. CRAWLEY.

DOW CITY, Iowa, September 21, 1905.

Editors Herald: Sr. Mary Knight of Defiance, Iowa, secured the use of the Methodist Episcopal chapel of that town for me, and I preached six discourses there to good-sized and attentive audiences. Last Sunday morning and evening the choir conducted the singing, and I was made welcome. At the close I thanked the Methodist people for their kindness in permitting me to use their church, both for myself and the church I am permitted to represent.

The week before last I held services in Bro. William McCord's home, four miles northwest of Defiance, where the attendance was small, but the attention given was excellent, the young seeming to be specially interested.

Sunday, the 3d inst., I met with the Saints at Gallands Grove, where I spoke twice and enjoyed a basket dinner with them.

Tuesday and Wednesday evening of this week I had the pleasure of listening to discourses delivered by C. J. Hunt and J. M. Baker in the home church at Dow City. All seemed to enjoy the sermons.

There are still many evidences given of the divine authenticity of the work in which we are engaged, which inspire the mind and gladden the heart, and give assurance of eternal life to all those who endure in faith unto the end.

As we walk along the path of life there is joy, peace, and love enjoyed, and one can see the need of a constant watch of self that due forbearance may be exercised towards all.

Patience, truth, goodness, and love are necessary, and should be the characteristics of all.

In gospel bonds,

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

PORTLAND, Oregon, September 21, 1905.

Editors Herald: The reunion held in South Portland, or Montevilla, the first in this district, proved a success, commencing September 7. Two days of the time were given to visiting the fair, that those from a distance, whose time was limited, might have the opportunity of taking in what is claimed by some to be a far better fair than that of a year ago in St. Louis.

The meeting was spiritual throughout. Ten States and British Columbia were represented. The members living here, with the committee, took every pains to make it a success. Surely God will reward them for this effort, both in labor and purse; one young sister working in a shop gave five dollars, though able to be at the meeting but little, being obliged to work.

The Sunday-school is small, there being no children to attend; but judging from the number of little ones their school will soon be on the increase, even if no outsiders take part. Two Mormon elders attended part of the time, and it is hoped sermons by Bro. Joseph and others will lead them into greater light. Our congregations were good, quite a number of outsiders attending toward the last.

A committee was chosen to make arrangements for a reunion next year; thus the great Northwest will be fairly on its feet, taking its place alongside the Middle States in this great gospel work for God, home, and humanity.

Our hearts were sad for those so far from home, who were to tramp o'er hill, dale, and mountain, exposing themselves to the northern blast with biting cold and snows, and all for—what? Yea, for the scattered sheep, to nourish them once more with the sound of gospel life. Do we, can we, who are at home with our families, realize the sacrifice these brothers are making because the Master has given the word, "Go forth"? Oh, how earnestly should our prayers for them daily ascend that the Spirit of God go with them, and the angels be ministering spirits to them, that they neither stumble nor fall. "The prayers of the righteous avail much." May we be among that number whose prayers shall avail.

NEBRASKA CITY, Nebraska, September 22, 1905.

Editors Herald: I was called here to see my aged mother, who has been very sick, and at present is far from being well. She is gradually growing weaker, and we fear she will not be with us long. I also had the privilege of taking my oldest brother by the hand once more, the first time for nearly thirty-five years.

I expect to start West again soon. Our missionary work has been hindered much this year on account of sickness and so much rain. However, we have tried to do all we could for the advancement of the work. We have had the privilege of leading four through the waters, and believe if properly cared for they will be valiant soldiers for the cause. My labors have been mostly in the northwest corner of the State, and I find the few Saints that are scattered over that territory well grounded in the faith.

I spent two weeks in the Black Hills, and enjoyed the association of the Saints there very much.

When we received this week's HERALD to our great surprise we read the notice that the reunion in this district was postponed for one year, because of the lack of interest by those of the priesthood, also the laity. I can not understand this, for traveling over the field and also receiving letters from various parts of the field, there never has been the interest in behalf of the reunion that there was this year; and we know there are Saints who feel very much disappointed over the postponement. I hardly know what is meant by lack of interest by the priesthood, for the missionaries of the field have anxiously watched for the notice of place in the papers, and have done all we could to awaken an interest among the Saints. But as the committee has postponed the time for one year, we trust interest may be awakened, and one year from now the Saints will be gathering together in faith and prayer, that the reunion of 1906 may not be a failure, as the one of 1905 is. We trust inasmuch as there has been a lack of interest this year, and 1905 must record a failure in Western Nebraska District, that we all will awaken, and that 1906 will record success for us. If nothing prevents I will be in the field next week ready to begin work again.

KNIFE RIVER, Minnesota, September 22, 1905.

Editors Herald: Thinking that some would like to hear how the work is progressing in this field, I will send you a short account of my labor since April 27, when I reached my field, stopping first at Pipestone. Finding little chance for work there I came to Minneapolis, where I did some preaching in the hall, and at private houses. Leaving there for Bemidji, May 23, I held some good meetings six miles north of that place, and on Sunday, June 4, baptized four. I found this branch greatly weakened by the removal of three of the Anderson families to Canada, near Saskatoon, where Bro. Knisley has found them.

I went to Clitherall to attend the reunion, an account of which has been published. There Bro. Rumel and Bro. Sutton appeared, but at the close of the reunion Bro. Rumel concluded to return home, and as Bro. Whiteaker had not arrived, Bro. Sutton and I hitched up and started out. We went first to Friberg, where we had a fairly good attendance, and Bro. Sutton baptized three. From there we went to Fargo and held a few meetings. Leaving Bro. Sutton to hold the fort I went down to Wolverton and began meetings. Such an interest was manifested that I had Bro. Sutton come down, and we continued the meetings until the haying season interfered with the attendance. Here Bro. Sutton baptized Bro. Brown of Fargo, who came down for that purpose. We then went to Audubon, remaining over Sunday; then to Cormorant, where we had a splendid interest again. Here I had the pleasure of baptizing Bro. J. W. Gregory and Sr. Katy McLeod, and two little girls, children of Bro. and Sr. Gibbons and Bro. and Sr. McDermot. We then went to Frazee, putting up the district tent there; but rain and nonattendance soon discouraged us, and we went to Minneapolis, where we held meetings wherever the Saints could arrange, in private houses, also in the hall. Here Bro. Sutton had a call to come home on account of sickness. I continued the meetings, intending to close on Friday night; but I was requested to remain over Sunday, as one desired to unite with the church. So I remained over, and on Sunday, in the beautiful lake Calhoon, I had the pleasure of leading into the waters of baptism the wife and eldest daughter of Bro. Lundeen. Happy tears were falling from nearly every eye. This was the culmination of much labor done, the answer to many prayers. The presence of the Spirit was felt at the baptism, and again at confirmation. Bro. Lundeen is rejoicing as are all the Saints who are acquainted with the family.

On Monday I came here. Have preached twice to very attentive audiences. Bro. Whiteaker came into the field soon after the reunion closed, and has labored at Clitherall, Almora, and Amor. Here he baptized one. His labor was well appreciated, and we will all be glad if circumstances can be arranged so he can get back in the field soon. I was at Amor a few days with Bro. Whiteaker, where he had a good interest. There are a good many calls for preaching.

This fall our conference will convene at Friberg, October 7, and we hope all will attend who can. Saints living outside of branches, who desire preaching, please write me at Audubon, Minnesota.

Praying and hoping for the success of the work, as ever,

Your brother in the gospel,

H. A. MCCOY.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, Ohio, September 23, 1905.

Editors Herald: When I last wrote I was at Bryan, Ohio. I came over to Toledo the 9th, and was with the Saints there until the 21st. One was baptized the 3d, and one the 10th by Elder W. G. Kimball, both heads of families. Others are investigating, and other young in the families of the Saints are ready—old enough, however, by the laws of the church. The branch at Toledo is in good condition, compared with the past. The officers are alive to the interests of the work, and are at a unity; and the members are at this time in better spirits than in the past. They are paying their tithing, and coming to a better understanding of the spirit of the work, seeing the need of other officers; and we think will honor them in their calling. The Saints are energetic in their worship—the young as well as the older ones. We were with them until the 21st, then came over here; found Bro. I. M. Smith holding meetings every evening. Meetings are announced for all of next week.

We find the Saints here very kind and attentive on the services. A good feeling is coming among them, judging from the attendance, and the liberty of the speakers. We hope, trust, and pray that we may all come up higher, until we get above the low and groveling things of earth and their consequences, and come in closer touch with our heavenly Father.

We believe, so far as we are able to see, that the work is advancing in this district. More additions, better understanding, and better results obtaining. May the good work go on, is our prayer, until this gospel is preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, the obligations of the ministry fulfilled, the honest ones that erred come to an understanding, the ones that murmur learn doctrine, the law honored, Christ glorified, the Saints established in the gospel, and gathered to a place of safety before the great calamities prophesied of come o'er the earth.

Your brother in the conflict for life,

G. A. SMITH.

FAIRLAND, Indian Territory, September 25, 1905.

Dear Herald: I am busy as can be in the Master's work. We are holding tent-meeting here, having large crowds of interested listeners. Last night two thirds of the town came, and many from the country. I never saw better order in such large crowds. This used to be a very prejudiced people, but it is rapidly giving way.

The last two Sundays we have had the two best prayer-meetings I have been in this year. Bro. Frank Conner was pointed out to hold priesthood. He is a man well liked by everybody. I have preached all the sermons but two since coming here. So much sickness, chills, and fever! Bro. Riley while here was on the go administering to the sick; I did the preaching. Since he left, I have attended to administering to the sick and preaching too.

Last Saturday I was called upon to preach a funeral-sermon across Neosho River, in Wyandotte Nation. My experience I shall not forget very soon. I started early, drove four miles to the river expecting to cross in a skiff. The skiff had a hole in the side and end, and would sink before it had gone twenty feet. We had to drive about four miles farther and hunt up another skiff. No bridges, no ferries for miles up and down the river. The river was very high and swift, and a man brought the skiff over, and I got in and he paddled it across. When I got out of the skiff, I had the pleasure of stepping in mud, shoe-top deep, and winding around in corn-fields and woods, afoot, till we came to a road. We almost needed a microscope to find it. Finally we arrived at the cemetery; you could not see tomb-stones for weeds, blackberry-bushes, stick-tights, "beggar-lice," sumac brush. I stood by the grave and discoursed for about one hour, over the remains of Bro. and Sr. Adams' little boy, John Franklin. I enjoyed the best of liberty. I had the most full-blood Indians for listeners that I ever had at one time.

I attended the Stewartsville reunion, which I enjoyed very much. I found a spiritual lot of Saints, who love God. Bro. C. P. Faul knows how to make everybody feel welcome. Long may Stewartsville reunion continue.

Yours in the conflict,

F. C. KECK.

RAYMOND, Idaho, September 23, 1905.

Editors Herald: Since the beginning of this conference year I have labored in the states of Idaho and Wyoming, doing such work as usually falls to the lot of a missionary. In some places my labors have been crowned with success, and in other places the way seemed to be hedged up. Have visited many places and talked with many people, publicly, and in private, distributed many tracts to such as I thought would read them, and have tried in every lawful way to win souls to Christ. Have baptized five; two of them were living in Wyoming, and three in Idaho. Have traveled many miles, and labored among Mormons, Gentiles, Saints, and Followers. Of the last named I will say that they live in the Silver Creek Valley, Idaho, and had their origin with one John N. Burton, who at one time was an elder in the Reorganized Church, but was disfellowshipped for immoral and unchristian conduct; but they (the Followers) claim to have continued down from Christ and the apostles.

Well! I read their pedigree to them, and if ever a man got called pet names, I did.

But notwithstanding the wrath of the Follower leaders, I believe good will result from my labors among them. The Saints in Idaho generally seem to be alive in the work, and most of them are trying to do something for the cause of Christ.

I have labored in the Snake River Valley, Big and Little Wood River Valleys, also Silver Creek and Big Lost River Valleys, besides the Bear Lake country and Vinta County, Wyoming, and am pleased to say the work is onward, and I feel encouraged to press onward in the promulgation and defense of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

A. J. LAYLAND.

FRONTON, Ohio, September 25, 1905.

Dear Herald: I am here alone with tent; have awakened quite an interest. Baptized five yesterday, and expect six more for next Sunday. All excellent people. This will make thirty baptized by me since July 1. Saints are standing by the preacher. We have a grand time each Sunday. Three sermons and a good basket-dinner under the canvas. Have sold nearly fifty dollars' worth of church publications the last few weeks. We all feel encouraged to push the fight.

F. J. EBELING.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, September 24, 1905.

Editors Herald: At present we are having a pleasant and enjoyable time here. We have with us Bro. Joseph Smith and his better half, also his son Frederick M. and family, with a few others of the general missionary force to help out in the good work we are trying to accomplish.

Friday, the 22d, was devoted to Sunday-school and Religion convention work, which proved profitable, as well as interesting; and to say the least the literary program that was rendered in the evening was appreciated by all.

Yesterday was occupied by disposing of the routine business that came before the conference, and in the evening at seven o'clock the writer spoke on the street to a fair attendance, some of whom followed us to the chapel, where Bro. A. M. Chase delivered the evening address, using, to illustrate his subject, a historical chart that he has designed for the purpose.

This morning the Sunday-school met in charge of the local officers at ten o'clock, and at eleven President Joseph Smith delivered an excellent discourse on the efficacy and validity of the gospel of Christ.

Hoping to continue the good work until the Master sees fit to say, it is enough, I remain,

In the gospel truth,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

Remedy for Heart-Failure.

Editors Herald: While perusing the pages of a late issue, I read the letter from Bro. John Erter. Whether it was my remedy or not he wanted I can not say; but it is simple. It is so good for several complaints; not palpitation,—for that there is something that looks like the best indigo, but I have forgotten the name, and when I came West I accidentally left my book of remedies, and so many things are gone.

For heartburn, wild black-cherry; also for jaundice. But for heart-failure cayenne pepper is the best thing I know of. Put a quarter of a teaspoonful in two tablespoonfuls of sugar, wet to thick molasses. Put some back as far as the middle of the tongue, as far as can be, to prevent burning. Take until relieved.

Sometimes I have taken four or five doses, as much as a teaspoonful, in half an hour. It never fails me. I always aim to keep some ready for emergencies. It is the best remedy for sore throat or diphtheria. With plenty of peppermint-tea to sweat a patient, and freedom of the bowels, it is a sure cure for scarlet fever. While the typhoid fever is raging so badly, to all whom it may concern: in all cases of fever give warm medicine. To break typhoid take as much of the best gunpowder as can lay on a dime, put in a glass of water, give from a teaspoonful to a tablespoonful every few minutes; plenty of lemon juice to cause a free perspiration, and bathe often under cover with warm soda water,—twice a day anyway; salts for physic; and if not effectual give injection of salts in large doses. It will remove the fever after mortification has set in, I know, for I have tested it.

For hemorrhage of the lungs or bowels give peppermint oil in doses of from one to three drops; also excellent for summer cholera. Bleeding of the nose is not dangerous unless too frequent. Burnt leather or alum to snuff are excellent to stop it.

Do not drink water to stop pepper from burning. Take sugar; let dissolve gently in mouth—nothing is better.

Peppermint-oil is a great disinfectant dropped in a dish of clean ashes, or on paper. To get rid of mosquitoes burn bright lights out of doors, without chimneys; they will light in the blaze.

Died.

BAILEY.—Asa Eilands Bailey, son of Asa Bailey, Sr., and Laura A. Alden, departed this life on the fourth day of September, 1905, after an illness of five days. He was a member of the Latter Day Saint Church. He was born on the nineteenth day of February, 1879. He was a member of Sunday-school at Robinson Bridge at the time of his death. He was a lover of the church, but epilepsy and failing health kept him from attending at Coldwater and Calhoun of late. He was baptized by Heman C. Smith, November 30, 1894.

LEWIS.—At the "Saints' Home," Lamoni, Iowa, September 11, 1905, Sr. Mary A. Lewis, aged 90 years, 1 month, and 22 days. She married John Lewis in England in 1839 and came to America, and went to Utah in 1849. There accepted the Reorganized Church in 1864. Bro. Lewis took a mission to England in 1865. He died at Council Bluffs, 1872. For the last three years her mind was a blank, but she was gentle and harmless. She was one of the best of earth's pilgrims. Funeral-sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, according to her request four years ago.

BOWMAN.—At the "Home," Lamoni, Iowa, September 21, 1905, of heart disease, Sr. Elizabeth, wife of Bro. John S. Bowman, aged 75 years and 6 days. She was baptized in 1889 by Bro. I. A. Morris in Wayne County, Illinois, and she continued in the faith. They came to Lamoni in 1901. Having been blind for twenty-one years Bro. Bowman more keenly feels the loss of one who has been his constant companion during that long period. The funeral-sermon was preached by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Bro. Eli Hayer.

GREEN.—At his home near Atwood, Rawlins County, Kansas, September 16, 1905. David Hyrum Green was born at Minersville, Meigs County, Ohio, December 6, 1854; was baptized at Scranton, Kansas, June 17, 1879, by J. B. Jervis; ordained a deacon, September 12, 1883, at Scranton, Kansas, by J. B. Jervis. Married to Miss Jennie Crieg, December 25, 1876. To this union nine children were born. Three of these preceded him to the life beyond. The remains were brought to Netawaka, Kansas, his old home, for burial. Funeral-sermon by Elder C. E. Guinand, of Atchison, Kansas, and was one of the best funeral-sermons ever delivered in Netawaka. The Saints' church was crowded with sympathizing friends, and as many more on the outside who could not enter. The casket was covered with beautiful flowers, showing that he was much respected. The remains were laid to rest beside his little ones, in the Netawaka Cemetery. Bro. Green leaves a wife, six children, an aged father and mother, four brothers, and three sisters to mourn their loss, "but we mourn not as those who have no hope." He died firm in the faith.

HAWS.—Don Carlos Haws died at Bryan, Ohio, of typhoid fever, the 15th of September, 1905. He was born the 9th of June, 1863, at Ruby Valley, Nevada. He was baptized in the summer of 1875, we think by Bro. Joseph, in the Humboldt River. He leaves a wife, father, mother, and one brother to mourn their loss. He is the son of Alpheus Peter and Betsy Haws.

HAYTON.—Thomas Smith Hayton was born in the city of Hull, Yorkshire, England, September 13, 1848. He united with the church April 27, 1870. Was married in 1874 to Mary E. Fitz. To them fifteen children were born, seven boys and eight girls. The wife and eleven children still survive to mourn their loss. He died firm in the hope of a glorious resurrection. Sermon by W. S. Taylor assisted by O. P. Sutherland.

Much-Needed Reforms in the Life Insurance Business.

Further disastrous shrinkages may be expected unless managers of life insurance companies take some such timely measures as the following to restore confidence and to attract new business.

1. Sell stocks and securities the values of which fluctuate, investing proceeds in first mortgages on improved city realty for two thirds of its marketable value. Savings of the thrifty should not be exposed to the risk of speculation.

2. Dispose of superfluous buildings acquired in all parts of the world to advertise business, and invest likewise. Policy-holders care for absolute safety more than for marble halls.

3. Cut down salaries and other expenses. The measures taken by the Equitable do not go far enough; retrenchment should be instituted by every other company which does not want to become the target of criticism.

Owners of mutual policies are entitled to a yearly statement of the details and results of the business in which they are interested, just as much as holders of stock in banks, railroads, and industrials. Managers who find a disclosure of these details distasteful should quit the business.—By Louis Windmüller, in the October-December Forum.

"What Shall We Eat?"

Every day the same old question, What shall we eat for breakfast, for luncheon, for dinner, assails with monotonous regularity the patient housewife who seeks to provide good living for the family in agreeable variety at a moderate cost. There is a daily department in the Chicago Record-Herald which is intended to answer this question satisfactorily every day in the year. It is entitled "Meals for a day," and provides menus for the three meals every day, with the necessary recipes. These menus and recipes are carefully selected by the Record-Herald's household editor, and cash prizes are awarded for the best that are received. Housewives everywhere are invited to participate in the competition. For full particulars see the "Meals for a day" department in the Chicago Record-Herald.

Sylvanus Stall, D. D., the author of the well-known series of purity books, has issued a pamphlet of twenty-four pages of extreme importance to pastors, Young Men's Christian Association Secretaries, and all interested in the welfare of young men. It deals with one phase of an important sociological question, and sets forth the wonderful changes in present knowledge concerning a disease formerly regarded by physicians and still popularly thought no worse than a toothache or a bad cold, but which to-day is known to be one of the most contagious, and in its consequences one of the most serious of any that afflicts mankind. The Vir Publishing Company, of Philadelphia, have issued this pamphlet, entitled, Not a Toothache or a Bad Cold in the Head, at cost, for free distribution by pastors, employers of large bodies of men, and others, at the rate of $1 per hundred, or single copies at 5 cents each.

About the most exciting existence we have read of in a long time is described in the October Cosmopolitan. Prof. R. V. Matteucci lives on the crater's edge of Vesuvius for the purposes of scientific observation, and he describes his daily life in a popular manner. Readers will not envy this scientist his job, especially when they see the pictures of the rocks that are liable to drop any moment upon him, but they will be immensely interested in his many alarming predicaments and narrow escapes. This is only one of the many fine features of this very attractive issue.

A Drama of Every-day Life.

Mrs. Mary Stewart Cutting, the author of "Little stories of courtship," a recently published collection of her McClure romances of suburban life, has in the October number another of her sympathetic tales of the simple home. "The hinge" is the Ridge's viewpoint of a little domestic drama in which the neighborhood tragedy of a neglected wife is straightened out in the light of big happenings which help husband and wife, as well as the neighbors, to a readjustment of ideas.

Mrs. Cutting finds the romance in the simple lives of every-day people, and her wholesome, familiar Americans get our quick sympathy because, perhaps, they are us.

A Hawaiian Cure for Indigestion.

King Kalakaua, of the Hawaiian Islands, tells naively, in Mrs. Isobel Strong's book, The Girl from Home, (McClure-Phillips) of a new cure for indigestion: "We had a sick man here once," said the king, "an Englishman, who was traveling, and put off on account of his health. He could not eat anything, and was slowly dying of starvation. Some aggravated form of dyspepsia. I sent down my servants with poi and raw fish; he began to get well from that day and now he's a member of Parliament." Poi, one of the characters had previously explained, "is native food, like paste. . . . When the sitting-room was papered last year the men stuck the paper on with poi, and then they ate what was left over for lunch."

Brother!

Do you want work that pays?

Easy work that you can do in your spare time? If so, send for my thirty-two-page book telling "How to make spring-beds to order" and "How to get orders," etc.

It's free for the asking.

I furnish material needed from our factory at Peoria, Illinois, at price that leaves you a big profit for your work. You can make it pay to hire agents to take orders, and you to put up the beds and make collections, sharing profits with your agents.

Below are two sample testimonials, selected from the many received. More will be sent with book.

If others can do so well, why not you? Brothers living in the country and small towns, having a horse and buggy, are especially invited to write me.

Yours truly,

B. F. Ordway.

R. F. D. 1, PASADENA, Cal.

F. Gayoso, of Tyler, Texas, writes: "I am not dissatisfied with your springs or you in any way. I know that I handle the best spring and that is Ordway's Portable Springs. I have been at it over twelve years and expect to continue as long as I can get around, and as for yourself, I can say truthfully that you have been more prompt and kind and considerate in all your transactions with me during and over twelve years than any one I have had dealings with. I feel kindly and grateful to you, and hope you may live long, growing in business and prosperity, enjoying health and blessings that it is possible for you to enjoy, and finally find a resting place with Jesus. God bless you and yours."

B. W. Snyder, of Tunnelton, West Virginia, writes: "I received your outfit all O K and have canvassed two days and took thirty-six orders. I have sold as many as six at a house. They sell on their own merits."

Three days later he writes: "I received the set of springs all right and adjusted them to my bed, and they are all O K. I called in the town sergeant as he was passing, to see them, and he said that they were the best springs he ever saw, and is going to resign and work for me, for there is $100.00 a month in it for a man if he is a pusher. You will find order for thirty-five sets springs and thirty-four slat locks. I can sell as many springs as two or three men can set up. . . . It is no trouble to get orders at all. One man can take as many orders as two can adjust, I believe, so there are three of us going at it the first of the month. . . . It is the best paying business I ever got into. I have been engaged as mine foreman at $85.00 per month, but can make far more selling springs. All you have to do is just watch me this summer."

THE EDITOR ABROAD.

Diverging from the main line the Editor and family left Spokane on the morning of July 20, over the Lewiston and Palouse (pronounced Pa-loose) branch for Stites, the end of the road; in the mountains of Northern Idaho, near to Buffalo Horn, Dixie, and other mining-camps of Idaho County. The route was for the most of the way up the valley of the Clearwater River, the waters of which are not clear but very muddy, much like the Missouri, and the Mississippi after the Missouri joins it. The day was a hot one, the ride a long one, lasting from five minutes past eight in the morning till six in the evening. Mercury stood at one hundred and twelve degrees in the shade at two o'clock in the afternoon, and everything in the car was hot to the touch.

Potlatch Junction, where a change of cars was made, lies in a valley fully exposed to the midday and afternoon sunshine—and it was glowing hot as we waited for the train from Lewiston. But waiting ends sometime, and so in this case. Potlatch is in the Nez Perce country, and Indians and speculators are there in force; the first, to hold their own if they can; the last, to get what the poor Indian may lose, his lands.

The object of divergence from the route was a visit to the ranch of Isaac Ternan, whose wife is sister to Sr. Smith. We were met at Stites, the end of the branch line of road, situated on the banks of the Clearwater at the foot of the mountains, which are very near on either side of the river, the waters of which are very rapid. Brother-in-law Ternan was waiting for us and at fifteen minutes after six we were, bundles, grips, overwraps, boys, and all, stowed away in a regular mountain rig, two-seated and strong. We were drawn by gray Sam and black William Jennings Bryan, strong and true, and these qualities were needed for the climb in the mountains, still up the river for eight miles, and then an elbow tangent of two miles more.

We had taken in, as a way passenger, a Mrs. Douglas, whose home was at Harpster, the post-office where Mr. Ternan and his neighbors get their communications from the outside world, a town hanging onto the rugged mountain sides on the east bank of the river with true Western grit. Mrs. Douglas is a sister of a Mrs. Hollen living in the Evergreen neighborhood near Lamoni, and was pleased to see any one from the region. There were seven, big and little, but we managed.

We have seen and have ridden over a bad piece of road, but that from Stites to Harpster in Idaho is the worst eight miles on end we ever "met up with." It was a constant grind on the gravel, and chug, chug, on the rocks, up hill and down along the mountain sides, on a track so single that for miles teams can not pass, so sidling and steep below that there is constant danger of "skidding" over the edge to the river hundreds of feet below. But the brother-in-law was a mountaineer, the rig strong, the team true, and although it took from fifteen minutes after six till after eleven at night to make the ten miles, we were safely landed, and were greeted with a sister's smiles and tears, and were soon asleep in an Idaho mountain home, thirty-five hundred feet above sea-level, doors open, pleasantly cooled from the excessive heat of the day.

The family were all pleased to see us, and soon the children had fraternized, and the older ones were getting acquainted.

Our brother-in law, though himself and wife were of a different faith, invited us to occupy in the schoolhouse at the village; so on Sunday, the 23d, after the Sunday-school session was over, we addressed a small but attentive audience. Bro. Charles Clark, at work some twenty-five miles away, had come over to visit his sister Ada, and attended the service. The heat was great, one hundred and twelve in the shade, so that it was hard for all to keep the tension of devotional thought up to standard, but we did the best we could.

We stayed during the week, and notwithstanding the weather was unusually hot during the day, it was pleasantly cool at night, and, but for a period of sickness for the Editor and the baby, the visit with these relatives in the hills of Idaho was a pleasing episode.

At three o'clock, Friday afternoon, the 28th, we returned to Stites, the Editor driving the team, with Ervie to take it back home, Bro. Ternan being unable to go. The train left Stites at ten minutes to five in the morning, making it necessary to come down the mountain the evening before and stay over night. This we did and on time Saturday, the 29th, with lunch-box well stored, we were on hand.

It was a much cooler and pleasanter ride down the river than when we went up, and in the early afternoon we reached Spokane with our friends, Bro. Ferguson's folks.

We occupied here twice on the 30th, at eleven and eight o'clock, and visited points of interest in the city, including the offices of the Spokesman-Review and Chronicle, the editors of which journals gave us a characteristic newspaper welcome; questions, questions; both are keen, shrewd men, as indeed they must be to hold the posts they do.

APPEALS TO PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT.

According to reports, John H. Scott, who was lately excommunicated from the Utah church, has appealed through the British Embassy at Washington to President Roosevelt to intercede in his behalf and obtain for him a hearing before the Mormon conference, which he felt sure would be denied him by the leaders of the Utah church. With his letter to President Roosevelt he inclosed a copy of his challenge to Joseph F. Smith, which has already been published in our columns. Mr. Scott's letter to the President, as published in the Salt Lake Tribune, is as follows:

SALT-LAKE CITY, September 20.—To the President of the United States; Sir: I am a member of the Mormon church. Our leaders have stated that you are a friend to us as a people and that we can rely upon you for protection, inasmuch as we do not violate the laws of the land. Therefore as a Mormon and as a believer in the principles of truth and liberty provided by the Constitution of the land, I do appeal to you in behalf of a large percentage of our people to use your influence to obtain for me a hearing at the coming conference of this church, so as to express the sentiments of many who believe as I do.

Those people whom I represent have at heart the welfare of this great nation, the state of Utah, and all the human race, and they stand by the Constitution of the land, and the cause of the poor, the widow, and the orphan. We believe that it is not our religion which is to blame for the animosity of nearly all the world against us as a people, but the heresies and priestcraft of those who have set aside the laws of God and ignored the heaven-inspired Constitution of the land, which transgression must naturally bring indignation upon a people making so great pretensions as we do.

And, inasmuch as it has been the custom in this church to suppress any individual who has dared to proclaim the departure from the law of any or all of the file leaders, by various methods of priestcraft such as unjust excommunication, villification of character, false reports, and contempt for the written church laws, I earnestly ask of you that you will use your influence in obtaining the privilege of proving the charges which I have made from time to time, through the free public press, from which I inclose a clipping expressing the situation and conditions throughout Mormondom.

But for the prejudice which to a great degree is instilled in the minds of the people by their leaders against the free press and the refusal of the Deseret News, the supposed organ of the church, to open its columns to representatives of all the church, reformers might reach them, but all the hope we have lies in gaining a hearing before the whole church according to the written law, which provides that all things must be done by common consent, which law is set aside and its adherents suppressed by those in authority.

Knowing that my demand for a hearing will be ignored by the leaders and that the minds of the people are being poisoned by them against reformers and the truths they proclaim, as a last resort I have called upon you for assistance, asking you to request our leaders to give me a hearing, in order to present to the people those truths in their standard church works which would reveal to them the departure of their leaders from the laws of God, which departure is the cause of the indignation of the world against us as a people.

It is the custom for the people to sustain their leaders by vote at each conference, and until some one is permitted to present to them those laws from which they and their leaders have departed Mormonism will increase the public indignation and continue to be a menace to the nation, which I fear will result in most stringent measures being taken by the Government, which calamity may be averted by more peaceable methods.

I claim that true Mormonism is good and will be appreciated by the whole world of progress, when it is relieved from the grasp of priestcraft, false doctrine, and suppression of free speech. Therefore I await your kind assistance, which I hope to receive in time for the October conference of this church.

Respectfully yours, in the cause of truth and liberty,

JOHN H. SCOTT.

A WARNING TO MORMON PEOPLE.

President Joseph Smith again preached to a crowded house in Salt Lake City, 1st inst. His sermon, according to reports, was largely doctrinal, yet he issued a note of warning to the law-defying element, a partial report of which is as follows:

Why not accept the inevitable? Why not recognize now what you must recognize sooner or later—that the men at the head of this church in the valley must come within the pale of the law; that the disregard of the various acts of amnesty by Congress has all but exhausted the patience of the Government; that the defiance of the laws of the land will not longer be endured?

Why not be warned in time? There are thousands of good, honest, noble, virtuous men and women of this faith in Utah. God bless them! But I say to you that this church in Utah is seen through Joseph Fielding Smith and his associates; that his statements in Washington that he had lived, and expected to keep on living, in defiance of the laws of God and of the land, have been blazoned abroad over the nation; have even gone across the seas. Joseph F. Smith has become a public character. The world is judging the church by his acts and the acts of his associates.

Think what the continuous living in polygamy of these men means to you! Utah is not yet out from under the power of Congress. The same authority that extended to you pardon and amnesty, that legitimized your children, can disfranchise and take away your rights of statehood. We must have peace, and lasting peace, in Utah, but the church leaders must so live and rule as not to array the Gentiles of this State and nation against them.

Come back to an understanding of the truth. Can you have that peace and prosperity by provoking the Gentiles to hostility? No. Can you have it by trusting your immunity from punishment in your law-breaking to the fact that men fear to prosecute? No. Until the leaders and all the people return to obedience of the revelations of God and the laws of the land, you will suffer. You have suffered in the past, you will suffer more in the future, for there is this difference: Some of the suffering in the past came from undeserved persecutions. Now, if this defiance of the law continues the strong arm of the Government will be stretched out to punish, and punish justly. The United States has been patient with the people of Utah, but the punishment of crime is sure to come.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The conference of the Utah church, October 6, 7, and 8, appears from reports to have been a very quiet affair, at least for the first two days. The general authorities, Joseph Fielding Smith as Prophet, Seer, and Revelator of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, including his counselors, the twelve patriarchs, seven presidents of seventy, historian and assistants, bishopric, board of education, clerk of conference, all members of the tabernacle choir, auditing committee, etc., were unanimously sustained, as also were officers of the Relief Society, Deseret Sunday-school Union, Young Men's Mutual Improvement Associations, Primary Associations, Young Ladies' Improvement Associations, and Religion Classes. The counselors in the first presidency, the twelve apostles, and the presiding patriarch were sustained as Prophets, Seers, and Revelators, as reported by the Deseret News.

The Tribune reports that the leaders of the Mormon church were highly eulogized by some of the speakers. W. T. Jack, president of the Cassia, Idaho, Stake, is reported to have said, "The life of Joseph F. Smith, who now stands at the head of this church, is one that might be imitated with profit by any man. I say, God bless our leader. I testify to the divine calling of Joseph F. Smith, the head of this church, and know that his superior can not be found in all the wide world to-day. He and his counselors, the quorum of the apostles, and the other leaders, are men without spot, without blemish; men who are making noble sacrifice to further the work of God." "Without spot, without blemish"—how Joseph F. Smith, who has admitted his spots and blemishes publicly, and his associates, must have smiled inwardly at the gullibility of the speaker. They must have felt a good deal like the sectarian preacher in San Francisco, who had preached the doctrines of his creed long after his conscience condemned him for his hypocrisy, and who, after he had left the ministry, speaking of the struggle he made to exhibit an apparent faith in the doctrines he professed, and the constant practice of hoodwinking the people, said, "I don't see how one preacher can look at another without grinning."

That our President Smith was a visitor at the conference we gather from an utterance credited to B. H. Roberts, as follows: "One week ago I heard a man say that the president of this church has, by his life, brought his religion into disrepute, and I rejoiced yesterday that that man was here to see how the Saints sustained our leader by their unanimous vote." This "vote," however, may only emphasize the blindness of the people. The visitor might surely have expected better things after the revelations of the past year.

An exchange says that a Minnesota doctor figures that the American people are now paying out annually $80,000,000 less in doctors' bills and medicine than they did a decade ago, and that they are living on an average ten years longer than folks used to live. "A word to the wise —," etc.

It is reported that ten thousand people were drowned on the islands at the mouth of the Yangtze River, in a typhoon the first part of September.

A booklet entitled The Patriarchate, containing much-needed information along the line of the office-work of the Order of Evangelists, can be had of the Herald Publishing House: paper five cents, limp cloth ten cents. The subject-matter contained in the booklet is authorized and indorsed by the Order of Evangelists, and is treated from two standpoints, historical and doctrinal; and will be valuable to those desiring information concerning this department of church-work, as well as to defenders of the truth.

Alexander Dowie, who was stricken with paralysis September 24, upon the eve of his departure for Mexico, is reported to be recovering, and out of danger. He did not allow his sickness to interfere with his journey, the object of which is the founding of a "Zion Paradise Plantation" in Mexico.

Original Poetry

The Coming of the Kingdom and the Coming of the King.

See Israel's glorious guiding star of Faith and Hope and Love,
Beaming with golden glory from shining realms above,
It glows and blazes evermore, with pure, refulgent light,
Rising to triumph grandly o'er the darkness of the night.

Our glorious church is spreading, in the East, and West, and North,

And Israel's conquering armies, with joyous songs go forth;
Together Jew and Gentile are coming from afar,
The hosts of King Immanuel, led by th' eternal star.

But not alone, O brother of the Saints of latter days,
Oh, not alone thine eager tongue shall sound Immanuel's praise.
See! see! the myriad ancestors of the savage Indian come,
To add his thousand thousand more—for this is Laman's home.

Of Lemuel and Nephi, and of Moroni, too.
The mighty Nephite armies, triumphant o'er the foe,
The wild and haughty Lamanite, no more his brother's foe,
Has laid aside his scalping-knife, his arrow and his bow.

With thankful heart and reverent mien, his warriors join thy band,

Their happy wives and little ones no more in terror stand;
For Nephi's Master and his God, Lord of Eternity,
Has o'er them waved the gospel rod, and set the captives free.

See, too, the mighty armies of Coriantumr come,
With tongues unknown to swell the praise of David's greatest Son.

For in the dim, past ages, ere Nephi saw the light,
Or Lehi in Jerusalem first felt the Spirit's might,

Long ere the famous temples, where Pharaoh's power was feared,

And mighty towers of ancient Thebes unto the clouds were reared;

Long ere the conquering Roman came, or Britain's shores were seen,

The Jaredites o'er this fair land reigned, undisturbed, supreme.

Though Nature's wild convulsions raged, and though from end to end

Of this great land tornadoes swept, earthquakes conspired to rend

Its ancient mountains from their base, its rivers from their course,
"They shall return unto their place," hath said the Lord of hosts.

There, with the eternal concourse, as num'rous as the stars,
E'en from the frozen North, as well, come the triumphal cars,

Of Israel's scattered lost ten tribes, hid by Jehovah's hand,—
No mortal eye shall find their place, till his last great command.

At their resistless, conquering tread, mountains of ice flow down;

Their prophets in God's name command, and, lo, as paths of stone,

The mighty rivers of the North their torrent-beds shall dry,
Like as when Jordan's waters stood, while Israel's hosts passed by.

Therefore remember, Saints of God, these thy companions are,
Washed by that same most precious blood, led by that same bright star;

For angels and archangels bright with all the prophets stand
To gather home to Zion this glorious, countless band.

To-morrow.

Life commences like a flower
Opening on a summer's day—
Blooms in grandeur till to-morrow,
When 'twill close and fade away.

We shall fade as cut grass withers
Underneath the rising sun;
We are here but till to-morrow
When earth's journey will be done.

But while here let's journey onward
'Long the straight and narrow way;
Hoping, trusting, till to-morrow;
Overcoming all the day.

Trials seem oft to upset us,
(And they will while we are here,)
Causing many a tear and sorrow,
Till we reach the better sphere.

Let not all our strength and labor
To seek earthly wealth be given;
For such pass away to-morrow—
But lay treasures up in heaven.

Not for "self" let's strive to conquer,
But to lend a helping hand
To the needy;—till to-morrow,
When we'll reach "the better land."

We may often be discouraged,
Helping others with a care;
But press on, for we to-morrow
Shall th' eternal mansions share.

Though we sow in tears of sorrow,
While upon life's stormy deep,
All is well!—for we to-morrow
Shall in tears of gladness reap.

Soon life closes as a flower,
For a season fades away:
But to bud again in springtime—
In the blest millennial day.

THE BEAST AND THE IMAGE.

Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy.—Revelation 1:3.

I believe it is an accepted theory that he who intrudes overmuch among the hoofs of Daniel and the horns of Revelation will not come off scathless. This may and does apply to those not of the kingdom; but to the saint of God, who in the discharge of his duty wanders into the realm of the mysterious, there is no danger; for "it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given." (Matthew 13:11.)

Truly this wonderful, panoramic view, given under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, is intricate and has baffled the astute and learned of all ages since it was presented to John on Patmos. Our divine Head has declared, "Now I have told you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye might believe."—John 14:29. Many of the prophecies are of such a character that the children of men do not understand until a fulfillment is reached; and then with wonder they realize the simplicity of the types and shadows, and marvel at the goodness of the omnipotent one in allowing them to obtain such knowledge, with the possibility of divining its import. For "the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets." (1 Corinthians 14:32.) In a measure at least a man under the Spirit of God can understand the pictures of the seers, and they thus serve as warning and promise. But after fulfillment, I can not see why these instructive revealments can not be fully and minutely applied, thus helping to confirm the child in the loving watchcare of the All Father. The great difficulty exists in that we are left mainly to our own resources, and with our limited knowledge of the past we are unable to locate the special points of identification, especially if the prophecy covers such a vast period as the one under consideration.

There is nothing new under the sun. That which was, is now, and that which is now, shall be. Originality is nothing more or less than the finding out and the combining of the knowledge of others, whether we are aware of it or not. All knowledge we may have received we have absorbed from the finite or the infinite, and if any credit is due let us render it unto the source of all wisdom.

My object in considering a portion of this last recorded scene is that I might focus the lens of greater minds upon what I believe, if substantiated, will encourage the Saints and place in the hands of the ambassador a weapon that will be invincible. I am myself unable at present to give the necessary data and minutiae, not having access to the archives of knowledge that I would require; but what I can not do perhaps there are others who can, and so by a united effort gain an inestimable weapon of defense for the apostasy, and offense against the reign of Babylon.

I can not say that I have ever read or listened to an exegesis of this chapter, and if I make mistakes, and seemingly fail in applying figures, I would request the toleration of those who may hold different opinions. I do not believe I am inordinately attracted toward the mysterious, but love at times to allow my mind to drift in meditation upon the past, present, and future, as revealed in the book of God. In one of these moods, January, 1902, the following interpretation was presented to my mind. I shall only attempt to give a general outline, and trust that if there is truth in it my colaborers will help to amplify and extend the power of the explanation.

Before entering upon the subject direct, I will possibly prepare the ground and eradicate from the minds of some an objection that might obtain. Some at least may think that all that is recorded in the book of Revelation is to be fulfilled succeeding the year 96 A. D., the time of its supposed utterance. "Things which must shortly come to pass."—Revelation 1:1. While I grant, that in the main futurity is unveiled, yet to uncover unborn time the prophet must loosen some of the drapery of the past, and present the scenes gone before, especially when history repeats itself as in the present instance.

As proof of this position in the twelfth chapter there is recorded a war in heaven. I believe all will readily admit that this commotion took place when Lucifer rebelled against God in the early morning of time. So with this precedent I fear not to state my position.

This chapter has two main divisions. Verses 1 to 8 describe conditions between the year 719 B. C., the rise of Rome (as a power) until the extinction of the Roman Empire between the years 541 and 570 A. D. Herein is recorded the rising, the character, and the duration of the pagan Roman empire, which continued, as verse 5 states, "forty and two months,"—twelve hundred and sixty days—or, prophetic time, twelve hundred and sixty years; for the Lord has declared: "I have appointed thee each day for a year."—Ezekiel 4:6. The second division, from the eleventh to the eighteenth verses, relates the rise, character, and operation of the counterfeit image—"Babylon," or Papal Rome.

Even if these are deep things, yet they are the revelations of men individually and collectively given of God for their benefit. Listen! "If any man have an ear, let him hear." Should this not stimulate us to inquire? And to those who endured the fiery ordeal, patience and faith were given, for they without us shall not be made perfect.

Let us minutely examine the first division and point out the marks of identification. The Patmos seer represents himself as being upon the sand of the sea. As a servant of God not in connection with human governments, he stands between the kingdom of God and the kingdom of men in proper condition to observe the commotions of the sea—peoples—(see Revelation 17:15), and to conduct the waters (individuals) into the realms of, and under the government of Jehovah. I think it is admitted that God allowed his servants to use types, and that beasts in prophecy represent earthly governments. If the reader desires proof of this, turn to the pictorial record of Daniel, and there discover the lion, the emblem of Babylonia, the beast the symbol of Medo-Persia, the leopard representative of Grecia. In the second verse the beast arising (pagan Rome) from among the people is said to comprise the component parts of the former animals,—a nondescript hybrid, even the fourth beast of Daniel, “dreadful and terrible,” diverse from all others preceding, but utilizing the forces and powers of its predecessors. These are historical facts, that the Roman empire—mistress of the world—ruled and used the former kingdoms of Babylon, Medo-Persia, and especially Grecia, for the advancement of its temporal power. And it will be admitted by all Christians that it was a fit power to assume the prerogatives and authority of the dragon, that old serpent the Devil. With what pleasure did Satan hand over to his willing tool who worshiped him under the guise of Jove, Janus, Mars, Juno, the privilege to oppose the introduction of Christianity! And shall we wonder that in the early conflict a head of the hydra should receive such a wound when the sword of the Spirit was wielded by no less a personage than the immaculate Son of God? The advent of Jesus Christ in the time of the Cæsars (emperors) dealt idolatry such a blow that for a time it was believed the monster would perish; but “his deadly wound was healed.”

I am aware that in its first stages the Roman empire did not assume such powers, and not until God threw down the gauntlet in the person of our Savior did the adversary choose it as his especial representative. The first verse indicates this beast had seven heads—seven-hilled city of Rome, though I prefer to believe it refers to the seven different forms of government—1, kingly; 2, consular; 3, decemvirate; 4, dictatorial; 5, triumvirate; 6, imperial; 7, exarchate, which it passed through. And the ten horns with the ten crowns are the ten kingly divisions that arose within the bounds of the empire between the years 356 and 526, viz: Huns, Ostrogoths, Visigoths, Franks, Vandals, Lueves, Burgundians, Herules, Saxons, Longobards. (Bishop Loyd; Lowth's Com., in Adden.)

Surely the name blasphemy is appropriate when we recall the past, and the scornful contempt and treatment of Jehovah and his sanctuaries. “Down Eros; up Mars,” was the Roman motto. “Who is like unto the beast? Who is able to make war with him?” Let the wail of devastated lands and crushed peoples, enslaved and brought to grace the triumphs at Rome, answer. Let the ten great persecutions answer, when this rapacious, vulturic brood gloated over the mangled bodies and reveled in the blood-stained sands of the arena, or when incarnate devils wrapped the martyrs in combustibles, forming torches to light the bacchanalian charioteer, racing in honor of the gods whom the Christians refused to offer incense to or subscribe to their ritual.

“And it was given unto him to make war with the saints; and to overcome them; and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations.” Here is the record of a complete disorganization of the church of Christ. The balm of tortured saints, the oil—the blood—of the witnesses for Jesus was poured in upon the wounded head and it began to heal, but not until all were slain, the last vestige of authority in Christ's kingdom eradicated, the man child (priesthood) caught up to God, did the wound close. Then with renewed energy did earth and hell combine to destroy the institution of heaven, until “all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him,” and those whose names were not written in the Lamb's book of life suffered death and martyrdom.

Oh, what a condition to behold! Angels wept while the long night of misery held sway in the earth! Devils triumphant, angels in sorrow, while the bride of Christ was hiding herself from this persecuting power!

This church, so beautifully described in chapter 12 as a woman, is yet to be the bride when the marriage is consummated at the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior. “Clothed with the sun,” represents the glorious light of the gospel in all its effulgence in contradistinction to the pale beams of the moon (Mosaic law) upon which she had risen nearer to God, but which is now under foot passing away. How brilliantly in the early years did her diadem of polity shine as the twelve apostles executed the orders of government and carried the opening message to the nations of the earth! This glorious institution, pregnant with power, “travailing in birth,” agonizing over the welfare of mankind, and desiring to commit the holy priesthood to others, was indeed “pained to be delivered.” But the ever-watchful opposing power, the “great red dragon,” had committed to his agent (pagan Rome, having seven heads and ten horns) the right to persecute unto death the stars (ministry) of heaven, and cast them to the earth until the last vestige of humanity that was pure enough to receive and retain this sacred gift was ushered into the paradise of God. And the “man child [authority] who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron,” the inflexible word of God, was taken to Jehovah from whence it came. Destitute of authority, the flock without shepherds melted before the fury of the satanic charge, and the woman fled to the wilderness of disorganization, where the plans and secrets of government would remain until "a thousand two hundred and three score days" should elapse, or as the fourteenth verse declares: "A time and times and half a time." Twelve hundred and sixty years, prophetic reckoning, would again announce the coming of an Elias to prepare the way of the Lord (see Malachi 4:5), and permit the angel to restore the priesthood and gospel to the sons of earth. (See Revelation 14:6.)

However, his satanic majesty, with his vast knowledge and devilish wisdom gained in the university of hell that has been in operation since the first rebellion, did not rely upon this temporary victory. In the spirit condition he had existed through many cycles of time as the professor and student of history. Here he had seen the repetition of occurrences and profited by them. Now knowing that brute force would not always keep in check the leaven of God he decides to manufacture a counterfeit that under the disguise of peace would still embrace all the evils of the past.

Here we end the first and come to a consideration of the second division. Degenerate men, prone to do evil, ever ready to be used as the potter's clay, yield themselves as instruments to mold the "image" now to be erected.

I do not claim to give exact times as to when the last vestige of Christianity fled, for I believe that it never did; but as alcohol commingles with water, so did the fiery elements of sin diffuse themselves into the water of life—truth,—and so neutralized its potency and in time became the wine of fornication so liberally poured from the golden chalice of the scarlet woman. (See Revelation 17.) Deductive errors, like the incoming tide, begin with a ripple that excites the curiosity of the child, but end with the overwhelming bore that destroys life. Satan is too wise a manipulator of the floods of sin to fling them open wide until he has environed the masses. And so profane and sacred history relates how, in the first centuries after Christ, little by little, error deposed truth. Gradually the gifts and blessings of the Holy Spirit retired before the mummeries and enchantments of the pseudo-priesthood that usurped the prerogatives and donned the livery of heaven.

In 312 A. D. Constantine, to serve his own ambitious purposes, flattered the now numerous and retaliative Christians, and heaped honor and wealth upon the clergy in order to win their support. By concessions he so ingratiated himself that he was able to secure the seat of emperor. From the year 320 A. D., when he united church and state, begins directly the transmutation, and the two-horned beast begins to appear from the earth. The once down-trodden children of the light, after swallowing the gilded bait, became entangled in the mazy meshes of ambition, wealth, and power; and though as yet retaining some of the simple truths of the doctrine of Christ they began to change and pervert. Under the guise of tradition they sedulously incorporated the old heathen practices of the votaries of Jove.

It is a known dogma of the Papal church, that it is right to lie and practice deception to advance the holy(?) faith. Here we find the babe that in after-years developed into the manhood of Jesuitical tyranny. Mosheim, chapter 3, says: "One maxim was, that it was an act of virtue to deceive and lie when by such means the interests of the church might be promoted."

Notice the beast is to have two horns and to be like a lamb (Christ) in some respects. But like its predecessor it would control both in spiritual and civil matters. History relates that about the year 533 A. D. the Emperor Justinian proclaimed the Papal power supreme, and the successors of the Papal chair have claimed that they are, as Cardinal Pucci says, "The sight of thy divine majesty does not a little terrify me; for I am not ignorant that all power both in heaven and in earth is given unto you: 'That the prophetic saying is fulfilled in you, all the kings of the earth shall worship him, and nations shall serve him.'"

Here then is the horn of the dragon appearing under the cloak of peace. While nominally Christians, admitting the divinity of Jesus Christ and accepting him as the crucified Lord, they proceed to enforce the assumed titles that the blasphemous popes arrogated to themselves, and which the prophetic word declares they would appropriate. (See 2 Thessalonians 2:4.) It is with a shudder that the student of history reads that the head of this satanic church coveted and used all the appellations of Deity. How steeped in error they must have been to allow, not alone the rabble, but the learned, to address them as: "Holy Father," "The Infallible One," "Lord of Lords," "Lord God the Pope."

Cardinal Bellarmine in Authority of the Councils, book 2, chapter 17, says: "All the names which are given in the Scriptures to Christ, even the same names are given to the Pope." Also see Oswald's Kingdom Which Shall Not Be Destroyed, pages 97 to 99.

Why wonder if that portion of their history is kept away from the gaze of modern Roman Catholics? I do not blame them for trying to efface such a record from the domain of their votaries, and am not surprised at times to hear it indignantly denied. There are thousands of honest Catholics as well as Protestants; but there are tens of thousands who are in benighted ignorance as to the real history of their church, that old hulk, whose main timbers are ignorance and tradition, whose rotten framework is venerated and gilded with all the tawdry tinsel of superstition and priestcraft, whose worm-eaten deck is carpeted with the sophistry of the logician, and its spacious parlors curtained with the rhetorician's art.

• "And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast." Yes, pagan Rome not only controlled the destinies of men temporarily, but spiritually she dictated their worship; and now this counterfeit arising upon the ruins of the spiritual government of God, builds its throne, and the other horn (temporal power) comes into play, and enforces the dogmas of Papal Rome. About the year — A. D. this unity became fully developed and these two powers, human (secular dominions) and spiritual (satanic inspiration) conjointly work together and cause the earth and them that dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed.

It is a conceded fact that Papal Rome in the zenith of her power controlled both spiritually and in civic matters all the countries and dominions that had been under the iron heel of her predecessor.

Now will the second position be conceded, that inasmuch as she dominated all nations with her religious ideas, that religion was a revival of the old heathen rites dressed in the garb of Christianity? This may seem audacious, but is it not true? Speaking of the enemies of the Christian religion one writer says: "But a worse enemy than all was the growing amalgamation of pagan forms with Christian worship."—Buck's Theological Dictionary.

Vain fictions were now confirmed, enlarged, and embellished. Hence arose that extravagant veneration for departed saints. Hence also the celibacy of the priests, the worship of images and relics. An enormous train of different superstitions were gradually substituted for true religion and genuine piety. A preposterous desire of imitating the pagan rites and of blending them with the Christian worship, and that idle propensity towards a gaudy and ostentatious religion, all contributed to establish the reign of superstition upon the ruins of Christianity.—Mosheim, chapter 3. The rites and ceremonies by which the Greeks and Romans and other nations, had formerly testified their veneration for the fictitious deities, were now employed in the service of the true God.—Chapter 4.

The seventeenth chapter now comes as an auxiliary helping us to identify that organization pictured so graphically by the pen of inspiration. The type is still a woman; but instead of the stainless character of the first type that awful appellation, whore, designates the woman (organization) emerging from the wilderness of disorganization. Shall we not accept the conclusion, when history informs us that not only did she play the harlot typically but literally, by incestuously incorporating the doctrines of paganism and pandering to the whims of kings, until she gained supremacy? Then the lovers were forced to obey the paramour and gratify the lustful passions, greed, avarice, intolerance, until the blood of honest humanity flowed in rivers through the wounds inflicted by all the instruments of torture a satanic inspiration could suggest. Small wonder that blood (color) is the emblem of Rome; and not alone the robes and hats, but the hands of her priesthood are dyed in human blood. I refer the reader to Fox Book of Martyrs, which charges the papacy of murdering fifty millions of earth's best citizens to satiate her desire for supremacy. Is the image not fulfilling the antitype? A persecuting power until she makes the nations drunken with the wine of her fornication (corrupt practices)! Is she not seated upon the scarlet-colored beast, the seven-headed hydra with the ten horns that early operated against the kingdom of heaven? And, as the eighteenth verse declares, hath she not her center of government in that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth? and as the ninth verse says, on the seven mountains—the seven-hilled city of Rome—or typically, as mountains represent governments, upon the location where the seven governments of Rome once held the reins of earth and hell?

Having followed closely the earmarks of prophecy, let us proceed further and particularize the similarity of the two religions; and to make it more apparent I place in parallel columns, the points of identification between the beast, Paganism, and the image, Catholicism:

PAGAN ROME.

1. Worshipers of Jove, Mars, etc., had a Pontifex Maximus or supreme priest.
2. They had an order of priests who consulted the oracles for revelation.
3. Her priests wore all the decorative jewelry and precious stones that could be obtained, and ornamented their garments with inscriptions and devices.
4. They had numerous flamens (priests).
5. They had their vestal virgins (?) with whom the flamens secretly cohabited.
6. They had their everlasting fires in their sanctuaries.
7. They sprinkled converts.

8. They worshiped and prayed to more than one god, —Jove, Janus, Mars, Apollo.

9. They worshiped a female goddess, even Juno, the mother of Jove's son, Mars.

10. They worshiped their dead ancestors and prayed to them.

11. They had their mysterious miracles and curative holy essences.

12. The priests incanted in a jargon, unintelligible to the votaries.

PAPAL ROME.

1. Catholic worshipers have their universal bishop, or pope.

2. So hath modern Rome, and so doth the pope when he sits upon his throne to receive revelations.

3. Go to a modern cathedral and observe the counterpart in dress, ornamentation, jewelry, and inscriptions of priestly attire when high mass is celebrated.

4. Rome has numerous priests.

5. So hath Rome her virgins (nuns) with whom the priests cohabit. (See Chiniquy's Monk's Exposures.)

6. So hath Roman Catholicism her holy fires (candles).

7. So doth Rome and her daughters.

8. Rome prays to God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. Saints are commanded to worship the Father through the Son by the power of the Holy Ghost.

9. Papists worship Mary the mother of Jehovah's Son, Jesus Christ.

10. So doth Romanists pray to the saints.

11. So hath Rome her healing shrines and her holy water.

12. Modern priests use Latin, not understood by the masses.

13. Pagan Rome coerced opponents by the secular arm, and caused rivers of blood to flow.

14. Its adherents afflicted themselves to propitiate the gods.

15. Paganism had their charms and protective baubles.

16. They revered and worshipped relics of the dead heroes.

17. The ancient idolators paid moneys to appease the angry gods and relieve their dead friends' punishment.

18. They had their numerous festal holy days in honor of the gods.

19. Attendance on public worship was compulsory, but after its close no restraint was placed on the passions, and all kinds of revelry were indulged in.

20. Image worship was a prominent feature of Paganism, and treasure was extorted to mold and decorate the temples with these figures. The common people carried them in miniature on their persons.

Dear reader, do not allow this arraignment of an existing church to arouse undue antagonism. Be assured that it is love that prompts it, and in plainness I would interpret the prophecies of God, and point out the dangerous, counterfeit institution. I do not war with men, but with the erroneous opinions of men; and although like the apostle Paul I may have to bear the opposition, hatred, malice of this modern Diana, yet like the ancient servant I must not hesitate to denounce the folly, the jugglery, the mummery, cruelty, arrogance, and avarice of modern Babylon, and her hireling priestcraft. I do so with the intent that the children of men may halt in the road of error, and retrace their steps, investigate that which is called religion, and heed the injunction of God: "Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith."

To-day, in both Catholicism and her daughters, there is a strong tendency to follow the file leader, whether it be pope, reverends, prophet (Dowie), president (Brigham Young), prophetesses (Mary Baker Eddy, Mrs. E. G. White), or the mediums of spiritualism. "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm," is as true to-day as when uttered under inspiration by Jeremiah. Oh, ye children of men, hear ye the word of the Lord

13. Papal Rome coerced heretics with the secular power, and the blood of fifty million crieth to God for vengeance.

14. The image enforces penances to propitiate Deity.

15. Papacy have their scapulars, beads, crosses, and other tokens.

16. Papal Rome has her holy shrouds, the bones of the martyrs, other relics.

17. Modern idolators buy indulgences, and pay liberally for masses for the release of the dead from purgatory.

18. Mystery Babylon has her innumerable holy and fast days in honor of departed saints.

19. Roman Catholics must attend service (mass) so often, but are then released to indulge and gratify the sensual man. Only necessary to confess next time.

20. Does not modern Rome correspond with her costly cathedrals, their price wrung from her ignorant votaries who assemble to bow before the images of departed Catholics and others; and do not the devout of to-day carry images of patron saints, and an image cross with them?

and heed it! "Come out of her [Babylon] my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins and that ye receive not of her plagues." Yield obedience to the promptings of God to "see and ask for the old paths"; the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Shake off the fetters of tradition and churchianity, and listen to Jesus as he declares: He that will do the will of the Father shall know of the doctrine. Why will you wander in the maze of uncertainty and doubt, along the dim corridors of priestly tyranny, whose gilded walls shut out the light of God's Holy Spirit? Allow the true servants of God to take off the grave-clothes, loose you, and let you go out into the sunlight of present revelation, where all the glory of the universe can bathe you with the golden waves of love; and, under the angel's banner, march on until the victory is won. Then you will be numbered among the jewels of Christ's kingdom that is yet to be set up on earth.

Can the student of history but wonder when he reads that the early Christians prayed for the continuance of the Roman empire? They then, under the power of inspiration, realized that a cessation of pagan Rome only meant the arising of a more savage continuation of this seven-headed demon power. This first monster of cruelty attaining dominion about 719 B. C., continued her prophetic period twelve hundred and sixty years until obliterated or submerged in Papal Rome about 541 A. D. "The Roman Consulship extinguished by Justinian, 541" A. D. is the title of the last paragraph of the fortieth chapter of Gibbon's History of Rome. She has to her credit some three million martyrs, while the second instrument of cruelty (the image) multiplies the roll until histories relate that upwards of fifty million suffered for conscience' sake.

As stated, I do not pretend to give exact data; but approximate. A gradual decay took place in the primitive church. See Mosheim, part 2, chapter 5, for a history of the first centuries until about the year 538 A. D., when the edict of Justinian came into force proclaiming the Roman bishop "rector of the whole church" (D'Aubignè Reformation, book 1, chapter 1.) But not until 570 A. D., when the last vestige of priesthood fled, did the spiritual forces from beneath hold despotic sway, and the "time, times and a half a time," when the woman (church) would be nourished in the wilderness from the face of the serpent completed, and the dispensation of God usher in the angel message in 1830.

Coincident with spiritual domination, temporal power was secured, and the night when no man could work held sway. This lasted from the decree of Justinian 538 A. D. until the papal power received its wound by the sword (literal) when Napoleon in 1798 abolished for a time the temporal power of the pope. But again the wound healed, and not until Victor Emanuel, king of United Italy, reopened the wound (1870 A. D.) by taking away the pope's jurisdiction in civic matters, did it begin to produce death. But this two-faced image is doomed; for again, as in the past, God smites the idol with the sword of the Spirit, when in 1830 the angel of Revelation 14:6 hands the sword to Joseph Smith, who has been the person to organize the church, that, as a stone, shall smite the image until it crumbles, and God's government fills the earth.

Who will attempt to dispute the fulfillment of verse 16? "And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads; and that no man might buy or sell, save he had the mark, or the name of the beast." Let the history of the twelfth to the sixteenth centuries relate the story, how, that unless an individual had the name (Roman Catholic) he had no rights as a citizen, and could be slain at the discretion of the faithful child of the church. Shall not the wailing of Saint Bartholom, 1572 A. D., attest the divinity of this interpretation and impeach the holy (?) see as the image that "should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed"? No doubt all Protestants will agree with the view just presented, and will unite to denounce "Mother Babylon"; but, my dear "naughty children," as mamma calls you, you should not be too harsh with your parent; at least until you disown her and reject the insignia of the papacy. Do not you know that the mark of the beast is that rite (sprinkling) first advanced about the year 230 A. D. and then sanctioned in 753 by Pope Stephen II, and again commanded in 1311 by Ravenna Councils, is the changed ordinance of the everlasting gospel that once inducted people into the fold of God, and by which they obtained a remission of sins through faith in the atonement of Jesus Christ?

As a climax to the identification above we observe verse 18: "Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is six hundred threescore and six."

Let us count the number of the beast (image) — 666. The pope of Rome, as head of that organization, wears a triple crown to signify his absorption of the three kingdoms uprooted that gave him temporal power; and also to symbolize the combination of powers that God saw would animate the hydra, viz.: secular (governmental), human (individual), spiritual (satanic). Upon this diadem is an inscription as follows: "Vicar. Vis. Filii Dei." The translation into the English language would be this: Deputy, Power, Son, God. And if we make it a little better, we will say, Deputy through the power or authority of the Son of God. When computed after the Roman numerical method it exactly constitutes the number of the man 666. Who can doubt the interpretation? The silence of the misty past is broken, and through the portals on the angel message comes the light that enables us to fully and definitely understand and locate the figures on the dial that announces: "The beast that was and is not and yet is" is none other than pagan Rome "that was" quiescent for a time, "is not" but "now is" Papal Rome. And the beast that was and is not, even he is the eighth form of the Roman empire, and will go into perdition; and the ten horns that once gave power to the beast, and again to the image, these are now hating the lewd woman, and are making her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh (rob her of power), and burn her with fire. Yes, the heroes of the Reformation brought in the word of God that consumed the ignorance and superstition of the Dark Ages; and although their blood flowed to establish religious liberty and political freedom, it has been and shall be as a fire that will eventually burn away the fetters of Roman bondage. They prepared the way for the restoration of the gospel and the dispensation of the fullness of times.

We have almost concluded this examination, yet I would attract attention to another and concluding thought. This "mystery Babylon" is a mother. Where are the daughters? This decrepit old woman, although passing away, is undergoing a transformation that the Protestant world had best give heed to, or else the master magician (the Devil) will again wave his wand and palm off upon them a new form of this image, more difficult to detect, and in this age of knowledge best calculated to captivate apostate Christendom. What are the orthodox sects of to-day but the daughters or granddaughters of Rome? Truly they are her offspring, for the lineage of each and every one can be traced, and the dates of their births given. It will not do to treat with contempt, or rave out the epithets, bigot, egotist, at the individual who makes the charge. That will not solve the riddle. Nor will it refute the position taken to hurl slander (Mormonism) or resort to calumny.

Ye lovers of truth, sweep up the debris of decaying faith and investigate the claims of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The testimony of your writer is that there you will find the fullness of the gospel as when first it came to earth.

"And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men." This verse gives us a clew or inference as to the new face assumed by the image. You see, reader, it is patterning after the old two-faced god of the Romans (Janus). The inquisitorial visage gave way to the Jesuitical grin, and now the grin is being softened into the alluring smile of spiritualism. Spiritualism is but an excrescence of Protestantism—a direct child of the daughter, and grandchild of the mother. This insidious progeny was born about the eighth century, when the plain statements of Scripture were set aside, and the doctrine that heaven is the home of God's people was embraced. This disbelief of holy writ was nurtured, and to-day the belief that departed spirits are hovering around (ticket of leave from heaven) loved ones here, is almost universally accepted. It is but a little step from the belief that spirit entities exist around us, to believe that those entities will give revelation. The acceptance of this theory, in part a reality, is honeycombing both Protestantism and Catholicism. Christ said, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth"; not go to heaven. True the departed spirits go to paradise; but they remain there until the resurrection and do not roam about through space, and thus be able to give knowledge of the past, present, and future. There is a reality, however, in spiritualism; but the reality is that personating devils (fallen angels), not the departed friends, appear and commune through the mediums or clairvoyant.

"And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet, for they are the spirits of devils working miracles."—Revelation 16:13, 14. Yes, these unclean spirits have emanated from the dragon (Buddhism, Brahmanism); the beast (Roman Catholicism and her daughters); the false prophet (Mahomet). Mystery Babylon and her daughters have their show and side-shows superintended by Pius X, Swedenborg, Brigham Young, Alexander Dowie, Mary Baker Eddy, Mrs. E. G. White, and all the spiritualistic guides of to-day.

"And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men." If this has not been fulfilled in the past by such men as D. D. Home, who could play with fire and be unscathed, it will be in the near future.

Ye lovers of the marvelous, be not deceived. If ye would enjoy,—to the law and to the testimony,—yield obedience to the perfect law of liberty that has been restored, and then you have a right to the manifestations of God. If you will yield obedience to the law of adoption, then as heirs the gifts of the Spirit are your heritage; but if you disregard the commands of Jesus, then you throw yourselves open to be deceived. "For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect."

Dear fellow laborers, I have written this in weakness, realizing my inability to cope with the subject through lack of knowledge (history); but I trust that it may prove a stimulus to a more efficient exegesis.

THE MEASURING ROD.

I dreamed that I was on my way to school, when suddenly I noticed a great crowd upon the green. People were hurrying to and fro, and when I asked what all this commotion was about, a girl said, "Why, don't you know? It's measuring day, and the Lord's angel has come to see how much our souls have grown since last measuring day."

"Measuring day," said I, "measuring souls! I never heard of such a thing," and began to ask questions; but the girl hurried on, and after a while I let myself be pressed along with the crowd to the green. There, in the center, on a kind of a throne under the great elm, was the most glorious and beautiful being I ever saw. . . . His clothes were a strange, shining sort of white, and he had the kindest and yet most serious face I had ever beheld. By his side was a tall golden rod fastened upright in the ground, with curious marks at regular intervals. Over it, on a golden scroll, were the words, "The measure of the stature of a perfect man."

The angel held in his hand a large book, in which he wrote the measurements as the people came upon the calling of their names in regular turns. The instant each one touched the golden measure, a most wonderful thing happened. No one could escape the terrible accuracy of that strange rod. Each one shrank from or increased to his true dimensions—his spiritual dimensions as I soon learned, for it was an index of the soul's growth which was shown in this mysterious way; so that even we could see with our eyes what otherwise the angel alone could have perceived.

The first few who were measured after I came I did not know, but soon the name Elizabeth Darrow was called. She is the president of the Aid for the Destitute Society, you know, and she manages ever so many other societies too, and I thought, Surely, Mrs. Darrow's measure will be very high indeed. But as she stood by the rod, the instant she touched it she seemed to grow shorter and shorter, and the angel's face grew very serious as he said, "This would be a soul of high stature, if only the zeal for outside work which can be seen of men, had not checked the lowly, secret graces of humility and trust and patience under little trials. These, too, are needed for perfect soul-growth."

The next was Lillian Edgar, who dresses so beautifully that I have often wished I had such clothes and so much money. The angel looked sadly at her measure, for it was very low, so low that Lillian turned pale as death, and her beautiful clothing no one noticed at all, for they were quite overshadowed by the glittering robes beside her. And the angel said in a solemn tone: "Oh, child, why take thought for raiment? Let your adorning be not outward adorning of putting on of apparel; but let it be the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price. Thus only can you grow like the Master."

Old Jerry, the cobbler, came next—poor, old, clumsy Jerry—but as he hobbled up the steps the angel's face fairly blazed with light, and he smiled on him, and led him to the rod. And behold! Jerry's measure was higher than any of the others. The angel's voice rang out so loud and clear, that we all heard it saying: "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted. Whosoever shall humble himself as a little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven."

And, then; oh, my name came next! I trembled so that I could hardly reach the angel, but he put his arm around me and helped me to stand by the rod. As soon as I touched it, I felt myself growing shorter and shorter, and though I stretched and stretched and strained every nerve to be as tall as possible, I could only reach Lillian's mark—Lillian's, the lowest of all. I grew crimson with shame, and whispered to the angel: "Oh, give me another chance before you mark me in the book so low as this! Tell me how to grow! I will do it all so gladly, only do not put this mark down!"

The angel shook his head sadly: "The record must go down as it is, my child. May it be higher when I next come! This rule will help thee: 'Whatsoever thou doest, do it heartily as to the Lord, in singleness of heart as unto the Christ. The same earnestness which thou throwest into other things, will, with Christ's help, make thee grow in grace.'"

And with that I burst into tears, and I suddenly awoke and found myself crying. But, oh! I shall never forget that dream! I was so ashamed of my mark.—Christian Herald.

MANUSCRIPT OF JOHN WESLEY ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-ONE YEARS OLD.

GIDDINGS, Texas, July 24.—Among the papers of the Shaw estate at Lexington, Texas, was recently found an old manuscript signed by the immortal John Wesley, dated one hundred and twenty-one years ago, ordaining Doctor Thomas Coke as superintendent (or bishop) of the Methodist Church in America.

Immediately after his ordination Doctor Coke sailed for North America, where a great nation had been born. In the autumn of 1784 he landed in the United States, presented this document as his credential and soon called a general conference of all the Methodist societies in America. This conference is known to history as the "Christmas conference." Its first session was held in the Lovely Lane Meeting-house on German Street. In 1900 Doctor

Lee tells us that the Baltimore Merchants' Club building bore this panel inserted in its walls:

"Upon this site stood from 1774 to 1786 Lovely Lane Meeting-house, in which was organized December, 1784, the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States of America."

The conference met December 24, 1784, and was presided over by Bishop Thomas Coke, who had as his authority the document now before me. The conference unanimously ratified the appointment of Doctor Coke and also the appointment of Doctor Francis Asbury as his associate bishop or superintendent, who was at once ordained by Coke.

At this time there was a strong feeling in Virginia against negro slavery. A petition to the legislature was being signed praying for the passage of an act of emancipation. General Washington had just achieved the independence of the United States and was easily the most influential man in America. Bishops Coke and Asbury were sent as a committee to see General Washington in his retirement at Mount Vernon and secure his signature to the emancipation petition.

Of this interview Asbury wrote, May 26, 1785: "General Washington received us very politely, and gave us his opinion against slavery."

Doctor Coke wrote: "He informed us that he was of our sentiments; that he did not think it proper to sign the petition, but if the assembly took it under consideration he would signify his sentiments to the assembly by letter."

In 1785 Bishops Coke and Asbury built a college at Abingdon, eighteen miles from Baltimore. The ignorance of child nature among the greatest scholars of that time is forcibly shown by Bishop Coke's "rules" for Cokesbury College, as the school was named after Coke and Asbury.

These "rules" forbade all play, and no recreation was permitted, except "gardening, reading, carpentering, and walking."

Swimming in the river was prohibited, but the boys were permitted to bathe "one at a time" in private, attended by a "master," and this luxury was brief, as the boy was permitted to remain only one minute in the water.

Naturally under such rules the college was a failure.

In 1795 it was burned to the ground and never rebuilt.

That John Wesley did not approve of Cokesbury College is shown by the following excerpt from his famous Asbury letter. He wrote: "I study to be little; you study to be great. I creep; you strut along. I found a school; you a college! Nay, and call it by your own names! O, beware! Do not seek to be something." The following is a copy of the manuscript before me:

"To all to whom these presents shall come. John Wesley, late fellow of Lincoln College in Oxford, presbyter of the Church of England, sendeth greeting.

"Whereas, Many of the people of the southern provinces of North America who desire to continue under my care and still adhere to the doctrines and discipline of the Church of England, are greatly distressed for want of ministers to administer the sacraments of baptism and the Lord's supper according to the usages of the said church; and

"Whereas, There does not appear to be any other way of supplying them with ministers:

"Know all men that I, John Wesley, think myself to be providentially called at this time to set apart some persons for the ministry in America;

"And, therefore, under the protection of Almighty God, and with a single eye to his glory, I have this day set apart as a superintendent by the imposition of my hands and prayer (being assisted by other ordained ministers), Thomas Coke, doctor of civil law, a presbyter of the Church of England, and a man whom I judge to be well qualified for that great work. And I do hereby recommend him to all whom it may concern as a fit person to preside over the flock of Christ.

"In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this second day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and eighty-four.

JOHN WESLEY."

Captain James Shaw, among whose papers this unique manuscript was found, was a surveyor who came to Texas in 1833 from Ohio. At the battle of San Jacinto he commanded a company under General Houston. After the revolution of 1836 he was elected to the first congress of the Republic of Texas. Following annexation he was elected to the first legislature of Texas and served several consecutive terms. Captain Shaw was a staunch supporter of General Sam Houston in his several races. He was married twice. First to Miss Nancy Riggs, and after her death to Mrs. Kray. His last wife survives him and lives a widow with her son, James Kray, in La Grange, Texas. By his first marriage there were three children—Frank, who died in the Confederate army; Miss Sophia, who married Captain I. C. Douglass; and Travis, who died in 1882.

Travis Shaw entered the army at twenty-one and fought four years for the Confederacy in the Seventeenth Texas infantry. After the war he served his country in the legislature of Texas, and was nominated in 1880 for the Senate.

In 1870 Travis Shaw traveled in England, France, Germany, and Denmark. While in London he found the old Wesley manuscript at a curiosity store among a lot of old relics, and bought it. His widow, Mrs. Lizzie B. Shaw, now lives in Taylor, Texas, and his children are prominent in several Texas towns. His sister, Mrs. I. C. Douglass, of Lexington, Texas, is an ideal lady of the Old South and is the idol of her grown and married sons. Her only daughter, Mrs. J. W. Dickson, died years ago. Captain I. C. Douglass, the custodian of this document, was a Confederate army officer, and his brothers, William and Thomas S. Douglass, were both Confederate captains. William died soon after the war, but Captain Thomas Douglass lives on the old farm near Lexington, where his father settled fifty years ago. He is commander of Camp Tom Douglass No. 555, United Confederate Veterans. He belonged to the Second Texas Infantry, was captain of company H and was desperately wounded by a piece of shell at Vicksburg, where his company was surrendered by General Pemberton. The Douglass brothers were natural-born soldiers of old Scotch descent. The family were all Methodists. Their father, James Douglass, came from Tennessee to Texas in 1853. His daughter married Judge T. H. Brennan, formerly county judge of Milam County, whom she survives.

Naturally they highly prize the old manuscript as the original draft of the ordination of the first Methodist bishop from America.—Baylis J. Fletcher, in Houston Semi-Weekly Post, August 3, 1905.

THE INFLUENCE OF COMPANIONSHIP.

"The chief want in life," said Emerson, "is somebody who shall make us do the best we can." Make us, but how?

This question comes home with directness and force to each and every one who has to do with children, but especially to parents and teachers, since it is in their power to add to the force of moral suasion the, at times and under proper circumstances, equally potent one of compulsion. Once before in these talks we have referred to the fact that it was because Eli—the priest of God—restrained not his children when he knew their wickedness, that God said: "I will judge the house of Eli for ever."

Love is a strong potent factor, but is not love the moving power in all proper compulsion? Certainly it is. There may be parents and teachers also, who often are not governed by this higher and purer motive but who, from motives of selfishness or feelings of anger, use compulsion over the child placed in their care. It is needless to say that such compulsion is not the kind to which we refer.

"I took a sleeping infant in my arms," said a friend to us recently, "and while I held it there my brain was teeming with many thoughts and questions.

"Beautiful, and wonderfully made," I said; "pure and innocent; what its destiny—its capacity? With soul immortal—a child of God, why embodied in this tenement of clay, why given into hands so weak, trusted to the swaying and control of judgments so fallible? Then there surged over my heart a great pity and the hot tears burned the lids which held them back—held them, for who could offer to a young mother an acceptable excuse for weeping over her sleeping babe? And why indeed should I weep? Was not this infant the child of God, and was not his wisdom perfect? Did he not know the end from the beginning? And strangely wonderful as it may seem to us we know—because he has revealed it to us—that the spirit without the body can not inherit a fullness of glory. (See Doctrine and Covenants 90:5.)

"But such questions—while I might not, could not answer them,—would still arise. I could only say then 'It is God's doing and is marvelous in our eyes,' but oh, I felt as never before the need—the great and crying need of fitness for parenthood—fitness to meet and honor the God-given trust. It is with parents we need most to labor; it is parents' day, not children's day we need!" Thus spoke my friend.

"Parents' day"—the day of their influence and power—when is it? we ask. If only we were wise enough to know—to use the period God has appointed—the period in which he will not allow the Devil to tempt these little ones, then might we so strengthen the influence God intended we should exert over his little ones intrusted to our care; that our day should be for ever—our influence everlasting. Truth and righteousness are the pillars of his throne, and it is these principles—the principles of "light and truth" in which we are commanded to bring up our children.

Let us not forget that mankind is one great family every member of which is interdependent one upon another.

In no way is this mutual dependence more forcibly illustrated than in the early and universal desire of every normal human being for the companionship of other human beings.

This companionship is the source of the purest and sweetest joys of life, but it may and often does become the source of unmixed evil.

The child of tender years and even the youth is not wise enough to choose companions unaided, and as nothing can be of greater importance than the kind of company he keeps it follows that the watchcare of the parents during all the years up to young manhood and womanhood is required to prevent the choosing of such companions as would do them harm and to encourage the choosing of such as will prove to be helpful.

Do not let any sophistry mislead you in this matter. Professor Everett of Harvard University holds that hypnotism is but an exaggerated form of the silent but powerful influence which is constantly being exerted by human beings in their companionship one with another. "The suggestions made by our ordinary companions," he says, "simply perhaps by their ways of speaking and acting, tend to exert a like influence. They control us less because other influences are working in other directions; but almost every young person who falls into bad habits shows that these suggestions may sometimes get as complete a control of a person as is the case in hypnotism.

"Besides what are called 'bad habits' there are other habits hardly less bad that are caught from one's companions. Such are habits of frivolity, of unkind gossip, and whatever may tend to lower the standard of our lives.

"Good habits of life, of thought, and of feeling are helped as truly by good companionship as they are hindered by bad.

"If the nature of the companions among whom we live has such an incalculable influence over us, we see what power we have to shape our lives by the right choice of companions.

"We should remember, too, that we may as truly have influence over our companions as they over us. We should dread more than almost anything else, the thought that another has been made worse by associating with us. To injure the nature of another is to do about as much harm as it is possible for us to do in this world."

Children naturally incline to imitate and soon fall into the ways of those with whom they associate intimately. There is an old and familiar saying that

"Vice is a monster of deceitful mein,
That to be hated needs but to be seen;
But seen too oft, familiar with its face,
We first endure, then pity—then embrace."

The boy who has been taught that it was wicked to swear or use bad language of any kind if allowed for a time—and not a very long time either—to make companions of such as swear and are profane, soon loses the disgust and horror he felt at first, and before long can equal his companions in the readiness with which he uses the same kind of language.

Is it not wise, then, that so far as they possibly can parents become the companions of their own children? It may demand some sacrifice of time or even inclination, but it is a sacrifice which will repay many fold—one of those which binds your child near to you with bands never to be broken and which lengthens the "parents' day," filling the heart of the boy or girl with the sweet memories of childhood which will endure as long as life itself endures.

But it is not always possible for parents to become the companions of their children more than for brief intervals at a time, but is it not always possible for them to have an oversight of the choice of companions and to insist, even to the point of enforcing, that they select such as will do them good and not harm?

In this connection it is of the utmost importance to remember that habits once formed soon become fixed and harden into principles which are to control and govern the entire life. Is it not then a matter of vast importance that parents realize this fact while the child is yet susceptible to the loving influences which need not the aid of compulsion? Again let us repeat the words of Emerson: "The chief want in life is somebody who shall make us do the best we can," and while repeating it let us ask, Is there any one in all the broad universe of God to whom the child may with such justice look for the satisfying—the complete filling of this want—this crying necessity of life, as to the parents who are responsible for his earthly existence? "Make us do the best we can!" "Alas! alas! how few of us ever attain to that. How many have failed through the culpable neglect of parents—how many others through mistakes ignorantly made, only eternity will reveal.

But ought not the time which is past suffice for such mistakes? Is it not time that we arise, shake off our slumbering spirit and going in earnest prayer to God for wisdom, resolve that "let others do as they will as for us we will serve the Lord"; will raise our children in his admonition and fear, and thus doing, be to them the embodiment of that which will fill their chief want in life?

Questions on November Reading.

Following Emerson's thought, is the time of the chief want in life limited? May one reach the time when he can make himself do his best regardless of the influence of others? Are we ever wholly independent of the influence of others? Upon whom does it largely depend whether a child gains the strength of character to withstand any hindering influences which may be exerted upon him? What does H. Clay Trumbull say of the place of "must" in the training of a child? What feelings should never be indulged in using compulsion over a child? In what broad sense may the term parents' day be used? How may the universal desire for companionship bring either the purest joys or the greatest evils? Have children wisdom to choose right companions? How long should parents exercise watchcare over the companionships of their children? How far do you agree with Professor Everett's estimate of the influence of companions? Are we careful enough that our children shall be good companions for others? What would make society safe for our children? Will it reform bad companions simply to avoid them? Are we as mindful as we should be to guard the interests not only of our own children but of the children of others? Do we heed Froebel's injunction as much as we might, or as much as we should, to live with the children? Would the companionship of parents be sufficient for their children? Do they need the association of those of like age? Does not a mingling of the two give the best help and furnish the opportunity for the parent to regulate all other companionships?

Program for November Meetings of Daughters of Zion.

Opening hymn No. 80 in Hymnal. Invocation. Reading, "The influence of companionship," in HERALD. Discussion of above, with the aid of questions. Paper, "What I require of those who may be companions for my children." Hymn 165, Hymnal. Paper, "Is it right to expose a child to vice in order that he may hate it?" General discussion, "How may we as mothers fill the 'chief want' in the lives of our children?" (Assign this to two or three who will give short addresses on the subject, and then let the others present take it up as time and inclination will allow.) Closing hymn. Benediction.

Two International Diplomas.

A brother asks, "What is the present arrangement of the International Sunday-school people with regard to their two diplomas for normal class work? Of what does the work consist, and can any one take it?" To answer this inquiry we take a clipping from the World Evangel, Winona Lake, Indiana, upon this topic. It is brief, but as accurate information as we have upon the subject. We are glad to see interest awakening along lines of normal study among our people. When there are sufficient numbers ready and anxious to take up the work, we will be able to put out a course that will be adapted to our particular needs as a people. This course of the International people is very good, and could be pursued by our people with profit by slight modifications. As soon as the "Exponent" is in the hands of the readers we will have some work on these lines prepared by Bro. J. A. Gunsolley. Just what the course will be we do not know. But it will pay you to make thorough study of the following from the World Evangel as the course is the result of the combined experiences of several specialists in normal training.

ELEMENTARY AND ADVANCED COURSES OF STUDY.

The International Sunday School Association, as has been often stated in the Evangel, is very aggressive in pushing the work of teacher training. Through its committee on education standards for two courses have been established, elementary and advanced.

1. Elementary course. The Légion of Honor, Semelroth's Complete Normal Manual, Hurlbut's Revised Normal Outlines, Pease's Normal Outlines, Roads' Teacher Training, Sabbath-school Teacher Training Course, and any course equivalent to these has been approved as elementary.

To those who are unfamiliar with these books it may be well to say that they comprise a general study of four subjects: a. "An outline study of the Old Testament." b. "An outline study of the New Testament." c. "A study of Sunday-school history, organization, and management." d. "A study of the essential principles and methods of teaching."

About twelve lessons are given to each subject.

Advanced course. This course must include the following subjects: a. "The Bible," "Biblical introduction"; "Biblical geography"; "Biblical history"; "Biblical Doctrine." b.

"General church history." "Denominational church history" is referred to the various denominations. c. "Pedagogy and child study." d. "The Sunday-school; Its history, organization, and management."

The text-books in each section must be of college grade as approved by the committee on education. The committee will be glad to render assistance to any association contemplating the establishing of an advanced course. Inquiries should be addressed to Teacher Training Secretary, Room 14, 132 LaSalle Street, Chicago, Illinois.

TWO INTERNATIONAL DIPLOMAS AND HOW THEY MAY BE SECURED.

Two International diplomas have been prepared; one for those who have completed an elementary course, and one for those who have completed an advanced course. These diplomas are awarded by the International Association, through the various auxiliary, State, provincial, and territorial associations according to the following rules:

1. The association must have a teacher training department, and exercise supervision over all classes and students, such supervision to be evidenced by enrollment and examination.
2. A course or courses of study must be prepared or adopted equivalent to the standards of the International Association.
3. The examination must be conducted in writing, without help, and under the supervision of the association granting the diploma.
4. The examination must be upon questions sent out or approved by the association supervising the work.
5. The students of elementary course are required to make a grade of 66% per cent. The students of advanced courses are required to make a grade of at least 70 per cent.

Those who live in States, territories, or provinces where there is no organization of the teacher training work may write direct to the International Teacher Training Secretary, W. C. Pearce, 132 LaSalle Street, Chicago, Illinois. In such cases he is authorized to direct the work of students and classes.—W. C. Pearce, Teacher Training Secretary.

A Religious Work Within and Without the Home.

Religious work should commence with each and every individual who is a disciple of Christ, and its effects should be felt in the home. It should make it a place of love. Love is the feeling that prompts the mind to do right. Our religious work should be a constant companion of what we desire in our homes.

Our homes should be a place of joy, peace, and happiness where the love of God is made manifest, for God is love; and I know no better way to explain a religious work than by love. Our religious work enters into our vocations and every business transaction, so that we are truthful, prompt, energetic, persevering, honest, pure, and good.

Each one should understand the responsibility imposed by the divine One, and the nature and magnitude of the work to be done.

Our religion should make us feel very humble, for the influence that is in our homes is felt for everlasting good or evil. We should be training our minds in the lessons of life, that we may make our homes a heaven below. We must have that respect for husband, wife, and children that will give them the highest place in the home. And as a type of noble manhood and womanhood, we should keep ourselves pure in the sight of God and the world, that our example may be worthy of imitation.

Our religious work is too sacred to trifle with. The highest position a Christian can gain is to be worthy of the indwelling of the Spirit of God. The fruit it bears is love, manifested in joy, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance. I would to God that every Saint would see the great importance of such fruit in their homes. And if we are true disciples of Christ it will be there. Our religious work should reach out to those not of our household. It should cause us to be good, loving, kind, free-hearted to everybody. It should be so grounded in us that no difference where we are we could be told by those whom we are with that we are true disciples of Christ.

A Saint should be true and tender,
Our handclasps sure and warm,
A strong and brave defender
To shield from every storm.

As toilers in life's babel,
A help in time of need.
So ready and so able
To guide, uphold, and lead,

Then our presence daily blesses,
We are neither stern nor cold;
Kind words and fond caresses
Come from a pure heart of gold.

The Beautiful Hymn.

The following scrap of information concerning the old, familiar hymn, "Just as I am," will be read with interest. It is taken from the "Heart and Home" department in Wallace's Farmer, Des Moines, Iowa:

"Just as I am without one plea,
But that thy blood was shed for me,
And that thou bid'st me come to Thee,
O, Lamb of God, I come, I come."

"This beautiful hymn was written by Miss Charlotte Elliott, of Brighton, England, who was an invalid for fifty years. In the beginning of her illness, at the age of thirty-two, her suffering made her sometimes impatient, and when at that time a noted minister called, and in conversing with her asked if she were a Christian, she answered that she did not care to discuss religion; he replied that he 'would not pursue the subject, but would pray that she might give her heart to Christ and become a worker for him.' A few days later she apologized to him, confessing that his question had troubled her, saying she did not know how to find Christ, and wanted him to help her. He said, 'Come to him just as you are.' Thus this hymn was inspired and is now sung all over the world. Miss Elliott wrote it one day when a bazaar was being held in Brighton by her brother, a minister there, to raise money to educate the daughters of poor clergymen. She could not attend, but when left alone suffering and sad because of her apparent uselessness she wrote this hymn which has brought joy and peace to so many sorrowing hearts. A benevolent lady of Great Britain was so impressed with its beauty that she had it printed on a leaflet and sent through the cities and towns of the kingdom. At this time Miss Elliott was under the care of a skillful physician of Devonshire, a Christian man, who one day brought her this leaflet, saying he was sure she would be pleased with its contents. The surprise was gratifying to each one when the doctor found his patient was the author. Miss Elliott lived to the age of eighty-two years, a constant sufferer for half a century, yet blessed in knowing the good she had accomplished for the world through

ZENITH, Illinois, September 24, 1905.

Dear Saints: I thought to send you an account of a remarkable case of healing which took place near here. On the night of September 6, 1905, I went to Bro. James Slover's to cut corn for him. Just at dark a medicine peddler drove up and Bro. Slover went with him to put up his team. Presently I heard some one moaning as if badly hurt, and found that Bro. Slover had fallen from the loft, striking his side on the edge of the scuttle-hole. When I reached him he was lying on his back on the barn floor in great misery. I tried to raise him up, but it seemed as if it would kill him if we moved him. The peddler wanted to send for a doctor, but Bro. Slover objected. He then went to his wagon and got some liniment which he rubbed on Bro. Slover's side.

I asked what I could do for him and he first said, "Uncle Jimmy, pray for me"; then directly said, "Send for Isaac Morris." We sent for him and in about half an hour he and Bro. Burrows came. By this time several of the neighbors had come to see what was the matter. They were talking of putting him onto a mattress and taking him to the house when Elder Morris came in. He got down on his knees, anointed Bro. Slover's side, then laid his hands on him and asked God to remove all pain, to restore him, and make him sound from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet. By this time Bro. Slover had quit moaning. Bro. Morris got up and taking hold of his arm said, "Get up now and go to the house." He did so, and in one day was apparently as well as ever.

His little grandson, nine years old, said the next day, "Didn't grandpa get well quick when Uncle Isaac prayed for him?" though a neighbor who was there said to me two days after, "Well, Ferguson, when I first got there I thought Slover was badly hurt." I said, "Well, wasn't he?" He said, "No. See how soon he got well. He couldn't have been very badly hurt."

There is a preacher from near my old home, Bird's Eye, Indiana, who is preaching just south of here, telling the people that there never was a miracle performed in the Latter Day Saint Church; that it is all a humbug and a delusion. We know better. Why can not people believe Jesus? He says these signs shall follow them that believe; and we know that they do follow right in our own day.

He who goes out and passes counterfeit money, and cheats his fellow man out of his inheritance here is sent to a penitentiary for a term. What will be the sentence on the man who passes a counterfeit religion on his fellow men and cheats them out of their inheritances in the great beyond?

J. A. FERGUSON.

HAGERMAN, Idaho, September 4, 1905.

Dear Saints: It will be one year to-morrow since I bade farewell to loved ones in Pittsburg, Kansas, and came West to meet my husband, who had come here in the summer to look for a better climate than where we then lived. But I think it is a mistake for Saints having good homes to break up and come out here.

Since coming here I have had to pass through some of the hardest trials I ever had, and it seems at times I can never overcome, but I know that God will not suffer me to be tried above that I am able to bear. In April of this year I was called to part with my oldest daughter, Lula, who had been a sufferer for a long time, but bore her afflictions very patiently. She passed away without a struggle, and left a bright evidence of her acceptance by her Savior. She left three small children and a young husband. Three days later we laid beside her her little infant babe.

Then in July I was called again to part with a grandchild whom I had been caring for nearly two years, and to whom I had become so attached that it was like giving up one of my own. It still seems at times I hear him calling me. I hope to be remembered by the Saints that God will give me sufficient strength to endure to the end, that I may be ready when the time comes to depart, to hear the welcome plaudit, "Well done."

Our little branch here, I believe, is growing some. A few faithful ones have moved in this summer. The worst drawback to us now is we have no church to meet in. The little school-house we have been holding meetings in is too small, and it is inconvenient for some to meet there. It is not like living in a city where we are all close together. We all live in the country and are scattered around, but we hope to be able to purchase a lot in town, and build a house in the near future.

We are trying in our weakness to let our light shine, and always be ready to give a reason for our hope in the gospel, which we should all prize above all our worldly pleasures. While our young people nearly all seem timid now, if we can all be at our posts and continue to do our duty, they will eventually come on after us. We are trying to be prepared to meet the bridegroom, when he comes, with oil in our vessels, and our lamps trimmed and burning. We have the blessed promise that if we are pure in heart we shall see God. He says he gives unto us the light of the world. A city set on a hill can not be hid. Now let us, dear Saints, order our lives by the example of Christ, so we will be his children in deed and in truth. He was meek and humble.

May the Lord bless us all with light and knowledge is the prayer of

Your humble sister,

FLORENCE MCKNIGHT.

CUMBERLAND, Maryland, September 17, 1905.

Editors Herald: I left home on the thirteenth day of August, having lost my companion on the 7th. I find myself in Cumberland, Maryland. On leaving my home at English, Indiana, I went to Fort Wayne, Indiana, and from there I directed my way to Columbus, Ohio, thence to Wheeling, West Virginia, then to Pittsburg, and on last Sunday I found myself at Johnstown, Pennsylvania, the city that was completely destroyed by a flood in 1889. On the evening before I walked away from my hotel down the principal street, simply to see the city; incidentally I came upon a large crowd. On further examining I found that a colored minister was preaching, assisted by a white man. They claimed to be sent of God. They preached a powerful sermon, denouncing the popular churches to the fullest extent, and requesting each and every one to repent, be baptized, and obey the gospel. I was much interested and wondered who it could be that would preach the gospel in such fullness. After they closed I approached the white man and asked him what church they were attached to. In reply they said they were the children of God. I asked them where they got their authority; they said, "Of God." I quoted them a little scripture on authority, whereupon they took wings and flew. Oh, how wonderful is this gospel of latter days! When we are in the light as he is in the light, we have no trouble to put to flight the most skillful. After they left an old man came to me and began asking questions. I answered him promptly and he began to get very much interested. I found in this man an honest heart, and found that he was honestly searching for the bread of life. I took great pains to lead him in the light of the gospel and the angel's message, also the martyred Prophet. He was astonished at my saying, and confessed that he had been searching for years for just such a church, but had almost given up in despair. He said he wanted to be baptized, but was unable to find any one with the proper authority until I showed him the way. He was baptized by a Christian minister but left the church in utter despair, seeing that they did not teach the gospel in its fullness. I gave him some tracts, What We Believe, The One Baptism, and The Latter Day Saints, Who Are They? He took them home, and studied them thoroughly, using the Bible in connection. He came to me again before I left town, and is indeed in the light, and has accepted it. If any of the elders come by way of Johnstown, they ought by all means to call on this man, as he needs baptizing. His name is Anthony Brydon, 208 Vine Street. I talked with others there and I think this is a great opportunity to preach the gospel with great effect. I wish I could do more to draw poor, wandering souls to God. It makes my heart ache to enter Sabbath after Sabbath into the popular churches. I went to the Methodist Episcopal church this morning. In the choir were a violin, horns, pipes, and the organ. They sang and played their theatrical songs until I could see the very Devil leap for joy. Such music would please every lover of music and worldly pleasure. I went to-night to the Reformed church. It is "form" indeed. Every prayer is printed in their books, and they stand and read the prayers. Not even an imitation of the gospel was preached. No wonder the Devil has such a powerful influence. He has succeeded in silencing the churches. The world and the church are arm in arm. As I glance over the world and see even those who have obeyed the angel's message taken up with chewing tobacco, drinking intoxicating liquors, and standing in perfect harmony with the rotten politician of to-day; when one goes from one State to another and sees the throngs of thousands being led to hell and destruction by the Devil's devices of rum, and then think that a man that calls himself a Christian,—and especially the Saints who claim to be the salt of the earth,—voting to sustain such corruption, I wonder, When Jesus comes, will he find faith on the earth? Will Zion ever be redeemed, when some of our own elders are given over to the pride of the world, and so many of its vices? O God, how long? My prayer is that we may more earnestly consider where we stand before God, and that we call upon his holy name with mighty praise before God with his wrath does smite the earth with a curse.

Hoping and praying for the honest in heart and the welfare of Zion, I want to be a brother in Christ.

DELOIT, Iowa, October 1, 1905.

Editors Herald: I succeeded in getting an article of fifteen hundred words published in the Housekeeper for October, a monthly journal of Minneapolis, showing some of the great differences between the Reorganized Church and the Utah faction. The publishers made an egregious mistake in the first column by inserting the word not, making a part of a sentence read "Joseph Smith, if he did not receive divine assistance, had authority to establish the true church of God." The word not between the words did and receive puts a very dangerous and misleading construction on the sentence. I have requested the editors to correct their mistake in the November issue. The Housekeeper is publishing a series of illustrated articles entitled, "The tragedy of the Mormon woman," of Utah.

Very sincerely,
C. J. HUNT.

ALICE, Ohio, September 28, 1905.

Editors Herald: We are trying to do all we can; but prejudice keeps the people from heeding the good word. They seem to turn a deaf ear; though one woman told me the other day if I would let her have some of my HERALDS she would lay aside prejudice long enough to read them. So I gave her eight or ten HERALDS. We will do all we can to help the work along.

We had the the pleasure of meeting Brn. Devore and A. W. Kriebel, and were glad to talk with them, and would be glad to have them call again and preach for us if it be God's will that we can get an opening for them.

"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Dear Saints, we have believed and been baptized, now let us be workers of the Lord that we may be saved; for Jesus has said: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, if a man keep my saying, he shall never see death."

I ask the prayers of the Saints for us both, that we may live faithful and serve the Lord to the end.

Your brother and sister,
EDWIN AND ADA LAMBERT.

VINCENNES, Indiana, October 3, 1905.

Dear Herald: We are still alive and trying to keep the faith. I have been isolated from any branch for twelve years, but God can be with the scattered Saints, as well as with those in the branches. Still I long to be with the Saints. Bro. W. D. Ellis came here in September, and preached fifteen sermons, baptized my wife, and got others interested. He had large crowds, and good interest, and has removed lots of prejudice, and I believe some will obey if he gets back before interest dies. Bro. George Jenkins was in here about three years ago and got a good interest started but it died before he came again. Brn. Jenkins and Ellis are both powers in the gospel.

Our four-month-old baby is suffering with bowel trouble, and I ask a special interest in the prayers of all the Saints in his behalf, that he may be restored to health. Pray for us that we may be faithful to the end.
JOHN A. DAVIS AND WIFE.

STRATHBURN, Ontario, October 1, 1905.

Dear Herald: It is with a sad heart we are called upon to record the death of Sr. Ann Kelley. We will miss her in so many ways. To know her was to love her. She was of a bright, genial disposition; no matter how full of trouble and trial her own life was she always had a smile and word of encouragement for those around her, both of the church and outside. Though not blessed with much of this world's goods, her measure of meal and cruse of oil were never empty. Many of the ministry and Saints have been refreshed at her table.

A few years ago two evangelists of some sectarian church, on passing through the part of country where she lived, had called at several places and asked for lodgings, but were refused. On reaching Sr. Kelley's home they were admitted, fed, given a good bed, and were told the angel's message, which she never lost an opportunity to do. She has defended the church ever since her birth into it. She suffered much persecution, and many trials, but was always faithful in duty.

Her remains were followed to the grave by a large concourse of friends and neighbors, the casket being covered with flowers placed by loving hands. Elder A. Leverton preached a powerful sermon from Job 14:14: "If a man die, shall he live again?"

She leaves to mourn their loss a heartbroken husband and eight grownup children.

She had suffered for some time with rheumatism, but was feeling much better the day she died. For a few hours she complained of feeling faint and sick, then passed quietly away with a full assurance of taking part in the first resurrection. The family appreciated the kindness shown them by those not of the church.
A SISTER.

DOWN, Kansas, September 30, 1905.

Dear Herald: I had the privilege of attending the reunion of this the Northwestern Kansas District, held near Gaylord, Kansas, August 12 to 21. Had a nice time, and received many blessings. We had some very nice prayer-meetings, also good preaching.

When I last wrote I was in poor health and had been all my life except about two years. How I have been blessed since, no one can tell. My health is good now, for which I am very thankful to our heavenly Father. I can enjoy this life so much better now. I am trying harder to do my Master's will. We know not how soon our time on this earth will be over; and, dear Saints, let us be ready to meet our Redeemer when he comes.

I am not with the Saints as much as I would like to be. We still have meeting once a month. I go to other meetings and Sunday-school some, but that is not home. I think the Saints ought to make an effort to meet as often as they can. Let us strive to do our duty. Pray for me, for I am weak in this work. My prayers are for all.
Your sister,
MYRTLE COOP.

STANBERRY, Missouri, October 2, 1905.

Editors Herald: We are still in the faith, rejoicing in the great latter-day work. We say great because the work is complete in every respect and fills every demand. Why not? It has the stamp of divinity, and is of divine origin. The beautiful ancient order of things, restored by an angel from glory, is one of magnitude, and "power and much assurance." The Doctrine and Covenants says, "Ye shall receive the Holy Ghost by the prayer of faith," and "if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach." We need more of the Holy Ghost to accompany the message we are carrying to the world—to be "baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire." One class of religionists seem to be afraid of the baptism of fire, because they say it means the destruction of the wicked. I do not so understand it, as I believe the term fire is used in the Scriptures as an element of great power. In this instance: "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire," can not mean the obliteration of the wicked, because the "baptism of fire" is associated with the baptism of the Holy Ghost. In one place Jesus said, "I am come to send fire on the earth," etc. Did he mean literal fire? No, and every time our materialists and literalists literalize the term fire, when it is used to represent a condition obtainable under the operations of God's power, they get themselves into difficulty.

There has been of late a great deal of interesting matter appearing in the columns of the HERALD, both in point of doctrine and instruction, which is conducive to our welfare. I hope and pray that under the manipulating forces of our God, apostate Israel in the salt land will see the deplorable condition they are in, and see the sad mistake they have made, and turn to the true church and kingdom of God. God said to former-day Israel, "Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?" And "where there is no vision [or revelation from God] the people perish." Is not history repeating itself? Bro. Fred M., your articles relative to the Utah contingent are unanswerable.

May the Lord help us all to come up higher, do well our part in this work, and finally and ultimately receive the crown of immortality on the sunny banks of everlasting deliverance, in my prayer, in Jesus' name.

Northwest Mission Reunion.

The Northwest Mission reunion which was held at Portland, Oregon, from the 8th to the 17th inst. was a grand success in every respect. Fourteen States and British Columbia were represented at this reunion, and about eighty-five visiting Saints outside of Portland attended.

We had present with us, one of the First Presidency, one of the Twelve, six of the Seventy, five elders, five priests, also teachers and deacons.

The sermons were good and elevating, and greatly enjoyed by the people. The social services were very spiritual, and a source of great strength and encouragement to the Saints. President Smith's sermons and counsel were highly commented upon, and very much enjoyed by both the Saints and outsiders; and I can assure you that his visit in the Northwest Mission will not be forgotten by those who had the pleasure of seeing and hearing him. His sojourn among us helped to remove considerable prejudice from the minds of many people, and placed the church in a more favorable light before the thinking people. Hence, his visit was timely, and resulted in great good to the work of God in this far-off mission.

I wish to state in this connection that Sr. Smith, by her gentle spirit and pleasant ways, won the affection and the high esteem of the Saints; and she will always find a cheerful welcome in the homes of the Saints, if ever she comes West again.

Bro. Joseph and his happy family left for the East last Tuesday, and we were loath to give them the parting hand, as we had greatly enjoyed their society, and regreted that the time of separation had come. We wish them a safe journey, and pray the Lord to prolong the life of our worthy President for many years to come.

All those in attendance at the reunion went to their respective homes rejoicing in the Lord and the grand latter-day work.

The ministry have gone to their fields of labor with renewed courage, and feeling joyful in the Lord.

I am pleased to report that we are making progress, if but slowly. With love to all who are striving to gain everlasting life, I remain,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

G. T. GRIFFITHS.

Southern Nebraska Reunion.

The Southern Nebraska District is pleased to report a successful reunion held at Nebraska City, August 25 to September 3, 1905. The location was beautiful, distant about one mile and a quarter west of town, on the farm of Bro. E. D. Briggs. A good deal of opposition was witnessed in the way of discouragements, before the reunion, which is about always the case when good is to be accomplished; but by united effort success was attained. Twenty-one tents covered the grounds. Thirteen souls were made happy by receiving their patriarchal blessings under the hands of Bro. J. R. Lambert. Bro. W. M. Self conducted nine lambs into the fold, mostly the results of Sunday-school. According to reports the preaching was more than common. We had three sessions of Sunday-school and one of Religio. By unanimous vote Southern Nebraska will hold another reunion the coming year at Nebraska City, on the grounds of Bro. E. D. Briggs. Collection was taken up for Graceland, also to help in reunion expenses, which were amply covered.

We are pleased to state that our neighbors and friends were liberal in their kindness towards us. May God bless them. We extend invitation to all that can, to come to our reunion and help make it a success.

A. E. MADISON.

Independence Items.

Throughout the entire fore part and middle of September, when Kansas City and vicinity were said to be the meteorological storm-center of the country, there were almost continuous heavy rain-storms, and many trains here and all over the State were delayed on account of washouts and the destruction of bridges. The downpour that raged for several days put the electric light and telephone wires out of commission, and the damage on "the Muddy" was severe to the corn and hay, much of which was washed away.

There was on the 14th a fierce thunder-storm hereabout, and in Benton, Missouri, at the Cass County fair-ground, scores of persons were stunned by the lightning, two persons were killed, and sixteen seriously injured.

A more interesting item to record is that our county stock and agricultural fair which was opened on the 21st by an instructive address to the farmers by F. M. Miller, professor of agronomy, at the agricultural college of the State university, was considered to be a success.

Several tents were stretched in the court-house yard, and the fine poultry, vegetables, canned fruits, corn and grain, and, in the ladies' department, the pantry and needlework exhibits, were all excellent. There were other interesting features also, among them the baby show, and due honor would not be paid did we not mention that Miss Thelma Esther, daughter of Sr. E. Peterson, was judged to be the second prettiest baby on the grounds.

As to educational matters, the public schools here opened the fall session September 18, and there was the largest attendance in the history of the schools, which number, in enrollment, sixteen hundred and thirteen. We have six public schools, including the high school and Young school (colored).

The Columbian school, situated near the Temple Lot, of which our esteemed Bro. R. C. Kelley is principal, has seven lady teachers, and is one of the best institutions here.

On the 5th two gentlemen and their wives on their way home to Salt Lake City visited the church and Temple Lot. Mr. Edwin Evans, professor of art at Utah University, speaking of their ministry said, "Many are ordained to the priesthood who have not been called to preach. I am of that number, and unless I receive by inspiration or request a call through the prophet Joseph F., nothing could induce me to go forth as a minister." We only wished he had an opportunity (but time was limited) to read from page 102, The Old Jerusalem Gospel, which makes very clear the mistake made by those who have taken upon themselves the high prerogative to call men to preach the gospel of Christ.

The church and society meetings have continued as usual during the month; and the Religio and Sunday-school have held their own, notwithstanding the unfavorable weather and break in the attendance occasioned by the holding of the stake reunion.

On Monday, the 25th, there was held an open meeting of the priesthood, at which about one hundred were present. Elder Hilliard gave a concise and comprehensive lecture on the Word of Wisdom, and it was interesting and profitable, notwithstanding as usual the critics and humorists were in attendance both to enjoy and instruct in the interest of the general good.

In one of the first sermons of the month Elder Joseph Arber suggested to the Saints a good starting-point in a discourse on the gift of the Holy Spirit, reiterating the statement of the prophet Joel in regard to its outpouring, and much also was said upon the subject of good works, and of warning our neighbor. He thought we ought to know for ourselves, and "there would," said the speaker, "be less mistakes made in our lives if we would more and more live in harmony with the word of God." Elder Peak also shrinks not from proclaiming the whole truth, for in speaking of faith and works combined in a late sermon he made the solemn inquiry, "What are we willing to do? We can go to church when the weather is favorable, and some one is to preach that suits us; but are we willing to spend our money for the work of the missionary, and the preaching of the gospel, to pay our tithing and give free-will offerings for the spread of the work?"

But Bro. Luff's forceful sermon of the first Sunday morning of the month still rings in the ears of his attentive listeners, not like the sharp rebuke, but like a piercing appeal to souls yet not fully awakened in the knowledge of eternal verities. "A man must get down to work in order to obtain salvation." "No man shall have any claim on God, only he that endureth to the end." "To endure to the end is to have faith in God."

Truly the Saints here are living under the benign influences of light and blessedness; and what need hinder (could we heed the practical instruction given to us of late by Bro. E. L. Kelley, by "steadfastness," "living nearer to God," "faithfulness at the post of duty," "continuance in our earnest and worshipful devotion") our bringing forth "fruits of praise and wisdom according to the revelations and truths," which through our prophet the Lord has vouchsafed to us?

There has been considerable sickness recently, and several of the aged sisters met with accidents by falling; but we are glad to write that they are on the way to a speedy recovery. Also a few of the ministry who have been engaged in arduous labor for the Master, and who have come home for a much-needed rest, need our prayers, and a respite from care and many afflictions. Among them we may mention Bro. I. N. White and Bro. A. V. Closson.

Many are mourning the loss of loved ones who have passed away within a day or two,—Sr. Minnie Engle, Sr. Tousley, and Bessie, the only daughter of our beloved president, G. H. Hulmes. Also on the 17th Bro. and Sr. William Roberts were called to part with a young son of fifteen years,—a grandson of Bro. Henry Kemp.

"Oh, yes, he knows, the Lord knows why
These things are ordered from on high;
And tho' dark clouds may hide the sun,
The Lord knows why, his will be done."

The day is dead, that sun has set—
The past is o'er."

Extracts from Letters.

James Kemp, Conifer, Colorado: "The work is moving along nicely in this mission. Quite a number have been added by baptism the present conference year, and there are others believing. May the good work go on, and improvements be made as time passes, wrongs be righted, and justice meted out where justice belongs; that unity, love, and peace may fill the hearts of all God's children everywhere, is my earnest desire and prayer."

William C. Chapman, Moberly, Missouri: "Please state in HERALD that all persons writing me should be sure to address me thus: William C. Chapman, Moberly, Missouri, R. F. D. 4, as there is another William Chapman on the same route, and our mail gets mixed."

F. T. Dobie, Lexington, Nebraska: "When I started in the work I thought I was too poor to pay anything into the tithing fund, or to take the church papers. Now I know that was a mistake. My reason is this: Before I paid any tithing, or took the papers, I was always in debt, and could not keep out. First I paid one hundred dollars, and I saw that everything was different. Now I know that every dollar I pay, and every moment of time spent for the cause of truth is repaid. I have had a hard struggle to part with my means; but now I think it is my duty, and believe that if I fail in duty I will be in want as I was before."

T. E. Thompson, Beeler, Kansas: "Please send me two dozen tracts, Apostasy and The Restoration. I consider this subject to be very important. There is another subject which I consider to be very important, and that is the 'Immutability of the gospel, or exclusive salvation,' as published in Pearl of Great Price: So many people think good morals are the main thing, and that it does not matter what church you belong to. The article or sermon to which I refer was preached or written by Elder Jaques. Bro. and Sr. E. H. Ebert of Bazine, Kansas, have the book which contains it. Sr. Ebert's father got the book while in Utah. Brigham Young gathered up all he could and destroyed them. Her father managed to retain this one. I hope some one will write a good tract on that subject."

Mrs. S. A. Madden, Scandia, Kansas: "Our branch is growing in membership. We have ten new members since last spring, four by baptism and six by letter. The local officers are alert. September 10 my husband preached in the Methodist chapel, but when their pastor learned of it he was greatly displeased, and criticized the directors, telling them they should have asked his permission. They told him they would investigate, and if he had that authority they would say nothing more, but if not he would have to make an acknowledgement to them."

G. A. Smith, New Philadelphia, Ohio: "Bro. I. M. Smith and Arthur Koehler are here. We are holding meetings every eve except Saturday. I never saw so many young ladies and children with musical talent in any one branch before. In connection with good singing Bro. Smith has been outdoing his usual manner of preaching. I can account for it only that there is a demand for such preaching, and it is very encouraging to see the good it has done. This branch has had a struggle with the satanic power; but we feel that the Saints, some of them if not all, are encouraged to strive on and endure to the end."

John I. Ward, Minden City, Michigan: "There is a work for all God's children, if we prove faithful. I believe the time is near when we will see our Master if we are worthy to meet him. I truly love this gospel, and ask an interest in your prayers, that I may help this glorious work along, and be instrumental in saving some soul that is seeking truth."

Fred Turnbull, Sagle, Idaho: "Am at present holding a series of meetings at Westmond, Idaho. The attendance is small, but interest is shown in the work, and God's Spirit has been with us in our effort. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may never be weary of well doing. I feel that God has blessed me in the few efforts made."

Lula Barnes, Vanleave, Mississippi: "I have been a member of the church a year and have received many blessings from the Lord. We have a small Sunday-school, which we attend every Sunday if we can. Bro. Alma Booker held a two-day meeting here last Saturday and Sunday. I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may hold out faithful to the end."

B. F. Spicer, Marlin, Texas: "Bro. John Harp is here holding meetings with good interest. Some people come out to hear that do not go to hear preaching as a general thing. Several have been added to our branch in the immediate past, and the Saints rejoice to see the Lord's work go on. We hope to see the Texas Central District come up higher, as we have been commanded."

T. J. Sheppard, Haileyville, Indian Territory: "My debate with the First-day Adventist, set for September 20, did not materialize. My opponent did not make his appearance, writing that he was lame with rheumatism. Bro. Henson and I went to the place, held meetings for a week, and baptized two splendid people. Our conference convenes at Wilburton, December 11. We would be glad if one of the patriarchs with stenographer could be in attendance, as many are anxious to get their patriarchal blessings."

Conference Minutes.

Northeastern Missouri.—Conference convened with the Greenleaf Branch, September 2, 1905, at 10 a. m., J. A. Tanner in charge, assisted by F. T. Mussell; William C. Chapman and W. B. Richards, secretaries. Branches reporting: Higbee, Bevier, and Greenleaf. Ministers reporting: J. A. Tanner, F. T. Mussell, William Chapman, Thomas Broad, F. A. Evans, J. T. Williams, Daniel Edmunds, Charles Edmunds, C. A. Brown, and William J. Richards. Bishop's agents, J. T. Williams and W. B. Richards, reported, also district treasurer. The following resolution was adopted: "Whereas the Northeastern Missouri District reunion, which has been in session from August 25 to September 3, 1905, at Greenleaf Branch, has been a success in bringing together the members of the district and increasing the social and spiritual conditions, therefore be it resolved that we favor and hold a reunion in 1906, time, place, and arrangements to be left to a committee of five, one of whom shall be the district president, the others to be selected by the president, and he to have power to fill any vacancies which may occur." J. A. Tanner was elected district president; F. T. Mussell, vice-president; William C. Chapman, secretary. Adjourned to meet at Bevier, Missouri, the first Saturday and Sunday in February, 1906.

Florida.—Conference convened with the Santa Rosa Branch September 9, 10 a. m., T. C. Kelley chosen to preside. Branches reporting: Calhoun. Elders reporting: W. A. West, B. L. Jernigan, J. N. Hawkins; Priest W. N. Hawkins; Teacher Joseph Dixon. Bishop's agent had no report. L. F. West and Joseph Dixon were appointed a committee to arrange a time and place for holding a reunion in the Florida District, 1906. Adjourned to meet with the Saints of Calhoun Branch, December 9 and 10, 1905. Mae McArthur, secretary.

Convention Minutes.

Southern Wisconsin.—Convention convened at 2.30 p. m., August 31, 1905, presided over by the superintendent, Mrs. J. E. Wildermuth. Reports of officers and schools read and adopted. One new school organized at Excelsior. Resolution of previous convention requesting quarterly collections from schools was rescinded. Resignation of Mrs. J. E. Wildermuth as superintendent accepted, and Bro. George Brookover chosen to succeed her. Executive committee of district association was made committee to provide an entertainment at next reunion. Resolved that we request one half day and evening at 1906 reunion. Moved to adjourn to meet on the half day previous to the February conference at same place as conference. Resolved to hold but one annual business-meeting, at the last convention prior to the General Convention. Adjourned. Mrs. F. A. Ball, secretary.

Pastoral.

To the Scattered Saints in Eastern Oregon: As my labors for the balance of the year will be in Eastern Oregon, I wish the coöperation of all to assist me in visiting all the scattered Saints. My address will be Prineville, Oregon, as I understand there are many scattered Saints in the John Day country. I desire to hear from each as early as I can, so that I can lay out my route with as little expense as possible. In order to save the cost of staging, if the Saints are willing to meet me at points, whether by wagon, hack, or horseback, they will find that I am not much of a tenderfoot. If you can go, I will try; so let me hear from each as soon as possible.

HENRY SPARLING.

LEBANON, Oregon, September 23, 1905.

To the Saints of Northern California: I send you this greeting to inform you that I am now at liberty to answer calls for services at any time. My whole time will be spent in doing all I can to build up the work, and to assist you in making out your inventories of assets and liabilities, collect tithes, offerings, and consecrations, and do all work pertaining to the bishopric with the assistance of collectors to be in every branch. I trust all will see the necessity of "heeding the commandments" with willing minds. Please note new address.

Your humble servant for Christ's sake,

C. A. PARKIN.

2063 Mission Street, SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Sept. 30, 1905.

Inasmuch as the Saints have again chosen me to preside over the New York and Philadelphia District we wish to make known this fact to those who had not the privilege of meeting with us at the district conference, and especially to those members of the priesthood who are not occupying branch offices. We desire that these brethren would kindly advise us as to their present environment, and what opportunities there are in their immediate neighborhood open to the district officers, for the presentation of the truth, either by preaching, distribution of tracts, or otherwise.

We solicit an expression of their willingness to thus coöperate with us in the Master's cause, and will gladly furnish tracts or papers to any desiring the same, and will make arrangements to fill any appointments for preaching that can be obtained.

At the last district conference there were ordained to the office of elder, Bro. Ephraim Squire and Bro. Benjamin R. McGuire. These brethren were chosen and sustained as counselors to the district president. They are faithful, prayerful, and earnest, zealous of good works, and desiring to assist in spreading truth. So that we feel to say, being upheld by the faith and prayers of the Saints, that much good can be accomplished. Now, brethren, let us hear from you. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am,

Yours in the Master's cause,

GEORGE POTTS.

167 Cooper Street, BROOKLYN, New York.

Conference Notices.

The Sunday-school convention of the Northwestern Kansas District will convene with the Scandia Branch, at or near Scandia, Kansas, Friday, November 10, 1905, at 2.30 p. m. A program in the evening. Send all reports early. Myrtle Coop, secretary, Downs, Kansas, R. F. D. No. 3.

The Religio convention of the Southeastern Illinois District will be held at Parish, Illinois, October 13, 1905, Narcissus Hoover, secretary.

Died.

TRASK.—Bro. James Albert Trask, of congestion of the brain, at the home of the parents of Sr. Trask, at Fairfield, Clay County, Nebraska, October 5, 1905. Was born April 28, 1878. He married Edith Teeters, and to them were born two children. Bro. Trask was baptized May 6, 1894. He was faithful to the last, and was beloved by all who knew him, and he moved among his many friends with a kind and loving spirit. It was said of him, We have lost a friend and brother. Funeral sermon by W. M. Self.

MIZELL.—At Escautawa, Mississippi, September 20, 1905, William Hyram B., son of Bro. and Sr. John Mizell. Born July 23, 1838. Funeral services from the Three Rivers church, September 21. Sermon by Alma Booker, assisted by W. L. Booker.

MCCASH.—Harry McCash was born November 27, 1885; was baptized March 12, 1899. While working, September 16, 1905, he was struck by a falling gate, weighing two hundred pounds, which caused his death. Funeral services at the house in charge of E. A. Davis and Arthur Allen.

GAYLORD.—Ira Fielding Gaylord was born December 5, 1897, near Thurman, Iowa, and died at the same place September 18, 1905, after about two weeks' illness, being 7 years, 9 months, and 13 days old. He was the only child of Bro. Frederick and Sr. Pearl Gaylord, who, with other relatives, feel keenly the sad loss. Funeral services at the home, conducted by Elder Charles Fry. Interment at Malvern, Iowa. May the Lord give comfort to the bereaved.

Management of Woodlands on Country Estates.

At Hyde Park on the Hudson, some eighty miles north of New York City, two gentlemen have called in the aid of forestry in the management of their large private estates. Foresters are engaged in making a working plan for the guidance of the owners, and this will soon be completed and put in operation, and will later be printed.

The estates belong to Mr. A. Rogers and Mr. J. S. Huyler, and consist of about one thousand acres each, of which from three hundred and fifty to five hundred acres are under forest. The owners were desirous of managing their woodlands on right principles, both for their own satisfaction and to help along the cause of forestry by good example. They agreed to defray the expenses of making the working plan if the Forest Service would furnish the expert knowledge, and the Forest Service, which has long successfully cooperated in this way, agreed, after an agent had made a report, to contribute the services of a number of foresters.

Most of the cooperative work of the Forest Service with owners of large timber tracts, or with lumbermen, has had commercial ends in view. This work at Hyde Park, however, marks a fresh forward stride in the movement toward a more intelligent use of our woodlands, in that it is undertaken mainly in the hope that it may lead to the practice of forestry among private owners who are financially independent, and whose desire to handle their forests for revenue and improvement is therefore especially significant and helpful.

The forest consists of cut-over lands, with a good growth of such trees as oak, hickory, and chestnut, and hemlock and pine in mixture. The study, on which a party of men from the Forest Service have been at work since May 1, will show both the present stand of timber and the productive capacity of the forest for cutting with a view to lasting revenue.

In view of the special character of the problem—the combination of working plan with object-lesson—the method of preliminary work differs from that hitherto followed in most cases, where advice is given for owners to follow in their own way; for it is the owners' desire not only to be told, but also to be shown, how the thinning should be done. For this purpose areas in different stands and different conditions have been selected, trees in these areas have been marked for thinning, and the thinning has then been executed on the spot. Thus a striking illustration of the correct procedure in each case has been placed before the owners' eyes. Photographs taken immediately before these cuttings, together with others taken after, give the clearest guidance for the further performance of the work to be recommended in the working plan.

Such an arrangement as this with the owners of private estates is ideal for educational purposes. In the work done strictly according to expert direction it offers the best sort of object-lesson, ocular proof; while the attitude of the owners affords the strongest sort of encouragement for the extension into wider and wider circles of the practice of conservative forest management.

Indian Philosophy.

I was once in the market-place of a city in the Deccan, listening to a Christian Brahmin preach the gospel. A student from a college in Ceylon translated his words for me in excellent English. The preacher spoke of the nature of God; infinite, all good, all wise, all loving, when a Hindu in the congregation began vehemently to contradict. The dispute became so hot that it was proposed to leave the street, and entering a garden near at hand to sit down under the trees and have the discussion to an end. The substance of it was this: The Hindu asks the Christian as follows: "You declare God to be infinite?" "Yes." "What is the meaning of infinite?" "It means limitless." "And what part of speech is good?" "Good is an adjective." "And what is the grammatical function of an adjective?" "To limit a noun." "How then do you apply an adjective to God, calling him good, and thus limiting the limitless?"

By this philosophy, therefore, God can not be described, no adjective applies to him, and we can neither preach about him nor urge any to worship him. How then can we have anything to do with him? In the conversation described above, the Christian Brahmin took his turn in asking questions: "You believe in God as infinite?" "Yes, I so believe." "And you say that no adjective can be applied to him?" "I so affirm." "How then can you distinguish him from nothing?" That becomes the question, how can you distinguish him from nothing? You can not, by logic or discourse, but you may by long process of contemplation or of asceticism bring yourself to a place where you will understand. Then it will appear to you that God is the only reality, and that everything which men regard as real is an illusion—earth, and man, and sky, and devils, and gods, and life, and death, and my own soul—all are such stuff as dreams, having no real existence, for that which is, is the Infinite. My own existence is illusion like all the rest, excepting as I come to identify myself with the changeless, timeless, limitless, indescribable Ultimate and Absolute.—From "The spirit of the Orient," by George William Knox, in the Chautauquan for October.

There has just been issued by the Public Publishing Company, First National Bank Building, Chicago, the first edition of a descriptive catalogue of the books it publishes and sells. This attractive pamphlet, with index to titles and authors, lists a remarkably interesting collection of books. They are books about which every man and woman who wishes to come in touch with the spirit of democracy in the fundamental sense of that word, or desires real political and economic freedom, will be glad to know.

The catalogue describes, with concise comment, the works of Henry George, often called the economic torch-bearer and pathfinder of democracy, and books about him and his work, and the works of Tolstoy, that marvelous novelist, humanitarian philosopher, and unique Christian, now recognized as first among living writers and the foremost citizen of the world, and books about him; the writings of Walt Whitman, the great American poet of the democratic spirit; of Henry George, Jr.; of Louis F. Post, including back volumes of his weekly review, The Public; of Ernest Crosby, Bolton Hall, Henry Demarest Lloyd, John P. Altgeld, Clarence S. Darrow, Thomas E. Watson, Professor Frank Parsons, Edwin Markham, Lawson Purdy, William Jennings Bryan and others. There are books about Thomas Jefferson, his life and writings; about democracy, about government, both national and city; about taxation, about public ownership and operation of public utilities; about municipal corruption, and about trusts and monopolies, including the Standard Oil Company. There are novels and romances, biographies, histories, poems, essays, sketches, addresses, letters, treatises, and other kinds of books, every one of present-day importance and interest. All of these books are lucidly described in the catalogue.

The Public Publishing Company is devoted entirely to the promulgation of the most important and inspiring literature relating to that real or fundamental democracy on which the welfare and progress of humanity depend.

This catalogue will be sent to any address on request accompanied by a two-cent stamp.

The Evil of Rebates in Life Insurance.

Another evil incident to this hot-housing process is the premium rebate. In some States, rebates are illegal, and policies rebated may be declared void. Theoretically, all managers frown upon rebates. Actually, nearly all companies know that rebates are given by their agents, and they wink at the sin. In one respect the insurance rebate is more to be condemned than the railway rebate. It is given to men who "know the ropes," to smart business or professional men who are aware that agents are so eager for business that they will cut the first year's premium thirty or forty per cent if necessary. Most of these insurants can afford to pay full premiums. But the poor fellows, the mechanics and farmers and others who are not in touch with affairs, usually pay the full premium, which they can ill afford to do. This discrimination in favor of well-to-do insurants and against men of small means seeking to provide protection for their families out of their slender salaries is unjust, indecent, and should be made criminal.

To such a pass has it come in this mad scramble for new business that in every city may be found many men who carry their life insurance simply from year to year. By inducing several companies to bid against one another they secure great reductions of the first-year premiums, and at the end of the year permit their policies to lapse and look about for other companies willing to take them on at the cut rate. In this way they carry their insurance at much less than it would cost to take out policies and maintain them year after year.—From "American life insurance on trial," by Walter Wellman, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for October.

Japan's Splendid Moral Triumph.

Of the military history of the last eighteen months I do not propose to write. It does not properly belong to my province, and it is a history still vividly fresh in the mind of the reader. The victories of the Japanese were no more amazing to the world than were the defeats of the Russians. That Japan should have sent her torpedo boats into Port Arthur, caught her adversary at a disadvantage, and disabled three of his battle-ships as the signal to the world that the temple of Janus stood open, was not surprising. That Japan should have destroyed Russian cruisers in the harbor of Chemulpo was not surprising. That Japan should have forced the Yalu and beaten back the Russians was not surprising. That Japan was to score the first successes was expected. But the surprising thing was that from beginning to end the success of Japan was unbroken. This was the thing that made the world pause.

There must be reason for it. The reason was not to be found in Japan's overwhelming superiority, because there were times when the advantage of numbers and position was on the side of Russia; when the ships of Russia outnumbered those of Japan. No, there was a deeper, a more subtle explanation. The skill, the persistence; the courage, all the noblest qualities of heroism and patriotism that came to the front, convinced the world that more potent even than skill and courage and persistence when a nation is engaged in a death grapple are the moral qualities that animate that nation. The success of Japan may be ascribed to her religion. It is immaterial what we call it, because religion to the truly religious is only another name for the highest moral code, the attempt to live up to a certain standard of ethics; although geography may influence the concept of ethics.

Bearing these things in mind, the terms on which Japan consented to make peace may be looked upon as simply the logical development of that all-embracing spirit of morality that is immanent in the Japanese character. Japan came to Portsmouth resolved to force Russia to pay her an indemnity equivalent to the expenses of the war, and to retain the territory of Russia, the island of Sakhalin, that she had won by force of arms. In laying down these conditions as the price of peace. Japan did simply what the usages of civilized warfare have sanctioned. The defeated nation has always been compelled to pay tribute to the victor, money being the modern equivalent of the hostages that barbaric warfare exacted. But Russia refused to pay an indemnity, maintaining that while she was defeated she was not vanquished, and that it was only a vanquished nation, a nation physically incapable of further resistance, that paid an indemnity and thereby made confession of its inability to continue the struggle.

It is not worth while to discuss a "principle" so academic as this. When nations discuss principles and they are unable to agree as to their interpretation, there is only one court of last resort—the appeal to the sword. Russia and Japan were then at war in an attempt to settle principles; a further discussion of principles involved a continuance of the war unless there was a recession on one side. Russia, with an air of "j'y suis, et j'y reste," was not to be moved. Japan, in the interest of the world, to promote the cause of civilization, yielded.—A. Maurice Low, in October-November Forum.

The Growing Burden of the Ballot.

"The vitality of the democracy itself rests to-day upon the popular knowledge of complex questions hitherto left almost wholly to the sociologist or economist. The requirements of American citizenship in the mere matter of information are vastly greater than they ever were before."

This statement in the current McClure's is especially true at the present moment when the great question of railroad control is in the focus of public interest and every thinking citizen is facing the necessity of passing judgement on the proceedings of the coming special session of Congress.

The railroads are the prime creators of the national wealth, for their agency made available the country's enormous resources of soil, forest, and mine. During the astonishing piling up of fortunes consequent upon the sudden development of these natural riches, the railroad's relationship to the national life has been suffered to take care of itself, and it is only now that public opinion has taken serious hold of the problem grown out of this civic neglect.

The administration of the nation's transportation has been intrusted to railroad corporations created by the States for the service of the public. It is charged that the men in control of these State-created privileges have not dealt justly with the people, that for long they have given individual shippers privileges which do great injustice to all other shippers in the same industries, with the result that fair competition has been killed and the control of the fundamental necessities of life handed over to the few. It is further charged that in the course of these practices the railroads have set at naught the legal restraints that have been put upon them from time to time, and to complete their power, have encompassed the corruption of State and national legislators.

"It becomes, therefore, of the gravest importance," says McClure's, "to know the exact truth in regard to these charges—the position of the accusing citizen, and the answer of the accused railroad. What are the discriminations charged; how do the railroads corrupt politics; are their combinations monopolistic; who are the real owners of the railroads? And finally, are the present laws relating to the railroads right or wrong? All these and many other questions must be answered in order that the American voter may have a clear understanding of the principles involved—moral, as well as legal—when he is called upon to decide what shall be done."

To make just such an investigation as every citizen himself would make if he could command the time, McClure's Magazine has had Ray Standard Baker at work for more than a year. In the October number the scope of Mr. Baker's investigation is discussed editorially with the announcement that he will begin a series of articles in November.

The University of Chicago Press announces for publication early in October a new book from the pen of President William R. Harper entitled The Prophetic Element in the Old Testament. This is the latest volume in the series of Constructive Bible Studies, edited by Doctor Harper in conjunction with Ernest D. Burton. It forms, therefore, one step in the process by which the Sunday-school pupil is led from the kindergarten stage to mature biblical scholarship. The book is adapted to advanced Bible classes and to college and divinity students, and assumes that the reader has already an understanding of scholarly methods, and a ripe judgment. The term "prophecy" is taken in its widest sense, and the prophetic element is shown to be interwoven with every period of biblical history, the present volume carrying the subject through Amos. While the treatment is severely scientific, the "constructive" studies, which alternate with the historical and interpretative material, furnish endless suggestions for reflection. A frank recognition is everywhere made of the various possible points of view, from the extremely conservative to the rationalistic, but the reader has no difficulty in discovering the moderate views that are personally adopted by the author. Carefully selected bibliographies introduce the student to the literature on the subject in English and other languages.

"WITH WHAT MEASURE YE METE."

Beginning with the seventh chapter of Matthew, Inspired Translation, we read the following language:

Now these are the words which Jesus taught his disciples that they should say unto the people. Judge not unrighteously, that ye be not judged; but judge righteous judgment. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again. And again ye shall say unto them, Why is it that thou beholdest the mote that is in thy brother's eye, and considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and canst not behold a beam in thine own eye?

Jesus and his disciples were being misjudged continually by the people around them. Christ was looked upon by the socially high and the learned as an impostor and a deceiver, his followers with scorn, and his message as unworthy the consideration of intelligent beings. By political aspirants and ecclesiastical dignitaries he was looked upon as a pestilent fellow, and his followers as insurrectionists. They erred in judgment, and hence the commission of Jesus to his disciples to warn them to judge not unrighteously; but to judge righteous judgment.

Again, people in that day, as now, were wont to pick out the weaknesses of the followers of Christ, and because of them misjudge the value and the truth of the message they bore. From a worldly standpoint, Christ was too humble. He had no social position. He had no learning, as pertaining to the learning of the world. He did not display sufficient pomp and worldly show. Instead of entering the city of David in a magnificent chariot, clothed in gorgeous robes, surrounded by an escort of plumed and shielded knights, he made his entry seated upon the lowliest of all beasts of burden, surrounded by his followers and a multitude of the common people, many of whom no doubt were buoyant with the hope, born of a misconception of the true work of the Messiah, that he would restore the Jews as a nation. They hailed him "King of the Jews," not having comprehended that "My kingdom is not of this world." And so Christ entered Jerusalem, a laughing-stock to those who would deride because of unrighteous judgment, a liberator to those who misunderstood his mission, and the very Messiah to a few to whom it had been revealed,—but not by flesh and blood,—and to those who believed on their words.

LOVE is everything. Joy is love exulting. Peace is love in repose. Long-suffering is love untiring. Gentleness is love in society. Goodness is love in action. Faith is love on the battlefield. Meekness is love at school. Temperance is love in training. Love is the greatest thing that God can give us; for himself is love; and it is the greatest thing we can give to God, for it will give ourselves, and carry with it all that is ours.—Selected.

Also, the people saw humanity cropping out in the disciples; they saw, perhaps, the weakness of Peter, the sons of Zebedee had faults, and something was the matter with this one, and something wrong with that one. They set up their measuring-staff, and said, If these men be what they claim to be, saints of God, and servants of the true Messiah, they will measure to a high notch on this staff. The men fell below the mark, and they cried, Impostors! They could see the motes in their brothers' eyes, but could not behold the beams in their own eyes. But Jesus sent them word, "With what judgment ye shall judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." They must be measured by the same measure they had used in condemning others; and although those who had accepted the counsel of God, and were engaged in the warfare against the world, the flesh, and the Devil, might not come up to the standard erected by the self-righteous Pharisees, when they who had rejected the counsel of God themselves should be measured by the same measure their mortification must be exceedingly great indeed. And so with those to-day who hold up the shortcomings of those who are truly striving to serve God as sufficient reason for their refusal to make the effort themselves. If they should first cast the beams from their own eyes, square their lives by the gospel of Christ, they then could see clearly to pluck the motes from the eyes of their brethren.

This, as applied to other individuals, may be very agreeable; but if we turn it around, and apply it to ourselves as a body, or as members, how do we like it then? If we, who are in a position to know the truth, and to be called the children of light, erect a standard by which to measure others, how shall we appear if we fail to measure up to that standard ourselves, as individuals, as ministers, or as a body? There are so many ways in which this may be done.

If we hold the standard of personal righteousness high in our teaching, and condemn the world, or our brethren, for failure to measure up to that standard, and we ourselves are impure in our lives, we judge unrighteous judgment when we condemn them and excuse ourselves. If we, in the use of the right given us to judge righteous judgment, condemn the leaders of the Mormon church for the promulgation of those things by which the people are brought into bondage, and are blinded to the infidelity of the law-breaking element to the laws of the land, the laws of God, and the principles of common honesty, we should see to it that we do not countenance anything of that nature in our own ranks. If we condemn the exercise of priestcraft in the management of the churches surrounding us, let us not suffer it to creep into the Reorganized Church. If we condemn the system by which the people are mercilessly robbed of their hard-earned means for the luxurious support of the lords of the Mormon church, for which no accounting is made to the church, let us see to it that no system of that kind ever obtains in the Reorganized Church. Otherwise we are measuring them by a standard that we must be measured by, and be found wanting. A proper application of the law of tithes and offerings, consecration and equality, and a proper living up to the privileges granted under such condition, should not and could not impoverish a people, neither could it maintain in luxury one man or a set of men at the expense of their brethren.

In the churches surrounding us, and in the Utah church more particularly, we see existing a condition in which those who have taken upon themselves the responsibility of teaching the letter of the law and the commandments, signally fail in keeping the spirit of them. And by so doing they are justly entitled to position among those to whom Jesus referred, as he continued his conversation with them:

And Jesus said unto his disciples, Beholdest thou the Scribes, and the Pharisees, and the Priests, and the Levites? They teach in their synagogues, but do not observe the law nor the commandments; and all have gone out of the way and are under sin. Go thou and say unto them, Why teach ye men the law and the commandments, when ye yourselves are the children of corruption?

And yet while we may judge righteous judgment in classing with the Scribes, Pharisees, Priests, and Levites, those who profess to teach the law and the commandments and at the same time proclaim that they do not keep them, and have no intention of doing so, we should impose the duty upon ourselves that we who also profess to teach the law and the commandments come not under like condemnation, by our failure to keep them. For with what measure we mete to them, it shall be measured to us again.

It will not do for us, upon the hypothesis that we are the true successors, with the power and authority of the priesthood vested in us, to flatter ourselves that because we are recognized as the legal heirs by lineage or by adoption, we are therefore in a position to command or exact a blind faith or obedience similar to that which we condemn in those in the West and elsewhere. Let us avoid the humiliation of having it said to us, after we have condemned their teaching and practice, "Why teach ye men the law and the commandments, when ye yourselves are the children of corruption?" "Ye hypocrites, first cast out the beam out of thine own eyes; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye."

And as Saints, we can not afford to judge the world of unrighteousness, and then lend our support to the unrighteousness that is in the world. Not long ago a petition was circulated in the city of Des Moines, Iowa, asking the privilege to erect a brewery. It was signed by hundreds, among them the names of some of our churchmen, nominally so at least. We as children of the light, who should be as a city set upon a hill, can not afford to aid in any way, or lend our influence in the support of that which results in untold misery and sin in this world and eternal condemnation in the world to come. When we do this we are in a measure responsible for the derision with which the gospel of Christ is treated by those who are cognizant of our weakness.

We are glad to note that the branch at Des Moines, as a body, adopted and forwarded to the city council a document protesting against the proposed establishment of this business. Lamoni Branch is also on record as protesting against it. And as an item of interest to all we wish to mention that on October 12 the citizens of Lamoni met and organized a Law and Order League, the purpose of which is to assist in the enforcement of law and the repression of the obnoxious work that has been carried on here by a law-breaking element. This element, which has increased and become more open in its work to an alarming extent, has engaged in the illicit importing and selling of liquor, and other pernicious practices. And the evil effects are manifesting themselves not alone upon nonmembers, but sons and daughters of members of the church are being led into the meshes of sin from which it will be difficult to extricate themselves. But the warning has been sounded, the citizens are awakening, and steps are being taken to remove some of the motes from our eyes, that those who stand 'round about with their eyes full of beams, may have no opportunity to consider them.

While the influences of good may predominate, and the opportunity for spiritual development be greater here than in many other places, it is also true that the opposite may be found by those who wish to engage in it. It is a noticeable fact, also, that those coming here soon find their level, and partake of the good influences by which they grow and develop and become men and women in Christ, or drink in of the evil influences by which they are carefully led away by the evil one to destruction. And while these conditions exist we believe it to be a mistake to advertise the center places as places where perfection reigns. It is to be regretted that many of the Saints in small branches appear to be imbued with the thought that if they could only dispose of their properties, raise the means, and get within the boundaries of the stakes, their trials would be at an end, the clouds would be driven away, and naught but sunshine and peace would be their portion. The facts are that until greater progress shall have been made, a greater degree of perfection attained, those who gather to Zion may expect to be confronted with things that try men's souls. They think that, surrounded by the world, they are greatly burdened, when really their patience is only being tried a little, their feelings wounded somewhat, a sorrow here, and a grief there,—little things compared to some of the trials met when once within the precincts of Zion and realizing that the Saints as a body are far from being "the pure in heart."

Let us judge righteous judgment, both with regard to ourselves and others, and measure ourselves by the standard we erect for them. L. A. G.

REST

Thy glist'ning, fair and undulating bosom—
Its rhythmic rise and fall betok'ning peace;
Its gentle motion scarce enough to loosen
The sands from one another, or release
A bit of stranded seaweed on the shore.
Thy gentle breaths, as through the shells they murmur,
Bring forth the sweetest music to the ears;
Enveloping with quietude the yearner
For peace as calm, through all the coming years,
Untroubled by the coming morrow's store.

UNREST

Unfathomed and unfathomable Ocean!
Thy spirit, chained in depths, is ill at ease—
'T is chafing in its bonds—it cries for motion—
Hark thou! Hear'st not those angry, pounding seas
Beat 'gainst the rock-bound coast with deaf'ning roar?
The air is filled with their wild, piercing shrieks;
They scream in baffled fury as they try
With mighty leaps to scale yon tow'ring peaks,
Only to fall and at their feet to lie
For time, eternity, and evermore.

SHALL WE PERSEVERE?

The ceaseless beating of the waves against the rocks, though not perceptible for the time, will eventually wear away and diminish. So with this "marvelous work and a wonder." It moves slowly but surely. It will accomplish its purpose. For the mills of God grind slowly, but they grind exceedingly fine.

What God sets his hand to do, it is not as if man is doing it; but there is a dependence. For God is perfect. He doeth all things well. "For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater; so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereunto I sent it."

As the crops are growing while men are sleeping, so this latter-day work will grow while the fleeting moments go by, whether we grow with it or not; for God's word "shall not return unto him void." Jesus said, Work while it is day for the night cometh when no man can work.

Some of us may regard this latter-day work with indifference; whether alive or dead some day we will open our eyes in astonishment when we behold that the "little stone," so insignificantly small, "cut out without hands" will have grown and filled the whole earth. Where will we be then?

The signs of spring come, verdure breaks forth and gladdens the heart of many of earth's children; some partake of the same life-giving power; others are indifferent. Summer is on. Some are working with their might, others are taking it easy, having a good time. Nature changes summer into autumn. The observing are reaping the fruits of their labors; others are still having a good time. Like a thief in the night, winter has stolen upon us. Some are filled and happy; others like the five foolish virgins go begging. But "the slothful shall not eat the bread of the laborer." What will become of those standing without the gate begging to be let in, after the Lord has entered?

When winter has covered the earth with its mantle of white, and the bleak north wind is whistling, some are forcibly reminded to look back with regret because of the season that is passed and gone. They had neglected what they might have enjoyed; "there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

Some men and women when their hair is hoary with the age of many winters, spend the remainder of their days lamenting over lost time, and wishing to be young again. God never intended that. But he did intend that everything should be in its season. Men can not plant corn in August and expect to reap a harvest. So our best efforts must be put forth in the strength of our manhood. Men should so occupy that when age comes on, there will be a desire to rest, being filled to satisfaction, waiting, longing to reap the benefits.

We ought to be glad that God has given us so great an opportunity to work out our salvation in this life. We ought to realize and appreciate that we are among earth's fortunate. That in the first place our eyes have been opened to see, our ears to hear, our hearts to understand the gospel message; that we are sons and daughters of God. "How then shall we escape, if we neglect so great a salvation."

BUT ONE WITNESS.

Have we on record in the Bible more than one instance of the Holy Ghost being received before baptism since Christ preached the gospel? I have heard it stated by some of the elders that Acts, chapter 10, was the only place that could be shown that was conclusive evidence of the Holy Ghost being received before baptism. I have also made this statement myself, when talking with those that differ from us in the principle of the gospel. Until quite lately I supposed the idea of the Holy Ghost being received (in New Testament times) at different times before obedience to the law, was entirely a sectarian idea. But of late I have found Saints that believe more than one witness or instance can be shown. This, however, does not change my mind as to its being a sectarian idea, and that it originated in the heart of the enemy of all righteousness for the purpose of overthrowing or working against God's divine law. It looks to me, if this idea can be sustained, that it gives strength to the sectarian claim; not that this would prove their claim that the first principles of the gospel were unnecessary, but it would strengthen their claim that during Christ's time the law was broken here and there; and to the degree that it would strengthen their claim it would weaken ours.

I admit that God can give the Holy Ghost before baptism, if he chooses. I also believe that he does not unless for reasons outside of the general line. To me it looks as though the case cited in Acts 10 were quite different from the general rule. We will notice this later.

We will now proceed to examine some of the quotations that have been given me as proof of the Holy Ghost being received before baptism:

And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams.—Acts 2:17.

This, to carry their point, was explained in this light: that the Holy Spirit here referred to was the Holy Ghost, and this did not state that just a few that had been baptized should receive the Holy Ghost; but that all flesh, (meaning everybody,) should receive it.

I stated that this line of reasoning, then, must entitle the thief, the murderer, or the infidel, who denies there being a God, to the receipt of the Holy Ghost. Then I asked if it would not seem strange to see an infidel receive the Holy Ghost, and through its office work pertaining thereto, utter a prophecy, or speak in tongues. It is easy to see that this quotation does not refer to those outside the gospel.

We will notice next, Acts 2:1-4:

And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

It is explained that they probably had not all been baptized; but if we note verse 1 we will see that "they were all of one accord in one place," and so we conclude there is nothing here to substantiate the idea.

Again, Acts 9:17, 18 has been cited as proof that the apostle Paul received the Holy Ghost previous to baptism:

And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost. And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales; and he received sight forthwith, and arose, and was baptized.

From Ananias' statement here, it was argued that Paul must have received sight and been filled with the Holy Ghost from laying on of hands before baptism. But I find nothing in the verses under consideration that says he received more than his eyesight before baptism. It was urged that we could not doubt his receiving the Holy Ghost from the fact that he was sent for that purpose. But could he not have received the Holy Ghost after baptism, and have been in line with the law God gave, and in harmony with said quotation? I think so. Notice the laying on of hands for sight. Outsiders are often entitled to receive this blessing; but to entitle us to the Holy Ghost is quite different, is it not?—two separate ordinances. Then could not Ananias have administered to him for his eyes, and, after he was baptized, have laid on hands again to confirm him a member of the kingdom on earth? Thus he would be in accordance with the law; and as the quotation states he was baptized, this could all have been accomplished while Ananias was there. And this would not conflict with anything in the Bible, nor with God's law. The argument was urged that the two clauses "that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost" were joined together, and that there was but one reference given of laying on of hands. Hence it could not be two separate rites; but must all transpire from one laying on of hands, and before baptism.

I admit God can and does grant the Holy Ghost sometimes, not according to the general rule; but I do not believe we have direct evidence in the New Testament of his doing so except in the latter part of the tenth chapter of Acts. To me it looks plain that this was for a different purpose than that for which it is generally given. If we notice Peter carefully, previous to this time, we will notice he considered the Gentiles unclean; and when sent here he seemed to be in doubt as to the Gentiles. Does it not look reasonable that the Holy Ghost in this case was for Peter's benefit, to show him that God also accepted them?

I always desire to use wisdom, and not to be radical on any point; still I desire to be firm wherever the principles of the gospel are at stake. Whenever scripture is shown to me that seems to be contrary to God's law, I always intend before jumping at the conclusion that God has overstepped his law, to study well, and see if it can not be understood so there will be no conflict.

My object in writing is not to give instruction, or to teach others; but rather that, if I am in error, some one may take up this subject who is capable of doing it justice.

Yours in gospel bonds,

THINGS SEEN AND UNSEEN, AND THEIR INFLUENCE ON THE SOUL OF MAN.

But though our outer man perishes yet the inward man is renewed day by day. . . . While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal.—2 Corinthians 4:16, 18.

The inference to be drawn from the above is, that the study and observation of temporal things would not promote the growth and development of the spiritual part of man. "Canst thou by searching find out God? Canst thou know him unto perfection?" is asked by an ancient sage.

Is there in a knowledge of the things physical that that will satisfy the longing of the soul, or prepare it to enter that celestial condition after the resurrection? The physical man having reached his full development begins to decay or grow weaker, as the laws of supply and demand are out of harmony, and the worn-out cells are no longer fully supplied, and no human power can arrest, or for one moment stay the divine fiat that dust shall return to dust. A careful observance of the laws governing the natural man may prolong life, or retard the process of decay, but the final end is dissolution.

While we look not at the things which are seen, but the things which are not seen, or while the soul by faith contemplates divine things, we can complacently view our perishing condition; and as Paul has expressed it, "Our light affliction, . . . worketh for us a far more exceeding, and eternal weight of glory."—1 Corinthians 4: 17.

The physical man may be in a perfect condition, and be in perfect correspondence with his physical environments, and enjoying the highest type of physical life, yet this alone is not life.

The observation and study of things temporal, while it may afford pleasure and increase our knowledge of God's creative power, and declare to some extent his glory, is not food upon which the inward man is fed and renewed day by day. But the spiritual things, or things not seen or heard by the physical senses, are the things upon which the spiritual nature is fed and its growth and development promoted.

