THE AMANA SOCIETY AGAIN.

The readers of the HERALD are all more or less desirous of knowing about every effort of the past or the present to solve the question of social, economic, or communal associations, whatever may have been their origin or the forms and processes of their organization, operation, and continuance.

We called attention to the Amana Society several years ago, and gave a statistical statement of some of its features and the number of its membership, then in an excess of eighteen hundred. From the tone of the article which we quote from the Des Moines Capital for June 23, 1905, we conclude that there has been a slight decrease in numbers. This is significant though the decrease may be small, for it points to the final decay of the community through decrepitude of bodily life.

When we wrote before the society was obliged to rent many acres of its farming lands, as the number of workers had decreased—the result of incompetency from age and the failure of accession of younger elements to take the places so made vacant.

The statistics of production then gave two hundred and seventy-two dollars per year for producers outside of the society in the state of Iowa, as against two hundred and fifty dollars per producer in the society. There were nearly five hundred nonproducers included in the eighteen hundred membership at that time.

We made arrangement with quite an able writer, then an advocate for communal association and who was visiting the society at Amana for business purposes of his own, to write us the results of his personal inquiry into the principles, organization, methods, and results as he saw and found things; but, for reasons not assigned, he failed to inform us, so that we do not now know whether he considered it a success or not.

If some one or two of our German-speaking members would visit Amana and give the HERALD the results of their observation and inquiry, it would be worth reading and beneficial to the Saints. "Knowledge is power," needs a little revision, to the knowledge of things desirable to know is the basis upon which the power of action may safely rest. We are all anxious for working basis of communal or economic association and coöperation, but so far are not settled upon an agreed working detail of procedure. True, the order has been given of God, but no divine detail has been given. Is it one of those things referred to in the command "men should of their own selves seek to bring to pass much righteousness, for the power is in them"? We are so far inclined to think so.

VINTON, Iowa, June 23.—Situating twenty-five miles south of here is the "Amana Society," or the self-styled "community of true inspiration," and no more interesting place to the studious traveler could be found within the borders of the State. Founded in the year 1714, making its first beginning in Hussia, Germany, not as a communistic society then but as a new religious sect having for its creed the belief that God could inspire men and women to speak and declare his word and will, and thus act as messengers of divine teaching to the world, and the society is to this day living a life of simple and conscientious Christianity, with the highest standard of virtue and morality, devoid of all outward display and form, and many of their virtues might well be imitated by the Christian church of the present day in its purpose of leading humanity to a purer and truer Christianity. The society was not without its troubles in its earlier history, and from 1749 to 1779 suffered a rapid decline, and at the beginning of the nineteenth century but few of their large congregations which had been established throughout the European countries remained, and even these had become largely imbued with the ways of the common world. Their decline seems to have continued until about the year 1817, when a new and apparently greater period dawned upon the society, through the endowment of the gift of inspiration upon M. Krassert and Barbara Heinmann, the latter a poor peasant girl without culture and education, and from this time on the society became more and more united, until it found itself under a form of government similar to that of the present day, except that then there was no community of goods.

Government molestations arising from the withdrawal of their children from the public schools, and the maintenance, as to-day, of their own schools, and the refusal to accept the affirmation of members in place of the oath sought induced the society to seek refuge where they could follow their religious customs unmolested, after various attempts in the European countries, among which was the leasing of large tracts of lands at Marienborn, with commodious buildings near Bonneburg, and later tracts from the Herrnhuter Society, and the old convent of Arnburg owned by the Count of Laubach, with large tracts of land in connection therewith. But even here molestations followed until it was decided at conferences held in July and August, 1842, at Armenburg and Engelthal, to send members to America, the land of personal and religious liberty, to find a new home, and the Seneca Indian reservation, a tract of about ten thousand acres of partly dense virgin forest and partly cultivated lands, near Buffalo, New York, was purchased, and during the years 1843-1846 some eight hundred members of the society came over to occupy their new possessions where they remained until in 1854, when it was found that more lands would have to be acquired, and in September, 1854, four members came west to find new possessions to be acquired; but after spending a month in Kansas, traveling by wagons with Indians for guides and suffering the many hardships of the frontier, they returned much discouraged by the failure of their commission; but the plan of removal was not abandoned and in November a new committee was sent to visit the new state of Iowa and inspect several large tracts of government land. The most pleasing to this committee was the rich Iowa valley, situated about twenty miles west of Iowa City and their present rich possessions which were with much difficulty purchased, and the first village was laid out on a high hill north of the Iowa River, eleven miles east of Marengo. It was called Amana, a name taken from the Bible and meaning "remain true." At first only small frame houses were built, but as more and more help came from the East, quarries, with which the hills were rich and abundant, were opened and stone buildings were built.

In the following years more villages were commenced at different places on the colony: West Amana and South Amana in 1856, High Amana in 1857, and East Amana in 1860. Up to this time the nearest railroad station had been Iowa City, twenty miles distant, but now the Mississippi & Missouri Railroad, later named the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, was completed as far as Homestead, a small town south of the society's territory, and the society saw the necessity of owning this railroad station and in 1881 the entire village was bought and thus became the sixth of the villages of the society. In 1862 another village was founded two miles west of Amana and called Middle Amana. The last of the members of the society at Buffalo came on December 13, 1864, by which time the society had acquired about twenty-six thousand acres of land, approximately the amount owned at the present time. In 1859 the society was incorporated as a religious and benevolent society under the name of the "Amana Society."

The purposes sought to be obtained by this organization as a religious society and community is best defined in the following more important provisions of the society's constitution:

"Article 1. The foundation of our civil organization is and shall remain for ever, God, the Lord, and the faith, which he worked in us according to his free grace and mercy, and which is founded upon the word of God as revealed in the Old and New Testaments. The testimony of Jesus as revealed through the spirit of prophesy, and the hidden spirit of grace and prophesy. The purpose of our association as a religious society is therefore no worldly or selfish one, but the purpose of the love of God in his vocation of grace received by us, to serve him in the inward and outward bond of union, according to his laws, and his requirements in our own consciences, and thus to work out the salvation of our souls, through the redeeming grace of Jesus Christ, in self denial, in the obedience of our faith, and in the remonstrance of our faithfulness in the inward and outward service of the community, by the power of grace, which God presents us with. And to fulfill this duty we do hereby covenant and promise collectively and each to the other by the acceptance and signing of this present constitution.

"Article 2. In this bond of union tied by God amongst ourselves, it is our unanimous will and resolution, that the land purchased here and that may hereafter be purchased, shall be and remain a common estate and property, with all improvements thereon and appurtenances thereto, as also with all the labors, cares, troubles, and burdens, of which each member shall bear his allotted share with a willing heart. And having obtained in pursuance of the act of the legislature of this State, chapter 131, passed March 23, 1858, an incorporation as a religious society, it is hereby agreed on that the present and future titles to our common lands shall be conveyed to and vested in 'The Amana Society,' in the township of Amana, as our corporate name by which we are known in law."

The society is engaged in agriculture and manufactures and all surplus remaining after defraying expenses, etc., is applied to improvements, to the erection and maintenance of their separate schools for each of the several colonies, the founding of a business and a safety fund, and to benevolent purposes in general. The control and management is vested in local organizations for each village auxiliary to a board of thirteen trustees who are chosen annually from among the elders. Every member is required to give his or her property both real and personal to the trustees for the common fund, at the time of joining the society, and members leaving the society either by their own choice or expulsion shall receive back the amount paid into the common fund without any interest or allowance for services during the time of their membership. The increase in membership has been slow but steady until within the past few years when it has practically been at a standstill and now numbers between seventeen and eighteen hundred. There is in operation two woolen mills, a factory for the manufacture of cotton prints, soap factory and shoe factory, also seven stores distributed through the several villages for supplying the wants of the members and accommodating the surrounding farming community. The society produces about everything required for its comfort and maintenance, meals are taken in large kitchen houses, where from thirty to fifty people eat together, cooking by individual families is unknown, children attend school the year around from the ages of five to fourteen and are taught both the English and German language; but the German language is used exclusively by the members in their work and business. Religious meetings presided over by the elders are held twice on Sunday, short prayer-meetings being held every evening, members are not admitted without first giving proof of their full accord with the religious doctrines of the society, and then usually have to go through a period of probation. In dress and wearing apparel the many variable styles of the day are in no way imitated, stress being apparently put upon comfort and comeliness.

The dwelling-houses likewise are plainly built without paint, set in irregular places without reference to boundary lines, but are commodious and the living rooms comfortably but plainly furnished, the entire absence of the usual luxuries of the even common American home being noticeably absent. Games and all worldly amusements are not countenanced, being thought to be harmful, diverting the mind from religious matters, and while this may not mean an ascetic life, cheerless and discontented, to the average young American there might appear a restraint not fully in accord with the imaginations of the youthful mind, yet there is an apparent solicitude for the welfare and happiness of every one so strongly manifested that their life seems well blended with happiness and peace. The outcome of the recent action by the State is apparently giving the society but little anxiety, and yet whisperings of contemplated removal and dissolution is indulged in by occasional non-members of the society claiming superior knowledge of the inward workings of the society. However, there is apparently perfect harmony within the society, and the interest and sympathy participated in by all manifests a life blended with peace and cheerfulness, and a great loyalty and attachment each for the other.

CREATING NEW FORESTS.

An effort is being made by the Government to reclaim the lands from which the forests have been cut in order to furnish material for building and other uses. So carelessly, and in some instances so ruthlessly as to be wantonly wicked, has the work of destruction been carried on, that the increasing demand for lumber is facing a rapidly failing supply; and how to replace the forests is an anxious study for the lumbermen and the nation. The following is in point:

California and other Western States have proved the efficacy of irrigation in promoting agriculture, but there are millions of acres of fertile land unused through lack of sufficient water. Much of this land will be reclaimed by the gigantic irrigation works planned by the National Government, but the scope of this work is limited by the amount of water available. The influence of forests in conserving a limited rainfall is recognized, but they are often wanting where most needed. Thus forest planting is often necessary.

An example of what the Bureau of Forestry is doing in this direction is furnished by the nursery which it is establishing fifteen miles from Santa Barbara, in Southern California. This is the fourth forest nursery which the Bureau has established within Western forest reserves. Nowhere in California is water needed more than in the coast plain east and southeast of Santa Barbara. To cover large areas with new tree growth, however, in regions where the forest can not naturally restore itself, is a difficult matter. Unless great care is used in the selection of species and in the cultural methods employed, the work is likely to prove a failure. Methods which would succeed on a small plantation are impracticable on a large scale on account of the expense.

The nursery in the Santa Barbara Reserve will be planted with seed of trees likely to flourish in that region. Coulter and yellow pine will be most largely planted. The seedlings will be ready to transplant to their permanent locations two years hence.

The first attempt at reforestation will be made on the upper watershed of the Santa Ynez River, which supplies the town of Santa Barbara with water. This town of only sixteen thousand inhabitants is spending six hundred thousand dollars to secure a good water supply. A dam and reservoir for this purpose are now under construction. The Santa Ynez watershed is now bare or poorly covered with chaparral. A good forest growth is necessary both to conserve the water and to prevent the washing down of silt, which if unchecked would eventually fill and ruin the reservoir.

The success of the transplanting will depend largely upon the season. In excessively dry years good results can not be expected, and the bureau must take advantage of a wet season. Preparations for the transplanting will be begun immediately, so that quick work can be done the first favorable season after the seedlings are old enough.

In the whole of the Santa Barbara Forest Reserve, which contains nearly two million acres, there are only two groves of any size. There is, therefore, a large opportunity for the extension of the work of tree planting, if it proves successful.

In Nebraska the Bureau of Forestry has demonstrated its ability to solve the same kind of difficulties with which it is confronted in California, and has successfully established forest plantations at an extremely low cost. If it can do the same in Southern California it will be an important work for the welfare of the region.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The reunion committee of the Lamoni Stake has secured forty acres of timber located one mile or less from the city of Lamoni in which to hold the stake reunion, beginning Friday, August 4, and lasting over Sunday, the 13th. This effort to locate the reunion at Lamoni is made with a view to securing grounds entirely under control of our own people, with a view to the exclusion of extraneous and disturbing features foreign to the spirit of such gatherings. A good attendance is requested from members of the church and friends in the stake, and those of adjoining districts are also invited to be present. It is hoped that an arrangement will be made to secure these grounds as permanent grounds for reunion and similar purposes. Good speakers, abundance of pasture, healthful and eligible location, etc. Tents and meals at reasonable prices. See present and later notices of the committee. Come and tent with the people of Lamoni Stake, and enjoy a season of spiritual and social enjoyment with a health-promoting outing.

Bro. Gomer T. Griffiths has given notice that Bro. Joseph Smith will call at certain places in the West and Northwest, including Bozeman, Butte, Spokane, Seattle, and other places in the far West; but he failed to notice that President Smith would be accompanied by his wife and three children, it being the intention to visit Vancouver, where the wife's father and mother are living, as one object of the visit. Bro. Joseph expresses the hope that the Saints where he may call will not be surprised nor incommoded by the fact that he has his little family with him. He has never taken his family into the field with him in all the years of his ministry, and he would not now like to impose upon the hospitality of the Saints unnecessarily. This is the reason for this little note calling attention to the fact. Should any feel inclined to write him a note in reference to the visit, from any of the places named, he would be pleased to receive it.

There were nineteen baptized into the Lamoni Branch Sunday, June 25, Children's Day. These were mostly scholars from the Sunday-school, some being children of those not belonging to the church. Confirmation of these occupied the entire evening session, the baptizing having been done by Brn. F. B. Blair and William Anderson. Two were confirmed at the water side, seventeen at the church.

Children's Day was a notable one at Lamoni, the services and exercises of the morning session being full of interest, in charge of Superintendent Oscar Anderson. The program was a good one and was well sustained by the children. The house was full. The day was fine, one of which it has been written, "What so rare as a day in June."

Excavators in Mexico City have found that the city is built on the ruined foundations of another and the presence of Spanish coins would indicate that the ruined town was the ancient Aztec capital razed by Cortez. Many feet further down ruins of still another city have been found, on which the Aztec capital was evidently built. Scientists are asking the government for permission to dig deep and explore the ancient ruins.

C. J. Spurlock, who did not take missionary appointment for the present year on account of ill health, has of late been visiting and working in and near King Mills, Arkansas, and has done considerable missionary labor in the way of a local minister. This is as it should be. Elders should never wait for a missionary appointment before finding plenty to do, if health will permit.

Sr. Irene B. Sorden, of Kingfisher, Oklahoma, wrote a letter for the HERALD some time ago, and shortly after received a letter from a lady by the name of Smith, asking a favor which she would gladly grant, but having lost the letter she does not know the lady's address. Mrs. Smith lives somewhere in California, and Sr. Sorden would be glad to hear from her again.

Original Poetry

A Plea for Unity.

Once in a mountainous region,
A ten-horse wagon-train
Had pulled through the muddy bottom land
And over the rolling plain.
They had left the rivers behind them
And toiled up the weary steep,
Sometimes thro' a cleft in the mountain-side,
Sometimes through the canyons deep.

The horses were jaded and weary,
They'd traveled through heat and cold,
The leaders were poor and thin and rough,
The wheelers were lame and old.
But as one at th' call of the driver,
They strained at the tugs once more,
With a last, long pull, with one accord,—
They stood at the stable door.

In another part of the country
A good train started that day.
Twenty horses, all fat and shining,
The leaders were strong and gay.
They were all inclined to be fractious
Some wanted to go too fast
Others needed a constant urging
To hold them to their task.

The wagons were heavily loaded
The horses did chafe and fret,
While the driver coaxed and scolded
As they grew more unruly yet.
Then they came to a shelving roadway
'Twas safe if the team were quiet;
If they'd heed the voice of the driver
He could easily guide them by it.

He gave the sign to the horses.
In vain! Though his arm was strong,
Each thought his own way was the best,
And the driver's way was wrong.
They were piled in the depths together,
And suffered and moaned and died;
Because they would not pull together,
And heed to the voice of their guide.

In the heart of the Ozark Mountains
Is a band of Saints I know,
Who remind me much of the ten-horse team
That was steady and sure, if slow.
Always trying to pull together,
As they climbed the weary steep,
Giving due heed to the guiding voice
That warns them of pitfalls deep.

In another part of the country
Is th' twenty-horse band I know—
Members all palling this way and that Each striving his own way to go.
And I fear me disaster's ahead,—
The loss of all they would gain
Unless they'll unite their forces, and heed
The touch of the guiding rein.

GRACELAND COMMENCEMENT.

BACCALAUREATE SERMON AT LAMONI, IOWA, JUNE 11, 1905,
BY ELDER G. H. HULMES, OF INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Doth not wisdom cry? and understanding put forth her voice? She standeth in the top of high places, by the way of the places of the paths. She crieth at the gates, at the entry of the city, at the coming in of the doors: Unto you, O men, I call; and my voice is to the sons of man. O ye simple, understand wisdom: and, ye fools, be ye of an understanding heart. Hear, for I will speak of excellent things; and the opening of my lips shall be of right things. For my mouth shall speak truth; and wickedness is an abomination to my lips. All the words of my mouth are in righteousness; there is nothing froward or perverse in them. They are all plain to him that understandeth, and right to them that find knowledge. Receive my instruction, and not silver; and knowledge rather than choice gold. For wisdom is better than rubies; and all the things that may be desired are not to be compared to it. I wisdom dwell with prudence, and find out knowledge of witty inventions.—Proverbs 8: 1-12.

I am safe, I believe, in saying that the fairly prosperous middle classes are the happiest and most contented of earth's inhabitants. Add to their moderate prosperity a religion inculcating the highest morality, honesty, and all the virtues, including a practical application of the golden rule: "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you do ye also unto them,"—add to this a good, practical education and, I repeat it as my conviction, that the middle classes, neither the rich nor poor, in the extreme sense in which these terms are used in the world, are by far the happiest and most contented, especially in a land where constitutional liberty prevails, and I thank God that the conviction that we as a church hold to, and teach, that this nation and its constitution was formulated under divine leading, is even now showing an example of its high mission in the midst of the nations, under the peace-making diplomacy of our constitutional president in saying words of peaceful intent which may yet lead to the ceasing of war and carnage by the great empires of Russia and Japan in the far-off eastern land.

The glaring weakness of an absolute form of government in human hands, is this: The benevolent and humane ruler of to-day, may be the capricious tyrant of to-morrow. The youth who live in lands where constitutional liberty assures to each the fruits of individual industry, should indeed highly cherish such privileges.

To our Graceland graduates along the lines of a business education in all its departments, there comes a splendid recognition by our heavenly Father, to this class of life's very important mission work:

All are called according to the gifts and callings of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

What an encouragement! By giving a reasonable proportion of the fruits of the labor of each in consecration, tithes, and offerings in accordance with God's law, their work becomes just as important in its sphere as that of the ministry in theirs.

This reminds me forcibly of David's decision relating to a similar matter in the olden time. Some of David's men objected to those, who for legitimate reasons were prevented from going down to battle, receiving any of the victor's rewards:

Then said David, Ye shall not do so, my brethren, with that which the Lord hath given us, who hath preserved us, and delivered the company that came against us into our hand. For who will hearken unto you in this matter? but as his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be that tarrieth by the staff: they shall part alike.

And David made it a statute and ordinance in Israel from that day.

Of the importance of business and our relations to it, we read: "Not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord."—Romans 12: 11.

Our heavenly Father has frequently by the written word shown displeasure with lukewarmness and half-heartedness. It strikes a discordant note, and is out of harmony with the glorious activities of the moving worlds which he has made. No wonder Jesus Christ our Lord incorporated in his system the first commandment:

And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength.

That commandment, if possible, more than any other, is entirely and altogether for our benefit as a race, and not at all for his benefit, who gave it. If complied with, it will rapidly lift up those who observe it, nearer and nearer to ultimate perfection. Can any important work even of this world be done so well in any other way?

So, as being especially pleasing to our heavenly Father, I urge in relation to entrance upon the activities of life, purity and equity of purpose, also a cultivation of fervent, strenuous business habits, and, associating with these, manly and womanly lives, which will finally bring even the people of the world to look for par excellence in results from the young men and women of Graceland, and similar institutions of the church, of which we hope it will become a prototype, in the great work of practical education, by the church, and within the radius of its influence.

In this age of excess and dissipation, the physical and mental benefit of the conserving principles inculcated in the habits and lives of our young people, among other things in the avoidance of tobacco and intoxicating drink or other deteriorating agencies of any kind, must soon be recognized by the practical men of business of the world. The cry for this class of brain and muscle is becoming more and more urgent. Not that other institutions than ours are not teaching these things, for in many noble instances they are, and there is much of splendid good being taught in the world, in her schools and splendid institutions of learning.

With us there is a difference which must sooner or later tell to our credit, and that is this: We have access as they have to moral and philosophical teaching of the world and the Bible; but we also accept as direct revelation instruction bearing upon almost every living issue relating to moral questions of to-day.

"Not slothful in business." I once read of a young man, a graduate of an institution of learning, who sought and obtained employment in one of the offices of a large corporation. A few days after being installed at his desk, he was approached by an employee who had been with the company for some time, and he advised as follows: "Young man, this is a soulless corporation. Take my advice, and do just as little as you can to merely hold your position. You will get no thanks for doing more." He courteously thanked his adviser and promised to consider his advice.

That night upon retiring to rest he began to think as follows: If I take that man's advice, what will be the result with myself? I will become a mere incompetent, development along practical lines will cease. For my own sake if for no other, I will do the very best I can. It was not long until the results were seen in his steady advancement, and he was placed, among other promotions, at advanced salary over the department wherein continued to work at his old desk his foolish adviser. His advance to positions of honor and increased recompense was of comparatively little significance compared with the infinite value of the development coming to him by his wise choice.

There is no reason why, if with clean hands and pure hearts it is sought in legitimate ways with intent to do good, some of our graduates may not occupy even in some great positions of trust in this and other lands. Joseph did in Egypt, when the great cities of Thebes and Memphis were in the height of their grandeur, and Daniel in great Babylon; and each though high in station and next to earth's greatest monarchs of those times, stations gained by honorable rectitude and godly gifts, yet they continued through life faithful and devoted servants of the Lord.

But if prospered we must remember as Rome was admonished, "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

With us we may well use this watchword: "Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." If so you shall consistently do, no height, honorably and righteously attained, need be denied you.

But, dear young friends, let me warn you, if by reason of the excellent education you have and shall yet attain you shall be fortunate in obtaining increase of talents and recompense, do not as Samson of old, sell your strength to a Delilah of impurity, or to greed, or to mere worldliness; or, as Esau, sell your birthright for a "mess of pottage"; or, as some have done, for even less than that.

Music! Oh, that princely gift! Nor does it alone remain for a David to, with matchless skill, touch the harp, and amidst a nation of musicians and singers become the sweet singer of vast multitudes.

Yes, and it is true, even when Jehovah himself, with thrilling presence and awful majesty, proposed being present at the dedication of the great temple of Solomon, infinitely beautiful and complete, being finished in detail by the divine instruction of immediate revelation, on that great occasion when "the Levites" praised the Lord "with instruments of music . . . which David the king had made to praise the Lord, . . . and the priests sounded trumpets before them." (2 Chronicles 7:6.)

We believe the God whom we serve is, now as then, a lover of music; not only vocal but instrumental as well; and while our young men and maidens have all the incentives the rest of the world has to love and cultivate music, and the splendid history of the music of the world proves that these incentives alone lead to wondrous development,—yes, and we also recognize in the splendid creations of earth's great masters of music, such as Beethoven and others, an inspiration that is higher than the unaided human intellect; with all this before our youth we also have such incentives as this: "Let the young men and the maidens cultivate the gifts of music and of song."—Doctrine and Covenants 119:6. I do not think it extravagant to expect, in due time, great results in view of the Lord's direct instruction to us as a people, not only regarding music but also in relation to learning in every avenue of development wherein our youth will enter, not only from inclination, but by reason of divine advice and authority. Entering upon these things as upon a stewardship from above, is it not reasonable to expect shining lights to arise from our youth, not only in the true and complete theology, the gospel restored in its fullness, but also in the realms of philosophy and general learning, in the arts and sciences, and mechanical arts and developments of labor?

Mentally I see arising in the near future, under God's gracious and divine leading, an army of practical development, which I believe will become exceeding great, and in strange and peaceful ways being enveloped and impelled by God's Holy Spirit shall become to the world an astonishment which will lead many to say, "Let us not disturb this people, for while we can not believe as they do, yet surely God is with them in many practical and excellent ways."

Now, may these graduates of the class of 1905 move on under God's blessing in the church and the world's true and good development, and with them as in our Savior's sweet prayer for his disciples, may God not take them out of the world, "but keep them from the evil."

"NON-MORMONISM VERSUS MORMONISM."

"A PLAIN STATEMENT OF FACTS."

The above is caption to a catchy and deceptive little circular issued by Clark Braden as a forerunner in his dishonorable war upon the equitable and impartial system of doctrine and precept espoused and advocated by the Latter Day Saints. A few unsuspecting, innocent persons have been transiently inveigled by means of this surface work, but we know of none who have been enlightened walking into this gilded spider-parlor. We think a few lines exposing the falsehoods and utter rankness of logic, will not be untimely. In order to beguile an unacquainted public, the circular proposes "looping the loop" by leading out with an unctuous, "flattering untruth, which would fain land all vessels in the same harbor. The first paragraph is as follows:

As Mormons profess to accept, believe, and use the Bible, just as all other professed Christians believe, accept, and use it; the one great and fundamental issue between Mormons and all other professed believers of the Bible, the one on which all other issues are based, and the issue that includes all other issues, is this: "Should Joseph Smith be accepted as a prophet of God, the same as the prophets of the Bible should be accepted, and be added to the prophets of the Bible, as equal and indeed superior to them?"

This is a specious attempt to unify, but we fear the maudlin agglutination. If by the use of the term "Mormons" he means the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, we would love to know just when there has been a confederation or union of said Reorganized Church with "all other professed Christians." The Reorganized Church "believes, accepts, and uses the Bible as the word of God"; "all other professed Christians" should believe, accept, and use it as the word of God; but as to the standard by which that word is interpreted, and the interpretation itself, the Reorganized Church does not stand committed to what is known as "evangelicalism," or, to the standard of beliefs, acceptance, and usages of "all other professed Christians." The Reorganized Church stands for church restoration instead of church succession through the Dark Ages. We plead the restoration of the kingdom of God on its original New Testament basis, by angel ministration, and to the Bible we appeal in advocacy of this plea. Do "all other Christians" believe and accept this? The Reorganized Church "believes, accepts, and uses the Bible" in the doctrine of a "called ministry," by immediate and direct revelation from God. (Revelation 14:6; Hebrews 5:4; Romans 10:14.) Do "all other professed Christians" believe, accept, and use the Bible the same way? The Reorganized Church "believes, accepts, and uses the Bible" in the doctrine that baptism in water, by immersion, in the name of Jesus, for the remission of sin, is essential to salvation. (See Mark 1:4; Luke 3:3; Acts 2:38; Romans 6:1-6; Titus 3:5.) Do "all other professed Christians" believe, accept, and use the Bible the same way? The Reorganized Church believes, accepts, and uses the Bible in the ordinance of "laying on of hands" for the gift of the Holy Ghost after baptism. Do "all other professed Christians" believe, accept, and use the Bible in the same way? The Reorganized Church believes, accepts, and uses the Bible in the organization of the church, developing apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, bishops, priests, deacons, etc., with the priesthoods of Melchisedec and Aaron. Do "all other professed Christians" believe, accept, and use the Bible in the same way? If "all other professed Christians" believe, accept, and use the Bible in the same way as does the Reorganized Church, why are "all other professed Christians" fighting the Reorganized Church? It would be cheering indeed, if "all other professed Christians" would concede that the doctrine taught and administered by the Reorganized Church is true. But "all other professed Christians" should know Clark Braden misrepresents them in this, just for the purpose of evading proper issues.

"Joseph Smith and his productions—the only issue," says Braden. But suppose Alexander Campbell and his productions should logically constitute one more issue? "We don't hold him up as a prophet, he never claimed to be a seer or revelator," says Braden. It does not matter; will you affirm in public debate what you believe him to have been? It is true the Campbellite church would have no existence but for A. Campbell,—any more than would the Methodists without John Wesley, or the Latter Day Saints without Joseph Smith. Clark Braden would not affirm that "Alexander Campbell was a servant of Jesus Christ, and that he taught the gospel as we find it in the Bible." Reverends Stilwell and Pegram (Methodists) would not affirm, nor permit Braden to affirm that (a) John Wesley was a good man, (b) that he was a servant of God, (c) that he taught the gospel, (d) that he gave the world the church of Christ. In fact these gentlemen denied that the church of Christ, as it existed under the personnel of Jesus and the apostles, was in the world to-day. It is quite plain that two positive, clear-cut issues are before the public—one which Braden characterizes as "Mormonism," and one which we characterize as "Campbellism." Both systems come before the world demanding recognition. Both rest upon merit as to the consideration they should receive. Braden holds up "Mormonism" as a "blasphemous imposition." We certainly hold "Campbellism" as a clumsy counterfeit—a conspiracy to cheat the children of God out of their legal inheritance, and an attempt to default the promises of God.

If both systems are thus illegitimate, neither of them should receive recognition from the world; but it is an undecided question except by a proper examination of the doctrines, beliefs, and organizations of each system. In order to prop up his theory of "one issue," Braden further says, that the introduction of one more issue, covering both sides of the controversy, "enables his opponent to sling dirt." Mirabile dictu! Braden never flings dirt! He is so clean! Does he suppose we are going to find a soft spot on which to let him down? Does he wish to beg now, for an easy fall? "Only one issue," and that issue involves the question: "Was Joseph Smith superior to the prophets of the Bible?" Indeed! When has such position been taken?

The Reorganized Church looks upon Joseph Smith as having been a servant of Jesus Christ—a minister of the gospel, and who, like Paul, had seen a vision of Jesus Christ—that he was not disobedient to the heavenly vision, and like Paul, to whom was committed a dispensation of the gospel, and like Paul, was inspired to "lay the foundation" of a great work to be performed by the Lord in the latter days.

If Joseph Smith was "called of God," and endowed with inspiration necessary to the performance of the work he was called to do, and faithfully performed that work until called to an eternal home, he ranks with all other servants of God, in any and every age of the world, who has faithfully wrought out the mission for which he came into the world and will receive "reward according to works," and their works must bear them witness instead of foul aspersions of men. The Lord says: "If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not."—John 10:37. "But if I do, though you believe not me, believe the works." What for? "That ye may know, and believe, that the father is in me, and I in him."—Verse 38. This is the test: if his works were in harmony with the Father, they would witness the authority of the Father.

Braden's advance sheet further says:

A man is on trial for making a counterfeit bill. His counsel admits that he made the bill. The prosecuting attorney demands that he produce authority from the government, for making the bill. The criminal's attorney coolly proposes that the real issue, the only issue, authority of the accused to make the bill, be set to one side; and that each attorney lay down a note of hand, that he has made; and that they "argify" as to which comes nearest to meeting the demands of the law in regard to notes of hand. Smith is arraigned for issuing counterfeit revelations. His counsel admits that he issued the revelations. A demand is made that Smith's attorney prove that Smith was inspired—that Smith had authority to issue the revelations. Mormons coolly propose that the real issue, the only issue, Smith's inspiration, Smith's authority to issue revelations, be set aside, and that each disputant lay down a note of hand, made by each church, and proceed to "argify" as to which most closely meets the demands of New Testament law, in regard to church teaching and organization.

It is very doubtful that such a mode of procedure would be adopted by any intelligent attorney, as the one set forth in the foregoing by Braden. He himself would enter his protest against such outlandish, unreasonable method, were he the one prosecuted. Would not the attorney subject himself to the charge of mindless stupidity to prosecute a man for issuing a bill, before he had ever determined whether the bill was really counterfeit? Is it not necessary to pass on the bill first? Does Braden properly represent the legal profession in this matter? How can a man be prosecuted until the "bill" is laid down alongside the detector, and proven to be spurious? It seems proper that an examination of the "bill" be had first, otherwise the prosecution might eventuate in the arraignment of an innocent man. Now to apply: Joseph Smith issues a revelation. Braden says it is "counterfeit." How will we determine? Oh, Braden says, prosecute Smith, that will determine whether the bill is genuine or spurious! Soaring logic! Wonderful legal acumen! What weapons for annihilating "Mormonism"! The falsehood upon which this rotten pettifoggery is based is apparent. The "bill" issued through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith has for its bullion and face value the "kingdom of God"—the "everlasting gospel of Jesus Christ"—the church of God in doctrine, belief, organization, ordinance, and worship. Joseph Smith's counsel does not admit that it is counterfeit. Such is Braden's assertion. The demand is made upon him to prove it. He has taken for granted an assumed position, i. e., "the bill is counterfeit." He proposes to prove the bill is spurious by arraigning and prosecuting Smith. Would it not be more rational to lay the bill—the church, the work, down alongside the detector, the Bible, and determine first as to the genuineness or spuriousness of said bill or church before prosecuting the one who issues? Yes, the first work is to determine the character of the "bill." If in harmony with the government standard, the Bible, accept it for the gold there is back of it. Why, Braden's method would be, if a carpenter builds a house, to determine whether the house is built according to the stipulations and specifications, or not, it is necessary to prosecute the carpenter! Bosh!