What does Nature, unaided by divine revelation, teach us of God or his attributes, or of the atonement of Christ? In 1 Corinthians 2:9, 10, 14 we read:

Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things God hath prepared for them that love him. That God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. . . . The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned.

It is evident from the foregoing scripture that man unaided by divine revelation can not rise to that condition of spiritual excellence that would insure them a part in the first resurrection. Take for an example the Chinese nation. Their idols looked like the Chinaman a thousand years ago, and are the same to-day,—no change in former attributes. A stream can not rise higher than its foundation.

When one has entered into covenant relationship with Christ by the new birth, it would be well for him to study the twelfth chapter of Romans, first two verses, relating to the renewing of the mind. We may not know just how this growth or renewing is brought about, neither is it essential or necessary that we should know all about it. There is an element of mystery about both the growth and birth of the Spirit.

The Master said, Behold the lilies of the field, they toil not, neither do they spin, yet they grow, and become a thing of joy and beauty. Having light, heat, and moisture, they can not help growing. The Master said to the ruler, "Except a man be born again, he can not see the kingdom of God." "How can a man be born when he is old?" To this query Jesus said, "The wind bloweth where it listeth and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit."

This growth or renewal of the Spirit is a gradual process, going on unto perfection. (See Romans 6:1.) Jesus said, speaking of spiritual growth, "First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear." I sometimes think that there are some who, owing to conditions, postnatal, and antenatal, will not be able to reach that to which their souls aspire during this probationary stage.

The inward man is renewed day by day. It must have its supply every day. Some suppose that the spirit of man grows weaker in unison with the body, but this is not true. The body diseased by sin is like an old organ, out of tune; but the fact that it can not play "Home, sweet home," does not prove that no such song exists. So of the spirit that lies in a sin-cursed body. It can not manifest itself. We hear Paul exclaim, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?"—the spirit crying for release.

The inquiry might now be made, How is the spiritual nature renewed or fed? Of course it will be admitted that the observation and knowledge of physical things is not the food. The Master said that man should not live by bread alone, but by the word of God. To the Samaritan woman he said, "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst: but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." "I am that bread . . . which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die." Again, If I go away I will send you another comforter, even the Spirit of truth, and it shall abide with you, and take the things of the Father and show them unto you.

This is the fountain-head and storehouse from which the inward man is, or must be, fed day by day. How blessed the thought that if we place ourselves under spiritual environments and be en rapport with the powers of an endless life, we, like the lily, may grow into a well-rounded spiritual condition before God.

"To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." "The spiritual life is the gift of the living Spirit." "The spiritual man is no mere development of the natural man. He is a new creature born from above."—Professor Drummond. This being true the spiritual man must, perforce, get his food from above. The spirit of man is in a veritable prison from which it can not escape, no matter what the condition of its prison may be, until death. We can not always choose as to the nature of our food, or our companions, no matter what their nature may be. But our spirit may have as a companion the Holy Spirit promised by Christ, or a spirit of evil. The soul, body, and spirit must be in complete subjection to the law of God to insure a harmonious development of the inward man. "There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding," and if a man will only dedicate himself, soul, body, and spirit, to God's service he need not worry over the result, for God will do the rest. "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God."

The soul that tries to satisfy itself by feeding on the husks of sin, or material things, will soon feel as did the prodigal son; and unless, like him, they come to themselves, and go to the Father's house, they must perish. A man may possess all knowledge of earthly things, and great stores of wealth and yet his spiritual nature be famished, and every manifestation shows that it is in darkness. But on the contrary, if one has placed himself under spiritual environments, and the spirit is in constant communion or correspondence with heavenly things, those who see them say, These have been with Christ and learned of him.

The humble child of God, however meager his knowledge of temporal things may be, will manifest the existence of a healthy, well-developed, spiritual nature, while he looks not at the things which are seen, but the things which are not seen.

What a delightful thing it is to see the aged saint of God, whose body is bent with age, and whose eye is dim, ear dull, the body ready for the grave, yet in every word, act, and thought is seen the truth that in his being there is a harmonious blending of all the powers of soul, body, and spirit. He has feasted on heavenly manna, and his soul is glad.

The body is the temple of the Holy Ghost; and baptism in water is for the cleansing of the body from sin; and the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost is for the spirit's cleansing. A man may return, like the sow that was washed, to wallow in the mire; but God says he that defileth the temple of God, him will God destroy.

The temporal things of life may conduce to our well-being and happiness if used wisely; and it is only when we allow the temporal things of life to draw our minds away from God, and make them objects of adoration, that they become a dead weight on the soul, and drag it down to ruin and despair. Did you ever stand by the death-bed of a wicked man or woman? Did you ever hear the cries and groans of that poor spirit as it, so to speak, beat its pinions like a caged bird against its prison bars, longing to leave that sin-cursed body, that wretched prison? It makes the heart sick to see such an end to a wasted life.

And again, we have seen the righteous die, and what a contrast. The bodily suffering may be the same; but, ah, see that heavenly smile that illuminates that face, the calm trust and assurance. Like Paul they can say, I know if this earthly tenement were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands.

If, as we believe, the spirit of man lived with God before entering a human body, we must be impressed with the necessity of returning the spirit to God in as pure a condition as possible.

The deepest and most profound thought connected with this subject-matter of our text is, To what extent is the spirit responsible for its condition, if at all responsible? In Romans 7:22, 23, 25 Paul says:

I delight in the law of God after the inward man: but I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. . . . So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God, but with the flesh the law of sin.

From the foregoing strange language we infer that while Paul felt plainly the effect of sin in his body, yet the spirit was in harmony with the law of God. It is certain that until we lay these bodies down to await the resurrection, we shall not be free from the effects of the curse on our bodies. If we can only make a wise use of temporal things, using them for the glory of God as well as to gratify our own selfish natures, we shall in no wise retard the growth and happiness of our spiritual natures, but grow in grace, and in a knowledge of the truth.

And while we by faith contemplate the unseen things of the celestial life, our spiritual natures expand and grow, until the time comes when God shall call our weary spirits to paradise, there to await the happy reunion of body and spirit, and to be no longer tempted and tried, but to reign with Christ, and all the holy angels, and spirits of just men made perfect; and to for ever praise him who hath redeemed us by his own precious blood and made us kings and priests unto God for ever.

WILL THE SON OF PERDITION BE SAVED?

As we suppose, or hope, that all the elders desire to be in harmony in their teaching, and for the benefit of those who may not have the Church History at hand, permit me to quote what the martyred seer said, Church History, volume 1, page 301:

"Say to the brethren, Hulets, and to all others that the Lord never authorized them to say that the Devil, nor his angels, nor the son of perdition should ever be restored, for their state of destiny was not revealed to man, is not revealed, nor ever shall be revealed, save to those who are made partakers thereof: consequently those who teach this doctrine have not received it of the Spirit of the Lord. Truly, Bro. Oliver declared it to be the doctrine of devils. We, therefore, command that this doctrine be taught no more in Zion. We sanction the decision of the bishop and his council, in relation to this doctrine's being a bar of communion. . . .

I think the above would be wholesome reading for quite a number of our elders.

J. C. CLAPP.

WILL THE GIFTS AND BLESSINGS CEASE, AS WE ATTAIN TOWARD PERFECTION?

CONCLUSION.

In the HERALD for September 27, under the heading of "A closing argument," our brother who advocates the idea of a decrease of spiritual gifts and of miraculous power even in this life, appears again in answer to mine found in HERALD for August 30. He charges that "in nearly every instance" I have misstated his position, and then adds:

Will the brother kindly point out in any of my statements where I have stated that the gifts and blessings would cease before the attainment of perfection?

Certainly. We are willing to do it for the benefit of our brother, although we feel sure that the majority of those who have read his articles in the HERALD are aware of the fact that he has made such, or similar statements. His sermon is not in print, or we could present what he asks for in very plain language; but he has committed himself sufficiently in his articles in the HERALD.

1. In HERALD for June 14, I wrote under caption of "Will the gifts and blessings cease, as we attain toward perfection," mentioning the fact that I had heard such a position taken in a public discourse before a congregation of Latter Day Saints. That the position was taken that "the reason that the gifts and blessings are not enjoyed, in some localities, to that extent as formerly, may be because we are getting nearer perfection, and hence because of such advancement we do not need the manifestation of the gifts to the extent that we did in our earlier experience in the church." The argument was also made that "the reception of miraculous manifestations is positive proof of our ignorance and imperfection."

Then in HERALD for July 5, under the caption of "A reply," the brother says:

I was the speaker who delivered the public discourse referred to, and think an answer is called for.

In my first article I gave neither name, date, nor place; but this brother in his "reply" says that he was the speaker. Now if I did not represent the sermon correctly, how did he know that I was referring to the sermon he preached? But he has assumed the authorship of the discourse, and the responsibility for the position taken, and also has proceeded to defend it in the HERALD.

2. In the same article he says:

If our position herein is tenable does it not logically follow that as perfection is approached [not "attained" remember.—H. E. M.] the miraculous and the mysterious decreases?

3. In his article, "In review," he says:

As perfection shall be approached [not "attained."—H. E. M.], will the necessity for spiritual gifts keep pace or be decreased? We thought at that time and still think that such necessity will be decreased in proportion to the advancement made.

Unless the words approach and attain mean the same thing, he has certainly taken the position, even in his articles, that the gifts are to cease, proportionately, before "that which is perfect is come." That "little pocket dictionary" the brother referred to might be used profitably by himself.

4. Here are his words again:

In the sermon, for which I am taken to task, the thought was suggested, as stated by the brother [does this sound like I misstated him?—H. E. M.] that the reason the gifts are not enjoyed in some localities, to that extent as formerly, may be because we are getting nearer perfection, and hence do not need the manifestation of the gifts to that extent that we did in our earlier experience in the church. The proof-text cited was in Paul's first epistle to the Corinthians: "Charity never faileth; but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away. For we know in part, and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away."—1 Corinthians 13:8-10.—HERALD, vol. 52, pp. 661-662.

5. Again he says:

The necessity for miraculous gifts will decrease in proportion to growth and progress toward perfection.—HERALD, vol. 52, p. 928.

The foregoing shows that he not only advocated that the gifts should cease or decrease as we get nearer perfection, but that he also used the above quotation to prove that they would cease—even in this life—proportionate with our advancement. He uses the word decrease in his writings, but it serves the same purpose in this instance. If there is a decrease, something is made less; there is a decay; something falls off, or falls away. In order that there may be a decrease, something, or some part of something, ceases. Have I misstated the brother, or his position? "I speak as to wise men; judge ye. . . ."

But, behold, all at once, seemingly, the brother shifts his position, or to be extremely charitable, he will say, attempts to modify his position in the following:

My view, as stated in the sermon under criticism, is that they will cease (see 1 Corinthians 13), but not until after perfection shall have been attained, sometime after the coming of the Savior.—HERALD, vol. 52, p. 776.

The reader can readily see that this statement is contradictory to those statements in his articles to which we have just called attention. It will be noticed that he now uses 1 Corinthians 13 (the same proof-text that he used to prove that the gifts were to cease, or decrease, in this life) to prove that they will not cease until sometime after the coming of the Savior. I am beginning to wonder what the brother does believe this text proves.

In his last article he denies that the real issue before us is, "Do, or shall the gifts and blessings cease as we attain towards perfection?" He says, "this is born in the brother's own brain." Strange, indeed; after having practically conceded it as the issue in his "reply." The issue was first raised in a public discourse.

Again he says:

This gun, as the brother calls it, I will stand by, and it is far different from his attempt to state the thought. In my judgment, it is supported by stubborn facts as they actually exist within the purview of a vast majority of the Saints; and it is also, we think, supported by the unanswerable logic of Paul's positive statement that when perfection shall have been attained, "that which is in part shall be done away."

We call the attention of the reader to the fact that he makes Paul to say something that he does not say at all. Paul does not say, "When perfection shall have been attained," but he does say, "But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away." Will the brother please read it again? He has been making this mistake all along, as though the apostle were referring to attainment of individual perfection. Please notice that it is not when we come to perfection that those which are in part shall cease, but "when that which is perfect is come." This certainly refers to the coming of Jesus to reign as king over all the earth, and the establishment of universal peace and the knowledge of the Lord. It can not be proven that Paul referred to attainment of individual perfection.

Again he says in the same paragraph:

Not only the three gifts he happened to mention in that particular verse, in which he says they shall cease, and be done away—that is prophecy, tongues, and knowledge—but all the gifts under discussion by the apostle in the Corinthian letter are undoubtedly referred to.

What a sweeping assumption! Paul just "happened to mention" the three gifts in this verse. But it takes our brother to tell us that it meant, or referred to "all the gifts under discussion" "in the Corinthian letter." Is this due to the fact of Paul's having been "ignorant," and our brother's advancement towards perfection, or is it only part of his "dream?"

Again:

As stated substantially by the brother himself, my position was that in some instances the nonreception of the gifts might be accounted for on the grounds of their not being needed, rather than a lack of faith, or unworthiness. Why does the brother evade this real issue? I may not have added in words the last thought, namely, that one reason why gifts are not received is because of unworthiness, because I consider that so simple that it would be superfluous to assert it.

No, he did not "add in words the last thought," but he did add words that very much opposed that thought, saying we are getting better all the time and reaching that condition where we do not need these things as formerly. And in a former sermon he actually criticised the sermon of another brother who had said in his discourse, that "as we did not enjoy the gifts as often as formerly he feared that there was 'something wrong' with us, and that we were not as worthy as we should be." My opponent took the position in this criticism that such did not indicate anything wrong, but rather that we were farther advanced, and nearer perfection than we were in the past.

Referring to my statement that the doctrine advocated by our brother was an erroneous one and dangerous to any one who accepts it, he says:

This "dangerous belief" is very much in harmony with the dangerous doctrine of Joseph Smith the Martyr, which he received from God, and set forth in Doctrine and Covenants 58:6, which reads as follows: "For, behold, it is not meet that I should command in all things, for he that is compelled in all things, the same is a slothful and not a wise servant; wherefore he receiveth no reward. Verily I say, Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves. And inasmuch as men do good, they shall in no wise lose their reward. But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with a doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned."

It will certainly require "wresting," or something else equally as improper, to make the quotation furnished above harmonize with the position of our brother. Notice that there is not one word in it about the gifts and blessings, or miracles. Now if the brother could have in some way the word miracles, or gifts, for the word commandment, or command, then there might have been some appearance of harmony. But unfortunately for his position, there is not the slightest reference to the gifts and blessings in the quotation. The fact is, the brother has been presenting a theory that will not harmonize with anything in the word of God. The revelation is all right, but it will not do service for our brother in this case.

Trying to answer my statement that "Paul nowhere said that miracles should cease," he says:

Prophecy, tongues, and knowledge are miracles. Therefore miracles shall cease, and Paul said it.

Who said that "prophecy, tongues, and knowledge are miracles"? Oh; that was my brother that said that. We can not help smiling when we are reminded how this sort of reasoning agrees with an example of logic he gave us in his first article. He said: "Butter is made of grease. Greece is a foreign country. Therefore butter is a foreign country." Put the two together, and see their similarity. We are speaking of these gifts from a scriptural standpoint, and it is not necessary to go into some strained definition of the word miracle to see what the apostle meant. Paul does not use the word miracles interchangeably with "prophecy, tongues, and knowledge." In mentioning the nine gifts of the Spirit in 1 Corinthians 12, prophecy, tongues, knowledge, and miracles are mentioned as separate gifts. The brother's logic is faulty.

Referring to the angels who fell, he asks: "Were those angels perfect?" We answer, they were certainly far more perfect than we are; if not perfect, how came they in the presence of God? I know of no revelation teaching that mankind will, or may, attain to a perfection equal to God himself. Such teaching is found only with Brighamism and its like. The attainment of perfection in any degree, will not, we believe, destroy the agency of God's children. What has occurred, may occur.

In my last article I cited him to a quotation indicating that provision was made in the holy city for the "healing of the nations." "And the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations."—Revelation 22: 2. He answers it by saying:

"Now the brother has the sick in addition to devils over there."

No. He is mistaken again, as usual. I have not the sick "over there." In fact have not said one word about there being sick over there; neither have I at any time said that there were, or would be, devils in the celestial city. These are only his own deductions in his mere play upon words. I have said that I believe it possible for angels to fall, (Paul thought so too. See Galatians 1:8,) and referred him to the provision for healing on the other side. But he answers it all with ridicule, following it up with a little poem of burlesque on the gifts of the gospel. Indeed, I do not wonder that he became apprehensive that some might consider him "sacrilegious." If Revelation 22: 2 does not mean healing, why did he not tell us what it does mean, instead of this recourse to ridicule?

Next he says: "But speaking of the greater gifts, the apostle says the greatest is charity."

He neglects, however, to tell us where Paul so stated. He will not find it in the New Testament. Paul does say, "And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity." The greatest of these. These what? These three—faith, hope, and charity. Not a word to indicate that charity is the greatest of the gifts. This is a fair sample of the modus operandi employed by my brother in using the scriptures.

In answering the quotation I made from Doctrine and Covenants 108:6, which portrays a wonderful work to be done at the time of the return of the people from the north countries, he says: "This revelation does not prove any miracle. I frankly confess that such is hinted."

Then he proceeds to tell us that when they, or their prophets, smite the rocks, it "may be done with a hammer and drill." The ice flowing down at their presence, "is flowing now in icebergs." "The casting up of a highway in the midst of the deep," he says, "proves no miracle, as a highway is now cast up in the form of ice." We might ask him if the tribes will travel upon this highway of ice? It "does not prove any miracle," but just "hints" at such. Rather strange that the Lord would reveal to his servant something to come to pass in the future that is to take place in just such an ordinary, commonplace way. To my mind there is no hinting about it.

Great miracles are to be done yet. He might also have given us an explanation of the fifth paragraph of the same section, where the Lord says:

He shall command the great deep and it shall be driven back into the north countries, and the islands shall become one land, and the land of Jerusalem and the land of Zion shall be turned back into their own place, and the earth shall be like as it was in the days before it was divided.

I wonder if he thinks that there is just a "hint" of a miracle in the foregoing;

We have not taken pains to examine all the brother presented in his "closing argument," as the most of it is a mere play upon words. Were it not for occupying so much of the valuable space in the HERALD, we would have taken up some things that we have passed over.

To the Saints let me say, Let us not deceive ourselves with the thought that we may become so far advanced that we do not need the gifts of the Holy Spirit. Our experience teaches us that the more devoted we are to the truth and the great work of the Lord the more we enjoy of those blessed favors of the Spirit. The more we delve into this work, the more we study it, the farther we go in the line of duty, the more we receive and enjoy of that which is called supernatural. We believe that a "going on to perfection" will only bring us to that condition where we are worthy and prepared to enjoy greater gifts and blessings than ever we have in the past, instead of placing us in that position that we do not need them.

May the Lord bless my brother, and all of us, that we may properly understand the word of God, our duties and privileges; and, finally, that we may "see eye to eye" and "speak the same thing."

With love for the gospel, and all of its blessings,

H. E. MOLER.

"WHEN ARE WE PERFECT?" ARE WE PERFECT IN THIS LIFE?

The question has been asked and discussed pro and con through the HERALD of late, "Are we perfect when we come up out of the waters of baptism," but has not been answered to my satisfaction.

It is not my intention to enter into a controversy with the brethren who have written on the subject, but to endeavor if possible to answer the question in the caption of this article. If we can do so, it will also settle the question referred to above. To begin with, I must confess that I believe a man may and should be perfect in this life. And it is our purpose in this paper to endeavor to show from the scriptures how we may be perfect, and when we are perfect. There are extremes to everything, and we do not want to go to the extreme, as we believe some have; but want, if we can, to find out what the Lord meant when he said, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."—Matthew 5:48. We presume that none will deny that we must be perfect at some time, if we ever obtain the celestial glory.

The Lord in HERALD of October 26, 1904, writing on this subject, says, "Then in order to be perfect we must be sinless, and that condition does not exist on earth among men." Then may I ask why did the Savior give the injunction, "Be ye therefore perfect," if we could not be perfect? I do not think the Lord requires impossibilities of his creatures.

If it can be proved that any man was ever perfect in the past, we must admit that it is not impossible for men to be perfect now. If it was said of men in the past that they were "perfect in all their ways," in keeping God's law, we may be perfect in the same way. I believe I have seen men and women who were perfect in that sense, though I shall not attempt to point out any perfect ones now living, for God only knows the hearts of all men. Noah was a just man and perfect in his generation, and Noah walked with God. (See Genesis 6:9.) This was said of Noah before the flood, and Noah lived after the flood three hundred and fifty years. Whether or not he remained perfect, we can not tell; but we do know it was said of him, "Noah was . . . perfect," at least four hundred seventy years before he died.

Again the Lord said to Abram, "I am the Almighty God, walk before me, and be thou perfect," with the promise, "and I will make my covenant with thee," etc. (Genesis 17:1, 2.) Inasmuch as God did make his covenant with Abraham, we must concede that he obeyed God and was perfect. We have thus far found two men that were perfect in their lifetime.

Enoch also was a perfect man and "walked with God." Just why Enoch was translated, and Noah and others (perfect men) were not, we can not tell. Paul says Enoch "had this testimony, that he pleased God." (Hebrews 11:5.)

David, also, was a man after God's own heart. He pleased God, but was not translated. Perhaps the Lord had other work for Noah, Abram, and David to perform, and for that reason they were not translated. And so with all other perfect men who lived, and do live, on the earth.

Again, we learn that the children of Israel were commanded to be perfect with the Lord their God. (See Deuteronomy 18:13.) David said, "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright."—Psalm 37:37. This could not be done if none were perfect.

Again, it was said of the King of Tyrus, "Thou wast perfect in thy ways from the day thou wast created, till iniquity was found in thee."—Ezekiel 28:15.

Epaphras prayed fervently that the saints at Colosse might stand perfect and complete in all the will of God. (See Colossians 4:12.) Epaphras evidently thought that the saints should be perfect; and Paul says, "Howbeit we speak wisdom among them that are perfect."—1 Corinthians 2:6. So there must have been some who were perfect. Again, when writing to the Philippian brethren he says, "Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded."—Philippians 3:15. Still he did not claim to be perfect himself (see verses 11 and 12) in the sense that he would be in the resurrection, which would mean a perfect body as well, which none are promised in this life. But we can be perfect in keeping the law. Paul was perfect in that sense; for he said, "Let us," "as many as be perfect," including himself; and exhorted them to be followers of him. (See verse 17.) Also to the Corinthian saints his exhortation is to "be perfect." (See 2 Corinthians 13:11.) And Christ said to the rich young man, "If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor."—Matthew 19:21. I for one believe that if the young man had done as the Savior commanded, he would have been perfect. Do not you?

We have shown conclusively that men have been perfect, and also that we are commanded to be perfect. And, as we said before, he has not commanded us to do something that we can not do, or given a commandment that we can not keep. Now it is necessary for us to know what was meant when the command was given, "Be ye therefore perfect." We must remember that all things which are perfect are not one and the same, and equal; neither are they always alike. For instance, God is a perfect God, and man may be a perfect man. A horse may be perfect. In fact anything may be perfect in the sphere in which it was created. Noah was perfect as God was perfect; but it does not follow that he was equal to God. The king of Tyrus was "perfect in all his ways," and God is perfect in all his ways. In that sense the king of Tyrus was perfect as "God is perfect"; and I believe we may all (who desire to keep God's law) be perfect in that sense; that is, by living in obedience to every known law. We believe that is what he meant, and all that was meant, when he said, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

The term perfect sometimes refers to God (see Matthew 5:38), sometimes to Christ (see Hebrews 2:10), sometimes to the law (Psalm 19:7; James 1:25), and sometimes to an individual, as in Abram's case (see Genesis 17:1) and the young man of Matthew 19:21. And, again, it may refer to the church or body as a whole. (See Hebrews 6:1, 2; Ephesians 4:12; 1 Corinthians 13:9, 12, and many other places.) I do not want to be misunderstood in this. When I affirm that man can be "perfect in this life," I refer to the spiritual or "new man," and not the natural or fleshly man,—the outer man. This mortal will not be perfect until it has put on immortality. Hence it can not be perfect until the resurrection. Here is where the danger is of running to the extreme.

Some have supposed that we must be "sanctified wholly," and that means "perfect soul and body." The word sanctify has a double meaning. It means to set apart, as in Joel 1:14; 2:15: "Sanctify a fast," etc. (See 2 Timothy 2:21; 1 Thessalonians 5:23; etc., etc.) In that sense we can be sanctified "wholly," spirit and body,—set apart for the Master's use; but not perfect in body, for we might be a cripple, or blind, or deformed in other ways.

And again, one might be sanctified to do evil and be condemned, as in Isaiah 66:17. So we would not desire to be "sanctified" or set apart for that kind of work. The natural or fleshly man is never converted, and must be kept under subjection by the spiritual man. Paul says, "When I would do good, evil is present with me. . . . But I see another law in my members [natural man] warring against the law of my mind [spiritual man] and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members."—Romans 7:21-23. And in verse 17 he says, "Now then it is no more I [the spiritual man] which do it, but sin that dwelleth in me [the natural man]." That is also in harmony with 1 John 1:8.

"The carnal mind . . . is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be."—Romans 8:7. So we must crucify "the flesh [old man] with the affections and lusts." (Galations 5:24.) And as he is continually "warring against us," we must take up our cross "daily." (Luke 8:23.)

It is evident from the above that we are not perfect as pertaining to the flesh in this life. Christ himself was not perfect in body until he was resurrected. (See Luke 13:32.) And that explains how he was made perfect through suffering. (See Hebrews 2:10.) He was already perfect spiritually; for he "knew no sin" (2 Corinthians 5:21), "doing always those things that please him [the Father]" (John 8:29). And Paul says they that are in [after—Inspired Translation] the flesh can not please God. (See Romans 8:8.) Now if Christ was free from sin, hence "perfect," because he did the Father's will, may not we be perfect, free from sin, in the same way? We think so.

The Lord has given us a "perfect law" (James 1:24), and has commanded us to be "perfect." And if we ever enter that perfect rest, we must abide a perfect law. Can not we abide a perfect law? Is there any commandment we can not keep? If there is I am not aware of it.

"But," says one, "we are never free from sin, because John says, 'If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us.'—1 John 1:8." Yes, that is true. But it refers to the natural or fleshly man, as we have already shown. (See Romans 7:17-23.) So, as John says, we can not truthfully say we have no sin (when referring to the natural man); neither can we truthfully say we are perfect when referring to the natural or fleshly man. But can not it be said of the "new man," or spiritual man, that he is free from sin, hence perfect? We think so.

Hear Paul: "God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you. Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness."—Romans 6:17, 18. Here we find a people who were made free from sin; and, if free from sin, are they not perfect? I mean spiritually perfect. And they were made so through obedience to the gospel. They had obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered them, "the perfect law of liberty." (James 2.)

Paul says, "For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God."—Acts 21:27. Evidently Paul had taught these people the "perfect law," and they had obeyed it, hence were freed from sin. Query: "Were they free from sin when they came up out of the waters of baptism?" No. For water baptism alone will not remit sins. There is another form of doctrine, viz.: the laying on of hands, the fourth principle. There is not a complete baptism, as we understand it, until they receive the spirit of baptism by the laying on of hands.

In proof of the above statement, I refer you to John 3:5; Hebrews 6:2; Acts 8:17; 19:56. Also in latter-day revelations, and in the Book of Mormon we have some very plain statements in regard to this. In 2 Nephi 13:4 we have this: "For the gate by which ye should enter is repentance and baptism by water; and then cometh a remission of your sins by fire and by the Holy Ghost." In Doctrine and Covenants we have this: "And of tenets thou shalt not talk, but thou shalt declare repentance and faith on the Savior, and remission of sins by baptism and by fire; yea, even the Holy Ghost."—Doctrine and Covenants 18:4. Read Book of Mormon, Nephi 5:33; 12:23; Moroni 6:4; these references show us, conclusively, when we receive a remission of sins, and how. The form of doctrine necessary for this is faith, repentance, baptisms, laying on of hands, and a belief in the resurrection of the dead and eternal judgment. (See Hebrews 6:1, 2; Romans 6:17.) So if this be true, Bro. Maddock, you have seen a perfect man and woman,—spiritually, however, for this perfection only pertains to the spiritual.

"But," says the objector, "you forget that Peter says we are babes in Christ." Well, can not we be perfect babes? The Savior said that except we become as little children we can not enter the kingdom. Then if we become as little children we can enter the kingdom.

Faith is the first principle of the gospel. And Peter says, "Giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; . . . patience; brotherly kindness; and . . . charity."—2 Peter 1:5-7.

Again, we are told to put on bowels of mercy, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another. (See Colossians 3:12, 13.)

Now, may I ask, How long would it take a truly converted one to do all that? I believe all that could be (and is often) done or added before baptism. Certainly, it should not take a lifetime to do so. Peter says, "But as he which hath called you is holy, [perfect,] so be ye holy [perfect] in all manner of conversation; because it is written, Be ye holy; for I am holy."—1 Peter 1:15, 16. This is synonymous with, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." So we must conclude that if we are abiding a perfect law we will, like one of old, "be perfect in all our ways," by keeping the commandment. And let me say right here; If we expect to abide a celestial glory we must abide the celestial law, which is the "perfect law." James says, "For whosoever shall [endeavor to] keep the whole [perfect] law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all [the perfect or celestial law]."—James 2:10. And the Savior said, "Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, . . . shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 5:19. The least would be "the glory of the stars,"—a little star.

Again, James says, "So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the [perfect] law of liberty."—James 2:12. Then if we are guilty of breaking the celestial law, we can not receive a celestial reward, but will have to occupy the terrestrial or telesstial glory, according to the degree of good we do.

And they who are not sanctified through the law . . . even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom, even that of a terrestrial kingdom, or that of a telesstial kingdom. For he who is not able to abide the law of a celestial kingdom, can not abide a celestial glory.—Doctrine and Covenants 85:5.

It will not do, then, to argue that none keep the perfect law, and none are perfect; for if we do we are bound to admit than none can enter the celestial glory.

We shall now endeavor to show how we may abide a celestial law, a "perfect law." The gospel, or doctrine of Christ, is the perfect law. And all scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine, for reproof and correction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto every good work, as Paul taught, All scripture is profitable to us, that we may be "corrected" and made perfect. And we must live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. If we do this we will be "perfect in all our ways" (Ezekiel 28:15), "in all manner of conversation" (1 Peter 1:16); for he that offendeth not in word, the same is a "perfect man." (James 3:2.) Not perfect in knowledge and wisdom, however, for that will not be until our change comes. James says, Let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing. Job certainly was a perfect man, for his patience was superior to any we read of. Thus we can begin to see how we may be perfect.

"But," says one, "we are often tempted, and become offended, and get angry. Can it then be said that we are perfect?" Certainly not, while in such condition. But there has been provision made. The scriptures are to "correct us in righteousness." "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that you are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it."—1 Corinthians 10:13. The way is pointed out in the perfect law, and if we will heed it we will be perfect in all our ways. John says, "If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." And again, "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."—1 John 1:9.

The Lord knew we would make mistakes and in his wisdom and mercy hath made provision for us to escape.

"Whosoever is born of God doth not continue in sin,"—(Inspired Translation,) for he will comply with the "law of liberty," and thus be freed from sin,—"perfect." Then when provoked to anger, what should we do? Repent. "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath."—Ephesians 4:26.

"But," again the objector says, "the law says, 'love thy neighbor as thyself.' (Matthew 19:19.) I have a neighbor who is all the time seeking occasion against me, and all the time giving me trouble. How then can I love him as myself?" Answer: By doing unto him as you would have him do unto you. (See Matthew 7:12.) "But," you say, "he is such a mean man, and devoid of principle, that I can not get along with him at all." Well, the Lord knew we would meet such characters, and made a way for our escape. Romans 12:18: "If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men." So if it be not possible for us to live peaceably with any, we are free, and may have recourse to the law of the land for protection. We are left without excuse.

Wherefore, "seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses," how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation? May the Lord help us to come up higher, and "lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us." That we may be found in that perfect state when Jesus comes, is the prayer of, "Every one feels 'mean' sometimes, but many of us feel meaner than we really have to. We get to thinking that the weather, or what we ate at the last meal, or that we didn't get much sleep the night before, should make us feel miserable. Then we begin looking for trouble, and we usually find it. This is one form of worry. If you feel you can't help worrying go out and rake the yard, do an errand for some one whom you haven't been on good terms with for some time, or do something or anything to occupy your mind, and you will feel better right away. Or rather you will forget whether you feel bad or not.

HOW TO BE HEALTHY AND HAPPY.

"A French physician, who claims that we all might be strong and beautiful if we would, gives the following rules for health:

"Don't drink tea or coffee.

"Drink pure water.

"Eat grapes, apples, raisins, and figs.

"Eat a few salted almonds daily.

"Don't eat much animal food.

"An egg or two a day, soft boiled, instead of meat.

"Eat an orange every day or so.

"Walk two or three miles a day.

"Bathe the whole body daily in tepid water.

"Don't fret, don't worry; be calm and quiet."

And we might add, Don't use intoxicants. Eat regularly and not as much as you want. Eat something light at night; go to bed early, and get up with the lark. Hold no grudge against any, and observe the Sunshine motto: "Do something for somebody quick."

PROMOTE A DESERVING MAN IF YOU WOULD KEEP HIM.

Once upon a time there was a highly efficient and thoroughly satisfactory janitor. [This is a true story, though it starts like a fairy tale.] He was so good a janitor that he was on friendly terms with every one of the tenants in the fifty-four flat building where he was employed, and during five years of service no one had ever complained of him.

During this time the landlord had managed the property himself, collected his own rents and signed new leases, but the time came when he wanted to go away and leave the property in the hands of a reliable agent. Experience had shown that agents are not always satisfactory and that one who had the landlord's interests at heart is hard to find. Common sense suggested that the janitor, with five years' experience in looking after repairs, hiring under-janitors, and keeping the tenants contented, would be the man for the place. He lived right in the building, stood well with everybody there, and had all the necessary qualities to please others who might come into the apartments.

TOO GOOD TO BE PROMOTED.

But he was such a good janitor. If he were given the renting agency, including collections, he could not then attend to the janitor work and superintend repairs as he had done, and it would be pretty hard to get another janitor half as good. No, it simply would not do to promote him. He was too good where he was. Better get some one else to take up the renting and collections and let him stay where he was giving such satisfaction.

So an agent was found. The janitor was told that in the future he must deal with the agent in place of the owner. It did not please the janitor to have a new, green man over him. He opened his mouth to speak several times, but each time failed to say the thing he had in mind—namely: that he would have liked the chance to manage the building and have the promotion he knew he deserved. Each time his nerve deserted him and the opportunity was lost.

Within three months the new agent had established an absolute monarchy. He lorded it over every one, including the janitor. He favored those tenants who came into the building during his reign, and was disagreeable and unreasonable with those who had been there for years.

One day the janitor wrote a letter to the landlord and told him how things were going, and suggested that if he had the authority to do so he could yet straighten things out. Then he reconsidered and decided that if he sent the letter it would only weaken his own position because the new agent would find it out and probably discharge him.

JANITOR FINDS AN APPRECIATOR.

Another lapse of three months. The renting season was at hand again. Things were more and more complicated. Flats were being vacated and not refilled. Tenants were grumbling and complaining. Everything was at sixes and sevens. The building had lost its enviable reputation as a place of residence, and all in six months' time.

One morning the janitor was sent for by a tenant whose lease was soon to expire.

"Johnson," said the tenant, "you are too good a man to be knocked around here by that idiot of an agent. I am building some flats of my own out south here, and I want you to move out there and take charge of them. You can act as agent, attend to repairs, collect rents, and hire a cheap man to do janitor work. I will pay you twenty-five dollars a month more than you get now, and your flat will be pleasanter and more healthful for your family. What do you say?"

Johnson did not hesitate. He had been ignored

Heaven.

"We look above for heaven when,
Lo! it is all around,
And needs but comprehensive soul
And seeking to be found.
But, deeming it to be afar,
With eyes fixed on the sky,
We journey on, with tortured soul,
And pass our heaven by."

Not the Burden but the Way.

Not tired of my burdens
But weary in the way;
The path is sometimes lonely,
And dark and drear the day;
Yet when the path is roughest
And clouds are black and wild,
I hear a sweet voice saying,
"I am near to help, my child."

The valley and the shadow
Of times have seemed so near,
But Faith the curtain lifted,
And calmed my every fear,
For Hope, the steadfast anchor,
Holds fast within the veil;
Again the sweet voice whispers;
"My help shall never fail."

No matter what betide me
The little while I stay;
A loving Father leads me,
His hand directs my way;
He knows the very burdens
And pains I must endure,
To fit me for his kingdom,
And make my calling sure.

Shall We Rise to the Emergency?

In HERALD for September 6 I notice that the Burlington Hawkeye, in making mention of a sermon by Bro. Elbert A. Smith, says that he made prominent the thought that "reform should begin at home"; and I thought on reading it, There is another person adding emphasis to the fact that the daughters of Zion should be bestirring themselves; for they are the home-makers, and the beginning of the responsibility of reform rests on them.

Try as we may we can not get away from the fact that the home influence, from its very beginning, is either for good or evil; it is either preparing the way for development into the stalwart growth of moral and physical strength; or for the miserable pigmy of weakness, if not the morally and physically debased, and our children carry this influence with them wherever they go. As soon as they enter the public schools, they begin to advertise their home training. William George Bruce, editor of the American School Board Journal, says in American Motherhood, "The infractions upon the good discipline of the school-room, which come before the average school committee of the United States for adjudication, are, in most instances, directly traceable to the maternal parent." And this is not merely a personal opinion, but a statement made after "a study in school administrative labors covering many cities and extending over a number of years."

I am utterly appalled sometimes when I think of the great work that has been given us as parents by our heavenly Father, and overlooked where he had given faithful service for five years, and now he knew he must help himself. He did help himself into a good place, managed it successfully, and now has charge of another building in the next block which has been built by the same man.

LANDLORD AND JANITOR BOTH WRONG.

If Johnson had spoken out and said, "Mr. Landlord, I have given you excellent service for five years. I have reached the highest point this work will ever take me to, and I know that I can handle this part of your business just as well as the other; in fact, I am so sure of it that unless you give me the chance here I shall look for it elsewhere," Mr. Landlord would have realized that his man was uneasy, that he was looking for something better, and, being a man of experience, he would have known that he would sooner or later find what he was seeking. Business judgment would have favored the janitor's promotion, but the opportunity slipped by and Johnson did not speak.

On the other hand, if Mr. Landlord had listened to the dictates of calm business judgment, he would have realized that unless he advanced the man who was worth more than he was earning, some other man with equal judgment would see the value of his services and hire him away, putting him in a place he was well qualified to fill.

PROMOTE A DESERVING MAN.

If you have competent help and want to keep it, advance every man when his opportunity comes. There is always another fellow looking for good help, and usually he has an eye on yours. A man may stay in your employ apparently in a rut and apparently satisfied as long as there is no opening above him. When that opening comes, if outsiders step in to get the benefits, your man is gone. He may not go that day or the next, but he will go. He is a disgruntled, dissatisfied employè and will begin to look about. Real merit never looks long for a market. Promote the man you know and have confidence in, and start the stranger in less important places. As the wheels go 'round they, too, will get the advancement for which every employè worth his hire is striving.—Chicago Tribune, October 8, 1805.

Mr. Bryan Abroad.

William J. Bryan sailed from San Francisco September 27. Mr. Bryan will make a voyage around the world. In the course of his journey he will visit Hawaii, China, the Philippine Islands, India, Australia, New Zealand, Egypt, Palestine, Greece, Turkey, Italy, Spain, Switzerland, Germany, France, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Russia, Holland, and the British Isles.

In each of these countries Mr. Bryan will write for his paper, the Commoner, one or more letters describing his observations. It is needless to say that Mr. Bryan's letters will be interesting to men and women, regardless of political prejudice. Those desiring to avail themselves of the opportunity to read these letters should lose no time in subscribing for the Commoner. Published at Lincoln, Nebraska. Subscription price one dollar.

and of the fearful consequences of carelessness or neglect on our part in the performance of the same. And it is only when I remember that we need not be left alone to accomplish this work, that I take courage and hope to receive approval of my work. How can any one dare to take this responsibility without a devoted purpose to be a coworker with God in the accomplishment of his great plan? To receive into our care an immortal soul, with power to train it either in good or evil—oh, fearful trust! Can we make too great preparation for this trust? Yet, how many enter into this responsibility without even a thought of anything but their own pleasure. And the result is disorderly homes and willful and disobedient children, who are a continual worry in their own homes and a dread to the neighborhood in which they reside. We sometimes read in the papers a great scoring of landlords because they have no houses to let to those having children; and perhaps, if we have had occasion to look for a house to rent, we have found just the nice neighborhood we would like and the house that would suit us, and we were ready to conclude a bargain for the place, when upon inquiry, if we had children, we were answered with, "I am sorry, madam, but I can not let these apartments to parties having children." But when we think how many slovenly and unruly families there are, it is not any wonder that the residents of a quiet and orderly neighborhood look with dread upon the coming of a large family into their midst, fearing that their peace is all to be destroyed, and not even their own premises will be free from their intrusions; but on the other hand if it proves to be a well-ordered family that takes up its abode in their midst, they bring a benediction with them, for there are a hundred ways in which good children appeal to the better nature of grown-up people, and there are but few persons who do not appreciate cleanly, good, and bright children.

If, then, we may choose between these two conditions just referred to, why should we not make a strenuous effort to make our homes such as will be gratifying to ourselves, and a pleasure to those who may enter them? We may not all know how to do so now; but can we not learn how? The opportunities for instruction and help in all lines of mother's work are so much greater now than they were a few years ago that it would seem none need be ignorant of right methods if they will take the trouble to learn. Right in our own church papers we have had volumes of such literature, of the very best in those lines, such as we used scarcely ever to find in any current papers of a few years ago, to say nothing of the numerous books and magazines that are published by men and women whose whole lives are devoted to helping to raise the standard of the character of the generation in which they live. Among these, we wish to call attention of all mothers who have children to bring up, as well as any others who have the care of them in any way, to American Motherhood, published monthly by American Mother Company, 64 Loring Avenue, Salem, Massachusetts. Price one dollar a year. We have taken it for several years and find it an excellent help along all lines of mother's work. We think no mother can read it carefully without being a better mother for it.

Shall we not rise to the emergency and strike hands with the Daughters of Zion who are trying to get these matters before every sister in the church? They are trying not only to reach those who belong to the organization, but those who do not, as well, who perhaps would gladly join the ranks if something did not hinder them. But they need the united assistance of all who can spare a little time and money to help them in their work of distributing literature. Send for the Daughters of Zion readings, published monthly in leaflet form, and distribute them among your friends who do not have them in the HERALD. They will cost you only the small sum of ten cents for twenty-five of them. Until further notice they can be had each month at the HERALD Office. You have no idea what a missionary you can become by this means. The bread cast upon the waters will return after many days.

If we sisters would but rise to our opportunities and develop commensurate with them, the needed reform would soon be well under way.

Let us not think lightly of our calling, but remember that there can be none holier. I once heard a sister, who was telling of her love for the work of God, say that she sometimes wished she were an elder that she might go out into the world to preach the gospel. Truly, that was a noble wish. But that sister was the mother of a large family. As an elder she might turn sinners from the error of their way; as a mother she might teach the truth and train her children so that they would never walk in sin, and her influence for good go out in the world multiplied by the number of her children. Which is the better? Do not wait for others to carry on this reform; but go right to work in your own home and in your own neighborhood and do what you can to accomplish it.

The World's Good Women.

Good women are as sentinels; in the darkest of earth's night
They hold with stout hearts, silently, life's outposts toward the light,

And at God Almighty's roll-call 'mong the hosts that answer
"Here,"

The voices of good women sound strong, and sweet, and clear.

Good women are brave soldiers; in thickest of the fight
They stand with stout hearts patiently, embattled for the right,
And tho' no blare of trumpet or roll of drum is heard,
Good women, the world over, are an army of the Lord.

Good women save the nation, tho' they bear not sword nor gun;
Their panoply is righteousness; their will with God's as one.
Each in her single person revealing God on earth,
Knowing that so, and only so, is any life of worth.

* * * * *

Dost talk of woman's weakness? I tell you that this hour
The weight of this world's future depends upon their power.
And down the track of ages, as time's flood-tides are told,
The level of their height is marked by the place that women hold.

Social Duty.

To do our duty in this world toward God and toward man consistently and steadily, requires the cultivation of all the faculties God hath given us. "And to thus cultivate our faculties, requires us to be fully alive to all our opportunities in every phase of human activity, intellectually, morally, religiously, politically, and socially."

You have heard discussed at length several of the phases, and it now falls to our lot to say a few words about social duty. It is not the object of this paper to rehearse the rules of etiquette, nor is it necessary for me to enumerate the many little acts of politeness and the doing of little kindnesses that go to make social life pleasant, but to decide if there is any way of knowing what portion of our time we should devote to acts of sociability and in what way a portion of that time should be spent.

Duty consists altogether of what is right or due from one to another and is impelled by the affections. Duty also implies action; and one who performs his or her social duty must of necessity lead a life of activity either, in public or in private. Those who assume public responsibility must of necessity perform private duties as well.

"Social" implies a mingling with others, a liking for the company of others. Now to what extent should we bend our energies to the association of others? Shall we join the merry throng whose greatest pleasure seemingly is in attending social gatherings? Shall we spend our time merry-making in the parks, the street-fairs, just because everybody else goes? Shall we put in our evenings at the club, the lodge, and like places of amusement that afford free intercourse with our acquaintances? Is this what we understand by our social duties? Let us not mistake social pleasure for social duty. Duty is impelled by love for others, not for self. In the attending of such places as just mentioned, what chance have we for benefiting others? True we come in contact with those whom we may never meet in any other way, but does the effort justify? There is a golden rule by which we may measure even our social duties with perfect safety. You are all familiar with the command, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness." How many of us when attending these places think of the kingdom of God while there? How many of us think to make an impression for good on a single individual? True, a mingling with the people of the community in one of these gatherings does any of us good, and we are justified in indulging in such occasionally, but should we as Latter Day Saints make a business of spending our leisure time in that way?

ENTERTAINING.

The subject of entertaining is one that is puzzling many of our church-going people. And it is one worthy our consideration. In the discharge of our duty to our friends in a social way we must again remember that love is the power that prompts the action, and in pure love for our neighbors and friends with a desire to make them happy we should plan all our social gatherings. Then we will have a pleasant, friendly time where all are benefited instead of a "swell affair" that outdid the last one who made the effort. Let us strive for simplicity and not show, and much of the social problem will be solved.

As individuals we owe the community in which we live some of our love, time, and talent. In our individual conduct we are under obligation to visit the poor especially, not just to see how poor they are, but to comfort and cheer them. We should in our sociability, however, avoid being funnels of conversation. In all our social intercourse we should be truthful. I mean by this that we are not under obligation to follow the fashionable fad of being "not at home" when we do not feel just ready to receive a caller. We do not need to say, "Oh, I am so glad you came," when under our breath we said as we saw her coming up the walk, "I wish she had stayed at home." Now I know these things are indulged in by women who think they are good Christians, and they feel under obligation to make just such demonstrations when they have a caller. Do you know, I have heard people say, "I am so glad to see you," when it took an effort for them to conceal the look of displeasure on their countenance. I once heard a little girl laughingly remark, "Mrs. L— called to-day, and Mamma and I just kept still and pretended we weren't at home." Poor child! being trained up in such deceit. No wonder this is an age of liars. Again, do you ever hesitate to call at a place of rather lowly appearance for fear of what your friend will say? Pythagoras said, "Rest satisfied with doing well and leave others to talk of you as they please." Do not hesitate to make a call where there is need, because of some report you may have heard. I think it was Spurgeon who said, "Believe not half you hear, and repeat not half you believe. When you hear an ill report, halve it and quarter it and say nothing about the rest." This is one of the obligations we owe society. Let us know, too, that "a cat with a silver collar is none the better mouser," and live our own independent lives, doing that which we know is right and not worrying about what other people think. Franklin said, "The eyes of other people are the eyes that ruin us." In your independence do not forget that there are two freedoms: the false, where a man does what he likes; the true, where a man does what he ought to do. We should strive at all times to put out the best possible appearance and then look to it that we live up to that appearance.

I once heard of a man who thought he was very smart, but he carried the weight of his self-esteem by proving that he was smart, and no one could find fault because he thought so. On the same principle let us appear well before the world, and let us do well that we may so appear. The social life of a Christian should partake quite freely of the essence of the missionary life. Let us "do all the good we can in all the ways we can to all the people we can." Let us let our light so shine that when we are removed from the midst of old friends and neighbors we will be missed for our many good deeds and cheering words. May we remember that obedience to duty at all times, at all costs, and at all risks is not only the very essence of highest civilized life, but the surest road to a perfect life.

Questions and Answers.

Q.—Is the election of local Sunday-school officers by ballot in conflict with section 2 of article V of constitution for districts? A.—No. This article refers to election of district officers only. You can vote for local officers in whatever way the school may see fit, either by ballot, rising vote, show of hands, or viva voce.

Q.—When auditing the treasurer's accounts, should the secretary's record be used in comparison thereto? A.—Yes. That is the object of keeping the accounts. One officer's book is a check or voucher for the other. They should agree in every detail. Both secretary and treasurer should keep an itemized account of all that is received and expended by the school.

Q.—Should the secretary report his financial account? A.—He should at least give a complete summary thereof.

Q.—When the secretary pays money to the treasurer, should he take receipt for same? A.—According to the rules of strict business he should, though it is not often done. We have seen questions raised as to whether the collections were ever turned over to the treasurer or not, when he had been absent from the school for some weeks. The treasurer must either give receipts each time and then insist on their being produced in case of disagreement, or take his chances on the secretary's book being correct. There is no going back of the secretary's record. The treasurer must have as much as the secretary has him charged with.

Q.—Our district convention made a rule requiring each school to take up a collection each month for the benefit of the district treasury. Is it in conflict with article VI, page 10? And would it be binding on any school that might not want to follow the rule? A.—The rule is rather in conflict with the article referred to. No district has the right to assess the schools or to compel them to furnish any funds. But it does have the right to request the schools to provide their proportion of the funds needed. And it is the duty of the school to do what it can to comply with the request, though there is nothing requiring them to do so. The rule, if made at all, should be in the form of a request.

Letter Department

BAY MINETTE, Alabama, September 28, 1905.

Dear Herald: The branch at this place is not in a very good condition, but we hope to see the day when we will be brought out of this condition, and be placed upon higher ground, and become a shining light to the surrounding world. Bro. W. J. Booker has been our president for a long time; but he has been on the missionary force, and has not been able to do much work in the branch; and this year his mission being in other parts he resigned and it was with some regret that we gave him up, feeling almost as sheep without a shepherd. The burden fell on the weaker ones, your writer as priest, and Bro. E. A. Bankester as teacher, and we feel our weakness and ask the Saints to pray for us, that the Lord may strengthen us, that we may be better prepared to do the work that God has for us to do. We hold meeting twice each month at the church; and I have been preaching nearly every Sunday, and sometimes through the week. I have more calls than I can fill. The colored people of Bay Minette have asked me to preach for them twice, which I did, and they seemed to be well pleased. Their minister got up and told his people that they had heard a gospel sermon all through, and asked me to come again when I could, for he liked to hear such sermons preached.

Of late we have had some good prayer-meetings; and the more I work the better I feel and the stronger I am in the faith. I had to give up our little Sunday-school, as other work was pressing upon me, and there was no one else to take the lead of the school who was near enough to attend.

Dear brothers and sisters, let us live our religion and prepare ourselves to receive the blessings that God has in store for the faithful, that we may be able to escape the wrath that is to come; for desolation and sickness are to spread over the land and country.

I am anxiously waiting and praying for God to send a servant that is more able to lead and build us up in this branch. May God bless his Saints throughout the world, and build up the church.

G. W. BANKESTER.

WILKESBARRE, Pennsylvania, October 1, 1905.

Dear Herald: I am a regular reader of the HERALD for the last twelve years, and have not missed one week only when I was on the ocean, coming to this country. I left Lucas, Iowa, on the 4th of May, 1905, for Wilkesbarre. Arrived on the 6th of May. Wilkesbarre is a large city of nearly seventy thousand inhabitants in the city, and within eight or nine miles there is a population of nearly two hundred thousand. This place is up to date in everything. Very large buildings, good roads, gas lights, electric lights, electric cars, railways, and so on. I am sorry to say that I can find no Saints in this place, but I tell the people as much as I can that I am a Latter Day Saint. Some like to hear me, and believe what I tell them. Others laugh to scorn. But I know this much: I get liberty to talk to the people in Welsh and English. I only wish I could speak many other languages.

On the tenth day of August President Roosevelt visited Wilkesbarre, and I had the privilege of seeing him. I never saw such a gathering of people in my life as at that time.

My family and I go up to Scranton every time we can, where there is a branch of some very faithful Saints indeed; and it is a pleasure to meet with them.

As a family I am glad to say we are as strong in the faith to-day as we ever were, and we feel to thank God that we are in the light.

A young preacher told me when I first came here that our little bit of light was just the same as if a man came to this place and told them to put out the gas lights and the electric lights and all other lights, and that he was going to give better light with a little penny wax-candle; because we do not know what is in the Bible, or we would not join the Saints; but, thank God, to-day there are many in Wilkesbarre who know that we have more Bible than they have ever thought, and they know that the Saints can use it well. So I hope and trust that the Lord, in his own due time, will lead us to the honest in heart, and that they will obey this gospel.

EVAN LEWIS.

COVE, Arkansas, October 4, 1905.

Editors Herald: I came to this place the 2d inst.; found J. A. Wilson living here with his front room well seated for service, so we held forth last evening with the seats occupied with attentive hearers. There are five Saints living in Cove. Barton brothers are running a lumber-milling business at this place; but business is dull to what it was when Bro. Ellis Short was here. It makes one feel lonely to come to this place and think of the bygone days when there was such a lively branch here and such a grand Sunday-school conducted by the Saints with Bro. J. L. Newton as their superintendent. But those days are past. The last quarter has been the most successful one with me since I entered the mission field, in many respects, yet I have met with severe difficulties. It seems that Satan desires my life, or my overthrow in some way; but I hope to stand until the Lord says it is enough. There have been over forty baptisms in Arkansas this conference year, most of them near Mena and Stringer.

J. W. JACKSON.

DES MOINES, Iowa, October 3, 1905.

Dear Herald: With the responsibility growing out of the pleasure I take in reading from others of my brethren in the field of conflict, and a duty that I owe to the many that have requested to hear from me now and then through the church periodical, with a degree of pleasure that I take in letting those interested know of the onward progress of the work in this city, I, after a long delay, pen a few thoughts of some interest to the work in this mission.

While the increase in numbers has been small thus far this conference year, and a few have grown cold, yet there has been a growing spirituality on the part of those attending the services, and of late this spirituality has had a vitalizing effect upon others, and has given encouragement to some despondent ones.

Sickness has had much to do with the attendance all summer, and is still preventing some from attending as they would like. With all the sickness there, has been only one death, that of the babe of Bro. William Lane, whose death has left the home lonely, yet in that home has the spirit entered to more than compensate for the loss. God's grace has been poured out abundantly, and the spiritual activity of our brother is a great pleasure to all those who have the interest of souls at heart, and it is evident that his life will be more actively spent in soul-saving than ever before. Truly, all things work together for good to those who love God, for if out of sadness joy is brought then how easy it is for us to see how God can sanctify all other experiences for our good.

It is a very noticeable fact that the officials of the branch are doing effective work in seeking the cold and indifferent ones, and those who are forsaking the assembling of themselves together, and who, by so doing, are wielding an influence detrimental to the building up of the cause, as well as being detrimental to their spiritual growth, and a trial to the shepherds of the flock. It has been ascertained that nearly all the troubles that have been experienced by any have been the result of not following the counsel of God, either because they were uninformed as to what that counsel was, or because they did not have a disposition to observe it. But in the ministration of their duties as officials of the branch there has been unity of purpose, and that is the salvation of souls while honoring their lawgiver by seeing that the law is kept. How much of trouble would be saved to the Saints if each would seek to labor in harmony with the law of God, and seek the advice of those whom they have by their own choice placed in a position to be instruments in the hands of God to watch over and care for the interests of the church locally, when they are in doubt as to what is the wisest plan to follow when in trouble, or the proper way to accomplish the most good by the efforts being put forth to build up the cause, either individually or in an organized way.

One of the saddest conditions that is experienced in the city work is to see young people come into the city seeking employment, and have their interests turned from the work by reason of falling in with bad company, and listening to their wishes and counsel rather than to the expressed wishes of the loving Redeemer, and the counsel of those who have their present and eternal welfare at heart, and have been appointed of the Lord to advise and give counsel. It is not in my heart to advise any of the young Saints to come to the city expecting to secure employment, or to accept employment even when offered, unless they are rooted and grounded in the faith; for there are so many allurements, so deceptive that even some of the older Saints, who should set a better example for the young by a living sacrifice, have been carried away for a time by them, and by so doing have made some impressions that are hard to erase from the minds of others, however hard they may afterwards try to do so.

The deceptive arguments made by those who were interested in adding one more curse to the city by way of a place in which to manufacture that which has cursed more lives and homes than any one thing in the world, and of which God has said in his wisdom that it is not good for man, has had its effect upon some of the Saints, so that they united in the petition, or prayer, that a brewery be located here; but, thank God, the branch officials did a good work in their efforts to place the church unitedly against such an institution of death and destruction. And the branch without one dissenting vote sent a petition to the council asking them not to grant the request made, and from Woodbine and Lamoni there came from the branch and stake a strong disapproval of and protest against disgracing the capital of the State by the granting of such a request as had been made, all of which were filed with the city clerk, and presented to the council before their final action. The action thus had placed us on record before the public on the question of temperance that nothing else could have done, and the temperance workers are not loath to express their gratitude for the help rendered, though it has been small, so much less than we wish it had been.

An effort has been made to introduce the work in the south part of the city, but as yet the outlook is not very encouraging. The Saints living there have made a commendable effort, and for such there is a reward. For ten days I held services at Hastie with no additions, though there are some there who acknowledge that they are believers in the work, and while I was there showed their interest in a practical way. I trust they will not procrastinate the time of their adoption till too late. The influences there are adverse to spiritual growth on the part of the few Saints living there, but they still retain their faith and interest in the work. The opposition is shown there in about every way that it can be shown anywhere, yet there are some good, honest souls to be gathered out in that vicinity, I believe.

Since the Runnell's reunion I have not been well, yet am now about in a normal condition. I was not well when I went there; and while well cared for I did not improve very fast, and it has taken some time to recover from the effects of my illness. My hearing and voice are both still slightly affected.

I expect to enjoy a rest for a short time with loved ones, while assisting them to make preparations for winter, and doing the little odd jobs that fall to the lot of a missionary to do when he returns from several months' absence.

It is now contemplated that the church in the city will be dedicated some time next month; the notice of the exact time will be given later on. Saints are rejoicing that they have found favor with God to the extent that they have been able to pay for their place of worship in so short a time, and have it ready for dedication without any incumbrance on it. It stands as an evidence of the sacrifices of God's people, and what a few can do when they are united. The building, while not large, is a comfortable and inviting place in which to worship God, and to which none need be ashamed to invite their friends.

So many calls to make, and so many things to call one's attention in city work, that I find I neglect some things that should be done; and yet had I not neglected them I must have neglected others. So many things need to be done so badly it is a continuous strain on the mind to know which to do, and which to leave undone. It takes more than the wisdom of man, and this calls to my remembrance how many times God has led me in making my decision, and how abundantly he has continuously blessed me in my ministrations. My heart goes out in praise and adoration to his high and holy name.

Surrounded as I am in the city continually with wickedness of all kinds, and seeing the struggles of the Saints to overcome, and feeling the great burden that rests upon one of the witnesses under these conditions, I feel oftentimes like crying, as did John the Revelator, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

Your brother in Christ,

J. F. MINTUN.

LONDON, England, September 25, 1905.

Editors Herald: I came to this great city about two weeks ago. On leaving Scotland, Bro. J. W. Rushton and myself crossed to Belfast, Ireland, where we found Bro. W. H. Kelley in his appointed mission endeavoring to effect an opening. We stayed with him there for a few days and then parted, Bro. Rushton going to Wales, and I went to the cities of Dublin and Cork, and also to the beautiful lakes of Killarney.

Leaving Dublin, I crossed the channel to Holyhead, Wales. The sea was desperately rough and almost frightful in appearance—the roughest passage I ever took, nevertheless I did not get sick. Thus far I have always escaped that unpleasantness. Some of the people were terribly sick on this trip, and looked wretched, and as though they cared little whether they lived or died, but after setting foot on the ground they soon appeared as though nothing had happened to them. From Holyhead I went to Carnarvon and saw the wonderful castle. It has been pronounced the finest castle in Great Britain and the second in all Europe. It is very large and imposing, with its lofty turrets and frowning battlements. The immense strength of its massive walls, its grandeur and symmetrical design, together with the impress of mediævalism that clings to it, make it a subject of great interest to the traveler. Here I met the Brn. Lloyd and was kindly and hospitably entertained by them at their home. Leaving Carnarvon I went directly to Cardiff in South Wales, where I met Bro. Rushton. Here I sojourned with Bro. and Sr. E. B. Morgan, missionaries from America.

From Cardiff I came directly to London, and have found a stopping-place with Bro. and Sr. R. Clift, who willingly do all they are able to do to afford me a comfortable home. I have preached a few times in our little chapel on Common Bow Lane. Our numbers here are very few, but they are endeavoring to keep the light burning. It is not as yet determined just how long I shall remain in this vicinity. I expect to take a tour through various parts of Europe sometime in the near future. Bro. and Sr. Lewis, of Chester, Virginia, United States of America, have been with me here for a week, and we have spent the time busily in seeing some of the noted things of interest. On the 23d inst. I was privileged to visit the home and birth-place of Shakespeare, at Stratford-on-Avon. The natural surroundings there are very beautiful and must have been inspiring to his great mind. The gentle flowing river Avon, with its grassy banks and overhanging weeping willows, affords many a pleasant scene to gaze upon. The British Museum is a great curiosity shop, and a field indeed for the thoughtful student. Letters will reach me here, addressed 86 St. Paul's Road, Burdett Road, London, East, England. Elder William Newton, missionary, lately returned to America from this vicinity, is remembered with much love and esteem by the Saints and friends.

Yours truly,

SEALE, Texas, September 2, 1905.

Dear Herald: We are still in the faith of the latter-day work, though we have a great deal to contend with. We are the only Saints here, and the people call us Salt Lake Mormons. We hear it all with patience, for we know that Christ also was hated without a cause. We thank God that he spared our lives to hear this gospel, and we are trying to live as near right as possible. We have been blessed in many things since obeying the commandment of God.

Dear Saints, I am badly afflicted, and have not been able to walk for two months, or longer. I suffer all the time. I am thankful that I get the HERALD to read, and have also the Book of Mormon. It is such a great pleasure to read them. I have eczema in my leg; if any of the Saints know what will cure it, I will be glad to get the remedy. I suffer so much with it. We ask the prayers of all true Saints that we may be faithful to the end, and that I may be healed. We do not get to hear any preaching. The HERALD is all the preacher we have.

G. B. AND E. S. MOSS.

CLARKSVILLE, Tennessee, October 6, 1905.

Editors Herald: I was invited back here after my first visit, when I preached eight nights with good liberty. I left with the promise that I would return September 20, which I did, and have been preaching ever since. It has been with me like it was with Paul at Ephesus. I have fought with the beast at Clarksville, and by God's help up to the present time I have been able to hold my own side with much power from God.

I called the other day at a white lawyer's office and had a good talk with him on business, about getting a regular place to worship, and he told me to preach the full gospel to the black people. He said that he believed in the full Bible or none. I expect Sr. S. J. Graves to be here some time next week to help me in my missionary work. Kind regards to all God's Saints.

G. H. GRAVES.

BELFAST, Ireland, October 4, 1905.

Editors Herald: This city is about to put on holiday attire, as the new city tram-cars and tracks are about complete, when the change will be made from the old horse-car to the electric, consisting of about seventy miles of tracks, new cars, etc., involving an immense outlay of money and muscle. Belfast then will be a modern city in every respect. Its streets are broad and clean; its business houses are spacious, with fronts nearly all glass, making a beautiful display of goods.

I do not feel so lonely until I begin to think of the Atlantic Ocean between me and America.

Belfast is noted for its extensive navy-yard and ship-building interests. I am informed that this is the birthplace of nearly all the ocean greyhounds. I saw the new large vessel, the America, that is just completed and has started on her way to Hamburg. I am told that she is modern in every respect, and indeed she looks it. I was fortunate enough to see a very large vessel launched the other day, and to me it was a grand sight to see a great mass of steel, riveted together, sliding from her ways into the water. It can not be described fully with the pen.

Belfast is also noted for its many linen industries. I believe it is the home of this industry. Many hands are employed, mostly women and girls.

The city has under its control several public bath-houses where one can bathe in a pool for three pence, and can get a nice hot bath for six pence. For this small sum you are provided with soap and three towels. Provisions are more costly here than at home, also fruit and vegetables. Clothing is about the same, only one can get a suit made to order here for the price of a ready-made suit at home. Hats and gloves are cheap.

The city owns a large hall, where they have a very large and fine organ, said to be the largest in the United Kingdom. The city employs an organist who gives recitals twice a week, at which there are also two solo singers at each performance. In the afternoon is given a classical program, and at night a popular one. The cost is two pence. The entertainment is of a very high order, and the poor can attend. In fact the city owns about all of the public utilities. This would be a good place for our socialistic friends to come to study their system of government ownership, etc. Street-car fare is one penny for about twelve blocks' ride. Many are the interesting features of north Ireland, but above them all the country itself stands preëminent. It is really a beautiful country, and the title of "Emerald Isle" is very appropriate. No wonder the Irish love their native land, with its undulating scenery and ever green hillsides, and thatched houses and barns in the country.

To pass through Ireland is really interesting and instructive; but when we remain and come in touch with the inner life, we see the effect of poverty in places here, the cause of which in my opinion is false religion and whisky. In small towns we see a large, grand building, with large steeple, and under its shadows a nice looking building; and the rest are not in comparison with either of those two, one a church-house, costing much hard-earned money, and the other draining the people of what is left. And from this condition there seems to be no prospects of relief, only through the gospel.

Every pleasant evening I had meeting on Shaftsbury Square. I had to talk standing by myself for about fifteen minutes before I could get any one to stop to listen to me, and the voice had to be pitched above the rumble of the cars and vehicles. I was often interrupted by drunken men, and by wagons driving through the crowd. The Irish being naturally a combative people, I had all kinds of questions. Ministers would submit questions through others. Several times they would get to pushing and shoving and I would be nearly carried off my feet. Sometimes I thought surely I would be mobbed in the melee, or get hurt; but I managed to keep my feet. They would cry out, "Are you a papist?" I said, "No." "Are you a Protestant?" "No." "Are you a Mormon?" "No." "Well, then, you are the Devil." "No." "Who are you, then?" I answered, "I am a man, and wish to be heard, and then you can judge for yourselves." Some evenings I would talk from eight o'clock till a quarter after ten. In the daytime I would distribute tracts. I feel the importance of the scripture that says, Let them go two by two. I do not believe it proper to try to open a new field like this with one by himself. It requires quite a stock of moral courage to stand alone four thousand miles from home, in a strange land, that is religiously crystalized, where all of the schools are conducted by the churches, and the minds of the people prejudiced even against one another to such an extent that bitterness and strife reign. In the application of a man for work he is asked first his religious convictions. To see a procession led by a fifer and two other men, each with a large bass drum, beating it on each end with a stick in each hand as long as a walking-stick, the music of which reminds me of an Indian war-dance, and on the return see their hands bloody as well as some of their heads, is more comical than inspiring. Yet I find quite a few liberal-minded men and women among the people of this country, and a large number of cultured and educated ones of wealth and importance.

August 28 Brn. Rushton and LaRue visited Belfast, but as the weather was very bad no open-air meetings were held by us. They remained four days, then left, Bro. Rushton for Cardiff, Wales, Bro. LaRue for London.

September 3, Brn. J. Brien and G. W. Leggett, of Manchester, England, arrived here to spend their holidays, and remained one week, and were kept busy all the time, seeing the sights, and preaching at night to large crowds on the streets. These brethren are good men, and have the interest of the work at heart, and are qualified to do just such work as is needed here (pioneer work), and helped me well and did me good in their coming; and I did miss them when they returned to their homes.

Well, I can appreciate the opportunity, if it ever occurs again, to labor in and around districts where there are Saints. However, there is one here, a Sr. Edwards, whose husband is in Wales, at work in the coal-mines, and we hope for more to be in this place ere long. Perhaps next spring something permanent can be done providing a systematic rule is followed under the law.

AUBURN, Nebraska, October 10, 1905.

Dear Herald: My faith continues to grow. This work is a God-sent work, and I ask the prayers of the Saints, that nothing will come up to overthrow me in this work. My mother does not belong to the church, but she has received a wonderful blessing. She was sick from February until October. We had several doctors, and they did not do any good. She said if Bro. W. M. Self and Bro. Madison would come and administer to her she would get well. She had not been out of bed since April, and she got up the next day, and in the space of two weeks was able to be up town, and is still improving.

Yours in the faith,

NELLIE UNLAND.

KNOX, Indiana, October 10, 1905.

Editors Herald: We dropped you a word from Wakelee, Michigan, in September. Since then we have been busy in two-day services. So far they have been very successful. The services appointed to be held at Lansing, September 23 and 24, were conducted in the Maccabee hall, at North Lansing. The hall consists of kitchen, dining-room, ladies' parlor, and main auditorium. The Saints from Howell, Webberville, Williams-ton, Holt, Dimondale, Eaton Rapids, and St. Thomas, Ontario, attended with glad hearts and merry voices. The Saints of Lansing sent large and well-filled baskets to the hall, and lived right there—only returning after evening services to their homes to sleep; and for two days the Maccabee hall at North Lansing put on metropolitan airs. A fine spirit pervaded the series of meetings. The occupancy of hall cost considerable money, and the Saints are to be commended for the sacrifice. They felt blessed.

We continued the meetings three times during the week; and the following Sunday we had the privilege of leading four persons into the waters of regeneration. They were buried with Christ in beautiful Grand River. There are now twenty Saints in Lansing, and twenty-six just around.

Passing along to the appointments at this place, we have held eight services up to date. The Spirit of the Lord has visited his people here. Last Sunday we led two young ladies,—one a graduate of Knox High School,—into the waters of Yellow River, and baptized them into Christ. They are bright minds for the Master's kingdom. Others are just waiting by the door-posts of wisdom—if they do not wait too long.

Bro. Columbus arrived on Friday, and has been engaged in the good work, preaching some strong discourses. Our people are made glad by the recent services and baptisms, and feel encouraged. We move along to conference Saturday next, leaving here to-morrow. Remember the appointments at Decatur, November 4 and 5, and at Hartford the Sunday following.

Hopefully yours,

ST. CLAIR, Michigan, October 9, 1905.

Dear Herald: I have just returned from the Chatham District conference, which was held at Kimbal, just six miles from the line into King Edward's country; but I must say when we Yankees and those Canadians were mingled together, you could not tell us apart, for we had been baptized into the one body, and all partook of the same Spirit. Although I am a Yankee I can say with a clear conscience, there are some very good, bright, sociable people over in Canada, and when the pure in heart gather to occupy in Zion, Canada will come in for her portion.

I am glad Jesus said the gospel would be preached to all nations, that they may come out of darkness into the light and liberty of the gospel of our dear Savior, Jesus Christ, which will bring joy, peace, purity, and meekness if we obey all of its principles.

We can not stop when we have obeyed the first principles; but we must continue to obey. Jesus said, If you love me you will keep my commandments. This includes virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, and charity. I feel that the time has come when the people of God must be very prayerful. Satan is raging, and setting pitfalls and snares for God's people, and we must arise in the strength of Israel's God to be able to compete with that evil one.

I ask the prayers of the children of God, that I may always have strength to rule myself and walk in the footsteps of Jesus.

Your sister,

GERTRUDE MAXWELL.

DES MOINES, Iowa, October 12, 1905.

Dear Herald: Your pages bring to us each week the reading-matter that is highly prized by all the Saints, though we regret that more of the Saints of our district do not have you and Autumn Leaves as regular visitors in their homes. What could each one of us do for you to extend you into more of the homes of our members? If we could pen some lines which would reach those in our district who do not have you in their homes that would influence them to have you visit them weekly, we would gladly do so. How much the Saints miss, in so many ways, who do not have you! So much of news of the progress of God's work in all parts of the world, so many able articles, etc.

And why do so few recognize the value of Autumn Leaves? We would that every young person in the church were a regular reader of this magazine. There is so much in it from month to month that is real food for the soul. There are many things along different lines that cause us to ask, Why?

The branch presidents' quarterly reports for the third quarter, ended September 30, show the branches of the district to be in good condition with one or two exceptions; all are holding regular services.

The district historian has made considerable of an effort the past year in gathering up fragments of district history, and he has been quite successful. All should be interested in the placing of historical facts on record that they may be preserved for future use and reference. Biography is especially interesting, and many of the men of the church to-day ought to prepare their autobiographies and leave them for others to peruse.

The Saints of this city still have cause to rejoice in the goodness of God to us as a people and as individuals. Sorrow and affliction have been the lot of some; but it is through trials that we triumph.

Sr. Rachel Vice, who has been afflicted with cancer in the eye for years, and who has recently passed through severe suffering, is again able to attend church. Sr. Minnie Mather was compelled to give up her work as assistant superintendent in the Sunday-school because of ill health, and she has spent the past month with her mother in Western Iowa.

Sr. Halliday, mother of Sr. Katherine Waller, has been in the city of late.

Bro. H. H. Gold, of the class of 1905 of the shorthand department of Graceland College, who has been in the city during the summer, returned last week to Graceland to continue his work in the college course. We hope to have representatives from our district in the college during the winter.

On Saturday, October 7, fire broke out in the barns and out-buildings on the lot adjoining our church, and it was thought for some time that our church-building would be wiped out by the flames. The prompt and heroic efforts of the fire department saved the building, with the paint on one side burned off. On last Sunday as we gathered for church service and beheld the work of the fire demon, we all felt truly thankful that the house, so soon to be dedicated to the service of God, had been preserved from the flames. The dedication will take place some time in November, and we look forward to that day as one to be memorable in our work here. The Saints of the city, all of whom are of the laboring class, began the securing of the house of worship eighteen months ago. At the beginning of the effort the Lord manifested his approval of the step taken. Many of the Saints have sacrificed greatly, and in so short a time we are able to dedicate the building to God's service free from debt.

Yours in the faith,

A. A. REAMS.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, October 11, 1905.

Editors Herald: I would like to state, in view of my present physical condition, that it will not be practicable to respond to some kind invitations to do ministerial work, though such invitations were duly appreciated. Inability for such labor has measurably increased subsequent to the receipt of such invitations, which I did not anticipate, and could not avoid.

Inactivity to one who has sought to be active under the gospel standard is far from desirable, so much so that it is purgatory, so to speak. And if so be that purgatory described by the Catholic priests be worse, in the language of the Episcopalian churchman I say, "From such purgatory, good Lord, deliver me. Amen."

In the light radiating to my mind from the everlasting gospel, I was led to believe that a proper utilization of time, according to the gifts and callings of God unto its representatives, was one of the essentials with a view to spiritual growth, and that the activity, legitimate and imperative under the gospel standard, is God-given; therefore all giving evidence in practice or manner become godly proportionate to diligence evinced in a godly activity.

Then, too, I have believed and taught as to the possibility of evincing a zeal not according to knowledge, which, if persisted in, will leave one on the tempestuous sea of time, in a similar predicament to a ship on the mighty deep, without a rudder or compass. For in the light of God's word I am necessitated to conclude that in the event of the infinite God accepting worship from his creatures, with a guaranty of eternal life, such worship must be intelligently and sincerely rendered, without malice, deceit, or hypocrisy, or any such thing. How far I may have been successful in my lifetime in giving practical evidence of such worship, I pause not to say. God in his goodness has granted me the opportunity of making a record, in a probationary condition; and I am stimulated in the thought that in my case, as in others, he is to give the final decision, which will be just and right, and from which there will be no appeal; for the day of pettifogging and man's vain assumption will have past.

I never in my earthly struggles have posed as a perfectionist, as that term or phrase is generally understood, as I have not altogether overlooked the significance of Christ's declaration, namely, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."—Matthew 5:49. Nor have I essayed such absolute interpretation of the above as to make it and God's absolute perfection identical, thinking that were extreme and unjustifiable. But I have believed and taught that God's absolute perfection was to be reached by a practical observance of perfect law. I therefore am prepared to state, at this late stage of my earthly career, that I have never known disorder to follow a legitimate application of God's given law, when confronting exigencies necessitated that application; but have been an eye-witness to much disorder, etc., when law has been evaded, no matter under what pretext, or by whom; nor have I been blind to the fact that loyalty to given law accelerates our spiritual progress, while disloyalty, if persisted in, must lead to retrogression, or the claim that law is the rule of action is invalid, and the following is as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal: "And again that which is governed by law is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same."

In conclusion I wish to state, since my department in 1902, attributable to a vision,—Doctrine and Covenants 126,—I highly appreciate the consideration and kindness evinced toward me by Bro. F. A. Smith, as I also do that of Bro. H. C. Smith since my being numbered with the superannuated ministers, in being granted privilege of laboring where convenient in their charge; but am unable to state at this time to what extent I may avail myself of this privilege in the future.

BLAIR, Nebraska, October 14, 1905.

Editors Herald: Because of personal and home affairs I have been permitted to labor in Nebraska a short time, and am now getting ready to return to my mission. I desire the Saints of South Dakota, east of the Missouri River, to note the above fact, and let me know their whereabouts, and also if they desire preaching in their region of country, and I will try to respond to all the requests made. Address me at Omaha, Nebraska, 3318 Taylor Street.

We do not wish to appear selfish and take up space which belongs to others, but we would like to be heard from occasionally. It may and it may not be that our handsome little chapel has something to do with our desire to let others know we are alive and trying to keep in tune with the body. Suffice it to say, we are delighted with our new chapel.

On August 27, we were made sad by having to hold our first funeral-service within its walls. Bro. Holmes J. Davison's son, Merrill, died on Friday, August 25. Although he had been an intense sufferer for months, he passed away very peacefully, his last words being the result of a talk with his father on the subject of the great beyond: "I wish I was there"—and his wish was almost immediately granted. He was of a happy disposition, and proved to be extremely patient in his sickness. His baptism took place the Sunday previous to his burial.

Sr. Julia Glover was removed from our midst by death after a few weeks' illness on the eighteenth day of August. A most excellent Saint, she lived a life of patient endurance, for hers was not a pathway strewn with roses; always had a kind word for every one. Her dear face, sweet alto voice, and kindly manner, can ne'er be replaced, and will never be forgotten by us who loved her well. We were not permitted to hold the funeral-services, as her remains were taken to her old home in Maine. She was fifty-six years of age, and had been in the church about twenty-six years.

Burpee Davison left us but a short time ago for the West, Independence, Missouri, to seek to regain his health, the fifth Bostonian we have had to spare and thus increase the ranks at Independence. We surely miss Burpee, but hope the change of climate will benefit him, and that he may return to us after a few months well and strong. A farewell party was held in his honor just previous to his departure, at the Lewis home.

Since the departure of the last mentioned, Bro. Charles Warren, another of our good Boston boys, has left us for California with a number of his relatives.

Boston was well represented at reunion in August at Touisset, Massachusetts, our new camp-grounds—where was held the largest and best reunion yet held in Massachusetts District. The reunion has come to stay, and more are becoming convinced each year that they can not afford to miss it. We had about ninety-seven occupied tents, and three hundred and fifty campers. There were said to be six hundred on the grounds on Sunday. We were privileged to have President R. C. Evans with us from the first Wednesday to the close of reunion. There were twenty-nine baptisms. Being on the salt water, the bathing was an important feature, as well as boating. Several times the owner of a naphtha launch, holding about thirty, took parts of our crowd out for a ride for a small sum. The prayer-meetings each morning were excellent. Sunday-school was held at eight o'clock both Sunday mornings, in charge of W. A. Sinclair. Two or three afternoons were given over to Religio and Sunday-school work during the week. Preaching each evening and two extra preaching-services on the Sabbath. We all hope to live to attend reunion another year. M. O. L.

Whiteaker, Charles Lundeen, Fred Green, Eleanor Whiting, Ann Barnhard, Eva Elliott, Joseph Elliott, Lurette Whiting, Birch Whiting, William Barnhard, Kate Rotzien, T. J. Martin, and Marcus Erickson. Irene Whiting was chosen secretary. The president appointed as a committee to solicit means for buying a district tent: Union Branch, L. Whiting; Oak Lake, T. J. Martin; Audubon, M. L. Hawley; Bemidji, Birch Whiting; North Minneapolis, Charles Lundeen; South Minneapolis, Bro. Hawkes; Amor, George Bugbee. Birch Whiting was ordained to office of elder, and recommended to the Bishop to succeed Bro. Griffin as Bishop's agent, Bro. Griffin having resigned. Adjourned to meet at Frazee last Saturday of reunion in June, 1906.

Addresses.

R. Baldwin, changed to 103 Oakland Avenue, Sharon, Pennsylvania.

Notice of Silence.

To the Saints of Michigan: Our attention as district officers has been called to the fact that James A. Carpenter, of Bay City, Michigan, has recently and repeatedly officiated as an elder among the Saints where he has traveled, though he is now, and has been under silence by the First Quorum of Seventy since 1904. Repeated counsel to remain inactive, and promise so to do has proved unavailing, and we therefore take this means of notifying all Saints that the said brother is void of authority to officiate in any capacity as a minister.

J. A. GRANT,
E. A. GOODWIN,

For the Presidency of Northern Michigan District.

Reunion Bee.

The reunion committee of the Lamoni Stake has secured the Dancer place, one mile south of Lamoni, for the reunion of 1906, and in harmony with former announcement has appointed a reunion bee to be held on said grounds, Thursday and Friday, October 26 and 27—two days—for the purpose of improving the grounds. The reunion of 1905 was a decided success, and it is the intention of the committee to make the reunion of 1906 still more successful. The intention is to clear additional space for campers by cutting brush on the well-shaded hill-slopes of the west and southwest portions of the grounds; also to open up a road along the east end whereby teams may be located and pass to and fro without disturbing campers and services. Stubble will be cut out, and in due time a well will be sunk, and other improved facilities looking to the comfort of all will be provided. The help of all interested is solicited. Come out and help make the grounds what they may be made—the best in this section of country for reunion purposes.

Bring sharp axes and grubbing-hoes. In case of rain, the bee will be postponed until Thursday and Friday of the following week.

On behalf of reunion committee,
D. C. WHITE, Chairman,
R. S. SALYARDS, Secretary.

THE Buddhists say, "No seed will die"; every seed will grow. Where is the service which can escape its remuneration? What is vulgar, and the essence of all vulgarity, but the avarice of reward? The man whose eyes are nailed, not on the nature of his act, but on the wages, whether it be money, or office, or fame, is almost equally low. He is great whose eyes are opened to see that the reward of actions can not be escaped, because he is transformed into his action, and taketh its nature, which bears its own fruit, like every other tree.—Emerson.

THE EDITOR ABROAD.

A strike of the telegraph operators on the Northern Pacific and Great Northern Railways so far affected us, that instead of leaving Spokane at twenty-five minutes past seven, on the morning of August 2, it was not until three hours later; and then instead of making the usual time over the road, the train crept from station to station, feeling its way like a man in the dark not seeing his way. It was a daylight run, but it cost us a restless all-day and all-night ride, and at fifteen minutes after six in the morning, August 3, the train ran into the station at Seattle, ten long hours late.

There was no one to meet us, but having the address of Bro. F. W. Holman we soon found him, Bro. G. T. Griffiths, and L. G. Holloway, the last named our neighbor of Lone Rock, Missouri, doing missionary work in the Northwest.

The brethren gave us an excellent breakfast—not exactly the "honeycomb and fish"—of breakfast food, fish, and bread and butter. To hungry folks it was delicious and comforting.

Bro. Holman is an officer in one of the county offices; so leaving us in charge of Brn. Griffiths and Holloway he was off to his work. These brethren took us to the home of Bro. A. W. Gorbutt, a pleasant spot on the hill overlooking the bay to the west, mountains in the distance—Mts. Baker and Hood. It was too hazy that day, but later we saw them. Bro. and Sr. Gorbutt and little Moroni made the visitors from Iowa very welcome, and during our stay we were most cordially cared for. The friendship of the family of Saints has no equal in the friendships of this world.

It was a pleasure to meet in the evening the Saints of Seattle in their prayer-service at the home of Bro. David Davis, brother of the good missionary John Davis who has for several years been at work in the pioneer work and field, and whom we met in Wales and England in 1903.

The removal from the high mountainous altitudes of Idaho and Eastern Washington, into the lower and coast moisture induced dullness and sleep, so that for two or three days we were disposed to lassitude and quiet. However, on Friday under the kindly care of Brn. Griffiths and Holloway we visited one of the attractive out-of-door resorts, Lake Washington, where the old folks and the children enjoyed the light and beauty of an almost faultless day and the loveliness of lake, mountains, and forest, and kaleidoscopic movement of comers and goers all intent on the joys of liberty and the "pursuit of happiness."

In the evening the Saints gave us a reception at Bro. Gorbutt's home at which old acquaintances were renewed and new ones formed of those whom the whirligig of time had thrown together. Bro. Gorbutt and wife, natives of the "Old Country," wherever that may be, are imbued with the spirit of "Peace on earth, good will to men"; and the evening passed pleasantly, as such evenings are wont to do. The guests departed, leaving substantial tokens of cheer and good wishes with the sojourners for the gospel's sake.

The branch at Seattle, under the care of Bro. F. W. Holman, meets in a fine hall, known as the Acme, in the Post-Intelligencer building, the Post-Intelligencer being the leading journal in the city. We did not inquire as to the politics of the paper; however, its business religion is to boom Seattle and give the people the news.

We met with the Sunday-school, and in sacrament-service in the forenoon, and at half past two in the afternoon and eight o'clock in the evening spoke to attentive listeners of those within and those without the pale of the church. Albeit one unfortunate man, a Mormon, or sympathizer with that body, took pains to rather persistently affirm that he heard the Editor of HERALD speak in the tabernacle at Salt Lake City, and was much incensed because we denied ever having had the privilege to occupy in that noted edifice. It was a useless lie for him to tell, as the truth was cheaper and easier to state. The father of lies causes his children to weary the truth-loving, and burden their own souls with danger as lovers of lies rather than lovers of truth.

We met at Seattle a number of former Lamonians, among them Bro. Charles Hammer and family, also John Black and wife, who though not members of the church are friends to the banner-bearers. Another whom we met was an attorney named Thomas H. Cann, who was a boy in Hancock County, Illinois, at the time of the trouble by the mob and the killing of the martyrs Joseph and Hyrum Smith. He gave the Saints and the martyrs a good reputation.

The members of the branch came to the hall, bringing their lunches with them, and stayed all day, thus saving time of going to and from, besides enjoying visiting with each other during intermission. Brn. Griffiths and Holman were in charge, and all went cheerily and well. Saints from several adjoining places were in attendance, especially from up the bay. Several remembered the preacher, as the Lord said, "by this shall ye know my disciples."

Our stay at Seattle, ending August 7, though short, is one of the bright spots in the trip. The city is a wonderful mart, and is destined to be a great entrepot for the markets of the world. It has an excellent seaboard and will soon have a land-locked fresh-water harbor, by connecting Lakes Green and Washington by canal with the waters of the Sound. Immense lumber interests and plants are centered here. The railway from Spokane is partly over a desert land, stones, sand, sage-brush, rabbit-brush, lava-rocks, arid and dry; and partly through fertile fields and over tree-clad mountains along bright and sparkling streams. Washington is one of the coming States. Its exhibit at the Lewis and Clark Exposition, at Portland, was excellent and did the State honor.

The road from Seattle to Vancouver, British Columbia, lies along the Puget Sound, and through what was once a dense forest of fir, pine, and cedar, with undergrowth of other woods. In places the axes and saws of the lumbermen have felled great tracts, and where the debris was left fires, set to denude the land for the plow, or by careless thoughtlessness, have devastated thousands of acres of the benign gift of a bounteous Father, and a desolation of charred and burnt forest and field pains the eyes and brain of the lover of Nature and of Nature's God, the provident Father of all. Waste, waste! Where once stood miles square of primeval forest, these is now a wanton, wicked waste.

And so it is. As left by the Lord his eminent domain has ample provision for man's primitive need; but advancing civilization with its thousand artificial wants murders Nature and robs her of her elements of beauty, grace, and strength.

A pleasant ride of a hundred and sixty miles, and lasting from half past eight in the morning till near four in the afternoon of August 7, including an international overhauling of baggage at Blaine in crossing the line between the United States and British Columbia, an examination that is calculated to make a republican American smile at its perfunctory and nearly useless character. But then it is about an even thing; as Dominion excise men do to us south of the line, United States customs officers do to them north of it.

We were lovingly met at the station in Vancouver, the farthest point from home of our journey, by the large-hearted, genial sister of the Editor's wife, who with glistening eyes gave us the kiss of welcome. It was not long before pleased papa, tired mamma, and weary but excited lads were at home under the hospitable roof of the earnest Scotch veteran, Father Alexander Clark, formerly of Waldemar, Ontario.

Obedience, submission, discipline, courage—these are among the characteristics which make a man.—
Samuel Smiles.

PRINCIPLE AS A STANDARD.

In another article we have called attention to what is stated by revelation, and what has been said by the church in General Conferences on the subject of tobacco-using. Happily, in these instances cited, the people were in harmony with the law, and occupied high ground, hence their moral attitude and tone were high. Accepting the truth as revealed by direct instruction to the church, and recognizing the manifest correctness of that instruction, they did not hesitate to "move up" and take a higher stand. Most of them did so at least; some, of course, held back because not emancipated from the tobacco-habit, and made pleas in extenuation. However, we believe the number was few; the opinion of the church in general has been always strong against the use of tobacco. The conference declared the use of tobacco to be "expensive, injurious, and filthy."

Fundamental principles lie, or should lie, at the base of all action taken by the people. God speaks to the people upon the basis of principle, not from arbitrary desire to command and be obeyed. He informs us that "light cleaveth unto light"; also that if "the truth be in you it shall abound," etc. (Doctrine and Covenants 85:12.) Men are not to be "commanded in all things"; they are denominated "slothful servants" if they "wait to be commanded" in all they undertake. They are agents unto themselves and the power is in them to do much good by the exercise of such power.

The church of Christ exists because truth and light have come into the world. That is the basis of its advent and organization, the foundation upon which it is builded—"the truth." It stands before the people and advocates that it exists to bring men to "obey the truth." It is representative of that idea, and of that idea alone; therefore he who truly represents it as a member of the body, takes upon himself, whether as minister or layman, to be a representative of the truth—all truth. Jesus Christ and his divine law, which is the expression of his Spirit—the Spirit or light of truth—is the standard of principle, of belief, and of conduct. "Whatsoever is more, or less than these, cometh of evil," God himself has declared. This is plain, clear, strong, unmistakable; there need be no hesitation as to "where to draw the line"; God in his law has not spoken hesitatingly or indefinitely; nor has he left his people ground or given them cause for hesitation and embarrassment as to where he stands, and where they should stand. He is "just and true"; intelligent, strong, clear, and forceful in character, hence he speaks and acts like himself.

It is because of these things that as a church we can speak boldly to the world. Our faith, stated in the revelations, is voiced clear and strong. It is true in principle; it is in harmony with the word of God in past ages, and the world can not overthrow it, because it is builded upon the rock. Men who were instruments under God in contributing to the establishment of the church "builded better than they knew." They were but instruments in the hands of the Lord. He did the work; he is "the author and finisher of the faith": men are but human, imperfect agencies employed by him through whom, to a degree, he works. Men are honored of him and if very careful to keep the human in subjection are enabled to know the divine and to act for God; but at the same time they are very, very liable to forget and to substitute their human wisdom for the wisdom of God. Hence the thought must be kept in mind that only by constant care and devotion and cultivation of nearness to God and decided and maintained and increasing spirituality, can men mount upwards and administer and live in communion with God, in touch with "the powers of the world to come." Jesus, the Captain of our salvation, the Leader, the great Head, "brought out" the necessity of such spirituality in his life. He suffered not himself to neglect the cultivation of humility, of daily and lengthy periods of special effort, with a constancy of effort, to draw nearer to God. His life was a season of continuous outbreathing of pure, active effort to occupy higher ground. Truly he was not "of the world," and clearly has he commanded his people—ministry and laity—that "ye shall not live after the manner of the world."

We can advocate the faith, we can succeed in living the faith, only by advocating and by living in harmony with its fundamental principles. When we meet the sectarian world, when we send our elders to the Utah organization, we can do nothing but offer them "the truth." We have no other message; we are unauthorized to offer them any other. Our position is manifestly true; it is therefore clear, plain, and strong. When we depart from, wherein our internal or external development has been based upon or may in future be based upon or involve any departure from principle, from truth, we have been wrong, we shall be wrong. It is our business, therefore, to seek for "the truth" "as it is in Christ." The moment we begin to indulge in dallying, in endeavors to patch up or to make excuses for departures from right, for slips or compromises of individuals, and seek to excuse in ourselves or in them easy-going methods or lack of devotion to true and exalted standards, that moment we are facing away from God and in the direction of error and darkness and going into the "mist of darkness" that bewilders and blinds and leads down to destruction and death. We must stand up straight in all our attitudes, face issues squarely, and move right ahead.

It is high time that our people, that we individually, learn that we can not trifle in these matters. We must be awake to the fact that we can not be the children of God without being "the children of the light." "He that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth." It is nonsense, or worse than useless, if not childish, to believe in and to profess adherence to the idea that God has spoken from heaven and called men to the ministry and organized the church in these last days, and then fail to measure up to the requirements of intelligent citizenship in the kingdom of God. God called Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith and Oliver Cowdery and others and organized the church in 1830, but as early as 1831 he declared the children of Zion to be "under this condemnation," and commanded them to repent, and warned them that if they continued in their course they would be accounted as salt which had lost its savor and be trodden under foot of men; and in 1844, the church, numbering upwards of one hundred and fifty thousand, was rejected and scattered to the four winds and became the prey of wicked, ambitious, and designing men, so great was the departure from truth, so incomplete the development of the people.

Washington, Adams, Jefferson, and others of the fathers were "called of God" to establish the republic; but it, too, drifted on the rock of corrupted wealth based upon slavery and other evils, and passed through manifold ordeals peculiar to "human" destiny under prevailing low ideals; and where is the republic to-day, and what the future of the people, with the revelations of wide-spread corruption in graft, bossism, corporate control of legislation, bribery, and other evidences so startling that one is led to wonder whether it will ever stop and what the end shall be? Where are the people? Are they (and are we) Republicans, Democrats, Populists, or anything else as mere partisans, or are we seeking to be free, to be governed by principles upon which all successful government must rest—the fundamental principles of the science of government? In the light of the awful revelations of the day, are we justified in standing by any mere party, as such, or shall we be ready to ally ourselves with those who, devoted to fundamental truths, coming out of any or all partisan organizations, hold themselves in readiness to support purity in government and ally themselves on behalf of patriotic movements equipped for reform, without respect to mere political denominational name? "What's in a name?" One can be a "Latter Day Saint" in name by adherence to the Utah church, but not be one in fact; and we or others can have "a name to live and be dead."

What is to be the future of the people—of the American people, raised up of God to liberty, of us as a people, raised up also to liberty, both political and religious liberty? Are we prepared by devotion to truth to assert it, to stand by it, to insist upon it, in government, in state, in church? Is there not danger to guard against and progress to be made all along the line of human development in church and in state, requiring full knowledge, clear insight, and active participation upon the part of the whole body of the people? Who built up the republic, who took active part in the establishment of the church in the beginning, a few men, or the people as a body, both men and women? A democracy with its complex system of government of the people, by the people, and for the people, can not be maintained except by constant, close participation of the people; neither can a theo-democracy, as is the church or kingdom of God, be otherwise maintained. The benefits of government are so great that designing, unprincipled men manipulate and control to the gratification of their selfish desires. The love of wealth and power, the power of wealth and political control of legislation with its special privileges so secured, is so great that unregenerate men will deliberately connive to manipulate government to the control of its powers to reach and to maintain themselves at the expense and enslavement and suffering of the masses. The people and their condition are secondary considerations, if considered to any degree at all; they are used as a mere means to personal, selfish ends.

The claimed right of kings is not dead; only one of its forms is becoming obsolete. Money is king—money is power, and kings reign in America as absolutely as do reigning monarchs in the old world. Indeed, even in the old world "money talks"; money makes wars, or forbids them when against its interests; rulers dare not set themselves against invested wealth. German, American, French, and other "interests" largely build navies and maintain armies, to protect their holdings at home and abroad, though the people foot the bills.

But coming back to this clear-cut legislation on tobacco: is our legislation in general, are our convictions, our general and specific attitude as a body and as individuals—is it, are they, clear-cut, strong, unequivocal, uncompromising? Are we ready, have we yet come to the point or position where we are resolved, "highly" resolved as were our Revolutionary fathers, to look straight for truth, for principle, for right, in our legislation, in our attitudes, in our general course? Are we yet where we judge matters solely upon their merits, and not by the personalities who stand for or who stand against them? If not, are we anywhere definitely? If not so standing are we not "nowhere"—practically without chart, compass, or rudder, adrift on a sea of conflicting currents and eddies which may carry us away we know not whither or down we know not where?

It is our solemn duty to "walk in the light," not to "pour darkness on a dawning day."

We hand folks over to God's mercy and show none ourselves.—George Eliot.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.—TOBACCO.

Has it become a law in the church prohibiting officers from holding offices in the church who use tobacco? Does it make any difference whether they are branch officers or traveling ministers? Please answer this; it is for information. Did it come by revelation or by the voice of General Conference only? Make it plain.

Revelation to the church on the subject of tobacco and its uses and abuses, is as follows:

"And again, tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man, but is an herb for bruises, and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill."—Doctrine and Covenants 86:1.

"Avoid the use of tobacco."—Doctrine and Covenants 119:3.

"Cease to be unclean."—Doctrine and Covenants 85:38.

"Be ye clean in your bodies and in your clothing."—Doctrine and Covenants 119:3.

General Conference resolutions on the subject of tobacco-using are as follows:

"Resolved that this body declares that the use of tobacco is expensive, injurious, and filthy, and that it should be discouraged by the ministry. [Adopted 1878.]"—General Conference Resolutions, p. 48.

"That this conference discourage the use of tobacco, and of strong drinks, as a beverage, by the church, and especially by the ministry. [Adopted 1881.]"—General Conference Resolutions, p. 58.

"Whereas, The Lord has spoken against the use of tobacco and strong drink on different occasions; and whereas, In all our appointments we ought to show respect unto said counsel. Therefore, resolved, That henceforth we recommend no man for General Conference appointment whom we know to be addicted to either of the above evils, and that this decision take effect one year from date. [Adopted 1888.]"—General Conference Resolutions, p. 87.

"Whereas, the Quorum of Twelve deem it wisdom to appoint none as church missionaries who do not honor the Lord in 'avoiding the use of tobacco,' etc., as enjoined in the revelation of April, 1887, and whereas, branch and especially district presidents are important church servants, therefore be it resolved, that we do respectfully call the attention of all Saints to the propriety of observing the example of the Twelve in appointing such officers, especially where others equally competent are available who do thus honor the Lord. [Adopted 1892.]"—General Conference Resolutions, p. 94.

In 1898 the church readopted or reaffirmed the foregoing resolution adopted in 1892. From all of this it will be seen that the voice of the Lord by revelation and the voice of the church in General Conference in harmony with the divine provision that the "voice of the people" be heard, according to the law of "common consent," are clear and strong against the use of tobacco. The church has declared in plain words, in clear, unmistakable terms, without equivocation or mincing of words or dodging the responsibility, that "the use of tobacco is expensive, injurious, and filthy." We have been asked to make it plain, and trust we have done so; however, it is not difficult to do so, because the body has spoken so clearly and decidedly upon the matter.

The Utah Mormons held a conference in Nauvoo, September 30 to October 1, the first since the expulsion from Nauvoo nearly sixty years ago. They report a warm welcome from the citizens of Nauvoo. We understand that their efforts have been followed up by Heman C. Smith, Elbert A. Smith, and J. W. Peterson, and perhaps others not named, and the people are given an opportunity to learn the difference between Utah Mormonism and the Reorganized Church.

"He that by usury and unjust gain increaseth his substance, he shall gather it for him that will pity the poor. He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination. Whoso causeth the righteous to go astray in an evil way, he shall fall himself into his own pit; but the upright shall have good things in possession. The rich man is wise in his own conceit; but the poor that hath understanding searcheth him out. When righteous men do rejoice, there is great glory; but when the wicked rise a man is hidden. He that covereth his sins shall not prosper; but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy." "He that hasteth to be rich hath an evil eye, and considereth not that poverty shall come upon him. He that rebuketh a man, afterward shall find more favor than he that flattereth with the tongue." "The righteous considereth the cause of the poor; but the wicked regardeth not to know it." "When the wicked are multiplied, transgression increaseth; but the righteous shall see their fall."—Proverbs 28:8-13, 22, 23; 29:7, 16.

Beginning with the issue of September 22, 1905, the American Economist will supply its readers with a series of charts in supplement form, illustrating in convenient form facts and conditions attending the phenomenal progress of the United States from the foundation of the Government to the close of the fiscal year 1905. The information and data embodied in these charts are so arranged as to make them useful for future reference.

"Take the instant way;
For emulation hath a thousand sons,
That one by one pursue: if you give way,
Or edge aside from the direct forthright,
Like to an enter'd tide, they all rush by,
And leave you hindmost."

THE LABORERS.

For the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man, a householder, who went out early in the morning to hire laborers into his vineyard. And when he had agreed with the laborers for a penny a day, he sent them into his vineyard. And he went out about the third hour, and found others standing idle in the market-place and said unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard, and whatsoever is right, I will give you; and they went their way. And again he went out about the sixth and ninth hour and did likewise, and about the eleventh hour he went out and found others standing idle, and said unto them, Why stand ye here all the day idle? They said unto him, Because no man hath hired us. He said unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard; and whatsoever is right ye shall receive. So when even was come, the lord of the vineyard said unto his steward, Call the laborers and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first. And when they came that began about the eleventh hour, they received every man a penny. But when the first came, they supposed that they should have received more; and they likewise received every man a penny. And when they had received a penny, they murmured against the good man of the house, saying, These last have wrought one hour only, and thou hast made them equal unto us, who have borne the burden and the heat of the day. But he answered one of them, and said, Friend, I do thee no wrong; didst not thou agree with me for a penny? Take thine and go thy way; I will give unto this last even as unto thee. Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? Is thine eye evil because I am good? So the last shall be first, and the first last; and many are called, but few chosen.

This parable seems more correctly interpreted, when we use early morning, third, sixth, ninth, and eleventh hours, to mean different dispensations, or God's special dealings with man in different periods of the world's history. Criticism against using the parable to mean youth, middle age, and old age is apparent. Critically examined, for the parable to mean individual life, going out "early in the morning" would mean that the Lord hired men in their infancy, as that is "early in the morning" when it is used to represent individual life, which is not as reasonable an interpretation as the other. Again, "he went out about the eleventh hour, and found others standing idle." If we use the parable representing individual life, there is no provision made for hiring any man after the eleventh hour of his lifetime. Thus twelve hours would represent the day, or the allotted time for man's three score and ten years. The eleven hours is eleven twelfths of his time or near sixty-five years, and no provision of hiring at eleven and one half or three fourths, but about five years of man's time in his old age there is no call to repentance, no opportunity given. But if the Savior wanted us to understand it to mean individual life and if a man is called to repentance just before death, allowing seventy years as allotted time and twelve hours to a day, would he not have said, "He went out about the twelfth hour to hire laborers into his vineyard"? Not so when hours mean dispensations; and God hires men during the time of the dispensation. In giving the rewards he compares the first dispensation with the fifth dispensation. The murmuring against the good man of the house will be because the fifth-hour-dispensation people will receive equal reward with the people of the first dispensation, which is but natural, humanly considered.

The strongest point against the individual life theory and sustaining the dispensation interpretation, is contained in the statement, "So when even was come the Lord of the vineyard said unto his steward, Call the laborers and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first." It may not appear so at first, but in harmonizing it with the dispensation plan it becomes plain. "So when even was come,"—a stated time; one time when all are to be called to receive their pay. Here is comprehended the first resurrection and gives a reason for the murmuring.

And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held; and they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?—Revelation 6:9, 10.

Here is a state of unrest in heaven, among departed souls, while men are still on the earth,—a state of labor, "all the day long."

"The elements are eternal, and spirit and element, inseparably connected, receiveth a fullness of joy; and when separated, man can not receive a fullness of joy."—Doctrine and Covenants 90:5. We are here given to understand that the unresurrected righteous dead are in a sense laboring until the "even is come," "bearing the burden and heat of the day."

Concerning the dead we read:

Neither can they nor we be made perfect without those who have died in the gospel also; for it is necessary in the ushering in of the dispensation of the fullness of times; which dispensation is now beginning to usher in, that a whole, and complete, and perfect union, and welding together of dispensations, and keys, and powers, and glories should take place, and be revealed from the days of Adam even to the present time.—Doctrine and Covenants 110:18.

If, now, individual life was meant, in what manner does he, or has he, or can he call the servants together, "at eventime" in their lives, to reward them. Yet the parable arranges "eventime" of that day he was speaking about. "Eventime" of the day composed of dispensations, is the first resurrection, while there is no eventime for the aggregate of individual life.

The parable states, "And about the eleventh hour he went out, and found others standing idle, and said unto them, Why stand ye here all the day idle? They said unto him, Because no man hath hired us." Here is the one class that answers, "Because no man hath hired us." The reason, no doubt, was because no man had the right to do so. It was the fifth or our own dispensation, and no man held priesthood. They could readily say, "Because no man hath hired us." This is the only dispensation when there was no priesthood, and their answer was in harmony with right rules to govern, and completes the incident largely in harmony with the facts as they are.

There are three points we have noted that do not seem so reasonable, in accepting the individual life theory, viz:

1. Going out early in the morning to hire laborers.
2. Going out about the eleventh hour.
3. They were called at eventime of that day to receive their penny.

All the points in the parable do harmonize, with possibly one exception, with the dispensation interpretation as used by the brethren. I have therefore not fully noted that interpretation.

THE TEN VIRGINS.

Our Savior has given several parables in which he sets forth the kingdom of heaven, by symbol, metaphor, and allegory, seemingly so different in likeness that the careless reader attaches no importance to them; but the searcher for truth finds wonderful lessons hidden in every one, each representing a phase of time in which it makes advancement in growth. The mustard seed represents it in its small beginning; and the ten virgins represent it in the end. This last is a sort of summing up of the whole, and covers all the ground; and is most sublime. I do not know if the number ten has ever been referred to as having a meaning in this parable; but every metaphor in a parable has a meaning, and in this might mean the number of organizations believing in the same religious doctrine of Christ's second coming, for there are many others looking and longing for Christ's second coming to earth "in like manner as he went away" besides Latter Day Saints. And what preëminence has one of these honest believers over others who are as earnestly watching and waiting for that day? All must belong to, or be in some way a part of the ten virgins, and this parable concerns only the ten virgins.

But as there are various theories held concerning this parable, let us reason together in the bonds of love, and examine it closely; not follow man's leading, but take the word as we find it. Virgins denotes chastity and purity, not having been seduced nor led away into dark and intricate paths of vice and immorality, hence our Savior's choice of such a symbol to represent the kingdom of heaven.

What is the kingdom of heaven, of what interest is it to man, and how does it concern him in this present life? In the beginning of our Savior's ministry, he said to his followers, First seek ye the kingdom of heaven, and its righteousness and all these things (the needed things of this life) shall be added unto you. What a wonderful promise this is! And again he said, Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. What a beautiful presentation to us of our heavenly Father's love and care, showing that he is more willing to give than we are to receive. Should not we be interested in seeking so great a gift? This most important of all things to be sought after is possible of attainment here and now, or the Savior would not have told them to seek.

Again, he said, The kingdom of heaven cometh not with observation (is not visible to physical sight). Say not, Lo here, nor Lo there. Behold the kingdom of heaven is within you,—an exalted state of mind. And its attainment is within our own power. As many as believed on him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God. Paul said the kingdom of heaven is not meat, nor drink, but peace, joy, and righteousness in the Holy Ghost.

That which Paul called charity is conceded by all to be "divine love." "Love and righteousness," produce joy and peace of mind, that peace of mind that passeth the understanding of the natural mind of man. "There is a spirit in man [his natural mind, his intellect] and the inspiration of the Lord giveth them understanding," (quickens and illumines the mind with spiritual light and divine love—the oil of gladness).

Of the ten virgins, five were wise and five were foolish (not vicious or wicked, but just foolish). They all took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom. Now a lamp is a means provided to give light, and, in this parable, symbolizes the intellect, the mind. They that were foolish took their lamps and took no oil (no divine love) with them; but the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps, (took divine love in their conscience with their intellect).

"While the bridegroom tarried they all slumbered and slept." Are we sure we are not now in the slumbering-time? Do not be too sure.

"At midnight there was a cry made." Midnight denotes darkness, the hour of deepest sleep. Notwithstanding all our boasted enlightenment, the greater part of the world to-day is in midnight darkness as regards divine love and spiritual understanding. The Bible says there is to come a famine for the hearing the words of the Lord. All our wants in righteousness will be supplied as we have seen. That cry made at midnight, to my mind, implies a "want" for light, a famine for the hearing of the word of the Lord. So when the cry for God's love and light is made, we have a promise of supply in these words of our Savior, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled with the Holy Ghost." In response to that cry a light springs forth: "Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." The same motive in view as at the first starting; but, then they all went forth in self-confidence to meet the bridegroom. Now comes the word, "Go ye out to meet him" (go ye out of darkness into God's beautiful light, for light has come). "Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps," (examined their minds). The foolishness of self-sufficiency is made manifest. The foolish virgins become aware that they have no oil. Without that oil (the divine love, the power of all good) we can not meet him; for we can not be on the same basis of divine love with him, so can not be like him; and only as we are like him can we see him as he is.

The foolish virgins said unto the wise, "Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out." To my mind this would be an acknowledgement of their inability to understand God's spiritual light. The foolish virgins never had that oil in their lamps. The word says they took no oil with them when they started, though they all started on the same mission, and all took their lamps with them.

There are more points of interest in this parable that might be pointed out. The midnight cry has not yet been made. The foolish virgins have not asked oil of those who had. No famine has come for the hearing of the words of the Lord. God's love is not wanted. His light is considered foolishness. The leaven is still hid in the meal; but it is working, and will keep on working till the whole is leavened; for God's eternal truth is the leaven. If pressed to earth under ever so much rubbish or oppression, it will rise again.

In the hope of God's love and light prevailing,

"THE REFUGE OF LIES."

Does all Israel say amen to this?

President Smith then presented the authorities of the church. All the voting was unanimous with two exceptions. . . . Anthon Lund as Church Historian and Recorder. Andrew Jenson, Orson F. Whitney, A. Milton Musser, and Brigham H. Roberts, assistant historians.—Minutes "Seventy-fifth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," p. 22.

I have always regarded myself as properly respectful and attentive to church authority, in my labors in the church, whether in missionary or literary affairs. I have always consulted with the Presidency when communication was possible; and their wishes have been respectfully followed. All the manuscript of tracts or books of which I am the author, that have been written in advocacy or defense of the Mormon faith, have been invariably submitted to their personal inspection or to the inspection of committees appointed by them.—B. H. Roberts in Salt Lake Tribune, October 14, 1885.

This declaration must fix the responsibility for whatever of misrepresentation may be found in the writings of this one of the assistant historians, not only upon the Presidency of the "Mormon" church, but by the indorsement given by the body on April 6, 1905, as well as in previous conferences of the whole church. Are they prepared to carry that responsibility? Let us see.

Elder Roberts is the author of a little work entitled Succession in the Presidency of the Church; of which we believe—up to date—there have been two editions issued. The first in 1894 by the Deseret News Publishing Company, and the second in 1900 by Geo. Q. Cannon & Sons Pub. Co.

We are not intending in this article to enter into an argument either for or against the positions assumed by Elder Roberts in this work, but only to call attention to some plain misquoting and falsifying therein that those positions may be made to look plausible to his readers.

By these plain falsehoods the church represented by Elder Roberts is put in the unenviable position of one who either ignorantly or willfully sanctions falsehoods. Do they enjoy that position?

In the work referred to above, the edition of 1894, page 94, we find a quotation from the Autobiography of Parley P. Pratt, page 371 (but credited to page 361). In the quotation as given this occurs: "Go and say to my people in Nauvoo that they shall continue to pursue their daily duties, and take care of themselves, and make no movement in church government to organize or alter anything until the return of the remainder of the quorum of Twelve."

Evidently some one has found fault with or questioned the quotation as given here, for in the edition of 1900, page 96, we find the following:

"One other remark at this point, and one of a personal nature. In the course of struggling to find an argument to justify a 'reorganization' of the church, a passage I quoted from Parley P. Pratt's autobiography is seized upon, in which this occurs: "'Go and say unto my people in Nauvoo'" to "'make no movement in church government to reorganize or alter anything,'" etc. So the 'Reply' writer has it. I quoted it "'organize or alter anything.'" Whereupon the 'Reply' writer sets down this insinuation: "'We regret to notice that Mr. Roberts in quoting the above revelation omits the prefix 're' and makes it to read 'organize.' The copy of Pratt's Autobiography in my library is the second edition, 1888, and referring to the passage again, I find was quoted accurately by me, whatever difference may exist between that and any edition the 'Reply' writer may have quoted.'" And accordingly on page 98 of his book Elder Roberts continues to quote "organize," etc.

Now, Mr. Editor, the facts in the case, so far as we have been able to ascertain, are these: There never have been but two editions of the Autobiography of Parley P. Pratt, the first in 1874, and the last in 1888, and in each of these the passage controverted by these two writers occurs as given by the "Reply,"

"Make no movement in church government to reorganize, or alter anything," etc.—Page 371.

When Elder Roberts' attention was called to this misquotation, there was an avenue of escape for him by confessing a mistake: but as he poses as one of the living oracles, we suppose this would be incompatible with that claim, so he chooses rather to affirm a falsehood while knowing it to be such. How long will this people bear the insults of these men who, presuming upon the ignorance of the body or their willingness to uphold a falsehood, persistently commit them to false statements and false positions before the world?

John has said, "No lie is of the truth."—1 John 2: 21. How long will the Mormon church be in learning this lesson, and cease to sustain such men by the uplifted hand at their conferences? Echo answers, "How long?"

ADDING TO THE BIBLE, AND TAKING FROM IT.

Nephi says:

Thou seest the foundation of a great and abominable church, which is most abominable above all other churches; for behold, they have taken away from the gospel of the Lamb, many parts which are plain and precious; . . . thou seest because of the many plain and precious things which have been taken out of the book, which were plain unto the understanding of the children of men, according to the plainness which is in the Lamb of God; because of these things which are taken away out of the gospel of the Lamb, an exceeding great many do stumble, yea, insomuch that satan hath great power over them.—1 Nephi 3: 40.

Elder Lamb, in his Golden Bible, thinks that Nephi was mistaken here, and he undertakes to prove it. He says:

Such a piracy of Holy Scripture could not have occurred later than 350 A. D., because there are now in existence copies of the Bible . . . written out by hand not later than three hundred and fifty years after Christ, two hundred and fifty years after the death of the apostle John. There are four of these old manuscripts of the Bible, now in possession of scholars, known as the Alexandrian, the Vatican, the Ephraim, and the Sinaitic Manuscripts of the Bible, besides quite a number of fragments or portions of the Bible that are nearly as old. And these old copies of the Bible contain precisely the same books as are found in our Bible to-day, and no others; and precisely the same contents. If, therefore, a "great and abominable church" took out of the Bible its most precious and valuable portions, the theft must have occurred after the close of the first century, or the death of the apostle John, and previous to the year 350 A. D.—Golden Bible, p. 329; also Lamb's Mormons and Their Bible, pp. 83, 84.

HERE IS AN ORTHODOX OLD TESTAMENT AT 330 A. D.

Athanasius, the great champion of orthodoxy, 330 A. D., gives a list of the Old Testament books at that time in these words:

The books of the Old Testament are twenty-two, which is the number of the letters among the Hebrews: Genesis; Exodus; Leviticus; Numbers; Deuteronomy; Joshua; Judges; Ruth; Kings four, two books; Paralipomenon (Chronicles) two, one book; Esdras two, one book; Psalms; Proverbs, twelve; prophets, one book; and Isaiah, Jeremiah, with Baruch, Lamentations, and Epistles; Ezekiel and Daniel; then there are books uncanonical but readable,—the wisdom of Solomon, Sirach, Esther, Judith, Tobit, (See Stowe's Origin and History of the Bible, p. 572, and Testimonies of the Fathers by Carey.)

Do you see anything wrong in the above "Old Bible"? What does Athanasius mean here by putting "Baruch" and Jeremiah's epistles in his Bible, and leaving Esther out? How is that for a Bible at 330 A. D.? Is that "precisely" like ours?

And in self-defense for his Bible Athanasius says:

Since some persons have attempted to set in order the books that are called apocryphal, and to mix them with the divinely inspired Scriptures, of which we have been fully certified, as those who saw them from the beginning, and who, being ministers of the word, handed them down from our fathers, it seemed fitting to me, being exhorted thereto by the orthodox brethren, and having learned the truth, to set out in order the canonical Scriptures, which have been handed down, and are believed to be from God; that every one who has been deceived, may convict those who have led him astray.—Carey's Testimonies of the Fathers, p. 117; and Stowe's History of the Books of the Bible, p. 573.

NOW WE WILL SEE BISHOP HILLARY'S BIBLE, 350 A. D.

They are so arranged [says he] that there are five books of Moses; Joshua Nave, six; Judges and Ruth, seven; First and Second Kings, eight; third and fourth of Kings, nine; of Paralipomenon two, ten; book of days of Esdras, eleven; Solomon's Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Song of Songs, thirteen, fourteen, and fifteen [twelve he misses]; twelve prophets, sixteen; then Isaiah, Jeremiah with Lamentations and epistle, these and Daniel and Ezekiel and Job and Esther, make up the number of twenty-two books. Some are pleased to add Tobit and Judith, to make the number twenty-four, according to the letters of the Greek alphabet.—Stowe's History of the Books of the Bible, p. 574.

Reader, did you notice that list? We see that Bishop Hillary leaves out Baruch, but he counts Esther in. He, like Athanasius, counts in Jeremiah's Epistle. That hint about the Greek alphabet, and Tobit and Judith, is an eye-opener! According to this bishop's logic, if the Greeks had had thirty letters in their alphabet, likely they would have found that many canonical books. This very man counted in three books here, we see, as canonical, that are not in our Protestant Bible, viz: Jeremiah's Epistle, Tobit, and Judith; but he leaves out Athanasius' Baruch. Tobit and Judith are saved here just because the Greeks had two more letters in their alphabet than the Hebrews! Did you notice that, Bro. Lamb?

THE COUNCIL OF LAODICEA, 367 A. D.

The councils of Laodicea in the year 367, tells what books they had in their Old Testament at that time in this way:

The books of the Old Testament which must be read are: "Genesis of the world, Exodus from Egypt, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, Joshua son of Nave, Judges, Ruth, Esther, of Kings first and second, Esdras first and second, book of one hundred] and fifty Psalms, Proverbs of Solomon, Ecclesiastes, Song of Songs, Job, twelve prophets, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Baruch, Lamentations and Epistles, Ezekiel, Daniel."—History of the Canon; also Stowe's Books of the Bible, p. 576.

And this list, which includes the epistles of Jeremiah, was confirmed in the fourth general council of Chalcedon in 451 A. D. (See Stowe's History of the Books of the Bible, p. 576.)

ORIGEN'S OLD BIBLE.

Origen's list of the Old Testament includes Jeremiah's Epistle (in the singular). The date of his list is about 200 A. D. (See ibid., p. 570.)

These lists seem to prove that the fathers had a Bible with some books in it that are not found in King James' Translation, so that the Bible at 330 A. D., and at Laodicea at 367 A. D., and at Chalcedon 451 A. D., were not "like" ours "to-day"; and Elder Lamb must have erred here.

That the Jews had other authoritative or canonical books besides those given in the above lists is plainly seen by Josephus' Antiquities, book 3, chapter 16, paragraphs 1-4, and even from the Bible itself; for we see that the Bible writers quote from books as authoritative that have not come down to our day.

We know from a statement made in First Chronicles that "the acts of David the king, first and last," were written in the "book of Gad the Seer," and in the "book of Nathan the Prophet," and in the "book of Samuel the Seer." These three books, then (which we have not got), seem to be the primary authority for the Chronicles of David. (See 1 Chronicles 29:29.) And in like manner the writer of the first book of Kings draws from an author which he calls "the book of the acts of Solomon." (1 Kings 11:41.) And the author of the second book of Chronicles draws from three books in his history, viz: "The book of Nathan the Prophet," "The prophecy of Abijah the Shilonite," and "The vision of Iddo the Seer." (2 Chronicles 9:29.) The book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Israel and Judah cites the reader to no fewer than thirteen books which appear to have been used by him as canonical books. They are the books of seers and prophets, viz: Samuel, Nathan, Gad, Abijah, Iddo (in three books; one is a vision, the other is concerning genealogies, and one is the story or commentary of the prophets). (See 2 Chronicles 13:22; 12:15; 9:29.) He also quotes from others by the names of "Semaih" (ibid. 12:15), and "Jehu" (ibid. 20:34), and the acts of "Uzziah" by Isaiah (ibid. 26:22), and the "sayings of the seers" (ibid. 33:19). And then there is the book about Babylon (see Jeremiah 51:60), and the sealed book of Daniel (see Daniel 12:14).

All the above were authors (or books) of good enough repute to be read and quoted as witnesses by the Bible writers, and why not good enough for us? We see the chroniclers and prophets continually refer the reader to them (as would appear) for additional information. The facts are, the history of the Kings and the Chronicles rests upon the testimony of contemporary and competent writers whose separate books have not for some reason reached our day. Our Old Testament (Nephi says) is "a record like unto the engravings which are upon the plates of brass, save there are not so many." (1 Nephi 3:39.) That is, Nephi's Bible (which included the prophets down to Jeremiah) had more in it than we have in ours and we see how Nephi is confirmed by modern writers. For we are told that "many of the canonical books of the Scriptures have quite perished, and not so much as appeared in the days of the very ancient fathers; so that nothing but the names of the books are come unto us." (Question of Questions, sec. 1, par. 7.) Saint Chrysostom said that "many of the prophetic monuments have quite perished." Saint Justin said that "the Jews destroyed some prophetic books." Nephi we see was right then.

There is the book written by Jeremiah (see Jeremiah 36:2-32); the "book of the wars of the Lord" (Numbers 21:14); the book or law of Ephraim (see Hosea 8:12); the book of the manner of the kingdom (see 1 Samuel 10:25); the prophecy of Enoch quoted by Jude (see verse 14); the Epistles of Jeremiah, cited by the "Fathers"; Paul's Epistle to the Laodiceans (see Colossians 4:16); and Paul's Epistle to the Corinthians (see 1 Corinthians 5:9); also an epistle written by Jude (see Jude 1:3); together with the writings of seers and prophets and the chroniclers previously quoted, show that we have not got in our Protestant text of the Old and New Testament all the good books that have been written by inspired or good men.

JEROME'S REVISED BIBLE.

Jerome's version of the Bible was declared authentic by the Council of Trent.

It has, however, underwent several revisions, the two most remarkable of which were made by Popes Sextus V and Clement the VIII. Though the former of these pontiffs had affixed the seal of infallibility to the edition published under his auspices, it was ordered by his successor to be suppressed, as swarming with errors; and another equally infallible edition was brought out, differing from the former in upwards of two thousand instances.—Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, p. 233; and Critical History of the New and Old Testament Writers.

With reference to the New Testament text, Elder Lamb says:

"And these old copies of the Bible (that is the Alexandrian, Vatican, Ephraim, and Sinaitic manuscripts) contain precisely the same books as are found in our Bible to-day and none others, and with precisely the same contents.—Golden Bible, p. 329.

Let us see. The Alexandrian manuscript was written by an Egyptian lady between 325 and 350 A. D. (See History of the Books of the Bible, pp. 65, 66.) The Vatican manuscript is perhaps a quarter or a half century older than the Alexandrian. Several of its leaves have been lost. The Epistles to Philemon, Titus, and the two to Timothy, the latter part of the Epistle to the Hebrews, and the Apocalypse, are all wanting. As originally written it had neither ornamental capital letters, punctuations, accents, nor anything of the kind, though some have been added by later hands. (See ibid., p. 68.) See!

The Sinaitic manuscript was found in a basket of rubbish at St. Catharine's Convent on Mount Sinai. With it was the Epistle of Barnabas, and portions of the "Shepherd of Hermas." There are revisions and would-be corrections of the manuscript by later hands, beginning as early as the sixth century. It is the only ancient manuscript yet known which contains the Greek text entire without the loss of a leaf. (See ibid., p. 75.)

The Ephraim Manuscript: Of entire books which are missing are John two, Thessalonians two, "And there are wanting in the four gospels about thirty-seven chapters; in the Acts ten; in the Epistles forty-two; and in the Revelation eight." (Ibid., p. 75.)

In commenting on these very same old manuscript copies including the "Beza," which is another old copy, Professor Calvin E. Stowe says, "There are diversities among them, and divergencies from our common text, and these are to be frankly acknowledged. . . . No ancient Greek manuscript hitherto discovered contains 1 John 5:7, (viz.: "There are three that bear record in heaven," etc.) (History of the Books of the Bible, p. 78.)

Again he says: "Besides these divergencies between the older manuscripts and the modern text there are also divergencies among the older manuscripts themselves. . . . As compared with the common text the Vatican is remarkable for its condensations, the Beza for its amplifications."—Ibid., p. 79. Still worse!

How is that for Bro. Lamb's "old manuscripts"? These are the elder's witnesses which he introduces in his book to prove that the Book of Mormon is a fraud. He says those old manuscripts have precisely the same contents as our New Testament. Professor Stowe says, "There are diversities among them, and divergencies from our common texts," and "no ancient Greek manuscript hitherto discovered contains 1 John 5:7," thus proving that our text is a mutilated one, and confirming 1 Nephi 3:40.

The elder is evidently in error, because Bishop March says that Origen changed the text "before it reached the hands of the Council of Nice." Doctor Bentley admits that the best texts of the New Testament contain "hundreds of irreparable omissions, errors, and mistakes." Doctor Whitley says, "Many corruptions and interpolations were made almost in the apostolic age." In comparing our text with the ancient Hebrew, Bishop Lowth notices as many as

"fifty omissions" in Isaiah "all owing to the carelessness of the transcriber."

Will the reader please turn to the book of Nahum 2:8-13? We will quote the same passage as given by Josephus:

Nineveh shall be a pool of water in motion; so shall all her people be troubled and tossed, and go away by flight; while they say one to another, stand still, sieze their gold and silver, for there be no one to wish them well, for they will rather save their lives than their money; for a terrible contention shall possess them one with another, and lamentation and loosing of the members, and their countenances shall be perfectly black with fear. And there shall be the den of the lions, and the mother of the young lions. God says to thee, Nineveh, that they shall deface thee, and the lion shall no longer go out from thee to give laws to the world.—Antiquities, book 9, chap. 11, par. 3.

In a foot-note to this passage it is said that Josephus "made use of the Hebrew original (and not the Greek version); as also we learn that his Hebrew copy considerably differed from ours; see all three texts particularly set down and compared together, in the essay on the Old Testament." Here is an admission by Whiston that the Hebrew original considerably differed from our text.

Alexander Roberts says, "Every new manuscript which is discovered increases the amount of different readings." The varieties of readings are reckoned from thirty thousand to one hundred and fifty thousand. Do not we see, then, that it would take a prophet or a god to tell which is correct?

What we call the original text of the New Testament (in English) was first given to the world in 1516. In 1518 that edition was reprinted with about two hundred corrections; and in 1519 the author of the first edition issued a third with about "three hundred corrections."

The different readings in the manuscripts used by Robert Stevens in his editions of 1546 and 1549 amounted, it is said, to twenty-one hundred and ninety-four.

Beza published five editions of the New Testament. "These varied somewhat among themselves." Our common English translation was derived from the above versions, chiefly from Beza's fourth edition of 1589. And for this reason our "common text," as Professor Stowe says, is not like the oldest manuscripts! And "there are also divergencies [Professor Stowe says] among the older manuscripts themselves." The oldest manuscripts are but copies, and not the original copies, and none have a pedigree older than the third or fourth century.

Doctor Roberts says, "The authors [of copies] in some few instances from doctrinal bias seem to have departed from the original text."—The Bible Whence and Where, p. 17.

With reference to the present text Dupin says, "Several authors took the liberty to add, retrench, and correct divers things." Victor Willson informs us that some changes were made in the gospels at Constantinople in the year 506 A. D., by order of the emperor Anastasius. Alexander Campbell said, "The mother of harlots changed even the Bible itself." Saint Jerome complains that "Origen had corrupted the text." Scaliger testifies that "the text was corrupted." Michaelis says, "They thrust in, and thrust out, as best suits fancy." And after Bishop Usher had looked up the different readings in the Greek manuscript, he is said to have found such an innumerable number of different readings that had he revised them in print it would have rather made men atheistical than satisfy them in the true reading. William Penn said, "There are many errors in the Bible. The learned know it, the unlearned had better not know it." (See Simonton's Critical History, Carey's Testimonies of the Fathers, Historical Criticism of the Old and New Testament Writers, Debates in the Councils, History of the Canon, Christian System, and Encyclopedia of R. K.)

The immortal Quaker said that there were many errors in the Bible and the learned knew it, the unlearned had better not know it!! Why, William, — ah!

Mr. Penn knew that the clergy had taught the people (the unlearned) that the Bible was the pure word of God to a dot, and he also knew that if the unlearned found out the real facts in the case, they would likely not only look at the fathers with suspicion, but would probably doubt the claim of inspiration made for it. So that here we see, to the unlearned ignorance was bliss!

Elder Hancock of the Church of Christ, in his comments on this same quotation of Nephi 3:40, says, "The fact is, the statement concerning the Bible in the quotation is as false as was ever uttered. This is strong language, but we have a severe case and strong medicine is needed."—Mormonism Exposed, chap. 2, p. 11.

That is, Nephi (or rather Spalding?) is guilty of uttering a very great falsehood, and Bro. Hancock is not backward about telling him so, thus giving him a dose of strong medicine. Now, Bro. Hancock, what about Bro. Alexander Campbell, Bentley, Roberts, Dupin, Willson, Jerome, Scaliger, Michaelis, Usher, Carey, Stowe, William Penn, et al? Are they guilty of telling great falsehoods, too? Were these men in league with Spalding? What interest have these men in testifying in Spalding's behalf, other than to tell the truth?

The text, then, was "changed," and that is what Nephi says,—certain parts were "kept back." Saint Jerome says, "Origen had corrupted text." Scaliger says, "The text was corrupted." Michaelis says, "They thrust in and thrust out." Roberts says, "From doctrinal bias some have departed from the original text." Victor Willson says, "Some changes were made in the gospel at Constantinople." And William Penn says, "There are many errors in the Bible. The learned know it, the unlearned had better not know it." All of these are in harmony with 1 Nephi 3:40.

Spalding's story may have been "a silly romance"; and Nephi may have told very great falsehoods, and all of that; but Bro. Hancock will see that they told the truth in 1 Nephi 3:40.

And then the Romanists have some fourteen books in their Bibles that Protestants reject. For this reason Rome spurns the Protestant Bible as a mutilated one. Protestants on the other hand show their teeth to their mother or grandmother, and declare that she has canonized spurious books, and hence has a corrupt text. "And in respect to the Vulgate, what signifies the affirmation of its authenticity while the different editions vary so much from each other, and no one of these is pointed out as the correct one?"—History of the Books of the Bible, by Stowe, p. 563.)

And our text is defective as would appear from the following reading: Compare Acts 9:7 with Acts 22:9. In one place it says that those journeying with Paul heard the voice that spake; but in the other, that they heard not the voice of him that spake. That is, one reading says that the men that journeyed with Paul "heard the voice" that spake; the other reading says "they heard not the voice of him that spake." Now, who can tell whether those men heard that voice or not? So we "stumble."

Another thing which we notice is, that the several evangelists, in narrating the same circumstances, or reporting the same discourse, seldom or never employ exactly the same words; but seem rather to give the sense—slightly varied. For instance, what did the voice from heaven say at Christ's baptism? Matthew says, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Mark says, "Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Luke reports the message this way: "Thou art my beloved Son; in thee I am well pleased." According to Matthew the voice was speaking to John, or those standing by, but according to Mark and Luke it was speaking to the Son. So we stumble.

Again, what were the words of the superscription on the cross? Matthew says they were, "This is Jesus the king of the Jews." Mark says, "The king of the Jews." Luke says, "This is the king of the Jews." But John says the words were, "Jesus of Nazareth the king of the Jews."

A like variation is often observable in the quotations of the same passage of the Old Testament by the different writers of the New. For example, compare Deuteronomy 8:3 and 6:13, as quoted by Matthew 4:4, 10 and by Luke 4:4. In Luke 4:4 he reports Jesus as saying, "It is written, That man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God." But Matthew gives these words: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Moses gives it this way: "Man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord doth man live." In Deuteronomy 6:13 it reads, "Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God, and serve him, and shalt swear by his name." In Matthew this is quoted, "worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." Some stumble at this class of readings, because we have been taught that the Scriptures were inspired, and we think to be inspired they should be verbatim quotations.

But these texts seem to prove that the writers were trusting to memory or tradition. Inspiration no doubt assisted and coöperated with the men by predisposing the mind and suggesting the thought, but it left the men free to supply their own words. It was history they were writing, and each one of the evangelists drew from the past, or what they had heard some one else say.

Matthew was an eye-witness of some things he relates, but between the events and writing them there were from seven to twelve years. (See History of the Books of the Bible, p. 165.) He wrote his gospel in Hebrew, and to the Hebrews. Mark wrote his gospel at the request of Roman converts as the interpreter of Peter. (See Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, book 3, chap. 39, and book 5, chap. 8.) And a year or two after Matthew wrote his.

Luke wrote his gospel about the time that Mark wrote his. He was a Gentile by birth, and wrote it for a Greek pagan convert, as the interpreter of Paul. (See Eusebius 6:25.) John wrote his gospel some sixty years after the death of our Savior while at Ephesus to refute the heretic Cerinthus and the Ebionites. (See History of the Books of the Bible, p. 196.) So that there was a local demand for each one of the gospels at the time that they were first written. Each one followed out different lines of thought, and related the facts as they remembered them or had heard them related.

But another class of difficulties which "involves the text" is found in this way: One text says that the ark was made of gopher wood, but the Arabic says that it was made of boxwood, while the Persian Bible says it was made of pine wood. Another translation says that it was made of red ebony; still another says it was made of wickwork; and another that it was made of cedar wood! (See Bible of Bibles.)

And still another class of difficulties is:

1. And the Lord said unto Moses, See, I have made thee a god to Pharaoh; and Aaron thy brother shall be thy prophet.—Exodus 7:1.

Moses here, we see, is a god, and Aaron is Moses' (that is "god's") prophet! Does that sound just right?

2. And I will harden Pharaoh's heart, that he shall follow after them [the Israelites]; and I will be honored upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host; that the Egyptians may know that I am the Lord. And they did so. . . . And the Lord hardened the heart of Pharaoh king of Egypt, and he pursued after the children of Israel; and the children of Israel went out with a high hand. . . . The children of Israel walked upon dry land in the midst of the sea; and the waters were a wall unto them on their right hand, and on their left.—Exodus 14:4, 8, 29.

But when the Egyptians got into the water and were still pursuing the Israelites, God commanded Moses to stretch his hand over the sea, "And the waters returned, and covered the chariots, and the horsemen, and all the host of Pharaoh that came into the sea after them; there remained not so much as one of them."—Exodus 14:28.

That is, God hardened Pharaoh's heart, that he should follow after the Israelites; and God also hardened the hearts of the Egyptians and they also followed them, because God put them up to it. He was at the bottom of the whole transaction. He was prompting this work, and the Egyptians while "following" got drowned. Now who was responsible for their death? Was Pharaoh a free moral agent here?

3. Here is another one that we stumble over:

Ye shall not eat of any thing that dieth of itself: thou shalt give it unto the stranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat it; or thou mayest sell it unto an alien.—Deuteronomy 14:21.

Dear reader, does that sound just right? Would you like to take the place of the stranger, or alien among the Jews?

4. Neither shalt thou countenance a poor man in his cause.—Exodus 23:3.

This is the law to the judge in Israel, and upon this text is built our civil law, and for this reason mainly a man has to give "bond for appearance," or take his chances in jail, if he fails to give a bond for appearance. That may be all right, but why say, "a poor man"? Why single out the poor man?

5. Paul is reported as saying:

All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not.—1 Corinthians 10:23.

Are we to understand by this that Paul was above the law, and had a right to do as he pleased? If so, where and how did he get that right?

6. Then said Jesus unto them again, Verily, verily, I say unto you, I am the door of the sheep. All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers: but the sheep did not hear them.—John 10:7, 8.

The Bible prophets, then, were thieves and robbers? Ah!

7. And if the prophet be deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I, the Lord, have deceived that prophet, and I will stretch out my hand upon him, and will destroy him from the midst of my people Israel.—Ezekiel 14:9.

If a prophet is deceived, the Lord is responsible for it? The Lord deceived him? Does that sound just right?

Scores of such texts might be cited, which appear to be defective, because they misrepresent God and his Son and the prophets. The Bible is represented as telling the Israelites to feed the strangers on something that is unfit to eat, and many infidels have taken shelter behind that text to "berate the God of the Jews." The Son is misrepresented where it says that "all that ever came before me are thieves and robbers." He himself appealed to some that came before him, to prove his own mission and sonship.

Doctor Bentley says that there are "hundreds of irreparable omissions, errors, and mistakes" in our text. Now, how are they to be corrected? Or are we to be for ever in this condition? Can they be corrected without revelation? It is right here where Joseph Smith's Inspired Translation comes in,—the text corrected by inspiration. Let us notice a few of the texts as corrected in his translation:

Acts 9:7 and 22:9 are made to read alike, in that the men "heard not the voice of him who spake."

In Exodus 7:1 Moses is a prophet to Pharaoh, and not "a god," and Aaron is a spokesman for Moses, not "his prophet." That is more reasonable.

In Exodus 14, Pharaoh and the Egyptians harden their hearts, hence they were "free agents," and they followed the Israelites at their own risk, and thus God is relieved from "seeking a pretext," as infidels say, to get a chance to destroy them! Do you see?

In 1 Corinthians 10:23, instead of its reading that all things are lawful for Paul, it reads that "all things are not lawful for me." That is reasonable.

Deuteronomy 14:21 reads, "Ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself; thou shalt not give it unto the stranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat it; or thou mayst not sell it unto an alien." That destroys the infidels' stronghold!

Ezekiel 11:9 reads: "And if the prophet be deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I the Lord have not deceived that prophet."

John 10:8 says, "All that ever came before me who testified not of me are thieves and robbers." Quite a difference, we see.

In Exodus 23:3 where it says, "Neither shalt thou countenance a poor man in his cause," Mr. Smith's translation reads, "Neither shalt thou countenance a wicked man in his cause."

Exodus 22:18 reads, in the common text, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live"; but in Mr. Smith's it reads, "Thou shalt not suffer a murderer to live." These corrections made in Mr. Smith's translation, even if there is "no inspiration about it," as some say, there are other good points which do commend it, viz: it is humane and just.

But there is, we are told, a prohibitory clause in the Bible, which has direct reference to such men as Joseph Smith, "who claim inspiration," which settles this question of inspiration and revelation for all ages to come. We are told that "there is sufficient in the Bible to guide us to heaven" without the aid of the Book of Mormon. "Paul said so to Timothy," viz: That from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation. Yes, Paul said so to Timothy; but what Scriptures had Timothy known from childhood? The New Testament Scriptures were not yet made in Timothy's childhood! So it must have been the Old Testament that was able to point Timothy the right way to Christ. Second, this anathema is quoted:

For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book; and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book.—Revelation 22:18, 19.

This text is said "to shut out" both the Book of Mormon and Mr. Smith's inspiration, and it is interpreted as a "divine notice" that then and for ever the divine revelation was complete, and "the canon of scripture was full." Is that right? Let us see. John wrote his gospel and epistles after this. (See Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, book 3, chap. 18, 23, 31, 39.) And Jerome says:

The apostle John, whom Jesus especially loved, the son of Zebedee, and the brother of the apostle James, whom Herod beheaded after the passion of our Lord, wrote the gospel last of all, being called thereto by the bishops of Asia, against Cerinthus and other heretics; and especially the dogmas of the Ebionites, who assert that Christ did not exist before Mary. . . . He wrote this gospel in Asia after he had written the Apocalypse in the island of Patmos.—History of the Books of the Bible, p. 196.

Jerome was one of the most learned and productive authors of the early Latin church, and was born at Dalmatia about 331 A. D. What do we learn from him? He shows that John himself "added" the "gospel according to Saint John," after he had pronounced his "anathema" unto every man. Did he set a trap and catch himself in it? Will the plagues be poured out upon him? Will his part be taken out of the "Lamb's book of life"? What made him add other books after the "divine notice" had been given that the "canon of scripture was full," and "the divine revelation was perfected"? According to that view, John would better have remained on Patmos.

John's anathema refers to men who add words of their own to the text, and who, as Michaelis says, "thrust in and thrust out as best suits fancy"; or as Dupin says, "take the liberty" to "add" or to "retrench" "certain things." These are the very men that John had in prophetic view.

Would not any court, construing the expression of the purpose of an individual or book, consider the whole case of which that expression is a part? That would be only just and fair. Moses gave the same advice in his day, viz: "Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish aught from it."—Deuteronomy 4:2. That is, man was not to "thrust" into the text his own words, nor "thrust" out God's words, as we see has been done in the New Testament. That this is the proper view is seen by the fact that Moses himself added about thirty chapters after this caution was given. In fact nearly the entire Bible has been "added" since man received the "divine notice" not to add!

Solomon, like Moses, gave the same advice, viz: "Every word of God is pure. . . . Add thou not unto his words."—Proverbs 30: 5, 6. Yet men kept on writing books which make up our "Old Bible," adding book after book. But according to Bro. Lamb's logic, this adding was all wrong. His construction of Revelation 22:18, 19, lands all the Bible writers in the bad place! But when we construe it in the light of all the rest of the Bible writers, we see it bars man, not God, from adding.

The New York Weekly Witness, and later on the Ram's Horn and Zion's Ensign, in August, 1900, said:

Many Christians rewrite the Bible to suit themselves; or, rather, they read their own fancies into it; and imagine that they are studying how to adapt its teachings to their own ideas; and the people who do this are not conscious of irreverence toward God and toward his truth simply because they are fully impressed with the idea that they are honestly seeking the truth. So they are, no doubt, after a fashion; but they are seeking to evolve truth out of their own inner consciousness instead of trying to open their hearts and minds to the truth of God—the truth which is eternally true and superior to all human thinking; which is, in fact, the basis of all true thinking.

That is, we read into it what is not there, and read out of it what we think should not be in it, so that we add to it and diminish from it right along according to the "tradition of the elders."

The chronological arrangement of the sacred writings of the New Testament, as given in the Sunday School Journal and Bible Student's Magazine for October, 1901, is as follows:

- First Thessalonians, 52 A. D.
- Second Thessalonians, 52 or 53 A. D.
- First Corinthians, 57 A. D.
- Second Corinthians late in the same year, 57, or early in 58 A. D.
- The Galatian letter, about 58 A. D.
- The Roman letter, 58 A. D.
- Matthew's Gospel, between 58 and 60 A. D.
- Luke's Gospel, between 58 and 60 A. D.
- Mark's Gospel, between 63 and 70 A. D.
- Acts of the Apostles, about 61 or 63 A. D.
- Philippian letter, about 62 A. D.
- Colossian letter, about 63 A. D.
- Ephesian letter, about 63 A. D.
- The letter to Philemon, about 63 A. D.
- First letter to Timothy, 63–66 A. D.
- Epistle to Titus, 66 A. D.
- Second letter to Timothy, 67 A. D.
- James' Epistle, about 61 or 62 A. D.
- First Peter, about 67 A. D.
- Second Peter, altogether uncertain.
- Jude's letter, altogether uncertain.
- Hebrews, about 68 A. D.
- John's Revelation, about 68 A. D.
- John's Gospel, about 90 A. D.
- First, Second, and Third Epistles of John, about 95 A. D.

The same magazine for June, 1901, contains an excellent paper on the writings of the apostle John, written by Farrar. He says the gospel was written twenty-two years after the Revelation, and that his epistles were written still seven years later. So that the caution not to "add," of Revelation 22: 18, 19, can not possibly be what Bro. Lamb and some others say it is—a divine notice to shut off more revelations, —because the apostle John wrote his gospel and his epistles after he had given this "divine notice not to add." The caution seems to mean that God will do the adding, and that man is to obey. Otherwise we would have no Bible at all, for nearly all of it has been written since Moses gave notice not to "add."

Again, there were three gospels already written before the apostle John wrote his, viz.: Matthew, Mark, and Luke. What made John "add" one more? The facts seem to be about like this: First, Matthew wrote the gospel for the Jews; and he devoted himself to applying to Christ the prophecies of the Old Testament in order to convince the Jews, who believed them, that Christ was the Messiah, and that in his person the predictions of their prophets had been fulfilled. Second, Mark wrote the gospel at Rome as the "interpreter of Peter," for the pagan converts. His object was to prove that Christ was the sovereign Master of all things. He therefore devoted his efforts to a recital of his works which show his divine power. Third, Luke wrote the gospel more particularly for Theophilus, a pagan convert, as the "interpreter of Paul," and as more especially adapted for the Greek converts. Quite different from Matthew, he traces the genealogy of Jesus through his mother Mary to Adam; his design was to prove that Jesus of Nazareth is the true Savior of men. Fourth, after three gospels had thus been written, John wrote one more, "being encouraged by his friends," "the bishops of Asia," to refute the heretic Cerinthus and "the dogmas of the Ebionites," who assert that Christ did not exist before Mary. For this reason John commences with, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." —Common version.

Mr. Smith's translation here reads, "In the beginning was the gospel preached through the Son. And the gospel was the word, and the word was with the Son, and the Son was with God, and the Son was of God. The same was in the beginning with God." And that was just what the Corinthians, Ebionites, and Valentinians did not believe.

Well, then, what use have we for the gospel again (in the Book of Mormon)? "What place does it and the book occupy in the Christian theory?" It occupies its own place, like each one of the gospels and books of the Bible. It contains the word of God as revealed and taught to Americans in ancient times. It reveals to us who the American Indians are, and from whence their forefathers came, and who were the ancient city-builders in America. It was the Bible to them, written to the Lamanites (the Indians), who are a remnant of the house of Israel; and also to Jew and Gentile; "written by way of commandment and also by the spirit of prophecy and of revelation. Written, and sealed up, and hid up unto the Lord, that they might not be destroyed: to come forth by the gift and power of God unto the interpretation thereof; sealed by the hand of Moroni, and hid up unto the Lord, to come forth in due time by way of Gentile; the interpretation thereof by the gift of God . . . and also to the convincing of the Jews and Gentiles that Jesus is the Christ, the eternal God manifesting himself unto all nations." And that he lives again, and was seen alive by men in America after his crucifixion; and the record of his ministry was kept by just men for our good, that we might believe, that is "the place" that the Book of Mormon occupies. It is another witness for Jesus, that he lives for evermore.

And what Bro. Spalding (?) says about our text of the Bible is too true, and is confirmed by the very best authorities, viz; Bishop Usher, Jerome, Carey, Roberts, Bishop March, Doctor Bentley, Doctor Whitly, Dupin, Laufrane, Archbishop of Canterbury, Eusebius, Willson, Scaliger, Michaelis, Stowe, Daille, Doctor Gregory, Mosheim, Alexander Campbell, and William Penn. "There are many errors in the Bible," said Mr. Penn. "The learned know it." Again he says some of the scriptures "which were taken in [to the Bible] by one council as inspired were rejected by another council as uninspired; and that which was left out by the former council as apocryphal was taken in by the latter as canonical. And certain it is that they contradict each other. And how do we know that the council which first collected and voted on the scriptures—voting some up and some down—were able to discern the true from the false?" Who will answer him?

The fathers did not know what books were inspired. If they had, they would not have voted them up and down, or in the canon, and then out again, or make the inspired books of the Old Testaments at one time to fit the Hebrew alphabet consisting of twenty-two letters, and others to make them fit the Greek alphabet consisting of twenty-four letters.

Neither do we know the meaning of the present text. One says it means this, and another says it means that; one says, Lo here; another says, Lo there. So we stumble.

"The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." Yes, but who is the interpreter of the law? We boast of our civil liberty and independence. We say that we are protected in our person and property by safeguards which nothing can take away; but what are those safeguards? You answer, in the law of the land, and the Constitution which is over us. You say your property can not be taken from you, nor your good name, nor your person injured, because the law protects you. But only reflect that the laws and the constitution of a country are only, and mean only, what the judge says they are and mean; and that if he chooses to pervert them, and misinterpret them, our boasted security is gone in an instant. This can not be otherwise; because the law must have an interpreter, and that interpreter is the judge. The law speaks only by the lips of the judge; otherwise it is silent.

So with the divine law, or the perfect law of liberty, —the gospel law. It must have an interpreter. It speaks only through the lips of its ministers, like the civil law speaks by the judge. Now, who are the interpreters of the gospel law? It is the pope, it is Bro. Lamb, or ministers of our different denominations, each denomination interpreting for their church. We see that our civil liberties are as tender as a spider's web, because they are only what the judge says they are. We can not interpret the civil law for ourselves. The courts are appointed to do that for us. So with the gospel law. It must have an interpreter, and is supposed to mean what the preacher says it does, because he is the ordained channel by which the law is made operative. And no matter how much they differ in the rendition of the law in other things, they all tell us that "he that believeth not will be damned." Now then, if some choose to "thrust into" the text their own thought, as to what should by right be in it, or "thrust out" what they do not want in, so as to "retrench certain things," what else but stumbling can we expect? We see that the divine law is like the civil law, left to man to interpret; and if they choose to pervert its meaning, we are helpless, and left to go our own way. In such a condition, we find good advice in James 1:5, viz.: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."

But we are told that "the pope is of so great authority and power that he can modify, declare, or interpret the divine law. . . . The pope can sometimes counteract the divine law by limiting, explaining, etc." (Ferrari's Ecclesiastical Dictionary under the word papa, article two.—A papal authority). Limit.—To set bounds to; to confine within certain bounds. Modify.—To change the form of. Counteract.—To act in opposition.—(Webster's Abridged Dictionary.)

Now we are told that the pope can do that, because he is so great and has so much power. That is the gospel according to Rome; but in another place we read, "But there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed."—Galatians 1:8, 9. According to Rome the pope can modify or counteract the divine law. But according to Paul neither we nor an angel from heaven can.

The Council of Trent in its session of 1546 A. D., said:

In order to restrain petulant minds, the council decrees that in matters of faith and morals, and what even relates to the maintenance of Christian doctrine, no one, confiding in his own judgment, shall dare to wrest the sacred Scriptures to his own sense of them, contrary to that which hath been held, and still is held by holy mother church, whose right it is to judge of the true meaning.

That is, the mother church (or the pope for the church) can modify or counteract the divine law, Paul and his teaching to the contrary notwithstanding! Just think of a civil judge setting up such a claim! But, then, the pope is so "great"—oh, yes, but that causes many to stumble.

Pliny says that the ancients manufactured "malleable glass," "which, if thrown upon the ground and dented, could be pounded straight again by the hammer," so the pope, we see, can hammer the divine law into the shape he needs it. No danger of breaking the divine law, not at all! It is malleable, like Pliny's glass. Just squeeze it into the shape you want it, and never mind Paul or his angels from heaven, because that upper world has lost jurisdiction in this world of ours (?) we are going our own way now!