Again, we can not determine a bill as counterfeit by comparing it with another counterfeit. In other words, we can not determine "Mormonism" by comparing it, or weighing it in the scales of Campbellism, for Campbellism itself is in question. Yet, Braden insists on deciding every question by Campbellite standards, as if such standards were the alpha and omega of infallibility. Braden continues: "Non-Mormons deny that Smith had any license from God as a prophet, or that he was inspired. Denials are without value in the absence of the grounds upon which denial is predicated. The fool hath denied the existence of God, but he must excuse others if they can not adjust the same lens, and by evidence conclude differently. Braden would bar out, blindfold, and block up all lines of evidence by which a proposition may be demonstrated and there proudly ensconced in the negative citidel impersonate Shakespeare's bigot:

"There are a sort of men whose visages
Do cream and mantle like a standing pond;
And do a willful stillness entertain,
With purpose to be dressed in an opinion.
Of wisdom, gravity, and profound conceit;
As who should say, 'I am Sir Oracle,
And when I ope my lips let no dog bark.'"

The high standard given by the man of Galilee which urges all to "convince of sin by the word," is completely set aside by this "intellectual giant" of Grand Valley, Ontario. No one could possibly be so wise as he looks. Teaching, doctrine, organic law, and Deity are only the tallow dip in comparison to his illumination. He would test the fountain by turning aside the streams, test the tree by the destruction of its fruits, test the endowment and ability of the infinite God by blotting out the universe, test the inspiration and divinity of Jesus Christ by the destruction of the work which he performed, and by reducing the Bible to ashes. In this manner he proposes to test the inspiration of Joseph Smith—block out all his teaching, doctrine, organization, and the "work" which witnesses for him.

How can any proposition be fairly examined and permit Braden to enforce his standard by which to examine? His standard is the one adopted by Satan, and is named in the word of God "the accuser of our brethren." Never did pupil follow teacher as particularly as does Braden follow the "father of lies." There is no weapon in the armory of slander with which he is not an adept. With him, the end justifies the means. It does not matter how unfair or dishonorable the weapons he employs may be. If the facts of history are brought against him, he unblushingly siezes them, twists and disfigures them, and loudly asserts they mean just the reverse of what they mean. If reason fails him, he shapes some high-sounding cries, such as "colossal gall," "monumental cheek," "Mormon idiocy and hifalutin." He reminds us of the old mill-horse with blinkers on—condemned to fix his gaze upon the narrow track before him, and to plod on, apparently going forward, but in reality going round and round,

He culls such statements from Doctrine and Covenants as he thinks will prejudice and befog the public, not being particular as to the correct quotation, or whether it is the book adopted by the Reorganized Church, or the Brighamite edition. He then leaves out words here and there, puts his own construction on it—ridicules it, and asks if such and such is "from God's own mouth." This latter clause is a pet one with him, that is, the revelations given through Joseph should be received, as though "spoken by God's own mouth." (Doctrine and Covenants, page 102.) Braden has it page 49. In reality what is objectionable in this statement? In the light of Bible usage, it stands out beautifully harmonious with statements of olden time. It is not as if a man claims to be sent of God with a message and then has men put that message in his mouth. If it is the words of God put into the mouth, where is the force of objection?

The same God tells Moses, when about to enter on his wonderful mission: "Now therefore go, and I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou shalt say." And when Aaron the Levite was suggested of the Lord to accompany Moses, the Lord says: "And thou shalt speak unto him, and put words in his mouth; and I will be with thy mouth, and with his mouth, and will teach you what ye shall do."—Exodus 4:15. Again in the history of Balaam, when Balak desired him to curse Israel, Balaam says: "Must I not take heed to speak that which the Lord hath put in my mouth?"—Numbers 23:12. This chapter informs us emphatically that "God put words into Balaam's mouth."

Isaiah, who was sent out a prophet to comfort Zion, addressed the Lord's people in this language: "But I am the Lord thy God, that divided the sea, whose waves roared: The Lord of hosts is his name. And I have put my words in thy mouth, and covered thee in the shadow of mine hand."—Isaiah 51:15, 16. A little later Jeremiah is on his mission as a prophet to the nations,—he apologizes for slow speech. The Lord says: "Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth." "I will make my words in thy mouth fire, and this people wood, and it shall devour them."—Jeremiah 1:9; 5:14.

Again, when calling Israel to repentance, in order to make emphatic the divine authority of the prophet, and to obviate doubts as to the genuineness of his mission, the Almighty declares: "Therefore, thus saith the Lord, If thou return, then will I bring thee again, and thou shalt stand before me: . . . and thou shalt be as my mouth."—Jeremiah 15:19. This would surely obligate Israel to receive from Jeremiah "as if from God's own mouth."

It is a gospel principle that God ratifies in heaven what is done by his authority on earth, and he exercises his undoubted right to clothe his "called and chosen ones" with representative authority. The angel who "went before" Israel during the exodus from Egyptian slavery had "God's name upon him." (Exodus 23:20, 21.) Jesus told his ministers: "I will give you a mouth and wisdom."—Luke 21:14. "He that heareth you, heareth me."—Luke 10:13. "He that receiveth whomsoever I send, receiveth me."—John 13:20.

In view of the foregoing, it is not against the claims of Joseph Smith as prophet of the Lord, or his work, to find such a sentiment, but rather in favor, especially in view of the spiritual condition of the world, in the age when Joseph Smith ministered. That condition is recognized by the Lord in the outset of his work:

Wherefore I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments, and also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world; and all this that it might be fulfilled, which was written by the prophets; the weak things of the world shall come forth and break down the mighty and strong ones, that man should not counsel his fellow man, neither trust in the arm of flesh, but that every man might speak in the name of God the Lord, even the Savior of the world; that faith also might increase in the earth; that mine everlasting covenant might be established; that the fullness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple, unto the ends of the world, and before kings and rulers.—Doctrine and Covenants 1:4.

Truly, there is a necessity for the "increase of faith in God." Can Braden, or any other man, suggest a better method to bring it about, than the Lord's plan outlined in the above? In paragraph 6, the Lord says: "I am willing to make these things known unto all flesh, for I am no respecter of persons." Joseph Smith's work, under God, as outlined in this section embosoms in its inception the near coming of Jesus Christ the second time, the time when Christ himself says: "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"—Luke 18:8.

MY TESTIMONY TO THE TRUTH OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.

To all whom it may concern, especially the Baptists, of whose church I was a member for about twenty years, having been a preacher in that church about fifteen years. I first saw the Book of Mormon at the house of a gentleman by the name of S. R. Hay, where I met Heman C. Smith. I borrowed the book to read, to see for myself what it was. I put it in my buggy so that no one could see it. I did not want anybody to know that I had it. After I arrived home I commenced to read it very carefully and prayerfully, and while I read the Holy Spirit testified to me that its claims were true, and from that time till this I have known that the book is what it purports to be.

I have read a great many efforts that men have made to prove that the book is a fraud, among them the efforts of Clark Braden, D. H. Bays, M. T. Lamb, R. B. Neal, etc. If I had no greater evidence than man could give I might be shaken; but the Spirit still says it is true.

I have read a great many tracts and books, and heard a great many sermons to prove that the Book of Mormon is what it purports to be, all of which are good as corroborative evidence; but still I must say as Paul said with regard to the gospel: My testimony does not depend upon what men may say, one way or the other, for I received it from God by his Holy Spirit.

I further testify that the Book of Mormon (or, in other words, its claims) will never be destroyed. Men and devils may do what they can against it, yet it will remain true and firm as the rock of eternal ages, and the purpose God intended by it will be accomplished.

I received my testimony as to the truth of the Book of Mormon in 1886, before I joined the church, and I want it to go upon record to be handed down the annals of time till the day when Christ shall come again to reign on the earth.

Yours in the faith,

E. W. NUNLEY.

WHAT IS MAN?

In some of my past articles wherein I have touched lightly the analysis of "man," I held that he was a triune or threefold being, namely, spirit, conscious mind, and body. My reasons having been solicited I will briefly state them. They are as follows:

First. The Greek words from which our English words spirit and soul have been translated seem to be entirely distinct or separate words. The same is true of the Hebrew also, and both are used as being intelligent.

Second. The manner in which the two words spirit and soul are used in the Bible. The sense and import of the context in so many instances will admit of no other sane conclusion. For instance, 1 Thessalonians 5:23: "I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved," is proof that the words soul and spirit are not synonyms. I can not believe that Paul, who was educated, would use such meaningless language. I can not find where he does so anywhere else or along any other line.

To illustrate: If I say to my boy, "Go get the team and harness and plow," he would understand me. If I say, "Go get the team and harness or gears," he still knows what I have said. But if I say to him, "Go get the team and gears and harness," he is in doubt. He knows at once that I have misused language in some way. Now this is exactly what Paul did when he used this conjunction and (a particle implying addition) if the words spirit and soul are interchangeable terms.

Paul evidently refers to the same two intelligent entities or principles, but uses a more comprehensive word than soul, in 1 Corinthians 14:14: "My spirit prayeth but my understanding is unfruitful." And in the fifteenth verse he makes the matter still more forcible when he writes, "What is it then? I will pray with the spirit and I will pray with the understanding also. I will sing with the spirit and I will sing with the understanding also;" and he continues in the nineteenth verse, "I had rather speak five words with my understanding . . . than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue" or with the spirit, for he had explained in verse 2, "He that speaketh in an unknown tongue speaketh not to man but unto God, for no man understandeth him."

When we know that in the act of thinking brain substance is exhausted, and that a vibration of certain nerves is required, we are in condition to elucidate somewhat by referring to the dust man, Adam, perfect in all his parts, because made by a perfect workman. One has said, "He had eyes but could not see; ears he had but he could not hear; he was made with a well-developed brain, but he could not think. No secretion could take place. He had a perfect nervous system but those nerves could not vibrate. Then God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul."

Be it known that the "Spirits of all flesh," "All the sons of God," existed previous to this act. The spirit that was breathed into Adam did not become soul, but the spirit and the body when united makes the soul of man; or the spirit quickened those dormant nerves and man began to think, began to understand.

There was an intelligent spirit breathed into Adam which started the physical machinery to running; the result was a conscious mind, understanding soul,—"I will pray with the spirit and I will pray with the understanding also." "I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved."

Then we have such passages as these: "He that ruleth his spirit," and "He that hath no rule over his own spirit is like a city that is broken down and without walls," and "The spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets," which shows conclusively that there is in man some other intelligent force besides the spirit; for surely the dust man could not rule over or hold in subjection the spirit which quickened it, unless by that quickening act some superior intelligence had been awakened.

It stands to reason that something must have been gained when a physical body was formed for the spirit to occupy.

There was some grand achievement in view when the foundations of the earth were laid which caused "all the sons of God to shout for joy." There must be some gain for a spirit to occupy a body, or the devils who have never been permitted to take bodies would not be so seemingly anxious to enter human bodies at every opportunity; and it seems conclusive that that grand achievement, that great gain was the awakening of a superior intelligence, for "the glory of God is intelligence," and "God has made man for his own glory."

Mary said, "My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Savior."

Isaiah said, "With my soul have I desired thee in the night; yea, with my spirit within me will I seek thee early." Surely, if language has any meaning at all a dual intelligence is here mentioned.

Third. The science of suggestion furnishes us decisive evidence of the same fact: We all know that the mind that seems to be located in the brain, the mind that grasps physical things, becomes inactive when we sleep soundly; but when the most profound sleep is induced by suggestion we find that the intellect of the spirit is still in possession of the body, and that to a certain extent it is conscious of its spiritual surroundings. A suggestion may be driven home in a most positive manner that will take effect, but the conscious mind of the ordinary subject never knows what has been said or done. Here is a point beyond which it is very doubtful if man should experiment: With the spirit of discernment, and authority to cast out devils, it is possible that it might be safe to experiment along the line of clairvoyance, but I am not that way inclined.

Fourth. The phenomena of somnambulism can be accounted for along the line of a dual intellect, but in no other way can I solve the problem. Many cases might be mentioned, but one will suffice. The lady at the art studio whose work so mysteriously took on more splendid touches at night than she was able to give it during the hours of study,—the rest of the students suspicioned the teacher, but, on arranging a secret watch, discovered that she did her own work at night while asleep, without a light; a fact that she had no physical knowledge of.

Fifth. The science of telepathy.

Sixth. The art of mind-reading.

Seventh. The development of the sixth sense, perception.

These are all splendid witnesses of a two-fold intellect in man. The three last named, while closely related to each other, are developed or brought to the surface by such differing processes that I feel justified in presenting them under separate heads, or viewing them as separate witnesses, but as my article is longer than I aimed to have made it, I will only name one instance of the latter. That of Miss Ella M. Hopkins is right to the point. She is now at a deaf and dumb institute in New York, where her wonderful sense of perception is attracting much attention. She is deaf, dumb, and blind, still she often understands the conversation of those in the room with her, and writes out sentences of the same. She perceives the presence of strangers; and when some of her friends come into the room, she smiles and speaks their names with her hands before any personal contact has occurred.

In conclusion let me say the passages of scripture are rare indeed where soul and spirit are used as synonyms; a heavy majority of those that have been thought to read that way, are more easily understood, and make better sense, to view them as separate, distinct words, referring to intellects differing in nature one from the other, both necessary in order to get a full-fledged man. I solicit criticism, for if I have reached erroneous conclusions I wish to know it.

D. R. BALDWIN.

TO HIM THAT KNOWETH TO DO GOOD.

To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin.—James 4:17.

This subject is one of very great importance, as we all know that we have certain gifts and spiritual blessings, and should any be necessary to be made manifest through the flesh to the honor and glory of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ let us not be slothful to act.

Many a good deed, a kind act, is being deferred for better opportunities, while instead of doing the good we might, we simply hide up our talents in a "napkin," as it were, instead. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." For the giving of only a cup of cold water, one shall not lose his reward.

Good things and golden opportunities come often in one's life just as the opportunities of following Satan become manifest in our lives if we allow him to do so by simply refusing God's bounteous mercy from his hand, who is omnipotent, infinite, the triune God, sufficiently able to care for and protect this weak triune "body,"—spirit, mind, and flesh, three in one body.

It often becomes necessary for us, it seems, to pass through very trying circumstances that the little good which has been latent within, may spring up within us a "spring" of everlasting life, and that we often cease from doing those things which please the Father at all times; consequently we pay the penalty which is "dear" in the end, but "cheap" at present.

Many gifts and spiritual blessings likewise have been withheld from us by our heavenly Father, not because he would not freely give, but that we through the hardening of our hearts have failed in that work which has been divinely instituted by him; and as a consequence we have forfeited our rights as citizens of his kingdom, the church of Jesus Christ militant.

Man's heart being shapen in iniquity and being born in sin, we find not only the tendency to shirk our duty as to what we know as our duty, but we leave undone those things because sin has crept in unawares, and hence, "To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin."

GREELEY G. HECKMAN.

ANSWERS.

I find in SAINTS' HERALD of April 19, 1905, that a brother desires answers to two questions, and presents some suggestions which possibly need answering. The first question is: "Is the Spirit of God and the Holy Ghost given of God through the laying on of hands by the elders one and the same?"

In answer to this I will give the words of Jesus himself as I believe he knew of the things of which he spoke and they may be relied upon as truth. He made this declaration:

I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting.—John 12:49, 50. If ye love me keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. . . . But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.—John 14:15-17, 26. Nevertheless I tell you the truth; It is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you. . . . Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself, but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come.—John 16:7, 13.

A close and attentive reading of chapters 14, 15, 16, and 17 of St. John should, in my opinion, be sufficient to prove to a mind seeking for truth that the Spirit of truth, the Spirit of God, the Comforter, the Holy Ghost are one and the same, and that the apostles and those who then believed in Jesus and had passed through the waters of regeneration had not received as an inward monitor the Spirit of God, the Holy Ghost. But that he, Jesus, had been with them as their Comforter and Teacher, and the Holy Ghost had been with them. But at some future time when he shall have gone to the Father they should receive the Comforter as an indweller in them, provided always that they must remember not only to say but to do the things he had commanded them.

In regard to the second question, "When does the birth of the Spirit of God take place within us?"

that is a question to which my mind remains in the mind of God. Jesus when speaking upon this point to Nicodemus says:

That which is born of flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit, is spirit. . . . The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one who is born of the Spirit.

Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again.

I have met experiences in my time when parties, in the same meeting in which they were confirmed, arose and spoke of the goodness of God in bringing them to a knowledge of the truth, and in their faces could be seen the glorious working of the Spirit of God within them, while others were strenuously striving to live as becometh a saint of God, and yet for some time gave expression that they did not appear to be enjoying any of the Spirit's influences; but the time came when they could and did realize the Spirit's influence and became and continued devoted workers for the truth.

In regard to little children and the position they occupy, I shall refer to the word of the Lord delivered to us as a people through the now martyred prophet:

But, behold, I say unto you, that little children are redeemed from the foundation of the world, through mine Only Begotten; wherefore they can not sin, for power is not given unto Satan to tempt little children, until they begin to become accountable before me; for it is given unto them even as I will, according to mine own pleasure, that great things may be required at the hand of their fathers.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 13.

Jesus said:

Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God. Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, shall in no wise enter therein.—Luke 18: 17.

The brother states: "I can not help but believe that the Spirit of God was within us either before or at the time of baptism of water." This to me appears a very strange idea in the face of recorded facts. The Savior, Jesus, when giving the promise of the Comforter, the Spirit of truth, to his disciples, told them, as I have before quoted, The world can not receive it. And a person is still of the world until he has passed through the waters of baptism and become dead in sin, and become a new creature in Christ Jesus, raised unto a newness of life, freed from sin. We are also informed that the Spirit can not dwell in unholy temples; but we will pass on.

Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them. And the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, . . . And there was great joy in that city. . . . When they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women. . . . Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John, who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost; (for as yet he was fallen upon none of them; only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus). Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost.—Acts 8: 5-17.

That is pretty straight goods. They had great joy in that city because of the power of God made manifest through Philip. The Spirit of God was moving upon them leading their minds to a realization of the truths presented.

Another instance presents itself to my mind where there was great rejoicing where the party so rejoicing had not the privilege of receiving the Spirit as an indwelling monitor. We find that when Philip had completed his work in Samaria, an angel of the Lord spoke unto him, saying,

Arise, and go toward the south, . . . And he arose and went: and, behold, a man of Ethiopia, a eunuch of great authority . . . had come to Jerusalem for to worship, was returning, and sitting in his chariot read Esaias the prophet. Then the Spirit said unto Philip, Go near, and join thyself to this chariot. And Philip ran thither to him, . . . and said, Understandest thou what thou readest? And he said, How can I, except some man should guide me? And he desired Philip that he would come up and sit with him. The place of the Scripture which he read was this, He was led as a sheep to the slaughter; and like a lamb dumb before his shearer, so opened he not his mouth; in his humiliation his judgment was taken away: and who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth. And the eunuch . . . said, I pray thee, of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man? Then Philip began at the same Scripture, and preached unto him Jesus. And . . . they came unto a certain water; and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. And he commanded the chariot to stand still; and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, and he, [the eunuch,] went on his way rejoicing.—Acts 8: 26-39.

Why? Because Philip had proven that he of whom the prophet spoke, was Jesus Christ the Son of God. He had also taught him that Jesus had established his work here upon earth for the salvation of man, that he had suffered death upon the cross that man might live, that he had risen from the grave and had ascended on high that he might give gifts unto men, that he called upon all men everywhere to believe in him, to repent of their sins and to be baptized in water for the remission of their past sins, together with the reward of eternal life to all those who would obey and continue in the way of righteousness and well-doing unto the end of their probation. Here Philip had taught him all this or he would not have preached unto him Christ Jesus. The eunuch believed and was baptized and rejoiced. Why? Because by believing and obeying Philip's teaching he had received from God a remission of his past sins, and had risen to a new life in Christ Jesus, and had done this in obedience to an authorized servant of God. And while he had not received the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands and prayer as an inward possession, he had come out of the world by obedience and was entitled to the promptings of the Spirit of God as the apostles were prior to their endowment upon the day of Pentecost. The Spirit had been with them and would be with the eunuch giving him support and promptings to help him through life.

The above will also cover the suppositions of the brother in regard to any one who may have been baptized but die before receiving the gift of the Holy Ghost in gospel order. Such a one would certainly receive a remission of their past sins if the baptizing was done by an authorized servant of God and would as certainly be admitted into paradise as was the thief upon the cross. Jesus knew him. And I have my ideas in regard to that man. The brother states, "I hear some of our preachers say that baptism is a mere nothing, that it is only an entrance into the kingdom." If the brother means by "our preachers" Reorganized Latter Day Saint preachers, such men in my opinion ought to be silenced until they learn truth. Jesus when he gave to his apostles their commission said unto them:

Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved.—Mark 16: 14, 15.

Peter, upon the day of Pentecost, told the people:

Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.—Acts 2: 38.

Paul said:

Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection: knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead to sin is freed from sin.—Romans 6: 3-7, Inspired Translation.

Here are the evidences from three witnesses, on whom we may rely, that the ordinance of baptism following the proper conditions of faith in our Lord Jesus Christ and repenting or turning away from our former sins, the baptism being performed under and by proper authority appointed of God, is indeed for the remission of our former sins, and that we arise from the watery grave new creatures in Christ Jesus. This presents to our mind the peculiar and awe-inspiring position occupied by those authorized to present gospel truths, and also the necessity that those presenting those truths should always do so under the inspiring influence of the Spirit of God. It is true we are living in a world overflowing with sin and wrong-doing; but, thanks be to our heavenly Father, he has made provision by which if we overstep the rule of right we may repent, turn away from the wrong, return again to our allegiance, and obtain his forgiveness, and renew our proper course in this life, and he has promised help in every time of need, if we will put our trust in him.

And besides this giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and can not see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins.—2 Peter 1: 5-9.

These exhortations of Peter are all in the line of going on to perfection. In regard to perfection, I believe that obedience to gospel first principles, which gives us a standing in the kingdom of God, and obedience to the instructions above given, will, when we pass from this life, entitle our spirits to an entrance into paradise which will also entitle us at the first resurrection to a place in it and also to an inheritance with Christ during the millennium. And I further believe that our life here as children of God, and the spirit life in paradise, and the privilege of a life with Jesus our King during the millennium, are but as stepping-stones upon which we may study and learn the works of God and become purified and perfected in all things, to that state of perfection that we shall be worthy to enter into the presence of God and dwell with him upon the new earth, when Jesus shall have conquered and put all things under his feet. Then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that God may be all in all.

Ever praying that the inspiring influence of the Spirit of God may be with, and enable us all to endure unto the end,

Your brother in the covenant of peace,
WILLIAM HAWKINS.

God's Answer.

The cry of man's anguish went up unto God:
"Lord, take away pain!
The shadow that darkens the world thou hast made,
The close coiling chain
That strangles the heart, the burden that weighs
On the wings that would soar—
Lord, take away pain from the world thou hast made
That it love thee the more."

Then answered the Lord to the cry of his world:
"Shall I take away pain,
And with it the power of the soul to endure,
Made strong by the strain?
Shall I take away pity that knits heart to heart,
And sacrifice high?
Will ye lose all your heroes that lift from the fire
White brows to the sky?
Shall I take away love that redeems with a price
And smiles at its loss?
Can ye spare from your lives that would climb into mine
The Christ on his cross?"—Julia Larned.

In Time of Trouble.

"It is like a glimpse of heaven itself to be there," said a young wife who had just returned from the home of a dear friend where the little form of the last of three lovely children was lying in the still, cold embrace of death.

The husband listened with an inquiring expression as though not able to understand the relation of heaven's joy to the sorrows of earth. He had not yet learned the lesson of the sweet singer of Israel who fasted and wept while his child yet lived, — not knowing but it would please God to spare his life; but when his child was dead, he arose, washed and anointed himself, and ate bread, for he said, "He will not return to me, but I shall go to him."

It is not only in times of joy, of peace, and happiness that the light will radiate from the true Christian home, but above all other times in the night of sorrow and adversity will its steady rays illumine every nook and corner to such an extent that it is not possible for him who crosses its threshold to close his eyes to its radiance.

But alas, sad thought! "If the light which is in thee become darkness, how great is that darkness." If from the home has departed the love, joy, and peace which once found their abiding-place within it, how shall light radiate therefrom or God's benefits be dispensed? To a certain extent we grant you they may be, but not to the unlimited extent God designed they should. Oh, that parents would be wise! That children might be so instructed as to be able to choose wisely and well, when the time for choosing comes, the companion who is to enter with them into the marriage relation, that the homes of our land, especially of all Saints, might be established in purity and righteousness and thus become centers from which God's benefits should be dispensed, not only to the poor and needy, but to the soul-hungering and heart-sore ones of earth.

Work While it is Day.

Dear Home Column: I have often been made to rejoice while reading the sweet, comforting words from the pen of one and another of the many writers. Let us endeavor to write more frequently to each other. By doing so we may cheer some of the many who have burdens that are heavy to be borne, or we may give comfort to some one that has little troubles, or perhaps to one that has a cross. Let us remember that there may be such,

And hasten to write them a letter
Which the Home Column gladly will bear
To that friend far away who is striving each day
To overcome sorrow and care.

Let us think of the lonely ones, our elders' wives, and many hard-working brothers and sisters. Others who are striving to overcome a bad habit will rejoice to hear that God helped you, my brother or sister. Oh, yes, let us work while it is day, for soon the night will come when we will be called home. Let us not be discouraged if we can not do just what we would like to do, but work at whatever falls to our lot and do it cheerfully. With kind wishes to all, I am,

Your sister,
JANE HEATON.

[But for an oversight the following letter would have appeared sooner.—Ed.]

Dear Mothers of the Home Column: I have been a reader of the Home Column for a number of years; have received so much good advice, and it has been so much benefit to me in training my little "tots." But in HERALD for March 1 appears a letter upon child-training, which grieved my heart, to think any true Latter Day Saint had such ideas about child-training. The sister says some children can be managed without whipping and some can not; here I beg to differ from her. If it takes a wise, cool-headed mother to punish children with the rod, then please erase my name from the list and call me the opposite if you choose.

I, too, am a mother with five little tots ranging from six weeks to ten years. I also carry that dreaded name step-mother, having had the care of three little orphan girls, two of whom are with me now, grown young ladies, and never yet have I had occasion to use the rod. True, I might have applied the rod in some cases, yet I believed I used a wiser method of punishment. For instance, not long since one of the children in passing by her little five-year-old sister accidentally hurt her. No sooner done than she resented by biting the offender. I politely handed her a chair and invited her to sit down until she was sufficiently cool to make apologies for her hasty wrong. It was only a few minutes until she had her arms entwined around her sister's neck, and I witnessed the kiss of repentance and forgiveness, and away they went to their play arm in arm as though nothing had ever marred their peace.

Yes, Solomon was a wise man, but I believe it pleases God as much for us to ask for wisdom in ruling our subjects, as it did for Solomon to ask wisdom in ruling his subjects. If Solomon received wisdom from our heavenly Father, why not profit by his advice and discard the rod? for Solomon says, "The rod is for the fool's back."

Now, dear mothers, let us not treat our children as such, but let us put them upon an equal footing with ourselves.

Appeal to their reason and judgment, and if they commit a wrong, do not reach for the rod or threaten to skin them alive, etc., but take them aside and talk to them, reason with them, and if necessary, punish them, but in such a manner that it will appeal to their conscience, and not bodily harm. And then you will not create within your child so much of that spirit of combativeness that he will make you "dare to correct him," for, dear sisters, the rod only makes the child the more rebellious, disrespectful to parents, and in time will drive them out into the world with anything but pleasant memories of home.

A bad habit a great many mothers form is commanding their children to do this, that, etc. Ask them to please run the errand, or do the job of work; and when done, let them receive your thanks and see how much you have lightened their task. I seldom ever have any trouble with children, when I ask, and not command, them to do anything.

Now, dear sisters, do not think that I am holding myself and mine up as simply perfection. Far from it. Yet, I certainly do think we are nearer unity and perfection than we would have been had I been a believer in the rod as a punishment.

With love to all Saints and malice towards none, I will close my few remarks by telling all mothers I know by experience, "It is better far, to rule by love than fear."

SR. DAISY A. DEAN, of Appleton, Wisconsin, sends a nice report of their parents'-day program and incloses the program as carried out. She says "they are much interested in it. I hope to be able to send a report next time that you will be proud of." We are proud of this report and well pleased to learn that an earnest effort was made to do good. They are "pleased with the work," doubtless because interested in the subjects. Whatever will interest parents more in the work of the Sunday-school and Religio will insure added strength to these organizations and more good to follow. One of the handicaps of the Sunday-school is the indifference of the parents to the school and the welfare of their children. Remove this indifference and we have willing helpers in the parents. All parents want their children to do well, but many of them fail to see wherein they are able to do more than they are doing. Get them to thinking and writing along these lines and they will soon educate themselves in the right way. The subjects in the printed parents'-day programs are very plain and impressive to any one who takes hold of them and works with them. And hence we are very glad to learn from time to time of the schools taking up and enjoying the work. It is a good sign.

THERE have been several requests for the publication of some of the papers written upon subjects given out for district convention programs for the benefit of all. And we regret that the lack of space will permit us to comply with the request to but a limited extent. We give one in this issue; others will follow in due course.

A Little Advice.

From a clipping from an unknown source handed us we excerpt the following paragraphs. They are full of very nice thoughts. And I suspect that it would apply to some extent to many of us in our work:

"Never threaten a boy in the class. Do not tell him that if he does not 'behave' you will have to put him out of the class. This is proof that you are losing your patience and your temper, and you must cling to both if you are to do the boy good. If threats are to be made at all, they should be made privately. But it is best not to make them at all.

"Never allow any one to make you believe that there is absolutely nothing to appeal to in some boys. This argues a belief in total depravity, and total depravity is not a condition of childhood and boyhood. There is some vulnerable point of attack, something to which you may appeal, in every child.

"There is a world of good advice in the two little words, 'keep sweet.' Sunday-school teachers could not chose a better motto than just these two monosyllables. The teacher who can 'keep sweet' in the face of every trial and annoyance will win many a victory never given to those who lose their self-pose and descend to the low estate of being 'cross!'"

Courtesies and Obligations.

REVERENCE FOR OUR SENIORS.—SALUTATIONS, ETIQUETTE, ETC.

In this age of, hustle and bustle, we are apt to think that a lack of courtesy is excusable, but the old caution, "Never be in too much of a hurry to be polite" is just as applicable to-day as ever.

One of the best definitions of politeness, were we called to define it, would be "to do and to say the kindest things in the kindest way."

Politeness is an inexpensive article, as cheap as a smile, and often resolves itself into a smile when the occasion will allow.

True politeness comes from the heart, and is never found where selfishness is the ruling passion; but politeness, as displayed in following the strict rules of etiquette, may come from a desire to be well thought of rather than from an earnest desire to be kind to others.

What is courtesy but that interest in and love for one's neighbor that seeks some form of expression? The outward and visible sign of the inward and spiritual grace—it is a stronger manifestation of benevolence than merely being civil. It not only avoids saying or doing what is disagreeable, but seeks to say and to do what may be gratifying to the feelings of others.

Suppose it is not easy for one to be polite, what is the proper course to pursue to acquire the habit? What are the helps to courtesy? Would not the practice of patience avoid much trouble in the way of discourteous actions and language? Are there not many unkind words said and deeds wrought in a fit of impatience that might have been avoided by heeding the admonition of Paul when he said, "In your patience possess ye your souls." Is not pride often the cause of impoliteness? Is not one of a humble spirit more apt to forget self and remember others? more apt to condescend to men of low estate? After all, what but love or charity will call forth true politeness? The first law of good manners, which epitomizes all the rest, is: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." True courtesy is simply the application of this golden rule to all our social conduct.

Some one has said, "The courtesy of the heart is the secret of good manners"; and another has said, "Politeness is practical Christianity."

Life would be far more agreeable if politeness were more assiduously cultivated.

Habit is a very important point in connection with this subject. Habit counts for so much in little things that one can not look too carefully after the small courtesies in his own conduct. If we would begin the day aright, our morning greetings to the members of the home circle, and later our salutations to our business associates will be cordial. We must watch how we inflect our salutation—inflection has much to do with the way in which our speech is interpreted. It takes no more breath to say "good morning," than it does to say "good morning."

And again, our salutation may not be returned as we would like it to be, and we may imagine it made little difference whether we spoke or not; but we know not the inward struggles, innermost thoughts. He whom we addressed may have been severely tried, and his mind may be burdened more than we know; he may be wondering why he was placed here in this vale of tears, as it sometimes looks to the weary-hearted, and a cheery word may do him good.

Apprentices, learning a business, have to be courteous, both to their employer and to customers, to be successful.

We must remember there are others in the world besides ourselves who perchance may be just as sensitive as we, may feel the sting of a disrespectful word or remark as keenly as we.

Impoliteness in children away from home shows lack of proper training at home. Good manners are contagious. An impolite father or mother can not expect polite children. Example is supreme in this particular, and you can not begin too early to guard your manners, for children are great imitators. If you expect your children to say "thank you," "if you please," etc., to friends or strangers, let them first hear it from your lips in the home. They should be taught to be as polite to father and mother as they are to a stranger. Never lose your temper before children; it will weaken your influence with them, and you will lose their respect.

Teach them to always reverence elderly people. A lack of reverence for and politeness to old age is inexcusable in any young person—a serious breach of etiquette. How much we admire a young man or woman who is thoughtful of older people, and how necessary it is to be so to be truly polite. A young person who will sit in a crowded car and let stand an elderly person, or a mother with a babe in her arms is not playing his part well.

Old age must come to all of us, and if we are tempted to be disrespectful to an older person let us imagine ourselves in his place, and think what sort of treatment we would desire at the hands of young people.

Another way in which we may fail to reverence them is in refusing to listen and profit by their advice. To be sure we are free to think for ourselves, but there is such a thing as our having mistaken ideas, and in following them out, a danger of having to suffer for the same. If we think aright on this subject, we are all favorably impressed with a young person who shows due respect to old age.

I remember hearing some one say but a short time ago: "Is there any one we admire more than a person who is polite, or, in other words, always does the right thing at the right time in the right place?"

We as a people should be more polite and respectful. We are too prone to forget the feelings of others, too apt to think of number one. This is a severe criticism, as we have already hinted that impoliteness is due to a great extent to selfishness; when it is not selfishness, it is thoughtlessness or carelessness.

What is or could there be more annoying to a preacher than to see throughout his discourse a number of young people whispering and tittering among themselves, paying little heed, if any, to the words of the sermon? and yet, we see such occurrences in our branches among our own flock. It is a source of embarrassment to others, as well as to the preacher, especially those who may bring strangers with them to church. Such a mistake in conduct betrays lack of respect, also lack of interest and love for the work.

We are commanded to do good, especially to those of the household of faith. Now it seems we might infer from this that we shall take particular pains to be polite and kind to our brothers and sisters in the faith.

We are not all situated alike. Some of us have a comparatively easy, happy life, although we are all a busy people. Others are so heavily burdened that almost every breath seems a sigh, and many times we might lighten the burdens of such by manifesting a kindly interest in their affairs, even though it may not be in our power to make their lot any happier.

Let us now consider a few "don'ts" in connection with the subject of politeness. Firstly let us repeat one already made.

Don't ever be in too much of a hurry to be polite.

Don't cultivate the habit of perpetual joking or punning.

Don't for ever be saying unkind things about people—learn to say kind things; it will help you wonderfully.

Don't be impatient or ugly to animals—it does not pay to be impolite even to a dog.

Don't look abstractedly in the distance when one is talking with you; give respectful attention even to an uninteresting subject.

Don't look for faults in our brothers to criticize, but look for good qualities and you will be sure to find them, even in the most faulty; and don't forget to tell of the good qualities, for a thing oft repeated is soon believed.

And don't, whatever you do, forget to keep sweet at home.

It seems that Paul struck the keynote of politeness when he admonished us to "Be kindly affectioned one toward another in brotherly love, in honor preferring one another."

NECEDAH, Wisconsin, June 10, 1905.

Dear Herald: We have moved into our new church. Elder W. P. Robinson, our missionary, came this way and preached in the schoolhouse where we have held our meetings for four years. While so doing he gave a helping hand on the church and in two days we got the siding on and moved in and oh, what a time of rejoicing! The crowd was on the increase, so he labored on for another week. One old man from Iowa, here on a visit, said he was here looking for the truth; and thank God he was satisfied, and on Sunday morning we all assembled on the bank of the Wisconsin River to attend to the ordinance of baptism. But instead of there being one there were four. After leaving the river about one fourth of a mile we met two teams coming and the people said we had better go back. We did, and baptized four more, and there was great rejoicing in the camp of Israel. Our branch now numbers fifty-two and I think is in a good condition.

Our local force is at work. It consists of elder, teacher, and deacon, the priest being absent. We hold preaching-services each Sunday evening, Sunday-school and Religio during the day.

We are to have a wedding in the church to-morrow, providing the bridegroom can get here in spite of high water. Bro. W. P. is a good and faithful steward and may the Lord be with him. Our missionary force has been much cut down. We will have to fight all the harder.

I am still in the faith and want to be till the end.

JOHN MOORE.

ELDORADO SPRINGS, Missouri, June 16, 1905.

Editors Herald: The conference at Veve has just closed. The good Spirit was there in power to cheer and comfort our hearts. And all the laborers move out into the field with a strong determination to do all they can to advance the work. Sunday-school and Religio convention was presided over by Sr. Iva Keck—was excellent; and the prayer-meeting was a spiritual feast. Preaching by Ammon White, George Jenkins, and the writer.

I have attended meeting about every night since I arrived in the field, May the 6th, and it has been a great pleasure to labor among the Saints and friends in this district and I hope our confidence and love for each other may increase as we become more fully acquainted, and this is desired that we may glorify God only, and that his work may spread into the regions where it never has been before. The indications are that the ministry, both traveling and local, are willing to labor in harmony and we desire to see every member fall in line, and that means, to help the missionary get a place to preach, and see that his needs are supplied, in order that the world may be warned. "Let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

If all labor together in complete harmony with the law God will be with us and we will be successful in every department of work in which we are called to labor. We write the above words in much assurance and are still hopeful of realizing all the blessings which have been promised to the obedient. Hopefully in the work,

F. M. SLOVER.

WOLVERINE, Michigan, June 10, 1905.

Editors Herald: We are almost isolated here—just a Sr. Gardner, my mother, and myself, that I know of; but we are striving to serve Christ in our weak way. We moved to Gaylord from Shabbona in October, 1904, and from there here the first of May. There is a nice little branch of Saints at Gaylord. They are trying to get a hall to hold meetings and have some preaching done. There are some investigating—some who believe the Bible as we do but have never heard the gospel preached. My earnest prayer is that they may hear and know that this is the true church of Christ. It is six years since I embraced the gospel and I have never regretted the step I have taken, but do regret I have not lived nearer to Christ. I am trying to serve him and trying to live more faithful each day. I am so glad I am a Latter Day Saint. I love this great latter-day work, and am not ashamed to tell people what church I belong to. The dear Lord has blessed me greatly since I tried to serve him and he has answered my prayers, also healed me and I thank him.

I miss the meetings very much but I know if we are faithful the Lord will be with us. Our trials and troubles may seem hard to bear, but the dear Lord will not put upon us any more than we can bear, and they are for our good. He knows best, although we may not think so at first; but in time we will see it was for our good.

I like to read the letters in the HERALD. I do not take it but a dear sister in Gaylord gave me some to read and now I am going to subscribe for it, as we can not get along without it.

I know this work is true and I want to live so that when Christ comes he will not be ashamed of me. My earnest prayer is to be faithful and be not only a Saint in name but a saint indeed that my daily walk in life may harmonize with what I profess to believe. May God bless you all.

Your sister in Christ,
MALISSA PARROTT.

TULSA, Indian Territory, June 7, 1905.

Dear Herald: I rejoice in this latter-day work because I know it is of God, and he has blessed me many times, though I have had many trials and at times felt as though I would fall. I was the only Saint in Montague County, Texas, for three years and was persecuted by the Baptists, but God heard my prayers and kept me from falling. We moved to this place in 1902, where there was a little band of Saints, consisting of thirteen members. On New Year's day, 1905, my little eight-year-old girl asked for baptism, and less than two months later my husband was baptized, and now I have the pleasure of hearing them testify to the truth and goodness of God.

We have now at this place forty-seven members, yet we have not a branch organized, which we should have. Have splendid meeting and Sunday-school; have sacrament-meeting every first Sunday.

My desire is to help roll on this gospel, and be a doer of all good, and help save the souls of others as well as myself. I want to live in obedience to God's command to love thy neighbor as thyself, to do unto others as you would have them do to you, and be worthy of meeting our Savior when he comes.

Ever praying for the advancement of this gospel, I remain,
Your sister in the one faith,
DAISY D. CROWNOVER.

CHICO, California, June 12, 1905.

Dear Herald: Bro. Crabb of Little Sioux will be glad to read that Bro. Barker and his son Walter and my younger brother Ralph were baptized by our Elder Hommes. The boys were baptized in the rain with the determination to obey that ordinance. Bro. Barker was baptized three weeks afterwards, at night, after a day's work, making up his mind that the Latter Day Saints were the church of Jesus Christ and the sooner he came in the better it would be for him.

Bro. Crabb preached a series of sermons which laid the corner-stone of the faith our brethren will have which will enable them to securely stand when Jesus appears, if they do not put off the day of their probation and neglect their opportunities, which are worth more than fine gold.

I was delighted in reading Bro. Crabb's patriarchal blessing. It was the only one I have seen. It says that he is to be a horn of Ephraim to push the people of Israel together, and that the Spirit would be with him in his lonely moments, and while he meditated and pondered over the words of life.

Elder Hommes has gone down to live on the coast at Berkeley or Oakland, as he will afterwards decide, for the benefit of his little boy Ray who has the chills here.

I desire the prayers of the Saints that our branch may grow strong in faith and works, and that we may soon have an elder to be with us in our branch work.

LYTLE E. WHITE.

BLAIR, Nebraska, June 13, 1905.

Herald Editors: I am striving to do the Lord's will, by faith and prayer, and sacredly guarding the truth that will prevail over wrong,—filled often with a strange, sad surprise at the utter want of spirituality and grace, and at the indifference to God's holy church, for where once God smiled lovingly on a large branch of the church, there now can be found only a faithful few, where once the branch numbered over a hundred. We had the gifts in the good old days, of tongues, of prophecy, of interpretation, of healing, of casting out evil spirits, of wisdom. These and other things are my brightest recollection of childhood days. I sometimes pass a farm once owned by a Saint, land worth fifty to seventy dollars per acre, where once there shone a light in the window for me; now strangers occupy.

When I look at the wealth and beauty all around, and think that the tithing on one of those farms would go a long way toward supporting the gospel, I am filled with sad regrets for what is and might have been had the Saints not left the lands here to be inhabited by Gentiles. I even wonder if I am the only one left; and in the midst of plenty with my children all around me, I feel as much alone as King Bruce of Scotland. But I do not watch the spider as he did, but I pray to God that I may live to see the honest in heart in this country gathered out and numbered with God's people, and a church-building of our own. I am often cheered by the Spirit of God, and believe that honest work will yet bear fruit here. There's a cry from Macedonia, Come over and help us.

If any of the elders took offense at my letter of January 4, I would beg their forgiveness, because they think I should have entreated them as my father' if I had any plans. But I being their mother instead of they being my father, I presume, is how I made the mistake.

Your loving sister,
MARY A. CARTER.

LOS ANGELES, California, June 7, 1905.

Editor Herald: Spiritual conditions are normal here. No unusual excitement, and still we are not all asleep. Very little friction; general unanimity apparent. Have a brand new tent nearing completion purposed for the use and occupancy of those in charge of mission work.

My wife passed through her operation at the hospital favorably and is now at home and able to be about doing a good share of her household duties. The Saints were unusually kind to us, evidencing their loyalty in a material as well as moral sense. May God reward them. Am assiduously applying myself to the execution of the imperative material demands at hand, and reaching out so far as I feel able to perform the functions of my calling and office.

Please convey my kindest regards to all the dear friends and Saints throughout the East, with whom I have associated in gospel-service in the long ago. Memory to the righteous and pure becomes a veritable benediction as the years come and go. New conditions involve new duties; new duties necessitate new associations. However pleasing those of the present may be they can in no sense efface those of the past.

The local church debt is lifted. We are getting ready to paint, tint, and refurnish, and then when some one of the leading missionaries comes along we will have the church dedicated.

Yours very truly,
T. W. WILLIAMS.

BERLIN, North Dakota, June 19, 1905.

Editors Herald: Am out on the frontier battling for the truth. It is somewhat hard, but still I find some encouragement. It seems as though Satan were getting a stronger hold on the minds and hearts of the people.

Since leaving General Conference I have labored at Newark and Hecla, South Dakota. The situation at Hecla was somewhat complicated. After the whole neighborhood had been enlightened by the labors of different ones of our elders, a Mr. Baker, a one-time Latter Day Saint, an "apostate," I believe, of the Des Moines Branch, and a Mr. Boyer assisting him, established what they pleased to call, "The Children of God." It was well understood by all that they were preaching Latter Day Saint doctrine; but by a combination of flattery and deception, assisted by the general ignorance on the subject of authority, they carried the day.

After spending a month at the two places, which are near together, I had the pleasure of baptizing three; and the Sunday following Bro. Hayer baptized three more. Prospects are good for getting more in time. There are now twenty members at the two places; there ought to be a branch.

At Berlin the Methodists closed us out of the church which I had occupied on a previous visit; but a Mr. Young, who owns a good hall, offered it to us free of charge. On the fourth day of our meetings the Methodists started up a "revival." They have endeavored to poison the minds of the people by a house to house canvass, but we go calmly on. Have two names for baptism.

I leave here this week for the North Dakota reunion. Ever praying for the blessing of God upon all our efforts that meet his divine approval, I hope to be ever found,

In the work,
WM. SPARLING.

ELDORADO SPRINGS, Missouri, June 19, 1905.

Editors Herald: The district conference of the Clinton District, Missouri, convened the 17th instant at half past ten o'clock in the forenoon with the Veve Branch. Unity prevailed throughout all the business-sessions. How grand it is when the Saints meet together in union, all of one heart and mind, and self left in the background.

Clinton District is a new field to the writer, but so far I am well pleased with my field of labor; for everywhere we go we feel the spirit of welcome greet us. Surely God has a people here with whom he is well pleased. Saints, let us see how much we can do this year and not how little, as our reward depends on the amount of work done by us. We are now domiciled with Bro. G. W. Beebe, Sr., who has just completed his new home; in this beautiful mansion he furnished one room for the missionaries, and on the morning of the 13th inst. he invited the Saints and friends to come and join in with him in the dedication of this home to the weary travelers, and all that might need his hospitality as far as he shall be able to give.

Eldorado Springs is the famous summer resort, where thousands of sick and afflicted come annually to drink of the ever-flowing fountain of mineral water. This place has a population of thirty-five hundred, and is the terminal of the Eldorado Springs branch of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad, ninety miles south of Sedalia, and one hundred and fifteen miles southeast of Kansas City, on and between the well-wooded hills, in a naturally healthy location. Well wishes to all. I am as ever,
Your humble servant,

GEO. JENKINS.

WEEDMANN, Ontario, June 19, 1905.

Dear Herald: I was notified last month by the president of the Canadian Mission, R. C. Evans, to come and labor in the Chatham District for a while, and I am at the home of Bro. C. Taylor, a new opening. This place is about two miles from Inwood Station. Had a nice turnout last evening for the first sermon. I hope to be instrumental in saving souls.

Dear Saints and friends of the London District, I thank you all for favors shown me as an agent of the church. God will bless you for kind deeds, words, and acts you have done. As I am in your midst again I hope you will take an interest in soul-saving in your community, wherever you are, and help the missionary to make new openings.

I have just returned from the Cedar Springs conference. I saw many familiar faces once more, that I had not seen for three years. I was glad to see you all again and hope your prayers will be for me, that I may be made an instrument in bringing souls to God in your midst. Write and let me know if you would like me to labor in your community. Let us be workers together with God. My permanent address is, Box 625, St. Thomas, Ontario.

Editors Herald: I have often thought I would like to write a few lines to our valued paper, but then I would think, Why take up the room of more valuable writers? However, this morning while reading Sr. Corson's letter my heart went out to her in her afflictions. I wish to say, dear sister, none but those who have passed through the trials in this life are able to so fully sympathize with others in trouble as those who have had the same trials. I, too, have had sorrows to pass through, but I have a sweet comforter in Jesus. He has never forsaken me, although I have sometimes felt my burdens were more than I could bear. Two years ago last March my father died. The next December my mother was taken away, and ever since last Easter Sunday I have been sick. It is going on nine weeks, and as I lie here writing these few lines, the thought comes to me, How gracious the Lord is, for he gives us precious thoughts.

We would not have them if we were always in good health and had no troubles to inspire the soul and make it stronger.

It takes our thoughts from worldly things and brings us nearer to God. So, dear sister, be patient; trust God and he will give you strength as he has promised, for he knows, and he will not burden us with more than we are able to bear.

I have three children, all girls, of whom only one, the eldest, and myself belong to the church. I hope the rest will soon see their way clear and obey.

Here are a few verses I think very beautiful:

"Seek not to flee the place God placed thee in,
For where he wills is the true place for thee;
If thou hadst thine own choice thou couldst not win
A spot all restful, where no rough winds be.

"Live thou thy life; with patience sweeten it;
Make rich the lives of others in thy walk;
Strengthen thy soul with words of Holy Writ,
And season with sweet charity thy talk.

"Above the earth incline thy thoughts to soar,
In places heavenly sweet to find its strength;
Thy mind instruct in wisdom more and more—
So shalt thou have a peaceful life at length."

Your sister in gospel bonds,
MRS. F. V. REED.

CLITHERALL, Minnesota, June 19, 1905.

Editors Herald: I arrived here June 9 from Minneapolis, where I had been laboring for more than a week in the interest of the work. I came to this place to attend the district reunion that commenced June 11, as also the district conference that was held here June 10. Upon taking the train at Minneapolis I was happily surprised to meet Bro. W. M. Rumel, who was also an appointee to this field, and upon our arrival here the morning of June 9, we were met at the depot by H. A. McCoy, T. J. Martin, L. Whiting, and others, and at once I felt at home, though far from my home in old Missouri. Elder Rumel and I were soon domiciled at the home of Alonzo Whiting, and we were made to feel at home indeed.

On Friday evening our Patriarch Alexander H. Smith and Leon Gould put in appearance, and on Saturday morning Elder H. C. Smith, our missionary in charge, came in.

The district conference convened on Saturday, H. C. Smith presiding. Everything passed off peacefully.

On Saturday afternoon of June 10, the organization for the reunion occurred. H. C. Smith was chosen president, and associated with him were A. H. Smith, H. A. McCoy, W. M.

Rumel, and J. R. Sutton. J. R. Sutton was chosen as secretary, with W. M. Rumel as assistant. Elder T. J. Martin was elected chorister, and Sr. Irene Whiting organist.

Elder A. H. Smith fired the first gun of the reunion, and all those who had known Bro. Smith for so many years felt cheered to again hear his voice in defense of the angel message.

The Sunday morning prayer-service was in charge of Elders T. J. Martin and L. Whiting. This was really a spiritual meeting and many prayers were offered, also many good testimonies given.

The sermons during the reunion, generally speaking, were real encouraging and fraught with a goodly degree of the Spirit. The prayer- and testimony-services throughout the entire reunion were marked by that peace and calm Spirit of the Divine that gives cheer and spiritual vigor to the lives of God's people.

No policemen were appointed to keep order, but perfect order prevailed throughout the sessions of the reunion.

There seemed to be but one feature of discouragement especially, and that was the excessive amount of rainfall. Had rain almost every day during the entire session.

Bro. Alexander Smith took quite seriously ill on Wednesday evening, with a very bad cold on his lungs, in fact threatened with pneumonia, but before the reunion closed he was much improved, and at present is feeling quite well.

The reunion committee, consisting of O. E. Murdock, W. Gould, and Arthur Whiting, did their work well. The expense of the reunion and also the board of the missionaries in attendance were met, and a neat little sum given to each missionary to help him on his way rejoicing.

June 14 a business-meeting of the reunion was held, when it was decided to hold a reunion in 1906 at Frazee, Minnesota, beginning June 15. A committee consisting of W. C. Griffin, Kate Jepson, and T. J. Martin was chosen to look after the work.

Elder A. H. Smith gave some blessings, but on account of his sickness was unable to give blessings to all who desired them. There were three children blessed, a number of administrations to the sick, but none baptized.

From here H. C. Smith will go to the North Dakota reunion to be held at Westhope, A. H. Smith will soon return to his home at Lamoni, Bro. W. M. Rumel returned to his home in Nebraska on last Sunday evening, and H. A. McCoy and myself will go to Rumsey for our next Sunday.

In hope of eternal life,
J. R. SUTTON.

PORTLAND, Oregon, June 15, 1905.

Editors Herald: We have now arranged for a hall in which to hold services, and for the benefit of visiting Saints coming to the fair. If our notice can be continued in the paper many, no doubt, would be glad to meet with us. Also for the Saints who contemplate attending fair, I find that by getting a short distance from the more busy part of town nicely furnished rooms can be had at fifty cents to one dollar a day, with meals at twenty-five cents, at private homes. If you think this will be of any benefit to the Saints you are welcome to use it, and I will do what I can to help them, if it does not interfere with my ministerial duty. I commenced meeting the same night I landed, and am still at it.

Extracts from Letters.

Jacob Hershey, Seiling, Oklahoma: "The Saints here are doing very well. We have three services each Sunday. Our Sunday-school averages about forty. Four were baptized the first Sunday in June; one was a Lamanite. Services were held near the river in the grove, and a very pleasant time was had by all. Would like to learn the address of Mrs. Mary A. Anway. They live in Missouri."

Jay Hoffman, Leoti, Kansas: "I have been here three weeks, and like it very well. Preached Sunday, the 18th, to a good crowd, sixteen miles southwest of Leoti. Expect to keep on preaching as long as interest is good. There are other schoolhouses we expect to preach in as soon as we can get to them. We are located five miles south and two miles west of Leoti, and any of the ministry or Saints passing this way are expected to stop and see us. The lathstring is always out. There are two other families of Saints here who would be glad to see any of the ministry."

The report was adopted. The high council of Lamoni Stake presented the name of Leon A. Gould to fill one of the vacancies existing in the council. The resolution was adopted. The following resolution was passed: "Resolved that the direction and control of our reunions is vested in the stake authorities, and not in an intangible body called a reunion." The ruling of the chair was called for upon these two questions: 1. "Is the committee appointed by the last reunion legally in existence, consisting of D. C. White, R. S. Salyards, F. B. Blair, John Smith, and Charles Jones?" 2. "Is the reunion association committee a legal body, consisting of Duncan Campbell, J. A. Gunsolley, and John Smith?" The chair (J. A. Gunsolley) ruled as follows: "As far as this conference is concerned, it had no part in their appointment, and from the standpoint of this conference they have no existence." A motion to indorse the appointment and work of the committee that was appointed last year by the reunion was followed by a substitute to appoint a reunion committee consisting of D. C. White, F. B. Blair, R. S. Salyards, John Smith, and Charles Jones. The substitute carried. It was also moved and carried that the stake bishopric be the permanent financial committee of the reunion. Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Pittsburg District and Western Pennsylvania: Having been placed in charge of the above-named district, I take this means of getting into communication with all who would like to have ministerial labor performed in their vicinity. I would like to hear from any one who has friends or relatives in this field whom they would like to have our ministry call upon and take the gospel to them. It is our purpose to push the work as much as possible throughout the field, and to accomplish the most possible good. We ask for the assistance of the local ministry as much as they can give us. We earnestly ask the ministry to push the work as much as possible out into new fields.

The ministry will labor as follows for the present: Bro. I. M. Smith and Bro. Koehler with the tent, Bro. R. Etzenhouser in Monongahela Valley with Fayette City as basis of operations, and Bro. J. Craig in Chester and vicinity. Bro. J. Hollibaugh will labor with me for the present.

Let us all work together for the success of the cause of Christ,—members, local officers, and missionaries, each in his or her special duties, and we will see at the end of the conference year that the gospel has made progress. My address will be, 97 Elm Street, Sharon, Pennsylvania. Your brother,
R. BALDWIN.

Through an oversight the names of Brn. W. T. Bozarth and A. A. Baker were not mentioned in the list of appointees to Colorado in my communication to the Saints of the Rocky Mountain Mission. They were, however, duly appointed, and will be expected to labor as hitherto in that mission.

WM. H. KELLEY, Missionary in Charge.

Bro. William R. Norris resigns by reason of being called away from the district; and, for his willing and useful work in the past, the Bishopric extends its thanks and solicitations, and trusts that the Lord may bless and direct him in his labors in his new fields.

We also urge upon members and friends of the Master's cause in said district to aid the present agent in his work and to aid the work of said district as they may be able to do so, as provided in the law of Christ.

Trusting that the Lord may bless every one of goodly desires and goodly effort as they labor together for the good of the gospel cause, I am, in behalf of the Bishopric,

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

The reunion grounds include forty acres of timber, well located, healthful as a site, with good drainage, and abundance of pasture. This reunion will furnish an opportunity to visit Lamoni and to enjoy a good time among the Saints of the stake. Full particulars concerning rental of tents, and other items of entertainment, will be duly announced. Good speakers and other features necessary to a successful program will be provided. Saints and friends everywhere are invited to attend and enjoy this reunion, which we hope to see one of the best ever held. Make your arrangements early and meet with us. Come one, come all.

Reunion Notices.

Reunion of the Southern Wisconsin District will convene at Madison, Wisconsin, beginning August 26, and ending September 3, 1905. We have secured the grounds as last year, also some additional land, so that there will be plenty of room. We hope now that all the Saints will sacrifice all worldly amusements and attend the reunion and so gain a degree of spiritual strength that will be hard for you to obtain elsewhere. Further information will be furnished later on. J. O. Dutton, Geo. J. Brookover, for committee.

The Massachusetts District reunion will convene at Touisset, Massachusetts, August 5, 1905. Orders for tents should be in our hands not later than August 1, 1905. Tents 10x12, $2.75; 12x15, $3.25; cots 25 cents each; commissary board the same as last year, twenty-one meals, $3.50; children under twelve years, half price; between twelve and fourteen, 50 cents extra; and all over fourteen years full price. Those attending should have all luggage checked to Touisset, Massachusetts. Touisset is about midway between Providence and Fall River. Trains run in each direction every half hour; good connections from all places, six mails daily. Those sending baggage should send it via Fall River, instead of Providence, as at the latter place it would have to be trucked across the city, and would cause extra expense. The camp-grounds are situated on Mount Hope Bay; salt water, a good beach, bathing, boating, fishing, clamming, etc., for those who desire it. There is a large field for baseball and other sports. Plenty of good spring water for all, good shade, and in fact everything to make it a first-class camping-ground. The prices from the different branches are reasonable; they are as follows, mileage: Attleboro (via Providence) 35 cents, Boston $1.10, Brockton 50 cents, Cranston 25 cents, Dennisport (via New Bedford) $1.30, Haverhill $1.75, Little Compton 15 cents, Fall River 15 cents, New Bedford 30 cents, Providence 15 cents, Plymouth (via Providence) $1.15, Plain-

TRACTS.

We are receiving a number of tracts from different writers in response to our request some time back; but we are sorry to state that writers of quite a number of these tracts have failed to keep within the limit of the number of words we requested them to do. The result is that we can not use them for the purpose designed. We have neither the time nor the inclination to take those that are too long and cut them down to the length desired. It would result in a failure to give the writer's sentiment and argument, and would injure the symmetry of the whole.

Our request was for manuscript suitable for four-page tracts to contain about the number of words of one full page of the HERALD. We made a calculation of six hundred words to a HERALD page. This was not correct. There are nearer eight hundred. But it ought to be easy for a writer to select a full page, (not one all in small type,) in the common type and count it, then cut the intellectual garment according to the pattern. We have counted the words in some of the tracts received, and find that they exceed the requested limit from two to four and five hundred words. Some are within the limit and are quite good material for the object designed.

If those who have sent us manuscripts have copies of their work, as they should have, we suggest that they overhaul them and put them in shape. If we can have from one to six good tracts of the size required, by different writers, we will have none too many, and it will be all the better, for then we will have variety of treatment which will make the series interesting.

We have as writers, Brn. C. Derry, J. D. Erwin, Alvin Knisley, W. S. Pender, A. E. Madison, E. E. Long, John Reynolds, J. C. Grainger, J. A. Tanner, W. H. Greenwood (Sheffield, England), L. G. Gurwell, and others; but the suggested topics are not all covered, and there is room for more. Of course, we must use the best, and as Bro. Pender writes in submitting his, "You will doubtless be receiving several on each subject; if any is better than mine, choose the best, and put mine in the waste-basket; the best is none too good." So send them along; it will be good study, and educational anyway.

FROM THE CADILLAC "NEWS."

The following written by Bro. E. A. Goodwin is from the Cadillac (Michigan) News, for June 16, 1905, and by its insertion speaks well for the good citizenship of the Cadillac Saints, and the liberality of the News:

Joseph Smith, the founder of the church, was born in Vermont in 1805, and, after founding the church and living to see it grow in the space of fourteen years to a prosperous society numbering two hundred thousand communicants, he was killed June 27, 1844, by a mob in Carthage, Illinois. Brigham Young, in 1852, gave to the world a document which he affirmed was a divine revelation, and which he said was given by the Lord to Joseph Smith back in 1843. This statement of Young is largely the authority for the charge that has been urged against Joseph Smith as being the author of polygamy in America. Disputes have been long and many. Sons of Joseph Smith, who are also members of the Reorganized Church, repudiate polygamy and the charge against their father of introducing it, and declare it was a forgery of Young. The Cadillac conference press committee furnishes a statement from Walter Wellman in the Chicago Record-Herald of March 14, 1904, where, in speaking of the testimony of Joseph Smith, of Utah, before the Senate Committee upon privileges and elections, in which the witness charged the founder of the church with the introduction of polygamy, Mr. Wellman says: "The members of the Reorganized Church and their friends of similar societies in Michigan and other Western States are imploring the committee to give them a chance to prove that President Joseph F. Smith, of Utah, bore false and outrageously unjust witness against the original Joseph Smith. It is not probable that the committee will accede to the request to open up this old controversy. But a member of the senatorial committee who knows something of the high character of the monogamist Latter Day Saints says he has personally examined some of the evidence which has been submitted to the committee, and he can find no proof whatever that President Smith was correct in saying that Joseph Smith had introduced polygamy into the church. On the other hand, he finds almost conclusive proof that Joseph Smith did nothing of the sort, and that the founder of the church neither practiced nor preached polygamy." One thing we do know, that whether Joseph Smith taught polygamy or not, his son, the president of the Reorganized Church, repudiates it, as do his followers.

COLONEL W. P. HEPBURN, CONGRESSMAN FROM EIGHTH IOWA DISTRICT, IN HONOLULU.

Bro. G. J. Waller sends us a copy of the Pacific Commercial Advertiser for June 8, 1905, in which is reported some of the things said by Colonel Hepburn in an interview for the Advertiser. One of them we give below:

THE MORMON QUESTION.

Colonel Hepburn incidentally referred to Utah and regretted that the Mormon question had been so prominent before the nation. He was of the opinion, however, that the church authorities in Utah had been guilty of bad faith in keeping a promise made many years ago, that polygamy should no longer be practiced. Colonel Hepburn admired the younger element of the church, which had combated the church authorities on this crucial issue and for which many had been excommunicated. He named among others, ex-United States Senator Frank Cannon, now editor of the Salt Lake Tribune, which is waging a fierce war on the polygamous Mormons, as one he had known in Congress and for whom he had a good deal of admiration.

Colonel Hepburn said he came from Clarinda, Iowa, near which was the home of the reformed Mormon church, a church which believes in the doctrines of Joseph Smith, but has never believed in polygamy. This is the sect of which G. J. Waller is the head in Honolulu.

"The son of Joseph Smith lives near me," said Colonel Hepburn, "and I have great admiration for him, too. He is a man of excellent qualities. The people are thrifty and make good citizens."

It is always pleasant to know that the public representative men of our time who have had an opportunity to know the men and communities of the church, and have a just right to speak of them, will, if they have occasion to, speak of them well.

Bro. Waller would feel encouraged by the attitude of Honorable Hepburn towards us and our associates.

"THE TRAGEDY OF THE MORMON WOMAN."

Speaking of "The tragedy of the Mormon woman," a serial begun in the July number of the Housekeeper, published at Minneapolis, Minnesota, the Salt Lake Tribune, edited by Frank J. Cannon, who was lately excommunicated by the "heirarchy," as he calls it, for denouncing President Joseph F. Smith through the press, says:

The Housekeeper, a magazine for women published at Minneapolis, with a wide circulation in the homes of the United States, is making most aggressive warfare against "The tragedy of the Mormon woman."

One of its editors visited this State and, from investigations which she conducted here, is giving her views to the women of the country. Naturally, the editor, Marion Bonsall, treats of the domestic life—with polygamy as the paramount consideration in her view.

While plural marriage is not the most significant evil of the present hierarchical system, we at home must not lose sight of the fact that it is a "tragedy." The young women who have been dragged into polygamy during the recent years stand imperiled of the destruction of all their hopes in this mundane sphere. Hundreds of them have been married, as they believe, under sanction of the church. For the sake of their faith they have violated law and all the sentiments of the country, and have set themselves in a class separate from the womanhood of the nation. The only compensation, the only protection, the only hope which they could have in such a state would be in a recognition by the church of their status as wives, and a continued recognition of that status and of the sanctity surrounding the birth of their children throughout all the generations of this existence. But that recognition will be withdrawn from them in the near time to come. It is true that the church will soon be compelled to avow in words what it has avowed in facts, that plural marriages have been solemnized with church sanction since the manifesto. The cases are so many, and the knowledge of the circumstances surrounding these cases is becoming so general, that the church will be compelled to protect its apostles who have solemnized these marriages by declaring publicly that the revelation commanding plural marriage is the authoritative word of God, and that the manifesto is not a binding document. And in making such a statement in plain words and publicly, the church will only be declaring openly what is put forward and thoroughly understood in private conversation.

But the epoch of recognition will not be a period of long duration. A short, sharp conflict will ensue and polygamy will be once more abandoned—or else the polygamists will seek shelter other than that afforded by the United States flag. In such event the church will repudiate the illegal unions, and the young women who have entered into that relation since the manifesto will find that they are without social status in the land of their birth; and they and their offspring will be, like Hagar and her child, sent into the desert of despair.

It is a horrible tragedy to go on under our eyes day by day. Every one knows what the end must be. All kind-hearted people must mourn that in the midst of an intellectual and Christian people, such as Mormons profess to be, there can exist this shameful betrayal of womankind, from the consequences of which they can not escape. Long before the majority of these girls can reach middle life or old age the whole system of plural marriage will have been abandoned by the Mormon church, and these women and their offspring will be of a class as designated by Doctor Talmage, when he went to Washington and declared, by authority from the Mormon church, that a plural wife since the manifesto could not hold any but illicit relation to her "husband" in the eyes of the church.

It would seem as if Joseph F. Smith must have more to answer for than any other living leader of men. Day by day and year by year, to protect his own selfish relations, he has permitted young people to plunge into this abyss of horror, from which death is the only escape.

If the cry of their misery can reach the eternal throne an awful change will await him when he stands at the judgment-seat of God. All his pretensions, of self-righteousness then will be of no avail. The torture which he has caused, the tragedy which he has perpetrated in the lives of others, merely that his own sin might have company, will appear a naked deformity, and his satanic self-satisfaction and self-praise will be of no avail in that dark hour.—Salt Lake Tribune, June 28, 1905.