But Protestants will not submit to the pope's limiting, modifying, counteracting, or interpreting. No, no. So they read, and judge, and interpret the law for themselves, although the Council of Trent forbade it, declaring that the "mother church" was the one whose right it is to judge of its true meaning. And Protestants do not agree among themselves as to its meaning, as may be seen by their difference in teaching, organization, doctrine, and practice. For this reason, also, many stumble, not knowing where to go to be right. And they can see that Christianity is divided against itself and that there is something wrong with it. Is Christ divided?

And is it any wonder that "Christians are becoming cold," and "losing faith in the pulpit"? Just think of suffering humanity, in poverty and rags (many of them), reading of "a certain noted evangelist" riding through the land in a "special car," and drawn from the depot to where the doctors of divinity were in session, in a "luxurious carriage behind four beautiful white horses." Think of such ministers, and compare them with their Lord who died for them, resting by the wayside ("being wearied") against the curb of Jacob's well, near Sychar; yet part of the money by which such "noted evangelists" pay their bills is squeezed out of the hard earnings of the poor, who have to walk to church with tired feet and bleeding hearts, because they can hardly live and pay their rent. What else but "cold" Christians can we expect, when we see such divines "so great" that Jesus Christ's overcoat would not make one of them a vest-pattern? Such divines appear more like autocrats than followers of the meek and lowly Jesus.

General Butler once attended a political convention, in which a Unitarian divine, James Freeman Clarke by name, was a delegate, who said when discussing the subject of candidates, that if a certain nomination were made he would bolt the ticket. "Very likely," Butler blurted out; "you are good at bolting; in your religion you bolt two thirds of the Trinity."

And so it is with other divines. One group of ministers bolts this part of primitive Christian teachings; another group bolts that part; and in this it is like the canonical books of the Bible—we do not know which one of the bolters is the right one.

"That apostate church—Babylon the great," says Alexander Campbell, "the mother of harlots—changed even the Bible itself and the whole entire diction of the Christian institution, the apostolic constitution or covenant."—Christian System, p. 178.

Elders Lamb, Hancock, et al., jump onto Spalding (?) with both feet for saying that certain parts of the text had been kept back. Now, why do not they pitch into Brn. Campbell, Origen, March, Bentley, Roberts, Whitly, Jerome, Stowe, Scaliger, Michaelis, Carey, Usher, Penn, et al.? Why not?

We see that the writer of the Book of Mormon had his eye on the right place as usual. In fact he appears to have had two sets of eyes, viz.: one set in his face like other people, and one set behind his head with which to look backward! Could Mr. Spalding see like that? We see that Spalding (?) is confirmed in what he says about the text.

It is said that the seven cities in which Homer begged his bread, raised monuments to his honor when dead.

Elder Lamb says that "Spalding failed as a preacher," and "failed as a blacksmith." But we see that he was a success as a "seer." He saw that the fathers had hammered the divine law into this shape and that shape (like the ancients hammered their malleable glass) to retrench certain things.

Spalding is said to have been "poor." His story was nothing but "a silly romance which in some unknown way fell into the hands of Joe Smith." (Talmage) Why not build a monument to Spalding, then, for setting the world to thinking? Homer became famous as a poet in his later life. So Spalding became famous as an author in his "dotage." Homer begged his bread, and "poor" Spalding begged for credit. Homer set the ancients to singing, and Spalding set the modern divines to thinking.

Some ministers, General Butler says, "bolt two thirds of the Trinity." Some bolt water baptism as not essential; some bolt Holy Spirit baptism as not needed now; nearly all bolt apostles and prophets, though it pleased God to set such ministers in his church. The primitive Christian church was God's. It was built according to heavenly pattern. The Son was sent from heaven to teach its doctrine (see John 8:42; 6:38, 39) and set up a heavenly institution on earth. God did this without consulting humanity. We had no voice or vote in the matter. Michaelis says that the ancients thrust into and out of the text as best suited fancy; but we go farther than they did in this matter, because apostles and prophets, etc., are in the text. We "thrust" them out of the church. We will not have them. We condone what the ancients did in thrusting in and out of the text, and we go them one better; for we thrust out of the church many things that are found in the text. Thus we thrust in or out of the church as best suits fancy. We treat the Christian constitution as we do a political platform. Now we have a right to amend a political platform, because it is a human product, but the plan of salvation, and the institution called the church, are not human, but divine. They have no human pedigree, because man can not save himself. He must have divine help. The gospel plan is not ours. It was not made in Jerusalem, nor Rome, nor London; but it was made in heaven (see John 12:49, 50), and a heavenly messenger was sent from that better country to teach it to humanity. But we bolt apostles and prophets and spiritual gifts as out of date. Some ministers bolt the laying on of hands for the heavenly blessing, and for the gift of the Holy Spirit, and ordination of ministers. In fact many ministers now discard the New Testament doctrine of the laying on of hands, except to lay their hands on their salaries. That part of the minister's duty (?) is not done away. Some ministers try to read into the book what is not there. Others try to read out what is in it. And the people are expected to pay the preacher and take what they give.

Speaking after the manner of men: A person while alive may change his own will by adding to it, or taking from it; but who would think of changing a dead person's will? An executor can not change a testator's will. If he did, it would not be the testator's, but the executor's will. When a testator is dead we sometimes break the will by getting a court to set it aside; but the court does not change the will. If it did it would be the court's will, and not the testator's. So we dare not change a dead man's will. Paul says, "Brethren, I speak after the manner of men; though it be but a man's covenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth, or addeth thereto."—Galatians 3:15.

"Then said he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second. By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all."—Hebrews 10:9, 10. "For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second."—Hebrews 8:7. The first will was set aside, then, because it was not perfect. A second will was made and becomes of binding force because the testator is dead, "for a testament is of force after men are dead: otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth." (Hebrews 9:17.) No man disannulleth, or addeth to a man's will. Why should we, then, strike out, or add to the divine will? Is it like the first will—faulty? If so, can the executors amend it?

Moses said, "Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish aught from it."—Deuteronomy 4:2. The first covenant was faulty, but notwithstanding that, the people were notified to keep their hands off. But we are "so great" (like the pope) that we interpret the divine law by counteracting and modifying to suit our own will. Thus it is becoming by degrees ours and not the Lord's will; because we are amending it to our own sweet notion. Would not it be better to let the Lord amend his own will? We do not know whether he approves of all our amendments or not; but we are very good to him, because we give him credit for all we do. We get in our work, and then call it the Lord's. And, like ancient Israel, we "lean upon the Lord, and say, Is not the Lord with us?"

We also make a church once in a while, when we fall out with the old congregation or its ministers; and we brand the church, that we have made, with Christ's name, though Christ had nothing to do with making it. This, too, makes many to stumble, because the people hear the churches denounce and berate one another, and call one another names.

Some Protestants go back hundreds of years to denounce and condemn papal indulgences; and at the very time they do it, their own bread and butter is made in part, by selling pews, or renting pews at fancy prices, and an assessment of so much per head on their congregations. "And the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money."—Micah 3:11. And the poor stumble.

Need we wonder, then, that Christians are becoming cold, and that infidels, skeptics, come-outers, and even religious anarchists are increasing, who deny all the solemn rites and ordinances of Christ's church? These same skeptics heard from childhood the ministers of their choice preach part or nearly all the primitive ordinance away, as not needed in these days. They "stumbled," and came out against the church entirely; they were driven away from the book by our own ministers, whom they saw making faces at one another.

But there are a few who want doctrine and ordinances of the New Testament kind, the same in quantity and quality as in the apostolic age. Such people are kindly told that they live too late in the world for that, because that kind of Christianity died in its infancy. A substitute is offered them which is said to be "just as good." And some say that ministers ought to be called of God, or by the Holy Spirit; but others say, No, God does not call his servants now. So a majority are calling themselves these days. The church calls a great many. But the dollar-mark has considerable influence in the calling of such. Once in a while God seems to call a man, and that man does not run around to feel the public pulse before deciding what to preach. The man that God calls always has a message to tell, regardless of the public pulse, which usually beats faster after such a minister has declared his message than it did before.

Some want this kind of a minister, and some that kind; and we are fortunate in this "enlightened age," for we have many sorts now. We see that ministers are now made to order, and all we have to do is to send in our orders, and get the sort we want. Only "take notice" and do not send in any orders for the New Testament kind; for that kind is out of stock, and has been, lo, these many hundred years! But this condition of things causes many New Testament readers to wonder and stumble, because they can see that they are reading the wrong book. They can see that the institution they hold membership with is different from the New Testament kind. People can see that ministers now are walking in their own way, taking from or adding to the divine law and church "as best suits fancy."

I wonder if we can see, or are we blind? Dear Lord, help us to see; and, if blind, open our eyes. May we practice the sacred rites and ordinances of the new covenant now? or is it, or any part of it done away? May we hope for divine help and comfort, such as we read of others receiving in the "good old book"? or are such rites and such worship like the old-covenant offerings of bulls and goats—annulled? If they are, then take the old book, and give us a new one,—one that is up to date, one that we can depend upon now; for the one we have contains two covenants, but neither one of them is right according to our practice now. We think our practices are right, and that the book is wrong or out of date. Lord, shall we listen for the thunders of another Sinai? or shall we look for the agonies of another Calvary?

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

The Dearest One.

Oh! which of all my dearest dear is most my very own?
Which do I pray for oftenest when bending at the throne?
'Tis not the one whose earthly cup is brimmed with gift and grace,
Nor yet the one whose winsome heart looks from the bonniest face;

The dearest dear of all mine own is one in greatest need,
The one whose burden heaviest weighs, whose path is rough indeed.

For him I claim the help of heaven, for him I cling about
The cross of the All-pitiful till flesh and strength give out;
And still it is the neediest for whom I plead and pray,
What time I bring my dearest dear to Christ at fall of day.
If, all imperfect as I am, thus love doth reign in me,
How better far, and truer far, must Christ the shepherd be,
Whose greater love hath largesse for the weakest of his own,—

Who, by the hunger and the thirst, the faintness and the moan,

Doth measure still the bounty that, outflowing day by day,
Uplifts and helps the weary one who faltereth in the way.
Dear Love, sweet Love, thy dearest dear, 'tis he who most hath need,

Whose want and weakness are his prayer, and without word can plead.—Margaret E. Sangster.

Duties of Mothers.

Probably there has never been a time when so much was being said and written regarding the "duties of mothers" toward children as at the present time. Much of it bears on its face the impress of having been written by those who have little or no acquaintance with the genus infants, and no conception of the merits of the case. When reading a short article of this kind, a few days since, I wondered if it were not about time to call a halt in this long tirade of what mother should do, and investigate a little more closely what mother can do, in justice to herself, and pay a little more attention to what father should do.

I am well aware fathers are seldom made much account of, in these days, in the matter of family government and the proper adjustment of the domestic machinery; but I know of no physical or moral reason why this should be thus. Do you?

The commands in the Bible were to parents. No intimation there that the bringing up of the children was to be left for one to carry. True, the mother naturally takes the lead in the molding and developing of the child, but it is the father's privilege, it should be his duty, to share in the good work. It should be his pleasure to cultivate the acquaintance of his children; to learn their natural inclination, to teach them it is manly to do right; noble to be pure in thought, word, and act, and to respect women, beginning with their mother.

It has always seemed to the writer home-making, which included the rearing of little ones, should be much more of a mutual affair than it so often is. Did the father realize and do his whole duty in this matter there would not need to be so many articles written, like the one alluded to, which, by the way, was written by a lady (?) minister, though I can not see how that adds any force to the argument that "mothers should let children go barefoot in summer, wear ragged stockings in winter, be strangers to the taste of pie and cake from one year's end to another, and never wear aught but the plainest clothes, that she, the mother, might have time and strength to engage in mental work for herself and them."

Now that may read very well. It would seem at first glance the writer had chosen that good part that should not be taken away from her.

But how is it in practice? Many a mother does all that, and yet has no time for reading. Again, in places of any size, to follow out this rule to even a limited degree would be to make a laughing-stock of one's own children, and bring upon one's defenseless head the censure of all the neighborhood.

It is doubtful, too, if it would not foster disorderly habits, and favor the forming of either leisure-loving, novel-reading children, or the one-sided development of the nature, either result not being desirable.

A symmetrical development is what our children need, a mind so poised that while choosing the weightier things they shall not despise the lesser.

In the majority of cases, the advice for plainer clothes is not needed. The fashion for children is for the simpler gowns, and from a somewhat extended observation, such as a physician has ample opportunity of using, it has not seemed to be the making of so much pie and cake that took the busy mother's time to the loss of time for reading in the homes where it was most needed and coveted; the homes wherein cake and pie abound, and where the much-trimmed clothes are found, are more often the homes where mother is relieved of much work by competent help. Yet even here there is very little reading with the children.

There remains, however, a large number of homes where mother is cook, seamstress, hostess, nurse, and general manager. She would also like to keep within speaking distance of her children, in books, and yet finds no time she can conscientiously devote to reading. These are the ones who deserve help.

It is a matter of much encouragement to those with limited time that a comparatively small amount of the printed matter in existence is really necessary if one only knows how to choose.

Mothers so limited must bear in mind that she who can inculcate a love towards God, and a firm belief in their accountability to their Maker for all things, in the minds of those committed to her care, has done far better than she who can solve the most difficult problem in Euclid and settle at once any question of history or science, yet can not lead her little ones to the foot of the throne. We are in great danger of becoming a race of head-worshippers to the great neglect of the heart, from which springeth all motives.

And thirdly, mothers so placed with little ones demanding all of their time and strength to care for their physical needs, yet with minds craving mental food, should also recognize they owe themselves a duty, and should receive the coöperation of husband and children towards the securing of some time for mental improvement.

To be sure father works all day. Ten chances to one mother began at least an hour before he did, has worked just as hard, for her strength, all day, and has three or four hours before her after he stops. Now what is the legal or moral reason to prevent his helping clear away the tea-table and wash the dishes, and doing whatever is necessary towards the next morning's meal? What is there to hinder his doing this if he is well (of course a sick man ought not to be asked to do such work), and at the same time telling his wife any items of interest concerning the world at large he may have learned from either a daily paper or from conversation?

The work will be quickly done, and mother, whose mind has been busy with its manifold cares all day, will feel really quite rested.

Let there always be some good book handy, to pick up any minute when baby wants rocking or when waiting for something when there is not time enough to take a stitch, but several lines might be read.

Where time and money are scarce do not waste either buying all the latest novels. Take one standard periodical, and expend any other amounts you can spare in the purchase of cheap editions of standard works: Dickens, Thackeray, Cooper, Macaulay, Emerson, Hawthorne, and Irving, and a score more of never-old writers, can be bought at so small a cost it seems almost any one could have a few good books. Irving is an author children should know more of. True American as he was, none can read his pages without feeling a greater love for their own country, a genial sympathy for the sufferer, and seeing something interesting in everything. Dickens' Child's History of England will be a great help to mothers not familiar with history, who find it somewhat dry reading, and yet do not want to be too ignorant before their children. A dictionary and an encyclopedia are almost "must haves," yet if we live near a large library we can note down little points we wish to look up, and in this way cultivate the habit of following everything out as far as possible. A few books, well read, are worth far more than whole libraries known only by their titles.

It is astonishing how the careful study of one topic will broaden one's general knowledge, when it can be studied with reference-books. Take a single item of history—a battle, perchance—where was it fought—who were the opponents—where did they live—in what country—what were the habits and customs—what led to the fight—its result, and so on. Do not be in a hurry to do a large amount of reading with your children; cultivate thoroughness.

If possible, take some good journal for the children—publishers have combined to put before the public periodicals suited to every age. Do not make the mistake of thinking if one is good ten will be ten times better.

The Chautauqua Young People's Course is most excellent and not to be despised by parents who may not have time or money for the C. L. S. C. work, yet would like to improve somewhat.

One other matter demands the mother's attention in this matter of securing the needed time for her own rest and relaxation, and that is the duty her children owe her.

This idea of all the duty being on the mother's side is not right. Children have duties in the home just as soon as they can wait on themselves, and the more thoroughly they learn them, the more fitted they will be to make some other home happy, when in after-years they have gone to homes of their own making. The lazy, selfish girls, the thoughtless, disorderly boys, will not make model wives or husbands. Bring them up to be independent and thoughtful. Do not wait until they are grown up before you assign them any duties.

A little four-year-old can save mamma lots of steps, is just as happy when "helpin'" as playing, and will feel well paid if mother thereby gains time to read her a story.

Girls, and I almost said boys, old enough to make much call on parents' mental capacity, ought not to make much call on their time for plain mending. I know the cry is often made, they have no time out of school. That is a wrong that needs righting, if it is true. There seems something very peculiar, to say the least, when children under fifteen years of age, taking only three studies, are obliged to study out of school hours. One parent can not make a change any more than one fly can make a summer; but parents should rise en masse, and know why, in grades below the high school, children need to study out of school hours, and if so, why so? But even then there is usually time to care for their own beds, set the table, dust the sitting-room, do up the after-supper work, and so lighten mother's work that she will have time to read with them.

Coöperation is the universal cry—try it in this matter, where each mother can be queen, and where father and children should be willing subjects, counting nothing too hard that makes the true mother healthier, happier, and wiser.—Exchange.

The Convention Calendar Again.

We wish to call attention to the convention calendar again for the purpose of getting it more perfectly established. It will be a ready reference to the district workers and all others interested in convention dates. Often adjoining districts wish not to conflict in their convention dates because of many of the workers visiting their neighboring districts. And if the time of the neighboring convention were set and known, it would be an easy matter to avoid conflicting in dates. With all dates known long before it would be much easier for the missionaries to plan to attend all the conventions. Further, it often happens that a district superintendent or secretary will send a "rush" notice to the HERALD or Ensign for the convention which will come out but one or two weeks previous to convention. We have seen some that would not reach the people in time for them to start to the convention. All this may be overcome by supporting the convention calendar. Send us at once your convention dates, Religio or Sunday-school, and we will insert them and keep them standing till the date expires. Thus any of your patrons may take up any HERALD and ascertain the convention date. But we must be furnished the data. Give date, hour of meeting, and place. Should mistakes or changes occur, notify us and corrections will be made. This does not need to preclude other or further notice of your convention in either HERALD or Ensign. Give them if necessary or desirable. However, it will largely remove the necessity for other notice. Will district officers please help us to make this complete?

How to Work.

When "the people" and the publicans and the soldiers, moved by the preaching of John the Baptist, asked, "What shall we do?" they were not told to change their occupations or to give up earthly interests, but only to do their parts unselfishly, honestly, justly. Work of many kinds must be done. Any work that is good to be done at all may be sanctified by doing it "as unto the Lord"; by letting the principles that Christ teaches direct it, exalt it, beautify it, make it really serviceable.—Sel.

Life's Best Days.

The venerable pastor and great preacher, Doctor Richard S. Storrs, speaks these cheering words of testimony: "I had as happy a childhood as falls to the lot of most children; and many a time it has been said to me by those who were visiting at my father's house: 'This is the happiest time in life for you.' I did not believe it then; I did not believe it as I grew older, and I know now that it was not true.

"The happiest time in your life is to come hereafter. If you try to do that which is right and useful to others, that which is honorable to yourself, and that which is for the glory and praise of God, every year of your life will be happier than that which went before it.

"So do not feel that you are entering an oppressive, grinding, hateful world. Life on earth grows better and sweeter as one goes on in it, and what you are to do is to try to make a success of that life—each one of you."—Exchange.

THE General Superintendent attended the convention of the Fremont, Iowa, District early in October. The attendance was not so large as it perhaps should have been but the interest was all that might have been desired. We noted one thing particularly that is commendable. Just enough time was taken for business to transact the necessary business. The business seemed to be simply a means to an end and not the sole object of the convention: Just enough business to keep the work of the district in systematic shape. Then they turned their attention to matters pertaining to improvement of the schools, of officers, and of teachers, matters that tend to fit us for our special work, and that tend to make our homes a part of the Sunday-school, just as they should be. And while we do not wish to be flattering or to overdraw the matter, it seemed to us the ideal form of convention—the kind of a convention that can not help but wield its influence for good in a practical way. The Religians and Sunday-school workers hold their conventions jointly. The work is separate and distinct, yet they share the time, even dividing to the best interests of all the time of a single session. This is as it should be. I delight to see the Sunday-school and Religio workers going hand in hand.

Beginning Thursday night, there was a model session of Religio. Bro. Joseph Roberts, the president of the district Religio association, believes that to establish the work properly and get the correct methods of conducting a Religio before the people, nothing is better than a real session thereof. Make it exactly as you would like it as nearly as it is possible. This is practical. We can see more in two short hours of this work than we might learn in days of theoretical discussion on the same subject.

Friday morning there was a union prayer-meeting, union of the Sunday-school and Religio workers. But why should I say union of the workers when all are workers in both institutions? Following this was a business-session, first of the Sunday-school and then of the Religio convention. The afternoon was devoted to institute work upon the general themes of "Specialists as teachers," "Gaining and holding attention," "Present needs of our district as compared with the past." The subjects were handled by the General Superintendent, Bro. Joseph Roberts, and Sr. T. A. Hougas, respectively. And as previously mentioned, the subjects were handled in a practical way.

The night session Friday was devoted to the program sent out by the General Association, using the theme of "Duty." Strong and impressive appeals were made on the several subdivisions of the theme. And it seems that one could scarcely listen to the discussions or appeals and remain careless or entirely indifferent to their duties.

May God bless those who have the work in charge and enable them to do what will be for the betterment of the work in their care.

A Thanksgiving Thought.

To think the best of people, and not the worst, to say only kind and gracious words, to be brave and true and hopeful and undaunted, to rest on God's will as on a soft pillow, to keep the child heart to gray hairs, and to have the kingdom of heaven within you, are all parts of the duty, and belong to the birthright of good men and good women. To despair of none, to refuse help to none, to give, to lend, to love, to live for others, these are the stepping-stones to real thankfulness.—Margaret E. Sangster in the Woman's Home Companion for November.

EUNICE, Louisiana, September 27, 1905.

Editors Herald: My husband and I are the only Saints here. I have been a member of the church eleven years. My husband has been a member twelve years. I am trying to do the will of my Lord the best I know how, though when I came into the church I knew very little about the word of God, never having read the Bible much, or even prayed. But when I heard a few sermons, I believed it to be the true church of Christ; and having a sick child at the time the meeting was going on, I thought if I did not obey, I would lose my child, so I was baptized. But after the meetings were over, I still went on in sin. I did not pray or try very much to do the Lord's will; and for the last eleven years, as I read and learn, I find myself in tears and sorrow because I did not do my duty before, and because I did not come into the church in a more earnest spirit. I was baptized by Bro. E. W. Nunley. He is a good man. Often I wish to see him, and hear him preach again. Bro. Nunley, if you see this I want you to pray for me, that I may receive more light. My heart is broken because I have committed sin in turning right around after obeying, and going on in sin.

I have five children living, one dear little one having gone before. It died the 6th of August, and was five months and two days old. Since then I have been praying and pleading with the Father, because of my want of faith and lack of love, that he will help me and draw me nearer to him each day; and I can say that I have been comforted with loving dreams.

I ask all God's people to pray for me and my children. My three little boys are growing up without much teaching. I try to teach them all I know, but they hear so much the other way that it looks like they will go wrong in spite of all I can do. How often I wish I were where I could send them to church and Sunday-school.

I aim to pay my tithing, this year, and in the future. I am sorry that I have so long neglected my duty. My determination is to do better the rest of my days.

JOSIE HELMS.

MINATARE, Nebraska, October 15, 1905.

Editors Herald: Certain it is that the reunion in Western Nebraska did not materialize and I am willing to take my share of the blame; but I feel I am not alone. And I will here suggest that if one is to be held in the autumn of 1906 that the committee should now commence work by finding a proper location and by soliciting contributions to create a fund sufficient to meet necessary or incidental expenses. For if these reunions are to prove a spiritual success, we must first have a financial union; that is, to mutually share the burden by lending a helping hand in every possible way. Further, Saints should put forth their best efforts to be there; and while there, as much as possible, assist in prayer- and social-service; and as far as possible put far away lightness of speech and lightness of manners, loud and foolish laughing, so that the more serious and sad ones of earth's children may not become discouraged or driven from our sublime worship.

I am here reminded of the words of the Master, "Ye are the salt of the earth," "Ye are the light of the world." What, then, if the salt have lost its saltness, and the light become darkness? How shall any one be benefited, either Saint or sinner? I leave you, kind reader, to answer. Such a condition of things will never convert the world, or make the weak strong; but may destroy the good that has been done.

Well, although the reunion did not materialize, to seemingly make up for the loss Elder C. W. Prettyman came to these parts some weeks ago and while here did noble work for the cause by preaching the gospel in the evenings on the streets of Minatare, Gering, and Scotts Bluffs, bareheaded, by lantern-light, to rather small but attentive crowds. I consider his labors worthy of imitation, and believe the time is at hand when to reach the people our ministry will be compelled to go into the streets or by-ways everywhere; and I pray God that courage be given to this end; for the world must be warned.

While here, Bro. Prettyman baptized Burr Showbar of Gering and Lee Babcock of Minatare. We also blessed Bro. Frank Babcock's infant. So I feel that the work has received a new impetus here.

I will say that while the elder was here, and on the day when he was sixty years of age, he and I climbed to the summit of Scotts Bluff Hill, to view the Platte River and valley, and its nestling towns beneath our feet, something over four thousand feet above sea-level. The day was not very clear, or else we no doubt could have seen one hundred miles east or west. We approached close to the perpendicular cliffs, but a strange feeling seemed to creep over our being, and we felt that we must either retreat or take a death-leap of several hundred feet.

Your brother,

D. W. SHIRK.

HAILEYVILLE, Indian Territory, October 15, 1905.

Dear Herald: We have had some fine sermons here this last month, good for the Saints and outsiders; some of our missionaries underestimate themselves to the extent that it hinders them. We should look on the bright side of life, and let the world and Satan magnify the darkness.

I love this great latter-day work, and want to so live that my light will shine to the convincing of many; and that the good, faithful brother that taught me the truth will not be ashamed to own me as his child in the gospel. This branch is increasing in number, having now about fifty-three; but mostly scattered Saints.

I see that T. J. Shepard in his letter spoke of conference, and also of the desire of having one of the patriarchs with us on that occasion. I know of many who want their blessings. I am one of the many. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints in our behalf, that we may be faithful as a branch.

While writing, a dream presents itself to my mind which I had some time ago. I was in a large building with another brother alone; and as we were thus situated we saw in the corners of the rooms, in the dust and dirt, a lot of precious jewels, and when we saw them we wept for joy at finding them. We picked them up in a clean, white box, got a white cloth and started to clean them, and behold they were diamonds, pure and bright.

In bonds,

JOHN S. WHITE.

Extracts from Letters.

E. L. Hyatt, New Harmony, Indiana: "Bro. Ellis has been with us about three weeks. Preached thirteen discourses; baptized in all thirteen souls; organized a Sunday-school."

L. C. Donaldson, Hamburg, Iowa: "It is reported in the papers of this county that Bro. Ira Chamberlin died in Oregon some time last August. Will the readers of the HERALD in Dekalb County, Missouri, who know him, state what has become of him? Bro. D. R. Chambers is holding meeting in the gospel tent, north of Riverton, Iowa."

Bro. and Sr. J. H. Snider, Hamilton, Missouri: "We can not do without the church publications. We see that some find fault with some things written in the HERALD; but with an effort on our part, and measuring these things up with the gospel law, we can discern the truth from error, and these things make grand object-lessons to us, and help us to knock off some of the sharp corners of our human natures, if we apply the lessons."

W. S. Taylor, writing from somewhere in Missouri we presume, says: "The Spring River District conference is a thing of the past. It was one of the most harmonious conferences that I ever attended. The time for prayer-services was well spent."

P. A. Flinn, Tower, Indiana: "The calls for preaching in Southern Indiana are many. I have not done very much the last year, on account of sore eyes. Just closed a meeting at a new place four miles west of my residence. Made the round trip every night; held eight meetings, making sixty-four miles. The interest was good. Brethren, one and all, do what you can for the advancement of the kingdom of God. Saints, do you pay your tithing, one and all, and in that way help the work along? All can help in this. Quit smoking and chewing tobacco, stay out of those secret orders, and put your money in the kingdom of God, and keep yourselves alive spiritually. God will bless all who do this."

Elbert A. Smith, Burlington, Iowa: "Meetings are being held in Nauvoo in the city hall, in charge of Heman C. Smith, to offset the effect of Utah elders who met there sixty strong a few weeks ago."

Mary Flagg, Castalia, Gvanmanan Island, New Brunswick: "My papers contain all the preaching I get, and I would rather go without a meal of victuals than to go without my papers. Our home is ready to receive any elder who comes here."

Josephine Clark, Des Moines, Iowa: "I have belonged to the church for twenty-five years, and we have been blessed many times with the gift of healing, and I have received testimony upon testimony that this is the true church of Jesus Christ. Pray for me, dear Saints, for I want to meet my dear companion who has gone but a little while before. Pray for my children that they may be blessed also."

Sr. R. M. Bradley, Niangua, Missouri: "We wish to inform the ministry that our doors are open to any of them who may come this way."

Miscellaneous Department

Pastoral.

To the Ministry and Saints in Nebraska, and That Portion of South Dakota Lying South and West of the Missouri River: Being appointed assistant minister in charge of above named territory, I desire to become informed in regard to the needs and condition of the work, hence would like to hear from all, both of the ministry or laity, who can give me needed information. It is hoped that we shall be able successfully to push the work this fall and winter, and I desire to get closely in touch with all that I may know how to render the assistance needed. I trust we may duly consider the importance of the work unto which we are called, and be faithful laborers in the vineyard.

Any one knowing of opportunities for opening up the work please write, and we will do the best we can that the gospel may be spread.

Mail addressed to me at Council Bluffs, Iowa, R. F. D. 2, will reach me.

Yours in the Master's cause,

H. N. HANSEN.

To the Officers and Members of the Clinton District; Greeting: It is with pleasure that we look back on our conference of October 14 and 15, made more profitable and enjoyable by instruction given us by our missionary in charge, Bro. I. N. White. By the power accompanying his teaching our strength is renewed, and our determination to move forward in the work is more firmly fixed.

Therefore, as those chosen by you to assist in building up this great work of God in this district, we ask you in the name of Jesus Christ to renew your diligence in prayer, in the study of God's word, and in faithful labor with your friends and neighbors; that all may be warned of the near coming of the Son of God.

We make a special request of the priests and teachers of the district to magnify their calling. The importance and responsibility attaching to their office-work never justifies the statements, "I am only a priest," and, "He is nothing but a teacher," but is a disparagement of their high and holy calling. The priests' and teachers' work is as important and necessary to prepare the church to meet the Savior as any other part of the holy priesthood work. Therefore, let us all work (for the idler shall have no place in Zion), and so make a sure foundation for future salvation, and a brighter light, that others may see that this is indeed the "church of Jesus Christ," and that we are "the Saints of the Most High."

Let all the officers of the several branches commence to make a record of their labors and have them ready for the next conference.

We expect to visit you shortly. In the meanwhile we wish a hearty God-speed to all the laborers.

ABNER LLOYD, President.

WM. WATERMAN, Assistant President.

The Bishopric.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

The Saints and friends of the District of Minnesota will please take notice that upon the resignation of Bro. W. C. Griffin, Bishop's agent in and for Minnesota District, and recommendation of the conference of said district, Elder Birch Whiting of Bemidji, Minnesota, has been appointed agent in and for said territory.

We trust that the Saints and friends will remember the name and address of the new agent and put forth an effort to sustain and aid the same in his official duties.

We also extend special thanks to Bro. Griffin for his work and assistance in the office of agent in said district in the past, and trust that he may be blessed and prospered in his other duties in spiritual as well as temporal matters.

Trusting the Lord may bless the helpers, in behalf of the gospel truth, I am,

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

The Saints and friends of the District of Utah will please take notice that upon resignation of the Bishop's agent, Bro. G. L. M. Brokaw, and recommendation of the district conference, Elder J. E. Vanderwood of Pleasant Grove, Utah, has been duly authorized to act as agent in and for said district, in financial matters.

We take pleasure in recommending Bro. Vanderwood to the consideration and confidence of the Saints, and trust that he may receive the ready help of every lover of the truth in the district, that his efforts as agent may be sustained.

The thanks of the Bishopric are also extended to Bro. Brokaw for his aid in the financial line in said district until the present time, and we trust the Lord may direct and bless him in his future labors.

Confidently laboring for the cause of Zion's weal, I am, in behalf of the Bishopric,

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

THE UTAH PROBLEM AND EDUCATION.

A late writer on the situation in Utah, evidently writing from a general view-point, opens his argument in the following way:

The problem is entirely one of education. Educate the masses to freely and fearlessly develop and use the reasoning powers with which Almighty God endowed them and the Mormon hierarchy will exist only in history and Utah will then become one of the grandest, most beautiful and prosperous of all the States. Until then, and in spite of all else that can be done; in spite of the love her sons and daughters have for their native State; in spite of all the promises given and prophecies uttered; of all the heart-burnings, sufferings, and sorrows of fifty years Utah will remain a menacing disgrace to the nation.—Don Carlos W. Musser, in Salt Lake Tribune, September 29, 1905.

This writer is and has been in a situation to know of his own knowledge something of affairs, religious and secular, political and economic, in Utah, both as a territory and since statehood was granted. He rightly concludes that the way to solve any problem in state affairs is to "educate the masses." How to reach them is almost as great a problem as it is by education to dispel the ignorance that may exist among the masses. If there is no desire on the part of the people for enlightenment, or no disposition to put themselves in the way to be educated, teachers labor in vain, so far as results to the masses are concerned. Neither this nor any other writer can reach the masses in Utah who for any reason do not want to be reached. So long as men in the following are persistently echoing the cry of the leading forces, "All we want is to be let alone," just so long will the people (the masses) be held within the leash, and neither affirmation nor argument will affect the masses or effect a cure of the evils complained of.

The people, the masses of the Mormon population of Utah, are in the grasp of a spirit more dangerous, subtle, and relentless than that of commercialism of which so much is said and written. The Lord gave to the church, the people, laws for their guidance in spiritual and domestic affairs, plainly indicating what his will was in regard to marriage. These laws were set aside, and rule and practice altogether at variance with those instituted. This brought to bear upon the masses the rule of the few whose position in the church gave them favoritism in that which could not in the nature of it be indulged by all; polygamy with all its adjuncts of teaching are obtained.

This spirit holds rule still in Utah Mormonism. It is now, so far as may be seen, the prevailing power behind the throne. Plural marriage in its open practice must be maintained. The principle was conceived in secrecy, was fostered and grew by secrecy and deceit, and must be continued by similar means if it continues at all.

Large numbers of the Mormon people have now no active share in the practice of polygamy; hundreds, if not thousands, have been quiet, submitting to the action of the leading few because unable to control, and fearful of denouncing what they felt was sanctified into right-doing because done by those who were in high standing over them, whose actions they must not criticise for they held "the priesthood."

It seems hard to say, but it is a belief fast assuming proportions, that so surely as the wives of Solomon turned the heart of that wise man to the rule of fleshly folly and idolatry, just so surely has this modern departure from the right way of the Lord darkened the minds of these latter-day polygamists unto the wise admonitions of those sent unto them; and as a consequence shut out from their consideration what is required of them as citizens of the Republic which the Lord has ordained to be the instrument for the accomplishment of his purposes in the world.

THE EDITOR ABROAD.

Vancouver, British Columbia, is a city of forty-five thousand population, and is about twenty years old. It occupies a projection of land reaching southwest into the waters of False Creek on the south and Burrard Inlet on the north, has an excellent harbor of easy access to all classes of shipping, and is destined to be the outlet for the commerce of Canada to the far East, paradoxical as that may appear. Here, as elsewhere along the northwest coast, the lumber industry is largely occupying the attention and capital of enterprising men who have not been slow to see and make use of the opportunity to supply the demands of the country, and, incidentally, line up the money-bags.

Soon after our arrival, on Monday, August 7, Bro. William Johnson, of Nanaimo (pronounced Nanimo), having charge of the district, called, and the Editor was booked for service at New Westminster, Sunday, August 13. Bro. W. S. Pender and wife and Bro. Johnson had been holding tent-services in Westminster for some time with but indifferent success; so the Editor being willing to share in the duties acceded to the wish of all.

The week prior to the 13th was spent in physical and mental rest, visiting, making acquaintances, recreation, and sightseeing in and about the interesting city.

On the morning of Sunday, August 13, in company of Bro. Alexander Clark, went by rapid transit to Westminster where we found Bro. W. S. Pender and wife, with Bro. Johnson ready for the eleven o'clock service. We occupied at eleven in the forenoon and in the evening, Bro. Pender speaking at four in the afternoon. Bro. J. S. Rainey, elder, has charge of the Westminster Branch, a small band of faithful ones trying under adverse conditions to hold the banner steady. The audiences were small but attentive, few of the outside being present. We were guests of Bro. Rainey.

On the Monday following, under the care of Bro. Rainey, a small party visited down the Fraser River, to have a look at the canneries, where the salmon, the fish of the northwestern rivers, are offered so lavishly to the use of man. The steamer Transfer was the means of carriage, the objective point was the canning town of Steveston, seventeen miles down the river. The day was fair and the little company, Bro. Rainey, wife, and little girl, Bro. W. S. Pender and wife, Sr. Butterfield and daughter, Sr. Stillwagon, Sr. Mae Good, and R. C. of the Editor's family, fully enjoyed the trip. But, oh, the sight of the fishes, nets to the right of us, nets to the left of us, nets to the front of us, nets to the back of us—nets everywhere; it seemed as if every foot of the river was covered, and the wonder is still new, How does ever a salmon get through? A verse of Doctor Holland's poem, "Bitter sweet" came forcibly to mind:

"The finny army clogs the twine
That sweeps the lazy river;
While pearls come singly from the brine
With the pale diver."

Hundreds, thousands, tens of thousands, till one is conscious by actual use of sight that Providence has wonderfully provided for human subsistence from the treasures of the sea.

The catch this season is estimated at near a million cases of forty-eight cans holding two pounds of fish to the can; and everybody eats "canned salmon." Of the processes of dressing, cleaning, cutting, curing, or cooking and canning, it is needless to write; it is enough to say that, in the different canneries stationed at points along the river, cleanliness is required and obtains; so that those who may wish to do so, or those who are so situated that canned goods are an essential part of the bill of daily fare may eat of Fraser River, or Columbia River Salmon without squeamishness, so far as fear of dirt is concerned.

The fishermen are controlled by law, and rules for carrying on the industry are made and enforced in order to prevent human greed from destroying the recurrent supply of the food fishes. These rules include licensing canneries and the fishermen whom they employ, the size of the meshes in the nets used, and the time when the season for taking the fish shall begin and close. These salmon leave the salt water in the early summer in enormous numbers and seek the fresh-water rivers for spawning purposes. The efforts of the governments of the United States and Canada are exerted to so conserve the industry and at the same time to prevent the wanton destruction of the lives of the fish, and the consequent waste of food.

By agreement with Bro. Johnson; we left Westminster by steamship Beaver up the Fraser River for a stay of a few days with the branch at Chilliwack, in the Chilliwack district of the province of British Columbia, Dominion of Canada. The distance by water was some fifty or sixty miles. The day was a chill, misty, rainy one. Little of the scenery along the river was to be seen, so low hung the clouds and thick the mist and rain on either side of the boat. It was an eight-hours' run and ended at the landing one and a half miles from the village of Chilliwack, a little hamlet of a few hundred inhabitants at four o'clock in the afternoon.

We were met at the landing by Bro. Henry Stade, with his team, who took us to his farm seven miles beyond the village. Here we received the welcome of the Saints. The rain held off during the ride, but fell again during the night, though not heavily. Appointments were out for the rest of the week and Bro. Henry and John Stade and Bro. Johnson were busy preparing the Saints' little church, a half mile away, for the accommodation of those who might come, all day Thursday, August 17; and at eight o'clock we were greeted by a house pretty well filled with a few standing against the farther wall. We talked to them of the gospel faith and the hope of life in Christ the best we could, to which the closest attention was paid.

At the close of the service we were introduced to quite a number; among them Sr. Mercer and daughter, of Rosedale, a village some three or four miles farther up the river; Bro. John Stade and wife; Bro. Holt; Honorable C. W. Monroe, member of the Provincial Parliament for Chilliwack district, and his wife. In conversation he stated that we had some of the best people in the settlement with us as members of the church. We met also the school-teacher, Mr. Brœe, a genial, hearty young man boarding for the time at Bro. Henry Stade's. Bro. Stade's family consists of himself, his wife, and son Harry.

The rain was interfering with the gathering in of the harvest, but did not prevent Bro. Johnson and the Editor from visiting, so we ate dinner on Friday with Bro. John Stade and family, wife, and seven rustling boys and girls, such as are raised on the farm, bright eyes and ruddy cheeks, a mother hearty and cheerful. At night we held meeting again with fair audience, though the day and evening were wet and chilly. Rain is so common in that part that but little regard is paid to it when folks desire to go.

On Saturday Bro. Johnson and the Editor took supper at Rosedale with Sr. Mercer and her family of sons, daughters, and a niece. It was an election day for the district to decide by ballot whether the district should purchase a dredger for the purpose of draining off the surplus water in wet portions, and raise the cost by a tax. Mr. Mercer was absent from home so that we did not see him; but we held service in the dining-room, which was quite large and commodious, and was pretty well filled by the neighbors and friends of the family. Here we visited a Bro. Frederick Muirhead, badly crippled from rheumatism for years, but cheerfully patient as waiting for the deliverance to come.

To-day we also met with Mr. Little, the school-inspector, an intelligent, frank gentleman, quite a traveler, and now connected with the local press at Chilliwack. He gave us quite a good notice in the local items of the paper. The feeling in the neighborhood was quite mixed, some quite hostile, others tolerant, some, a few, fair and friendly. We noticed that in the Dominion, as in the Republic, self-interest had strong influence. For instance, the interest in the election for the purchase of a dredger for the district to be paid for out of the public purse, divided the people thus: those owning low lands on which the overflowing water stands too long in wet seasons all favored the purchase, while those owning higher lands and larger holdings on which the tax would be heavier, all voted against the purchase; not needing the aid themselves they had little care for those who did; and so the election went against the farmers and land-holders whose lands were liable to the overflow and damage therefrom.

The Fraser River flows through a rich valley heavily timbered, cedar, fir, and alder principal woods. A part of the district by a plebiscite voted to ask the government to dyke against the encroachment of the river and levy a tax per acre to run some twenty years to meet the expense. The petition was granted, the dyke was built; but when the government essayed to levy and collect the tax, amounting to about fifty cents per acre, the settlers revolted. A man with a farm of eighty acres must stand a tax of forty dollars yearly besides the other taxes, which made it burdensome. An effort was to be made to secure from government a release from the tax. Land ran in price from forty to sixty dollars per acre for raw, heavily timbered land. And when it is remembered that it would cost the settler from twenty to twenty-five dollars per acre to clear it, and then add the tax for dyke, one can estimate what the land cleared and improved would be worth.

We saw cedar stumps from two to nine feet in diameter, standing on land cleared and in cultivation. Cedar lasts an indefinite period, whether standing in the stump, or fallen in the log. We saw trees from one hundred to two hundred and fifty years old in growth standing over and growing with roots enveloping fallen predecessors of equal or larger size and still sound. Fire is the only destroyer of these monsters. They have to be torn in pieces by explosives, torn out of the soil and burned. To a man accustomed to the rich acres of prairie, grass- and sunflower-clad land, through which the plow may be driven with but little labor, an undertaking to make a home in that part of the country looked like a task too huge to tackle; and yet, it is a rich grain and fruit region, and inviting. To talk to the residents of the labor of it is to provoke a smile. They know how to do it.

Sunday was a gem of a day. Almost for the first time the mountain tops were visible; one with poetic name nine thousand feet high made lower heights look like little hills. Down one canyon a beautiful waterfall shone glistening in the afternoon sunshine. Two services were held in the church at two o'clock in the afternoon and eight o'clock in the evening at which the Editor was the preacher. At all of the meetings good order prevailed and the best of attention was the rule. Bro. Johnson held charge, and made an excellent coworker, prompt, able, and wise. Services closed with good feeling in all. On Monday, Bro. Johnson and the Editor met by agreement at the home of a Sr. Smith, a widow of some years' standing. She and her husband came into the country some thirty-five years ago, forcing their way through the dense forest, and finding a suitable spot built their cabin, and "tamed" by labor the wild land. Now, with a family of nine girls, and a son grown, she has secured her homestead, one half of which is hers, the other half her son's, and is diligently keeping the wolf from the door by careful management and hard work. And she is but one of many. We ate our dinner with them. The son was in the midst of oat harvest, and taking advantage of the excellent weather.

Bro. Henry Stade has a good farm, won from the forest and morass by toil. He too was a pioneer, and of such a reputation that his word is taken now without question; he seems to understand the word, "Do ye unto others as ye would they should do unto you," and to apply it in his every-day life as well as in the Sunday theory of the preacher. He has the care of the branch. Bro. Dan MacGregor was the main teacher in building up the branch; has been ably assisted at times, and he, Bro. R. C. Evans, and Bro. J. W. Roberts are well spoken of as to their labors there.

The final act of our stay was a reception at Bro. Henry Stade's, where we were greeted by the Saints with good wishes and substantial aid. "By this shall ye know my disciples." If we judge thus, the Lord has disciples at Chilliwack.

Tuesday, August 22, was a beautiful day, and the trip by team to the village and down the Fraser was a very pleasant episode. The placid river, the green, wooded mountain sides, the short but busy stops along the way, the constantly shifting scenery, and the final stop in tide-water at Westminster, all stand out in memory as an oasis in life's landscapes.

OGDEN, Utah, October 23, 1905.

WHAT ARE YOUR POLITICS?

What are your politics? This may strike some as being a leading question; it is nevertheless one that is frequently asked, directly too, and a universal response from the members of the church would reveal a wide diversity of belief, strangely out of line with the thought of the children of Zion being of one heart and mind. Environment and education are responsible largely for political adherence, though many perhaps have, after a more or less thorough investigation, renounced the political faith of their fathers. But what should be the answer of a real, true, earnest Latter Day Saint to the query, What are your politics?

In our judgment there is but one reply that can be made by a man who esteems himself to be a free man in Christ; and until we can from a free heart make such reply, as Saints we are living beneath our privileges, and come short of being in possession of that perfect liberty in Christ of which we read. That answer must be in harmony with the revelations of God as taught and indorsed by the church. That answer is comprehended in the following:

I, the Lord God, maketh you free; therefore, ye are free indeed: and the law also maketh you free; nevertheless when the wicked rule the people mourn; wherefore honest men and wise men should be sought for, diligently, and good men and wise men ye should observe to uphold; otherwise whatsoever is less than these cometh of evil.—Doctrine and Covenants 95:2.

That is the platform upon which every true Latter Day Saint should stand; and it is broad enough for every free man. And if we would be found among those whose skirts are clean from the blood of this generation, we must stand right there. We can do no less than that, for "whatsoever is less than these cometh of evil."

How true the word of God is, and how it ought to sink into every heart: "When the wicked rule the people mourn." The truth of that statement has been vindicated in the past, and is being vindicated at the present time. The rule of the wicked has brought mourning to the masses, and always will do so. On the other hand wherever an honest and wise man has been put in office the people have had reason to rejoice, and such men have justly earned the everlasting gratitude of a suffering people.

Laying aside our petty prejudices, let us carefully consider a few reasons for forsaking the world's political parties which are decidedly of the earth, earthy. We can adhere to no political party, in the sense of giving it our undivided support, with safety to our freedom, our honesty, and our moral integrity. Why? Because political parties are the institutions of men, and no matter how upright and honorable the founders of the party may be, nor how profound the truths of its inception, the human in it sooner or later permits a departure and a change of front, and if we blindly follow its lead we are found supporting that which is neither honorable nor just. And we may become so imbued with party spirit that we become actual slaves to party. This is not an idle thought. We see it manifested too often. Men advocate strenuously the principles of their party; the next campaign there has been a change of policy and the party advocates an opposite doctrine. Men follow the lead of the party, and try to believe and preach doctrines directly opposite the doctrines they advocated before. They become mere slaves to party; whatever the party says goes, right or wrong. And when men get in that state of mind, and continue in it for a length of time, they can not see the right, they can not draw the line between right and wrong; they are only capable of drawing the line between parties. Their honesty and moral integrity are then in danger of being sacrificed for the interests of party.

The minds of men in the world are being wrought upon by the influences of light, and they are seeking to educate and elevate the masses. We make lengthy extracts from two writers which are interesting, timely, and morally strengthening.

In the Cosmopolitan for November, 1904, John Brisben writes upon the topic: "Should young men enter political life? and how?" His statements were drawn out by the experience of a friend of his, and should have their weight with every young man professing to be a follower of Christ:

Since his first vote, four years ago, this young man has taken a practical interest in politics, attended primaries, addressed meetings, and cheerfully given his time in such work as he believed to be beneficial to public affairs. His interest and ability were recognized this year by a suggestion that he should be a candidate for the Assembly at Albany. This proved acceptable to him and was greeted with favor wherever he was known. He was such a man as would, after a little experience, leave the whole Assembly.

But the lower end of his Assembly district was in the control of a "Boss." No nomination would be certain without the consent of this man. It would not be required that he should make downright pledges. Bossism has been refined beyond that point. But it would be necessary that he should call on the Boss, spend ten minutes in talking over the prospects in the district, receive assurances that his candidacy would be an agreeable move in the political game, and go away with the tacit understanding that, in the convention, the Boss's unseen hand would bring about the nomination. But, as the candidate would go away from the interview the Boss would understand only one thing—that an alliance, offensive and defensive, had been made, in exchange for his influence.

At Albany the young man would not be called upon to do dirty work. He would vote without suggestion for or against; he would seem to be a free man. Unless! Unless—there should be a close question in which his vote would be absolutely required. Then he would undoubtedly be called upon to "deliver the goods." And he would be expected to close his eyes to the corruption going on around him and indulge in no reform outcry upon the legislation which would be really vital to great business plans. There would be plenty of little "reforms" in which he could take part—dummies of which the Boss would rather approve—which would attract the attention of the public and strengthen the "reformer" in his power to do mischief to public interests by giving him public confidence.

But suppose that, arriving in the legislature, he did not pursue this line of policy; suppose he proved intractable—a dangerous man. What then?

Oh, then his political career would be given short shrift; he would be quietly sat upon in the Assembly. His influence in legislation would be nil. Rumors would be passed around suggesting a hundred unfavorable characteristics, and at the end of his term he would retire to private life.

Of course, there would always be the danger that he might be a man of such strength and rectitude that he would become a menace to the combination of corruptionists; and by his actions go back to the people so strong as to enable him to secure reelection in spite of the "machine." This is a risk the Boss must incur in selecting this type of man.

But he had dealt with so many such; he gauged so accurately the "passivity" of the ordinary man when surrounded, powerless and hopeless; he knew so well the insidious germs contained in the average political ambition, that, "the call on the Boss" having been made, that modern hydra would dismiss all fear of the ambitious youth ever becoming recalcitrant.

These were substantially the conditions as they came into view after some thought had been given to the matter submitted.

"What am I to do?" the young man asked. "I should like to enter political life: I have an ambition to serve the state. Unless I can be regarded at least not unfavorably by X—Z—, I am certain to be 'turned down' in the nominating convention, regardless of any desire of the people of my district."

"But what would you do if you entered the assembly under such auspices?"

"I should exert every effort to secure good legislation," he replied.

"But would you be free to do so if you arrived in official life under the favor of a boss? Would you not feel that by your visit you had given an implied promise? Would you not be under an obligation which would weigh like a millstone about your neck, and eventually, perhaps, sink you in the morass of legislative corruption?" . . .

"Is there, then, no entrance to political life for an ambitious young man?"

"Yes. There is one which every young man should take. He should go into politics from a desire to obtain for himself and his fellow voters the endless benefits which accrue under a republic if every voter would do his full duty. He should swear to himself that he will perform his full share in securing honest legislators and wise laws.

"You have a business. Resolve to yourself that you will look to it for success—for monetary reward.

"But—go into political life.

"Give up your spare moments to taking an interest in affairs.

"Go to the primaries—to the conventions, municipal, county, and state, if possible.

"Look carefully into every issue—debate it.

"Study the men of your section—learn their true values—single out those that can be depended upon to think rightly and act rightly—those that are wrong—those that are corrupt.

"Above all, teach yourself to think justly.

"Be steady. Do not be deflected from a right idea by business interest, or friendship, or by clever words. Learn to penetrate deception.

"Put away all hope of reward for these efforts. They are your contribution as a citizen to the good of the state.

"And above all, be cheerful and good-humored, even with those whom you know to be in the wrong. Let the Boss and his henchmen know that you may be counted as a steady influence in the decision of affairs—at the primaries, at the convention, and at the polls. They gain their power by being eternally diligent in wrong-doing. They must fear the man who will be eternally vigilant in right-doing.

"It is not improper to desire to serve the people by holding office. You should resolve to do so when the right time comes. A thoroughly independent man who understands politics and the people—the right policies and their enemies—such a man in the legislature or in Congress would in himself be powerful enough to create a revolution in methods by exposing corruption."

We quote the above for the purpose of giving our readers an insight into the methods of the party machines; and especially to give them the benefit of the excellent advice to young men who are ambitious to enter public life. The advice to "go into politics" may be accepted by any of our young men who have ambitions in that direction; but it should be with the understanding that it means "Doctrine and Covenants politics." And if the advice given above is heeded, all other kinds will necessarily be avoided; and the young man who follows it will be compelled to stand practically alone so far as party politics is concerned.

The Doctrine and Covenants politics comprehends something more than is usually expressed in the term, politics. It comprehends not only the selection of officials and rulers, but a depth of character, a breadth of honesty, a range of freedom and a height of morality to which modern political parties are strangers. Men of the world are beginning to understand this, and to urge the necessity of higher ideals upon the people. B. O. Flower, editor of the Arena, in an editorial in the October issue, 1905, gives expression to thought that can but be appreciated by every lover of light and truth. He says:

Evils may exist in society and evil-doers may long thrive without the heart of a nation or civilization being seemingly impaired. Men may, indeed, long be vaguely conscious of the presence of wrongs in a body-politic without the hideous facts being burned into the conscience in a compelling way. When, however, the grim and terrible truth is pressed home to the public consciousness and the people are aroused to the true condition, they can no longer be quit of responsibility. Then, if they remain inactive, if they fail to rise in their majesty and stamp out the iniquity and drive the evil-doers from the temple of government; they become accessories to the crime; for, knowing the evil and having the power to destroy it, they have condoned or ignored its presence. While ignorant of the true facts, or when vaguely conscious of the probability of evils being present, they were not morally contaminated, but when once the facts are brought home to them, if they fail in the solemn duty imposed by moral responsibility inherent to citizenship, then the nation suffers from the poison that is diffused throughout its organism. Ideals are lowered, moral integrity is impaired, and the nation suffers as only a small part of the people have heretofore suffered. Hence it is that periods of moral awakening and times when evils and corruptions are uncovered become supreme crises in the history of nations and civilizations. Then it is that fate holds the balance and the people cast the determining weight which means life or death, glory or doom, the promise of renewed health or the destruction and the epitaph of the nations thus tried. Thus it is that great periods of moral awakening, when the eyes of a nation are opened and the vice and iniquity or injustice that their carelessness or indifference has long permitted, are always potentially glorious or tragic, and the duties or obligations impressed upon citizens and especially on the leaders of thought are graver and more solemnly portentous than during the long dormant spells when evil and corruption advance so stealthily and covertly that their presence is not recognized. It is a melancholy fact, however, that at the great moral crises, such as the present hour, for example, there are always many well-meaning people who thoughtlessly throw the weight and force of their brain and moral influence on the side of darkness. To paraphrase a striking expression of Victor Hugo's, they pour darkness on a dawning day. The circumstance that they frequently are moved by the best intentions does not alter the evil effect of their influence any more than the ignorance of the child saves the hand which it thrusts into the fire from being burned. There is an old and excellent maxim which advises finding out what the enemy really desires and then doing the opposite. Now at the present time, when from the Atlantic to the Pacific the spiritual consciousness of the nation is being aroused to a realization of the moral diseases that have long been permeating the body-politic; now that evil is being unmasked in present-day business life and in municipal, state and national government; now that we have discovered the cancers that have long been eating into the vitals of the nation, impairing most seriously the integrity of state and individual; now that everywhere the evil-doers are trembling before the righteous indignation of a great people and the conscience of the citizens everywhere demands the righting of the wrong, and the restoration of the moral integrity that alone can make a nation truly great; now that everywhere the people are uniting to overthrow corrupt rings and immoral machines and to drive the corruptionists from seats of trust and the grafters from the temple of government, we have certain writers denouncing this crusade that promises so much,—this great unmasking of wrong that reveals the real diseased condition of present-day life and which has made immediate and thorough action essential to the rejuvenation of the republic and the ethical quickening of society. We are hearing cries of "Peace! Peace!" and arguments discouraging the further prosecution of the ring. If this cry of corruption and a demand for the ceasing of exposures of evil came merely from the citadels of the corruptionists, it would be neither surprising nor would it call for any serious notice, but when this immoral attitude is assumed by those who stand as leaders and who are supposed to represent moral integrity, the potential evil of such attitude calls for the earnest attention of all friends of ethical advance. If this cry for an immediate cessation of exposures of corrupt conditions, which means the virtual throwing of a mantle over the diseased body-politic, after the people have beheld the eating sore but before they have applied the cautery, should have emanated merely from the corruptors and those who are responsible for the lowering of national ideals, there would be no occasion for surprise, nor would the matter be a subject for special notice. When, however, the opposition to a crusade for a moral reformation comes from those who pose as leaders of the people and upholders of sound ethics, it demands the serious consideration of all friends of progress and moral advance.

Mr. G. W. Alger, in a recent article on "The literature of exposure," bewails the general unmasking of corruption, graft, dishonesty, and moral obloquy in official circles and among the leaders of the business world. This writer, we doubt not, is prompted by high motives. Nevertheless, he is giving aid and comfort to every trembling grafter, corruptionist, and moral criminal who is quaking in the present moral awakening. When Harper's Weekly and the New York Times created a moral uprising against the Tweed Ring, every effort possible was put forth by the thieves to stay the rising tide and put off any definite action on the part of the community. . . . There are times, and the present is such an occasion, when the first duty of all patriots is to fight corruption precisely as do men on the western prairies fight the great fires which, if not checked, will destroy the homes and sustenance of the settlers.

The most important lesson for the American people to learn to-day is that there can be no true peace, no enduring greatness, no real prosperity and progress, without sound moral foundation. The farmer buys a home. He finds it encircled with a board fence, and this fence is covered with a vein that has sent its tendrils into the wood and has become a mass of vegetation containing moisture and rapidly rotting the fence. At present the wall of green is beautiful, even as to those who saw only the external, Rome was gorgeous when, stricken in her vitals but arrayed in imperial splendor, she reeled forward to her doom, or as the foliage of an autumn tree or bush stricken with death is gorgeous to the eye. But the farmer knows that to save his fence he must remove the vine and paint the wood, else in a year or two there will be no fence. Now, it is so with corruption, dishonesty, and immorality in national or business life. They may long eat into the vitals of government and the morals of the individual unseen, and perhaps by many unsuspected, because over them has been cast the mantle of wealth, conventionalism, and respectability. Yet the hour comes when the people must by the might of a moral reformation purge themselves of the evil, or the destruction of the nation and the decadence of the individual is inevitable.

Other critics, less honest than Mr. Alger, seek to minify the evils now brought to light, or they strive to divert public attention from the real issues by exalting into undue prominence some good done by the workers of iniquity. This is to confuse the issue and defeat the ends of moral righteousness. We are told, for example, that while Mr. Rockefeller and the Standard Oil Company doubtless acquired much of their wealth by indirection and moral criminality, still Mr. Rockefeller is doing much good with his superfluous wealth. This is no new truth. When the New York Times and Harper's Weekly were fighting the battle of civic honor and integrity in New York by exposing the robbery of Tweed, the great New York boss gave fifty thousand dollars' worth of coal to the poor of the East Side, and incidentally, a number of respectable citizens of New York began sounding the principles of the boss. His philanthropy was dwelt upon on all sides with the evident purpose of diverting the public mind from the Times exposures and bringing the incorruptible tribune of the people into discredit. In this attempt to bolster up the Tweed Ring till the moral sensibilities of the people should again be lulled to sleep, the New York World, Sun, Herald, and Post joined with enthusiasm. And on the very eve of the publication in the New York Times of the record from the books of the city treasurer that fixed the guilt of the Ring and showed how in the most barefaced possible manner the city had been robbed of millions upon millions of dollars, a committee composed of John Jacob Astor, Moses Taylor, Marshall O. Roberts, George K. Sistare, E. D. Brown, and Edward Schell, all of whom were recognized among the wealthiest and most influential citizens of New York, signed a clean bill of health for the Ring in which they stated:

"We have come to the conclusion, and certify, that the financial affairs of the city, under the charge of the controller, are administered in a correct and faithful manner."

Then came the great Times revelation and the collapse of the Ring, but it was the "literature of exposure" and not the literature of guilty silence or of appreciation that destroyed the Ring and rescued New York.

So every forward step for justice, for social righteousness and civic purity has been rendered possible by those who dared to expose the wrong, the unjust and the corrupt, and who with single-hearted loyalty to high ideals carried forward the crusade until the civic conscience had been so awakened that it compelled the city, state, and nation to right the wrongs, and at every step in the age-long conflict the most potent aids to the corruptionists and the assailants of free institutions have been those elements of society, who count themselves among the most respectable, and many of whom have been actuated only by good motives, but who have sought to check the groundswell of moral indignation before it destroyed the corruption that was undermining public government and civic integrity. . . .

And so it is, always has been, and always will be till we reach higher conditions than at present, that when an individual, free from factional bias, has undertaken to point out the wrong, and evil, and corruption by which the people have been made to suffer, the influential citizens, the ones whom the people look up to most for protection, are willing to sign a "clean bill of health" for the ring, the community, the party, the corporation, the organization, the business, the individual, or whatnot whose reputation is at stake.

We can not partake of the partisan spirit that is in the world, and be safe. There is higher ground for the Saints of God to occupy. Will we do it? Will we be as a city set on a hill, as it is our privilege to be, or will we insist on appearing merely as a village squatted in a hollow, while the light of truth permeates the minds of many noble men around us, and the movements they are instituting in the advocacy of uprightness and true principles are towering above us? Will we forsake these things that are purely worldly, that always have and always will contain within them the seeds of decay and corruption, and take the stand as indicated by the word of God, draw the line, not between parties, but between darkness and light, between good and evil, between right and wrong, or must we be shamed into taking this stand by the reform movements in the world? In other words, will the Lord use these agencies in the world to kick us into line, or will we ignominiously fail to come up to the high standard that has been erected for us, spiritually, morally, and temporally, and be compelled to read, as others have, the handwriting on the wall, "TEKEL," "Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting." How does it look to see the church divided, each section hanging to the skirts of some political party, more or less corrupt and earthy, when we should occupy as children of the light, as a candle put on a candlestick that gives light to all? There is higher ground for us, a broader platform than any human political movement, if we will but accept it. Do we say "that there must needs be an opposition in all things," therefore political opposition between sections in the church is necessary? If we do we make a mistake. There must be the opposition of truth and error in all things, but the opposition need not be, necessarily, between parties, sections, organizations, quorums, or individuals. The opposition may exist in parties, sections, organizations, quorums, and individuals, but it must needs be the opposition of right against wrong, light against darkness. The right and the wrong in one party should not be opposed to the right and the wrong in another; but the right in all should be opposed to the wrong in all. That is the higher stand that is open for us. We may stand by right and truth and oppose error; then we will be occupying the Doctrine and Covenants platform: "Honest men and wise men should be sought for, diligently, and good men and wise men ye should observe to uphold." Ah, yes. We can not be partisan and do that.

And if the saint of God should occupy this high station, it is doubly important that Christ's ministry stand there. We know, as well as we know that faith is a principle of the gospel law, for we have seen it both at home and abroad, that the partisan-spirited minister loses influence with the Saints. Wherever he gives expression to his views he antagonizes the adherents of opposite parties, and they lose confidence in his ability to discern the truth. His partisan views lower him in the estimation of all nonpartisans who, standing as they believe where they can view impartially the doctrines set forth by all the parties, marvel at his blindness. Not only that, but the thinking class of his own party are humiliated because they have expected something higher of the representative of Christ than political prejudices. He is "hail fellow well met" with a few as party-loving as himself, and is satisfied in that low station. And so there is need for the minister to put in practice the Doctrine and Covenants politics.

Truly has the Spirit spoken, The weapons of our little army are yet carnal, many of them. And though the "set time" to favor Zion may be here (if we were ready for it), we can never bring about the redemption of Zion by truckling to political interests, or trailing in the wake of vacillating political movements.

"Awake, Saints, awake,
No time now for reposing,
The Lord is near,
Breaks on the ear;
O come, come away."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. U. W. Greene, in his October report of work done in his field, states that seventy-two have been baptized during the quarter. He says: "I am pleased to report that an era of prosperity, both spiritual and numerical, is being enjoyed in this field. The long series of troubles is ended and peace like a cherishing fountain has come to gladden our hearts. President Evans visited us twice, attending the Akron reunion four days; then in September the Pittsburg conference, speaking in Wheeling, West Virginia, Creola, and Columbus in Ohio. At Creola I arranged for him to speak from the platform with Governor Myron T. Herrick. Am informed that he made a hit. . . . Bro. Evans' visit was well received and good was accomplished. Shall be glad to welcome him at any time. Bishop Kelley rendered assistance at both Akron and Wellston reunions and assisted in opening the beautiful new church at Wheeling. Bro. J. W. Wight also attended the Akron reunion and rendered valuable assistance. In the Sunday-school line Bro. J. A. Gunsolley was at the reunions, strengthening the workers in the auxiliary societies. Bro. J. H. Lake also attended, dispensing blessings. We have secured extensive advertising this year, thus placing the work before the world in proper light. At Akron reunion the sisters signed a modified form of the 'Christian Herald petition' against seating Reed Smoot in the United States Senate. This petition was indorsed by the conference and ordered sent to Senator Charles A. Dick, who has acknowledged receipt of the same. The Christian Herald published the photograph of the sisters signing the petition and stated that the Reorganized Church has 'nothing in common with the Mormon church or creed, although, unfortunately this is not very clearly understood by the American people as a whole.' Recently at Amity, Pennsylvania, the preachers have raised a monument to the memory of Reverend Solomon Spalding and inscribed thereon, 'The Man Who Wrote the Book of Mormon.' What next? Will try to get the papers to set the matter right. There had been two public discussions in which Brn. R. Etzenhouser and I. M. Smith had successfully represented our cause. Bro. T. J. Beatty was mobbed in Scioto County, in August; he was then joined by Bro. Ebeling, and together they preached while armed men guarded every road and path to protect them. The local ministry are very active, a number baptizing several, so that the gain is much greater than the missionary report shows." Bro. Green states that Bro. W. H. Fuller had baptized some of his race, colored people.

Without full reports from his field Bro. Sheehy states that forty-six have been baptized; outlook favorable.

We are informed by Bro. Alma M. Fyrando of Magnolia, Iowa, that Davis H. Bays died Tuesday, October 24, at Persia, Iowa, and was buried in a cemetery some three miles from that place. He was formerly for many years an active missionary in the Reorganized Church; but for a number of years has been its bitter opposer and a minister in the Christian Church. He has now been called to meet his record, and to reap the results of his labors.

Bro. G. T. Griffiths reports thirty-five baptisms by the missionary force and twelve by local officers in the Northwestern Mission during the past quarter.

Bro. J. W. Wight reports one hundred baptisms in his field, seven baptisms reported by the local force.

Bro. J. W. Rushton writes encouragingly of prospects for the cause in the British Isles Mission. He says: "Speaking of the work in general in this land, there seems to be an improvement that is promising."

"THE LABORERS."

As the parable of Matthew 20 concerning the laborers sent into the vineyard seems to be under consideration now, I wish to give my views on the subject, and I may as well say now, as later on, that I do not indorse any theory I have yet seen published on the subject. The last theory by Bro. Gould is, in my judgment, no improvement on the two preceding ones, which he very cleverly and effectually knocks out of commission.

The difficulty with all these theories touching this parable is that they make the Lord give to some more than they earn above others. All may get more than we earn, but the extra pay should be equally divided. Justice demands that, and the Scriptures clearly teach that God will reward—pay—all men according to their works. Any and all ideas that make God give more to one than another for the same work are wrong.

The real difficulty in the way of understanding this parable, is that men have been trying to make more out of it than there is in it,—like trying to make a garment out of a piece of goods that does not contain enough cloth to make it. Now what is the leading thought the Lord is desirous of impressing on the people? Is he endeavoring to tell them what he is going to do under certain conditions, or what they should do? Notice the closing part of the parable, when the laborers all stood before him and were paid off. Some were dissatisfied at what seemed to them injustice. What did the Lord say? That it was just; that it was perfectly right for a servant to get the same pay for one hour's work as five? No. He said no such thing, because it is not true.

He said this: "Didst not thou agree with me for a penny? take thine and go thy way." Or in other words, Stand by your agreement. That is the real lesson taught in this parable; and it is a very important lesson,—too hard for most men to learn. And in order to illustrate that thought the parable had to be formulated as it is.

The dispensation theory that we have put upon the market, is farther away from the fact than the one we have so industriously assailed, namely, that it represents a person's life. As stated by Bro. Gould, it would represent the people of this dispensation as standing idle from Adam's time, waiting all through these dispensations; and it would make the people of Adam's time be working somewhere from then until now, and receive no more pay than we do for one fifth of the work.

So it is best for us to try to make no more out of it than God put in it, which is to do as we agree to do.

THE CHRISTIAN HOME.

Dear Editor: Two hundred and ten children to feed and clothe.

Sometimes our hands are pretty full, and the head aches with raising the funds to feed this great company of wholly destitute children, cared for, trained and educated in the Christian Home Orphanage, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

If you could be of assistance to us in this great effort, would you not do it?

I inclose herewith an article, which, if you feel that you can not publish, will at least give you a better idea of this work and what it has done in its twenty-three years of existence, so we ask you to read it, and trust that you may give it space in your paper. It may be the means of helping us to feed and clothe many more homeless children during the coming winter.

A PITIFUL CASE.

It was a bitter cold day in December, 1882, and the man was ragged and half drunk. Behind him were his four motherless girls, likewise ragged, and unkempt, and very cold and hungry. They had been turned out of the shack they called home, and night was not far off. This was the reason for their journey to the pastor's residence—he was a good man and the father of these wretched children had heard of him.

The pastor himself answered the faltering knock. The five were taken to a warm fire, where he listened to the man's pitiful story, which, in substance, was that he was a wreck, physically, morally, and mentally; his wife had lately died, and his daughters were going to ruin. Would the pastor please take them and care for them?

The pastor explained that he had no way to provide for his girls; that he occasionally dispensed food and clothing to needy families, but did not receive children for direct, personal care; that his duties were to his congregation and his own family.

In great despair the man cried out:

"If you do not take my girls, God only knows what will become of them. If doing such work as this isn't God's work, what is?"

The pastor's eyes were opened. He took the girls, and cared for them in his own house. Other homeless, deserted waifs came to his notice. He rented a house and hired a woman to look after them.

The work grew, until he was compelled to lecture in its behalf to obtain means for its support.

Pitiful cases of suffering, want, and sorrow came to his notice. His heart was burning with anguish for these little ones and their sorrow—so much more of it than he ever supposed could exist.

Thus was established the Christian Home Orphanage of Council Bluffs, Iowa, and its founder was the Reverend J. G. Lemen, who, after the home had been established one year, gave up his private residence, resigned as pastor of his church, and literally moved over to the home, put into it every cent of his earthly possessions and devoted his entire time to its management and its upbuilding.

The growth of this institution has been marvelous. Starting twenty-three years ago with one small frame cottage, it to-day occupies two city blocks of ground and has property valued at more than one hundred thousand dollars, which is all held by a board of trustees, and is so deeded that it can never be mortgaged nor alienated, but must be used for an orphanage for ever.

The Christian Home Orphanage is not a local institution, and is wholly undenominational in character, being controlled by no church, society, or sect. It is strictly a charitable institution, depending entirely for its support upon the voluntary contributions of those who sympathize with homeless and destitute children. It has no endowment, employs no agents, and charges no fees for receiving children, or for placing them for adoption with private families. It does not separate families of young children, believing that it is cruel to break up the family, scattering these little ones in all parts of the country.

This institution has cared for more than 4,000 children, and has constantly under its care an average of 220, many of whom are seriously and permanently crippled or afflicted in other ways.

The children are taught useful occupations, and are educated in the institution's own school. Chapel exercises are held every morning, and church and Sunday-school every Sunday.

The Home receives destitute children free of all charge, from any part of the country.

One year ago, the faithful founder of the orphanage died, and the work has been carried on by his eldest son.

A new brick dormitory for children under six years of age is now being erected, and funds are needed for additions to the industrial department. The manager appeals to all charitably inclined people to assist him.

Thanksgiving is near at hand, and donations of vegetables, fruits, canned goods, meats, poultry, butter, eggs, etc., are gratefully received. It is a large task to provide meals for this great number. Surely many will be led to help the good people of this institution in their laudable efforts.

Send all contributions, either of cash or merchandise, to the manager, H. R. Lemen, Christian Home, Council Bluffs, Iowa, who will promptly receipt for the same, and give the donor credit in the official publication of the institution, the Christian Home.

We believe there are many readers of this paper who will find pleasure in helping the manager of this orphanage provide a Thanksgiving dinner for his more than two hundred charges.

RISE OF THE REORGANIZATION.

Seventy-two years ago to-day occurred an event destined to be an important factor in the world's history—namely, the birth of Joseph Smith, the son and legitimate heir to Joseph Smith the founder, under divine rule, of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints—not the man so much as that he represented the continuation of the church as her rightful leader.

The boyhood of Joseph Smith was spent in and about Nauvoo, Illinois, where he lived on arriving at his twenty-first birthday, and at a period in life where it was necessary to make a choice of his life's vocation. He was at this time reading law under William McLennan, whom I met personally in Nebraska City in 1885, and who always spoke of Joseph Smith as a noble young man.

At this period, 1853, there was a great emigration to Utah. A delegation from a colony passing Nauvoo for Utah visited Joseph Smith and urged him to go to Utah. He replied that he was ready to do the work that might fall to his lot, or that he might be called to do; that he could not give his sanction to the teachings of the leaders in Utah.

In the summer and fall of 1853 he had a violent sick spell and while convalescing his mind was turned to the question of what part he was to act in the work begun by his father. While thus seriously engaged in deep thought on the to him perplexing question, the room suddenly expanded and disappeared, and he saw stretched out before him: towns, cities, busy marts, court-houses, courts, and assemblies of men, all busy in the affairs of the world. He was made to know that he who entered this life must be submerged in its din, bustle, and confusion. A sudden transition came, and he was gazing over a wide expanse of country in a prairie land—hills and dales, hamlet and village, farm and farmhouse, betokening thrift and happiness and peaceful life. He remarked to the person standing by, "This must be the country of a happy people." The reply was, "Which would you prefer, life, success, and renown among the busy scenes that you first saw, or a place among those people without honors or renown? Think of it well, for the choice will be offered you, and you must decide, and your decision once made you can not recall it, and must abide the results."

After this vision, (1853,) he pursued his studies till the early winter of 1855, when he was visited by William Walker, of Utah, with whom he had the first serious disagreement about polygamy,—Walker affirming and Joseph Smith denying. Various and strong inducements were offered him to go to Utah and take the leadership of the church there, so much so that it became a perplexing question to him.

The thought occurred to him, as it had to his father under something of similar circumstances, "If any lack wisdom let him ask of God." He saw a vision of a funnel-shaped cloud above the brightness of the summer sun that was then shining. It descended and enveloped him completely, so that he stood within its radiance. The question, "Why not go to Utah?" had been in his mind. So when the light settled upon him, a voice from it said in answer to this question, "Because the light in which you stand is greater than theirs," in a tone clear and distinct. He also asked the question, "Is polygamy of God?" and the answer was distinctly, "No," and that he was to have nothing to do with it but to oppose it. These experiences for ever settled the question as to his going to Utah.

He had recently married, and with his wife settled on a farm. In this same year, 1856, he was again visited by Elders George A. Smith and Erastus Snow, a committee from Utah, who again presented the question of his going to Utah, holding out to him flattering prospects if he would go with them. But it was to no avail, as the Lord had settled the Utah and polygamy questions with him by showing him plainly that neither was of the true light.

Forty-eight years ago this month, he was visited on his farm by Elders Samuel H. Gurley and Edmund C. Briggs, sent as delegates from the Reorganized Church, then located at Zarahemla, Wisconsin. In the message they brought, which is too lengthy to here reproduce, they plead the right of presidency to the literal decendants of the chosen seed to whom the promise was made; also that the Spirit of revelation from God had moved them in the matter of reorganizing the church. Joseph's answer to them was that what they came to bring might be the word of the Lord. He could not say that it was not. He had, however, no testimony that it was. He was prepared to do what God required of him.

Time passed on till the fall of 1859. The questions as to his connection with his father's work were all settled save one, viz: "Where and with whom should my life-work lay?" The two ways were presented: To Utah and revel in honor and financial luxury, or with the Reorganization. This was the important question of his life, and for an answer he sought to the same source from whence he had hitherto received light. The answer came clear and distinct: "The Saints reorganized at Zarahemla and other places, is the only organized portion of the church accepted by me. I have given them my Spirit and will continue to do so while they remain faithful and humble." This was sufficient, and in keeping with his desires another committee from the Reorganization visited him in March, 1860, composed of William Marks, W. W. Blair (whom many of you have seen), and Israel L. Rogers; and arrangements were made for Joseph to attend the annual conference to be held April 6, and take his legitimate place as the leader of the church in harmony with the prediction and blessing of his father who had blessed and set him apart to this end, as his successor.

A few words in regard to the rise of the Reorganization prior to this time:

On November 18, 1851, there came to J. W. Briggs a revelation in which the Lord says:

Let the elders whom I have ordained by the hands of my servant Joseph, . . . resist not this authority, . . . which is to preach my gospel as contained in the record of the Jews, and the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants; and cry repentance and remission of sins through obedience to the gospel, and I will sustain them, . . . and in mine own due time will I call upon the seed of Joseph Smith, and will bring one forth, and he shall be mighty and strong, and he shall preside over the high priesthood of my church; and then shall the quorums assemble, and the pure in heart shall gather and Zion shall be reinhabited, as I said unto my servant Joseph Smith; after many days shall all these things be accomplished saith the Spirit.

Thus the Lord sanctions his former revealments and begins to regather the scattered yet faithful ones under the promises that Joseph Smith, or the seed of the Martyr would be called, and that after many days Zion would be reinhabited. Zion is fast being reinhabited by the Reorganized Church, there now being located there over thirteen hundred, which number is being constantly augmented by the gathering which is constantly, though quietly, going on. I have been privileged to see the quorums assembled in General Conference, presenting an inspiring scene, especially when accompanied by a pentecostal outpouring of the Holy Spirit, as, too, we have witnessed and experienced.

In 1852 there came to Z. H. Gurley a revelation telling him to Rise up, cast off all that claim to be prophets, and go forth and preach the gospel, and say that God will raise up a prophet to complete his work.

Thus as the Reorganization we stand on firm foundations.

1st. The perfect agreement with the previously revealed law and

2d. Being sanctioned by additional revelation from the same God.

The work is moving on and we have nothing to fear if we can constantly move toward the ideal standard, The Pure in Heart.

PAUL.

I have been studying quite a bit of Brother Paul's writing of late, and I feel impressed to contribute a few thoughts on the subject. What was it that caused Paul and many others in his day to leave home and a quiet, peaceful life, to engage in a warfare that meant privation and suffering? I have often thought of Paul as a bright young man of more than ordinary education, with bright prospects for future usefulness, Hebrew of the Hebrews, pure blood, a Pharisee of the Pharisees—strong in conviction,—none more zealous for the religion of the fathers,—persecuting the church,—a leader among his people, popular and favored.

Not a cloud was there between him and his most sanguine expectations, yet in a moment he laid all aside and cast his lot in with a cause that was everywhere spoken against.

From a human standpoint, what could have been the motive? No promise of distinction, a most necessary element for an ambitious man. No prospects of wealth, which alone could induce a fortune-hunter to engage in an enterprise. No idea of a life of ease, a thing altogether necessary to get the interest of an indolent man. No promise of fame and popularity, but just the reverse—oblivion and obloquy. How strange that a person full of manly vigor and worldly desires should in a moment, without the least care as to what the result would be, take a step which to all human ken was so disastrous. But Paul said, "I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, . . . that I may . . . be found in him, not having mine own righteousness," and forgetting all earthly honor, fame, fortune, and friends, "I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

But, Paul, you may have to endure poverty and hunger.

Yes, I have learned both to be full and to be hungry, to abound, to suffer need; and in whatsoever state I am therewith to be content.

You may have to endure great hardships for Christ.

I have suffered shipwreck. Five times have I been whipped with the lash until I suffered from loss of blood. I have been stoned and left for dead.

But, even your friends may forsake you, Paul.

Yes, at one time when I needed the comfort and sympathy and advice of friends, all men forsook me, and I stood alone. No, not alone, for the Lord stood with me.

But, Paul, would it not have been better for you to have turned in with the world, gotten to yourself fame,—become rich in this world's goods, and enjoyed life as we here find it?

I count not this life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy. I have had joy in tribulation, though myself poor. I have made many rich. I have been troubled, but not distressed; perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; always bearing about in my body the dying of the Lord Jesus.

But, Paul, are you not now willing to turn back to the world?

No, but to press forward; for I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course. I have kept the faith; and now I am ready to be offered up.

But do not you feel now, in these your last days upon the earth, that it would have been better for you to let the religion of Christ alone?

No, for there awaits me in the heavenly kingdom a crown of righteousness which he shall give me, and not only me, but also all who love his appearing.

Now we might ask ourselves the question, "What was it that caused men in our day to leave home and a quiet, peaceful life to engage in a warfare that meant privation and suffering, men who could have won to themselves fame and fortune, men who are fitted for senators, congressmen, and the highest position in life, to cast in their lot with a cause that from a human standpoint was so disastrous? This needs no interpretation so far as Latter Day Saints are concerned. We would readily say that the same God that moved upon Paul in his day has moved upon men in our day and caused the pure religion of Jesus Christ to be reestablished in these latter days.

Saints, can not we look back seventy-five years and see what it has cost to reestablish this great latter-day work, and start out with a greater determination to serve God, both in spirit and in truth? "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." —Matthew 5: 10-12.

THE OTHER SIDE.

In a preceding number of the HERALD is a letter written by a brother who discusses the question, Will the sons of perdition ever be resurrected? I desire to present a few thoughts on this subject, not to create contention, but that we may learn from each other for our benefit.

We will agree that those who were once enlightened with the word of God, and tasted of the heavenly gift, and received of his Spirit, and have sinned against the light, have become the sons of perdition. But we can not agree that they will not be resurrected.

We are referred to the Book of Mormon, page 71, for evidence that the Devil has no flesh-and-bone body. Will the brother please tell us what kind of a body the Devil has? He has not established the fact yet by referring to the Book of Mormon, page 71, that if our spirits and bodies should not be restored to one another, our spirits would be like the Devil. Our spirits would be disembodied spirits, but does that prove that they would be like the Devil? I think not.

By taking the second verse together with the third we are given greater light on the subject:

For as death has passed upon all men, to fulfill the merciful plan of the great Creator, there must needs be a power of resurrection, and the resurrection must needs come unto man by reason of the fall; and the fall came by reason of transgression; and because man became fallen, they were cut off from the presence of the Lord; wherefore, it must needs be an infinite atonement; save it should be an infinite atonement, this corruption could not put on incorruption. Wherefore, the first judgment which came upon man, must needs have remained to an endless duration. And if so, this flesh must have laid down to rot and to crumble to its mother earth to rise no more.—Nephi 6:2.

From this we learn that death hath passed upon all men, the sons of perdition not excluded. It teaches the necessity of a resurrection. It came by reason of the fall, and the fall came by reason of transgression; and because of this there is an atonement by Christ to bring to pass the restoration of all men, the sons of perdition included. Nephi is teaching us if it were not for the atonement we all would have been lost, and this body would have crumbled to its mother earth to rise no more. There would be no hope for us; and the first judgment passed on man would have remained to an endless duration. And in this sense we would be like the Devil and his angels,—in misery like himself,—be shut out from the presence of God. Nephi 6:6 teaches us of a judgment to come, when all men will have to be judged. They will have to appear in their immortality, and they who are righteous shall be righteous still, and they who are filthy let them be filthy still. Wherefore, they who are filthy are the Devil and his angels, and they shall go away into everlasting fire, prepared for them. If the Devil and his angels will come to judgment, to be judged, will not the sons of perdition have to answer for their sins, and especially as they belong to the same class? If not, why not? And will they not have to be restored and have an equal chance with the rest of mankind? If not, why not? "I say unto thee, my son, that the plan of restoration is requisite with the justice of God; for it is requisite that all things should be restored to their proper order."—Alma 19:8.

In this chapter Alma tells us that justice can not rob mercy, neither can mercy rob justice. The brother tells us that Christ's death and resurrection was to bring to man a plan of redemption from the dead. True. Hence a being who has not fallen by transgression does not come under such a plan. Will not the same cause produce the same effect? If the death of Adam affected all men, and the atonement of Christ was for all men, will not the resurrection be for all men, Jesus being the first that should rise?

The reason Jesus says it would be better for them never to have been born, is because of the judgment they shall receive, Depart, ye cursed. The apostle Paul says, "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." Will the sons of perdition be excluded from the all? What will the brother do with the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, where Christ says to them, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels"? Not the sons of perdition only, but those who did not feed the hungry and gave them no meat,—thirsty and they gave them no drink. This is the judgment day when all nations shall stand before him to be judged of their works, when he shall say, "Depart ye cursed."

In the twenty-eighth section of Doctrine and Covenants, paragraph 11, the Lord tells us that because Adam yielded unto temptation, and transgressed the commandment of God, he became spiritually dead, "which is the first death, even that same death, which is the last death, which is spiritual, shall be pronounced upon the wicked when I shall say, Depart ye cursed." To whom shall he say, "Depart ye cursed?" To the Devil and his angels, and to the sons of perdition. Now are these the only ones to whom he shall say this?

But, behold, I say unto you, that I, the Lord-God, gave unto Adam and unto his seed, that they should not die as to the temporal death, until I, the Lord God, should send forth angels to declare unto them repentance and redemption through faith on the name of mine only begotten Son; and thus did I, the Lord God, appoint unto man the days of his probation; that by his natural death, he might be raised in immortality unto eternal life, even as many as would believe, and they that believe not, unto eternal damnation; for they can not be redeemed from their spiritual fall, because they repent not, for they will love darkness rather than light, and their deeds are evil, and they receive their wages of whom they list to obey.—Doctrine and Covenants 28:12.

From this we learn there is a probation given unto man, that if he will repent he can be redeemed from the spiritual fall which was pronounced upon Adam, —a banishment from God's presence. And those that believe not can not be redeemed from their fall. They will not receive eternal life, but for their wages they receive death. Wherefore they will be dead to all things spiritually. Paul says, "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life."

In the seventh paragraph of this same section we are taught that there will be a resurrection of all men:

For their graves shall be opened, and they shall come forth; yea, even all; and the righteous shall be gathered on my right hand unto eternal life; and the wicked on my left hand will I be ashamed to own before the Father; wherefore, I will say unto them, Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his angels.

Now who are the righteous spoken of here, and who are the wicked? Let the Book of Mormon answer. Alma 3:8:

And now I say unto you, all you that are desirous to follow the voice of the good shepherd, come ye out from the wicked, and be ye separate, and touch not their unclean things; and behold their names shall be blotted out, that the names of the wicked shall not be numbered among the names of the righteous, that the word of God may be fulfilled, which saith, the names of the wicked shall not be mingled with the names of my people. For the names of the righteous shall be written in the book of life; and unto them will I grant an inheritance at my right hand.

First, this teaches that there is a book of life written, and that the names of the righteous are written in this book of life, and only to these is promised an inheritance on his right hand. It follows, then, that the wicked whose names are not written in this book of life will be found on his left hand. Book of Mormon, page 195:

Therefore I say unto you, that he that will not hear my voice, the same shall ye not receive into my church, for him will I not receive at the last day.

We will quote now from Malachi 3:16, 17:

Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard-it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name.

You take notice that those that feared the Lord thought upon his name and spake often one to the other, and there was written a book of remembrance, "and they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels."

Revelation 3:5:

He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels.

The promise is made only to him that overcometh. If they do not overcome, to the Father he will not confess their names, and they will not be in the book of life. Their names will be blotted out. Now what difference is there between one that does not overcome, and one that is overcome? There is no difference.

And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire. — Revelation 20:15. But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death.

From this we see there is somebody else besides the sons of perdition who will endure the second death.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

The advisory board of the Daughters of Zion has appointed as ways and means committee for raising money for the Children's Home Fund, Mrs. L. R. Wells, 623 West Lexington Street, Independence, Missouri, chairman; Mrs. Ellen Sargent, 801 West Lexington Street, Independence, Missouri, and Miss Dora Young, Holden, Missouri. Presidents of locals will probably hear from them soon, if they have not already done so, and we hope they will try to take up some line of work suggested by them, and let us see how good a showing we can make for the home fund this year.

Commencing with the November number of Daughters of Zion reading-leaflet, let all orders thereafter be sent to Mrs. B. C. Smith, 214 South Spring Street, Independence, Missouri. Prices are twenty-five cents per hundred, fifteen cents for fifty, and ten cents for twenty-five.

MRS. B. C. SMITH, President.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 23.

Dear Column: It is several months now since I contributed anything towards your fullness. For a time after our arrival in our dear native land I could not put my mind to anything, but to selfishly enjoy the grandeur of this glorious country, as well as meeting with our many friends and relatives. In fact I know very little difference in the feeling towards the relatives in the household of faith, and those of our own household; all were alike kind, and pleased to see us. We had not thought to receive so much of loving kindness. Having been gone so long, and where there is in these days so much to draw the mind to that of the present, it would have been only natural that the absent ones would have been in a degree lost sight of; but we did not find it so. And again, we have until very recently been so continuously going from place to place in answer to the calls for a visit, that there was really little or no time, or opportunity, to write. Yes, we, husband and self, were visiting, but I trust they were not unprofitable visits, or time lost. Indeed, no, but seasons of pleasant and profitable intercourse with Saints, such as our souls had often longed for in our isolated life at the Islands. At each locality the Spirit bore its witness, and our hearts swelled with joy.

But the climax of all was when we met with the Saints of our home branch (the Newport Branch). To see again the faces of those with whom we had so often met to worship, in the early days of our life in "the kingdom," when the Spirit of God was so freely poured out, brought such a thrilling of the Spirit I could not keep the tears back, though I scarcely knew why I wept. And when Elder Burton took the stand what a panorama of events passed before my mind's eye, showing the fulfillment of prophecies that had been given and sorrowed over because they came not to pass according to the limited interpretation placed upon them; yet the work of the intervening years had wrought them out. How vividly I recalled that of a certain evening when it was he who stood thus, and as the spirit of prophecy rested upon him he said, "Two from this branch shall go out on a mission; they shall go north, and during their mission four branches shall be built up and two other branches helped."

And when the time of trial came to that people, and their homes were taken from them,—as was also prophesied—and many were scattered, and that prophecy had not been fulfilled; those who thought lightly of those things, pronounced it a failure, while others felt sorrowful, not knowing how to reconcile the Spirit that gave the promise with a failure. But now it was seen that two from that branch did go on a mission—though one may not have been called a missionary. They went north as far as San Francisco, then out on the Pacific Ocean even to the Australias. During their mission four branches were built up, one reorganized, and another revived.

This, with other promises and fulfillments loomed up to view as so many witnesses for the truth. It seemed to me that God was vindicating the spirit of the work in bringing those things to view.

How good of our heavenly Father to show his children from time to time that the thread of events is held in his own hand and that he changes not, neither forgets.

But I am lingering long at our home branch, and have scarcely space to note the enjoyable reunions, that of Southern California in August and Northern California in September, that it has been our privilege to attend since our arrival, a feast truly of spiritual things, with natural home singing and words that we could understand and enjoy. But since both have been written of by abler pens than mine, I will not repeat, will only say it was good to be there.

Shortly after the close of the northern reunion, I came south on account of the very poor health of my daughter Addie Matthews, and am still with her. She is improving some. Husband is still north.

We learn through recent letters from the Islands, that our aged friend, Mr. Isaac Henry, who was also our translator, has passed away. And also that typhoid fever is making its annual rounds, causing many deaths both among the natives and the white people.

The letters from our native brothers and sisters are pathetic. Sr. Maua, after writing of much love and much sorrow, says, "O Emā return! O Iotefu return! Great is my sorrow and weeping day and night because you two are not with us. Behold my love for you and come to us again."

I am becoming accustomed to the change of climate, and do not feel the cold as I did at first. Am in the enjoyment of health and happiness, with heart-felt gratitude to the giver of all good gifts that all our children and grandchildren were spared to greet us on our return, and am so glad too, that I am where I can render a motherly service to my child in her nervous condition.

Unconscious Influence.

While visiting in a certain city of the East, one calm, lovely evening in the spring, I found myself at its business center. I watched the busy scene. Trolley-cars, omnibuses, bicycles, vehicles of every kind crossing each others' tracks; men and women hurrying to and fro, each upon some errand of business or pleasure.

There seemed no lull in the noise, no cessation of activities by which the approach of the hours for rest from labor might be distinguished from the noon-time.

As I gazed, I wondered about eternity for this multitude of restless souls. I wondered how many of these, so eager for this life's interests, were ready to meet their God. My reverie was broken by the sound of music. Oh, how sweet, how refreshing! Voices were singing, too. I leaned forward from the window, when with sound of drum and tambourine, came the tread of feet. It was a little band of Salvation soldiers. I listened, and my heart bounded with them at the words,

"I'm satisfied with Jesus here
He's everything to me;
His dying love has won my heart,
And now he sets me free."

"There," I said, "isn't that beautiful? They were trying to arrest a busy, worldly throng with heaven's music about Jesus. A few in contrast with the many."

These dear, brave souls took their stand near by, sang of their Redeemer, lifted him up by prayer and testimony, and then retraced their steps in marching order, singing the gospel to others whether they would hear or not.

So far as they knew, no one heard or cared. They had done their duty. God would attend to the results.

But there was one building where, high above the street, the windows were opened that the inmates might catch the sweet strains. Two heads leaned forward, two hearts were touched, and the influence of that effort for Jesus strengthened purposes for a closer union with the Master and a more fearless spirit in declaring his love.

It seems a hopeless task, sometimes, to try to save a world so wicked, so indifferent, so busy that there is no time to serve the Lord.

"Gentle words of patient kindness,
'Tho' unheeded oft they seem,
To the fold of grace may gather Souls of which we little dream."

"In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand; for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good." Watch every opportunity to do good. Give a tract here, a kind word there. Step out of your way to do a kindness. Let no chance to benefit others slip by. You may not see any results, but plod on, labor on; in heaven some soul will greet you who has been saved from eternal death through your influence, unseen by yourself.

One soul saved is worth a lifetime effort. Just think, if you fail to be faithful in one instance, it may mean an eternity of hopeless despair for another. God loves and will honor those who are true to duty even in the face of seemingly lost effort. "Opportunity is the measure of our responsibility," and to this degree will we be accountable.—Rose of Sharon.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

To the Superintendent.

1. Be ahead of time, to prepare paraphernalia.
2. Open on time, exactly.
3. Have good singing which means all begin together, sing together. (If a new hymn, read it aloud together first.)
4. Give scholars some part in prayer.
5. If you lead in prayer, be pertinent, be brief, be tender.
6. Give your assistant superintendent plenty to do; if not busy in the opening service he may be greeting in-comers at the door, caring for strangers, or planning supply work.
7. Do not interfere with the progress of the class-study, except in a matter of life and death.
8. Have a teachers' prayer-meeting (if at all possible) for ten minutes before the school session.
9. Close with an appropriate hymn, with a brief clincher of some one main point. Let the students go out of the school with the distinctly spiritual impression, "Inasmuch as ye did it to one of the least of these ye did it unto me."—Iowa Sunday-School Helper.

Method of Conducting a Sunday-School.

While I can not, in this short article, nor do I have the wisdom to place in a lengthy one, all that pertains to method in conducting a Sunday-school, still I will strive to set forth some of the more essential facts with the hope and prayer that they may be helpful.

"Nothing so much clears a learner's way, helps him so much on in it, and makes him go easy and so far in any inquiry as a good method," is one of the practical sayings of the great English philosopher, John Locke; and the German writer Goethe speaks of method in this way: "Method will teach you to win time."

Be we engaged in whatsoever work we may, if we

of what we wish to accomplish, and with an eye alert to find the easiest practical way to reach the end desired, we will have gained far more to ourselves and to all concerned than any one could gain from a conglomerate, half-hearted effort. Hence we can see the practicability in the saying, "Method will teach you to win time."

The inquiry we are so much interested in is the gospel given for the redemption of man, and the Sunday-school inquires how to present it to the youth that they may become "trained up in the way they should go."

To succeed in this work

DEMANDS A SACRIFICE

on the outstart, a sacrifice that in itself will develop the very essence of method. We must be fully consecrated to our labors, our heart and soul must be in the work, that we be able to superintend with the view that when the hour is past that the lesson of the day may have been presented in a clear, practicable way, and that all the wheels that move the machinery of the school may have turned in harmony, each officer and teacher working in his time and place to the confusion of no other one. When we are possessed of this innate desire to benefit, we will find that we do not know so much as we used to think we did, and we will also find there is a necessity to bow in humble prayer before the "author and finisher of our faith" that we might have wisdom and understanding in conducting the school intrusted to our care.

PRAYER,

I would say then, is the first essential to success in things of God, for in them we must be led by the Spirit. "And ye receive the Spirit through prayer."—Doctrine and Covenants 63:16. Let us then forget not to call often upon our God in prayer. It will teach us gradually through our daily experiences what to do and how to do it—the very essence of method.

BE ON TIME.

It is most necessary that the officers and especially the superintendent be on time as his duties are first and continuous throughout the service. Yet he can not do his work perfectly unless his collaborators are also in their places. The results are better if they are more than on time, say about fifteen minutes, which will give them time to engage in a spirited song-service. This dispels gloominess in that it drives away the heavy cares of life, and implants a feeling of cheerfulness. It prepares the heart for the requirements of the hour and causes the individuals who take part to feel like praising God. Then begin the service on time.

The person who is to offer the

PRAYER,

if some other one than the superintendent so acts, should be notified or requested beforehand, to give time for collection of thought and that he may seat himself well forward in the building. It is just a little out of harmony to listen to a petition where just one is offered in the service, from away in the remote corners. The heart may be right, but it imparts a sense of nonpreparation and confusion. We rather look forward. The same rule might govern in the

BENEDICTION.

The prayer might be spiced with some thought or theme of the lesson, simple and easily understood by the children, for it is them we first wish to benefit. Let the petition be short. All, and especially small children, tire of a lengthy effort that their understanding can not grasp. They become fidgety, and a feeling of unrest follows where we would create reverence and a peaceful quiet.

There are so

MANY LITTLE THINGS

that go to make the service run smoothly; and to come near realizing the ideal each officer must have a sense of his own duties. The superintendent can not successfully conduct it alone, and should not be expected to any more than an engine would be expected to thrash grain without the separator. It takes the united effort of all. The body is composed of many members, and the hands, the feet, and the eyes and ears must each do their part and never leave a duty with the thought that "some one else will do it if I don't." Let the librarian do the duties of a librarian. The chorister should have the songs picked out and handed to the organist if possible a week ahead of time where practice is required. The librarian might also have the numbers for his convenience in offering books to late arrivals, having a few books marked for easy reference.

THE SECRETARY

plays a very important part. The coldness of figures and statistics in his work of reports might be relieved by a few spicy, well-meaning remarks in addition. They might be on punctuality, comparisons of offerings of different weeks, etc. This would invite attention to the report which but few usually know anything about after it is read.

I said each officer must have

A SENSE OF HIS OWN DUTIES.

Verse 4 of article 7 of By-laws for Sunday-schools reads thus: "The officers, teachers, and visiting committee shall meet once a month for consultation and business pertaining to the duties of their office." It seems to me a better way could not be provided for consultation and learning our duties and obtaining a mutual understanding, that we might labor together in harmony. In such a meeting there is more liberty in the exchange of thought, and it is confined to those who have the responsibility of doing the work, and avoids the contention and agitation by those on whom no responsibility lies. They can talk over the requirements of their own school and exchange thoughts regarding their duties, so when the time of service comes they can each do their parts with ease. This meeting is to the Sunday-school what the priesthood meeting is to the church.

THE MARCH.

In large schools where separate rooms are used for the primaries, the passing to and from class work may be made more orderly if music is provided. And such an effort is not unsuccessful where classes resort to different parts of the same room, especially when gathering together for review. It is beneficial as a warning that the time of class-work has expired, and each class should come to its place led by its teacher. The primaries nearest the front, next the intermediates, and so on. Then, whoever conducts the review of the little folks has them in easy reach.

Much may be said about method. We feel after we have said and done all we can that there is much more yet to learn and do, which will be unfolded to us as our zeal and work demands. Let us go on in this labor of love that our reward may be sure and that "time may be won."

Letter Department

TULARE, California, October 5, 1905.

Editors Herald: Our two California reunions, Southern and Northern, are past. As before stated in your columns, they were a success in every sense, and the strength received from these gatherings can only be measured by the Infinite. A better day is dawning in the fact that the Saints are more clearly comprehending the "marvelous work and a wonder"—that it is indeed perfect—that no exigency can arise in our lives, no combination of circumstances surround us, but what the heaven-born system will meet and solve if only allowed its perfect opposition. "With all your getting, get understanding." Understanding or wisdom is the leaven which will leaven "all" getting. Truly "The glory of God is intelligence."

After attending to work placed in hand to do by missionary in charge, at Oakland, in company with Bro. C. W. Deuel and by suggestion of those in authority, I began to work my way south to my own district. We first stopped at Fresno and found a few Saints, some still battling against "the world, the flesh, and the devil" and others about ready to quit.

A few miles out from Fresno, at Oleander, we found a resting-place at the home of Bro. George Barr. Although in the bustle of having "just sold out," we spent a pleasant and hope profitable evening with Bro. George and family. Bro. Barr moves to Fresno, where we anticipate he will lend a hand for the progress of the work.

From there we came to this place, and have been holding meetings nearly every night since our arrival. This little branch has had its struggle for an existence. The late additions to its faithful few, from the Newport Branch in Southern California, will no doubt help materially. Up to present time three of the families of the Saints, Bedford's, Damron's, and Smith's have settled in and around here. Amongst these we find staunch supporters and faithful workers in the cause. The hospitable home of Bro. William Bedford is our stopping-place, with urgent invitations from the rest of the Saints. We find conditions here about the same as the rest of California—almost a complete indifference to the gospel by outsiders—some of the Saints fairly starving for spiritual food, and some indifferent.

How long shall we continue to spend so much time and energy in bringing souls into the fold and at the same time let those already in "starve to death"? Scattered all over this large valley are isolated Saints being tossed about in the vortex of conflicting opinions and warring social elements. What shall the harvest be? Is it not possible that some of these scattered Saints are partly to blame for their condition? We are commanded to neglect not to assemble together, etc. If we think so little of this command as to allow us to place ourselves in a condition that we can not comply, who is to blame? The command implies that we should so control our affairs that we may be in a position to heed and obey. Let us not magnify a dollar until it looks as big as a cart-wheel, neither look through the magnifying glass from the opposite end and make the souls of our children to appear about the size of a pin head. By getting the proper focus, we shall grow better spiritually.

I have found in my traveling companion, Bro. Deuel, a man of sterling worth. It is a pleasure to be associated with a man that is above reproach. Bro. Deuel's visit was timely and fraught with good for the Saints.

It is with no small concern we are watching Bro. Fred and associates, battling for truth amongst "our cousins." "Lay on McDuff," etc., and God be with the Utah contingent. They surely need his help if anybody does.

Working for Zion's weal,

A. CARMICHAEL.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, October 17, 1905.

Editors Herald: I believe I have written nothing for publication in the HERALD since the April conference.

By the invitation and consent of the missionary in charge, I deemed it proper that I should seek to meet some demands outside of my designated field; hence, in June, I made a short trip to the Nauvoo District. June 2, 3, and 4, the Sunday-school and Religio conventions, and the district conference, were held in a tent at Fort Madison, Iowa. Bro. J. W. Peterson, district president and missionary, presided over the conference with dignity and ability. Our young brother, Mark H. Seigfreid, is assisting Bro. Peterson in his work, and is a Sunday-school and Religio worker, manifesting both tact and zeal in his work.

On Saturday, the 3d, by vote of his branch and the conference, Bro. Herbert S. Salisbury was ordained to the office of elder. By proper cooperation upon his part, this ordination will prove to be a blessing to Bro. Salisbury, his family, and the church. Such was the plain testimony of the Spirit. I hope, therefore, that the office will be magnified, as the law of God directs.

I remained at Fort Madison till Wednesday morning, speaking in the tent Monday and Tuesday evenings. The attendance was small, interest fair.

From June 7 to 13, I spent my time in Rock Creek, Illinois. I visited around some, among old friends and relatives, trying to do some good and no evil. On Sunday I spoke twice in the Saints' church.

On Tuesday, the 13th, I returned home.

Have preached occasionally at Lamoni, and twice, I believe, at Davis City; also once in the Greenville branch.

Spent a portion of July in the Evergreen Branch, where I spoke twice with good liberty, and gave twelve blessings.

Another portion of the same month was spent in the Pleasanton Branch, where I gave fourteen blessings and spoke twice. At both of these places we met good, earnest Saints. How pleasant and cheering it would be if all we meet were of that kind.

After attending a few sessions of the Lamoni reunion, and preaching on Sunday morning, I left in the midst of it, that is, on Wednesday, August 9, to attend the reunion at Tabor, Iowa, according to previous promise. Here I met kind friends and relatives, and aside from hard struggles with ill-health, had a very satisfactory and enjoyable time. Spoke six times and gave thirteen blessings. Bro. Henry Kemp was present, hence the patriarchal work was divided between us, to my great relief and, perhaps, to the more complete satisfaction of all.

After spending a few days in visiting with Bro. and Sr. H. O. Redfield and eight nephews and nieces, (one being absent,) and a two days' visit with Bro. and Sr. Leeka and family, we repaired to the Nebraska City reunion, an account of which has already appeared in your columns. Here, too, we received the kindest of treatment, met many old and new friends, and once more experienced how sweet it is, after suffering and trial, to receive the recognition and approval of God. Without this we would perish!

Monday, September 4, I returned home, badly worn and nearly sick.

Having made a conditional promise to the Saints of the Nauvoo District, last June, I determined at a big risk of physical safety to redeem the promise, if possible, while my stenographer, Sr. Estella Wight, was present and willing to undertake her important part of the work.

We left Lamoni on Saturday, September 16. Our first stop was at Cleveland, Iowa, where we gave eight blessings and I spoke twice.

September 19, we went to Burlington, Iowa, where we gave eight blessings.

September 22, and the following morning, we gave five blessings at Fort Madison, Iowa.

On the 23d, we went to Farmington, where we gave four blessings, and I spoke three times.

September 26, returned to Fort Madison, gave three blessings, (one on the morning of the 27th,) and on the following morning went to Montrose, where we gave three blessings.

On the afternoon of the 28th (Thursday), we returned to Burlington in order to complete our work. Gave ten blessings and spoke once.

Monday, October 2, we took train for Adrian, Illinois. Here we gave four blessings, did some other work, made a short visit with my poor old father, and the next evening started for home.

At all these places we were kindly and well cared for, and as a rule, had the earnest and intelligent cooperation of those in charge, as well as others. Bro. Elbert A. Smith, of Burlington, rendered us very valuable assistance in arranging, advising, etc.

It is true (and all should be willing to concede it) that the best efforts of our best ministers reveal weakness and imperfection; but I am persuaded that such has been the spiritual experiences of many, that they will not be readily deceived by the deluding cry of some, that the work of the patriarch is either human or Satanic in its origin.

On October 6, my wife and I came here to visit our daughter and family, and if possible, take a little rest. I have been on the sick list ever since we came, hence have passed over two Sundays without going to the church. Hope to be able to do something for the good cause, ere long, however little it may be.

It is very hard for me to write, but I have something more I wish to say, at some future time, if the good Lord will.

Yours in the faith and love of the gospel,

J. R. LAMBERT.

CLEARWATER, Nebraska, October 11, 1905.

Dear Herald: While I was appointed to labor in Northern and Central Nebraska Districts my labors have been confined mostly to Central Nebraska and farther west in Cherry County. Good work was done with the tent at Valentine, Ainsworth, and Long Pine. I assisted at the two former places, laboring with Brn. D. M. Rudd, L. Gamet, and W. A. Smith. I found those brethren very congenial companions to labor with.

I went home for a short visit with my family and to attend the stake reunion at Lamoni. After the reunion wife and I visited some points in Dodge and Butler Counties, visiting friends and relatives, and trying to teach them, as opportunity offered, the gospel story. I did some preaching near Dodge. On my way to the Inman reunion I stopped at Meadow Grove and did some preaching. From there my wife returned home.

From Meadow-Grove I went to Inman, stopping a couple of days with the Clearwater Saints. At Inman the Saints held their conference Saturday, September 30, and the reunion opened the 1st of October. The conference was meagerly attended; so also was the fore part of the reunion. Toward the latter part a better representation was had; and a goodly spirit of kindness and brotherly love was felt all through the conference and reunion. The Saints bore the financial burden nobly. The missionaries' traveling expenses were looked after, and the writer's other needs very kindly considered and a purse of twelve dollars and fifty cents, the contribution of a number of the Saints, was handed him by Srs. Hilsinger and Logerman, to assist in the purchase of a suit of clothes. How thankful we are when the Saints notice our needs, and show their brotherly love by supplying our wants. God will surely reward such Saints; for he has said, "Whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward."—Mark 9:41. Provisions were made for another reunion.

After the reunion I came to Clearwater, and have been preaching in the town hall to fair-sized and attentive audiences. The branch president decided the expense of the hall was too great, so the rest of the week we will hold forth at the Saints' church, three miles north of town. The first of next week I will have to return to Inman to go through the formality of an elder's court to drop a name from the records, the individual having requested it. After that I will move toward the east, stopping, perhaps, at Meadow Grove and Norfolk; thence bend south toward Columbus and other points in the Northern Nebraska District. I expect to give that district most of my time till spring. Those desiring my labors may correspond with me by writing to my home address, Lamoni, Iowa.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. M. STUBBART.

SHINNSTON, West Virginia, October 12, 1905.

Dear Herald: There are a few Saints here, seven families in all now. We would like for Brn. F. J. Ebeling, L. R. Devore, and T. J. Beatty to visit us here, if they can. We feel that there is a work to be done here, and we think that having different ones that way is what does good. Bro. E. E. Long did good when here, and we would like him to come back again. When any of the elders are passing through this way we would be glad to have them stop. It is a good place here for them, and right at the station. We will care for them. When they come we want them to stay awhile, not preach two or three sermons and then be off again.

Yours for gospel truth,

ELIZA J. LEESON.

ADDIE JARRETT.

ELDORADO SPRINGS, Missouri, October 16, 1905.

Editors Herald: The conference of the Clinton District just held near here was a blessing to all, and so was the Sunday-school work under the able management of Sr. Iva Keck. The conference was presided over by Bro. I. N. White, who gave much valuable advice, which was very encouraging to all. September 23 Bro. Lee Quick and I began a meeting at Hartford, Kansas, where we preached twelve sermons to very interested audiences. The Lord was with us in Spirit and in power, and gave us ability to present the word in much assurance unto the convincing of some that we were the true servants of God, and many were heard to say, "These men are preaching the truth according to the Bible." Bro. Quick has an excellent voice for outdoor speaking, and is very eloquent, and the Methodist minister, who stayed at home, could hear every word of one sermon. He told his friends that sermon was all right, and yet it was in opposition to their doctrine, it being on the laying on of hands. This place being in Bro. Quick's field, it was necessary for me to assist in opening the work there, as I had become very widely known on account of holding a five days' debate recently with W. G. Roberts, a representative of the antiorgan wing of Campbellism. We were successful in gaining the sympathy and good will of almost the entire community present, and many were convinced that our position could not be overthrown; and they were anxious, in case we had left it to a vote of the people, as to the result to have voted for us. But we were willing to leave the result with Him who stood by us in the conflict, and with those who love truth better than the praise of men. We feel that the victory gained there, for truth, will never be forgotten by the people in this life; and no one felt the force of our work more than our opposers. We are glad to be engaged in a work that will thus stand the test, and that makes us feel so happy and free.

Brethren, do not be over-anxious about debates; but use wisdom and keep on the defense, and when an attack is made, and you are led into a public investigation, the good Lord will stand by you and bring you out victorious every time. I know this by experience; but we must study both sides of the question well, and be ready always to give an answer to every man, and a reason for the hope we have.

October 7 and 8 I was permitted to attend the conference of the Spring River District at Sherwin, Kansas. The spirit of love and unity prevailed throughout, and it was a pleasure indeed to the writer to meet with the many noble Saints in that district; but a feeling of sadness passed through my soul on learning of the death of Bro. T. S. Hayton, who was a true Saint indeed, and one of the faithful workers. But as we see our faithful friends passing over the river one by one, it does not make death such a terror to us after all, as it is one of the means which will help us to meet them on the other side.

Bro. White is much better in health, and is able to preach with his old-time vigor; and we pray the Lord to spare his life for many years yet, as he has done much in meeting the opposition against the work, and has been a kind father to the young in the ministry. I can speak from experience, as he has written me many cheering letters which will be of lasting good to me. I hope to be faithful, and to abide in the truth.

Your brother in the conflict,

F. M. SLOVER.

LACONA, Iowa, October 24, 1905.

Editors Herald: The work is in a prospering condition here now. Bro. D. C. White was with us from the 19th to 23d, preaching six sermons, and on the 23d baptizing one who had been a cripple from birth. Others are nearly ready for the water. They are anxious for Bro. White to return. The Sunday-school is prospering, and the Religio also. There are nineteen members enrolled now, and they are nearly all nonmembers. May God bless his Saints all over the land, and let his work prosper, is my prayer.

Your brother in the gospel bond,

J. C. CACKLER.

CONDON, Oregon, October 24, 1905.

Editors Herald: A word of cheer from this part may be welcomed by some. We can not tell of any great success we have made in the number of baptisms; but I believe Bro. Sheldon, my collaborer, and self have worked hard during the summer months with the tent in the city of Portland. Our attendance was small; but the few noble Saints there have done well in caring for the wants of the missionaries, and also in helping by their attendance. Our late reunion displayed a noble spirit of sacrifice on behalf of not only Portland Saints but of the whole district.

The words of counsel given by the ministry present, and especially by our beloved President, were highly esteemed by all, Saints and visiting parties. One of the Utah members that were present made the remark to the writer, that the manner in which Bro. Joseph took up his abode with the Saints, and the pleasant manner he had of making himself one of us, won his admiration, and he said, "I can not help but see the difference. Your president wants to stay with his people; ours must go to the Portland Hotel, and cares nothing for us."

Bro. Joseph's testimony had its effect with the people, and has already made us two new openings.

I am having good liberty here, and good attendance, and I trust I shall be able to do some good. There is a good branch here. The reason, I suppose, that we have a good branch, is that we have a good working ladies' aid society.

Yours in bonds,

HENRY SPARLING.

CUSTER, Oklahoma, October 25, 1905.

Dear Herald: Seeing so many letters from Oklahoma, we, too, have caught the spirit of writing, letting you know that Custer will swell the list to four more, who would be pleased to see all of those who are so scattered around us.

We so often think of our own whom we have left two thousand miles away, and are even appreciative of the dreams we have of you, one of which I will relate, as it came to me two nights in succession. I saw you all in the new chapel; and, while I was wishing I could only see you all plainer, immediately a beautiful light came down from above and filled the room with light, then went out upon Bro. Bullard's head. When Frank sent me the revelation given to the Saints in June, I felt it must be the meaning of the dream.

Ruthie and I keep looking for a letter from the East, but have to use our charity, knowing if we were there with you, we should be as negligent.

I guess Frank and Bro. Holmes Davison have gotten about as far away from us all as they can, without going into Europe, as he wrote me that was the next place to Prince Edward Island.

We were made sad upon learning of Sr. Julia Glovers death, and do not like to feel we can never meet with her again in this life. Truly, we can all say she was a beautiful character. I also had a very pleasant dream of her. As I was walking through, and was about midway of a large white stone building, I saw Julia arranging long wreaths of flowers over the stone archways, which were on either side of me. When she saw me, her face lighted up with such an expression of contentment and joy. I said, This is the best situation you ever had. "Oh yes, Rilla, and I have charge of this whole side," she answered. Her face looked so sweet among the beautiful flowers; and I thought, What an appropriate place for Julia. Young ladies were with her, working under her instruction.

At this writing, my dear little grandson, William Francis, sits in his go-cart, and has allowed me to write this whole letter, only giving his dictation in the sweetest of smiles.

My visit with relatives and Saints in Maine is ever a pleasant remembrance. May God's blessings be with you.

We find the home Sunday-school lessons very interesting, and intend to keep on with them.

Your sister,

RILLA SHEEHY.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, October 23, 1905.

Editors Herald: Our district conference at Rock Creek was a very pleasant and profitable meeting. It will please those who are interested in the proposed convention of the Religio and Sunday-school in Nauvoo during the autumn of 1906; to learn that the district, as well as the district Religio association, is ready and willing to do what it can to make such a gathering a success. Just previous to our convening, the Utah elders had gathered in that city, about sixty-five strong, and held a conference which attracted considerable notice. They also did some baptizing. In view of this it seems that our movement to rally there is opportune. The district voted to rent the city hall and invite Bro. Heman Smith to take charge of a series of meetings there, which was done, and the meetings began with large crowds. The final results we have not yet learned. Sr. Vida Smith was present and is writing up this memorable series (the first preaching we have done there for years). Her account will be in Autumn Leaves, with illustrations. A splendid poem relative to our gathering in Nauvoo was read by Sr. Vida at the district conference, and it will appear in the November Autumn Leaves. Religians take notice. Let us awake to the importance of the movement and make it a success.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

NORTH SYDNEY, New South Wales, Australia.

Editors Herald: It is late for me to express my grateful appreciation of your kindness in replying to my letter, and in placing my name on the record. I could not write much then, and believed others did it for me. Since Bro. Wille has called and administered to me, I have been greatly relieved, and every month that faithful shepherd comes a long way to administer the emblems of our dear Redeemer's death to one of so little account as I. Thus I am refreshed through the few remaining steps of life's journey. I desire to thank all the Saints for their love and prayers. I must mention Sr. Clark, whom I first knew in the Hanley Branch; but the family went to America years ago. She, seeing my son's address in my last letter, came a long way to find his home, and got tidings of me. They wrote and told me how glad she was. Had she left her address I would have tried to write to her. This love is the Lord's test. Dear Saints, let love prevail, that the world may know we are his disciples; in all our language let us be careful not to wound the feelings of others, but let us heed the good advice given in the letters of the HERALD. "Let us pray for one another," especially for those who are afflicted and isolated. I see there are many; but He will give relief and comfort.

Your loving sister,

JULIA EDWARDS.

ODESSA, Missouri, October 25, 1905.

Editors Herald: Having the missionary work to look after, in the Independence Stake, (except Kansas City,) I desire to say to your readers that I have been trying to the best of my ability to keep the standard of the restored gospel before the people. Bro. W. R. Smith and I ran the big tent until Bro. Smith's health became impaired so that he had to go home for a rest. I continued tent work alone, assisted by local brethren till cool weather forced me to lay the tent away for the season.

In some places we found it very difficult to get people out to tent-services, and at other places we received all the encouragement we could wish by way of attendance and interest, and the people said the preaching was the best they ever heard, and that they would go to church more if they could always hear such sermons, etc. However, they are very slow to make up their minds to obey the glorious gospel.

The weakness and folly of man-made religions have so broken down the confidence of the people, that it is very hard indeed to get them to believe the gospel, though it may be declared in plainness and by the power of the Holy Spirit.

I am more and more convinced as the years add to my experience in this work that Zion must be redeemed with power and equity ere we can speedily gather out many of the honest in the world. It will take something more than a good, plain, spiritual sermon to awaken the people out of the "spirit of deep sleep" that has fallen upon them.

There are surprises in store, not 'for the world' only, but for some of the Saints as well; for when the redemption of Zion is more fully accomplished many will find to their sorrow that they are not prepared for the goodly land—the great inheritance, where all is peace and safety from the great tribulations and destructions that await the world in the day of God's visitations.

I look for great changes in the near future, for the Lord has not forgotten his promises to finish his work in the earth and cut it short in righteousness.

I hope that all Saints in the Independence Stake who are living away from branches will make an effort to "warn their neighbors." I would like to hear from all such, and if there is no other place to preach the word, just open your own house to make a start. Sometimes great good results from starting even in a small room in a private house. Write me at Knobnoster, Missouri, and if I can not come, I will send you a preacher. I came here to Bro. Peter Cairns' home a few days ago and found Bro. W. R. Smith here preaching to attentive crowds in the schoolhouse. I am doing the preaching while Bro. Smith is gone home after his winter clothing. When he returns to continue his work, in this new yet somewhat promising field, I may go to other parts of the stake to give a helping hand.

I sometimes feel discouraged on account of the slow progress in making converts, but do not feel forsaken of the Lord, for I often feel the soul-inspiring power of the Holy Spirit come to my assistance to cheer, comfort, and help the poor, wandering missionary.

May God bless all the dear Saints in every land and clime. My mind often turns to the Saints of former loving acquaintance in far away Australia.

Graceland College.

Editors Herald: Within the last few days there have been several inquiries regarding Graceland's registration; and I have concluded to bring to the readers of the HERALD some of the facts concerning this year's work so all the Saints may be in closer touch with the work. I am unusually glad to report at this time, for Graceland has certainly taken an advance step in many respects and there is progress along all lines. If you will turn to page 767 of the minutes of the last General Conference, you will find that the complete enrollment for fall term, counting duplicates, was 84. Only one month of our fall term has passed and our complete enrollment to date is 118; without duplicates we still have an enrollment of 102. Comparing the past month with the corresponding month of last year, exclusive of the music departments, the enrollment has been increased 66½ per cent. Our correspondence promises a much increased attendance later, and especially for the winter term. I am sure the Saints are glad to hear such a favorable report, as you are all desirous of having this institution of the church prosper.

During the fall term (announced in another issue of the HERALD) the board of trustees provided a house for dormitory purposes where boys may have board and room at almost a nominal rate. This will be of interest to many who desire to reduce living-expenses to a minimum. Many who have been hesitating on account of living-expenses ought to be able to meet this extremely low rate.

If any boy or girl wishes to communicate with us on matters pertaining to the college work or to the living-expenses, either Mr. Fred B. Blair, secretary of the board, or I will be glad to answer any inquiry. Investigation may prove to bring an opportunity.

Hoping these few items may be of interest to you, I am,

Yours for service,

R. M. STEWART, Acting President.

LAMONI, Iowa, October 28, 1905.

Independence Items.

The Lord's appointed servants continue, here, as elsewhere, to disseminate the light of truth "that it might come to all men" according to the word of prophecy given at the beginning of this latter-day work; that "though the heavens and the earth pass away, my word shall not pass away, but shall all be fulfilled, whether by mine own voice or by the voice of my servants, it is the same."

On last Sunday evening Bro. T. C. Kelley spoke partly for the benefit of the young people present, taking for his text "Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? by taking heed thereto according to thy word."

The speaker thought many failed to understand what constitutes a true success in life, and referred to the evil of keeping late hours, of improper amusements such as dancing and playing cards, and dwelt upon the idea of cleansing one's life from these things, and of the necessity of meditating on the law both by day and by night. The keeping of the commandments, and helping to build up Zion according to the principles of the gospel, were important duties for all to perform.

At the afternoon meeting Bro. Hilliard spoke of our individual work, of keeping within our minds the remembrance of the pure principles taught by Christ, letting them inspire and direct our every action.

In accord somewhat with this thought, President Roosevelt, while addressing the people of Alabama quite recently and speaking of "individual citizenship," said, "What you want in this nation is not brilliancy, not genius, but the fair performance of the common duties of life. The vital things in life are the things that foolish people look upon as commonplace, the failure to perform which means the destruction of the state."

Bro. F. B. Blair from Lamoni was present at the morning services and discoursed from Acts 27; also gave a few encouraging items concerning Graceland College, and spoke with much force and earnestness of the Saints' privileges and opportunities and of the contemplated future work of that worthy institution.

Patriarch Lambert's visit among us, and his words of cheer and comfort, have been much appreciated also.

The calm and blessed Spirit of the Master attended the solemn ordinances of baptism and confirmation which took place October 8, under the hands of Bro. Joseph Arber, who officiated at the font, Bro. Ammon White leading in prayer, and Elders J. Luff and I. N. White in confirmation. The candidates were Srs. Anna B. Cox and Dora M. Tousey. At the afternoon prayer-service thirty testimonies were borne.

In the way of news items we note the Hedrickite brethren held business-session of their local and general conference on the 5th and 6th of this month. At the former Bro. Halderman was sustained as their presiding elder.

Street-paving continues, many fine residences are being built in every direction, and the Metropolitan Car Company is engaged on Main Street in laying new tracks.

History repeats itself, and we see now as in the days of the sons of Helaman, men filling the judgment seat "doing no justice unto the children of men." We regret to say of such is one of our fair city's judges who on the 4th inst. confessed to committing "oppression," and paid his dollar fine.

While meditating on the frailties of humanity it seems perhaps strange to have to record that Pope Pius and many other religionists are adopting the support of the various means of popular recreation and pleasure-seeking,—the races, contests, gymnastics, etc., his holiness even giving out the prizes on the Sabbath day; but stranger still that we have to note that many of the Latter Day Saints also look with favor upon attendance at such functions. The last regular business-meetings of church and Sunday-school here were even postponed, those in charge anticipating (and not without reason) the fact that the quorums necessary to do business would perhaps nearly all be present at the gorgeous autumn festivities held in Kansas City in honor of the Priests of Pallas! So also many members of the church societies turned aside, but the faithful Prayer Union stood pat.

Another regretful item: In the Kansas City Star's issue of the 19th inst. appeared an article with the head-lines, "To check Mormon 'Peril.'" "Many Independence citizens favor annexation to Kansas City." "Of the 10,000 inhabitants of the suburban town 2,000 are Mormons, and they're increasing—Other reasons for the annexation plan."

But we need not repine because of the misconceptions of many concerning the Saints, for not all men are narrow-minded as witnessed in the noble sentiments expressed by some of our great statesmen, one of whom says, "We are passing from the sordid age of commercialism into the age of high ideals: a moral revolution is sweeping over the land." And for this we are truly thankful, and also for delightful weather which has during this month been ours to enjoy; we have basked in golden sunshiny days, and the abundant rains of September served to keep in preservation to our delight the rich colorings of verdant nature. Our nights too have been lighted up by the starry heavens bending low in brilliancy and benediction, and with the blessed shining of October's harvest moon. So also have the Saints truly feasted on spiritual things, according to the promise: "They whose feet stand upon the land of Zion shall also be crowned with blessings from above; yea and with commandments not a few, and with revelations in their time, they that are faithful and diligent before me."

October 27, 1905.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Extracts from Letters.

Peter Muceus, Porsgrund, writes October 16, to Bro. Stebbins, as follows: "Things are moving along well, the Lord confirming his work among those who have accepted it, and thus the truth is being established. I am thankful to be among this people, and to have the pleasure of seeing so many honest people accept the truth and rejoice in it. It strengthens my faith and increases my determination to press onward in the good cause. At Eidsvold I have baptized twenty-one persons since August, 1904, and others are interested. There are several other places I want to labor in this fall and winter, where our work is unknown, but where an interest may be created, I believe. The Lord is with us in our efforts so we have no reason to fear or doubt. I hope to live worthy of his fatherly care and prove faithful to the trust placed upon me."

Powell. Total number of baptisms, 16. Officers elected: President, W. S. Taylor; vice-president, H. J. Thurman; secretary and treasurer, Mollie Davis. Adjourned to meet at Webb City, Missouri, Friday before full moon in February, 1906.

Convention Minutes.

Gallands Grove.—Sunday-school met in convention at the Gallands Grove Branch October 13, 1905, J. L. Butterworth in charge. A profitable time was enjoyed, and spiritual strength received.

Religio association met with the Gallands Grove Branch October 12, 1905, A. H. Rudd presiding. An enjoyable time was had and benefit derived. Floy Holcomb, secretary.

Northern Wisconsin.—Sunday-school convention met with Appleton school October 9, 1905, Bro. W. P. Robinson presiding. Schools reporting: Appleton, Valley Junction, Prince of Peace, Searles Prairie. Reports from superintendents of the different schools showed an increase in interest throughout the district.

An interesting paper by Bro. Fred Dreyer, concerning the rise of the work at Appleton, was read. Motion carried that the district secretary be privileged to draw on district fund to defray expenses. Convention adjourned to meet the Monday following next district conference at Porcupine.

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana.—Schools met in convention at Clear Lake, Indiana, October 13, at 10 a. m., with Sr. Ella Davis in chair. Election of officers: Sr. Ella Davis, superintendent; Bro. Cochran and Sr. J. H. Royce, assistants; D. B. Teeters, treasurer; Sr. Elsie Lockerby, secretary. Schools reporting: Coldwater, also the branch school near Coldwater, Hartford, Alto, Clear Lake, Galien, Belding, Dowagiac. A report from the Pleasant Valley school near Grant, Michigan, has been received later. The reports show an increase of four schools since last convention. The evening session was pleasantly spent listening to remarks by Bro. William Shaub and Bro. Columbus Scott along the line of Sunday-school work. Adjournment was made to meet on Friday before the next district conference.

Alabama.—Convened at Pleasant Hill, October 6, 1905, at 3.30 p. m. Report of officers: Bertha D. Harper, superintendent; J. S. Wiggins, assistant superintendent; M. S. Wiggins, secretary; L. G. Sellers, treasurer. School reporting: Pleasant Hill. Officers elected: Bertha D. Harper, superintendent; A. A. Weaver, assistant superintendent; M. S. Wiggins, secretary; Idella Sellers, treasurer; Sr. D. E. Tucker, librarian. Adjourned to meet with Lone Star on Friday at 3 p. m., before next conference.

Nauvoo.—Sunday-school convention of the Nauvoo District met at Rock Creek, Illinois, October 6, George P. Lambert presiding. Reports were read from the local schools at Ft. Madison, Burlington, New London, Rock Creek, and Farmington. Reports from the superintendents of these locals were very interesting and encouraging. Treasurer's report showed: Balance on hand, $22.74. The program of the evening rendered jointly with the Religio was very interesting. An especially instructive number was a Book of Mormon map-talk by Sr. Edith Jarvis of Burlington. Adjourned to meet at Burlington, February, 1906. Jessie J. Ward, secretary.

Northern California.—Zion's Religio Literary Society met in Oakland, September 5, 1905, at 2.30 p. m., with John Lawn in charge. Reports of the locals and home classes were read, and were evidence of progress. One new local, Santa Rosa, has been organized since our last convention, with a membership of fifteen. The San Jose local was allowed to withdraw from the Northern District and join the Central District. The proposition to unite the Religio and Sunday-school libraries was discussed, but action deferred until next convention. Officers elected as follows: President, William H. Dawson; vice-president, W. P. Bush; secretary, Pauline O. Napier; treasurer, Sr. J. M. Terry; librarian, A. Merkens. Convention adjourned to meet in Sacramento the day previous to the convening of the next district conference. Pauline O. Napier, secretary, 2130 J Street, Sacramento, California.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints in South Dakota; Greeting: Being the Bishop's agent for above-named territory, I send you this greeting to remind you of your duties as members of the fold of God. The Lord has blessed our land and the labors of our hands with a plentiful harvest. Now let us show our appreciation by turning into his storehouse that portion required of us according to his law. Remember it is a high and holy calling to be laborers together with God, and every member should be glad of the opportunity to aid in so grand and glorious a cause.

The latter-day work has been confirmed unto us by the testimony of God's Spirit and we are assured of its ultimate triumph. But, brethren, if we fail to do our duty, what will our portion be? Think of it, and do not delay in rendering unto the Lord that which is his, that we may stand approved as faithful and wise servants. Right now is the time to act. Do not wait, but forward your tithes and offerings, be the amount great or small, and I shall be pleased to receipt for same.

Yours for the work's sake,
W. W. WHITING.

Lock Box 35, BONESTEEL, South Dakota, October 21, 1905.

To the Saints of Utah District; Greeting: Having been duly appointed to act as Bishop's agent in and for the Utah District, I wish to call the attention of the Saints of this district to the fact that I am prepared to receipt them for tithes and offerings.

Those wishing to write me can always reach me by addressing me at Pleasant Grove, Utah.

Let us have your hearty cooperation in rolling forward the cause of Zion.

Fraternally,
J. E. VANDERWOOD.

Reunion Notices.

The annual camp-meeting of the Southwestern Iowa reunion association will be held seven miles north of Emerson, three miles southeast of Henderson, on grounds belonging to A. Badham. Meeting will commence August 25, 1906, and end September 2. Notice of all necessary arrangements will be given in due time. Samuel Woods, J. F. Greene, A. Badham, committee.

Conference Notices.

The Portland, Oregon, District conference will convene December 2, with the Condon Branch. We desire a good representation from both branch and scattered Saints. Henry Sparling, president.

Died.

EVANS.—Mary Jane Evans born March 8, 1868, at Malad, Idaho; baptized May 4, 1879; died at Ross Forks, October 16, 1905. Married October 5, 1889, to Henry W. Evans, and to them were born five children. Funeral-services in the chapel of the Reorganized Church, October 20, in charge of Frederick M. Smith, who preached the sermon. Prayer by Elder William Thomas, of the Mormon church. "Josephites," "Mormons," and "Gentiles" were all ready and kindly in their assistance to the bereaved family, and the large attendance at the funeral bore testimony to the respect in which the departed sister was held.

What Is an Individual?

Have you ever asked yourself the question "What is Me?" "What is the Individual?" Is it one constituent ever the same, or is it made up of many? The question is extremely difficult to answer. You claim to be an "Individual"; but a book may be an individual, yet it is made up of individual leaves, the leaves of individual sentences, the sentences of individual words, and the words of individual letters. But all are connected to form a whole. Precisely so it is with ourselves. Apparently one and indivisible as a unit, yet we can be resolved into sets and systems of organs, the organs into tissues, the tissues into individual cells, and so on.

And we are constantly changing. All through our lives the stock of memories at the direct disposal of our personal consciousness keeps contracting in some ways and expanding in others. Many memories drop out, and others come in. How little do we remember of our infancy and childhood. There are leaks, breaks, and gaps in all directions.

Is it possible for a person to become almost instantaneously somebody else, to have his past life blotted out as though he had never been born, and to commence life in the years of manhood as a new-born babe, requiring to be fed, to be taught to walk and talk, and to have so little sense of dimension as to reach out for the waving tree outside the window? And yet, mind you, to be therewith so far from "insane" as to be taught all the things which an infant is taught, catching up again to full development in a few weeks?—Professor Hyslop in Woman's Home Companion for November.

Brother, Do You Want Work

That pays? If so send for my book. It tells how to make spring-beds to order—get orders—material, and make all kinds of money for your work. I will send it free, post paid, also lot of testimonials from "workers"—see large ad in SAINTS' HERALD of October 4. Brothers with horse and buggy living in country or small towns are especially invited to try this work in their spare time. Address, B. F. Ordway, R. F. D. No. 1, Pasadena, California. (Supply house still at Peoria, Illinois.) 411f

N. B.—All orders for books must be sent to Pasadena, California.

THE EDITOR ABROAD.

Our stay at Vancouver was limited to a period fixed in the program, and although it was delightful in the incidents of a stay with the home folks and the Saints, drew on to its close. Our last public service was held in the city hall in the city, a very centrally-located place, a large and pleasant hall secured by Brn. Clark and McMullen, by direction of branch, where we occupied at eleven o'clock in the forenoon and four o'clock in the afternoon of August 17, and in the intermission between morning and afternoon service took dinner at the home of Mr. and Sr. Quigley, whom we met at a reunion in the East. Here Bro. William Johnson and the Editor blessed Mary Amelia Isabel Dunlap, a granddaughter of Mr. and Sr. Quigley, and May Genevieve, Arthur Gordon, and Mary Isabel Quigley, children of the son of Mr. and Sr. Quigley, by request of the mother, who, though not in the church, is alive to the beauty of a trust in God, and disposed to honor those who love and are striving to serve him. We left our blessing with the household on that day. What about the blessing the children of those not members of the church? Only this: "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God."

For the benefit of those fond of poetry in names we suggest that the initials of the names of Sr. Dunlap's baby spell the name often applied to little women—M. A. I. D.

The period between the return from Chilliwack and leaving Vancouver was spent in recuperation and in cultivating the acquaintance with the family of father Clark and the Saints, of whom we were pleased to note, though few they were of the better element of society. The evening of the day of worship was occupied in a prayer-service at Bro. Clark's, at which the good Spirit was present to the comforting of the Saints. Those living at Westminster, ten miles away, were present.

One of the things of interest seen during our stay at Vancouver was a game of the Indian sport of Lacrosse between the rival teams of Victoria and Vancouver. It had an additional interest to us, as we called to mind that it was by such a spectacular game that the Indians beguiled the garrison of Fort Dearborn, when that fearful massacre at Chicago

BRO. F. A. SMITH, in charge of the Southern Mission, reports one hundred and forty-eight baptisms in that field during the past three months. The yellow fever has hindered progress some, but "the general tendency is an upward one now."

BRO. HEMAN C. SMITH reports one hundred and sixty-six baptisms, including one reported by local authority, in Iowa, Minnesota, Dakota, and Nebraska mission, for the past quarter. The Utah elders over fifty in number had made a special effort at Nauvoo, Illinois, but had been met by the ministry of the Reorganized Church with satisfaction to the interests of truth.

took place somewhere in the 30's of the last century. We could easily see how the Indians bent on deadly mischief followed the artful play of the ball into the open doors of the fort, and accomplished by strategem what they could not do by open attack. And thus it has been through the advance of time and its events: Men have often won the way for both good and evil designs through diplomacy, intrigue, and strategy where forceful measures would have failed.

Departure from Vancouver on August 31 was hurried by reason of conference of the district being held at Tacoma, September 2 and 3, and a subsequent reunion at Portland, Oregon. So, at a reasonably early hour on that Thursday morning, good-byes and offered prayers for each other's welfare and final good were said, and the Editor, wife, and boys, and good sister Mabel Clark, were off on the first tack for the home port away toward the sunrise lands. At Westminster we were joined by Brn. J. S. Rainey, Henry Stade, Sr. Good, Sr. McMurry, and others. It was a pleasant company, and the way was consequently short. At Seattle the Editor's family were the guests for a night of Bro. David Davis and family, while the rest went on by boat to the place of rendezvous. However, on the morning of Friday, September 1, our little group safely made the trip by water on the Flyer, a swift coast steamer plying between Seattle and Tacoma.

Bro. L. G. Holloway met us at the landing, and in a little while we were pushed up the hills to South Tacoma, and were housed in the neatly furnished cottage of Bro. Van Eaton, son of Bro. and Sr. Van Eaton, of No. 1618 South Fortieth Street.

The Sunday-school was in session, and, of course, the Editor was in attendance. We here met the missionary force: Brn. Griffiths, Johnson, Holloway, Pender and wife, and some whom we had not met for years, among them James Ritchie, Sherman Wightman, and Walter S. Gladwin, the first named formerly of Lamoni, the latter of Council Bluffs, Iowa. It was good to see old-time faces once more.

The Religio held the boards part of the day Saturday, September 2, and the conference the remainder. Business was soon disposed of, and "Bro. Joseph" was called on for the usual short talk. At night, however, Bro. W. S. Pender was the preacher and made an excellent effort in a scriptural and argumentative elucidation of the value and force of the word shall. He was suffering from a severe cold and hindered by an annoying cough, but gave an interesting and instructive talk, enjoyed by all, but by none more than the Editor.

The brethren of the Van Eaton families were away on the homesteads they had taken, so that the home of Sr. Van Eaton, Sr., was the home-center of the conference visitors, and mother and daughters did what they could to make all comfortable and were successful.

Sunday, September 3, was the Editor's day and so he addressed the little flock at eleven in the forenoon, and at eight o'clock in the evening, in the neat chapel the few had built as a "place of our own in which to worship." It is quite a distance out from the center, though easily reached by street railway by those who know the way. The band of Saints is but small, and will soon be smaller, as the Brn. Van Eaton's are making homes in Washington, not far from Spokane, and will remove from Tacoma. It is a pity that it is so, but so weaves the shuttle of human affairs. However, the same enterprise and spirit of self-sacrifice which has done so much at Tacoma, will make a new nucleus in the places to which these brethren remove. May God give them success, temporal and spiritual.

On Monday, September 4, the conference folks left for home, among them Bro. Adams, of Portage, Washington, and Bro. Alexander Graham, and Bro. and Sr. Schofield whom the Editor met in Grand Manan, New Brunswick, in 1875, hale, hearty, and in the faith.

We rested at Tacoma until Wednesday, September 6, when, with the wife and two of the little boys, the Editor left for the Saints at Castle Rock, where a stop for a day had been arranged, leaving Sr. Mabel Clark and R. C. to come after to Portland. We were met by Bro. Pender and wife and Bro. George Appleman, in charge of the branch, who took us to his home for our stay. The town is a picturesque one located on the Northern Pacific Railway, some sixty-five miles north of Portland. A little river, navigable a good part of the year for small steamers, and across which a home-made suspension wagon-bridge has been built, adds an attractive feature to the landscape. Seen from the front part of Bro. Appleman's house looking to the west, the village, railway, river, bridge, and distant hills make a view pleasant to remember.

At night a fair audience gave the preacher a good hearing, the meeting having been well advertised by Brn. Appleman, Pender, and others. But some who had seemed eager to hear "Mr. Smith" were conspicuous by their absence—promises are kept when convenient. The preacher did his duty, however.

This part is a splendid fruit region; apples, plums, apricots, pears, blackberries, etc., are plentiful and large and luscious—and we enjoyed them to the danger of indigestion. Bro. Appleman is a genial, jolly man, thoroughly enjoyable as a companion, as we afterward found at Portland, but as Kipling wrote some time ago, "that is another story."

In company with Bro. Pender and wife we left Castle Rock (the place is named from a rock somewhere near which looks like a castle but which we did not see) at two o'clock in the afternoon, Friday, September 8, and reached Portland on time.

We found Bro. F. A. Sympson, by whom we were escorted to Mr. Charles A. Patton's, whose wife is a relative of Sr. Alice Cobb, of Lamoni, where we were made welcome once again. Here we were joined on the 9th by Sr. Mabel and the boy, R. C., and the family were together again.

The reunion was to be held at Woodward's Hall, in Montavilla, literally mountain town, a suburb of Portland, five miles from business center, and reached by street-car and telephone. Wife and self went out, found the hall, Brn. S. D. Condit, W. S. Pender, Henry Sparling, Watson Fordham, George Appleman, N. V. Sheldon, G. T. Griffiths, William Johnson, and N. C. Enge. Arrangements were made for the ensuing week's services.

The hall of the Knights of Pythias in the city of Portland had been secured for the morning hour, and we occupied, Bro. Griffiths in charge. Quite a fair congregation gathered and good attention was given. We met quite a number of the faith. One of these was an aged brother, Russell by name, if we remember right, who was a resident of Mercer County, above Nauvoo, Illinois, on the Mississippi River, at the time of the trouble in Hancock County, and was at about the time of the assassination at Carthage, with others, ready to start for Nauvoo to assist the brethren if they could. The killing of the brethren in the jail stopped them; and Bro. Russell settled down and remained aloof from all, but was still in the original faith. We were pleased to give him the hand.

The Editor was the speaker at the hall in Montavilla, at eight o'clock Sunday night.

On Monday, September 11, we made camp at Montavilla in a furnished house hired for the purpose, with Bro. Appleman and his family of wife, daughters, and son, Bro. S. D. Condit, wife, and daughter, Bro. W. S. Pender and wife, Bro. Watson Fordham, Bishop's agent, of Spokane, and a Sr. Jones. This formed quite a large family, but there was room for others and all were made welcome. Brn. Fordham, Appleman, and Condit were purveyors to the party and Srs. Condit, Pender, and the rest looked after the preparation of the food and the tables. It was a pleasant arrangement and each one tried to enjoy the situation. The hall was quite near and easily accessible to all—a very fair coöperative affair.

Bro. Henry Sparling led off in the week's services, speaking at night.

On Tuesday, by agreement, a number went to the Lewis and Clark Exposition, "The Portland Fair." It was a rainy, bad day and quite disagreeable.

The Editor was the speaker on Wednesday evening, the 13th. The remainder of the week the services were as usual at reunions, prayer at nine o'clock in the morning, preaching at eleven and afternoon and evening. Bro. Griffiths gave three excellent discourses on the priesthood by chart, which were much appreciated. We also heard Brn. Johnson, Pender, T. W. Chatburn, N. V. Sheldon, Keeler, and Enge, all interesting and appreciated.

The Editor preached at the hall on Sunday, September 17, and in the course of the day blessed with another of the elders Alonzo and Israel Straight, and William Lester Witherly. Services closed at night, and the reunion was pronounced to be a success.

Monday, September 18, was spent in breaking camp and getting ready for the next stopping-place, Salt Lake City, which place we reached on Wednesday, September 20, at midnight, train being late.

BLESSED TO SUCCEED HIS FATHER.

The following letter to President Joseph Smith will be of interest to those who have noted John W. Rigdon's testimony concerning his knowledge of the blessing and setting apart of "young Joseph" to succeed his father:

HORNERSTOWN, New Jersey, October 27, 1905.

JOSEPH SMITH, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Brother: I am the daughter of John B. and Rebecca Wright, of New Egypt, New Jersey, both members of the Society of Friends. I was born, according to the family record kept by my father, on June 13, 1816, at New Egypt, New Jersey.

I was married in May, 1833, to Abraham Burtis, also of New Egypt, where we lived until the death of my husband, in 1871. We heard the gospel first through the preaching of Elder Benjamin Winchester, who came to New Egypt about 1836 or 1837, as I now recollect it. He was followed by Elders Samuel James, Erastus Snow, Orson Hyde, and others. I was baptized with fifteen others, among whom was my husband, in September, 1837, at Hornerstown, New Jersey, by Elder Erastus Snow, and confirmed the same day by Orson Hyde. My husband was confirmed by Elder Snow, and ordained an elder shortly afterwards. He was chosen president of the branch at New Egypt, and continued until after the death of the martyrs. Elders Benjamin Winchester and Erastus Snow were at our house in July when we heard of the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

The sad news spread gloom among the Saints. We felt so bad we could hardly know what to look for. We were visited by Elder Sidney Rigdon soon after the death of Joseph and Hyrum. My husband met him at Bordentown and brought him to our house, where he made his home while visiting the Saints in our neighborhood. This was in the early fall of 1844. We talked much about the martyrdom of the Seer, and about who should preside over the church. I recollect very distinctly, as plainly as if it were only a few weeks ago, what he told us, and the advice he gave us. He said "little Joseph [as you were called then] will be the next prophet and seer to the church, and the successor to the Martyr." "For," said he, "I saw him consecrated and blessed by Bro. Joseph and others, to be his successor in the prophetic office, while we were in prison in Missouri, in Liberty, Clay County." "I also was present at a public meeting in Nauvoo, Illinois," said Bro. Sidney, "when Joseph presented his son, little Joseph, and told us that he was our prophet, and his successor." Bro. Sidney said many of the Saints present wondered what it meant, and asked how it could be. "But," said he, "Bro. Joseph told me he had anointed him and blessed him to be his successor in the prophetic office."

Bro. Sidney told Bro. Burtis and myself, and others in our house, that he was the guardian of the church, the spokesman, and the one to preside till young Joseph was old enough to be ordained to the high priesthood; that it was his right as a member of the First Presidency, and not the Twelve. We saw that it was according to the order set forth in the Covenants, and believed Bro. Rigdon was right. He visited us afterwards, two times, but he argued at the latter visits that he was the head of the kingdom, and successor to Joseph. He did not seem like the same man, and we did not follow him.

We were also visited by Brigham Young, and members of the Twelve, but did not follow them. My husband was much opposed to polygamy, when it was preached, some time afterwards, by them.

We were visited by Elder James W. Gillen, in 1864 or 1865, who presented the claims of yourself as the successor of the Martyr, and we gladly received him, for we had been looking for you for a long while.

Bro. Burtis died in 1871. I was married to Bro. Samuel Hopkins, in 1881, who is dead some time since.

I love this work; it is so dear to me. I have spent most of my life in it, and am only waiting for the summons to come home and rest from the toils of this life.

Your sister in Christ,

SARAH B. HOPKINS.

To Whomsoever It May Concern: This is to certify, that I, Sarah B. Hopkins, (daughter of John B. Wright), was born June 13, 1816. I am a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. I was baptized in September, 1837, at Hornerstown, New Jersey, by Elder Erastus Snow. Further,

That I heard Sidney Rigdon state in my house in New Egypt, New Jersey, in the fall of 1844, that Joseph Smith blessed or ordained little Joseph, his son, to be his successor in the Presidency of the church; that Joseph had told the Saints in a public meeting that little Joseph was his successor,—this at Nauvoo, Illinois; that he, Sidney Rigdon, presided as the guardian to the church, as a member of the First Presidency.

Yours in defense of the truth,

SARAH B. HOPKINS.

Dated this twenty-seventh day of October, 1905.

HORNERSTOWN, New Jersey.

Witnesses to the signing of the above: Walter W. Smith, William H. Brown.

LABOR—CAPITAL.

One of the best and most instructive exhibits at the Portland Fair was one located not far from the entrance and fronting the Missouri building. It was in the form of a free lecture, delivered several times each day upon the National Cash Register Company's manufactory at Dayton, Ohio, and their methods of procedure in their work, the lessons of which lecture were emphasized and enforced by a series of stereoscopic views and moving pictures illustrating the whole scheme including a trip by rail from Portland to Dayton.

The lecture was a clear, well-arranged presentation of what a proper coöperation between capital and labor would do for both employer and employee upon a purely commercial-basis answer to the question, Will it pay? without reference to the ethical, moral, or sentimental phase of the labor question; the cash register company frankly confessing that they have neither desire nor intention of posing as philanthropists. Does it pay? If it does, then much of the difficulty existing in settling the controversy between capital and labor, employer and employee, the master and the workman, is overcome.

This lecture in itself, ably given to successive audiences each day, challenged the attention of capitalist and laborer alike without doing so in specific words. It ought to be repeated and multiplied in every emporium where capital and labor do business in the world.

NOT PERSECUTED?

While at Portland, Oregon, during the reunion held there September 8 to 18, a woman residing not far from the hall in which the meetings were held, a Catholic, called at the house where a number of the elders were staying and told us that a member of the church with us, living at her son's home, old, sick, and in need of help had asked her to speak to us about her. Brn. N. C. Enge and S. D. Condit at once went to the number at the son's residence. They were admitted in an apparently kind way. They made known who they were and why they called, being requested to do so by the man's mother. The son upon finding who they were became very angry, cursed and swore at them; and disregarding the poor old mother's entreaties he ordered the elders from the house. The brethren tried to explain, but the infuriated man refused to listen; if anything he became more excited and angry, got his axe and ordered them out, threatening to kill them with his murderous weapon. Of course the brethren left the house, but had to do so on their guard, as he followed them into the street and threw stones at them as long as they were in reaching distance. By watching they were enabled to avoid being struck by the stones he threw; but it was an unfortunate reception for peaceable men bent on an errand of kindness to a fellow being in distress with a view to help them if in their power.

It looks like a case of persecution.

CORRECTION.

In HERALD for November 1, page 1045, column 1, paragraph 3, occurs the name, "John Brisben." It should read "John Brisben Walker."

In this issue will be found a portion of a lecture by Doctor Samuel Calvin of the State University of Iowa, on "Prehistoric Iowa." Replying to a request for permission to republish the article Doctor Calvin says: "My publications so far are all public property, and are freely at the public service provided they can be put to any use." We appreciate a statement of this kind, and commend Doctor Calvin for the excellent and proper spirit manifested.

THE LAND OF ZION.—WHERE IS IT?

We have often heard the statement made that the whole land of America is the land of Zion, but we think this is a mistake. California is called "the land of gold" because gold is found there; but it is not found everywhere in California. In the same sense America may be called the land of Zion because Zion is found here; but Zion is not everywhere in America. It is located at a certain place and occupies a certain amount of territory. It has its limits and boundaries, extending so far and no farther. All inside of this precinct is Zion—or the land of Zion; but it does not extend outside. Modern revelation has given us the location, and tells us where the center stake is, which is very plain so far. In the "revelation given in Zion, July, 1831," the Lord says:

Hearken, O ye elders of my church, saith the Lord your God, who have assembled yourselves together, according to my commandments, in this land which is the land of Missouri, which is the land which I have appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the saints: wherefore this is the land of promise, and the place for the city of Zion. And thus saith the Lord your God, If you will receive wisdom here is wisdom. Behold, the place which is now called Independence is the center place.—Doctrine and Covenants 57:1.

In section 98 the Lord speaks of "the land which I have appointed to be the land of Zion . . . Jackson County, and the counties round about."

We are here told that Independence, Jackson County, Missouri, is the center place of the land of Zion; and that for the beginning of the gathering it is extended to the counties round about. But after the Saints had been driven from Missouri, and found a resting-place at Nauvoo, Illinois, the Lord gave them a revelation there in which he says:

Your prayers are acceptable before me, and in answer to them I say unto you that you are now called immediately to make a solemn proclamation of my gospel, and of this stake which I have planted to be a corner-stone of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 107:1.

Now we have found one of the extremes of the land of Zion, even a corner. So if Nauvoo is one corner, and Independence is the center, we think we can locate the boundaries of that land. It may be the land of Zion is square. Independence is Zion proper. It is spoken of as the New Jerusalem, and will be the city of God. The temple of the Most High will be built there. It will be the chief city, the center place. But the land of Zion—her boundaries, will extend a certain distance around. If we take a map and draw a square with Independence for the center and Nauvoo for a corner, we will find that the land of Zion embraces nearly all of Missouri, about half of Kansas, a part of Nebraska, part of Illinois, and a part of Iowa, and may extend no farther.

Some may claim that the land of Zion may be oblong. That might be correct. The tabernacle in the wilderness, built after the pattern shown unto Moses by our heavenly Father, was oblong. The temple of Solomon, built by command of God,—who outlined every detail,—was oblong. But the holy city, New Jerusalem in heaven, as described in Revelation 21:16, is square. And the Lord says that Zion shall be called the New Jerusalem. (See Doctrine and Covenants 45:12.) So we infer that it may be square. But be that as it may, whatever its shape, we have its given center and one extreme corner. So, taking Independence for the center, and the distance from there to Nauvoo as a radius, and describing a circumference, this circle will represent approximately the extreme boundary of the land of Zion. The reader will notice that Nauvoo was a stake that the Lord "planted to be a corner-stone of Zion." It was not for the corner-stone of a building, nor of the city of Zion—that was many miles away. But it was a stone to mark a corner of the land of Zion. And then follows a very strange statement from God. He says to Joseph Smith: "You are now called immediately to make a solemn proclamation of my gospel, and of this stake which I have planted to be a corner-stone of Zion." He was not only commanded to proclaim the gospel, but also that Nauvoo was a corner-stone of Zion. It seems that our Father thought that this fact was about as important as the gospel itself. He then continues:

This proclamation [of the gospel and this corner-stone] shall be made to all the kings of the world, to the four corners thereof—to the honorable president-elect, and the high-minded governors of the nation in which you live, and to all the nations of the earth, scattered abroad.

Why was all this necessary? What great importance was there attached to this particular corner? And why should our heavenly Father think it necessary to so impress this fact upon the minds of the rulers and leaders of the world? Because he was "about to call upon them to give heed to the light and glory of Zion," and he wanted it to be fully established that Nauvoo was an outer corner, so that the boundaries might be known.

The writer approximates that the circle surrounding the land of Zion is about four hundred miles in diameter. We will now produce some evidence to prove that Ohio—including of course Kirtland and the temple—is not in the land of Zion: It must be at least some three hundred miles away. Section 58:10 reads, "And let there be an agent appointed by the voice of the church, unto the church in Ohio, to receive moneys to purchase lands in Zion." In August, 1831, a revelation was given in Kirtland, Ohio, from which we make a few extracts: "Let my servant Titus Billings, . . . take his journey up unto the land of Zion. . . . Let all the moneys which can be spared, . . . be sent up unto the land of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 68:10.

This expression, "up unto the land of Zion," is repeated twice again on this page, showing that Kirtland is not in that land, but was to send up to it.

In September, 1831, another revelation given in Kirtland, after making the same kind of statement twice in paragraph four, says, in paragraph five:

It is not meet that my servants, Newel K. Whitney and Sydney Gilbert should sell their store, and their possessions here [in Kirtland, Ohio], for this is not wisdom until the residue of the church, which remaineth in this place [Kirtland], shall go up unto the land of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 64:5.

To the writer's mind this is positive proof that Kirtland was not in that land.

November, 1831, the Lord commanded that "my servants who are abroad in the earth should send forth the accounts of their stewardships to the land of Zion." (Doctrine and Covenants 69:2.) Remember that all who were "abroad" from Zion at that time were in the United States, but not in the "land of Zion."

Concerning the gathering of the Saints, we read: "Let them carry up unto the bishop a certificate from three elders of the church, or a certificate from the bishop, otherwise he who shall go up unto the land of Zion shall not be accounted as a wise steward."—Doctrine and Covenants 72:5. Revelation, April, 1832: "Manage the affairs of the poor, and all things pertaining to the bishopric both in the land of Zion, and in the land of Shinehah [Kirtland], for I have consecrated the land of Shinehah in mine own due time for the benefit of the saints of the Most High, and for a stake to Zion; for Zion must increase in beauty, and in holiness; her borders must be enlarged."—Doctrine and Covenants 81:4.

In the above we have two different lands spoken of. Shinehah—Kirtland—has nothing to do with the land of Zion at this time (April, 1832). She is not even a stake of Zion; but our heavenly Father says that in his own due time he will make her a stake, for "Zion's borders must be enlarged." This virtually states that there is a limit to them, and we have tried to show the limit.

Again we read, "Let all those . . . who receive moneys, send it up unto the bishop in Zion, or unto the bishop in Ohio."—Doctrine and Covenants 83:18. Here are two bishops, one in Zion and one on the outside. We are all familiar with the revelation on the Word of Wisdom. In the introduction to the same we read: "A word of wisdom for the benefit of the council of high priests, assembled in Kirtland, and church; and also the saints in Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 86.

In a revelation given in Kirtland, February 24, 1834, we read:

Your brethren, who have been scattered on the land of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 100:1. Gather yourselves together unto the land of Zion, . . . which I have consecrated to be the land of Zion.—Paragraph 5. Parley P. Pratt, and my servant Lyman Wight should not return to the land of their brethren, until they have obtained companies to go up unto the land of Zion, . . . Ye shall not go up unto the land of Zion, until you have obtained one hundred of the strength of my house, to go up with you unto the land of Zion.—Paragraph 6. Gather ye together, O ye people of my church, upon the land of Zion, all you that have not been commanded to tarry. [Given November 3, 1831; called the Appendix.]—Doctrine and Covenants 108:2.

Here we have a portion of the Saints commanded to tarry in Ohio, and the rest of them commanded to gather together upon the land of Zion.

In March, 1833, a revelation given in Kirtland says, "Vienna Jaques should receive money to bear her expenses, and go up unto the land of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 87:7. May, 1833: "A commandment I give unto you, that ye shall commence a work of laying out and preparing a beginning and foundation of the city of the stake of Zion, here in the land of Kirtland, beginning at my house."—Doctrine and Covenants 91:1. Now we have Kirtland made a stake of Zion. Independence we will call the center stake of an imaginary tent. There are stakes at each corner, Nauvoo being one. There may also be stakes at each side and end to hold them secure. There are also imaginary ropes connected with the tent and attached to stakes placed some distance away. One of these stakes was placed at Kirtland. These outside stakes are for the strength and support of the tent. This imaginary tent represents Zion, or—more properly speaking—the land of Zion. And it makes no difference what may happen it will never be moved, for the Lord has said, "Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return."—Doctrine and Covenants 98:4. And it makes no difference where they may go, or where they may settle, in God's own time the pure in heart shall return (go back) to Zion. And it makes no difference where they may wander beyond the regions we have described, they are outside of the land of Zion, and outside of the gathering-place, and their gathering is unwise, and only temporary at best, and not approved of God. For he has plainly told us:

There is none other place appointed than that which I have appointed, neither shall there be any other place appointed than that which I have appointed for the work of the gathering of my saints, until the day cometh when there is found no more room for them; and then I have other places which I will appoint unto them, and they shall be called stakes, for the curtains, or the strength of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 98:4.

We are here told that there is no other place for the gathering, and that there will be no other place until after Zion is full. It is not full yet. Then what are the people doing, who are gathering in Utah? Utah is not Zion. She is not in the land of Zion. Utah is not a gathering-place, and never can be until after Zion is full, and the writer doubts very much that it will be even then. At least it can not he until God so appoints it; and he says he will not appoint any other place until the time comes when there is no more room in Zion. When that time comes, he says he has other places which he will appoint. Those places are already in the mind of Jehovah, and he knows where they are.

We now have mentioned Independence, the center stake of Zion, Nauvoo a corner stake, and Kirtland an outside stake, all appointed of God and limiting the territory. And as pertaining to the work of God, he says:

It is ordained that in Zion [Independence], and in her stakes [Nauvoo and Kirtland], and in Jerusalem, those places which I have appointed [the places already appointed—not places he would appoint after this time] for refuge, shall be the places for your baptisms for your dead.—Doctrine and Covenants 107:11.

Here is an ordinance of the church to be performed for the dead, which can only be done in Zion and her stakes, and Jerusalem, and nowhere else. And in January, 1841, God had already named the places, and the only places he had appointed for that work. And as pertaining to America, it was Zion and her stakes, the places he had already named at that time. Attempting to perform that work at any other place is useless, and wasted effort, of no avail, and not accepted of God.

Again, baptism for the dead can only be performed in the temple of God, and his temples can only be built in Zion and her stakes, and in Jerusalem. And in these places appointed of God there had been temples built at the time God said, "those places I have appointed." No man or set of men in America has any right to attempt to build a temple of God anywhere outside of Zion and her stakes. They might build what they call a temple; but they never could make it a temple of God; and he never could accept it as such.

When the church was at Nauvoo, wicked and abominable doctrines were secretly introduced. Many of the members ceased to listen to the words of God, but began to follow their own desires, and became rebellious to the commandments of God. They had forgotten that he had said, "The rebellious shall be cut off out of the land of Zion, and shall be sent away, and shall not inherit the land." If the people of Utah have not been "cut off," and "sent away" "out of the land of Zion," then they are not the "rebellious." But we know this: They have not inherited the land! And there are but very few left of those who were sent away, and of the few remaining there are no present prospects of their inheriting it. And when we read that the "pure in heart shall return"—of those who remain—and we see so little change for the better among them, is it any wonder we ask, Who of them will return? If this prophecy of "the rebellious" applies to the Mormons, they are out of the land of Zion, and the boundary line is somewhere between Independence and Utah, and we have shown about where it is. It is a fact that the Mormons were sent away from the land of Zion! To "a salt land and not inhabited," where Jeremiah said certain ones should go, "whose heart departeth from the Lord." (Jeremiah 17:5, 6.)

GEO. S. LINCOLN.

LIKE HIM.

Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure.—1 John 3:2, 3.

There are many mysteries pertaining to godliness. Some mysteries remain without a ray of heavenly light to help us penetrate their depths, while there are others from which the veil has been partly lifted, and we are permitted to get a glimpse of God's designs. As to "what we shall be" was still to the "beloved disciple's" mind shrouded in impenetrable mystery; but this he said, "We know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him." This was no mystery to him; but knowledge. To be "like him" when he comes is a happy privilege to which we may attain.

He explains how we may be "like him" by saying, "Every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." Purity was one of the most striking features of Christ's life. He "did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth: who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously." (1 Peter 22, 23.) And Peter tells us that he was our example, "that ye should follow his steps" (verse 21); and John says, "He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked" (1 John 6:2.)

Christ designed the gospel as a means of purification; and Peter said of the saints in his day, "Ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth."—1 Peter 1:22. Their perfection had been an accomplished fact, was then completed, and had been effected through "obeying the truth," or the gospel.

Christ gave himself for the church "that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by [according to] the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish." (Ephesians 5:26, 27.) The "washing of water by [according to] the word," or baptism was one of the means for sanctification, whereby they purified themselves "in obeying the truth." This is the purity Christ designs the church shall have attained to when he comes to present it to himself at the marriage supper. "For the marriage of the Lamb is [will] come, and his wife hath [or will have at that time] made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints."—Revelation 19:7, 8. The "righteousness of saints" at the time of the marriage, then, must be "clean and white," "not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it [in its purity] should be holy and without blemish."

Paul speaks of this purity of the saints, and the degree of purity designed that they should attain to at and prior to the time of the presentation mentioned above, in these words: "To present you holy and unblameable and unproveable in his sight."—Colossians 1:22. "And teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus."—Verse 28. We have noticed that the time we are to be presented to Christ is when he comes to take his ready "bride"; and if we desire to be in that happy throng composing the church of Christ, "the bride, the Lamb's wife," we must be pure, "clean and white," and "without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing," and "perfect in Christ Jesus." If we are so prepared we shall be truly "like him," as John declares the "sons of God" will be.

Some claim that this purity, cleanliness, and "perfection" can not be obtained in this life. From the texts we have quoted, and others, it is evident that some will have attained to that happy state when Christ comes to present the church, his "bride," to himself. Those who will not be ready to enter will be the foolish virgins, for "they that were ready went in with him to the marriage: and the door was shut. Afterward came also the other [foolish] virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us. But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, I know you not." (Matthew 25:10-12.)

This preparation must not only be made by the saints living when Christ comes, but the saints of all ages who will be worthy to enter and partake of the marriage supper must have made themselves ready for that event by righteous living; and while living must have worn "robes of pure righteousness, white." If the church, "his wife, hath made herself ready," (and this refers to the church militant when Christ comes,) as it must do, what hinders the saints of all ages from making themselves equally ready while living?

The objection is urged that we can not live so perfectly but that we will violate God's laws repeatedly. That is no doubt true; but if we discover our robes of white have been tarnished by failure to live up to all of God's laws it is our duty to see that the "spot" is removed by proper repentance; then we should be careful not to repeat that which caused the stain. We should be constantly on the watch for "blemishes" in our character, and be ready to correct them when found.

I once heard Bro. J. H. Lake relate a vision he had wherein he saw himself robed in white; and he was given to understand that it was his life-work to bleach that robe. All our robes must be bleached and cleansed from all spots and blemishes by following Christ's steps, living the Christ-life, in order that we may "abide the day" when he shall appear.

Still the query is urged, "Inasmuch as our circumstances, or our lack of knowledge, hinders us from living fully up to every requirement of the law, how can we be fully ready?"

God has made provision for such emergency by telling us that when the quickening-time comes, the time of the resurrection in fact, when Christ comes with all his saints, "Ye who are quickened by a portion of celestial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness."—Doctrine and Covenants 85:6. This lack of fitness is to be made up then, and not some other time. God knows wherein and why we fail; and, if our failure is not through carelessness on our part, he will then, at the time of the resurrection, supply our deficiency; and we, with others more enlightened and who have had better opportunities, will be made ready by "our Helper"; and "like him" we, too, will be permitted to enter when he presents his ready "bride" to himself.

PREPARED TO SEE GOD.

If we have "purified" ourselves "even as he is pure," then we will be prepared to enter into the presence of God; for, "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God."—Matthew 5:8. We must be "pure in heart," and prepared to meet God at the beginning of the millennium, and not wait for a thousand years for the purifying influence of God's Spirit to elevate us to that degree of purity and perfection that we ought to reach in this life. Alma says, "Behold, this life is the time for men to prepare to meet God."—Alma 16:30.

LIKE HIM IN KNOWLEDGE.

Paul tells us in Colossians, third chapter, that we that "have put off the old man with his deeds; and have put on the new man" are "renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created" us; and we must attain unto that condition of life wherein "Christ is all, and in all." (Verses 9-11.) Since we are to be "renewed in knowledge after the image of" Christ, then we are to become "like him" in knowledge. Paul in 1 Corinthians 13 says, "Now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known." "For we know in part, and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away."—Verses 9, 10. Christ, speaking of his resurrection, says, "And the third day shall I be perfected."—Luke 13:32. Christ then was "perfected" in a sense when he was resurrected; or, in other words, he had entered that perfect state. John, referring evidently to the resurrected state, says, "When he shall appear we shall be like him." From these scriptures, we learn that we, too, will have entered that "perfected" condition, or state of perfection, when we come forth in the resurrection.

Now, through the operation of the Spirit, we get little glimpses of light or knowledge; only occasionally the divine light breaks through the veil of darkness that covers of earth; "but when that which is perfect is come," the veil will be removed, and we will see God's goodness, love, and might in all its effulgent glory. Now, these glimpses of light are "renewing" us "in knowledge after the image of him that created" us, and preparing us for the great flood of light and knowledge that shall burst upon us when the veil is lifted. Then we will have perfect knowledge; or at least, all that God may see fit to give us.

Christ says "through the resurrection from the dead" those that are "worthy to obtain that world" shall be "equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." (Luke 20:36, Inspired Translation.) When we are resurrected we shall be "equal unto the angels," and whatever degree of purity, holiness, perfection, and knowledge they possess we shall possess. They do not possess all knowledge, neither did Christ claim to possess all knowledge; for he said, "Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my father only."—Matthew 4:36. Peter said the "angels desired to look into" the mysteries of salvation. They did not understand it all; so when we shall obtain that world through the resurrection of the dead and are "equal unto the angels," and even "equal with Christ," as we shall see later, we may still not have all "knowledge" in the fullest sense. New developments in God's plans may be revealed to us from time to time.

LIKE HIM IN POWER.

When Christ comes we shall be like him, not only in purity and knowledge, but also in power; for we shall reign with Christ a thousand years (see Revelation 20:6), "and we shall reign on the earth," (Revelation 4:10), for he has "made us unto our God kings and priests." This kingship and priestly rule is ours when he comes; for to him "that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron." (Revelation 2:26, 27.) This power to rule the nations with a rod of iron is theirs while they reign with him a thousand years on the earth. They commence this work at the beginning and will continue through the thousand years. Again he says, "To him that overcometh will I give to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne."—Revelation 3:21. This is the time Daniel speaks of when he says, "The time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints."—Daniel 7:22, 27.

John says, "Now are we the sons of God."—1 John 3:2. If we are "now" the sons of God, surely when we have put off this mortal body and come forth in the resurrection "like him," we shall then be ready to take up our sonship with Christ, our "elder brother"; and all that pertains to him as a son of God will be ours. At that time "the saints shall be filled with his glory, and receive their inheritance and be made equal with him." (Doctrine and Covenants 85:33.) It is at the time they "receive their inheritance," that they are to be made "equal with him." Will any one argue that they are not to receive their inheritance till the end of the thousand years? The receiving of inheritance is surely at Christ's coming; therefore, at his coming we shall be "like him" in power and authority, "equal with him." Since we are to be "equal with" Christ at his coming, and "like him," upon what rule of logic or course of reasoning can any claim that we will need a thousand years of purification to prepare us to "see God"? Will Christ require so long a time to enter into the presence of God? If we are "equal with him" why should we?

OUR WORK WILL BE LIKE HIS.

We will not sit down "at ease with folded hands" when we come forth in God's celestial kingdom. "Jesus answered them, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work."—John 5:7. We are told that God's work is "one eternal round." Since God's work never ends, and Christ's work is coextensive with his, for "without him was not anything made that was made," and we are also "sons of God," our work, too, will never end.

WE SHALL REIGN OVER THE NATIONS.

We have already noted that we shall reign with Christ on the earth a thousand years: "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heavens, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High."—Daniel 7:27. And they are to have "power over the nations," and "rule them with a rod of iron." (Revelation 2:26, 27.)

Christ said, "I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me."—Luke 22:29. They will not only rule the nations, but will judge angels also: "Know ye not that we shall judge angels?"—1 Corinthians 6:3.

These nations which the saints are to rule, will be on the earth during the millennium. After Israel "is brought forth out of the nations," and settled in the "land that is brought back from the sword"

(Ezekiel 38:8), then the nations with "Gog" are to go to battle against Israel, "a great company, and a mighty army" (verse 15), "to take a great spoil" (verse 13). "It shall be in the latter days" (verse 16); God will "plead against" them with "pestilence and blood," with "an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone" (verse 22); and he will "leave but a sixth part of" them (chapter 39, verse 2).

Isaiah, in speaking of this event, said, "Therefore, the inhabitants of the earth are burned and few men left."—Isaiah 24:6. Zechariah also speaks of this important time when all nations will be gathered "against Jerusalem to battle." "Then shall the Lord go forth, and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle. And his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives." "And the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee." "And the Lord shall be King over all the earth: in that day there shall be one Lord, and his name one." The nations will be scourged with a great plague. "And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all nations which come against Jerusalem, shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts; and to keep the feast of tabernacles. And it shall be, that whoso will not come up of all the families of the earth, . . . even upon them shall be no rain." "This shall be the punishment of Egypt, and the punishment of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles." Read the whole fourteenth chapter of Zechariah.

These scriptures show that "all nations" will be engaged in this great conflict, and it will be "in the latter days," after Jerusalem is rebuilt by gathered Israel. And the Lord will fight "against those nations" with plagues, rain, hail, fire, and brimstone. It will be at the time he comes, "and all the saints with" him; when he shall establish his rule over "all the earth." As a result of that battle, there will be "few men left," "but the sixth part." And those that are "left of all the nations which come against Jerusalem, shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts." Only those who will worship the Lord of hosts will be left, and these will be subject to the punishment of "no rain" should they fail to go up to Jerusalem from year to year to worship him.

I think it needs no further comment to show that those who are "left of all the nations," will be the nations that will be ruled by the saints, when "the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heavens shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High," when Christ "shall be king over all the earth," and the saints are to "reign with Christ a thousand years."

NEW JERUSALEM IN THE MILLENNIUM.

When "that great city, the holy Jerusalem" shall descend "out of heaven from God" (Revelation 21:10), "and the nations of them which are saved ["left of all the nations which come against Jerusalem"] shall walk in the light of it ["the city"]"; then the "kings of the earth" will be outside of the city and will "bring their glory and honor into it. And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there. And they shall bring the glory and honor of the nations into it." (Verses 24-26.)

This shows that the New Jerusalem will come "down from God out of heaven" while the nations are still on the earth with some persons to rule them as kings; besides, when it does come, it is "prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." (Verse 2.) We have already learned that the "bride" was the church and she will be "prepared" and "hath made herself ready," and hence is to be "adorned for her husband" in robes of righteousness, "clean and white"; and all this when Christ comes to present her to himself at the time of the marriage.

The New Jerusalem that comes down from heaven is the company of saints that have lived in all ages, and have worn robes of righteousness while living and who are worthy of forgiveness of their shortcomings and defects; and who are "prepared as a bride adorned for her husband," even "the bride, the Lamb's wife."

I have no idea that this will be a city of brick and mortar, even though it is to be a city of "pure gold, like unto clear glass." (Verse 18.) It seems to me much of the language used relative to this city must be figurative. We know that part of the language used is figurative, for the city is called "the bride, the Lamb's wife." This must refer to people and not to buildings. I, for one, can not believe that this city is to have buildings in it "twelve thousand furlongs" (verse 16), or one thousand five hundred miles high. This does not refer to the wall of the city, for it is to be "a hundred and forty and four cubits" (verse 17), or about two hundred and sixty feet. It must be its glory that extends so high, and the "pure gold, like unto clear glass" represents the purity of the saints. Christ "shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver." (Malachi 3:3.) And again, "I will bring the third part [the Reorganized Church.—J. M. S.] through the fire, and will refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried: they shall call on my name, and I will hear them: I will say, It is my people: and they shall say, The Lord is my God."—Zechariah 13:9.

We are told that "gold is tried" in the crucible till it reflects the image of the refiner. Christ is the purifier, and we are to be tried till we are like him.

NATIONS MORTAL.

Those nations that are about the city are to live on in mortality as they now live, with possibly some change to suit new conditions, and will be subject to plagues as we have already seen. "And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations which come against Jerusalem, shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and keep the feast of tabernacles." If any do not come up to worship, "even upon them shall be no rain." "This shall be the punishment of Egypt, and the punishment of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles." Those that fail to live as they should shall be punished.

This position is fully sustained in Isaiah 65, where he speaks of the "new heaven and a new earth." He says, "There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die a hundred years old; but the sinner being a hundred years old shall be accursed." The transgressor, the "sinner," shall be punished, "shall be accursed." So there will be sinners during that peaceful time, when "they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord." (Verse 25.) Satan will be bound, and be not there to tempt them; still they may, of their own accord, refuse to come up to worship at Jerusalem year by year, or possibly sin in some other way, and be punished.

Isaiah says, in substance, no child shall die in infancy, nor till he is "a hundred years old." Then they will die, or be changed as we shall see later. The people, who are subject to death at the age of a hundred years, will build houses, "plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them." "They shall not labor [have children] in vain [that is, to die in infancy], nor bring forth for trouble; for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them."—Verse 23. This evidently proves that some are mortal, and that there will be children born to them during the millennium. The same is proven by the following statements:

At that day when I shall come in my glory, . . . they that are wise and have received the truth, and have taken the Holy Spirit for their guide, and have not been deceived, verily I say unto you, They shall not be hewn down and cast into the fire, but shall abide the day, and the earth shall be given unto them for an inheritance; and they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst.—Doctrine and Covenants 45:10. [The earth is their inheritance.] And in that day Satan shall not have power to tempt any man. And there shall be no sorrow because there is no death. In that day an infant shall not die until he is old, and his life shall be as the age of a tree, and when he dies he shall not sleep (that is to say in the earth), but shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye, and shall be caught up, and his rest shall be glorious.—Doctrine and Covenants 98:5. Yea, and blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth, when the Lord shall come, and old things shall pass away, and all things become new, they shall rise from the dead and shall not die after, and shall receive an inheritance before the Lord, in the holy city, and he that liveth when the Lord shall come, and has kept the faith, blessed is he: nevertheless it is appointed to him to die at the age of man; wherefore children shall grow up until they become old, old men shall die; but they shall not sleep in the dust, but they shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye; . . . these things are the things that ye must look for. . . . And at that hour cometh an entire separation of the righteous and the wicked, and in that day will I send mine angels, to pluck out the wicked, and cast them into unquenchable fire.—Doctrine and Covenants 63:13.

These quotations show us that at Christ's coming the Saints shall receive "their inheritance," and afterwards "shall multiply and wax strong"; and their children shall "grow up without sin." "At that time Satan shall not have power to tempt any man." And while there will be "no death," yet the child, when he reaches the age of man, the "age of a tree," "a hundred years," shall die; but he shall not die as we do now. He "shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye, and shall be caught up, and his rest shall be glorious." That is, he shall be changed to immortality and caught up into the holy city.

While the nations are in mortality and outside of the city, as soon as they reach the age of "a hundred years" they are translated, or "changed in the twinkling of an eye," to immortality, and then enter the "holy city" which is inhabited by those who "shall rise from the dead and shall not die after, and shall receive an inheritance before the Lord in the holy city."

We also learn that this is the time when "old things shall pass away, and all things become new." We do not have to wait until after the millennium and the "little season" for all things to become new. At the beginning of Christ's reign comes "an entire separation of the righteous and the wicked." The righteous will be spared, but the angels "in that day" will be sent "to pluck out the wicked and cast them into unquenchable fire." We do not want to lose sight of the fact that "these are the things ye must look for."

The Saints should have their eyes open and understand "these things," so they may be looking for them, and not be crying, "You had better leave those mysteries alone." What is unveiled is no longer mystery. The danger is not in delving into God's word for the facts relating to a matter, but in jumping at conclusions and forming theories contrary to facts and teaching such theories.

THE END OF MORTALITY.

If mortality ends with Christ's coming, as some believe, then we will have children born to immortal beings, which children will be changed "at the age of man," "a hundred years," to some other state, and sinners to be accursed and punished with drought; and at the end of the millennium and "little season," nations of immortal, resurrected beings destroyed. Yet we are told that those who "rise from the dead shall not die after."

The facts are, these things referred to take place with those who have not attained the age of "a hundred years." Those living at Christ's coming will not receive their change till they reach that age. These will beget children in mortality, who will also beget children in mortality till the end of the "little season." These will be the "nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog," whom Satan will "gather together to battle, and they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city," the "holy city," "the New Jerusalem," "the bride, the Lamb's wife," the abode of the resurrected saints. These mortal nations will be "accursed," "punished." "And fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them"—Revelation 20:8, 9. Here is the solution of the matter: "Satan shall be bound; and when he is loosed again, he shall only reign for a little season, and then cometh the end of the earth; and he that liveth in righteousness, shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye; and the earth shall pass away as by fire; and the wicked shall go away into unquenchable fire."—Doctrine and Covenants 43:7.

At the end of the "little season" the wicked will be devoured by fire and the righteous mortals will be changed to immortality, and a final end is made of all mortal conditions, and not till then.

RESURRECTED BEINGS NOT MARRIED.

For fear that some may think the conditions referred to above will take place with immortal beings, I refer to the following language of our Savior. When the Sadducees desired to know which of seven husbands would be husband in the resurrection to a certain woman, Christ replied:

Ye do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God, for in the resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven.—Matthew 22: 29, 30. Jesus answered and said unto them, The children of this world marry, and are given in marriage; but they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, through the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection.—Luke 20: 35, 36, Inspired Translation.

People should not make the same error to-day that the Sadducees made. We should know the Scriptures so as not to make the same blunder. Christ gives us plainly to understand that marriage is for this life, the mortal state, and does not obtain "in the resurrection," "that world," the immortal state. To avoid this plain statement of Christ's, the people of the mountains take it, they must be married here, so as to live in the marriage relation then. If this theory were true, how about the children born there? They never could marry, and hence God would be partial.

Some may think I have covered ground that is irrelevant to the subject, but to the mind of the writer it is necessary to understand the Scriptures on all points, and to fully understand what it means to be "like him," and how we will be like him, and who will differ from him and how.

"Buy the truth and sell it not." "Let us walk in the light."

THE GREAT JEHOVAH.

The restoration of the gospel with its powers, blessings, and opportunities is a tremendous movement.

The Book of Mormon, Bible, and Book of Covenants are crowded with "large ideas"—wide thoughts. The object of those books is to teach the "great salvation"—and they contain many "exceeding great and precious promises."

The gift of eternal life is called an "unspeakable gift." The Psalmist speaks in this majestic strain, saying, "Thou hast set my feet in a large room." God is not niggardly in his dealings with us; for the Psalmist said, "Return unto thy rest, O my soul; for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee."

God is a king! Therefore we should expect him to act like a king in his dealings with us. There is no monopoly of the spiritual blessings which the Lord has prepared for men; but "he that worketh righteousness is accepted of him." It is our duty to pass the cup of knowledge to our neighbor. There is no limit to the bounty of God's grace. "Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, and see if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing; that there shall not be room enough to receive it." This is not narrow, meager, or puny in its scope; but this promise is kingly. It expresses the bounty and resources of our royal Father. He has enough pardon for all, enough bread for all. "His peace shall flow like a river." The joy of his Saints is unspeakable and full of glory.

In a speech delivered at Budd Park in Kansas City, about two years ago, Joseph Smith said, "To be truly great is to be truly good." The apostle Paul had big thoughts when he prayed, "That ye . . . may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God."

The lives of most people are small, narrow, and insufficient. "Be ye also enlarged," says the apostle. If any one will open the door of his heart, the Lord will come in and enlarge his wisdom, his charity, and his goodness. He shall no longer be a spiritual pygmy, but a giant. We need richer, broader, fuller, nobler, grander lives, purposes, and hopes.

The life of Moses was broad and deep, flowing like a mighty river from generation to generation.

The life of Joseph the son of Jacob was not narrow, although he lived in Egypt where his surroundings were unfavorable to the best life.

Daniel lived a pure life in Babylon.

Alma, and Aaron and his brethren, sacrificed worldly honors for the larger life.

It was not because those men had been well born that they were so highly favored, but it was because they had been "born again," "born of the Spirit." The second birth has more to do in the making of a great character than the first.

God never intended any one to be small and pinched and dwarfed in character. He has given us a large pattern, and grace sufficient to make us all broad-minded and large-hearted.

Little things make life small and mean. A little covetousness, a little selfishness, a little sin, will make a little soul.

One who is like Christ will have a large heart. It will be large enough for his kindred, his friends, his neighbors, and strangers. He will have room for those who belong to the same church with him, and for those who belong to other churches, and to no church. He will have room for those who think as he thinks, and for those who think otherwise; room for those who love him, and for those who hate him. He will be large enough to offer a sincere prayer every day for his enemies. A big heart is better than a big bank account, or a great name.

Let us have charity for all mankind. Let us expand sufficiently to comprehend the magnitude of this great, glorious latter-day restoration of all things spoken of by "all the holy prophets since the world began."

In No. 230, in the Saints' Hymnal, the poet gives utterance to desires commensurate with our work:

"Father, bid the world rejoice,
Send, oh, send thy truth abroad;
Let the nations hear thy voice,
Hear it and return to God."

JOHN C. GRAINGER.

I could not ask for you a greater gift than that in the future, when the autumn-time of life shall come, you may have the springtime in your heart. There is only one life where the new never becomes old, where the love is always kept fresh, and is always a first-love with increasing freshness: and that is having the One who says, "I am the life!"—Margaret Bottoime.

PREHISTORIC IOWA.

LECTURE BY PROFESSOR SAMUEL CALVIN, OF THE STATE UNIVERSITY. DELIVERED DECEMBER 1, 1891.

The subject assigned to me by the committee that arranged this course of lectures assumes that there was an Iowa before men began purposely to make historical records, and the assumption is not without ample justification. For long before men learned either to carve or write, here was Iowa. At least this beautiful tract of land that we now call Iowa was here. In the course of things it must have been here before men occupied it, before there was any one, therefore, to witness, much less to record the ongoing of local events. Indeed it may easily be shown that Iowa's broad acres, "fair as a garden of the Lord," spread from river to river before a human foot had pressed the surface of the planet anywhere. And in those far-away times of which ordinary history in the nature of things can make no mention, seasons rolled by then as now with all their attendant coming and going of generations of plants and animals. Summer suns shone much as they did in this year of grace, 1891. Spring brought its flowers and autumn its leafy glories. The struggle for life, which is as old as the appearance of life upon the world, was here yearly carried to the final issue. Man at last joined the struggle, and long before there were any historians, events of historical importance were enacted within the limits of Iowa.

You may say all this sounds very well, but if there was a prehistoric Iowa, and if events that historians neither witnessed nor recorded took place within its borders, how is it possible for us to know anything about them? There are records, be it remembered, that are not made by historians, not made by any human hands in many cases, or if so made are wholly independent of design or purpose to perpetuate a knowledge of what is taking place; and yet these records are as clear, as intelligible, as trustworthy, and convey information respecting events as significant and important as any that historian ever penned. To illustrate what I mean, and at the same time to elucidate the methods whereby records relating to prehistoric events have been made and are now deciphered, let us suppose the simple case, that a horse walks along some unfrequented path and leaves the prints of his feet in the yielding soil. No human eye we will suppose saw the animal as it walked along the path so that it is impossible to get direct human testimony concerning the event. Soon an intelligent person passing that way discovers the tracks. He wastes no time in debating the question whether those impressions in the clay are mere accidental freaks of nature. There is but one rational way to account for them and being a rational man he at once reaches the conclusion that an animal of the only kind that ever makes such tracks could alone be responsible for them. The direction in which the creature was going is very clearly told, whether it was walking or running is also recorded, and if a shoe had been lost the fact is expressed in unmistakable terms. The length of time since the animal passed may also be approximately known. The marks we will say are fresh; they were made since the last shower. The disturbed clay has dried but little since the tracks were made; they are less than an hour old. Thus may we have a record conveying information respecting a series of facts and circumstances that tells its story in a manner as clear, straight-forward, and convincing as if it were supported by the testimony of a thousand human witnesses. The manner in which such a record is interpreted illustrates the methods of science in general. They are methods that are the necessary outcome of trained observation and common sense applied to natural phenomena. They are methods based upon the belief that Nature's operations are uniform, and that all phenomena, relating to material things at least, must be referred to natural causes that are known to be competent to produce them.

When a beautifully finished arrow-point is taken from the soil, the possibility of its being the result of accident, of the ordinary action of the forces of attrition and solution that shaped the pebbles with which it is associated, of the influence of the stars, or of some occult process of fermentation in the soil, or that it simply grew, or had always possessed the form we see and needed no becoming or fashioning, is not entertained for a moment. On the contrary, any person with the smallest possible degree of training in the observation of such objects, will at once refer it to the activity of the only agent known to be capable of producing articles requiring purposeful and skillful manipulation in their manufacture. It must be admitted after all that there may be persons who chose to believe that that arrow-point was produced through the agency of unintelligent forces acting without purpose or design. If there be such person entertaining such belief, I know of no way by which he can be convinced to the contrary. No living person saw the object made. Nor has any person seen any person who saw any one who saw it made. We are wholly without human testimony in respect to its manufacture. Nevertheless science would assert in very positive terms that at some time in the past history of the world some human brain designed the object and some human hand fashioned it into shape. If hoof-prints and arrow-points were produced in different ways, by different agents, now in this way and now in that, sometimes shaping themselves spontaneously without any assignable cause, then there would be an end to making scientific deductions so far as they are concerned.

The arrow-point may have been made in times usually called prehistoric; but it is itself an historical record, though all undesigned for such purpose, and tells in unequivocal terms that the region had human occupants at the time it was made. At the same time it bears witness to the degree of civilization or uncivilization that these human occupants had reached. The state of manufactures among such people together with their mode of pursuing game and conducting warfare may at least be inferred. Thus the finding of a single genuine prehistoric arrow-point may enable us to write up an important chapter in the history of a people that no historian ever saw, and concerning whose existence there is not even the shadow of a human tradition.

The recovery of the weapons of a prehistoric people sheds important light on their character and habits, but when, as is often possible, we may add the knowledge gained by exploration of their homes and hearths, their shrines and sepulchers, we are in a position to write up somewhat fully the portion of their history which deals with their daily occupations and their domestic life.

There are many records that tell of other facts than the mere presence of human occupants in a region such as Iowa. Vegetable remains, for example, preserved in peat-bogs or in the mud that accumulated at the bottom of ancient ponds and lakes, enable us to reconstruct the prehistoric forests. With such vegetable remains are usually found bones of the animals that lived in the forests. Human weapons or human skeletons are often there too. And so from records preserved in peat-bog and lake-bed, science may rehabilitate in a general way the prehistoric landscapes, and may see them enlivened with multitudes of struggling creatures, man among the rest, all bent on accomplishing the two great objects for which living things below the higher planes of humanity seem to strive,—namely, "to eat and to escape being eaten."

Not only may we restore the forests in the shadow of which prehistoric man lived, we may know the very size and habits of the animals that roamed through those forests; those that prowled at night and those that sought their food in the open day; those the man chased and those from which in turn he fled; and we may go even farther and determine the climatic conditions under which this assemblage of all animal and plant life existed.

Need I say that the method by which science, after picking up such threads and fragments of history, is led to those confident conclusions to which it gives expression, is not anything that is peculiar to science? It is simply the method of Zadig, made famous by being quoted by Professor Huxley and turned so aptly to account in illustrating what he is pleased to call Retrospective Prophecy as a Function of Science.¹ It is based on the same assumptions which you and I employ in conducting our daily business. As pointed out so well by Huxley these same assumptions regulate the humblest domestic affairs as well as the great concerns of commerce and finance. They lie at the foundation of all our confidence in the truth of written history. They constitute the basis of our confidence too that there will be a to-morrow, in which men will have the same needs and, under the same circumstances, will perform the same acts as we observe or experience to-day. They are also the basis of our belief in a long succession of yesterdays reaching back for centuries beyond the limits of our individual experience. These assumptions take it for granted that the phenomena of Nature, including the phenomena of the human mind, are now, and always have been, and always will be, controlled by unvarying laws; that in short the same things occur in the same order of succession under the same circumstances. Science differs from ordinary pursuits in the fact that it busies itself in accumulating by observation and experience a knowledge of natural events and of the circumstances under which these events take place.

Let us proceed then, after this introduction, altogether too long, to set forth the conclusions to which we are led by applying Zadig's method to the interpretation of the records that deal with prehistoric Iowa. And at this point I feel greatly embarrassed with the question of where to begin. For choose what point of time I will I am immediately confronted with the fact that there stretches back beyond that time what, speaking with some license, may be called a series of geologic eternities during which events were taking place that contributed in greater or less degree to making Iowa what it is to-day.

The first information we have respecting prehistoric Iowa is derived from geologic records. These records, untampered with and unimpeachable, declared that for uncounted years Iowa, together with the whole great valley of the Mississippi, lay beneath the level of the sea, and so far as it was inhabited at all, marine forms of animals and plants were its only occupants. During these long years of submergence the rocky strata of Iowa, as well as of all the adjacent States, were successively accumulated as soft sediments on the sea-bottom. Omitting the small area of Sioux Quartzite in Lyon County, the oldest strata in the State are the limestones and sandstones of the northeastern part of Iowa. These contain the record of a period of duration altogether incomprehensible². Myriads of years, if not myriads of centuries, pass again and in the meantime the light-colored limestones so well represented at Anamosa grow by imperceptible sedimentary accretions.³ Other ages of similar duration drag on slowly into the lengthening past, but bring us only to the point at which the limestones and shales represented in Johnson County are completed.⁴ About this time a small portion of Iowa in the northeast becomes dry land, but all the region to the south and west of where we stand was still held under the dominion of the all-pervading sea. Odd-shaped fishes on one hand and relatives of ferns on the other mark the highest points reached in the evolution of animal and plant life. Another of those ages, to human comprehension limitless, but which the mind of science divides up geologic time into enormous segments, wends slowly by, and the agents of sedimentation build up in slow succession the great crinoidal beds at Marshalltown, Burlington, and Keokuk, together with the coal measures and associate strata of central, southern, and southwestern Iowa.⁵ Still Iowa and the rest of the world are without human occupants. Some progress is making, however. Not so much among plants, for among them nothing much better than ferns has been produced; but among animals we have at the close of this time some air-breathing creatures that deserve to rank with the crocodile, and the alligator.

Soon after the completion of the coal measures the sea, which during the preceding ages had been gradually withdrawing to the south and west, left our whole State as a part of the growing continent, and it might seem that the discussion of prehistoric Iowa should begin at this point. But crocodiles and alligators are not especially adapted to cut what one might call dignified historic figures, and so the events relating to this portion of prehistoric time in Iowa may be left without further notice.

"The whirligig of time" may, as a figure of speech, correctly typify the rapid mutations that take place in connection with human affairs, but it would be altogether inapt if applied to the stately movements of geologic periods. Geological revolutions there were, but they would be better represented by the steady and majestic movements of the outer planets around the sun, or of the sun itself around the center to which it owes allegiance. After one or two more of these great revolutions, the world advanced to a condition in which birds had come to enliven the groves with their songs, and a few small rat-like creatures, related to the opossum of the Southern States, represented the highest type of vertebrates. There were some wonderfully formed reptiles too at this time, but any reference to them is aside from our purpose. About this time too there were forest-trees much like those of our modern forests.⁶ While all these things were developing out of conditions that existed at the close of the coal age, Iowa was dry land; but the sea again takes possession of at least the northwestern half of the State, and another geologic period goes by before the upward movement of the land carries the shore line out beyond our present borders.

And now with this upward movement Iowa is at length permanently disenthralled from the dominion of the sea. Forests of a very pronounced modern type take possession of the surface. Animals related to the dog, the wolf, and the panther as well as to the deer, the camel, the ox, and the horse unite with lizards and birds and bats and monkeys to impart a modern aspect to the assemblage of animals that occupied this latitude. The climate was that of southern Louisiana. The conditions were not inconsistent with the possibility of man's existence. They seem indeed to have been particularly favorable, and yet, so far as the records show, man at the beginning of this new period, was not only absent from Iowa, but was absent still in every quarter of the globe.

Let us note the course of events from this point on to the beginning of historic time a little more closely. For the sake of clearness we will follow the usage of geologists and call the era at which we have now arrived the Tertiary. During the Tertiary period then, as has been already said, Iowa was part of the land area that made up the half-formed continent of North America. The drainage of the State must have been much the same as now, although the altitude above sea-level was a few hundred feet less than at present. The Mississippi River ran in a channel not far from the one it now occupies, and its waters were poured into a gulf that extended up as far as the mouth of the Ohio. The Missouri was a much shorter stream than at present because the region now traversed by the Upper Missouri and its tributaries was occupied by a series of great lakes. Tertiary lakes occupied large parts of Nebraska and may have drained into the Missouri. Other Tertiary lakes were found in Utah and Nevada, but none, so far as has been discovered, existed in Iowa.

Now what have Nebraskan and Dakotan lake-beds to do with prehistoric Iowa? Why simply this: The mud swept down from the adjacent slopes and settling on the bottom of the lakes covered up the leaves and branches of trees and the bones and teeth of animals. In this way we have laid away for perpetual preservation, samples so to speak of the various forms of life that occupied the lake shores at the time the sediments were accumulating. These old lakes have long been drained, and the hardened sediments exposed to the action of the atmosphere and all the agents it sets in motion. That in some cases the lakes were filled to the surface with mud would be literally true. Modern streams are now cutting their way through the old mud beds. The surface of the sediments is undergoing continual degradation through the effects of erosion. The remains of the entombed animals and plants are being laid bare and little by little we are learning what they were. Such beds, remember, are the only places of any importance where records of Tertiary plants and animals were kept. From such only do we get information on which to base conclusions respecting Tertiary climate. Tertiary lake-beds or Tertiary ocean-beds are the volumes in which the records of Tertiary phenomena were inscribed. Now the conditions that prevailed in Nebraska and Dakota were not so unlike those that obtained here, so that in the absence of Tertiary lake-beds in our own State we may turn with confidence to the records preserved in the old lakes of Nebraska and Dakota for information regarding Tertiary Iowa.

According to these records there were luxuriant forests in this latitude ranging west into what is now occupied by arid regions. Mingled with the more familiar oaks and poplars and hickory-trees were the magnolia, the cinnamon, the fig, and the palm. In northern Dakota and even away on into British America these subtropical forms were found growing on the slopes that drained into the Tertiary lakes. The southern cypress, in all probability adorned, as is its present habit with pendent tassels and fringes of swaying gray moss, stood spectral-like in all the great marshes even far north of the latitude of Iowa. At present we have two species of Sequoia, the big redwoods or giant trees of California. One of these is confined to a few isolated slopes of the Sierra Nevadas, the other to the western side of the Coast Range. During the Tertiary there were numerous species, and these seem to have been very widely and generally distributed.⁷

If the Tertiary forests seem strangely out of place in the latitude of Iowa, what shall we say of the animals that ranged through these forests in quest of food or shelter or concealment? At the beginning of the Tertiary the animal types were so different from those familiar to citizens of Iowa in this nineteenth century that any reference to them may well be omitted. Imagine, however, a series of geologic revolutions to pass with all their leisurely grandeur, sweeping successive groups and types of animals to extinction, and introducing others that, speaking generally, successively approximate our modern types in structure, and let us imagine ourselves at a point of time near the middle Tertiary. The animals are strange enough yet, but at length we have evidence of the existence of some that may at least be readily compared with the modern species.

To begin with there were creatures allied to the opossum, so nearly like the little marsupial of the South, that we might be justified in speaking of them as opossums. In our modern North American fauna we have but one species of this type. In the fauna of the middle Tertiary there were not less than twelve. Creatures that played the part of squirrels, busied themselves among the branches and foliage of the trees, while an army of small beavers were employed in cutting brush and making dams along all the smaller streams, and groveling gophers burrowed in the soil. Among hoofed animals were some we might be permitted to call rhinoceroses, others were manifestly related to the South American tapir, and with these were curious creatures that may be looked upon as the proper predecessors if not the ancestors of the tribe of swine. There were also species related to the deer, there were other species that were almost camels or llamas, one group of species forshadows the modern ox, and some erratic looking creatures with three toes and three hoofs on each foot pass themselves off as Tertiary horses. Among the curiosities of the time was a ruminating or cud-chewing hog as described by Leidy, that combined in a single species characters that belong respectively to the hog, the camel, and the deer. Carnivorous mammals were well represented by a host of dog-like prowlers that varied from the size of a small fox to creatures larger than the largest wolf. There was a whole family of short-jawed species that was intermediate between the dog and the panther, and possessed of cruel, sharp, trenchant teeth. Nimravus is the name given by Cope to one of them, the ancient progenitor of Nimrods, the mighty hunter of the middle Tertiary. There were also true cats or panthers, one of which, called Machairodus, is usually referred to by geologists as the Saber-toothed Tiger. The size of its skeleton and the flattened, sharp-edged, saber-like, canine teeth indicate an animal stronger and more cruel than the dreaded tiger of southern Asia. Secure among the leafy branches and chattering defiance in the very face of the saber-tooth and all his hungry kindred were groups of agile monkeys belonging to a number of species.⁸

⁸ For descriptions and illustrations of Tertiary mammals see papers of Professor Leidy in Smithsonian Contributions, in Owen's Report on the Geology of Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota, and in the publications of the Philadelphia Academy of Science. See also memoirs on the subject of the Tertiary Fauna in the reports of Haden, King, and Powell of the United States Geological Survey. Important papers by Cope are found in the American Naturalist, and others by Marsh in American Journal of Science.

Such is an imperfect review of the forests and the fauna of this region during the Tertiary. Nothing has been said of the bright-winged birds that flitted back and forth in the open glades or amid the shadowy recesses, nor of certain larger birds with bones twice as strong as those of the ostrich and wholly unfitted for flight. Neither have we mentioned the curious turtles nor the snakes, nor the lizards that crawled and crept among the fallen leaves or basked in sunshine on some half-submerged log or stone, nor can we describe the insects that furnished food for numerous bats, or left their bodies to be buried in accumulating amber.

I know that it is simply a groundless fancy but the picture that rises before me when I think of Tertiary Iowa is that of a fair land bathed in mellow sunshine and covered in whole or in part with forests of tropical luxuriance. These forests give shelter to a marvelously diversified assemblage of animals endowed with equally diversified activities, but at the distance from which the scene is viewed, the animal activities are wholly unobtrusive, each of the multitudinous creatures accomplishing its purpose without haste, without worry, without noise. A dreamy stillness pervades the shimmering air. The gray moss droops listlessly from the bare arms of the bald cypress. The very branches and leaves of the foliage trees seem to be listening for sounds that never come. A somnolent land it seems that for untold centuries enjoys perpetual afternoon.

The real picture was doubtless very far from being as peaceful as my unchecked fancy paints it. Clouds alternated with sunshine, and storms at intervals swept across the face of the land. Animals waged fierce battles among themselves. Daily recurring hunger created perpetual unrest, and the ferocity of the carnivorous tribes begat in all the others an ever present fear, an unremitted vigilance.

In time the long sweep of geologic revolutions brings the Tertiary era to its close. Before it closes, however, animals have assumed more and more a modern aspect. For example, there are one-toed horses that the casual observer might not readily distinguish from some of our wild species. The deer, wolf, bear, fox, rabbit, and a long list of others of the later Tertiary present only very slight differences from animals we call by corresponding names to-day.

God Knows It All.

O help me, heavenly Father, to do thy holy will,
And day by day while here on earth
Help me to do the deeds of worth—
Help me thy law fulfill.

Father, if no mighty deeds are ever done by me,
Acknowledge thou the little things,
The eagerness that suff'ring brings,
To meekly follow thee.

When others understand us not, thou our acts do see;
Thou knowest well the hearts of all,
The rich, the poor, the great, the small;
Then, Lord, remember me.

Father, take my hand, direct me where thou ledest the way,
Be thou my guide through darkest night,
Until the glorious morning light
Dawns in immortal day.

The advisory board of the Daughters of Zion has appointed as ways and means committee for raising money for the Children's Home Fund, Mrs. L. R. Wells, 623 West Lexington Street, Independence, Missouri, chairman; Mrs. Ellen Sargent, 801 West Lexington Street, Independence, Missouri, and Miss Dora Young, Holden, Missouri. Presidents of locals will probably hear from them soon, if they have not already done so, and we hope they will try to take up some line of work suggested by them, and let us see how good a showing we can make for the home fund this year.

Commencing with the November number of Daughters of Zion reading-leaflet, let all orders thereafter be sent to Mrs. B. C. Smith, 214 South Spring Street, Independence, Missouri. Prices are twenty-five cents per hundred, fifteen cents for fifty, and ten cents for twenty-five.

The Clouds Will Clear Away.

Alone in my room at the "dusk of the twilight," weary, discouraged, and heartsick with the unequal struggle of life, I renew my past life, with all its struggles, temptations, battles fought, burdens borne, sacrifices made, and bitter, bitter sorrow endured; and with all the longing to do some good in life and leave the world some better for having lived, and a longing for the sympathy and approval of true, loyal friends. All, to-night, seems such a sad failure that the heart sinks, and tears will come. Tired of the cruel injustice of the world, tired of endless persistence, misunderstanding of pretended friends, tired of the world and all its sham, and, worse than all, tired of self, I ask, "Why is it the world is so ready to censure and blame, and so loath to encourage and help in the weary struggle of life?"

Again the heart sinks lower and lower, and I ask self, "Is it worth the struggle?" Self says, "Give up. You have done your best, and all you could, only to be criticised and misjudged. The world alone is to blame if you fail, and drift with the tide. You are not the first that the world's cold, cruel injustice has driven to despair. Why struggle longer?"

Just then, outside my window, a clear, childish voice breaks in with the old sweet refrain,

"O the clouds will clear away by and by,
And the sunbeams flood the sky.
Look up to heaven with a truthful eye
For the clouds will clear away by and by."

As if awakened from a terrible dream I awoke to the fact that my feet had truly wandered on dangerous ground. Where, oh, where has the faith and trust fled that was taught me at a sainted mother's knee? Self repeats the sweet refrain, "Look up to heaven with a trustful eye."

"Oh, ye of little faith," to let the world and all its sham make you doubt him who suffered all the injustice that a cruel world could heap upon him, and yet could say, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."

We think, as has been said (and rightly too), "What emotion can sear and harden the human heart more quickly or more completely than the burning sense of injustice and unfairness?" And only by the help of him who suffered on Calvary can we too pray, "Father, forgive them." Trusting him, I again take up life's battle for right.

"And if, sometimes commingled with life's wine,
We find the wormwood, and rebel and shrink,

Be sure a wiser hand than yours or mine

Pours out this portion for our lips to drink."

How Can We Expect Model Children Without the Use of the Rod?

I have been requested to write to the Home Column upon this subject, and will endeavor to express a few of my thoughts, and should I say anything that would help one sister to better understand motherhood I shall feel well repaid for my effort.

I shall begin with the young sisters, for how seldom they stop to consider the step they are taking when entering into the holy bonds of matrimony. It is too often the case they fall in love with a handsome face regardless of a true heart. A handsome face is all right, providing the young man is blessed with a good character and disposition.

Do you stop to consider, "Will he make a model father for my children?" Is his disposition in keeping with your own, that your lives may blend together happily? For, dear sisters, parental influence has very much to do in molding the disposition of your child. And when we are blessed with children with good dispositions, let us not destroy this disposition by continually nagging at the child. Do not be for ever finding fault with your child. Give him privileges and make him feel that he is a partner in your every-day life; that he has equal privileges with yourself. And above all things teach your child independence; that is, to ask no one to do for him what he is able to do for himself. Do not think by this that I do not believe in giving the child a helping hand, but I do not believe it the duty of a mother to make a slave of herself for her child, when God has blessed him with health and soundness of body and mind.

When a child becomes old enough to have a desire to help mamma, right there we should begin to teach our child by giving him something to do, and teaching him how to do it right. I have heard mothers say, "I would rather do my work myself than try to teach my child, having her musing with the work. Wait until she is old enough to learn for herself." Is it any wonder there are so many young ladies in the parlor, thumping the piano while the mother is drudging her life away in the kitchen?

Patience! mothers, patience is what we need. You had not the patience to teach that little tot who wished so much to lighten mamma's burden; but you let her grow up in idleness until now she has no desire to learn, and mamma can just go on in drudgery. Now, mothers, why not bring up our daughters as partners and not "pets"? I adopted this plan very early in life with my little ones, and find it is perfectly safe to follow.

When there are numerous little things to be done, I scarcely ever ask one of my children to assist me. I simply make my wants known, and ask who is ready to help, and little volunteers are soon lined up ready for work. When the work is finished, then comes a romp with mamma and the little ones.

Now, dear sisters, do not call me silly when I tell you I spend sometimes an hour playing "visitors," or some innocent games with the children, or help them to learn a pretty recitation, "play school," etc.

I have had mothers ask me: "How do you manage your children so easily? I never see or hear of your whipping your children, and yet they are always ready to help with anything, while there is never a day passes but what I whip some of my children, and yet I can hardly do anything with them."

Yes, dear sisters, there is where these poor mothers have made their mistake. Instead of taking their child into their confidence and talking upon the different subjects of right and wrong, showing him wherein he might have done better, or have avoided doing the wrong, they will probably comfort themselves with the thought, "I have not the time to train my child in the way I would have him go," and before they are aware, the golden opportunity has fled, the child is beyond their control and they must now resort to the rod, and whip their child into subjection. Ah, mothers, we can not begin too early to sow the good seed in the heart of our child! "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand."

Children are great imitators. Then, if we should expect model children, we must grasp every opportunity within our power to become model mothers. Patience is an indispensable qualification of a model mother; also a firm, yet a kind and sympathetic heart.

The fruits of righteousness and truthfulness should be found in her every-day life. She should seek divine aid. In short, she should strive to become as near Christ-like as it is possible for erring humanity to become. For what calling is so grand, 'so noble, as true motherhood?

There is so much that could be said upon this subject, but for fear of worrying some of my sisters I will conclude by saying, Give me a child that has not its conscience seared with a red hot iron (rod) and I will show you a child I can manage without the use of the rod.

The Secretary's Report.

In two Sunday-schools lately visited, unusual prominence was given to the secretary's report at the close of the session. When it was called for, the officer rose and gave it, as the minutes of the meeting are often read at the close of a formal assembly.

The hymns sung, Scripture read, the name of the one by whom prayer was offered, the attendance of each class and the amount of its offering, and all such details, were accurately given, with the total number present and total amount of the offering. The superintendent called attention to the two latter facts, also the comparison with the corresponding Sunday of the year before, which the secretary gave in addition. The school repeated these particular items, which were thus impressed. These schools were small, and the time consumed by the report was hardly appreciable. The benefits of these careful statements weekly, and especially of the comparisons made, are evident. There is no doubt that too little is made of such statistics in many schools. They tell the story of life and growth and ought to be emphasized and heeded.

Moreover, the office of secretary ought to be magnified. Records are important, and their value should be recognized by listening to them as given by the officer himself.—Julia H. Johnston in New Century Teachers' Monthly.

Religious Work—Business.

When God placed Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden they were perfect in his sight. He gave them a commandment that they were not to eat of the fruit of the tree of knowledge; nevertheless, they had their free moral agency given them to do good or evil. They chose the evil by partaking of the fruit that God had commanded them not to eat. Therefore they were cast out of the garden and God told them they must earn their bread by the sweat of their brow. There were not in that day as many vocations of business as there are to-day; but jealousy and selfishness were there, else Cain would not have slain his brother. So on down the countless ages of time this leaven of jealousy and selfishness has grown to be a monster to our nation. And why? Because the people have failed to take the pure religion of Christ into their business; and in their great haste to get rich they have disregarded the injunction of Paul: "Let every man seek not his own, but his neighbor's good."

If they have religion they fail to use it in their methods of doing business. Their religion, like their Sunday apparel is donned only on Sunday. The grasping spirit of heartless avarice which sacrifices the wealth of a thousand to increase the coffers of one still goes on. Now is the time when every-day religion (the same that Christ had) is needed in our business as well as in our churches. If our business and religion can not go together, better find a business to fit our religion, for there are many lost opportunities for doing good by the dishonest methods of doing business. We are too afraid to use our religion for fear we will lose popularity or wealth thereby. But "what profiteth a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

If we make the application of Christian principles in our business, in the diffusion of the true Christian spirit of brotherhood, in the recognition of the equal rights of all, then can we say we have taken our religion into our every-day affairs, made it a part of the business. And we can say with the poet:

"It matters little where I was born,
Or if my parents were rich or poor;
Whether they shrank at the cold world's scorn,
Or walked in the pride of wealth secure.
But whether I live an honest man
And hold my integrity firm in my clutch,
I tell you, brother, as plain as I can,
It matters much!"

On taking up the religious work within and without our homes we deem it necessary to make our bodies fit dwelling-places for God's Holy Spirit. "Give your heart to God, and your life to earnest work and loving purposes."

If we are parents we should teach our children as set forth in the Bible, also Doctrine and Covenants, the first principles of the gospel. We should teach them to pray and walk uprightly before the Lord, that they should perform their tasks cheerfully, and be ever ready to lend a hand to the needy. There are so many places we can work in and out of the home! If we have a talent for teaching, the Sunday-school doors are open to us. The places for good teachers are never so full but that there is room for more. The Religio is another place where we may work. The amount of good done by both Sunday-school and Religio, also other auxiliaries in the church, is astonishing to those who have made a particular note of it.

There are places for all willing workers to work and do a vast amount of good; even the children may work to get more scholars in their Sunday-school. They also have a good chance to work in their sunshine band, making sunshine wherever they go, by cheering the sick, carrying them flowers, or reading to them, helping to while away many tedious hours, not (any of us) forgetting the aged about us to give them a cheery smile, a loving word fraught with good will to all. And so we say with the poet Whittier:

"If there be some weaker one
Give me strength to help him on,
If a blinder soul there be,
Let me guide him near to thee,
Make my mortal dreams come true,
With the work I fain would do;
Clothe with life the weak intent,
Let me be the thing I meant."

Parental Responsibility.

"If any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel."—1 Timothy 5:8.

So wrote the great apostle to the Gentiles over eighteen hundred years ago. The God whom we worship again emphasized this in these latter days when he spoke to his people concerning their children, and told them this: "All children have claim upon their parents for their maintenance until they are of age."—Doctrine and Covenants 82:2.

Do we ever realize the great responsibility that rests upon us as parents, when the great Creator places one of these little ones in our care? Do we realize in what things and how far this responsibility goes? Let us for a short time look at this matter squarely, and see, if we can, where we should stand in this matter. Notice this: The God of Nature so created the birds of the air and the beasts of the field that their little ones could take care of themselves in a few short weeks, or months at the most. But when he came to man, the climax of the creation, the creature whom he created in his own image, whom he endowed with the power to reason, and who, having this reasoning power, could assume a responsibility that could not be placed upon those that did not or could not reason, to whom he gave the power to attain perfection, through the atonement made by Jesus Christ our Savior, to him has he spoken and told him that his little ones have a claim upon him for years, or until they become of age—claim upon him for food and raiment. And he certainly will hold the parents responsible that they do the best they can to provide their children with suitable clothing and good, wholesome food, plain though it may be, that their bodies may grow up strong, vigorous, and healthy; for a good, healthy body is a great aid to a strong, healthy mind.

And, after the parent, this duty devolves to a certain extent upon the church. Socialism would place it upon the state to see that every child is properly clothed and fed and placed in such environments that it has the chance to develop the very best there is in it. Can Saints afford to do less? No, for the law or pattern as given to the church is as far ahead of socialism as day is ahead of night.

EDUCATION.

It is also a responsibility that is placed upon the parent to see that their children have the chance to obtain a proper education. You can not be a true follower of Christ and remain in ignorance. "The glory of God is intelligence." Now this does not necessarily mean that all who are highly educated are properly qualified to render unto God the glory and honor that is his due; but a proper education broadens the mind, lays a solid foundation, gives a substantial basis for Christ to work upon through the Spirit of truth. Did you ever realize that it matters not how ignorant a man or woman may be, when they truly embrace the gospel they will not remain in ignorance? They can not. This gospel of Christ is the greatest educator in the world. Notice this, that the most enlightened nations of the world are the ones who come the nearest to following the teachings of the great Master. Does this all mean that the education of a child must be entirely such as he will get at a public school? No, indeed! Let us quote again: "The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth."—Doctrine and Covenants 90:6. Now "truth is a knowledge of things as they are." This can be obtained by a proper use of the things about us, by the books in the schoolroom, by the papers in the home, by lectures, sermons, etc. Truth is also a knowledge of things "as they were, [this can also be obtained in like manner,] and as they are to come." (Doctrine and Covenants 90:4.)

To obtain all this is plainly impossible if we depend entirely upon the knowledge taught by the wisdom of men. So we find that if our children are to be educated in a proper manner and have a well-balanced mind, we must mingle the education they receive at the public school with a certain amount of religious education in the church, the Sunday-school, and home, that they may be taught the plan of salvation, the gospel of Jesus, and receive the Spirit of truth that shall so guide their minds that they can readily discern between the false and the true, and may have a knowledge not only of things as they are, and as they were, but also of things to come.

READING.

The mind is largely influenced by the books and papers we read. For this reason parents should be careful to provide for their children proper reading matter. Truths can often be taught in story form that obtain a hold upon the mind more readily and sometimes more strongly than in what we might term a drier form. And I am sorry that we as a people do not have more such books than we do,—books in which the restored gospel and the history of the church in these latter days are the uppermost thought,—books in which the truths of Christ stand preëminent and still be told in such pleasant, story-like form as to appeal to young minds. Some of these we have, and they should be in every home in which there is a child. The church papers should not be neglected either. Remember this: The impressions made upon the mind of a child are the longest retained, and the parent is largely responsible whether their children are equipped to do their part in the work of preparing the world for the coming of the Savior or not.

Parents should also be quick to recognize the fact that we are largely the creatures of

OUR ENVIRONMENT.

"Evil communications corrupt good manners." Man is gregarious, delights in the society of his kind, and will have it whether this society be good or evil. Parents are largely responsible for the society their children keep. If they are too strict and keep them too close, the children are apt to choose companions of their own. Would it not be better for the parent to take note of this fact and become acquainted with the companions of their children, and thus place themselves in such position that they can choose for the child the company most proper for him to enjoy?

Bring up a child in the tenements of the city and we have the street Arab. Bring him up in the tents and among the tribes of the North American Indian, and you have one schooled in the ways of the woods and the lore of the hunter. Why will this rule not work the other way as well? Bring him up in a home, which acknowledges Christ as the head (one that is ruled by love), surround him on every hand with the things that are pleasant, and the people that are highly developed along spiritual and educational lives, and you should have a lovely character. If not, why not? Who can answer? For certainly such environments would largely overcome the nature inherited, even should that nature be largely inclined to evil.

is essential to happiness. While we admit the truth of the old saying that "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," still it is apparent to all that we could not enjoy life without work of some kind. Man's occupation before the fall was to tend the garden; and I think there will be work to do in the hereafter as well. Parents should recognize this and train their children to work, to take care of themselves. Our heavenly Parent, who always knows what is best for us, has repeatedly spoken in condemnation of idleness. Listen, as he says, "Thou shalt not be idle; for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer."—Doctrine and Covenants 42:12. And while we see the necessity for work of some kind are also essential. Let there be music in the home, or some simple games. These should be chosen with care, that nothing might be brought in that could lead to anything hurtful. A lecture, a concert of the right kind, Religio social, all of these serve their purpose that we might have the proper blending for a perfect character. If we study or read along one line only, if we so train our minds that we can only see one side of a question, our minds become narrow, and we become bigoted and fall far short of the perfection at which we have aimed. While the responsibility rests with us to so teach our children that they may be perfectly familiar with the philosophy of religion as taught by the church of Jesus Christ, yet it is not necessary to keep them in the dark concerning other beliefs than ours. While we should so train their minds that they can readily detect the truth from error, bring them up that they may be properly equipped to wage a warfare against evil, yet to properly do this it is best for them to obtain some knowledge of what they must meet in defending the faith once delivered to the Saints. In short, it belongs to the parent to strive to so blend education, environment, work, and amusement that they can form in their children a perfect character, a sound, well-balanced mind, one quick to judge twixt right and wrong—in short, a lovable nature.

It is an old and truthful saying that

"EXAMPLE IS BETTER THAN PRECEPT."

Then how can we teach the lessons we would have our children learn, better than by doing as we would have them do? Children are all born imitators. What the boys' father or girls' mother does, is right in their eyes always. I speak of the younger children now. You may convince them, when they grow older, that their parents did not always do what was right; but it is a hard task, and one that need not be undertaken if parents always strive to do what is right.

And now let me close with a command from the Highest found in fourth paragraph of section 68, Doctrine and Covenants. "And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized; and their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands: and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord."

OMAHA, Nebraska, October, 31, 1905.

Editors Herald: The work here seems to be moving along fairly well and a good feeling exists among the Saints. Our church which has been under repairs for several weeks was finished last Saturday, and the regular services were held Sunday after having missed two Sundays preceding. The repairs include new sills, floor, pulpit, and choir platform, and platform and steps on the outside. Also the inside being papered and painted, the seats and pulpit refinished and floor oiled. Two large arc gas lamps supercede the ordinary burners, giving the room at night the brightness of day. A new carpet covers the platforms and aisle, the gift of the Sisters' Aid Society. The total expense has been about three hundred dollars, which has nearly all been paid in, but a few dollars remaining to be raised in the future. This has been a heavy burden on the branch but the Saints have done nobly and have sacrificed cheerfully in helping to bear it. Much credit is due the committee which has had the work in charge. The usefulness of the sisters' aid can be appreciated when we are told that it gave fifty dollars in cash besides the carpet. The Saints appreciate their church home.

Bro. Rannie spokè for us Sunday morning, and the writer in the evening. Our monthly priesthood meeting was well attended in the afternoon and enjoyed by all while discussing the duties pertaining to the office of deacon. At six o'clock in the evening the Religio was swelled almost to overflowing by the addition of the Council Bluffs local, which came over en masse. Such visits we believe are beneficial to both sides and we hope this will not be the last.

Bro. M. H. Cook came over on a little visit from Council Bluffs yesterday, and we planned to work together some this winter. A companion is an absolute necessity in some kinds of city work, and by changing off and helping each other we can do some work that otherwise could not be done. I have partly arranged to open cottage meetings in the south part of the city this week, and hope that we can do so and that good may be done.

My faith grows stronger in the gospel and my hope brighter. I feel the need more and more of divine help in my work and desire to so live that I may be worthy. The nearer we can live to God the more certain is our success in the work. May our Father in heaven bless and sustain all his servants that the work may be prospered.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, October 23, 1905.

Editors Herald: This leaves me at home just recovered from a severe spell of congestion which lasted four days. But by the goodness of a merciful God, I am up again, very weak yet, but hope to recover soon and get out into my field of labor once more; for I know many honest souls want to hear the gospel. By request of I. N. White I met G. M. Reeves, Baptist, at Piedmont, Missouri, October 6, in a ten-session debate. We had large crowds and intense interest all the time. The weather being very warm I became very hoarse the second session on the second proposition, but maintained sufficient vocal power to speak so they could hear me. My opponent G. M. Reeves, is an able speaker, but started out to maintain church succession. The Missionary Baptist Church was started by John the Baptist, established by Jesus Christ, and perpetuated to the present time.

But we reminded the people Bro. Reeves is a relic of the Dark Ages, and the latest Baptist historians consider him as such. Vedder's history, a cheap history, twenty-five cents, published by the American Baptist Publishing House, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, on page 46, reads, "No church can be traced for a period of a thousand years save the Catholic Church." A. H. Newman, Baptist historian, says the same thing. We took up the standard histories of the world (and Baptist) and traced his church into the great church, Roman Catholic, and here my opponent left it in a smashed-up condition.

We had a real nice debate, and much good, I believe, was done. The people treated us fine and seemed to enjoy it. Bro. J. T. Davis, our missionary of Southern Missouri, moderated for me and did his work well. A Christian preacher and president of a college in southeastern Missouri, occupied the chair part of the time, and treated us fine, a real nice man. May the Lord bless him to accept of the better way. Also Mr. Durham, said to be the finest lawyer in southeastern Missouri, occupied the chair part of the time for us, and gave me one dollar. May the Lord bless him for his kindness too. G. M. Reeves said Christ never had but twelve apostles. Mr. Durham, the lawyer, went home and looked the matter up to see for himself and readily found seventeen apostles in New Testament times. The debate closed with a good feeling among the people. The Baptists ordered a collection and the money was divided between us.

Quite a number of the Baptists came to me after the debate closed and told me they believed me to be a man of God, and shook hands with me. May the Lord add many of them to his church in due time.

Brn. George and Walter Hartrupt live in the town of three thousand people and have fought the good fight almost alone, hence the town was ripe for the debate. No doubt the brethren have done much good in that place. A small branch exists there now. I hope to be able to get out to my field soon.

In bonds cordially,

J. D. ERWIN.

KIRTLAND, Ohio, October 23, 1905.

Editors Herald: By conference appointment I was placed in the Kirtland District to labor, and I have labored as temple attendant, and have been made to rejoice many times while standing within the walls of one of the most sacred buildings (I might say the most sacred and hallowed) known to man in these latter days. So many people visit here during the summer months to see what they have been given to understand is the (or a) "Mormon" temple. While it is a mistaken idea, and quite necessary that they should be corrected, it devolves upon the one in charge to explain the error and shed some light upon the matter. It is passing strange to meet with ministers of various denominations who claim they did not know of the differences of the two churches,—people of apparently bright minds, ignorant (either willfully or otherwise) of our claims. But by the grace of God, I purpose to instruct them so that when the great day comes when all men will be called upon to give an account of what they know of this work, they will be left without excuse.

A person having charge of this old historic place is in a position to meet almost all classes of individuals, some skeptic, others merely wish to see the building, while some apparently are interested in its history and express themselves as being pleased to know the truth concerning the house, its builders, and its present owners. But of all the contemptible and unreliable persons it has been my lot to meet in this place, those people who have established themselves back of the living oracles, in open defiance of the law of the land and of God, are the boldest it has ever been my lot to meet. Their prophet, Brigham Young, said November 9, 1856, "I have many times dared the world to produce as mean devils as we can. We can beat them at anything. We have the greatest and smoothest liars in the world." Now they of course believe Brigham was a prophet, because I have heard them declare it in this place and in order to prove his statement to be true they continue to practice just what he said they could do—lie. We have a little incident in evidence of this. On October 15, 1905, it was my privilege to entertain a party at the Temple who had just arrived from San Jose, California, which is their home. On their way east to visit points they stopped over at Salt Lake City, Utah, for the purpose of seeing the Mormon temple, a privilege which they were denied. They had to content themselves with seeing it at a distance. But they were conducted through the Tabernacle, and while there they were given the following piece of information. Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Mitchell (being the parties referred to) tell me that an individual by the name of Taylor told them that they, the Mormons, had recently purchased the temple at Kirtland, and twenty-five acres of land, and in about two years they would take possession of the same, and make extensive repairs. Query: Did Brigham tell the truth as to their ability to stretch the truth?

The work is moving slowly in Kirtland, but we trust profitably; and we hope and pray for still better conditions in the near future. For we are deeply impressed with the thought that "the time has truly come to favor Zion," and our opportunities are great if we will only avail ourselves of them.

"Let us shake off the coals from our garments
And arise in the strength of the Lord."

He is willing and ready to acknowledge every faithful effort upon our part to rise above the present level upon which we are moving. Pray for us.

Yours in the conflict for life,

ALBERT E. STONE.

GRIT POINT, Victoria, Australia, September 23, 1905.

Editors Herald: I belong to the Hastings Branch, Victoria. It is about twelve years since I became a member of this church, and I have never had cause to regret the step taken. During that time I have received very many blessings. I also have received the manifestation of the Spirit which is given to all who obey the gospel, for their profit. I take a pleasure in reading the HERALD and Autumn Leaves. While reading the HERALD I sometimes see a request for prayer for those that are sick in the church. I thought that perhaps I might say a few words that would help to cheer some of the sick ones by relating my own experience. Over two years ago I was taken seriously ill, and I soon became so weak and wasted that it almost seemed impossible for me to recover. Time went on and I did not seem to improve in health. I tried to exercise my faith, and I felt assured that all would be well. I knew that my Father was caring for me, and I felt that I could put my trust in him who was so good as to care for a weak mortal such as I was. Just at this time I had a most beautiful prophecy given to me, and one sentence in it was that I should yet have days of joy and rejoicing. How my heart was filled with gratitude for such a beautiful promise. The months passed away, still I did not seem to get much better, but my faith did not fail. How could it, for the promise was always before me giving me hope and encouragement. It cheered me many times by day and by night. There were many times when I could not sleep; but I tried not to murmur, although there were times when I felt very weary. It seemed that I just had to wait patiently till my heavenly Father saw fit to release me from my weakness. And according to promise I have had many days of joy and rejoicing. All thanks I give to him who hath done so much for me. To-day I am well and able to perform the duties devolving upon me. I can truly say that my greatest desire is to be humble and faithful and to always remember God's loving kindness to me, so that when my earthly course is run I shall be worthy to receive the crown that is laid up for me.

Your sister in the gospel,

ROSE WOOLLEY.

BLAIR, Nebraska, October 21, 1905.

Dear Herald: The writer is one of many of the young Saints who are striving to "let their light shine," and bear testimony as to the truth and light of our church. There are so many nice letters in your columns, from different members, scattered far apart over this broad land, and one sees many familiar names of old-time, faithful, life-long Saints, workers in the vineyard; especially glad were we Saints in Blair to hear from Bro. J. F. Mintun in last week's HERALD. The Saints at Blair are all well at present, and seemingly the Lord is prospering them in many ways. We have a small branch, and have rented a place in which to meet, and, if the Lord wills, hope soon to purchase the same. Bro. H. S. Lytle is president of the branch, and is a faithful worker, as is also the branch teacher. We just closed a successful conference here, and the members came in from all over the county, and the Blair Saints all tried to outdo each other in hospitality. Bro. Dine Carter, who lives on a farm north of Blair, came into town with both carriage and wagon twice a day and carried many delegates out to the farm to spend part of the time with his family and ours.

Last year a dear little son was taken from us, but about six weeks ago another little boy came to bless our home, and during conference week Bro. J. F. Weston of Omaha, and Hansen of Iowa came out to bless him.

The writer's husband is not a member of our church, and has heard but few sermons; he seemed especially interested in one sermon preached by Bro. Rudd of Dow City, Iowa, and we have hopes that in time we will be a united family in the faith. We hope, though, that other young ladies who are Saints, should they marry outsiders, will find them as courteous and tolerant to our members and of our religion as is my husband. I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may be more faithful to the cause.

Sincerely,

MRS. J. P. JENSEN.

Notice of Dedication.

The dedicatory services of the church lately purchased and repaired by the Saints of the Des Moines, Iowa, Branch will occur Sunday, November 12. Bishop E. L. Kelley will be present to assist, and it is hoped that President Joseph Smith will be able to attend, and render his quota of assistance.

This building stands as the result of the sacrifices of the few Saints at Des Moines, during the time of which sacrifices continued increase of joy and spirituality came to those thus sacrificing, and many look back with somewhat of surprise at what has been accomplished in so small a time. There were a few that felt doubtful of the propriety of assuming so great a task, and at first rather discouraged the effort; but now all are rejoicing that the effort was successful, and anxious that their offerings will be acceptable to the Lord, and be a blessing to his work in the city and district, and thus a blessing to the church in a general way.

THE EDITOR AT HOME.

We reached Salt Lake City at midnight, September 20, and, to make a long story short, were met by a number of the brethren and sisters, who expressed great pleasure at meeting us from the East. Our first duty as a visitor we paid to Bro. Alfred Pettit, who for a number of years has been suffering from commonly called shaking palsy, and he was much pleased to see us. We met at the chapel Friday morning, the 22d, the brethren and sisters, including Brn. W. H. Kelley, J. E. Vanderwood, A. M. Chase, and Swen Swenson, of the missionary force, and Brn. Foreman, Wardle, Hyrum Smith of Union, and J. C. Jensen and others from Pleasant Grove. It was Sunday-school and Religio service in convention, and we were pleased to meet again those whom we had seen before, among them the widow of Bro. William P. Smith, of Union Fort, sister to Sr. James Anderson, of Lamoni. We spent the time with them, day and evening, quite pleasantly in their exercises.

The first to call on us was Patriarch John Smith, of the church in Utah, who as a kinsman gave us kindly greeting. It was conference-day of the Utah District and we assisted Brn. Kelley and Vanderwood in the business-session. On Sunday, the 24th, the Editor spoke at eleven in the forenoon and in the evening. Fair audience in the morning and a crowded house at night.

During the ensuing week we occupied the time with other brethren in the evening hour at the chapel, audiences not large, and in the daytime we visited from place to place, including dinner at Bro. Jeff Wilson's and Patriarch John Smith's, where we were kindly entertained, meeting at Patriarch Smith's our cousins John Henry Smith of the Quorum of Twelve of the Utah church and Sarah Nichols, daughter of Lucy Milliken, sister of the Martyrs Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

Rain interfered with the meetings at the close of the week and they were abandoned.

On Saturday afternoon Cousin George A. Smith, son of John Henry, made us his guests for a pleasant ride through the city and some of its suburbs, pointing out the places of interest, for which he was well qualified, having been raised in the city; and while we mention these visits with these relatives of ours who treated us so kindly, it must be understood that the question of differences existing between us was not made a part of the conversation to the disturbance of the spirit of good fellowship.

On Sunday, October 1, the Editor occupied both the morning and the evening hours upon the topic of priesthood and succession, having a crowded house. At the close of one of the sessions Elder Samuel W. Richards, somewhere near eighty years of age, asked the privilege to speak, which was granted, and coming forward to near the stand he spoke for a few minutes, paying a glowing tribute to the character and calling of Joseph Smith the Seer, which all of us could cheerfully indorse. He stated to us at the close of the service that he was one of twenty-five young men whom he stated the prophet Joseph had chosen to hunt out the far West with a view to removal and colonization. This he said was in 1842.

Visiting the State Fair in session during the week we met another man named Stewart, who also said he was one of the twenty-five. We do not know as to the correctness of these statements, but it is a matter of serious wonder to us that there is no record as to whether these men did go west and make report if they were appointed as early as 1842. They were old men and there was not much opportunity for critical examination, nor was any needed.

On Monday, October 2, the Editor parted with his wife and children, sending them home in the care of Bro. A. M. Chase, who for business reasons was called home and to Oklahoma. The family tickets expiring on the 6th, it was thus necessary. On consultation with the brethren, Smith, Kelley, Swensen, and others, it was deemed proper that the Editor should remain for a while in the city and State, and if found practicable deliver a few discourses. In accordance with this understanding we remained. We visited the State Fair under the guidance of Bro. Swen Swensen, on Thursday, October 5; and on Friday, the 6th, the Editor and his associate in the Presidency, Bro. Frederick M. Smith, attended the Mormon conference in the Tabernacle, which convened promptly at ten o'clock. The services began by a speech by President Joseph F. Smith, who assumed the chair with his counselors, John R. Winder and A. H. Lund. He was followed by Winder and Lund and F. M. Lyman, president of the Quorum of Twelve, in the forenoon. At two o'clock the conference convened again and John Henry Smith, Rudger B. Clawson, Reed Smoot, and Hyrum M. Smith, of the Quorum of Twelve, made addresses; then followed the presentation of the officers and other items requiring a vote of support, which President Joseph F. Smith read from a manuscript copy item by item, saying at the close, "Those favoring it signify it; those opposed, if any, signify it."

At the call for the vote affirmatively on every item but one every hand went up, president, counselors, twelve, high priests, patriarch, and everybody else that we could see. That one exception was this: The President stated, "It is proposed to sustain Francis M. Lyman president of the Quorum of Twelve." All voted, including Senator Smoot. The President then said, "It is moved to sustain the following named persons as the remainder of the Quorum of Twelve," reading their names. When this vote was put Senator Smoot did not vote. It was rumored that Senator Smoot would not sustain Apostles Cowley and Taylor, who were not present at the conference, but who are suspected of having contracted polygamous marriages since the manifesto, upon which it was understood an inquiry would be urged by Senator Smoot. Of course if the question of his vote is agitated he can simply say, "My name was called among the rest and I did not like to vote for myself." Whether this will satisfy inquiries as to why he did not sustain his brethren Cowley and Taylor remains to be seen, or whether he can at the same time say, "I did not vote for these two men, no inquiry having been made as to their standing."

It looks to the ordinary visitor that this would be a lame excuse, from the fact that he had already voted to sustain the whole quorum as prophets, seers, and revelators, and had also voted to sustain Francis M. Lyman, an acknowledged polygamist openly living in defiance of the law against unlawful cohabitation, and had also voted to sustain President Joseph F. Smith under like conditions of living.

The Tabernacle will seat some ten or twelve thousand and there were present on that date not more than seven thousand, and this to represent the entire body of some three hundred and fifty odd thousand, without a representative or delegate system. To those who may fancy that it was a remarkably united body of people we suggest the thought that here was a body of men gathered together under a system of rigid discipline, the most of them chief actors in their home rule, presidents of stakes, high councils, high priests, twelve, and presidency, of whom every man was known to the presidency and who may have been under instructions to attend the conference, while no general notice of the matter to be presented may have been given. Under such conditions unity may be the result of what is known as "packing the convention," or of dominating influences which none are at liberty to resist. We do not say that either of these is the case, but the possibilities are clear. There was no question presented upon which an inquiry arose and no opinion was expressed by any reference to the items of business presented. The President simply said, "It is proposed," and followed this by a statement of what the matter was. By whom it was proposed was not stated, but the inference appears to be probable and clear that it was a foregone conclusion on the part of the few, that few being the Presidency. No motion to sustain was made from the floor nor second made, nor any effort made to present any item of business, and the President voted in every instance, even in the one of sustaining himself as "prophet, seer, and revelator, President of the Church of Jesus Christ in all the world."

FALSE PROPHET—NOT TO BE FEARED.

In the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew the Savior predicted that in the latter days false prophets should arise and should deceive many. The prediction has been fulfilled to some extent already, and we are now enabled to add another name to the list of false prophets. Israel of old was troubled with false prophets who spoke lies in the name of the Lord, and it is not surprising that we find the same class of individuals at work in our day. Jeremiah says: "Then the Lord said unto me, The prophets prophesy lies in my name: I sent them not, neither have I commanded them, neither spake unto them: they prophesy unto you a false vision and divination, and a thing of nought, and the deceit of their heart."

"A false vision and divination, and a thing of nought," and the deceit of his heart has been prophesied by one Alva A. Tanner, of Idaho. He published a two-page circular December 1, 1904, containing a prophesy which he asked editors to copy. We preserved it carefully, and choose to present it now. It is as follows:

RUSSIANS WILL CONQUER.

The word of the Lord came to me, Alva A. Tanner, of Oakly, Idaho, in November 1904, saying, "The Russians will conquer the Japanese," and I was about to give it to the world in about that many words. But from reading the newspapers and hearing men's opinions and seeing that things looked favorable for the Japanese to conquer, I hesitated to make it known. I therefore gave the subject serious thought and inquired of the Lord to know further concerning the matter and the word of the Lord came to me again saying: "Thus saith the Lord God, behold I am God and besides me there is no God. Yea verily, I am he who knoweth all things even from the beginning unto the end. And now I, the Lord will show unto you a mystery, even as you have inquired of me to know concerning the war between the Russians and Japanese. Now verily, thus saith the Lord unto you. I will show unto you this mystery. Make it known unto all the people of earth, declare it unto all the nations, that I am the Lord God, who gave it unto you for verily, I say unto you that "the Russians will conquer the Japanese in the present war." Amen.

Be it known unto all men unto whom this revelation concerning the Russians and Japanese war may come, that I, do earnestly, sincerely and truthfully declare that I am the only medium through which it was given. And as such I invite newspaper editors to kindly give it space.

OAKLEY, Idaho.

ALVA A. TANNER.

The Russo-Japanese war is ended; and the Japanese are not conquered. Evidently some one whom the Lord has not sent has spoken "presumptuously," and we are admonished that we shall not be afraid of such. "When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken, but the prophet hath spoken it presumptuously: thou shalt not be afraid of him."—Deuteronomy 18:22.

ANOTHER WITNESS.

The following testimony is another link in the chain of evidence that has accumulated pointing to the fact that "little Joseph" was set apart by his father to take his place, and that the general teaching in the years immediately following the death of the martyrs was to that effect, even by those who afterwards assumed control:

Dear Herald: I was born in the year 1826 in McKean County, Pennsylvania, and, when eleven years of age, moved with my parents to Columbus, Ohio, where, in the spring of 1844, I first heard the gospel of Christ preached by Bro. Jackson Goodall, and was baptized and confirmed by him in the month of August of the same year. In February, 1845, I went to Nauvoo, and in one of the services held in the grove on the temple lot I heard Brigham Young say, while discoursing on their persecutions and the death of Bro. Joseph, "Brethren, we must be very careful to watch over little Joseph, for he is ordained to lead the church. I am only acting till he takes his place."

I know it was understood by all the Saints that I heard express themselves, that young Joseph was to lead the church.

MELISSA C. KNAPP.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

President Joseph Smith reached home the 12th inst., having been absent since July 6. He is in fairly good health and excellent spirits.

Thomas R. Wren, of Middletown, Ohio, has furnished the Saint's Home with a special package of felt for blankets for that institution, making a valuable donation.

Elder F. J. Ebeling writes from Ironton, Ohio, of continued success in that field. Since April there have been one hundred and twenty-one additions to the church through baptism. A new branch is soon to be organized in the district also.

A card from Bro. R. M. Elvin announces the death of William Cadman, aged seventy-one years, at West Elizabeth, Pennsylvania. He was the leader or last leading personality of the "Bickertonites," and was understood to be the successor of William Bickerton, who led a faction of believers in the Book of Mormon, located in Kansas, Western Pennsylvania, etc.

Bro. C. J. Spurlock, Delta, Colorado, makes the following call for literature for distribution: "I recently received two or three hundred tracts from Zion's Religio at St. Louis, and I want as many HERALDS and Ensigns for distribution in this country. I am anxious to distribute these if Saints will send them. Please do not wait until next week, but send them now."

The Purity Advocate, published by the Vir Publishing Company, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, "in the interest of the work of personal and social purity," price ten cents per year, is the organ of a worthy movement whose publications would benefit every individual and every home. Persons interested in the work of social purity will find this paper an excellent one to put into the hands of their children and others.

Bro. I. N. White, reporting the Missouri, Kansas, and Central and Southern Illinois field for the past quarter, says: "The missionaries report fifty-eight baptisms, and the districts report thirty-nine, ninety-seven in all. The work is in fair condition. Bad weather has hindered and sickness has prevented some. There seems to be a general desire to work. All our men claim to have been greatly blessed of God in delivering the message. This alone is evidence that we have been moving forward. We have had more than the usual opposition from sectarian ministers. This indicates the power of the gospel is being felt."

The Observer, Logan, Iowa, November 2, devotes two columns to the early and later history of members of the Reorganized Church in connection with the history of the city of Magnolia, Iowa, and vicinity. It recites the early experiences of brethren who located in that region of country after the breaking up of Nauvoo, the work of the pioneers in connection with the Reorganized Church, and commends in general the work of our people as citizens. The general position and work of the church is made clear and plain in the article. We appreciate the friendly spirit of the Observer in publishing such historical account.

The Des Moines Daily Capital for November 12 devotes a half page to a sketch of the "Saints," their work in the city, the difference between the Reorganized Church and the Utah church, and some of the doctrines of the Latter Day Saints, including a three-column cut of the Saints' chapel which was to be dedicated that day, and Bishop Kelley who was expected to assist in the dedicatory services. A notice of the dedication services with program was also published in the Capital for November 9, containing this sentence: "There is no debt, directly or indirectly, upon the property, hence there will be no soliciting of funds at these services." The Saints have done well in lifting the debt incurred in the purchase of this building in so short a time, and they deserve much credit for the whole-souled manner in which they have labored to obtain a suitable place of worship.

According to the Chicago Tribune for November 12, an alarming increase in deaths from nervous diseases is noted in London, and doctors in search of the cause attribute it to the tea and coffee habits. One medical man writes: "Thousands of men, particularly in the city, sip coffee during the day, at brief intervals, as their brethren in New York sip spirits. In time the coffee habit develops palpitation of the heart, irregular pulse, nervousness, indigestion, and insomnia. Coffee drunkards, as I may call them, are greatly increasing in number, due probably to the wave of temperance which is passing over the country, but I have known cases where hallucinations scarcely different from those of alcoholism have been set up by persistent abuse of coffee over a series of months."

WALKING IN THE LIGHT.

To walk in the light of Christ is to "fulfill his commandments" and "observe his statutes to do them."

It is not sufficient for us to sing, "Let us walk in the light." If we would stand approved by the great Teacher we must not only sing but observe in our lives the lesson so beautifully rendered in harmony and song. Jesus said, teach "them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

Let us then not simply in word but in deed and in truth walk in the light, and opening God's word which has been so faithfully delivered and preserved by him for our good, fully accept the direction and admonition contained, and render to him that service and praise that becomes children of the light.

It is written: "The commandment is a lamp; and the law is light; and reproofs of instruction are the way of light." Also, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." And by the "beloved" apostle John: "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

To walk is to do. A failure to do, to remain idle, or to stand and criticise those who are working, is not walking in the light, but casting a shadow in our own pathway that will cause us to stumble into sin and death.

It was to the household of Christ that the apostle wrote: "For we are laborers together with God." As members of the "the household," it makes little difference whether great or small, each should perform his work. If it is only to perform the task of setting the yeast or preparing the kindling so that due preparation is made for the beginning of another day, should any one be found guilty of either forgetting or neglecting the duty?

"Laborers together with God!" But what have we been working at? It will not do to fold our hands or close our eyes when there is so much to be done in the Lord's work, and persuade ourselves that God does not know that we are idlers, and only harping about what others do, or fail to do, to excuse ourselves. Shame on such a life!

If a person shall be found during the day, backbiting his brother, falsifying his accounts, cheating his neighbor, hiding from duty, envious of his coworker, untruthful in his reports, selfish in his ways, unkind to the poor, and too small of soul to give what is due from him to the cause of Christ, can he in good conscience raise his voice when the evening shades appear and sing: "One more day's work for Jesus"? Oh! no; he has been laboring for quite a different master. All such work is against Jesus.

Life is not made up of a single act. Every word and step we take is a part of it. A life devoted to duty to God and man is the successful one, no difference who has lived it. It was the great Teacher himself who said: "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." Not in a pile of gold, nor a single great deed. Faithfulness to duty and uprightness in thought and deed lead to true success, and there are none who may not win if they will strive. But "strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it"; "and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction." This dazzling, showy way is what the people like; it is the world, not Christ.

If we would walk in the light, let us be at our work. Whatever duty we are called to perform in the gospel work, God has made it sacred by his commandment. If it is to preach the gospel, push forward, proclaim the word; why hesitate when the Master calls and sends? There are tens of thousands awaiting God's messenger. There should not be found a single idler in the ministerial ranks.

If it is to furnish seed to the sower, help for the missionary, why hesitate? Let us move up to the Lord's house with our tithes and our offerings. Now is the time for every one to render his account.

The commandment is, "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

"All the tithes" include "the tenth," "the surplus," "consecrations" under the law, and the "tenth of the increase for ever." Wherein we have received of our heavenly Father let us be diligent and just in rendering to him an account.

In the year 1831, we were instructed:

Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming); for after to-day cometh the burning: this is speaking after the manner of the Lord; for verily I say, To-morrow all the proud and they that do wickedly shall be as stubble; and I will burn them up, for I am the Lord of hosts; and I will not spare any that remaineth in Babylon. Wherefore, if ye believe me, ye will labor while it is called to-day.

This includes all of God's people. The instruction is to all; and the penalty attaches to all who fail or refuse to comply. "For there is no respect of persons with God."

Later revelation provides for the execution of the law:

In order to place the church in a position to carry on the promulgation of the gospel, and as a means of fulfilling the law, the twelve will take measures in connection with the bishop, to execute the law of tithing; and let them before God see to it, that the temporal means so obtained is truly used for the purposes of the church, and not as a weapon of power in the hands of one man for the oppression of others, or for the purposes of self-aggrandizement by any one, be he whomsoever he may be.

The law must be "fulfilled," or we can not be accepted as Zion's children. Every one must perform, or lose; and each should under the divine privilege and favor do his or her best.

There was never more to do, and yet the field is opening up each year. The laborers are in nearly every State and Territory; in Britain; Denmark; Sweden; Norway; Germany; Australia and the far off isles, and they need and are calling for help. Is there one who will fail of duty now?

Other fields are growing ripe for the harvest and must be supplied. We need a reserve fund for this emergency. And the Lord has said that if all perform their duties, "there shall be enough and to spare."

Mexico and the South American States; China and Japan; the Philippines and Russia; the countries of Europe and Asia; Africa and the Holy Land are all opening up, that the message may be borne to their peoples. The harvest of the world has come! Who can afford to be idle? Now,

"Let Zion in her beauty rise,
Her light in fullness shine."

This may be accomplished by her children, individually and collectively, standing in "holy places," performing every command and discharging every duty, walking in the light. So let us ever walk.

IDEAL HOME.

Like the pebble that is dropped in the water, while the waves circle round with the shock, so is the influence of an ideal Christian home. A home in which the sacred fires are constantly kept burning on the altar of devotion to our heavenly Father, is bound to make itself felt. For prayer is the key that unlocks heaven's portals, the means by which true practical Christianity is tested. By it we are brought within the realm of divine atmosphere in which our minds expand and our souls are enlarged.

God has made himself known to us. We have partaken of his divine nature. As we become like him our home becomes a resemblance of the divine home, a little Eden, millennium, or heaven. The church without this home has no life, no power for good; it is simply an empty shell. But an ideal home and a group of them will make a true Christian community or town. This will constitute Zion, scattered or collective: for Zion is the pure in heart. Without this purity there can be no Zion, no church or bride adorned with the wedding garments, which is the righteousness of Saints.

In the home of the true Latter Day Saint will not be found obscene, trashy literature, which makes chaffy, obscene minds: no uncouth, vulgar stories are heard; virtue reigns supreme. In the morning before entering upon the duties of the day, prayer is offered for protection, spiritually, physically, and for prosperity; thanks offered before partaking of earth's bounties.

Before the youngsters drop off to sleep, parents gather them around; a few verses, wisely selected from the sacred book, are read; children are taught to kneel, fold their hands with reverence and respect; and the duty at the sacred altar is performed, which will ascend as sweet odors unto the Lord. "And a book of remembrance" is kept for them that fear the Lord; "and they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels."

Homes of this kind will be like lamps in the streets of the city. The surroundings will be lighted up; poor, fallen humanity will be aided to see. This spiritual light will evince a gospel that has power to accomplish that for which it was sent, and those whose high ideal is Christ Jesus will be drawn by the light. Others, indifferent with their prejudice, and ill will, will have passed under the lights, beheld them, seen the surroundings lighted up by them. They may call them whatever name they will, regard them as they will, yet they have beheld the light that lighted the world, heaven-born, of which Christ was the great prototype. This light will be the great searchlight of the eternal God that shall search to the quick, and bring all men to judgment. In that day "the Saints shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free."

As fruit-bearing trees, there will be visible the luscious fruit. The gifts that God has set before us as Heaven's bounties, mentioned in 1 Corinthians 12, of which we are every one entitled to one or more, will not have been bestowed in vain. It is true that these gifts are in the church, and that it is the only church on the earth that has manifested all of the nine gifts, which stands as an evidence that it is the only church accepted with God.

Yet there are many homes, yea, branches, where these gifts are absent,—not speaking of the visible gifts altogether. When will we as a people arise in our strength, as an army with banners, terrible yet glorious, because the power of God is with us, occupying as lively stones in the building of God? When will we come to realize that this must first begin at home; that within that home there must pervade an atmosphere of purity, of sublimity; that there must be order and obedience to God's law? "Quit yourselves like men." "Put on the whole armor of God." Do not try to carry the world on one shoulder and the church on the other, and thus cause your lamp to be dimly shining, hindering the advance of God's work.

The gospel advocates progression, onward, upward to higher and purer altitudes.

Because of the neglect of this ideal home, many children stray out into the world, never uniting with the church of the living God, but being engulfed within the subtle powers of worldliness and sectarianism, within which, like an ancient monastery in the once dominant church, its high walls are the boundaries of seclusion to spiritual heights, its inclosure the field of thought and spiritual development.

The spiritual welfare of our children ought to be a subject of our fondest attention. If we would realize the companionship of our children in the one fold and family in Christ, we must bring that influence to bear early, before the subtle tactics of the enemy are introduced, and habits are formed, influences of sectarianism rooted. By the diligence of parents in their own observance of right, timely advice and culture given the children, these things can be avoided. The Sunday-school in our church is here a great factor for good; but it must commence at home.

ANSWER TO ARTICLE IN CHICAGO "AMERICAN," APRIL 16: "THE BIBLE AND RUSSIA'S DEFEAT," BY REVEREND DOCTOR R. S. M'ARTHUR.

It is indeed amusing to see how the highly educated ministers of the sectarian organizations of our day misinterpret the Scriptures, especially the old prophets. Reverend Doctor McArthur, in writing of the present defeat of Russia in connection with the prophecies of Ezekiel, is entirely erroneous, even if "Gog" is identical with Russia.

In the thirty-seventh chapter, Ezekiel prophesies of the return of the children of Israel to their own country in Palestine, and that they shall live there for ever, safe and guarded by the Lord; and their king, David, shall govern them.

And here in the land of Asia Minor, around the holy city and the holy mountain, shall be the last great battle fought, as we find it described in Ezekiel 38 and 39. And all the powers and nations that come to fight against Israel shall find their complete destruction.

According to the great image of the king, Nebuchadnezzar, as found in the records of the prophet Daniel, we find that we have to deal with four or rather with five great empires of the world. Daniel himself gives the declaration to the king Nebuchadnezzar: The head of gold, the breast of silver, the body of brass, and the two legs of iron, and the feet with the ten toes of clay and iron mixed. The head was Nebuchadnezzar, the breast the kingdom of the Persians and the Medes, the body was the Grecian kingdom of Alexander the Great, the thighs and the two legs was the Roman Empire divided into the East and West Roman Empire. But the last empire was one consisting of the union of the ten kingdoms, and is the actual successor of the Roman Empire; and against this the stone, cut out without hands, will roll and destroy them all.

The Franko-German Empire entered the inheritance of the Roman Empire, and from Charles the Great the German Empire emperors were crowned with the crown of the Roman emperors.

The church is always considered as the wife or bride of Jesus Christ; and when the Scriptures call this woman the whore, it is the church that abandoned the true doctrine of Christ and committed adultery with the worldly power of the Roman-German Empire. And for this reason she is pictured as the woman riding on the beast, as the beast always signifies some governmental power; and nearly all the empires, kingdoms, etc., have one kind of beast or another in their signets. A full explanation of this matter we find in the revelation of Saint John in the seventeenth chapter. The beast that has been and is not, and yet is, coming up again, is the last great emperor of this empire.

The German-Roman Empire existed until about the twelfth century, and then it was only existing by name with the emperors of Austria. First in 1871, after the German-French war, it came into existence again, and to its full power when King William of Prussia was crowned at Versailles as the German emperor, with the crown of Charles the Great.

But this German Empire has not yet reached its top and its full destination, as it shall reign over the gold treasures of Arabia, Lybia, and the Moors.

And this king of Prussia is the small horn that grew up between the high ones, or the two others, the Franco-German and the Austro-German Empires. Therefore, it is true, we are facing the most important evolutions that the history of man has known. But we have not reached the point yet, the point of the last catastrophe; and the wars we have had in later years and the Japanese war now, are only the beginning.

First, the Jews must return to their native country in Palestine; and all the efforts of the Zionists will be fruitless to establish a Jewish state in another country. The prophet Hosea says expressly that kings and queens shall bring them to their native land, and will be their nurses.

Further, we will experience destruction of the spiritual babel, or all those sectarian churches that abandon the true doctrine of Christ and worship the almighty dollar. Babel is used as meaning the confusion of the doctrine of Christ, as the tower of Babel brought the confusion of languages.

Then there must come forth the two witnesses, or the two prophets who shall give the last testimony of the power of Jesus Christ, and exhort the human race; who will be killed by the anti-Christ population of Jerusalem. Then comes the destruction of this last emperor, with those great armies that have been gathered between the seas near the holy mountain,—as "tidings out of the east and out of the north shall trouble him, therefore he shall go forth with great fury to destroy, and utterly make away many," but then the end shall come.

After this great battle Christ will establish his kingdom and reign with his people a thousand years; and Israel shall acknowledge him; and, weeping, they shall ascertain whom they pierced. After this time everything shall be made new. But before this day comes, there shall be such distress on earth as never has been before. This is in short the history of the prophetic events of which our generation shall experience yet considerable.

We also shall experience great disturbances, evolutions, and revolutions in this our beautiful country. And especially for this our country the prophet says, In these last days the rich will throw their gold and silver in the streets, and shall not escape. And when we consider at our present time the struggle between capital and labor the indication is clear that the time is not far distant when this prophecy will be fulfilled.

The American nation is a nation of extremes. Let us consider the strikes and outrages in Colorado on both sides, also the stockyards' strikes and the present teamsters' strike in Chicago. These words may be a voice of warning to the rich classes. The fathers and the relatives of the present generation shed their blood to free the negroes from slavery; and to-day the rich use these very classes to bring the working-classes of this generation to a worse condition than the actual slavery of the South ever brought the negro. The masters of the slaves, with a few exceptions, generally took good care of their slaves, as the wealthier classes take good care of a valuable horse. But to-day the large employers do not care very much for the welfare of the working masses. They do not care whether the wages of their working men are sufficient to support their families, or what becomes of them. They want the full value in work for their money as Shylock wanted his pound of flesh.

This very action of the Employers' Association of Chicago to import negroes into Chicago to take the place of strikers is very apt to produce great indignation and aggravation in the whole United States, that will again bring to the fore the race question, and this will not better the situation.

The judicial conditions of our beloved country are, in general, so corrupt and miserable that an enlightened person must look upon them with disgust. A St. Louis paper made, the other day, the statement that our laws are open to everybody, and that he can receive justice. This must be denied. It is very hard for a poor man without money to find justice. He can not present his own case in court, and when he goes to a lawyer the fee is so great in most cases that he is unable to furnish it, and for this reason he must suffer the wrong. Many of our laws are based on this very principle: to rob the poor classes because they are not able to take the course of the law to defend themselves, on account of their poverty; while the rich and the corporations control the legislative bodies and have their yearly salaried lawyers to take care of their affairs. Thus the working classes under present conditions have only one chance for defense, and that is in the united strength of their unions, to obtain anything like reasonable treatment and human existence for themselves and their families. Otherwise we would have to-day nearly as bad conditions as still exist in Russia, with the difference that the American working man accomplishes in a half day more work than the Russian accomplishes in a day.

The American working man of to-day is nothing but a machine; and it is very sad to think that in this our beautiful country so many young children are being raised to this very condition. The unions sometimes go to extremes and do wrong, but they will be regulated in the course of time. And we can not deny them the right to exist, for they are a blessing to the working classes as long as there is the united controlling power of capital to contend with. There must be radical reforms, and a return to greater simplicity of living by the richer classes. The rich set an example of extravagance, and they forget that the poorer classes are the ones who produce the wealth for them, and that they are entitled to a proper share of their production. We do not need any fifty or hundred thousand dollar, or even higher, salaried corporation officials. Those high salaries are extorted from the working classes. We must return to a purer basis of living, and imitate the rules of the Jews: to have the words of the ten commandments written in large letters over every door in the house and school, to be reminded of it; especially of the tenth commandment: "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife, nor his manservant, nor his maidservant, . . . nor anything that is thy neighbor's." You ministers of the gospel, do you fulfill your duty in this direction? Christ said distinctly, "I am not come to dissolve the law, but to fulfill it." Therefore enter the footsteps of Christ. Do not preach your sermons for the high salary that is in it, but be true to the covenant of Christ. Remember you have a great responsibility upon your shoulders! The poor need the comforters, not the rich. The time may come sooner than you wish that you may be called upon to give an account of your stewardship, and woe be unto you if you be found unfaithful in the discharge of your duties.

Once more, remember that we are facing the greatest crises and evolutions that the history of man has ever witnessed, and there shall come such distress as never has been since the existence of man.

As a witness for truth,

AD N. RICHTER.

P. S.—This article was written shortly after the publication of the article by Professor McArthur. The history of our day proves how wrong his arguments were. The treaty of Portsmouth between Japan and Russia is signed and war is ended.

But in the future we will enter into a different era of the history of the world. It will not be long until we will witness the most prominent powers of Europe uniting under the leadership of Germany into one union against America, and those who otherwise will not enter into it will be forced to by war. The Monroe doctrine of America will give the cause for it.

China, in the far East, will regenerate in the near future, animated by Japan; and then we have to consider also a union between Japan and China (and it may be some other Asiatic nations), for their own protection against the invasions of Europe and America. And these united empires, we may believe, are referred to in the Scriptures when it is said, "But tidings out of the east and out of the north shall trouble him," etc., as mentioned in the article above.

These explanations are logical and in accordance with prophetic history of the Scriptures, and should be heeded by all men, especially by the ministry of our day.

PREHISTORIC IOWA.

LECTURE BY PROFESSOR SAMUEL CALVIN, OF THE STATE UNIVERSITY. DELIVERED DECEMBER 1, 1891.

(Concluded.)

From the beginning to the close of the Tertiary, as far as the records show, climatic conditions were practically uniform over long stretches of time. They seem also to have been uniform over regions embracing many degrees of latitude. There were Tertiary forests in southern Greenland in most respects similar to the forests of Dakota and Montana.

The Quaternary or Pleistocene era follows the Tertiary, and with its ushering in there begins a new and strange chapter in the history of Iowa. Previously Iowa had been basking in sunshine and reveling in all the luxuriance of tropical conditions. But now a change takes place whereby all climatic favors are withdrawn and the fair face of Iowa becomes a scene of unimaginable desolation. The climate is rigorous. Precipitation is copious. Snow falls during long, bleak, dreary winters, much beyond what can be melted in the short, cool summers; and so, year by year, and century by century, the snow is piled higher and higher until, by the pressure of its own weight and the freezing in its mass of percolating waters that come from summer rains or surface melting, it is converted into a solid sheet of glacier ice.

Looking at the records from this distance of time it seems as if the transition from Tertiary luxuriance to Quaternary desolation had been somewhat sudden. But the change must have occupied thousands if not hundreds of thousands of years. A few thousand years more or less do not count for much in geologic reckoning. Whatever the length of time employed, the change was as extreme and complete as that which one would experience, if transported to-day from southern Florida to central Greenland. Iowa was only a small part of the region in which similar changes occurred. The area reached from beyond the Missouri River to the Atlantic Ocean, and from the latitude of St. Louis northward to the pole. Indeed the climate of the whole continent of North America underwent profound modification.

The history of Quaternary Iowa would begin, therefore, with a long period of transition during which the climate is gradually depressed, and plants and animals either suffer extinction or migrate year by year farther and farther south. The process of refrigeration goes on until, as already said, the piled up snows are compacted into glacier ice that covers Iowa with a mantle probably thousands of feet in thickness. One of the known properties of ice causes it, when in large masses, to behave like a viscous or semi-fluid body. It flows; flows as water flows, but much more slowly. Bodies of flowing ice are called glaciers. Glaciers always flow outward from the center of accumulation where the ice is thickest towards the thinner portions. These thinner parts are usually the margin of the ice sheet—the glacier terminus it may be called; for all glaciers that do not reach the sea end more or less abruptly at the point where equilibrium is established between the amount of ice flowing in, and the amount that is melted in the same region.

The great ice sheet that covered Iowa had its terminal margin at times south of St. Louis. But there were many oscillations in the severity of the cold and the amount of precipitation so that the margin would sometimes retreat and sometimes advance from century to century. Whether the margin retreated or advanced the great body of ice was perpetually moving outward from the center of the accumulation, grinding over the underlying rocks, crushing them into fragments, and grinding the fragments often into finest powder. Fragments, frequently of enormous size, were caught in the lower portion of the flowing ice and carried bodily forward, dragging along over the rock strata of the surface traversed by the ice stream, grinding the strata into rock flour, and being themselves worn and planed and grooved on their lower surface. Slow as was the movement of the glaciers there was time enough to transport some erratic fragments from native ledges in British America and strew them broadcast over the surface of Iowa. All the granitic boulders, and all boulders of crystalline rocks of any kind, scattered over the surface of Iowa, were carried into the State from the north by means of the great Quaternary ice sheet. To be strictly correct I should use the last word in the plural and say ice sheets. There is abundant evidence that Iowa was invaded by glaciers at least twice, and that the two glacial periods were separated from each other by a long interval of comparatively mild climate during which deglaciation laid bare the whole country probably as far north as Hudson's Bay. It was during the first invasion that the ice flowed over the whole State, and beyond our southern boundary down to the latitude of St. Louis. During the second invasion the southern ice margin was exceedingly sinuous and irregular, but on the average its greatest southern extension did not reach beyond the middle of Iowa. The line of greatest advance is marked by a series of gravelly ridges and knolls that are very conspicuous in Cerro Gordo, Wright, Polk, and some adjacent counties.¹

The melting of the glaciers was attended by a series of phenomena conspicuous among which were flooded rivers whose waters, thick and turbid, carried loads of detritus that was strewn along the course of the channels or carried far beyond the most southerly limit reached by the ice. During some phase of the melting process there was deposited at Iowa City as well as at scores of other localities, this well-known Loess or yellow clay that is convertible in wet weather, as all have had experience, into fathomless beds of stiffest, stickiest mud, and in seasons of drought is reducible to finest dust that whirls into the air on the slightest provocation. Furthermore, there is evidence that during the period of melting the country was reoccupied by plants and animals that successively pushed their stations up to the very margin of the retreating ice. In the Alps and other glacial regions plants and animals maintain themselves without inconvenience in close proximity to the ice-fields, so that the presence of organisms of high rank in Iowa pressing hard upon the footsteps of retreating glaciers need excite no surprise. This point in the history of Iowa deserves especial notice, for there are reasons to believe that with this incursion of animals from the south to hold and occupy what the glaciers were compelled to abandon, man came and for the first time set foot within the limits of our State. Professor Aughey's discovery of arrow-points in undisturbed beds of Loess at different points in Iowa and Nebraska, would indicate the presence of man in close proximity to the foot of the melting glaciers.² The rude implements of human make found by Doctor C. C. Abbott in the Quaternary gravel along the Delaware near Trenton, New Jersey, show that man was present about this time on the eastern border of our continent. In Oregon, Nevada, and Utah are certain old lake sediments in which were buried the remains of an assemblage of animals that constitute what is known as the Equus Fauna. This fauna as set forth by Cope embraces a number of extinct species, among which was a gigantic sloth-like animal, an otter, an elephant, two kinds of horses, three species related to the llamas or alpacas of South America, and an extinct deer. Besides these there were modern gophers, the modern beaver, and the modern prairie-wolf. The fauna is an old-fashioned one. Cope is inclined to regard it as belonging to the later Tertiary, but Gilbert, Russell, and McGee show that without doubt it must be referred to Quaternary, that in fact it follows the glacial period. Now it is a point of wonderful interest that man was a part of that Equus Fauna. Human implements are found in undisturbed Equus beds. At the late meeting of the Geological Society in Washington,³ Professor Cope exhibited a skull of one of these extinct horses. The skull had the frontal bones crushed in a way that could be explained only on the supposition that the animal had been deliberately slaughtered with one of the rude hammers that are found in the beds from which the skull was obtained. Man was not only present as a part of the Equus Fauna, but it would seem that he had learned how to conquer the horse and utilize its body as food. There were Quaternary horses in Iowa as shown by Foster,⁴ and the museum of the State University contains portions of skeletons of a number of Iowa elephants belonging practically to the same species as that found in the Equus beds of Oregon and Nevada. The early men of Iowa and Oregon contended for supremacy with the same rivals. It is an interesting coincidence that over in Europe Quaternary man entered the valleys of France and Belgium immediately after the withdrawal of the glaciers and had for contemporaries, among a host of other creatures, a horse, and an elephant that was identical with the species that roamed over Quaternary Iowa and Nevada. The Quaternary horse of Europe was also utilized for human food, and numerous crushed skulls embedded in the ashes and charcoal of the ancient hearths attest the high esteem in which the brain was held as a toothsome delicacy.

Over in California there has accumulated, and there is still accumulating, a mass of evidence which makes it seem necessary to accord to man on this continent an antiquity higher than the middle Quaternary.⁵ The facts briefly are these: Before the Sierra Nevadas were occupied by glaciers, and while yet a fauna including rhinoceros and other late Tertiary forms occupied the region, the rivers had cut deep gorges in the mountain sides and had strewn along their channels bars and beds of gravel. These gravels were rich in gold as were the more modern bars and gravel-beds of rivers of the same region in 1848 and 1850. Bones of the Tertiary animals were frequently buried in the old gravels, and at the same time were buried hand-made implements and human skeletons. After all this had been going on for unmeasured centuries, the region, hundreds of miles in extent, became the theater of a series of world-making or at least world-modifying convulsions. Lava was poured out from scores of fissures and piled up to a depth of hundreds or even thousands of feet, choking up the old river-beds and burying out of sight the gravels with all their gold and all their entombed remains of men and animals. Since then the rivers of the region have found new channels, cutting them gradually by ordinary process of wear down-through refractory lava-beds and down nto the hard crystalline rocks of which the mountains are constructed, to a depth in places of two thousand feet below the level of the older channels. Since then, too, glaciers accumulated on all the mountain-tops to unknown depths and went flowing down the mountain sides plowing out channels and scooping out enormous valleys. After accomplishing an incredible amount of work the glaciers waned, died, became extinct; and now glaciated valleys with their heaps of glacial rubbish and with floors and sides characteristically scored and planed, attract attention from even the most untechnical tourist. To-day man is energetically following the courses of the prehistoric river-channels in quest of gold, tunneling under the lava-beds and bringing to light not only the gravels with their glittering contents, but the bones of the Tertiary mammals and the human skeletons and human implements that were buried there long before the glaciers that once occupied the region were born, before even the lava floods had turned the rivers aside from their original beds. Whatever may be the true interpretation of the records preserved in the prehistoric river-channels of California, it is quite certain that we have no evidence of the existence of man in Iowa, or anywhere in the Mississippi valley, earlier than in the middle Quaternary.

What sort of a man was it that first inhabited Iowa? The fact is gradually taking shape in the minds of archaeologists that there are remains of at least two prehistoric races in the Mississippi valley. In order that we may appreciate intelligently the peculiarities of the earliest of these races, let us consider for a moment the famous Neanderthal skull. It resembles the skull of the gorilla in the enormously thick, stout ridges over the eyes, while the low grade of intelligence of its owner is indicated by the almost total absence of a forehead. This anomalous skull was found 1857, and was for years regarded as marking probably some individual peculiarity and not as representing some distinct human type. At the late meeting of the International Congress of Geologists in Washington,⁶ Mr. Max Lohest exhibited drawings and descriptions of human skulls of the Neanderthal type, from Leige, Belgium. Similar skulls are now known from France, Italy, Austria, Belgium, and Sweden, and everywhere the conditions and surrounding circumstances indicate that they are the oldest of known human fossils. The fact that there was a low-browed, brute-like, small-bodied, square-shouldered, Neanderthal race of men must be regarded as fairly established.

Turning now to our own continent, we find a parallel series of facts of unusual interest. Mr. M.

W. Davis, of this city, has in his possession a skull from a mound in Johnson County that is almost of the Neanderthal type. It differs simply in having the superciliary ridges a little less prominent than in the old European race, and the arch of the skull is not quite so flat. A skull from Floyd, north of Charles City, Iowa, exhumed and described by Mr. Webster, is quite as anomalous as any known from Europe, and if found in Europe would be at once referred to the Neanderthal race. Three other skulls found by Mr. Webster at Old Chicasaw, exhibit the same racial characteristics. Three skulls of similar contour, from the region of Dubuque, Iowa, are mentioned and one illustrated in Foster's Prehistoric Races of the United States. Still others are described by Foster from Illinois and Indiana. Referring to one from a mound near Chicago he says, "No one, I think, can view this fragment of a skull, with the superciliary ridges projecting far beyond the general contour, both laterally and in front, and the low, flat forehead with its thick, bony walls, without coming to the conclusion that its owner was a ferocious brute."

Doctor Lapham, author of Antiquities of Wisconsin, was at one time quite skeptical concerning the existence of a low-browed, ape-like race of men in America, and was even inclined to believe that the mounds had been heaped up by ancestors of the modern Indians. His observations led him to change his opinions, and later he could write to his friend Foster concerning two prehistoric skulls preserved at Milwaukee that, "The peculiar characteristics indicating a low grade of humanity common to both, are a low forehead, prominent superciliary ridges, the zygomatic arches swelling out beyond the walls of the skull, and especially the prominence of the occipital ridge. The anterior portion of these skulls, besides being low, is much narrowed, giving the outline, as seen from above, of an ovate form."⁷ The same Neanderthal type, it will be seen, inhabited Wisconsin. America has furnished a larger number of skulls of this type than has Europe. The race may indeed have originated here and the low-browed American may have been the ancestor of the man of Neanderthal. We know that Europe received its prehistoric horses from America. Why may it not also have received its earliest prehistoric men in the same way? After the horse had been long extinct on this continent—the continent in which it had its origin—and after the Neanderthal type of men had disappeared from every quarter of the globe, Europe repays its debt with added interest by stocking this great continent again with domestic horses, and peopling it with an improved ethnic race represented in our own community by the Saxon, the Teuton, and the Celt.

The Neanderthal race of Europe lived, some of them at least, in caves, and caves became in many instances their places for burial. The equivalent race in America occupied a region destitute of caves. Their habits, like those of all other races, were determined largely by their environment. What kind of homes they reared we may never know. In the matter of burial they adopted the simple fashion of piling heaps of earth over the bodies of their dead. Whether this inferior type of humanity was displaced by another, or whether in the course of time it developed into something better, would be difficult to say; but it is quite certain that a higher race followed, constructing mounds on a much grander scale and of more elaborate patterns. Doctor Lapham clearly expresses the probable course of events when he says, "It seems probable that men with skulls of this low grade were the most ancient upon this continent; that they were the first to heap up curiously-shaped mounds of earth which now so much puzzle the antiquary; that they were gradually superseded and crowded out by a superior race, who adopting many of their customs continued to build mounds and to bury their dead in mounds already built."

It seems to me that archæologists take too little account of the fact that a superior race may be lineally descended, or perhaps you would prefer to say that they may have lineally ascended, from an inferior one. Theoretical biology affirms that the ancestors of every race, our own proud ancestors among the rest, if we could only trace our line of descent back far enough, were men as low in grade and with skulls as flat, as the most brutish individual among the men of Neanderthal. The reverse is also possible, and a race of superior intelligence may, by a process of retrogression or degradation, give rise to descendants of very inferior quality. Fluctuations in the intelligence of a single prehistoric race might, judging from the monuments made at different times, lead to the conclusion that a region had successively been occupied by tribes of people racially distinct. Major Powell, Mr. Henshaw, and others incline to the opinion that all mounds and their contents are to be attributed to ancestors of the modern Indian. If that can be proved no one will object. From one point of view we would have evidence simply of the successive occupation of Iowa and the Mississippi Valley by three successive races; from another point of view the monument would record three distinct phases of civilization of the same race. The question as to which view is the true one may be left without discussion until our information is more complete.

Whatever may be the genetic relations of the peoples that successively occupied America, this fact stands out prominently, that following the low-skulled men, and prior to the phase of civilization of which, at the time of Columbus, the modern Indian was the exponent, the country was occupied by an intelligent race that lived in settled, organized communities, and heaped up elaborate mounds of earth to which they often gave very perfect geometric outlines. These were the true Mound-builders.

The monuments of the Mound-builders are confined almost exclusively to the Mississippi Valley, and are scattered all the way from the Gulf of Mexico northward into Wisconsin. The center of this population, and the center of its culture and civilization as well, seems to have been in the valley of the Ohio, along the Wabash, the Sciota, and the Miami on one side, and the Cumberland and the Tennessee on the other. If asked to locate the center more definitely we would place it near Chillicothe, or Marietta, Ohio. From this center the race extended into adjacent States, a portion of it occupying eastern Iowa. Iowa, however, seems to have held the position only of a remote frontier province, sparsely settled with rude pioneers that fell as far short of representing the real state of civilization attained at the center of population, as Iowa in the early 40's would have fallen short of representing the highest degree of culture and progress attained by the Anglo-Saxons.

The Mound-builders cleared forests and must have practiced agriculture on an extensive scale; they wove cloth; they graded roads; they built extensive and skillfully planned fortifications often embracing scores or even hundreds of acres; they made stone implements, but finding copper better for their purpose they sent annual expeditions to Lake Superior to carry on extensive mining operations in quest of this metal. As a rule the copper was hammered into knives and hatchets and bracelets, and other objects, but in some instances they seem to have known how to cast it into the desired shape. There appears to have been no McKinley among them, to conceive the idea of developing the tin-mines of America, and so they missed the art of making bronze. Their water-jars and water-coolers were molded by hand into artistic forms, often representing portions of the human body or of lower animals. Effigies of fishes, reptiles, birds, quadrupeds, and even the human form were skillfully carved in stone. The elephant-pipes in the museum of the Davenport Academy of Science, which have been ridiculed by some persons high in authority, are to me in no way surprising. The men who made the arrow-points found by Professor Aughey were here as early as the earliest elephants that followed close upon the retreating glaciers, and elephants were prominent among the animals inhabiting Iowa and adjacent regions for a long stretch of time subsequent to their first appearance. Man was associated with the same species of elephant at the time the Equus beds were forming in Nevada. He was associated not only with the elephant, but with other forms belonging to older faunas in California. The evidence of man's contemporaneous existence with this same species of elephant in Europe has for many years been such as to preclude the possibility of doubt.

For a long time too after the elephant became extinct in this region another elephantlike creature, the mastodon, roamed in herds over the Mississippi Valley, our State included, and must have been familiar to many generations of prehistoric men. The artists that carved birds and smaller quadrupeds so skillfully that even the genus and species represented may often be accurately determined, could hardly have failed to attempt the more ambitious subject of the elephant or the mastodon. The only wonder is that effigies of these striking creatures are not more common.

The earthworks constructed by the Mound-builders are their most characteristic monuments. These vary from shapeless heaps of earth barely rising above the level of the surrounding surface, to great cones or pyramids, fifty, sixty, ninety feet in height. One, the great truncated pyramid at Cahokia, Illinois, has a height of ninety feet and a circumference at the base of more than two thousand feet. But of their mounds, or embankments, or strategically-planned fortifications, or temples, or sacred inclosures, or sepulchers, it is not my purpose to speak. My object has been to describe prehistoric man no farther than was necessary to fix the proper relations of successive prehistoric events. Regarding the glacial period as the portion of time around which discussions relating to prehistoric man must center, I have tried to set forth its relations to preceding and subsequent eras. I have tried also to have you see that however long or however short the time since the close of the glacial period, man has during all that time continuously occupied this continent, that in fact men of some grade of intelligence and some shade of color have, since the glacial period, continuously occupied Iowa. Furthermore, man has been here as long as he has been in Europe; and the question whether America received its human population from the Eastern Continent, or the Eastern Continent from America would not now be answered offhand as it would have been twenty years ago. The facts I have presented are such as may be ascertained by pursuing what we may call the geologic method. The gentlemen who will follow me in this course of lectures will carry forward the discussion of events affecting Iowa by methods belonging more particularly to the historian, the philologist, and the comparative ethnologist, and into their hands it gives me great pleasure, at this point, to turn the subject over.

THE INFLUENCE OF COMPANIONSHIP.—NO. II.

In our last we endeavored to show the power of association or companionship, that its influence is strong and lasting, and that it is exerted both for good and evil.

The companionship there referred to was that in which one live, sentient human being comes in contact with other human beings, all susceptible of both receiving and giving out influence.

But there is another companionship—the silent but powerful companionship of books—and it is of this companionship we now purpose to speak, with the earnest desire and prayer in our heart that we may at least be enabled to direct the minds of such parents as read this to the vast possibilities for either good or evil influence which the companionship of books possess.

We have known parents who guarded their children most carefully from the evils of the former and yet took little if any oversight of the latter; who seemed to think if the child was reading he was in good company and safe from harm. Could a greater mistake than this be made?

Recently, this matter was brought forcibly to our attention by the following incident: Two families were near neighbors to each other and in both there were several children, ranging from five and six to twelve and fourteen years of age. The parents of the two families were not unfriendly, but at the same time were never intimate; and because of doubts as to the honesty of the one family and also because of improper language used by their children, the parents of the other family strictly (and wisely too) forbade all intimate association, and were careful to see that their commands were obeyed. They were required to treat them civilly, but were never allowed to visit or play with them.

But strange and inconsistent as it may appear, these same parents felt perfectly safe in allowing their older children to read indiscriminately whole volumes of literature of the real character of which they knew little or nothing. Some of these were books by a popular writer of juvenile stories supposed to have a moral tendency; and yet upon examining one of these we found it to be the step by step history (or rather purported history) of a shiftless country lad through all the different stages of his development into a professional city bummer—living by his wits, and finally, instead of being punished for his misdeeds, the author rewarded him with a good home and an ample salary, because he had been instrumental in finding a lost child. Think of it, parents! Especially you who feel a sense of pride in saying of your boy or girl that he or she is a great reader; and we beg of you, as you value the future usefulness of your children, see to it that it is good, wholesome literature—not trash, not moral and mental poison—you are feeding to them. Parents love their children, and loving them desire their welfare. That this was the case with these parents we know, but cumbered with cares in serving, they forgot in this matter to choose the better part which can never be taken away.

It is not possible for the ordinary individual—desire it earnestly as he may—to always meet and command the attention of the wise and cultured ones of earth, either for himself or his children. Even the fortunate few, to whom occasions of this kind come most frequently, are permitted at the best but brief intervals of such rare enjoyment; and seldom at such times and under ordinary circumstances does the companionship extend beyond the usual civilities—the ordinary exchange of thought and ideas permitted by the usages of refined society. Heart to heart talks may not be indulged in, and we may not monopolize the attention too long of one whom many others besides ourselves are most anxious to meet and converse with.

But in books, all this is changed. Here we may meet the good, the wise, the noble ones of all ages, all climes, and sit down to uninterrupted, unrestrained companionship with them. In books they open to us the most secret thoughts of their souls; they lay bare to our gaze the trials, struggles, and conflicts through which they have come. They tell us of their failures and their despondency and make us sharers in their final triumphs and victory. Good books are plentiful, and even when one has not access to free libraries, they may be obtained at such a small cost as practically to be within the reach of all.

Even when circumstances limit parents to a choice of few books for their children, if these books be wisely chosen it is an open question as to whether this limitation is not in itself an advantage. In regard to this, Professor Everett of Harvard says: "The mind is weakened rather than strengthened by reading too many books. One goes to the library to get a book he has never read. If it be a book that is just published, he is all the more pleased. He hurries through it, and then goes to the library again to get another book that is new to him.

"In this way he gets very little good out of any of the books he reads. What he reads passes through the mind so rapidly, and is so soon replaced by something else, that it makes very little definite impression. The mind gets so used to looking out for something fresh; that it loses the interest, and thus the power to grasp any thought or any information so as to hold it fast and make it its own.

"We should laugh at a little girl who should say she knew how to sew, when all she did was to draw the thread through the cloth, so that nothing remained of all that she was doing. Shall we say that any one who forgets as fast as he reads, knows how to read any better than the little girl knew how to sew?"

"There is a proverb which says, 'Beware of the man of one book.' It means that a man who has taken a good book and read it and reread it, so as to get the mastery of it, will have vastly more power than another, who skims over one book eager to get hold of the next. Plutarch's Lives, for instance, thus studied has formed a great many heroes."

And now there comes to us, in connection with Professor Everett's statement in regard to the influence upon the formation of personal character of a faithful study of Plutarch's Lives, the desire to restate that which has for years been an abiding conviction of our own mind, namely: that no study of the word of God, let that study be classified as it may, can ever compensate to our children—to any one—for the failure of committing to memory the words of the inspired writers themselves. We are fully aware as we write this, that the practice has long been discountenanced and classed among the imperfect methods of the past; but time is already restoring to favor other things which once met a like condemnation and rejection, and we fully expect to live to see the time when a change will take place in this also.

If through the medium of good books we are admitted to a close companionship with the noble, pure, and true of earth, what shall we say of that Book of books which admits us not only to the companionship of the good and pure of earth, of the angels, but, (oh, wonderful thought!) of the Father and the Son? Is it not well, then, is it not a privilege impossible to be too highly appreciated, that we drink from these pure streams right at the fountainhead?

Recently from the editorial page of the Chicago Record-Herald we clipped the following; and, as it bears strongly upon this point and is certainly impartial testimony, we insert it in full:

"READING THAT COUNTS.

"In a bound volume of a college literary magazine is an oration on John Brown that won a much-coveted prize some twenty-five years ago. We are reminded of it now by references to the retelling of Bible stories because it was so thoroughly pervaded by the biblical spirit and so rich in biblical quotation and allusion. The boy of nineteen or twenty who delivered this message spoke with the fervor of the Hebrew prophets upon his modern theme. By contrast with his competitors who discussed divers classical subjects with the impressive erudition of youth he was vital and inspiring. His sentences made the nerves tingle, fired the imagination, caused the tears to start.

"Furthermore, if the classmates who heard him should read that oration to-day they would find it as effective in their maturity as it was in their young manhood. They would realize at once that the judges were wise in their decision, that such a composition was distinctly superior to the conventional essays with which it was brought into comparison.

"Now, as to the reasons for this superiority it may well be that the temperament and personality of the speaker were important factors in his success. He had undoubtedly a touch of genius that might have gained him some note in this world but for his untimely death. But the power of his work as a literary production can be traced very clearly to his early training in Bible reading. He had had the discipline of the old school, had committed pages by heart, had taken Bible history at first hand until it was as familiar to him as the alphabet. Quotation and allusion were not sought out in the index to Bartlett, but suggested themselves to him inevitably as the natural expression of his thought, and his exceptional strength in his appeal to the emotions was derived in great measure from the effect of his intimate knowledge of the Bible upon his own emotional development.

"We cite the case as an illustration of the value of discipline in this as in all the branches of education. The purpose is often beyond the comprehension of the child, but it is plain enough later that through discipline he has come into a priceless possession."

It is a sad thought that in the midst of such an abundance of good reading—reading calculated to refine the taste and uplift the life—any one should choose from that equally abundant class of reading calculated to corrupt and destroy. Can parents and teachers be too careful in their oversight of what the children read?

We can find no better words with which to close than those of the author before quoted in his advice to the young:

"Try to get hold of books that are worth reading. If you read a novel take one that is strong and pure. One might as well go to the dram-shop or opium-den, as to devote himself to reading a kind of novel that is only too common.

"Then there are the works on popular science that will tell you about this wonderful world; and there are stories of great men that will show you how to make your life noble; there is the history of the past which, if it is well told, is, to an unspoiled mind, more interesting than many a novel. In a word, there is no limit to the healthful and helpful books that are at your command. In the midst of these, what a pity it would be if you should take only those that would do you harm."

Questions on December Reading.

What two kinds of companionship are here mentioned? How should we rate the companionship of books? Are parents as likely to be vigilant in regard to the companionship of books as of persons? What mistake is likely to be made? Relate the instance cited and give your view as to the effect upon the child of the book examined. What are the comparative opportunities for communing with the wise and cultured in real life and in books? What advantage may there be in being limited to the possession of but few books? Can one read too many books? What is the effect of reading many new books? To what may we compare the reading of one who forgets as fast as he reads? Is it proper to say that such a one knows how to read? What is the meaning of the proverb quoted? What has been the result of the careful reading of Plutarch's Lives? Do you agree with the advice given in regard to memorizing scripture-text? Do you learn the Golden Text and the Memory Verse of the Sunday-school lesson each week, and see that your children learn them also? Can you not do this much if no more to store your minds with the word of God? Into whose companionship are we admitted in reading the Holy Scriptures? Tell the story of the oration on "John Brown," and the conclusion drawn from it, together with your own thoughts in regard to it. Out of the abundance of good and evil books, what shall we choose for ourselves and our children? If one reads a novel, of what sort should it be? May a history be more interesting than a novel? Under what circumstances? Shall we not ponder well the sad possibility contained in the last sentence, and labor to form in our children or any others whom we may influence the taste for books that are healthful and helpful?

Program for December Meetings of Daughters of Zion.

Opening exercises. Reading of "Half hours with parents and teachers, No. 20." Discussion of above with the aid of questions. Paper, "The value of good books as companions for our children." Vocal music. Paper, "Books that I consider of worth to my children." Address, "How may we make the Bible the favorite book in the library of our children." Closing exercises.

The Jubilee Fund.

Many very encouraging reports have come in concerning the work being done for the jubilee fund. Recently we taught a class by invitation which at the close contributed seventy cents to the fund. This was just one of the weekly occurrences with them. The record showed this to be twice the amount of any others day's offering, but they were taking hold of it in a way that is sure to succeed. They delight in it because, as one expressed it, "It is a worthy cause and I like to help in it." Thus it is. Many others would like to help in it if those in charge will but keep it before them in a proper way. Let each one feel that it is a privilege and not a matter demanded of him. We should both feel and convey the idea that it is a privilege to help in a righteous cause and not a thing demanded or an irksome duty. It is a duty to be sure, but it is also a privilege and one we can not afford to miss. The effort along the jubilee fund line is only a special effort in a special line to help this great work we all love so well. Let us join our forces and bring about results that will make us all glad. The time is nearing and we should lose no opportunity to do what we can.

Why Do Not We Hear From You?

We mailed circular letters concerning the jubilee fund to the officer of every organized district whose officers were known to us, requesting that they write us that we might know that the matter was properly received. But at present writing but little over one half have responded to the request. Why? We have repeatedly, since, given notice requesting all who had not heard from us to drop us a line. Two or three have been heard from on this call. Why not more? Did they all get the letters? If so, why did they not write us? We have no other way to get into touch with the districts except through the mails and when the officers will not answer our letters or heed the calls in the church papers, what is to be done? We do not want to slight any district or to see the work therein lagging if we can help it, but what can we do? What is the matter? What will be the remedy?

In some districts to our certain knowledge it is not because of any lack of interest on the part of the officers, nor because they would not like to have the benefit of all that could be done for them. This we conclude because they are working hard and effectively to make their work a success. But why they do not reply to a letter; why they do not see and heed a call in the "Department" or elsewhere in the church papers, is what continues to be mystery to us. At one time we attributed it to a sort of timidity upon the part of the officers. They perhaps hesitated because they thought they would appear too far behind to correspond with the General Superintendent, fearing they would appear "green" in the work. If such are your feelings, we would we had power to for ever dispel all such false notions. Maybe you are not a specialist in the Sunday-school work. Maybe your experience is very limited. What does that matter? We all had to begin once, and none of us want to remain beginners. Let us move out. If you need help, and can make your wants known to us, there is no one who would more gladly help you as far as it is possible for us to do so. No one would take greater delight in helping every beginning or weak worker than your General Superintendent if you will but give him the opportunity. We have met with all classes of workers from the highest to the lowest, east, west, north, and south, and think we can to a degree at least size up the situation so as to be of help to you. This has been a constant effort upon our part for the past ten years or more of the general work. We have sought to gain all we could that we might help others, and we do not think our efforts have been wholly unsuccessful. And we would like to help you all.

Yes, we would delight to be of assistance to every worker in the church. Our lifework has been with the young of the church and for them almost exclusively—we mean our missionary efforts, and it seems the Lord wants us to still confine our energies in that special line. And we are trying to do it and do it as best we can. But we need the full cooperation of all. We can not reach you if you will not let us. We can not come to you all. That is impossible. So we must write you, and send you printed outlines of work. This has been done from time to time and generally with results for which we are grateful. Much good has been accomplished that we feel quite certain of and that others have borne testimony to. But we wish that all could be benefited alike. But that this may be, it will be necessary that we get into correspondence with each other at times. And whatever may be the reason for not replying to our letters, let us remove it, and when you receive a communication, write me that you have received it and what you think you will be able to do with the matter, whatever it may be. If you are not at the time the officer of the district, kindly inform us who is and forward the matter to the proper one. This is only your reasonable duty. This much you owe to the work in general. But one sister failed to write me or to forward the matter because she could not pay for a postage-stamp. We will gladly furnish stamps to any one who will indicate that he is not able to furnish them. What we want is to get the matter into the proper hands and learn who they are. Will you not help us?

To assist us in our work we make this suggestion, which is in reality only one of the rules or requirements of the General Association: Report all changes in district officers, promptly, to both the General Superintendent and the General Secretary. You will find their names and addresses on the cover of the Quarterly. Do not depend upon the blank form of your annual report to furnish us the data. It does not reach us in time to be of use during the year at all. Send a complete list of names and addresses of all district officers at once. Our list is very incomplete.

Write us whether you have received the jubilee offering circular letter. We want you to have it if you have not previously received it.

Kindly let us hear from you when we write to you.

Districts should see that they have live officers in charge of the work.

Let us all work together for the welfare of the young in Zion.

That Mischievous Boy.

Here are some good questions for a teacher to ask himself or herself about that boy:

"1. Have you tried to see him during the week and find out his personal interests?

"2. Have you tried to get him to put some drawing on the blackboard to illustrate the lesson?

"3. Have you tried appointing him to keep quiet a boy smaller than himself?

"4. Have you given him any bit of work to do for yourself personally?

"5. Have you taken him with you to help cheer some sick or disabled one?

"6. Have you invited him to your house and treated him like a gentleman?

"7. Have you tried to love him and to have him feel your love?

"8. Have you made plain Christ's love for and present interest in him?

"9. Have you prayed for him especially, and asked your prayer-meeting committee to do the same?

"10. Have you let him know you are praying for him?"—New Century Teachers' Monthly.

How to Make a Sunday-School Grow.

Mr. James Edmunds is a most energetic Sunday-school missionary on the Pacific slope. He has a way of making Sunday-schools grow by a method he calls "doubling up." It is only the old way of each one in a Sunday-school bringing some one else to it, and so doubling the school. But Mr. Edmunds has put new life into the old and too-little-used method. He organizes "double-up contests" between schools of a section. It is thus he reports about it:

"I want to write you just a word to inform you of the outcome of the three months' 'Double-Up Contest' that I inaugurated among the Sunday-schools of my field. I persuaded only thirty-one schools to try, and with some of these the try only went as far as the writing of a letter asking to be enrolled in the contest. But those who did try added over two thousand to their total enrollment, reporting gains ranging from forty to two hundred and eleven per cent. Many of these schools are continuing their effort for new members with success."

Next month the usual Sunday-school year and work begins. How can it begin better than by such a "doubling up" determination, and carrying out of the determination? I often pass by a recruiting-station for the United States Marines. Every Sunday-school ought to be a Sunday-school recruiting-station; and every member of a Sunday-school ought to be a recruiting-officer for it. So Sunday-schools would grow. Each one in a Sunday-school going after some other one as yet outside of it — there can be no better, more successful way.—Selected.

A Word of Thanks.

In behalf of the Ladies' Aid Society of Waterloo, Iowa, I wish to thank those who have been so kind as to send us their names for our quilt, also for the many words of love and encouragement we have received. Perhaps if they knew the size of our society and our object in trying to raise money, they would understand better how much we appreciate their help and good wishes.

Our branch numbers only eleven members, only six of whom live at Waterloo. Our aid society has only three members, and there are many things larger societies can do to raise money that we can not, on account of our being so few in number. One man told us our charging ten cents a name, then giving the quilt to Holden Aid Society, for them to sell, was "a money making scheme from start to finish." It is, or we would not be making it, but the money will be used in the work of the Lord. We have had some preaching here at different times, but seemingly without much success. We are few in number, and hall rent is high, so we are trying to raise some money to pay the expenses of a series of meetings, as well as help Holden a little.

One dear sister seventy-three years old, sent us a list of ten names; we would thank her especially; and one young sister sent us a list of twelve names. Others from different States from Pennsylvania to California have sent names.

We would thank each and every one. Some have expressed a fear that their names were sent in too late to be of use. To those I will say we have not quite half as many names as we need yet, so their names will find a place. Should any others desire to send their names, please mention whether Saints, Elders, Teachers, Priests, etc., or Friends if not members, and Hopes if small children of Saints.

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. BELLE GOODRICH.

215 East Sixth Street, WATERLOO, Iowa, Oct. 31, 1905.

CANTON, Ohio, October 30, 1905.

Editors Herald: I thought that I would write you a few lines again. We are still spiritually alive, and God's Spirit and the demonstration and power of the Holy Ghost has rested upon us. I am preaching every Sunday in the city hall, and having good meetings. God has blessed us in our feeble efforts, and laden me with a few sheaves. I baptized one the 12th of this month. He was sixty-seven years old; this makes three I have baptized this year. There are several others near the kingdom of God, and Bro. U. W. Greene from Kirtland, Ohio, will be at Canton the 6th of November to hold a series of meetings for a week. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that God's blessing may be there to the building up of his kingdom, that there may be a branch built up here in the near future; and I hope that God will hasten this work all over the land, that we may soon be gathered home to Zion to sing the songs of everlasting praise, where there will be no parting.

I was called upon to preach at the funeral of Bro. and Sr. Stewart's child a few days ago, the only boy they had. He was six months old. Two girls older than the boy have died. May God comfort them in their bereavement and sorrow. They are noble Saints.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

ISAAC TRUE.

FORT DODGE, Kansas, November 1, 1905.

Editors Herald: We are a way off here by ourselves. The HERALD contains all the preaching that falls to our lot; but we appreciate that; for it does us good to read the letters and sermons. Wife and I have been here for over a year. Her health is very poor. She is afflicted with weak eyes, and other complaints, and we humbly ask all Saints to pray for her that she may be healed. Our membership is at Galena, Kansas. Inclosed find five dollars to be credited as tithing.

W. J. BALDWIN.

WAMSLEY, Ohio, October 29, 1905.

Editors Herald: There are a few live Saints in this part of the Lord's vineyard. I am trying, by the help of the Lord, to do what I can to warn the people, and to prepare them for the coming of the Son of Man, which your unworthy writer believes to be in the near future. Dear Saints, pray for me that I may be strengthened by the Holy Spirit, that I may be instrumental in the hands of God in bringing souls to Christ.

My soul is in this work. This latter-day work is "all in all" with me. I can say in the language of the poet, "Praise the Lord, O my soul."

We are deprived of church privileges here as a branch, as there are but few of us to meet together; but we claim the promise: where two or three are gathered together Jesus says he will be in the midst and that to bless. If God be for us, who can be against us? If God is on our side, we have a majority.

I want to do all I can for the advancement of his cause, and the upbuilding of his kingdom in the world.

Dear Saints, let us press forward to the mark of our high calling in Christ Jesus.

Let us all be in earnest about the cause of Christ, and the salvation of souls. If we are saved ourselves we will want to see our neighbors saved. We must love our neighbor as ourselves, as love is the fulfilling of the law. We may have faith to remove mountains, and not have charity; but it profiteth us nothing. (See 1 Corinthians 13:2.)

Let us stand firm in the faith, not wavering. James says a man that doubts is as a wave of the sea. In union there is strength. Let us live so that when Christ comes, all will be well. May the Lord save us all in the celestial kingdom, is the prayer of your unworthy writer,

J. T. MITCHELL.

WEYBURN, Saskatchewan, Canada, Oct. 21, 1905.

Dear Herald: I have been a reader for some time, but have never written to the HERALD before. We came here the 12th of July, and like the country very much. Our home is thirty-six miles from Weyburn, and that is our nearest postoffice. Several Latter Day Saint families have taken up claims around here. When they are all settled in their new homes we expect to organize a branch, and all put a shoulder to the wheel and keep the good work rolling on. There is a branch just twenty-two miles from us. The officers are all young in the work, but are true, honest workers, and are doing the very best they can, and have certainly been blessed with God's Spirit.

My sister Lizzie, and brother Tommie, and one of Sr. Toovey's little boys were baptized September 4, by Elder Fisher, and confirmed by my father, Elder E. E. Williams, and

Bro. Fisher. There is also a Sunday-school twenty-two miles from here, and all are very active workers; and oh, how it makes our heart rejoice to hear the little children take part in the Sunday-school and each one try to answer all the questions asked them. Each and every one tries to do his part, both in Sunday-school and prayer-meeting. There are no drones in that branch. My father, mother, and I are going to have our letters of removal from the branch in the States, and have them put in this branch at Weyburn Plains; then we can be numbered among the busy workers. And I pray that each one of us may be able to keep up our end of the rope, and help to sound the blessed gospel to all. When I can attend the Sunday-school and church I play the organ, and we have a very nice time.

There was a prophecy given at our prayer-meeting the other evening, through one of our young brothers, which was very encouraging, saying there was a great work begun here, and that there was a rich reward for us in heaven if we continued to be faithful. I feel sure this is worth striving for.

We were favored with a visit from Bro. Alvin Knisley a few weeks ago. Bro. Alvin has certainly a warm friendship among the Saints here. All were glad to see him come, and sorry to see him go.

I desire an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may be numbered among the faithful in Christ Jesus.

Your sister in hope of eternal life,

MAY E. WILLIAMS.

PAINESVILLE, Ohio, November 5, 1905.

Editors Herald: I had hoped to meet with the Saints at Kirtland to-day; but it has rained so very hard that I gave it up. I am glad to be numbered with the Saints of God, and am thankful for the Spirit's witness that I am accepted of him, although I am so unworthy. If God were not so merciful, where would we be? I desire to become pure in his sight, and am thankful he shows me my weaknesses; and I am trying to overcome them. Will you not remember me and mine in your prayers?

I can not tell you how much I have been comforted by the letters written to the HERALD, but have often been refreshed and been strengthened in my determination to go on my way rejoicing and thankful for the blessed gospel of Christ that makes us love one another and pray for one another, that we may not be overcome, but be faithful to the end.

The coming of the Lord is near. I feel it every day; and so many are going heedlessly along, giving no thought to their future existence. If only they knew what they were losing! I wish, so much, that they might have a knowledge of the truth. Surely their condition is terrible. I hope that we will leave nothing undone that God will have us do; and that we may so live that we may have his sanction on all that we do. God bless you all.

Editors Herald: Believing that a few lines from the active missionary occasionally is of benefit to the body, I pen these few lines. Since I returned from the Lamoni reunion to my field of labor, I have labored with interest in Gilchrist, Millersburg, and Cable. I want to relate our experience in the last named place, which to my mind shows the workings of God with his people.

Monday, October 23, Bro. Bailey and I drove from Viola to Cable to try to obtain a place in which to preach. None of our people live there; and there never has been a sermon preached there by our people to my knowledge. We found it a pretty little mining-town with about four hundred inhabitants. There were in town six churches and only one preacher. We were told by one of the merchants that he thought we could get the Congregational church. It was the largest church-building in town. We also learned from him who the trustees were, one of them being the weight boss. We went to the shaft where he was working and saw him, stated our mission, and got permission to use the church. Our grips all being at Viola (nine miles from Cable) we were compelled to go back, but we billed the town for Wednesday night the 25th. In the meantime we dropped a card to Bro. Russell at Davenport to come and help us in the singing. So, according to appointment, we were all there Wednesday, the 25th. But about six o'clock some one telephoned to the trustees that we were Mormons, and one came up to the hotel at seven and gave us to understand we could not occupy the church. He stated his reason: that we were Mormons. We denied the charge, and tried to argue the matter with him, but we were shut out. No place in town could we get only the opera-house. The proprietor told us if we took it for two nights we could have it for eight dollars; one night for six dollars. We found that among the three of us we had eight dollars; but if we paid that for the opera-house we would not have anything to pay our board, and our reputation was bad enough without being unable to meet our board-bill. So we concluded not to take the opera-house, but to go on the street. Next day, we borrowed a democrat-wagon and decorated it with some signs and a gospel chart.