The "Tragedy of the Mormon woman," in the Housekeeper, is written by Miss Marian Bonsall, one of the editors of the magazine, and she gives a graphic account of conditions in Utah as she sees and understands them. Speaking of the probable reason for the continued toleration of polygamous practices in Utah, she says: "Why, then, you say, do not the intelligent women of Utah refuse to submit to this unspeakable degradation? Why do not the fresh young women, and the brilliant young men of the State stamp out this relic of barbarism? I will tell you. First, because polygamy is in their blood. Second, because polygamy is their religion. Third, because to denounce polygamy would be to cast reflections, of the most horrible character, upon the virtue of the mothers and the honor of the fathers." Of the three reasons, the latter is undoubtedly the most potent. Further along, Miss Bonsall says, "And there is another reason also. The Mormon woman DOES NOT DARE, for the sake of peace in her home, good standing in her church, and the reputation of her character, to make complaint against her bondage in Mormonism. Blood atonement, beyond all doubt, is done with in the Mormon church for ever. The Mountain Meadow Massacre could not and would not be repeated by the Mormon authorities to-day. But the Mormon church will kill a man's business and it will ruin a woman's social standing."

This writer promises to tell next month, something of what the Mormon woman "submits to in the religion of the prophet Joseph Smith." She should have said, "the usurper, Brigham Young," for there is the widest difference between the religion of Brigham Young, and the religion introduced by Joseph Smith, the prophet. In the latter religion there is no submission, in the sense in which she uses the term, and no man or woman is brought under bondage to sin and degradation by an adherence to its tenets; but instead is made a free man or a free woman in Christ. GRAFT.

It is truly distressing to contemplate the extent to which graft and greed have gained a foothold in political and business lines of life, and almost every day some startling revelation is made of corruption and fraud that has been carried on under cover in some department of life. An exchange says, "The hunt for graft is becoming general throughout the country. Graft in various forms is so prevalent that it is a menace to the safety of the country." When we are confronted with the disclosures that are daily being made, it would seem that it were no exaggeration to say, "The hand of graft is at the nation's throat." Surely we are living in the age that Paul foresaw when he said, "In the last days perilous times shall come," when men would be covetous, trucebreakers, and traitors.

And yet it is a most hopeful sign that fraud, corruption, bribery, graft, and other forms of dishonesty are being brought to light, and the greed of man is being made known. Each succeeding issue of the various newspapers and magazines contains an account of some new fraud exposed, or new complaints and charges made of alleged betrayal of trust imposed. Truly the secret acts of men are being spoken from the housetops, as it were.

The publicity of the post-office frauds, and the exposures of the St. Louis and Milwaukee hoodlums, of the perfidy of the strike instigators and strike leaders, of the reeking corruption of the legislatures, and of the lawlessness of officials in corporate institutions and financial circles, are all evidences that the influences are at work to purge these evils from our midst. The apathy and easy-going indifference that has made possible the developments of these great national and business evils to such an extent, is giving place to a determined effort to bring to account the plunderers of the people. The struggle has begun almost simultaneously in the various cities of the United States. What will be the outcome? Time will tell.

It is not only in political and business circles that evidences of fraud and corruption are being brought to view; but in religious circles the same spirit seems to be working, and we should hail with joy the signs that indicate an upward tendency. Evil-doers find it more difficult to cover up their secret acts; their fraudulent practices are being presented to the public mind in a more vigorous and fearless manner than ever before. And the forces which are working for the uncovering of evil and wrong, whether in the world, the world's churches, or in the church of God, are certainly in harmony with the mind of God as revealed in his word to us. The church at one time, to an extent, entered into darkness, and partook more or less of the evils of the world, which led finally to the latter-day apostasy. And the influences have been at work uncovering, and bringing to light the frauds perpetrated upon a trusting people, as the Lord said they would: "And liars, and hypocrites shall be proven by them [the inhabitants of Zion], and they who are not apostles and prophets shall be known."—Doctrine and Covenants 64:7. For we see that the spirit, which has begun to work in the world, has been and is yet working to expose the shame of those men who led away the people of God and introduced the abominations that have brought reproach upon the work of God; and the inhabitants of Zion are able to prove them, and those who were not true apostles and prophets in the past have been made known.

What men have done, men may do; and a careful consideration of these things should teach us this important lesson: That it is possible for men, to-day, as then, to forget in a measure their covenant with God, and partake more or less of the influences of the world surrounding them; but it should also be remembered there will surely come a reckoning time, if not in this life, then in the life to come, "and liars and hypocrites shall be proven," for this divine statement applies to all time future from the date upon which the revelation was given. Hence, the wisest course is to make our lives, daily, conform to the rules of spiritual uprightness, as we may be given grace and ability to understand it, coupled with a humble walk before the Lord of all. EDITORIAL ITEMS.

It is said that $1,500,000,000 is spent annually for intoxicants in this country; $1,500,000,000—to curse the homes of the United States!—Lamoni Chronicle.

Yes, and a lot of Christians (?) will, by their vote, sanction the business, hoping to share in the benefits of the "curse." Vain hope!

LAFAYETTE, Indiana, June 23.—[Special.]—Charles B. Landis, congressman from the Ninth Indiana District, addressed the convention of the Chicago Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church to-day.

"I would no more think of sending my boy to a city to college with the unrestrained influence of the university of to-day, than I would of sending my daughter to Paris without an escort," was the sweeping assertion he made in an argument in favor of the small town for the college.

He severely arraigned cities where colleges are located and said the environments of the students contain contaminating influences which never are found in the smaller town.

He said: "I am a firm advocate of the small college. I would send my son to the small college, even though some one would give him free tuition to the large college or university. I prefer the small town because of its influence."—Chicago Tribune.

It does not take a man-made law to define a moral wrong.—The Commoner.

And no amount of human legislation, in church or state can make wrong right.

"Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation." "If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!" It is by yielding to the tempter that we are led into darkness, and we should be on our guard constantly. We are never in greater danger of being led into darkness than when we think we are perfectly safe, but that it is our brother who is in danger.

Bro. Jasper O. Dutton writing from Flora, Wisconsin, reports excellent work and some interest manifested by the hearers of gospel work there. Eleven baptisms and others to follow by himself and Bro. George Brokaw. We are glad these young brethren are having success in their labors.

That "the wisdom of their wise men shall perish," and is perishing in more than a religious sense, is evidenced by the following clipping from the Chicago Tribune, June 18, 1905: "Paris, June 17.—For many a year archæologists have expatiated on the wonderful constructive skill of the ancient Romans as shown by the aqueduct of Chaillot and papers on the subject were read before many learned societies. They observe a discreet silence now for the reason that in the archives of the Hotel de Ville it has been discovered that the aqueduct is comparatively modern. A document, the authenticity of which is undoubted, shows that it was constructed by Bernard Palissy in 1567 by order of Catherine de Medicis."

California oranges are now growing on trees at the Lewis and Clark Exposition. The California commission dug up several trees bearing the fine yellow fruit and took them to Portland, with considerable quantities of earth about the roots. Set out in boxes they attract much attention.

TRUE HONOR.

SERMON BY I. M. SMITH, AT INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI,
MAY 7, 1905.

(Reported by Marie Morgan.)

The text of scripture which I have chosen as a foundation or starting-point for the remarks I may make will be found in the eighteenth chapter of Proverbs, twelfth verse: "Before destruction the heart of man is haughty, and before honor is humility."

If you will allow me to put that in my own words I will word it like this: "Haughtiness goes before destruction; humility goes before honor." The same thought is presented in the fifteenth chapter of Proverbs, and elsewhere in the writings of Solomon; but I shall attempt to prove, from other writers, that the principle is true, and that honor can not come to us unless it is preceded by humility. We can never attain unto honor unless we first possess that humility which God requires of his creatures. You remember the statement of the apostle Paul, found in 2 Timothy 2:20, 21 that "in a great house there are not only vessels of gold and of silver, but also of wood and of earth; and some to honor, and some to dishonor. If a man therefore purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honor, sanctified, and meet for the Master's use."

In a great house! Now the church of God is "the house of God." The apostle says, in speaking of Christ, that he is "a son over his own house; whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end." We believe, then, if we hold fast this confidence and this rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end of our lives, that we are "the house of God," and I think there will be no doubt in your minds that "the house of God" is, indeed, a great house; and hence, in this house of God will be vessels of honor and vessels of dishonor, and the vessels of honor are those who have purged themselves "from these." But from what? The apostle had been speaking of profane and vain babblings, of error, and of iniquity. If a man purge himself, then, from these profane babblings, from error, from iniquity of every kind: if he "purge himself from these" he shall be a vessel of honor; but, in order for us to attain unto this honor, and become a vessel of honor in the house of God, it is necessary for us to seek for this honor. The apostle in writing to the Romans, declares in the second chapter, seventh to tenth verses, that God will reward every man according to his works, according to his deeds:

To them who by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life: but unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil; of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile; but glory, honor, and peace, to every man that worketh good; to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile.

But they who "seek for glory and honor," and seek it in the right way, by doing good: not by spasmodic efforts in doing good; but who "by patient continuance in well-doing" seek for this glory, honor, and immortality,—they are the ones who are to be granted this honor, this eternal life.

If you will permit, I will relate a story I read several years ago regarding a colored brother. He was going from church one Sunday and was overtaken by a judge, who made no profession of religion, and the judge asked him where he had been. He said, "I have been to church." "What church do you attend, Uncle Billy?" "Why," he said, "I attend the Presbyterian Church." "Oh! Do you believe the five points of Calvinism?" "Well," he said, "I don't know anything about the five points of Calvinism." "Well, you believe if a man is elected to salvation he will be saved, and if he is elected to condemnation he will be condemned?" "Oh, yes. Yes, sir, I believe that." "Do you think you are one of the elect?" "Yes, sir, yes, sir." "Well, Uncle Billy, do you think I am one of the elect?" "Well," he said, "I don't know, judge." "Well, tell me what you think of it. Do you think I am one of the elect?" "I will tell you, judge. I never heard of a man's being elected before he was a candidate." Now that is the thought here. You will never be elected to honor and immortality, until you become a candidate, until you seek for it, and seek for it "by patient continuance in well doing"; and, by so seeking, you shall be elected and crowned with this honor. Perhaps you may not receive a fullness of it in this life, for the apostle Peter in his first epistle, first chapter, seventh verse, exhorts the saints and makes a statement, in his exhortation, like this, "That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ." The trial of your faith may be found unto this honor and glory. But when? "At the appearing of Jesus Christ."

Now it may be possible that some of you are asking, What is honor? and what kind of honor is it that is spoken of here? Well, the psalmist David tells us what kind of "honor" it is that belongs unto God's people, in the one hundred and forty-ninth Psalm and ninth verse. Beginning, however, with the first verse he exhorts them to praise the Lord and says:

Let Israel rejoice in him. . . . Let the children of Zion be joyful in their King. . . . Let the high praises of God be in their mouth, and a two edged sword in their hand; to execute vengeance upon the heathen, and punishments upon the people; to bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron; to execute upon them the judgment written; this honor have all his saints. Praise ye the Lord.

To bind their kings with chains and to execute the judgment that is written: "this honor have all his saints." "This honor": the honor to execute "the judgment that is written." The honor to execute judgment upon the nations, upon the people who are transgressors, or who do not come up to the standard required in God's law. And I believe the teaching of the apostle Paul, as found in 1 Corinthians 6:2, 3, is in harmony with this. Paul asks if they would dare, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the saints, and asks further: "Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters? Know ye not that we shall judge angels? how much more things that pertain to this life?" Here the apostle says that God's saints are to judge, not only the world; but that they are to judge angels. And in the second chapter of Revelation, twenty-sixth verse, it is declared by the angel that appeared unto John upon the Isle of Patmos, that "He that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron." The rod of iron we understand to be the word of God. Hence, those who overcome shall be made rulers over the nations. Rule them by the word of God. Now the Psalmist says, in the text before quoted, they shall execute "the judgment that is written": rule them by the word of God. And in the third chapter of Revelation, twenty-first verse, it is said again, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Christ had to overcome, and then he sat down with his Father in his throne. You and I must overcome, and then we shall sit down with Christ in his throne.

In the nineteenth chapter of Matthew, twenty-eighth verse, is a statement to this effect: "Ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Now "this honor have all his saints," says the psalmist David. It is simply another way of presenting the thought found in Revelation: "They shall be kings and priests unto God and shall reign with him,"—reign upon the earth, reign a thousand years, sit with him in his throne, and sit upon thrones judging the nations of the earth, according as they shall have prepared themselves for this work. This is the "honor" that belongeth to "all his saints."

In the fifth chapter of Hebrews, first verse, we are informed: "For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins." And in the fourth verse he declares that "no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron." Every high priest, who is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins; but no man can take "this honor" unto himself, only as God shall bestow it upon him. "This honor" may commence in this life, but "at the appearing of Jesus Christ" we shall be crowned with glory, honor, and immortality; eternal life, if you please, if we have been faithful in these things, "by patient continuance in well-doing," and have succeeded in overcoming, and thus preparing ourselves for this high and exalted condition.

But we must remember there are other kinds of "honor" spoken of in the Scriptures, besides this. For instance, in the twelfth chapter of Proverbs the wise man tells us that "he that is despised and hath a servant, is better than he that honoreth himself, and lacketh bread." The man who is despised, then, is better than the man who honors himself; and hence the honor which I bestow upon myself, and the honor which you bestow upon yourself is worse than no honor at all. In fact, it is recognized here as being dishonor,—worse than none. Better be despised than have that kind of honor.

Then there is another kind of honor spoken of by the Master in the fifth chapter of John, forty-fourth verse: "How can ye believe, which receive honor one of another?" So there is an honor that may come to you through me; there is an honor that may come to me from my brethren; there is an honor that we may bestow one upon another, the honor of our fellow men. Now Jesus says those who receive this kind of honor can not believe. How can you believe, while you continue to receive this kind of honor?

There is also another kind of honor spoken of in this same verse: "How can ye believe which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?" The honor that cometh from God, must be sought, as we showed you before. Those who win that glory, honor, and immortality, must seek for it. If you do not seek for the honor that comes from God only, how can ye believe? the Master asks here.

As we have, then, these three kinds of honor: that which we bestow upon ourselves; that which men may bestow on us, and that which comes from God only, we must decide for ourselves which kind we want, and then act accordingly. If we have the first or the second kind of honor it is worse than none, in many instances, at least; but the honor that comes from God only is certainly what we are seeking for, what we desire.

And this is the honor that the Master had. He said in the fifth chapter of John, forty-first verse: "I receive not honor from men." And in John 8:54, he says, "If I honor myself, my honor is nothing." So he did not have the honor that came from himself, neither did he have the honor that comes from men; but he says, "My father honoreth me and ye do dishonor me." While men dishonored the Son of God, the Father of heaven honored him. In 2 Peter, and about the seventeenth verse, it is declared through the apostle Peter that he "received from God the Father honor and glory," when there came a voice from the heavens saying: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Then he received "honor" from the Father; but he received honor, no doubt, at other times.

But did he receive honor before or after humility? We shall let the apostle Paul answer this in the second chapter of Philippians, beginning with the fifth verse, where he exhorts the saints:

Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God; but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name. That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

It was after he had "humbled himself" and became obedient that the Father exalted him, and gave him a name that is above every other name; when everything in heaven and earth was placed in subjection to him.

I will call your attention to the fifth chapter of Revelation, eleventh and twelfth verses. Here John says:

I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne, and the beasts, and the elders; and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands; saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing.

And in the thirteenth verse it says:

And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever.

The Lamb is associated with the Father that sitteth upon the throne, and this is in harmony with what Jesus said, they shall "honor the Son, even as they honor the Father." So you see before Jesus was exalted to this position, he "humbled himself," and "became obedient." Now, in order for us to attain unto this exalted position, and enjoy the honor of sitting with him in his throne, being kings and priests unto God, and reigning with him, it will certainly be necessary for us to follow his example. Hence, in the twelfth chapter of Hebrews the apostle says, beginning with the first verse:

Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God.

What did he do? Listen! "Who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross." What joy was set before him? We are told that before he came into this world he was in the form of God and, in fact, was equal with God. What more could he ask? What could he require more than that? What then was the joy that was set before him? What would bring him more joy than to be in the form of God and to be equal with God? Evidently it was the thought that millions of intelligent creatures would be redeemed from death, through his suffering, and would be exalted to occupy this high and holy position with him; be like him, when he shall come in his glory. It was the joy of lifting others up, redeeming them from sin and death, and making them godlike and Christlike, worthy to reign with him. It was the joy of doing good unto others. It was this joy that was set before him, which caused him to be willing to endure the cross, despise the shame, and endure the humiliation which was heaped upon him. It was this that caused him to suffer himself to be spit upon, to have his name cast out as evil, to make himself of no reputation. "HUMBLED HIMSELF!" It was this joy that was "set before him," and caused him to do all this for us.

Now the apostle says, "looking unto him." And, if we are to "look unto him," it is evidently for the purpose of following his example. Hence we read in the writings of the apostle Peter again, 1 Peter 5:6: "Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time." The trouble is we want to be exalted now; and because God does not exalt us, when we think we ought to be exalted, we sometimes try to exalt ourselves, and the result is always the reverse. "Humble yourselves," the apostle says, "under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time." Just wait patiently until his time comes, and then the exaltation, the honor, will come; but remember that humility goes before honor. Remember that before we can attain unto this honor, we must be humble, meek, and lowly like the Master. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "I am meek and lowly of heart," he says. Come and "learn of me," and "ye shall find rest for your souls." Looking unto Jesus as the author and the finisher of our faith, and learning of him, learning to be meek and lowly of heart, will give us rest for our souls; and we surely can not find rest for our souls in any other way, because this, and this only, will bring the "honor" that comes from God to man. This will bring the exaltation that is promised unto God's children in the world to come.

In the fourth chapter of James, tenth verse, he says, "Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up." Remember the humbling is to be done by ourselves. "HUMBLE YOURSELVES." The lifting up, the exalting, is to be done by a higher power. When we humble ourselves, the "honor" comes from God; and it can come from no other source.

In the writings of Luke there are one or two instances to which I wish to call your attention as examples of this. For instance, in the eighteenth chapter, beginning with the ninth verse, and reading to the fourteenth verse:

And he spake this parable unto certain which trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others: Two men went up into the temple to pray; the one a Pharisee, and the other a publican. The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself, God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are, extortionists, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican. I fast twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I possess. And the publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner. I tell you, this man went down to his house justified rather than the other; for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

Better to be despised than to exalt yourself, says the wise man. And Jesus says, "If I honor myself, my honor is nothing." The Pharisee trusted in himself; took the honor unto himself, or tried to, at least. The publican, on the other hand, was so filled with shame and humiliation, at the thought of coming into the presence of God, that he could not even lift his eyes to heaven, but smote upon his breast and said, "God be merciful to me a sinner"; and Jesus said, "I say unto you that this man went down to his house justified rather than the other; for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." In other words, every one that is haughty shall be dishonored, and every one who is humble shall be honored of the Lord. In Luke 14:7-11 is another illustration of this principle. Certain ones were striving for the uppermost seats, the most honorable positions; and he warned them against this, especially his disciples, and told them to take the most lowly place. Then when the man who has bidden you, invited you to come, invites you to go up higher, you will be glorified in the presence of all those who sit at meat with thee. On the other hand, if you go and take the uppermost seat, and then the master of assemblies shall come and tell you to come down lower, you will be humiliated in the presence of the audience, for he says, "Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

Now I might quote you text after text, were it necessary, in the teaching of the Savior, in the teaching of the disciples, and in the teaching of the prophets, showing that men who exalt themselves shall be abased, while those who humble themselves shall receive the "honor" that comes from God only.

It is not always easy for us to humble ourselves.

Sometimes we are tried, and sometimes we almost give up. Some of the best of men have found themselves in this condition. The Master himself was severely tried, so much so that in the Garden of Gethsemane he prayed, "If it be possible, let this cup pass from me"; and the psalmist David, in the seventy-third Psalm, says: "But as for me, my feet were almost gone; my steps had well nigh slipped. For I was envious at the foolish, when I saw the prosperity of the wicked." And then he goes on to give us some account of the earthly blessings of the wicked. He says:

They are not in trouble as other men, neither are they plagued like other men. . . . Their eyes stand out with fatness; they have more than heart could wish. They are corrupt and speak wickedly concerning oppression; they speak loftily. They set their mouth against the heavens, and their tongue walketh through the earth. Therefore his people return hither; and waters of a full cup are wrung out to them. And they say, How doth God know? and is there knowledge in the Most High? Behold, these are the ungodly, who prosper in the world; they increase in riches. Verily I have cleansed my heart in vain, and washed my hands in innocency.

In ignorance, if you please. I have done these things in vain. Why? "For all the day long have I been plagued, and chastened every morning. If I say, I will speak thus; behold, I should offend against the generation of thy children. When I thought to know this, it was too painful for me." "My feet were almost gone; my steps had well nigh slipped." "I cleansed my heart in vain," concluded that I was washing my hands in ignorance because, while I saw the wicked prospering on the right hand and on the left, I was being chastened sore every morning. I was being plagued. I was having to suffer all these things, and my feet had well nigh slipped. I concluded I was doing all this in vain, until—until when? "Until I went into the sanctuary of God." Then I understood. Until I went into the presence of my Creator, and received the Spirit that giveth light and understanding. Until the divine nature came down into my soul and lifted me out of myself, or, if you please, until I humbled myself in the dust of the earth and presented myself before God in such condition of mind and soul that he could speak to me; that he could show me the light of his Spirit; could enlighten my mind, heart, and soul, and enable me to comprehend what should be the end of all this; "until I went into the sanctuary of God. Then I understood." "Surely," he says, "thou didst set them in slippery places; thou castedst them down into destruction." And when he came to understand all this, he says, "so foolish was I and ignorant; I was a beast before thee." My heart was grieved and I was pricked in my reins because I had been so foolish and so ignorant. Because I had been like a beast before the Lord;—had failed to comprehend; had failed to understand that I must be humbled in the sight of God before I could be exalted; had failed to understand that humility goes before exaltation, or honor; and, on the other hand, that haughtiness and pride go before destruction. His enemies had been exalted or had exalted themselves and seemed to prosper and increase in this world. They were exalting themselves, and speaking loftily; but the psalmist says that they shall be destroyed; while the humble, those who go down in the dust of humility before God, and present themselves before him in this manner, shall be exalted. They shall be honored of him.

If you want the honor that comes from God only, honor him. Honor him with what? What have you to give to him? Why give him your heart, to begin with; give him your soul; give him the work of your hands; give him everything you have, for it all belongs to him. And when you do that, even then you have done nothing only what is your duty. Honor him, and he will honor you. Humble yourselves and become obedient, even as the Son did, and then, as God exalted the Son and gave him such a high and exalted position, so the Son will exalt you to sit with him in his throne. He will exalt you to be "kings and priests unto God." He will exalt you to dwell with the high and holy ones in his high and holy place. Remember, then, that haughtiness goes before destruction; that humility goes before honor, and that you can never attain unto this honor, you can never receive this honor, God will never bestow this honor upon you, until you, like the Savior, have humbled yourselves. Make yourselves of no reputation, become "obedient unto death," if need be, and God will raise you up and give you a fullness of that "honor that cometh from God only." But, "before honor is humility."

FOLLOW MAN—HOW FAR?

Is there any man on earth to-day who can tell us what we must do to be saved? I answer, No, and none has been since Christ was here. I know it is common to hear preachers of different sects, even elders in the Latter Day Saint Church, say they can tell us just what we must do to be saved. I am willing to admit that there are some men who can tell us how to become a child of God; but does that give us the knowledge that is necessary in order that we might be saved? I answer, No. When I say, Saved, I mean complete salvation in the first resurrection. If any man can tell us what we must do to be saved, I fail to see the need of the Spirit of God coming to reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment to come. It was to come after Christ should ascend to his Father. He said if he went away he would send it, and it was to guide us into all truth. Can any man guide us into all truth? I answer, No. Then if we are saved we must be guided into all truth and must abide in the truth, and the truth will make us free; hence the Spirit of God is to teach us all things, and bring all things to our remembrance, and show us things to come.

It is said in the Scriptures that it is life eternal "to know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." Paul says, "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." Flesh and blood can not give us this knowledge; God alone can do that; and he does it by the spirit of revelation. Paul says we get the Holy Ghost by obeying God, so the proof is conclusive that no man can be saved without the spirit of revelation.

"The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple." A man can teach us the law of the Lord, but he can not give us the testimony of Jesus, which is the spirit of prophecy. It is true, Peter was to tell certain ones words whereby they might be saved; but Paul says, "Our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance."

We are told that as many as are led by the Spirit of God, are the sons of God. Who are the sons of God? Those who are led by men? No, those who are led by the Spirit of God. No wonder Christ told his disciples to take heed that no man deceive them. He knew there would be men in the world and in the church, too, who would try to make us believe they could tell us just what we must do to be saved.

Some may ask if the true servant of God is not to lead us, and if we should not do as he directs. I answer, No. I am afraid to risk him because Christ said, "take heed that no man deceive you." I can give you a case in point, found in 1 Kings, chapter 13, where an old prophet lied to another prophet and caused his death. So, I conclude that it is dangerous to put too much confidence in man. If one man will lie, another may do the same thing; and my experience with men has taught me that it is a little risky to believe all we hear, or read on paper.

I am willing to admit that we need officers in the church to teach us in some things; but I can learn faster from their example than I can from their precept. To my mind the church is not progressing as it would if the Saints would make their teaching more effectual by their example.

Some tell us all we have to do is to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and we can be saved; and at the same time they do not believe half he says, and do nothing that he tells them to do. Others tell us, No, faith alone will not save us, but we must be baptized in water. Others tell us that we must accept all the commandments of God, and at the same time they do not think he will ever give any commandments to the people except those found in the Bible, and they do not keep many of them. I am sorry to say we have Latter Day Saints who will stand up and urge the Saints to obey the law contained in God's word, and at the same time they observe but a very little of what they are commanded to obey themselves. All such teachings are worth but little, I am sure. Such teachings are not able to condemn the world or save it either. Christ's teachings were a savor of life unto life, or of death unto death. They were made so by his example. So he tells his disciples to wait at Jerusalem till they were endowed with power from on high; that is, they were not to teach without the Spirit of truth. The same is commanded of the elders in the Latter Day Saint Church. They were to obtain the Spirit by the prayer of faith, and if they received not the Spirit they were not to teach. But here is where many, many mistakes are made. More sermons are preached by the elders without the Spirit than with it, hence so much wrangling over words of no profit. Some want to excel. Others want the name of advancing something new.

I have known some elders to get up right after the speaker and contradict what his brother elder had preached. What was the trouble? One must have been without the Spirit of truth. I remember once while I was preaching I told the people that the church was organized April 6, 1830. A brother was impressed, he said, to correct me; and he told the people the Church History informed him that it was organized in 1831, and he hoped the people would overlook the mistake of Bro. Snow in telling them the church was organized in 1830. It was only a mistake of Bro. Snow's head, and not of his heart. In this case the people could see the Spirit of truth was lacking in one of the two speakers. I should have said the three, for after the above brother was through another one gave me a lick or two before he closed the meeting, and asked the people to overlook my mistake in telling them the church was organized in 1830.

I have in mind another brother who went with me to fill appointments. It was at a new place. Quite a crowd came out and the brother was so anxious for the people to find out that he was smart, that every time one would ask me a question he would answer it before I could say anything; and if the question was one he could not answer he would say, "I will let Bro. Snow answer that one for you." And after I had answered it he would say, "I could have answered that just as good as Bro. Snow, but I wanted you to know we both believed just alike." This brother was seated about the middle of the congregation when the time came to open the meeting, talking as fast as he could talk, telling the people that John's baptism was not a Christian baptism, and not a valid baptism; and that Joseph Smith had a breastplate like spectacles, which he wore on his breast, and looked through, and translated the sealed book. When the brother was told that the time had come to open the meeting he remarked to the crowd,

"If you all will just come to my house some time, I will tell you all about it; the trouble is, I know so much about it I can never get through telling it." Now to my mind if the brother had known less and known it better, it would have been better for him.

Pardon me for bringing up one more case. I remember where I had succeeded in opening the work and quite a number had been baptized. A new missionary had just come into the country. He and I were to travel together a while. One Sunday we met with the Saints at a schoolhouse to administer the bread and wine. We had not at this time learned to make new wine from the grapes, hence had bought a quart of old wine, and it was the kind that would have made a fellow feel upward for the ground. There was a large crowd of outsiders present that day, and a good interest there at the time. As soon as I dismissed the meeting the brother grabbed the glass of wine on the stand (and it was nearly full), opened his mouth, and in one swallow it went down; then he grabbed for the bottle that contained the rest of the quart, poured it into the large glass, and it was soon out of sight. I felt bad when I saw the people still looking on at the funny way of the elder. After this we were never able to get much interest in that neighborhood, and do you wonder at it?

I have mentioned the above to try to teach a good lesson by it, and it is this: We should not trust to the weakness of man. Paul said, "Follow me as I follow Christ"; so we must post ourselves on the written word of God and be sure we keep our bodies in a condition that the Spirit of truth may abide with us, then follow no man further than he follows Christ. Where he leads, I will follow. It is always safe to follow Jesus.

I was once diverted by a branch officer in one of the branches in a certain district. They were not getting along very well, and one missionary in charge advised them what to do in order that they might get their branch in better shape. This was just before the General Conference in April. Soon after conference there was another man put in charge, and he advised the same branch officer to do right the reverse of what the other one did. Then the third one came next year and advised a different way altogether to what the other two had done. Two of the above ministers were sub-missionaries in charge. So after the third had advised with the above officer he came to me and asked what to do. He said they had him all tangled up till he did not know what to do. I saw he was troubled and said to him, "Well, brother, I can give you a remedy that will help you out of your difficulty. You can get the three books that are to govern the church, post yourself, and pray the Lord to give you his Spirit to guide you in your work. You will find this the safest way for you." I said, "One of the men who advised with you, drove twenty miles under whip to keep me from taking part in a little school debate where I was to affirm that there was a chance for a man to be saved after death, telling me no representative man of the church would take that position. Said he knew but one more elder in the church that claimed what I did; and when I asked the sub-missionary in charge if the books did not teach such doctrine, he answered, "They do not." And when I quoted from the Doctrine and Covenants, and proved there was a chance for a man to be redeemed after death, he did not believe it was in the book till I turned to the place and let him read it himself." After that I saw the need of posting myself in church government and doctrine. And my advice is to all branch officers, Study the church books and then you can govern your branches without looking altogether to some one else to tell you how.

After seeing and hearing so much of the weakness of man, I am forced to the conclusion that man is not able to lead us and tell us what we must do to be saved. It was trusting to the arm of flesh that got the church in Utah in the condition it is to-day. They must obey counsel, and it must come through the living oracles. So pardon me, if I refuse sometimes to do everything I am told to do by some who want to command, and see us obey. My motto is to honor all men in their office and calling, but to follow them no further than they follow the law. Everything is to be done in this church by common consent. That is grand indeed. I am truly glad to see the Reorganized Church working under that principle, though it seems at times some lose sight of it. But the principle is there all the same, and the more we work in harmony with it the more we are blessed in our work.

Still in the faith,

HOW TO CONSTITUTE SAINTS.

MR. JOSEPH SMITH, Lamoni, Iowa.

Friend of Education: You must be convinced that neither "freedom" nor "great problems" in reforms, civil and divine, can be fully realized until the stringent money policy in the first instance, and the unbelief, strife, and hypocrisy in the second instance, are broken.

The present age is an age of literary labor for the advancement of learning, for the propagation of socialism to bring on prosperity, peace, and happiness in the future. The writers are mostly men of noble minds. Their argumentations are, with some exceptions, sound, but very seldom reach the essential point (living point), cause and effect, and what is wanted. For example: Christ's own words, when he spake in parables: when I wanted bread they gave me a stone, when I wanted a drink they gave me gall, when I wanted fish they gave me a serpent, when I wanted money they gave me a Babylon of words. And so it is with many of us to-day; we do not get what we want.

The late mayor of Toledo, Ohio, Samuel M. Jones, of golden rule fame, did not know, as he wrote me once, what to do with the many poor of his own city, —with the millions of money and everything else in the same. He could not drown them in the Atlantic Ocean, but in the ocean of oblivion he could. What an executive! If he had the mind of Jesus, he would simply ask every one in need of money, "How much money do you want?" because money is the arbiter of all shortcomings, and the only factor in human transactions.

General William Booth, of Salvation Army fame, wanted to know, Why is it, after nineteen hundred years of preaching, the world is not nearer conversion? The answer is, Simply because churches as a rule satisfy themselves with preachings instead of doings. So it is in politics. Governments satisfy themselves with golden rules and fathomless argumentations.

Let the justice of "rational love" be established, and the peace of "good will" prevail, and out of the strange civilization, out of the criminal jargon of civil courts, out of the wars that fill the earth with waste and slaughter, a new earth of brotherly love could be created.

The world was made that men might be taught to love with reason. The world endures that such love may bring men into association and liberty, because "rational love" is the real universal force. Every other force is a shadow, a popular delusion, and the end always confusion. It is the absence of such genuine rational loving which has brought sorrow, suffering, and distress into the world. If men would work with God, all conflicts would cease. Enmity, competition, and prejudice would be only monsters from which all conflicts arise.

Christianity is passing with its persecutions, inquisitions, —with its errors as well. But the life of the genuine godly people will become a religion, and "such souls" the temple of the Most High. There will be no more masters or powers, but God's immutable laws. Such men can say, "Let there be light," and straight down from the throne of God would the light shine deep into the hearts of unconverted men who do not know Jesus, who says, "Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man." This message is the only sane, hopeful, cheering gospel.