About half past six we all three got onto the wagon, Bro. Russell presiding at the organ. We began to sing and soon had about three hundred people around us. We held them for about two hours, and just at the close a young man told us he had rented the opera-house for us for the next night. That night we were greeted with an audience of about three hundred, and at the close of this meeting one of the trustees of the Swedish Baptist church said we could have the use of their church. We accepted, and held fourteen meetings in all with a fair interest. The trustee of the Congregational church who opposed us the most came to all the meetings, and at the close was one of our best friends. He bought a song-book, and invited us up to take a meal with him. He told us he was sorry for what he had done. A Mr. Peterson and his wife were very kind to us. May the good Lord reward them.

At our last meeting they took up a collection to pay our board in the hotel. Some are very deeply interested in the work. We expect to go back in about a month.

We are glad we can see the guiding hand of God in our work; and it is our greatest desire to live worthy of his aid and recognition.

Yours in the conflict,

GEO. W. THORBURN.

ST. CLAIR, Michigan.

Editors Herald: A word regarding the conference at Kimball, Ontario, of the Chatham District. The weather was all that could be desired, and a large number of the Saints of the district were in attendance, also Saints from Port Huron and St. Clair; but we missed some faces that have now grown familiar. The Saints at Kimball have a neat, white church, and their hospitality needs no comment, abundant proof of which was found on the long, well-filled tables to which ample justice was done. Brn. Leverton, Green, Snoblen, Brown, and Tyrrell were among the Saints from a distance. Bro. Rich Coburn came and brought his voice along, which was highly appreciated by all. Bro. R. C. Evans, of London, and Bro. R. C. Russell, of Arthur, Ontario, with Bro. Alvin Knisley of the Northwest Territory, who traveled over a thousand miles to be in attendance, were there.

On Sunday morning Bro. Russell gave a grand discourse from Jeremiah 16:19. Bro. R. C. Evans in his discourse in the afternoon made the unique and forceful statement: "If a Latter Day Saint is not better than his neighbor he is not so good." This is a startling thought. Then where do we stand? If we delight in the poisonous venom of slander, are we better than our neighbor who deals in this devil's broth? The answer comes back in thunder tones, No! A testimony may not go beyond four walls; the unspoken testimony of gentlemanly conduct to our associates is the testimony that appeals loudest to them, and to the world speaks louder than any sermon delivered from a pulpit. In the evening Bro. Alvin Knisley spoke from Amos 3:6 on direct revelation from God.

I would like to mention here a remarkable incident of this great latter-day work. At the morning meeting was an aged man whose silvery hair and trembling form betokened the end of his journey. In his old age he obeyed the gospel. About two years ago he came to Elder Skinner in St. Clair and asked for the ordinance of baptism—a distance of sixty miles from his home. Some months previous to this Elder Skinner was shown in a dream that an aged man would come and ask for baptism, and, although a stranger to Bro. Skinner, he recognized him as the person in the dream. Truly, this is a marvelous work and a wonder. What reminiscences of the bygone past cluster around this meeting of the Saints at Kimball, where the gospel was preached in the early 60's, when it meant a great deal to be called "Latter Day Saints"! What wild, stormy times those sturdy pioneers of the gospel passed through to uphold the ensign of truth! What sacrifices they made to meet together! These were not "gilt-edge" times, when they drove sixty miles in wagons to be present at conference at Blenheim or Corinth, or "yoked" their oxen and crossed the river St. Clair on the ice, and drove out to the Bowman road to meet with the Saints west of St. Clair, Michigan. Candidates were baptized on the farm of Bro. Phelan Shaw adjoining Wilkesport, Ontario. In those stirring times Sr. Ellwood came out for baptism in the midst of great clamor and opposition. Some of the absurd and foolish methods adopted by the enemy are illustrated in recalling Bro. Shippy's preaching, in the early days of the Reorganization, at Wilkesport, when a large ox was driven into their midst. Bro. Shippy said, "If that is all the arguments they have, let them bring them on." Among the veterans for the truth in those days of strenuous opposition, who preached at Wilkesport, are some whose voices are silent, Bro. Robb and Bro. Deuell, whose odd speeches are still recalled with a smile. Mention is oftentimes made of Brn. Blair, Luff, and Lake, also Bishop Kelley, they having preached in what was then known as the Olive Branch, now reorganized under the name of the Kimball Branch.

Memories of long ago will be brought back by "calling the roll": Robb, Sturdavant, Chute, Johnstone, Kimball, Shaw, Muir, Harvey, Duncan Campbell. One of those memories was the night Bro. Phelan Shaw drove fifty miles over a rough, bad road to bring Bro. Leverton to administer to Sr. Muir, who was lying at the point of death with hemorrhage. The Lord blessed their faith and Sr. Muir is still living. Another recollection of the past is that two Indians were called and ordained elders, one being Moses James of the tribe of Chippewas, near Sarnia, Ontario.

Editors Herald: Living as I do away from any branch I could not get along without the HERALD and Ensign to read upon the Sabbath day. We can not do without spiritual food. I took the HERALD the first year I was in the church; but afterwards thought I was too poor, so let it go. I did not know the law, but sent for a Doctrine and Covenants, which I read but did not understand. I became careless, and finally neglected my duty. I was afflicted, my hearing becoming impaired, and at last I tried to believe that God did not have anything to do with the work. In 1896, when it seemed that my time was short, the thought came to my mind, Why don't you believe? I could not tell. I tried to pray, but seemed to be bound. I did not give up, and after a time had more liberty. Then I got the Church History, which helped me. "Now, when I read the instruction that the Prophet gave to the church, and the history that he gives of his calling, I must believe that he was called of God; and the fourth volume makes it plain that God will raise up those that will carry on the work.

Now, I see that by doing what God has left for us will bring blessings. I know that we must not harbor ill will. That is one thing that has always bothered me; but now if any one does me a wrong I will leave it with the just Judge, as he has always protected me; and in my declining years I have plenty.

I went to Curtis, Nebraska, the 5th inst., and had the pleasure of partaking of the sacrament with the Saints. They are few in number, but are trying to let their light shine. I had to drive thirty-five miles, but feel well paid.

May God help us all to learn our duty and do it is the prayer of
Your brother in the gospel,

Ebb and Flow: Facts Without Fables.

Experiences among widely separated people have, from the cradle to the grave, very much in common. Inherited traits and a variety of circumstances and associations make their impress, and to a great degree mark the variations in individual characters.

In the days of childhood death removed the earthly guardians of youthful years. Left to a world of strangers, with no ties of kindred, and neither pity nor care, conceptions of the future and its mission had then no place in thought. Mature years can review the past and call back the toils and triumphs that live only in thought now, stirring the deeper convictions of the heart that the dictates of a higher wisdom mark the bounds and direct the ways, rough hew them as we will.

Perhaps the conditions existing thirty odd years ago, connected with the open field for endeavor, afforded reasons for the many instances where men of small means, or with none at all, could engage in a business of size and importance. This period opened the way and inaugurated the first movement that transformed the temporal prospects of life. A company of four of this class organized, engaging in lumber manufacture. The success that followed this investment by the close of the second year realized a plant and output valued at thirty thousand dollars.

A not very distant location and opportunity offered itself to duplicate the first investment. The company divided, two remaining and two going to establish the expectations of quickly acquired wealth. The move succeeded and promised to equal or surpass the former. But fortune frowns as well as smiles upon hopes and ambitions. The smooth-running course of events that carried success on its current was destined to change. For two successive seasons the elements refused to supply the needed rainfall. Streams were rendered useless as a means of transportation. Expensive outlays were made in building reservoirs to gather the scanty waters in volume, and other expenditures that were incident to these conditions proved a burden and a barrier too great to be overcome. The pleasant feelings that crown success were fast disappearing now, "and coming events cast their shadows before them."

But Time with healing in his wings dulls the keen edge of disappointment, and little by little they are lost in the great world of possibilities that stretches before us.

Ten years later, while living in the Badger State, a new industry was ushered into the field of enterprise. More correctly stated, radically changed methods were introduced to deal with it. The success that followed its introduction invited both small and great to enter the field of promise. The initial steps were taken and the anticipations of securing a good business were fully realized. Cherished thoughts that find expression in successful action inspired the hopes. The lost of former days would be regained, coming back on "the tide which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune."

Again a halt is called, but not alone in this experience, for many others in business of this character suffered defeat from the same causes. Wheat-fields that formerly produced the golden grain in abundance became nonproductive in succeeding years. The local supply was a thing of the past and distant fields of supply had little value for local business. That being then a comparatively new part of the State, it made a constantly increasing area of production in the starting that gave no evidence of the widely-changed conditions of the ending.

The changes that come and go on the stream of time are still bearing onward the victor and the vanquished.

Philadelphia Anniversary.

Sunday, October 1, 1905, the Philadelphia Saints celebrated the sixty-sixth anniversary of the first baptisms, in this city, by the ministry of the restored gospel. It was one of those delightful autumn days, seen only on the Atlantic side of the Allegheny Mountains—warm, blue, and simply charming. All nature seemed to unite in making it an ideal day. A large gathering of interested and lively Saints, the largest since the dedication of the chapel, vied with Nature in showing which could do most to reciprocate the mutual favors of a festive day.

The services really began at half past nine in the morning, when the Sunday-school under the superintendency of Bro. Elsworth B. Hull, gave a special service with historical retrospect by Elder Hosea H. Bacon. At eleven in the forenoon a historical address was delivered by the writer, setting forth the trials and triumphs of the work of the Lord in the City of Brotherly Love. It was found by careful search of the records, newspapers, and journals of the old-time Saints, that the work was introduced in Philadelphia by Elder Benjamin Winchester in September, 1839. The first sermon was preached September 9, at "early candle light." Meeting with favor in the eyes of some, he continued his work, and on October 1 the first candidates presented themselves for baptism, which was administered by Bro. Winchester. The gospel found many adherents; so much so that by January 11, 1840, he had baptized sixty-five. A branch was organized early in January, 1840, by Joseph Smith, while he with others was pleading the cause of the persecuted Saints, who had been driven from Missouri. The work grew apace, and in 1844 there was a branch numbering three hundred and thirty-four. Trouble followed the martyrdom of the leaders, and the work was not on a safe basis till reorganized by Elder W. W. Blair, August 22, 1867, since which time it has grown from ten to one hundred and forty-seven in number.

At three o'clock in the afternoon a sacrament- and social-service was conducted, all the priesthood of the branch presiding and assisting. One candidate, Sr. Clara Hitchcock, was confirmed at this service, having been buried with Christ at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, thus commemorating the sixty-sixth anniversary of the first baptisms with another baptism. The scene was affecting as the candidate descended into the font, which was surrounded with ferns, palms, and flowering plants. The service was very largely attended, there being the largest gathering of Saints of the Philadelphia Branch in the Reorganization. An unusual degree of solemnity characterized the meeting, as many bore their testimony to the abiding character of the great latter-day work. We had the rare pleasure of enrolling two members on their original baptism, Bro. Aaron S. Branson and Sr. Martha P. Chafey, having been baptized in 1838 and 1840 respectively. The latter was a member of the Philadelphia Branch from 1843 till after the death of the Martyrs. Our souls were rejoiced to have these old Saints once more with us, heart and hand. Their testimony, though not heard at that meeting, is to the effect that all through the dark and cloudy day, the testimony that they had of the divinity of the work, alone, enabled them to stand firm to their calling. The addition of these names to that of Bro. Ephraim Wright, who was rebaptized upon entering the Reorganization some years ago, Sr. Martha Chambers, rebaptized on request, and Sr. Sarah B. Hopkins, who was several years ago received on her original baptism performed in 1837, make quite a strong bond of union, bearing testimony of the blessings they received in the work in the days of the Martyrs, together with those received by us. The testimony of Sr. Hopkins [It appeared in last week's HERALD.—Editor.] is especially valuable as she was well acquainted with most of the leading ministers in the old church. She tells of the direction and advice given by Elder Sidney Rigdon to the Saints in the fall of 1844, to wait for "little Joseph" as the successor to his father. The afternoon meeting was continued at length, a great many taking part.

At fifteen minutes till eight in the evening the writer talked to a large and attentive audience on the history of the great latter-day work, and while we feel that we did not do justice to the subject and the occasion, we hope many who otherwise would not have heard were favorably impressed.

During the day we did not leave the church, but a committee of tireless workers served dinner and supper in the basement, so that the physical appetite was regaled as well as the spiritual desires satisfied. We got favorable mention by five of the great Philadelphia newspapers, which will give us a good advertisement.

There are many children and grandchildren of old-time Saints here, many of whom do not desire to be mentioned in connection with what the world has been pleased to call Mormonism; some are not so minded, and among our membership we number several whose fathers and mothers, grandfathers and grandmothers, were numbered with the Saints of other days. We are made glad when an occasion of this kind offers a chance of meeting so large an assemblage of Saints and friends of Saints. We are gaining ground in Philadelphia numerically and spiritually, and hope to be able to be worthy of the commendation given the Saints at Philadelphia by the Savior, in another land and time.

Your brother in the hope of ultimate triumph,

WALTER W. SMITH.

PHILADELPHIA, Pennsylvania, October 30, 1905.

My Testimony Concerning the Patriarchs' Office.

I want to tell your many readers what I once believed and now know concerning the office of patriarch in the church.

Before, and for some time after there was a patriarch ordained in the Reorganized Church, I did not believe that there was such an office in the church recognized of God as "patriarch." I remember hearing Bro. A. H. Smith make his first report after he was ordained. I being already skeptical, his report made me more so. I thought a great deal about the matter, and finally concluded to investigate Bro. Smith as to his call to the office. He gave me all, or about all the evidence that he had which failed to convince me that he or any other man was called of God to the office of patriarch in the church. This investigation took place in the year 1898 while I was in the state of Tennessee on a mission. I then let the matter rest until Brn. Lake, Lambert, and Briggs were ordained patriarchs. Soon after this I commenced an investigation with Bro. J. R. Lambert which continued for quite a while, and finally we agreed to postpone our investigation until we met at General Conference, which should meet at Independence, 1903; then we would continue our investigation in person.

A while before said conference a change took place in my mind, and I concluded to call upon Bro. Lambert to perform the ordinance of blessing me, which I did, and he readily consented.

The time was set and place appointed, which was at the home of Bro. Mills, Bro. Lambert's son-in-law. Sr. Eunice Winn-Smith was the stenographer. The Lord met with us in power, which was convincing and comforting to me at least. The blessing was a grand one to me. Bro. Lambert told me a number of things which he could not have known outside of revelation from God. He also gave me some grand promises upon condition of faithfulness. The record has been a source of encouragement and comfort from the time it was given until now. There is one thing I know to be true for myself: That God did meet with us in the person of his Spirit, and that he did recognize the service of blessing. Ever since that time I have retained that testimony. While I have had some very, very hard trials, the severity of which is known only to God and myself, yet the good Lord has sustained me thus far, and I am determined by the grace of God to endure to the end of the race. I am assured (and that by the Lord) that I will triumph over all opposition by the power of God and not of man.

The above is my testimony up to date. Some may believe and say that the office of patriarch is a fraud, and of his majesty the Devil. I know that God did and does bless me through the administration of Bro. Lambert as a patriarch in the church. I submit the above testimony, as I have my testimony to the truth of the Book of Mormon heretofore.

Yours in the faith,

E. W. NUNLEY.

COOKES POINT, Texas, November 4, 1905.

MINDEN CITY, Michigan, November 1, 1905.

Editors Herald: Another year has passed since my last letter to your columns. My health is better than it was at that time, for which I feel to thank God.

In June I attended our district conference at Detroit, the first one since 1900, and the first time I left my home vicinity since being afflicted, just four years to the day.

I feared to undertake the trip after having suffered so much; but when the Lord promised to go with me I went trustingly; for I had learned to know that his promises are sure and his ways are wise. I was given unusual strength and I enjoyed the conference, both spiritually and socially.

I hope ever to have the Spirit of appreciation and thankfulness for blessings received. Under the influence of the Spirit I can see plainer how much the Father has done for me. How tenderly he has cared for me during my afflictions; the favorable situation and good care I was given, also his working through human instruments to bring cheer and comfort to me. I accept all these favors as blessings.

During the first months of affliction we had a great desire to get well and strong; but when we began to see that it was working for our eternal good we were perfectly willing to abide God's will whatever it be. And as we drew nigh unto him, he drew very near unto us and revealed himself in many ways, so that those days were made memorable. The lessons we learn under purely spiritual environment leave lasting impressions.

There is great satisfaction in serving God when we begin to see that he really can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, and that he hears and answers prayer. No earthly intelligence can reason with us as he can when our minds are attuned to his.

After partaking of the true joy and power—even the hidden manna which is in store for those who live the higher life, we find satisfaction nowhere without it. With it, we enjoy a degree of heaven, under any condition,—a degree of eternal life,—for "to know God is life eternal." A taste of this spiritual food increases the desire for more; the inner man starves without it. How different are the lives of those who are being fed on this food! How noble it makes them in word, deed, and thought; and how we love the society of such! We need spiritual nourishment daily. Without it we feel weak and easily moved out of place. How true the Master's words: "Without me ye can do nothing."

If it were ours to have but one of the two, physical or spiritual strength and development, we would choose the spiritual. But God knows all about each of us and knows under what condition and position we best develop the better qualities.

The degree of physical strength we have we fully appreciate. The thorn in the flesh that still remains is known to God, as well as the purpose of it. We can not see far into the future; but our faith in God has been sufficient in the past and we trust it shall be in the future.

"For hope, the steadfast anchor,
Holds fast within the veil;
Again the sweet voice whispers,
'My help shall never fail.'"

The Lord tries in many ways to reach his children. Patiently he tries to teach them those things which will bring the greatest happiness in life. We desire to learn obedience willingly; for our joy increases as our obedience increases—intelligent obedience—and not until our obedience to divine law is perfect will our joy be full. Ignorance of God's law may free us from the penalty of disobedience; but it does not make us holy, and without holiness no man can see God. It takes a comprehension of the pure principle of righteousness and a compliance with the same to develop in us a Christ-like nature. This requires sincere and continuous efforts on our part, with the help of God's Spirit.

The powers that lie within us must be brought into use and developed. A life of ease and carelessness will not gain for us true salvation; we must "work out our salvation with fear and trembling." Great demands and important work require sober-mindedness, earnestness, and consecration of life. There must be willingness on our part to learn, for God can not do it alone, but there must be coöperation.

The angel's advice to Joseph the Seer was: "Pray often that your mind may become strong." If more followed this advice and less time were spent in thinking and talking on light and frivolous subjects, we would grow purer and stronger in mind, and more able to receive the counsels of the Lord, and thus we might come to a deeper realization of the folly and ignorance of sin and awake to the fact that we, ourselves, are the losers for our wrong-doing, and that we will have to occupy the house that we are now building. Are we building soundly? There will be no mistakes in testing our works, for the judge will be "just and true."

The way we think and act, even when no one sees and knows but God, is what makes character.

The Saints of our vicinity, though few in number, have lately purchased the Congregational church in town. It has been vacant for a number of years, so it needed repairing and also furnishing. We expect to hold our opening services in it next Sunday. We hope and pray that the Spirit of the Master will be in our midst whenever we meet there to worship; and that all may live worthy lives, so that through our humble efforts others will be led to see and obey the truth.

We are not yet organized into a branch, but may be in the near future.

Our Sunday-school, which was organized last May, is getting along very nicely. All seem to realize the benefits of it. Some of the older ones have said that they can now see where they should have learned their primary lessons in the gospel and have been prepared for advanced lessons. We who live after them can profit by this, and take advantage of every means provided for our learning. What is grander than to see children growing up under proper gospel training and instruction, thus advancing in understanding with the years? Such lives remind us of the budding and blooming of beautiful flowers. Oh, that we may all see the importance and the beauty of learning our higher duties, forming a stronger friendship and a closer association with God, until we are prepared to see him as he is and dwell with him for ever, is my prayer.

Your sister in Christ,

EMMA VOLZ.

FRASER, IOWA, October 30, 1905.

Editors Herald: Five weeks ago I left the tent at Montour in charge of Elders Christy and Stedman and came to Fraser alone. Held a three weeks' meeting in schoolhouse north of Fraser, preaching twenty sermons in the three weeks. Besides this, I preached from one to four sermons nearly every day to private parties. In short, I have been just "hustling," not waiting for an invitation to call, but going where I was impressed to go.

Hearing of a young lady who could not come to meeting, but who desired to learn more of the gospel, I resolved to call on her. She was staying with a Catholic lady, who, when I had stated my mission, said, "We do not believe in any kind of Mormons here. I am a Catholic myself," in a tone which plainly said that my room was more desirable than my presence. However, I began comparing Catholicism with the doctrine of Christ, and was invited to be seated, and the lady in question also invited to take part in the conversation. So I gained the object of my visit in a two hours' talk, sowing the seed of the kingdom.

One man in town, a preacher of course, said I was "chuck full of devils," which in the light of the scripture which says, "If they call the Master of the house Beelzebub, what will they call they of his household," I consider quite a compliment. Have baptized seven, and a number more are "almost persuaded," one of whom is Mrs. Mary Reed, who believes "the work" and whom Bro. Thorburn will probably remember telling, "There'll come a time, when you'll hear the gospel." I began a series of meetings in the public school-building Monday, October 23. Bro. Stedman came to assist me on the 23th. From twenty to fifty out, and fair interest. Will continue a week or two more. Realizing my verdancy, inefficiency, and inability in this great warfare, I request that I may be sustained by the faith and prayers of the Saints.

Ever praying and laboring for the welfare of Zion, I am,

Yours in bonds,

S. M. REISTE.

Extracts from Letters.

G. R. Wells, Rozelle, Sydney, Australia: "Bro. Barmore and I. are joining in a special effort at one of the outlying suburbs, and we are hard at work canvassing from house to house."

S. J. Madden, Scandia, Kansas: "I am preaching and doing what I can. I have baptized six this year."

Thanksgiving.

Dear Lord, who hold'st my soul in fee,
This day I offer up to thee
My grateful thanks on bended knee.
I thank thee for the blessings shed
Upon my poor unworthy head:—
For paths of peace where I am led.
I thank thee for pure love and health;
I do not pine for boundless wealth,
Procured too oft by craft and stealth.
I thank thee for a wife's sweet smile
To help me onward, mile on mile:
To cheer me when I rest a while.
For baby prattle, Lord, I pay
Thee homage, and at close of day
"Thy will be done," teach me to say.

Baggerly and W. D. Ellis were appointed to consider the case. Charges were sustained. Adjourned to meet at Byrneville, Indiana, December 9, 1905.

Convention Minutes.

Chatham.—Association convened at Kimball at 9 a. m., October 6, 1905; J. W. Badder chosen to preside, with Ambrose Wrencher assistant, and Mary M. Green secretary. District Superintendent J. W. Badder reported one school organized at Thamesville with a membership of 22; it was united with Chatham District. Officers elected: J. W. Badder, district superintendent; Ambrose Wrencher, first assistant superintendent; J. L. Brown, second assistant superintendent; Mary M. Green, secretary; Emily Shaw, assistant; Orlo Coburn, treasurer; J. L. Brown, librarian; William L. Ross, home class superintendent. Adjourned to meet with the Stevenson Branch the last Saturday and Sunday in February, 1906.

Little Sioux.—Convention convened at Woodbine, Iowa, October 20, at 9.30 a. m., with district officers in charge. Time was well occupied in the discussion of papers read; the theme, "Duty," being carried out. Thoughts both interesting and instructive were brought out and we feel that good was accomplished. Our quarterly reports show two new Sunday-schools organized, making an enrollment in the district of eight hundred and seventy-six. Adjourned to meet at Little Sioux in February. Annie Stuart, secretary.

Conference Notices.

Conference of the Southern Indiana District will convene with the Byrneville Branch at Byrneville, Indiana, December 9, 1905, at 10 a. m. Bro. J. W. Wight, W. D. Ellis, and others are expected to attend. Branch presidents and clerks take notice and have your reports sent to J. J. Boswell, Byrneville, Indiana, in care of Columbus Maymon. We want a report from every branch in order to make a correct report for General Church Recorder. Also hope to have a full priesthood report, not only from the missionary force but from all local elders, priests, teachers, and deacons. W. C. Marshall, president.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of the Pottawattamie District: Not being able to visit all of you in person, I take this means of communicating with you. God has dealt very kindly with us in numerous ways, for which we ought to be always anxious to demonstrate our appreciation. The greatest blessing that has come to us is the gospel, and though all of us were living under different conditions, the gospel news was brought by human instruments working under God's command. Not alone the missionary who left his home and loved ones but those remaining at home have assisted by paying their tithes and offerings. While the elder has been on the "frontiers" "facing the enemy" other faithful ones have "held up his hands," both equally interested in the salvation of man. When we think of the blessings we enjoy through the gospel let us not forget there are hundreds, yes, thousands and even millions, to whom the light of the true gospel has not yet dawned. Shall we not try to do more towards sending God's servants forth? In the great day of account the faithful worker at home will receive the Lord's recognition just the same as the elder who has spent all his time in the field.

Shall we forfeit our right to an eternal inheritance in the celestial glory by a failure to work for only a few years? May God inspire each of us with the thought that to-day is the time for us to improve our privileges.

Any amount sent my address will be promptly acknowledged.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, R. F. D. 2.

JOHN A. HANSEN.

Resolution of Condolence.

The following preambles and resolution were adopted by the Spring River Saints in conference convened: "Where Thomas S. Hayton has been removed from our midst by the hand of Providence, and whereas we the Saints of Spring River District in conference assembled recognize in our brother a true husband, a loving father, and a good friend, also a consistent Christian who was ever ready to aid the cause of truth and righteousness by his talent and his means,—therefore be it resolved by this assembly, that we feel deeply our great loss, recognizing, however, that the ways of Providence are inscrutable, and that our heavenly Father doeth all things well, and that our beloved brother has but entered the golden gate of a higher, happier life."

S. F. CUSHMAN,
A. H. HERKE, Committee.

MOLLIE DAVIS, District Secretary.

Died.

PARK.—At Runnells, Iowa, November 27, James Park, of heart failure. He was a member of no church, but believed in and defended the faith of the Saints, his home being ever welcome to the servants of God; a man of strict integrity, of whom it can truthfully be said he was one of the "honorable men of the earth." His wife and five of the six living children are members of the church. Funeral-services at Runnells in the Saints' chapel, by J. F. Mintun, the 29th, in the presence of an overcrowded house, the subject being "Eternal judgment."

DEMPESEY.—Laurel Cornelius, son of Bro. A. C. and Sr. Hannah Dempsey. Born January 16, 1898, died of diphtheria, November 2, 1905. He was a lover of Sunday-school, a prompt, bright scholar and often expressed a wish to see and live in heaven. His throat was affected about two weeks ago and in simple faith he took some oil and was remarkably helped, but he took fresh cold at an entertainment. When administered to his breathing was very distressing but after prayer and administration of the ordinance he began to breathe naturally and slept peacefully, but as we all knelt again and asked for angels' care his spirit went to rest. Discourse by William Waterman at the house and prayer and singing at the grave.

CASTOR.—Graydon, the oldest child of Will and Sr. Ida Castor, at Henderson, Iowa, on Monday, October 30, 1905. He was born August 19, 1901. Graydon was a bright, intellectual boy and seemed to have thoughts far in advance of his youthful years. He was laid to rest in the Henderson cemetery October 31, 1905, the funeral-sermon being preached by J. B. Lentz, assisted by A. Badham.

WORDEN.—In St. Joseph, Missouri, October 23, 1905, Adelbert Worden, at the age of 48 years, 5 months, and 13 days. He leaves wife and six children. Was laid to rest in the Dekalb Cemetery, two and one half miles north of Stewartsville. Service in charge of J. W. Roberts; sermon by William Lewis. Bro. Worden was on his way to work when the summons came, and in less than one hour his spirit had taken its flight to mingle with loved ones. His death was a shock to all of us, having met him at church the day before.

EVANS.—Maggie May, the beloved daughter of Bro. Silas and Sr. Elizabeth Ann Evans, of 362 Cardiff Road, Aberaman, South Wales. Was born June 2, 1898. Died of consumption of the bowels October 6, 1905. Buried at Aberdare Cemetery the 9th, Elder E. B. Morgan conducting the funeral-services at the home and at the grave, assisted by Priest David Edmonds.

"Go to thy rest, fair child!
Go to thy dreamless bed,
While yet so gentle, undefiled,
With blessings on thy head."

PENNELLS.—Bro. John Pennells of Hersey Branch, died September 22; funeral-sermon preached by Bro. J. J. Cornish. He united with the church in 1883; baptized by Bro. John Shipley. In 1894 ordained to office of priest; was priest of the branch until death. He had been a sufferer for six years.

MCINTOSH.—John J. McIntosh, born September 1, 1846; died September 29, 1905, at his home in Pottawattamie County, Iowa, of that dread disease, consumption. Was married to Nancy P. McMullen in the year 1866. She died in 1874. She was the mother of four children. He was married to Aretta Goodner in 1877. To them ten children were born. United with the church early in life. Remained strong in the faith to the end. Funeral-sermon by D. Parish, assisted by J. Lapworth.

TAYLOR.—In the hospital at Centerville, Iowa, October 20, 1905, Bro. Matthew Taylor. Bro. Taylor had undergone an operation for cancer of the stomach but died a few days after the treatment. He leaves a wife and four children, also a mother, sisters, and one brother. The services were in charge of Bro. John Smith; discourse by Bro. E. L. Kelley. Bro. Taylor was born at North Alton, Illinois, October 29, 1857; married to Miss Mary Ann Allen August 4, 1880; united with the Reorganized Church August 5, 1884, at Lucas, Iowa. Let his good deeds be held in remembrance by those who knew him best.

ELDER W. E. LA RUE is visiting scenes of note and interest in Great Britain and Europe. This he is doing at his own expense, but he proposes to share his pleasure with others. In the December Autumn Leaves he begins a series of illustrated articles, "Little journeys in foreign fields." The first deals with scenes in "Bonnie Scotland," the second with the lakes of Ireland. Others will follow. This series is nicely illustrated and can not fail to interest.

BAD EVIDENCE.

The following statement has been made in opposition to some of the elders in Southern Utah. It is of a piece with other things which have been called proofs, but which will not bear criticism:

MINERSVILLE, Utah, February 21, 1905.

This is to certify that on or about the last of February, 1841, I, Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Rollins Lightner, was sealed to the prophet Joseph Smith, as his plural wife, in an upper room of the Red Store, used as a Masonic hall, in Nauvoo, Illinois, Elder Brigham Young officiating at aforesaid sealing.

MARY E. ROLLINS LIGHTNER.

Signed in presence of Mary R. Rollins, J. E. Vanderwood, H. N. Hansen.

All that need be said of this statement is that while Brn. Hansen and Vanderwood were laboring in that part of Utah, they were met by persons who stated that a wife of Joseph the prophet was living at Minersville, and challenging them to visit her and verify the statement. They made it their business to do so; the result is this signed statement; Mary R. Rollins is a daughter of Mrs. Lightner, as we understood the brethren. Mrs. Lightner also stated that she did not live with the Prophet as his wife, was only sealed to him.

The date given, February, 1841, does not agree with historical facts as to the whereabouts of Elder Brigham Young. For instance: Elders Brigham Young and Heber C. Kimball left Nauvoo, Illinois, for England, September 18, 1839; and returned to Nauvoo in company with John Taylor, July 1, 1841. So that Elder Young could not have performed the sealing referred to.

FEMALE RELIEF SOCIETY OF NAUVOO.

By the kindness of a friend in Salt Lake City we are permitted the pleasure of having a copy of the minutes of the organization of the Female Relief Society of Nauvoo, March 17, 1842. We publish this for the reason that some comment has been made upon the organization of that society as to its objects and as to some things that have been said to have taken place at that meeting. This copy of the minutes will show just what was done and how it was done and will be a sufficient answer to those unnecessary and evil-breeding comments. It would be well if every true believer would not only abstain from evil reports, but would adopt the celebrated axiom, "Evil be to him who thinks evil of this."

Minutes of the first organization of the Female Relief Society, Nauvoo Lodge Room, March 17, 1842.

Present: President Joseph Smith, John Taylor, and Willard Richards, Emma Smith, and others.

Elder John Taylor was called to the chair by President Smith, and Elder Willard Richards appointed secretary.

Meeting commenced by singing, "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning," etc.

Prayer by Elder Taylor.

It was moved by President Smith, and seconded by Mrs. Cleveland, that a vote be taken to know if all are satisfied with each female present; and are willing to acknowledge them in full fellowship, and admit them to the privilege of the institution about to be formed. The names of those present were then taken, as follows:

Mrs. Emma Smith	Mrs. Bathsheba W. Smith
Mrs. Sarah M. Cleveland	Miss Phebe M. Wheeler
Mrs. Phebe Ann Hawks	Miss Elvira A. Cole
Mrs. Elizabeth Jones	Margaret A. Cook
Mrs. Sophia Paekard	Mrs. Athalia R. Robinson
Mrs. Philinda Merrick	Mrs. Sarah M. Kimball
Mrs. Martha Knights	Miss Eliza R. Snow
Miss Desdemona Fullmer	Miss Sophia Robinson
Mrs. Elizabeth Ann Whitney	Miss Nancy Rigdon
Mrs. Lenora Taylor	Miss Sophia R. Marks

President Smith and Elders Taylor and Richards withdrew, while the females went into an investigation of the motion, and decided that all present be admitted according to the motion; and that

Mrs. Sarah Highee	Mrs. Abigail Allred
Mrs. Thirza Cahoon	Mrs. Mary Snider, and
Mrs. Keziah A. Morrison	Mrs. Sarah Granger
Mrs. Marinda N. Hyde

should be admitted, whose names were presented by President Smith.

President Smith and Elders Taylor and Richards returned, and the meeting was addressed by President Smith, to illustrate the object of the society: That the society of sisters might provoke the brethren to good works in looking to the wants of the poor, searching after the objects of charity, and in administering to their wants, to assist, by correcting the morals and strengthening the virtue of the female community, and save the elders the trouble of rebuking, that they may give their time to other duties in their public teaching. President Smith further said that an organization to show them how to go to work would be sufficient. He proposed that the sisters elect a presiding officer to preside over them, and let that presiding officer choose two counselors to assist in the duties of her office; that he would ordain them to preside over the society, and let them preside just as the Presidency preside over the church; and if they need his instructions ask him, and he will give it from time to time.

Let this presidency serve as a constitution. All their decisions be considered law, and acted upon as such.

If any officers are wanted to carry out the designs of the institution let them be appointed and set apart, as deacons, teachers, etc., are among us. The minutes of your meetings will be precedents for you to act upon, your constitution and law. He then suggested the propriety of electing a presidency to continue in office during good behavior, or so long as they shall continue to fill the office with dignity, etc., like the First Presidency of the church.

Motioned by Sister Whitney and seconded by Sister Paekard, that Mrs. Emma Smith be chosen President. Passed unanimously.

Moved by President Smith that Mrs. Emma Smith proceed to choose her counselors, that they may be ordained to preside over this society, in taking care of the poor, administering to their wants, and attending to the various affairs of this institution.

The president-elect then made choice of Mrs. Sarah M. Cleveland and Mrs. Elizabeth Ann Whitney for counselors.

President Smith then read the revelation to Emma Smith, from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and stated that she was ordained at the time the revelation was given to expound the scriptures to all, and to teach the female part of the community; and that not she alone, but others may attain to the same blessings.

The second epistle of John, first verse, was then read to show that respect was had to the same thing, and that why she was called an Elect Lady is because elected to preside.

Elder Taylor was then appointed to ordain the counselors. He laid his hands on the head of Mrs. Cleveland and ordained her to be a counselor to the Elect Lady, even Mrs. Emma Smith, to counsel and assist in all things pertaining to her office, etc.

Elder Taylor then laid his hands on the head of Mrs. Whitney, and ordained her to be a counselor to Mrs. Smith, the president of the institution with all the privileges pertaining to the office, etc.

He then laid his hands on the head of Mrs. Smith and blessed her and confirmed upon her all the blessings which have been confirmed upon her, that she might be a mother in Israel, and look to the wants of the needy, and be a pattern of virtue, and possess all the qualifications necessary for her to stand and preside and dignify her office, to teach the females those principles requisite for their future usefulness.

President Smith then resumed his remarks, and gave instructions how to govern themselves in their meetings. When one wishes to speak, address the chair, and the chairman responds to the address. Should two speak at once, the chair shall decide who speaks first; if any one is dissatisfied, she appeals to the house. When one has the floor she occupies it as she pleases. Proper manner of address is, Mrs. Chairman, or President, and not Mr. Chairman, etc.

A question can never be put until it has a second. When the subject for discussion has been fairly investigated, the chairman will say, Are you ready for the question, etc.

Whatever a majority of the house decides upon becomes a law to the society.

President Smith proceeded to give counsel: Do not injure the character of any one; if members of the society shall conduct themselves improperly, deal with them, and keep all your doings in your own bosoms, and hold all characters sacred.

It was then proposed that Elder Taylor vacate the chair.

President Emma Smith and her counselors took the chair, and Elder Taylor moved, seconded by President Joseph Smith, that we go into an investigation respecting what the society shall be called. Carried unanimously.

President Smith continued instructions to the chair, to suggest to the members anything the chair might wish, and which it might be proper for the chair to put, or move, etc.

Moved by Counselor Cleveland, and seconded by Counselor Whitney, that this society be called the Nauvoo Female Relief Society.

Elder Taylor offered an amendment, that it be called the Nauvoo Female Benevolent Society, which would give a more definite and extended idea of the institution—that "Relief" be struck out, and "Benevolent" be inserted.

President Smith offered instructions on votes.

The motion was seconded by Counselor Cleveland, and unanimously carried, on the amendment by Elder Taylor.

The President then suggested that she would like an argument with Elder Taylor on the words relief and benevolent.

President Joseph Smith moved that the vote for amendment be rescinded, which was carried.

Motion for adjournment by Elder Richards, and objected to by President Joseph Smith.

President Joseph Smith:—Benevolent is a popular term, and the term relief is not known among popular societies. Relief is more extended in its signification than benevolent, and might extend to the liberation of the culprit, and might be wrongly construed by our enemies to say that the society was to relieve criminals from punishment, etc., etc., to relieve a murderer, which would not be a benevolent act.

President Emma Smith said the popularity of the word benevolent is one great objection; no person can think of the word as associated with public institutions without thinking of the Washington Benevolent Society, which was one of the most corrupt institutions of the day. Do not wish to have it called after other societies in the world.

President Joseph Smith arose to state that he had no objection to the word relief—that on question, they ought to deliberate candidly and investigate all subjects.

Counselor Cleveland arose to remark concerning the question before the house—that we should not regard the idle speech of our enemies, we design to act in the name of the Lord, to relieve the wants of the distressed, and to do all the good we can.

Eliza R. Snow arose and said that she felt to concur with the president, with regard to the word benevolent, that many societies with which it had been associated were corrupt, that the popular institutions of the day should not be our guide, that as daughters of Zion we should set an example for all the world, rather than confine ourselves to the course which had hitherto been pursued. One objection to the word relief is that the idea associated with it is that of some great calamity, that we intend appropriating on some extraordinary occasions instead of meeting the common occurrences.

President Emma Smith remarked, we are going to do something extraordinary. When a boat is stuck on the Rapids, with a multitude of Mormons on board, we shall consider that a loud call for relief—we expect extraordinary occasions and pressing calls.

Elder Taylor arose and said, I shall have to concede the point; your arguments are so potent, I can not stand before them. I shall have to give way.

President Joseph Smith said: I also shall have to concede the point. All I shall have to give to the poor, I shall give to this society.

Counselor Whitney moved that this society be called the Nauvoo Female Relief Society. Seconded by Counselor Cleveland.

Eliza R. Snow offered an amendment by way of transposition of words, instead of the Nauvoo Female Relief Society, it shall be called the Female Relief Society of Nauvoo. Seconded by President Joseph Smith and carried.

The previous question was then put: Shall this society be called the Female Relief Society of Nauvoo? Carried unanimously.

President Joseph Smith: I now declare this society organized, with president and counselors, etc., according to parliamentary usages, and all who shall hereafter be admitted into this society must be free from censure and received by vote.

President Joseph Smith offered a five-dollar gold piece to commence the funds of the institution.

President Emma Smith requested that the gentlemen withdraw before they proceed to the choice of secretary and treasurer, as was moved by President Joseph Smith.

WILLARD RICHARDS, Secretary.

The gentlemen withdrew, when it was moved, seconded, and unanimously passed, that Eliza R. Snow be appointed secretary, and Phebe M. Wheeler assistant secretary.

Moved, seconded, and carried that Elvira A. Coles be appointed treasurer.

President Emma Smith then arose and made appropriate remarks on the subject of the society, its duties to others, also its relative duties to each other, etc., to seek out and relieve the distressed, that each member should be ambitious to do good, that the members should deal frankly with each other, to watch over the morals and be very careful of the character and reputation of the members of the institution, etc.

P. A. Hawkes, question: What shall we answer to interrogations relative to the object of this society?

President Emma Smith replied: For charitable purposes.

Moved and passed that Cynthia Ann Eldredge be admitted as a member of this society.

Counselor Sarah M. Cleveland donated to the fund of the society, 12½ cents; Sarah M. Kimball, $1.00; President Emma Smith, $1.00; Counselor Elizabeth A. Whitney, 50 cents.

President Emma Smith said that Mrs. Merrick is a widow, is industrious, performs her work well, therefore recommends her to the patronage of such as wish to hire needlework. Those who hire widows must be prompt to pay, and inasmuch as some have defrauded the laboring widow of her wages, we must be upright and deal justly.

The business of the society concluded, the gentlemen before mentioned returned.

Elder Richards appropriated to the fund of the society, $1.00.

Elder Taylor appropriated to the fund of the society, $2.00.

After singing, "Now let us rejoice in the day of salvation," Elder Taylor offered prayer.

Meeting adjourned for one week.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

1. If a man hears, believes, and obeys the gospel preached by a Utah elder, will he receive remission of his sins?
2. If a man hears, believes, and obeys the gospel preached by an elder of the Reorganized Church who has not been called and ordained of God, will he receive a remission of his sins?
3. Does the effect of the gospel depend upon the guilt, or innocence, of Joseph Smith, the Seer, as to polygamy?

Joseph Smith once wrote in effect: "If any man holding the priesthood attempted to lord it over his fellow men in any degree of unrighteousness, amen to that man's priesthood."

In the light of such a statement we should conclude that a baptism, to be fully acceptable to the Master, must be performed by one not in transgression, or practicing unrighteousness. Therefore, we would answer questions Nos. 1 and 2 in the negative, the rule for the Reorganized Church being the same as the one given to the church February, 1831:

"Again, I say unto you that it shall not be given to any one to go forth to preach my gospel, or to build up my church, except he be ordained by some one who hath authority, and it is known to the church that he has authority, and has been regularly ordained by the heads of the church."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 4.

We can see, however, that it might be possible for an elder to so teach and conduct himself while preaching, that, notwithstanding he might himself be in transgression, those to whom he was teaching and to whom he might administer in baptism would not be affected by his transgression, the Lord taking cognizance of the innocence, integrity, and earnestness of the believer. But such cases are and must be extremely rare.

We do not admit that the Utah eldership hold general authority to act in the name of the Lord and the church of Christ; though admitting that "there may be men among them who hold priesthood," as agreed to by the committee of conference between the Church of Christ (Hedrickite), of Independence, Missouri, and the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, a few years ago. This leaves it so that the standing and authority of each elder whose acts were called in question must be judged by the circumstances surrounding the case.

We should answer the last question thus: It does not necessarily follow that the acts of the priesthood, the eldership associated with Joseph the Seer, would be so affected by the guilt or innocence of Joseph Smith in regard to polygamy. Whether he was or was not a polygamist in the last years of his life neither voids nor makes good the promise of salvation given in the angel's message.

CORRECTION.

In HERALD for November 15, page 1091, last paragraph of "Another witness," the name "Grant," should read "Grout."

An error was made at bottom of first column on page 1092, in crediting half page sketch concerning dedication of church at Des Moines, etc., to the Des Moines Capital. The Capital had something over a column article in their issue the day before; but the half-page sketch with cuts appeared in the Daily News.

In the same issue, the secretary in reporting minutes of Kewanee conference stated that conference adjourned to meet "the first Saturday and Sunday of 1906." It should read "the first Saturday and Sunday of February, 1906."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. R. C. Evans is evidently doing a good work at Toronto, where he has been holding services in one of the opera-houses, the Majestic Theater, beginning November 5. He evidently aroused the antagonism of some Protestant clergymen, who got after him in the Toronto Globe, of the 6th, to which Bro. Evans replied in the same paper for the 7th. Bro. Evans anticipated baptizing some as a result of his agitation, and we hope his expectations will be realized.

A brother wants to know wherein does a man discard the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ, if he accepts the living, divine, all-powerful, and all-authoritative Christ as his creed. Can he do God's will except he first believe and so accept Christ that he may know of the doctrine? Perhaps a sufficient answer to this query would be the statement made by the Master himself in the seventh of John: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." It would appear clear, then, that it must be by the revelation of the Spirit of Christ that man should be thus able to speak of the doctrine.

We are requested to state whether a reunion committee would have a right to postpone a reunion for any definite time after the reunion itself had voted and set the time by vote at which it should be held, leaving the committee to select the place. We presume this question will have local application, and would say that it would depend largely upon the conditions prevailing in the locality where the reunion was to be held. Perhaps the most that could be said about it would be that the committee had presumed that such authority rested with them providing they saw a necessity that it be postponed. It would be a matter for the local district to determine either at the assembling of the reunion or at the district conference. It is not one that the Editor of the HERALD has the right to determine.

We are admonished from time to time that elders in the field, and local elders, as well, in their preaching-services from time to time, take occasion to assail the different creeds existent among religionists in harsh terms. The question arises, "Is this right, when there is no apparent cause for it?" The question suggests its own answer. If there is a call for it, then there is a necessity for it. We have frequently called the attention of the eldership to the fact that harsh denunciation and scathing antagonism can not be productive of the spirit of proper reception of the elder among the peoples where they travel or labor. What may be permissible in forensic dispute with an antagonist in open debate is not always either practical or justifiable in the presentation of our claims for gospel recognition among the people. It is far better to pursue an affirmative course of argument and presentation, maintaining our position from the word of God, than to assail the faiths of others. Whatever may be their absurdities or falsities of claims for doctrine may be made to appear by a steady pursuit of the gospel theories in an affirmative way, thus showing by contrast the better without offensively decrying the other. Try it, brethren.

I GREW convinced that truth, sincerity, and integrity in dealings between man and man were of the utmost importance to the felicity of life, and I formed written resolutions, which still remain in my journal book, to practice over while I lived.—Franklin.

"THE LABORERS."

Several have expressed their views of the parable found in Matthew 20:1-16; but none of the writers have the same idea of its meaning, so I will attempt to express my views. We agree with some that think it refers to individuals sent out to preach the gospel, or the ministry selected to officiate in the kingdom of God. The principal thought, in our opinion, was that the gospel was to be preached by different men at different periods of time. In examining the first verse we find that a householder went out to hire laborers. This householder evidently is Christ, as he is the one that selects the men to represent him. He made an agreement with those that he hired to give them a penny (or eternal life) for their service.

In the third verse we find that this same man went out again at another period or hour, and found "others" standing idle in the "market place." We would infer from this that those that were selected at this hour were not in the market place when the others were chosen in the morning hour, as the word others shows.

"Again in the sixth and ninth hour he did likewise."

He goes out again in the eleventh hour and finds some standing idle and he asks them the question, "Why stand ye here all the day idle? And they said, Because no man hath hired us." Here is where some seem to think that it could not be made to represent the different dispensations when the gospel was preached, as the language seems to carry with it the idea that those selected in the eleventh hour had stood all the time from Adam until Joseph Smith was selected to be an instrument in God's hand to help in restoring the work in the hour of God's judgment. If we notice the reading of the seventh verse closely it does not state that those selected in the eleventh hour had stood in the market place during the entire day, and the reason the question was asked, "Why stand ye here all the day idle," was to impress upon them if they did not work in the early morning (or could not because they were not hired), why not labor in the closing hour as well as in the heat of the day? Those selected in the eleventh hour expressed their willingness to work by saying, "No man hath hired us." No one would want to think there were set hours for men to obey the gospel when it was preached the entire day.

In Acts 10:34, 35 we read that "God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." And by the willingness of those selected in the eleventh hour to work, had they been on the stage of action, the Lord would have chosen them as readily as he would any of the others that were chosen.

Some may say that the Lord does not select his representatives all at once, and would try to make it appear as if those chosen in the eleventh hour were all chosen at the same time. But when we examine the language, we find that the men were chosen during the hour, and as a result could be selected at different times during the hour.

Those that complained because they received the same wages as those that labored in the last hour, had borne the burden and heat of the day and it seemed to them that they had earned more because of having to labor under more trying times. As Christ came in the ninth hour, it might refer to the time that those selected during that hour had to endure more, as we know the church passed into the wilderness as a result of persecution and other causes. Many had to give up their lives for the sake of the gospel and to some it might seem that those that suffered as the people of God did during the Dark Ages, especially as his servants did, should receive more than we do who labor in this hour. If we are just as willing to labor and do all we can to honor God and his law, should we not receive the same reward as those of any other age?

So we agree with those that believe this parable represents the different dispensations of time when the gospel was preached. As men had to be selected to officiate in harmony with God's law, it became necessary to select them at different times in the first or morning hour, third, sixth, ninth, and eleventh hours.

Hoping that we may all come to the correct understanding of the Scriptures,

Yours for truth,

L. G. HOLLOWAY.

HOLY GHOST; HOLY SPIRIT.

Much has been said at different times on the above subject, and recently in our Religio society at Springfield, Missouri, it was used as a subject for general debate, one side claiming that no part of the Holy Ghost has ever been given to any persons outside of our church. Following this discussion one of the brethren gave an able sermon on the operation of the Holy Spirit, and made the statement that at different times, while yet a member of another church, before ever hearing of the great latter-day work, but while trying to preach what he then believed to be the gospel, he had felt the influence of God's Holy Spirit throughout his entire being. I have also heard lay members bear testimony to the same fact with them, and I would not wish to tell them that they were mistaken in it either; for I know that there are many who have felt, when doing that which was right before God, the influence of the Holy Spirit; and I have felt it too, and rejoiced under its power.

Were we deceived in the Spirit? The brother plainly stated in his sermon that the Holy Ghost was not given as an abiding Comforter before receiving the birthright for it through the administration of the laying on of hands, yet the statement that a portion of the Holy Ghost had been given to him, and was also given to others outside of our church, was denounced by some of the ministry present as heresy.

This is a position I would not dare assume. There are yet points which present themselves to my mind which clearly show to me the work of the Holy Spirit on others outside of the church. These points have as yet been unsuccessfully met, and if I am in a wrong position regarding them, I would like some one to set me right. Would like to hear from the Presidency of the church on this subject, and the stand taken by them regarding it. In the record according to John, chapter 1, he is speaking of Christ and calls him "Light." In the ninth verse he says, "That was the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." How does Christ lighten every man that comes into the world? Is it not by his Spirit? Is not his Spirit the Holy Spirit? "Yes," some say, "but there is a difference between the 'Holy Spirit' and the 'Holy Ghost.'" But is there any difference? Christ says, "I and my Father are one." If they are "one" in all things—thought, mind, will, and work—would not the Spirit that emanates from them be the same? Christ is holy; is not his Spirit a Holy Spirit? God, the Father, is holy; would not his Spirit be a Holy Spirit? These two being "one," their Spirits must be one; hence the Holy Spirit or, in other terms, the Holy Ghost.

1 John 5:7 says: "There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one." My understanding is that this "Holy Ghost" here spoken of is the Spirit of the two—the "Father" and the "Word." If there is a difference between the "Holy Ghost" and the "Holy Spirit," then John must be wrong in his statement, and I am also wrong in my understanding of it; for there must be more than three. There would be God and his Spirit, Christ and his Spirit, and the Holy Ghost which would make five instead of three.

I fail as yet to understand that there is any difference between the "Holy Ghost" and the "Holy Spirit." The terms are used interchangeably; sometimes spoken of one way; sometimes the other way.

There are two general or ruling governing spirits abroad in the world, viz.: the Holy Spirit and the spirit of Satan. I would like to ask a few questions of those who hold that no portion of the Holy Ghost is ever given to any one outside of our work. Will the spirit of Satan ever lead a man to do a righteous act? What gives to some people that prevailing, inward desire to do right? I am speaking of those outside of the church. Would the spirit of Satan ever lead an individual out of another church into the gospel fold? If it was not the spirit of Satan that led you to see the gospel light, what was it? It must have been the Holy Spirit. But some say that there is an individual spirit in each man, every person having his own spirit, and that the natural desires of this spirit are for righteousness, in those whose acts are right acts; and that the Bible declares that the "inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." (Job 32:8.) We admit all this and agree with it, but wish to ask, if the people of other churches and of the world do not receive any portion of the Holy Spirit, and yet the "inspiration of the Almighty" giveth understanding to the spirit in man, how and by what spirit is this "inspiration of the Almighty" given? It does not seem to me that it would be given by the spirit of Satan. If it be true that it is given by the spirit of Satan, and not by the Holy Spirit, then God and Satan must be working together in this regard at least, and this I could not accept. How will those who deny that others have a portion of the Holy Spirit meet the points coming up in our present Sunday-school lessons, especially the introduction of lesson 7 for November 12; also Acts 10:44-48? This plainly shows that those people who were with Cornelius (Gentiles) had the Holy Ghost poured out upon them before baptism. Some may say that this was a special manifestation for the purpose of showing that God was going to give the gospel to the Gentiles as well as to the Jews. If this be true, God must be a partial God: giving to them what he would not give to others; showing partiality to just those of Cornelius' friends who had come in with him. How will they meet the statement found in Book of Mormon (small edition), page 452, paragraph 4, which says that the Gentiles would be blessed because of their belief in Christ "in and of the Holy Ghost," which should witness to them of the Father? And it also says that because of their belief, in the latter day shall the truth come unto them. My understanding is that by the influence of the Holy Ghost upon the Gentiles it would cause a belief in Christ and give them a witness of the Father; and by reason of this knowledge, or belief, in the latter day, the truth, or the gospel, would be given to them.

This influence of the Holy Ghost must have come without the laying on of hands, for the truth or gospel had not yet been given in its fullness, which taught this principle. It could not have been the spirit of Satan which would give to these Gentiles this influence of the Holy Spirit preparing the way for the gospel. The same thought of the Holy Ghost being poured out upon the Gentiles is spoken of by Christ in Book of Mormon, page 462, paragraph 9; and we see that this is given before the fullness of the gospel has yet reached them.

I do not hold that the Holy Ghost is given as an abiding Comforter until we accept the gospel and follow its ordinances, thus giving us the right to it as such; but we must come to this conclusion, from all of these things, that a portion of the Holy Ghost is given to all men, and that it leads them to righteousness, and prepares the way for the acceptance of the full gospel of the Son of God. If I am wrong in these premises, I wish to be instructed rightly, that in my testimony and administration of the word of God I may say nothing contrary to truth. Would like also for Bro. Hiram L. Holt to give a full explanation of his understanding of the parable of "the laborers," as he speaks of in a late HERALD, either in a personal letter to me or through the columns of the HERALD. Would prefer to have it through HERALD that all may be benefited by the explanation.

THE HOLY GHOST. WHO MAY RECEIVE IT?

SERMON DELIVERED BY ELDER WILLIAM NEWTON, AT MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, AUGUST 6, 1905.

(Reported by J. D. Howell.)

I ask an interest in your prayers this morning, that whilst I am endeavoring to speak to you, I may have a portion of the quickening power of the Master, so that the lesson may be profitable to us; without it, it is apt to be but a dead letter. I desire to direct your attention to the first verse of the second chapter of Ephesians: "And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins."

I understand this to be the condition of men who come into the world—dead in trespasses and sins, having no life.

You will remember that when our first parents were placed in the garden, our heavenly Father commanded them that they were not to eat of the forbidden fruit; that the punishment for disobedience was death; how they partook of the forbidden fruit and were cast out. They ceased to be in touch with the Almighty; could not commune with him. They became dead, and every one that has been born into the world from that time to the present has partaken of this punishment more or less. Some have been quickened very early in life. John the Baptist, the forerunner of Jesus, had that quickening power given to him at a very early age. It is sad to contemplate the present condition of mankind; but it was not long before our heavenly Father delivered to his disobedient creation the great scheme of redemption—the plan by which his children could be redeemed from the curse of their disobedience. In the sixth chapter of Genesis, however, the Lord is reported to say, "My Spirit shall not always strive with man."

Now many in this day and age in which we live, in the church and out of the church, teach that none can have the Spirit of God until they are baptized into the church and kingdom of God—until they have had hands laid upon them.

Now, I want to state here this morning, emphatically, that that is not true, no matter who teaches it. The passage I have referred to makes the statement that God's Spirit shall not always strive with man, showing conclusively that it does strive with man, enabling him to realize his true condition, enabling him to see that he is dead in trespasses and sins, and enabling him to see the great plan that he must comply with in order that he might be redeemed from that condition.

Many are of the opinion that they can come and serve the God of heaven just when they choose, that they can just put off their obedience to the great plan of redemption until danger faces them, and until they are face to face with some calamity. That also is not true. Men can not come just when they choose to serve their heavenly Father: but they must come when that power of the Spirit is striving with them. On no other occasion can men come.

I wish to give you open quotations this morning to support my statements. The first chapter of Proverbs is very pointed and very clear upon this point, and we will read a portion of it commencing at the twenty-third verse, which shows that God has poured out his Spirit upon the people:

Turn you at my reproof: behold, I will pour out my Spirit unto you. I will make known my words unto you. [Not make you believe, not merely give you faith, but will make known his mind and will, his word, the plan by which men can come to Christ.] Because I have called, and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded; but ye have set at nought all my counsel, and would none of my reproof: I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh; when your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you. Then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer, they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me: for that they hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the Lord: they would none of my counsel; they despised all my reproof. Therefore shall they eat of the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices. For the turning away of the simple shall stay them, and the prosperity of fools shall destroy them. But whoso hearkeneth unto me shall dwell safely, and shall be quiet from fear of evil.

This is the message, and the Scriptures from Genesis to Revelation verify the statement I have made to you.

I will read another statement from the prophet Isaiah, commencing at the twelfth verse of the sixty-fifth chapter; and not only is the statement true concerning those out of the church, but those in the church who do not live right, and who do not do their duty. It reads:

Therefore will I number you to the sword, and ye shall all bow down to the slaughter: because when I called, ye did not answer; when I spake, ye did not hear; but did evil before mine eyes, and did choose that wherein I delighted not. Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, my servants shall eat, but ye shall be hungry: behold, my servants shall drink, [That is, those that are faithful and do their duty.] but ye shall be thirsty: behold, my servants shall rejoice, but ye shall be ashamed; Behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart, but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for vexation of spirit. And ye shall leave your name for a curse unto my chosen: for the Lord God shall slay thee, and call his servants by another name.

Now this, I repeat, is the message from Genesis to Revelation—the Spirit of God is imparted to all people.

I must read another quotation to support this, which is recorded in the first chapter of Romans, commencing at the twentieth verse:

For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse.

And many Latter Day Saints are without excuse, for they are rejected, and will stand rejected until they shall obey God's laws as contained, not only in the Bible, but in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, who must not only say but do.

Because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful; but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened. Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools, [There are many high-minded in the church, not sufficiently humble and Christlike, and who, although they think much of themselves, become fool, and without power.] and changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and to four-footed beasts, and creeping things. Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness, through the lusts of their own hearts, to dishonor their own bodies between themselves. Who changed the truth of God into a lie, and worshiped and served the creature more than the Creator, who is blessed for ever.

* I often wonder when the time cometh when mankind shall stand before the great Judge of all the earth, and their individual acts and doings shall pass before them and their Creator, how many will stand justified, feeling that they have a conscience void of offense. No man is without excuse, for the great scheme of redemption is shown to the people so that they may understand right from wrong; and to do right is to observe what Jesus has enjoined upon us—what we are to do.

I now turn your attention for a moment to the sixteenth chapter of Saint John's gospel where it is recorded that Jesus said that the Spirit must be given to the people to strive with them. He says:

It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you. And when he is come, he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment.

And he gives the reason for this: "Because they believe not in me." In the seventh chapter of Acts we find the words, "Ye stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost: as your fathers did, so do ye," which is sufficient to show that the Holy Ghost is undoubtedly imparted to the people to show them their condition. That power, in other words, is the quickening power, and it comes to help men to put away that which is evil and do that which is right. It is not given to the people as an abiding Comforter.

Many people say, "What about Cornelius? He received the Holy Ghost before he was baptized." That is correct; he did. But it was only given to him to show him, in answer to his prayers, what was the right thing for him to do, and would not have remained long with him if he had not obeyed the truth and been initiated into the kingdom of God. "My Spirit," saith the Lord, "shall not always strive with man." And if Cornelius had not obeyed, the Spirit would have been withdrawn from him, and there would have been no light; but he would have been left in darkness.

There is a way by which man can be redeemed, and that way is free to all; for God is no respecter of persons. Men are only respected according as they do that which is right. And the humblest here this morning is the one most favored of God, and the one to whom the Spirit will be given. God wants all men to be redeemed; but you can not be saved in your own or any other man's way. We can only be saved in God's way. And in order to attain that condition, we must have the right kind of faith. And so the Bible says, "He that cometh to God must have faith that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."

I am sorry to say there are many who do not diligently seek the Almighty as they should do. I do not believe that loafers can be saved; neither cold nor indifferent people. I care not what you know. It is not what you know that is going to save you; but it is the amount that you do, that you put into practice, that is going to be of lasting benefit to you, and the Bible again says, "For not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be purified." We learn from this, then, that in order to be saved we must diligently seek the Master; and there is much that is enjoined upon us to do individually and collectively; and in order that we may know fully what is required of us, we must become acquainted with the contents of this book. You do not merely want to hear of the book, but you want to have God's law in your hearts—printed there—that from the abundance of your heart your mouth may speak of the good things of the kingdom. That is where the Lord wants his law to be, as recorded by the prophet Jeremiah, and in Hebrews, and in various other parts of the Scriptures.

If you have the right kind of faith, it will cause you to observe all that Jesus has enjoined upon you to do, and in order that you may have this kind of faith it is necessary that you should put aside your own thoughts and ways—minister and layman. This may not be easy to do; but I will say this this morning, that until you are able to put away your own thoughts and acts and doings, and do that which God has enjoined upon you to do, you will never be free from the power of the adversary—you have not brought yourself into subjection to God's mind and will.

Jesus says, "If you love me," and surely this is the proper way of ascertaining the truth, "keep my commandments"—commandments given for our welfare, temporal and spiritual, commandments that had been given from the Father; for Jesus says, For I do nothing but what my Father commanded; nothing but what I saw my Father do before me. It was his mission to faithfully observe what his Father had commanded him to observe. Jesus kept the command because he loved God; and if we love Jesus, we will be humble, meek, and gentle doers of the truth. It will not be looked upon as a task or a burden, but we will do it because we want to do it; and we will not leave out one command or permit any one to prevent us from observing it. Until we are brought to this condition, we can not be saved, neither can we have the quickening power we have been speaking about; for the only possible way by which we can be brought into touch with the Almighty is by obeying his commands.

The Scriptures are very plain on this point, and in the sixth chapter of Romans we find this passage, "So many of us as were baptized into Jesus." Baptism is no good unless we come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and have a determination to renounce that which is wrong and do that which is right—do it with a zeal that is worthy of imitation. When we then come forth, we come forth to be baptized into—i-n-t-o. I am not much of a speller, but i-n-t-o spells into, and not out of Christ. We can not live out of Christ (no one can), and it is therefore necessary that we should be baptized into Christ if we are to live. Peter says we must partake of his divine nature; and if we do partake of his divine nature, I am convinced that we will not do anything contrary to the will of God. Neither will we think little of each other, or be proud or quarrelsome, or be anything but meek and loving; for God is love. And we must remember, as we were told last night, that above all things we can not make progress in this work except we do love one another, and be ready to do for each other just as much as we would do for any member of our natural body, and be just as concerned if any one is afflicted as if any of our natural members were afflicted. Besides, not only is it enjoined upon us that we should love one another, but we are commanded to love our enemies. And if we love our enemies, we will not do them an injury, but will try to do them good. We must try to win them to Christ, if possible, and do just what the prophet tells us we should do: "Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins." Being warned ourselves, we warn our neighbors, and everything will be done in the spirit of love.

The apostle Paul in the eighth chapter of Romans makes this statement:

There is therefore now no condemnation [what a thought] to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, [which is an enemy to man,] but after the Spirit. For the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, hath made me free from the law of sin and death.

Do we want to be free? The only people who are truly free are those who have partaken of the nature of Jesus and have been baptized into him.

The fifteenth chapter of John is very fine. I will read a portion of it. Jesus here says that he is the vine, and that his Father is the husbandman, that is, the one that cares for the vine. I am convinced that he is a wise vineyard-dresser, a wise husbandman, and that he makes no mistakes. "Every branch," says Jesus, "in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away." Taketh away from the vine! And when the branch is taken away from the vine it is taken away from its source of life, and it dies as a matter of course.

The Savior taught that you can not gather good fruit from a bad tree, or bad fruit from a good tree; and that those who abide in Jesus produce fruit. What fruit? As soon as we want to "shake off the coals from our garments, and arise in the strength of the Lord," arise to a knowledge of the blessings that our Father is waiting to bestow upon us, we will begin to produce the fruit; for the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, patience, brotherly kindness, virtue, etc. This will be the natural sequence of our being in Christ; for we must partake of the nature of the vine. If, however, we are not producing such fruit, the Father will surely take us away from the source of life. But if we produce the right kind of fruit he will purge us. I like that word; it seems to make me feel good. If I produce fruit the Father purges me—he purges all that is unclean away, and is not that nice to think about?

The mere matter of attending church will not benefit us much, for it is quite possible for regular church-goers to become worse devils than they were before; and the last state of some men will be worse than the first.

I must read some more of this fifteenth chapter of John, because it is very fine:

Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you. [Now mark] Abide in me [not out of Christ], and I in you. As the branch can not bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine, no more can ye, except ye abide in me. [You can not produce fruit until you abide in Christ and partake of his nature.] I am the vine, ye are the branches. He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without me ye can do nothing. [Nothing pleasing to God.] If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them and cast them into the fire, and they are burned. [You shall burn unless you are in Christ and producing fruit—you can see that plain enough.] If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you.

You can have your prayers answered then. Your sick will be healed, and your lame will walk, and there is nothing that is impossible if you will abide in Christ. You will become the sons and daughters of God, and your eyes will be opened so that you can see, and your hearts will be able to understand, and you will be guided continuously by the almighty power of God, and his angels will encamp round about you.

The Psalmist says:

A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it [pestilence and destruction] shall not come nigh thee. Only with thine eyes shalt thou behold and see the reward of the wicked. Because thou hast made the Lord, . . . even the Most High, thy habitation.

And I am very pleased, Saints, that so many of us have been engrafted into Jesus, and that we are partakers of his nature, and that we are continuously hungering and thirsting after righteousness; that we love each other, and are doing all we can to build up the church and kingdom of God and disseminate the truth, and are presenting ourselves, not only when we come to conference and to meetings like the present are, but all the time, as living sacrifices in the great work we are engaged in. You are not your own, but you have been purchased, and all that you have and are are simply intrusted to you. You will have to give an account of it all to your Master. Use it right, brethren and sisters, that you may hear the plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things."

Now, the Master wants us to enjoy all he has in store for us. He wants to be with us continuously, and wants us to tell him our trials, our troubles, and our difficulties, for he cares for us and does not wish any one of us to be tried or tested above what we are able to bear.

It is many years since I had the privilege of speaking to Saints in this place, but I am glad to be with you once more. I do not know whether I shall return to this land again or not. If I know my own mind I shall not; but if the Master desires me to do so, I shall have no will of my own. His will be done. I want to abide in Jesus. I want him to be my witness. And whether I do or not he is my witness. And, Saints, you can not conceal anything from him; for he looks upon each one of us as we are. He is not only our witness, Saints, but he is our commander. He has given very many commands which must be observed; for Jesus says, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded."

Do not forget your prayers; but pray without ceasing. Then there is something else—he has told us all to "watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation." What shall we watch? We must watch our thoughts; for evil thoughts come to all of us. There is no wrong in that; but if you do not wish to cherish them, lift up your voices to your heavenly Father and ask him to kindly remove them, and he will remove them. But if you want to cherish them—and I have had much experience in this matter—he will not take away your evil thoughts. If you want to make your salvation sure, and if you want Jesus to abide with you and produce the fruits of the Spirit, you must watch your thoughts and lift up your voices in supplication when you feel weak.

The Mohammedans, we are told, pray eight or ten times a day (I was among them for eight years); but how many times do Latter Day Saints call aloud to their God? Three times a day? I do not know whether the prayers of the Mohammedans are effectual or not—God knows.

Jesus has commanded us to search the Scriptures. You must observe that command, too, or you can not be saved. He has commanded us that we shall not give our thoughts to worldly things, and we must obey that command if we are to keep in the fold. He has also commanded us that we are to pay our tithing. This command does not seem to suit every one; but if they do not obey they shall be burned. This statement is made in the Book of Covenants and in the Book of Mormon, and I believe these books for I know they are true. You must pay your tithing, and that not grudgingly, for God does not want that kind of offering—you had better keep it. I do not believe any stingy Saint will ever go to heaven.

As I go round, I hear the prayers of many that the plan of salvation may be made known to all people; but when it comes to giving practical help to secure this they do not come up to the mark. Men may dole out a penny. Jesus gave himself and all that he had, and left the glory of his Father that he might save the people; and his command is that we should follow him. We must pay our tithing. Do as you would be done by and the measure that you give to others will be measured to you in return. Jesus tells us that the measure shall be shaken down and that it will run over. You must forgive others their trespasses, as you want others to forgive your trespasses.

I wish to remind you, in conclusion, that Jesus is not only our witness, but it is as our leader that we must follow him.

Now, Saints, you know that I love this work. I have loved it to the extent that I have tried to sacrifice for it and have come alone to this land that I might assist in its progress. I have left my wife, my family, and my business to come, and have had to pass through many privations in consequence, because I love my country and the people in it. And I have come to the conclusion that the Spirit of God is ceasing to strive with the masses. I believe the Gentile times are closing, and my prayer is that those in the church may get into the condition that they may produce fruit, that they may be one with Jesus as he is one with the Father; that they may have an abundant entrance into his holy presence. This is my prayer in the name of Jesus. Amen.

WHAT IS THE MATTER WITH THE CHURCH?

The bishops, the preachers, the laymen, all, are asking the question: What is the matter with the church? Why does it no longer attract men?

One: Sunday, not long ago, in a rather large congregation, the writer was one of five men in attendance! Only five men in a large congregation!

This was an extreme case, no doubt. But who will deny that it is an example of a general symptom?

Men do not care for the church. That is not to say that men are no longer religious. True, the failure of the church to feed the religious hunger of the world is causing increasing numbers to lose faith in religion. But men who intelligently discriminate between merely human institutions and divine principles are just as religious as such men ever were.

And there are prophets in the pulpit to-day. But the church does not know them, and I dare not name them. To name them would but expose them to the scoffing of the church.

The matter with the church is that it is wanting in religion.

It may answer the need of the family, but not of society: of the individual, but not of the mass.

Yesterday was the day of the circuit-rider. The family was so loosely connected with the social body—men lived so far apart—that the preacher was forced to go far to find a small congregation. The sermon is the same to-day as then, except as to hell-fire; but human society is different. Then the preacher warned his hearers against stealing purses—and it sufficed as to theft. Trade was a thing so simple, and the values were so obvious, that each individual was competent to protect himself against inequity in matters of barter. Then the purely social relations were few in kind, but the preacher laid down the law concerning them all.

To-day the industrial life of the country is intensely social, and the individual is extremely dependent upon the integrity of the social mechanism for his equity in the final distribution. Will any man pretend that the distribution is equitable?

Look at the reports of the Inter-State Commerce Commission; look at the revelations in regard to the great life insurance companies; the beef trust, the steel trust, and many other private monopolies, all of which take toll from the masses who work for what they get. It is not merely that these monopolies cheat the public out of hundreds of millions annually; a more direful effect is that they deprive multitudes of the chance of gaining an honest livelihood. Monopoly creates a misbalance between supply and demand, making work scarce relatively to the number of would-be workers. Thus starvation for ever lurks in the lower places of the social world.

But what is the organized church doing toward correcting this enormous evil?

A certain sinner of Boston has done more toward eradicating the commercial villiany of the times within the last year than nine tenths of the clergy have done in all their lives.

"What is the matter with the church?" This: The church has abandoned society to the tender mercies of commercial pirates, whose gifts have purchased silence from the clergy in general, and frantic support from some clergymen in particular.

Here and there a prophet cries aloud from the pulpit, unheard by the church at large, or, if heard, condemned as an agitator or a sensationalist! The whole secular world, recognizing the prevailing political and commercial diabolism, is boldly calling spades spades, but the clergy calmly and circumspectly continues to call spades "alleged mechanical instruments, used in excavating—perhaps!"

The preacher will valorously denounce the Sunday peanut peddler—and board the Sunday trolley-car at the close of his sermon. He will cry anathema upon the boys who play ball on Sunday, and on the same day himself patronize a transportation system that chains multitudes to the wheel of toil seven days a week, year in and year out.

The preacher declares that his duty is to inculcate the fundamental principles of morality, leaving the practical program to his hearers. Jesus commanded: Thou shalt not steal. But he did not end with merely stating a central principle; he went into the Temple, overturned the tables of the money-mongers, and branded them as thieves.

What good is a principle that can not be applied? If the shepherd dare not interpret his principles in relation to the practical affairs of life, can he expect his sheep to do so? If the learned teacher dare not place his hand upon a thing and say: It is accursed, will the humble learner venture to do so? Will the rank and file go where the captain dare not even point the way with definiteness?

"What is the matter with the church?"

This: It strains at the gnats of individual peccadilloes, and swallows the camels of social diabolisms.

Here and now the kingdom of heaven is at hand. Let not him who fails to strive for heavenly conditions here and now flatter his recreant soul with the hope of heaven hereafter.

The hypocrite will pretend to scorn wealth; will characterize desire for wealth as sordid; will advise contentment with poverty; will denounce the poor for their unrest, on the one hand, and on the other will fly to the defense of the rich oppressor, while always his groveling soul is drunk with the contemplation of the golden streets and jasper walls of the New Jerusalem! a city whose boundless wealth he dearly hopes to share; wealth that he is striving for, tooth and nail, by hook or by crook, to capture.

Justice demands that the social mechanism deliver to every one the equivalent of his contribution to the total product. Or, to state it in another way: Justice demands that the social mechanism deliver to no one more than the equivalent of his contribution to the total product. But the prevailing social mechanism delivers countless millions to some individuals, and leaves multitudes in abject poverty.

Some of the sheep are grazing in green pastures, beside the still waters, while many are famishing in the desert. But the shepherd dare not interfere, except to adjure the hungry bleaters to "be content with that condition in life to which," etc., ending with an infamous blasphemy!

And then he wonders why the poor do not go to church!—Edward Howell Putnam, in the Public, November 4, 1905.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Oh, Love of God.

Oh, love of God, how strong and true!
Eternal, and yet ever new;
Uncomprehended and unbought,
Beyond all knowledge and all thought!

Oh, heavenly love, how precious still!
In days of weariness and ill,
In nights of pain and helplessness,
To heal, to comfort, and to bless!

Oh, wide-embracing, wondrous love,
We read thee in the sky above;
We read thee in the earth below,
In seas that swell and streams that flow.

We read thee best in him who came
To bear for us the cross of shame,
Sent by the Father from on high,
Our life to live, our death to die.

Oh, love of God, our shield and stay
Through all the perils of our way;
Eternal Love, in thee we rest,
For ever safe, for ever blest.

—Horatius Bonar.

Parental Duty.

It was with great reluctance that I accepted this task; but realizing that we generally learn more from failures than from successes in life, I give a few thoughts as they have occurred to me from time to time.

HOME GOVERNMENT.

Volumes have been written on this subject, and as much more might possibly be written with profit. Latter Day Saints would do well to study the "Home Column" in our church papers. I have seen some who ignore this department.

We are largely creatures of circumstances, and can not always carry out our ideal plans in the government of our home affairs. No iron-clad rule can be made to fit all cases.

The majority of parents do not understand their children. They are kept under restraint and are not properly developed. They live lives of fear rather than of love, which should not be; as in childhood impressions are received and habits contracted which impels them toward the good and true, or toward the evil and false. Parents should study the character of each child. Some parents live to be slaves for their children, which is no kindness to them, for when the time comes that they are to depend upon themselves, they are not prepared,—consequently they are a failure. Other parents raise their children to be their servants, which is the other extreme.

Parents and children should have confidence in each other, (it is a sad fact that few children confide in their parents,) working together as loving companions, and the seed properly sown will bear fruit to the honor and glory of God. Children should be taught to be courteous in speech and manner, and they will live to honor their parents. They should not be allowed to argue their parents out of their decisions, or they will soon grow to think they know best. Make them useful and helpful, and they are happy. Let them early learn habits of neatness and when you are weary you will not have to wait on their carelessness. Mothers would do well not to overtax their strength more than is absolutely necessary, for in after-years they will need all their reserved forces.

EXAMPLE.

Whatever parents desire their children to be they should be themselves. Whatever high ideal they hold for their children, they should ascertain if it be practicable, and, if so, strive to bring themselves to the same high standard. It has been truthfully said that "the child's soul is the chart of a man yet to be filled up with the elements of character." These elements are first outlined by the parents, and with what delicacy should they use the pencil of personal influence! Children are more easily led to be good by loving kindness, than to be forced into obedience by threats of punishment. Parents do not think how far a word of praise will often go with children.

SPIRITUAL INSTRUCTION.

As with every other branch of child-training, the spiritual instruction should begin when the child is very young. And, as "actions speak louder than words," so the parents (although the greater responsibility generally falls upon the mother) should day by day try to live near to the heavenly precepts as laid down in the word of God: not as a task or irksome duty, but as grateful service, with words of thankfulness to the Father, each evening at least, for mercies received, either great or small. A mother might take her young child, and with the object-lesson at the head of our Zion's Hope, teach all the first principles of the gospel in a simple manner, which, together with the beautiful lessons in the Sunday-school Quarterlies, and the Spirit of the Master, ought to place the rising generation far ahead of any previous generation in the knowledge of the things of God and how to use them. The training of a new-born soul for eternity is a grave responsibility, and parents need consecrated lives to accomplish it.

GENERAL EDUCATION.

It would seem at first thought that there would be little to say on this subject, in this land of free schools with all the equipments needful for systematic work but—"send the children to school." However, there are a great many things to be learned outside of books or schoolrooms that would help to make a good general education. The child's mind should be directed as he goes along, to know how to apply the knowledge learned from books; in fact, develop the "sixth sense," by coming in contact with the outside world sufficiently to learn that this life is not as a fairy-story. It seems to me to be a great mistake to shield a child from knowing anything of the realities of life till he is almost a man, and then let him suddenly awaken to the fact that life is not what it seemed. A knowledge of the world is more than necessary to enable us to live wisely and this knowledge should begin in the nursery. Who but the parents is best qualified to so instruct? Encourage the children to read good books, and they will not be apt to hide themselves away to read dime novels, which have done so much to injure the minds of boys and girls.

BUSINESS EDUCATION.

In this age of the world a young man turned loose without a business training in some line would be like a "ship on the ocean without chart or compass." So the duty of parents would be to try to discover the trend of the young minds under their care, and not force them to learn some trade or profession that is distasteful, but seek by all means to do all they possibly can to help them to a business training in whatever they prefer to choose. What a child is best adapted for, that will he be most likely to make a success. I fear too few of our girls are fitting themselves for the great object of their creation, namely, wives and mothers, how to prepare good, wholesome food, etc. I would be in favor of more industrial schools than there are.

The allurements and excitements of the world, the vanities, ambitions, and pride of life have sad influence on far too many. But I refrain from lecturing on this subject.

INFLUENCE AND TRAINING.

It is hard to separate this from "home government." Some wise person has said, "The time to begin to train a child is a hundred years before it is born." As we can not go back, or wholly undo that which has been done, we will have to accept our condition and natures as they are, and, as parents, Sunday-school workers, and Religians, begin, with the aid of the "restored" light, to develop ourselves and lay the foundation for the future generation to build upon.

We should always be truthful, honest, and punctual. Most children are experts in discovering "white lies," or any other means of deception so often imposed upon them. Parents should seek by all means to know what kind of company their children are keeping, and be sure to provide some pleasant means of keeping them at home evenings. The subject of amusements has been discussed in a former convention, so will let that rest. The wise man has said, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

Shut-in Time.

It's shut-in time with those I love.

The curtains are drawn down.

Though stars may shine the world above

Or wintry clouds may frown,

Close by the fire our chairs are placed,

And apples, nuts, and cake

Are brought for old and young to taste

What comfort now we take!

It's shut-in time.

Some Sunday-School "Bees."

Be on time.

Be of good cheer.

Be in your place every Sunday.

Be thoroughly and prayerfully in earnest.

Be filled with the power that only the Holy Spirit can give.

Be much in prayer, remembering that:

"More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of."

Be willing to set aside your own preferences if it is for the good of the school that you should do so.

Be sure to take part in all the opening exercises of the school, for if you do not your boys and girls will not feel that they should do so.

Be patient and "Never think that God's delays are God's denials." In his own time and in his own way he will give you the rewards for which every consecrated Sunday-school teacher prays.

Be true to yourself, true to your highest and holiest convictions, true to the Master whose child you are, and whose little ones you are trying to teach.

Be filled with enthusiasm, for enthusiasm is contagious. It is true that "Enthusiasm is the genius of sincerity, and truth accomplishes no victories without it."

Be forbearing, learning from the example of Jesus to love tenderly and forgive much. "Let the blood of Jesus, which implores pardon for you in heaven, obtain it from you for others."

Be as generous as possible in your support of the the school, bearing in mind that, "in giving, a man receives more than he gives, and the more is in proportion to the worth of the thing given."

Be gentlemanly if your are a man and womanly if you are a woman, for it sometimes happens that there is the familiarity that "breeds contempt" in the relations existing between teachers and scholars in the Sunday-school.

Be courteous, for man has no more winning attribute than that of simple courtesy, and there is no surer sign of the Spirit of God in the heart than for one to be courteous to all of God's children, no matter what their station in life may be.

Be slow to grumble and find fault. Mr. Moody gave utterance to a great truth when he said: "When a man is full of the Holy Ghost, he is the very last man to be complaining of other people." And the Sunday-school is the last place in which one should make one's complaints.

Be joyful with the serene joy that comes from calm and perfect faith in God and in being obedient to his will. Let your boys and girls know by your own example that the religion of Jesus is full of joy and peace.

Be sure of this: God's promises are sure and steadfast, and if we but sow the seed he will give the increase. "Be ye faithful in well-doing," is his simple message to every Sunday-school teacher and officer throughout his earthly kingdom.—Selected.

Work for Boys.—Work for Girls.—Legitimate Work Not to Be Despised.

As the age of the boys and girls is not defined in the subject, we will begin with our very small boys and girls, even in the nursery. How many things they can do to help mamma in the way of tidying their playroom after tiring of their playthings! And as they advance in years they will be able to do little things about the house and run errands. To my mind there are greater opportunities for small boys in the country. In spring-time they can have their own little garden and carefully watch and tend it through the warm summer months, and when harvest-time comes they can see the fruits of their labor. Then a little later, their minds are illuminated with greater opportunities that will be presented to them, for the seed of progression is planted in the heart of every true American boy and girl. The secret of success in life is for boys and girls to be ready for their opportunities when they come to them.

The story is told of General Grant that when he was a boy, his mother sent him to a neighbor's house one morning to borrow some butter, and, as he entered without knocking, he overheard the reading of a letter from the son of the neighbor, who was at West Point. He had failed to pass the examination and was coming home. Without waiting for breakfast he ran to the officer of the district and said, "Will you appoint me to West Point if Mr. — fails?" Mr. Hamer laughed. "If he don't go through, no use for you to try, 'Uly.'" But Mr. Hamer promised, and the next day the defeated lad came home. "The Congressman laughed at my sharpness and gave me the appointment," says General Grant. "It was my mother being without butter that made me General and President." But he was mistaken. It was his own shrewdness to see the chance and the promptness to seize it that started him upward. What grand opportunities are before our young people of to-day! The careless, the slow, the unobservant, the lazy, fail to see it until it is gone. The energetic and wide-awake fellow detects it instantly and catches it when it is going. The youth who starts out in life determined to make the most of his opportunities and let nothing escape him which he can possibly use for his own advancement, who keeps his hands open that he may seize every opportunity, will be sure to live a successful life. Although millions are out of employment in the United States to-day, how difficult it is to find a thoroughly reliable and industrious young man or woman for any position, whether as a domestic servant, an office boy, clerk, or bookkeeper, or whatever we may want.

This is a superficial age. Very few young people prepare for their work. Of thousands of young women trying to get their living at typewriting, many are so ignorant, so deficient in the common branches even, that they spell badly, use bad grammar,—in fact, they murder the English language. The first thing a youth entering the city to make his home needs to do is to make himself a necessity to the person who employs him. Whatever he may have been at home,—it counts for nothing until he has done something to make known the quality and stuff that is in him. If he shirks work, however humble it may be, the work will soon be inclined to shirk him. But the youth who comes to the city determined to make something of himself and who is not afraid of doing his best, whether he is paid for it or not, is not long in finding employment. It is the youth that is deserving that wins his way to the front, and, when once he has been tested, his promotion is only a question of time.

It is the same with young women. There are seemingly no places for them where they can earn a decent living, but the moment they fill their places worthily, there is room enough for them and progress is rapid. It is the staying qualities that have been inwrought from childhood which are now in requisition, and the success of the boy or girl is determined by the amount of energetic character that has been developed in the early years at home. Take up the experiences of every man or woman who has made a mark in the world for the last hundred years, and it has been the sterling qualities of the home-training that have caused the success of later years.

The first thing to do, dear boys and girls, is to find what you are the best qualified to do, and then do it with your whole heart and mind. A selfish vocation never pays. If it belittles the manhood or womanhood, blights affection, chills the cheerfulness, and shrivels the soul, do not touch it. Choose that occupation if possible which will be the most helpful to you in every way.

Do not think you have no chance in life because you have no capital to begin with. Most of the rich men of to-day began poor. The chances are you would be ruined if you had capital. It is estimated that five out of every seven of the millionaires began by making with their own hands the article on which they made their fortune. The great things of the world have not been done by men of large means. Want has been the great schoolmaster of the race. Necessity has been the mother of all great inventions. It is a long, rough road at first, but, like the ship on the ocean, you must lay your course for the place where you hope to land and take advantage of all favorable circumstances.

John Jacob Astor left home at seventeen to acquire a fortune. His capital consisted of two dollars and three resolutions: "To be honest, to be industrious, and not to gamble." Most people in our day are afraid of letting children go to work too young, but to my mind there is more danger in their not seeking employment early enough. The saying is as true as it is old, that "an idle mind is Satan's workshop."

Perhaps we have said enough about work that procures the bread that perishes. Will mention a few thoughts about work which procures for us life everlasting. Christ did not say, Come unto me all ye pleasure-seekers, ye indolent and ye lazy; but, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden."

WHAT WORK CAN OUR BOYS AND GIRLS DO

in the Sunday-school? Need I ask what they are doing? God will not have his work made manifest by cowards. We can not make ourselves known through great deeds at first, but by enlarging on the talent God has given us we can reach the top as did the little boy who was asked to learn a poem. When asked by his teacher how he did it, as he was a very dull boy, he said: "I watched a snail crawl up the wall little by little. It did not stop or turn back, but went on and on. And I thought I could do the same with the poem. So I learned it little by little and did not give up. By the time the snail reached the top of the wall I had learned the poem." And well might we as children learn a lesson from God's creatures, for after all we are only overgrown boys and girls. A little boy was asked how he learned to skate. "Oh, by getting up every time I fell down." Do we do this or are we inclined to stay down after we fall? When we get in a tight place and everything goes against us till it seems we can not hold on a minute longer we must not give up. Stick to the thing and carry it through. Believe you were made for the place you fill, and that no one else can fill it as well. Put forth your whole energies. Be awake, electrify yourself, and go forth to the task. Only once learn to carry a thing through in all its completeness and proportion, and you will be a hero. You will think better of yourself and others will think better of you. The world in its very heart admires the stern, determined doer. Do the best wherever you are, and when this is accomplished God will open up a door for you, and a voice will say, "Come up higher to a higher sphere."

A New Pamphlet.

We are in receipt of a new pamphlet entitled "Notes for Sunday-school and Religio workers," by A. Carmichael, issued by the Southern California district Sunday-school and Religio associations. It is of about thirty pages of clear-cut and practical suggestions to teachers and officers. It was issued for the benefit of the workers of that district but I presume that a limited number of copies could be supplied to others who would send them cost and postage, whatever that might be.

The author, Bro. A. Carmichael, second assistant superintendent of the General Sunday-school Association, seems to be pushing the work as best he can in that far-off region. We bespeak for him success and commendation on this effort. It is an effort in the right direction and shows originality and an understanding of the subject-matter. Thanks, Bro. Carmichael, for the copy, and unless "objected to" we will from time to time use parts of it for the common good in the Department.

Letter Department

Open Letter to Clark Braden.

[The following letter from Doctor D. B. Turney, who met Clark Braden in joint discussion, will be of interest.]

Doctor Turney, the polemic of the Methodist Protestant Church, writes an open letter to Elder Braden, a leading polemic among the Campbellites. "Mighty interesting," as Horace Greeley would say.

"EFFINGHAM, Illinois, November 14, 1905.

"ELDER CLARK BRADEN.

"Dear Brother: I stand ready to meet you on any of the propositions which we have ever discussed, in the future as in the past; but in view of your unnecessary efforts to uphold Charles A. Burton in wrongful insinuations and incorrect statements against me, instead of advising him to make a manly retraction, I shall take the liberty to propound some questions to you.

"Do you remember the statements which are made by you on page 142 of the 'Debate between Clark Braden and G. W. Hughey,' in reference to an alleged quotation from Justin Martyr, made professedly by you?

"Why did you misquote? What led you to attribute to Justin Martyr a statement which he never made? How came you to state that Justin used the Greek word katadusis, when he never used it? and when you, as a scholar, knew he never used it? What was the motive of your erroneous and deceptive declaration?

"Can you cite a Greek text of Justin Martyr anywhere that says that baptism is a katadusis, or which even hints such a thing? Why did you represent him as saying it is a katadusis, when he never said it?

"Have you made any effort to correct the false statement which you issued to the world in a book copyrighted by yourself? Have you explained the false statement? the misquota-tion and the misrepresentation? Why did you allow yourself to make a statement which truth does not warrant?

"When Justin spoke of 'the laving with water,' why did you change it into 'the immersion in water,' and then justify your conduct by representing Justin as employing a Greek word which he did not employ? and which you, with your admitted knowledge of Greek, could not well avoid knowing that he did not employ? What made you so reckless as to remark, 'He says it is a katadusis, the very word which the gentleman says means immersion,' when you at least were perfectly aware that Justin did not say it is a katadusis? Why did you say, 'He is describing a baptism, and he calls it an immersion,' when he never calls it so?

"Do you perceive that you yourself, the renowned Elder Clark Braden, may be not only charged with changing a word, but actually convicted of changing it? Do you think that you may represent me as changing a word, in order to put me on a plane of equality with yourself? Did you resort to such tactics to revenge the defeats which you have suffered in your joint discussions with me? Where is your proof?

"Do you approve of the efforts of Charles A. Burton to work an injury upon my unsullied reputation by retailing a ridiculous and exploded fabrication, as utterly unfounded as your statement that Justin Martyr described a baptism as a katadusis?"

"Did Mr. Burton make his false statements and untrue insinuations at your instigation?

"Did you assure him that the charge of changing a word was based wholly on a false and misleading report in reference to my discussion in Ohio with Elder McDiarmid, who has since deceased, and which discussion you did not attend, and in regard to which you are wholly unable to authoritatively testify? Are you aware that I never changed any word? Would it not be well for you if you were equally innocent?

"Hoping that the custom of traducing the opponents of Campbellism may pass into speedy disuse, but being prepared to suffer persecution on account of my zeal in standing in defense of what I believe to be true, I have found it necessary to write these questions for your considerate inspection. They are questions which you can answer in your own way, but to which any answer you may give will result in a way which you will at least fully appreciate. Your wiser course, perhaps, may be to ignore the questions and play off silent contempt toward them, banking upon popular indifference and forgetfulness, especially if I should see proper to print this letter for the enlightenment and edification of our friends.

"We both profess to believe the Bible and to love Christ; and I think that you are well enough acquainted with me to give me a testimonial every way superior to the kind of recommendation which J. S. Sweeney received of you, when you instructed Underwood how to defeat him in a joint discussion as to the inspiration of the Bible.

Respectfully,

D. B. TURNEY.

P. S.—I am willing for you to explain all you please.

MOUNTAINVILLE, Maine, November 6, 1905.

Editors Herald: I am yet in the ranks of the Master, working and fighting daily, as best I can, perhaps, under the existing circumstances and unfavorable surroundings of life; and this brings a thought to my mind: Will not God's people be rewarded in some degree for the good they earnestly desire to do and yet, for certain reasons over which they have no control, can not accomplish?

I have thought about this often, and I have come to the conclusion that they will be. For instance, I might be filled with the desire to give to the poor in a temporal way, yet can not because I lack the means. Will not that good desire gain for me in some degree a reward? Certainly it will, if all things good are rewarded. So I believe that not only our actual good thoughts, words, and deeds will be the means of our gaining a reward, but also the good desires of our hearts day by day. And I believe further that some of that reward will come right here in the shape of added kindness and a more loving nature; for it is a fact that every good thought one thinks, every good word one utters, every good desire one has helps one to be better along those very lines. Is not that a reward indeed?

I am so thankful as the days pass for the loving kindness of the dear Father in answering prayer and for the things he has given me, and equally thankful to him for not answering (according to my idea), and for the things he withholds. And right here comes another thought: Do we ever stop to think how much we owe to the Father because he, in his love and wisdom, does not answer always as we ask, or as quickly as we desire; and in some instances not at all? If he did, how much would our earthly pains and sufferings be augmented, and our reward here and hereafter lessened! I know this from experience, for I have earnestly prayed for and expected the greatest desires of my heart; but in the wisdom and love of the Father they have for a time, at least, been withheld. I thank him for his goodness in this, for withholding the sweet that would mean perhaps a spiritual death to his child.

We have our chapel, which has been so long in building, in a condition to hold our meetings in. The outside is finished and inside nearly so, so that the district conference, which convenes November 11, and 12, will be held there. While quite a little work still remains to be done, and some bills to be settled, still we are hopeful and trust we will soon see all satisfactorily arranged. Thank God for his goodness.

While many thoughts are ready to be put in black and white, I realize that others must be given space as well as myself, so, in conclusion, let me say to the dear brothers and sisters in this grand work, in the words of Paul; "Put on the whole armor of God, and having done all to stand." Oh, Saints, remember how short time is, and how long eternity. Strive therefore daily to live a life of such goodness, purity, and conformity to the Lord's will as will give you a home in Zion, a celestial glory and a home not made with hands eternal in the skies. May God help us each to so live daily is my earnest, constant prayer in Christ's name.

Yours to the end of the conflict,

WALLACE A. SMALL.

PLEASANT GROVE, Utah, November 9, 1905.

Editors Herald: We are busily engaged in the good work intrusted to all, and although at times it seems as if our efforts were all in vain, yet we have this consolation, that God's ways are not man's ways, and that if we are found doing his will we will eventually reap the reward of our labor.

And it is indeed encouraging to know that we are to receive our hire from a just Judge, who has said, "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say; but if ye do not what I say ye have no promise," thus allowing each individual to choose his course in life,—either to do as the Lord has said and thereby merit the promise of eternal life, or to disobey his holy laws and drift into outer darkness, and not only lose the promise of God but suffer loss, as well, of his works.

While at times things look gloomy, there is always somewhere a ray of light and a bright side to everything. Though we are often led to say, "How long, O Lord?" when we look at the deception that is in the world, and men's hearts wholly going after pleasure, yet we rejoice in the fact that we have the truth to stand by, and that it is always the same, and its source is sure.

Yesterday, however, we were permitted to witness one of those more pleasant sides of our great conflict for right. At twenty minutes after nine o'clock in the morning the writer found himself at the railroad depot where we met Presidents

Joseph and Frederick M. Smith; and, after shaking hands, took the Prophet's satchel and led them to our humble cottage, where they were permitted to take sufficient rest. About four o'clock all the Saints congregated at the place, each with a basket of something good to eat, and a delicious repast was served, after which, according to previous arrangement, they met at the little chapel (about ten steps from the cottage before mentioned) at half past seven. The house was crowded so that a number were obliged to stand, while others were turned away unable to get in. Bro. Joseph spoke to them, using as a text John 8:31, 32: "Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." The discourse was excellent, and all paid strict attention. "And some marveled at the doctrine; for he taught as one having authority from God, and not as having authority from the scribes." We trust that the seed sown will take root and spring forth to bear a bounteous harvest in the own due time of the Lord.

This morning at twenty minutes past nine o'clock the brethren took their leave for Provo, where they will hold forth to-night, after which Bro. Joseph leaves for the East on the ten o'clock train, and Frederick M. returns to Salt Lake City the next day, all being well, to look after the work in that part of the field.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain,
Your humble servant for Christ's sake,
J. E. VANDERWOOD.

HOLDEN, Missouri, November 15, 1905.

Editors Herald: As the HERALD is for the purpose of publishing items of interest for the good of the work, I have something to report which I trust will be beneficial to all the readers, and especially to those who are called upon to defend the cause in public controversy. November 2 I began a ten-nights' discussion with Reverend W. L. Crowe, at Shaw, Kansas, who claims to represent the Church of God, or Restitutionists. Each disputant affirmed that his church is in harmony with the New Testament scriptures, in faith, organization, doctrine, and practice. Five nights of two hours each were devoted to each question, with King James' Translation of the Bible as the standard of evidence, all other evidence to be received upon its merit, subject to the rules governing in the civil courts of the land.

Mr. Crowe seems to be a traveling evangelist, and is editor of a paper which is called Present Truth, published at St. Paul, Nebraska. He has also published a book of one hundred and sixty pages against the church, which he has named The Mormon Waterloo. He has met Brn. C. J. Hunt and J. W. Wight in debate, and he sent a challenge to the people at Shaw, where Bro. Lee Quick has been doing a good work, that if he could get to meet us in debate they would not be bothered with our elders any more. While arrangements through the missionary in charge were being made for the debate, Bro. Quick received what was to him an evidence from the Lord that I came upon the scene of conflict, and that the work would not suffer loss, and that my opponent would get mad. And he was so strongly moved upon in regard to it that he came very near writing Bro. White and requesting him to send me, but he hesitated, thinking if what he had received was of the Lord I would be sent without his request. While this matter was being arranged without my knowing anything about it, and about five days before I received word from Bro. White to go at once and help conduct this discussion, I had the following dream:

I thought I was fishing in a little pool of water and I caught what seemed to be from the first impression a very beautiful fish, clean and white. And as I was getting ready to take it from the hook, I was astonished when I discovered that it was in the form of a man of red complexion and with a very angry look in the face.

There is more about my dream, but I feel it would be unwise to burden the paper with it now. But what I have written has been fulfilled, and I found the red-complexioned man to be Mr. Crowe, and he appeared to be very nice and kind, and tried to hold the sympathy of the audience, but kept throwing dirt upon our work all through in his smooth, sly way. But when he was exposed in his trickery, and his positions were shown to be false, and the people were moved to laughter, I could see the anger in the face as I saw it before. This is one positive evidence to the writer that the Lord does direct his servants in the work, when they are humble and faithful.

Bro. C. J. Hunt of Deloit, Iowa, furnished me with matter which was a great help in meeting this man, and I advise all who contemplate meeting him in the future to write Bro. Hunt and get the evidence he has in hand.

Mr. Crowe teaches that man is wholly mortal, and that the soul is unconscious between death and the resurrection; but we had no trouble in refuting him on that position. And we used his own papers against him with good effect, as also his book was a hard weapon against him clear through, which he had on sale at fifty cents each. It is very misleading in regard to the main features of the work, as well as to the character of Joseph Smith. We proved it to be a falsehood. On page 55 it says the true visible church is no visible organization now on earth, and this body is not organized till the resurrection, which was in opposition to the proposition he had signed. On page 126 it says Jesus was not the Christ till anointed at his baptism. We read in Luke 2:11 where the angels said to the shepherds, "unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior which is Christ the Lord," and we turned to Mr. Crowe and told him what a grand thing it would have been if he could have met those angels out on the plains with his Mormon Waterloo and informed them of their mistake. And we advised him then that before he advertised that book for sale again to revise it. We made many good points against him, but we can only take time to speak of two or three.

When we used items in his paper, and from his own pen, which he wrote three or four years ago, that were against his argument in the debate, he was then forced to acknowledge before the people that he had changed his mind since he wrote that. But we came against him so hard with his own articles that he tried hard to rule them clear out, but the people saw that he changed his mind several times during the debate, until finally he acknowledged in next to his last speech that his proposition was not worded just as he wanted it. And when I arose to reply I told him to never go into another debate unless he got a proposition that just suited him. We had learned that he stated in private just before the debate began that his proposition was untrue; and as I brought that in in my last speech the chairman decided that it was unfair unless I gave Mr. Crowe a chance to reply to it, to which I agreed, stating that Bro. Quick, my moderator, was a witness; and when he arose to reply he admitted that he said it, but tried to smooth it over. Thus out of his own mouth we condemned him before that people. The Saints were blessed and strengthened in the faith.

F. M. SLOVER.

WINSLOW ROAD, Prince Edward Island, Canada.

November 6, 1905.

Dear Herald: I am still in the work, doing about half what I might do, I presume,—perhaps not that. When I compare what I have accomplished with the work of some in the early days of the church I come to the conclusion that I am not a success as a boomer of the work.

In about twenty-five places in Nova Scotia where I have held a series of meetings I can not count one conversion to the faith. Am now on the little "Garden of the Gulf" seeking to get the gospel before them. This is a difficult field to work in some ways. There is a fine class of people here, but so conservative, and so much under ministerial, domination that it is hard to make an impression.

I am in a very desirable locality just now, and perhaps no better people in the world, humanly speaking—the most of them relatives of Sr. Salyards of Lamoni. Have had two weeks of meetings, largely attended, and the people are friendly and kind,—covering me all over with hospitality,—yet only a few can seem to comprehend that this is anything more than another man's ideas of things. Bro. Sheehy was with me about four weeks, but circumstances were against accomplishing much during that time, although we worked hard. Fortune, or something better, has favored me since that time, and I have been able to make a better record so far as preaching is concerned.

I am going to request all the Saints who read this, who have relatives or friends on this island, to send them some reading-matter. Something that will help them to understand that we are not of the Utah polygamous people will be helpful with the rest. You can do a good work that way.

Since last writing to you I have passed through some trying scenes, and have much to be grateful for in the way of kindness shown by the Saints of Boston and Maine, as well as elsewhere, the Bishop included. I do not forget it, and, I hope, do not undervalue it.

Would like to say to those who were at the reunion at Toussitt, Massachusetts, last summer, that my son died in the faith. They will understand why I refer to it.

My hopes, ambitions, and interests are in this work. I regret my lack of wisdom, and the many mistakes I have made, and am continually making. Were it not that I believe the Master can overrule even these, I would go home and live a less conspicuous life, where the range of responsibility would be more circumscribed.

Hoping for final victory,

H. J. DAVISON.

DES MOINES, Iowa, November 13, 1905.

Dear Herald: With heart full of rejoicing we write of the dedication of our church on yesterday, the program for the service being carried out just as arranged. The printed folder sent out as an invitation to attend the services was neat and contained an excellent cut of our chapel.

The weather for the day was beautiful and many Saints from surrounding branches came in to attend the service.

Elders James McKiernan and Waddell Christy of the missionary force of the district, and M. H. Cook, ex-president of the branch here, and Bishop Kelley of Independence, were present.

The services on Sunday began at fifteen minutes to ten in the forenoon with Sunday-school, and the attendance was one hundred and twenty-five, the largest attendance ever recorded in our school.

The dedicatory service began at eleven o'clock with W. Christy in charge. The music prepared for the day was very appropriate, indeed, and well rendered. The reading of the receipts and expenditures on the church showed a total of twenty-four hundred dollars. The morning sermon was by Bishop Kelley and was most kindly received by the audience of Saints which filled the building.

Not quite two years ago the first steps were taken here to secure a larger and more commodious house of worship in the city, the first church-building being erected here in 1882, and as soon as it was known that we would have a larger church, the one we now have was offered to us at a very reasonable price; the offer was accepted and the first service held in it April 3, 1904. From the very first our heavenly Father manifested his approval of the steps we had taken, and comforted and cheered the band of Saints with promised success and rich blessings. The final payment was made on the church in June and the deed secured, and on last Sunday was handed over to the Bishop. Success having crowned our efforts along every line we could all breathe the prayer of consecration and dedication offered by Elder J. F. Mintun last Sunday after the sermon, and all felt the peaceful assurance that God accepted our offering and sanctified and hallowed our beautiful chapel for sacred worship, a house dedicated to the solemn worship of God, and his people consecrated to his service and his work. A large number of the Saints partook of dinner in the church.

At half past two a social- and praise-service was held, in charge of Elders McKiernan and Cook. Truly "It is good to be a Saint in latter days," and

"Sweet the time, exceeding sweet,
When the Saints together meet."

It was a service of heartfelt rejoicing on the part of the Des Moines Saints, and many of the visiting ones expressed their feelings of rejoicing. Among those who spoke was our aged sister, Grandma Moffit, of the Pleasanton Branch, who has come to the city to make her home with her daughter, Sr. I. W. Carr. She spoke of sixty-five years of her life in the church, and a firm hope in the work. Sr. Paulina Park of Runnells, who has lately been sadly bereft by the loss of her aged companion, always bears her strong testimony to the work. The service was much enjoyed by all present, and our blind sister, Carrie Tullisson, who has been a wanderer from the church for years, was present and expressed a desire to again be numbered with us.

At six o'clock the Religio met in regular session, and at half past seven Bishop Kelley occupied the stand. At this service many not of our faith were present, and listened to a sermon full of good thoughts and strong points.

Thus closed a memorable day in the progress of the latter-day work in the city of Des Moines. The first baptisms in the city were in 1863, with a branch organization the next year. Since that time the ship of Zion has sailed many troubled seas, and has had seasons of fair weather. To-day we feel that the ship is firmly anchored in the harbor, and with a house of worship of our own consecrated to God we are now better prepared than ever before to meet the opposing forces, and to advance to storm the enemies' works.

Bishop Kelley and Elder McKiernan remained in the city during the week and services were held each evening at the church.

The efforts which the Saints have made here, the trials which they have passed through, the sacrifices they have made, are all counted as blessings at the hands of a loving Father; and with full faith to more firmly trust our Father in the future, and seek higher heights in the Christian path, we enter upon a new era in our work here, and join in singing, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Yours kindly,

A. A. REAMS.

CARLISLE, Pennsylvania, November 13, 1905.

Editors Herald: In a recent speech in Newark, New Jersey, Mr. Hans P. Freece said: "At the Smoot investigation in Washington, these facts were brought to light and given to the world: First, that seven of the apostles are living in polygamy; second, Professor Tanner of the school at Logan, had recently taken a new wife; third, the surest way of advancement for a young man is to enter into polygamy; fourth, Apostle Teasdale had recently married a young and beautiful girl, and had set aside one of his old wives.

"Mormonism is not only in Utah; it is in Washington to-day. It is in every State of the Union. You men who think that Mormonism is harmless, and think the question a chestnut, have yet to learn its true meaning. To-day there are fifteen hundred Mormons in New York City. Only last Sunday the Christian ministers of Independence, Missouri, warned their congregations that it would be but a question of time ere the Mormons would control that town. In 1897 the Mormon church numbered but one half as much as the Congregationalists. That year the Congregationalists added 1,200 to their numbers, the Presbyterians 1,700, the Methodists 1,900, and the Mormons added 6,300."

The above will no doubt be interesting to HERALD readers. Notice how great denominations of other churches, aided by the leaders, try to blind the people to the fact that there is a wide difference between the Utah church, and the church at Independence, Missouri. When I hear such things it makes me realize more and more the great duty I owe to my God, realizing the force of the solemn expression that the Master gave, "Blessed are you, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake."

Just a few nights ago a man delivered a speech in Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, denouncing Joe Smith and his damnable heresy, and connecting him in every instance with the Utah church. I often think, "O Lord, how long, how long?"

JOHN ZAHND.

BISHOP, California, November 5, 1905.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I have written to you, nearly three years, and then I was living in Carson, Nevada. I have enjoyed the best of health since I wrote before. The dear Lord sent us another boy. He is now over two years old. Oh, how thankful I feel when I think how good the Lord has been to me and mine. How he healed me of those two dreadful cancers, and then sent us our baby boy to show to the world that I was indeed healed!

I am isolated and alone, there being no members or branch nearer than Los Angeles. I am anxious to get a home near a branch so my husband and children will feel the influence of Saints. Both of our daughters, ten and thirteen years of age, have said they would like to be baptized. So if any one knows where there is land that we can take up or buy, near a branch, please write to me, as it is so hard to raise a family out in the cold world away from all church privileges. My constant prayer is to be near a branch and live to see my husband and four children come into the fold. But if it be God's will that I live away from all that my heart desires, pray for me that I may not faint, but may keep my lamp trimmed and burning.

When I read the letters of the sisters asking for the prayers of the Saints that their husbands and children may be brought into the fold, my heart bleeds for them, for I know how they feel. Dear sisters, cheer up and put all trust in the Lord. Of course we would feel safer if they were secure within the fold; but if we set a good example, and teach them all we can, we must trust in the Lord for the rest.

Your sister,

MRS. J. S. STAUTS.

BOLCKOW, Missouri, November 12, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have waited over one month after our conference, which convened with the Bedison Branch, Saturday, October 7, for some more able pen to write the news from old Nodaway.

The weather was ideal and on the day preceding the conference the Sunday-school convention brought a number of earnest workers together at two o'clock to engage in a business session, closing with a round-table exercise on the home class work. The eight o'clock session was devoted to an entertainment, or rather it proved out that way because of the failure of those assigne papers to appear with them prepared. But the entertainment was good. The writer is impressed that Nodaway District should have development along more substantial lines. We should be students of methods and Sunday-school tactics. If we have entertainments, do not confine the conventions to two sessions.

By ten o'clock quite a crowd had assembled and conference was organized by selecting Bro. E. S. Fannon, district president to preside, who called our genial Bro. J. C. Foss to assist who gave good and wholesome advice to the Saints and bore a strong testimony to the divinity of this latter-day work. He also encouraged the Saints by exhorting them not to let the evil power or any influence darken their minds and lead them away from the truth.

On Sunday many Saints of the district and the neighbors from the country surrounding Bedison Branch gathered in until the church was entirely filled. Well-filled baskets containing the dainty viands of earth were in evidence about twelve o'clock.

Bro. J. C. Foss delivered sermons both Saturday and Sunday evenings, which the writer was denied the pleasure of hearing, but judging from all reports the efforts were masterful. On Sunday morning Bro. W. E. Haden preached a fine discourse replete with gospel truths. At two o'clock Bro. James Schofield exhorted all to stand in the way and seek and ask for the good old path and walk therein. The best evidence of a successful conference was the peaceable influence of the Spirit of God which was present throughout. We trust the day has come when Nodaway District will arise and show good development along spiritual lines. There are a number of noble Saints in this district, and among the young we hope to see that development that will place us in the foremost ranks of God's soldierly host and make us valiant in the defense of this great work.

Bro. Haden is like Field-marshal Oyama; so says Bro. E. S. Fannon. He has his plans made for the entire field. He and his coworker, Bro. McCord, have been considering a movement or an advance on our Northwestern Missouri normal city—the city of Maryville—a beautiful burg of six thousand inhabitants having nine church edifices, seven very modern and fashionable ones. We have often prayed that the gospel sound would be heard there again. About thirty years ago Brn. Woodhead and William Powell told the gospel story there. It is the place of the writer's birth. The city is one of the most healthful and clean cities of its size there is. It has a good system of water-works and sewerage, a good electric light plant, and over six miles of paved streets. It secured this summer the magnificent prize of the "Fifth Normal School," which will be built following the next session of the legislature. Work is going on as rapidly as possible on the site: surveying the grounds, putting in sewerage, water-works, pavements, etc. There is prospect of a shirt and overall factory and electric road from St. Joseph through the city of Maryville, which will also give the city street-car service. The city has many enterprising men, and if they could but become interested in the gospel message how nice it would be.

In the religious circles in the town of Barnard, where we have held two debates with the standard-bearers of the Church of Christ—Popowell versus F. J. Chatburn, and Reverend Collins versus J. D. Stead—there is a ripple of agitation. Reverend J. F. Bickel, pastor of the progressive branch of the Christian Church, has accepted a challenge from the nonprogressive branch and propositions have been signed up and a debate will ensue, commencing December 5, two sessions a day. The writer has not yet learned the propositions to be discussed. The disputants are J. F. Bickel of Barnard, and Reverend Roberts of Iowa. Bro. William Woodhead has been selected to act as presiding moderator.

In closing I want to say I desire to see this work prosper and see Zion redeemed, and I for one want to have a hand in this work. I am trying to cultivate the God-given qualities in me, such as honesty, humility, patience, prayerfulness, love, etc. Am trying to be studious to keep posted in this work, and on the events of interest constantly transpiring daily—signs of the times—and I want to be able to give a reason for the hope that is in me, when opportunity offers.

This has been a year of unusual experience to me. Trials of a peculiar nature have come before me; and yet Satan tries to vex me, but I want to follow my leader, Christ. May God help us all to overcome.

Sr. Elsie Nelson is very sick at present, also Sr. T. A. Ivie; and Sr. Ida Nelson, wife of Jacob Nelson, deceased, is sick at present. I just heard from Bro. and Sr. David Wyatt of Rosendale. Sr. Wyatt is very feeble and has been for a long while. She suffers constantly from rheumatism, yet she is patient. They often ask about Bro. Gowell, who will remember well their faith in this work when he found them several years ago. They bear the same strong testimony to the divinity of this latter-day work.

May God help his suffering children to bear patiently the trials of life. May he reach down and with his hand of power relieve them of their physical infirmities, and bring us at last to his home of peace.

Your brother in the conflict,

W. B. TORRANCE.

SYDNEY, Australia, October 19, 1905.

Editors Herald: Another old soldier has lain down his armor—one personally known to you though far away. Bro. Richard Ellis passed away October 3, at his home, Forest Lodge, Sydney. He was the youngest of seven children. Was apprenticed when a boy to a wheelwright, but not liking the place he left home for London at the age of eighteen, where he learned the carpenters' and joiners' trade. At the age of twenty-one he married Ann Jones, and soon afterward emigrated to Australia, where he spent the last fifty-two years of his life.

Over forty years ago he embraced what appeared to be the true gospel; but later found that the authority of those men originated in Utah, and did not represent the true body of Christ; and he was much disappointed when abominable heresies were introduced.

In 1874, when our missionaries, Elder Glaud Rodger and C. W. Wandell, came out from America teaching the original pure gospel, he and wife were delighted to learn that the church had not been overthrown, nor its authority given to another; but that it had been reorganized and was still prosecuting the great mission whereunto the Master has appointed it.

Bro. Ellis went to America about this time, visited our headquarters, talked with the church officials, and satisfied himself as to the genuineness of the claims of this Reorganized Church. When our missionaries in Australia were confounded with Utah elders, or were met with the assertion that "they were the same," they could with considerable pleasure refer to Bro. Ellis as a living witness to the truthfulness of their claims. He was ever an uncompromising foe to the heresies of the Utah defection, and he had the best library of church literature in Australia to fortify him in his position.

After his return from America the Sydney Branch was organized, most of the members of which have since died, only two or three remaining. Until recent years, when age began to tell on them, Bro. and Sr. Ellis' home was a haven of rest to the missionaries landing from America, and passing to and fro in the mission. Bro. Ellis was about the first Bishop's agent the Reorganized Church had in this mission.

He has been the president of the Balmain Branch for twelve years, but of late, and especially since the sickness and death of his life's companion, the members have seen him fail in strength, and have realized that the end was not far off; but no one thought it would come as unexpectedly as it did. He ran to catch a train at Strathfield, which overtaxed his heart, and he expired in six minutes after reaching his home in Forest Lodge.

He leaves a son here, and a married daughter in Los Angeles, California. May they take comfort in the thought that their parents died firm in the faith of the true gospel; for they "rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

G. R. WELLS.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, November 19, 1905.

Editors Herald: At the close of this morning's preaching-service I had the pleasure of baptizing three more in the church font, making a total of fifteen since the font was installed, less than one year ago. One of those baptized was a convert from the Utah church. He had been baptized when a boy but had lost sympathy with that denomination and thought that he had no use for any religion, until he came to our meetings and felt the touch of the Spirit. He said that he had heard the letter of the gospel for forty years until he was sick of the sound of it; but had never heard the real gospel in power and with the Spirit until then.

We have been wonderfully blessed here during the past few months. The Spirit has been present in great power at the prayer-meetings and at the preaching-services; so much so that strangers have been deeply moved in common with the Saints. God's power has also been manifest in the healing of our sick; and he has abundantly verified the promise that we have made to people, that if they would pray earnestly and willingly obey God's law they would receive an assurance.

We are a little band of pilgrims having a form of godliness and enjoying a measure of the power thereof, and seeking to move forward in love and unity to higher things.

In bonds,

ELBERT A. SMITH.

My Experience.

I obeyed the gospel in old England, and I am a stranger to you. I am thankful I embraced the gospel, and, like many others, thought it was all peace; but I have traveled the straight and narrow path and I find it a thorny path. Like many who thought of coming to Zion, after I crossed the sea and down the rivers I began to feel that I was on a rough road. We then began to cross the prairies, and I had to walk over a thousand miles with the rest of the people, and found there was very little bread to eat after having plenty. And after arriving at Salt Lake, finding nothing to eat when we got there (the grasshoppers had eaten all the crops), I and my husband and sons lived for many months on pig-feed. I thought that was pretty rough, coming to Zion that way, and witnessing the Saints dying off by cholera every hour on the road. We hurried on to hear the great prophet of the Lord. I thought we would soon hear some glad news, and we hurried to the Tabernacle to hear it.

He said, "Good morning, brethren and sisters. Now you have all come to Zion. You all think you have come to Zion. And a pretty hell of a Zion you have found it."

That was true. We found it so. I thought if they were the blessings God had for us it was pretty rough work; but I got my eyes opened. I found it was not all gold that glistened.

I am thankful that I embraced the gospel and know the truth for myself; and, like my Lord and Master, I have found very few friends. But I have had the grandest visions and blessings from God, seeing my Lord come to this earth.

I never see the elders of the church. None come to visit me. I have been a cripple for ten years, having dislocated my right hip by falling, and not having walked since.

I do not know whether any Saints are on the earth. I do not see any that believe the gospel as it is written. But the elect people of God are on the earth somewhere. The Lord knows where they are. He will soon come and find them. I am waiting and longing for his appearing, which I know will not be long. But I can not see him through my mortal flesh. But he will translate me, and I shall be like him and see him as he is. I pray that all the faithful ones will be with us when he appears.

Excuse my long letter. I hope no offense will be taken; but I thought I would write to you. May God bless all those in the publishing house. I remain,

Your unworthy sister in the gospel of peace,

M. WORWOOD.

Extracts from Letters.

E. A. Mehlisch, Jackson, Michigan: "We had Elder Shippy here for five meetings, and had fair interest. Elder S. W. L. Scott will be with us next week, and will stay as long as interest warrants, beginning meetings November 19. Please mention meetings in the HERALD, as there are Saints at Ann Arbor, River Junction, and Battle Creek whose addresses are unknown to me. There are only two families of Saints here, but we are hoping and praying that the number may be increased soon. We have secured a hall on 204 West Main Street."

Mary F. Fulton, Chico, California: "We take the HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves and are always anxiously waiting for Monday morning to come so we can read the good letters from the Saints. I desire to take the church papers as long as I can raise the money to pay for them. I ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints that I may live faithful to the end."

Olive Woods, Della, Colorado: "Our hearts were made sad a few weeks ago by the death of our dear cousin, Eva J. Woods. She passed away September 13, 1905, at Edmonton, Canada. She was the only surviving daughter of Sr. Lucy and Mr. J. Warren Woods, and was beloved by many friends and relatives."

John Lalone, Lewiston, Michigan: "The two-day meetings held here on September 30 and October 1 were well attended, and greatly enjoyed by the Saints under the presence of the Spirit of the Lord, and on account of the able discourses by the ministry. We are doing what we can, and trying, in our weakness, to hold the gospel banner high."

Mrs. E. A. Gill, St. Edward, Nebraska: "Will the brother in the South please give recipe for cure of tobacco-habit? I had it once, but it must have been destroyed."

Bro. J. F. Mintun, Des Moines, Iowa, writes some of the details of the dedication of their new church, already furnished by Bro. Reams, and adds: "When at first it was thought best by several that an effort should be made to secure a more commodious building, it was looked upon with doubtful propriety by a few, but the Lord told the Saints that they would be assisted to secure the building, and meet all the payments without any special inconvenience, and so it has been. During the last summer and fall nearly if not every family of the Saints has been visited by trials, either physical or spiritual, that in some cases have been hard to bear, and still remain, and the peculiarity that attaches to these trials is that those who had made the greater sacrifices for the work in the city were visited with the most severe trials, but all who have followed out the law of God in seeking deliverance have received a blessing. Whatever results remain of these trials will yet work out for good to those who continue their love for God and will keep his commandments, following the instruction that is given in the word when seeking counsel. Whatever else may be said there is nothing more satisfactory than to know that God has been and is with his people in the efforts to build up the kingdom of God on earth."

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Minutes.

Southwestern Texas.—Conference convened with the Bandera Branch at Pipe Creek, Texas, October 6 to 8, 1905. Bro. F. A. Smith presiding; H. O. Smith secretary pro tem. San Antonio Branch reported one lost by death. Bandera and Medina no report. Bishop's agent's report: On hand last report, $19.17; received since, $15.40; balance on hand, $9.57. Ministry reporting: D. S. Palmer, O. D. Johnson, T. J. Jett, F. A. Smith, H. O. Smith, Wilson Clark, W. S. Causey. Officers elected: O. D. Johnson president, J. P. Neal assistant president, and W. H. Davenport secretary. D. S. Palmer was sustained as Bishop's agent. Bro. F. A. Smith made some remarks calling attention to the fact that only one out of three of the branches of which the district is composed had reported, and exhorted an improvement along that line and gave some good advice and counsel in the matter of keeping awake, and a lively interest in the branch meetings, work of local officers, etc. Adjourned to meet with San Antonio Branch, February 9, 1906, at 7.30 p. m.

London.—Conference met in Broadway Hall, Toronto, October 28, 1905, at 10 o'clock. Elder Evans was appointed president, the presidency of the district assisting; secretaries, Hannah Leeder and J. L. Burger. A request from the McKillop Branch that their branch be divided was received and referred to the presidencies of mission and district. A bill from the Southam Printing and Lithograph Company re bills printed as ordered by R. C. Evans was received and ordered paid. Statistical reports from forty-two branches were adopted. Ministry reporting: Howlett, Shields, Gray, Bushlen, Smith, Yerks, Staley, Leeder, Burger, Burley, and Martin. Auditors reported treasurer's, secretary's financial, Bishop's agent's, and Canadian Messenger's business manager's reports correct. Reports adopted. R. C. Evans as business manager of Canadian Messenger tendered his resignation which was accepted. Visiting Saints were accorded all the privileges of the conference. It was resolved that salaries should be paid none of the officials of the Canadian Messenger and the offices of business manager and assistant editor were united. F. Gregory was appointed editor and D. McGregor business manager and assistant editor. A report was received from committee appointed to ascertain prices of printing Canadian Messenger by other printing establishments. The retiring business manager and assistant editor were tendered a hearty vote of thanks. It was decided that the next conference should be held with the Niagara Falls Branch, the date to be decided upon later. The officers of the district are: President, R. C. Longhurst; vice-presidents, J. H. Taylor, N. Overholt, A. E. Mortimer, George Bushlen; secretary, H. Leeder; treasurer, M. McGregor; Bishop's agent, R. C. Evans; historian, A. E. Mortimer. General Conference delegates: R. C. Evans, F. Gregory, A. Knisley, A. McLean, H. Dickhout, T. J. Jordan, F. Miller, R. C. Russell. The branches are to be taxed to pay the expenses of two delegates, viz.: Elders Gregory and Knisley. Delegates were empowered to cast the full delegate vote of the district and in case of division a majority and minority vote. Report of administering to sick committee adopted, and also a report from the district Sunday-school. An invitation to take part in a reunion was received from the Chatham District. Resolved that we acknowledge the invitation and go if we possibly can. It was resolved that orders be drawn on the treasury to pay bills presented. Toronto Branch agreeing to bear $10 of indebtedness, all accounts were provided for. Total collections of conference were one hundred and four dollars and sixty-eight cents.

Eastern Michigan.—Conference convened at Juniata, Michigan, October 7, 1905, J. J. Cornish presiding, J. W. Davis secretary. Seventeen branches reported for four months ending September 30, showing a net gain in membership of 24. Ministry reporting: J. J. Bailey baptized 4, A. McKenzie, Charles E. Grant, William Davis baptized 5, Israel Goheen, Andrew Barr, J. L. Sweet baptized 3, William Cargill baptized 1, O. J. Hawn baptized 10, G. H. Skinner baptized 4, C. C. Whitford, J. W. Davis, Murdock McDonald, William M. Grice baptized 4, G. M. Shippy baptized 17, Thomas Miller, Herman Diem baptized 2, Thomas Young, Hugh G. Campbell, R. H. Huston, W. F. Smith, P. W. Surrbrook, J. E. Harriman, George R. McConcha, W. L. Smith, C. K. Green, B. F. Parker baptized 2, George Smith, L. N. Janrow, B. F. Pheteplace, C. E. Pearson, A. B. Anable, P. G. Hager, F. H. Baxter, L. D. Whitford, John H. Harrison, Thomas O'Brien, Jed. J. Emlaw, Ezra E. Wortz, Noble Wilkinson, and Joseph Koyle. Total number of baptisms in district during four months ending September 30, 42. Bishop's agent's report: Receipts, including amount on hand, $963.04; expenditures, $757.61. Treasurer's report: Balance on hand and receipts, $3.55. William Davis was elected presiding elder, O. J. Hawn assistant, J. W. Davis secretary, P. G. Hager treasurer and A. Barr was sustained in the office of Bishop's agent. It was decided to hold the next conference with the East Fremont Branch at call of district president. Three were called to the ministry, viz.: William F. Smith to office of elder, Charles Shepherd and C. U. Grant to office of priest.

Convention Minutes.

Clinton.—District Sunday-school convention met at Coal Hill chapel, October 13, 1905. Prayer-meeting at 9 a. m.; business-meeting at 10 a. m. A short program was rendered in the evening, entitled "The home." Mrs. Martha Cool, secretary, Nevada, Missouri.

Conference Notices.

Eastern Maine District conference will convene at Jonesport, December 9 and 10, 1905. All branch and district officers are requested to send in reports. U. M. Kelley, president.

Died.

Cox.—Nellie, the only daughter of Mr. Joseph and Mrs. Margaret Cox, of 6 Wyndham Street, Evanstown, Gilfach Goch, South Wales. Yielding to that dreaded disease, consumption, she fell asleep on the morning of October 22, 1905, and was interred in the Trealaw Cemetery the 26th, E. B. Morgan conducting the funeral-services. She was peaceful in life and was peaceful in death, dying in Sr. Collon's arms without a struggle. She was greatly respected and beloved by all who knew her. She leaves five brothers besides her parents to mourn their loss. She intended being baptized for she believed the gospel.

EVANS.—Bro. John O. Evans, of 5 Avondale Road, Gelli, Ystrad-Rhondda, Glam, South Wales. He met with an accident, September 4, 1905, and died from the injuries the 12th; was buried the 16th at Treorchy Cemetery, the Reverend Davies of Hebron Chapel, Ton Pentre, officiating. He was born June, 1844, in Cardiganshire. Married Miss Rachel Lewis at Derry Goch in the same shire. To this union four children were born, three sons and one daughter. The mother and daughter remain to mourn their loss. Bro. Evans was baptized about thirty-four years ago at Ystrad. Ordained an elder October 14, 1879; by David Jenkins. He was a faithful man despite family persecutions. He now rests from his labors.

TIBBELS.—James, son of Bro. and Mrs. Frank Tibbels, at Tonganoxie, Kansas, October 6, 1905, aged 5 years and 6 months. He was sick but a few days, when the angel of death called for him. Thus the little bud of promise was transplanted from this world to the paradise of God. Funeral-sermon in the Christian church by F. C. Warnky, assisted by Reverend G. W. Barton, minister of the Congregational church.

THOMMEDIEU.—At Colo, Iowa, November 10, 1905, Sr. Nellie V. Thommedieu. She was born June 29, 1878, in Chicago, Illinois, married Frank I. Thommedieu April 5, 1896; was baptized by J. S. Roth, 1897. She left a devoted and affectionate husband, a dear mother, and three loving little children. Funeral-sermon on the 12th by J. S. Roth from Revelation 14:13: "Blessed are the dead," etc. It was the largest funeral ever held in these parts. She was a faithful Saint, a loving wife, and kind mother. She always welcomed the missionary. The angels were with her by times for a week before she died.

SWALLERS.—Frank, son of Bro. and Sr. John Swallers, born November 15, 1891; died September 27, 1905, at Plainville, Indiana. Funeral-services held at residence by I. P. Baggerly.

McKEE.—Sr. Mary McKee, at Fall River, July 18, 1905. Was born in Lankershire, England, August 20, 1847. She came to this country in 1865, since which time she has made her home in this city. She was baptized in 1866 and was faithful to the end. Funeral-services at her home, conducted by Elder F. G. Pitt.

KERNS.—Michael Kerns was born August 27, 1825, in Ray County, Virginia. In 1848 he came to Iowa, where he resided till the time of his death. He united with the church August 27, 1901, being baptized by J. F. Mintun. September 26, 1905, he fell asleep to awaken no more in this life. He died strong in the faith, with the hope of a glorious resurrection. He leaves to mourn his departure one son and one daughter; three brothers, one sister, three grandchildren, and eleven great-grandchildren. Funeral-sermon by D. R. Chambers, assisted by C. Fry.

Common Errors in Speech.

Who does not make errors in every-day speech? As a matter of fact it is very unusual to find any person whose use of the English language is absolutely correct. The following are examples of some very frequent errors or faulty expressions often heard:

- "Let you and I go"—should be "you and me."
- "I am as good as her,—should be "as she."
- "You are younger than me"—should be "than I."
- "Come to dinner with John and I"—should be "John and me."
- "Between you and I"—should be "you and me."
- "Where are you going?" "Who? Me?"—should be "Who? I?"
- "Who do you see?"—should be "whom."
- "If I was her"—should be "If I were she."
- "Was it him?"—should be "Was it he?"
- "Who was it by?"—should be "whom."

These examples of "Faulty Diction" are so common that many people look upon the improper form as being the correct one, and Thomas H. Russell, L. L. B., editor-in-chief of Webster's Imperial Dictionary, has done the public a great service in having written the new book, entitled Faulty Diction, or Errors in the Use of the English Language and How to Correct Them, which the publishers have, by printing it on thin Bible paper, succeeded in getting into what may be called vest-pocket size. It is handsomely bound in embossed Russia leather and will be sent postpaid on receipt of 50 cents to any address by George W. Ogilvie & Company, Publishers, 169 East Randolph Street, Chicago, Illinois. They also publish the same book in cloth binding and will send a copy of it in that style on receipt of 25 cents.

Graft in Medicine.

In Collier's Weekly of September 9 we read a powerful article on the above subject, which states that some apothecaries pay some doctors a commission on every prescription they receive, which leads to the use of adulterated drugs, or higher charges to the suffering public; also that some hospitals pay a commission to some doctors for every patient sent to them, the result of which is increased charges at the hospital, or longer continuance of sickness there for patients who are supposed to be able to pay. What is the remedy? We answer, as we have said many times before, "Societies for the protection of public health," as independent of all outside influences as our societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals are or ought to be. Societies which shall be constantly at work without fear or favor to expose and denounce widely, and endeavor to stop everything which endangers public health.—Geo. T. Angell, in Our Dumb Animals.

William J. Bryan in Foreign Lands.

William J. Bryan, editor of the Commoner, sailed from San Francisco, September 27, for a year's visit abroad. In the course of his travels, Mr. Bryan will visit the following named countries: Hawaii, Japan, British Isles, China, India, Philippine Islands, Australia, Egypt, Palestine, New Zealand, Turkey, Greece, Spain, Switzerland, Italy, France, Norway, Germany, Denmark, Russia, Sweden, Holland. From each of the countries named, Mr. Bryan will write letters describing his observations and dealing particularly with the political life of the countries visited. These letters will be published in the Commoner, and those who desire to read every one of these letters should lose no time in subscribing for Mr. Bryan's paper. The Commoner is issued weekly and the subscription price is $1 a year. Address all orders to the Commoner, Lincoln, Nebraska.

Light on the Railroad Problem.

On the eve of President Roosevelt's battle for railroad reform McClure's begins publication, in the November number, of the results of Ray Stannard Baker's investigation of this great problem. More than a year ago Mr. Baker started out to make just such an investigation as every conscientious voter would make if he could. He has gone to the bottom of the subject from the viewpoint of the citizen.

In the first paper he takes hold of the crux of the problem, the Railroad Rate. He tells the almost ludicrous story of how rates are made, and shows the appalling power which rate-making places in the hands of "railroad interests," and how the wielders of this terrible weapon have made or unmade not only individual enterprises but towns, cities, localities, and whole sections of the country. His story is an exposition of the utter chaos, injustice, and immorality of the present system which the railroad men are trying to tell Congress is the best that can possibly be devised.

Mr. Baker's fairness and thoroughness have already been established by his mastery articles on the labor problem. His reputation puts the stamp of authority upon what he has to say. In searching out the complexities of rate-making he has traveled up and down the country talking with farmers, city workers, railroad men, academic experts, the sufferers and the gainers by the system, so that his story gains the live interest of personal experience.

If he tells the grievances of the Spokane merchant or the Eastern power or the Minnesota manufacturer he gives the railroad side too.

"We are at this moment facing a new conflict in this country," says Mr. Baker, "the importance of which we are only beginning to perceive. It lies between too great new parties, one a progressive party seeking to give the Government more power in business affairs, the other a conservative party striving to retain all the power possible in private hands. One looks toward socialism, the other obstinately defends individualism. It is industrialism forcing itself into politics. And the crux of the new conflict recognized by both sides is the Railroad Rate in this case."

No greater or more fundamental problem confronts the country than this one of rate regulation. Its complications are appalling, but they can be solved, Mr. Baker thinks.

"I take it as fundamental," he says, "in rate-making as in every human activity, that there are orderly principles to be discovered and justice-making laws to be laid down." It is not only weak but absurd to assert that the American can not rise to it. And in solving his own problems, he will establish new principles for the world."

Pure Food and Pure Drugs.

"Pure food" and "pure drugs" form two very different problems. An impure drug may be the cause of immediate death or of lingering disease. A deceptive formula may conceal indulgence in liquors or narcotics, or more unfortunately may be the insidious source of a drink or drug habit. Departure from established standards of strength may outwit all the cunning of the physician, or overcome the skill and watchful attention of the trained nurse. It would seem that explosives and poisons need supervision no more than the drugs intended for conserving or building up of life.

"Impure food" comes from a variety of causes. There may be lack of cleanliness or due care in handling the raw material, during the process of manufacture, while in the hands of the retailer, or again, in the home or other place of consumption. Ignorant and unskillful treatment may occur at any point between the place of first production and the dining-table of the actual consumer. As may readily be seen publicity and education promise relief from most of the above evils. "The buyer must be educated to know what he is buying." "A people was never made clean and healthy against its will."—From "The survey of civic betterment," in the Chautauquan for November.

The Kiln-Drying of Wood.

Drying is an essential part of the preparation of wood for manufacture. For a long time the only drying process used or known was air-drying, or the exposure of wood to the gradual drying influence of the open air. Kiln-drying, which is an artificial method, originated in the effort to improve or shorten the process. By subjecting the wood to a high temperature, or to a draught of heated air, in a confined space or kiln, time is saved and a certain degree of control over the drying conditions is secured.

There are two points in the manufacture of lumber at either of which it may be kiln-dried. With softwoods, for instance, it is a common practice to kiln-dry the lumber at the sawmill before it is shipped. This practice, however, is ill adapted for hardwoods, in which it would produce such checking and warping as would greatly reduce the value of the product. In practice, therefore, hardwoods are more or less thoroughly air dried before being placed in the kiln, where the residue of moisture may be reduced to between three and four per cent, which is much lower than is possible by air-drying only. Yet another practice obtains in the case of a few woods which give up their moisture very slowly. With these woods, of which cypress is an example, the kiln is resorted to both at the sawmill and at the factory where they are remanufactured.

Making a Home.

Such a trifle—plain, delicately tinted wall paper, but it revolutionized eight lives. Somehow we all took courage. The girl who would have been a matinee girl if she had not been obliged to work in an office every Saturday afternoon hung on the wall theatrical photographs, passe partouted and framed, and she spent rainy evenings filling a scrap-book with interesting clippings from magazines and weeklies. The girl who had always wanted to study art, but who had to clerk instead, painted a stenciled frieze around her wall in harmonious colorings, and was so encouraged that she took up a night course in art, and she is to-day assistant art editor on a small magazine.

The girl who was deft with her needle showed us how to make pretty but inexpensive bureau scarfs, bedcovers and nightdress cases. In fact, we deserted the front stoop and the parlor to work together in those once obnoxious hall rooms. The domestic instinct was rampant within us, the rooms blossomed forth in dainty furnishings, and we all forgot that New York was a desert populated by homeless girls working for ten dollars a week. — Woman's Home Companion for November.

What's in McClure's.

One function of the up-to-date magazine is to reflect the moving spirit of the time, and this is the striking thing about the December McClure's. As befits a holiday number, it is filled with good, strong fiction; there is a Jack London story, one of his best, and six other short stories; but first in importance are the contributions of William Allen White, Ray Stannard Baker and Reverend Charles D. Williams. William Allen White who, as a judge of public men has become almost the national oracle, cool, incisive, unerring, fixes the place of Folk in national affairs. He tells of his great accomplishments in Missouri, measures the man, and finally shows that he is not big enough yet for presidential timber.

"Railroad rebates" is Ray Stannard Baker's second paper on the railroad question.

Jack London's "Love of life" is a harrowing tale of human endurance, pitting against nature and against each other a starving man and a starving wolf. Blumenschein has illustrated it wonderfully, in color. In contrast to this tale of primitive strength is a delicate, fanciful Irish folk tale full of the nimble wit of the race in which Herminie Templeton introduces again Darby O'Gill, and the King of the Fairies.

Editorially appears a character sketch of Charles Evans Hughes who has been lifting the lid from insurance in New York, and a critical estimate of Christianity in practice, "The final test of Christianity," by the Reverend Charles D. Williams.

Brother, Do You Want Work

PROSECUTION NOT PERSECUTION.

One of the persistent claims to be the church of Christ made by the leaders and members of the Mormon church in Utah is that they are so constantly persecuted; even the action of the United States Government against the violation of both national and State laws on the part of those professedly loyal and confessedly breakers of the law, is absolutely complained of and charged to be persecution.

The only persecution recognized in the word of God which men are entitled to credit for enduring is that mentioned by Jesus as stated by Matthew:

Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake.

There is in these sayings of the Savior not one word of commendation for him who suffers chastisement of unrighteousness; not a loop-hole for escape from the just condemnation of the righteous and the good for wrong-doing; not a shadow of excuse, nor place for a proper plea of persecution for him who does evil, or breaks the law, to shield him from prosecution at the hands of the executors of the law.

These lawbreakers have no basis for the cry of persecution which they so pitifully put up; nor is there either sense or justice in the statement that the action of Congress is the result of a motive on the part of the lawmakers to "persecute the Mormons."

INFLUENCE OF EXAMPLE.

President Joseph F. Smith, of the Utah Mormon church, stated to the Senatorial Committee on Privileges and Elections that his "people" were "loyal to the Government," at the same time testifying that he had not kept the laws himself and did not intend to do so, but would continue to do as he had done; i. e., disregard the law of God on the marriage relation given to the church in 1831, and the Manifesto revelation to the Utah church through his predecessor, Wilford Woodruff, and the enactments of Congress and the statutes of the state of Utah.

It is a perfectly fair conclusion that as President Joseph F. Smith has done and is now doing, so is every other man, brother member and officer, in the Mormon church who was entangled in the meshes of the polygamous marriage net at the date of the Manifesto, or by artful collusion has juggled with the meaning of the word loyalty and has been married into the practice of polygamy, now is following the example of President Joseph F. Smith and living in the practice of polygamy, or plural marriage contrary to and in defiance of law. Such are not loyal to the Government of the United States, no matter how urgent their plea to loyalty may be.

PRAYER UNIONS.

There is no really good reason why the sisters of the church may not meet in what is known as a Prayer Union, at a stated time each week to work as a "mite" or "aid" society, engaging in such work as may offer them, or their wisdom devise, to aid any object worthy of consideration. These sisters also may by themselves, among themselves and for themselves spend a portion of their time at such meeting in prayer-service if they choose to do so, choosing some one of their number to take charge of such service. Or, the sisters of the church may meet at the house of some one of their number for the purpose of engaging in prayer-service, and may properly select some one of themselves to have charge in such service.

It is a mistake for the brethren, eldership or otherwise, to suppose that the sisters may not meet as above indicated simply because no one holding the priesthood is present to preside. Lay members, whether men or women, have the right in themselves to offer prayer-service to God, or to have charge in case no officer is present.

It would be an unfortunate condition of affairs if the sisters of the church, mothers, wives, sisters, and daughters, could not be trusted by themselves for an hour or two to spend together in prayer, unless there was some brother elder to watch them. It would seem to be only official jealousy that causes objection to the sisters' Prayer Unions. We are decidedly in favor of them. Men "shall of their own selves seek to bring about much righteousness." Why not the women?

ABUSE OF AMNESTY.

Amnesty asked for by Joseph F. Smith and other leading men and officers of the Utah Mormon church and which was granted by Presidents Harrison and Cleveland respectively, and by the terms of which the unlawful acts of those asking for relief were pardoned, and the children born of those unlawful acts were legitimized, was based upon the condition that the unlawful acts should be discontinued and the pardoned lawbreakers should thenceforward be law-abiding citizens, and in case they continued in doing such unlawful acts, thus continuing to be lawbreakers, the act of amnesty was void to them and left them subject to prosecution as other criminals would be and in direct contempt of the clemency of the Government and in forfeiture of the benefits of the amnesty asked for and granted.

The moral attitude of those to whom amnesty was thus granted is in effect that they are still criminals, unabsolved of their wrong-doing, and the children sought to be legitimized are deprived of the benefits of such legal act.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Is the baptism of the Holy Ghost the same as the baptism of fire—are the two terms identical?

Yes, we so understand. In Doctrine and Covenants section 18, paragraph 4, we read: "Thou shalt declare repentance and faith on the Savior, and remission of sins by baptism and by fire; yea, even the Holy Ghost."

Has the fullness of John's record, mentioned in Doctrine and Covenants 90:5 been received by the church?

We understand that it has not been received.

In view of the undeniable fact that human frailty is ever the same, liable to substitute for the sake of expediency that which may be not in harmony with the principles of revealed law and thus set aside the means by which the church can be sanctified, both in an individual and a collective sense,—Doctrine and Covenants 2:3; 85:8, 9,—is it reasonable to ask that, under these adverse conditions would the church be rejected of God or not?

Judging the matter by the history of the past, it seems clear that if the church departed from the truth to such a degree to merit rejection of God, it would be rejected of him. The kingdom of heaven was "taken from" the Jewish people of Palestine "and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." (Matthew 21:43; Acts 13:46.) The church in these last days was threatened with rejection, as an organization, which rejection occurred, and it remained under such condition until individuals holding authority were commanded of God to reorganize the body. What has occurred in the past may occur again, under similar conditions. However, we are given to understand that the purposes of God will not fail, but that he will continue and complete his work. It is the duty and privilege of the people of God so to live in adherence to his law that repetition of the lesson of rejection may not be necessary. By close adherence to the principles and spirit of the law of the celestial kingdom, danger of displeasure and rejection may be avoided; this applying to the church individually and collectively. The church is an organization constituted for the accomplishment of a specific purpose—the teaching of and making manifest the truth. Should it fail in accomplishing the purpose of its creation, it would be useless, hence another organization would be necessary. The principle is couched in the apostle's words, "That which beareth thorns and briars is rejected, and is nigh unto cursing; whose end is to be burned."—Hebrews 6:8. The Savior also spoke to like effect when he declared that he who continued not to receive should have taken from him that which he seemed to have.

In translating the Holy Scriptures what did Joseph Smith, the Seer, translate from?

We have no further information than that contained in the History and in the Preface to the Scriptures themselves, which state that the work was done by the spirit of inspiration.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

Ninety-seven baptisms in Bro. I. N. White's field in quarter ending November 1.

The reports of baptisms in the various fields are very encouraging. It shows a decided advancement along the ways of progress. Be encouraged, all ye workers for the truth; the Lord is with you.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Even the clergy of New York City are tainted with graft, according to the Chicago Tribune, for November 20. A discount is given by undertakers to ministers on funerals recommended by them. The discount may be placed to the credit of the bill of the family by order of the minister, but the number who put it in their own pockets is surprisingly great.

Along with the general prosperity of the country, the football game has reaped a bounteous harvest this season. Nineteen players have been killed (three of whom were seasoned athletes), and a hundred and thirty-five injured, not counting ordinary bruises. As a result of the serious accidents that in the nature of the game are unavoidable to a great extent, some of the schools have set an example which should be followed by every other school in the United States that has the safety and welfare of the student at heart—they have abandoned football. A game which has no good thing to recommend it, but which develops the more base and brutal qualities of human nature, should, with hazing and inhuman initiation pranks, be relegated to the back-ground and consigned to oblivion. None, unless it be those who, as Paul said, in the latter day should be without "natural affection," desire to send their children out from the protecting influences of home to be subjected to the cruel treatment suffered at some institutions of learning. None desire to send their child to an institution promising mental and moral attainment, and receive him back again a mangled corpse, or even with broken arms and legs. Latter Day Saints, in schools under their control, should not be the last to take an advance step. And how much better it would be if they would lead out boldly and demand a higher standard than is required by worldly institutions!

"Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife; and they shall be one flesh."—Genesis 2:24. "For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave unto his wife; and they twain shall be one flesh."—Matthew 19:5. "For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh."—Ephesians 5:31. "A bishop then must be blameless, the husband of one wife."—1 Timothy 3:4. "Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife."—Verse 12. "Marriage is ordained of God unto man: wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh."—Doctrine and Covenants 49:3. "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else."—Doctrine and Covenants 42:7. "Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord, wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led this people forth that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph. Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none: for I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women."—Book of Mormon, p. 116.

The Chicago Tribune, November 25, represents Henry M. Turner, leading bishop of the African Methodist Church, as charging the United States Supreme Court with robbing the negro of every vestige of human and manhood's rights, in the following words: "I am not pleased with this nation. No man hates this nation more than I do. When I go to say my prayers I have a struggle to get to the place where I am willing for God to allow the United States Supreme Court to have a part in my prayer. That damnable institution has robbed the negro of every vestige of human and manhood's rights. The men that compose that body may get to heaven the best way they can, but it is little help God will grant for any request that I make." We believe the last clause; his requests would probably make little difference one way or the other. Does the Bishop belong to that class mentioned by Peter and Jude who "despise government," and "despise dominion"? He admits it. "Presumptuous are they, self-willed, they are not afraid to speak evil of dignities." The Supreme Court may have done many regrettable things that need to be spoken against, yet no one is warranted in cultivating such a hatred of the nation and government. Rather should he follow the teachings of the Master, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you."

Bro. C. J. Spurlock writes from Delta, Colorado, that he has received ten packages of HERALDS and Ensigns in answer to his call a short time ago, and wishes to thank the senders.

At the yearly meeting for 1905 of the Federation of Church Clubs in the city of New York, an organization of the Episcopal Church, a wholesome "litany for society," authorized by the Bishop Coadjutor of the diocese of New York, was used. From it we make these extracts: "From all impurity, intemperance, idleness, and dishonesty, From all corruption of the franchise and of civil government, From all rebellion against the kingship of Christ, Deliver us, good Lord. O Lord, we beseech Thee, enable us to see that Thou hast a plan of love for the world, in the working out of which Thou dost give to each generation its appointed share. . . . Help us and all humanity so unreservedly to acknowledge Thy social law that all society may rise to that supreme ideal which Thou didst give to earth when the Eternal Word was clothed with the life of man."

It must be difficult to say such prayers perfunctorily: but to say them intelligently and in earnest is as certain to bring the appropriate answer as is praying for grain with a plow.—The Public.

President Frederick M. Smith has again changed his residence in Salt Lake City. His address is now 11 Devon Court, Salt Lake City, Utah. Those writing him please take notice.

Original Poetry

The Preaching of the Cross.

For th' preaching of th' cross
Men have left their loved ones dear;
They have suffered pain and loss,
And have labored far and near.
Hither, thither, spurned and tossed,
For th' preaching of th' cross.

For th' preaching of th' cross
Men have given all—their life:
Righteous souls have mourned their loss,
All have felt the bitter strife.
Hither, thither, spurned and tossed,
For th' preaching of th' cross.

For th' preaching of th' cross
God will own each chosen one;
He will show in time who've won
When this little life is done.
When his Saints shall not be tossed
For th' preaching of th' cross.

THE REORGANIZED CHURCH VERSUS SALVATION FOR THE DEAD.

The above is the title of a thirty-two-page pamphlet written and copyrighted by Joseph F. Smith, Jr. The purpose of the effort is to show that the Reorganization is out of harmony with the church-books on the subject of baptism for the dead.

We do not propose in this connection to give this work an extended examination, but to call attention to its character and purpose in few words. On page 4 he says:

It is not my purpose to discuss the foolish question of the "rejection of the church," but to examine the Reorganite position in regard to salvation for the dead; and to show their lack of harmony with the teachings of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints pertaining to the dead, as those teachings have been revealed through the latter-day Prophet.

The real issue between the Reorganized Church and the church in Utah is: Was the church rejected? For Mr. Smith to refuse to discuss the issue, and then to arraign us for opposition to the work of God on the assumed position that we are wrong on the issue between us, thus assuming as a basis for his case the real point at issue, is so decidedly foolish that it brands him as an unscrupulous opponent, or one ignorant of all proper rules of controversy.

The whole issue hinges on what he refuses to discuss.

If the church was rejected, then all the temple-building and ordinances performed by the church in Utah are without authority: if it was not, then, if they continued in favor with God, their ordinances, including baptism for the dead, are acceptable. Why refuse to discuss the real issue and then occupy time and space in trying to show that some one is out of harmony with some one else's interpretation of the books?

One other point we wish here to call attention to. On the last page of his tract he says: "What the Mormons believe is thus epitomized as formulated by the prophet Joseph Smith."

Then follows the "Articles of Faith" in most parts as Joseph Smith formulated them; but he, or some one else for him, has taken the liberty to change at least one of them, viz.: the fourth.

Where Joseph Smith the Prophet said, "We believe that these ordinances are," Mr. Joseph F. Smith changes it and makes it to read, "We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the gospel are."

He then has the audacity to attach Joseph Smith's name to this document. Joseph Smith the Prophet conveys the impression that by obedience to the "Articles of Faith" as he formulated them, salvation could be secured, while Joseph F. Smith, Jr., seeks to make him say that these are only the beginning, and that there is something else to follow in order to secure salvation. This appears to be a covert effort to pave the way for that other, so called, new and everlasting covenant presented to the Utah Special Conference at Salt Lake City in August, 1852, providing for polygamy.

Query: If men do not scruple to sign Joseph Smith's name to a doctored article, making him to say what he did not say, are we not justified in the suspicion that they would forge his name to the document which they thus prepare the way for?

CLAIMS OF REORGANIZATION DEFENDED.

In company with Bro. W. W. Smith, now in charge of the church-work in the city of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, we visited the library of the Pennsylvania Historical Society in Philadelphia, and made a brief examination of the newspapers for the years 1839 to 1844, Bro. Smith gathering what information he could find relative to the work in that city in the early days, of which you will doubtless hear from him, while I examined editorials and foreign news of several daily papers concerning Mormons, Mormonism, and their persecutions. I had for many years wished for the privilege to see for myself what the unprejudiced writers had to say on the subject; and I am pleased, that while the newspapers contained much that was false and had a tendency to poison the public minds against the Saints, there were some that presented facts in their true light.

I present the following from the Public Ledger, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, for July 15, 1844:

It now began to be rumored by several men whose names will be forthcoming in time, that there was nothing against these men (Joseph and Hyrum Smith). The law could not reach, but powder and ball would.

The following is the statement of Mr. H. T. Reids, one of the counsel for the Smiths, as published in Public Ledger, July 15, 1844:

The different examinations, comments, and so forth, preceding the final violence, [seems] to have been highly informal. A guard of only eight men was stationed at the jail, whilst the rest of the Grays were in camp at a quarter of a mile distance; and whilst his Excellency (the Governor) was haranguing the peaceable citizens of Nauvoo, and asking them to give up all their own arms, the assassins were murdering the prisoners in jail, whom the Governor had pledged himself to protect. At about 6 p. m., the guard was surprised by an armed mob of from 150 to 250 painted red, black, and yellow, which surrounded the jail, forced in, poured a shower of bullets into the room where these unfortunate men were held in durance vile to answer to the laws of Illinois, under the solemn pledge of the faith of the State by Governor Ford that they should be protected, but the mob ruled, they fell as martyrs amid the tornadoes of lead, each receiving four bullets; John Taylor was wounded by four bullets in his limb, but not seriously. Thus perished the hope of law; thus vanishes the pledged faith of the State; thus the blood of innocence stains the constituted authorities of the United States, and thus have two among the most noble martyrs since the slaughter of Abel sealed the truth of their divine mission by being shot by a mob for their religion.

Copied from the St. Louis Review for the Public Ledger. The above statement is from one who was on the ground and was not a member of the church.

Public Ledger, July 18, 1844:

All men from one end of the Union to the other must condemn most emphatically the outbreak at Carthage, Illinois. It was wrong, unjustified by any law; it was a demonstration bound to be regretted deeply by all our good citizens living under this free government.

Editorial, July 30, 1844, Public Ledger, copied from Tribune:

The killing of Joseph and Hyrum Smith while in the custody of the law by an armed mob June 27. This outrage has brought great reproach upon our government, the press and public sentiment generally as far as we have heard, stigmatized the act as a deed of cold-blooded unprovoked murder.

Editorial, July 13, 1844, from United States Gazette, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania:

We have expressed our opinion that the two Smiths, Joe and Hyrum, were not killed in an attempt to escape from jail, or from an effort at rescue, and we now find that we were correct in our surmise. The following letter from Governor Ford of Illinois shows that the massacre of them was a thorough going cold-blooded murder. They had surrendered themselves to the authorities, and were awaiting a trial by jury. The claim is made by the enemies of the Saints, that it was in an attempt to take from jail the prisoners by their friends that they were shot by the guard. This statement was not believed by the Editor of the United States Gazette. As stated by them and the report of Governor Ford, which we shall present, confirms the Editors that they were right in their opinion as above stated. The very fact as admitted by all that have heretofore said anything about the killing of these men in their publications here stated that they came to their death at the hands of a mob from 150 to 250 strong, painted black, red, and yellow, is strong evidence that it was premeditated by the mob who had disfigured themselves. There was no need to paint themselves if they had wished to help the guard to keep the prisoners from escaping. It was claimed that the prisoners had been supplied with weapons.

Notice what the editor of the St. Louis Gazette said, as copied by the Public Ledger, July 31, 1844:

Weapons are said to have been found in the prophet's cell after his death. Quite probable weapons enough had been carried there by his assassins to accomplish their diabolical deed, and it was easy for some to be left behind, easier than to explain how a prisoner in close confinement should have retained weapons. The prisoners were not placed in the cells; they were permitted to occupy a room above, so if there were weapons in the cell, they would not have been of any value to the prisoners had they wanted them, for the cell was not on the same floor as they were.

Statement of Governor Thomas Ford, July 12, 1844, from Public Ledger:

I desire to make a brief but true statement of the recent disgraceful affair at Carthage, Illinois, in regard to the Smiths so far as circumstances have come to my knowledge. The Smiths, Joseph and Hyrum, have been assassinated in jail, by whom it is not known, but will be ascertained. I pledged myself for their safety, and upon the assurance of that pledge, they surrendered as prisoners. The Mormons surrendered the public arms in their possession, and the Nauvoo Legion submitted to the command of Captain Singleton, of Brown County, deputized by me for that purpose. All these things were required to satisfy the old citizens of Hancock County, that the Mormons were peaceably disposed and to allay jealousy and excitement in their minds. It appears, however, that the compliance of the Mormons with every requisition made upon them failed of that purpose. The pledge of security to the Mormons was not given by my individual responsibility. Before I gave it, I obtained a pledge of honor by a unanimous vote from the officers and men under my command to sustain me in performing it. If the assassination of the Smiths was committed by any portion of these, they have added treachery to murder, and have done all they could do to disgrace the State and sully the public honor.

(Signed)

THOMAS FORD,

Governor and Commander-in-Chief.

State of Illinois, July 12, 1844.

Reported for the St. Louis Review, copied by the Public Ledger July 17, 1844:

Having visited Nauvoo and its vicinity in person for the purpose of getting at the true statement of affairs among the Mormons and their neighbors, we are enabled to give the latest as well as the most correct intelligence. Nauvoo reposes in a state of quietude and tranquility most remarkable. During some thirty hours that we passed in the holy city, we heard but one solitary intemperate expression, and the man who uttered it, was instantly checked, and made silent by more prudent spirits around him. The above speaks well for a people that had been robbed of husbands, fathers, prophets, and patriarch, shot down in cold blood by a wicked mob, after they had complied with all that had been requested of them.

Notice what Governor Ford says further. Public Ledger, August 14, 1844:

I have been informed that the Mormons about Lima and Macedonia have been warned to leave the settlement. They have a right to remain and enjoy their property, as long as they are good citizens they should not be molested, and the sooner those misguided persons withdraw their steps, the better it will be for them. I can never agree that a set of infatuated and infuriated men shall barbarously attack a peaceful people who have submitted to all the demands of the law when they had full power to do so, refrained from inflicting vengeance on their enemies.

For further information see Church History, volume 1. July 19, 1844, Public Ledger, copied from the St. Louis Transcript of July 10, 1844:

Much speculation abounds as to who will be the successor of the imposter Joe. It is asserted by those who profess to know that his oldest son, a lad of about twelve years of age, is to be the new ruler, and that a revelation to that effect was left behind by the departed prophet.

We shall present some of the revelations that have a bearing upon the matter referred to in the above statement as published sixty-one years ago in the columns of the public newspaper, which is strong evidence that he was a prophet of God, and not an imposter as stated by the reporter.

Doctrine and Covenants 43: 1, 2, February, 1831:

O hearken, ye elders of my church, and give ear to the words which I shall speak unto you: for, behold, verily, verily I say unto you, that ye have received a commandment for a law unto my church, through him whom I have appointed unto you, to receive commandments and revelations from my hand, and this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me.

From the above is given to understand that no one is to receive by revelation laws and commandments for the entire church, but the one chosen and appointed. We can see the wisdom and safety in this, and this was to be the law and order until he be taken, if he abide in the Lord.

Paragraph 2:

But verily, verily, I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift, except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he should not have power, except to appoint another in his stead; and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations, or commandments; and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived, that you may know they are not of me. For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me, shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed.

The Lord foresaw that there would a time come when there would be deceivers, and as means of protection the warning is given. And we notice first, that there was none to receive commandments for the church, but the one appointed, Joseph Smith, Jr. Second, that no one should be appointed unto this gift, except it be through him, and this shall be the law. Third, we are not to receive the revelations or commandments of any that have not come in accordance with the above. Fourth, he that is ordained of the Lord, shall come in at the gate and be ordained, and he shall teach the revelations already received, and those which shall be received "through him whom I have appointed."

Section 87, paragraph 2:

Verily I say unto you, The keys of this kingdom shall never be taken from you, while thou art in the world, neither in the world to come; nevertheless, through you shall the oracles be given to another; yea, even unto the church.

The above was given March, 1833, and is in harmony with section 43, already referred to, giving us to understand that the successor would be appointed by and through him (Joseph).

Section 104, paragraph 18:

The order of this priesthood was confirmed to be handed down from father to son, and rightly belongs to the literal descendants of the chosen seed, to whom the promises were made. This order was instituted in the days of Adam and came down by lineage.

All Latter Day Saints believe that Peter, James, and John conferred the holy priesthood upon Joseph Smith, Jr. This being true, and in harmony with the order from the days of Adam down, he, Joseph, would be justified in the eyes of the law to confer the same upon his posterity.

Section 107, paragraph 18:

For this anointing have I put upon his head that his blessing shall also be put upon the head of his posterity after him; and as I said unto Abraham, concerning the kindreds of the earth, even so I say unto my servant Joseph, In thee, and in thy seed, shall the kindred of the earth be blessed.

Section 99, paragraph 6:

The president of the church, who is also the president of the council, is appointed by revelation, and acknowledged, in his administration, by the voice of the church; and it is according to the dignity of his office, that he should preside over the high council of the church; and it is his privilege to be assisted by two other presidents, appointed after the same manner that he himself was appointed.

The above is very plain as to the manner in which the presidency is called by revelation, these to be acknowledged by the voice of the church.

Section 17, paragraph 17:

Every president of the high priesthood (or presiding elder), bishop, high counselor, and high priest, is to be ordained by the direction of a high council, or general conference.

We notice the expression "every president of the high priesthood" is to be ordained.

We will briefly refer to the law and order governing the call and appointment of the successor to the prophet, seer, revelator, and presidency of the church as follows:

1. Called by revelation (see section 99, paragraph 6).
2. To be appointed or chosen through his predecessor by revelation (see section 43, paragraphs 1, 2; section 87, paragraph 2).
3. Must be of the lineage of the literal descendants of the chosen seed (see section 104, paragraph 18; section 107, paragraph 18).
4. Is to be ordained by direction of a high council or general conference (see section 17, paragraph 17).
5. Shall teach those revelations received by the one appointed, Joseph Smith, Jr. (see section 43, paragraph 2).

We shall examine the Presidency of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

1. The President, Joseph Smith, is the oldest son of the late prophet and President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, namely, Joseph Smith, Jr.; the one appointed and empowered to choose and set apart his successor. (See section 43, paragraphs 1, 2; section 87, paragraph 2.)

2. The President of the Reorganized Church was blessed by his father in Liberty jail. The promise and blessing of a life of usefulness to the cause of truth was pronounced upon his head. Over forty-five years have been spent in the interest of the cause of truth referred to in the blessing. Upon two other occasions was the same blessing confirmed by his father, Joseph Smith. What greater evidence do we want than work performed during the past forty-five years by this faithful servant of God of the divinity of his mission? (See Church History, vol. 3, p. 508.) Lyman Wight, one of the first apostles, testifies to the truthfulness of the blessing pronounced upon the head of Joseph by his father, also Bro. James Whitehead. (See Church History, vols. 2 and 3.)

3. Joseph Smith was ordained by order of General Conference to the Presidency, at Amboy, Illinois, 1860, under the hands of High Priest William Marks and Apostles William W. Blair and Zenos H. Gurley. Bro. Marks was president of the High Council in the lifetime of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. Some fault has been found with the ordination; the objector claims that it should have been performed by Joseph Smith, Jr. We answer that Joseph Smith, Jr., was ordained to the Presidency January 25, 1832, by a council of high priests nearly two years after the organization of the church, at Amherst, Ohio. (See Times and Seasons, vol. 5, pp. 611, 612, 624; Church History, vol. 1, p. 244.) As there were no apostles till 1835, and the High Council was not organized till February 17, 1834, the reader can see that the ordination of the son was by a higher tribunal than that of the father. In the latter we have two of the apostles and the president of the High Council, so we see no just grounds for the objection.

4. He shall teach the revelations received. With pleasure we look back over the forty-five years, and with gratitude to God for the light, wisdom, and understanding with which he has blessed our worthy President, to guide the church in the straight and narrow way. His advice and counsel have always been in harmony with the law, and it has been his delight to point to what was written in the three books. The Lord said, "He that is ordained of me, shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed." All that have come in as teachers that have not taught in harmony with those revelations, we are justified in rejecting. And they have been numerous in the various factions that have come into existence in the last sixty years; calling themselves Latter Day Saints. Out of the twenty factions, there are to-day some two or three left. The fact that there have sprung forth so many claiming to be the successors to Joseph Smith, Jr., nearly all having had some followers, and having taught and practiced that which was in conflict with the revelations as referred to in section 43, paragraphs 1 and 2, is strong evidence of the wisdom of the warning voice in said section, as nearly all of those pretended leaders are a thing of the past, having failed to accomplish that which they claimed they were sent to do, namely, build up the waste places of Zion, and bring home the scattered sheep, (which we understand is one of the duties of the true leader and successor to the Palmyra Seer,) a work that is being done to-day by the Reorganized Church. The Saints are gathering into the regions round about as well as to the central place, and the promises of the Lord are being fulfilled, as spoken in the year 1834, section 102, paragraph 7:

Talk not judgment, neither boast of faith, nor of mighty works; but carefully gather together, as much in one region as can be consistently with the feelings of the people: and, behold,

I will give unto you favor and grace in their eyes, that you may rest in peace and safety.

For thirty years I have lived in Far West District, state of Missouri, and with a thankful heart do testify that the Saints are receiving favor and grace with the people, and do rest in peace and safety, and what is true of Far West District is true also of the stakes of Independence and Lamoni. This of itself is evidence that we are in harmony with the revelations. How is it with those that have inhabited the salt land, as spoken of in Jeremiah 17:5, 6? Why, they said nearly sixty years ago when confronted with the question by those that read in the revelations that Missouri was the land set apart for the gathering, "Oh, yes, we are going back to Zion." Why teach and sing that Utah is Zion, the place for the Saints to gather? What says the revelation? Section 57, paragraph 1:

Hearken, O ye elders of my church, saith the Lord your God, who have assembled yourselves together, according to my commandments, in this land which is the land of Missouri, which is the land which I have appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the saints; wherefore this is the land of promise, the place for the city of Zion.

Section 98, paragraph 4:

Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy; to build up the waste places of Zion. And all these things, that the prophets might be fulfilled. And, behold, there is none other place appointed than that which I have appointed, neither shall there be any other place appointed than that which I have appointed for the work of the gathering of my saints, until the day cometh when there is found no more room for them; and then I have other places which I will appoint unto them, and they shall be called stakes for the curtains, or the strength of Zion.

The above needs no comment. I only wish to say that Brigham Young and his successors have taught and instructed thousands to gather to Salt Lake and vicinity, calling it Zion, when the Lord positively said that the gathering-place was in Missouri, and that Zion would not be moved out of her place. Brigham said otherwise, and thousands believed him, another evidence that he, Brigham, nor any of his successors, was not the one that would come in at the gate and be ordained to receive revelations and commandments for the church, for they have not taught the revelations. (See section 43, paragraphs 1, 2.)

I shall briefly give a short history of what is known in the world as the Utah Mormon church, and prove that they did usurp authority. First, three of the Quorum of Twelve apostles, John E. Page, Lyman Wight, and William Smith (brother of the martyrs) deserted Brigham Young and his followers. Second, Brigham and six of the Quorum of Twelve returned to Winter Quarters from Salt Lake City, October 31, 1847. Two of the Twelve, P. P. Pratt and John Taylor, remained in Salt Lake City.

On the 3d of December 1847, a conference was held in Winter Quarters, but after having resolved to build a tabernacle for the congregation, it adjourned for three weeks. December 5, council was held at the house of Apostle Hyde. Brigham Young expressed his views covering the reorganization of the First Presidency, and wished those present to do the same. Orson Hyde then moved that Brigham Young be President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and that he nominate his two counselors to form the First Presidency. Wilford Woodruff seconded the motion. It was carried. President Young nominated H. C. Kimball as his first counselor and Willard Richard as his second. The same was carried. (See Life of Brigham Young, p. 188.)

As we have already stated, five of the Twelve being absent and President Young in the chair, he could not be elected by a majority of this quorum without casting a vote for himself, and it would also require the votes of Kimball and Richards, each voting for himself to place them in the Presidency; hence this step toward the reorganization of the Presidency was illegal, not having a quorum present "and every decision made by either of these quorums [Twelve or Seventy] must be by the unanimous voice of the same; that is, every member in each quorum must be agreed to its decisions in order to make their decisions of the same power or validity one with the other. (A majority may form a quorum, when circumstances render it impossible to be otherwise.)" (Doctrine and Covenants 104:11.)

On the 24th of December, 1847, conference convened in the newly-erected building, 60 by 40, with a seating capacity for from six hundred to one thousand. The action of the above council was received and adopted. The above was not in harmony with the law and order of the church, as we shall here prove.

1. The President is to be called by revelation through his predecessor (see section 43, paragraph 1, 2; section 99, paragraph 6).

2. His counselors are to be called by revelation (see section 99, paragraph 6).

3. Every president of the high priesthood or presiding elder is to be ordained by the direction of a high council or general conference (see section 17, paragraph 17).

4. It is the order of this priesthood to go from father to son (see section 104, paragraph 18-24).

Brigham Young and his followers have taught that the president of the Quorum of Twelve was the next highest officer to the president of the church, and if the president was removed by death, that the president of the Quorum of Twelve became his successor. And this rule they carried out in the appointment of Brigham, Taylor, Woodruff, and Snow to the presidency; but a departure from that which they claimed was the law governing the succession was made in the choosing of the present incumbent, Joseph F. Smith, when had they lived up to their former order, Brigham Young, Jr., would be the successor to Mr. Snow. Consistency is a jewel, but her name is not Brighamism. The claim is now made by the supporters of Joseph F. Smith to the Presidency of the Utah church, that his father was appointed a prophet, seer, and revelator; and that by lineage he is entitled to the Presidency. Why did they not say so long ago, before Brigham, Taylor, Woodruff, or Snow were chosen?

Let us read section 107, paragraph 29, given June 19, 1841:

And again, verily I say unto you, Let my servant William be appointed, ordained, and anointed, as a counselor to my servant Joseph, in the room of my servant Hyrum; that my servant Hyrum may take the office of priesthood and patriarch [not President], which was appointed unto him by his father, by blessing and also by right, that from henceforth he shall hold the keys of the patriarchal blessings upon the heads of all my people, that whoever he blesses shall be blessed, and whoever he curse shall be cursed; that whosoever he shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever he shall loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven; and from this time forth, I appoint unto him that he may be a prophet, and a seer, and revelator unto my church, as well as my servant Joseph, that he may act in concert also with my servant Joseph, and that he shall receive counsel from my servant Joseph, who shall show unto him the keys whereby he may ask and receive, and may be crowned with the same blessing, and glory, and honor, and priesthood, and gifts of the priesthood, that once were put upon him that was my servant Oliver Cowdery.

The appointment of Brigham Young to the Presidency was not in harmony with the above, hence illegal:

1. He was not called by revelation.

2. He was not recommended by the High Council or General Conference for ordination to the Presidency, or even by the faction of the church over which he presided.

3. Joseph Smith, Jr., who was the President of the church, and who had the power and authority to appoint his successor, did not appoint Brigham Young.

4. Brigham Young was not in the lineage of Joseph Smith, and had no claim as his successor.

Brigham Young said, "You can not fill the office of a prophet, seer, and revelator. God must do this. You are like children without a father, and sheep without a shepherd. You must not appoint any man at your head. If you should, the Twelve must ordain him. [Why did not they ordain Brigham?] You can not appoint a man at your head."—Brigham Young, president of the Twelve, Nauvoo, August 15, 1844.—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, pp. 618-620. "I again repeat, no man can stand at our head except God reveals it from the heavens."—Page 231.

That is just what the Reorganized Church has taught, which is in harmony with the law; but as we have already stated, Brigham was chosen at Winter Quarters, December, 1847, as president of the church in open violation of the law and order of the church, as understood and declared by him August 15, 1844.

From the above we learn that Hyrum was appointed patriarch by his father by blessing and also by right, and he was appointed a prophet, seer, and revelator unto the church; that is, in the discharge of his duties as a patriarch to the church, not as President and law-giver. He could not fulfill his office as patriarch, successfully, without the gift of revelation; hence the wisdom in the appointment as a prophet and revelator. Again, he is promised the same honor and priesthood and gifts of the priesthood that once were put upon him that was my servant Oliver Cowdery.

In section 27, paragraphs 1 and 2, Oliver is given to understand that no one is to receive commandments in the church but Joseph Smith, Jr., and the Lord informs Oliver further that he must not command him who is at the head, so that while he (Oliver) was blessed with the spirit of revelation, and to teach the church, he is forbidden to write by way of commandment, but by wisdom; and Hyrum was to be honored as Oliver Cowdery. Had the sons of Patriarch Hyrum Smith remained faithful in the work, and the same blessing was conferred upon either of them that was given to their father, neither they nor their supporters could claim by blessing or by right the presidency of the church. Had they walked in the footsteps of their father, they would not have been guilty of transgressing the laws of God and the land, and the probabilities are that the honor and priesthood and gifts of the priesthood conferred upon their faithful father would to-day be theirs to enjoy, and they would act in concert with the posterity of Joseph Smith, Jr., whose right it is by lineage and blessing to the Presidency of the church. (See section 107, paragraph 18.)

I was pleased to learn by the statement of the reporter already referred to, published just thirteen days after the death of Joseph and Hyrum, in the St. Louis Transcript, that it was understood by those that professed to know, that the oldest son of the Prophet would be his successor. This was so understood to my personal knowledge in Wales, for I heard my parents and others speak of it. Time has demonstrated the truthfulness of the claim. Forty-five years have passed, and the oldest son has faithfully discharged his duty as the successor in office to his father, Joseph Smith, Jr. Long may he live.

WM. LEWIS.

P. S.—On page 854 of the HERALD, September 6, 1905, appeared what is, in my judgment, an unwarranted criticism. The writer says, "Here we have a young lady in Missouri weighing one hundred and twenty pounds at the age of eleven years, showing the productiveness of Missouri soil." This he immediately follows up with, "This is another evidence of the divine guidance' of Joseph Smith." The statement concerning evidence, referred to, does not come in where the brother tries to make it appear, but follows the statement: "No mistake made in choosing that land as the central place for our gathering, notwithstanding it was so declared seventy-five years ago by a young man twenty-five years of age, unlearned, when that land was unknown so far as her resources and coming value were concerned." It is the fact that Missouri stands to-day as one of the leading States in the Union, and the central place, Jackson County, the garden spot, called forth the saying that Joseph was guided by divine hand, and that there was no mistake made in the selection.

WM. LEWIS.

SCRANTON, Pennsylvania, September 21, 1905.

THE SCHOOL OF THE PROPHETS.

DESIGNED OF GOD FOR THE INSTRUCTION AND PREPARATION OF ALL THE MINISTRY OF THE CHURCH.

The disciples asked Jesus concerning those not members of the church:

Why speakest thou unto them in parables? He answered and said unto them, Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given. Therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is a householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old.—Matthew 13: 10, 11, 52.

And in the gospels are recorded some of the beautiful instructions of Jesus to the officers of the church; and also in the letters, especially in those of Paul to Timothy and Titus, are some excellent teachings to the ministry. And when our Master again began his great work of the last days, he gave them like instruction and also made such necessary preparation by counsel, as would qualify all the officers of the church for every duty devolving upon them, that they might be more perfectly united in their teaching, and thus be better qualified to instruct others in the doctrines, laws, principles, commandments, and rules of the church and kingdom of God, and of the redemption of Zion. And he spoke to us in 1894, saying, "Until my people shall hear and heed those who are set in the church to teach the revelations there will be misunderstanding and confusion among the members."—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 1. And the ministry should seek "that their wisdom may be the wisdom of the Lord and their strength the strength of the Spirit" (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 2), without in the least degree neglecting the aid of the Holy Spirit, but rather striving to follow more closely the counsel of the Master through the Holy Spirit: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."—2 Timothy 2: 15. Then there will be no misunderstanding or confusion among the members, for all the workmen in all their varied duties will see eye to eye.

And as the work progresses toward the end, it is apparent that the ministry of the church should use the means which God has ordained whereby they would be more perfectly qualified to teach the doctrines, laws, and order of the church, according to the instructions which he has given to us for these last times. And concerning the successor of Joseph the Martyr it is said:

For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me, shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed.—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 2.

One of the strong evidences presented by the elders of the Reorganization in favor of the successorship in the presidency, is the fact that in all his teaching to the church and to the world he has never varied in the least degree from this instruction. And the following paragraph of that section shows that a more official teaching than the Reorganization has yet received may be expected when the ministry of the church are fully prepared or qualified to engage in such work of instruction:

And now, behold, I give unto you a commandment, that when ye are assembled together, ye shall instruct and edify each other, that ye may know how to act and direct my church how to act upon the points of my law and commandments, which I have given; and thus ye shall become instructed in the law of my church, and be sanctified by that which ye have received, and ye shall bind yourselves to act in all holiness before me, that inasmuch as ye do this, glory shall be added to the kingdom which ye have received.—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 3.

In this the church was commanded to instruct and edify each other, in an assembly or school, how to act upon the points of God's law and commandments, and how to direct the church to act upon all these also. But it appears that the church was not sufficiently diligent in reference to this matter, and two years afterwards the Lord spoke again, saying:

Therefore, verily I say unto you, my friends, Call your solemn assembly, as I have commanded you; and as all have not faith, seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith. Organize yourselves; prepare every needful thing, and establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36.

Again the officers of the church are here commanded to teach one another words of wisdom out of the best books, and to learn by study and also by faith, and to organize themselves, and to establish a house of God, a house of learning; for the Lord has told us that the elders of his church "are not sent forth to be taught, but to teach the children of men the things which I have put into your hands by the power of my Spirit; and ye are to be taught from on high."—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 4.

We of course would know that of any other teacher, for the teachers in the schools of the world are not sent to teach until they have been taught; and why should we not seek instruction in the school of the prophets which the Lord has authorized for the preparation of the ministry? Has not the Master said of the the elders, "Ye are not sent forth to be taught"? Not even by experience, which is an excellent teacher; but in this school is a far superior teacher, for those who attend there "are to be taught from on high." "And they shall teach according to the spirit of wisdom and understanding, and as they shall be directed by revelation, from time to time."—Doctrine and Covenants 122:2.

And again the Lord spake to the elders, saying:

It is my will . . . that there may be an house built unto me for the salvation of Zion; for a place of thanksgiving, for all saints, and for a place of instruction for all those who are called to the work of the ministry, in all their several callings, and offices; that they may be perfected in the understanding of their ministry; in theory; in principle and in doctrine, in all things pertaining to the kingdom of God on the earth, the keys of which kingdom have been conferred upon you.—Doctrine and Covenants 94:3.

In this we notice that a place of instruction must be built for all those who are called to the work of the ministry in all their several callings and offices, and in paragraph 5 we read, "If Zion do these things, she shall prosper and spread herself and become very glorious, very great, and very terrible; and the nations of the earth shall honor her." But if she does not do what God has commanded her, what then? Hear what the Master says: "But if she observe not to do whatsoever I have commanded her, I will visit her according to all her works, with sore affliction, with pestilence, with plague, with sword, with vengeance, with devouring fire."

All the ministry in all their several callings were to attend that place of instruction that they might be perfected in their ministry, for we read as follows:

And again, the order of the house prepared for the presidency of the school of the prophets, established for their instruction in all things that are expedient for them, even for all the officers of the church, or, in other words, those who are called to the ministry in the church, beginning at the high priests, even down to the deacons.—Doctrine and Covenants 85:39.

And a part of that building was to "be dedicated to me for the school of mine apostles." (Doctrine and Covenants 92:3.)

Thus all of the ministry were to have the privilege of attending that school of preparation, established for the instruction of all the officers of the church from the high priests to the deacons. Apostles are high priests, and the Presidency were to hold "the keys of the school of the prophets, which I have commanded to be organized, that thereby they may be perfected in their ministry for the salvation of Zion, and of the nations of Israel, and of the Gentiles." (Doctrine and Covenants 87:3.) And in this school they were instructed to "appoint among yourselves a teacher" (Doctrine and Covenants 85:37), and thus they were to teach one another.

By these quotations we learn that the Master designed that the ministry should be in unison in their teachings, at least when they went out from that school as Jesus had beforetime prayed: "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us."—John 17:21.

And again we read:

And I give unto you a commandment, that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; . . . and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms, that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again, to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you.—Doctrine and Covenants 85:21.

And thus we have learned by these revelations that it is necessary that a house be prepared and a school established wherein all the officers of the church from high priests to deacons were to receive instruction which would qualify them to fulfill their duties in every position in the church; and those who had been sent once were to attend that school that they might be prepared to go out again to warn the world. And a minister after attending that school will be perfectly qualified to take care of the flock over which he may be called to preside; and the missionaries will be fully qualified to go out into the world to teach the wonderful story of Christ and his gospel, for all these will agree in their counsel and teaching, and those to be sent to a foreign land will be instructed in the laws, customs, and language of that people, and his own rights and privileges while there, as a citizen of his own nation. And these all teaching the same laws, doctrines, and principles, all misunderstanding and confusion among the people will cease, sinners be converted, and Zion be redeemed.

Is it too much to say that Zion will not be redeemed until this instruction is complied with? Read section 94 and meditate upon these things.

WHO ARE WORTHY TO ATTEND THAT SCHOOL?

That there are some peculiar qualifications required of those who desire to become students in that school is very evident, and very proper also; for those who pass through that school may be relied upon in perfect faith by the church, and sent forth to occupy in places of trust and grave responsibility. Therefore they must be men of experience, honorable, just, and true men, and worthy in all things, as the following quotations will show. The Lord in speaking concerning those who were accepted of him in the school in Zion, said:

All among them who know their hearts are honest, and are broken, and their spirits contrite, and are willing to observe their covenants by sacrifice; yea, every sacrifice which I, the Lord, shall command, they are all accepted of me.—Doctrine and Covenants 94:2.

"Therefore cease from all your light speeches, from all laughter, from all your lustful desires, from all your pride and light-mindedness, and from all your wicked doings. See that ye love one another; cease to be covetous; learn to impart to one another as the gospel requires; cease to be idle; cease to be unclean; cease to find fault one with another; . . . and above all things, clothe yourselves with the bonds of charity, as with a mantle, which is the bond of perfectness and peace.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 37, 38.

And this salutation is to be made by the president or teacher to all those who enter the school:

I salute you in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, in token or remembrance of the everlasting covenant, in which covenant I receive you to fellowship, in a determination that is fixed, immovable, and unchangeable, to be your friend and brother, through the grace of God, in the bonds of love, to walk in all the commandments of God blameless, in thanksgiving, for ever and ever. Amen. And he that is found unworthy of this salutation shall not have place among you.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 41, 42. And ye shall not receive any among you into this school, save he is clean from the blood of this generation.—Paragraph 45.

Probably for this writing these will be sufficient, but I wish to call attention to these that we may the better comprehend them. In these we find that the Lord requires that those who enter that school must have these qualifications. They must be honest-hearted men, whose spirits are contrite, and who are willing to observe their covenants by sacrifice.

If we will meditate a few minutes upon this statement, we might say that these requirements were sufficient, especially when the ministry observe "every sacrifice which I the Lord shall command." What more could mortal do to cause himself to be accepted of God? However, they were also commanded to cease from foolish speech or laughter, from all evil desire, pride, and all wicked doings; and to love one another, and impart to one another, thus putting away all self-conceit and covetousness; and to cease to be idle, for an indolent person can not be a diligent servant; and to be clean.

"Men of God, who bear the vessels of the Lord, be ye clean in your bodies and in your clothing."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 3. How like the counsel of old! "Touch no unclean thing; . . . be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the Lord."—Isaiah 52:11.

"Cease to find fault one with another." When will we learn to abide this counsel? Brethren, think it over, meditate upon it, heed it, and let us clothe ourselves "with charity as with a mantle." All these things we must do before we can be accounted worthy to enter the school of the prophets.

"And ye shall not receive any among you into this school, save he is clean from the blood of this generation." This command includes all things necessary to constitute a person worthy to enter that school. And a person who is "clean from the blood of this generation," has proved himself a faithful, just, and active servant, and, from deacon to high priest, has obeyed all the laws of God which pertain to the salvation of men, and also to the redemption of Zion, having made a covenant by sacrifice, having even presented their "bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God." (Romans 12: 1.) And having dedicated and consecrated themselves and all they were to the Lord, they, like David of old, could ask the Lord to "create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me. Then will I teach transgressors thy ways; and sinners shall be converted unto thee." (Psalm 51: 10, 13.)

And the minister who has warned his neighbor, and is in accordance with the foregoing instruction, is most surely clean from the blood of that neighbor, and therefore is worthy to enter the school of the prophets to qualify himself for further work in his office in the church.

And the missionary who has faithfully warned those in the mission to which he had been sent, keeping himself in harmony with these laws of God in his work, is clean from the blood of those of that generation, and therefore is worthy to enter that school, to learn from all good books, not only doctrine, church government, and laws, but also the laws, customs, and languages of the nation or people to which he is to be sent. For the Lord tells us that he commanded the first laborers in this last kingdom to assemble, and organize themselves, and to "teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that ye may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; . . . that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21.)

They had been sent once, and having proved themselves faithful and true servants were then clean from the blood of that generation, as is also intimated in paragraph 20 of this section. For they were commanded to attend a school to prepare themselves to go again to magnify their calling, and in that school they were to be instructed in all things that were expedient for them to understand, and they could not enter that school unless they were clean from the blood of that generation. And it certainly is expedient that the pastors and the missionaries should be in harmony with those whose duty it is to teach, as well as with each other in all doctrines and laws of the kingdom of God, its ordinances, customs, principles, and in all things which pertain unto the redemption of Zion.

And all the ministry who have proved themselves faithful in all these things are free, and clean from the blood of this generation up to that time. Thus some experience is necessary to qualify a minister and make him worthy of entrance into that school, in which the minister who has proved himself worthy of the salutation of the teacher, and therefore has obeyed all the laws of salvation and of the redemption of Zion so far as he knows, may be prepared for greater usefulness in the kingdom of God.

And a minister who has passed through a course of instruction in that school will certainly be properly prepared for his work, and then the ministry will be more united, and the church can safely send them forth, sustaining them by their confidence, and trust, and faith. Then the missionaries, district and branch officers, Sunday-school superintendents and teachers, of the higher classes at least, will be prepared to teach, correctly and in unison, the doctrines, commandments, and laws of God. Thus all will work together for man's salvation and Zion's redemption.

Then the missionaries will go forth to their missions fully qualified to enter upon their work, having been instructed in the laws, customs, and languages of the people to whom they are sent, as well as in all points of doctrine and laws.

And thus all the officers of the church, being united in the ministerial work of the church, as well as being instructed by the bishopric in the laws and orders of tithing, surplus, consecrations, stewardships, inheritances, and the redemption of Zion, will present a solid phalanx of the ministry in their great work of redemption, all believing alike, all teaching the same things, in fact all one, as Jesus and his Father are one, yet each maintaining his own personality and individuality.

When this is done it will be by the Father's aid through the school of the prophets, and never can be accomplished until such a school is established, whatever its name may be. May God hasten the day of its establishment.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Be Strong.

Be strong!

We are not here to play, to dream, to drift,
We have hard work to do, and loads to lift.
Shun not the struggle; face it. 'Tis God's gift.

Be strong!

Say not the days are evil—Who's to blame?
And fold the hands and acquiesce—O shame!
Stand up, speak out, and bravely, in God's name.

Be strong!

It matters not how deep entrenched the wrong,
How hard the battle goes, the day, how long.
Faint not, fight on! To-morrow comes the song.

"There is a lad here, which hath five barley loaves and two small fishes."

Dear Mothers and Teachers: My appeal is to you, and I am persuaded it is not to be in vain.

When the words I have quoted above were spoken Jesus was surrounded by a great and hungry multitude. He was on one of the mountains which border upon the Sea of Galilee and far from any place where food could be bought. The Master knew this and he knew also the great need of the people. They had not just assembled, coming from homes where they had been plentifully fed, but they had followed him from the other side of the Sea of Galilee. There they had seen many wonderful miracles wrought and had listened to his teachings,—teachings so different from any they had ever heard and which, while bearing the seal of royalty, of divine authority, yet appealed to the hearts and understanding of the simplest of that great multitude.

But now the day was far spent and the multitude were both hungry and weary. What could be done?

Then the Master turning to his disciples asked: "Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat?" Philip answered him: "Two hundred pennyworth of bread is not sufficient for them, that every one may take a little."

Evidently Philip was not thinking of the difficulty in the way of obtaining bread, but of the means of paying for it. How could the penniless disciples of a penniless Master furnish the means to pay for bread to feed so great a multitude? And yet the multitude were there, weary and faint for want of food. What could be done? Who would come to the rescue?

Suddenly Andrew, the brother of Peter, made the discovery of a lad with a basket in which were five barley loaves and two small fishes. He tells this to the Master, but immediately after—as if ashamed of having mentioned it—he added: "But what are they among so many?"

Truly what was this little boy—this lad with five loaves of bread and two small fishes, to this great, weary, hungry multitude of five thousand?

You have all read the story—that wonderful feeding of those five thousand hungry human beings—not to each one a little but "as much as they would."

You have read, too, of that still more wonderful fact that when this great multitude had eaten of the loaves and fishes brought by the lad, until their hunger was perfectly satisfied, at the bidding of the Master they gathered up twelve baskets of the fragments which remained.

All this is familiar to you, but I come now to question if you have ever given thought to the human agents—the human actors in this wonderful drama?

Of the Master, the disciples, the multitude, and the lad I have no doubt. These you have thought of many times. But, have you ever thought: How came the lad there, and who baked those barley loaves? Who prepared the two small fishes which were put in the basket with the loaves?

Doubtless the Master could have fed that hungry multitude without the slightest intervention of human agency; but he did not. The lad was there with the loaves and fishes, but who baked those loaves and put them in the basket with the little fishes, and who sent the lad upon his way? Who, if not his mother?

On the 24th of December, 1905, will occur the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Joseph Smith, the man to whom the angel message of a restored gospel was brought. Shall this anniversary pass unnoticed, unhonored as other days pass, or shall we honor it by bringing a double tribute to Jesus for the speeding of that gospel? Shall we indeed make this a year of Jubilee? And if a year of Jubilee, how could we celebrate it more appropriately than by helping to send abroad the "tidings of great joy," helping to speed the gospel which cost the precious life-blood of the Son of God; and which this man, too, sealed with his blood?

The Jewish lad, with whose five barley loaves and two small fishes the multitude of five thousand was fed, was without a doubt sent upon his way by the mother who had baked the bread and prepared the fishes. Let now the mothers, grandmothers, and aunt stand by the children and rejoice with them in the result of this effort. Let us honor God and his servant with our cheerful giving, and make this a year to remember with gladness and thanksgiving.

Then, mothers, haste and send them,
Bonnie lads and lassies wee,
With their baskets, loaves, and fishes,
In this year of Jubilee.
Jesus calls—the world is waiting;
He can bless their little store
Till it feeds the hungry thousands,
And they cry for bread no more.

'Tis the bread of life they're needing,
For the world if full of woe,
Faith is crucified and bleeding—
Angels weep to have it so.
Then help to send the message,
Which alone from sin can free,
Mothers, help the children make this
A glad year of Jubilee.

Simple Hospitality.

One reason why we fail to take all the comfort and enjoyment we might from our friends and neighbors is that we are ambitious to make our social entertainments too elaborate. They soon become a burden and an expense to all but the very well-to-do. There is good sense in having a little something to eat when a few friends visit you in the evening. Nobody has satisfactorily explained why the act of eating together promotes good fellowship, but we all know that it does. To secure this result, however, it is not in the least necessary that what is eaten be rare or expensive. Crackers and cheese, provided they are good and daintily served, will do quite as well as pate de foie gras or broiled mushrooms. The main thing is that what is eaten be relishable. A chafing-dish is a great invention for neighborly sociability. The moment the little company be gathered about the dining-room table interest centers in the manipulations of the fair hostess. That is one of the moments when a woman looks most engaging. And when the plates are filled with the toothsome morsels, the spirit of neighborly friendliness and good cheer is at high tide. A little money will go a long way in pleasant entertaining, if we are sensible enough to make it very simple and let good feeling largely take the place of money in the ordering of our hospitality.—Watchman.

How to Teach the Little Ones.

The subject which has been chosen is certainly a subject which every teacher of little ones should consider at length.

It seems to me that the primary school period is the most important of the child's school life. It is then that he gets his foundation for his future education; and, like a good building, a good education must have a good foundation.

THE DELPHIC PRECEPT,

"know thyself," is a wise one for the teacher to consider. She must also have a clear knowledge of the guiding principles of this great art—teaching.

There is great advantage in the intelligent study of good methods; but the highest success in teaching is only attained by the teacher making the methods, which she uses, her own. They must embody her ideals, and be adapted to her individual power. The teacher must, as far as possible, become acquainted with the home life and with the parents of the children; be in close touch with them, know of their environment. And such knowledge will help her to solve many otherwise knotty problems in her discipline of those pupils. She must live with them, get into their common life, and let her maturer and stronger spirit be one of those influences that go to make it up. She must show an interest in their plans, treat always with respect what sometimes appear to her to be mere whims or foibles. Whether in Sunday-school or public school, teachers should not forget to discipline their pupils.

THE END AND AIM OF DISCIPLINE is self-government, or the building of character, and such training as will enable the child, when he becomes older, to be a useful, lovable, inspiring, righteous member of society.

The first requisite for a good disciplinarian is self-government. A teacher must be mistress of herself under the most trying circumstances. The teacher should always be an example to the child. If she wishes him to be kind, courteous, and cheerful, she must teach him to be so by being so herself.

A story is told of a man who whipped his little boy for swearing, and swore at him while he whipped him. That man did more harm by his example than good by his precept. With children nothing inspires reverence, respect, admiration, and confidence so much as self-possession. It is amazing how quickly this attitude will communicate itself to the children, and it is ever the same with all other virtues. The old doctrine was that our children are prone to evil, but that is only half the truth. They are also prone to good, and by constant appeals we can develop the good that is in them.

VARIETY SHOULD BE INTRODUCED

often, as one thing becomes monotonous to the child. Simple, correct, and concise language, which, as Jonson says, "expresseth not enough, but leaves somewhat to be understood," is another important factor in the problem of successful teaching. The teacher should be energetic, and should prepare and teach each lesson as though it were the last. If while carefully preparing each lesson, she should constantly keep in mind the thought, "What will interest and at the same time be of greatest benefit to the child," I think good results would be assured. She should try to promote interest as much as possible, and I have found no better way, especially in a class of small Sunday-school children, than to tell Bible stories after hearing the lesson. Have these stories illustrated by pictures if possible. I think it is better to tell the story than to read it, as the children get the important facts more clearly in mind. Then at some later time have the children tell the story in their own words. She may not always have the material that she likes, but she must always try to like what she has. She must have true, genuine love for her pupils, and they for her. Without this the teacher fails of her highest aim.

In conclusion, permit me to say that if she carefully observes these principles, and many others, does the best that she can with the material that she has to do with, puts her trust in the great Almighty, for whose service she is fitting these little ones, and endeavors to impress upon their minds their indebtedness to him, she can conscientiously say that as far as she is concerned she has done her duty as teacher.

There are ten things for which no one has ever yet been sorry. These are: for doing good to all; for speaking evil of none; for hearing before judging; for thinking before speaking; for holding an angry tongue; for being kind to the distressed; for asking pardon for all wrongs; for being patient toward everybody; for stopping the ears to a talebearer; for disbelieving most of the ill reports.—Gospel Reflector.

MT. VERNON, Washington, November 11, 1905.

Dear Herald: What would I do without you in my isolated condition? There is a little band of us here, seven all told, that meet every Sunday to read the Bible, study, and converse with one another to gain light and information. Formerly we would have a little season of prayer, and a testimony-meeting, but one of the brothers objected to the prayer-meeting because we had no president, teacher, or priest; says we have no right to conduct a meeting of that kind. We have no branch nearer than Seattle. I do not wish to do wrong, for I love this gospel. There is no other, to my mind, that can begin to compare with this gospel in its fullness. I do not feel like turning back, or going to any other church; for they can not satisfy the hungry soul.

Will the Saints kindly remember us in their prayers, that as we meet, we may be blessed with God's Holy Spirit to guide and direct us into all truth, that we may persevere in our little meetings and do some good, be it ever so little, for little things help make great ones.

Yours for truth,

MRS. ALICE SAVAGE.

IONE, California, November 12, 1905.

Editors Herald: Bro. Paul Efling is visiting me for a few days, and we saw black spots on the sun here yesterday, one being larger than the other. Luke 2:25 says, "And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring." All this has been fulfilled in our day, and "men's hearts failing them for fear," as the next verse says. But very few who see these things realize that they are witnessing the fulfillment of prediction in the holy word.

All these things are for a sign of the near coming of Christ. Our country now is so full of smoke that we can not see anything more than half a mile distant. Acts 2:19 says there shall be vapors of smoke. But it says that those who call on the name of the Lord shall be saved. I put myself in his care, and desire to do his will and not my own. May he guide us by his unerring Spirit.

EDWIN T. DAWSON.

JACKSON, Michigan, November 20, 1905.

Editors Herald: We wrote you after the two-day effort at Knox, Indiana. The conference at Clear Lake, Indiana, October 13 to 15, was of high type and the light of the Spirit beamed in the hearts of the Saints. Strength and encouragement were given. Bro. Columbus Scott continued services at that point over the following Sunday, with interest. We met in a joint effort at South-Scott the following week, endeavoring to set forth the better life to moderate-sized audiences until time to set out for Decatur, Michigan, appointment, November 4, going via Coldwater, while Bro. Columbus preached once to an interested audience in Cottage service on Marshall Street. Our services were hindered by rains to some extent at Decatur, but we managed to meet at Lee's Schoolhouse six times, and held four services.

Moving on to Lawrence we were again made welcome at Bro. Braybrooks' and at our nephew's, M. C. Thompson's. Sr. Braybrooks and Wave deserve a compliment for the bountiful dinners, and the manner of catering. Bro. Columbus, of course, was at home in that vicinity.

At Hartford, the weather being beautiful, the meetings were fine. I counted five services held on Sunday. The meetings properly opened on Friday evening, Bro. Columbus and myself alternating the services until I left to come to this place. We hope to reach Galien and New Troy in due time.

We opened up here in this central city Sunday, November 19, in a hall on Main Street; only moderate attendance. This is a city of about twenty-eight thousand inhabitants. Bro. Mehlich and Frisbie, with their excellent ladies, reside here, and stand high in the estimation of those acquainted. We hope the Lord will bless them in their sacrifice for the truth. I am impressed that a work can be done in this city by dint of effort. We have appointments out for the week. "Posters" and "dodgers" announce.

Hopefully,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

SOLDIER, Iowa, November 17, 1905.

Editors Herald: This leaves me seven miles northwest of Moorhead, Iowa, at the Struble Schoolhouse, where I commenced meetings five weeks ago to-night. The farmers are all busy husking corn, but we have had good attendance and fine interest, and last Sunday we led seven into the water and baptized them into the church and kingdom of God; others are near the door. This makes fifty-eight this conference year, including twelve at the Moorhead reunion. This is a new opening and there are a large number of the Methodist Episcopal people here.

I have sold three copies of the Book of Mormon, three Doctrine and Covenants, three Instructors, one Saints' Hymnal, and one Three Bibles Compared. The seven that I baptized are all the heads of families, but one young lady. Our energetic Bro. R. A. Ballantyne has assisted me, and we have been blessed in our efforts for the truth. Our hearts have been made glad to see such noble souls accept this glorious gospel. So the good work is moving along, because it is God's work. Those that have accepted the truth here are in the spirit of the work. May we all live so as to enjoy that loving Spirit, and endure faithful to the end.

Your brother,

W. A. SMITH.

POND CREEK, Oklahoma, November 20, 1905.

Editors Herald: There are but three families of Saints here now, and another sister. I think we are all doing what we can for the advancement of the Lord's work. Elder J. F. Grimes was here last August, and we had preaching at the court-house and in the park, but did not have a very large attendance. The weather was very warm and the people were eating, drinking, and making merry. Did not seem to care for the things of God, although we advertised and made many special invitations. I heard one party say they heard a man say of Bro. Grimes, "There goes that old Mormon preacher"—after I had given out so much literature making known the difference between the Utah people and our people. Satan could not have devised a better plan to destroy the work of the Lord. Everything that caters to the lust of the flesh is of the Devil. God's people will only have to work the harder, live humble, and trust in God to guide the work. For when he is for us, and at the helm, all will come out safe in the end.

The Christian Scientists are having quite a gathering here at Pond Creek now. Many have heard the gospel and rejected it, and God has given them a strong delusion. I know what that is, for I have investigated it and find it in opposition to the truth. It is my opinion it is a form of spiritualism. Mrs. Eddy says there is no personal God, no personal Devil, no death, no sickness, only in the mind; that when man believed in materiality is when he fell; that God is good, good is God, Devil is evil; that Jesus Christ did not die for our sins, but to demonstrate the Christ truth, there was no death only in the mind, and he could take upon himself the body. The key to the Bible by Mrs. Eddy says she is to this age what Jesus Christ was to the age in which he lived, the "way shower." I have the great vibrating treatment from the reformed church by Dr. Sabien. He says all power was given man in the beginning. Now just claim your own. And he goes on to give directions how to do and what to say to get great power. Says if he would practice that for a certain length of time he would walk with God. He says the Eddy school is the black art, the black magic, witchcraft. But he just has a little more to deceive, even beginning to baptize. Many preachers are taking it up. They deny the efficacy of the blood of Jesus Christ. So do spiritualists. I read one of their papers which said, "Now if you want to become a spiritualist you must disabuse your mind of the idea of the blood of Jesus Christ." There is the secret. I once went in prayer to God for light on that subject. I told the Lord I wanted to know what it was, and if it was right or of the Devil. I told him to answer in his own way, and I would give it to the Church. The next morning I awoke singing, Come, saints of God, and sing with me.

For Jesus died on Calvary.
He died to set the prisoners free;
He died for you, he died for me.

I was singing it to the tune of "When earth in bondage long had lain." I thanked the Lord he had shown me that.

At another time I asked the Lord about the reformed Christian Scientists. I knew it was not of God, but wanted to know what it was. The next morning it seemed a large, black cat was on my chest trying to smother me. I awoke trying to choke it, and I heard the words, "black art, black magic, witchcraft," over and over. So I have been perfectly satisfied since then, and am prepared to warn others of the awful delusion. When any one talks with me about it, I show them the beauties of the gospel in contradistinction to Christian Science, so called.

Jesus Christ taught the grandest philosophy on earth, the science of life, life from the dead equal to angels, and life without death equal to the Son of God. Enoch, Elijah, and those who are worthy to be translated at his coming, made higher than the angels, are they not the "bride," the Lamb's wife, the one hundred and forty-four thousand spoken of in Revelation 14? There will be a people prepared by keeping the celestial law, like Enoch and others, before they can abide the Lord's glory. When the ten virgins were invited, five were wise and five were foolish. The church is sleeping. Awake, thou that sleepest; arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. How sad that when five of the virgins went to buy oil, the door was shut, and they heard the words, Ye can not enter now. The abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet (see Daniel 12) is now set up. The time is short. Prepare to meet thy God, O'Israel. He will say as he did to the Jews, How oft would I have gathered you as a hen gathereth her brood under her wing, and ye would not; therefore your house is left unto you desolate.

I was much impressed by the dream of Sr. Allie Thorburn in Autumn Leaves, where she saw our Savior and he said: Behold, I speak expressly to my servants: see that my law is kept, and those that will not repent and live according to my law shall be cut off from among my people: for how can my church prosper when ye will not do the things which I have commanded you? Yea, how can it prosper when ye will not impart of your substance to the poor and afflicted of my people? Behold now is the time, that my temple should be built, but my people are not prepared to build it.

There is a time appointed when God will judge the world by that man Jesus Christ, and it will come whether we are ready for it or not. The church was rejected once for disobedience, and Zion will not be redeemed save by the law of the celestial kingdom.

Yours in the faith once delivered to the Saints,
MRS. EFFIE J. McCULLOUGH.

MAPLETON, Kansas, November 15, 1905.

Editors Herald: I went to Shaw, Kansas, October 20, to hold some meetings. On my arrival I found one, Elder Crow of the Church of God, or Restitutionists, had sent us a challenge for discussion. The propositions we thought were unfair. I wrote to Bro. White for church proposition, which he sent. I then called upon Elder Crow, presented the propositions to him, but like others he did not like to bring his church into the fight. I said, "All right, if you don't want to sign fair propositions, we will just drop it." But he had gone a little too far to drop it. He had said we would not meet him. So, after about an hour's parley he signed the proposition, giving me the privilege to get another man to do the debating. By direction of Bro. White, F. M. Slover came.

The debate began with a good crowd. It is not worth while to state much that was said on our proposition, only that Crow took the same old line—mud-slinging. But Bro. Slover cleaned the dirt away, and presented the truth in such a forcible way the people could not help but see it. When on Crow's church it was hard to keep him off our church. Bro. Slover told him he evidently was not satisfied with the five nights he had already had. Bro. Slover proved that his (Crow's) church was not in harmony with the New Testament Scriptures on more than forty points.

The debate closed with the best of feeling, notwithstanding Bro. Slover got Elder Crow in a tight place a time or two just at the close, showing the people he had told an untruth. The church was packed full. Many expressed themselves as being in our favor. It was a grand victory for the truth. One man who was bitter against us when it commenced, at the close said he was on our side. The Saints are all strengthened in the faith. Bro. Slover is an able defender of the truth, a wise laborer, a good and noble man.

I preach here in Chanute to-night and to-morrow night, then to Oak Grove to hold meeting over Sunday. I never felt better in the work than now. I had the pleasure of leading Bro. and Sr. James Cochran's little boy down into the waters of baptism last Sunday. Bro. and Sr. Cochran are living their religion and paying their tithing, and the Lord is blessing them. They are seeing the fruits of their labor. So the work is moving on.

Your brother in the one faith,

LEE QUICK.

LAMAR, Nebraska, November 22, 1905.

Editors Herald: Bro. S. D. Payne and I have been in the field most of the time, traveling by team and endeavoring to get the gospel before the people. I find this in some respects a hard field to labor in, as the population is somewhat scattered and meetings usually are poorly attended, especially in the busy season, making it impossible for us to do as much preaching as we might be able to do in other fields.

The Saints with whom I have become acquainted this year are, as a rule, such Saints as I like to find, being willing to assist us all they can in our efforts to present the gospel to their neighbors, and enjoying the respect and confidence of those outside the church. I find in Bro. Payne a pleasant colaborer, and a man who thoroughly understands the work in this part of the country. And judging by the favorable mention of his work, both by Saints and outsiders, he is certainly the right man in the right place here.

We began meetings near this place last night. Audience small but attentive. Expect to remain a few days, then work farther south.

While we have had some discouragements and unpleasant experiences, I have enjoyed the work quite as much as in previous years, and can record myself still in the faith, and anxious for the welfare of Zion.

E. F. ROBERTSON.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, November 22, 1905.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I have contributed anything to your columns. Although I have kept silent, my interest in the work has not grown less, and my desires are to see every department of the work prosper. For the past six months I have not been able to attend meetings, being hindered by sickness, and the HERALD and other church papers have been a source of strength and comfort to me, and

I have received instruction and spiritual food. Never before have I so fully realized what a mission of love and comfort their pages contained. Often when I would feel despondent, and would take up the HERALD, Ensign, or Autumn Leaves, I could find something to meet the demand that my very soul longed for, and I felt comforted in the thought, "How good it is to wait upon the Lord, that our strength might be renewed"; and how grateful we all should feel who have the blessed privilege of reading these papers.

It has been about thirty years since I embraced the gospel, and the abiding hope that was given me when I first entered the work has remained with me all these years. I wish I could express in words the gratefulness of my heart to my heavenly Father for the blessings that have been mine to enjoy. He has been mindful of me, and his watchcare has been over me through many severe afflictions, and I am yet spared to testify of his power to save all those who trust him in faith, believing.

Last Sabbath was the first time in several months that I had been strong enough to attend services, and it seemed like getting home to meet with so many dear faces once more. Bro. J. W. Wight was the speaker in the morning. It was indeed a spiritual feast to me, having been deprived of the privilege so long. I trust that I may meet oftener, as my strength is returning, and hope to be able to do good in the work in as many ways as I can.

I was pleased to see the statement in the HERALD from Sr. Sarah B. Hopkins. I have been acquainted with her from my girlhood until the present, and her testimony has always been the same in regard to the legal successor. I am glad to know the work is moving forward in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. In years past I have often met with the Saints there when they were only a few in number. Many of those have passed to the other side, who were strong and faithful in this gospel. May the Lord bless and prosper all who are trying to advance the cause; and may wisdom and spiritual light be given those who preside and direct the affairs of the church, is my prayer. With faith in the cause, I am,

MRS. H. H. ROBINSON.

BUFFALO, New York, November 21, 1905.

Editors Herald: Will you kindly announce in the HERALD the death of our dear and only son, William S. Schofield? He died on the 8th of November, in his twenty-fourth year, at our home in Buffalo. You perhaps will remember that I wrote to the HERALD and said he was in Grand Junction, Colorado, for his health. He came home on the 20th of October. The trip West did him no good; and only by the hand of Providence did he reach home. He seemed to realize his condition, and understood the gospel, and asked for baptism. He was baptized by Elder Dickhout of Hamilton, Ontario, on the evening of November 4; confirmed same evening by Elder Dickhout and Alvin Knisley, also of Ontario, both coming very unexpectedly to our home. We feel to thank our heavenly Father for his goodness to us in sending his servants to us, as it seems surely his hand was in this in answer to our prayers, that our dear one might obey the gospel while here. He fully realized what he was doing, and felt that God acknowledged him in the act, and gave him the needed strength. Our hearts are saddened by his being taken from us, our only son, but his work must have been done here. And if through his death others may be led to investigate this gospel, then we will not suffer in vain. Many of the ministry that we knew when living in Columbus, Ohio, will learn of our loss through this means.

A few of us are striving to meet together here in Buffalo; but we would be pleased if an elder could come and labor here. Surely the field is large, and a home is always open to one, with us. I love this work more than ever, although my heart is very sad now. But my desire is greater than ever to live so that I will meet him; and that through this affliction others of my family may obey this blessed gospel.

Yours in gospel bonds,
211 Bird Avenue. MRS. JAS. S. SCHOFIELD.

BALDKNOB, Arkansas, November 14, 1905.

Editors Herald: I will again let the readers of the HERALD know our experience in paying tithing, and must say, dear Saints, our Father has wonderfully blessed us since we first began by paying, as I said before, just five dollars four years ago this fall. Three years ago we paid ten. Two years ago we paid fifteen; and one year ago we paid forty. This year we send in fifty dollars which we can spare three or four times easier than we could the first five. So let me say, dear Saints, do not wait until you think you are able to pay your tithing; for if you do I am afraid it will never be paid. Should we not as well owe the merchants, or some one else, as to owe the Lord? Should we not divide with him? If we owed two merchants, and our means would not allow us to pay all we owe them both, would we pay one all we owed him, and let the other one go?

I know God wants us to be honest and pay our debts; but is he not able to prosper us if we really love his church and do all that is in our power for its advancement, that we may have enough to pay our debts and our tithing and still have plenty left to meet our necessities?

But if we should pay our tithing as a business investment, not because we really loved the work and wished to see it prosper, I could not expect the Lord to bless us as he has. He has not only blessed us temporally, but has blessed us spiritually and physically.

Since my last letter four more precious souls have been added to our branch, making eleven in all this year. We still have a very good little Sunday-school, and prayer-meeting every Wednesday night.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints in behalf of the little Bald Knob Branch, that we may be faithful, and that the Lord may prosper us, so we can soon have a little church of some kind for worship, as we are rather crowded in our little residence when the weather is favorable.

Dear Saints, do not let us forget to pray for the scattered Saints, and those who are so careless and unconcerned and carried away with the things of this world. Oh, how it does make my heart ache to know of those who have seemingly been instruments in God's hands for much good, and whom I have looked upon many times and wished that I was blessed with such talent that I might be able to do more good, become so careless and carried away with worldly things. May the God of heaven bless all such and extend his loving mercy to them; and may we all remember that we shall be judged according to the light we have received.

Saints, pray for me that I may never become cold in this grand and glorious work. Though we are hated by the world, it is something no one should be ashamed of. It gives us comfort which the world can not give.

Yours in the battle for right,
MRS. BEULAH JOHNSON.

Mission President's Report.

(Published by resolution of British Isles conference.)

To the Annual Conference of the Church in Great Britain; Greeting: I respectfully present to you my report of labor during the past year, also the condition of the church and its interests in this mission. Since our last conference, August, 1904, my labors have been distributed among the branches, and at other points where wisdom and necessity seemed to demand, doing the best that I could to encourage and strengthen the Saints, especially seeking to arouse and sustain a deeper spiritual regard for the work which we have accepted as divine. There has also been the usual amount of evangelical work, attended with varying success. We must admit that in the work of proselyting the results are not very flattering and among the reasons may be suggested the following:

There is universally, and especially in our own land, a growing indifference, amounting almost to contempt, towards all religion. This indifference has been vaguely observed for years, but is now beginning to make itself felt with almost irresistible force. Atheism and agnosticism, which a few years ago was avowed covertly and propagated more or less surreptitiously, is now being proclaimed in public halls, squares, and parks, and has actually been carried into the very camp of the churches; and the churches are apparently unable to repel the advances. The cardinal weakness of religion has been discovered and is being advertised broadcast to the astonishment of the world. That weakness is the fact that professed religionists are not any better, and in many cases not so good, as those who do not have any religion at all. Many also of the dogmas which were held to be fundamental have been attacked; and, to the discomfiture of the religionists, have been proved to be largely erroneous and enshrined in superstition. This, combined with the great social problems, commercial and industrial stagnation, and hostility, with which the churches has hitherto been unable to cope with anything like success, have produced the fevered intoxication in pleasure and vice which is in universal evidence, and is to some extent the reactionary result of this throwing off the restraints which religion has more or less imposed. But there is a strain of despair in all of this apparent abandonment which seems to show that there is yet hope of winning back the masses to Christ, if there can be produced some real and substantial evidences that in him is to be found the true solution of the many problems which have so long confronted us. In a sentence I believe that the apathy and contempt of the masses toward religion exists because of the unreality and ineptitude of the churches, with the increasing selfishness of men. We have either lost confidence in our ideal, or the ideal no longer exists, and there is the consequent decline in honor, chastity, and spirituality.

These grave and calamitous difficulties are of themselves sufficiently appalling; but, unfortunately, they are not the worst. The most threatening of all the menaces is the widespread inertia and unproductiveness of our own people. We are bankrupt in results. The fault to be found with us is that "we are not any better than other people generally." In many instances we are not so good as some. We fail just where Christ said that his people should be strong! Love for God, who ought to be recognized as the embodiment of all that is good, and love for each other. "By this shall all the world know that ye are my disciples." This love for the good and pure is the only antidote for the invidious malady of selfishness which is the cankerworm of modern times. If we are to accept the statement of our Savior as true, "By their fruits ye shall know them," where do we stand?

In honestly analyzing the situation, in taking spiritual stock, we are all but insolvent. We have cultivated a passion for argumentation, and developed some expertness in doctrinal dialectics, and excel in controversy; but as a force for the generation of spirituality, and uplifting fallen humanity, we have been woefully wanting. I do not hesitate to allege that the principal one, if not the only cause, which has worked to the great injury of the cause of Christ is self and self-interest. We so seldom dissociate self from the work we do, that all seems to be abortive and futile, and now we are reaping some of the harvest. We do so much need converting to the doctrine, and especially the practice of consecration, the art of "counting all things loss in order that I may win Christ and be found in him." Until we can grasp the real meaning of the mission of Christ, that he came to establish a system of right-living, and to demonstrate the superiority of his method over all others in actual life and conduct, our work will very largely be in vain. Let us become imbued with the thought that in this testimony,—the demonstration of a pure and lovable disposition,—we are only then rendering to God and the world what is the reasonable service of true Saints of God. Arguments against baptism may and can be presented which will not satisfy all, as all do not want to be baptized. People can oppose the argument on church organization, and the most if not all of the doctrinal features of our church. But, in the language of the Bishop of Ripon, "Love can not be silenced with an argument, nor can you slay holy aspiration with a sneer; nor can royal faith be withered with a sarcasm." I appeal to each of you here to-day earnestly, to your individual experience, is it not a fact that so far as the fruit of the Spirit of God is concerned, in love, peace, kindness, self-control, and toleration, we have experienced but very little of these,—the promised heritage of the children of light? Can it be that God or Christ is to blame? If I thought so I would immediately cease my service as a minister of the gospel and spend my time in a more lucrative way. No, I do not, I can not believe that the fault can be honestly put anywhere only upon ourselves. How many times the heart of some brother or sister is ruthlessly and almost deliberately wounded by some cruel suggestion and willful, conscious misrepresentation of facts, simply because of a selfish desire to be revenged, or it may be, because of jealousy!

I put it to you to-day in all kindness, Can we continue such conduct and still be accounted the children of God? Let us be more anxious to redeem the name of the church from the evil which has for so long enveloped it, by irreproachable conduct and the exhibition of a consistent character; for by doing so we shall prove that "our gospel" is in deed and in truth "the power of God unto salvation." I therefore reiterate the burden of my pastoral letter to you, Let each one of us, personally, become missionaries to our friends and neighbors, and in the spirit of earnest prayer and consecrated living seek to woo back again the old-time zeal mellowed with experience and sanctified by love which should always characterize the saints of God.

The remedy for our ills must be individual adjustment of the soul with all of its functions, longings, passions, and desires to the will of God, every word, every thought, every act so completely and spontaneously reflecting the will of our Father in heaven as to manifest actual identity.

This is the interpretation of the pledge or promise we made when, on the brink of the watery grave of baptism, we disavowed association with the world or the will of self any longer; but very solemnly vowed to follow and serve him through good and evil report. Israel's infidelity to their promise caused all their national calamities. Let us therefore beware lest we experience the same misfortunes in forgetting or ignoring God. Let the promise of him who never fails inspire us to a more diligent seeking after God and the things of the kingdom: "They that seek me early shall find me."

Our organizations are not what they ought to be by a good deal. It is a matter of great concern to realize, as those of us who are brought into contact with the branch and district work do realize, that, with very few exceptions, our branches are utterly depleted of earnest and faithful workers who are willing to make reasonable efforts to discharge their duties. This carelessness on the part of the local ministry is working a threefold injury. 1. There is the injury to themselves. 2. To the members of the branch or district of which they are members. 3. To the church as a whole.

One thing especially I wish to mention in connection with this. We have heard from many sources complaints, some of them very immoderate as well, developing in some cases into actual opposition and even persecution, because in several instances it has been thought necessary to have missionaries acting in local capacity. Let me say to all of you here and now, as emphatically as I can, what I have said before, that it is distinctly contrary to my understanding of the law of the church, and to my personal desire, to have missionaries acting in local capacity. None are chafing under this urgent necessity more than your president. But what other can we do? Having the interests of the church at heart in its various aspects, it has become very necessary to have this work of "shepherding" attended to as efficiently as possible. Having been without any local men to properly do this work, we have had no alternative but to put in the missionary wherever such a course was possible; and I believe we should have had better results to show if we had not met with opposition both passive and active. Let it be distinctly understood, that as soon as ever we can with safety to the interests of the work withdraw the missionaries from local work it shall quickly be done. This is dependent upon the local ministry themselves. We are very anxious that you relieve us of this undesirable responsibility, as we want to have the missionaries concentrating their efforts upon the work of proselyting, which especially belongs to them.

In order to attain this efficiency we suggest to you two rules which seem to be fundamental:

1. Regarding ordinations, there must be more care exercised than there has been in the past, speaking generally. We must have more real inspiration and less desire to convey favors and benefits out of personal esteem. Viewing the situation from a practicable standpoint it appears to me that we have ample men holding licenses to attend to all that is entailed by a membership of not fourteen hundred. It is not more ministers that we need, but more faithful work on the part of those who have already accepted the responsibility of ordination.

We can not too strongly emphasize the urgent necessity of thoroughly impressing all who may be selected to act as ministers, that ordination means work which ought to be faithfully and sacredly performed. I had an experience during the present year which illustrates the system I speak of. A certain brother wrote to me naming two men, whom he said he proposed to recommend to the district conference for ordination. As he had no evidence upon the matter, he requested me to pray that God would show that it was his will. Knowing the conditions that obtained in that particular district, I asked, Is there any necessity for those being ordained to the office named? Was there any inspiration? All that was vouchsafed in reply was a further request to pray. These are the circumstances as well as I remember them. I did nothing of the kind, nor do I intend to importune God to indorse the capricious desire of any individual. If I understand the matter correctly, the entire method needs to be reversed. Let God point out the ones to be ordained, and we have the privilege of indorsing. I know in the case of one of the proposed ordinations that it would have removed a useful man out of an office in which he was doing good, and have placed him in a position where his work to say the least would have been not so useful. Let this kind of procedure be stopped. Utility and benefit to the work must be the leading purposes in ordination.

I wish again to draw your attention to the desirability of systematic reporting. We have had several very good attempts this past year, but all have not seen their way to even give the matter a trial. I renew my request, and ask that all the branch and district presidents cooperate in this. I have drawn up some blanks which I think will be helpful to all in assisting to reach this. I want this conference to consider this matter and give the authority of its sanction. I think the necessity is so obvious that I need not present any argument to prove it.

I suggest then that if these two simple precautions were taken, regarding ordinations and also a systematic method of doing our work, which will be to a large extent insured by systematic reporting, we shall very soon be out of the present difficulty. Two words cover the entire situation as I see it: EARNESTNESS and METHOD.

This year our missionary staff is increased some, but there will not be much increase in the financial responsibility. We have Elder Morgan in Wales, assisted by Bro. James Evans; Bro. W. H. Greenwood in the Sheffield District; Bro. T. Taylor in the Leeds District; Bro. LaRue goes to Scotland, and Bro. Kelley to Ireland, immediately after this conference. Bro. Pierce has been laboring all of this conference year in Plymouth, and will be continued for the present.

Bro. W. Newton, who has been laboring in London and the South of England in a very able manner, is leaving us in the course of a week or so. It is with genuine regret that we part with him after an association of nearly three years. We sincerely wish him God-speed in his journey across the sea, and in whatever field he may labor in the future.

As you know I was in attendance at the late General Conference, which entailed an absence from home of nearly five months, having left on the twenty-second day of February and having reached this land again on the 14th of July. I desire to extend my sincere thanks to all of the Saints whose kind attentions have conduced to make my labors pleasant. I earnestly hope that there will ever be maintained the same cordial relations, with an ever increasing tendency to real cooperation growing out of that brotherly love which alone will insure success.

I trust that each and all will endeavor to eliminate the spirit of unjust criticism and suspicion which can only engender strife and bitterness. I would like to say in conclusion, it will be a great relief to know that there is a desire on the part of the Saints to remember the financial responsibilities, which are just as necessary as any other law which is of divine origin.

Praying that our conference will be a blessing to all who are privileged to participate in the sessions, and that the coming year will be rich in results, I remain, as ever, in gospel love,

Your brother and servant,

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

LEEDS, July 28, 1905.

Independence Items.

As to news, interesting to all, November has been an eventful month, and to the Saints the signs of the times increase in significance.

We note that in Russia the last autoeracy of Christendom has disappeared from history; also, that during the recent persecutions of the Jews, thousands have been massacred, and on November 1, in many towns of Southern Russia, there was a reign of terror. Vice-president Fairbanks in a late address said, "It is incredible that, in the light of the twentieth century, when all the world is becoming more charitable, more just, more humane, when the desire everywhere is to promote peace among men, thousands of innocent men, women, and children should be butchered for no other reason than that the blood of the Jews courses through their veins."

As to our own land, the record of tornadoes, epidemics, disasters, and the sweeping wave of wickedness in our large cities is appalling. Surely

"The night is growing darker While the scourge goes flaming past."

The trembling pen well-nigh fails to record so cruel and dark a deed, but our young sister, Winona C. Newton, the fifteen-year-old daughter of Bro. Thomas Newton, who lives in Kansas City, unwary and unheeding, fell a victim to the subtle wiles of the adversary, and was murdered on the 3d inst. and her mutilated body found on the following morning in an unfrequented place near her home.

The funeral-services were held in the city, being conducted by Elder A. V. Closson, and her remains were brought, accompanied by the stricken father, his six children, and many sympathizing friends, to Independence, and were interred in Mound Grove Cemetery. Quite a number of the Saints walked there, while a few who were not provided with conveyance to the burial-ground returned home. Six of her young friends, dressed in white and bearing floral emblems, were her pall-bearers.

Near Sheffield, just east of this place, there was on the 1st a terrible train tragedy,—a high-speed railway horror, in which many were killed and injured.

Among our city items we note that the work of construction of the trolley-car tracks is progressing rapidly on South Main and North Liberty Streets.

There is a probability of the fire department headquarters being moved from the middle of the street, its present location (the old slave-market place) being objected to generally.

Property in the northwest suburbs, including Sugar Creek, is advancing rapidly in value.

The night before Allhallows, or All-Saints day, called Halloween, there was a pleasant social gathering of our folk at the cozy modern home of Bro. and Sr. G. E. Harrington to celebrate their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary.

Interesting events are also taking place in the sectarian world. During the first week of the month the city of Pittsburg—the former home of several of the brethren—was visited by a revival wave, and twenty-six churches there, and forty in adjacent sections with their forty revivalists, “went under the influence.” But in other parts, with the Unitarian brethren the wave was a cold one when they were excluded from the great convention of Christian churches and were thus ignored,—their writers, editors, poets, historians, hymn-writers, (among them the author of “Nearer my God, to thee,”) advocates of peace arbitration, anti-slavery, temperance, and humane treatment of animals,—all these are left out.

They of the Orthodoxy have even consigned to oblivion one of our own beautiful hymns,—“Lux benigna” which the music committee selected because of its expression of Christian faith and spirit-breathing chords.

Thus while the popular church is in its views and doings narrowing toward the verge of infidelity, there is a condition of things being brought about by men out in the highways of the world “that shows,” as Governor Folk said yesterday before the high school students of Kansas City, “moral regeneration and that the spirit of civic righteousness now abroad will not die out.” So, too, the church of Christ is drawing nearer to the true standard.

Bro. Hulmes in his discourse last Sunday evening felt keenly the burden of responsibility and spoke with earnestness concerning the duties of the priesthood and the necessity of faithful service on the part of all. Taking for his text 1 Corinthians 12:28, also Amos 3:7, and speaking on the subject of “Helps and governments” his closing thought was a most expressive and important one: “Any one who claims to rule contrary to the government of God is doing contrary to the commandments of God.”

On the same evening quite a number went to Kansas City to attend a meeting in charge of Bro. Joseph Luff, who had been requested to come over and help some of the brethren in an effort to show forth our claims, also those of the Utah church. About one hundred and fifty were present and excellent interest was manifested.

The morning hour at the Stone Church was occupied by Bro. J. W. Wight, who, having liberty of the Spirit, discoursed with plainness, and the Saints were comforted in the work.

On the previous Sunday afternoon, the 5th, was communion-service, conducted by Brn. Garrett, Hulmes, and Wight, the last-mentioned giving acceptable instruction concerning the partaking of the sacrament; and in the evening Bro. T. C. Kelley, from the words “Well done, good and faithful servant,” deduced many plain and precious truths for the edification of those present. The speaker said, “It is a privilege to work, and to cease work is to lose faith in God.” He also read from section 3 of Doctrine and Covenants: “O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your might, mind, and strength that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day: therefore if ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to the work . . . and faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualify him for the work.”

The meetings, all of which have been held in the upper room on account of improvements progressing below, have generally been well attended of late and have evinced much spiritual light and fervor. The young and old have met together and cheer and inspiration have been given through the gifts of prayer and prophecy, urging all to press forward in the higher life.

At the business-meeting on the 6th matters pertaining to work on the church were attended to harmoniously, and seven were received by letter, three by certificates of baptism, and two were granted letters of removal. On Sunday, the 5th, two little ones were blessed.

Last Thursday a few of the Prayer Union sisters met at the pleasant home in Englewood (a beautiful village west of this place) of Sr. T. Mooney, who has suffered long and patiently in affliction, as have several others of our number, and for whom we ask the prayers of the Saints.

Bro. Kemp, who was present, gave words of comfort and administered to our sister, and on leaving all felt that the Spirit of a blessed assurance of our Father's love toward his children had been ours to enjoy. The following lines were spoken to the afflicted one:

“He loves thee too well to forsake thee,

Or give thee one trial too much:

All his people have been dearly purchased,

And Satan can never claim such.

“By and by thou shalt see him and praise him

In the city of unending day,

And the toils of the road will be nothing

When thou gettest to the end of the way.”

Conference Minutes.

British Isles.—Annual conference met in our North Manchester room at 6 p. m., August 5, 1905. J. W. Rushton occupied the chair, supported by C. H. Caton, Joseph Dewnsup, Sr., James Baty, and E. B. Morgan. Bishop Taylor's resignation as mission treasurer being presented, it was resolved that the matter of Bro. Taylor's resignation together with the auditing of the accounts be referred to the present auditing committee with instruction to report before noon on Monday. The report of Bro. J. W. Rushton as delegate to General Conference was next presented. One item of general importance in this report was the establishment of the first Sunday in September as “college day.” On this day collections are to be taken up by all the Saints on behalf of the college, the results of such collections to be used exclusively for the college expenses. The General Sunday-school Association and Zion's Religio were solicitous for a closer union with similar organizations in our own land. Missionary reports were received from Elders E. B. Morgan, James Evans baptized 8, W. H. Greenwood, William Newton baptized 2, F. G. Pierce. District presidents' reports: Manchester by Henry Greenwood—Some good being done; room for improvement; things were bad financially in the branches; Stockport, Warrington, and East Manchester were engaged in tract work; this work was hindered for want of money. Leeds by Thomas Taylor—Spiritual condition of district discouraging owing to faultfinding, attempts to sow discord, and nonfulfillment of duty on part of officers. Eastern Wales by Thomas Gould, who said work was not in good condition; some have been added by baptism during the year; some had not fulfilled their duty, but hoped for improvement. London by Elder R. Clift, who spoke of the condition of the London Branch as low; a few faithful members were trying to hold the fort; Enfield, a younger branch, was in a better condition. Birmingham by William Ecclestone—in fairly good condition; each branch had been alive and active during the year; two had been baptized at Derby by Joseph Ecclestone, where we have now four members. Glasgow and Hamilton failed to report according to rule. Plymouth was reported by F. G. Pierce to have twenty-four members and greatly improved; this was owing to the untiring labors of William Newton, whose departure for America recently they much regretted. Heavittree by Bro. Henry Wilson where Elder Newton had labored much.

Report of British Isles bishopric: Received in tithes and offerings from the Saints in this country, £189 10s. 3½d.; from Bishop E. L. Kelley, £139 7s. 1d.; total, $328 17s. 4½d.; expenses, £302 8s. 3d. From this it would appear as if the financial condition was rosy at that time. Such, however, was not the case. As a matter of fact Bro. Taylor had not enough to pay the family allowances for the month of November until a remittance was received from Bishop E. L. Kelley for £20, which came to hand December 31. But as it left Lamoni December 21 it was included in the receipts for last year, but the payments were carried over to 1905 account. Received for Grace-land College debt fund, £20. Since January 1 to June 30. we have received £78 4s. 6½d. in tithes and offerings in this country, and £40 from Bishop E. L. Kelley which, with balance in hand December 31, £26 19s. 1¾d., shows a total of £145 3s. 8d. We have paid out up to June 30, 1905, to missionaries' families, £149 5s., which shows a debt of £4 1s. 4d. due Bishop Taylor. To this must be added £13 11s. owing to Sr. Taylor of Leeds. Total indebtedness £17 12s. 4d. So far this year has not shown as good returns as previous years. Before closing our report we would call attention to special appeals to the Saints for money for objects of an experimental nature, and more or less of a fad. There is already an agreement between Bishop E. L. Kelley, the bishopric of the British Isles Mission, and the missionary in charge, that such appeals shall be made only upon joint consent of missionary in charge and bishop of British Isles, and that all such moneys shall pass through the bishop's books. This we think should be generally understood, because if anybody who chooses may make appeals for special objects we shall have no end to them. We often are asked for tracts and have to tell the old tale: We have neither tracts nor money to get any with. If there is room for special appeals we think the question of tracts should have first consideration as they would assist the local brethren as well as the missionary.

In the case of the district boundaries committee it was reported by Bro. George Baty that nothing had been done. The report was read, the committee, which consisted of branch and district presidents, continued, and the name of the mission president added.

A social service was held Sunday, 3 p. m., in charge of Elder James Baty, assisted by Brn. C. H. Caton and Joseph Dewsnup. Sr. Mary soul-stirring testimonies were borne, and the gift of tongues and interpretation was manifested to the confirmation of many in the following terms: "Hearken unto the word of the Lord, O ye people of my church; for, behold, it is not pleasing before me that any of my ministry should discourage my Saints in seeking for the power of my Spirit; but it is pleasing unto me that they should be encouraged to seek after the promises of God which are yea and amen to my children. For, verily, this is the day of my power; yea, even that my people should speak with tongues, and prophesy; and that the Saints should be healed, and that the lame should leap and rejoice in the power of God. Nevertheless, there are some of you, yea even of my priesthood, who would work against the gifts and blessings of my gospel, trusting rather in the wisdom and learning of man. Behold, the wisdom of man is good; but my servants shall stand in the power of my might, for it is written in my word, There is none that doeth good except him that worketh according to the gifts and callings of God unto men. Yea, even to be guided by my Spirit, and to establish my people in my promises, saith the Spirit. Hearken unto my voice, O ye my servants who have been appointed to the evangelical priesthood and patriarchal office in these isles. Behold, ye shall not refuse the requests of my people for blessings at your hands; for, verily, I will bless my people if they will place their confidence in you, my priesthood. For this is your calling, yea, like unto my patriarchs in the days of old, to bless the children of men inasmuch as ye are endowed with power to comfort and bless them by the power and authority which is in you. For by this means have I, the Lord, ordained that my people shall be comforted and blessed. Thus saith the Spirit."

On Monday the Saints met at 10.40 a. m. in our North Manchester room for business, Bro. Rushton again presiding. The report of Bro. Alfred Fysh, the Mission book agent, was read. His sales for the year amounted to £12 4s. 4d. It was stated that a discount of five per cent would be allowed for all orders over £1. It was resolved that the Eastern Wales report be considered. The report was reread, after which it was discussed freely. A letter from Bro. James Evans was now read.

The Seventh Quorum of Elders reported progress and asked for a further session during conference; also the Sixth Quorum of Priests, which submitted the following names for ordination: J. W. Green to the office of president, James Schofield and E. J. Trapp, counselors. It was resolved that we receive the report of the Seventh Quorum of Elders and that we grant to them the time they require, if the conditions of the conference will permit. Resolved that the report of the Sixth Quorum of Priests be received and spread upon the minutes and that the necessary ordinations be provided for. The mission treasurer's report showed the receipts to be, £5 9s. 4d.; expenditures £3 18s. 9d. Bro. Thomas Taylor's report having been received his resignation as mission treasurer was presented. It was then resolved that we continue the services of our respective Brn. W. R. Armstrong and J. D. Howell as secretaries of the British Isles. Resolved that we sustain W. R. Armstrong as local historian. Resolved that Joseph Dewsnup, Jr., be appointed mission treasurer. Resolved that J. W. Taylor be reelected auditor of mission accounts. By resolution the conference agreed to subscribe five shillings to the funds of the Grosvenor Street Baptist P. S. A., in return for exchanging halls with us to suit our convenience on the afternoon of Sunday, the 6th inst., thus contributing to the success of our social service. Resolved that we sustain the general and local authorities of the church. Resolved that we record our hearty thanks and express our gratitude to the brethren and sisters who have subscribed to the comfort of those who have attended the conference. Resolved that we record our hearty thanks and express our gratitude to the organist, chorister, singers, and deacons, and all other workers connected with the conference. Resolved that our best thanks be awarded all those who assisted in the successful procession of Sunday afternoon. Resolved that inasmuch as the report of the president of the Eastern District of Wales reflects upon the conduct of our Bro. Morgan, that this conference do not receive that part of the report; and as it is irrelevant this conference has no jurisdiction over it. Resolved that the appeal from the Lydney Branch be referred back to the branch to be dealt with. Resolved that the mission treasurer be authorized to pay the expenses of the secretaries of the mission in future without an appeal to the conference for the same. Resolved that the report of the president of the mission be sent for publication to the HERALD. Resolved that when this conference adjourns it do so to meet at a place to be appointed by the missionary in charge. Resolved that the revelations of Sunday, the 6th inst., be spread upon the minutes. Reference was here made to the imminent departure of our beloved Bro. William Newton for his home in Kansas City after a lengthy sojourn as missionary in his native land. We learned with extreme regret that our aged brother was not likely to visit England again. Feeling reference was made by some with reference to his labor after which the following was presented to him:

"It is with feelings of genuine regret that we bid 'Good-bye' to our much esteemed Bro. William Newton who during a period of over two years has labored faithfully and assiduously in London and the South of England as church missionary and is now returning home. We assure him on behalf of this conference of the districts and branches comprising the British Isles Mission, of our continued appreciation of his self-sacrificing disposition and love for his native land and the work of God which has prompted him to leave home, loved ones, and 'count all things loss' in order to preach Christ and him, crucified three separate times and bearing the burden of expense, persecution, and hardship has steadfastly maintained the truth. We express our very high esteem and extend our love and sympathy towards him, praying that wherever it may please God to send him by the voice of the church, that peace and prosperity may accompany him. His diligence, unflagging zeal, wise counsel, and unostentatious generosity have benefited many and have been an inspiration to young and old. When the history of the Reorganization in Great Britain shall be written we feel that it is not too much to say among the names of missionary laborers the name of our brother will be honored and respected. God grant that his declining years may be rich in spiritual experience and continued in active service to the good of the children of God and the glory of his sacred name. We heartily and reverently wish him God-speed."

The business sessions then closed with the singing of "God be with you till we meet again," after which Elder James Baty offered the closing prayer.

During the concluding social meeting of the conference, Bro. J. W. Green of Manchester was ordained president of the Sixth Quorum of Priests; vice Bro. John Foden, now an elder of our Manchester District, by Elders William H. Kelley and William LaRue; Bro. Trapp, of South Wales, was ordained second counselor to Bro. J. W. Green by Elders LaRue and Kelley. William R. Armstrong, secretary.

Kentucky and Tennessee.—Conference convened at Foundry Hill, October 14, 1905, at 11 a. m., Bro. T. C. Kelley presiding; J. J. Adair, secretary. Branches reporting: High Hill 44, Foundry Hill 59, Haley Creek 67, Sedalia 146. Ministry reporting: T. C. Kelley, C. L. Snow, S. Reed, L. M. McFadden, S. H. Fields; R. N. Warren, W. F. Haynes, E. P. Cook. By recommendation of the Foundry Hill Branch, E. P. Cook was ordained an elder. Adjourned to meet with the Foundry Hill Branch, Saturday, before the first Sunday in March, 1906. Please do not forget the resolution passed in our last conference, May 27, 1905: "Resolved that inasmuch as some holding the priesthood have failed to report for years, and feeling that such negligence of duty on the part of the ministry is detrimental to the work, therefore be it resolved that any one holding the priesthood in the Kentucky and Tennessee District be required to report in person or writing to the district conference and any one failing to report for three succeeding conferences, be it further resolved that district president be authorized, after due investigation, to demand his license if in his judgment deemed wise."

Convention Minutes.

Northwestern Kansas.—The Sunday-school convention of the Northwestern Kansas District met near Scandia, Kansas, November 10, 1905, at 8 p. m. Called to order by S. J. Madden. Remarks by Brn. J. F. Gunsolley and S. A. Madden. Report read and accepted from Mount Hope Sunday-school that was sent back for correction at last convention. Report from Zion's Hope Sunday-school, and the superintendent of Zion's Hope Sunday-school. A very interesting program was listened to. Adjourned to meet with next conference at the call of the president. Myrtle Coop, secretary, Downs, Kansas.

Convention Notices.

The Far West District Sunday-school convention will convene in special session at St. Joseph, Missouri, on Saturday, February 10, 1906, at 8.30 a. m. Officers will be elected, also delegates to the General Convention. Let a good representation be had. Madge Head, secretary, Stewartsville, Missouri.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of the Northwestern Kansas District: I have changed my address from Gaylord, Kansas, to Lund, Kansas. Address all letters and communications to F. S. Ward, Lund, Kansas; and all post-office money-orders must be made payable at Oberlin, Kansas, as Lund is not a money-order office. Remember, it is nearing the close of the year. Try to have all your tithing in by December 31, so I can make a report of it to the Bishop in my annual report. F. S. WARD.

Working Plans for Timber Sold From Forest Reserves.

The increased demand for the purchase of timber from the forest reserves has called for detailed working plans for the more important timbered areas with them. In order to avoid delay without jeopardizing the future welfare of the forest, and that these working plans may be well considered, they are being made as rapidly as possible for those forest areas from which the sale of timber is probable in the near future. In many cases they are made before the actual application for purchase is received.

Those who purchase timber from the Government are required to observe Forest Service regulations in logging, which guard against waste and provide for the reproduction of the forest. Considerable variety exists in the character and requirements of the forest in any one reserve, so that each working plan must be based on a close study of local conditions.

When setting about the preparation of one of these plans the first question is, What areas in the reserve are adapted to the same scheme of management? After these areas have been selected they are thoroughly studied from every aspect.

The location of the timber is noted, and a rough estimate is made of its amount. Then the character and condition of the stand are carefully determined. Its age, overripeness, injury from fire or insects, the possibility of improving it by logging, and the kind and amount of young growth are principal points, all of which must be taken into consideration in settling whether it is advisable or inadvisable to cut.

The question of markets, and the logging facilities, are also taken into account, as well as the present local demand for timber, the probable future demand, and the kind of timber required. In connection with these problems attention must be given to the nature of the country, the accessibility of the timber, and the existing roads and drivable streams, because the actual value of the timber is in large measure dependent upon the ease and economy of its removal.

Reproduction, by which alone the forest can maintain itself, is essential where logging is to be done. For this reason the reproductive capacity of the forest is noted with careful detail, and the effect which fire and grazing may have upon it becomes a question of the first importance.

The data, therefore, which the working plan study has gathered form the basis of the terms of the contract in agreement with which the purchaser of Government timber removes the timber which he has purchased. These terms include the diameter limit below which the timber may not be cut, the number of seed trees of various species which must be left to reseed the ground, the maximum height at which the stumps may be cut, and the diameter to which the tops must be utilized, and other stipulations insuring clear, conservative logging. Especially, also, they provide for the disposition of the slash, so that the forest floor may safely be cleaned of inflammable material, on which uncontrollable forest fires might feed.

The restrictions imposed by the Forest Service upon timber purchasers are meeting with the intelligent approval of all who are performing logging operations under them. It is more and more clearly understood that they are necessary for the permanent good of the forest, that they are of a purely practical stamp, and that their observance means the continued productivity of the forest and, therefore, the husbanding of the timber supply and all that depends upon it.

$25,000 for a Story.

Think of it! Twenty-five thousand dollars for one story! The highest price that has been similarly paid in America to any author. And this for just the exclusive right to print the story in this one publication—no right to publish it in book form being included.

Consider the quality of merit, the intensity of interest this story must possess to command this extraordinary price. The "White Company" has ever been accepted as the greatest work of any author, and by far superior to his own "Sherlock Holmes" tales—but "Sir Nigel," says Conan Doyle himself, surpasses them all.

Conan Doyle receives this fabulous sum for his "Sir Nigel," which begins in the Sunday Magazine part of next Sunday's Record-Herald. Do not fail to buy the Record-Herald for next Sunday, December 3, as this great romance by the world's greatest writer of romantic fiction will be the sensation in the literary world for months to come.

ARE WE WORKING FOR THE REDEMPTION OF ZION?

This may seem an irrelevant question to ask of Latter Day Saints whose hopes and aspirations have been centered, presumably, upon the redemption of Zion, and the establishment of the city of God for, lo, these many years. But the man who can take a comprehensive survey of conditions as they exist in many of the branches of the church to-day, including some within the confines of the stakes, must be very singularly constituted, if he is not compelled to consider this question in one form or another, and if it does not become very apparent to him that if we are laboring for the upbuilding of Zion we are going about it in a very queer way.

Doubtless the most of us think we are working with might and main for the glory of Zion and the good of the kingdom of Christ. Still, we have history handed down to us portraying the fate of those who thought they were laboring for the welfare of Zion, but for some reason the result was disaster to the church, and the inevitable shipwreck of the faith of many. Yet, they were warned in time. The Lord tried repeatedly to show them their danger, and tried to bring to them a realization of what would befall unless there was a forsaking of evil, and a stronger attachment formed with that which is right. These admonitions of inspiration have been quoted from time to time in our pages, and it is not necessary to reproduce them here. But Joseph the Seer, in a letter to W. W. Phelps in 1833, indicated his alarm at the dangers that threatened, and besought them to purify themselves:

If Zion will not purify herself so as to be approved of in all things in his sight, he will seek another people: for his work will go on until Israel is gathered, and they who will not hear his voice, must expect to feel his wrath. Let me say unto you, Seek to purify yourselves, and also all the inhabitants of Zion, lest the Lord's anger be kindled to fierceness. Repent, repent is the voice of God to Zion; and yet, strange as it may appear, it is true, mankind will persist in self-justification until all their iniquity is exposed, and their character past being redeemed, and that which is treasured up in their hearts be exposed to the gaze of mankind. I say to you, (and what I say to you, I say to all,) Hear the warning voice of God, lest Zion fall, and the Lord swear in his wrath, "The inhabitants of Zion shall not enter into my rest." . . . Remember God sees the secret springs of human action, and knows the heart of all living.

Brother, suffer us to speak plainly, for God has respect to the feelings of his saints, and he will not suffer them to be tantalized with impunity. Tell Brother G—t that low insinu-

ON THE last page but one of this issue will be found an attractive announcement of Autumn Leaves for 1906. It is the intention to make this magazine for young people stronger and better the coming year than ever. You who are looking about for some suitable Christmas gift for a young friend, what could you select that would be more appreciated than a year's subscription for the Leaves? It would be something that would last, not only a few hours or days, but would bring renewed enjoyment and gratitude each month for a whole year.

ations, God hates; but he rejoices in an honest heart, and knows better who is guilty than he does. We send him this warning voice, and let him fear greatly for himself, lest a worse thing overtake him; all we can say by way of conclusion, is, if the fountain of our tears are not dried up, we will weep for Zion. This from your brother who trembles for Zion, and for the wrath of heaven, which awaits her if she repent not.

P. S.—I am not in the habit of crying peace, when there is no peace, and knowing the threatened judgments of God; I say, woe unto them who are at ease in Zion; fearfulness will speedily lay hold of the hypocrite. . . . —Church History, vol. 1, pp. 267-271.

This was written to Zion in the Seer's day, but it is equally good for us to take to heart now. We will see some of its fulfillments in our day.

The church, in localities, at least (and some where it should not be expected), seems to us, from observation and report, to have declined in excellence to what might be termed "a baseball and football plane," or in other words, to a pleasure-seeking level. There is too much of a disposition to look with favor upon, and run after anything that promises a couple of hours' amusement. The cry is made that "we must furnish amusement for our young people, or they will go elsewhere for it." And there is where a mistake is made; for the theory, pleasing though it may be, does not work out as those who advance it intend, and believe that it will. They believe that by taking hold of these things and supervising the pleasures and amusements furnished their young people, they may inculcate in them a distaste for the allurements offered by the world, consequently develop a more God-fearing generation of youths. They also believe they can furnish a higher grade of entertainment than, on an average, the world affords. (This frequently works out the wrong way like the other theory.) But for some mysterious reason, instead of producing the results anticipated, they simply whet the appetite for the pleasures and allurements that may be found for the seeking; and instead of sober-minded, reverent young people, we have communities of irreverent "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." Parents, toward which class are your children tending? It will not take a very penetrating judgment to discover. Are their minds absorbed in parties, oyster and ice-cream suppers, watermelon socials, football and baseball games from one year's end to another, or are they absorbed in the things of God? Look and see.

The trouble is not so much the lack of pleasures and amusements. The chief trouble is that there are too many of them. Something is on docket continually to occupy the attention of the young, and keep them from enjoying scarcely a sober moment's contemplation and reflection upon the great and marvelous things of God, undisturbed by the thought of some social event just past or just to come. It must be a mistake to fix the thought in the young mind that it came into this world for the express purpose of being amused and entertained; and yet that is the tendency of the world to-day. We ought not to expect that a constant swirl of pleasure and excitement, between the ages of accountability and maturity, will fit and qualify the individual for the important and grave duties of a child of Christ—with no lucid interval allowed for the rational consideration of the things of God. But, "you can't put old heads on young shoulders," we are told. Whether that be true or not, we might at least make the attempt to avoid having, what is more absurd, rattleheads on old shoulders, by encouraging the cultivation of sober, sensible heads upon young shoulders.

Unless we want to rear a community (or several of them) of unremitting pleasure-seekers, it is time to crop off some of our worldliness, and turn our attention to more serious things. It is safe to say that nine tenths of the amusement and pleasure furnished by us for the entertainment of our young folks is of such a character that they would be better off at home, engaged in cultivating the quiet, restful influences of companionship that make home pleasant. It would be to our advantage to dispense with this much at least. There is a tendency, in the mad rush and scramble for pleasure and amusement, to make home but a restaurant where meals may be had, and where rest may be sought, in the few hours that are left of the time set apart for rest after the fill of pleasure and excitement.

It is possible, in the world, to rear a family of young people in such a way that they develop a positive distaste for the fleeting pastimes of the world, and they actually feel uncomfortable and out of place if they find themselves in a place of that kind. But if, to keep our children from partaking of the spirit of the world, we are going to bring the world into the church and make it part of our religion (we can not make it part of the religion of Christ) parents may as well give up and go with the tide, or move away from the branches; for these things hinder rather than help the parent in the control of their children, who, being out from under parental control so much, are soon inclined to throw off and defy all restraint, and come and go when they please. Evil is sure to follow.

How many oyster suppers, ice-cream and watermelon socials, entertainments, shows, and receptions, baseball and football games will it take each week to bring about the final redemption of Zion, think you? And how much nearer the culmination of this grand hope will we be after the bulk of the rising generation (upon whom the burden of carrying on the work, we so often hear stated, will rest) have spent twenty years in running after the worldly amusements we are so willing to introduce, and encourage them in desiring? "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Sow to the winds of pleasure and amusement, and reap the whirlwinds of indifference, doubt, and ineptitude.

We glance back over the history of the last few hundred years, and note the rapid advancement made by the movements of the reformers. So long as they battled with the allurements of the world and held out to mankind the avenues of something better, they increased in strength and power, and there is no question but that men and women were induced to lead purer and better lives. But now the power of those institutions is all but dead. First, they rejected the greater light when it came in the form of the message from heaven. Then to revive their waning power and retain their hold upon the minds of men, they began to institute parties, social functions, various suppers, church festivals, bazaars, and the like, until they have degenerated into mere benevolent institutions, the chief if not the sole aim of which consists in coercing the quarters and dimes from those whom they can entice to their places of resort. And thereby they have lost all power to attract men who possess a measure of true religious simplicity. We ought to avoid their error instead of imitating it. Shall we retrograde as they have done? The avenues are open.

But not all the harm consists in indulging in these things. The mischief is augmented by permitting them to occupy in the house of prayer. Can we expect our young people to cultivate and develop a holy reverence for the house of God when the majority of events within its portals are of a like nature with those which the world go to see in their opera-houses and halls? Can we expect that their love for God will increase when the greater portion of the time they spend within the walls of his house they are furnished with the sort of entertainment that in its very nature is calculated to cause a disregard of the commandments of the Lord in regard to the deportment of his children? To some of the ministry he said: "Cast away your idle thoughts and your excess of laughter far from you."—Doctrine and Covenants 85:19. "Therefore cease from all your light speeches, from all laughter, from all your lustful desires, from all your pride and light-mindedness."—Doctrine and Covenants 85:37. And after giving the most vital commandments to the church he says: "Inasmuch as ye do these things, with thanksgiving, with cheerful hearts, and countenances; not with much laughter, for this is sin, but with a glad heart and a cheerful countenance; verily I say, that inasmuch as ye do this the fullness of the earth is yours."—Doctrine and Covenants 59:4.

Query: Are the elders justified in advocating and furnishing amusement of a character to cause a flagrant disregard of that which they and the church have been commanded to observe, and especially in providing for it in the house of prayer? It is but the primary lesson in the excesses to which the world has gone; and with a little more case-hardening we will be able to throw off the yoke of Christ and imbibe some of the advanced lessons of Utahism, discovering the ease with which our young folks may be saved from partaking of the spirit of the world, if we will only incorporate the world in our religion, introduce socials and balls into our churches, keeping them under our control, and opening with prayer and thanksgiving. The Brighamites are several milestones ahead of us, yet, but we will catch up in time, if we are persistent.

Then again, to how many of our own churches might not we apply with reason the rebuke of the Master: "It is written, My house shall be called the house of prayer; but ye have made it" — "a house of merchandise"? The men who brought oxen, sheep, and doves to the temple were imbued with the idea of benefiting their fellow men—thus putting in practice their religion, i. e., doing good. Those things were needed for the sacrifices. To sell them in the temple would make it very convenient for those who came to offer sacrifice. And in this work of practicing their religion—and incidentally raking in a few quarters for themselves—they were engaged when the Son of God came upon the scene, —and he went right in with them and helped them out, did he? Not exactly, though he did go in and help them out of the temple. On the other hand, go to one of our churches with the "money-changer's" table in the hall, where the tickets are sold for the benefit of those who come to engage in that particular feature of their religion (?), by those who are imbued with the idea of benefiting the people,—and incidentally raking in a few quarters, dimes, and nickels that likely enough rightly belong to the Bishop, and where will you draw the line of distinction? On which one will you put your finger and say, This is better than that? Do we think we will succeed in establishing the city of God by continually hatching up and inventing new schemes to wheedle money from the people, many of whom are really too poor to pay tithing? We may be a bit over-sensitive and unduly fearful in regard to these things. But if the redemption of Zion can be brought about and accomplished successfully by eating oysters and ice-cream, and using valuable time in participating in worldly sports, we are quite willing it should be done that way. It will be so much more convenient and pleasant than working for it, certainly. However, from our limited study of the life of Christ, and the laws of the church, we have not seen anything to warrant us in the conclusion that these are essential gospel requirements.

We call to mind a vision related a few months ago by a sister in Australia, who saw a woman, representing to her the church; and she was given to understand that the woman's (church's) robes were not as white and pure as they were two years ago. Has not the disposition to seek pleasure (and profit) increased in the last two years? At the same rate, how long will it take for the church to regain the brightness of her robes?

There appeared in the Ensign some time ago an account of a vision as related by Bro. Alfred White, in which he saw something of the manner of the redemption of Zion, and only those who were able to abide the judgment could remain within the sanctified circle. He anxiously inquired who could abide the judgment, and wanted the personage with whom he conversed to point out some one known to him that he might understand just the kind of character that would be permitted to remain. This was refused; but he was told: "All those whose hearts had been just and true, all those in whose hearts there is no guile or deceit, can abide the judgment." He also told him the following characters could not abide the judgment: "All those who forgive with their lips, but not with their hearts; all those who have not spoken the true sentiments of their hearts."

This leads to another question: If we spend our time during the week in attending various social functions and suppers, and worldly sports and pleasures, are we expressing the true sentiments of our hearts when we come to church on the Lord's day and with a loud voice declare our zeal and love for the great work of the Lord, and the upbuilding of Zion?

"Well," says one, "do you think any argument against worldly pleasures, and merchandising and entertainments in the house of the Lord, will have any weight in turning the tide?"

No, the chances are against us. Abler men have tried and failed. Even the Son of God, who so forcibly manifested his disapproval of the desecration of the Lord's house, was rewarded with scorn and hatred, but the money-changers continued to do a thriving business. The churches of men have paid no heed to the warning voices raised from time to time, but are now contemplating lunchrooms, pool-rooms, and barrooms in conjunction with their churches to attract men to their services. The early church in this age paid little heed to the admonitions of inspiration, but, as the Seer said they would, continued on in their self-justification till all their iniquity was exposed, and their characters past being redeemed. So we can not hope that our feeble efforts will accomplish much, now. But whirl, whirl along, fill our measure of worldliness to the brim, then the Lord can again "seek another people" to accomplish his purposes, and bring about the gathering of Israel, and to us will be granted the exquisite delight(?) in the day when man shall give an account for every idle word, of beholding our offspring lined up with the "money changers" of the temple, and the pleasure-seekers of the world. EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. Evan B. Morgan, missionary to Wales, will have an article on Robert Raikes and his first Sunday-school in the first issue of the Sunday-School Exponent, January number. Bro. Morgan visited Gloucester, England, with a view of learning more of the early work of Mr. Raikes from personal inquiry and observation. The results of this investigation he now places before the readers of the Exponent. The article will be illustrated with cuts of Mr. Raikes, his home, the first (boys') school, and the first girls' school. If you have not sent in your subscription, better do so at once if you wish the first number. Single subscriptions seventy-five cents a year. Any one sending in five subscriptions will be given one subscription free. Address Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

Most of us are inclined to regard the contemplative Hindoo as a dreamer, a quasi idler who will never accomplish much in the world. We feel that our volcanic energy lifts us away above the contemplative spirit and puts us on a higher plane. We are proud of our ceaseless activity. But there are a few who think we might swap a little of our nervous activity for a measure of the oriental's contemplative spirit with advantage to both. "Material America needs no stimulus," says Hamilton W. Mabie; "its triumph is already at hand. It is spiritual America that needs constant revelation and definition; and it is to be the high service of the literature of the future, as it has been the service of the literature of the past, to hold the ideal of this nobler America clear and beautiful above the dust and tumult of a vast and powerful working community." The man who takes time to raise himself above the "dust and tumult" by reading and communion with his Maker is wiser than his more strenuous brother who looks upon relaxation and spiritual refreshment of this kind as mere idleness.—Success.

Selected Poetry

"From God—to God."

A little grave within a churchyard set,
And over it the soft and grassy sod,
And carved upon the marble's gleaming white
These words—"From God to God."

Some mother's darling softly slumbers here,
With folded dimpled hands and golden head;
Yet her crushed heart could breathe the words of hope
Over her precious head.

Sweet words and true, oh, cherished little ones!
And though our eyes with blinding tears grow dim,
From God you are, and when he calls his own
We give you back to him.

GEORGE Q. CANNON VERSUS JOSEPH F. SMITH.

These high dignitaries of the Utah church agree that Joseph Smith the Seer received revelation commanding the observance of plural marriage, but as neither of them claims to know anything about it from personal knowledge they are dependent upon information from other sources.

Their statements, however, show that the information received is not reliable because contradictory.

Joseph F. Smith says: "The great and glorious principle of plural marriage was first revealed to Joseph Smith in 1831, but being forbidden to make it public, or to teach it as doctrine of the gospel, at that time, he confided the facts to only a few of his intimate associates."—Jensen's Historical Record, p. 219; Deseret News, May 20, 1886.

George Q. Cannon said: "A great trial came to the Prophet in the latter part of his life and a very severe test was made of his willingness to obey the word of God unto him. The Lord revealed that he wished his faithful servants to take more than one wife, as did the patriarchs and righteous men of old. This was so new and strange a practice that the Prophet hesitated and did not at once obey. He put it off from time to time until at length an angel of God appeared before him with a drawn sword, and said that unless he obeyed the command to teach this doctrine and establish it his priesthood would be taken from him and he would be destroyed."—The Latter-Day Prophet, pp. 186, 187.

If this was new and strange to the Prophet in the latter part of his life as asserted by Mr. Cannon, then it was not revealed to him in 1831 as asserted by Mr. Smith.

Again, Mr. Cannon says: "The revelation therefore remained the unwritten law of God, established in the hearts and obeyed in the lives of some of his faithful servants, until the twelfth day of July, 1843, when it was recorded, that it might remain a comfort and guide to the people after Joseph and Hyrum should pass away."—Life of Joseph Smith, p. 412.

Mr. Smith says: "Further, the fact is established that Joseph Smith received the revelation on celestial or plural marriage, and the eternity of the marriage covenant, prior to July 12, 1843, the time when a portion of said revelation was written."—Historical Record, p. 223.

If only a portion of the revelation was written on July 12, 1843, as asserted by Mr. Smith, then the revelation as such was not recorded on that date as asserted by Mr. Cannon.

If Mr. Smith was right, what portion of that document was written on July 12, 1843?

Has the church in Utah a copy of that which was written on that date? If not, where is it? If they have it will they produce it?

Joseph F. Smith was born November 13, 1838, and therefore was but five and a half years of age at the death of his father in 1844.

WHO IS SERVING GOD?

Under the above heading we wish to call special attention to the fact that it is "not every one that saith Lord, Lord, but he that doeth the will of the Father" that shall be saved and blessed of him; and it is for that reason that we call attention to the words of our Savior: "If any man serve me, let him follow me; and where I am, there shall also my servant be: If any man serve me, him will my Father honor."—John 12:26.

It occurs to the mind of the writer that it would be a comfort to every Saint and follower of Christ to know that he was honored of God, or in other words to be loved of God, yet we should remember that we can not meet the approval of our heavenly Father only as we serve him and do his will in all things. So again we refer to the words of Christ as he spoke them to the people in his day: "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him."—John 14:21. Then our having the commandments of God will profit us nothing, except we keep them; and to keep them evidently means to do according to their requirements.

We have often heard people say, "Oh, if I could only aid others to know and obey the gospel—but I'm unable to preach because I haven't the ability. Yet, I do long to have others rejoice in the good news that has reached me." It is possible for you, dear brother or sister, whoever or wherever you may be, to aid in the spread of the gospel, the glad tidings of great joy, just as much as the missionary who sacrifices his life, his home, and loved ones, to bear the glad tidings abroad, if you will help the missionary in making sacrifice, i. e.: if you will do what the Lord requires of you as his servant. We are told in the law of God that we should all be laborers together for good. The preacher can not do it all. It requires the united cooperation of all.

"But," says one, "I can't preach, so there is nothing for me to do." Let us see what the Lord says to his people:

If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken; . . . and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors, two of the elders, or high priests, such as he shall or has appointed and set apart for that purpose.—Doctrine and Covenants 42:8.

It is not only necessary for the missionaries to consecrate their lives to the service of the Master and the cause of truth, but others as well are required to impart of their substance, that the Lord has blessed them with, for the good of mankind.

Again hear what the Lord says:

Hearken and hear, O ye my people, saith the Lord and your God, ye whom I delight to bless with the greatest blessings; ye that hear me: and ye that hear me not will I curse, that have professed my name, with the heaviest of all cursings.—Doctrine and Covenants 41:1.

According to this language it is only those who hear what the Lord has commanded that will be blessed; and to hear means to obey and do that which the law enjoins.

Now hear the law that God has given to his people, and see if we are in harmony therewith. If so we can claim the blessings that the Lord has promised to those that hear him:

Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion, for the building of mine house, and for the laying the foundation of Zion, and for the priesthood, and for the debts of the presidency of my church; and this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them for ever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 106:1.

Are we as Saints of God complying with that law? There is great advantage in doing what the Lord requires, as we will see by again referring to his perfect law: "Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming)."—Doctrine and Covenants 64:5.

Shall we obey the law and escape the punishment, or fail to observe it and suffer loss thereby? Let us decide now. It will be just as we choose, for the Lord says: "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise."—Doctrine and Covenants 81:3.

May God help us to do his will.

WHITHER ARE WE DRIFTING?

It is quite evident to any but a superficial observer that the world is drifting toward a great crisis, but the great masses of the world fail to understand the meaning of the passing events, which are rapidly making history. War, revolution, and bloodshed, confusion and chaos, are scarcely even worthy of comment by the giddy crowd in their mad rush for pleasure. But to a Latter Day Saint the passing events are an open book and they are fraught with a deep significance as they see the world fast ripening in wickedness, see prophecy being rapidly fulfilled, and know that the curtain will soon be rung down on the closing scenes of the last dispensation of time.

Crime is on the increase. The laws of God and of the land are set at defiance. The apostle Paul gives us a true pen-picture of our day in 2 Timothy 3: "In the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection."

If Paul had been looking on modern society as it is to-day, the picture could not be truer to life. There is an utter disregard for human life in the blind scramble for wealth. The divorce court with its train of evils is a blot on our civilization, not to speak of the murders, robberies, and long daily list of horrors that sicken the soul. Respect for the aged, and reverence for God's house are on the wane; but Sunday football and Sunday excursions are patronized by tens of thousands. Vice is arrayed in every alluring form. Our children are being educated by the great flaring pictures in the Sunday newspapers, which are neither amusing nor edifying, but a great moral plague, and they with the cigarette are making a race of moral pigmies and degenerates that will one day fill our jails and hospitals with criminals and idiots. Gambling is also on the increase among women in society circles; and the world and the churches go hand in hand. Theaters, operas, dancing, progressive euchre, and bridge parties, and "forms of godliness" combined, make infidels of honest souls weary of that shallow pretense called "religion."

One of the signs of our modern times is excessive eating and drinking. Jesus said one of the signs of his coming would be "eating and drinking." These are perfectly necessary and legitimate in their own way, but there is a limit. "What is there going to be to eat?" is the question of the hour with a class whose time hangs heavily on their hands, although science has exhausted her resources in catering to appetites already stalled. A prominent city daily lately severely criticised a society dinner among people supposed to be cultured (save the mark) for a lack of all sense of decency in a scramble and grab to get the choicest bits. Part of the guests got no refreshment because they were too disgusted to grab. Commenting on the affair the writer said, "Pokers 'woof, woofing' in their troughs are only one step removed from their human brothers." And this is our boasted twentieth century civilization when modern pulpits and modern philosophers are telling us the world is growing better; and this in a city where only a few blocks away thousands are nightly seeking an emotional religion called a "revival," while in wicked New York evil has grown to such an extent that church people have thought it necessary to have special prayers for the salvation of the city.

Another curse of our day is the extravagant display in dress and fashion, growing more tyrannical in its demands each year, and bringing ruin and disgrace to countless thousands who daily sacrifice health, honor, and virtue in their worship at its altar. This is a dark picture, but we have God's own word that it will be darker yet, for he has said, "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse."

But in the midst of this darkness the gospel shines out like a bright star at midnight, the wonderful, beautiful gospel that the angel brought to earth,—and woe, woe is pronounced on those who willfully trample on the gospel of the Son of God; for soon he will come "in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." (2 Thessalonians 1:8.) Not the gospel of the creeds and churches which thousands flock to obey, who love popularity; but the gospel of Christ which to-day is as unpopular as when he was on earth.

This is "the day of his preparation." (Nahum 2:4.) "His marvelous work and a wonder" (Isaiah 29) has come forth: God is moving on the children of men by his Spirit. In the great panorama of wonderful events, he is preparing the way for the gospel. And when this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness, then shall the end come. (See Matthew 24:14.) Thrice happy are those who have come out of the world for the gospel. Christ will soon be here, "but who may abide the day of his coming?"

PATRIARCHS.

There seems to be in some quarters a disbelief in the necessity of patriarchs in the church. For my part, I have never doubted that there should be. There was a time when the term evangelical ministers puzzled me somewhat; but that is long past, and things in that direction now are clear to me. I trust the few thoughts I offer upon the subject may be helpful to some of the brethren and sisters who regard patriarchs as an innovation.

In order to prove that patriarchs or evangelists are an innovation in the church, it must first be proved that they were not in the church in ancient times. This it is impossible to do, for they were in the church. In the New Testament we find it plainly stated that the gospel and the church both existed on earth before the Jewish law was given, as well as after the Jewish law was fulfilled. In the Acts of the Apostles, 7:38, we find that there was a church in "the wilderness," and that Moses was in the church; also in Hebrews 4:2 it is distinctly stated that the Israelites had the gospel preached to them; and in 1 Corinthians 10:1-4 the same thing is affirmed.

Only two systems of worship have been given of God. The first was the gospel of Christ, which was on earth at different periods from the days of Adam till the apostasy of the children of Israel under Moses' leadership. Then they went into idolatry, worshiped the "calf of gold," giving evidence in this of their breaking of the "gospel covenant," when God took the gospel, Moses, and the high priesthood out of their midst; but he restored the gospel and the high priesthood at the coming of Christ, at which time he set up the church again. The other system of worship was the parenthetical one called the Mosaic covenant—the Jewish law—which existed between the apostasy of the children of Israel in the wilderness and the death of Christ. During Christ's lifetime he laid the foundation, and established the church, bringing back the ancient order of things.

Because they had the gospel and the church before the Jewish law was given, we find mention in the Old Testament of three ministers, "Moses, Aaron, and Hur," the leaders of the people, evidently "the presidency," then "the twelve," "seventy," "high priests," "patriarchs," "elders," the sons of Aaron (receiving the tithes, i. e., they constituted "the bishopric") the "priests," "teachers," and "pastors" or "deacons." (See Exodus 17:11, 12; John 4:4, 5; Numbers 11:16, 17; Leviticus 21:10; Deuteronomy 32:7; Numbers 18:8; Exodus 29:9; Psalm 119:99; 2 Chronicles 35:15. For patriarchs see Hebrews 7:4; Acts 7:8, latter part of verse). Here are given texts proving the existence of the forenamed officers of the church in ancient times.

In the New Testament we find presidency, twelve, seventies, high priests, evangelists, elders bishops, priests, teachers, and deacons. (See Matthew 16:18; 26:36-38; Galatians 2:9; Matthew 16:19; Matthew 10:1-4; Luke 10:1, 2; Hebrews 3:1; 8:3; 5:5; Ephesians 4:11; Acts 21:8; 2 Timothy 4:5; Acts 14:23; Titus 1:5; Philippians 1:1; 1 Timothy 3:1-4; Luke 1:5; John 1:6; in connection with Exodus 40:13-15; Numbers 18:6-8; Acts 6:7; Acts 13:1; 1 Corinthians 12:28; Philippians 1:1; 1 Timothy 3:8, 10, 13.) Here are the officers of the church as found in ancient and New Testament times. The names of the officers are identical with two exceptions. First, in the Old Testament, the word pastors is employed in place of deacons. The word deacon comes from deacones, and means a minister of tables, i. e., one that serves in temporal things; and as the pastors of Old Testament mention attended to temporal things, it shows their identity with the New Testament deacons.

The other exception in the two lists of officers is this: In the Old Testament "evangelists" are not mentioned as being part of the organization, while the word patriarch applied by New Testament writers (as cited) refer to Old Testament times, and indicate certain individuals, recognized of God as being authorized to represent him in the church in those times. In the list of officers mentioned as belonging to the New Testament church, the word patriarch is not used, while the word evangelist is used frequently. How is this? Is there identity in the office of patriarch and evangelist? If so, the matter is explained, and that accounts for one word being employed in the Old Testament and another word being used in the New Testament to denote the same office.

In the revelation God gave to the church April 15, 1901, Doctrine and Covenants 125:3, we find the following: "The patriarch is an evangelical minister." The word evangelical is a derived word and means "according to the gospel; consonant to the doctrine and precepts of the gospel, published by Christ and his apostles, as evangelical righteousness, obedience, or piety." This is not very definite; for any minister called of God, whether apostle, prophet, seventy, elder, or of whatever office, is according to the gospel, hence Webster's definition does not help us any. So let us go back further to the word from which it is derived. The word evangel means "good tidings." It comes from the Greek uangel. We have a word in the New Testament, evangelist, the Greek of which is uangelistus, and means "an announcer of good tidings." Taking it for granted that the words evangelist in the Bible and the word evangelical of Doctrine and Covenants refer to the same general idea, we gather that the term "an announcer of glad tidings" may be descriptive of their work, or a part of their work at least.

As we have already ascertained that patriarch and evangelist are the same, let us see if the work of the patriarch is in harmony with what we know concerning the work of an evangelist.

Look at what God said to Abraham: "And I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed."—Genesis 12: 2, 3. Abraham was a patriarch, and in him the families of the earth were to be blessed. Jacob, who was also in the patriarchal line, was blessed by his father Isaac thus: "Let people serve thee, and nations bow down to thee: be lord over thy brethren, and let thy mother's sons bow down to thee: cursed be every one that curseth thee, and blessed be he that blesseth thee."—Genesis 27: 29.

In Genesis 48 and 49 we also find Jacob (Israel) blessing his grandsons, Ephraim and Manasseh. Now the power "to bless and to curse" was evidently conferred upon these patriarchs. God said to Abraham: "In thee shall all families be blessed"; but Isaac, that righteous man of old, made it appear that not only should "the families of the earth be blessed" "in thee," but "by thee," for he exercised the right, and pronounced both the blessing and the cursing (see Genesis 27: 29), and that before either the friends or enemies of Jacob had merited either the blessing or the cursing which Isaac said should come to them as a reward for their works. Old Isaac recognized the truth that "whatsoever a man soweth that he should also reap." And he acted as though he believed that God had given to him the right to "bless and to curse," as the Spirit of God should inspire him to do.

So it seems that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are committed to the position that the patriarch holds the right "to bless and to curse," in harmony, of course, with the merits of the individual who was to be blessed or cursed. Also think of Balaam who said, "How shall I curse, whom God hath not cursed? or how shall I defy, whom the Lord hath not defied?"—Numbers 23: 8. Also, "Told not I thee, saying, All that the Lord speaketh, that must I do?"—Genesis 23: 26.

If it be argued by some that Balaam fell, hence is no example to quote, I suggest that neither Balaam nor any other man ever fell because of carrying out the commands of God. It was because of wickedness subsequently, hence it is no argument against the power possessed by Balaam while he maintained his integrity in the sight of God. From the foregoing we find that the power "to bless and to curse" in olden time was recognized as belonging to the patriarchs. This is precisely what is taught in Doctrine and Covenants 107: 29 in reference to Hyrum Smith; and yet some people kick at that section as though it contained the most abominable heresy that was ever advanced. He who denies this section (107: 29) and then accepts the Bible statements relative to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, certainly causes logic to blush! If one is truth the other must be, for they teach the same things.

Now when Jacob foretold the blessing or future of Ephraim and Manasseh, did he not foretell good things? (See Genesis 48 and 49.) Did he not "announce good tidings"? He certainly did. Hence we are right in concluding the evangelist and the patriarch are one and the same office, for we have proven that part of the work of the patriarch is "to bless," "to announce good tidings," and that the meaning of the word evangelist is "an announcer of good tidings." The offices then are the same, and critical inquiry only substantiates what God in his kindness tells us, Doctrine and Covenants 125: 3: "The patriarch is an evangelical minister."

A word as to the ordination of the patriarchs or evangelists: Timothy was a minister of the gospel called by prophecy, ordained under the hands of the presbytery (body of elders). (See 1 Timothy 4: 14.) This was when Paul wrote the first epistle; but a year afterwards Paul refers to him as an evangelist. (See 2 Timothy 4: 5; 2 Timothy 1: 6), reminds him of "the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands." Oh, indeed, what is that gift? The Holy Ghost? No. Why? Well, this gift is something he can stir up. Who ever heard of stirring up the Holy Ghost? If we know anything about it, it is that the Holy Ghost stirs us up and leads us, not us leading the Holy Ghost. Then it really looks as though the apostles were to ordain the evangelists, and that Paul so ordained Timothy. Hence we understand his admonishing Timothy to stir up the gift of God in him, or in other words magnify his office and calling, "doing the work of an evangelist," making "full proof of his ministry." We then see again harmony with the revelation, Doctrine and Covenants 104:16, which says, "It is the duty of the Twelve, in all large branches of the church, to ordain evangelical ministers, as they shall be designated unto them by revelation." This office then is the gift of God. That there has been an exception to this rule we admit. It was when members of the Twelve were released from the great burdens in that quorum, when because of old age or sickness they had become so weakened that the burden of the office of apostle was too heavy for them. In that case the Lord relieved them from the responsibilities of the apostolic office, yet showed his confidence in them, and manifested his love to them in making them ministers who hold "the sealing blessing in the church." In their case the Twelve could not ordain them, as they were already apostles; and the only ones higher, to say unto them what God desired them to do, was the presidency. When the Lord speaks, he speaks through the head. The head of the apostles is the presidency, hence they are the only ones through whom God would speak when he contemplates a change in the ministerial career of those whom he had beforetime called to be apostles. Hence everything was done in order, in harmony with the law of God. There is no conflict, and God has acted like himself in these latter days, as he did anciently, showing that he is the God of the patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

In conclusion let me say that I do not pretend I have said all that can be said upon this great subject; but trust what I have said may be helpful.

Yours in the one hope,

T. J. SHELDON.

THE SOCIAL ASPECT OF OUR CHURCH.

One of the most prominent features of the doctrines and philosophy of the church established in 1830 was the teaching of the ministry that this gospel proposed social, industrial, and commercial reform as a direct result following the acceptance of the gospel they presented.

Beyond doubt, it was this vision of social equality which attracted so large a number of converts, especially in foreign lands; particularly among the laboring and artisan classes of Great Britain and other European countries. To understand, as we may from experience and observation, the grievances and injustices which are endured by the bulk of the working masses in lands which uphold an artificial classification based upon wealth (either money, or in estate, or both), and blood, including title, it is no longer a phenomenon to cause astonishment, that in a few short years the new church should have gathered thousands of the very best of these classes to recruit its strength. There is now, as there always has been, a deep and powerful yearning in the heart of the toilers for an equality of distribution of Nature's beneficent gifts of which, generous parent that she is, she has provided ample and to spare. This manifest and unnatural injustice has been borne with patience and but passive resentment for almost unnumbered years, occasionally bursting out in a wild and irresistible storm of passion in the frenzied attempt to adjust the wrongs of so cruel and unjust a system. These attempts have never been satisfactory; and to-day we are still made to feel that the worker belongs to an inferior species if not genera, and is enduring a condition of slavery that is even more galling than the chafing shackles of iron or the brass of serfdom or negro-bondage that filled civilization with compassion, and nerved noble-hearted heroes with strength and fortitude; and finally success crowned their efforts in the emancipation of their unfortunate brethren. The spirit of prophecy in the poets has voiced the wrongs of the people, and they have realized that

"Rank is but the guinea stamp,
The man's the gowd for a' that."

And,

"A Prince can mak a belted knight
A marquis, duke, and a' that
But an honest man's aboon his micht,
Guid faith he mauna fau' that.
For a' that and a' that
Their dignities and a' that
The pith o' sense and pride o' work
Are higher rank than a' that."

Truly any classification that is based upon any other foundation than moral worth and integrity of character is an insult and injustice that can not be compensated for by acts of charity.

It was because the Jewish church remained indifferent to the wrongs that the people were suffering and groaning under, that the prophets of God poured out their vials of wrath upon her; and she was bereft of power and divine recognition. It is because the churches of our time have, in the spirit of abject sycophancy, obsequiously either remained indifferent to, or have catered to the lordling and aristocrat even though bankrupt in morals, and destitute of honor, that the people are discrediting them and ridiculing their authority. The churches have proved treacherous to the rights of the people; and violating the principles of honor and justice they no longer "walk humbly with God."

These pampered favorites of Fortune have made a common and concrete spectacle of the poet's vision:

"See yon poor o'erladen, weary wight,
So abject, mean, and vile,
Who begs a brother of the earth
To give him leave to toil."

It is because the churches have answered the prayer of the masses for "leave to toil, to work," to labor (the God-given heritage of all men) and equal rights and opportunities to share in the bounty of Providence, with "charity" and "soup-kitchens" (their prayer for independence has been met with the endeavor to pauperize and enslave) that they are looking upon religion as the natural enemy of man.

It is a mournful and tragic fact that while the "common herd" are singing in the spirit of feverish hysteria, "Britons never, never, never shall be slaves," they are in a condition of moral slavery that has never been equaled in all the history of the past.

We join with reverence in the sentiment of the prayer,

"Then let us pray that come it may,
As come it will for a' that.
That sense and worth o'er a' the earth
Shall bear the gree and a' that.
For a' that and a' that!
Its coming yet for a' that,
When man to man the world o'er Shall brithers be and a' that."

"Men" do not want soup-kitchens nor Dorcas Societies to provide them with sustenance. They only ask for the opportunity to live and have the legitimate share of their own produce. This has been, and still is denied to them. Hence, when there came a missionary of the new church that promised an alleviation and an adjustment of such outrageous injustices, they thought surely their deliverance had come. Were they mistaken?

Any religion or church that undertakes to ignore the pressing and urgent problems in the social and economic environment is doomed to failure and rejection sooner or later. One of the leading atheists of this country has crystallized into language the sentiment that is silently but with deadly intent growing stronger and stronger: "We will leave the Eternity and its heaven to the preachers and ministers; we propose to cultivate the splendid provinces of Time." What a wealth of cynical contempt is contained in this impeachment of the church!

Emil Zola, the brilliant French writer, strikes the weakness of modern religion; and in common with thousands who regard the church as the most invidious and implacable of the enemies to human rights and justice says,

"In the day when the idea of 'charity' should crumble, Christianity would crumble also, for it was based upon divine charity correcting the injustice of fate, and offering future rewards to those who might suffer in this life."

Zola's conception of Christianity is evidently based upon the churches' interpretation of what Christ taught. However, he voices the prevailing sentiment that the world will not tolerate a "charity" that is offered as a substitute in lieu of equality and justice.

I incline to Ruskin who says that "no man can love his brother who does not do justice to him. If you will not do him justice, you grow to hate him. Justice is the Temple of which Love is the pinnacle."

It appears that these burning questions, so pregnant with momentous issues, should not be ignored by our church any longer. This doctrine of the redemption of Zion must have a more real and practicable place in our tabulation of belief and practice. The establishment of Zion involves the emancipation of, and the providing of equal opportunity to all without favor or fear. These conditions not being possible in the world, our membership is turning with affectionate longing to the church in which their hope is stayed. We must give an economical translation of the doctrine of "universal brotherhood." We can not continue to satisfy the multitudes of hard-working people with promises and dreams of future redress, who are presently groaning under conditions that are unspeakably miserable and even tragic.

To many, who are enjoying the comparatively easy pastoral or semipastoral life on the vast American prairie or in some of the many small towns and villages, where the tumult of the unceasing strain of the frantic struggle for existence is in progress, away from the grinding, crashing, screeching wheels of modern commercial life, or where only the faint hum of the deadly warfare is heard as in a dream, far away from the sight of its long procession of victims maimed, blind, deaf, palsied, cancerous, phthisical, dying humanity, from the muling, puling, whining babe at the breasts in the agony of scrofula, up to the decrepit old man and wife, who with swollen joints, toothless gums, bleared eyes, bereft of manliness or womanly grace, as the procession (a hideous nightmare) passes onward in its eternal misery: how can you grasp the awfulness of this boiling, seething volcano of humanity, struggling for bare existence?

When we stand in view of these carbuncles of moral corruption, that we call cities, like London, Glasgow, Paris, New York, Chicago, etc., realizing the helplessness of the world to help itself, is it not a question of grave and urgent moment to ask: What must be done? What can we do? To offer platitudes, and dreams, and visions of a coming Utopia, a nebulous Zion, while the world is going to the Devil and living in a present hell, is arrant puerility, if not imbecility. It is time we took our coats off, rolled up our sleeves, and got down to business.

While we are dreaming and talking, others are doing something, and we stand gaping in open-mouthed wonderment, and speculate as to the cause of the almost phenomenal success of the Salvation Army, and Dowieism, and even Utah Mormonism. The secret of the success is not a mystery, nor is it hid very far below the surface; they are cultivating the "splendid provinces of time" and endeavoring to abolish hell, and usher in paradise, by the removal of these social evils. I do not say that they are accomplishing this, but I do say that this is their message and mission to the world. It is of no use to give a tract on baptism or church organization to a hungry man with the maddening knowledge of starving children and weary wife breaking under the unbearable load. Yet practically this is what we are doing. To the vast majority of our fellows, heaven is a very long way off and it is a weary road to travel, and at the most but a promise of future compensation. To have a home of their very own, with something like a reasonable competency assured by their own effect, is much more inspiring than creeds or treatises and the rights and wrongs involved in ecclesiastical controversy.

The masses will condone the extravagant and histrionic gyrations of Dowie, and even acquiesce in his strange teachings because of the material benefits resulting from his daring attempt to alleviate the present suffering caused by the universal injustice of our class discrimination. General Booth has passed through a baptism of fiery ridicule and rancorous opposition for many years; but despite all this, braving contempt and persecution, he has forced the praise and admiration of the nations of the earth. Kings and emperors vie with each other to do him honor, not because of his religious creed, but because of the social and industrial possibilities that he has created. As a religion in the accepted sense, doubtless his scheme leaves much to be desired; but with grand indifference to theological theses and sacerdotal elaboration, he probed down to the lowest depths the maelstrom of vice and iniquity, and, with its own hands his society has dragged out of the swirling, murky torrents of degradation and sin, the besotted and bedraggled victims and has given to them an opportunity of moral and social redemption. Is it possible to withhold our admiration from the noble-hearted men and women who, regardless of cast and position, associate with the rank and file of the "Devil's Own" army as did our blessed Master, of whom it was said, "This man receiveth SINNERS," and actually DO something NOW? It is not a compliment to intelligence to stand aloof, and, in the spirit of supercilious contempt, begin to criticise their creeds and ritual; besides, they, in grand indifference to the carpings and quibblings of the doctrinaires, continue DOING SOMETHING.

We may argue and quarrel for a generation over doctrines and the like, but it is work and results that tell with God and with intelligent men. Is it not in some degree the same with Mormonism? Of course, as far as "law" is concerned, they simply can not, nor will they attempt to meet the Reorganized Church; but they are making converts in spite of their lying and criminality, and with all their concomitant evils. Why is it? you ask. Their preaching and promises of present and practical redemption from commercial and social slavery. That they do not act as they ought to act, we may grant; but still they have at least a good imitation of the promised Zion with its material blessings.

When, when shall we learn that it is not what a man professes to "believe," but what he "does"?

Think of the Herculean efforts of the heroic George Muller and his sainted wife; who, year after year, sustained the world-renowned orphanage at Bristol, not by begging, nor by preaching, but by "prayer." Think of the truly great Doctor Barnado, who literally saved from moral, physical, and spiritual damnation thousands of the "flotsam" and "jetsam" of humanity's wrecks, cast up by the flowing tide of time. These men and their like are heroes and "apostles of work," who are doing "exploits" and working "miracles." Do not tell me that because they are not baptized that they are not accepted. Surely the ever-loving All-Father must be filled with ecstasy and delight to behold the endeavors to "destroy the works of the Devil," which is the mission of the Christ himself. Yet with a complacency that is simply awful in its sphinx-like imperturbability, we regard the shaking of the dry bones and these moral resurrections as of insignificant worth compared with the nicety of doctrine and scrupulous reverence for ecclesiastical construction. Let us learn now ere it is eternally too late: The most poignant curse of God is on the ones who are guilty of "neglect."

Carlyle's stirring cry that seems to be full of anguish, is worthy of a consideration at this point:

"Be no longer a chaos; be a world, a world-kin. Produce, produce; if it be ever so infinitesimally small, in God's name produce it."

We have the hope of Zion; this hope has been the secret dynamic of the thousands who joined the church. This hope of redemption nerved the arm and sustained the confidence of the brave hearts who pioneered the restored evangel through the stormy days of its infancy. Being assured of the never-failing promise of Jehovah, they gladly "counted all things loss in order that they may win Christ."

To-day hearts are failing; ominous rumbles of discontent rasp out at intervals, turning harmony into discord; and our conferences, whose primary object is to deepen spiritual life and develop the purposes of God, and to translate into life and conduct the word he has given, are utilized to vent grievances and adjust what we consider to be personal wrongs. We can not afford to continue this kind of work. Everything points to the coming crisis (or, more likely series of crises) which are upon us. We must make some intelligent provision for the coming difficulties. Oh, let us be wise! Let us very carefully and prayerfully diagnose the symptoms, and then apply the remedy.

When we get right down to the root-principle of things; and having shorn ourselves of all miserable excuses, and in the spirit of justice analyzed ourselves as we must do, as all of the people have had to do or else suffer loss, what is the trouble with us?

SELF-INTEREST! Here is the primary cause of all our difficulties, and bitter and undesirable experiences. Individualism as opposed to communism. Love of self, as opposed to love of others. The struggle for the welfare of self as opposed to the struggle for the welfare of others. We have not yet learned the essential quality of religion, that spiritual life can only begin with death of self. Until we are willing to help ourselves to this voluntary self-immolation, God Almighty can not begin to help us. The vague notion that so many seem to have, that the redemption of Zion is waiting for the Lord, is a nightmare and cruel delusion. God is waiting for us "to redeem Time and Location from the evil of the day." Primarily and fundamentally, this revolution must take place in the individual. Until we get the "salvation of our God" within, it is a scientific impossibility to "work it out." Consequently "the improvement of the soul must begin with improvement in the soul" is axiomatic in this age of empirical and scientific knowledge.

However, we will confine ourselves to the material aspect of the question alone, and let us endeavor to find out what we can do to help ourselves in this great work of redemption. We mean the great economic aspect, out of which grow the social, industrial, and commercial influences, which are equally as necessary—nay, they must have the prior consideration to everything else unless we wish to invite disaster. It is apparent that these very basic principles of economy have not had any earnest consideration; and it would appear as though we were endeavoring to muddle through in this "slipshod" fashion that has, unfortunately, characterized too much of our work.

Let me put the paramount principle in the form of a question: How is it possible to establish Zion without work? Do we propose to make Zion a kind of suburban residential quarter of the world for the retired portion of the membership? Is this wanton caricature of God's purpose the kind of ideal that we have? If I mistake not, and do not misinterpret the experiences of the past, this is simply the recrudescence of the idea that many have of the coming Zion.

I postulate that it is an impossibility to have Zion unless you have provision for work and production for the people who may gather there. As things are at the present, either the Saints can not gather, only at the imminent risk of bringing very great and speedy calamity upon the church, simply because there is not provision for the workers, or those who do gather there must either be retired people who are in positions of comparative ease and do not need to work to sustain themselves, a residential population of social parasites and a limited number of poor people who are having to be sustained out of the coffers of the church. Truly, a condition of matters that is infinitely worse than the first! There is no social condition known to history or experience more undesirable than the condition of parasitism or pauperism. I confess to a much higher conception of Zion than its being a huge collection of paupers. As it is at the present, we have a mixed community, existing under the very conditions which obtain in the world, conducive to anything but the chief characteristics which should mark church association. Zion, therefore, is impossible but upon general equality and justice, without which there can be no "harmony," i. e., peace.

The question is, What are we going to do? It is no use postponing and delaying the consideration of these economic problems in the superstitious hope that God, in some miraculous manner, is going to bring about an adjustment of these difficulties. The "endowment" will not be primarily causative, but it must be resultant. It will be the "seal," the "pledge," the sign of "authoritative approval." There must be a correspondence, based upon an affinity between the units making up the community, and God, before there can be realized "the glory of the Lord," in Zion. We repeat, God is waiting for us.

Let us consider the conditions under which we are living to-day, whether in Independence or out of it.

1. It is true that all are consumers, and the demands for food, clothing, shelter, furniture, etc., must be supplied from some where and by some one.

2. The very large majority of our membership are producers.

3. The benefit and profits of their produce, to a very large degree, are daily passing into the grasp of private traders or monopolies; whether these traders and companies are members of the church or not makes not a mite of difference; the profits of our workers are passing into the hands of exploiters and speculators for selfish ends and with scarcely any just advantage to the producer.

Now these three foundation facts are experimentally true and known to all who are in the church.

In order to equalize matters and provide for the exigencies that are sure to occur, and that the weekly income will not cover, our people are forced to join coöperative societies, benevolent and insurance societies, etc. So that out of our membership there is a steady stream of money ever flowing into the treasuries of the world, every penny of which ought to be retained in the church. But, with the solitary exception of what finds its way into the church treasury in the form of tithing and free-will offering,—a very thin stream at that,—all of the produce of this church is going from out of our control, into the vast ocean of worldly speculation, and actually preventing the realization of the very purpose for which the church exists, namely, the "salvation of the people."

What is left to the faithful toiler and worker after giving up the best years of his life to the service of the mammon of selfishness? A worn-out body, a broken spirit, a useless bit of human "scrap"; which must either be provided for by the workhouse, or by the church, or out of the charity of sympathizing friends; or he straightway commits suicide rather than be dependent upon the cold and perfunctory benevolence of the people. This is not an extravagant exaggeration nor poetic hyperbole, but a stern and common experience in America as in Great Britain. We have for years, in this country, had under advisement, on various political programs, the scheme of old-age pensions and the like; but these kind of measures do not meet the difficulty, as already shown.

Another very important aspect of this question is the fact that if our church is going to depend upon the ever fluctuating and, at the best, precarious stream of tithing and voluntary gift, without having any true commercial source of revenue, then we are never going to be out of debt, and this miserable "hand to mouth" style of living is simply the way to the bankruptcy court. The only thing about it that is stable is, as the American wit says of going to the Devil, "The road is easy and you are bound to get there."

What prospect is there of being able to "open up the new fields ever widening before us"? It is one of the axioms of commerce that we can not possibly maintain credit, continue sound business, and accomplish good results so long as we have to meet a continuous and ever-increasing drain with a fluctuating and intermittent income. We shall have to readjust our financial system sooner or later, either because of the persuadings of sense and reason, or by the force of disaster. We have the power of choosing now—but, who shall tell of the morrow? Let us be wise in time, and not delay any longer. We must begin to regulate both outgo and income, and not let these circumstances regulate us, as we have been doing.

It is not even sufficient to maintain a balance; this is always a bad condition of affairs. But we must not be satisfied until we have a reasonable and ever increasing surplus. To-day we are practically attempting the impossible task of "living on losses." Our dependence upon tithing and free-will offering is an ever present menace to our progress, because at the very best it is a dependence upon the caprice of the human will.

There is not the slightest intention of undervaluing either the law of tithing or free-will offering. These have their legitimate place and also their legitimate avenues for expenditure. It is not intended as a criticism of the financial authorities of the church, but rather a call to investigate our position as a body with a view to discover as far as possible some securer and more profitable method of building up the influence of the church, and bringing into practicable reach the hopes and aspirations of our belief.

It will be readily understood by the student of the modern revelations that we have received for our guidance in these latter days, that these isolated sources of revenue are not intended to meet all the demands, because divine wisdom has provided other ways and means of meeting and supplying the necessary and increasing demands upon the exchequer. Therefore, what we urge is a practicable application of the whole law that God has given which will bring about a religious revolution involving commerce, industry, and sociology.

Of course there is consecration; this will provide a considerable income. Yes, but what we want to explicate is the glaring fact, that no matter how much may be "given" either in tithing, free-will offering, or in consecration, unless that money, or the means so donated, be put out or conserved in such a way as to insure its utilization within the church and by the church we may as well try to fill up the bottomless pit. We are simply consumers, and not producers, and as a matter of fact living upon the charity of the membership who are in a position to advance the means. In a word we are parasites. This unsound system of getting and absorbing, without "using" is the great menace to our success, and is condemned by experience, by Nature, and by inspiration. Study the New and Old Testament writings for abundant proof that the displeasure of God always follows the ones who will not increase their heritage. Were we as rich as Cræsus, as a modern Carnagie, or a Rockefeller, and continuing our present system, it would only be a question of time before we should be as poverty-stricken as we are to-day.

We will now notice just briefly and suggestively the law that seems to reflect the duty of the church.

Section 28, Doctrine and Covenants: "Ye are called to bring to pass the gathering of mine elect, . . . wherefore the decree hath gone forth from the Father that they shall be gathered in unto one place upon the face of this land, to prepare their hearts.

and be prepared in all things, against the day when tribulation and desolation are sent forth upon the wicked."

As long ago as 1830 the gathering of the Saints was provided for in the economy of the Father; and he gave a command that there should then begin the preparation of the necessary qualities of character among the people and "all things," so that protection against tribulation and desolation would be afforded, not by "miracle and fire," but by good conduct and moral purity of the people; and, as is obvious, independence of the world, for that would be filled with disaster and ruin.

The following also provides for the sensible and eminently practicable manner of securing the best results to the people of God, based upon individual character and social and commercial opportunities, by which would be removed some of the great evils which exist in the world. There are several references to the gathering in the revelations preceding the one quoted, but in this one we have what might be judged to be the first explicit instruction upon the matter. From that time onward nearly every revelation of God to the church bears more or less directly upon this important matter of gathering, giving valuable instruction conducive to the success of this aspect of the work, among which we notice the following:

There is provision for the appointment of a committee who shall take up the work of providing for the poor; this is detailed in almost categorical form in section 42.

In section 36, paragraph 22, we have an object-lesson almost after the simple pattern of a kindergarten in the history of the city of Zion in the time of Enoch. Observe very particularly the description of this city which is a pattern to us in these days.

To begin with, Zion was because the people were living in a condition of harmony, coöperation, righteousness, and equality. These qualities were in existence first, and then Zion was the result. They were accepted of God as Zion when they were living in this manner and spirit.

Doctrine and Covenants 36:2: "And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness, and there was no poor among them."

Let us note very carefully the following: "That ye might escape . . . and be gathered unto me a righteous people without spot and blameless. . . . And I now give unto the church in these parts, a commandment, that certain men among them shall be appointed . . . by the voice of the church; and they shall look to the poor and the needy; and administer to their relief, that they shall not suffer; and send them forth to the place which I have commanded them; and this shall be their work, to govern the affairs of the property of this church."—Doctrine and Covenants 38:7, 8.

See now section 42, paragraph 3: From the Ohio they were commanded to move westward and build up churches in every region, until it should be revealed "when the city of the New Jerusalem shall be prepared, that ye may be gathered in one." The law for the development of the necessary character of the individual was carefully tabulated, followed by the law of consecration. First the consecration of the person, then the consecration of the person's possessions.

The purposes to which these means were to be put are very clearly set forth, and can be catalogued as follows:

1. All were to have their needs supplied.
2. "The residue" shall be placed in the storehouse of the Lord, to be used for—
3. The proper provision of the poor and needy. How? By simply making periodical grants to them similarly to a board of guardians? Is this the ideal that we have of providing for the poor and the needy? Is this the kind of "equality" which we read obtained in Enoch's city, where there was no poor? This would insure a continuous poverty. Therefore we answer most emphatically, No. The method of administering shall be so carefully arranged that a special committee shall be formed composed of the High Council of the church and the Bishop and his council, and this committee shall—
4. Purchase lands.
5. Build houses of worship.
6. Build up the city of Zion.

What reasonable interpretation can be given to this other than: The money given in consecration, etc., shall be used in preparing ways and means for the abolition of poverty and distress in the equality of opportunity of work and producing in common; to the good of the common cause. Of course the equality shall be based upon the ability and power of the individual. Otherwise there would be inequality. It must be understood that equality or socialism does not postulate the equal division of monetary wealth or possessions according to the elementary rule of division. This would not meet the case at all, but as in the case of gratuitous doles would be a barrier to the establishment of harmony, coöperation, right-living and equality; and it can not be too frequently repeated that these are the essential qualities that produce Zion.

This crude and ignorant idea of socialism has long been discarded as impracticable and childish. It must be in this as in all of God's work, "Every man in his own order." And that order will be determined not by caprice or favor, but by the possibilities inherent in the individual. Every man shall have the very fullest and best opportunity to put his complement of talents out to the very best means of utility, in such a manner as will insure the very best possible results both to himself and the community. By this means no man will have more than he really needs and no man will have less; for all that may come as an increase over and above the necessity of the individual will be invested in the common interests of the whole; for the interest of the whole becomes then, primarily, the personal interest of every individual.

This will remove the spirit of dishonesty and roguery from commercialism, not by legislation and the enactment of prohibitive laws (which are always unsatisfactory, as the evil is not removed but simply by force-power is held in restraint and only awaits the opportunity and the evil would be in evidence again), but there would be genuine transformation in that the change would take place, where all genuine reform must take place, viz.: in the individual. There would be no dishonesty because there would be no desire for dishonesty. There would be universal brotherhood because it would be recognized that only by this "caring for the good of others," could "my" good be conserved. There would be a universal discovery of the law that is now, as it always has been, in existence, "that with what measure I mete, it shall be measured to me again." So the law of moral compensation would insist that if I would have the best for myself I must (this word is advisedly imperative) see to it, nay, must make it my fundamental work and continual study, that "the other person" is well cared for. This is not Utopian, but a splendid and scientific possibility.

The establishment of Zion is only the prophetic and poetic description of the conditions that will obtain when the law of love has been carried into the world of commerce and industry and of our social relations. Now let us consider this feature of this code outlined in our modern revelations.

The church, (as a body, as the body of Christ,) was intended to become the land agent, not to allow individual speculators, for the sake of individual gain, to exploit the people to the injury of the whole. The land question has always been a very prolific source of trouble and warfare. It must be obvious to all that for any man or syndicate to put a "corner" or attempt a monopoly on what is the possession of every individual in the world, is going to inflict an injustice upon not only another man, but, because the land is not being made to produce its very best, the whole community is consequently the poorer. The surest method of getting the very best out of the land will be for the land to be the actual possession of every individual, and the only way to realize this will be for the land to become the property of the community. And then all having equal possession will have equal interest, and consequently can not help putting into it the very best of which they may be capable. Therefore, it is the duty of the church to put a quick stop to this practice of allowing individual "estate agents" to acquire the land; and become herself the owner in a collective sense.

Then the church has the duty very clearly outlined, that she must become "the building agency," in the erecting of churches, houses, shops, and all the necessary buildings required for the city's welfare.

Of the vast resources involved in this, it is impossible to speak with anything like exhaustion. However, there are some very great advantages that are conspicuously on the surface worth a consideration.

There are comparatively very few of our people who are able to erect a house of their own; and they are obliged, if they do build, to resort to the installment plan. That is, they (for instance in this country) join a society that undertakes to advance money to a given sum which is regulated by the amount that they are able to pay at so much per week or month, and they select their own style of house and location wherever obtainable. The society builds the house and pays all the necessary expenses; and then the whole is subjected to interest, and the tenant pays his debt in the form of rent, which does not come to as much as he would have to pay if he were to hire the house from the owner; and all the time he is paying rent the house is becoming his own property. Now the advantages to the church financially are glaringly apparent. If we were to undertake to finance the Saints who will gather to Zion and her environs, on similar terms, we should have an ever increasing flow of money into the treasury, and the best feature of the matter is that every penny that left the church would not come back alone, but would return with a hundredfold, or sixtyfold, or thirtyfold in proportion. Besides, there would be the "industry" and all its concomitant necessary industries which would provide in some degree the very thing that we are so much needing to make Zion the city of refuge for the downtrodden sons of toil: work.

This thing is being done in the "regions round about and in Zion itself" to-day; but instead of the church doing it, private speculators are doing it, and the money that could be circulated by the church and for the church is going into the hands of the trader who leaves us nothing but the bill to pay, with a very exorbitant interest which is dissatisfying to the person who has so to purchase; and dissatisfying to the church; for they can not pay tithing and free-will offering honestly, when they owe a very heavy debt which must be paid to the minute if they would retain possession of their home. When we consider the amount of fraudulency which is being perpetrated upon hundreds and thousands of poor people, and the injuries which they suffer because of dishonest speculation, is it not only a privilege that we can have, but a duty that we actually owe to all the members? Is it not also a demonstration of the principle already enunciated, that in doing good to others we do good to ourselves? In this we can see that we should require timber; stone, natural or artificial; brick and mortar; tiles; and a host of necessary commodities that in a very little time could be produced by the church itself.