There is coming to be an almost universal cry among working people for justice, according to the words in the gospel: We have reaped your harvests and filled your barns, and you have withholden the wages. Cæsarism is still enthroned in all kinds of business, as it was in the Roman Empire. Not justice, mercy, and love, but force, is relied on to keep things as they are. Cæsarism in the first century knew that it could keep its throne only by slaying such men as Jesus. Later on it found it could keep its place only by perverting their religion so that Jesus became a stumbling-block to unbelievers and a misconception to believers. History repeats itself. Cæsarism now would keep its throne by suppressing all who oppose it. It would drown the voice of conscience, which cries out against tyrannical governments. The writer of this has experienced it to a large extent. He can truly say with Paul, In danger on land and water, many times in prisons, and among false brethren.

There does not exist a single institution on this earth which can escape the scrutiny of the eye of justice. Justice is a solvent which nothing can resist. It has dissolved empires, and it will dissolve every government that is on the basis of "force" and "wrong." And this very justice will dissolve others, whether they are in the realm of manual labor, or in the realm of religion, because mercy and love are alone eternal. And we shall never have anything like peace or prosperity until governments especially have come to the knowledge of God's will. It is knowledge that creates function in both natural and spiritual development. It would be very much easier, if they only knew it, actually, to realize the kingdom of heaven by following Christ, instead of trying to effect a better order by the thousands of thinkings, compromises, and methodical sciences. They ought to have learned long ago that the kingdom of heaven has been at hand all the time through their wanderings in the wilderness of investigations and speculations. Jesus, the prince out of the house of David, found God always in his works. He did not look for him in the abyss of philosophy, like our great men of the past and the present age, who never can find God.

The church of the kingdom on earth would be the common apostolic life,—a life without sin; and a life without sin means: "Love one another." And on this commandment hang all the law and the prophets. The church which stands for special privileges would vanish, with all other monopolies and gorgeous things. The secret chambers will be the religion of the kingdom, the common good its shrine,—a healthy, common life, a life in which men are equally fit to choose the work of their own hands, a life in which each man expresses his soul in the thing that he can best do, and finally, when released from toil and pain, the right to meet with the faithful in the kingdom of heaven.

"PROBATION AFTER DEATH."

I had supposed that since the able editorial in a late HERALD, and the able article of Bro. J. M. Stubbart in a later HERALD, the doctrine of probation after death would have a good long sleep, and we would find time to preach the gospel to the living; but, from the report of another gun in a still later number, we discover the issue is not dead yet.

After I read the editorial and the article referred to, if I had not written I would not have done so; but my weak effort was written and in the office ten months before those articles came out.

It was good generalship for the writer to attack my article, as it was much the weakest, but I am glad that even it stood the test so well.

Now I do not ask for space in which to reply to the writer, for I can see nothing to reply to. The brother has admitted all that I claimed; that is, that a certain class would be eternally punished. But as the brother has laid claim to the guiding influence of the holy Comforter, and intimates that the books, when properly understood, are in harmony with his theory, I will just ask him to make a little explanation so we can all come to a unity of the faith. The brother will please harmonize the following sayings with his theory:

Therefore ye must be cast off for ever.—Book of Mormon, p. 16, par. 19, large edition.

Into that hell which hath no end.—P. 24, par. 127.

From whence there is no deliverance.—P. 92, par. 19.

Hath no interest in the kingdom of God.—P. 133, par. 12.

As though there was no redemption made.—P. 153, par. 54.

Reap eternal happiness or eternal misery.—P. 188, par. 75.

Eternal as the life of the soul.—P. 278, par. 85.

Can ye pay even one senine?—P. 395, par. 56.

I have given only a few of the many passages I would like to see harmonized with the theory, hoping that an explanation of them would shed light upon others.

My opinion now is that preaching the gospel to men and women here, and then winding up by telling them that if they do not obey it they will have a chance on the other side, is a dangerous doctrine, and only justifies them in staying out of the church, and, as one told me, "having a good time."

It puts me in mind of a case I once knew. A boy was in the habit of going to the creek and going in swimming on Sunday, and the old lady took him to task about it. She said, "Now, Jasper, don't you dare go to the creek to-day. If you do, I'll break every bone in your body. You young rascal, you have caused me trouble enough. You know I don't allow you to go in swimming, especially on the Lord's day; and if you go in to-day you will be sorry for it as long as you live. But, Jasper, if you do go in swimming, don't stay in so long, and get all sunburned, like you did last Sunday."

OUR MEAT.

When we take a piece of meat on our plate, notwithstanding the pleasure we enjoy while eating it, thoughts often arise in our minds whether it be really wholesome or whether the animal might not have been diseased.

When we pass through one of those great abattoirs, where thousands upon thousands of sheep and cattle and hogs are slaughtered annually, and see the work of the inspectors, how they examine so carefully every animal, and in some respects at least every piece of meat, and then read the Government reports and the national laws governing the inspection of meat thus prepared for our table, we are forced to the conclusion that all is done that can be done to secure for us absolutely healthy meat, clear from all contamination of disease.

Before the animal is killed it is carefully examined by the Government inspector; and if found to be diseased, a tag is fastened into its ear marked, "U. S. condemned." These condemned animals are at once removed by the owners and disposed of as the law directs.

After each animal is killed, it is again examined by different inspectors for every possible trace of disease; and when one is found that shows evidence of disease, the Government stamp is placed upon it.

These condemned carcasses are placed in a room by themselves that is under the control of the inspector. There they remain until they are "tanked," or removed under supervision to a rendering establishment.

All meat shipped from those institutions must be properly marked to show where they are from, and that they have been properly inspected, and a detailed record kept of the same.

On passing through Cudahy's packing-house I saw several hogs bearing the "U. S. condemned" stamp. I also saw a man inspecting hams before they received the stamp for shipment. He had a long probe that he ran into every ham to see if it was tainted. He condemned several in the few minutes I watched him. I saw another man going from hog to hog that had been dressed, cutting out three bits of lean meat from as many different parts of each carcass and placing them in little tin cans. I wondered what that was for. On reading the Year Book of the Department of Agriculture, I learned what was done with those three little bits taken from each hog. These little cans have each a tag that is a duplicate of the one placed on the hog. The little boxes are placed in a large box under lock, and then taken to the microscopist of the establishment. He causes those samples to be examined under the microscope, and furnishes to the inspector a written report of such examinations, together with the numbers of all carcasses affected with trichina.

Pork thus examined is classified. Class A must show no trace of trichina, "living or dead, calcified cysts, or other bodies or substances having any resemblance to trichina or trichina cysts." "Class B, samples in which there are disintegrated trichina, or trichina cysts, calcified trichina or trichina cysts, or bodies having any resemblance thereto." "Class C, samples in which there are living or dead trichina bodies not disintegrated."

Class C must be removed from the cooling room and either "tanked" or rendered into edible lard at a temperature of one hundred and fifty degrees Fahrenheit, or made into cooked meat that is thoroughly cooked before leaving the establishment.

Class B is rejected from the export trade but may be found in the home trade; still the Government report states that, "The amount of affected pork under class B and class C is less than two per cent of the whole amount examined microscopically."

This system of inspection of all animals offered on the market, we are told, has greatly lessened the number of diseased animals offered for sale. Out of the 34,495,973 hogs marketed in 1899, only 163,953 were condemned as a result of ante-mortem and post-mortem inspection: a little less than one in two hundred. Of the cattle offered in market the same year there were about one in one hundred and twenty-eight condemned.

This shows that the hogs marketed were less diseased than the cattle.

This means of inspection has secured for our meats a good market in the most critical nations of the world, and at a very small expense: about six cents per hog.

A REPLY.

In the HERALD of June 14 appeared an article under the caption, "Will the gifts and blessings cease as we attain toward perfection?" I was the speaker who delivered the public discourse the brother refers to, and I think an answer is called for. If left as the brother puts it in the HERALD I would be placed in a false position. All that portion of the article which labors to show that the gifts must remain in the church until a state of perfection shall have been reached, is certainly irrelevant to the question, as this has never been questioned by Latter Day Saints, certainly not by me.

In the sermon, for which I am taken to task, the thought was suggested, as stated by the brother, that the reason the gifts are not enjoyed in some localities, to that extent as formerly, may be because we are getting nearer perfection, and hence do not need the manifestation of the gifts to the extent that we did in our earlier experience in the church. The proof-text cited was in Paul's first epistle to the Corinthians:

Charity never faileth; but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away. For we know in part, and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away.—1 Corinthians 13:8-10.

The brother proceeds to state that this is the text so often used by our enemies without avail. Very true. Any text is unavailing if misused, either by our enemies or ourselves. What is a miracle? "A wonder; a prodigy." "That which can not be accounted for by the known laws of Nature," or why not say of Nature's God? since God is the author of the laws of Nature.

Paul speaks of a time of perfection when man shall know as he is known, and see as he is seen. The word of God holds out the glorious prospect that men shall be as God, and know as God knows. Then that which is in part shall be done away. Evidently, "that which is in part" has reference to the miraculous gifts, as prophecy, tongues, and knowledge is mentioned, and are to be done away. Why? Because they will not be needed. Why the gift of tongues when we shall all know and speak a "pure language" the brother mentions? Can there be a gift of unknown tongues when all tongues are known? Why the gift of prophecy when in the perfect state, when every one shall know as his brother knows, and all shall know as God knows? Does the brother think that the elders will continue to lay hands on the sick in celestial glory, and that unclean spirits will be cast out of the bodies of the Saints who have attained unto perfection and became pure as God is pure? Possibly there will be deadly serpents there, and hence the necessity of miraculous interposition to save those silly souls who take them up. This would not do, brother. But we are given an example of logic to show my "sad mistake." "Will the coming of perfection obliterate all prophecy, tongues, and knowledge? If so, then there will be no knowledge." Strange logic. The brother mistakes the kind of knowledge the apostle is writing of. Paul is talking of spiritual gifts, that which is given in a miraculous manner, healing, tongues, knowledge, etc. When the mysteries are cleared away concerning the sun, will it cease to shine? The question of sunshine is more of a miracle than healing of the sick. Unless given the inspiration to speak in an unknown tongue the brother will cease to talk. Unless in a continuous and miraculous vision all the time, we will be blind. This is a little too visionary for me. Let me give an example of logic which I think is on a parity with the above. "Butter is made of grease. Greece is a foreign country. Therefore butter is a foreign country." Knowledge is a gift. The gifts are to be done away, therefore we will know nothing.

We will know as God knows, therefore a miraculous gift of knowledge is out of the question.

There are always extremes. On this question one extreme is, that that which is perfect is come and that there are no miracles now. This is equivalent to asserting that man has all knowledge, and that everything can be explained by the known laws of Nature. The other extreme, as we view it, that that which is perfect never will come, and that miracles and miraculous manifestations are to continue throughout all eternity.

Paul says they will cease. When? When that which is perfect is come. If our position herein is tenable, does it not logically follow that as perfection is approached the miraculous and mysterious decreases?

I have heard presented to the same congregation the brother referred to, and elsewhere, the thought that something is wrong. Complaint is made that the gifts are not as frequent as they used to be, etc. I do not share these pessimistic views. So far as I am capable of judging, by reading and also by experience, I feel that the church is in better condition than ever in the past, better spiritually, morally, financially, and in every way necessary for its steady growth and final triumph.

Yet in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding, that by my will I might teach others also, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue.—1 Corinthians 14:19. And now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; but the greatest of these is love. By this [love] we know we have passed from death unto life.—1 Corinthians 13:13.

Yours for the truth,

EDITED BY FRANCES.

A Careless Age.

"In such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

The long, long years of vice and wrong,
When superstition, black as night,
Made slaves alike of weak and strong,
Have passed for ever from our sight.

Gone are the dark, old days, and yet,
Although the gospel light shines clear,
Men heed it not, and quite forget
That they are only servants here,—

Servants intrusted from on high,
With sacred work—each man his own—
And yet who put their duties by,
And live for self, and self alone.

And though the Lord himself has said,
That he will come again with power,
When men expect not, they are dead
To all the signs of that dread hour.

When countries into war are hurled,
When tempests stir the mighty deep,
When great disasters shock the world,
They wake not from their foolish sleep.

But lulled by sleep into a dream,
 All heedlessly they drift along
 In pleasure's ways, until they seem
 To reach the deeper depths of wrong.
 And skeptics scoff, and waverers fall,
 Deeming that Christ will never come;
 While those who hold the truth through all,
 Too oft are listless, if not dumb.
 Oh, if this thing could only be!—
 That many a careless heart to-day
 Might wake to serve God faithfully,
 And do Christ's bidding, "Watch and pray."
 That when He comes again in might,—
 The Father's well beloved Son,—
 They might be faithful in his sight,
 And hear his sweet "Well done! well done!"

—The Quiver.

Education does not consist in the knowledge that one may have, but in the faculty of collecting and using knowledge. This is the secret of self-made men.—Joseph Rushton.

Failure.

The Lord, who fashioned my hands for working,
 Set me a task, and it is not done;
 I tried and tried since the early morning,
 And now to westward sinketh the sun!
 Noble the task that was kindly given
 To one so little and weak as I—
 Somehow my strength could never grasp it,
 Never, as days and years went by.
 Others around me cheerfully toiling,
 Showed me their work as they passed away;
 Full were their hands to overflowing,
 Proud were their hearts and glad and gay.
 Laden with harvest spoils they entered
 In at the golden gate of their rest;
 Laid their sheaves at feet of the Master,
 Found their places among the blest.
 Happy be they who strove to help me,
 Failing still in spite of their aid!
 Fain would their love have borne me with them,
 But I was unready and sore afraid.
 Now I know my task will never be finished,
 And when the Master calleth my name;
 The voice will find me still at my labor,
 Weeping beside it in weary shame.
 With empty hands I shall rise to meet Him,
 And when he looks for the fruits of years,
 Nothing have I to lay before Him
 But broken efforts and bitter tears.
 Yet when He calls I fain would hasten—
 Mine eyes are dim and their light is gone;
 And I am as weary as though I had carried
 A burthen of beautiful work well done.
 I will fold my empty hands on my bosom,
 Meekly thus in the shape of His cross;
 And the Lord who made them so frail and feeble
 Maybe will pity their strife and loss.

—The Month.

beautiful July weather I find myself physically a cripple—although enjoying good health otherwise—suffering considerable pain, all because of one slight misstep and a fall which resulted in a wrenched ankle, and I found myself unable to arise until others came to my assistance. But alas! for the morally crippled, who do not always find strong arms to bear them up when a step aside is taken and a fall ensues. Although sorely wounded and suffering much grief and pain, yet, too often, the face, blanched and mute with secret grief, is turned appealingly toward cold, unfriendly faces; faces which only return a blank stare of unrecognition, when a smile would have been as easy to have given and cost so very little, but would have been of more value than can ever be estimated, to the one needing it.

As I study this glorious gospel of the kingdom more, I see the greater need of oneness and unity among the Saints. While admiring a beautiful, healthy vine, which covered one side and most of the top of a portico, I realized that it all sprang from one seed of the wild cucumber,—the fragrance of the flowers, the maturing seeds (the fruit) which it brings forth—and I more fully comprehended the comparison made by our Savior. As I gaze enraptured I see no strife, no needless contention for mastery, but each branch seems to be perfectly content with the place assigned it. Although some are higher in position, some lower, some are entirely obscured from sight, others no more beautiful are readily seen by the observer, yet all are necessary branches of the great vine. All are fanned by the same gentle breeze, and are swayed by the fierce summer blast. The burning heat by day and the gentle dew at night affect all very much the same, and all are secure from danger so long as they cling to the nourishing vine. But when severed how quickly they wither and die. How beautifully comprehensive the words of our Savior, "I am the vine; ye are the branches!"

When among a band of Saints who are striving to abide in the vine, where unity and love for the gospel, love for one another with purity of heart prevails; where the spirit, the life of the vine flows out to all the branches, how pleasant, how good to be there! But when trouble arises, contention, strife, whispering, and suspicion creep in, how very soon the beauty is gone.

I can hardly think of a greater cause of disturbance among Saints than suspicion. For the slightest cause we entertain suspicion of our brother's motives; or that our sister is not walking as she should. We know nothing that we can testify to before a court of elders, yet we suspicion it so strongly we almost know it to be so; and we foster this suspicion until it becomes a greater snare to us by far than the wrong the suspicion one may have committed was to them, even if our suspicion prove true. Not only do we suspicion those of the laity, but we allow our suspicions to extend to those in authority. Well does the evil one know that there is no surer way of destroying the usefulness and unity of a band of Saints than to poison the minds of the Saints with suspicion in regard to those in charge of a branch or any church-work.

I fully realize that none are perfect, the elders included; nor do they at all times exercise the wisdom and discretion they should; but it is uncharitable, to say the least, for Saints to watch for errors in their brethren. If we seek for offenses we are sure to find them.

I remember with feelings of deep regret of once hearing an elder denounced in terms which, if true, were very detrimental to his Christian as well as moral character. And later when one in charge came to me, asking of this matter, I (feeling it my duty and, as Paul of old, with all good conscience) repeated what I had heard. Yet later in life I realized how unkind this was, and had conscience been educated along a stricter gospel line, nothing should have been repeated, for he simply wished to know what I know, whereas I had heard much but did not know.

Dear Home Column: I find much to strengthen and help in the Column. It is a source of much pleasure to me to read the communications from others. We who are isolated derive much benefit from the suggestions so kindly offered there. This nothing. When I consider what all our elders have to contend with from without, how unceasingly they are watched to find some wrong in them that mud may be thrown at the church, and if one does in weakness step from the path for a moment, how pleased the world is to note the fact, then I realize how careful we need to be. He may have many virtues, but when speaking of him this one folly will be told whether any of the virtues he possesses are extolled or not. When Saints have given this matter due consideration, we will, I believe, resolve at once, by divine help, to give them as little trouble as possible, and offer more in their behalf than heretofore. When sick and in trouble we call for them. They respond many times at great inconvenience to themselves and families, because they know it is the work of the Lord, and they are his servants,—yet in weakness, oft in troubles and discouragements unknown to others. Our Savior said, He that is greatest shall be the servant, and so it is.

Dear ones, let us try to bear our burdens as becometh Saints, and when the elders come to our homes let us have a cheerful time awaiting them. There is so much in this gospel which is cheering to talk about, and experiences past and present so strengthening when recalled, that if we only try we can entirely crowd out the petty trials and troubles and heartaches and discouragements which are common to all, and which are too often locked in the closet of our hearts and saved for a thorough airing when one of the elders comes along. Let us pray a little more over the matter, and perhaps the airing will not seem necessary when the elder comes. We will gain strength thereby and the elder if not cheered by our conversation will at least not feel an additional weight to his burden, which is none too light already. When I read in Conference Minutes of the brother singing "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord," and others joining in the chorus, I could not refrain from weeping, as I know how very much this meant to the elders and wives present as well as those far away, much more, I fear, than we who do not have those partings, and long, lonely weeks and months of separation from the loved ones to pass through, realize. With love for all.

At the Reunions This Fall.

The reunion season is now on. And until late in October there will be almost continuously a reunion of the Saints somewhere. We are glad to see this tendency as it is a blessing to all who may be able to attend a reunion. To those who have never been so blessed it may not seem so important. But by the regular attendant of the reunions the time is looked forward to with great anticipations. It is a time of worship and rejoicing; a time of sociability and recreation; a time to build both the physical and spiritual man. There is no business of a perplexing nature to disturb or weary us. No especial cares or work except for the few upon whom the responsibility of running the meeting falls. So to the visitor there is every opportunity for rest, pleasure, and blessing.

The reunions have been a blessing in another way. The auxiliary societies, the Sunday-school and Religio, have needed and do yet need opportunity to be brought before the people. Many of the church workers are beginners with reference to these lines of work. An opportunity to establish them, to train new workers, and to improve the experienced ones is very much needed in every section of the country. And experience has demonstrated that there is no better place for such work than at the various reunions throughout the church. We have met with many different reunions and do not now recall a single instance where there was not much good done. It is very true that some times there is not sufficient time allotted to the auxiliary work to do it justice; and when such is the case it is difficult to do what we would like to do. But in most places the needs and importance of the work is better understood and time is usually provided that is adequate to the needs. This has materially aided the Sunday-school and Religio work.

We would like to make one suggestion along this line. And that is that when time is proffered or granted for the use of the societies, that special efforts be made to occupy it profitably. Occupy it in a way that will be of a lasting benefit to the movements, not merely for a display of talent or material, or for mere entertainment. Time is too precious to be spared for any but beneficial results. Prepare a program of work that will be a credit to you and a benefit to the beginning workers. We say, to beginning workers, because it too often happens that we forget that there are and always will be a number of beginners that need a start. The older ones will get much out of this, and in fact more than the beginners. There will always be enough advance thought for advance workers even in the elementary work. So better make it a rule to always think of the needs of the new or beginning workers in planning the program of work for your reunions.

What we believe to be a mistake is often made in the granting of time for Sunday-school work at reunions. That is, in using one whole day. Better that you have one session each day for four days than four sessions in any one day. It is better for the auxiliary workers and better for the reunion work. The night session is not a good session for our work, but is one of the very best for a preaching-service. And why use it for our work to our disadvantage and to the disadvantage of the preaching-service? As to any of the other sessions there is not so much choice. But experience has taught us that it is far better for all concerned to have one session a day for three or four days than all of any one day.

We sincerely trust that the local workers of sections wherein are to be reunions will not fail to avail themselves of the opportunity to do all they can for the Sunday-school and Religio. If you need help, write the general superintendent or the president of the Religio as the case may be.

Recreation and Amusement.

READING.

In essaying the task of writing a paper upon the above topic, I feel it to be a difficult one, but will be excused if I do my best.

One of the most perplexing tasks placed before parents and instructors is to know just what class of reading-matter should be placed in the hands of our young people. We have among our children, bookworms, who will be hunting up matter to read, and often a love for fiction is acquired through a lack of supplying better and more instructive matter for their perusal. There is a poison in fiction, the effects of which are disastrous to the practical rounding out of a useful life. When the love of fiction is acquired, many of life's important duties are ignored and the mind becomes abnormal and warped, and in many instances agitated and uncongenial. The real every-day duties of life become tame and uninviting, hence they are slighted and left undone; and the very elements ordained by Nature and by God to build up character, and to acquire a knowledge of things as they are, are lacking, and life's purpose and insignificance is hidden.

There are grades of fiction, some more dangerous and serious in its effects than others; but fiction placed in the hands of our young people is a menace to the cultivation of a healthful, vigorous mind. The church is placing in the hands of its membership at a moderate price, some very fine works, and our libraries should have them well to the front. Pattie, With the Church In An Early Day, Autobiography of Joseph Luff, Book of Mormon Talks, etc., are especially adapted to our young people, and are pure in their moral tone, as well as of spiritual usefulness. These works lead up to the church's standard works and regular publications. The Sunday paper might well be dispensed with in our homes. Six days of easy access to the world's happenings should be sufficient. The foolish, absolute uselessness of the so-called funny sheets are so far beneath the notice of an intelligent person that I wonder that Saints should notice them at all. Tell me if you will, what purpose they serve. What can the originator of the silly cartoons have in mind? They are too absolutely foolish to provoke a respectable smile. Put your nickles into something that will furnish food for the mind. The love for good soul-food as furnished in literature must be cultivated, the appetite catered to, and wholesome food supplied.

There are writers of fiction who have lofty minds, and who are doubtless anxious to suggest to the mind something useful and good; but the unreal is almost without exception visible and can serve no purpose of true merit, from a rational standpoint of judgment. Let us then place in the hands of our young people that which will assist in purifying the mind, and create a love for the real practical affairs of life, and which will supply spiritual strength to them. Place good, wholesome, practical reading-matter in the hands of the young.

MUSIC.

The word music has a magic charm for me. There is an inspiration attending the harmony of sounds which thrills the soul whether from vocal or instrumental sources. I believe one of the most prominent enjoyments of the redeemed, when the perfection of beauty shall shine from our beautiful Zion, will be sweet, soul-stirring music, where voices and instruments combined shall swell forth billows of perfect harmony, when the voice shall be so perfectly trained and the ear so sensitive to sound that not a discordant note will be heard.

That our heavenly Father loves music is everywhere apparent. The more man is in harmony with Nature, the more music will fill his soul. The songsters of the wood and glen are an inspiration when the mind is healthful and normal. The rippling brook rolls forth a sweet cadence soothing to man's soul. The wind through the forest pines to the appreciative soul, is music. Isaiah, the poet-prophet to Israel, senses this when referring to the earth's rest, saying, "Then shall the trees of the fields clap their hands, and the mountains and hills shall break forth into singing," showing conclusively the appreciation God has for music when he inspires his servants to extol it among men. An inspiring thought is contained in the following stanza:

"How cheerful along the gay mead,
The daisy and cowslip appear,
The flocks as they carelessly feed,
Rejoice in the spring of the year.

"The myrtle that blooms in the bower,
The herbage that springs from the sod,
Trees, plants, cooling streams, and sweet flowers
Arise to the praise of our God.

"Shall man the possessor of all,
The only insensible prove?
Forbid it at gratitude's call
Forbid it devotion and love."

Our heavenly Father purposed, in the creation of man, that he should offer him a service of praise; for he has endowed him and formed him to that end. This talent among our people not only of singing and instrumental music must be brought to the front; but the composition of music suitable to give expression to the words we wish to sing by inspiration for such service must also be accomplished. No better talent will be known than that given us by our Father, if we cultivate these gifts. For his designs are that his people shall excel in all things, and certainly in that which will assist in making our service to him in his house perfect.

There are among us Haydns, Mozarts, Wagners, Mendelssohns, etc., if they can only devote their time and talents to composition. We will now see what the Master says in Doctrine and Covenants 119:6. "The service of song in the house of the Lord with humility and unity of spirit in them that sing and them that hear is blessed, and acceptable with God; but song with grievous sadness in them that sing, . . . is not pleasing to God . . . and that the worship in the house of the Lord may be complete and wholly acceptable, let them who shall be moved thereto by a desire and the gift to sing take upon them the burden and care of the service, and use therein instruments of music of the reed and of the string, or instruments of brass in congregations that are large, and as wisdom and choice may direct. Let the young men and the maidens cultivate the gifts of music and of song; let not the middle aged and the old forget the gladness of their youth and let them aid and assist so far as their cares will permit; and remember that Saints should be cheerful in their warfare that they may be joyous in their triumph."

Let the church encourage this by selecting able men to devote their time to this essential department of our work. "Sing upon your beds," "Make melody [not discord] in your hearts." "Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord." These suggestions to praise-service should be cheerfully acceded to. Let every branch use what musical talent they have, and always appoint the best material as instructors. One meeting each week, and at least half an hour every Sabbath-day should be spent in practice together. Let not jealousy find place among us because some may excel others in sweetness and richness of tone, but rather rejoice in this. Every branch where possible, should have its orchestra. This should be encouraged throughout the church. Saints, remember we are to join in chorus with the angels and the church triumphant, in heaven's glorious anthems and the song of Moses and the Lamb. Then to acquire this efficiency we must certainly cultivate all our gifts and powers to this end.

SPORTS AND GAMES.

Our young people should be encouraged in whatever will build up a physical structure. Baseball, basketball, football (not Rugby), cricket, etc., are healthful games, and, if carried out with the cheerful good nature which should always characterize play, will invigorate the mind as well as the body. It is wrong to get so excited over a mutual contest with bat and ball as to lose one's temper and charge unfair play because the game may go against us. Learn to take a defeat with as good grace as we would a victory. Put all the vim possible into our games but never lose our head or our temper. I think we should avail ourselves of the opportunities afforded us in our public gymnasiums. The Young Men's Christian Association hold out splendid opportunities along this line, and should be used whenever possible until we have such institutions of our own.

Physical culture in moderation has proved a boon to many. We can not over-appreciate its value. Start with your babies in a mild form, and gently practice with them, and the development will be wonderful. Both sexes should pay equal attention to this means of development. Many simple devices can be arranged in the home. The pulley, punch-bag, dumb-bells, clubs, barrel, etc. These are inexpensive and if you have a convenient place you can put up the horizontal bar which can be used to splendid advantage.

Walking with good heel-and-toe gait, with body slightly to the front is the best exercise we can engage in. Let the car speed past you for a mile or two, and use your limbs provided for such use, and you will sleep better, eat to better advantage, and develop a better physique.

Laugh as often as you can; not loud or boisterous laughing, but the good-natured laugh that brings sunshine and happiness and is not removed by soap and water. Keep it up, it is a good thing. This is the most effective massage treatment you can take. You can thus treat an unlimited number at the same time, for laughing, like the measles, is very contagious. It has been asserted by some writers that the Savior was never seen to smile. I can not accept any such statement. The Savior was not afflicted by any such facial defect. He could not have lived in this world so full of beautiful things for thirty-three years and see nothing to smile at. Children were his delight, and his smile often greeted them as he took them to his arms to bless them. Then like the Master let us smile; it will disperse that vinegar look which is common in some parts of our mission where they are looking for the good time coming, where the wicked cease from laughing and we'll mourn for ever more.

PARLOR AND SOCIAL GAMES.

Parlor games should be encouraged to an extent in our homes, and our little folk should come in for their share of social enjoyment. Some innocent games can easily be provided which will bring the happy laugh from the child and cause the little bright eyes to sparkle. Let the brief day of childhood be remembered whenever they are present in our social gathering and give them their share of attention; it will pay, the returns will be more than satisfactory. Those of more mature mind should arrange games where some good can be gained. Do not waste time foolishly.

Prepare a program where music, singing, reading, etc., are prominent numbers. Give each one verse in rhyme to compose; name the subject. Flowers, music, etc., would be good topics for this work, and thus encourage talents along that line. Many simple devices can be thought out to make the time profitable as well as entertaining. Let us never lower our standard as Saints, by a useless waste of time; we can not afford to do so. We are sociable beings, and to be a recluse is to be abnormal and almost unnatural. The great question is, How shall we best spend our time in a social way? What shall be considered a breach of social etiquette? What can be added to our store of usefulness by instituting social gatherings; at the same time satisfying the part of our nature which craves amusement. To be always sentimental is not healthful. We need something that appeals to the mirthfulness of our composition, and it is right that we should have it. To intermingle these qualities, one with the other, if in the mixture we obtain the right compound, so that the proper and natural poise of mind can be obtained, is good. Undue familiarity, is wrong and will always spoil a proper effect and purpose of our social gathering. This should be avoided, yet a free and natural mien be preserved. We have the very best material for social enjoyment of any people, if we seek to carry out the injunction of our spiritual instructors. "Be temperate in all things." "Let your moderation be known unto all men." "Avoid the appearance of evil."

I am reminded that I can not do justice to these subjects in a paper limited to fifteen minutes and should have confined myself to subjects A and B, namely, "Reading" and "Music." But if the few abrupt suggestions are of any value to start the minds of our young people to more fully comprehend the possible attainments for them through an application of what they already possess, then I have served the purpose, in part at least of this paper and shall be happy.

FAIRLAND, Indian Territory, June 22, 1905.

Editors Herald: I am now preaching in Fairland, Indian Territory. The good-Spirit is here in this branch. How quick the missionary can tell the condition of a branch when he goes into it!

Our quarterly conference closed last Sunday night. We had a large attendance. A peaceful influence of the Spirit was enjoyed in all the sessions. Bishop Short and E. Bailey of the bishopric, and Apostle I. N. White, gave us good instruction. On Monday the writer baptized three, one man from the Catholic Church. Twenty-seven have been baptized in this district this conference year.

I will preach here till we get tent fixed, then balance of summer we will be in tent-work, opening new places. Dear Saints, let me know your wants in regard to preaching, and we will look after them as soon as possible.

Spring River District reunion will be at Joplin, Missouri, beginning August 18. Saints, begin to make arrangements to come. Sunday, the 18th, at Scammon, Kansas, the writer said the words that united Bro. William Bath and Lucy Courtney in the bonds of the marriage covenant. They start out with a good home nicely furnished.

In gospel bonds,

F. C. KECK.

OMAHA, Nebraska, June 19, 1905.

Editors Herald: It is not often that I occupy space in your valuable columns, but I believe a few thoughts from various parts of the field are beneficial to the church at large. I have been detained at home some this spring, but now that I am in my appointed place again, I am glad to find that the work has prospered here in charge of the local workers. The branch under the presidency of Bro. J. F. Weston, and Sunday-school under the superintendency of Bro. M. Peterson, with the Religion under the presidency of Bro. H. T. McCaig, are doing nobly in sustaining the work along the various lines. Mission meetings which we started more than eighteen months ago in South Omaha are still continued and good has been accomplished.

Sunday, the 11th, was children's day. We would like to have seen more of the children at the morning preaching-service, as the subject was chosen for their especial benefit, but in their absence we found it necessary to talk more to the parents and others in behalf of the children. The work of caring for and training the children in the practice of right living is important to an extent that but few realize. The fruits (some of them) of past efforts in this direction are appearing all around us in the good and useful young men and women who are entering positions of responsibility and usefulness in church-work, and are making the name of Latter Day Saint honorable in the world. The harvest will continue, but will not be complete until the great consummation of the Master's work shall come, and the reward be given to every man. The evening program, rendered mostly by the children, was well enjoyed by the many Saints and friends who filled the house. Three precious ones were baptized in the afternoon by Bro. Weston.

Last Sunday Bro. H. S. Lytle, our new district president and Bishop's agent, was here, addressing the Saints in the morning upon their duties. The holding of branch priesthood-meetings was revived by holding a session in the afternoon which was attended with profit by most of the local priesthood. At this meeting a reorganization took place, the writer being chosen teacher, and Bro. Hale W. Smith secretary, and monthly meetings provided for. We believe this is a step in the right direction, and helps to fulfill the command, "Wherefore, let every man learn his duty," etc.