The houses thus erected would be the property of the church until the balance with the interest was cleared off. The church could afford to enter into this work cheaper and more advantageously to the purchaser and herself than can be done under the system of private trading.

Then we have provision made for the Lord's storehouse, the Almighty's departmental store. This covers the whole of the vast field of coöperation. Every demand of the whole shall be supplied by the whole for the common benefit of the whole. Can you have a more complete and real interpretation of, and translation into living realism of the "having all things in common," which at present is, at the best, a hazy dream, the benefits of which are away off in this misty future?

The church needs and demands bread. This necessitates the cultivation of land, the employment of labor, the production of machinery, the erection of foundries, the production of coal and iron, the employment of miners, artificers in iron, steel, wood, and a host of industries which will provide for an army of skilled and unskilled labor. There would be necessary means required to turn the produce of Nature into marketable commodities, which again demands the toiler. The food question is the most important and is the most urgent; and therefore presents to us the greater facilities. That there is a great need of reform in the way we are living, is only too tragically in evidence. We are suffering in health, pocket, and morals because we are being literally poisoned by the artificial method we have adopted in these days of daring speculation to gain wealth. The length of our days has been very startlingly shortened, and the efficiency of the race has been cruelly curtailed, so that now it is common to find that firms of employers are refusing to take on men who have passed their thirty-fifth or their fortieth year. Why? Because the vast bulk of men are practically incapable, after that age, of doing what is considered a good day's work. If it were the present purpose of this article, it could be demonstrated, chemically and physically, that the present physical degeneracy of the race is directly due to the injurious admixtures which we swallow under the sublime delusion that we are taking food and nourishment. It is very urgent that we, as a church, should begin the business of providing at least our own people with proper food. And then I do not know that it would be extravagant to either give all of our ministers a course on physiology and anatomy, so that our people can be taught not only "what" but "how" they should eat, or else give them special teachers who shall give physical tuition.

Next in importance is the providing of clothes. This is a very expensive item at the present; but unfortunately we all need clothes and can not so well dispense with the tailor and dressmaker whose bills very often are a nightmare to the overburdened father, especially if the majority of the family are ladies or girls. We should again need the mechanic, and these other artificers, and we should be able to produce our own cloth, woolens, cottons, silks, etc., which would be produced at a cheaper rate, and of better quality, than we can buy the same goods from the markets of the world. Besides we should have the employment of our own labor, which, when all is said, is one of the most imperative demands of the present. We need boots and shoes, harness, traveling-bags, and valises, and a host of leather goods which at the present, of course, have to be supplied by the world. Is it necessary to lengthen the list of possibilities? In short, everything in demand by the church should and could be supplied by the church. No marvel that the revelation describes the aggregation of possibilities as "a great blessing."

This section 42 is remarkably significant in many ways. With wonderful comprehensiveness it covers intelligently the whole range of human life in all its varied and complex ramifications. The moral, physical, and spiritual concerns are amply provided for, including hygiene, sanitation, commerce, industry, coöperation, and equality, in a marvelously simple, yet adequate manner. It is astounding that we are so slow to assimilate the power within our reach.

The purpose of the whole arrangement is given to us as well; and surely we can at least see the reason, as all of us are enduring the tortures and paying heavy penalties as a consequence of this fact: "Because of the consequences of that which is coming on the earth, and of secret combinations."

We have only to placé ourselves in touch with current events in all parts of the civilized world, through the medium of either our personal experience or the daily newspaper, and the stupendous truth of this multum in parvo sentence is punctuated and accentuated in many tragedies and calamities nationally, politically, and domestically, because of these secret combinations, whose sole and nefarious object is to secure as much as they can for themselves, no matter who shall pay the price. Surely it was more than human sagacity, — it must have been prophetic instinct that enabled Joseph Smith to anticipate the terrors and vast impositions of the modern trusts, monopolies, companies, syndicates, federations, unions, etc., which are rapidly undermining the foundations of our society, and making justice and peace but mockeries, or at the best but words to juggle with. The safety of the church is to be found EXCLUSIVELY in a faithful and implicit obedience to the law of God in temporal as well as spiritual concerns.

Then we have to consider another very important matter that has caused much controversy, and is still the cause of much anxiety to very many. I refer to the question of insurance societies and benevolent associations. It is not intended to argue the rights and wrongs of these much disputed questions. We will simply concern ourselves with what we have already described as the "root-principles." In the first place these associations came into being because they were demanded, or something equivalent to them. It was seen that it was very necessary that some proper provision be made for the emergencies and exigencies that are always probable in this uncertain life. Experience taught us that when the ordinary workman fell sick or had an accident which temporarily laid him off from work, both he and his family were at once plunged into very acute distress, and that the only hope was in the workhouse; and to become a dependent upon public charity involved the losing of personality, and disfranchisement, to say nothing of the many mean little annoyances also meant, besides being altogether unsatisfactory. He learned that it was necessary that he should look after his own interest. So these various orders, and societies, and insurances came into being to counteract the existent evils of the unjust division of labor and the unjust monopoly of the wealth thereby produced. It has always appeared to me that the extravagant talk and articles condemnatory of these orders and societies were very harsh, and also out of reason. It is the first law of nature to preserve self; and the second clause of that law is to preserve those who depend upon us; and for whose existence we are responsible. The apostle Paul says that if a man will not make provision for his household, he is worse than an infidel. He could have been stronger; for no beast of the field will neglect its own interest nor the interest of its offspring. It is unjust to inveigh against the thrifty members who take this means of providing for the "rainy days" of adversity and want that are almost inevitable in these days of cruel competition, at least until the church has offered to them an adequate substitute.

We readily grant that the methods may not be all that they should be; evidently they are not, according to the disgraceful revelations of barefaced robbery that is being carried on in at least some of these associations. But it does not follow that the principle is wrong because the expression of it is faulty.

In spite of all that can be said, our people will continue to pay a large sum every year to these different organizations, and is it not at least worthy of our consideration to suggest that we could succeed in turning this very large flow of revenue from its present course and have it come into the church?

I am prepared to concede that if the law of the church were in force in practice regarding tithing, and so forth, we could easily make provision for these common emergencies. But under present conditions we are not able to provide for the normal demands, therefore much less for the abnormal demands in ordinary sickness and death. The question has been put to me: "Suppose I give up paying to my sick-club and my insurance society and pay that money in the tithing and offering as directed in and by the church, will the church undertake to supply me and mine with the same benefits that I obtain at present from the societies of which I am a member?" All that can be said is, "Well, the church will do its best to see that you do not want for anything."

Now I should like to ask, what is there to prevent the church, under proper legal authority, from instituting a society for the sickness and death provision, that is really so very urgent a necessity? As to the success of such institutions, there can not be the slightest doubt; and inasmuch as our people will pay money for this purpose, why in the name of reason can not that money be paid into the church? This money could be properly invested in church property and ventures, and the ever accumulating interest would provide us means for the advancement of church-work, at the very least as large an amount of returns as are supplied to the institutions of the world of this nature. It seems to me it would be much more preferable to have the money invested in a righteous cause than in questionable if not actually dishonest ventures.

Now these ideas are not presented as a workable basis, in this crude and undeveloped manner. They are, however, offered as suggestive bases for the development of a proper working scheme. We can begin at least where God asked the church to begin in the appointing of a responsible committee as provided for, which can take these matters under advisement authoritatively.

One thing is sure, we should have to begin in a small way, but that need not discourage us. It would be simply impossible to reach the idealistic condition all in a week or even a year; but we certainly could make a very reasonable endeavor in the places where we have such good opportunities as in Independence and Lamoni.

The purchasing of land could be proceeded with, and the erection of houses according to the ability of the bishop to meet the demand; and then when once the investment was made it would gradually bring a continually increasing amount. We could open up a local market and general store in these two places and provide a means of disposal for the producers of the church neighborhood, and also for the purchasing community, and establish a reputation for value and integrity.

Begin a store in these places for the supply of all things that were in demand. So that there would be no unfairness to the existent traders, let there be a commercial valuation of their present status, and then let the church offer to them the amount that is fair and just; so that in the event of the establishment of this store the private traders had at least the option of selling out. If "honest value at reasonable prices" was the motto of the church, as it would be, then what can possibly hinder the church from succeeding?

Now, in conclusion, there doubtless will be much that can be criticised in this. It will be disappointing if it is not; so, but, if we can succeed in arousing thought upon this very, very grave problem, it will not be valueless as affecting the good of all; nor will the article have been written in vain.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

As Jacob Served for Rachel.

'Twas the love that lightened service!
The old, old story, sweet,
That yearning lips and waiting hearts
In melody repeat.

As Jacob served for Rachel
Beneath the Syrian sky,
Like golden sands that swiftly drop,
The toiling years went by.

Chill fell the dews upon him,
Fierce smote the sultry sun!
But what were cold or heat to him,
Till that dear wife was won!
The angels whispered in his ear,
"Be patient, and be strong";
And the thought of her he waited for
Was ever like a song.

Sweet Rachel, with the secret
To hold a brave man leal;
To keep him through the changeful years,
Thine own in woe and weal;
So that in age and exile,
The death-damp on his face,
Thy name in the dark valley lent
Its own peculiar grace.

And "There I buried Rachel,"
He said of that lone spot
In Ephrath, near to Bethlehem,
Where the wife he loved was not.
For God had taken from him
The brightness and the zest;
And the heaven above thenceforward kept
In fee his very best.

Of the love that lightens service,
Dear God, how much we see,
When the father toils the livelong day
For the children at his knee;

When all night long the mother wakes,
Nor deems the vigil hard,
The rose of health on the sick one's cheek
Her happy heart's reward.

Of the love that lightens service
The fisherman can tell
When he wrests the bread his dear ones eat
Where the bitter surges swell.
And the farmer in the furrow,
The merchant in the mart,
Count little worth their weary toil
For the treasures of their heart.

And, reverently we say it,
Dear Lord, on bended knee,
For the love that lightened service most
The pattern is with thee.
Oh! the love, the love of heaven,
That bowed our load to bear;
The love that stooped unto the cross,
And saved the sinner there.

What shall we give? How offer
Our small returns, to tell
That we have seen the Savior,
And are fain to serve him well?
Take, Lord, our broken spirits,
And have them for thine own;
And as the bridegroom with the bride,
Reign thou, with us, alone.

As Jacob served for Rachel
Beneath the Syrian sky,
And the golden sands of toiling years
Went swiftly slipping by,
The thought of her was music
To cheer his weary feet;
'Twas love that lightened service,
The old, old story sweet.

The Work That is Never Done.

"If things would only stay done; if I could look back over the day and see one thing accomplished which will not have to be done over again to-morrow, I should not get so tired of it or feel so discouraged!"

How many millions of wives and mothers have made some such comment as this on the monotony of household tasks! It is not alone the deadly sameness, the constant repetition of little duties! It is even more the feeling of futility, the apparent failure to accomplish any enduring results. The bread which was baked this morning will be gone to-morrow; the dishes are washed and put away, only to be used and washed again; the linen fresh from the ironing-table will be back in the laundry by the end of the week; the rooms swept clean the other day already need sweeping; the children call for endless sympathy and attention.

A man's work may be ever so hard; it is less often clouded by this sense of unproductiveness. It usually brings a definite reward in the feeling of something accomplished, some tangible result achieved. The architect points to the finished building and says: "I designed it." The carpenter and the mason, who see the structure growing under their hands, know that it will stand for years, an unimpeachable witness to their industry and faithfulness.

But the things which are tangible are not always those which are most real or most useful. There are other noble works besides fine buildings. The young man who goes out into the world healthy and clean-minded, strong in principles which he acquired at home, and firm in the belief that there is no other woman in the world quite so good as his mother—he is a nobler work even than a Parthenon or a Taj Mahal. And the daughter who has grown to womanhood with a pure heart, and hands trained to perpetuate in a new home the deeds of usefulness and comfort learned in the old—is she less to the world than brick and marble?

“Do you think that nothing is happening because you do not see yourself grow, or hear the whirl of the machinery?” says Henry Drummond. “All great things grow noiselessly; you can see a mushroom grow, but never a child.”—Selected.

Easy to Live With.

“You will never have any trouble with Marian,” said a mother to the young man who had recently become engaged to her daughter, “for she is so easy to live with. Other girls may be more brilliant, more talented, or more capable, but I don't believe you could ever find any one so easy to live with, and after you've been married a few years you'll realize what that means.”

Her words set me to thinking, and I wondered how many of us really are easy to live with. That means that we are always ready to see the bright side of things, to make the best of disappointments, to give up our individual preferences or wishes for the sake of others, to sympathize with those who are in sorrow or suffering, to lend a hand wherever extra help is needed.

It means that we are not oversensitive, we do not take offense at trifles, we are not always standing up for our rights, we do not envy the success and good fortune of our friends.

It means that we are ready to talk with grandma who is deaf and who gets low-spirited staying so much alone, to play games with Ralph when he has a cold and can not go skating with the others, to read aloud to mother when she is sewing, and to have a pleasant account of the day for father when he comes in from business.

It means that we have no annoying personal habits like snuffing, biting the nails, drumming with the fingers, keeping people waiting, or ridiculing the weaknesses of others.

It means that we are always busy oiling the wheels of the household machinery so that there may be no trouble from friction, no vexatious delays and stoppages.

In short, it means so much that the more I think of it the surer I am that I could die happy if I felt that I deserved to have placed on my tombstone the words, “She was easy to live with.”—Forward.

Suggestions for the Homemaker.

At the summer conference of the League of American Mothers, recently held in Chicago, some original and striking ideas in the training of children were advanced.

Mrs. James L. Hughes of Toronto, Canada, said: “The child's ideal of Sunday should be to make every one happy.” She recommended also: “If a boy is angry, obstinate, and uncontrollable, give him a bath, wash his face, or do something that will rest him. There is probably something wrong.”

Mrs. Ellen Lee Wyman, of Evanston, said, in a paper on “Neighborhood”:

“Never borrow if you can possibly help it; lend as often as you can without being imposed on.

“Keep your children at home unless, by permission, they visit.

“Become acquainted with your children's playmates, their mothers, and your children's teachers.

“Gossip is passing—speed its passage.

“Draw the line on anything that distracts or absorbs time that belongs to your husband, your children, or your neighbors.”

Mrs. Wyman gave some hints for the individual woman, from which these are culled:

“Keep yourself well dressed and be neatly dressed in the morning, that your husband may carry a sweet impression of you all day.

“A person lives up to his clothes as truly as his reputation.

“The greatest of self-imposed abuses of women is everlasting sewing. One third of the sewing you do is unnecessary. Draw the line on drawn work, embroideries, cushions, doilies, pillow-shams and all other shams, table covers, and draperies.

“There are too many clubs. This age must not witness woman's exodus from the home.”—Selected.

Sunday-School Department

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to Editors HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

THE editor of the department is compelled to resort to considerable selecting of matter for the department for a week or two from the fact that now he is doing double editorial duty, the copy for the first issue of the Exponent being now under preparation. But we feel sure that our readers will bear with us and go with us to our new home in the now near future.

“The Sunday-School Exponent.”

About the middle of December you will receive the first issue of the Sunday-School Exponent. It will be the official organ of the General Sunday-school Association and will present the Sunday-school work in an interesting and instructive a way as we and our assistants are able to place it before you. But we want to ask that you lend us your support. You know that no person or committee of persons can make any undertaking successful alone. We need and must have your support. All ventures of like nature must be supported or they fail. You are able to support it

IN TWO WAYS.

One way: Let us hear from you and your work either of district or school or home class. We want the items of news. They will interest and stimulate others to action. We want to hear of your prospects and what you are attempting to do. All that might be of interest to others. We will gather out such parts as we may be able to use for the benefit of the public. Some items are not of a nature to be proper to publish. But these are very valuable to the general superintendent in his work with the affairs of the association. It helps him to size up the work as a whole. Send us your items of news and we will be the judge, and we will appreciate the kindness, too.

The other way: You are aware that the venture entails expense, much of it. And that this may be financial success, that it may exist at all, it will be necessary to get a good subscription list worked up at once. Please do not think that your subscription will not amount to much. It does. It is of the “ones” that the whole is made up. We need the publication and have needed it for some time. It has been impossible to spare space in the HERALD to do the work justice. The management of the HERALD have always treated us with the utmost kindness and consideration and granted all reasonable requests, and it has done the work of the Sunday-school good that it is impossible for us to estimate. God knows, and we are grateful to them for their kindness and help. But the growing demands of the work require that we have an organ adequate to the needs of the association, and as per order of General Convention the undertaking is made. We are sanguine of the success of the paper in more ways than one. But at the same time we are aware that considerable effort must be put forth to make it a financial success. Will you not help us? Send your subscription. Get you neighbor to subscribe. Every teacher and officer in the school should have access to it, for it is especially for them. If you have not received a copy of the prospectus, send postal card to D. J. Krahl, Lamoni, Iowa, and he will gladly mail you one. We should keep the matter moving from now till —.

Why Should Religio Officers Attend the General Convention?

When one has been chosen as an officer in the Religio, whether president or librarian, he should realize to the fullest extent the responsibility resting upon him and should seek every means to better qualify himself to fill such an office. An important means is found in attending the General Convention. We here meet to transact business which affects every local organized, whether here or across the mighty deep, and who should be more interested than the officer? True, we may remain at home and read of what has been done, but should all do this, what would there be to read of, or what could be accomplished? Those who must remain at home may receive a degree of the Spirit, as one ever can by fervently asking God's help and blessing and using all the means that are before them for advancement.

We should not attend a convention thinking only of having a good time, but go asking guidance from Him who is ever ready to bless his people, giving attention to all that is done and said, that when we return we can make application of the things we have learned.

Meeting the general officers, and active workers all over the land, is a source of strength and encouragement, and gives one enthusiasm that he does not gain by staying at home. To hear the reports of the general officers, such as were given this year, makes us to know that God's hand is still over us and that he is still blessing us as an association. Our general secretary, Sr. Hitchcock, said that never could she so conveniently find the time for the needed correspondence, etc., connected with her office as now, but gives the glory to God for the blessing. Some expressed themselves as having been discouraged and told how they overcame that discouragement; others told how they never become discouraged. All this is a source of strength to me; not that I enjoy hearing of discouragements, but it makes me feel to say, Father, thy will be done; help me abide that will, help me to overcome.

How much more could our general officers report at the close of this year, if every Religio officer could have been present at our convention last spring. What is true of the general is also true of the district convention. I would that every local in our district could be represented by one officer of each being present at Sioux City.

In Doctrine and Covenants, section 17, paragraph 13, we read as follows: "The several elders composing this church of Christ are to meet in conference once in three months or from time to time, as said conferences shall direct or appoint; and said conferences are to do whatever church business is necessary to be done at the time."

The elder usually (not all, however) has charge of a branch, and the Lord saw the need of their meeting together in a conference.

Are not the presidents of locals in charge of an important part of God's work? hence need all the help and instruction they can obtain. What is true of presidents is true of all the officers, for I can not think the work of the president more important than that of secretary, treasurer, or librarian, for as chairman of their respective committees there is great responsibility resting upon them.

That we may ever be willing to improve every opportunity granted us, and continually go "Onward and Upward," is my prayer.

ANNIE STUART.

Letter Department

GOREVILLE, Illinois, November 25, 1905.

Editors Herald: As I scarcely ever see anything written from the Southeastern Illinois District by our missionaries or workers, will say that our work here as a district is progressing nicely. Our gospel tent was used after our reunion at Brush Creek. At least two fine openings were made at Johnsonville and Rinard in Wayne County, by request of Bro. John Henson. The last place was near Orchardville, where a Christian minister by the name of Phillips had conducted a revival-service. During this service he attacked our position and scandalized our people who resided in the neighborhood. A debate was talked of—Bro. I. N. White being counseled with. But for all of Mr. Phillips admitting that the propositions presented to them were fair, and that they would furnish a man to meet a representative of our church in discussing these questions, we have not seen or heard of their man yet, except during the tent-service. Daniel B. Turney, a polemic minister of the Methodist Protestant Church, and vice-president of the Anti-Mormon League, came to our tent-service one night, and after the sermon, when the privilege was given to ask questions, Reverend Turney attacked our position by first asking a question and then because we disagreed, called me before a large congregation a liar. We learned, however, that R. B. Neal had been written to by Mr. Phillips to come or furnish a man to debate us. Hence Doctor Turney was notified to come and help the Christian people out of the difficulty they had got themselves into. Of course we would not accept Doctor Turney as a representative man of the Christian Church, sound in that faith, etc., and Mr. Phillips said they could not recommend him as such. Yet at the same time we are branded by them as cowards because of not discussing with Doctor Turney under those circumstances. At the same time propositions were formulated including the church question of the Methodist Protestant Church, but in that neighborhood they are not signed up by Mr. Turney.

During the summer months Doctor Turney delivered a series of lectures in Goreville near Tunnelhill against what he was pleased to call Mormonism, of course classing the Utah church and us together; the final result of that is Bro. T. C. Kelley and Doctor Daniel B. Turney are now engaged in a nine nights' discussion in Goreville; three propositions: 1. The Protestant Methodist Church is a part of the one body or church of Christ, and harmonizes with and correctly presents the teachings of the Bible; 2, Joseph Smith, Jr., was a true prophet of God; 3, The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the church of Christ, harmonizing with the teaching of the Bible.

The usual calling of bad names is indulged in by Mr. Turney, and using testimony alone of our enemies, even going so far as to connect Sidney Rigdon and Joseph Smith together in palming the Spalding Romance, etc. But Bro. Kelley is onto all this, and is gaining ground fast in obtaining the sympathy of the large congregation by his manly deportment and clear-cut argument. Will report results later on.

Yours in the conflict,

F. L. SAWLEY.

PACKARD, Iowa, November 25, 1905.

Editors Herald: The work in Eastern Iowa is still on the upward move and although there are some who are not doing their duty and are not advancing as they ought, yet we can see that there has been some improvement.

A short time ago the writer had the privilege of leading three more precious souls into the waters of regeneration at Chattanooga, Jackson County, all adults and of the best people in the community. This makes ten in all at that place this summer who have been baptized by Bro. J. B. Wildermuth and myself, eight of them direct results of our tent work at that place and vicinity and all are good, earnest workers and a credit to the cause. We have made arrangements with Bro. Heide of Fulton to look after their spiritual welfare at present, but hope to see them organized into a branch at some future time.

At Clinton we found the little band of Saints struggling to keep the ship afloat and making noble efforts to buy and make ready for use a small church-building. They bought a lot and the building was thrown in, to judge from the extremely low price they paid, and it is in the heart of the city. They will appreciate any help they may receive. Those who wish to assist may send their gifts to Bro. D. L. Palsgrove, 110 Second Avenue, Clinton, Iowa.

Praying for the welfare of Zion, I am,

Your brother,

FRED B. FARR.

Conference Minutes.

Western Maine.—Conference convened at Mountainville, November 11, 1905, F. M. Sheehy presiding, assisted by C. H. Lake; Mary L. Carter, secretary. Ministry reporting: C. H. Lake, J. J. Billings, J. N. Ames, H. R. Eaton. Branch reports: Stonington 99, Little Deer Isle 59. Bishop's agent's report: Receipts, $192.35; expenditures, $149. A request from Little Deer Isle that William Haskell be ordained to the office of teacher was granted; also one from Stonington asking that Irving Carter be ordained deacon; and provision was made for their ordinations. The district officers were sustained, and J. J. Billings added to their number as vice-president. F. M. Sheehy and H. J. Davison were chosen delegates to General Conference. By action of the conference the Brooksville Branch was disorganized. Adjourned to meet at Stonington in May, 1906.

Conference Notices.

The conference of the Spokane District will convene with the Spokane Branch at the new chapel on the first Saturday and Sunday in January, 1906, at 10 a. m. All branches should be represented, and have their reports in good order and corrected up to date. The Spokane Branch will care for all visitors. T. W. Chatburn, president.

The Presidency.

RELEASE OF MISSIONARY.

By his request and by concurrence of the missionary in charge Bro. W. E. LaRue has been released from his appointment to the British Isles Mission.

JOSEPH SMITH, for Presidency.

LAMONI, Iowa, November 28, 1905.

Church Secretary.

CLERGY CREDENTIALS FOR 1906.

Corrected lists of all general officers of the church, including all under general missionary appointment, have been forwarded to the several passenger associations, to facilitate prompt issue of clergy credentials for the coming year. Said lists include those appointed since the General Conference and eliminate those released.

As heretofore, all local appointees are referred to their respective general missionaries in charge for indorsement. Application blanks may be obtained from joint agents of the various bureaus or associations. A close examination of rules and regulations governing issuance of credentials will prove helpful to all interested, especially to those who for the first time make application.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, November 29, 1905.

Appointment of Missionary.

Notice is hereby given that Bro. George Winegar's family and financial difficulties having been favorably arranged, he has been reappointed by Apostle G. T. Griffiths, approved by Bishop E. L. Kelley—therefore he is hereby placed in his field as appointed by the General Conference, and is recommended to all concerned.

T. W. CHATBURN,

Missionary in charge of Spokane District.
SPOKANE, Washington, November 23, 1905.

Change of Field.

I hereby give notice that in view of Bro. N. V. Sheldon's going to labor in Central Washington and Spokane District the remainder of the conference year, that I herewith appoint Bro. Henry Sparling subminister in charge of Eastern and Central Oregon, except Portland and vicinity. This territory is placed in charge of Bro. Will S. Pender, who has been assigned to labor in Portland and vicinity the remainder of the conference year.

We sincerely hope the Saints will support these men by their faith, prayers, and means.

Yours in gospel bonds,

G. T. GRIFFITHS.

237 Vine Street, MONTAVILLA, Oregon, Nov. 28, 1905.

Expelled.

This is to give notice that Elder James H. Parr was expelled from the church after due labor and trial, instituted by J. M. Terry.

CHARLES A. PARKIN,

President San Francisco Branch.

SAN FRANCISCO, California, November 25, 1905.

Died.

GILLESPIE.—At Washington, Pennsylvania, November 4, 1905, Sr. Mary Ann Gillespie; born in Ireland, February 2, 1841, came to America in 1872, and baptized by William Lawrance, April 6, 1873. Sons present at funeral, James, John B., Robert C., William, and Thomas, and daughters Barbara Beeherman and husband, Mary A. Caldwell and husband, Sarah Hazlett and husband, and E. Nellie, and six grandchildren; absent: Agnes Edwards and Georgianna Gillespie. Funeral was from the home the 6th; singing was by Srs. Alice Omohundro and Emma Farley. Sermon from Isaiah 26:19, by Elder R. M. Elvin.

ELLIS.—Elder Richard Ellis was born in Dolgelly, Merionethshire, North Wales, on Good Friday, April 13, 1832, and was 73 years and nearly 6 months of age at the time of his death. The last fifty-two years he spent in Australia. He was baptized February 8, 1874, and confirmed the same day by Elder Rodger. He was president of the Balmain, Sydney, Branch twelve years. At the age of twenty-one he married Ann Jones, who preceded him to the other shore in February last. Two children survive: a son who lives in Sydney, and a daughter living in Los Angeles, California.

PERKINS.—At Smock, Pennsylvania, October 30, 1905, Bro. William Perkins. He was born March 1, 1834, at Richmond, West Virginia, and was baptized July 31, 1904, by Elder Joseph Maxon, who also preached the funeral-sermon to a large attendance.

ROWLEY.—Elizabeth Woodall was born in Worcestershire, England, August 15, 1831. She was married in 1852 to Cornelius Rowley and came with him to America, in 1864. The Civil War was going on and they returned two years later and settled in What Cheer, Iowa, where they have lived thirty-five years. She died at the old home southeast of this city, October 16, 1905, aged 74 years, 3 months, and 1 day. Four children survive to comfort her aged husband in his bereavement. They are

John and Neil Rowley of Hocking, Iowa, Sam Rowley, of Skidmore, Kansas, and Mrs. Martha Kelley, wife of Frank Kelley, of Rock Island, Illinois. One sister, Mrs. Hannah Amblert, is all that survives of her family. She came here from England and assisted in caring for Mrs. Rowley during her long illness. Mr. and Mrs. Rowley were pioneers here, coming when this country was yet new. They founded a home where they have lived in peace and contentment, honored by all who knew them and living apart from the strife and turmoil of business life. She was a consistent member of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, but as the organization is not strong here, she expressed a wish to be buried from the Methodist Episcopal church, of this city. This wish was carried out, and in the absence of Reverend C. W. Wilson, Reverend W. H. Kelley, of the Presbyterian Church, conducted the services; text: "The day of death is better than the day of one's birth."—Ecclesiastes 7:1. The Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which Mr. Rowley is a member, expressed their sympathy by turning out to the funeral as a lodge. Her mortal remains were placed in the most beautiful coffin which could be procured, and she was laid to rest in Highland Cemetery, just a little way from the home which sheltered her for the past thirty-five years. The family and sister of Mrs. Rowley are deeply grateful for the many kindnesses shown them by friends during the sickness and in their bereavement.

SCARCLIFF.—In Mobile, Alabama, November 3, 1905, of dropsy, Frank David Scarcliff, son of Frank P. and Mary E. Scarcliff. Born June 12, 1889; baptized July 18, 1902. Shortly before his death, and after he had lost the power of speech, he evidently had a joyous vision. His eyes opened wide, and for a moment or two he looked intently upon something above him; his arms were stretched out towards it, and a glad, happy smile appeared upon his face. He died without a struggle, like one going to sleep. Father and mother, five brothers, and two sisters survive him.

REW.—Near Lamoni, Iowa, November 23, 1905, Helene, aged 7 months, daughter of Arthur and Julia Rew, and granddaughter of Sr. Sylvester Rew. The child was ill from birth, and, though mourned, it was a happy release for her. Funeral service at the home by Bro. H. A. Stebbins.

AUTUMN LEAVES FOR 1906

Autumn Leaves for 1906 bids fair to be better than ever before. Interesting articles, poems, stories, and illustrations will fill each number; and these will not only be excellent from a technical but also from a spiritual standpoint. One prominent church-worker writes: "I wish to congratulate you on the work being done by Autumn Leaves. It is crisp, bright, and up to date; and, best of all, the purely literary is made subservient to the spiritual."

INSPIRED DREAMS AND VISIONS OF MODERN TIMES

This series has been more popular than anything that has appeared in Autumn Leaves for a long time. God's dealings with individuals in our day through dreams and visions is clearly set forth. These accounts come from men and women all over the church and will be continued for some time.

TRAVEL

Various illustrated accounts of travel will appear, among them Elder W. E. LaRue's account, "Little journeys in foreign fields." "Bob Cat Lodge," in the January number, tells of the experiences of four young Latter Day Saints camping in the Black Hills; and how in the midst of gayety they found time to minister to the dying and preach to the living. It is illustrated with original drawings by one of the party. Subscribe in time for this number.

HOW TO REACH THE PEOPLE

The important subject of how to reach the people with our message will receive further consideration during the year. Methods and means and actual experiences will be discussed by those who have had experience. Those who have read, "How we reached the people of Toronto," and "Lifting an ensign in Nauvoo," will wish to hear more. An account of the second campaign in Toronto will appear soon.

SCENES FROM CHURCH HISTORY

Interesting scenes from church history will be given during the year. A history of the "Order of Enoch" is in preparation by Elder H. A. Stebbins, one of the secretaries of that little understood order that participated in the settling of the church in Lamoni. The directors and stockholders of the order are all dead and it will be of interest to have an account of the undertaking from an actual participant, ere it is too late.

BIOGRAPHIES AND AUTOBIOG- RAPHIES

These will be given the same prominence as in the past. More than one life has been changed through reading some good autobiography in Autumn Leaves. The first of the series for 1906 is that of Elder F. J. Ebeling, who begins his history in the January number with the words, "To me my conversion was as remarkable as the apostle Paul's. He had a vision; so had I. He heard a voice; so did I. He was stricken with affliction; so was I. He immediately began to repair the damage he had done; so did I. He died rejoicing, he had kept the faith; and oh, may God help me to do the same!"

FOREIGN MISSIONARY WORK

Elder G. J. Waller is preparing an account of missionary work among the Chinese and Japanese, and we hope to obtain a series of articles giving an account of work done among the Indians since the organization of the church. Other fields of foreign work will be canvassed.

"THE RELIGIO'S ARENA"

in Autumn Leaves is the official organ of the Religio, and every Religian owes it to the work that he subscribe for Autumn Leaves and secure other subscribers. The news of the societies, the home class work, the library work, articles from Religians; all these appear in "The Religio's Arena." Religians! Get busy for Autumn Leaves. Autumn Leaves is busy for you.

STORIES

Some excellent stories are in view for the year. Several numbers of the story, "Fred Martin," still remain and the closing chapters will hold the great interest already aroused. The Editor is writing a Book of Mormon story in three parts, entitled, "The four brothers," and other stories of that nature will entertain the Book of Mormon student.

The Subscription Price is Within the Reach of the Poorest

One dollar per year in advance, payable to the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. Send in your subscriptions promptly, as the January number is printed about December 15.

EDITOR AT HOME.

O'Hayes

Taking up the thread of the narrative where dropped in our last communication, we need to begin October 7.

Through the kindness of friends a new hall known as the Unity or Unitarian Hall had been hired for a week's services, beginning on Saturday evening, November 7. This hall has been built but a short time, and though its locality has been advertised, it was not sufficiently known for persons to locate it readily, so that the meeting on Saturday night was a failure. The hall is located at No. 40 South Second East Street, across the street and but a few rods north of the old Liberal Institute built by Messrs. Godbe, Harrison, and company at the time of the break-away from the Mormon church, known as the Godbeite movement. The leaders in that movement have all passed away with the exception of Henry Lawrence, whom we met for a moment on the street and who now is a Socialist and a successful man of business.

On Sunday night, October 8, we had the hall crowded full, with standing room only, quite a number occupying in this manner. Among those present on this occasion we noted Francis M. Lyman, president of the Twelve, of the Utah church, and Abram S. Hatch, at one time president of the Weber Stake. We were informed subsequently that there were quite a large number of presidents of stakes in the congregation. We spoke on the position occupied by the Reorganized Church from an affirmative standpoint, covering the question of law and organization and the command of God to observe the law of the land. We trust we may have made the subject-matter plain. At all events we tried to do so. We continued holding meetings in Unity Hall until Friday evening, when we were under the necessity of closing, the hall being engaged for Saturday night for a dance.

During this week we were visited by certain parties, among them on Thursday, Elder Angus M. Cannon, the husband of five wives, with whom he, like the President, Joseph F. Smith, is living in open defiance of law. In the course of conversation we gleaned from him that what would be called the records of the church, referring to the lists of membership, had been lost. The next day, Friday,

--------------------------	------

BRO. JOSEPH SQUIRES, Brooklyn, New York, lately ordained to the patriarchate, writes, December 4, very encouragingly with reference to the work he has been doing among the Saints and of their hearty appreciation of his efforts. He was at Broad River, New Jersey, where he expected to remain until the 23d; expected then to visit Baldwin, Maryland, and Philadelphia, and attend conference at the latter place.

NORWAY will have a king. Prince Charles of Denmark was elected king of Norway by a large popular majority on November 12, and it is expected the coronation will be celebrated on New Year's Day, 1906. In 1896 he married Princess Maud Alexandra, youngest daughter of King Edward of England. The new king will reign as Haakon VII.

we had a visit from a son of Heber John Richards, son of Doctor Willard Richards, who gave us a good deal of information touching things which we wished to know, and entertained us finely by his conversational powers; and he also stated that the records were lost. He, unlike some others, those in authority in the Mormon church, is a monogamist, the husband of one wife.

On Saturday, the 14th, we had a visit from Mosiah Hancock, the son of Levi Hancock, whom we used to know at Nauvoo. He had walked all the way into the city from his home in Arizona, and in all probability would have to walk back. He had undoubtedly been a faithful son of the church in his way, but by improper management and possibly added misfortune had remained poor. When asked the question by Bro. Fred M., where his home now was, he said with a sigh, "I have no home! I had three homes and three wives at the time the Manifesto was issued; now I have neither wife nor home." Then said I to him, "You kept the Manifesto?" To this he replied, "Yes," and with a leer, "I had to; they all left me and would not live with me any more."

I mention these three cases for the reason that they were boys in Nauvoo about our own age, Richards and Hancock a year or two younger, and were representative men of the classes in which they would be named. Elder Cannon was for many years president of the Utah Stake, in which was included Salt Lake City, but had of late been superseded by a younger man and the dividing of the stake into smaller portions. He was a well-preserved man, so far as the flesh goes, and seemed to be still active. Elder Richards, who was also a physician, is a unique character, has evidently sufficient means to live where he pleases, is a great traveler, and one of the kind that sees the humorous in life as he goes along, and is strongly inclined to "shoot folly as it flies." We gained much information through conversation with the Doctor. He had for years had access to the company of leading men and was well informed in regard to the general affairs of the church in the Valley, and we were really pleased to make his acquaintance.

On Sunday, October 15, Bro. W. H. Kelley occupied in the chapel and we filled in at night. Bro. Frederick M. was called to Malad, Idaho, on Thursday, October 19, to take part in funeral-service at that point. We took advantage of his absence to visit one or two parties, among them a colored man by the name of Isaac Manning and his sister, whom we found lived not very far from where we were staying in the city. We knew him when we lived at Nauvoo before the departure of the Saints. He earned distinction by being the one who bore and beat the bass drum in the Nauvoo Legion. The last time we had met him before this was at London, Ontario, where he was living with a white woman for a wife. His brother Peter, also living with a white wife, was at London at the same time. We learned that the wife whom we saw with him at London had left him some thirteen years ago, and he had slowly drifted west until he came to Utah and united with the church there. We found him rather a hale man, at work in his yard cutting wood, spry and active at ninety years of age. His memory was quite clear in regard to persons and things and events transpiring at Nauvoo at the time of the death of the Martyr.

On October 20 we went to Ogden for a visit with the Saints and if found practicable to hold a meeting. We occupied in the chapel on Sunday evening. The little branch here under Bro. Carl W. Hedelius are doing the best they can to hold themselves together and have a nice little chapel, the one which was built by the assistance of Bro. David W. Wight before his death, while on his mission in the Valley.

Bro. Fred M. returned to Ogden from Malad and with others secured the use of the court-house, where we occupied on the evenings of the 25th, 26th, and 27th, with a fair audience for the first night; the other two the house was well filled. We received, among other visitors at Ogden, Bro. W. H. McGary, from Long Beach, California, who was visiting his mother and sister, the family being together for the first time for several years. Elder Charles A. Smurthwaite and wife also called one evening, and on Saturday evening we had a visit from Elder Joseph Parry, one of the early Welsh elders, who is a standard speaker among the people on funeral occasions; and also from Elder John Farr, son of Loren Farr, of polygamic notoriety, and his wife. The younger man is not a polygamist. We had a very pleasant visit and chat with them.

On Sunday by arrangements with Sr. Coy we visited Plain City, some twelve miles west and north of Ogden, where we preached in a schoolhouse to one of the pleasantest and most attentive congregations we had on our trip into the West. Sr. Coy is a business woman, full of energy and snap; has been in business at Plain City many years and is well acquainted in the neighborhood. She visited Bishop Brimhall and asked for the meeting-house and received a written reply, that the house having been built by private subscription for the use of the people he could not see the way for us to occupy, but she secured the schoolhouse. We here met a number of very pleasant men whose names we do not now call to mind—Brn. John and Robert Coy, Bro. Hudson, Bro. Littlewood and wife, all trying to do the best they could under the peculiar conditions surrounding our people in that country.

Bro. Fred M. occupied this Sunday evening in the chapel at Ogden, when, upon his invitation, Elder John Farr opened the meeting by prayer, Elders Farr and Smurthwaite with their wives being part of his congregation.

It was a cold ride from Plain City to Ogden on Monday, but the distance meant nothing or but little, as Sr. Coy is a very entertaining talker and knows almost everybody along the line between her place of business and Ogden, and is well informed on all general topics. She was the only one of her father's family who was not sealed to him under the patriarchal order, she refusing because of a different understanding of the gospel and its requirements. It had stormed during the night and the morning was misty and cold and the snow was falling on the mountain tops and sides to the east of the valley as we reached Ogden. We returned to Salt Lake City on Tuesday, October 31. On Sunday, November 5, we occupied in the morning, also in the evening, and in the afternoon at four o'clock performed the marriage ceremony for Bro. W. H. McGary and Sr. Barrows, relict of Bro. Ethan Barrows. Tuesday, November 7, was election day. The city was in the throes of evolution and for the first time in many years what might be called the Gentile element succeeded in getting into power in municipal affairs. We had stayed over for the purpose of being present in the city on that occasion. The day before was our seventy-third birthday and in the afternoon Patriarch John Smith and his wife Helen paid us a visit, and in the evening Apostle John Henry Smith and his son George A. and Cousin Samuel H. Smith paid us a visit and spent a pleasant evening. The birthday party, however, was held on Tuesday night, when the Saints of the branch gathered in a reception at the house of Bro. F. M., where we had a very excellent evening with some sixty or seventy present. The result was something substantial for expenses.

We started for home on Wednesday, November 8, stopping at Pleasant Grove and speaking in the chapel that night, staying over night with Bro. J. E. Vanderwood and Grandmother Richings, going on the next day, November 9, to Provo. Bro. Swen Swenson had made every effort to secure the Tabernacle for services for the 8th, but had signally failed; but by the kindness of the sheriff he had secured the privilege of the court-house, where we spoke to a house crowded full, with more than as many as would fill the house turned away, unable to find room. At the close of the meeting several expressed surprise and indignation that we had not been granted use of the Tabernacle, as many would like to have heard who did not have the opportunity. At both Pleasant Grove and Provo we had excellent attention. We reached home on Sunday, November 12, at noon.

There are many persons who think Sunday is a sponge with which to wipe out the sins of the week.

CHRISTIANITY IN ITS PRIMARY AND SIMPLEST FORM.

In a masterly series of articles on "The spirit of the Orient," by George William Knox, D. D., LL. D., Professor of History and Philosophy of Religion, Union Theological Seminary; formerly professor Imperial University, Tokyo, and vice-president Asiatic Society; author of Japanese Life in Town and Country, which articles were published in September, October, and November Chautauquan, there is presented an excellent interpretation of the history, religion, and social conditions of the peoples of India, China, and Japan; and which, by the way, any one interested in human welfare in general, especially in the question of comparison of Christianity with the oriental religions, would do well to study. We note that the articles referred to are published by the Chautauquan in pamphlet form.

What we desire to call attention to is this: That as researches into the conditions of the race reveal the necessity for and the timeliness of the restoration of the gospel, this series of articles, after summing up the conditions of these oriental peoples, closes with this remarkable and significant statement:

Religion we have left to the last. It is the greatest problem of all, and the most pressing. We are far from advocating the introduction of a new sectarianism, but the most sympathetic review of conditions in India must reveal the need for a new gospel. Very much which goes under the head of our own religion is indeed unnecessary. Its introduction would only bring fresh confusion. The Hindus will not accept Christianity as bound up with our civilization, for that we have seen is not suited to their needs and is repugnant to their taste. Nor will they accept our philosophical doctrines. In metaphysics they are past-masters, and they are not prepared to sit at the feet of Western scholars. But fortunately, in our day, Christianity is returning to its first simplicity, and in the teaching of Christ there is neither East nor West, but the gospel for a common humanity.

Indian religion is a complex mass of cult and philosophy. Christianity should be taught in its simplest form, as the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. As the first it will free the people from their bondage to fear, from their superstitions, from their reliance upon priests and ceremonies, and will give each man his value as in vital relationship to God. The second will break down caste and exclusiveness, and teach men not to call each other common or unclean, but to recognize their common and mutual relationship and duties. Caste isolates, race from race, class from class, guild from guild, family from family. Philosophical religion completes the isolation by separating the individual and making him seek salvation for himself in meditation or by asceticism. Christianity breaks all this down, making service of others, even the outcasts, the highest worship, and bringing all men together as brothers. It is this inner regeneration which India chiefly needs. With it accomplished, all that is best will follow, and we shall go there then, not from idle curiosity, but to learn the lessons it can teach us, of simplicity, and spirituality, and the freedom of the soul from the trammels of the outer world.

What the writer refers to as Christianity returning to its first simplicity, doubtless is meant the turning from the creeds to the spirit of service expressed in the brotherhood of man, taught now extensively by many of the ministers of the day. Accepting the departure from the creeds as a sign of progress, resulting largely from the light that has come into the world with the introduction of the angel's message, we commend that message to fellow man everywhere, in America as well as in India and throughout the Orient, as Christianity in its first and original simplicity, in its simplest and pure form, the "gospel for a common humanity"—"the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," "for obedience to the faith among all nations."

We are glad to have read the excellent articles of Doctor Knox; and pleased to note the efforts of consecrated men and women whose labors in the Orient and elsewhere are lifting up the peoples now crushed under the cruel caste systems and other systems by which the peoples are held in abject subjection, religiously, socially, and economically. The way is being prepared for the full light of the gospel in every land, in "all the world, for a witness unto all nations." May the light continue to break forth unto all who sit in darkness and in the shadow of death.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

1. Would the baptism of a candidate be legal if the administrator failed to use the formula given in the Doctrine and Covenants?

We can only answer this question as we would in reference to the formula of the Lord's prayer: Would not a prayer be legal though the exact form given in the Lord's prayer was not strictly followed? Or would not the blessing of the bread or wine be sufficient and be acknowledged of God providing the officer asking blessing upon the elements failed to remember and use the formula given in the Book of Covenants or Book of Mormon? It is our opinion that while it is much better to conform to the formula and use it as it is given in the Doctrine and Covenants and Book of Mormon, though they differ this much: "Having been commissioned" and "Having authority," etc., the act of baptism having direct reference to the individual who is being administered unto, that act would be legal and undoubtedly recognized by the Master upon the ground that the spirit of the law had been complied with, though there had been a failure in the exact following of the letter; always provided the act had been performed in good faith on the part of the administrator and the candidate.

2. If the name of the candidate should be omitted by the elder when baptizing, he calling the candidate brother or sister, instead of giving the name, would it make any difference in the legality of the baptism?

We should answer this question in the negative, for the same reason that we would in following the formula of confirmation where the elder should say either brother or sister in laying on hands. Of course the act of baptism should be recorded and the record should give the names of the parties being baptized and the one officiating correctly, so far as known. This must be understood as not authorizing a disregard of or deviation from the law, and can have reference only to inadvertence or lapse of memory upon the part of the administrator, the acts referred to—baptism and confirmation—otherwise being performed in good faith.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

In regard to the work in his field, Bro. J. W. Rush-ton writes thus: "I am glad to say that there is every sign of an improvement in the outlook for the work here. Quite a nice number of baptisms have been reported to me incidentally by the local authorities, in Scotland, Manchester, Stockport, Warrington, Birmingham; and I hear that there are some in Abertillery, in Monmouthshire, who have given in their names. But one thing that is even more encouraging is the appreciation of the spiritual import of the work among the membership, and the evidence of a desire to develop in the work of grace. I have just closed a month's work in the Manchester District with very gratifying results. I have been in London now for nearly two weeks, where I am engaged in visiting among the Saints and in preaching to this end. I was in Enfield also and had a very good time there. I have arranged to go to Leicester and Birmingham and Stafford before returning home, which I expect to do about the 20th of December."

The Literary Digest for December 2 discusses the "crumbling of party lines," and quotes from various writers concerning the spread of the "independent idea," after asking this question: "Did the political upheavels throughout the United States at the recent elections signify something else besides the present popular hatred of bossism and graft?" One writer stated that "parties tend to crystallize and devote themselves to mint, anise, and cumin, to the neglect of the weightier matters of the law, just as churches do." From the Cleveland Plain Dealer was quoted: "The events of the last few years have shown that the independent idea has spread to the country and taken strong root there. The fact has proved disconcerting to the political statisticians, who can no longer depend upon canvasses, having the straight party vote of previous years as a basis of calculation. The independent voter is apt to keep his voting intentions to himself, and it is only when the returns are read that the volume and tendency of the silent independent vote become known."

The Utah church under the presidency of Joseph F. Smith are expecting to hold a sort of dedication service at the installation of a monument on Dairy Hill, in the neighborhood of South Roylton and Sharon, Vermont, erected to the memory of Joseph Smith. The erection of the monument has been in charge of Junius F. Wells, of Salt Lake City, Utah. It is expected that Bro. F. M. Sheehy will be present to witness the dedication of the monument.

The College Board has secured the services of Mr. John A. Larsen of Cedar Falls, Iowa, as instructor in natural science and history and assistant in preparatory department for the winter months. He comes highly recommended, and has acted as assistant instructor in the gymnasium at our State normal.

At a recent social event or reception in one of our churches, a mother and her little two-year-old daughter were present. The child partook of the spirit of the occasion, and was admonished by the mother: "Be quiet, dear, you are in church." The child looked at her mother in surprise, and replied in her baby tongue: "No, mamma, this isn't church." Simply because they were in the church-building did not deceive her. She was able to see what many older heads fail to perceive. Would that more of us had the wisdom of the little two-year-old. "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength." "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." "For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter the kingdom of heaven."

The insurance investigations have brought to light much of the trickery and knavery resorted to, by which the people have been plundered. And the fate of the rich man so graphically described by Job is being realized by many of the officials of insurance companies, and by the trust magnates as well who have hoarded up their ill-gotten gains: "The rich man shall lie down, but he shall not be gathered; he openeth his eyes, and he is not. Terrors take hold of him as waters, a tempest stealeth him away in the night. The east [Boston?] wind carrieth him away, and he departeth: and as a storm hurleth him out of his place." The manner in which insurance presidents, senators, and others connected with the insurance scandal, are being compelled to resign, and are hurled from their places is suggestive. "For God shall cast upon him, and not spare: he would fain flee out of his hand." The following is especially pertinent: "Men shall clap their hands at him, and shall hiss him out of his place." Men can only lawfully amass wealth by producing it, or by rendering an equivalent in service or otherwise for that which they receive from producers, so that no one is reduced by reason of their increase. Any enterprise by which one man is built up at the expense of others is unlawful, morally.

EARLY RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCES.

I was taught in my boyhood days to believe the Bible to be the word of God, and I did believe it. My father was a minister in the Christian Order, or New Light Church. They rejected all creeds, and claimed to stand on the word of God. That seemed right, and I was baptized by immersion when fifteen years of age. The New Testament was the book of books to me. I always believed God could and would manifest himself to all who would get themselves in a condition to receive this manifestation, by vision or by dream; and for many years I was seeking the Lord for something, that I could not doubt my acceptance with him. At midday in the month of April, early part of month, in 1870, if memory is not at fault, as I have no record to refer to, I was very earnestly trying to find the Lord, or get evidence of my acceptance with him; and while on bended knees in the forest the heavens were opened, the darkness disappeared, and in that beautiful light two persons appeared in beautiful robes. The older one was seated, and the younger standing at his right hand, looking at the Father. The Father was looking at me. I arose at once and stated that I saw the heavens opened, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God; and they vanished from sight. I was filled with the spirit of perfect peace and praised the Lord from the depth of my soul. And the Spirit that I received at that time continued to be my teacher.

I wanted to have this blessed, peaceful influence continue with me all the time. This teacher would quote the Scriptures, and taught me that I must do the things that God had commanded, and not expect to get to heaven by the good things received, but by doing God's will. After quite a fight to retain this happy state of mind, I was convinced that obedience was the only safe plan. Many in the church seemed to think that if they could make lots of noise, and do some shouting, that was all God required. I finally began to teach them that the way to heaven led along the path of obedience. It caused quite a stir in the church, and some stated that they enjoyed their religion, but Beatty was a "do religionist." In reply I took the stand that if doing what God commanded failed to secure a place in heaven for me, I did not expect to get there.

I will relate one dream and vision I had not long before hearing this gospel of the kingdom. At the time referred to I was clearing my land for the plow. I left the house with my ax on my shoulder, going to my work. I had got about one hundred yards from the house when all at once a bright light brought me to a sudden stop. It was directly in front of me and I was puzzled to know what to do. I was going west, and I looked north and then south, and could not see the end of it. I looked up and I could not see the top, and it rested on the ground. I could see no way to get around it and reach the place I had in view. I knew I had a right to go that way and I wanted to go. I thought if it was of God it would not be wise to go back to get away from it. I examined myself as best I could, and then decided to walk right into it, as it was on my road. So I stepped right into the seeming wall of light, and as soon as I stepped into the light I seemed to be pressed to the ground, and laid on my back. I arose at once, and thought, That is equal to Moses' light in the bush.

I could not interpret the dream until L. R. Devore brought the latter-day message to me in December, 1879. All Latter Day Saints can interpret it now. It is not wise to teach that the Spirit of the Lord is not given to others beside the Saints, and before hearing the gospel as well as after, yet in a limited way. I referred to some of my experiences, in trying to prove to Bro. Devore my acceptance with God. He did not say it was all of the wrong spirit, and that God had never manifested himself to me; but he taught me that it was in harmony with the word of God. If he had not respected me in the blessings that I had received of the Lord, I am not prepared to say that I would have obeyed the gospel just then, if ever.

Some in Babylon are doing the best they can to worship the Lord. In Revelation 18:4 the Lord's people are commanded to come out of Babylon. The Lord heard Rigdon's prayers, and then sent him forth to do a greater work. (See Doctrine and Covenants 34:2.)

Section 16, paragraph 4: "Contend against no church, save it be the church of the Devil." "Old covenants have I caused to be done away in this thing, and this is a new and an everlasting covenant."—Doctrine and Covenants 20.

It is wise to be charitable to all. Yet I confess that at all times I have not been wise in my work along that line. May we so live as the servants of the Lord that we may be instrumental in his hands to reach the good in all churches, and in the world, is the desire of one of the weak servants of the Lord.

ZION—WHY GATHER?

"Zion and the gathering" has always been an important theme among our people, and it will continue so until the promises made in the remote past and in the present have been realized. Why gather, who shall gather, and what are the benefits to be derived from so doing? is often asked. In this paper we shall try to answer these queries.

WHY GATHER?

Because God wants us to, ought to be a sufficient answer, whether finite mind can comprehend the wisdom of it or not. Lehi and his family could not grasp the purposes of the infinite mind, yet they obeyed. And all students of the Book of Mormon can comprehend, in some measure, the good that came from it. Those who are willing to accept the angel's message have the fullness of the gospel, not polluted by wicked and evil-designing men. Moses in blessing the children of Israel said concerning Joseph: "His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns: with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth."—Deuteronomy 33:17.

Zechariah speaks of good concerning Zion as follows: "My cities through prosperity shall yet be spread abroad; and the Lord shall yet comfort Zion, and shall yet choose Jerusalem."—Zechariah 1:17. "A new Jerusalem should be built up upon this land, unto the remnant of the seed of Joseph."—Ether 6:1. (Also see Nephi 10:1.)

The following passages of scripture will in a more direct way call to the reader's mind why the gathering was made a part of God's divine plan:

I say unto you that Zion shall flourish, and the glory of the Lord shall be upon her.—Doctrine and Covenants 64:8. And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety. And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven, and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another.—Doctrine and Covenants 45:13.

The internal troubles that are occurring constantly in our country, between the conflicting elements of society, ought to be a gentle reminder of what the future will bring when the strife becomes more bitter, and the spirit of revenge becomes more intense.

But behold, in the last days, or in the days of the Gentiles, yea, behold all the nations of the Gentiles; and also the Jews, both those who shall come upon this land, and those who shall be upon other lands; yea, even upon all the lands of the earth: behold, they will be drunken with iniquity, and all manner of abominations.—2 Nephi 11:16.

Is it not desirable that we should be in a place where we can escape the evils that will result from such a condition of society?

WHO SHALL LIVE IN ZION?

"Therefore verily thus saith the Lord, Let Zion rejoice, for this is Zion, THE PURE IN HEART."—Doctrine and Covenants 94:5.

In Doctrine and Covenants 68:4 we are given to understand that there is no place in Zion for the loafer. All must labor, and not expect to live upon the earnings of the industrious.

David in the fifteenth Psalm describes very minutely the kind of people that will be there. Read it.

WHAT BENEFITS SHALL BE DERIVED?

The poor of the church are of at least three classes, as follows:

1. The unfortunate ones who are made so by no act of their own; widows, orphans, cripples, victims of storms and other calamities can be properly classed under that head.

2. Those who lack business capacity and good judgment in the management of their temporal affairs. They are always working and making an effort to better their condition, but failure marks every struggle, and finally they give up in despair.

3. The lazy, shiftless, dirty, careless, indifferent and all-around good-for-nothing.

The first class deserve our most sincere sympathy and pity; and we have them scattered all over our country who are deprived of many of the comforts and necessities of life. The children (many) are being deprived of even a common-school education, and the benefits that come from church and Sunday-school privileges.

Of the second class the church and the world have a surplus. They are not so from choice. They are victims of hereditary sin, and the baneful influence of a bad environment.

Both of the above classes, in the midst of a good environment and under the watchful care of good and efficient officers who, with the light of God's Spirit, would seek their welfare, would soon be helping to lift up others who, like themselves, had been the victims of circumstances.

The isolated ones, who do not see an elder in several years, can not receive the ministrations of the priest, teacher, and deacon; and unless their service was needful God would never have placed them in the church. And then those who do not receive of their ministrations must be losers thereby; and what is individual loss must be loss to the entire church.

The third class is a burden to the church and the world, and the only use they can be to either is to be an object-lesson, a danger-signal to others who may be tempted to do likewise.

CHILDREN.

The greatest sufferers among the isolated ones are the children; and while the same conditions may in some measure exist in branches, yet the opportunities for their elimination are much better where the church exists with a completeness of all the officers. They are of two classes: the motherless or fatherless ones, who deserve our noblest and best efforts for their good,—more so than the cold and indifferent world who more often spurn than appreciate our efforts for their good. The others are those who have careless and indifferent parents, who neglect their spiritual welfare, and also their education, which is so necessary to fit them for life's responsible duties. The number that is being constantly lost to the church because of these conditions is appalling.

ENVIRONMENT.

Hereditary conditions have much to do in determining our life-work, but not near so much as environment, which will mold our life despite our efforts to do otherwise. And while we can point to a few who have overcome their environment, the majority of mankind yields to its influences, and this is especially true of children. Zion, inhabited by the "pure in heart," or those that are making a commendable effort to reach that condition, would certainly be a good environment.

CONCLUSION.

The question is often asked, How is this work to be done? It ought to be evident to all that God has commanded it. As late as 1873 he has given us instruction in regard to it (see Doctrine and Covenants 117: 11); also by council in 1894, (see Doctrine and Covenants 123: 12).

The most important part, as preliminary work to the gathering in small or large numbers, is that all be taught in plainness just what the responsibilities and duties are. That is the example set us by Christ,—to teach the people. We can see the good effects of it in the past twenty years in regard to tithing, and that of the Religio and Sunday-school work. It has come as a result of constantly teaching what was our plain duty. There are many in the church who are indifferent to all duties; but there are also many who will do their duty as soon as it is taught to them. Such ones can safely be gathered to Zion, and will be a tower of strength in her redemption. The cost of land, or anything else, will not be an impediment in the way, when we do as God would have us do. Is it not possible that many of our people are making a mistake in going in the opposite direction to what God has given command? Many of the Saints better think carefully and wisely, and not disregard the advice of a loving Father.

JACOB'S TROUBLE.

The late troubles inflicted on the Jews in Russia would indicate that "the time of Jacob's trouble" has not yet fully ended. But, as in troubles of different character, a crisis betokens the termination, either in defeat or victory, death or life,—a rise or a fall.

A crisis in the history of the Jewish people is now on in Russia. It is of such a nature as to affect the civilization of the Christian nations. It appeals, therefore, to those nations in a most serious manner. It appeals to their patriotism, their loyalty, to national justice and to their most intense and tender sympathy.

Is there no remedy for the condition of sad suffering at present inflicted on the Hebrews in Russia? A way was found to deliver Cuba from the horrors of destruction a few years ago. Shall no way be devised to close out the unjust suffering so repeatedly visited on this once favored people of God?

But a "time of trouble" has awaited them, as the ancient prophets predicted. (Jeremiah 30:7; Deuteronomy 29:24, 25.) This trouble was to be of "long continuance." But, how long? How long would they refuse God's covenant? How long were they to be "rooted out of their land"? How long were they to be "driven out unto the utmost parts of heaven" (Deuteronomy 30:4), and not be restored to their land of rest? Why continue to mourn and lament as at this time in Russia, Germany, England, and America? (See Deuteronomy 28:65, 66, 67.)

The answers to our queries are thus portrayed:

For thus saith the Lord, Thy bruise is incurable, and thy wound is grievous. There is none to plead thy cause, that thou mayest be bound up; thou hast no healing medicines. All thy lovers have forgotten thee; they seek thee not; for I have wounded thee with the wound of an enemy, with the chastisement of a cruel one, for the multitude of thine iniquity; because thy sins were increased. Why criest thou for thine affliction? thy sorrow is incurable for the multitude of thine iniquity: because thy sins were increased, I have done these things unto thee.—Jeremiah 30:12-15.

Jacob sinned against God; he, with warnings resounding in his ears, increased his sins. A penalty must be imposed on him, his wound is incurable. Why, therefore, need he now cry out? He is forgotten of his lovers. A leader, a commander, and witness was sent to him. (See Isaiah 55:4.) Through this commander and leader, Jehovah offered to them the terms of the everlasting covenant (see verse 3), but they would not receive it, "even the sure mercies of David," and gave their voice against their Messiah, when he was "cut off, but not for himself," (Daniel 9:26,) and the people of the prince, the heir apparent to the Roman throne, Vespasian, destroyed the city (Jerusalem) and the sanctuary (the holy temple), (see Matthew 24:1, 2), 65 to 72 A. D.

The Messiah grew up in the midst of Jacob "as a tender plant" before God; but "he was despised and rejected" of them. He bore their griefs, and carried their sorrows; but they "esteemed him stricken and smitten of God." Though wounded for their "transgressions," and bruised for their "iniquities," though by them brought to judgment before Pilate, taken from prison and judgment by them and the Gentiles, and that, too, without just cause, and although he offered to them a covenant of mercy, of conditional pardon for sin, through the mercy of God (pardon for sin and mercy not being found for the transgressor, in the covenant made at Sinai), yet may Jacob say now, after all their opportunities offered: "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way, and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all."—Isaiah 53:6. But refusing to accept the covenant of grace, of conditional pardon, refusing to repent of their sin of rejecting the offer of eternal life through their slain or "cut off" Redeemer, and openly, flagrantly violating in willing blindness, groping "at noonday" in darkness,—they must take the penalty of the cold law of justice unmingled with mercy,—as at this day.

And many of them bend their back to the Gentile, under a heavy burden—a wearisome burden; clothed in sackcloth and ashes, captives among the nations.

"And among these nations shalt thou find no ease, neither shall the sole of thy foot have rest: but the Lord shall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and sorrow of mind: And thy life shall hang in doubt before thee; and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy life."—Deuteronomy 28:65, 66. Is not this great prophecy of Moses being most literally fulfilled in Russia?

But God "will correct" Israel; they shall not go "unpunished" (Jeremiah 30:11). And the correction must continue until Israel yields to the divine will, and they become willing to accept the Messiah, and cease to look for a Messiah to come, who has already appeared, and was "cut off" as saith their record "but not for himself." He was offered, but not for his own sins (he was without sin), but for the sins of the people. "By his stripes we are healed," or through the "at-one-ment" he made, by the shedding of his own blood, he hath secured God's pardon of sins to penitent sinners in his covenant, and obedience to its terms, by them.

When they failed to "see the things that belonged to their peace," when offered "the sure mercies of David" by their Messiah near nineteen hundred years ago, they were warned that desolation awaited their cities, their temple, their governmental house, and their land (see Matthew 24:1-3, 15-22; Luke 21:20-22), as an evidence of their willfulness, and rejection of the mercy then proffered.

Also, they were foretold by their Messiah that they would be carried "captive into all nations," "until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." They then believed not their Messiah. And though this was foretold them by him in that capacity, and in the name of Jehovah has been fulfilled to the letter, most literally, as witness their history unto this time, yet they have believed not, thus fulfilling their prophet: "Who hath believed our report?"—Isaiah 53:1. With men of other lips and another tongue will he speak unto this people, and yet for all this they will not hear. (See Isaiah 28:11.) This Messiah has ever been to them "a stone of stumbling and a rock of offense," and their determination to reject him inevitably and necessarily declares him to be the stone who was set at naught of the builders of the temple Israel. (See Psalm 118:22.) But he has nevertheless "become the head of the corner."

Now God never allows a false prophet to foretell the truth. Nebuchadnezzar nor his astrologers could tell the king's dream relating to the then future; but God revealed to Daniel, his prophet, the dream and its interpretation. Any one foretelling the truth in the name of the Lord, is what he represents himself to be. There is no exception to this rule. A false prophet might repeat what had already been revealed by a true prophet, but this is the most a false prophet can do. The moment a man prophesies the truth, he becomes—is—a true prophet. Accepting this truism, we remark, No one but Jesus of Nazareth ever predicted that "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Rome, Egypt, Arabia, European Crusaders, and Turkey, have trodden their land under their feet to this day. Israel is a captive among the Gentile nations till now. (See Luke 21:22-24.) Jesus made this prediction as the Christ. It has been fulfilled. And the present day of sadness and mourning of Israel proclaims to the nations its fulfillment. Israel still mourns. They would go again to the land of their fathers, but "the fullness of the Gentiles" is not yet come in. They must pass through the time of their trouble.

The "measure of blindness" that overtook them when they rejected the light offered by their Messiah, which, indeed was their eternal life by the new covenant, (see Jeremiah 31:31-34,) yet remains with them. They have been in "outer darkness," where has been, and yet is, "weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth," as the Messiah foretold. (See Luke 16:24, 25; Romans 11:25-27.) And here the impassable gulf of the justice of God and his word embraces, and will embrace them till the "times of the Gentiles be fulfilled," that is, the times during which Israel remains in captivity to them, and their land continues to be trodden down by Gentiles.

But the Messiah, in his language above referred to, together with Paul, impliedly, and in quite plain terms, indicates a termination to this captivity, "until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled," "Blindness in part has happened to Israel till the fullness of the Gentiles be come in."

"It is the time of Jacob's trouble," but as saith the prophet,—"He shall be saved out of it"; but in order to be saved out of this time of trouble, they must submit to the plan God has by which to deliver, save, and redeem them.

Jehovah has a definite purpose in their captivity and punishment. His law of justice which they have violated must be vindicated, and they must be "reformed." (Leviticus 26:23.) The ends of justice must be humbled until he is able to see, and becomes willing to receive the "new covenant" (Jeremiah 31:31-34), by which their sins may be pardoned. Under the covenant made at Sinai, every soul that sinned, died:

Behold, I send an angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, . . . provoke him not; for he will not pardon your transgressions; for my name is in him. But if thou shalt indeed obey his voice, and do all that I speak; then I will be an enemy unto thine enemies; and an adversary unto thine adversaries—Exodus 23:20-22. Behold, all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine: the soul that sinneth it shall die.—Ezekiel 18:4. His blood shall be upon him.—Verse 13.

But did Israel "indeed obey" his voice? If they did, why is not Jehovah now an enemy to their enemies, and an adversary to their adversaries? Messiah died for all men, Israel included. But for his death, burial, and resurrection, death for all would have been an eternal sleep of the body of man in death, and an everlasting abode of their spirits in the prison, hell, or pit. (See Ezekiel 32:21-24.) But Christ was brought from the dead and from hell "through the blood of the everlasting covenant." (Hebrews 13:20.) And by the blood of that covenant the prisoners of hope are to be delivered from that "prison wherein is no water," by the King of Israel that offered to them this covenant when he came to them, "just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass."—Zechariah 9:9. "As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth the prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water. Turn you to the stronghold, ye prisoners of hope: even to-day do I declare that I will render double unto thee."—Verses 11, 12. (See also Matthew 12:38-40; 1 Peter 3:18-20; 4:5, 6; Isaiah 42:5-8.) But Israel replies to our citation to Isaiah: "It is he that created the earth and stretched out the heavens that brings these prisoners out of the prison." Very well. Who is he? Let the same prophet answer: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace."—Isaiah 9:6. How could this "child" born to Israel be "The everlasting Father," this heir to David's throne, unless he be the one through whom the Father created the heavens and earth, as indicated in Genesis 1:26, where the expression, "let us make" is used, indicating that a plurality of creators of all things were associated? Christ was—rather is—the Son of God, not as man is born of man,—else God himself is a father only as a man is the father of mortal man! But, "all the sons of God shouted for joy" when the foundations of the earth were laid, and before mortal man was created. (Job 38:7.) This Son born to Israel, this heir to David's throne, once having, under the direction of the Father, created the heavens and the earth, is once, and for ages unending, their "everlasting Father"; and man's unbelief will affect this fact no more than it does the fact of the heavens and earth created. Unless God be Father to sons greater than mortal man, then mortal man being father to mortal man, would be God's equal in that respect. But this being an absurd position, it follows that though Messiah be humbled and born of a virgin (see Isaiah 7:14), and though he humble himself to die on the cross, lay down his life and take it again, yet by God's appointment is he the everlasting Father of heaven and earth, the redeemer of the spirits in prison, the heir to David's throne, and is to "reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of the increase of his government there shall be no end." Israel ought to be able to see this; but, alas! they "grope as the blind for the wall." May they not begin to see, as "the times of the Gentiles" are now closing? May not their eyes be anointed to behold to their great joy the nearing of their deliverance, as the "fullness of the Gentiles" now comes in? (Romans 11:25-27.)

After the Messiah told them so plainly that they would go into "captivity," and that their land would be trodden down of the Gentiles "until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled," and their history and that of their land for the last eighteen hundred and thirty-five years so undeniably attest its sad fulfillment, they ought to see that their rejection of Messiah is incontrovertibly connected with that sorrowful history. They have been deceived so often with false Christs since 72 A. D. that many of them try to resolve the Messianic reality into a mere idea or condition. But how they can manage to dispose of false Christs,—twenty-four of them,—without the true one previously existing, is a question that philosophy nor fact is able to answer. As well could the shadow exist without the substance, or an idea exist independently of mind or faculty. A reign of glory, of rest to man, an age of sinless purity, of ineffable joy to man, where knowledge shall increase, under the reign of Messiah, did not suggest itself to Isaiah and David independently of divine inspiration. Such a Messianic idea could never have existed in the minds of the prophets without the existence and revelation of the real Messiah. It is here, as other divine truths are here. The captivity of Israel among all nations was foretold by Moses and Messiah, and Isaiah, (see Deuteronomy 28:24, 25; Isaiah 11:12; 66:20; Luke 21:23, 24,) and their deliverance and restoration in the last days, when Gentile times and fullness end, thereby implying their continued and separate existence as a nation—unmixed with the nations among whom they sojourn so long. But such prophetic statements are made of no other nation. And herein is a marvel,—a miracle of the ages.

Nations of long continuance, and kingdoms great and powerful have risen and have ruled, have held Israel in captivity. Israel have been their servants. And while those nations—many of them—have dazzled the world with their glory, have long reigned in splendor, and have gone down in general ruin, and are no more, Israel, though scattered and peeled, still lives, is rising to power, even in captivity; is gathering strength and health though oppressed as at this time in Germany, Austria, and Russia. He is growing to be a strong nation, though scattered among all nations, and without a settled home or a country. On their restoration to favor with God on conditions of repentance, and to their own land, see Deuteronomy 30:1-5; Isaiah 11:12, 13; Romans 11:26.

Israel's restoration to Palestine, and the development of "the stick of Joseph," is intimately associated in the prophecies relating to their final gathering, and the union of the two houses of Israel to be divided into two kingdoms no more for ever. (See Ezekiel 37:15-23.) The order of these events associated with Israel's final deliverance is thus set forth in the prophets:

1. Zion or the church of God is first restored and established among the Gentiles. This began to have its fulfillment in 1823 to 1830. The establishment of the Lord's house or church, in the United States of America, or "in the top of the mountains," "in the last days." Isaiah 2:1-5; 2 Timothy 3:1-5; James 5:1-8; 2 Peter 3:1-3, as identifying the time; also Psalm 102:13-22; Isaiah 40:9, 10; Malachi 3:1; Matthew 17:10, 11; Acts 3:19-21; Zechariah 2:1-3; Revelation 14:6, 7; 18:4, 5, set forth the character of the work, and the relation and manner of the introduction of this "last days" work. Out of Zion thus established a Deliverer is to be sent to open the eyes of Israel, and turn them to the Lord. (See Romans 11:25-27; Isaiah 40:9, 10; 46:12, 13; Psalm 14:7.)

2. A very little while after the introduction of this marvelous work of restoring the gospel by angelic ministration, the beginning of the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began," and associated with its rise, "the stick," book, or writing "of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim," will be by the power of God put with the stick, record, or writing of Judah, and they "become one" in God's hands. Now God puts these two records into one as really as he takes the children of Israel from among the heathen and restores them to their own land. If the one is a metaphor then is also the other. This writing is by Isaiah called "a book," a "book that is sealed," a book that has "words," some of which are delivered to a learned man, a book that is delivered to one "that is not learned." And the deaf and blind are to see and hear "the words of the book" "in that day," of the restoration of the fertility of Lebanon, or the land of Israel, and of the favor of God to his ancient covenant people, Israel. (See Ezekiel 37:16; Isaiah 29:11, 12, 18.) Too much is connected with this "book" or "stick," for it to be a metaphor. Joseph and Ephraim are a literal people, Lebanon is a real country, and men learned and not learned are real beings. The precepts and creeds of men are real things, not metaphors. The only metaphorical book of God that we know anything about is the great book of God's creation, the universe. The stick of Joseph, the metaphorical "stick," is a writing, and the little book that John the Divine metaphorically ate, proves to be a literal writing, a real revelation, the book of John's Revelation. (See Revelation 5; 10:9-11.) And the stick of Ezekiel's prophecy, and the book of Isaiah, chapter 29, is no less a real record or book. And "the stick of Judah" is a real book, the Bible of the Jewish prophets and the Jewish apostles.

Joseph received a landed estate, exceeding in magnitude that given to Jacob's progenitors, larger in extent than Canaan, where he was to become a multitude of nations, while the entire twelve tribes became but two nations in Canaan. (See Genesis 48: 15-20; 49: 22-26; Deuteronomy 33: 13-17.)

Joseph's land extended to "the utmost bound of the everlasting hills," according to Jacob's prophecy, and was to be a land of seas, "the deep," and its everlasting mountains were to pour forth abundant mineral treasures, and its wide-spreading plains and valleys were to teem with its fruits for "a multitude of nations." How does the land of Palestine compare with Joseph's land as described by Moses in Deuteronomy? Palestine has no navigable rivers, no gold or silver mines, no iron, copper, or tin, lead, or other mines. It has none of the characteristics attributed to Joseph's land by Moses. But America, embracing "the utmost bound" of the everlasting hills and its "everlasting mountains" with their exhaustless treasures, fills every item of the prophecy. In Joseph's land must Joseph's record be developed, as Judah's was in their land of prophecy and fulfillment,—sad, yet glorious Canaan. And from Joseph's land must latter-day Israel expect his record to come, according to the statements of their own prophets.

Joseph's branches were to "run over the wall"—extend over the sea. (See Genesis 49: 22; Isaiah 16: 8.) When Israel was overthrown by Babylon, 600 B. C., some of the tribe of Joseph, dwelling at Jerusalem at that time (see 2 Chronicles 9: 3), left Jerusalem under the leadership of one Lehi, others accompanying him; and traveling down southeast near the Red Sea, and on through Arabia, after a sojourn of eight years, built vessels and crossed the sea, as predicted by Isaiah above cited; and landing on the west coast of South America, at "the utmost bound of the everlasting hills" and mountains, entered upon their inheritance. Jeremiah, too, predicted the overthrow of the inhabitants of Hazor (see Jeremiah 49: 30-32). And Hazor and Heshbon and Sibmah, as mentioned by Isaiah and Jeremiah, were names of Canaanitish cities, in Joseph's inheritance. Their overthrow by Babylon would bring to their minds their former overthrow under Joshua. These cities pertained to the inheritance of Manasseh east of Jordan (see Joshua 12: 4-6), and of Reuben and Gad. At the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, some of the inhabitants of these cities were to go over the sea, were to "arise, get you up unto the wealthy nation, that dwelleth without care, saith the Lord, which have neither gates nor bars." (Jeremiah 49: 31.) But where in all the Old World was there a wealthy nation dwelling without "gates and bars," and dwelling "alone"? Echo answers, Where? They had to cross the "wall" or "sea"—the ocean—to find such a nation at that time. Such a nation was found alone on the land now called America. Ancient America, then, was the lot of Joseph as predicted by Jacob and Moses. And "the book" of Isaiah, and the stick of Joseph of Ezekiel (see chapter 37), the Book of Mormon, the book that was sealed up in the language of the ancient American, and given to Joseph Smith in 1827, and published to the world in 1830, fills the terms of the prophecies cited.

3. In order that Israel may be sustained in their land, Palestine, on their return at the fullness of the Gentile times, it was necessary that the early and latter rains be restored to the land. When Israel left their land, eighteen hundred and thirty-five years ago (72 A. D.), God commanded "the clouds that they rain no rain upon it":

And now go to; I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard. I will take away the hedge thereof [lay it open to the occupancy of the Gentile nations], and it shall be eaten up; and break down the wall thereof, and it shall be trodden down [see Luke 31: 23, 24]: and I will lay it waste: it shall not be pruned, nor digged; but there shall come up briars and thorns: and I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it.—Isaiah 5: 5, 6.

See also Isaiah 32: 13-15, on the desolation of the land of Israel.

But in connection with the restoration of Zion, the church (see Isaiah 52: 8, 9), the rise of "the marvelous work and a wonder" (Isaiah 29: 14), and the revelation and coming forth of the sealed book, "Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest" (verse 17).

The former and latter rains were to be restored to the land (see Joel 2: 21-27), and Israel is to praise the name of the Lord that hath dealt so "wonderfully" with them during the last eighteen hundred years, preserving so long a separate people, though scattered as captives among all the nations of the earth, while their land has kept Sabbath. Joel's statement cited is a most wonderful prophecy, dealing as it does with the land of Israel and its people, especially when considered in the light of their past and present, and associated as it is with events predicted to occur just before and at the second (the personal) coming of Messiah,—his coming to reign and reward.

Are the rains being restored to Israel's land as here predicted by their prophet? Our Hebrew brethren ren surely are not ignorant of all this. It was Doctor Barclay that in 1846 to 1853 was so delighted to see those rains then being restored that he took his rain-gauge and measured the annual rainfall six of those years and tabulated the amount in inches. No need for Isaiah, Moses, and Joel to have predicted the restoration of the rains to the land and its fertility, had they continued along the ages.

On pages 265 and 266 of the third volume of Millennial Dawn, a work written and published by Charles F. Russell, of Allegheny, Pennsylvania, is a letter published in a Chicago journal, and dated Jerusalem, November 23, 1887, which reads:

I am very glad to tell you of the glorious things that we have been witnesses of during the six years we have been here. When we arrived here six years ago, we numbered fourteen adults and five children. As we drove up from Jaffa we were deeply impressed with the desolation of the land. Not a spear of green could be seen anywhere; the olive-trees and vines were covered with the gray dust of a hot, dry summer, that you never could imagine there could be any green underneath; and the whole earth seemed dried to its foundations. But we have never seen it look like that since that time. Every year it looks greener, and now many of those barren hillsides are covered with vineyards and olive-yards, quite changing their appearance.

You will ask, What is the cause of all this great change? God has promised that, like as he brought all this evil upon this land, so he will bring great blessings unto it. And these have evidently begun by the sending of more rain than for centuries past. He sends beautiful showers and heavy dews, where there used not to be any; and he sends clouds in summer, which were never known even twenty years ago. This tempers the heat, so that it does not dry up the ground so. Five years ago he sent, in July and August (months in which it never used to rain) three hours of rain in Jaffa, and sixteen hours in Damascus, and much all around, so that the American papers remarked upon it as a proof that the climate of Palestine is changing. Also when we came here, there were very few coming back to this land, but the persecutions in Russia and Germany and other places began to drive them out; and in spite of the edicts of the Sultan, they began returning to this land, buying land, planting and building, and getting possession of the trade of the city: and so to-day there are many thousands more than when we came.

Jerusalem is in reality now in the hands of the Jews so far as trade is concerned; and the Jew is no longer under the heel of the Mohammedan as he once was. They are also rapidly building up a new city, exactly on the line of the description in Jeremiah 31:38-40; 32:43, 44, so that even the Turks, who are in power, are taking notice of it, and are saying to one another, It is God, and what can we do? And what can we say to all this but that God is rapidly fulfilling in our day his word and the covenant he made with Abraham? "And we are witnesses of these things."

We are sorry the book does not give the name of the author of this letter. But in many of its items it agrees with many statements made by others on this infinitely important subject.

I copy the following from the same volume of Millennial Dawn, pages 288 to 290, believing them to be of interest at this time, showing as the statements do, the Spirit taking hold of the people, and the Jews relating to this most interesting subject, of

Jacob's trouble. I do not remember to have seen them in the SAINTS' HERALD or Zion's Ensign:

"A JEWISH KINGDOM PROPOSED.

"WASHINGTON, District of Columbia, March 5, 1891.—William E. Blackstone, of Chicago, to-day visited the President of the United States in company with Secretary Blaine, and presented a memorial in behalf of the Russian Jews.

"He explained that the memorial was the result of a conference of Christians and Jews recently held in Chicago, and called attention to the fact that it did not antagonize Russia, but sought in a peaceable way to give the Jews control of their old home—Palestine.

"He pointed out many evidences of the possibility of great development of that country, both agriculturally and commercially, under an energetic government, and said that the railroad now building from Joppa to Jerusalem, if extended to Damascus, Tadmor, and down the Euphrates, can not fail to become an international highway.

"He said that the poverty of the Turkish government gives emphasis to the proposed indemnity, by funding a portion of the Turkish national debt through Jewish capitalists, and that only peaceable diplomatic negotiations are asked for, to the end that all private ownership of land and property be carefully respected and protected. In closing he said that, being on such friendly terms with Russia and having no complications in the Orient, it is most fitting and hopeful that our government should initiate this friendly movement, to give these wandering millions of Israel a settled and permanent home.

"The President listened attentively to Mr. Blackstone's remarks, and promised to give the subject serious consideration.

"THE MEMORIAL.

"Of which the following is the text:

"What shall be done for the Russian Jew? It is both unwise and useless to dictate to Russia concerning her internal affairs. The Jews have lived as foreigners under her dominions for centuries, and she fully believes that they are a burden upon her resources and prejudicial to the welfare of her peasant population, and will not allow them to remain. She is determined that they must go. Hence, like the Sephardim of Spain, these Ashkanazim must emigrate. But where shall two millions of such poor people go? Europe is crowded, and has no room for more peasant population. Shall they come to America? This would be a tremendous expense and would require years.

"Why not give Palestine back to them again? According to God's distribution of nations it is their home—an inalienable possession from which they were expelled by force. Under their cultivation it was a remarkably fruitful land, sustaining millions of Israelites, who industriously tilled its hillsides and valleys. They were agriculturists and producers as well as a nation of great commercial importance—the center of civilization and religion. It is said, too, rains are increasing, and there are many evidences that the land is recovering its ancient fertility.

"Why shall not the powers which, under the treaty of Berlin, in 1878, gave Bulgaria to the Bulgarians and Servia to the Servians, now give Palestine back to the Jews? These provinces, as well as Roumania, Montenegro, and Greece, were wrested from the Turks and given to their natural owners. Does not Palestine as rightly belong to the Jews?

"If they could have autonomy in government, the Jews of the world would rally to transport and establish their suffering brethren in their time-honored habitation. For over seventeen centuries they have patiently waited for such a privileged opportunity. They have not become agriculturists elsewhere because they believed they were sojourners in the various nations, and were yet to return to Palestine and till their own land. Whatever vested rights, by possession, may have accrued to Turkey can be easily compensated for, possibly by the Jews assuming an equitable portion of the national debt.

"We believe this an appropriate time for all nations, and especially the Christian nations of Europe, to show kindness to Israel. A million of exiles, by their terrible sufferings, are piteously appealing to our sympathy, justice, and humanity. Let us now restore to them the land of which they were so cruelly despoiled by our Roman ancestors.

"To this end we respectfully petition his excellency, Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States, and the Honorable James G. Blaine, Secretary of State, to use their good offices and influence with the governments of their imperial majesties—Alexander III; Czar of Russia; Victoria, Queen of Great Britain, and Empress of India; William II, Emperor of Germany; Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austro-Hungaria; Abdul Hamid II, Sultan of Turkey; Her Royal Majesty, Marie Christina, Queen Regent of Spain; with the government of the Republic of France, and with the governments of Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Portugal, Roumania, Servia, Bulgaria, and Greece, to secure the holding, at an early date, of an international conference to consider the condition of the Israelites and their claims to Palestine as their ancient home, and to promote in all other just and proper ways the alleviation of their suffering condition."

(The memorial was signed by prominent men of all professions and creeds from Chicago, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington.)

Two points are shown by the foregoing statements: First, that the land of Israel, so far as the Lord's part of that work is concerned, is receiving the blessings of rain and fertility necessary to the return of its children. Second, "the times of the Gentiles" were not "fulfilled" as early as 1891 A. D.

According to Walter Wellman, the Jews are looking to Honorable Theodore Roosevelt to take precedence in some action looking to the ameliorating of the condition of their brethren in Russia, but he and Mr. Hay tried this sometime in the late past, and but little was effected. At least the massacre of the southern Russian Jews continues.

But what can they do under existing circumstances? Go after Russia as the United States did after Cuba? Such a course may or may not have to be adopted in behalf of the Jews some day by some nation, but not by the United States now. Not at least till "the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Then, if Gentiles do not willingly vacate the lot deeded to Abraham by Jehovah, he will take measures to move them off. (See Joel 3:5-8.)

Israel have been sold to Gentiles for eighteen hundred and thirty-five years and have served as captives; but now the tables are being turned, and Gentile "sons" and nations are being sold into the hands of the Hebrews. The sons of Abraham are beginning to "possess the gate of his enemies."

The Gentile world owes Israel for a long service. They must be remunerated. The world has the debt to pay. Saints are not now alone in this view. Reverend Joseph A. Milburn of Plymouth Congregational church, Chicago, on Sunday, November 19, 1905, said:

The Jew, through the centuries, has fought and conquered like a god. With his devotion to the moral law, his unique political responsiveness, his talent for friendship, his power of persistence, his marvelous commercial acumen, and his strong intellectuality, he has put modern civilization under a vast obligation of gratitude. Let us evince this gratitude now by the generosity of our gifts.—Chicago Record-Herald, November 20, 1905.

Let this sentiment grow among the nations now, that the world is indebted beyond measure to the Jews, and for every reason mentioned by Reverend Milburn, but one. Jacob has not been devoted "to the moral law." That he has not, is God's complaint against him. Reverend Milburn's mistake is the same as that of the Jews. That is, he confounds the ten commandments with the "moral law." The moral law is immutable; the ten commandment law is not. (See Matthew 5:1-12; 20:21-24, 26, 27-48; Matthew 15:17-20.)

With the moral law, man is convicted of sin to think evil, or purpose it. Under the ten commandment law, sin was unknown till the sinner was convicted of the overt act by two or three witnesses. Under that law men can revel in sin in heart so long as they do not outwardly carry it out. (See 1 Timothy 1:7-11.) Under that law the penalty was as great for breaking one command as though the ten had been violated, and so with many of the statutes growing out of the ten laws, as their basis. (See the last citation, with Hebrews 10:28; James 2:9-11.) But to secretly purpose a violation of the moral law, —the gospel law is sin, and unless repented of renders the sinner culpable. (See 1 John 2:10, 11; 4:15; Romans 2:11-16; Ecclesiastes 12:13, 14.) God will judge the secret or private acts of men; and that, too, "without respect of persons," in the judgment day. It was the rejection of "the law of liberty," of Christ, the immutable moral law by the Jews that hid Christ from them. Its rejection still blinds them and all others that substitute the ten commandments, the "yoke of bondage," "written and engraven in stones," for the moral law. (See Romans 2:17-29; 2 Corinthians 3:7-14.)

We may be pardoned if we assert as our belief, that so far as it relates to the Jews being captives among the nations, one of the times of the Gentiles ended with the adoption of the constitution of the United States, 1789 A. D., when by it every Jew living in the territory covered by it, was a free American citizen, and those coming under its shadow since and complying with the laws of adoption allowed under it are citizens in full, not captives; and those born under its broad folds are citizens in full. Beginning with the year 1790, Holland began to arrange laws for the amelioration of their condition. France gave to them some degree of liberty and franchise, as early as 1806. And since that time (1789) till the present, the good work toward them has continued, as their history attests,

But their beloved land remains a patrimony to the Gentiles, while Russia remains far in the rear of the other nations in liberality toward Israel. But the cup of Gentile iniquity is rapidly filling to the brim. They can go but little further and longer. Is not "the whole earth" now "in commotion"? (Doctrine and Covenants 45:3.) Does not "perplexity" seize the "nations"? (See Luke 21:25; James 5:1-8; Revelation 18:8-19; Luke 17:26, 27; 2 Timothy 3:1-5.)

Another "time of the Gentiles" was fulfilled in 1830, when the gospel was restored by angelic ministration,—and to the bride of the Lamb was "granted" the right to array herself in robes of gospel righteousness. (See Revelation 14:6, 7; 19:8; Doctrine and Covenants 45:4.) But it also foretold that the masses will not believe it, though designed of God to be proclaimed to all nations, "as a witness." (See Doctrine and Covenants 45:4; Matthew 24:14.) Why, then, need the elders be surprised that but few believe their report? But few believed in Noah's day. And but few were saved from vengeance in the days of Lot. Gentile fullness of iniquity must be crowned as was that of Israel in olden days by rejecting the gospel of Christ,—and, consequently, the Christ.

A cloudy and boisterous season intervenes between us of the present and the close of Gentile times. Societies and kingdoms will be shaken and dissolved; men's hearts are to fail them. The iron and the clay will not adhere, says Daniel the prophet; and all the nations combined will be unable to replace the Jews in Palestine till the time appointed, for God will move first and will be sanctified in the eyes of many nations, in Israel's salvation. Israel need not think for a moment God will come to their terms. They can not take back that which they have forfeited by sin, without repenting of that sin. They did not go "into outer darkness," nor were they scattered among the nations, till they had rejected the Messiah that was "cut off, but not for himself," and refused his message of life and glory. And though they go back where he came to them in mercy, even to their land, yet will they have no king till they receive him whom they rejected—Jesus of Nazareth. (See Ezekiel 21:25-27.)

The burning of the Nauvoo Temple has always been shrouded in mystery. What claims to be the first authentic account of that affair is given in the December Autumn Leaves by one who claims to have had the story from the man who fired the building. In the same number Sr. Vida Smith gives a fine account of the recent series of meetings conducted by the Nauvoo District in the city of Nauvoo. Both articles are illustrated.

Consider.

Consider

The lilies of the field whose bloom is brief—
We are as they;
Like them we fade away,
As doth a leaf.

Consider

The sparrows of the air of small account:
Our God doth view
Whether they fall or mount—
He guards us too.

Consider

The lilies that do neither spin nor toil,
Yet are most fair—
What profit all this care
And all this toil?

Consider

The birds that have no barn nor harvest-weeks;
God gives them food—
Much more our Father seeks
To do us good.—Christina Rossetti.

Some Jubilees.

It is a very old custom to celebrate any notable event, as the births of kings and queens, or their long reigns. The fiftieth year of Queen Victoria's reign in England was celebrated with much pomp and show. Many visitors at the world's fair at St. Louis saw that big room full of costly presents that had been presented to the Queen to commemorate her jubilee—gold and silver and precious stones. We remember how we wearied of the sameness of countless caskets, the formality of designs, and the waste of riches. It seemed really childish, this heaping up of toys and trinkets. It reminded us of a child who has had more Christmas presents than it knows what to do with. Too costly for use and so many of a kind that one grew tired of them. And they must be stored in strong vaults and guarded from thieves, and—some day forgotten.

The thought came to me as I looked at them: Why could not all the lands and cities and people that sent them have united to produce some one thing so notable for grandeur and greatness that it should for ever make the good Queen's jubilee memorable in the minds of people from generation to generation? As it is, all the mind can remember is a great glitter of precious metal. What a great and notable work of art this vast wealth might have produced! What grand and wonderful things it might have done to more fittingly celebrate the jubilee! Why, little Hopes, I really felt sorry for the Queen, that her people had missed this opportunity to becomingly honor her, and her long reign. I wondered if she felt any of the disgust that I felt to look over those costly toys that could charm but a moment if at all.

In another part of the ground stood a great iron bell that called to mind some other jubilees.

Long, long before Queen Victoria had lived and reigned, God said to his ancient people, whom he had brought out of bondage and slavery in Egypt, that to celebrate that great event every fiftieth year should be to them a year of jubilee. "And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof; it shall be a jubilee unto you; and ye shall return every man unto his possessions, and ye shall return every man unto his family." That was a grand jubilee that was repeated every fifty years when every slave was set free, and every man who had lost his property by getting into debt was to have it restored to him. The great bell that we mentioned, and which many of you saw and touched, had on it a part of the words of God to the Jews: "Proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof."

You remember the story of how our independence bell really did that when it was rung at the declaration of independence of these United States. And the one hundredth year of our independence was celebrated by a great exhibition in the city of Philadelphia, in the year 1876. The people had enjoyed two times fifty years of liberty and so they had their jubilee.

The various churches have had their jubilees which they have celebrated as seemed fitting to them. The Pope some years ago celebrated his jubilee year as head of the Catholic Church. Like Queen Victoria, the Pope received many costly presents wrought by the toil and labors of the poor.

And now we Latter Day Saints are going to have our jubilee. It is twice fifty years since the birth of Joseph Smith, through whom God proclaimed greater light and liberty than have been enjoyed by other people—the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ in fullness and power. Surely it should be hallowed as a year of jubilee; the more so as it is seventy-five years since the church was organized and authority given to proclaim it to all people, that they may come to its light and knowledge.

Is it not fitting that we bring our gold and silver, and pour out our treasure at the feet of the King of kings; not to be hidden away in vaults where thieves may break through and steal? But let it be used, like our grand old Liberty Bell, to proclaim this gospel light and liberty unto all the world, to all the inhabitants thereof.—M. Eleanor Kearney in Zion's Hope.

What Kind of Company Shall We Choose for Our Children?

It is a true maxim that "a man is known by the company he keeps" and even "a child is known by his doings, whether his works be pure and whether they be right." Children naturally assimilate by the force of imitation the habits and manners of those by whom they are surrounded. "Let no man deceive himself," says Petrarch, "by thinking that the contagions of the soul are less than those of the body. They are yet greater. They sink deeper, and come on more unsuspectedly. From impure air we take disease; from bad company, vice and imperfection."

It therefore becomes a matter of no trivial concern to select proper companions for our children, and to avoid those who are certainly prejudicial. We should seek those who possess superior mental and moral endowments, for these, by being assimilated in manners and disposition, they adopt, whereas, by association with those who are their inferiors in every respect, they become assimilated with them and by the assimilation become degraded. Thus by copying others, they do that which is appropriate, right or wrong, without knowing why or the principles and consequences involved in their actions. The awfully sad consequences of evil associations are exhibited in the history of almost all criminals. Evil company is like tobacco-smoke—you can not be long in its presence without carrying away a taint of it.

Children should not be allowed to associate with the profane, the Sabbath-breaker, the drunkard, and the licentious, to be themselves lowered, without elevating the others.

Nothing elevates us so much as the presence of a spirit similar, yet superior, to our own. What is companionship where nothing that improves the intellect is communicated, and where the larger heart contracts itself to the model and dimensions of the smaller? Washington was wont to say, "Be courteous to all but intimate with few, and let those few be well tried before you give them your confidence."

It should be the aim of young men and women to go into good society. Not the rich, the proud, and fashionable, but the society of the wise, the intelligent, and the good. Once secure a love of good society, and no punishment would be greater than to be obliged to associate with the low and vulgar. What can be more pleasing and more angelic than a young lady, virtuous, and adorned with the graces and elegance of finished politeness, based upon a sound intellect and well-improved mind? At least they may attain to that degree of elegance and manners by judicious selection of company, that will render them pleasing in any social circle, whether at home or abroad. If so much importance be attached to the prudent selection of company and associates and if this be of such vital importance to every young girl, how careful should she be not to take to her bosom for life a companion of dissolute habits and morals! Such an act might destroy all the domestic felicity she might have hoped to enjoy, and be a constant sorrow to her through life. For no connection or friendship can be found lasting where a conformity of inclination and disposition does not exist; but where this exists all passions and finer feelings of the soul gently harmonize and form one common and lasting interest.

Christmas Lesson.

(For first primary classes.)

GOLDEN TEXT.—"They presented unto him gifts."—Matthew 2:11.

GOD'S GIFT.

Luke 2:8-16; Matthew 3:1, 2, 11, Inspired Version.

"And there were in the same country, shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flocks by night.

"And lo, an angel of the Lord appeared unto them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them; and they were sore afraid.

"But the angel said unto them, Fear not, for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.

"For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, who is Christ the Lord.

"And this is the way you shall find the babe, he is wrapped in swaddling clothes, and is lying in a manger.

"And suddenly there was with the angel, a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God, and saying,

"Glory to God in the highest; and on earth, peace; good will to men.

"And it came to pass, when the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the shepherds said one to another, Let us now go, even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord has made known unto us.

"And they came with haste, and found Mary and Joseph, and the babe lying in a manger."

"Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem,

"Saying, Where is the child that is born, the Messiah of the Jews? For we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him.

"And when they were come into the house, they saw the young child, with Mary his mother, and fell down and worshiped him. And when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh."

OUR GIFTS.

To-morrow is Christmas Day, the birthday of Christ.

At the first Christmas time, when Jesus was born in Bethlehem, the wise men came from their home in the East and brought him rich presents of gold and other things that were worth much.

At another time, when he had become a man, a woman came to him bringing the gift of a beautiful little white box filled with very sweet and costly perfume.

Once when Jesus was teaching in the temple he saw rich people come with gifts of money for the Lord. And he saw also a poor widow who brought her gift which was only about four cents, but it was all she had.

Jesus spoke about the poor woman. He praised her, because she loved the Lord so much she was willing to give her gift, although it was only a little one.

Jesus was a poor man. He did not give people money or the things money can buy, but he loved them and was kind to them and helped them.

Now we may not be like the wise men who brought gold and rich gifts to Jesus; we may not be like the woman who brought him the costly perfume, or like the rich people who gave much money into the Lord's temple; but we can be like the poor widow who gave a little gift, and we can be like Jesus who gave the people love.

REVIEW.

1. Where was Jesus born? 2. What was his mother's name?
3. Who came to the shepherds that night when Jesus was born?
4. Where did the angels say the shepherds would find the baby lying?
5. Who came from the East bringing gifts to the baby Jesus?
6. What did they bring?
7. What gift did a woman once bring to Jesus?
8. What did Jesus once see rich men giving in the temple?
9. What did he see a poor widow give? 10. What did he say about her?
11. What kind of gifts did Jesus give the people?
12. Have you a little Christmas gift for the Lord?
13. If little children can not give money, what can they give?

TEACHERS' LETTER.

Teachers should use this lesson on the Christmas Sunday, and defer the story of Lazarus until the last Sunday of December.

The scriptural reading which we have called God's Gift is Luke's account of the birth of Christ coupled with a part of Matthew's account of the visit of the wise men. Having had the story of the birth of Christ in the beginning of this quarter, we think the children will understand much of the language of the scriptural narrative, which may be read by the superintendent of the school, the superintendent of the primary department, or by the teachers of individual classes as the conditions in schools warrant.

Under the heading, Our Gifts, you will find the lesson of the day, the scriptural reading being of the nature of a review. The effort is to teach the little ones that even they can be helpers and can bring acceptable gifts to God.

Editors Herald: Soon after writing to the HERALD last, Bro. Frederick A. Smith and I met at Wilburton, Indian Territory, and began a tour though the Southeastern Mission. Our first stop was at Tulsa, where we found our genial Bro. Wallace Robinson engaged in erecting a large hotel, one of the finest, if not the finest, I have seen in the South. We stayed with Bro. Robinson one night, and were entertained by himself and brother, John A. Robinson, Jr., and his good wife, Bro. Wallace's wife being away from home at the time. The next morning at four o'clock found us on our way to Terilton, Oklahoma, where a reunion of the Saints of Eastern Oklahoma was to begin that morning, August 3. We found the tent pitched in the edge of town and quite a number of the Saints on the ground to welcome us. Terilton is the place where Bro. W. M. Aylor opened up the work over a year ago, and was challenged by an elder of the nonprogressive Campbellite faction, by the name of Foster. The debate resulted in much good to our cause, and Bro. Aylor, by his gentlemanly deportment, became endeared to the people around there, and made many friends to the cause. A number were baptized as a result of the discussion and a number have entered the church since. It was certainly refreshing to note the almost entire absence of prejudice in the minds of the people. I am sure I never was in a place, where the work was as new as it is there, where there is as little prejudice. We had fine audiences at our night meetings and some few outsiders at the day services. We had some very hard rains during the meetings, which dampened the ardor somewhat, but altogether it was a successful reunion. Eleven were baptized on the last Sunday by Bro. Aylor. On the 14th Bro. Fred and I took train for Eagle City, where we were met by Bro. Durfey and were driven to Seiling.

We stayed here two weeks and preached in the two branches that are situated there, and near there. Both of these branches have church-buildings. The one in Seiling is a frame and bears the distinction of being the first church built by our people in Oklahoma. The other branch is seven miles away and they have a fine little brick church. It was mostly built by volunteer work, the brick being made by the Brn. Yates, stepsons of Bro. D. S. Crawley, and sold to the Saints at cost, and some of the material donated.

The Saints here have had their ups and downs, but we believe that the work is established upon a firm basis, and good results will eventually follow. It has been considered of sufficient importance for the adversary to send his colleague, Clark Braden, in there to overcome the good that has been done, but we have an efficient force there to repel the invader, in the person of Brn. James Yates, H. F. Durfey, H. Case, and last, but not least, our genial Irishman, Richard Mike Maloney. The visit of Braden fell flat as a consequence, and our work is more widely known than ever. From Seiling we were taken across the country to Redmoon, by Bro. Will Durfey and his two sisters, Lizzie and Vi. This was a trip long to be remembered. There is some country in Oklahoma that impresses one with the thought that when it was created there was too much of it to lie down flat and so it was placed on edge, and we found most of that kind between Seiling and Redmoon. It took us two days to make the trip and some into the third day, but we got there, and in spite of the rain that fell about five out of the ten days that the reunion lasted, we had a good time, and from what we heard after the close of the meetings, a good impression was left behind. Six were baptized at this meeting by Bro. Case. From here we drove thirty miles to Sayer, and with Bro. Grimes we took the "Choctaw" for Washita Junction. Fred and I changed to the "Frisco" here and Bro. Grimes went on to Hydro, where he had an interest awakened, we going to Davidson, Oklahoma, where a number of the Saints were lucky enough to draw the right to homesteads a few years ago, and are in consequence located in good homes. We were here ten days and preached each night, and on Saturday, the 23d, organized the Davidson Branch of twenty-five or thirty members.

On the 25th we went to Vernon, Texas, and finding that no appointment had been given out we left on the 26th for Dallas, Texas. At Ft. Worth we were surprised to meet Bro. James Christensen on the train. Bro. Christensen is the trusted traffic claim agent of the Missouri, Kansas, & Texas Railroad in Texas, with headquarters in Dallas. His wife and children were away from home, but we were royally entertained by Bro. Christensen with restaurant fare. We spent a night and a day with our brother and then took the "Katy" for San Antonio, where we arrived the next morning. We held a few meetings here with fair attendance and then on the 6th of October went to the mountains and held a conference of the Southwestern Texas District at Pipecreek, continuing over the 8th.

From here we went to Crocket, as it is familiarly called, properly speaking, Tuff. We have a band of Saints here, and for about a week we held forth with good audiences. All of the travel in this region has to be done by team, so Bro. Quintus Hodge brought us to this place, and from Tuff we drove our own team to Centerpoint, stopping on the way for one night with my cousin and her husband, Hattie and J. W. Minear. Bro. Love, who owned the team, sent his son Jeff to bring the team back, so we had to get an early start the next morning. We found it damp and misting, but by daylight we were on our way, arriving at Centerpoint at eleven o'clock in the morning. That night found us in San Antonio again. We held meetings here over Sunday when it was not rainy, and on Monday Bro. Fred left me. I remained in San Antonio and vicinity until November 13, trying to hold meetings, but was hindered by the rain that fell almost incessantly. On the 13th I went to Cleburne, with the intention of trying to do some preaching, and to visit my cousin, who is engaged in railroading there. I could do neither with any degree of satisfaction, as my cousin being a "con" on the "Santa Fe" was out on his "run" nearly all the time, and the people would not come to hear me preach. However, I was able to visit Bro. and Sr. Riley, who live there, and tried to cheer them on their way. Sr. Riley has been sorely afflicted for some years past, but seems to be quite cheerful under it all. I am glad to say that she seemed to be improving when I was there, and is in a fair way to recovery.

On the 20th I came to this place on a visit with my uncle, L. L. Wight, and cousin, William Wight. The weather has not been good, and conditions such in other respects that I have held no meetings. I believe, however, that this country is a good field for labor when the weather and conditions are favorable. Winter is a poor time to try to hold meetings in the South. People will not come if it is the least bit cold, and rainy nights are entirely out of the question.

I found that my victory over Currie in the debate held at Bandera last July was quite complete, more so than I at first supposed. One man in talking of it without knowing that he was talking to a Latter Day Saint, when asked his opinion of the result, said that he was sorry to say that the "Latter Days" came out ahead, and in his opinion it had left a very bad impression in that country. Much was said by the people around there as to what they would do after the debate in making a choice, but I can not see that they are any more ready to accept the truth than they were before. They admit that we came out ahead, but yet they are not ready to accept the right.

I expect to leave here for home the 4th and will spend the holidays with loved ones, believing that I have earned a short rest as I have not seen home for about seven months, or nearly that long, having left home May 22. I may attend the Wilburton, Indian Territory, conference. The work in the field is fairly successful and my preaching has been with good liberty as a rule this year.

Yours in the conflict,

H. O. SMITH.

COLTON, San Bernardino County, California,
November 21, 1905.

Editors Herald: I had the pleasure of attending the reunion in Oakland over which Bro. Terry presided with great satisfaction to the Saints and friends in which I renewed many former acquaintances, and made some new ones among the Saints; but was also reminded that many of the noble sons and daughters of God had entered into their rest since I first made the acquaintance of the Saints and the church; nevertheless we were encouraged in the outlook for the future, for the Lord is raising us in this mission, and in the church, some grand young men, wise, careful and competent, who in the various offices in the church will nobly carry on the work of God in these last times; while the older brethren with the wisdom of age and experience are still contending for the faith which they so much love, and by their testimony and counsel are encouraging the younger brethren to mount up higher into the glory and power of this great dispensation of the latter days, and, yielding willing obedience to the Father's counsel to us all, receive as did the aged servant of God on Patmos, guidance, directions, revelations, and blessings by the Holy Spirit as they pass along toward the end of life's journey.

At the close of the reunion we received word from Addie that she was quite sick and Emma concluded to go to her aid. She left the pleasant home of Bro. and Sr. Anthony on September 21, and after a five-hundred-mile ride on the train reached Addie, who soon recovered under God's blessing and her nursing.

During the month of October I was in Santa Clara and San Benito Counties, and in the first part of November, J. B. Carmichael and I went to Monterey where for the first time I met Elder Trotter, who, with his kind wife and boys, took good care of the traveling elders. We held a few meetings there with the few Saints who gathered at Bro. Trotter's house, and a sacrament-service on Sunday. This old town has outgrown its former Mexican appearance, and is now quite a modern-looking town. Bro. Trotter showed us his wood-splitter and saw run by steam in his wood- and lumber-yard, by which about ten cords of wood can be sawed and split each day.

On Tuesday morning we visited Sr. Voshell and administered to her in the ordinance for healing and the sacrament also, for she was not able to attend the sacrament-service. Sr. Jorgensen also was present but Bro. and Sr. Dick McKee were hindered and could not attend, after which Bro. Carmichael and I went on to Watsonville and tarried all night at Bro. and Sr. Hedricks, then on to Bro. Martin's, a zealous brother in the work, who has created quite a stir among the neighbors, and who has had Bro. Francis Smith of the Seventies preaching among them, who although being afflicted with a throat or voice trouble yet declared the word of life in such a faithful manner that his words could not be gainsaid. They live near Aptos. Bro. Martin's wife is Sr. King's daughter, formerly of Watsonville; and here we met Sr. King also, who is hearty and well. From here we went to Santa Cruz and called on Sr. Jacob Smith and her daughters, who keep the hearthstone warm while Bro. Jacob gains experience hunting for the precious metals in the mountains. We had a pleasant visit with the family and were kindly entertained by Bro. and Sr. F. Smith and family and his brothers. May the good Master open up the way for them to enter more fully into the work as they desire. The next day we met the faithful daughter of God, Sr. Moses, who, with her daughter Clara, keeps the camp-fire burning in the old homestead where many of the weary servants of God have found a resting-place. From there we returned to San Jose, where we always find a pleasant welcome from the Saints of that branch, and as upon our former visit we tarried with Elder Henry Burgess, who, with his wife and son, made us welcome to their pleasant home; we also renewed our former acquaintance with Bro. and Sr. Range, Moses Holmes, Sr. Buck, C. W. Hawkins, who is president of the branch, their families, and others. We also had a very pleasant visit at Bro. Bates'. I also met Sr. Smith and her daughter and granddaughter, of Idaho, and many others. Some of the Saints here are looking Zionward. We also had a very pleasant visit at the Jefferson Branch, and while there we were kindly taken care of by Bro. and Sr. Eugene Holt and family, who, with Bro. A. Page and his son Walter, are the only families of Saints left in that branch, organized about thirty-two years ago by Elders D. S. Mills and J. R. Cook, and it is probable that these few who are left there will soon move away also.

On November 10 I arrived at Tulare and tarried that night at Bro. William Bedford's, where I was kindly welcomed by him and his wife, and Bro. and Sr. Aner Glines. We also met Bro. and Sr. Jack Damron and family, his mother and Sr. Amanda. All these are from the Newport Branch—a great loss to that branch but a great gain to the Tulare Branch and community. On Sunday we met with the Saints and I assisted Elder Flory, the president of the branch, in administering the sacrament. Sr. Walker and family kindly entertained us while in Tulare. From here I went to Bakersfield and visited at my brother's, who feels himself injured in church-work by the false reports and misrepresentations of others. He now is engaged in making earth reservoirs for the crude oil at the oil-fields here. He has made the largest reservoir in California, if not in the world. His present contract is for thirty-nine thousand dollars and is nearly finished. He has a nice home near Bakersfield, and the traveling ministry will find a welcome home there. I expected to get my island mail there but have not received it yet, as I was called here by a telegram from Emma, as Addie's little girl Dora was very sick; but by God's blessing through the administration, kind nursing, and a doctor's care the little one is well again, though yet very weak. On Sunday we met the Saints of San Bernardino Branch.

Through all these miles of travel we found the Saints striving for an inheritance in the kingdom of our God, and some of them very zealous and laboring nobly to advance the good work, while others were burdened with the cares of this world, and a few were drifting toward the darkness.

May God in his infinite love and mercy keep us ever so closely in touch with him that we may finally enter into the glory of the redeemed.

May peace be upon the Israel of God.

Your brother in Christ,

My address is as above.

J. F. BURTON.

CASTLE ROCK, Washington, November 22, 1905.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a few lines from the great Northwest will not be amiss. The work of the Lord in these parts is in fair condition. However, we have not baptized as many people in this mission as have been in other fields, judging from reports in the church periodicals. Of course conditions have to do with it. I have traveled in a good many parts of the world as a missionary but have not been in a country where the people were so hard to reach with the gospel as on this coast unless it was the European countries. It is not because of the prejudice of the people altogether, but because of the lack of interest on the part of the people in religion of any kind. They seem more interested in building up the country and making money, and in worldly pleasures, and amusements seem to attract the attention of the people more than the gospel of Jesus Christ. Hence it is that the ministry of this mission have a hard task before them. If we have from two to twenty-five outsiders in an audience we think we are doing well. There are occasions when we have more in places, but it is not the general rule. Another discouraging feature is the fact that many of the Saints who migrate to the West partake of the spirit of the world and suffer themselves to drift away from the church. In some instances they do not want any preaching done in the neighborhood where they live for fear the people will find out what religion they are identified with. Notwithstanding these many discouraging features we have to contend with in this country, the work is progressing slowly and the church is gaining prestige with the people.

The church is growing quite rapidly in point of numbers at Spokane—about twenty have been baptized of late by Bro. Chaburn and a goodly number have moved there from other places. Bro. Thomas has accomplished a good work in that city. He seems to be the right man in the right place and his efforts are supplemented by the local officers and the Saints there. We hope they will continue to live together in peace and labor together in unison. There is always danger where so many people congregate in one place, that is, when they come from so many different branches; I mean by this statement, that there is danger of an eruption in the new branch, for my experience has taught me that officers and Saints sometimes retard the progress of God's work in the place last removed to by being influenced by the idea that things must be done in the new branch in the same way they were done in the branch from which they came, and brethren who were active officers in said branches seem to think that they must hold office in the new branch, notwithstanding the different offices are already filled by good, active, and faithful men, and thus cause contention and jealousy to exist. Brethren should realize that all can not be officers in a branch, but there is demand for labor to be done in the district under direction of the presidency thereof. The local officers who have to follow the different vocations of life should try to effect new openings in the regions round about and thus honor their calling and magnify their office before the Lord.

At Roslyn the Saints are few in number but the few are trying to keep the work moving. The Holmes brothers and two or three others are the workers here. They are at a disadvantage in that place because of the wickedness which abounds there. Saloons and drunkards seem to be the prominent features of the place. We think a change of location would be a great relief to these dear Saints.

Brn. Holman, Garbott, and Sanders are the officers of the Seattle Branch and the work under their supervision is in good condition spiritually. Bro. David Davis (elder) renders these brethren good assistance when at home, and he and his excellent wife and children keep an open house to the poor, weary missionary and the missionaries appreciate their hospitality with that of Brn. Garbott and Holman. Bro. William Johnson, president of the Seattle and British Columbia District, has been actively engaged in opening up new fields and reports progress.

We are pleased with the bright prospects for the work in British Columbia. We expect to have quite a showing there within a year or two. Brn. Rainey, McMullan, Clark, Henry and John Stade, and Holt are doing all in their power to make the latter-day work a success in that part of the British domain, and their efforts are being heartily supported by the Saints there. I wish to call attention to the good work that the sisters' aid societies are doing for the ministry and the work in general. They have one at Seattle, Condon, Laconner, and I think one in Spokane. Those sisters have been a great help to the ministry financially as well as being a great help to the cause in other ways, such as assisting the poor and the needy.

This society should receive the indorsement and sympathy of the brethren. God will surely reward them for their good works.

Brn. Chatburn, Sparling, Enge, Sheldon, Keeler, Johnson, Holloway, and Turnbull are battling away in the interest of the salvation of their fellow men and while they can not report as many baptisms as some others of the traveling ministry they are a brave, noble band of workers. I am proud to have such honorable, faithful laborers associated with me in this mission. It does a person good to know that he is associated with men whom he can trust and depend on for support. Hence it is, that the minister in charge and his missionaries are working together in harmony and peace. I am at present holding forth in the Saints' chapel in this town with fair interest.

Brn. Enge and Harry Jones are here: Bro. Enge operating in a schoolhouse about five miles from here, Bro. Jones assisting the writer. We go from here to Sara over the Sabbath, where these two brethren have effected a good opening, and thence to Portland on Monday.

I wish to state that we have in all our branches in this mission as good Saints as are to be found in all the world—Saints who are always willing to sacrifice their means for the support of the ministry and the building up of the kingdom.

I am staying at present at the home of Bro. and Sr. Appleman, whose hospitality is well known to the traveling ministry.

With love to all, I remain,

Your brother and colaborer in gospel bonds,

G. T. GRIFFITHS.

FULTON, Kentucky.

Editors Herald: To my mind the member of the church who does not have enough love and interest for and in the cause to pay one dollar and fifty cents a year for the paper, had just about as well be out as in; and very likely many of us who are in, and who are taking the HERALD and other papers, will be cast out when the net is drawn to the shore. If the Scriptures are true (which we should not and do not question), some of our dear brethren and sisters may be sadly disappointed. At the harvest-time it is said that all the "proud" and "they that do wickedly" shall be burned up. Are any of those who have been adopted into that "family," which should be so holy, guilty of pride? Are we trying to imitate the life of our Leader and Commander in all things? Sisters, are you watching those fashion-plates, gotten up by the most worldly class, to see how to make and ornament your clothing and the clothing of your children, or are you looking to and following the instructions given by the various servants sent of God to teach you? such as this: "Let women dress in modest apparel as becometh such who profess godliness"; also, "Let your adorning be that of your own handiwork."

When did such counsel lose its meaning, and who gives it consideration?

Again, I often see in letters from brethren of the ministry, and also of the laity, in giving account of meetings, conferences, or reunions, such statements as these: "The reunion was a success—Brn. McClain, Roberts, Turpen, Snow, Kelley, etc., [as the case may be,] did all they could to make the reunion a success"; conveying the idea that without them it would have been a failure, and that none else did what they could to make it a success—when very likely some who are of less note did more to make it a success than the notable ones.

Jesus did not praise the notable ones for what they did as he did the poor old widow who cast in her little mite. James said, "Have not the faith of Christ with respect to persons"; and Paul said, "Those members of the body which we think to be less honorable, upon these we bestow more abundant honor; and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness." So would it not be doing more like Christ to give a "send-off" to those poor, humble brothers and sisters who do all they can to make our meetings a success, and who are of scarcely any note? Judge ye. May we all have respect to the law and to the Giver, and not unto men and women, unless it is those "less honorable." May the Saints be pure.

J. W. WILLIAMS.

SAN FRANCISCO, California, November 25, 1905.

Dear Herald: On the 21st of November one of our number passed to the other life,—Sr. Susan Morganstern, a faithful sister and devoted wife. She leaves a husband to mourn. She had been a great sufferer for many years. The writer spoke for twenty-five minutes at her home to a few friends, and at the chapel of the crematory read the twentieth chapter of Revelation.

I was called the same day to Danville to administer to Sr. Bell Russell, who was pronounced beyond hope by the doctor. The next morning the doctor came and said he thought she was very much better.

I followed Bro. J. M. Terry to Santa Rosa and held services Sunday to Thursday inclusive. One lady became much interested. She wanted to know if we were willing to meet her minister of the Advent faith in public discussion. I told her we were. I think Bro. J. M. Terry can do well in that line. I have had no experience at debates, but I would not run away. I held three meetings at Sacramento the 19th and 20th. Quite a number wanted inventories. I expect to hold some meetings at Windsor soon, also Stockton and Chico. Our branch is in good condition, and all anxious to build a church. I find much comfort in devoting all my time to church-work.

Yours at work for the Master,

2063 Mission Street.

CHARLES A. PARKIN.

GOTEBORG, Sweden, November 14, 1905.

Editors Herald: I am still trying in my weakness to get the gospel before the people in this city. I hold meetings in three places, but very few come out. Those that come seem interested, and we hope by setting a good example before the people we may in time convince them that we have nothing to do with the Utah Mormons. They have canvassed the cities and the country with their tracts and books, and their moral lives have not been the best; therefore the people are afraid of all that are called Latter Day Saints, and will not believe us because of the name. But we hope and pray that those who have made a covenant with God will live so that others may be convinced of the truth.

Bro. Peter Anderson was with us about ten days the first of September. We were all glad to meet him, and he gave us some good instructions. We expect him back again this fall or winter; he is now in Denmark and having good interest.

We have translated sixty of the most common songs out of the Saints' Harp—something that will be a great help in the mission and Sunday-school; but we are all poor and have not the means to publish them after we have them ready for the printer, so we thought to call on our Swedish-American Saints and others that are interested in this mission and the work of God here to help us out. So, brethren, if you feel like helping, much or little will be accepted. Please send it to me to address below, and as soon as possible, because I expect to start for the States the first of March and would like to have the books ready to take with me at that time, so give your address and the number of books wanted and I will send them to you or deliver to you at General Conference, because I will try to be there if possible.

This mission is new and needs some help to get a start. When I came here a year ago last summer there were only two Saints in the whole country and they were several hundred miles apart, but now we are eighteen and several others about ready to obey, and we hope and pray that the way will be opened that more missionaries may be sent here, that those who sit in darkness may receive light.

Yours in bonds,

JOHN H. HANSON.

Anggards Gatan No. 7, Landala, GÖTEBORG, Sweden.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, November 28, 1905.

Editors Herald: It is some time since I have contributed to your valuable columns which come to us weekly laden with glad tidings of joy and peace, and I am sure also to all of its readers who love the truth.

I am happy to be able to say I am still alive to the interests of this glorious work, and take great delight in doing what I can for the good of the same, and also for the good of its membership, and my soul rejoices to read the letters of the missionaries and to know of their success, thus realizing that God is with them and prospering them in their work, giving them souls for their hire.

I have traveled around considerably this summer in preaching the gospel and giving blessings to the Saints, and have indeed been wonderfully blessed in my work. With my stenographer, Sr. Estella Wight, have visited quite a number of the branches in this stake, both in Kansas City and in the country, and the Lord has been with us in every time of need. We went through one of my old fields of labor, the Nodaway District, preaching, and gave over thirty blessings, finding them all in the faith. They are a noble band of Saints in this district. For many years we labored with them, sharing their joys and sorrows, and found nearly all true to themselves, to their fellow laborers, and to God. What a consolation it is to meet with old friends of this kind, and how pleasing the task to confer upon them as an agent for God the blessings he has promised to bestow.

Made two trips to old Fremont District, one to their reunion and after this or later to their conference; working in the evangelical office in connection with Bro. J. R. Lambert very satisfactorily, Sr. Wight doing work for both of us. She is a very faithful worker in the cause, and competent for her work as a stenographer, and a good help in song-service, and Sunday-school work, enjoying the Spirit largely at all times. Long may she live to work for the Master.

We visited several of the branches in this district—were gladly and very warmly received by all in every place and helped on our way as we went. Peace be with all.

Next week we start for Wilburton, Indian Territory, to attend their convention and conference and labor with them and for them as the way opens for us, trusting we may have the good Spirit with us. Praying for God's blessing to be with all, I am, still in the faith,

HENRY KEMP.

CLITHERALL, Minnesota, December 7, 1905.

Dear Herald: The Union Branch is in a fair condition and most of those that live near enough to attend services are manifesting by their works a good interest generally. Our Sunday-school is progressing nicely and the Religio is still holding its own.

I was called to preach the funeral-sermon of our sister, Mary Ann Wiper, who departed from this life on the twenty-second day of November, 1905. She was sixty-one years old and had been failing in health for the last three years. She was baptized in 1867. Her husband united with the church at the same time. They moved from Pennsylvania to Forman, North Dakota, where they have lived for twenty years, and their faith has never been shaken.

It was her dying request to have one of her faith preach her funeral-sermon. Bro. Wiper could not learn the whereabouts of the Dakota missionaries, and, learning of a branch here at Clitherall, sent here for an elder. He stated he would have one of our elders if he must send clear to Lamoni. The funeral occurred from the Methodist church and their minister took charge. Judging from the large crowd that attended—about three hundred—and the many beautiful flowers that were brought, she must have been highly respected in the community where she lived. She was the mother of fifteen children, one deceased, and one belonging to the church. They were nearly all present at the funeral and all of them were very much devoted to their mother. Possibly the good example of her past life may be the means of bringing them into the kingdom.

Bro. Wiper stated they were isolated from the Saints, but had not been forgotten by their heavenly Father. They had sold their farm and had their things all packed, intending to go where they could spend their remaining days near some branch of the church.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

LURRETTE WHITING.

HITEMAN, Iowa, December 2, 1905.

Editors Herald: The Hiteman Saints are rejoicing, seeing the reward of their labors has come, the branch being complete in its organization, as follows: Ed Rowley, presiding elder; John M. Kephart, priest; Charles White, teacher; Frank White, deacon; and in addition Religio and Sunday-school all in good working order. They will soon have in a good lighting-plant, and everything looks flattering for the gospel work at this point. I came here Wednesday, November 29, and met with the Saints at their prayer-meeting. Thursday, the 30th, preached the funeral-sermon of Mrs. Daisy L. Narver, in the Congregational church, text, Job 14:7, "For there is hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease." She leaves a husband and two children; she made no profession of faith. A good crowd was out at the services, Bro. Ed Rowley assisting. The body was interred at Albia.

Last Sunday I preached at Lucas, Monday and Tuesday evenings at Cleveland—collecting some tithes and offerings and finding a good desire manifested among all the Saints. I am staying here with Bro. and Sr. Lawrence White and through the day visiting with the Saints. I shall remain over Sunday and then go to Lone Rock to begin meetings December 10. Quite a number of Saints are moving into Hiteman. There is plenty of good work here in the coal-mines and good pay. I am in hopes the Saints in all the stake will remember the tithes and offerings. They have been blessed with the fruitage of the fields, and now at the close of the year they should not forget the Lord's portion.

Your brother in Christ,

D. C. WHITE.

GEELONG, Victoria, Australia.

Editors Herald: Our mail just arrived bearing good news from the far country, and we were specially pleased to read those charitable but telling remarks of Bro. Joseph to those people of the "salt land" who had been led away from the paths of virtue and duty in a dark and cloudy day. His patience, love, and long perseverance toward those who have persisted in resisting the truth, is characteristic of true Christian strength. The warning to turn "back to the old paths wherein is the good way" is timely and appropriate; and unless the warning is heeded, sorrow, shame, and disappointment are inevitable. "Be sure your sins will find you out," was well spoken, and, if not forsaken when warned, must consequently prove disastrous, both here and hereafter. Those who resisted God's chosen leader, and sought to usurp authority in the times of Moses, had their follies exhibited to all the world, which is again being repeated, to our sorrow, in the gathering to the promised land in our day. "The meek shall inherit the earth," and the "pure in heart shall see God," can never be realized by a people who are living in violation, either openly or secretly, of the laws of God and of the land they dwell in. Nothing could be more pleasing to the Lord than to see them return to the liberty wherein they once found freedom, and walk in the light as it shone through the Seer, up to his death. No polygamy, or secret combinations of any form whatever, can find acceptance or approval with God. "Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled in the yoke of bondage," is all sufficient for any child of God. It was once said to the Saints, and I fancy in some cases it could equally apply with some now, "to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them, for it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret." Apparently, nearly the whole world are binding themselves into bundles, some with bands which can not be broken without endangering their own lives. The "tow rope" or "flaxen cord" has been around the necks of too many, and if they do not hastily slip it off and free themselves, the marriage supper will be ready, the doors closed, and they find themselves on the outside.

The HERALD has recently had several lengthy articles, both as to why and when spiritual gifts and operations will cease, and while I believe each writer is stating matters as he really views them, permit me to offer this thought: that while we remain in this mortal state we must look elsewhere than to perfection for the real cause of a cessation, either in part or in whole, of the gifts our Lord gave unto men when he ascended on high. A careful examination both individually and collectively is most likely to reveal the cause. Try it, brethren. While we are singing with such commendable zeal "Let us walk in the light," no barriers should be raised or curtains lowered to shut out the light which God intends to lighten up our pathway as we journey through this dark vale below. God is light, love, and truth, which attributes we must possess if we ever reasonably can expect to enter and remain in Zion. Our worthy young brother, P. M. Hanson, passed through here on his way to South and West Australia, and then home via the Holy Land. He leaves about the 17th of January, 1906.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

I desire once more to call the attention of the Saints of this district to their duty in the matter of tithes and offerings. Through the mercy of our heavenly Father we have been prospered generally throughout the State. Dear Saints, let us please have a ready and generous response to the exhortations of our Presiding Bishop. I also beg leave to again remind you that some of the branches have not yet been heard from on the college donation. I hope presidents of branches will take the matter up at once, and report either to myself or direct to E. L. Kelley. I regret having been unable to visit all the branches as yet, but hope to do so before spring. My new address is Sherwood, North Dakota. Blanks for taking inventory can be had by application.

Your servant for the gospel's sake,

WM. SPARLING,

Bishop's Agent, North Dakota District.

THORNE, North Dakota, December 6, 1905.

Every one who can do so, rally to the standard. S. W. L. Scott, by permission of district president, A. S. Cochran.

Addresses.

Elder Peter Muceus, Forsgrund, Norway.

Died.

PERCHIE.—Madilena Eva Perchie was born at Belleville, Ontario, March 16, 1892. She was but 13 years and 3 months old at the time of her departure from this world; was sick but one week with appendicitis. She was baptized by Elder Houghton at the age of twelve, and was always very sincere in her faith, as we should all try to be. "Whomsoever the Lord loveth he chasteneth" is a hard passage of scripture to realize the meaning of. But we have been given the sad experience recently when God sent his messenger of death into our circle to remove from earthly habitation one of the loved ones. She leaves father, mother, three sisters, and a brother. And while our hearts are still sad we bow in humble submission and say:

"Though cast down we're not forsaken,
Though afflicted, not alone;
Thou did'st give and thou hast hast taken,
Blessed Lord, thy will be done."

NELSON.—Sr. Ida Nelson was born in Denmark, May 16, 1836; was married to Martimus Egholm, December 3, 1858, who died November 20, 1889. Sr. Nelson united with the Reorganized Church in Denmark, April 24, 1879. She was married to Jacob Nelson, May 24, 1898, who preceded her to the other shore just eleven months and six days. She died November 20, 1905, at Guilford, Missouri. Sr. Nelson leaves one son, Christian Egholm of Council Bluffs, Iowa, four grandchildren, and many friends. Funeral in Saints' church, near Bedison, Missouri, W. E. Haden in charge. Sermon by Arch E. McCord.

STARKEY.—Sr. Evalena Starkey, the beloved daughter of Bro. Albert and Sr. Sarah J. Starkey, was born April 6, 1892; was baptized December 4, 1902. Died November 20, 1905, of consumption. Funeral-services were conducted by Hiram Holt, at the Saints' church. Sr. Evalena was a child loved by all that knew her. She loved her parents and friends dearly; and had great zeal for the Lord's work, never missing Sunday-school only when too poorly to come. Her faith in the Savior was beautiful.

GREEN.—John Jefferson Green was born March 21, 1833. Was married to Mary J. Morris, March 18, 1852; baptized August 16, 1867; died August 27, 1905. He lived with his wife fifty-three years, five months, and twenty-nine days, whom he leaves with four sons and three daughters, also an aged mother (who will soon be ninety-five years old), five brothers, four sisters, thirty-six grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren, with a host of relatives, friends, and acquaintances to mourn. He was a devoted husband, a loving father, a good neighbor, a worthy Christian. Funeral-services from the family residence by Elder I. A. Morris.

Capital Renews Bargain Offer.

ANNUAL BARGAIN DAY OF DES MOINES CAPITAL GIVES OPPORTUNITY TO GET A DAILY A YEAR FOR $2 CASH.

The now famous Bargain Day of the Des Moines Capital has been extended this year to include the entire week, December 21 to 28. During this week, and this week only, you can secure the Daily Capital for the entire year 1906 for only $2—REGULAR PRICE $3. This offer is extended to both old and new subscribers—BY MAIL ONLY. Old subscribers to take advantage of this offer must pay up all arrears to January 1 and $2 for the year 1906. All you have to do is to mail your letter on any day during the week December 21 to 28 to Lafe Young, Des Moines, Iowa, or give your $2 to your postmaster, publisher, or newsdealer. If you are already a subscriber, send the Capital to some friend as a Christmas present. They will be sure to think of you every day during the year 1906.

The Capital is a superb metropolitan newspaper, publishing the full leased wire report of the Associated Press, furnishing the news of Iowa and the world. Its market reports are unexcelled. It is printed in two colors on the finest press in Iowa. Excellent mail facilities, reaching nearly all the post-offices in the State in time to go out on the rural routes the morning following publication. The Legislature is in session this winter and every family in the State should subscribe to a newspaper published in the Capital City. None will publish a more complete report than THE CAPITAL. We urge our readers to take advantage of this generous offer.

REMEMBER THE BARGAIN PERIOD—DECEMBER 21 TO 28.

The December Arena contains a rich and varied table of contents. Among the full-page portraits are admirable half-tone pictures of Count Tolstoi, Mayor Johnson, and John L. DeMar, and a beautiful reproduction of Mr. Elwell's great statue, "Egypt awakening." There are also four full-page, original cartoons on the dollar-worship of the age, drawn expressly for the Arena by Garnet Warren, and numerous other interesting illustrations. Among the contents we mention the following as of special interest: "Uncle Sam's romance with science and the soil," by Frank Vrooman; "Economics of Moses," by President George McA, Miller, Ph. D.; "Mayor Johnson; one of the strongest leaders in municipal progress in America," by Professor E. W. Bemis; "The evolution of marriage ideals," by Theodore Schroeder; "The reign of graft in Milwaukee," by Duane Mowry; "DeMar: a cartoonist of contemporaneous history," by B. O. Flower; "General San Martin; the Washington of South America," by Professor Frederic M. Noa; "Dominant trusts and corporations in Colorado," by Honorable J. Warner Mills; "Our latest and greatest social vision," an interpretation, being an extended study of Joaquin Miller's new social vision; and "Count Tolstoi on the land question," a general discussion of the great Russian's recent argument in favor of the land philosophy of Mr. George, by the editor of the Arena. The publisher's announcements for the Arena for 1906 are extremely attractive.

If you have been thinking of subscribing for the Register and Leader, wait no longer, but avail yourself of this offer to-day: Any new mail subscriber sending $4.00 (the regular one year rate) will receive the Daily Register and Leader from now until January 1, 1907—almost fourteen months. If both daily and Sunday editions are wanted, send $6.00. Address: The Register and Leader, Des Moines, Iowa.

Reverend Doctor John Wesley Hill, pastor of the Janes Methodist Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, New York, ungraciously made an attack on "Mormonism," from his pulpit in a late discourse in which he made some very strong and erratic statements. These statements attracted the attention of Bro. Benjamin R. McGuire, lately ordained to the eldership, who very properly called the Reverend Wesley Hill into question upon several things in his statement, which the Reverend Hill very skillfully avoided, making this final answer: "I understand by the word 'Mormonism' that system of religious belief originated by Joseph Smith and embodied in the Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. . . . It was this institution that I denounced as a base fraud, which proposition I am ready to defend."

Bro. McGuire, though young in the work, is sufficiently well informed in regard to the history and the doctrine of the church to successfully withstand attacks of the nature made by this reverend gentleman. Both the Reverend Hill and Bro. McGuire got into the Brooklyn Eagle for October 9, 12, 27, and 29, with statement and counter-statement, through which the Reverend Hill was led to say:

I will not occupy the pulpit of his church and I shall not invite the representative of his church to occupy mine.

The day for spectacular forensics of that sort is past. This worthy man McGuire evidently misunderstands me. I have attacked the regular brand of Mormonism as it prevails in Utah to-day. I have attacked polygamy, and I have attacked most bitterly of all the doctrine of disloyalty to the United States Government which is taught by the Mormons of the Brigham Young faith.

This Reorganized Mormonism, of which this McGuire is a champion, is an insignificant defection from the parent body. If it teaches monogamy and obedience to law, I have no quarrel with it on those scores.

I am making my fight against the principles of Mormonism as taught and practiced by the leaders of the faith.

Bro. George Potts, president of the New York and Philadelphia District, in a letter dated November 27, in referring to the character of the work going on in his district, speaks in high commendation of his counselors, Ephraim Squire and B. R. McGuire. Bro. Potts has wisely chosen young men for counselors to stand with him in his work. We are pleased to note the condition of improvement which Bro.

BRO. ELBERT A. SMITH received the following from one of the readers of the Leaves: "Herewith check, one dollar, to continue subscription another year. I sincerely congratulate you on the splendid results in the Leaves. I consider the articles very entertaining and instructive. Wishing you continued success, I remain, Your brother in California."

ON PAGE 1215 of this issue, under the heading, "Toleration versus contention," the statement that the paper was read before the Fifth Quorum of Seventy, is an error. It was read before the Fifth Quorum of Elders.

Potts' letter shows in the district under his charge.

It is unfortunate that in this controversy between this Doctor Wesley Hill and Bro. B. R. McGuire it is difficult to get before the public attention the fact that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants to which Mr. Hill evidently referred in his statement, is the one now issued in Utah by the Mormon church there, and not the one in existence at the time of the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. In the latter the teaching was exclusively monogamic, and the so-called revelation on plural marriage had no existence either in fact or in the Doctrine and Covenants until it was so inserted in the fall of 1876, and that by President Brigham Young. These Utah propagandists are well aware of this fact, but they take good care that when they mention the Book of Doctrine and Covenants it is made to mean the one they now are using, and not the original. It may be that by the time this Smoot matter is ended in Congress this fact will be accentuated before the public mind.

STICK TO TRUTH.

In his services in the Majestic Theater, Toronto, Ontario, Sunday, November 5, Bro. R. C. Evans stirred the ire of a retired clergyman, J. M. Wilkinson by name, with the following result:

STICK TO THE TRUTH, MR. EVANS.

To the Editor of the Globe: At the invitation of a friend I attended a religious (?) service last night in the Majestic Theater to hear Mr. Evans, president of the church of the Latter Day Saints, speak on "The Devil, his origin and destiny." Among many other foolish things he made this assertion, and repeated it several times, to the evident delight of a portion of his audience: "Every orthodox church in this city teaches that God made the Devil and has given him an everlasting commission to torture lost souls for ever and ever and ever." At the close of his "remarkable" address he called for written questions. I was prompted by some spirit, good or bad, for there were divers present, to ask on paper the following question: "Will you please name any church or denomination in Toronto to-day who teaches that God made the Devil as he is to-day, and has given him an everlasting commission to torture lost souls for ever and ever?" Instead of answering the question he read a long quotation from some author on the duration of eternal punishment, and when I replied that my question was about the Devil, and not about the punishment of the wicked, he charged me with interrupting the meeting, and told me to sit down, and, looking around, I saw one of the deacons or elders telling me to keep quiet or he would put me out. Mr. Editor, I take this man's statement as a willful, pernicious slander of the churches, Protestant and Catholic alike, and I ask you to allow Mr. Evans to name the church or denomination, and if not retract the infamous lie.

TORONTO, November 5.

J. M. WILKINSON.

PRESIDENT EVANS TO MR. WILKINSON.

To the Editor of the Globe: Permit me to reply to the untrue statements made by J. M. Wilkinson regarding my lecture in the Majestic Theater last night. I emphatically deny making the statement: "Every orthodox church in this city teaches that God made the Devil and has given him an everlasting commission to torture lost souls for ever and ever and ever." While I made part of this statement, yet he misstates it and misrepresents it in true Wilkinson style.

I have preached in Toronto frequently for fifteen years, and feel sorry that the first one to disturb my meetings was himself a retired preacher. 'Tis true that one of the deacons told him to keep quiet or he would put him out, but several had cried, "Shame!" "Put him out!" and I had requested him to keep quiet before that.

What I did say was this:—"First, I desire to correct a false theory that has obtained in the past that God made the Devil, that God had foreordained and commissioned the Devil to torture men and women in literal burning flames for ever and ever." The words, "every orthodox church in this city," were never uttered by me, for I know well that many do not believe such doctrine.

In verification of my statement I submit the following:—First, that leading denominations teach that Satan is a fallen angel; second, that God foreordained that those angels that did fall were destined to fall. "By the decree of God for the manifestation of his glory, some men and angels are predestined unto everlasting life and others foreordained to everlasting death. These angels and men thus predestined and foreordained are particularly and unchangeably designed, and their number is so certain and definite that it can not be either increased or diminished."—Presbyterian Confession of Faith, third chapter, third and fourth sections.

If this be true, did God foreordain that that angel should be a devil? Calvin says: "Predestination we call the eternal decree of God, by which he hath determined in himself what he would have to become of every individual of mankind, for they are not all created with a similar destiny, but eternal life is foreordained for some, and eternal damnation for others."

Zachius, the Swiss reformer, declares that: "The reprobates are bound by the ordinance of God, under the necessity of sinning."

Beza: "That God hath predestinated not only unto damnation, but also unto the causes of it whomsoever he saw meet."

Peter Martyr says: "God supplies wicked men with opportunities of sinning, and inclines their hearts thereto. He blinds, deceives, and seduces them. He, by his working on their hearts, bends and stirs them up to evil."

John Knox says: "The reprobates are not only left by God suffering, but are compelled to sin by his power."

In Doctor Hopkin's work, volume 3, page 145, we find the following: "God has revealed it to be his will to punish some of mankind for ever. You know not but what you are one of them. Whether you will be saved or damned depends entirely on his will, and supposing he sees it most for his glory and the general good that you should be damned it is certainly sure that you will be damned. On this supposition, then, you ought to be willing to be damned, for not to be willing to be damned in this case is opposing God's will."

Doctor Vincent says: "God will glorify his infinite wisdom in the punishment of the damned, which will contrive such tortures for them that if all the men in the world should join their wits together and take to their help all the devils in hell they could not invent the like."

My soul sickens with the most profound disgust and abhorrence as I read these fearful misrepresentations of every principle of justice, law, equity, mercy, and love. The doctrine of eternal pain, never-ending torture, of perpetual spite, of deathless agony, represents our heavenly Father to be more devilish than the worst conception of all mediæval devils that have ever been recorded. It contradicts all scripture, and teaches men to despise God and lose all faith in the religion of Jesus Christ.

In conclusion permit me to say I never mentioned the Catholic Church during that lecture, yet I am accused of slandering said church. Nor did I mention any Protestant denomination until I was compelled to refer to a sermon preached by a Methodist minister after the lecture when answering questions. But what of the man who slandered Catholics in this city during the lectures of Father Chiniquy? Consistency, thy name is not Wilkinson.

R. C. EVANS.

TORONTO, November 6.

A MONSTER SHIP.

From the Pacific Commercial Advertiser for November 11, sent us by Bro. G. J. Waller, we clip the following. HERALD readers, think of a ship big enough to carry more than the half of such a city as Independence, Missouri, inhabitants, property, and accessories:

THE QUEEN OF THE SEAS.

The greatest steamship ever launched has just completed its first voyage across the Atlantic, and the placing of this giant in commission has attracted the attention of the nautical world. This latest wonder of the seas built for service in the Hamburg-American line is christened the Amerika and is a floating dream of magnificence. The ship is original in many important respects, the construction and maintenance being characterized by a lavish expenditure of money for the comfort, safety, and luxury of patrons that won for the vessel the name of the "Floating Carlton," this being the name of London's most exclusive and expensive club.

The Amerika is 687 feet long and 74 feet 6 inches wide, with 42,000 tons displacement and room for 4,000 passengers and a crew of 520 men. Besides this its registered cargo capacity is 16,000 tons. Such a ship could carry all the inhabitants of Hilo proper with room for 1,500 more, and all their furniture and merchandise. In ten trips this one ship could empty Honolulu. Not only is the ship remarkable for its size but for the decorations, the dining services, and the new appliances. It has a florist's shop, electric passenger elevators, gymnasium, state-room telephones, medical baths, and a corps of trained nurses. On the first trip more than 5,000 people used the elevators. A nursery for children is conducted by trained nurses and caretakers, and this department of the ship has proved very popular. It relieved the mothers and delighted the children.

The receipts for passage money on the maiden trip were about $149,480, while the expenses of running the vessel across the Atlantic were about $55,500, leaving a profit to the owners of $93,980. The ship itself cost $3,500,000. It has nine decks, corresponding to a nine story hotel.

Such ships as the Amerika show how far behind the times we still are on the Pacific; but progress is steady here and the opening up of the Orient may do wonders in the way of an improved ocean service.

GENERAL BOOTH AND THE SALVATIONISTS.

Bro. J. W. Rushton, writing from London, November 24, sends us a clipping from the London Daily Express for October 26 with regard to General Booth and the Salvation Army, and requests insertion of the clipping, believing that the statements made by the General are of sufficient bearing upon our work as to be worthy of recording:

GENERAL BOOTH, THE CITIZEN.

The Salvation Army enters upon a new stage of its development to-day. The conferment of the freedom of the city of London on the General is a fact, the formative influence of which upon the movement it would be difficult to exaggerate. In my opinion it will be irresistible. It marks the passing of the Salvation Army into a new arena. Both old-fashioned and new-fashioned Salvationists ask, if not exactly in words, yet in effect, "Will it be for good or for evil?"

Let us look back a little. Ever since the affiliation of the social with its spiritual operations, the process of the respectabilization of the Salvation Army has been marked. There has been less drum and more music, less racket and noise associated with its open-air demonstrations, and more stately, thoughtful, and concentrated evangelistic efforts; fewer manifestations of physical enthusiasm, and more energy wisely directed for the solution of individual and collective human misery—in short, less noise and more and better work. From the hilarity and precociousness of the child the Army has developed into the confident, daring, and ambitious youth.

In the process we have gained more than we have lost, and we see in the striking function at the Guildhall not only an acknowledgment of the splendid achievement of our beloved and remarkable leader, but a proof of the practical faith of the hard-headed common council that we have come to stay.

We know the dangers of being well, and perhaps too well spoken of. Our eyes are not blind to them. Organizations are as easily allured from their original path by the jade of public flattery as are individuals.

TRIAL AND COMMON SENSE.

Success, if not sanctified by trial or bridled by common sense, will afflict the successful with swelled head. Religionists are no exception to the rule; but, after examining the results of the recent waves of publicity upon the bulwarks of our vessel with as much impartiality as it is possible for one to exercise who is on board the ship, I am inclined to think that we will emerge from the trial as pure and as conservative as we did from the wild blasts of persecution.

The freedom of the city of London to the General will be considered by many Salvationists as denoting their religious emancipation from the brand that boycotted them from the higher walks of life. The effect upon Continental opinion will be far-reaching. The right hand of fellowship of the Lord Mayor of London to William Booth, the founder of the Salvation Army, will be reckoned in Continental countries to be as high an honor as if he had been invited to dine and sleep in the palace of their own monarchs.

While I frankly own to the presence of certain pitfalls, I see no serious signs of decay in the spiritual vitality and possibilities of our red-hot religion.

EFFICIENT OFFICERS.

I will give you my reasons. The army is producing within itself a crowd of more efficient and practical officers than it ever has done. The majority of our married officers possess the Spartan spirits, and it is only a question of time when the demands for more powerful leadership in the great trunks of the concern will be met from these.

General French was bemoaning yesterday the poor intelligence of some of his officers. We do the same. But we are determined to raise the standard. We have begun to do so by extending the period of training, raising our curriculum, widening the policy of inspection, and insisting upon men being judged by results.

We have no sympathy with the notion that once a parson necessarily means always a parson. A divine call must be substantiated by human results. This unorthodox view of the cloth partly accounts for our loss of officers in the past. A failure in religious work ought to be considered a greater calamity than one in business; but while giving due weight to the fact that in working an organization we must necessarily depend upon a large proportion of inferior material, we are not blind to our responsibility.

We believe that the future of the army depends not upon its novelty and government, or even disciple and compassion, but its men. Make officers, and the men will always be splendid. Then we are going to stick to our original pattern, only adapting it to the changed and changing conditions of the times and the invasion of new continents of woe and misery.

LEADERS OF MEN.

I believe we have the leaders capable of giving effect to all this. At present they are overshadowed, and, I will add, necessarily overshadowed. I may, however, be permitted to mention a few. Bramwell Booth and his inestimable "partner in this war" would constitute an inspiration to any cause. We can count on them as mighty assets for the future. "Keep your eye on Booth-Tucker," said Earl Grey of the man who is at the head of our missionary operations. The head of our training colleges in this country—Commissioner Howard—is a born maker of men. Men of the type of Commissioners McKie of Australia, Olphant in Germany, Cosandey in France, Coombs in Canada, Miss Booth in America, and Colonel Lamb in England are representative of hundreds of others coming on who have more than enthusiasm of youth on their side—they possess the fervor of semifanatics for the salvation of souls.

In finance we reckon to be not only far above suspicion, but examples of the religion we avow with such boldness, and able, tried men of the stamp of Commissioner Carleton and Colonel Stitt and others—whose salaries are little higher than those of bank-clerks—count for a great deal.

But I attach by far the greatest importance to the maintenance of the spirit of the army, which is, I think, the Spirit of the Son of Man. Let that decline, let that once be poisoned by the spirit of vanity, worldliness, and mere denominationalism and we shall go the way of other and greater organizations.

We must remain poor. We must eschew riches as we would treason. We must remain a separate people. We must abide by the idea of an army. We must stick to our first guns, and thunder their truths whether people are higher critics, middle critics, or no critics at all; whether they frown on us or flatter us. We must above all aim straight and constantly for the salvation of the people from sin, and set every saved sinner to work to save another. That spirit, and that only, will keep us alive.

CORRECTIONS.

In HERALD for November 29, page 1149, occurs the statement that Joseph Smith was born December 24, 1805. It should be December 23.

In HERALD for December 13, page 1186, first two lines of first column, reads: "We had a visit from a son of Heber John Richards, son of Doctor Willard Richards," etc. This is a mistake. It should read, "We had a visit from Heber John Richards, son of Doctor Willard Richards," etc.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. U. W. Greene, in a late letter, says: "You will be pleased to learn that the Saints in Middletown, Ohio, have just opened their neat church, value about two thousand dollars. I tried my hand at debt raising one evening and secured four hundred and twenty-five dollars, leaving a balance of about four hundred dollars owing on the building. A number are attending services there, with a few interested. There are in Dayton eighteen Saints, including two elders, two priests, one teacher. I think the condition is right to effect an organization. The news from Pittsburg is brightening. Bro. D. A. Anderson is there, and the prospect is fair. Good news, peace, and harmony, all through the mission. The year drawing to a close has been one of prosperity to the work. I note with many of the Saints a deeper spiritual life than formerly; in fact, an earnest effort to become pure in heart; to assist in bringing to pass the great work of the Son of God. I opened the work in Mentor, Ohio, last month; quite an interest there. We approach the new year with contrite heart, earnestly praying for strength to overcome self, and build character that will be well pleasing to God."

Bro. J. O. Coshov, of Mountain, Missouri, in the Southern Missouri District, writes of a number who desire baptism and of others much interested in the faith. He wishes some of the ministry, local or general, to visit that point as soon as possible. Will some of the brethren note the request and correspond with the brother.

Bro. David Clow, of Davenport, Iowa, stopped in Lamoni the 19th. He is on his way to Kansas City and Independence for a short visit, then on to Colorado where he expects to reside for a time. He reports the work at Davenport as being in the best condition spiritually that it has been for some time. This is encouraging. There is need of awakening all along the line.

An excellent letter from Bro. E. B. Morgan, dated Cardiff, Wales, November 21, gives an encouraging account of what he is doing. He states that during his visit to London, at the Brighamite conference held October 8, present year, Apostle Heber J. Grant, of the Utah church, stated that he was a polygamous child, that his father was a polygamist, and that if it had not been for polygamy he would not have been born; that he also was a polygamist and that if he could find two or three nice, young ladies who would have him, he would take them to be his polygamous wives; but that the law would not now allow him to do so. Bro. LaRue and Bradshaw at the close of the meeting went up to the stand and asked Apostle Grant if they correctly understood him, repeating what he said; to which he answered, "Yes." After a bit he seemed to wish to moderate the statement, and accused Bro. LaRue of wanting to publish the statement broadcast, and to this Bro. LaRue stated: "Yes, and if it is true, it ought to be; after your making it in the presence of this audience." How will this statement tally with that other statement in which they make denial that they are teaching it? What is the effect of such statements as this of Apostle Grant's upon those to whom they are made? And is it not difficult to separate the sentiment of such expression from the avowal that they are not teaching it? It is at all events strikingly suggestive.

Original Poetry

Supplication.

O God! our heavenly Father,
Before thee we appear,
To offer our petition,
In reverence and fear.
Do hear our supplication,
And grant to us our prayer;
May every land and nation,
In thy salvation share.

For souls now bound in darkness,
O Lord, we pray to thee:
Extend to them thy mercy,
And set their spirits free.
Let heralds of thy gospel
Proclaim thy word abroad;
Till every land and nation
Shall know that thou art God.