While, in entering upon the labors of this year, we have not been without some fears and discouragements, yet altogether the outlook is bright. The peaceful assurances come to us that God is in the work, and by faithful and continuous effort, and awaiting the Lord's own time we shall see better conditions prevailing. Sin abounds in the world, (and it is especially apparent in a city,) until the heart sickens at the sight, and the soul is pained, knowing that so many will not repent. It seems that the masses of the people are so bound by various worldly ties that they are inaccessible to the servants of Christ. Yet notwithstanding this we find one here and another there who are willing to listen and obey, and occasionally one who is diligently seeking for the truth. We hope for a prosperous year, for ourself and all the ministry, and the people of God throughout the world.

May the blessings of God rest upon his work everywhere.

Your brother in the gospel,

Editors Herald: May we each one realize the responsibility resting upon us to that degree that there may be manifest in our lives an example which shall be worthy of imitation. Let us have more patience, kindness, respect; and, above all, more charity in our hearts for each other. No one knows the temptations I have, and what I have to put up with. My wife is not a member. My baby was sick. I called for the elders, and my baby got well. My wife believes, and I think will be baptized next Sunday. I promised our heavenly Father that I would work with all my strength, and send herewith an order for literature. We must sow the good seed. I remain,

Yours in love,

L. L. GOTT.

SCRANTON, Pennsylvania, June 21, 1905.

Dear Herald: I inclose published report of the Baptist Church in Monmouthshire, South Wales, for the year ending April, 1905. In that district there are eighty-two churches, or branches we would call them, eighty-one having reported. For 1904, there was a total membership of 12,471, and at present, 17,345; a gain by baptism of 4,874, besides 1,197 restored. Over one fourth increase in twelve months. This district is not to exceed thirty miles square. A county where once there were thousands of Latter Day Saints, to-day has not twenty—the effect of Brighamism. The fact that nearly five thousand were added by immersion to the Baptist Church, is strong evidence that there are in Wales thousands who have faith in the principle of baptism, notwithstanding Mr. Evan Roberts, the noted revivalist in that land, does not advocate it, as the burden of his teaching is, faith in Christ, repent, and love one another. So far so good; but it is strange that the thousands who have united with the various religious bodies, and believe in Mr. Evan Roberts' statements, namely, that he has seen God, and has had some remarkable visions pointing out to him his duty, can have any confidence in the divinity of his claims, when he himself has so willfully ignored the doctrine of Christ.

Paul had a vision. He was told what he must do. Cornelius and his household received the visitation of an angel; he was informed what he ought to do.

It is strong evidence to me that Mr. Roberts was never called of the Lord, notwithstanding he claims to have received heavenly visions; for we read in 2 John 9: "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God." Baptism is one of the principles of the doctrine of Christ, (see Hebrews 6:2; Matthew 28:19; John 3:3, 5), and this Mr. Roberts neither teaches nor preaches.

Another evidence that he is not led, as he claims to be, by the Holy Spirit, is that there is too much confusion and disorder in the meetings. It is a common occurrence in services held by him, for one or more to pray aloud, while others are speaking, others shouting, and others singing, all at the same time. At some of the meetings persons have overtaxed their strength so that they have fallen to the floor and have been carried out. Sometimes when Mr. Roberts would be speaking, some one would sing, and while the congregation would try to stop the singing Mr. Roberts would encourage it and join in with them.

We have long since learned that the first law of heaven is order, and that the house of the Lord should be a house of order.

Paul says, 1 Corinthians 14:31-33, "For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all be comforted. And the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets. For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints."

If Mr. Roberts were led by the Holy Spirit he would not permit the disorder or confusion that is seen in the meetings led and presided over by himself. I am willing that all men should worship as they choose, either like our good Quakers, when you can hear a pin drop at times, or like the people that follow Mr. Roberts, the more speeches and prayers at once the better the meetings, the more noise and confusion and disorder the more they claim they are blessed. I ask, with what? Certainly not the Holy Spirit that Paul speaks of,—that is subject to the prophets, which is not the author of confusion.

Well, I did not intend to say anything about the nature of the meetings held in Wales, or concerning this great religious,—what shall I call it?—excitement? Yes, for that is just what it is, brought about by people being deceived and misled by a man or set of men; for there are many that teach that this great revival is the result of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and they hold services from seven o'clock in the evening till half past four in the morning, and that several times in the week, until many faint in the meetings and others are not able to do justice to themselves or their employers. The history of this religious excitement in full can be had by writing to the office of the Western Mail, Cardiff, South Wales, for two cents per copy. There are some copies that have pictures of the meetings, where as many as possible are on their feet at one time, speaking, praying, and shouting, while others faint and are overcome. While I have not overdrawn the scenes at those meetings, with few exceptions the papers in Wales are speaking in highest terms of the result; and, to many, it has been a good blessing, for very many are leading better lives. So, much good has been done; how long it will last time will tell. What a pity that the people are more ready to receive delusion than the truth. Yet thousands, in that land, have looked with amusement upon what is done, and they themselves are not satisfied that it is what is claimed for it.

I wonder, if we had a strong force of missionaries there to-day, could not much good be done, when thousands are so eager to have some faith in three, at least, of the principles of the church: faith, repentance, and baptism, and in the baptism for the Holy Spirit. I do not wish to be conceited, or to dictate; but I believe that we are neglecting a golden opportunity in that land. Certainly it would be worth while to try. May the good Lord turn and overturn for the good of his work in all lands.

In this place there is much to do in trying to get some that have lost interest in the work to again take hold. We are very sorry that Bro. John Davis concluded to try the gold mines of New Mexico, for we needed him so much in this field. We were about to have tent-work done here; but not being able to carry it alone, have given it up. We wish Bro. John would come. Hope that this move is for the best, for we need some of the yellow ore. If there is any in New Mexico in paying quantities, Bro. Davis will find it out, I hope, not to his sorrow but to the good of all.

The branch has made arrangements for another hall to hold meetings in. We think this move a wise one. It is on corner of Main and Jackson Streets. We hope that soon we can see a brighter day for the work in this valley, with its throngs of people, where it has been for some time. We find few very willing workers here.

Let me again ask the Saints in all love to favor me with answer to my request in the HERALD. Please send your testimony of the power of God in healing, dreams, visions, prophecy, and tongues. Do not put it off. I would like to hear from Saints in distant lands. Your experience will be of much value, and will be properly presented. Address 1118 Luzerne Street, Scranton, Pennsylvania.

WILLIAM LEWIS.

CLIFFORD, North Dakota, June 21, 1905.

Editors Herald: Having a desire to write concerning the work in my field, mostly for those who may read your paper of the field I am appointed unto, I will say I have felt somewhat encouraged with what work I have striven to do. Some of the places have been new (at least to me). There seems to have been a desire to listen to what we have had to say. I made my first effort at (or near) Arlington, South Dakota, where we held eight meetings. A preacher of the Baptist order, who had been laboring in that locality, was very much displeased because of my coming, and sought to poison the minds of the people by phoning to them and advising them to stay away, etc. But people sometimes seem to realize the fact that they can attend to their own matters, and they continued to attend meetings. His next effort to hinder them coming was to make a drive around the neighborhood leaving cards with "Old Joe Smith" and "Mormon" stories printed on them. We expected the gentleman would call on us, too; but he did not, so we took the privilege of sending him the tract of Bro. T. W. Williams, Latter Day Saints, Who Are They? with the request that he send in return one of his cards; but no reply at all. Our meetings were fairly well attended, and left some interested. We shall look after them later in the season, as our duties are in this part now.

About June 1 I reached Newark, where I continued for a time. Bro. William Sparling had left, just before I came, for Hecla, twenty miles west, where he had done some effectual labor. He returned to Newark the 3d, and baptized Bro. Willie Mitchell and wife the 4th, and one at Hecla the 5th, assisted by the writer. I returned to Newark the 6th, and continued my efforts over Sunday the 11th, and on that day three more were baptized at that place. So, we feel the work in that part is gaining. There are others who will obey in the near future, we have reason to believe.

Sr. J. P. Bierlein has been sorely afflicted for many weeks, living near Kidder, South Dakota. May she be remembered by all of God's children, and receive health and strength again.

There are more calls than we can fill at the present time. We came here the 17th. Have held three meetings with fair attendance and interest. Brn. William Sparling, S. Swenson, and I. N. Roberts are all kindly remembered by the people of this place, they having labored here in the past, and others likewise.

Our district conference convenes the 24th at Richburg Branch, North Dakota. Trusting that all may be benefited in coming together, and that all may labor lawfully until the end of our days,

Hopefully yours,

ELI HAYER.

HENDERSON, Oklahoma, June 23, 1905.

Editors Herald: I left my home for this field the first part of May. Since that time, have been very busy, occupying in new places. I notice I have preached about as many sermons as I have been out days, and have baptized ten. This is a new place for us. I preached the first sermon last night. Brn. Jim and Sam Malone, Henry Patterson, Bro. Smoot, and their families moved in here less than a year ago from Chickasha, Indian Territory, and bought farms here. I baptized all these Saints over in the Indian Territory, two and three years ago. I am glad to meet them again, and find them all solid in the faith, and note that they have let their neighbors know of the faith here. I wonder what the outcome will be here, but past experience teaches me some will accept with rejoicing, and others will scorn it.

I just closed a successful effort near McLoud. Preached eighteen times; baptized six out of five different families, all married but two; one of them a widow, the other Bro. Klemm's oldest daughter, Marie. We counted twelve others we thought ought to have been baptized. Some of them said they would be later. I had heard talk in the neighborhood, wondering how our ministry were paid. They said we never take up collections. Sunday night, the last part of my sermon, I made a short explanation of our financial system, tithing, and how the elders went out without salary. I told them I had been preaching this gospel for nearly six years, had never taken up a collection, and never had asked the people for any assistance in any way for my personal comfort, and yet in all of these things my needs have been very well supplied. And if I had to beg my way I certainly would not preach, and would go to work at something else. And we try to go out and represent the gospel as Jesus sent them in former days. If we will do so God will put it in the hearts of people to provide for our necessities. At the close, different ones came and gave me money to the amount of eleven dollars, mostly from outsiders. One man, Mr. Osborn, gave five dollars.

I expect to go from here to Piedmont to hold a ten-day meeting in Minium's Grove, commencing July 14. I have the promise of meeting Bro. Case there, which will be a welcome meeting on my part. I appreciate a good, congenial colaborer to help bear the burdens in this conflict. But it has been my lot so far to be alone most of the time.

From there we go to Terlton to attend our Eastern Oklahoma reunion, commencing August 4, lasting ten days. We are anticipating a good attendance from Saints and friends. Terlton is on the A. V. & W. Railroad, thirty miles west of Tulsa, Indian Territory. Train leaves Tulsa every morning for that place. We want the Saints from Indian Territory to come and help us out this year. We expect to have the boarding tent, coöperation.

Yours in the conflict,

W. M. AYLOR.

MARLIN, Texas, June 26, 1905.

Editors Herald: It has been six years or more since I enlisted in this latter-day work. Since that time the Lord has blessed me with some wonderful blessings. I have been privileged to see most all the signs follow. I have seen the Devil cast out, witnessed the gift of healing, and heard the Lord speak to latter-day Israel in unknown tongues, and that was the most wonderful of all of the manifestations of God's power, to confirm his existence, of anything I have ever witnessed. It was a message given to a handful of Saints of this (the Philadelphia) branch. It came through one of the Lord's handmaidens, who was living very humbly and faithfully,—in fact, living a consistent Christian life. I will give my reason why I think it such convincing evidence. It occurred about the time of my conversion, and the Lord had been blessing me with dreams and visions; and among other things he showed me that Saint speaking in tongues before it came to pass. The Saints had worked for two years to show me the light, and by the help of the Lord they had succeeded. We were on our way to the water to be baptized, when they were all rejoicing over their success and praising the Lord, and one of them began to speak in an unknown tongue, just as I had seen it in a vision. At that time, while listening to the wonderful words of God in another tongue, he showed me a vision that gave me to understand that she was speaking in Hebrew. I said, "Let us kneel and pray for the interpretation." So we did, but we did not get it at that time; but it occurred to me to write the words, and show them to a Jewish rabbi, Mr. George Frank, of Marlin, Texas, which I did. I went to his place of business and said, "Mr. Frank, do you understand the Hebrew language?" He said he did. Handing him the manuscript, I asked him what kind of language it was. He said it was pure Hebrew, and asked what book I got it from. I told him that I did not get it from a book, but received it by the Spirit of God, in unknown tongues. I asked him to write the interpretation under the words, and a part of it was this: "Hear, O Israel, the Lord thy God is one Lord for ever."

Dear Saints, these words are wonderful to me. The Devil tried through his agents to pick a flaw; but utterly failed, and will fail. This is God's work and his truth, and it will stand against all the battering-rams of Satan.

I do not think the interpretation could have come in a more convincing way. It was interpreted by a man that does not believe in the divinity of Christ, much less this latter-day work. I have seen many miraculous manifestations of God's Spirit, confirming the word. The Lord is reviving his work here at this place. Bro. E. W. Nunley, our district president and missionary, was with us not long since, and preached a series of sermons, such as edify and encourage the Saints, although he labored under considerable inconvenience. His ankle had been bruised by a piece of falling timber, and became inflamed while here, and he was confined to his bed a week. By request, Bro. B. F. Spicer and myself administered to him, after which he felt better. The last sermon he preached for us was delivered while he was sitting in a chair, not being able to stand.

Saints, we ought to appreciate the work of our missionaries, who labor, under disadvantages, for us. We ought to be coworkers together with them. We all could be in some way. And one way in which we could all help, is to pay our tithing. We are sure to be blessed in such efforts.

I wish I had time and space to give some experience I have witnessed with regard to tithe-paying, but it will suffice to say,

"Go on in faith, ye Saints, go on, Fear not, the cause is good."

We are sure to be blessed in discharge of duty.

Yours in bonds,

W. R. STANDEFER.

COLO, Iowa, June 26, 1905.

Editors Herald: On the 6th the new old tent was set up here. We are considerably disappointed in the tent, for we thought we were getting a comparatively new tent. But the center part of the top is old, and the side curtains are holes and patches, and not a peg came with it for the curtain,—a trick of the world.

Bro. Christy preached the first sermon here in the tent, then he left, and Bro. S. Reiste and the writer are running it now. The weather has been very much against us ever since we began. Hardly a day passes without rain, and some days it pours. Our crowds run from one outsider to fifty. Last night there were fifty in the tent, and more on the outside. A few are very much interested. I sold two Books of Mormon yesterday. What will the harvest be? We are sowing the gospel seed with a liberal hand. May God give the increase. Yesterday we were cheered when Bro. Hidy and family, Bro. Wilson and family, and Bro. Hardy's family all came from Nevada, seven miles, also Mr. Shalley and family. All but Mr. Shalley's stopped with Bro. and Sr. Frank Shommadieu, and our genial Grandma Belt (Sr. Shommadieu's good old mother). Well, we had a fine time, nineteen all told in one house. In the afternoon we had the sacrament- and testimony-meeting, and the good Spirit was with us. Nearly every member took part in testimony.

The Father blesses us in presenting the gospel. We will close here in a few days. I love to be out on the front, and work in new places; but I fear that my work in that line can not be long, for my hearing is so defective that I will be compelled to give up that kind of work, for outsiders want to ask questions and have one talk to them. I do not want to give it up, but what else can I do?

In bonds,

J. S. ROTH.

OAKLAND, California, June 22, 1905.

Editors Herald: Sr. Alice R. Corson's letter in HERALD for June 14 impressed me so deeply that I feel I should not restrain myself from writing a few lines. Perhaps putting us in remembrance may bring strength and comfort to more than one.

After Jesus had labored faithfully with his disciples for three years, when in the garden of Gethsemane he was betrayed by one, and forsaken by the others; even the beloved disciple followed him, but from a distance.

When the Lord acknowledged that he was the Son of God, he was found worthy of death; he was mocked and beaten; even a crown of thorns was cruelly pressed against his lovable head. When on the accursed tree, a thief reviled him. When finally darkness surrounded him and he felt that even his Father had forsaken him, he prayed for those who had nailed him to the cruel cross: "Forgive them; for they know not what they do."

He had sacrificed and lived, very largely, for those who loved him not, and died at the hands of those he came to save.

As we meditate upon such a sublime and perfect love, can we not join in the Savior's words: "The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?" Moreover his invitation still holds good: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

"If we sit down at set of sun

And count the things that we have done,

And, counting, find

One self-denying act, one word

That eased the heart of him who heard,

One glance most kind,

That fell like sunshine where it went,

Then we may count the day well spent.

"But, if through all the livelong day

We've eased no heart by yea or nay;

If through it all

We've done no thing that we can trace,

That brought the sunshine to a face;

No act, most small,

That helped some soul and nothing cost,

Then count that day as worse than lost."

A. BROTHER.

Extracts from Letters.

Mrs. Langdon, Berlin, North Dakota, June 25, 1905: "I am the only Saint, besides my four children, in this place. I am to start a home Sunday-school the first Sunday in July. I would be so glad if all who hear this latter-day work would obey it. I know of a truth it is the true work. I could not begin to tell you, dear Saints, the peace and love I have found. And when the precious gift of prophecy was given to Elder Sparling, as he laid his hands upon my head for healing, I felt very near to God. When the Spirit spoke to me, my whole heart went up in praise to our heavenly Master, to know that he does give his children the assurance of the gospel. I have many bitter trials, but I know that Jesus doeth all things well, and will guide those who put their trust in him. Pray for me, dear Saints."

Mrs. M. Houck, Leroy, Kansas, R. F. D. No. 2: "I should like to have an elder come to Leroy to preach after harvest is over, or in the fall. Bro. C. Cadwell lives there; he can direct him where I live."

E. E. Long, Pennsboro, West Virginia: "We have a debate on hand. Brn. Greene and I. M. Smith are on the ground, and all bids fair for success. Bro. Smith preached his first sermon on the street last evening, and captured the people by his profound reasoning. We then returned to the tent where Bro. Greene gave us an able discourse. The debate will begin Monday."

S. White, Diamondale, Michigan: "Unless we are dead to this world, the evils and the pride, the life of Christ is not in us. In the Book of Mormon Alma asks the people: 'Are ye stripped from all pride? If not ye are not prepared to meet the Lord.' Are we, as children of Christ, stripped from pride to-day? I fear not, altogether. I wish in my heart and soul it were so. The more we, as a people, humiliate ourselves, the more will the Lord work in and through us."

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Canada Mission; Greeting: Having been placed in charge of the Canada Mission for the present conference year, I have decided to divide the mission into the following named fields:

Counties of Essex, Kent, Lambton, West Middlesex, and West Elgin; George Green in charge, assisted by A. Leverton, R. C. Russell, and T. A. Phillips.

Counties of Perth, Huron, Waterloo, Wellington, Bruce, Grey, Dufferin, Simcoe, Frontenac, and Hastings; Frederick Gregory in charge, assisted by R. B. Howlett, and B. St. John. Manitowaning, and sister islands: John Shields in charge.

Algoma, Parry Sound, and Nippissing: G. C. Tomlinson in charge, assisted by George Hampshire.

Welland, Lincoln, Wentworth, Haldiman, Norfolk Counties, with South Oxford, East Middlesex, and East Elgin: R. C. Longhurst in charge, and William Place to assist.

Muskoka, Victoria, and Haliburton: A. E. Mortimer in charge, assisted by James Pycock.

William H. Crowell will be in charge of the Indian reservations.

For convenience sake we have divided the mission as above. While the missionaries may not be able to reach all parts of these large fields, yet they will feel that the burden of the work as defined rests upon them in the territory named. Any Saint desiring help will report to the one placed in charge of his respective field, who is expected to direct the labors of those placed in his field; and it is urgently requested that the elders named will report to the one in charge promptly on the first day of July, October, January, and March. The latter should be a double one, one for January and February, and one for the whole year.

Permit me to call special attention to the matter of reporting. During the past year some of the missionaries were not as prompt as was desired, in reporting to those in charge of the several fields, hence their reports were late in reaching me. Brethren, try to be prompt in this matter and save trouble. I will soon furnish those in charge of field work, also the president of every branch, with report blank, so that every member of the priesthood in Canada may have his report properly filed.

Being few in number and the mission so extensive, I trust that the laborers called to the vineyard will seek by every lawful means within their power to extend the gospel to the honest in heart. As our finances are limited, I hope that the elders will be frugal in their expenditures, and that the Saints will not forget their duty to the families whom these sacrificing elders leave at home, but will respond to the call by paying their tithes and offerings according to the law, that the work we love be not hindered.

In order that the missionary may be free to wait upon his ministry, it is wise that the branch and district affairs be cared for by those in charge. Personally, I expect to be absent from Canada part of the time, in connection with my other duties; but I will try to keep in touch with the work, and shall devote all the time possible in the Canadian Mission. During my absence, Sr. Evans will conduct the tithe, offering, college, and Canadian Messenger funds. Send all money in my name as usual.

Trusting that unity and love will prevail, and that each and all will seek divine guidance in the performance of their labor of love, I am,

Your brother,

R. C. EVANS.

To the Saints in Central and Eastern Oregon: As Bro. G. T. Griffiths has appointed me sub-missionary in charge we ask for the coöperation of the Saints and friends, as Bro. Henry Sparling and myself are the only missionaries sent here by the conference. I hope all the local brethren will assist, and do all they possibly can to help spread the angel's message; and those Saints who are isolated, please let us hear from you; and if you want preaching let us know, and we will do the best we can to reach you some time during the conference year. Any Saints having friends in these parts, and wanting us to call on or visit them, let us know by writing to us at Portland, Oregon, 824 Gantenbein Avenue, and we will do the best we can.

N. V. SHELDON.

Seventh Quorum of Elders.

Will the members of our quorum please note that we anticipate holding our annual meeting during the sessions of the forthcoming mission conference to be held in Manchester, August 5, 6, and 7. We urge all who possibly can make it convenient, to attend.

Prayer Union.

I do earnestly desire that the Prayer Union will fast and pray for a beloved sister of mine, who is living in Cleburne, Texas. She would desire to be administered to if she were not so far away from those having authority. She is so terribly afflicted, and wants to know the will of the Lord concerning her. She desires to do his will. Pray for her recovery, if it be the will of the Lord to raise her up. I desire the 9th of July to be the day set apart to fast and pray for my sister, Mrs. (Sr.) S. D. Riley.

Brilliant Record of a Newspaper Man.

The success which has attended William E. Curtis, the famous correspondent of the Chicago Record-Herald, is rarely attained by newspaper writers. Beginning his career in Chicago in 1872 as reporter, he rapidly rose to the position of managing editor. He resigned that position on receiving a government appointment as secretary of the South American commission. Mr. Curtis traveled extensively in Central and South America, while in this position, producing several popular volumes as the result of his literary labors. Afterward coöperating with Secretary of State James G. Blaine, Mr. Curtis organized the work of the bureau of American republics, with the result that he was placed in charge of that organization, and at the World's Columbian Exposition he distinguished himself by his labors as the executive head of the Latin-American department. As correspondent of the Chicago Record-Herald Mr. Curtis' travels have carried him into every section of the United States as well as into all quarters of the globe. His China and Japan letters were published in book form; likewise his letters from England, Germany, and France, as well as those written during his travels in Mexico and South America.

No newspaper correspondent possesses the facility shown by Mr. Curtis in writing on any of the diversified subjects embraced in his correspondence and making it luminous. Nor is any correspondent followed so closely year after year by the thousands of readers of the Chicago Record-Herald. On his recent trip to the Holy Land Mr. Curtis' letters have been read more closely than ever, and his descriptions of that interesting section of the globe as it appears to-day have been quoted everywhere.

A Fourth of July celebration by the Indians of the Nez Perce Reservation, Idaho, is described by T. W. Chatburn in the July Autumn Leaves. One feature of especial interest to Latter Day Saints is that the speaker, an Indian, declared that his people were destined to become a "separate, peculiar, and delightful people." Book of Mormon readers will readily catch the significance of that statement.

TO STIR UP YOUR PURE MINDS.—NO. 3.

"Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."—Matthew 7:12. This is the language of the Meek and Lowly One in that beautiful sermon upon the mount.

The same thought is often expressed by us in these words: Do unto others as you would that others should do unto you. From our observation we judge that its principal use to-day, is as a sort of Golden Rule to be taught to Sunday-school children; it is a very convenient phrase to repeat on Sunday, and we are very zealous in telling the children that it is their duty to observe this commandment of the loving Lord, and then we go home and practice the very opposite during the week.

Yes, we admonish others to do as they would like to be done by, and instead of doing to our hired man in the field, the mechanic in the shop, the bookkeeper in the office, as we would wish to be done by under similar circumstances, were conditions reversed, and instead of making their interests of equal importance with ours, and paying them as we would wish to be paid under same conditions, we beat them down to the lowest possible figure. We treat the help in the kitchens as inferior beings, just fit, not only to do the work which the mistress of the house found too great a tax for her strength, but, in addition, to do the work outside usually done by the master of the house, especially if they happen to be working for their board. Do we do it because that is the way we should want to be done by if we were in their place?

We admonish others that they should do as they would like to be done by, then we go home, and only half do our duty to our employer, shirk the hard work, neglect his interests, and then demand more for our labor than we would be willing to pay for the kind of help we are giving. It must be that we have forgotten the words of the Savior; or do we think they only applied to people eighteen hundred years ago, and do not apply to-day? We are of the opinion that the Lord never uttered a meaningless phrase in his sermons. This language means something, and to comply with it we must do more than use it as a golden text to be repeated in concert by the primary classes on Sunday.

It may be that some make a mistake in the application of the language, and they put it this way:

ELDER P. T. ANDERSON reports, June 23, from Svinbelle, Denmark, that he had arrived and the outlook for missionary labor was quite satisfactory. He reports the people as seemingly anxious to hear about the church.

Do unto others as they would that you should do unto them. This is not the meaning of the language; this would leave us at the mercy of the selfishness that might be engendered by such an interpretation. The responsibility is placed upon us, and to fulfill it necessitates the cultivation of an honest heart. And yet, if the meaning of the text is fully carried out in our lives, the other will be fulfilled as a matter of course, because selfishness will be eradicated, and we would wish others to do to us only that which they would find it their pleasure to do, in doing to us as they would wish us to do to them.

A careful examination of the complete text, a part of which was quoted, will reveal more than a casual reader might think. "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets."

A Pharisee at one time to tempt Jesus asked him this question: "Master, which is the great commandment in the law?" Jesus answered thus: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."—Matthew 22:36-40.

It is these two commandments on which the law and the prophets hang; and the law and the prophets, says Jesus, is "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." That is, this is the end of the law, this is the object of the sending of the prophets, that men might learn to do to others as they would have others do to them; and to do this, they must love the Lord their God with all their hearts, and with all their souls, and with all their minds, and love their neighbors as themselves. That means a good deal to weak humanity. It comprehends all that is required at our hands that we may be perfect, as our Father in heaven is perfect. The end of the law, the purpose for which the prophets were chosen, the object of the gospel plan, are all fulfilled in the application of this Golden Text which is the law and the prophets, and the faithful observance of the two great commandments on which the law and the prophets hang.

Turning to the "law" we find this language: "Thou shalt not avenge, nor bear any grudge against the children of thy people, but thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Leviticus 19:18. Love, true love, is the one essential necessary to keep this saying of the Savior. Paul says: "Owe no man anything, but to love one another: for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law. For this, Thou shalt not commit adultery. Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Thou shalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Romans 13:8, 9. All these commandments, as well as any other, if such there be, are comprehended in that brief saying. "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law."—Verse 10. Again, Galatians 5:14: "For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." If we do this we will do as we would like to be done by, and when we reach that condition we will, necessarily, have fulfilled all other laws and commandments. In the next verse the writer adds a warning: "But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another." To Timothy the apostle said, "Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned."—1 Timothy 1:5.

Then to do to others, in "all things" as we would wish them to do to us, is the end of the law, the fulfilling of the law; and we can not do it without complete love to God, and true charity toward our fellow men. And we will never be able to acquire this love that is essential except we shall put off pride and come down, as the Book of Mormon says, "in the depths of humility." A patronizing commiseration, because "I am big and you are little," is not the fulfilling of the law; but we must be actuated by "charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned."

We can not neglect faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, or any other commandment or principle, because they are parts of that law which is fulfilled in loving God, our neighbor as ourselves, and doing to others as we would wish them to do to us. They are all comprehended in this, for how can we say that we love God if we refuse to obey the least of his requirements?

"Therefore all things whatsoever you would that men should do to you do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets." This means so much! It reaches so far! What are we going to do about it? Shall we try to make it a part of our lives, or shall we continue to use it merely as a convenient Sunday-school text?

APPARENT DISCREPANCY.

Our attention has been called to what may appear to be a conflict between a statement made in an editorial in last week's HERALD, and a statement found in the Ensign for the same week. Both writers were speaking of Miss Bonsall's article in the Housekeeper, and both quoted from her article the three reasons she gives as to why the fresh young women, and the brilliant young men of Utah did not stamp out the relic of barbarism, polygamy, as follows: "First, because polygamy is in their blood. Second, because polygamy is their religion. Third, because to denounce polygamy would be to cast reflections, of the most horrible character, upon the virtue of the mothers and the honor of the fathers."

The editor of the Ensign says, "The first and second reasons given are self-evident; but the third is specious and untenable." The writer in the HERALD says, "Of the three reasons, the latter is undoubtedly the most potent." And right here we are reminded of the words of the apostle Paul, "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment."

At first thought it may strike somebody that the two statements made editorially do not exactly harmonize; but we think that when examined in a proper way the seeming conflict will disappear.

Evidently, the writer in the Ensign was speaking from the standpoint of the merit of the reason, rather than from the influence it may have in the minds of the young people in the West who use it. We certainly will all agree that so far as the truth and justifiableness of such a reason is concerned, it ought not to have weight with people who are seeking truth; and looking at it from that standpoint, to use it is unwise, to say the least, because it is not a safe position to stand in. To denounce, or to fail to denounce polygamy, for such a reason, would in no way affect the facts in the case, and whether the young men and women recognize the true status of the case or shut their eyes to it, does not change the condition of their parents one way or the other; but it does make a great deal of difference to the young people themselves.

The writer in the HERALD made his statement from another viewpoint, trying to look at it from the standpoint of the young people in the West, not from our own; this, as he understood it, being the view taken by Miss Bonsall.

Our reasons for thinking the third reason would have the most weight with them may be briefly stated. While in Utah a few years ago we distinctly remember hearing a young lady, a member of the Utah church, say that while she would not want to marry a man who was a polygamist, and that she did not believe in it, she had firmly resolved never to denounce it. She could not do so, because her mother was a polygamous wife, and she would be reflecting on the virtue of her mother. While a young girl she had made some disparaging remark about polygamy in the presence of, and was severely reproved by her father, who told her that he wanted never to hear anything of the kind from her lips again, because of the reflection upon her mother and himself.

While the first and second reasons given by Miss Bonsall may have their influence, we certainly are of the opinion that the third one has the most weight with the majority of the young people in the West, especially the children of polygamists. It must have some force, since to denounce polygamy they must necessarily conclude their parents in transgression, and acknowledge themselves illegitimate children. Human nature must be actuated by an extraordinary sense of right in order to do that cheerfully. It is, we fear, an obstacle that few will be able to surmount.

For this reason we believe it to be doubtful if any, save here and there one, of the children born in polygamy shall become converted to the original Latter Day Saint faith, the pure doctrine of Christ introduced and taught in this dispensation by Joseph Smith the Seer; but we have great hope of the grandchildren and great-grandchildren,—children of parents who have lived in monogamy. We believe the Reorganized Church will be able to reach many of them; since they will be casting no reflection upon the virtue of parents, and bringing no stigma upon themselves in their own minds, by forsaking the errors they have inherited, and accepting the truth. With this third reason entirely removed, and the force of the first and second greatly modified, we believe many of them will be able to comprehend, and say with the prophet: "Surely our fathers have inherited lies, . . . and things wherein there is no profit."

L. A. G.

A QUESTION.

The following question is offered to the HERALD readers as requested. Those who like the hunting of abstruse queries will take notice and look the subject up.

"A question which we would like to see an answer to in the HERALD is, Where was Christ the first four days after his baptism, as per Matthew, Mark, and Luke; also John, which gives a different account? Will some one please answer this?"

THE WITNESS.

SERMON DELIVERED BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH AT ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI, OCTOBER 16, 1904.

(Reported by R. Archibald.)

In partial pursuit of the thought which occupied the morning service I present before you this thought: If all the prophets known to the olden time and all the prophets known to the modern time were proved to be false prophets, no class of so-called Christian believers could afford that Jesus Christ should be proved a false prophet. For if this were done there were no hope left for the Christian. There are at least two prophecies on record in the Bible—the New Testament part of it—that are credited to him, either one of which justifies us in believing that in the time in which we live the gospel which was introduced by him should be preached in the world for the benefit of man. One of these is found in the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew, and reads like this:

And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come.

In common with other believers in Christ we are looking for the second coming of Christ; and, on behalf of myself and my comrades and the body of people represented by us, we confess that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh and pledge ourselves to the faith that he will come again in the flesh; and this is not antichrist, according to the statement made by John, the beloved disciple. The significance of this prophecy or prediction is this, that before this hope of ours can be realized, before the hope of all those who sing and praise Christ and look for the redemption that is to be accomplished by him when he shall come is experienced, there shall be preached in all the world the gospel which was introduced by him, as a witness unto all nations.

What is the province of a witness? If I were introduced in the courts of this city as a witness the court would discover whether or not I was a competent one; and if I knew nothing about that upon which I was called to testify my testimony would be proscribed; and skillful lawyers would never place me upon the stand if they did not understand that I knew something about the matter in hand. A witness, to bear successful testimony, must know whereof he speaks; and further than that the testimony must have value, and must be of such a character that that which is given as testimony shall bear significance unto those who are interested in the matter testified of. And according to the old law (and we are fortunate that it has come down to us in our statute-books and legal practice) there must be two or more witnesses to every fact; and if thus they testify from knowledge that which is asserted is established in the record and annals of the time.

Looking for the coming of Jesus Christ we anticipate this kind of work should be done, that witnesses should testify to that which had come within their consciousness. And to use the expression of a certain celebrated writer in regard to the reason, or why we know, after I had waded through about three fifths of his work, I came to this particular statement, "We know because we become conscious of," which put in Missouri parlance means. "We know because we know." And there are a good many things that transpire within the knowledge of men, or within their history, that they do not get consciousness of through the sense of feeling, hearing, seeing, smelling, or any other of the physical senses, but they get it by virtue of that which is without them, superior to them, enforcing upon them (their inner consciousness) that fact, important as it may be.

The object of this bearing record or witness to the gospel of the Son of God prior to his coming was to establish and keep established the promise made by the Master: "I am with you always, even unto the end of the world"; and, further than that, to show conclusively that God had in memory the salvation of the human family, and he proposed to offer to every man an opportunity to enter into relationship with him and receive salvation thereby.

The second prophecy to which I call your attention is found in the fourteenth chapter of Revelation, sixth verse:

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach [or to commit] to them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come.

Now whatever you may think of ancient or modern prophets, and those prophecies which have been left upon record by them, that which occurs in this fourteenth chapter of Revelation is attested by what occurs in the opening portion of the book of Revelation, in which it is clearly stated that it was certified unto John upon the Isle of Patmos by the Spirit, and that Christ was responsible for it. If that angel has not flown he must fly, or the prophecy fails. And we may just as well come squarely to the consideration of its truthfulness first as last, and by virtue of every desire we have for the accomplishment of good to ourselves and those by whom we may be surrounded, and with the intent and purpose to answer our conscious responsibility to God, we might just as well quit trying to evade by any species of sophistry the fair and plain understanding of what has been written.

What gospel was referred to there? It was the everlasting gospel. What gospel was it that is referred to in Mark, first verse, the opening of the chapter? What gospel is it that is referred to in that Second Epistle of John, the beloved disciple, which has been so often hurled against us when we have been preaching abroad in the world: "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine [gospel], receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed: for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds"? Now what gospel was that referred to? For this same writer makes use of this expression: "Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God." That language is just as true and just as applicable to this day and period of the world and men who live here, as it was ever applicable in the time in which it was written or in which it was uttered, a long time ago; for time has no significance to God and Christ. A thousand years is as one day; one day as a thousand years. And when he has laid the foundation of the work which he proposes to do it is laid for all time; and if it appertains to eternity it still remains as he had planned it when eternity begins and while it continues.

These two prophecies constitute testimony unto this generation. We can not evade the conclusions that are forced upon us by consideration of them; and if we come to you claiming to preach that gospel, we do not and can not find fault with you, neither would it be proper if we should find fault with you, if you make us prove, or attempt to prove, a correlation between every item of faith that we present to you for your consideration and for your adherence (if obedience be demanded through the preaching of it) with the gospel taught by Jesus Christ, and which should be covered by the declaration, "this gospel of the kingdom," referred to. Is not that a fair proposition? Is it not a business proposition? And let me tell you the gospel of the Son of God is not for Sunday alone, but it is for every day, for every month, for every year of every man's life who chooses to avail himself of its revelations if he proposes to reap its benefits. And just so surely as these benefits will accrue to him who is obedient and who puts himself in relationship with God by virtue of the gospel of his Son, just so surely every disability which attaches to him who disbelieves must and will be visited upon him.

I am not here to trifle with the word of God. I am not here to apologize for anything he has previously uttered or caused to be written. I am not here to claim the stream of revelation comes to men upon the earth to-day, and deny that which may have been revealed in the past. But I am here to insist that if God is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever; if that which has come to us in the books as a revelation is from him, every other revelation which comes from him, under any circumstances, which refers to the same subject-matter, must conform to and agree with that which is already received, or we are justified in rejecting it. There are no people that I know anything about that have given a better guarantee unto the citizens of these United States (including of course St. Louis, which just now is one of the grand centers of the republic), there are no people that have given a better guarantee of a sincere desire to prove themselves to be good citizens of the Republic and of the State and of the county, than have we. No people have given a better guarantee unto their neighbors of their sincerity in regard to this religious question, and no people have given a better guarantee that they are disposed to treat fairly all those who may come in opposition to them.

And now if you ask me for the reason for my making this statement, I will tell you. We have confessed and do confess to-night, the belief in the continuation of revelation from God, in the distinct and direct principle of present revelation; and we do it because God revealed himself to his people anciently, because the whole records, both the Old and the New Testaments, are full of recitals of God's dealings with men, and these dealings were brought to pass and consummated with them by virtue of messengers sent from God, and revelations from him through those whom he may have chosen at his will and sent for the purpose of declaring his object and all that he wanted to be done. Now having confessed to a belief in the principle of present revelation, men have the right to ask us what are these revelations which have come to you? And I answer, that by virtue of one of the first that came to the church we were told to take the things which were written in his scriptures to be his law to govern his church; and as a consequence we have taken the Bible and have told the people to whom we have preached that this was a record of the charter of our spiritual liberties. But they have said that we have supplanted the Scriptures, and have presented the Book of Mormon as superseding the Bible. That is a clerical slander. There is not a particle of truth in it. The Book of Mormon comes and certifies to the truth of the New Testament Scriptures. If it had not done that it never would have passed beyond the first edition which was published, and the book never would have been sought for with the same avidity that it now is. But we are told, If it comports with the teachings of the New Testament, what is the necessity for it? Here is the one witness (Bible) and infidelity is attacking it, and we are expected to defend the integrity of the Bible against infidelity, we are expected to stand in defense of the truths found in the Bible against all who assail them. The Book of Mormon comes as the second witness.

Let us see; we are expected to defend the divinity of the word of God. We cheerfully do that so far as we are able. We are expected to defend the revelations in the Bible and the Bible itself against those who disbelieve, and we are expected to give a fair exposition of our faith in regard to it. We are expected to do more than that; we are expected to hold in check those who believe that the Bible is plenary inspired,—every chapter, every book, every verse, every sentence, and every letter inspired. We do not believe that. We can not defend that. But we can sustain the thought that it comes to us as the statute-book of God, the validity of which, and its application to mankind, comes to us testified of by him who suffered on Calvary's cross, which shall continue to be a witness unto the end of time; and on the other side it shall be a witness against those who refuse to believe, but continue in their unbelief. It shall also be a testimony in favor of those who hear and obey and who are graciously saved by virtue of the means instituted of God and borne witness of in the word.

What shall we do with these prophecies? What shall we do with the character of this revelation? Convicted by it, having conceded to the fact of our belief in revelation, here comes that which is fraught with the word and is potent either for condemnation or for commendation, and we strive to read it. Shall we accept it as a plain statement made and intended to be made by the Almighty, or shall we seek to get rid of the conclusions which are absolutely forced upon us by virtue of a plain reading of the word?

Let me offer a few of these doctrines and see what we are to do with them. In the seventh chapter of John there is a statement made like this (if my memory serves me right): "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." What doctrine is that referred to there? Is it not the doctrine that he came to declare and that he subsequently authorized his disciples to declare? Every reader answers, Yes. And we answer that that doctrine stated by him, he declares was not his, but his Father's. As a consequence, when he comes and teaches us his doctrine, it is held before us as the doctrine of his Father, and there is the doctrine upon which the salvation of the human family rests, in all of its various phases, in every department of it from first to last; and we might just as well face the proposition that we are to answer to this doctrine and be saved by it or to be condemned by it first as last; and the sooner we get back to a consideration of this doctrine in its entirety the better off we will be, the sooner we will receive what we are seeking. Is that the doctrine that is referred to in the twenty-fourth of Matthew? Is that the gospel that is referred to in the fourteenth of Revelation?

The apostle Paul in writing to the Hebrews speaks about the principles of the doctrine of Christ, and there are six of them: faith, repentance, baptisms (plural, baptism of the body and of the Spirit), the laying on of hands, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment, six grand underlying principles from the first to the last. From an obedience which brings the body into subjection to the law of Christ unto the resurrection that brings body and spirit before the great judgment-bar to answer for what is done in the flesh, and that is what we understand every man will be subjected to. I propose to tell you a few things which have come to us by virtue of the spirit of revelation, and let us see whether these things are calculated to disrupt our faith in God and Christ and in the New Testament Scripture as his last will and testament to man, and whether in their teachings they are calculated to make us worse citizens,—as was expressed by a party when speaking of me. He said, Why, he is the worst man in the United States. Well, now, that came from my name. Now, mind you, by the spirit of revelation speaking to the church (and we are included by it because we have already stated that we believe in the principle and its present activity), we are bidden to take the things written in the Scriptures to be a law to govern his church. If we profess to be his church we must be governed by that law.

There are several things referred to in these revelations. There was a long-time quarrel, and it is yet in some places, in regard to which day we should worship. The question being agitated, there was a revelation received in regard to it, and that revelation instituted a day of rest, and it is called the Lord's day; and for a long series of years it was observed by the church in this sense, not as the Jewish Sabbath, but as the rest-day of the Lord. Subsequently, by virtue of the agitation, there came in a class who believed fully (and we give them credit for honesty in their belief) that the Jewish Sabbath should again be reinstated and become the Christian Sabbath. The voice of inspiration to the church distinctly declared it was the Lord's day, commonly called Sunday, and that is the day we understand to be the Christian's rest-day, not the Jewish Sabbath.

Again, this Bible, as we believe and teach, provides that it is the commandment of God for men to be baptized. While I may not be able to find a specific declaration which says, Thou shalt be baptized, I can find a specific declaration in which Christ told his disciples, who were authorized to act in his behalf, and to whom he said, "Whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosoever sins ye retain, they are retained," to go and baptize the people in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. In the last portion of the last chapter of Matthew, and in the last portion of the last chapter of Mark you will find these declarations: In Mark, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved"; in Matthew, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

I said this morning that laws were arbitrary. Here is a law that is in a sense permissive. He that is baptized will be saved, so if he is not baptized he will not be saved. The school-teachers and doctors of the language can fix it up as they please. But nowhere in the New Testament Scripture does Jesus tell us how a man shall be baptized. Did you ever think of it? Well, you know, they have been baptizing in various ways, and are yet. There are various methods of baptism, from the dipping of the finger in water and the making of the sign of the cross on the forehead, the sprinkling of a few drops by the operator upon the head of the person baptized, the pouring out of a bowl or other vessel (called effusion), and the taking of the person down into the water and baptizing him face foremost, immersing him in the water and bringing him up out of the water, unto the extreme of taking the person into the water, kneeling in the water and baptizing face forward three times, in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. If there had been any specific mode in the New Testament as to the actual manner in which men should be baptized, these different modes would not have obtained. The voice of inspiration tells us plainly that the person to be baptized shall go down into the water, and stand in the water (and it is to be understood, and it is to be so accepted, that it shall be sufficient to cover the person) and the one officiating shall use this formula, or something like it: "Having been commissioned of Jesus Christ, I baptize you in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen." And then shall he immerse the entire person in the water and raise him up out of the water, in the likeness of the death and "burial and resurrection of the Lord."

Again, the observance of the Lord's supper is commanded; but can any of you tell where the manner of its administration is given, aside from the relation of the fact that Jesus brake bread and blessed it, and poured wine into the cup and gave to his disciples? In the observance of this ordinance we have the various methods, from the laying of the wafer upon the tongue of the devotee by the acolyte, unto the eating of a hearty supper provided for the occasion; and we have all these different Lord's suppers administered in the different churches. The voice of revelation comes to us stating that it shall be wine made new among you, and it shall be bread; and we should all kneel with him who asks the blessing upon it, and he is to ask a specific blessing upon the bread and the wine, and it shall be blessed; that no unworthy person should partake, no unworthy person should pass it to the one to partake.

Again, there are a class of people in the United States (there were a good while ago, and there are some yet), who do not believe in marriage. Their tenets do not provide for the domestic relation. But it was thought by this people, in the days when they were under the influence of direct revelation, to send a message unto this class of people, and the question arose, What shall we teach them in regard to this question of marriage? The voice of inspiration was heard and this was the character of it: "Whoso forbiddeth to marry is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made." There is the statement, and these men were instructed to go abroad and teach the Shakers upon that principle. Having asked for information, they got it.

We have been challenged with the proposition, almost since I can remember, though of late years not so frequently, that you could prove by the Bible that God sanctioned plural marriage. We stand here to deny that proposition. It can not be done successfully. We come to this principle of direct revelation, and find we have the institution away back yonder before the foundation of the world was laid; it was in the mind of Jehovah. We do not care to go back farther than that. Now examine this in the light of the principle that we stated awhile ago, that whenever God reveals himself all revelations which come subsequently must agree and be in accord with those that have gone before upon the same subject. The church was organized in 1830, and immediately after there came, in 1831, a commandment concerning the government of the people in their personal conduct, and in the domestic relation as well, and this was the character of it: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else." There is a direct statement made to the body of the people through the voice of inspiration; in which we have already conceded, we believe. Here are two revelations given upon the same subject, both in the same year. According to our proposition all subsequent revelations upon the same topic, concerning which God had revealed himself at any prior time, must accord with that which had already been given by him, or he is not to be considered an unchangeable being. I make inquiry briefly as to what might have been the reason for such a commandment as this, but as I look out over this land, pick up the daily papers and look at what has been transpiring everywhere, I discover that there has been and is now a light treating of the domestic relation everywhere, and our courts are troubled with domestic infelicities, and the statutes have been brought to pass in which a great variety of excuses for breaking the marriage bond may be given. But God did not so intend it, as we have, by virtue of his revelations, been given to understand; for if I am commanded to love my wife with all my heart, and to cleave unto her and none else, it commands me to let other men's wives alone, does it not? More than all that, it commands me to answer unto God for the manner in which I treat my wife; advertises me that I shall be held accountable to him for the stewardship thus intrusted to me. And all this ought to be a guarantee unto the people among whom we live respecting our profession upon this topic, that we do not intend to disrupt or break the laws of the land, or to become subject to prosecution for having disrupted the public peace; that we do not believe in polygamous marriages, and that we propose not to accept this newfangled idea that has been stated in the newspapers and been encouraged by some, that is, to enter into five or ten year contracts in the marriage relation and let the state take care of the children. All I have to say about such a condition of things as that is this, that if it becomes a rule or a social fad the result of it will be that the state will have but few children to take care of, for they will be murdered, and men and women will add murder to the calendar of their crimes to conserve their domestic infelicities.

Under the influence of these two revelations, the church itself passed a rule on August 17, 1835. And we are as a people under that rule. It is found in our profession of faith known as the Doctrine and Covenants, with these revelations which have come to the church from its formative period, and we are included by it. That resolution provides like this: "Inasmuch as this church of Christ has been reproached with the crime of fornication and polygamy: we declare that we believe that one man should have one wife; and one woman but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again." Some thinking people say that this is a very deceptive provision, that it provides that the woman shall have but one husband, but the man may have more than one wife. That is a false conclusion. It is false reasoning. The conclusion itself is clear that the one is just as restrictive as the other; and if the one is not lawful, neither is the other. The question now comes home, What is meant by the term "lawful" in this passage which I have quoted from? "It is lawful that a man should have one wife," etc.? God knew all the time that in the states of New York, Ohio, Illinois, Iowa, and Missouri, the statutes themselves provided that a man, if he had more than one wife, was subject to prosecution under the statute; therefore, he says to man that it is "lawful," according to the law of God, that a man should have one wife, and it comes home to the church that this should have been the proper rendition of it from first to last. There is no room for inference other than that.

These questions have come up, and they have significance at the present time for several reasons; and I present them to-night for similar reason. Quite a controversy has been going on in the land in reference to this marriage relation. We as a church recognize but one cause justifiable before God for divorce. But one, that is the scriptural cause. We have no provision for many of those causes that under the statutes prevail. Personally, I believe that there should be no cause but the one; and that this peculiar complaint, this particularly elastic one called inequality of temperament, or incompatibility of temperament, should never appear upon the statute-books, because we have obligated ourselves to put our temperaments under control; and the man who knows that he has a peculiar temperament must conform so far as it is possible for him to do with the faults and with the foibles of the woman he may have married; and the wife must do the same thing, for there must be a joint bearing of each other's infirmities; and the man or the woman who will separate upon such cause as that seeks only to be free from a condition that becomes otherwise irksome and they want to be free from it.

There is another reason for it and that is a personal one. There are two Joseph Smiths in the field. There is Joseph Fielding Smith, president of the Utah church; and the other is Joseph Smith, of the Reorganized Church. One has its headquarters in Salt Lake City, the other in Iowa. Well, I am the Iowa man, and for forty-four years I have been in the public field and have been an opponent; an open opponent, of the doctrine of polygamy, under any and all considerations; and my cousin, Joseph Fielding Smith, testified before the senatorial committee, when it was sitting in Washington only a little while ago, (and it has been spread all over this country,) that he had lived in contravention of the law of the United States, and of the state of Utah, passed after its admission into the union of States, and was now living with five wives, and proposed to continue to do so. Notwithstanding that he reveres, and others pretend to revere (and I say pretend because I think I have justifiable reason for it) the memory, and honor the sacred character of Joseph Smith, yet Joseph Smith was the human instrumentality through whom these revelations from God came concerning the domestic relation, which were put into the book together with the other revelations to the church, and made binding by virtue of the acceptance of the people, and called the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. These revelations should have been sacred and kept sacred; and we as a people hold them to be sacred, because they have never been controverted. And if the question comes up for examination, should it ever come to us as a people, a revelation offered to the people that proposes to subvert these, we shall put it under examination, and if it does not comport with the teachings of the New Testament Scripture and the revelations which have been given before from the same source and accepted as the revelations of God, we shall most certainly refuse to accede to it.

I told you a little story this morning; I did not finish it. I had a purpose in not doing so altogether. The reason that old prophet succeeded in deceiving the young man, was that the young man thought the old prophet had received a revelation different from his commandment, and so he yielded to it. The old prophet doubtless told the young prophet that he was a prophet too, and that he also had received a revelation. Now I stand in the attitude of the young prophet in this sense. I do not propose to be deceived by any revelation which an old prophet may hold up before me—I do not propose to do that. I simply give that as a personal statement. But the question has come home to us; it was predicted several years ago that this question would ultimately be brought before the bar of the great American public, and that the Reorganized Church should stand face to face with the institution in the West upon this subject. It has been prophesied of and held before the people time after time, and now we are just exactly where the prediction said we would be. It has been asserted before that the things we spoke of and the conditions we had said existed in the West were slanderous; but now the chief man among them stands before the American people and concedes the very things we have been charging them with. It does not concern me what a man's private belief may be; but when a man puts himself before the public and presents his views, religious, political, domestic, or economic, he offers it before me and every other man to examine at his will; and if he puts up any kind of a barrier that would prevent me from a fair, earnest investigation of what he has presented, he does it at the peril of being considered weak, and that he himself is aware of the fact that what he has presented can not be defended.

I represent a people who believe that it is perfectly right and proper, in this religious field, to examine everything which comes to them for human consideration, which is deemed for their good, and they will be responsible for failure to accept it. It is our purpose to strike upon those institutions presented before us, and if they be solid and enduring we will find it out; but if they be made up of plaster, like some of those buildings on the World's Fair grounds, we are going to knock them all to pieces if we can. I am not one of those who think that a man may arise and assert a thing, and that no man shall answer him. I am one of those who believe that this latter-day work was intended to test everything, for it has been declared that the time was to come when everything that can be shaken will be shaken.

I may have been a little personal, but I am a public man, I have stood before the public for a long time, and I presume people are anxious to know what we intend to do, and I have made these statements as I believe myself to be a representative man among them. I thank you for the kindness with which you have listened to me; I will not keep you longer.

EQUALITY UNDER THE LAW.

In the HERALD of February 8 is an article under the heading of "Consecration and equality amongst Christ's ministry," which has so attracted my attention that I feel constrained to offer a few thoughts relative thereto.

In the first place the title seems to be a little peculiar. Why should the ministry particularly be mentioned in regard to consecration and equality? Is there any law specially applicable to the ministry as touching this principle? If so, I, as a minister, shall be glad to receive light upon the subject.

The brother says that until quite recently he was satisfied that he understood the church teaching, but things had transpired of late, which have compelled him to believe that he is not in harmony with the church, or the church is failing to enforce the law as the books teach it.

It seems from this that the brother is a recent convert to his present opinion. Of course it would be bad to find the brother is mistaken in his present view; but it would be at least equally unfortunate to find "the church is failing to enforce the law as the books teach it." It seems to me the brother has not done justice in his first quotation from the Doctrine and Covenants, which he gives as on page 101, but which I find on page 143, [It is page 101 in the 1901 edition.—EDITOR] by failing to give all its essential teaching. Dividing it, in the manner he has, certainly destroys, very largely, its force and effect, and has a tendency to confuse the mind of the casual reader. Let us quote the text as far as we go without division:

And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me, and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors, two of the elders, or high priests, such as he shall or has appointed and set apart for that purpose. And it shall come to pass that after they are laid before the bishop of my church, and after that he has received these testimonies concerning the consecration of the properties of my church, that they can not be taken from the church, agreeably to my commandments; every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration, inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family. And again, if there shall be properties in the hands of the church, or any individuals of it, more than is necessary for their support, after this first consecration, which is a residue, to be consecrated unto the bishop, it shall be kept to administer unto those who have not, from time to time, that every man who has need may be amply supplied, and receive according to his wants.

The brother says this "undoubtedly refers to the ministry in particular." I am sure he will cheerfully concede to me the right to differ from him. These properties are to be consecrated for the support of the poor, and certainly the ministers of the church and their families are not particularly poor. It is true the minister of Christ can not preach the gospel for gain, and perhaps a large proportion of them are poor when called to the work, and therefore must depend wholly, or at least largely, upon the allowance received from the coffers of the church; but it appears to me that giving this all due consideration, it does not justify us in the thought that the ministers are in particular the ones designated as "the poor." My understanding has been, and still is, that the ministry are supplied according to their needs and wants from the church treasury. I wish I could feel sure that the church could care for all its poor equally as well.

But leaving this, there are a few things to which I desire to invite attention. It is a duty required of those who are in condition to do so to consecrate of their properties for the support of the poor. These properties are to be secured to the church by covenant and deed which can not be broken. Every man shall be made accountable for that which he receives by consecration which is to be sufficient for himself and family. I do not desire to limit this in its interpretation as meaning the "ministry in particular." I do not so understand the teaching of the Doctrine and Covenants. It seems to me that the teaching of the revelations is, and has been, at least since March, 1832, that steps should be taken to procure land and care for the poor of the church; that storehouses should be established and wise men chosen to care for the material interests of the church, and that every man employed by the church, whether officer or member, should be equal in that work, and that every one so employed should receive from the treasury sufficient for his needs and wants,—that is, for properly carrying on the work intrusted to his care. I do not think this means that every one shall receive sufficient to keep him on a dead level with every other man; but believe it is better stated where it says, that which is "needful for their necessities and their wants." The brother also quotes from Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1, but I do not think he quotes enough to give a clear idea of what the teaching of this section is; I therefore quote what seems to me necessary for a clearer conception. The heading of the section explains its purport, by saying, "The order given of the Lord to Enoch, for the purpose of establishing the poor." Certainly this is plain enough as to its purpose. It is "for the purpose of establishing the poor." How is this to be done?

And, behold, and lo, it must needs be that there be an organization of my people, in regulating and establishing the affairs of the storehouse for the poor of my people, both in this place and in the land of Zion, or in other words, the city of Enoch, for a permanent and everlasting establishment and order unto my church, to advance the cause which ye have espoused, to the salvation of man, and to the glory of your Father who is in heaven, that you may be equal in the bands of heavenly things; yea, and earthly things also, for the obtaining of heavenly things; for if ye are not equal in earthly things, ye can not be equal in obtaining heavenly things; . . . And now, verily thus saith the Lord, it is expedient that all things be done unto my glory, that ye should, who are joined together in this order, . . . sit in council with the saints which are in Zion; . . . wherefore a commandment I give unto you, to prepare and organize yourselves by a bond or everlasting covenant that can not be broken. And he who breaketh it shall lose his office and standing in the church, and shall be delivered over to the buffetings of Satan until the day of redemption.

This certainly tells us what is to be done in order that equality may obtain. It is not a question of every minister's family receiving the same allowance, or living in the same style or sized house, but it is by, or through, "an organization of my people, in regulating and establishing the affairs of the storehouse for the poor of my people, . . . the city of Enoch, for a permanent and everlasting establishment and order unto my church."

The brother seems specially to object to an elder coming to Zion having a surplus left after laying all things before the Bishop. Well, I am not as well informed in regard to what the brother calls Zion as I would like to be; and I do not know that steps have been taken as yet, which enables the Bishop to grant inheritances to those who go there. In my humble opinion there is a difference between "the city of Enoch," as spoken of in the Doctrine and Covenants, and what the brother calls Zion, as at present established.

Your brother in Christ,

C. H. PORTER.

SOME IMPORTANT STATEMENTS FROM THE WRITINGS OF A NOTED CHRISTIAN (OR CAMPBELLITE) WRITER.

When reading the accounts of discussions held between our elders and elders of the Christian (or Campbellite) Church, I have frequently noticed, when our elders would quote from Alexander Campbell, and early writers of that church with reference to the apostasy of the Christ church and a restoration of the gospel, that their elders were not willing to be bound by their statements. It may be they think those writings too stale and wish something of a later date and more modern, hence I will give a few extracts from one of their leading lights, a prominent writer, and taken to be good authority in their church. I refer to William Thomas Moore, M. A., LL. D., who, as late as the year 1904, has written and published a book entitled, Man Preparing for Other Worlds; or, the Spiritual Man's Conflicts and Final Victory. His advertisement on the fly-leaf of the work is no doubt intended to impress the reader with his prominence and ability to write such a work. It is as follows: "Dean Emeritus of Missouri Bible College," "Lecturer on the Bible ethics and journalism, in Christian College" (Columbia, Missouri); "Eleven years editor of the Christian Quarterly"; "Twenty-one years editor of the Christian Commonwealth" (London, England); "Author of The Exile and the Return (in People's Bible History); The Turbulent Period (in Reformation of the Nineteenth Century)," etc., etc.

So with the literary status of the man as given above we proceed to quote from the above-named book. On page 133 under the head of, "How men are saved," he says:

A passage in the fourteenth chapter of Saint John will help us at this point. Speaking to his disciples, Jesus says: "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another helper that he may be with you for ever, even the Spirit of truth, whom the world can not receive for it beholds him not, neither knoweth him; ye know him; for he abideth with you and shall be in you." In the twenty-sixth verse it is stated that the Holy Spirit will teach the disciples all things and bring to their remembrance all that Jesus had spoken unto them.

Now it is important to notice the fact that the New Testament makes it very plain that the Holy Spirit is a speaking spirit, and that this is specially a prominent office of the Spirit. Jesus told his disciples, when they were in trouble, to take no thought of what they should say, for it should be given unto them in the same hour what they should say, for said he, "It is not you that speak, but the Spirit of my Father which speaketh in you." The spirit said to Philip, Go near and join thyself to this chariot (See Acts 8:29), "They were all filled with the Holy Spirit and began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance" (Acts 2:4), "It was needful that the Scriptures should be fulfilled which the Holy Spirit spake before by the mouth of David concerning Judah" (Acts 1:16). Now there are two things clearly brought to view in these Scriptures: first, the Holy Spirit is a speaking spirit, and secondly, it speaks through men, selected for that purpose. In the passage quoted from the gospel of John 14:16, 18, it is definitely declared that the world can not receive the Spirit of truth, but as a matter of fact the world can receive the truth, and can therefore receive the gospel message which is the truth presented by the Holy Spirit through living men. Hence, the unregenerate man can hear the voice of the Spirit though he "can not tell from whence the Spirit itself comes and whither it goes." This harmonizes with what Paul teaches in Romans, namely: "Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Now while the unregenerate sinner is dead in trespasses and in sins, he is not so dead that he can not hear and feel the gospel message. "This gospel is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth, to the Jew first and also to the Greek." It makes no distinction between classes. It recognizes all under sin that grace may abound unto all. The hearing, believing, and obeying the gospel brings the sinner where he enjoys the promises of the gospel, and among these promises is the gift of the Holy Spirit. (See Acts 2:38.)

Now all this in no way antagonizes the view I have presented of the spiritual man, while it certainly does emphasize the importance of the gospel which prepares and urges the sinner to accept the truth, and this truth sets him free, and enables him to receive the gift of the Holy Spirit or the baptism in the Holy Spirit which constitutes him a spiritual man.

The emphasis in the above is all Mr. Moore's, and when we compare the above statement to the position taken by the elders of the Christian Church on the gift of the Holy Spirit and its operations, either they or Mr. Moore is in the dark. Which? And will they turn Mr. Moore down as not good authority? On page 149, under the head of "The spiritual man's ethical standard," Mr. Moore, after dealing with man's degeneracy from Adam to Christ, and inferring that some were just beginning to understand the difference between Judaism and Christianity, says:

Complete deliverance from the smoke of Babylon must be a work of considerable time and patience. The steps by which the church went down into the apostasy were slow, and upon the whole covered many years before the worst was reached. Now that the church is hobbling up out of its fallen condition, through the quagmires of tradition, on the stilts of human creeds, it ought not to be expected that a complete restoration of all that is essential in the primitive faith and practice could possibly be accomplished within a short period of time. Many years will probably yet elapse before we shall see the dawn of a fully restored church.

The emphasis in the above is mine, and I only emphasize to draw attention to some special admissions of the writer. First, the primitive church had fallen or apostatized. Second, sectarianism of to-day is largely from the quagmires of tradition. Third, a necessity for a fully restored church. This has been the contention of Latter Day Saint elders all along, and it is encouraging to know that our opponents concede this in the early and late writings of their men. Of course Mr. Moore would not accept the restored church of Jesus Christ of to-day as being the Christ church; nor is it likely he would admit of its restoration by immediate and present-day revelation. However, the apostasy of the primitive church,—and that the creeds of to-day are of human origin, and a necessity for a restored church,—is our contention, and to have it admitted is some degree of satisfaction at least.

On page 220 under the head of, "The unrest of the world," after calling attention to the work of General Booth, through the Salvation Army, in England and elsewhere, and its possible failures, he says:

Nor is this all. Even the working classes will have to be reckoned with before General Booth's scheme will ever amount to much. I refer to the working classes who are not paupers. Until the drinking habits of these are reformed; until the relations of capital and labor are harmonized by a just coöperative system; and until the socialism of Jesus Christ is recognized everywhere by a reproduction of the Apostolic Church, in its faith and practice, in its doctrine and life, its organization and unity, its Spirit and work, all such schemes as General Booth's can have at best only a temporary and limited effect in redeeming the masses from their present outcast condition.

The emphasis is mine,—with a view to again calling attention to the admissions of the opponents to our contention. Are not Latter Day Saint elders willing to affirm the above? And has that not been the claim for seventy-five years, by the church? It is a pity that those who claim to represent Christ, and make an appeal for a complete restoration of the church and gospel, can not see that gospel as it shines to-day in all of its effulgence and glory; that they can not see the apostolic church identity of nineteen hundred years ago. Is it prejudice that blinds them, or are they so deep in the whirlpool of sectarianism that the rays of gospel light can not reach them? Who can answer?

On page 243 and 244 under the head "Where is the apostolic church?" he writes:

But just here we meet the real difficulty of the whole matter. Undoubtedly the apostolic church is just what is needed. This would give us the living Christ in living men, and this is the practical formula for the cure of the world's unrest. But when we ask, where is the apostolic church? echo answers, where? It is freely admitted that our broken and divided denominationalism is a poor representation of what Christ intended his church should be. The great apostasy, like a sombre nightshade, hangs between us and the primitive church; and though reformation has succeeded reformation, each in turn effecting something in the right direction, it is still abundantly evident that none of these reformations, or all of them together, may be regarded as having fully reached the apostolic church in what really made that church the body of the living Christ. No one who is not a pessimist will hesitate to acknowledge that much, even very much, has been accomplished in reproducing the church of the New Testament in many communities of the present day, but it must be confessed by even the most pronounced optimist that there is still a wide chasm between most of the organizations of this age, claiming to be the church, and that self-sacrificing, divinely inspired, and earnestly active organization of apostolic times, described in the New Testament as the church of Christ, an organization without any very hard and fast lines of organization at all, but which soon became the most potent influence in the whole world; an influence which practically dethroned the old religions and almost conquered heathenism before the close of the second century. This is just the church, in all of its essential features that is needed in this day, and until it is reproduced, in vain shall we look for a solution of our social difficulties, either as regards the immediate needs of the poor or the reformation of the rich.

The above needs no emphasis or comment upon it, for it speaks louder, and is more astonishing than a clap of thunder from a clear sky, coming from where it does. And it is the cry that has been ringing down through the corridors of time, through living ambassadors of Christ for three quarters of a century. The difference between Mr. Moore and the Latter Day Saints is, that he looks for a restored church in the future coming through the process of evolution up out of the sectarian churches of to-day, while they claim that the church of Christ is already here, restored back in its primitive beauty and splendor through divine and present-day revelation; and that seventy-five years ago the living Christ breathed the breath of life into that church when he created it anew or restored it; and now a living Christ through a living church and through living (spiritual) men is preached to the nations. And as Mr. Moore, and probably many of his brethren, expect a restored church by evolution out of the present churches, some time in the future, we would ask, Can a live church evolve from where there is no antecedent life?