Oh! help the young and wayward
To feel the weight of truth;
The glory of Christ's calling,
While in the bloom of youth.
Let not the cruel tempter,
With his mysterious flood,
Drown all their living substance,
And blast them in the bud.

And let thy gentle showers
From the brighter world above,
Refresh this youthful garden,
And give it root in love.
These are thy tender buddings,
And need thy constant aid;
For those who seek thee early,
Shall find thee, thou hast said.

Yea, bless the strong who labor,
To spread the work abroad;
And shield them in temptation
With help thou canst afford.
Oh, bless the old and feeble,
Whose days are nearly spent;
They are the rip'ning fruitage;
Of all, to earth, thou sent.

We thank thee, heavenly Father,
For blessings oft bestowed;
And for the precious gospel,
Sent down from thine abode.
Forgive our wayward wand'rings,
And help us gain thy love,
That we may be preparing,
To dwell with thee above.

TESTIMONY OF ORANGE L. WIGHT.

In the Elders' Journal, published at Chattanooga, Tennessee, by Elder Ben E. Rich, of the Utah church, we find the following statement signed "Orange L. Wight":

In regard to the statement of John W. Rigdon, I indorse it in every point. Bro. John W. Rigdon speaks of being in Liberty prison when the Prophet Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, Hyrum Smith, Lyman Wight, and others were there (the others were Caleb Baldwin and Alexander Macrae). I also visited the prisoners at or about the same time, and slept with them many times at different periods, and I can not recollect of ever hearing the subject of an ordination mentioned.

My father, Lyman Wight, nor my mother, never alluded to it during their lifetime in my presence, so I take it for granted that Joseph, the son of the Prophet Joseph Smith, was not ordained to fill the place of his father, in the Liberty jail. I was born in the state of New York, November-29, 1823, hence am about seven years older than Bro. John W. Rigdon. And if an ordination of young Joseph had occurred in the prison, I would likely have heard of it, and would certainly recollect it.

Previous to this while I was several years younger, the Twelve Apostles were organized and commissioned to assist in leading and governing the church. I can recollect every detail distinctly. My acquaintance with the Prophet was from the year 1830 to his martyrdom, and I can truly say he was a prophet of God and was appointed to the divine mission to organize the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in this last dispensation.

As to the Prophet's believing and practicing polygamy, I have as near a certain knowledge of the fact, I may say, as any man living; I was well acquainted with most or all of his wives, and talked with them on the subject, at the same time my wife also talked with them.

If there is anything further that is necessary for me to communicate in regard to my recollection, I will willingly do so.

Respectfully,

ORANGE L. WIGHT.

There is nothing affirmative in this testimony, and only one circumstance that would have any weight at all; and that is the suggestion that Lyman Wight, being present in the jail at the time the blessing was said to have been bestowed, would in all probability have mentioned it in his family, and Orange Wight would have heard it. Either the blessing never took place, or he through lapse of memory, or for some other cause, has misstated the facts. Fortunately, however, there were other members of the family besides Orange. His sister Anna C. makes the following statement:

I hereby certify that I, Anna C. (Wight) Smith, am the eldest daughter of Lyman Wight, formerly one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, that I was born in Allegany County, New York, September 30, 1825, that I was baptized by my father in Clay County, Missouri, in 1835. I well remember when my father was confined in Liberty jail, Missouri, in company with Joseph Smith and others in 1838 and 1839, and that at one time I visited him while in the jail. I do not remember of having heard anything while in the jail of the Prophet Joseph Smith blessing his son Joseph and setting him apart as his successor, but I do remember distinctly of having heard my father state many times both publicly and in private conversation, that such a blessing was conferred while he was in Liberty jail and that he was a witness to the same.

One instance which I distinctly remember was at a public feast at my father's house at Zodiac, Texas, to the best of my memory held about Christmas, 1850; when all of the Saints of the settlement and a few others were present, including a Mr. William Mogford. When the feast was prepared my father took his place at the head of the table and before taking his seat made an address to the company during which he related the circumstance of his being present when the Prophet Joseph Smith laid his hands on the head of his son Joseph in Liberty jail, Missouri, and blessed him as his successor in the prophetic office. My father also at that time bore testimony that young Joseph was the legal successor of his father.

Here are three parties who were with Lyman Wight in Texas that testify that they often heard him testify to the blessing in Liberty jail, which his own son never heard him allude to. Two of these witnesses specify a particular time and place. Following up this clue we find by reference to Lyman Wight's journal that there was a feast at his house Christmas Eve, 1850, at which time the subject of Joseph's work was under consideration as shown by the entry in the journal. It reads as follows:

Morning opened pleasant and all labor was attended to as yesterday till about five o'clock in the evening at which time the whole branch of the church assembled at my house and partook of a well-prepared feast, a thanksgiving for the blessings we are now and have been enjoying, and in partaking of this feast we do it with the view of expressing our gratitude to our heavenly Father, Jesus Christ, and Joseph Smith for their agency in securing our present state of happiness, peace and prosperity. William Mogford and his wife were present and took supper with us.

The name of Joseph Smith is here too intimately associated with the name of the divine personages to suit our ideas of right and propriety, nevertheless, it shows that at the time the name of Joseph Smith and his lifework were a prominent feature of the occasion, and thus corroborates the testimony of the witnesses as given in the above statements. Both of these witnesses think that Orange L. Wight was present, but whether he was or not the journal of his father shows that Orange was there on the 23d, the day before the feast, and the supposition is strongly in favor of his being present at the feast at his father's house.

Further, there was a conference assembled at the time holding a session each evening. This conference, according to the journal, convened on the 22d and continued until the 29th.

Orange L. Wight was in attendance at the conference, as the frequent mention of his name indicates.

At this conference there was present a representative of William Smith in the person of Elder George Bailey with a view of bringing about a union of the two organizations, hence the subject of succession was prominently before the conference nearly every session.

On the 23d a series of resolutions was passed from which we extract the following on the point at issue:

We in every sense of the word deprecate all aspirants, traitors, rebaptized apostates, and bigots, heady, high-minded office-seekers, and men of corrupt minds, who have gone astray from the counsels of Bro. Joseph, and who consider that he died a fallen prophet, and who have striven through those base and inflammatory influences to take his seat, and who now strive to make the church believe that they now stand as he stood when he was upon the earth. That we believe that any aid or any assistance required from brother Joseph on earth will come through the Smith family, his heirs having the lineal right. . . .

On the 26th the following was passed:

We believe that Joseph Smith, Sen., and family, were ordained from before the foundation of the world to build up the Kingdom of Jesus Christ on the earth, that the will of God might be done on earth as in heaven. And so long as there is one surviving male of the family of Joseph Smith, Sen., it is their right through the Urim and Thummim to receive revelations to lead and instruct the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as established by our beloved brother Joseph when alive and on the earth and we bind and obligate ourselves to receive them as such whenever and wherever they may be found on earth so long as they remain in full fellowship with the kingdom as established by brother Joseph.

On the 27th the subject was again discussed and his journal records that Lyman Wight used the following words:

But some will say, Is it not necessary that some one should receive and give revelations? And I will answer, Yes. The Smith family with the Urim and Thummim for ever. -I have stood for the Smith family for twenty years and am abundantly able to stand for them twenty years more. No man wishes more than I to see them have their rights. And I shall be found standing for them when some, who now think that they are a long way ahead of me, will be found somewhere else. If I am wrong there are three books out of which my wrongs can be read and plainly shown to me.

These extracts are taken from the journal of Lyman Wight, but are not given in full—just enough given to show the drift of the talk and legislation.

The strange thing is how Orange L. Wight failed to hear the statement made at the feast as testified to by his sister and Elder George W. Bird, when it seemed to be the leading topic of conversation and legislation. However, whether Orange L. heard it or not, it is established that Lyman Wight did testify that he witnessed the blessing of Joseph Smith, son of the Martyr, by his father while in Liberty jail, Missouri.

This conference of 1850 also passed resolutions indicative of its feelings for Mother Smith. They are as follows:

Resolved that we, as a branch of the church, will support Mother Smith with ample means to sustain her with every comfort of life so long as she remains on earth; and that we esteem it one of the greatest privileges among the sons of men. And if no other chance presents itself that we can safely rely on we will send men with means to the fullest extent of this resolution.

Resolved that if any man living in the vicinity of Mother Smith's residence, and wishing to come to this country, will place from three to four hundred dollars in her hands and bring true and accurate certificates of the same, he will receive his cash on sight.

We are told by some who were present that the occasion of the passing of these resolutions was that a report had reached them that Brigham Young and his fellows were trying to impoverish Mother Smith.

It has not been a pleasant task for the writer to call attention to these things. Orange L. Wight is his uncle and an old and feeble man, but in the interest of truth we present them.

We accept his statement regarding polygamy in this: "I have as near a certain knowledge of the fact, I may say, as any man living." We think so, and as he claims no knowledge but hearsay, hence no man living knows more.

TOLERATION VERSUS CONTENTION.

(Read before the Fifth Quorum of Seventy.)

There are two sides to each side of this subject, and I hope that in this paper I will be permitted to present it from either or both sides; though I am somewhat cast about to know just where to light upon this question, and desire plenty of room.

"Tolerance" practiced to a certain extent, certainly is commendable and necessary; but like many other good things, carried too far, as it often is, it becomes an evil. To my mind, the thought of "tolerance" carries with it the impression that there is something wrong, something out of harmony with the proper order of things, some law violated. How far we should go in the exercise of this virtue is the question that is at all times confronting us. The difficulty is to know where to draw the line between "tolerance" and "indulgence," or neglect of the individual responsibility of being our "brother's keeper." (Genesis 5:19.)

In our attitude to the world we should occupy in the high and exalted spirit of the gospel, and so represent our Master as to draw all men unto him. (See John 12:32.) What have we to do with the different creeds, either to "tolerate" or condemn them, except as they are obstacles in affirming our message?

True, we should not tolerate sin, or false doctrine, or transgression in the kingdom of God, for in order to "tolerate," we must endure, condone, allow, or permit, none of which we are to consent to, otherwise we become a party to the offense. One in the past has written the following:

"Vice is a monster of deceitful mein,
That to be hated needs but to be seen;
But seen too oft, familiar with its face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace."

We are told that God can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance. We are to be godlike, "transformed to his image." (2 Corinthians 3:18.) Alma tells us that those who had been ordained unto the "holy priesthood," "after being sanctified by the Holy Ghost, having their garments made white, being pure and spotless before God, could not look upon sin, save it were with abhorrence."—Alma 10:1.

Please remember the above quotations and the succeeding ones from the Doctrine and Covenants. Speaking to the elders, "Ye shall see that my law is kept."—Doctrine and Covenants 41:2. "And he that repenteth not of his sins, and confesseth them not, then ye shall bring him before the church, and do with him as the scriptures saith unto you, either by commandment, or by revelation. And this ye shall do that God might be glorified, not because ye forgive not, having not compassion, but that ye may be justified in the eyes of the law, that ye may not offend him who is your Lawgiver."—Doctrine and Covenants 64:2.

We have no right under the head of "tolerance" and charity to violate the instruction of the above. I have sometimes thought that because of being too lenient and thus offending our Lawgiver, we have lost to an extent the blessings we have formerly enjoyed.

CONTENTION

signifies strife, wrangling, controversy. Some persons have combativeness developed to such an extent that they can not feel prosperous without contention of some kind. This characteristic is very apt to lead them into rebellion of some nature. They make fine Protestants. We are told that the "rebellious are not of the blood of Ephraim"; that "the rebellious shall not inherit the land" (Doctrine and Covenants 63:7); that "Satan doth stir up the hearts of the people to contention over the points of my doctrine." (Doctrine and Covenants 3:15.) In the sense here used, we understand it refers to the principle of contending or rebelling against that which is right. But we have other injunctions, such as to "contend against no church save it be the church of the Devil." (Doctrine and Covenants 16:4.) And that we should "earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." (Jude 3.) We read in the Book of Mormon that Alma contended with Amlici, also with the Lamanites; Gideon with Nehor. Nephi contended with his brethren. It is our duty to contend when our faith is assailed. There is no need of "toleration" when the law of the church is violated. There is a provision in the law for legal procedure in every case and every phase of that case. It is much easier to shrink from the unpleasant task of "seeing that the law is kept," by being tolerant and charitable, rather than to suffer criticism and censure for being contentious. The law says the "elder shall see that my law is kept"; not may see. There is no alternative. We have no right to cover sin; if so, we thus become party to the crime. He who would please God rather than man may expect censure. That is our inheritance.

It is true we may be in error in our opinions. Others may differ from us widely, and be honest. We should be considerate, especially in case of doubt or uncertainty. But when truth is revealed our agency begins.

When intelligence, or the light of truth (which "was not created or made, neither indeed can be"—Doctrine and Covenants 90:5) illuminates our understanding, then we are guardians of that truth and become responsible for its defense against all odds, whether in the church or out of the church. This resisting quality is character, and by using it in behalf of right it begets more character.

It enabled Paul to fight the good fight, the Reformers to withstand Popery. It enabled Joseph Smith to endure persecutions, and he and his associates to establish the church of Christ in the midst of controversy. It has made it possible for the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ to withstand the odium of polygamy. And to-day it will enable you and me to withstand the flood of iniquity which is endeavoring to overcome our work. It will enable us to maintain our individual and collective integrity unto the establishing of equality among our brethren, that widows' and orphans' needs be amply supplied, Zion be built up, and the way for the coming of our Lord be prepared.

HOW MANY SPIRITS OF GOD ARE THERE?

Paul says, "one." "One body, and one Spirit, . . . one hope, . . . one Lord, one faith."—Ephesians 4:4, 5. And in 1 Corinthians 12:13: "By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body."

So all this talk about an indwelling Spirit, and an outward or miraculous Spirit, and an abiding Comforter, etc., as relating to different spirits, is all a mistake, if Paul knew anything about it.

As Christ has several names or titles, so has God's Spirit.

It is called "the Spirit of truth," "the Comforter," and "the Holy Ghost." Men receive it to comfort, when they need comfort; as a guide when they know not the way; as an abiding Comforter, when (and as long as) they abide in God's ways, and no longer; as a miraculous power, when necessity demands it.

The Spirit that lighteth every man that cometh into the world (see John 1:9), and guideth into all truth, is the same Spirit that performs miracles, the only difference being in the degree or amount received, which is always governed by faith, righteousness, and necessity. The term Holy Ghost is usually applied when the Spirit is received to an extent that is remarkable. In further proof of this position see 1 Corinthians 12:

Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant. . . . I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed: and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost. Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. . . . But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom: to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; to another faith by the same Spirit; to another gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another interpretation of tongues: but all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will.

In the above quotation we have a description of the operation of the Holy Ghost, and notice Paul says knowledge is by the Holy Ghost, and that the Spirit that gives faith and wisdom is the same Spirit that works miracles. He seems afraid, because of the great differences of the manifestations of it, that some might think it was not the same Spirit, so repeats several times that it was the same.

If the Spirit that lighteth every man that cometh into the world, guides men into the church, etc., is not the Spirit of God, and the same Spirit that works miracles, what Spirit is it?

But some one will ask, "Did not Philip perform miracles in Samaria without the aid of the Holy Ghost?" Did Philip say he did? Or did any other Bible writer say so? If so, where? I have never seen it.

It is assumed by some that Philip was an Aaronic priest, but proof is still wanting to support such a theory. But, if he was, it by no means proves that the Holy Ghost was not the power by which he wrought miracles; for miracles are the result of faith, not at all limited to the Melchisedec priesthood; for marvelous answers to prayer are being received by many not members of the church.

But what proof is there that Philip was not an elder? This is all I know of:

Now when the apostles at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost: (for as yet he was fallen on none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.) Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost. — Acts 8:14-17.

The conclusion has been reached by some that Philip could not have been an elder, or he would have laid on hands for the Holy Ghost, and saved the apostles the trouble of going. But several better reasons might be given than his not having the authority. It may have been then as now, when a sufficient number had been baptized and confirmed into the church, a branch was organized. It is more properly the work of the apostles "to set in order." We often, after baptizing a number (if it be at all convenient), have help when it comes to confirming. I always have.

Then going at such a time to assist him by no means proves that he was not an elder. If I build an up-to-date, modern house, all but putting in the windows, it is good evidence that I am a carpenter, although some other man may have fitted in the windows. So Philip did well the work of an elder all but confirming; he certainly possessed or worked by the power of the Holy Ghost in performing the mighty miracles he did. And it is more reasonable to believe that as an ambassador for Christ, preaching and doing the mighty deeds he did, that he laid on hands to rebuke, and to heal, than that he did not. If he was only a priest, he certainly possessed and exercised more power than priests of that order do now. But some one may say, "He could not have done those miracles by the aid of the Holy Ghost, for it had not fallen on any of them." "Them"—who? The converts. On them it had not fallen as the promised Comforter. In other words, they were not yet confirmed into the church and born of the Spirit. A person might be healed, or have a devil cast out, by the power of the Holy Ghost, and not be born of it. So those converts were blessed by the healing power of it, through the administrations of Philip, but were not yet born of it. But Philip was, and by it brought great joy to that people.

If an elder should lay hands on a person possessed of an evil spirit, pray God to cast it out, and it is done, is it not by the Holy Ghost? If a priest should make a similar prayer, and the result be the same, would it not be by the same power?

So my conclusions are that the Holy Spirit, Spirit of truth, Comforter, and Holy Ghost are, as Paul says, one Spirit, the same thing, received in different proportions, as men merit and circumstances demand, in the church and out of it, the wide world over. But, to be born of the Spirit, men must obey the gospel.

Christmas Carol.

It came upon the midnight clear,
That glorious song of old,
From angels bending near the earth,
To touch their harps of gold:
"Peace on the earth, good will to men,
From heaven's all-gracious King."
The world in solemn stillness lay
To hear the angels sing.

Still thro' the cloven skies they come,
With peaceful wings unfurled;
And still their heavenly music floats
O'er all the weary world:
Above its sad and lowly plains
They bend on hovering wing,
And ever o'er its Babel sounds
The blessed angels sing.

But with the woes of sin and strife
The world has suffered long;
Beneath the angel-strain have rolled
Two thousand years of wrong;
And man, at war with man, hears not
The love-song which they bring:
Oh, hush the noise, ye men of strife,
And hear the angels sing!

And ye, beneath life's crushing load,
Whose forms are bending low,
Who toil along the climbing way,
With painful steps and slow,—
Look now; for glad and golden hours
Come swiftly on the wing:
Oh, rest beside the weary road,
And hear the angels sing!

For, lo! the days are hastening on
By prophet bards foretold,
When with the ever-circling years
Comes round the age of gold:
When peace shall over all the earth
Its ancient splendors fling,
And the whole world give back the song
Which now the angels sing.

THE WAYWARD ONE.

Punishment That Misleads. No. 1.

We have no reason to believe that humanity has, since the creation, lost any of its divine characteristics. We have no evidence against the belief that in the progress toward good we may be able to reach the condition intended for humanity. Now let us start from this standpoint, with a firm, abiding faith in this human family that God has fathered.

Punishment, as the term is generally used, means pain, either mental or physical. Just punishment means suffering for wrong-doing, and so long as there is wrong-doing, there should be punishment. Yet the popular idea has undergone so radical a change, in the last few decades, in regard to the nature of punishment and the manner in which it should be administered, that at present we are inclined to look at the subject somewhat critically, and to question whether, out of a labyrinth of doubts and perplexities, we have yet clearness of vision.

We can not doubt that this question of punishment is a vital one in the rearing of children. How much for good or ill may depend upon a punishment administered or withheld! When we, as parents or guardians, take it upon ourselves to sit in judgment upon a child, a human being whose powers and potentialities we can not know, where we not only sit in judgment but strongly and authoritatively oppose our will to the will and inclination of this as yet undeveloped individual, we are assuming a great responsibility. It is well to remember that we may be making or marring that before which we should stand appalled. It is one thing to teach and train, and by our influence control a child; it is quite another to inflict punishment and by physical force compel him to do our bidding.

Suppose we find our child trespassing. Without questioning, we take the little rosy palm and inflict stinging blows upon it. What would you give, my sister, to be able to read the thoughts that leap into being and form in the child's mind while torture distorts the face and the pain brings tears to the wild, beseeching eyes? Did you even stop to question: Have I by this infliction of pain made my child better at heart? Have I made him more tender and kind and sympathetic? Have I helped to develop anything good and desirable in his nature? The child may not transgress again, for no other reason than because he does not wish his hand to sting and burn. But is this a desirable motive from which the child is to do right, or to refrain from doing wrong? What is punishment save a barbarous practice of inflicting pain unless we consider, first, last, and wholly, the present and abiding good of the child?

Evil tendencies and wrong-doing should never be treated lightly or carelessly, but should receive prompt attention and firm reproof. We should most persistently endeavor to bring up our child in the way that he should go. And, oh, for the wisdom of Solomon that we might know this way.

We do not advocate an easy indulgence nor too great a lenity; yet we do believe that undue severity and indiscriminate punishment have fostered many evils in the human race, and weakened or wrecked many a parent's influence. A friend of the writer once related an experience of her childhood which had made a lasting impression on her mind.

"My parents," she said, "were of the old school, and were very rigid in their discipline. They were not unkind or unloving, but they believed it a great mistake to allow an offense to escape punishment. My childish experience was connected with some fancy cakes that my mother made at one time. Both my older brother and I were very fond of these cakes, and I suspect I had more than my share of them; I am sure my brother thought so. One day I asked my mother if I might have a cake for a doll's dinner in my playhouse.

"I heard Mary tell your brother that there was but one cake left," said my mother, "and I have promised this cake to him when he returns from the errand on which I have sent him."

"But, mother, there were a number of them left in the dish yesterday."

"Mother was busy and made no reply.

"If there is more than one may I have one?" I persisted.

"Why, yes," replied mother, "but be sure you leave one for brother."

"Now the dish containing the cakes sat high up in the old-fashioned cupboard, and to reach it I stood on a chair, and then on tiptoe. I was only a tiny tot. I reached into the dish, which was quite deep, felt a cake, drew it out and looked at it. This was brother's cake, but perhaps there was another. I reached to replace it and the chair tipped a little, as I was near the edge, but regaining my balance I reached again and drew out a cake—and this was mine!

"I had a fine dinner with it, and just as I was clearing away the crumbs, I heard my brother's voice asking Mary for the promised cake.

"Yes," said Mary, going to the cupboard. In a few minutes I heard mother's voice calling me.

"Nellie," she said, in the severe voice that always made me cringe and shiver, "go up to the attic room and remain until I send for you."

"All the brightness went out of my sky; everything was black, my heart all a quiver, and I had no idea what I had done amiss. Such a miserable little girl it was that crept up the dark stairs that led to the attic. To be sent to the attic-room was a punishment in itself, but to be obliged to remain there until further punishment was decided upon, this was terrible. The gloom of the room, the dreary surroundings, and the thought of the impending punishment threw me into a very distressing state of mind.

"My mother was a good woman, all honor to her memory; but in my childhood days, when I erred, she seemed a sort of Nemesis, rigid and unbending. There were many times when she was kind and loving, and I am sure I loved her very dearly, but when she sent me from her to await punishment for some misdeed, I think my mind was not developed enough to hold the thought that she loved me, that I was her own child, and that no actual harm would come to me at her hand. The fear and dread experienced at such times were quite harrowing, even when I knew what my misdemeanor had been.

"I did not, perhaps, do much reasoning, but my impression was that as this had happened to me without any cause, I did not know what might happen next.

"It was perhaps an hour before my mother sent for me, and I think my retirement had not been conducive to clearness of mental vision or self-possession.

"Why did you disobey me and take your brother's cake?" my mother asked.

"It was my cake," I replied.

"Such boldness and effrontery! I am sure my mother was quite horrified.

"But did I not tell you to leave it for your brother?"

"I left brother's and took mine."

"There was but one cake."

"There were two."

"Nellie, do you think to escape punishment by telling a falsehood? Go right back to the attic room and remain until supper-time. And I wish you to think about what a wicked child you are; and of what becomes of little girls who disobey and tell falsehoods."

"Since that day I have seen much of life, and have borne many a load of care, but I think I never carried a heavier burden than the one I took with me up that dark attic stair.

"I was a girl full grown, perhaps, before it occurred to me that I had put back the cake and picked up the same one again. But the grass was growing over mother's grave then, and I would have given all the world then for a friend as kind and steadfast as she had been, for a love as strong and tender. I revere her memory and love her for all that she was to me. Yet I am sure that there were many times when my childish heart went out to her, and I longed for love and sympathy, that this scene and the punishment that seemed to me so unjust and unmerited rankled in my heart, and stood a barrier between me and her who was in truth my best friend."

There can hardly be a more pitiful or appalling spectacle in this world of ours than a child cruelly or heartlessly punished. And while a hasty or thoughtless parent may make mistakes, none but a heartless, wicked one will be guilty of cruelty in dealing with a child.

An old gentleman who had spent his life in the Master's service, once related the following incident, or as he called it, "A tragedy in real life":

He had been making a round of calls and was about to enter the home of a family who stood high in church and social circles. As he neared the house he heard a cry that almost chilled the blood in his veins. It was the cry of a child that seemed to be in mortal pain and fear. He felt a sense of horror and indignation. His nature was tender and sympathetic, and his first impulse was to rush to the rescue of the suffering child and relieve him, as he would have released a bird from a snare, or even a worm of earth from a perilous position. But he remembered that a parent is free to punish a child at will, and that there is no other place where interference is so absolutely forbidden.

He was welcomed by the lady of the house, whom he had always regarded as a capable, well-bred woman. Yet he knew that her hand had dealt the blows that had come to his ears.

When the call was over he turned into a side street, and as he was passing the barn he saw a boy of perhaps eight years of age, lying face downward on the ground sobbing in a passion of anger and grief. He stopped and spoke to him. At first there was no answer save a vigorous and vicious kicking of the small legs. But the man's heart was strangely stirred. He well knew that the little body was covered with cruel welts and marks, and before his mind came a vision of the disfigurement of the child's real self, his sense of injustice, and his better instincts.

Can it be, he questioned, that such treatment is necessary in dealing with a child, the Creator's best gift to man? Then memory took him back to his own mother, and he felt her loving arms about him again, as she talked with him about his childish faults, and told him of the All-Father's love.

"Tommy," he said, "do you know that I love you?"

The boy looked up. "No, you don't," he said. "Nobody does. And I don't love anybody either."

The year passed by. Tommy was known as a bad boy. Many people pitied his mother. She seemed to be so exemplary a woman. And amid much shaking of heads it was whispered about that some children seem to be born to go to the bad in spite of all that parents can do.

The pastor changed his location and one day, years after, he visited a well-known prison. A young man of good bearing and intelligent face came up to him and extended his hand. "Parson," he said, "don't you remember Tommy?"

The pastor grasped his hand. "It is Tommy! How came you here, my boy?"

"My mother sent me here, sir." During all the years the pastor never quite forgot the terror-stricken cries of the boy, nor the forlorn little figure sobbing and moaning on the ground. Yet he said, "But your mother was a good woman, Tommy."

"Yes," replied the criminal, "she was a good woman in many ways, but she knew no more about bringing up a boy than"—he hesitated a moment—"than a barbarian. She is a heart-broken woman now. I have broken her heart and ruined her life. I believe she loved me, and yet I am just what she made me." The pastor noted the bitterness in the man's voice, and the hard, reckless expression of his face.

"This is an awful charge that you make," he said. "It is a fearful thing to thus lay your sins at another's door—and that other your mother, my boy."

Tommy then asked the pastor if he remembered the time he found him lying on the ground possessed by a very fury of passion and anger. "My mother believed that I had taken some money from her purse and accused me of it. Now, in truth I had not taken the money, as she afterward learned, but she believed I had, and beat me until I told her I had. It was the first step on the road that brought me here. My childish honor was sullied, and there was never a right understanding between mother and me afterward. Perhaps she would have made a good boy of me if she had known how. But she did not know how."

We are looking for a better way. We are casting longing eyes toward a time, a condition, when the innate good of the child will be so drawn out and developed that the bad can not reach and hold him. But what is it that is going to bring this about? What is going to be the means of rearing a child who will be good?

The patience and loving kindness, the faith and strength, the truth and steadfastness of perfection are needed if we are to rear a perfect child. And in the degree that parents and guardians possess these qualities, in like degree shall we see the children growing good.—Mrs. Christine Randall Beals in American Motherhood.

Letter Department

SASKATOON, Saskatchewan, November 30, 1905.

Editors Herald: After traveling about four thousand miles and passing through nine different States and Ontario I am again in the very portion of my field I left to go thither. Two months from the day I left Saskatoon I returned. Two years ago I crossed the boundary into my field and landed at Winnipeg on my first mission to the West...

On my trip, rather long and tedious, I saw some of the great and notable cities, saw thousands of faces, the wealthy and the poor, the free and the stingy, the hovels of poverty and the palaces of splendor and affluence. Quite a contrast between the sod shacks of Saskatchewan here and the homes of the Rockefellers of Cleveland. I believe I passed one of the latter. I attended two conferences in the East, sat at many welcome tables, saw familiar faces beaming with love, shook the same old brave hands, was ordained and blessed for my western field, did baptizing, confirming, and administering, and returned to my field happily, hopefully, determinately. But the change two years had wrought! While new-born babes were plump and flushing with health, those of age had extra furrows added. At the first glance I could see the work that two years had made: girls had become more womanly, boys had become more manly. Some who were scarcely heard of when I left are holding the priesthood; pushing into prominence and unavoidable notice; doing creditable service; promising to supplant, to take the place of the dear sires that are passing away. Many of our neighborhood where I first launched upon the uncertain, perilous sea of mortality,—also of the church throughout the mission,—had put to test whatever was before them in the spirit land. They have solved the problem of problems, some unto their salvation, others unto their condemnation. It is somewhat pathetic after all to return to the place of youth and find everything transformed, trees you played under cut down, new houses instead of old ones, the old homestead in strange hands. This was not all my experience, but it has been sensed by many, many indeed.

The latter-day work seems to be undergoing some extension in Ontario; and at the Toronto conference a promise was made, by the authority, we can not doubt, respecting the same.

It is an agreeable change to leave the plains, shacks, long trips, limited fruit supply, for the electric-cars, bath-tubs, big houses, fruit, etc. Time, of course, is developing the West. So far, Winnipeg is the only city to my knowledge having electric-cars. The people are intelligent, informed; which can be easily accounted for as I have before observed in that they have so much of the year to spend at the fireside, to read up—in the country at least. People are pouring in from many countries—many tongues, many dialects, which is well illustrated in the fact that the Bible is called for in Winnipeg in forty-five languages. It is published in about four hundred. Some Saints are coming in from the States, some from Ontario. Some fail to come for the reason that they have nothing to start with and are afraid they will lose it. I have hitherto avoided saying anything to mislead the Saints, to cause them to make a precipitated rush here. Pray and act on your best judgment. The country has its advantages and disadvantages. Our school system took first prize at the World's Fair, but that does not help you much when the schoolhouse is five miles away, or when you are in a new settlement two or three years before you have one. One thing I can say: nearly all who have come are satisfied and better off than before. Good land can be bought at Saskatoon or Weyburn for from six to ten dollars an acre by going far enough into the country; and homesteaded here by going back from fifty to one hundred miles. I write this at Bro. Van Eaton's, from Iowa, who has six thousand bushels of grain this year. Twelve hundred and fifty bushels of oats were threshed on his place in one hour and twenty minutes. Almost incredible!

One never has to naturalize to buy and hold land nor to file on it—only to secure your patent. Some would better their conditions by coming, some would not, I dare say. The bugbear of "swearing allegiance to the king" need not be feared, need deter nor intimidate no one. I would rather give under a king than beg under a president. I should prefer plenty in a monarchy to starvation in a republic—sumptuousness under a king to pauperism under a president. In fact a monarchy of the limitations ours embraces is practically a republic. No government on earth is absolutely perfect. No administration but what has it corrupters and corruptions. Of course we all yield mentally to the preference of the Lord as expressed in the Doctrine and Covenants and Book of Mormon. But it is a matter of what is the best to do for the time being, under the circumstances.

The Saskatoon region affords considerable fuel and water. I think a good idea is for a man to come in May and bring his family and effects and a tent, and he can subsist with little expense till he finds suitable land and locates. I make these references to the temporal situation not from a love of the secular but to save myself the trouble of answering private correspondence. For I probably would not say any more in a private letter than I do here. Then, those who write and want to put you to a lot of trouble and know everything beforehand are the very ones that do not come. Any one addressing the Canadian Land Agency in the New York Life Building, Omaha, Nebraska, will be readily furnished with information.

It has already been fourteen below zero. Some excuse for eating meat here, which of course a Saint would not touch—would rarely need to—from two to three thousand miles south. Brn. Anderson, I am informed, have killed five deer this season, which may be sufficient for the winter. The wild game comes handy for the new settler, who sometimes, it happens, has little if any other dependence. It was under such circumstances the Lord intended them to be used, and he will not hold him guiltless who sheds blood and has no need. I can eat it here and feel good, save myself from the frostbites, whereas if I were to do so three thousand miles south I would be carnivorous—in the abundance of various fruits and heat.

In the spring I am to have—at least I was appointed—to attend General Conference as a delegate; a trip, a visit, an association I know I shall enjoy. That means another long ride, fond experiences, the seeing of those I love.

The sun now hides his face; he is dim and unfriendly for some months to come. I expect to get one hundred or more miles north between now and spring.

Editors Herald: We have had several very spiritual prayer-meetings of late, and the interest taken in these meetings is a cause of joy to us. But the best one we have had probably was the one of Thanksgiving evening. At seven o'clock Elder H. A. Stebbins, of Lamoni, preached a short and interesting discourse. At eight o'clock the prayer- and testimony-meeting was taken up. Not a moment was wasted and the spirit was present in great power. Sr. David H. Smith (the writer's mother) said that about one year ago she was impressed by the Spirit to exhort some who had been attending church to be baptized. She had spoken to some of them and they had obeyed. Some she had not spoken to and they were yet outside the kingdom. Then she said that the Spirit was pleading with them again, and under its influence she gave three verses of poetry, as follows:

The Master is calling to you,
In a voice that is tender and true,
Repent and obey,
Have your sins washed away,
And trust in the word of the Lord.

The Master is calling to you,
He bids you no longer delay,
Arise and obey,
Have your sins washed away,
And prove ye the word of the Lord.

The Master is calling to you,
His Spirit now warns you anew,
Arise and obey,
Have your sins washed away,
And rejoice in the work of the Lord.

We are convinced that the prayer-meeting is the most important meeting of the church for the Saints. No one can afford to miss it. And we have observed that a good prayer-meeting, where the Spirit is present, will move the heart of an investigator as no argument can. We can not make good converts or keep good members and neglect the prayer-meeting.

One more was baptized in our font Thursday evening, just before the prayer-service.

Editors Herald: Having just read in HERALD of December 6 an article entitled "The social aspect of our church," I wish to say that I consider it the most practical article on the gathering of God's people that I have ever read. It is in keeping with views that I have had, so far as I have been able to comprehend the subject.

It is now nearly seven years since my companion and I were baptized into the church. She departed this life May 7, 1905, leaving me alone, to look forward to the time when God's Saints might be prepared for the gathering, when they may feel more fully the necessity of having all things in common. Previous to the time of our being baptized, we were joined to a people in the city here doing missionary-work and street-preaching, purporting to have all things in common. This principle is what attracted our attention and induced us to join our interests with them, to bear the burdens and share the blessings, if any. We recognized it as a Bible doctrine that other so-called churches did not recognize, while we knew very little of it, only the Spirit seemed to direct our minds in that way, and had given us the spirit of the gathering, while we knew nothing of these latter-day revelations. We were enabled gladly, as we labored daily, to put all into what we then considered to be the storehouse of God. Since being a member of the church, at least for five years, I have carried insurance that has cost me about fifty dollars per year, although my companion never approved of it; yet I see no other hope, if called from this stage of action, for protection to those who had lost such support. My willingness to adjust myself to all the laws of God has not become less, nor do I think that if I were permitted to have great wealth, I could afford to have it cause an eternal separation with past and present light, that I could not gladly feel a willingness to submit my all to God's storehouse for the common good.

Looking forward to the time when God shall redeem Zion, when God shall keep us in his redeeming love, and shall supply his obedient ones with every needful thing,

In the faith,

EPHRAIM A. ULRICH.

PRAIRIE DEPOT, Ohio, December 4, 1905.

Editors Herald: In reading the HERALD for November 29, I was much pleased with the report of the mission president, John W. Rushton, to the annual conference of the church in Great Britain. As to local matters of which he speaks I, of course, know nothing; but what he says of "the most threatening of all the menaces" confronting the church of Christ at the present time, I think I do know that he speaks the truth. And when men of God, standing in the front ranks of the church, are enabled by the Spirit of God to see the real condition of affairs and, in thunder tones, proclaim it from the housetops, as it were, it gives me courage. I am very much opposed to this everlastingly praising ourselves: telling what we have done, what great things we are doing, and what a wonderful people we are. To me it shows a lack of spiritual light: a failure to grasp the real conditions existing in the church at the present time. Bro. Rushton says: "We have cultivated a passion for argumentation, and developed some expertness in doctrinal dialectics, and excel in controversy; but as a force for the generation of spirituality, and uplifting fallen humanity, we have been woefully wanting."

Please note that the above was written July 28, 1905; then take up your Ensign for October 19, 1905, and read what was given by the Spirit, through Bro. Joseph Luff, at Independence, Missouri, October 8, 1905, and see how beautifully they agree. The Spirit says that "the weapons of your warfare—many of them—are yet carnal and with these ye can not prevail." Many of "the weapons of your warfare" are this "passion for argumentation" and this "expertness in doctrinal dialectics." And, with these, we may "excel in controversy," but the Spirit says: "When, oh, when will my people learn that it is not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit their work shall be made to succeed?" When the Lord's people learn this all-important lesson, then—not until then—will they become "a force for the generation of spirituality, and uplifting fallen humanity."

Old Mother Eve was "deceived" by Satan; and, as the result of this, she, her husband, and their posterity were all cast out of the garden of Eden. Many men and women have been "deceived" by their fellow mortals, and thus cheated out of an inheritance in the kingdom of God. But the man who will "deceive himself" is easily deceived, indeed, and must be quite willing to be deceived; and the apostle Paul says: "For if a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself."—Galatians 5:3. And Obadiah said to Edom: "The pride of thine heart hath deceived thee."—Obadiah 1:3. Jeremiah said of the same people: "Thy terrible-ness hath deceived thee, and the pride of thine heart."—Jeremiah 49:16. Hence it seems to me there is great danger of our deceiving ourselves, by looking at and magnifying what little we have done, and thus blinding our eyes to the many things we have left undone. The little progress we have made in the past forty-five years is small indeed, when compared with the progress made by the church from 1830 to 1844. And I do not believe, not for a moment, that outside influences are responsible for our lack of progress: all the powers of earth and hell combined can not stay the onward progress of the kingdom of God, when the weapons of her warfare are spiritual. But "self and self-interest" in the church has hindered, is hindering, and will continue to hinder the onward progress of the work until we, especially the ministry and the church authorities, succeed in putting "self and self-interest" altogether in the background, keeping Christ and the interest of his work always to the front. I see no reason, therefore, for crying peace and safety unto the saints of God in their present condition. This is a time of war; and the servants of God are being hindered, baffled, and beaten, in their warfare against sin and evil, simply because they are depending too much upon carnal weapons: too much on "might" and "power"; too much on their ability to "excel in controversy"; and too little upon that spirit of humility and meekness which brings to the servants of the Lord divine power and divine wisdom.

False prophets of the past were always crying peace, peace; but true prophets of God told the Lord's people, as well as sinners, of their sins and failures; hence it is, when I see the leading men of the church willing to run the gauntlet of criticism, by proclaiming against conditions which are surely threatening our destruction, I feel encouraged: I feel that God is working for the salvation of Zion and for her deliverance from bondage. May the day soon come when the Lord's people shall be free, indeed, and able to see eye to eye.

My field address is 574 Dayton Street, Akron, Ohio.

ISAAC M. SMITH.

KANSAS CITY, Missouri, November 28, 1905.

Saints' Herald: I have been thinking it might be of some interest to some of the Saints in Lamoni to know what we are doing in Kansas City, Missouri. Brn. Bradley and Goold and myself and family, with other Saints, have organized a Sunday-school at Thirty-eighth and Woodland Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri, called the Ivanhoe Mission Sunday-school. We have Sunday-school at ten and preaching at eleven in the forenoon, prayer-meeting at half past six and preaching at half past seven in the evening. Bro. Kenworthy was the speaker Sunday morning. Bro. I. N. White and our worthy Bro. Robert Winning in the evening. There is good interest manifested, the Saints being cheered and comforted, and all seem determined to serve the Lord. We are having the blessings as in days of old. May we all live worthy is my earnest prayer.

Your brother,

L. A. FOWLER.

WESTON, Iowa, December 5, 1905.

Editors Herald: I was pleased to see the article in last week's HERALD about "Prayer Unions," because we have met so much opposition in regard to them from the ministry and others. I wish to bear my testimony in regard to them, because I know they are recognized of God, where they have been conducted with wisdom, and with an eye single to the glory of God; and great blessings have been given by the prayer of faith.

A short time ago the sisters met at the home of an aged sister who has been confined to her bed several months, suffering great pain from a large cancerous sore on her forehead. She was instantly relieved of all pain, and was resting comfortably the last time we visited her. At another time these same sisters met at the home where one of them lived. Several of her children were sick in bed with rheumatism, and through their faith and prayers they were all healed. Several years ago when the Prayer Union was first started, God was pleased to give me a dream which showed me plainly it was recognized of him. I saw several sisters going to a small house to hold their meetings. We walked through plowed ground, went through wire fences, and worked very hard to get there. When we all entered we knelt down in a circle, and first one prayed and then the next; and so on till all had prayed; and while we were thus engaged in prayer I looked up and saw the heavens open above us, and saw the heavenly host surrounding the throne of God, singing one of our hymns:

"Sweet the time, exceeding sweet,
When the Saints together meet."

It was the sweetest music I ever heard. For several days it seemed I could still hear them. It often makes me feel sad to think the Saints are not more united in the work; for in unity there is strength, and God requires us to be one. And are we not in a measure hindering the work of God and failing to receive the blessings he is ready and willing to bestow upon us, if we would only put ourselves in a condition to receive them by being united?

I believe the sisters have their part to perform in this latter-day work. May God bless and prosper every effort that is put forth in righteousness, is the desire of

Your sister in the gospel,
CHRISTINA RASMUSSEN.

BISBEE, Arizona, December 8, 1905.

Editors Herald: A few words from this out-of-the-way place may perhaps not be amiss, as we are "in the conflict" and "the soldiers of Christ" are at all times interested in knowing how the battle goes at the outposts as well as in the general field.

A few Saints are located here in this large copper-mining camp of more than ten thousand population, and are trying to live their religion and let their light shine—that is, some do and some do not, as in all the world over—and, when opportunity offers try to point the way of life and hold up triumphant the ensign of King Immanuel.

We are off the beaten track of missionaries, and hardly ever see one. But some who were here a few years ago left their judgment behind to the effect that Bisbee was not ripe for the promulgation of the gospel (so the report goes), and so nothing has been done in that line except for individual and conversational efforts.

While the writer is unable to see the sense of such a statement, he is willing to let every man have his own opinion—and claims as much for himself,—but that the Devil and the "Utah Mormons" do not hold that view is made manifest on every hand.

Probably Bisbee is no worse than any other western mining-camp, yet Satan has general emissaries and special agents here for every known vice, and most of it is displayed in broad daylight and flaunted openly. Yet is there a great number of this population who are striving to be good and to do good; and even in the devotees of evil we see traits of love and kindness that warms our hearts towards them, and makes us love the sinner though we hate his sin. Surely there is good in every soul, although, fettered by Satanic power, it can not rise to assert itself! And these conditions, do they not call to high heaven for a deliverer,—for the deliverer, that the dungeon of darkness may be opened, the fetters sundered, and the captives freed? Is not the command to preach to all the world?

It has been our doubtful pleasure to meet with some of the Utah ministry in their labors from house to house. A Mr. Larsen and another elder came to the house of Bro. James Farley and offered a tract on "first principles of the gospel" which was accepted, and they were invited into the house and to dinner. The writer and wife were visiting there at the time and, when we announced ourselves as "Josephites," of course an argument ensued. We were four to two.

In our discussion there was nothing new brought out, except that Mr. Larsen called the Reorganization "an insignificant little pup," (to which one of the sisters replied, "But oh, how it bites"!) and stated that he had "whipped" a number of "Josephite" elders in public debate, both in the "South" and lately in Oakland, California. (How is that, Bro. Terry?) He said that they were always willing to debate with the Josephites, but when the sisters showed him "the books" and read to him the contents of them, bearing on polygamy, he said never a word.

He asked one of the sisters what she would do if "our Joseph" should have a revelation in favor of polygamy and present it to the church, to which she replied that she would take the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants and see what they said about it, and then she would tell Bro. Joseph that "in the mouth of two or three witnesses shall the truth be established," and reject the revelation. He probably thought the Josephites "a rebellious people," but replied not at all.

Mr. Larsen is in charge of the Southern California District, with headquarters in Los Angeles. And now when you Southern California "true Latter Day Saints" meet Mr. Larsen, and he boasts again of "whipping Josephite elders," tell him that he was routed by two Josephite women in Bisbee, Arizona.

We asked him if he would consent to meet our elders in public debate in Bisbee on "church propositions." He said, "Why, yes." But when we asked him to set the time he said, "Suppose we say next Thursday"; after we had told him that we would have to send to Los Angeles at least for one, and that would hardly give us time to get a letter there, and he knew it. (Bro. T. W. Williams, will not you try to accommodate him when he gets "home"?)

The next Sunday a Mr. Robinson, in charge of the California and Arizona Mission, with headquarters in San Francisco, came here and spoke to a fair-sized audience, and, according to reports, made a favorable impression. Some of our people that attended state that he referred to the Reorganization as "another people who made claim to be the true successors of the church organized by Joseph Smith in 1830," but that "they had nothing to show for it—no temples and no following to speak of"; that they had to wait for a boy to grow up to be a man before they had a leader at all—and that if these people came to Utah they would not know what to do with the temples there and that "there is not a mother's son among them who would know how to use the font even."

He said that the doctrine of the church had never been changed by them; but that they taught everything as it was taught by Joseph Smith and his colleagues since the time of the rise of the church. He states that he knew that "Brigham Young was a true prophet of God" (!) and the true successor to Joseph Smith. He acknowledged polygamy and justified it, and those who practiced it. Said that it was not preached now because "they believe in obeying the laws of the land," and (quoting) "he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land."

So much for Brighamism and its emissaries. Whether they shall succeed, by thus passing themselves as angels of light, in blinding and leading away some one or more of groping humanity, is not yet in evidence. So far as we are concerned, it gives us an opportunity to make ourselves known, and to talk to those we meet, showing the true light as far as we are able. And it should be said for the majority of the Saints here, that they are willing and anxious to defend the truth wherever and whenever they can.

There are more than a dozen Saints here, though somewhat scattered, and we have been straining our eyes for years, looking for the elder that never came. We are every one of us working (and where we work all our time is demanded, even Sundays), so our hands are tied and we can not even have prayer- or sacrament-service.

We did have some lovely services at one time with the Spirit's power attending every one, and we all walked uprightly and loved one another. But the enemy scattered his seeds amongst us, and bred the usual distempers, until the love grew weak, and self became exalted, and we met no more at the Master's feet.

Our constant prayer to God the eternal Father is that we may all be speedily reimbued with his divine love, and that we may have opportunity to enjoy the glorious feast that we have tasted of old, that we may be united and remember our covenant which we have made to keep the laws that have been given us for our guidance and exaltation, and eschew all evil.

Some there are who, by their unwise words and idle boasting, cast a shadow on the church of Christ. For all such we pray that the Spirit of light and understanding may be given them, so that we may not have the finger of scorn pointed at us because of their membership, when we make known our faith.

May the Giver of all good gifts bless abundantly every one who is called to be a Saint, and keep them safely all their days, that we may all together meet in the kingdom of our God and enjoy for ever the felicity of the redeemed.

Yours in gospel bonds,

G. E. BALCHEN.

EAST HELENA, Montana, December 3, 1905.

Editors Herald: A few isolated Saints here are trying with the help of God to be Saints not in name only, but by deeds also. We love to read your pages, and I do not know how we would learn about this good and glorious work of the Lord if we did not read. Elder J. D. Stead calls on us once in a while and fills our hungry souls with many good sermons, and also gives us many good and encouraging words of advice. I pray the Lord to bless him in his good work, and may he sow the seed on good ground where it will bear a hundredfold.

My heart is made to rejoice in God for the light, and for the blessed gospel in these the latter days. But oh, how sad to think of those who were in the light and are drifting away for the sake of money and worldly pleasures, forgetting their souls' salvation. We should all work while it is yet day. I thank my heavenly Father for being so kind and merciful to me in sparing my life to accept this grand and glorious work. Sometimes I have little trials, but that does not discourage me. They only make the work look brighter; for I know this work is of God, and I rejoice in it.

Ever praying for the advancement of the cause, and that all God's children may hold out faithful to the end, I am,

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. AUGUSTA TEUSCHER.

COLDWATER, Michigan, December 4, 1905.

Editors Herald: Allow me to say through the columns of the HERALD to the Saints of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District, that, on account of poor health, I have not been able to reach all points of the district which I expected to do in the interest of the financial part of the work. For this reason, I take this way to reach all and inform them that we are in need of help to supply the families. Before the end of this year, we would be pleased to have the privilege of placing on the book the name of every member in the district with some amount, let it be much or little, just as the Lord has blessed them. This has been a bounteous year, and many debts have been canceled that we owed to our fellow man; and yet, how many there are who have failed to make a partial payment on the oldest debt they owe. How can we bow before a just God and say, "Father, give us this day our daily bread," and know at the same time that through our selfishness we have appropriated to ourselves all he has blessed us with, and failed to give to him and his work the small amount he has asked for, and which justly belongs to him, as tithes and offerings? We are told in Psalms, "Gather my Saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." Then it will not be wise for us to wait to help the cause until we can do so without a sacrifice on our part, for it is by our sacrifice, and doing what is required of us, that we are promised blessings in this life, and a part in the celestial glory. We feel thankful that many of the Saints in the past have been striving to do what they could along this line of the work; but let us remember the thought should not be with us, What we have done in the past; but should be, What can we do now and in the future to advance the cause we love. How often we have heard the Saints urge and tell those who have become acquainted with the work that delay is dangerous and that to-day is the accepted time to obey God's commands. Is it not equally true with us who have obeyed the first principles of the gospel, and fail to comply with other demands that God has made of us? May it not be possible with some of us, if we wait till next year to help, when we can now do a little at least, that we may never in this life have the opportunity? Will it not be better to comply with the demands made of us as they come? And as we do so they will become easier for us. We trust all may do what they can, so we need not call on the Bishop in order to balance up with families the last of the year. Please send in by December 25 so as to get credit in this year's report, and oblige,

Your humble servant,

SAMUEL STROH, Bishop's Agent.

FULTON, Iowa, December 4, 1905.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since there has been anything written from here. The year is drawing to a close, and when we look over the past eleven months the question arises, have we done our duty, or have we left undone things that we should have done? Have we attended all the meetings we could? Have we let our light shine as we should have done? Have we aided the Lord's work both by precept and example? Have we aided and stood by the officers the best we could, or have we been a hindrance to the work? We must either be a lifter or a leaner. What we sow, we must reap. There is much that we can do without being commanded. Have we paid our tithing, or do we wait until we are in a better condition, have enough laid by, so we can say as the rich man said, "Soul, thou hast much in store; take thine ease"? Shall our fate be like his? Do we make the sacrifice that we should? It is by the sacrifice we make that we receive a blessing. I wish all the Saints in this Eastern Iowa District would wake up out of their lethargy, and come to the work of the Master. Those who are energetic receive blessings from God's hand. Shall we not all receive blessings?

I am still Bishop's agent, and will promptly give a receipt for moneys sent me. The elders' families are behind with their allowance, so please do not delay; but send to me what you can spare before January 1, 1906.

The elders with the tent made good openings near here this summer; they have had the pleasure of baptizing ten, mostly heads of families. I had also the pleasure of baptizing three heads of families. The gospel work is widening here. I have many calls to come to their homes and talk with them. I intend to respond in the very near future; but as a farmer I have to look for the temporal things. But I have done the best I could under present conditions. I have traveled over three hundred miles with buggy since September in the Master's work; and I feel good over my efforts. One of those I baptized the 17th of September had a paralytic stroke two days before being baptized. Some told her not to be baptized, for it would surely kill her. But she obeyed the gospel. She came up out of the water rejoicing, and now she is entirely well. Shall we not praise such a kind Father, and serve him?

There are some drawbacks in our branch, but those who meet together feel blessed. We must humble ourselves (let others do as they please or will), and discharge our duty with an eye single to the glory of God.

Sometime in the last year I worried over the condition of the branch very much. Then one noon being tired I lay on the bed to rest. No sooner had I lain down, thinking over the branch affairs, than I was shown the Savior's presence; and I lay on his bosom. That took all my worry away; and from that time until now I have gone forward in the discharge of my duty. And, oh, how many blessings I have received.

How can we expect to be blessed if we have within our bosom a hatred against our brother or sister? How can elders be blessed in their efforts, if they are not in harmony with one another, and in harmony with God's law? Let the elders go forth being ensamples to the flock. And, dear Saints, lay aside everything that will hinder a free intercourse with God's Holy Spirit. If you use the filthy weed, lay it away, and help God's work along with the money you spend for it, and surely God will bless you. Saints, let your light shine. You surely have an influence over your fellow men. Wield it.

JOHN HEIDE.

SANFORD, Colorado, December 6, 1905.

Editors Herald: It has been quite a while since I wrote to you, but have tried to keep busy at work in the Master's cause. After our reunion at Colorado Springs, Bro. J. D. Curtis and I went to Pueblo and held forth on the street-corner about three weeks and then continued in private houses for a while. Nine were baptized at that place. We then came to the San Luis Valley to labor among the Brighamites. We labored at Antonito and then went to Fox Creek, where I and Bro. Shupe were attacked last summer. While there two of Bro. King's sons were baptized. Our next place was Morgan, Colorado, where Bro. J. W. Morgan and I baptized thirteen last winter. They would not let us use the schoolhouse, but we succeeded in getting an old log house where we held forth for two weeks, and then I received a written notice from Bishop Price and his two counselors to discontinue our services there, which we did, but the following day we baptized two, one of them being the Bishop's daughter (Sr. Bridges). We held forth then in a private house and the following Sunday we baptized Bro. John Hunt, who formerly had been one of the bishop's counselors.

We are now at this place preaching in the schoolhouse. This is a Brighamite settlement, but we are having good crowds. We have preached two nights and have had an attendance of about one-hundred each night. We will continue as long as the interest justifies if we do not get closed out.

The Spirit of the Master has been with us in our work. Several families here are living in polygamy. It is not a dead issue out here. Bro. J. D. Curtis and I have baptized thirty-one this conference year.

In hope of eternal life, we battle on.

J. F. CURTIS.

RAYMOND, Idaho, December 5, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have just returned from a trip into Star Valley, Wyoming, where I endeavored to present the truth unto the inhabitants of Smoot, Osmond, Afton, and Auburn. At the last named place I was challenged by the Mormons to discuss church differences, and I accepted the challenge. But after about two weeks of waiting for them to get a man to meet me, they finally concluded they only wanted to discuss one night, and rather than give them any room to say that I would not meet them I agreed to discuss, providing we discussed the necessity for a Reorganization. So their representative, Mr. Clark, and I crossed swords on the 27th of November, each of us having two thirty-minute speeches. At the end of the debate, they concluded they would try me another night, provided they could have the privilege of choosing another man to meet me. I told them it made no difference to me who I discussed with. So they chose a Mr. John Hyde, a returned missionary, to meet me next night on the same proposition. Well, we had it the next night, and that ended the discussion. But I do not think they were any better satisfied with the arguments presented by their last representative than they were with the first. And I believe I am safe in saying our cause lost nothing by the discussion.

Bro. August Okessen, of Afton, Wyoming, was my moderator, and all went along agreeably, and at the close of the discussion the audience gave a vote of thanks to both disputants, and seemed well pleased with what they had heard, notwithstanding I gave them strong arguments from the Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, also from the Journal of Discourses and Millennial Star. Well, I can not say what the result will be, but good seed has been sown in Star Valley, and we will have to leave it with him who giveth the increase. May God bless his Saints everywhere is the prayer of

A. J. LAYLAND.

CENTRAL CITY, Illinois, November 26, 1905.

Editors Herald: I am still in the work, doing about half what I might do. I have been out warning my neighbors and trying to get subscribers for the Ensign. I think that the HERALD or Ensign ought to be in every home of Latter Day Saints. I would be very thankful to any one who would send me church literature; for if there ever was a town in the world that needed the truth in its fullness, it is Central City. I want to get some good elder to come over here and stay at least two weeks. If there are any elders not in the field of labor, remember that this place is waiting for good news to come; and do not delay, but come at the earliest opportunity. My house is a home for all Saints and elders. Bro. Goostree and Bro. Spurlock sowed good seed, and we do not want the work to stop.

The Missionary Baptists are holding a revival meeting at this place, and I have been attending it; and on the way home one of the good Baptist sisters said, "We say that we are right and you say that you are right." I said to her, "Sister, there are things in the Bible that the Baptist Church does not preach nor practice." (I pointed out James 5:14; also Mark 16:16, 17.) The sister said, "I know that that is in the Bible; but I do not know why the Baptists do not preach it." I said, "It is because they are preaching for money, and not to save sinners," and I think that I was about right, for if the church had not raised ten dollars for the preacher he would have closed his meeting that night.

BAXTER, Iowa, December 2, 1905.

Editors Herald: I was reading the HERALD this morning, and was much encouraged by its influence. It always brings comfort, and the burdens seem lighter after reading the glad news it brings.

Not long ago I went to a neighbor's house whose little child had died. The hour arrived for the funeral, and the minister failed to come. We waited an hour, and he did not come. One of the friends came to me and said, "You are the only Christian in the house. Will you read and offer prayer?" I replied, "I will do the best I can." I thought, Does the church approve of my doing so? My patriarchal blessing says, "Now seek to serve him acceptably, using the intelligence and wisdom that he has given thee as far as opportunity will present in teaching others. There will be around thee opportunities given to teach others of the blessings that have been brought to thee by reason of the gospel law."

I thought, This is one of the opportunities. As I looked on that people I saw some that belonged to other churches; some who oppose our church. I felt blessed in my weak effort.

The branch at Clear Creek still lives, with Bro. W. C. Nirk at the head, who meets with the Saints the second Sunday in each month. The Sunday-school work is under the care of Sr. Mae Huffaker.

I can say, truly, this is the work of God. He has proved by evidences given, and many blessings received in times of need. I wish to set such an example that it will influence others to see the true light of the gospel.

MARTHA VEACH.

FARWELL, Michigan, December 2, 1905.

Editors Herald: I feel deeply interested in the work going on in our branch of late, and appreciate the efforts of our teacher, Bro. Wooden, and our priest, Bro. Pyers, in trying to bring about a better condition of affairs in general. The officers of the branch have seen for some time past that the branch needed "cleaning up," as they termed it, and have set to with a will to accomplish the desired end. There were several delinquent members to be looked after, and brought back to a good standing in the church, and a decidedly better form of living established. Bro. Wooden and Bro. Pyers have labored with a will to bring about a change, and in the address of the former to the members, Sunday, he showed how deeply interested he had become in the work. And I think the hearts of some of us waxed warm in sympathy with the subject in discussion. He plainly told them all their duty toward the church, and also toward their Savior. He dealt out no harsh measures for them to live up to, but merely gave them a standard to which he knew they could all reach if they so desired. He said he had lots of patience with those who "didn't understand the law," and with those who "would try," but none at all with those who said in plain words, "I won't do it." I think the time is at hand when all the people of God will be called upon to step up a little higher in their mode of living, when they will realize that even in their own homes and the every-day affairs of life, they will need to look at their every act, to see whether it is in accordance with the word of God.

"He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God and he shall be my son." What are we to overcome? All that is sin. Every, sinful desire of the heart. All unkindness, all deceitfulness, all untruthfulness, all unjust dealings one with another, all unjust judgments, all evil sayings, and become a "peculiar people, zealous of good works." If we overcome and cast out of our lives all that is displeasing to God, we will, some day, hear him say, "Here is the patience of the Saints; here are they that keep the commandments of God."

Your sister,

MRS. R. C. H.

NANTYGLLO, Monmouthshire, Wales, November 18, 1905.

Saints' Herald: No member should be without the HERALD in his home. We get in it good doctrinal and encouraging sermons, moral teachings that tend to build up the lives and characters of the Saints. I have appreciated from time to time the splendid articles written by Bro. W. Woodhead. The letters, too, are of such a nature that they seem to continually present anew to us the sick and afflicted, the tried and the true, who can bear testimony of the loving kindness of our heavenly Father, in giving them comfort in various ways.

I trust that we shall all seek for that power, the testimony of Jesus, which if obtained will cause every one that receives it to realize their individual responsibility to God and his fellow creatures. I am indeed grateful for the many noble and painstaking efforts put forth in the HERALD and Autumn Leaves by our brethren and sisters. Grateful, because it takes time, labor, and patience to write in such a way as to edify.

In Wales generally the Lord's work moves slowly, but I trust that we shall all make the effort to reorganize ourselves to duty. There are a few faithful and noble workers among the members and ministry; but so many that are practically wasting their time, and when I say time, it means talent to some extent. Because to be busy is to increase our ability; and the greatness of this work can be seen more fully, the more knowledge we gain and apply it in this work.

There is a thought that has borne heavily on my mind at times, and I have been afraid to write about it for fear I would disturb the feelings of some; but I hope all will try to bear with my inability to express those thoughts referred to. I have met a few brethren and sisters who are inactive through what seems to me to be a lack of the testimony of the Spirit of God. I will not attempt to tell the reason why every brother or sister has not received that witness of the Spirit. It is truly better to heed the commandments of God than rush people to the waters of baptism. "All those who humble themselves before God and desire to be baptized, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and witness before the church that they have truly repented of all their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end, and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into his church."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 7.

Brother ministers in Christ, let us each one endeavor to let this work have the effect in the lives of our fellow creatures that the God of heaven has designed. I am not writing in the spirit of controversy, but in love toward all of the family of God. I see that those fit to be received by baptism are to be humble, and to have a desire to be baptized, and are to manifest by their conduct that they have received a portion of that Spirit which caused the people in sacred history and in our own time to cry out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" having at the same time that determination which Jesus refers to when he says, No man goeth to build a tower before he sits down and first counts up the cost.

The elders or priests are to have a sufficient time to expound all things concerning the church of Christ to their understanding, previous to their partaking of the sacrament, and being confirmed by the laying on of the hands of the elders; so that all things may be done in order. And the members shall manifest before the church, and also before the elders, by a godly walk and conversation, that they are worthy of it, that there may be works and faith agreeable to the Holy Scriptures, walking in holiness before the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 17:18.

The foregoing shows what a solemn matter it is to handle sacred things, to represent God, to be the instruments among men by whom the Holy Spirit is to be poured out upon those who make themselves by obedience heirs of the promise. In reviewing the last verse quoted, I find that people are not to be inducted into the church without a fair knowledge of what they are doing; their condition, their responsibility to God must be made clear to their understanding, "previous to their partaking of the sacrament, and being confirmed by the laying on of the hands of the elders." They must be worthy to partake of the sacrament at their reception to the church, as required in after-times; they are to be worthy of the sacrament, and of the Holy Spirit, that there may be works and faith agreeable to Holy Scriptures,—a faith that brings down the universal promise of the Savior: "If any man will do the will of my Father he shall know." Paul says the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.

Then is it not a pity for any one in the church through his own neglect, or the elders', to come short of the spirit of the promise, which brings light, individuality, a realization of God, even the power of God unto salvation, unto all them that believe?

Without this Spirit we shall have members who are a lag to the work, who are as limp as cloth. I know we have troubles with those who sin against that God-given light. But if we as ministers do our part then we are free.

Better is the church without those people who have not complied with those laws which entitle them to knowledge, than with them. I know the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net which gathereth in of every kind.

I may say that in this district we have had some tilts with the Utah elders during the last summer. One of the many sons of Joseph F. Smith was here, and because we made known on the square at Brynmawr who he was and his associates, they, for the first time in my experience, made a sort of a defense, by calling us names, thus: Because the Reorganizers were few in number, he said we were like the tail wagging the dog, and other illustrations, and when we were not to be seen, they said we gave them a blow in the back, but the boys were on it, and sent to their place of abode asking them to come and get a theological blow in the front. They refused at first, but finally came. We gave them the reasons why we opposed them.

Because they went about villifying the character of the martyred Prophet, tacking to his name and character doctrines that were infamous, wicked, and contrary to the God-given laws of the church,—the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants; and as long as they did not hang the evils upon the right persons we should oppose them.

We presented the usual clippings giving accounts of the doctrines of Adam-god, plurality of gods, exaltation of gods, blood atonement, polygamy, sealing, etc.

We proved that these doctrines belonged to the illustrious Brigham Young and his associates, aiders and abettors of these evils that grew from apostasy and men of corrupted minds.

They plead ignorance of the Journal of Discourses. "Well," says I, "lend me your Doctrine and Covenants, and I will prove from these your belief in polygamy, plurality of gods, blood atonement, and sealing of wives, or celestial marriage. This man Smith, who could not help the conditions under which he was born, was a poor sample to come from that church pleading the abolition of polygamy, when his father was still living in it. I am glad he was representing the "dog," and me the "tail." The "dog" was the refuge of lies and vice. Well, they cleared out after a while from the whole of this valley, because of the persecution of those "nasty, contentious, hateful, blinded, Josephites." Is not it funny logic, for men who claim all keys, fullness of priesthood, etc? I have been having personal correspondence with him since, which I was desirous to publish but was refused permission.

We have a few of their people interested here, who believed the gospel, but were asked many times why they did not testify that President Young was a prophet of God. What thousands of innocent people are deceived by priestcraft!

I feel that many honest people might be rescued from their grasp. One thing is certain, they do not have a happy hunting-ground where there may be Josephites. I have watched with interest the account of our President's and his associate's labors in the salty land.

We are still hopeful of progress in the future, even in Wales. We have a good opening and interest at Abertillery. We have meetings alternately in the houses of Sr. Throll and Mr. Thomas Hearne, who formerly belonged to the Brighamites, but will soon be with us. He is an active man, and gets many to the meetings. They have fed and sheltered the elders of Brighamism for years. We expect a debate at Abertillery in February between Bro. Rushton and a Christadelphian. Bro. Morgan has assisted us in our new opening at Abertilly; also Bro.

Evans, our late missionary, and Bro. Green of Cardiff. May God bless them and all others who are laboring conscientiously for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God.

Your laborer in Christ,

THOMAS JONES.

Am I?

Am I keeping my covenant with Christ, which I made when I was buried with him in the watery grave? Did not I promise to keep his commandments as fast as they were made known to me? Yes. Well, have I kept my word? Let us examine ourselves, and see if there is one that I have broken. Well, I pray every day, and endeavor to keep myself unspotted from the vices of the world. I go to Sunday-school, to prayer-meeting, and preaching-meeting, and try to let my light shine to the world. I do not steal, or take my Lord's name in vain. I visit the sick, help the needy, the poor, speak a word for the Lord whenever I can, and think it will do good. I never take anything but what is mine. You do not? No. Well, let us see. You know the good old Book says for Christ, or God, that this "whole nation" has robbed me. Say, brother, are you one of the number that has robbed God? No. Have you given him his part of all that you have gathered, in a financial way? No, I have not done that. Well, are we not commanded to pay one tenth of all we have to the church—God's part? Yes, it seems like that is a duty to be performed by all who have taken upon themselves the name, "Latter Day Saint."

Now, let the Lord hold back the rain for just one year. Do not you think that would hurt us in our finance a great deal more than it would to give him the tenth of what we have? I truly believe that if all the Saints would pay their tithes the Lord would do just as he has said he would. That is, he would open the windows of heaven, and pour out such blessings that man surely would rejoice and realize that God is good and true to every promise made to man. Oh, if latter-day Israel only would be obedient to their covenant, Zion soon would be redeemed, and the Saints of God would soon be gathered home, no more to be separated. This is what I long to see, but the way that we so-called Saints are doing, it will surely be after I am laid in Mother Earth. But say, Saints, let us quit our quarreling and fighting, and trying to devour each other, and do our duty, and we will surely be a blessed people. There are too many in our day partaking of the forbidden fruit. Can not we be men and women, children of God in deed and in truth? Think the matter over, brethren, and think seriously. And let us try the Master one year; and when that twelve months is up I assure you we will be willing to trust him still.

Oh, let us come up higher. Father, help us; we are so weak. Brethren of the Nodaway District, we have three families to support. Will we support them? If so you will have to send in your help, each of you, so our boys can stay in the field. I have not enough to help them for November, and this the 12th of December. So come to the front, one and all. Do not wait. The Bishop's agent has not sufficient at all times. Sometimes he pays out of his own pocket in order to keep from calling on the Bishop. So please do not delay.

Yours for the glory of Zion's cause,

R. K. ROSS, Bishop's Agent.

MOUND CITY, Missouri, December 12, 1905.

Extracts from Letters.

W. J. Baldwin, Fort Dodge, Kansas: "Sr. Baldwin's health is improving since I wrote you before. We humbly ask the church at Lamoni to pray for her that she may be restored to her wonted health."

Sr. Victoria McAlister, Otto, Texas: "Bro. Harp has been here holding a series of meetings, preaching seven times, with increasing interest. The first sermon, eight were present; the last, the house was full. We began in the schoolhouse and closed in a large church-building. The people say there was never such a trumpet sounded in Otto. Quite a number invited him to their homes: the rich as well as the poor. We hope the conference will return Bro. Harp to this mission, for he is the kind of a man we need here. Our district conference will convene February 9."

B. F. Spicer, Marlin, Texas: "Bro. Harp has been doing a good work here, and it looks as if God were moving the work along. Bro. E. W. Nunley gave us a call and we enjoyed his visit. He gave the Saints good advice along the line of their duty to God and their fellow men. Saints here seem to be in good spirits. We hope the time will come when we can build a place of worship."

Charles M. Pinion, Arkansas City, Kansas: "If any of the elders visit this town I want them to come to our home at 915 South A Street. We have not seen a Latter Day Saint since we came here. The people of this place, as a rule, are mostly theater-goers and dancers, judging from the general conversation. I desire the prayers of the Saints that the Comforter may abide with me and direct me in my duty toward God and man."

Mrs. Jennie Youmans, Elling, North Dakota: "'Life is real, life is earnest.' I am a mother of two small children, and I realize the necessity of teaching and practicing sincerity. I notice what implicit confidence they have in father and mother. Oh, for patience! We need patience and firmness with these little ones."

A. B. Dunnam, San Antonio, Texas: "I have been in the church twelve years; have been in the world, and have turned the attention of the people toward this work. In doing so I have been able to discover some mistakes made by God's people. We ought to live by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God, and as a people we should be a model for the world to pattern after. We should not follow in the rear, but should be in the lead."

Sr. V. M. Goodrich, New Philadelphia, Ohio: "The gospel means much to me. My prayer is that I may be faithful day by day, and live so that when eternity is brought to my view I may dwell with the redeemed ones of earth 'neath the shade of the beautiful tree of life."

Sr. Emma Stonum, Anna, Illinois: "I am a new worker in the church, and feel very weak; but hope the Saints will pray for me that I may gain power and faith, and become a bright light in this work; for I do love the latter-day work. There are just two sisters and myself here, and we scarcely ever get to hear the gospel of our church. Pray for us that we may not fall by the way."

Sr. Nettie Counce, Anna, Illinois: "My sister and I are far away from any of our faith, and being somewhat discouraged we desire to ask the Saints to pray for us, as we have a desire to live for Christ. Our dear mother enjoyed this work so much when she was on this earth. She is now at rest, and we long to meet her in a brighter home than this. We have many trials and temptations to overcome, and oft I nearly fall by the way. Then I bear up and pray to God that some day my husband may come into the church for a help to me."

William Self, Auburn, Nebraska: "The work in our district is on the move. Some of the brethren are moving out, preaching the glad tidings of great joy that shall be to all people. At Hebron we had the pleasure of leading four into the water."

R. J. Williams, Alba, Missouri: "There are but two families here, and one young lady of another family. We have home class Sunday-school, and are trying to do all in our power to forward the truth."

Sr. Emeline J. Davidson, Fairview, Utah: "We came here to recruit my husband's health, and to visit a sister he never saw before. There are no Latter Day Saints here, except those of the Utah faith. As near as we can learn, they do not believe in polygamy nor practice it now. Our brother-in-law, Franklin Bills, says he would like to have seen Bro. Joseph when he was here this fall."

M. A. Simmons, Johnston City, Illinois: "I have an afflicted daughter who belongs to the church and desires administration, but there are no elders near, and she wants the prayers of all the Saints, that if it be God's will she may be healed of her afflictions, and be given a more prayerful spirit, and stronger desires to serve God. She is afflicted with lung trouble, and with catarrh of the head and throat. Her name is Mrs. Mamie Gaddis." The letter also stated that the 17th inst. had been designated as a day for fasting and prayer in behalf of their daughter. We are very sorry that the writer made the mistake that so many make when writing requests of this kind. The letter did not reach us until the HERALD for the 14th was ready to go to press; and even if we could have put it in that issue but few comparatively of the Saints would have received their paper in time to read it before the 17th. In making requests of this kind please remember to have, if possible, the letter in our hands at least a week before the date upon which the HERALD is issued in which it is expected to appear, and then allow a week or ten days for the HERALD to reach the Saints, and the request to be read.

Died.

HARRELL.—James H. Harrell was born May 10, 1850; died November 14, 1905, aged 55 years, 6 months, and 4 days. United in marriage to Matilda C. Lemay, January 21, 1875. He was the father of three children, Mrs. E. L. Baxdall, Mrs. Ida B. Fredrick, Thomas A. Harrell, all of whom survive him. He united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, September 10, 1899, in which he has lived a faithful member until death. Funeral-services conducted by J. W. Wight in the Hearstown church (United Brethren) the day following his death.

BROOKS.—At his brother's residence, near Lamoni, Iowa, December 6, 1905, Mr. Frederick Brooks; born at Arlington, Iowa, October 16, 1870. Deceased was never married but devoted his energies to the support of his widowed mother, his younger brothers, and sister. He was a firm believer in the principles of the restored gospel but neglected to yield obedience, and this was his only regret when called to go. A short time before his death he earnestly requested a sister present to be baptized for him as provided for in the ordinance of baptism for the dead. Funeral at Saints' church in Lamoni, December 8, by Heman C. Smith, assisted by John Smith.

MATHERS.—Sr. Christina Mathers, born February 6, 1847, in Richland County, Ohio; married to David Mathers, July 23, 1873; baptized October 23, 1875, by Mark H. Forscutt and confirmed by R. M. Elvin. Died December 4, 1905, at Omaha, Nebraska. She leaves husband and five children to mourn her absence. Funeral-services conducted by W. M. Self from the Saints' church at Nebraska City, 2 p. m., December 6.

DARST.—Mrs. Jacob Darst died November 13 at the family home, New Philadelphia, Ohio. She was well known by many of the church, and will be kindly remembered by a large number of the missionaries. Her home was always open to them.

She was among the first to accept the gospel at New Philadelphia. To-day our hearts are filled with mourning, but we realize that our loss is her gain. She is gone to her reward. Her work on earth is done, her battle fought, her race is run.

HOLDEN.—Jane R. Holden died November 16, 1905, leaving husband, six daughters, and one son to mourn. She died at the home of a daughter, Mrs. N. P. Hatley, at the age of 75 years and 8 months, having lived a Christian life for fifty-six years.

HUNT.—Sr. Margaret Hunt, at her home in Deloit, Iowa, November 25, 1905. She was born in the state of Ohio, November 26, 1829. She had suffered for some time past with bodily ailments, but bore them with patience, her last words being, "I am ready and willing to go." She leaves three sons, one daughter, nineteen grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren to mourn. Funeral conducted by J. T. Turner; sermon by J. C. Crabb, to an overflowing house of relatives and friends.

DOUGHERTY.—Sr. Emma P. Dougherty, wife of Bro. E. C. Dougherty, died March 22, 1900, near Fairview, South Dakota, of pneumonia, aged 27 years and 9 days. She was preceded but a short time by her infant girl. The testimony of her friends is that she was a good wife and mother, and loved the latter-day work dearly. A husband and five boys were left to keenly feel their great loss. Edward Rannie was the first elder here since her death, and memorial-services were held in the Noonan Schoolhouse, near Fairview, December 3, 1905.

BOWERS.—Andy Bowers at his home in West Pullman, Chicago, Illinois, November 25, 1905. He was born December 9, 1842, in the township of Clark, county of Durham, Ontario, Canada. Baptized June 21, 1861, by Bro. Samuel Powers. His remains were taken to Plano, Illinois, his old home, for burial. Funeral-sermon was preached in the Saints' church at Plano, by W. A. McDowell, assisted by C. H. Burr. Bro. Bowers leaves a wife, three daughters, one son, five grandchildren, and many friends to mourn their loss. He was loved and respected by all who knew him. He died firm in the faith.

HICKS.—Sr. Margaret Massey Hicks, at her residence near Spokane, Washington. She was born November 30, 1844, in Wayne County, West Virginia. Died July 14, 1905. Married to William T. Hicks at Irontown, Ohio, who preceded her to the paradise of God. United with the church in the early summer of 1880, at Blair, Nebraska. Funeral-services by T. W. Chathurn. Interment in Medical Lake Cemetery.

GOODE.—Near Tabor, Iowa, Elisheba Tompson Goode, aged 90 years, 1 month, and 14 days. Sr. Goode was born in England, October 17, 1815, and was married to John Goode in 1837, coming to Ohio in 1852. In 1867 they came to Tabor, where they resided until the time of their deaths.—"Father Goode," as he was familiarly called, having passed on seventeen years ago. To them were born fourteen children, seven of whom are living. She was baptized September 12, 1875. Services were held at the Saints' church, the sermon being from Job 5:26 by Elder Charles Fry.

BRITIAN.—At Atchison, Kansas, of quick consumption, Fannie Eslo Brittan, wife of Benjamin F. Brittan, November 19, 1905, leaving husband, three small children, mother, two sisters, and one brother to mourn their loss. She was baptized October 14, 1888, by E. C. Brand, and was at her demise 30 years, 9 months, and 3 days old. She lived faithful to the covenant made in baptism, expressing a bright hope in the resurrection. Her last request was for those present to pray; and as they prayed she quietly passed away. Many friends gathered to pay their last respects. Funeral-sermon by Samuel Twombly.

STAFFORD.—Thomas F. was born January 21, 1831, at Stockport, Cheshire, England. Baptized August 21, 1861. Ordained an elder in January, 1862. Died November 22, 1905, at Lewiston, Illinois. He was beloved by the branch to which he belonged. If ever a man lived his religion, he certainly did. He, with his parents, went to Nauvoo when eight years old. He learned the baker's trade, and for twenty-one years was a cook on the Mississippi River steamboats, and later became a successful grocer. He was married to Mary Ann Nichols September 29, 1856. His aged wife survives to mourn.

CLEMENTS.—Matilda M. Clements, born September 8, 1865; married to William Clements May 5, 1887. To this union were born six sons and one daughter. She united with the Reorganized Church June 17, 1888, and was a consistent Christian until death relieved her of her sufferings. She died of cancer of the breast September 6, 1905. She was a loving wife, a kind mother, and a faithful friend. Husband, seven children, an aged father, one brother, and three sisters are the chief mourners; but the church at Brush Creek will miss her. Sermon by I. A. Morris.

HOOVER.—Nettie May Hoover, daughter of David and Lucy Hoover, died August 6, 1905; baptized July 29, 1903. She was the youngest child of Bro. and Sr. Hoover. Father, mother, two sisters, and six brothers, and the Sunday-school at Brush Creek all sorrow on account of her early death. She died as she had lived, calm and hopeful of a part in the first resurrection. Funeral-sermon by I. A. Morris in the big tent at the reunion at Brush Creek.

LAWBREAKING.

And so it goes. "Law-breakers" of one age are often, in succeeding ages, honored as heroes, martyrs, and reformers. And it follows as a corollary that the prosecutors of one age often are by other ages branded as persecutors. Sometimes laws have to be broken, or progress would be impossible, because all human laws are imperfect and need modification, as times and conditions change. These are simple facts of history and experience, which should not be overlooked when the subject of persecution is discussed. All law-breakers are certainly not martyrs, or reformers. No sane person makes that assertion. Many law-breakers in all ages are simply malefactors. But many of the martyrs whom we now honor, were also classed among the law-breakers of their age, and history repeats itself from age to age—a fact it would be consummate folly to deny.

The foregoing is from the Deseret News for December 5, the closing paragraph of the editorial. The clipping came to us with a request that we publish in the HERALD, but expressing a doubt that we would do so; the plea to publish made in behalf of justice.

Is it not something of a travesty upon the functions of the blind goddess prefigured by a woman holding the scales in one hand and the sword in the other and with her eyes bandaged, to ask the publishing of a plea for immunity for lawbreakers when the conditions are so clearly understood as in the case of our editorial "Prosecution not persecution," which appeared in the HERALD not long since?

While the editorial in the HERALD referred to is not mentioned in this editorial sent to us from the Deseret News, the subject-matter of the latter would almost point to the fact that it is written in defense against the conclusions reached in ours, "Prosecution not persecution." The cases cited in which some of the historical lawbreakers of the past were in after-years considered as heroes, are not germane to the argument, for this reason: The laws against which these lawbreakers revolted were not made in the interest of the general good of the people of the State or Government, but were the result more or less of personal spite against the individual. Witness the Hebrew children and others of like character. In modern times such an action could not be had. It is a matter of history that Joseph Smith, the first President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, was arraigned before the courts of the State a number of times, charged with misdemeanors

IN OUR reference to the letter of Bro. Joseph Squire, last issue, we stated that Broad River was in New Jersey. It should be Broad River, Connecticut. Attention was called to this error by Bro. Squire himself.

BRO. ALBERT CARNEY, Blue Rapids, Kansas, wishes to announce that he has a lot of HERALDS and Ensigns which he will send to any one on request.

and crime; but these arraignments were not followed by conviction in any one of them; nor did he at any time make confession of having been guilty of those things with which he was charged; and one of the excuses made by the mob forces for taking his life in Carthage jail was that "the law would not touch him, but powder and ball would."

Allow the plea of the lawbreaker, that prosecution in his case means persecution, and the bars for asking exculpation for crimes of every description are thrown down, just the condition of things against which the HERALD has always argued. If the laws had been impartially enforced, both for and against the church, from its earliest inception until now, we fully believe a far different and better condition of things would have existed to-day; but loose administration on the part of the civil authorities, and a similar laxity on the part of church officials and members, resulted in allowing the criminals to go free because they were not prosecuted. The law of the church bearing the sanction of revelation distinctly affirms that certain classes of lawbreakers should be delivered to the law of the land. This included transgressors against the law of chastity. For instance: "Thou shalt not steal; neither commit adultery, nor kill, nor do anything like unto it."—Revelation of August, 1831, par. 2. "Thou shalt not commit adultery, and he that committeth adultery and repenteth not shall be cast out."—Doctrine and Covenants 42:7.

In the different States of the Union there are statute laws punishing the living with more than one woman as wives under different forms. In one State it will be for bigamy, in another for lewd and lascivious cohabitation, and in Utah for unlawful cohabitation. Adequate penalties are provided for infraction of these laws. Can those who thus break these laws justly claim that they are persecuted if they are prosecuted under the statute for disregarding the law? We venture the statement that such a plea would not be allowed in any court if made by a transgressor. The effort upon the part of the Government to put a stop to the practice of polygamy under the direction and fostering care of the dominant church in Utah is now of too long standing for any successful plea to be made against enforcement of the crystallized opinion of the universal public with any degree of success, and no possible prevarication or effort to exculpate from blame can make heroes of this class of lawbreakers. The revealed laws of God to the church condemn them, the congressional enactments of the United States condemn them, and the laws of the state of Utah condemn them. Neither blandishments nor the praise of associates equally guilty make heroes of them.

RESULTS OF THE SYSTEM.

Social conditions are not all they should be in England. St. Paul's cathedral was recently the scene of a shocking exhibition according to a cable dispatch published in the Chicago Tribune for the 24th. Hundreds of the unemployed paraded the cathedral in the afternoon and transformed the usually impressive service into a pandemonium. They became quiet for a few minutes, but the service was not to their liking, and when the anthem was reached they rushed wildly for the doors. (We confess to a similar impulse frequently at this stage of religious worship.) The mob donned hats and caps, and lighted pipes and cigars while still in the church, and two of the number indulged in a pitched battle in a ring formed by the spectators, under the shadow of Nelson's tomb. Once outside the church, the discontented mass shouted themselves hoarse, were harangued by their leaders, waved red flags, and tried to sing the "Marseillaise." Sacreligious as it may seem, only the thoughtless will condemn the the participators in the exhibition. The cause is farther back. They are but one of the products of the system, and the system is upheld by the church and the government. The system takes from those who are willing to work, their daily bread (the necessities of life), and gives to those who are too lazy to work, and who are so educated that they feel their dignity would not allow them to labor with their hands, a superabundance of this world's goods, and their lives are spent in ease and luxury.

The church, which enjoys the attendance of devotees representing the product last named of the system which it supports and shares, should not complain if occasionally it receives a visit from the representatives of the other product of their system. Let the church and the government take their stand for God and justice, instead of Mammon and special privileges, and the cause for scenes of such a character will be removed. It is a shame, when the earth is full, and to spare, that those who are willing to work are denied the privilege of earning a livelihood.

L. A. G.

HARRISON, New Jersey, December 24.—[Special.]—The State authorities on labor conditions will be asked to prosecute the international steam pump trust, which employs nearly three hundred women, many of them at the hardest possible manual work. Indeed, there are seventy-eight whose tasks would tax the strength and endurance of the average man. These women—they range from seventeen to thirty-five years—are foundrymen. They toil from seven o'clock in the morning until half past five in the evening, amid the smoke, steam, and grime, and they get on an average less than one dollar and twenty-five cents a day.

They are known as "coremakers." They wield hammers over anvils, shovel a mixture of sand, flour, and molasses "into patterns," and pack it down with rammers weighing about eight pounds.

At the proper time, when it becomes necessary to turn these "patterns," weighing in some cases half a ton, completely over, the work is done by the women, who put forth all their strength in the effort, and are breathless and exhausted at the finish.

About twenty-five hundred members of the Engineers' Society of America visited the foundry a few days ago at the invitation of the officials of the trust. They were amazed and delighted at the mechanical marvels they saw in various parts of the establishment, but not a few were horrified when they went to the coremaking room and saw the women engaged at such laborious work. As guests they could say nothing openly, but as private individuals they have taken action.—Chicago Tribune, December 25.

RETRIBUTION.

A month ago a daughter of Bro. Thomas Newton of Kansas was found lying where she had fallen off a bridge or viaduct by accident, or had been thrown off by force with intention to kill, for she was dead, under conditions so cruel and revolting that it pointed to murder of an atrocious character. The following dispatch from Kansas City to the Chicago Tribune indicates that the murderer was found, and, unless the sometimes laggard steps of justice are interfered with, will receive the punishment due his crime:

KANSAS CITY, Missouri, December 20.—Austin Francis, a switchman, charged with the murder, a month ago, of Winona Newton, fifteen years old, his sweetheart, was found guilty to-day of murder in the first degree. The girl was forced to drink poison, and when it failed to kill her at once, Francis choked her, threw her into a creek, and placed a heavy stone on her head.

WHICH IS THE GREAT COMMANDMENT?

When this question was asked of the Savior his reply was, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Matthew 22: 37-39.

It should be clearly understood by everybody who thinks that God through Christ never gave a commandment to men that he could not fulfill. The difficulty is in the understanding or misunderstanding of the word itself. If a man has a proper and discriminating love for himself it is not at all difficult for him to love his neighbor as commanded. If he is careless in regard to himself, has not a proper self-love, and is indifferent to the demands made upon him by his condition, surroundings, society and the State, he can not keep the commandment; or if he is a victim of an inordinate self-love that makes him self-sufficient, arrogant, haughty, and careless of the rights and privileges of others, including his family, his neighbors, and society, he can not keep the commandment. It is understood that the gospel has the effect to eradicate these feelings from the minds and hearts of men and to give them a proper understanding of self, which necessarily gives him a proper understanding of others.

We once heard an elder in a sermon ask the question, "How is it possible for a man to love God with all his heart, mind, might, and strength, and love anybody or anything else?" His final conclusion, however, was that if a man had the love of God dwelling in him he was not only able to love God supremely, but that that very quality of loving God would so enlarge his understanding and his capacity for loving that he could love the same as a father and mother, having one child, loved that child with all their hearts, and yet if that same father and mother have twenty, their hearts are never full but there is the same loving, forbearing, kindly spirit of regard for each and every one. A mother will realize this clearly and understand fully how it is possible for a man to love God and love his neighbor as himself, provided he has the proper love for himself.

The peculiar characteristics which the gospel develops in man are of such a nature as is shadowed by the teaching of the Savior where, speaking to the disciples, he calls them the salt of the earth. "If the salt have lost his savor," the King James translation says, "wherewith shall it be salted?" But the Inspired Translation reads, "If the salt shall lose its savor, wherewith shall the earth be salted?" thus amending the passage. It is a fact that salt exposed to the atmosphere and rain will gather dirt, lose its saving characteristic, and become unfit for use, as it takes unto itself noxious qualities that unfit it to be used. So may disciples, and it is quite possible that in these latter days men may suffer themselves to drift into such condition that they are practically worthless as the salt of the earth.

Later revelation gives us to understand that men properly called in this latter-day development are called to be the salt of the earth; that it should be their earnest endeavor to continually prove themselves worthy of the appellation and the thought of being considered the spiritual salt of the earth.

MRS. A. W. BALLARD, Los Angeles, California, renewing for the Leaves says: "We can not speak too highly of the Autumn Leaves. It is very interesting. Words can not express our appreciation of same."

BRO. LEONARD HOLLOWAY writes from Humptulips, Washington, December 18, that he is having good crowds, some are very much interested. He expected to baptize some the 24th.

HISTORICAL CRITICISMS.

In our editorial in HERALD for November 15, we made reference to the statement made by Elder Samuel W. Richards and another whose name was Stewart, that they were appointed with others to explore in the far West with a view to removal of the Saints beyond the confines of the United States or elsewhere where the church could be at peace. A brother writing in reference to this editorial apparently misunderstands what we wrote in reference to it, which simply was that we did not know as to the correctness of the statement, but that it was a matter of serious wonder to us that there was no record stating whether or not the men so appointed had made the exploration and reported thereon the results. We did not question the truthfulness of the statements made by these men, for we had no data upon which either to accept or deny. Each of them stated that twenty-five were appointed, and that the appointment was made in 1842. It would seem quite fair to presume that the appointment being made in good faith, some effort should have been made by the whole twenty-five or some portion of them to carry out the instruction to search for a locality in the West to which the church could profitably and safely remove. We have never seen anything in reference to the action of this committee of twenty-five or other organization if it was completed. We neither affirm nor deny the appointment or the existence of such a body of men, but it would seem that two years intervened between the appointment and the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. We do not remember anything in the Times and Seasons, the recognized organ of the church, with reference to the exploration thus ordered or provided for, and we see no good reason why we should be charged with exercising doubt in regard to it simply because we say we do not know.

The same writer refers to matters of record with reference to the ordination of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery to the Aaronic and Melchisedec priesthood. While writing the History of the Church, the historians stated that they did not know where the record of the ordination to the Melchisedec priesthood could be found; that is, the day and date and circumstance, as matters of fact. We ought not to be understood as casting aspersion upon the statement made by revelation in reference to such ordination, for as a church we have always acted upon it as a matter of truth, though we might not be able to produce the record in words and figures as we can upon the organization of the church in 1830. We accept the statement made in reference to the calling and ordination of the Master, in which calling and ordination he was made a priest for ever after the order of the Son of God, though we may not point to the page in history where such ordination was performed; nor is it proper to charge us with doubting such ordination simply because we avow the absence of historical evidence as to its occurrence.

There was nothing dishonorable in the appointment of such a body of men by Joseph Smith in 1842 that we are aware of. It was undoubtedly a matter of precaution that human wisdom might have suggested or that might have been pointed out by revelation; nor do we believe we commit an error when we say that we do not know whether such appointment was made or not, and that we do not know of any record made by the men appointed as having carried out the instruction given as to such exploration. There seems to be plenty in the published articles and matters in the Times and Seasons, published at Nauvoo, to deduct an inference that at the time of the death of Joseph Smith an immediate removal from the state of Illinois was not contemplated; for it is not until some time in the fall of 1845 that articles looking to the possible removal are found in that publication. Please bear in mind we do not call the statement of these men into question, for we have no data upon which to base an opinion for or against.

THE question of the declining birth-rate was dealt with the other night at a meeting of the Royal Statistical Society. In a paper jointly prepared by Doctor Arthur Newsholme and Doctor I. H. C. Stevenson, two main theses were advanced, that the inhabitants of the united kingdom and other civilized countries are markedly less fertile than was the case a few years ago, and that this state of affairs is due to other than natural causes.

"France," said the authors, "has anticipated the rest of the world and thus has come nearer to the consummation of its social felo-de-se, but it is only a question of decades in a great change in the moral standpoint of a majority of our people before other countries will follow in the same direction, and possibly even at the same pace. The outlook is gloomy, and we can not look with confidence to any help which is likely to come either from preaching or medical teaching.

"The whole field of fact seems to lead to the conclusion that the decline in the birth-rate is not due to poverty, but is associated with the general raising of the standard of comfort, and is an expression of the determination of the people to secure this greater comfort."—Chicago Tribune, December 24, 1905.

THE whole people must take upon themselves the education of the whole people and must be willing to bear the expense of it. There should not be a district of one mile square without a school in it, not founded by a charitable individual, but maintained at the expense of the people themselves.—John Adams in 1785.

CAN A LAYMAN PRESIDE?

We have so frequently answered the question whether a layman could under any circumstances preside over or take charge of a meeting that it seems almost nonsensical to answer it again. Letters are continually coming where it seems to us that all should take cognizance of what they see in the HERALD, and not have to be told so frequently.

Saints' meetings for prayer-service, either in an organized or unorganized condition, may be presided over for the purpose of a meeting by the one holding the highest office who may be present. The officer may, if he chooses, waive his right and ask some other to preside, or leave the matter to the choice of those present. If there be no officer present, any member of the church present may take the lead of the meeting by the consent of those present, in which case it would be proper to choose the one most experienced and elderly of those present.

In business-meetings of the branches or districts, as a matter of course, if no officers were present of the branch or district, business could not well be carried on, especially of a branch. But for prayer-service or general exercises, any one may take the lead. It may not be said to be a right that the layman has, but it is a privilege that he may enjoy. It is scarcely proper that the Saints meeting for prayer and testimony should have that privilege denied them simply because there is no accredited officer present. This privilege to take charge of a meeting includes the pronouncing of the benediction at the close of the services. It does not, however, include the privilege to bless the bread and wine or to administer the sacrament, as these duties are clearly defined in the law as appertaining to the officers alone. A person who has the privilege or authority or right to open a prayer-service by prayer would have a right to close the same by prayer, which is the benediction. This is a part of the unwritten law and comes under the general rule that persons are authorized to do what is necessary to be done at the time that their exigency or wisdom demands.

A CHALLENGE.

The Deseret News is again having spasms because commentators upon the present hierarchical purpose to defy the United States Government and practice treason against it are calling attention to the crime. Some of these commentators go to the official works of the church and extract therefrom paragraphs and sentences from the sermons delivered by the living oracles. And the agony of the News is voiced in this statement, that such commentation has "culled from works by different writers some sentences and parts of sentences which, taken away from the explanatory text are made capable of giving color to his assertions."

In the particular case to which the News has made allusion it is doubtful if the minister, who is quoted and who is attacked, will offer any resentment. He knows the impracticability of arguing with a falsifier and one who does not believe in truth or desire its dissemination.

But the Tribune, for once, will take up the contest in behalf of the abused ministers.

The News, if logical at all, desires the full text of the sermon to be printed in case any language therefrom is to be quoted. This paper, therefore, challenges the Deseret News to reproduce the full text of a sermon delivered in Salt Lake City on July 26, 1857, recorded in the official Journal of Discourses of the Mormon church of volume 5, and closing on page 95. If the News will print that authoritative sermon in its columns at the present time, giving to it the authentication and the authorization of the present hierarch, the Tribune will spread it broadcast by publishing all the matters therein (unless some are obscene) and asking the people of the United States to judge of the full text, and not by some segregated sentence or paragraph.

Furthermore, the Tribune hereby challenges the Deseret News to answer the following questions: Was the preacher (who was at that time one of the first presidencies) a "living oracle" and was his word the word of God to the Mormon people and to the world; or is he now repudiated by the Deseret News and the hierarchy?

They are either bound by his utterance as being that of a living oracle, or they must discard his utterance as that of a false prophet. Mr. Deseret News, the Tribune challenges you to print the sermon and answer which—"living oracle" or false prophet—delivered that sermon.

P. S.—If the Deseret News does not desire to make this matter public we hereby challenge the News to make a copy of that particular sermon and send it to the great and good friend of the Mormon people (according to the lying whispers of the hierarchy), viz., Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States of America.

N. B.—Lest the News mistake the sermon to which we are referring the Tribune quotes one of the closing sentences thereof:

"And the President of the United States, inasmuch as he has turned against us and will take a course to persist in pleasing the ungodly curses that are howling around him for the destruction of this people, he shall be cursed, in the name of Israel's God, and he shall not rule over this nation, because they are my brethren; but they have cast me out and have cast you out; and I curse him and all his coadjutors in his cursed deeds, in the name of Jesus Christ and by the authority of the holy priesthood, and all Israel shall say Amen."

The foregoing challenge is from the Salt Lake Tribune for December 16, 1905. We insert it for this purpose: For several years now we have been met on the part of the elders in Utah with the statement that many of those things which we have quoted from their publications have been manufactured by us and have no existence in fact, and we have tried to get the Utah journals to make averment in reference to the doctrines and principles announced by their public men years ago. We should be pleased to see the News publish the sermon referred to in full, giving such comment or explanation as they may see best, or to publish without comment. We shall wait with journalistic patience to see what the result will be.

CORRECTION.

In HERALD for December 20, 1905, No. 51, vol. 52, p. 1210, occurs the following statement, referring to the Doctrine and Covenants: "In the latter the teaching was exclusively monogamic, and the so-called revelation on plural marriage had no existence either in fact or in the Doctrine and Covenants until it was so inserted in the fall of 1876, and that by President Brigham Young."

Please read this as follows: And the so-called revelation on plural marriage had no legal existence, either in fact or in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, etc.

THAT PENNY A DAY.

Acting on that homely old adage of our forefathers that "the flail should never stop until the grain is all threshed out," and as several requests have come through the HERALD of late asking that the Savior's parable of the householder (see Matthew 19 and 20) be more fully discussed, the writer would like to present views as to its proper application. In so doing he does not wish to arouse controversy. He has no pet theory to ventilate, or hobby to ride. He has no particular desire to see his name in print, or to be considered "up to date" in "knowing a thing or two." The only reason he has, beyond those already given, is that he thoroughly believes the explanations given of late are, in a great measure, erroneous, and overlook the very point the Savior wished to illustrate by the parable.

To the writer's knowledge, there are three different explanations given to this parable. The first is, that the day represents man's natural life; the different hours mentioned, the different periods in that life in which God calls upon him for his services. The penny a day is his eternal reward. No matter what time in life the message is accepted, whether in the first or the eleventh hour, all will get the same reward.

That this is not the true explanation of the parable is evident from the fact that the great and final reward will be given upon the principle of eternal justice, wherein every person will be rewarded according to his works. The simplest mind can see the rank injustice in giving a laborer who has wrought but one hour the same reward as one who has labored all the day through.

The second is, the day represents all time from the creation down to the second advent of the Savior. The hours represent the different dispensations in which God has authorized men to preach his gospel upon the earth: the first hour being the Adamic dispensation, the third that of Noah, the sixth that of Moses, the ninth that of the Savior, and the eleventh that of Joseph Smith. The "penny a day" is the reward given at the end of the last dispensation—eternal life.

There are a multitude of objections to this explanation. For over forty years the writer has labored and puzzled his brain in the endeavor to reconcile this theory with the parable; but he frankly confesses that the harder and longer he has labored to do so, the farther he gets away. He is in a similar situation to the little boy who was set by his teacher to figure a cat from the bottom of a well thirty feet deep, which climbed up four feet and slipped back five. After figuring for over two hours and having both sides of his slate completely filled, the teacher asked him if he had the cat out of the well yet.

"No, sir, I haven't," he replied, "that cat works the wrong way; if he ever gets out he will come out through China, and there is not room on my slate to figure him clear through."

1. The hours would be of such unequal lengths that there would be no propriety or fitness in calling them hours. Jesus framed all his parables from actual facts as they existed around him. In this case the hours referred to were those of the Jewish method of dividing time, and undoubtedly referred to a twelfth part of the daytime. Should the day mentioned in the parable represent all time from Adam to the coming of the Savior—a period of six thousand years—one average hour would be one twelfth of that amount, or 500 years. Now from Adam to the Deluge—the first three hour period—was about 1,650 years; one hour would be 550 years. From the Deluge to Sinai—third to sixth hour period—about 850 years; one hour would be 283 years. From Sinai to Christ—sixth to ninth hour period—about 1,500 years; one hour would be 500 years. From Christ to 1830—ninth to eleventh hour period—one hour would be 915 years. Then, according to this dispensation theory, one hour is made to represent (or rather misrepresent) the following different number of years: 550 years; 283 years; 500 years; 915 years. And should we be allowed to speculate a little, it will appear still worse. According to a revelation given in 1832 (see Doctrine and Covenants 83:2) the temple was to be built in the lifetime of some living at that time, the glory of the Lord should rest upon it, and the sons of Moses were to offer an acceptable offering in it. This will no doubt bring it near the time of the coming of the Savior. As no one in the generation mentioned will likely live to be 125 years of age, that will represent the length of the last or twelfth hour. Taking the two extremes in this interpretation of the parable we have the absurdity of an hour representing a period of time all the way from 125 to 915 years.

Again: The different dispensations referred to come nowhere near the hours given. Should the hours be of equal length (which, of course, they ought to be) the third hour would end 1,500 years after Adam, the sixth 3,000, the ninth 500 A. D., and the eleventh 1500 A. D. Now how does the dispensation theory fit these facts? Noah's was 150 years behind the third hour, Moses' 500 years ahead of the sixth hour, that of Christ 500 years ahead of the ninth hour, and that of 1830, or Joseph Smith's, 300 years behind the eleventh hour.

How ridiculous would a person appear should he apply this method of measuring time to the measurement of length. I go to a hardware store at five different times to get a foot of wire. The first time I get 13 inches, the second 7, the third 12, the fourth 21, and the fifth 8. Surely a transaction like that would be somewhat confusing, and I am satisfied quite aggravating. But where is the difference between the two?

2. There were other times between Adam and Moses in which the gospel was preached which were just as important and as much of a dispensation as those alluded to. For instance: when God called Abraham, preached the gospel to him, and made the covenant with him that in him and in his seed should all nations of the earth be blessed, it was just as important an event, or more so, than when Moses preached the gospel to the Israelites and led them out of the land of Egypt. And when Enoch preached the gospel to the world in his day, and brought himself and all his followers to such a state of righteous perfection that all of them, with their city, were taken up into the heavens, it was an event of far greater importance than when Noah preached to the antediluvian world. Then why, in view of these facts, select the dispensations of Noah and Moses as the third and sixth hours, when they were of no more importance and no nearer the time mentioned than those of Enoch and Abraham?

3. In a revelation given to Joseph Smith in 1832, Doctrine and Covenants 83:2, is the following statement:

And the sons of Moses, according to the holy priesthood, which he received under the hand of his father-in-law, Jethro; and Jethro received it under the hand of Caleb; and Caleb received it under the hand of Elihu; and Elihu under the hand of Jeremy; and Jeremy under the hand of Gad; and Gad under the hand of Esaias; and Esaias received it under the hand of God; Esaias also lived in the days of Abraham, and was blessed of him, which Abraham received the priesthood from Melchisedec; who received it through the lineage of his fathers, even till Noah; and from Noah till Enoch; through the lineage of their fathers; and from Enoch to Abel, who was slain by the conspiracy of his brother; who received the priesthood by the commandments of God, by the hand of his father Adam, who was the first man.

From this statement we are made cognizant of the fact that there was a continuous and unbroken line of priesthood, from father to son, from Adam to Abraham; when God ordained Esaias under his own hand, and then in like manner the line continued on to Moses. Why the break in the line at Abraham's day, we do not know. But Abraham and Esaias being cotemporary, we are fully justified in the assertion that the Melchisedec priesthood was continuous upon the earth from Adam to Moses. This, then, being true, undoubtedly, all these men mentioned were preachers of the gospel. God had committed to each of them a gospel dispensation, and each one had his message to deliver to the world. Then we ask in all candor, "Why should we attach more importance to one or two of these men's missions than to the others? Why select Noah and Moses and pass by the others?"

4. The great complaint of the first-hour men was, that they had borne the burden and heat of the day and should have had more wages than the eleventh-hour men. If this dispensation theory be correct, this could not possibly be the case, for they had really labored no longer than the latter. Each had labored his lifetime after being hired and what more could they do? Why should Adam, or Noah, or Moses receive a greater reward than Paul or Peter, or John, or James, or any others, even in this age of the world, if they have devoted their time and lives in laboring in the vineyard?

"But hold on," says the objector, "the work goes right on after death, and in that way the first-hour men will have labored longer than the eleventh-hour ones." If we look at it in that light then the complaint was just, and by all rights of justice they should have had more wages than the one-hour men.

One brother in advocating the dispensation idea quotes Revelation 6:9, where the souls of those who had been slain for the word of God and the testimony they held, cried out, "How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?" as an evidence that the burden-bearing is still going on in the spirit world. Now how does that idea harmonize with the following declarations:

Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors.— Revelation 14:13.

And then shall ~~we~~ come to pass the spirits of those who are righteous, are received into a state of happiness, which is called paradise; a state of rest; a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles, and from all care, and sorrow, &c.— Book of Mormon, Alma 19:5.

The wail of apparent distress from those souls "under the altar" did not arise from any gospel burden they were bearing at the time, but simply from a desire to have justice hastily meted out to those who had shed their blood upon the earth.

5. This explanation of the parable makes the householder censure the eleventh-hour men for being idle thousands of years before they were born into the world. Hear him: "Why stand ye here all the day idle?" Now, bearing in mind that the day here mentioned means all time from Adam to the millennium, what other construction can we reasonably place upon it, but that the householder found fault with them for being idle before they came into the world? How different would the answer to the householder's question have been if this explanation be correct from what it was. Instead of answering, "No man hath hired us," they would likely have answered, "What a foolish question to ask; why, we were not born into the world yet, and how could we labor in your vineyard?"

6. The parable in the latter part of the twenty-first chapter of Matthew is frequently referred to as one of a similar character, and also as representing like dispensations. But this is not the fact. This one had reference alone to the Jews, or in its widest application to the house of Israel. God had sent his prophets time and again warning them of sin, but they had invariably slain them. He then sent his son and they crucified him. So the kingdom was taken from them and give to the Gentiles. This idea is fully proven by the forty-third and forty-fifth verses of this same chapter.

We could give other reasons for disbelieving this explanation of the parable, but we will let what we have given suffice.

We will now proceed to give the third explanation to this parable, which we believe to be the correct one, or the one nearest correct. The day represents man's probation here upon earth, the hours the different times that God may call upon him for his services during that probation. The first may represent youth, the third early manhood, the sixth manhood, the ninth late manhood, the eleventh old age. In fact the hours represent any time in a man's life the gospel message may reach him.

The laborers are the whole human family, or in other words, all who accept the conditions of hire ("a penny a day") whether he be prophet, priest, or people, male or female. All are alike laborers in the vineyard.

As man's salvation here is an educational work, and his life but a school to equip and qualify him for the great millennial college, with its thousand-year course, "the penny a day" does not, neither can not represent the great and final reward. It is but the entrance or tuition fee to paradise, which includes a part in the first resurrection, and a share in all the joys and blessings, which they may be qualified to receive, incident to the millennial condition.

That a person who accepts the gospel message in the eleventh hour of his life has the same right to an admission into paradise as one who accepts it in the first hour, and spends all his life in the vineyard. The penny a day includes nothing beyond the admission fee; after that every one must stand on his (or her) own merits. Those who have labored long and faithfully in the vineyard will stand first, while those who have not, but have paid the tuition fee, will stand last. It was to illustrate this condition of things that the Savior put forth the parable. In the last verse of the ninth chapter the Savior says, after speaking of those who had sacrificed everything for his name's sake, "But many that are first shall be last: and the last shall be first." The little word for, in the twentieth chapter, links this saying of the Savior's to the parable, and shows plainly that it (the parable) was given as an explanation of that passage. This is confirmed by his repeating the declaration, with a slight difference, at the end of the parable, "So the last shall be first and the first last: for many are called but few chosen."

The excuse the eleventh-hour men gave for being idle, "No man hath hired us," would be but a natural answer from those who had heard the message for the first time. Should one of our elders enter a new locality where the gospel has never been preached and would say to the people, "Why are you people standing here idle all the day long? Why don't you go to work and help spread God's message?" the answer would likely be, "God has never hired us yet."

By taking this explanation of the parable, we think we are coming much nearer to its true import than by any others given.

T. J. SMITH.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, December 15, 1905.

HOW SHALL WE PRESENT THE GOSPEL?

(Read before the Fifth Quorum of Elders.)

The topic assigned me in this paper is an important one, and I would rather have listened to the opinions of others.

To be efficient as laborers together with God should be our object, that the most good may come to the honor and glory of him who called us. To convince man that "God is," that our gospel came not in "word only," but that the windows of heaven have been opened, the veil lifted, and a voice heard, man has again been summoned by direct communication, and the primitive gospel in its fullness has been recommitted, to regenerate the world.

To give an exegesis as to "how we shall present the gospel" is an arduous task; but we can say with one of our predecessors, "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind," surroundings and conditions governing as they may. "The glory of God is intelligence," and since God is all-wise, and desires us to be wise stewards, it behooves us "to study to show" ourselves approved as "a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word," not casting pearls before those that know not their value, lest they turn again and rend us, while with many "the sincere milk of the word," and only a few crumbs from the Master's table, would be the soul's craving until they are able to endure strong meat.

"Go ye and teach. I have sent you out to teach, and not to be taught." Then as teachers sent of God we have an affirmative message; and one duty is to present the gospel in such a manner that mankind will realize that it is "a savor of life unto life, or death unto death"; that nothing short of the gospel can save, that they may be impressed that we speak not as others, but as those having authority, having "a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and of man, and all this for the salvation of Zion." The Lord has clearly said:

I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye dilligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in the earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations; and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms, that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again, to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you.

From these citations we can see that we should present the gospel intelligently. "Study to show thyself approved" is also a great admonition to us; and "knowledge is power," but "wisdom is the chief thing." Jesus, a teacher sent of God, displayed the wisdom of God; when with the doctors and lawyers they marveled at his wisdom, when with those of the more common walks of life "spake to them things easy understood." His parables were uttered according to his surroundings, to impress an eternal truth upon the minds of his auditors, from whence they gleaned the philosophy of life, the emotion of the soul was aroused, and an impression of God was indelibly engraved upon the tablets of their hearts until they truly could say, "He spake as never man spake."

"By what authority doest thou these things?" we may also ask of the teachers of the religions of the world.

We can affirm our position, for any system of religion that would seek to reveal God unto man must have both God and man in it. Every government, tribe, or society, fraternal or religious, which has been organized by a man or set of men, can not excel the wisdom of the wisest among them, unless borrowed from the God-given law. And then they could not promulgate without additional information, since primitive Christianity can only reach us "either by succession, evolution, or restoration," and we see that all Protestantism, wittingly or unwittingly, testify to the departure from "the faith once delivered to the saints." Hence we have the more sure word of prophecy, testifying to the truthfulness of our defense,—a restoration of the primitive gospel in its fullness, for promulgation until the "culminative decree hath made a full end."

One of the best ways, I find, to present the gospel, is to tell what we believe, and why we believe it. We find it very difficult at times to reach the people where priestcraft rules. It is the same to-day as of yore. They shut up the kingdom of God against men, reject the counsel of God against themselves, on account of their traditions, and their loving to sit as directors in their congregations. Of such we ask, Is Christianity, as taught by Christ, intended by God to be the religion of the human race? Is it the one religion that shall finally unite all mankind? or is it in its turn going to be superseded by another? "Art thou the Christ, or look we for another?" is as important a query to-day as in the days of John the Baptist.

With no hope of giving a definite rule, I present these few thoughts and quotations, ever praying God's Spirit to direct us, that we may be workers together with him, for Zion's weal.

F. E. COHRT.

WHY I LEFT THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND BECAME A LATTER DAY SAINT.

I was reared, tutored, and educated in the faith. And as we lived in a community where almost all other doctrines were unknown, my mind was often carried away in the thought as to whether we alone as a church should be saved, or whether that which we had been taught would come to pass, even that all other churches would by and by fall in line with us, and the scripture be fulfilled, where Paul writes to the Ephesians that they would all come to the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man.

And as the years passed by, I finally went to work out, and my first position was with a family who belonged to the Baptist faith. My landlady and I frequently conversed on the topic of religion, and in this way I was led to think more seriously on the matter; and by chance, or at least I thought so, my landlady's son presented me with a nice little testament of the King James translation. Though being instructed by our priest not to read the Bible, I thought there was a great deal of difference between our Bible and the Protestant's Bible, and with this thought in mind, I concluded to read and acquaint myself with this little book. As I did so, I found many beautiful things that I thought ought to be complied with, such as the blessing of little children, administering to the sick, and many other beautiful things that seemed virtuous to my mind; and thus my mind was moved upon to the extent that I even stole away and went to the Methodist church. There I seemed to be more free, but that longing desire for understanding was not satisfied; and by and by, while on a visit to one of my uncles some fifty miles away, I formed an acquaintance with a young man and learned that he was a Latter Day Saint. Of course he at once broached the subject of religion, and soon I became more enlightened as to my true condition as a believer in Christianity. About a year passed and we were united in wedlock, and then it seemed that we talked less concerning religion than before. As time passed my husband found work very scarce in the city where we lived, so he hired out to a lumberman and went away to the woods for the winter. No sooner had he gone than my people began to try to persuade me to go back to my own church, and make reconciliation for my misdemeanor as a member. By their continual coaxing and scolding, I finally consented to do so. But I thought many times during my husband's absence, as I attended church, that I was out of my place and had done wrong, and had broken my word with one whom I considered dearer than any one else on earth. Upon his return he discerned that my mind had changed, and I certainly knew that it put a burden upon his mind that he could not easily remove.

Time wore away, and one day to my surprise my husband came in with an English Catholic Bible in his hand, and as he laid it down said, "This is your own Bible. Compare it with mine, and abide by your decision, whether my Bible is right or wrong." I made no reply, but as soon as he had left the house I began the search. To my surprise I could see but little difference, if any at all, and the thought then came to my mind that perhaps our catechism was of divine origin. I concluded to go and purchase one of English print, which I did at my first opportunity, and immediately began to compare the two books, and soon found that they did not harmonize satisfactorily to my mind. Turning to the preface of the book, which I had not done before, I found that the compilers made no claim that the book was of divine origin. And while I had read the Doctrine and Covenants partially, I knew that the prophet of this work made the claim of divine revelation. This seemed a bright thought to my mind—that God would give a law to a church by revealing himself direct to the one whom he had chosen to organize the same.

But the problem I could not solve was, How is it possible for so many people as the Mother Church represents to all be in darkness and, seemingly, such gross darkness? And as my companion had told me that it was possible for my people to be zealous and still be in darkness, and that that would be no reason why I should not investigate and satisfy myself in the matter and be my own judge, so the thought came to me forcibly, "I must be wrong, for as I had searched my own Bible I found the very things in it that I least expected to find; and every time I opened the book my eyes fell upon something that seemed to stagger me." Each one of those things took its place in my mind, and finally there seemed to be so much upon my mind, that I could not rest day or night. I really felt at times that if something was not done, my mind would become deranged. So one morning, while standing at my ironing-board, my mind was so involved in thought that I scarcely knew what I was doing, and all at once I looked up and said, "Lord, what will I do?" In answer to this question, a voice said to me, "Go with your companion to my house of worship; and if you do you shall hear my voice as I shall speak through my servant." This was Saturday and I could scarcely wait for the time of the morning meeting to come, since when the above words were spoken all doubt seemingly left me, and the long-looked-for satisfaction came over me. And although I had said, in my mind, the Sunday morning previous, that I would never go with my companion again, and that if I could not be a good Catholic I would not be anything else, he had not forbidden my going in the least, though I have learned since that he could see the gross darkness that I was under; and I also felt at that time that he would much rather I would go with him or stay at home, and although he was unconscious of the fact that I was under conviction, I hurried about the following morning and was ready to go to church before he was, yet in my mind I really wished he would ask me to go with him. We went, and as the little prayer-meeting was in progress the Lord manifested himself in power through one of his servants in the gift of prophecy, as he arose to bear testimony, just as the voice had spoken to me; and while the Saints were made to rejoice, I also felt a portion of that same influence. On my way home I said to my companion, "Did you know that Mr. — was going to talk in the gift?" "No." I answered, "I knew it yesterday." With a look on his face I never will forget he said, "You did?"

From that moment everything seemed to be changed with us. At the following Wednesday evening prayer-meeting, according to the direction of the officers in charge of the district, my husband was ordained to the office of priest, and the following Sunday I was ready for baptism at his own hands. Whether there was joy in the family or not, I will leave it for your readers to judge. And I want to bear my testimony to your readers, and the world, that while the hands of God's servants were upon my head, God's Spirit rested upon me in such power that it thrilled my whole being, and never have I had a doubt pass through my mind regarding the divinity of this work. Yet I have felt sad at times at not having made the progress that I would have desired to make. But my hope is growing brighter and brighter day by day; and I hope that, according to dreams with which I have been blessed, I may yet be able to convince those who are near and dear of the truthfulness of this work.

Saints, pray for me to this end, for I consider the step I have taken an important one, being one out of seven hundred families who has found the right way. While we have just moved to what is termed "Zion," we felt sad on leaving those who are near and dear behind; but, as some of them expressed a great desire and determination to come and see us, we feel that we can accomplish more by having them come here, than by trying to convince them at home or among so many of their own faith.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

A Bit of Comfort.

Comes a legend quaintly tender,
 From some far-off age and time,
 Told maybe to grieving mothers,
 In the distant Eastern clime;
 'Tis a story sweet in telling—
 Of the tiny lambkins white,
 Laid on sacrificial altars
 In the ancient Jewish rite.

While the life-stream dyed their fleeces,
 Soft eyes filled with sore amaze,
 One who loveth well his creatures,
 Looking down with pitying gaze,
 Gathered close the fleeing spirits;
 With divinely gracious care,
 Bore to paradise the blessed,
 Left them in his pastures there.

Thither now the holy angels
 Guide the children's feet alway,
 When on earthly paths aweary,
 Faint and weak they go astray;
 There in innocence they gambol,
 Babes and lambkins snowy-white,
 Bird song trilling sweet above them,
 Flowers smiling gayly bright.

Comes a gentle Shepherd, watchful;
 See, his feet the nail-scars show.
 At their touch the grasses quiver,
 Softly glad his presence know;
 Lovingly the playmates gather
 Where those gracious footsteps rest;
 Crowd in tender trust about him,
 Lean against his willing breast.

Fearlessly they frolic near him,
 Softly shy wee faces raise,
 As with glance divinely tender
 Bends he low to meet their gaze;
 Innocent the childish laughter,
 Sounding sweetly in his ears,
 Ah! he knows the merry music
 Never will be hushed by tears.

Just a fancy dream, I grant you,
 Just a story quaintly told—
 To relieve the mother-anguish
 In some grieving heart of old;
 Still the golden threads that wove it
 With the passing years grow bright,
 While the babes we loved in losing
 Seem again to cheer our sight,
 As they play in heavenly pastures,
 With the lambkins snowy-white.

The Vision of Christ.

Dannecker, the German sculptor, occupied eight years upon a marble statue of Christ. He had previously exercised his genius upon subjects taken from the Greek and Roman mythology, and had won a great reputation. The celebrated statue of Ariadne in the garden of Herr Bethman at Frankfort is his work. Critics of art have given him rank with Michael Angelo and Canova.

When he had labored two years upon his statue of Christ, the work was apparently finished. He called into his studio a little girl, and, directing her attention to the statue, asked her, "Who is that?" She replied, "A great man." The artist turned away disheartened. His artistic eye had been deceived. He had failed, and his two years of labor were thrown away. But he began anew, and, after another year or two had passed, he again invited the child into his studio, and repeated the inquiry, "Who is that?" This time he was not disappointed. After looking in silence for a while, her curiosity deepened into awe and thankfulness, and, bursting into tears, she said, in low and gentle tones, "Suffer little children to come unto me." It was enough; the untutored instinct of the child had divined his meaning, and he knew that his work was a success.

He believed then, and ever afterwards, that he had been inspired of God to do that thing. He thought that he had seen a vision of Christ in his solitary vigils. He had but transferred to the marble the image which the Lord had shown to him. His rising fame attracted the attention of Napoleon, and he was requested to make a statue of Venus similar to the Ariadne, for the gallery of the Louvre. He refused, saying, "A man who has seen Christ would commit sacrilege if he should employ his art in the carving of a pagan goddess. My art is henceforth a consecrated thing."

Is there not an experience of communion with God in Christ, not uncommon to mature believers, which is equivalent to a vision of the Lord, and which renders life and life's work, even its humblest occupations, sacred? Italian and Spanish art contains many works in painting and sculpture on subjects derived from scriptural biography and history, to which their authors have given years of toil, and on which they labored in a state of religious fervor. Some of them believed that their artistic vision was illumined by the Holy Ghost. The privilege of every Christian life is not less exalted. The Scriptures seem to assure us of this. "Our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son, Jesus Christ." "Your life is hid with Christ in God." "He that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God and God in him." Such words, if they mean anything, mean something unutterably great. It is no prerogative of an elect few. The lowliest, not less than the loftiest, life may have this element of an infinite dignity. A profoundly prayerful life is by that single feature of it lifted into sympathy with God. A mean thing can not be made noble by it, but a small thing can be made great. The work of a laundress or a bricklayer may attract the respect of angels.

Hugh Miller, when working at his trade as a stonemason, used to say that his was a grand calling, because the routine of it gave to a first-class workman so much time and mental force for silent communion with God. It was in such communion that he laid the foundation of that dignity of character which afterward made him the companion of philosophers and the instructor of princes. It matters little what may be a man's employment in life. The whole life is ennobled and adorned by it, if it is done as in a vision of Christ. "In His Name" was the watchword of the Waldenses, and their form of salutation, when they met and when they parted. It expressed their supreme idea of life, and of all that made it worth living. They said it at their weddings; and repeated it at their funerals. It was their formula in baptism, and at the Lord's supper; and it lifted to the same altitude of dignity their work in their fields and vineyards. When have wise men ever discovered a theory of life more magnificent and inspiring? No being in the universe has a more exalted occasion for self-respect than one who lives in a vision of Christ. The apostle could find no more honorable words in which to depict the life of Moses than to say of it, "He endured, as seeing him who is invisible."—Professor Austin Phelps.

Letter Department

KINROSS, Michigan, December 18, 1905.

Dear Herald: After a long time I write for your columns; have not been idle because I was silent. I am pretty busy nearly all of the time. I am at present in the upper peninsula of Michigan. Have been here a few weeks, trying to open up the work in the upper part, and get the gospel established among others who have never heard the angel's message before. Bro. B. S. Lambkin came up in the latter part of the last summer, and hunted up some of the scattered Saints; did some preaching among them, and also opened up some new places.

At White Dale, where I had done some preaching a few years ago, and where I also baptized some, Bro. Lambkin met with some opposition from a Reverend Hogg of the Presbyterian faith, who said some hard things against us and our work. Bro. Lambkin made reply to his three lectures against us, which gave satisfaction to those who heard him; but, as usual, some would not hear our side of the question.

Bro. Lambkin has some interested at a place called the "Soo" (Sault Saint Marie proper) and also at this place (Kinross), but the country is not very thickly populated in these parts, hence the congregations are not so large as at some other places.

I spoke at a place called Cottage Park at the home of Sr. Sinclair, who was anxious that her few neighbors might hear the gospel. Among them was a Methodist Episcopal minister who had spoken very disrespectfully to her of the church and its representatives, Book of Mormon, etc. The sister made it a point to have the minister present. The elder was introduced to me. We talked freely upon current events until the few neighbors had gathered in, then I opened the meeting, calling on the elder to offer prayer, which he did. I then spoke with good freedom for one hour, after which I said, "Elder, did you wish to make any remarks? if so, say on." He arose and talked about one hour, misquoting, contradicting, etc., after which I told the people I did not wish to weary them, but as the elder had misquoted the Scriptures, and made some incorrect statements relative to our work, I wished to make a reply, whereupon three or four cried out, "Go on, go on, we'll stay 'till midnight." I made about a thirty-minute speech, and when I came to Acts 2:38 (which the reverend man with Bible in hand read out the words, for the remission of sins, to prove his point), I showed him up plainly, so that he will never forget it, and the people will remember it for a long time.

From Cottage Park I went to a settlement called McCadey Settlement. Hearing that the majority of them were from Canada, and had been in there for several years, I thought to open up the work there, and thus learn the needs and demands for our future work. Not being acquainted with any one there, I sought one of the school officers, and from one I learned that the minister whom I met at Cottage Park had said that Latter Day Saints were Mormons, and we ought not be recognized; yet so far as he was concerned, he would give his consent to the use of the house, and that he would like to hear, but that one of the moderators had said, "No Mormon shall be allowed to preach in that schoolhouse," "and you," said he, "had better see the other two." I traveled through a heavy snowstorm another mile, and found the two officers with three or four others pressing hay. On asking for the use of the house, one of the other men yelled out, "Yes, let him have it!" "Yea," said another. Finally one of the officers said, "Yes, we may as well let him in"; and after a few minutes the other officer said he guessed I might have it. So I had the school-teacher announce meeting for that night. I tramped around and told all that I had time to call on, and although the night was stormy (lots of snow here), we had a good congregation for such a small settlement, and I had the best of attention; and oh, I was blessed with the Spirit of the Master so grandly! Good was done; and as I was putting on my things, and others leaving the house, I thought, Must I walk back to Bro. Armstrong's, seven miles through the snow and cold, when I had walked so far and was tired, etc., when a gentleman walked up to me and said, "Where are you going to stay to-night?" I said I did not know yet. "Come with me," said he. And who do you think it was? Why, the man who said, "No Mormon shall be allowed to preach in that schoolhouse!" I preached again the following evening to a good, interested congregation.

I believe our work will begin to spread from this on, more than in the past. But I find that the winter is not the best time in the upper part, and that is the best time in many portions in the lower part of the State, so we will all work accordingly.

Last night, at Kinross, we had over fifty out to hear us, some having come in from the camps near by, after which several spoke favorably of what they heard, saying, "If you come up this way in the spring when we can get out to hear you, we will be glad to attend"; "Be sure to come!" "I am sorry I am so far away at work. I wish I could have heard all of your discourses"; "Bro. Cornish, be sure and come back in the spring, and if the balance of your teaching is in harmony with the Bible, and all looks as clear as what we have heard, I am with you"; "So am I," said another, etc.

We must arrange to have one or two come up and labor around in these parts next summer. I will go home, shortly, to attend to other church matters—Bishop's agent's report, etc. Am pleased to tell you, dear readers of the HERALD, that the good work is onward in Michigan, and that all of our men are alive to the interests of the church. I will come again next year.

J. J. CORNISH.

BOONE, Iowa, December 18, 1905.

Dear Herald: At the time of my previous letter I was laboring in Fraser, Iowa. I left there November 12, without performing any baptisms, though five or six said they would be baptized in the spring. I then came to Boone. Preached twenty-one sermons in twenty days in the church. Closed there on the 5th and began in the home of Mr. (now Bro.) Collins, by request. As a result of these efforts I have baptized six, most of whom had never heard the "angel's message" before; and yet there are six or seven who say they will be baptized in the spring, and quite a few others are interested.

Brethren and sisters, let us live our religion, and we can not help being a power for good. May God speed the right.

STOUX FALLS, South Dakota, Dec. 19, 1905.

Dear Herald: I left home November 1 for this State, but I could not go where I wanted to, and so was in a dilemma. I stayed all night with Bro. J. M. Baker in Sioux City, and told him how I was puzzled. In the meantime I sought light from him "who giveth to all men liberally"; and both Bro. and Sr. Baker advised me to go to Akron, Iowa, that there were some Saints there that were starving for the word of God, and that they could tell me of some Saints in South Dakota not far away. I went and found a welcome among the Saints there,—Sr. Christy and Bro. and Sr. C. H. Anway. We held four preaching-services in Sr. Christy's home, sacrament at Bro. Anway's, and two lectures in the opera-house, and as a result sold four copies of the Book of Mormon. I visited Sr. Hoges and her husband on the Iowa side, five miles out, and their kindness was duly appreciated.

On Sunday, November 12, Bro. and Sr. Carl Mann came in from South Dakota to attend meeting, and I went home with them, stayed one day, and persuaded them to take the HERALD and Autumn Leaves, and join the home class, and keep up with the Sunday-school work.

On November 15, I went to Fairview, South Dakota, and was taken to the home of Bro. E. C. Dougherty, by his mother and her husband. Here was a family that had not seen an elder for six years, and in the meantime his wife had died; not an elder could be found to administer to her or to preach her funeral-sermon. I held four meetings in the Woodman Hall in Fairview to a fair-sized and attentive audience. Twice it was necessary to stop meetings on account of inclement weather. Several meetings were held in Bro. Dougherty's home, and also memorial-service in one of the schoolhouses. I did what I could to take the gospel of hope and peace into their home and tried to revive their somewhat drooping spirits. Grandma, sixty years old, and husband ten years her senior, they have a task to take care of five boys, with all the fun and frolic that belongs to youth. But they are doing it right joyfully, if they are tired and weary when night comes. A Sunday-school home class of seven, and subscriptions to HERALD, Ensign, Autumn Leaves, Hope, and Sunday-school Quarterlies, is part of the work that was done. I spent many hours in talking, reading, counseling, advising; and I did not forget a few sermonettes for the boys. There is no place on the ministerial blanks to report such work; but what does it matter? The angels can keep that record, and much of it is done that only they and God and the recipient of the good done knows of. Bro. Dougherty was a willing helper, but it being a Norwegian community made it more difficult to reach the people.

I also visited Srs. Harris and Jenkins, two more isolated ones. The latter had not seen an elder for about twenty years.

On the 12th inst. I came to this place and found another isolated one, a widow, Sr. A. M. Emmons. She had no home to take me to, but she aided otherwise. I reluctantly took what she gave me; but what right had I to deprive her of the joy that would come to her because she was willing to help the Master's cause. In my short experience as a missionary, I have learned what many other elders no doubt have learned also, that it is not the amount of wealth a person possesses that determines the giving, but the willing heart.

When I came here I rented a furnished room for one week for one dollar and twenty-five cents. Sr. Kelsey had given me a sack of home-made cookies, and the best part of a chicken; and with that and strict economy in my living, I determined with God's help to let this city of twelve thousand know who and what we are. I have had one meal a day, twenty-five cents, and an apple and some cookies for supper, and no breakfast for one week, and my expense has been as follows: Meals, $1.50; fruit, 15c; and, adding room rent, total, $2.90. I do not tell this to advertise myself as a hero, but because the necessity existed, and there was a possibility of my having to pay hall rent, and perhaps stay more than a week, and I believed God would help me in this as well as other things. I have felt no ill effects because of it, and I am willing to do so again when the necessity exists.

The more I engage in this work, the more I feel like trusting God. There were only two halls besides the opera-house, one a dance hall. They would not rent that out for church service. The other was controlled by the fraternal societies, jointly, and the trustees said they would not dare take the risk, as the public did not know about two churches both claiming to be Latter Day Saints, and that there were several preachers that belonged, and they would "kick." Some Brighamites had been here several years ago, preached on the streets, and were holding a discussion with an Advent, and the parties in control closed the house.

I wrote two identical articles for the two daily papers, and the editors received them and treated me with great kindness; put them in a very conspicuous place.

I have never had a newspaper man turn me down yet. They are a blessing to humanity. Were it not for them, the wheels of progress would stop.

I delivered two hundred Reasons Why to that many homes,—not in the front yard,—so several hundred have had an opportunity to receive an equivalent of one good sermon. We are often met with the remark, "What good does it do? People won't read the tracts." The same authority that said, "Preach the gospel," also said, "Use tracts," leaving experience to suggest to us the best methods of distribution. No man can come to the Father except the Father draw him. Our preaching and tract-giving is vain unless his Spirit draws them. What we do is a mere incident in the affair. We need more God-made converts, and less of human origin, and then it will not keep so many busy trying to keep them from getting cold. I go to-day to Valley Springs.

Yours hopefully and cheerfully,

EDWARD RANNIE.

FULTON, Kentucky, December 10, 1905.

Editors Herald: We have never yet learned of one who remained true to God making the least compromise with the world or the pleasures thereof. It has always been more or less weakening to me to read of the various kinds of gathering in our churches for the purpose of "helping the cause." Ice-cream suppers, selling tickets for such and such things, is only a "polished," and we might say a religious, way of gambling. Whoever read of Christ or any of his "obedient" servants instituting such meetings as these for the benefit of him or his work? Such things are only mild opiates the great deceiver uses to lead God's people on to something worse.

Reading of the vision seen by the sister in Australia some time ago, brings to my mind a statement I heard an elder make a few days ago. He argued to me that the church was getting better and the Saints were coming up higher all the time. He also argued that a man could commit sin every day, and at the same time abide the celestial law; said that God knew our weakness, etc., which he no doubt does. But it is written, "God does not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance"; and it is no safe plan, to my mind, for us to make any kind of a compromise with worldliness of any kind.

As a missionary of our district once said in an article, "The only safe ground for the Saints is to follow strictly after the written word," or we are sure to be deceived in ourselves—or in others.

A specially good article in HERALD for December 6, is the one from the pen of Bro. J. W. Rushton. To my mind, if there is a severe need for any people on earth, it is for what we may call a social redemption for Saints, and an exaltation of the many low, and a bringing down of the few exalted, and a bringing about of that "godly" plan,—"all things common."

As the brother said, What does a hungry man care for tracts and glib-tongued argument? Shall we sit still upon this important point of redemption, and let Mr. Eph Peterson and Company, or the Utah people, or Dowie, or some other organization of the "world" (as we are ready to call them), step out and take the lead in such a redemption? Are the children of this world wiser in their generation than the children of light? The people can not always be satisfied with "promises," neither with the principles of the doctrine, or defeating some one in an argument.

So far as the gathering is concerned, would we fare any better to go to Independence, than we would to go anywhere else? We would have to pay just as much rent, and work for some combine or company of the world, more than likely.

I do not question the legality of the Reorganization; but as the brother argued, our church has the "sinks," plenty of them; but it has not the stand-pipe and the permanent power to supply these "sinks." They are supplied by the will of the members, which is continually changing more or less, therefore it is uncertain. I for one would be glad to assist in many of these helps—things which Bro. Rushton mentioned, such as insurance, sickness, and accident policies, and the like, if they could be carried on by the church, and be the common property of the church; also for an orphans' home where the orphans of the Saints will have a welcome, and be cared for by the Saints. I will give fifty dollars to help erect such a home at any time, if it is the common property of the whole; but for a few individuals to build up, and own, and control, I will not assist. I hope and pray that these parts of God's kingdom will be looked after. May the Lord direct.

J. W. WILLIAMS.

SAN FRANCISCO, California, December 17, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have been reading Bro. Rushton's article on "The social aspect of our church," and I must say he voices my sentiments pretty thoroughly. The time has now come that we must declare the whole counsel of God. We must preach the gospel as contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants; and we find something more written in them than faith, repentance, baptism, and laying on of hands. The people are demanding to know our position on the industrial question. We can no longer keep these things in the background, but must preach them, and show the people the difference between the present industrial system, and that which will be under the rule or government of Zion. And the time has also come when we must break away from the old system of doing business, both in and out of Zion, and organize ourselves into coöperative bodies so that the stream that is now flowing out of Zion may be turned and made to flow in. As long as it is necessary for the Saints to have food to eat and clothes to wear, there will be an industrial side to the question of Zion-building; and it is one of the underlying principles and foundation-stones upon which the whole structure rests.

I would suggest that the church call a conference, at its earliest convenience, of such brethren as have made a study of the coöperative industrial question, for the purpose of formulating plans for organizing the Saints into coöperative bodies throughout the whole country. I am glad that Bro. Rushton has commenced to stir this subject. Keep it stirring, Bro. Rushton. Let us hear from you again.

Yours in bonds,

J. A. ANTHONY.

Independence Items.

During the closing weeks of November, continuing into the present month, with the exception of a few days near Thanksgiving-time, when there was a cold snap, and when as we learn there was great disasters from storms on the lakes, we have had delightful weather. Were it not for the trees being shorn of their foliage, and the sere and yellow fields of grass, one might be reminded of most any other time than cold and dreary winter; and, as some poetic Kansas mayor said in his message, let us be thankful for our "overflowing cribs and granaries, and the green wheat-fields that stretch away like the billows of the ocean in their immensity."

Of late it has fallen to our lot, so it appears, to add to our store of experiences much in the line of business procedure, and of course as busy people we have had the necessity confront us to adopt, as Roosevelt calls it, the "square deal."

Doctor McGurk, a Methodist Episcopal minister of Kansas City, said to his flock a Sunday or two ago, "We must stand upon a high plane of business integrity; we must guard against allowing the financial part of our lives to overshadow the intellectual and moral," and we must not forget that, as he remarked, "The eyes of the world are on Missouri"; and we may add, "its center place."

It is reported that the sentiment for the enforcement of law is growing up as a business conviction all over our State, and they quote the President as a believer in choosing officers possessing the necessary independence to conduct affairs on a high plane of efficiency and integrity "without regard to any boss or any machine."

It would be well, no doubt, for us to be in the vanguard, to inculcate lofty financial and supervisory ideals in our societies and schools, provide efficient workers to attend to business, and to sustain them in their offices; and where there is committee work, to be done, or receipts and expenditures to account for, reports are certainly in order that the secretary may not get discouraged, and disaster come to the society, things that have occurred in certain instances. Perhaps most of us have seen important matters placed on the weak shoulders of the young, or in the hands of the irresponsible and disinterested, and ignoring the one set apart for that duty.

The author of the little book called The Patriarchate makes the declaration, "The church is organized, the order of God established, the kingdom of God set up."

In view of this astounding fact, the Saints here can but tacitly admit what great responsibilities have of late been set aside in the hustle and hurry of money-getting for church purposes; and yet we are all interested.

Just before Thanksgiving operations began, the executive committee was appointed, due notice of the annual dinner given out, the solicitors were set to work collecting and soliciting baked beans, pumpkin, mince, and apple pies, cakes, pickles, puddings, and salads, together with the usual frills. The phones of the society members were set to work ringing up the cooks throughout the branch, the cashier was engaged, and the president and her chefs gathered up the turkeys, and tired, and worn with many anxious cares proceeded to make the final preparation for the dinner, from which, after all this strenuous labor, and there was realized the sum of only twenty-five dollars, to be applied on the church carpet.

"Consider—what profit all this care
And all this toil?"

Then there were the musical and literary entertainments of the Religio and Sunshine Band, with their silver collections, the box social for Christmas Offering, the work of the visiting and soliciting committees for "the children's home," the continuous efforts to obtain collections for branch expenses, and the bishop's work in gathering oblations and offerings for the poor; all this beside the hard and faithful labors of the building committee, and others at work for the erection of a dining and entertainment hall. But this earnest striving for means wherewith to better our conditions will bring its reward, and after the strenuous efforts are ended, there will be, we trust, a much-needed rest.

The work of beautifying the church is progressing, and is giving the Saints general satisfaction; and it is indeed thus far a credit to those who have by any means assisted in carrying on the work of church improvement.

About one hundred, including ten of the choir, were present at the Thanksgiving service when Bro. Hilliard preached with liberty on the subject of thanksgiving "for the common blessings of life, the provisions made for the more abundant life, for this choice land, the beneficence of God in appointing this for the center place and the promise of establishing the new Jerusalem."

He said "our country is performing a great work" in inspiring men to seek for freedom, right principles, and the fullest and highest privileges of government.

"This age, this dispensation claims our greatest consideration because of the work of the hastening time.

"We may raise the puny arm of man against the one whom God has appointed to do a work for him, but no such arm can prevail. The designs of God can not be frustrated. Above all, we should have faith in God, and rejoice because of the promised opportunity to help in the great and wonderful ordinance of God, whereby those who have passed on without the gospel may, by our instrumentality, be saved through the work of redemption."

Our brother spoke with the liberty of the Spirit, and there was excellent interest manifest.

In accord with the counsel as given through the HERALD by Bro. Rannie, that "the most important part, as preliminary work to the gathering, is that all be taught in plainness just what the responsibilities and duties are," much good instruction was given by the presiding elder at the opening of yesterday's prayer-meeting in regard to church etiquette and other matters. And, by the way, as our brother also spoke of "the good effects in regard to tithing" in his article, we note that "the old Jewish custom of paying tithes" has just been revived by a Kansas City Methodist Episcopal Church, and after January 1 present methods of raising money by collection and subscriptions will be discontinued.

At the afternoon meeting there was a large attendance as usual, prayers were offered in behalf of Srs. G. Hilliard and W. Crick who have been long and severely afflicted. There was much time given to earnest testimony, and the words of exhortation by Bro. Hulmes were attentively noted. He mentioned a few of the responsibilities set aside at times by some of our young people (and a few of the older ones) chief of which were reverence for the house of God and respect for the worshipers who love to assemble there. He spoke with much earnestness concerning the matter. We believe also that the vandalism which has been going on in the past in and near the church building by patient sufferance has been endured; but the irreverence of loud talking, running in and out, visiting and engaging in business-talk just before services, and whispering, laughing, and going out during the hour set apart, also the attendance now and then at questionable places of amusement by those holding conspicuous posts of duty in the work, are all more or less hindrances to its progress.

And we may look with leniency upon the thoughtless indifference of the young; but the disregard for set rules of order,—which have been laid down for the carrying on of church work—by the older members of "the church" which has been "organized" wherein is "the order of God established," "the kingdom of God set up," is no doubt an issue that must be met.

We are admonished by the near approach of the New Year to examine ourselves and see to it that by reverence toward the work, by exerting an influence for good over the young, and by a true "efficiency and integrity" in the affairs of religious and secular life, we come up higher and "stand blameless before our heavenly Father." Then will be the constant answer to our prayer hymn:

"Here we come thy name to praise
Let us feel thy presence near:
May thy glory meet our eyes
While we in thy house appear,
Here afford us, Lord, a taste
Of our everlasting feast."

And we rejoice because many of the Saints have quite recently had "a taste" of joy and peace through the gifts of visions and dreams, some of which were related at the prayer-meeting yesterday.

Extracts from Letters.

Mary A. Ferguson, Bellais, Illinois: "There is need of some one being here who is able to expound all things to the understanding of the people. I believe a goodly number could be gathered out. If any elder comes he will find a home at Bellais."

J. W. Metcalf, Louisville, Kentucky: "Am still contending for the faith of our people, and trying to live it as best I can. I do not understand why it is so hard to keep some of the Saints alive in the work. It seems to me if they could understand the importance of it, they would all be more faithful. Bro. Moler and myself attended a popular church on the 19th and listened to a discourse on salvation that could be obtained without our doing a single thing; and that if we thought we had to do something to be saved it was an insult to the Holy Trinity, for salvation was a free gift. He never mentioned faith or repentance, but said that baptism was a mark for us after we were saved to admit us into the church. At the close, as he was shaking hands at the door, I asked the privilege to review his sermon, but he would not grant it."

J. R. Allen, Cincinnati, Iowa, "I have been suffering for several months with a complication of diseases that has affected my mind greatly, and had it not been for HERALD, Hope, Autumn Leaves, and Ensign to cheer my lonely moments, I do not know what I would have done. I have often read letters from isolated families, but could not sympathize with them until now. I have tried the experiment, and have had enough of isolation, and would like to get back to some branch. I like the ideas contained in the last HERALD by Bro. Rushton. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may be relieved from affliction."

James Neill, Weyburn, Saskatchewan, Canada, "As true Saints of God we are trying to let our light shine. We have church and Sunday-school every Sunday, and prayer-meeting every Wednesday and Sunday night. I will gladly answer all questions from any of the Saints wishing to know about this country."

Sr. Chloe Runkle, Pisgah, Iowa, "I long to be of some use to our heavenly Father, and to his gospel. I feel that each of us rewarded has work to perform; and that each will be judged and according to his works."

G. H. Graves, Hopkinsville, Kentucky: "I want to try to build a church in Clarksville, Tennessee, in the spring. I have been appointed to solicit money to assist in getting a place of worship, and desire to ask Saints to help with their means to get the first (colored) Latter Day Saints' church in the world, built. I have baptized five in my two fields of labor. I have many calls for preaching, but have not the money to pay railroad fare. I do all the walking I can. The colored people get such low wages that they have no money with which to help Latter Day Saint preachers. Dear Saints, please pity the poor colored people in the Southern States."

S. F. Butts, Thurston, Nebraska: "We are out here alone, isolated from the rest of God's people, but we are not entirely spiritually dead. We ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that we may not fall, but that we may continue faithful, and finally find a home in heaven."

Communication from Hiteman Branch recommending ordination of Edward Rowley to office of elder, Charles White teacher, and Frank White deacon, was adopted and the presidency authorized to provide for the ordinations. A motion to amend a resolution of June, 1903, conference, regarding the approval of ordinations by the stake council, by substituting the word impracticable for the word impossible was carried. F. M. Weld was chosen to succeed W. J. Mather as member of the standing auditing committee to fill the unexpired term. A report from the reunion committee was received, and two recommendations adopted, as follows: 1. "Resolved that it is the opinion of the present reunion committee that it is authorized to act in providing for another reunion, subject to approval by the stake conference." 2. "Resolved further, that we recommend to said conference that the action of the past conference concerning reunions be rescinded, and that hereafter the reunion be authorized to appoint a reunion committee, which committee shall have full power to transact any business connected with reunions." Financial report of reunion committee: Receipts, $298.36; expenditures, $247.80. The following was adopted: "Resolved that no one be considered eligible to ordination, or to act as an officer in this stake, who is addicted to the use of tobacco." Adjourned to meet at Lamoni at call of stake presidency.

Eastern Maine.—Conference convened at Jonesport, December 9. S. O. Foss chosen to preside, assisted by Eugene Braun. E. M. Walker secretary. Branches reporting: Olive 149, Indian River 80. J. B. WILDERMUTH, Branch President.

Died.

JOSLYN.—Rose M. Starkey, born September 29, 1861, in Salt Lake City, Utah; was baptized by David H. Smith August 8, 1869; confirmed by A. H. and D. H. Smith, same date. Moved with her parents to Omaha in the fall of 1869, and remained here until her death. Was married to F. R. Joslyn, December 24, 1883. Died at St. Joseph's Hospital, Omaha, Nebraska, December 13, 1905. Services at Saints' chapel conducted by Ed R. Ahlstrand. Interment in Prospect Hill Cemetery. She leaves husband, mother, two brothers, and one sister to mourn their loss.

WERNER.—Gomer H., infant son of Joseph and Minnie Werner, at the home of his parents, at New Trenton, Indiana, November 25, 1905, aged 1 month and 25 days. Whooping-cough and pneumonia together were too much for the little one to stand. Of the immediate family, five sisters, one brother, and parents remain to mourn the loss of the little one. Funeral services in the Methodist Episcopal church at New Trenton, Indiana. Sermon by W. C. Marshall.

PYLE.—Catherine A. Pyle, December 15, 1905, at Lamoni, after several years of suffering; aged 83 years, 1 month, and 3 days. Four sons and three daughters are left to mourn their loss. Funeral from the Saints' church December 16. Sermon by John Smith, assisted by J. A. Gunsolley.

Seeking Relief at Washington.

Perhaps one of the things most likely to impress a stranger coming to this country to-day is the fact that though the country is reveling in prosperity so far as natural products are concerned, yet the stock-market is dull and leaden. This declares very conclusively—as pointed out to me by one gentleman with whom I talked—that the people have lost confidence to a large extent in the financial leaders, and are now turning their eyes toward Washington for deliverance from conditions which, while in no way calamitous, suggest a spirit of distrust and dissatisfaction even in the sunlight of prosperity.—From "Affairs at Washington," by Joe Mitchell Chapple in National Magazine for December.

"Christ with us," a poem by Edwin Markham, with appropriate decorations, fills the first page of the Woman's Home Companion for December, and the remainder of the magazine is very Christmassy indeed. Christmas fiction is represented by "An ogre's tenants," by Owen Oliver; "The burglar's Christmas gift," by Clara Morris; "The quest of the unwise men," by Temple Bailey; "A borrowed Christmas," by Mary Wilhelmina Hastings; "The man who gained the world," by Alfred Tressider Sheppard, and other timely stories. Mrs. Russell Sage contributes an essay on "What's the matter with Christmas?" Reo Bennett tells how John D. Rockefeller celebrates the day; and two articles elaborately illustrated with photographs tell "How royalty celebrates Christmas," and of "Christmas charities of the great cities." Mrs. Sangster's talk "Concerning Christmas," and useful articles on hand-made gifts, leather tooling, Christmas cookery and Christmas tables give the number additional holiday value. Published by the Crowell Publishing Company, Springfield, Ohio; one dollar a year; ten cents a copy.

If you are interested in this winter's legislative session, which promises to be the most important in many years, you should be a subscriber for the Register and Leader. No other paper in Iowa covers state-house and legislative news so completely, and the fact that it is the only morning newspaper published in Des Moines makes it certain that no other newspaper will have such accurate reports.

Better than ever before. The Register and Leader, Des Moines, Iowa, is the best newspaper published for Iowa readers. A handsome, new, three-sheet wall map and the paper free the remainder of this year to new subscribers paying for 1906. The Des Moines Register and Leader publishes day after day more Iowa news than any other paper.

The Charm of China.

With all the offensive sights and smells there is no denying a mysterious and alluring fascination in China for all who come in contact with her people under their native conditions. Even the recollection of the discomforts of travel by the native means can not blot out the beauty of the landscape, the terraced mountain sides, the persimmon-groves, the tea-houses, the diminutive gardens, the little patches of ripening grain, and the great toiling throng always cheerful and contented in spite of their unending tasks.

All who have been visitors to China seem irresistibly drawn back to the country. They hear the call of the East and never cease to look forward to the time when they shall return to it again.

Those who have once lived in China are never satisfied to live anywhere else. Soothing and insinuating the fatalism of the Chinese creeps upon them and they too learn to accept things as they come. Other landscapes lose their interest, the oldest ruins of other climates seem cheap and new, while the bustle and haste of Occidental life with its harsh customs and abrupt manners bruise their spirit, and they long for the peace of Cathay.—From "China, the Sphinx of the twentieth century," by Guy M. Walker, in the Chautauquan for December.

If you have been thinking of subscribing for the Register and Leader, wait no longer, but avail yourself of this offer to-day: Any new mail subscriber sending $4.00 (the regular one year rate) will receive the Daily Register and Leader from now until January 1, 1907—almost fourteen months. If both daily and Sunday editions are wanted, send $6.00. Address: The Register and Leader, Des Moines, Iowa.

Home Made

Have your cake, muffins, and tea biscuit home-made. They will be fresher, cleaner, more tasty and wholesome.

Royal Baking Powder helps the house wife to produce at home, quickly and economically, fine and tasty cake, the raised hot-biscuit, puddings, the frosted layer-cake, crisp cookies, crullers, crusts and muffins, with which the ready-made food found at the bake-shop or grocery does not compare.

Royal is the greatest of bake-day helps.