It is gratifying to know that we are not alone in contending for a restoration of the Christ church, even though we may differ as to the process by which that restoration comes to us.

On page 246 he again says:

Before the apostasy, the church of Christ was all that we are claiming it should be now; but in the apostasy the church was partly lost, and, consequently, the living Christ was partly banished from the world; and in order to bring Christ again to the world in all his saving, sanctifying, and rest-giving power, his body, the church, must be reproduced in order that he may have a dwelling-place here in which to take up his abode.

On page 247 we find the following:

And should the apostolic church finally be reproduced, thereby bringing Christ to the earth again in personal power and rest-giving influence, what would then be the prospect before us? Let me ask the reader to give the imagination a little play at this point. Try to picture, first of all, a united Christendom, thoroughly illustrating the seven unities in Ephesians, with considerable emphasis on the "One Lord, one faith, and one baptism." This would give a practical reproduction of the living Christ in every place where there is now a local congregation. Imagine again these places multiplied at least a hundred times; and yet this might not express anything like the increase that would take place. Now think of all these local churches, as animated by the divine Spirit, guided by the divine word, walking in the divine commandments, attending to the divine ordinances, living the divine life, and manifesting the divine ministry, in feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, visiting those in prison, healing the sick, carrying the gospel to every nation, and preaching it to every creature. Is not this picture enchanting? And yet, is it not within the range of a possible realization? Certainly we can not doubt it.

The above is evidently a beautiful picture, and very likely the distant future lends enchantment to the scene from Mr. Moore's point of view. But to Latter Day Saints it is enchanting (with reference to the "seven unities in Ephesians") to know it is a positive reality, instead of being "within the range of a possible realization." And while creeds are crumbling, and tottering to their fall, and men are contending for, and looking to a restoration of the Christ church out of the debris, the already restored gospel will continue in its work of reaching the honest seeker after truth with its penetrating rays of light; and will finally accomplish all that its author intended. With hope that the extracts may be beneficial to the brethren in their work and discussions, I am, your brother and coworker in the conflict of a restored church and gospel,

JOSEPH A. TANNER.

"IS THE SPIRIT OF GOD AND THE HOLY GHOST ONE AND THE SAME?"

I have followed with the greatest care and attention the able and interesting controversy in the current issue of the HERALD with the result that I find myself wholly unable to subscribe to the thesis advanced by Bro. William Hawkins, viz: that the Spirit of God and the Holy Ghost given of God through the laying on of hands by the elders, are one and the same thing.

My reason, or rather one of my reasons for being unable to accept the brother's hypothesis is simply that I can not understand how the gift and the Giver can be possibly, and as a matter of course, one and the same thing. The divine Being, spoken of so solemnly and reverently in John 17: 13, as "HE, the Spirit of truth" is—if I rightly understand—the Giver of the gift of the Holy Ghost, shed forth or poured forth under the hands of the elders and otherwise, as fully and succinctly recorded in 2 Timothy 1: 6; 1 Timothy 1: 18; 4: 14, 15; Acts 2: 1, 2, 6, 7, 17; 8: 17; 19: 6.

I am still more at a loss to understand, or rather to agree with the brother when he goes on to say in effect that the Spirit of God could not possibly have been within us either before or at the time of the baptism of water. I beg very respectfully to inquire of Bro. Hawkins: What but the Spirit of God led us to seek the baptism of water in the very first instance? If the Spirit of God was not within us, leading us to repentance and God's holy order of baptism, by all means let us cease to sing,

"With joy we remember
The dawn of that day,
When, led by the Spirit,
The truth to obey,"

for if the Spirit of God was not within us, leading us to obey the truth, then is our condition woeful indeed: for is it not written, "Every plant, which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up."—Matthew 15: 13. Ergo, if we have not been planted into our baptism by the Spirit of the Father, then I see no logical escape from the inference that ultimately we shall be rooted up.

The fundamental ground of the brother's error, however, appears to me in his assuming the existence of a fixed and rigid line of demarkation, in which he quotes our Savior's saying in John 14: 17, that the world "can not receive it," meaning the Spirit, and then goes on to the wholly unwarranted and, as it seems to me, gratuitous assumption that every individual who has not actually passed through the baptismal waters, is "of the world," and consequently, as he further intimates and implies, "unholy" in God's sight, (SAINTS' HERALD, No. 26, p. 637, column 1, line 12 from the bottom).

What then about the thousands—nay, the tens of thousands who, in "every land and clime," are being slowly but surely led out of Idumea, or the world, to the baptismal gate into the promised land of Zion, the city of solemnities? Are they, too, "of the world," and "unholy temples" in God's sight, when, at the very moment, his own Holy Spirit is leading them "upward, onward, and heavenward"? I hardly think so. Nor do I believe that, upon deep and mature consideration and reflection, any considerable proportion of your readers will think so, either.

No! My entire sympathies are with the brother who writes so logically, so temperately, and so reasonably, yet, I can not help but believe that the Spirit of God was within us either before or at the time of baptism of water.

Permit me to extend my argument by just one more thought, viz.: If there is no life in the natural born child till it comes to the actual moment of birth, is it not a dead child? Ergo, if the "Spirit of life" is not within us till we come to the actual birth of water, then, obviously and incontrovertibly, there is no life in us either! Yours for truth,

Original Poetry

"Lean All Thy Weight On Me!"

"Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee."
—Psalm 55: 22.

When griefs and cares oppress me,
And life seems hard to bear;
Temptations fierce distressing,
No human succor near;
When fiercest storms assail me,
And friends, faint-hearted, flee,
'Tis thine own voice that calleth,
"Lean all thy weight on Me."

When in affliction's furnace,
I feel the cleansing fire,
Sund'ring each earth-bound tendril,
Melting each vain desire;
'Tis then, O Gracious Master,
Lord of Eternity!
'Mid sorrow's dire disaster,
I lean my weight on Thee.

When loved ones seem unable
To know and understand,
How, 'midst all earth's temptations,
I seek the "better land."
The land where all the holy—
The tossed on life's wild sea,—
Kneel with the meek and lowly,
Who've leaned their weight on Thee.

When tempted e'en to leave Thee,—
My truest, dearest friend,
Who never once deceived me,
Nor will until the end;
When the arch tempter whispers,
"Sure all thy hope is vain,
And in thy Master's service
Thou lovest earthly gain!"

Help me to say with courage:
"My Master's way is best."
Where the wicked cease from troubling,
And the weary are at rest—
There 'mid resplendent mansions
Of the land that is to be,
My sins and follies pardoned,
By him, I there shall see.

Eternal in his glory,
Resplendent on his throne,
He whom I've tried to follow,
The Mighty One and Strong.
To him, the Lord eternal,
All power and praise belong,
His love be all my story,
His praise my sweetest song.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Tired Mothers.

A little elbow leans upon your knee,
Your tired knee that has so much to bear;
A child's dear eyes are looking lovingly
From underneath a thatch of tangled hair.
Perhaps you do not heed the velvet touch
Of warm, moist fingers, folding yours so tight;
You do not prize this blessing overmuch—
You almost are too tired to pray to-night.

But it is blessedness! A year ago
I did not see it as I do to-day—
We are so dull and thankless; and too slow
To catch the sunshine till it slips away.
And now it seems surpassing strange to me,
That, while I wore the badge of motherhood,
I did not kiss more oft and tenderly
The little child that brought me only good.
And if, some night when you sit down to rest,
You miss this elbow from your tired knee—
This restless curling head from off your breast—
This lisping tongue that chatters constantly;
If from your own the dimpled hands had slipped,
And ne'er would nestle in your palm again;
If the white feet into their grave had tripped,
I could not blame you for your heartache then.

I wonder so that mothers ever fret
At little children clinging to their gown;
Or that the footprints, when the days are wet,
Are ever black enough to make them frown.
If I could find a little muddy boot,
Or cap, or jacket, on my chamber floor—
If I could kiss a rosy, restless foot,
And hear it patter in my house once more—
If I could mend a broken cart to-day,
To-morrow make a kite to reach the sky,
There is no woman in God's world could say
She was more blissfully content than I.
But ah! the dainty pillow next my own
Is never rumbled by a shining head;
My singing birdling from its nest is flown—
The little boy I used to kiss is dead!

Scottish Honesty.

At one time in the highlands of Scotland, to ask for a receipt or promissory note was considered an insult, and such a thing as a breach of contract was rarely heard of, so strictly did the people regard their honor. There is a story of a farmer who had been to the lowlands, and had there acquired worldly wisdom:

"After returning to his native place he needed some money, and requested a loan from a gentleman in the neighborhood. The latter, Mr. Stewart, complied and counted out the gold, when the farmer immediately wrote a receipt.

"And what is this, man?" cried Mr. Stewart, on receiving the slip of paper.

"That is a receipt, sir, binding me to give back your gold at the right time," replied Donald.

"Binding ye, indeed! Well, my man, if ye canna trust yoursel', I'm sure I'll na trust ye! Such as ye canna hae my gold;" and, on gathering it up, he returned it to his desk and locked it up.

"But, sir, I might die," replied the needy Scot, unwilling to surrender his hope of the loan, 'and perhaps, my sons might refuse it to ye, but the bit of paper would compel them.'

"Compel them to sustain their dead father's honor!" cried the enraged Celt. "They'll need compelling to do right if this is the road ye're leading them. Ye can gang elsewhere for money, I tell ye; but ye'll find nane about here that'll put more faith in a bit of paper than a neighbor's word of honor and his love of right."

Right Living.

The Reverend N. D. Hillis recently stated some bold facts in a public address. He said:

"Children are bundles of ungrown roots. How they shall develop depends on the training they receive. And this training must be in morals as well as intellectual pursuits. Of what value is it that colleges without number are founded if we have no university of morals? No republic was ever great that represented moral illiteracy. We send our children to Sunday-school, where incompetent teachers for fifteen minutes try to inculcate moral lessons.

"The father of a family is willing to be a tailor for his boys, the mother is willing to be a cook, but when it comes to giving any moral or religious education to the children, both withdraw and leave it to any one who will attempt it. This law carried out for one generation brings us to the pitiful condition of moral illiteracy in which we find ourselves.

"No youth can hope to attain weight of character who does not practice early the culture of Christian faculties as he does his art, his law, his science. And as his efforts in one are directed so should they be in the other. The highest form of scholarship is the science of right living."—Our Day.

Dear Sisters: Having been given the oversight of the work of the Daughters of Zion, much against my own wishes, because I feel my incompetency for the place so much, I now appeal to you all for your earnest support and hearty coöperation, that the work may not suffer under my care and direction.

There is a great work before us. The responsibility is upon us to raise the standard of our homes. The church has been admonished to come up higher; but how can it do so unless we do it in our homes? The church, the Sunday-school, and the Religio may admonish and instruct, but unless the principles taught and the admonitions given are carried out in our homes, it will avail us nothing. The standard of the church must be measured by that in our homes; for is not that the place where we live our real lives? So let us all work together with whatever ability God has given us, to help one another in this great effort to elevate our home life: not losing sight of the fact, that in the accumulation of the little helps to be found here and there among us, directed by our Father above we may push this work to a glorious success.

Do not be chary of your words of encouragement, your plans of work, or your suggestions for improvement in our work. Our departments in the different church papers are always open for anything from any source that will be helpful to the society and I am sure that the editors who have labored for us so long and faithfully will be encouraged by a manifestation of interest in their work. Let those of you who have ever felt the inspiration to higher effort that has been given you by a few words of appreciation from those you were laboring for, remember these sisters.

The advisory board has recently made arrangements for issuing the readings for the local societies in leaflet form, which may be had at the HERALD office for a small sum,—see notice in Home Column of HERALD for June 14, and in Daughters of Zion Department of Ensign for June 22. And we trust the sisters will avail themselves of this opportunity of getting the readings for distribution among their friends and neighbors, as well as for distribution in their own local society. It will be a good way to get this excellent literature into every home. There may be mothers of small children in your locality who can not leave these little ones to attend your meetings, and perhaps do not even take the HERALD. These leaflets will make it so easy for the local societies to see that such get the readings. It will be well to appoint committees to attend to this work.

We wish to call the attention of the sisters to the children's home fund, and ask them to give it their kindly help. Let those of you who are able to provide comfortable homes for your own loved little ones remember those who are not thus loved and provided for. It will be an excellent way to show our gratitude to our heavenly Father for the blessings we receive, to help provide a fund, as a thank-offering, to place in the hands of the Bishop, that he may have means to go to work with as soon as he can see the way open to build a home for these homeless children. Do not put it off, thinking to do something after a while. Do it now. The things we put off so seldom ever materialize. You may think you can do so little, that it is not worth while, but do not you know it is the many littles that make the great sum?

When I was in England a few years ago, I visited a grand old church that had stood there for hundreds of years, and I was told that the largest single subscription that was given for its erection was five pounds, or twenty-five dollars in our money; and I have thought many times since, What a forceful illustration it is of what combined efforts, though small by themselves, can accomplish.

Let us work together, not only to build homes for the homeless; but to make our homes a foretaste of the home we are trying to gain. There is no nobler place for women to fill than to preside in a home where love pervades the atmosphere, and order is observed in all its workings, while the glory of God is its aim.

Editors Herald: I wish to give my experience, and why I am a Latter Day Saint; for I think we all ought to give our experience, so others can see and know. The reason why I am a Latter Day Saint is because I have a soul to save; and, after hearing Brn. T. J. Beatty and F. J. Ebeling preach a few sermons, I was fully convinced that they had the true doctrine. Bro. Beatty said he was sent of God to preach, and I went to God in prayer, saying, if he was, and the Lord would enlighten my mind, and convince me that he was sent of God, that I would accept, and be baptized, and do his will whatsoever he called me to do. And by calling on Bro. Beatty to pray for me, although we were in different counties, I heard the whispering voice, and it was neither in my sleep nor in my dreams; and this is why I accepted, and why I am trying to be a Latter Day Saint. I was baptized, November 26, by Bro. T. J. Beatty. I ask the Saints to pray for me, as I am still hungering and thirsting for more righteousness, and I know the prayers of God's people will be heard. We are ever thankful to God for sending the two brethren mentioned, to tell us of this glorious latter-day message; for I know it is the power of God unto salvation, to those that believe. Ever praying for the advancement of Zion, I remain,

Your brother in the one true faith,

Editors Herald: I feel very lonely out here where I never have the chance to meet with God's people, but I am striving to obey the Master. Sometimes I fear, in spite of all I can do, I shall fall; but when I think of the promises the Master made to his children it makes me rejoice. It is truly a grand thought, that we by obedience may know the truth, and thereby be free.

I thank God that I was led to see the necessity of obeying his voice, and when I look back over my past life I am led to praise him for his loving kindness. In our Sunday-school a question came up in regard to the law, the ten commandments. I made the statement that the ten commandments were done away with or in Christ. And it seems to me that when we accept the gospel, and live it, then we do away with it by accepting Christ; but as we have some with us that bring the law in force to establish the Sabbath, or the seventh day, we got into an argument over the law. It might be all right to keep the seventh day, but I do not think we can get into the kingdom of God, just by Sabbath-keeping. These people talk on that more than anything else. The apostle Paul said the law was fulfilled in this one thing, Love thy neighbor as thyself; and I for one do not desire to be under the necessity of having the commandments in front of me to keep me from disobeying them. So, I believe that as I have been baptized into Christ, I have put on Christ, and hence if faithful, am an heir according to the promise. "The law made nothing perfect; but the bringing in of a better hope did."

Well, as we are all looking for evidence in support of the Book of Mormon, I will tell you what we have out here, and then you may judge whether it is of any value or not. I live on the Winnebago Indian Reservation and of course know a good many of the tribe. I had the pleasure of meeting one by the name of Louis Armel. He is a full-blood Indian; and, you may believe me or not, he is turning white. He has white spots all over his body. He says that the white is getting larger, and it is a very delicate white. He is an elder in the Presbyterian Church. He said he asked a doctor about it, and he was told that the red, or Indian color, would in time all leave him.

I ask an interest in the prayers of all God's people, that I may continue faithful to the end.

S. F. BUTTS.

BIRDSEYE, Indiana, June 21, 1905.

Editors Herald: Bro. I. P. Baggerly, missionary in charge, has just left here for Eckerty. We were truly glad to see him after so long an absence, to hear his fatherly counsel once more. A few of us have been neglected, and almost starving for spiritual food so necessary for the growth of the Saint; so we know how to appreciate a good sermon. Since I have been trying to superintend a Sunday-school I think I can comprehend some of the hardships of a missionary's life, and often think we could do more to brighten their way if we would. We could have our lights trimmed and burning, the beautiful rays of the Christian graces lighting up our surroundings, the Spirit of peace, love, and joy in our midst. Then what would there be to hinder an elder from preaching a good sermon? The angels seem hovering near, when we are pleasing in our heavenly Father's sight, and the minister could go on his way rejoicing in the truth, though he might meet with opposition from without. He does not mind that. It is this discord and spiritual death in the branches that hurt more than all outside opposition. The worst I ever felt discouraged was when I called on the school to help in children's day exercises. After giving out a dozen or more nice recitations, to find that no one had got their pieces,—the day coming and no one prepared for it! If it had not been for me and my little boys, everything would have been a failure. I happened to know several nice pieces, and the boys several nice temperance pieces and songs. I never let them know but what all the school would do their part, so we just went ahead, speaking, acting, and singing our songs, and had a good time after all. But how much nicer it could have been if all had done their part. Oh, how much faster the church would grow if all would do their part as a lively stone in the building. The missionary could do more, the waste places be built up, and Zion would be redeemed. Our blessed Redeemer would come, and peace reign from the rivers to the ends of the earth. In the spirit of the prophet we should cry out, Awake thou that sleepest. Gird yourselves, and prepare yourselves, for judgment must begin at the house of the Lord.

Yours in the work,
MRS. LIZZIE BAGGERLY.

A Few Queries.

Editors Herald: Can we prove that baptism is essential to salvation? If so in what way can water baptism be essential to salvation? Only by a full repentance, so clear that we are prepared to meet with the resurrection of the dead.

Why was Christ baptized by water? He was born in the same world that Nicodemus was born in, and he modeled the plan of Palestine, a new world, and he is the builder of it. We pretend to follow him, and claim to be loyal to that city, through water and the Spirit. How is it we get back into this old world and take part in electing "scribes," and "hypocrites," and "pharisees" into power every four years, fixing Moses' seat? What have we been doing? Did we follow Christ in the work he gave us to do by water and the Spirit? Have we turned back from the watery grave, and got back into this old home to help the wicked punish this old world that God will burn to ashes? How then do we claim we have been born again, and a gulf between Christ and the Devil made by the watery grave? Can we follow him, and yet be guilty of a rebellion to him in our building of this old world?

Unless we follow Christ our baptism is nothing but a sham, and the sow that was made clean has returned to the mire, and the dog has returned to his vomit, and it is of no use to preach up this old wicked world any longer.

D. W. NEWCOMB.

SEILING, Oklahoma, June 24, 1905.

Dear Herald: Having received instruction and encouragement many times by reading the HERALD I thought it might interest some to hear from this portion of the Lord's vineyard. Sunday, June 4, was set apart as children's day, when the Canadian Center Branch met in Chapman's grove on the north fork of the Canadian River, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, for Sunday-school. The lesson for the day was appropriate, proving the necessity of laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit. After the Sunday-school we had a good sermon by Bro. D. S. Crawley, proving beyond the shadow of a doubt the necessity for baptism by immersion, by one having authority, as well as the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit. After the sermon we went down to the river where Bro. James Yates baptized Myra Bell, the youngest daughter of Sr. A. F. Lincoln (formerly of Mallard Branch, Iowa, now a member of Canadian Center Branch) showing that she and her departed companion obeyed the command given in the latter days, for parents to instruct their children, so that at eight years of age they would understand the principles of faith, repentance, baptism, and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit.

I was gladly surprised, a few days before the baptism, to hear the knowledge this little child had of the first principles of the gospel. She told me she was going to try to obey the promptings of the Holy Spirit, and not listen to the evil one, after she was baptized.

Two more of the Master's lambs obeyed at the same time,—a little daughter of Bro. and Sr. James Yates, and one of Bro. and Sr. Bowers. And then Ben Chapman, a half Lamanite, a son of Amos Chapman, a famous Indian scout, went down and was baptized.

At two o'clock in the afternoon the candidates were confirmed; after this we had a sacrament-meeting at which we had a good degree of the Spirit.

We made the announcement that there would be preaching again on the 9th of July. Elders D. S. Crawley and James Yates expect to go to Cantonment to-day to preach to the Lamanites. Bro. and Sr. Williams, of Lamoni, will be glad to hear of this. Ever praying that we, as a people, may obey the command to come up higher, and to be careful not to do anything to bring reproach on the work, I remain,

Yours in the conflict,
JEPHTHA SCOTT.

UNION FURNACE, Ohio, June 29, 1905.

Editors Herald: The work in this place is at a standstill. There are only a few scattered Saints located here, and preaching has been done for a long time; yet we are trying so to live as to let the world know that we are Saints, and that we are not ashamed of the name; and we hope to so live that we will never bring disgrace or reproach upon the cause of Christ.

We had the pleasure of beholding a strange and lovely sight in the heavens at Union Furnace, Ohio, June 28, 1905, from half past eleven o'clock in the forenoon until between half past one and two o'clock in the afternoon. The day was very bright and clear and the sun shining in all his glory. The moon appeared, also a very bright star about ten degrees above, and a little to the north of the moon, and remained in plain view to the eye for over two hours. During this time the heavens seemed to put on an extreme dazzling brightness, which was very hard on the eyes, yet in all this brightness the moon and star shone out bright and clear, about midway between the horizon and zenith of the heavens. A great many people witnessed this strange and grand sight, and sign of the coming of Christ.

We were sitting at our desk at work when the telephone rang, and I was asked if I had seen the bright star in the heavens; replying I had not the thought came to my mind with such unspeakable joy: Lift up your heads, ye heirs of glory, for when ye see these things come to pass know ye that the time is nigh when your Savior will come and take up his kingdom and reign upon the earth. Going to the door, we gazed and wondered at the mighty works of God, who is giving warnings to his people that he has set to his hand for the last time to gather out his people; and that he will fulfill his word that there should be signs in the heaven above and in the earth beneath.

Such things help to confirm our faith in this latter-day work, which God has revealed to men upon the earth in these last days.

There are various theories advanced as to the cause, but as yet none have been able to give any reason that will stand a test, only that God was fulfilling his word.

Your brother in the gospel,

S. B. KRIEBEL.

ROSENDALE, Manitoba, June 29, 1905.

Editors Herald: Although but a short time in the missionary work I love the fight against the powers of darkness. For a few weeks I have been laboring under the supervision of Elder S. W. Tomlinson, who has just left the Treherrie field after a most successful five months' work, having baptized twenty-one converts here and three at Disley, Assiniboia.

The character of the work done here—drunkards sobered, filthy mouths cleansed, homes purified and made beautiful, and many of the sick healed, under S. W. T.'s administration, has aroused the jealousy and hence the ire of the sects around, and, unable to meet the elder in fair discussion, they have resorted to slander.

On my first Sabbath here I met Elder Tomlinson and many of the Saints at the Arbroath Schoolhouse, where the Presbyterian minister was holding forth on Mormonism, quoting from the Utah books, alleging us to be one and the same organization, and attributing to us the design, whenever we were strong enough, of introducing polygamy.

Having listened to all his charges against us of deceit, false pretenses, Adam-god worship, polygamy, etc., Elder Tomlinson asked for the name of the publishing house from which he had procured his authority and found it to be Deseret News Company, Salt Lake City, Utah. Elder Tomlinson said these were not our books, that our publishing house was at Lamoni, Iowa. A few minutes for explanation being refused, the elder announced a reply to be given on the following Thursday and offered to give half time to the reverend (?) gentleman if he would be present. No interruption was made by us till after the benediction had been pronounced, when the above notice and challenge were given, whereupon a great uproar ensued caused by an officer in their church who objected to the Mormons using the schoolhouse, the row being between a trustee (not of our faith) and the fire-eating official. There was also some discussion outside the schoolhouse.

The reverend gentleman and his official, who is also a justice of the peace, went around the school district early in the week and by ecclesiastical and other pressure got the schoolhouse closed against us. However, we secured a brother's house in the neighborhood and S. W. T. so completely knocked the props from under the reverend (?) gentleman's house of clay that many of the Presbyterians acknowledged that he, Tomlinson, had been misrepresented.

The next move of the adversary was to get a long notice of Reverend Hamilton's tirade in the Treherne Times, where he was said to have thoroughly exposed Mormonism or the Latter Day Saints, and it has so aroused our ire that there was almost a riot.

Under S. W. T.'s direction I indited a reply to the charges published against us, but the editor refused to publish it.

We have lately been attacked by a Methodist minister in another part of this field, who refused opportunity for reply after he had publicly promised it. He was careful not to use the Utah books, but his half-truths and allegations were more sinister because couched in a style of pretended honesty.

Many are inquiring and I am trying to continue the good work already accomplished.

The Saints are taking steps to erect a meeting-house of their own and have already secured a lot and some of the material.

Yours in the gospel,

ALFRED DORSETT.

BLAIR, Nebraska, July 2, 1905.

Editors Herald: To-day has brought us one of the hardest rains of the season, and because of it our services were not attended for the day, and as the Scriptures say, we know not what the night bringeth; but we do know this: that rain or shine, Saints of God should not let anything separate them from the love of God. And as John says, "This is love, that we keep his commandment," and if we do that mud will not stop us, but we will go if it be possible for us to do so. I notice that people do not stop for rain when they want to go on a journey for pleasure. God has called us to repentance: so let us repent of our slackness of duty and try to keep his commandments.

We are alive to God's work here, were just brought to life: that is, we are on the way. Our people are striving to get nearer together, and that means that they will be nearer God; for we draw nearer him by getting to love one another. I am glad to see this, as it will help God's work. I can not say we have done, or are doing, all we can; but I live in hopes of a brighter day for the near future, as the Saints seem to show a life in the work different from the past.

We are talking of buying a place of worship here; something we have never had, though we have stood in need of it always. It is a great help to our work to have a church of our own. One young sister, who works by the week, said she would give fifty dollars toward buying a church. That kind of faith well followed up will gain a crown.

I have been appointed district president and Bishop's agent for this (the Northern Nebraska) district, and hope all who need my help will let me know, and those who have tithes or offerings to give, may keep my address. I have appointed Bro. J. T. Weston as sub-agent for the Omaha Branch.

Now, as God has prospered you, you should remember his work needs money to carry it on. Also do not forget this, that God can get along without you; but you can not do without him. And if you do not do what he asks you to do, how can you expect him to do what you ask him to do for you?

I expect some of us are asking God daily to prosper us in this world's goods, and yet do not pay any tithing. We may live well,—so well that though we make seventy-five or one hundred dollars per month it is all used and we say we have no increase. This work is a work of sacrifice. So do what God commands you. Live right and you will receive the reward of the righteous.

You are praying daily for a chance to abide in the celestial kingdom, yet you are not living the celestial law, or the perfect law of God. Psalm 19:7 says, "The law of the Lord is perfect." Then if the law is perfect, how can we enter that kingdom of which it is the law, unless we make ourselves perfect by it? John 3:3 says, "Every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure." So put that down in your reminder, and see if you do not improve in spirituality.

With regards to all who are called to be Saints, and with a desire to walk in the ways of truth, I am,

HERBERT S. LYTLE.

OTWAY, Ohio, July 3, 1905.

Editors Herald: Dear Saints, I am truly glad that I obeyed the gospel of Christ when I did. It brings joy and satisfaction to live in obedience to the command of God. There are but few of us at this place. Isolated as we are, we are as sheep without a shepherd; but we claim the promise, Where two or three are gathered together in his name, he would be in the midst, and that to bless, and whatsoever they asked in his name, they should receive.

Just before the Savior ascended, he told the apostles to tarry at Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high; that is, with the Holy Ghost. When the day of Pentecost was fully come they were all with one accord in one place, and we find that they received the blessing: the Holy Ghost came on them. If we would meet together in spirit and in truth, we would get more blessings. God is no respecter of persons. Some people do not think what they assemble together for. It seems that the people in that day were like the people at this time, or some of them at least. We find in Acts 2:12 that they were in doubt as to these people who received the Holy Ghost, saying one to another, What meaneth this? They doubted, just as the people doubt Latter Day Saints in this day. But, praise the Lord, we have the Lord on our side. Others, mocking, said, These men are full of new wine. Peter informed them that they were not drunk as they supposed.

It seems to me that I can almost see them rejoicing. It seems that the people became concerned about their souls' salvation, and they asked Peter what they must do to be saved. Peter replied, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."

Dear Saints, let us come together with one accord; that is, for one purpose, in one mind, that we may get the blessing as they did on the day of Pentecost. We are too unfaithful. Let us put on the whole armor of God and fight manfully for the cause of Christ. The blessed Savior died that we might live. We must comply with the requirements of God, before we are entitled to the blessings. We must live our religion. We find in James something like this, Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves.

Hence, may we all be up and doing while it is day; let us all be wide awake, and put our trust in the Lord. May we ever be found in the light of God's dear Son, Jesus Christ.

Your brother in the one faith,

J. T. MITCHELL.

GAYLORD, Michigan, June 30, 1905.

Editors Herald: Bro. Leonard Stover and the writer, having been appointed to labor in one of the tents of the district, accordingly reared it in the little city of Gaylord last Monday, June 26. Apostle J. W. Wight, who had previously promised to assist us, came in time to occupy the first evening and has spoken each evening since, except one. The frank and honest manner in which he presents the gospel seems to meet with great favor with the people. There were about ninety adults present at the service last evening, and notwithstanding Bro. Wight spoke one hour, many expressed themselves that the sermon was too short. Some said, "We could sit and listen to you all night."

We have the tent beautifully located on the city hall grounds, this site having been procured by Bro. Thomas Hartnell, ex-sheriff of Otsego County, who lives just across the street, and in whose home we are domiciled.

Bro. Richard Hartnell, who for several years had charge of the electric plant, voluntarily came and furnished the tent with electric lights, which are much more convenient than the gas-line lamps.

We have everything very convenient and comfortable and, by the grace of God assisting us, we shall endeavor to do our part, leaving the results with him who doeth all things well.

J. A. GRANT.

WOODBINE, Iowa, July 2, 1905.

Editors Herald: One week ago to-day, it being children's day, Elder Kibler was privileged to lead fourteen precious souls into the waters of baptism, twelve of them being Sunday-school children, from a little over eight years to fifteen years old, and two were women. They were confirmed, after proper instructions pertaining to the ordinance of confirmation, and their present and future duties, the same evening, by Elder J. D. Donaldson and the writer. The branch and the parents were also shown their duties to the newly born.

Too many of our people forget their solemn obligations to the children, as though their work were done when they had led them to the water's brink, when, in reality it has but just begun. Where Satan has assailed the children once in the past he will now seek by manifold ways to lead their young minds into the devious paths of error; hence it requires on our part, a loving guardianship, a tender watchcare, and a wise leading in the path of holiness. No harsh or unkind treatment, or unwise or sneering reflections should be indulged in by the parents if the little feet stray from the right path. Sneers never convince. They may disgust, and fill the young mind with hate. Harsh treatment never converted the wayward heart; it may lead to hypocrisy—the most despicable of evil attributes—but it will never convince the soul of the blessedness of pure and undefiled religion; and that is what the young mind needs to know; and it will naturally look to the parents and older brothers and sisters for an example. If it is not found in their lives, the child will become bewildered, or perhaps disgusted with the hollow pretensions, and conclude that religion is a solemn mockery, and they want none of it. Then let us as parents be consistent, live the religion we profess, every day of our lives. Mere Sunday religion, or just while we are in church, will never recommend a godly life to our children.

Let us set the example of prayer in our families, with and for our children,—not a mere mouthing of set phrases, or an empty, formal worship, but humble, contrite prayer,—“worship in the beauty of holiness,”—then our children will feel the warmth of holy zeal breathed in every word, the sacred fire will kindle in their hearts and inspire them with holy desire, and they too will be led to pray. Never force a child to offer a form of prayer, but lead them in love to the sacred altar. Pray with and for them. Never make worship tedious to a child. Let your services be brief, but full of spirituality, and let your daily lives be in harmony with your prayers, always remembering that precept without example will fail to impress your children with the blessedness of a truly religious life. Advise, caution, instruct, and warn in the spirit of love, but never seek to force your child into the service of God.

GATHER THE LITTLE ONES INTO THE FOLD.

Gather the little ones into the fold, ere the darkening shadows fall,

Before the dread serpent's slimy folds has dragg'd them into its thrall—

Before the prowling wolf of sin shall close his fierce red jaws
On our loved ones, gather them in, and save them from its woes.

Gather the little ones into the fold, while the heart is pure and free,

From the cross that mars the precious gold, as it marr'd both you and me—

Before the soul shall ruin'd be by the damning blot of sin, Oh let each sinew and nerve be strained to gather the little ones in.

Gather the little ones into the fold, for the wolf is prowling near,

Eager to pray on those precious souls, who to Jesus are so dear.

Fold not your arms while they learn to tread the slippery paths of sin,

But save them from a doom so dread, oh, tenderly gather them in.

“Gather the little ones into my fold,” the good Shepherd's voice now calls,

He would his precious lambs behold, within those sacred walls.
The task is ours, shall we heedless be, and leave them the serpent's prey?

Gather them safely into the fold, “While yet it is called to-day.”

CHARLES DERRY.

DOW CITY, Iowa, July 6, 1905.

Editors Herald: Everything in these parts has seemingly assumed an equilibrium after the noise and bustle of our nation's holiday, the Fourth of July. I was glad to note that the orator of the day, at our celebration, did not forget to mention the fact that under the folds of “Old Glory” the blue and the gray had clasped hands and the nation's wounds have been healed. One by one the old comrades are dropping off, and the old bronze buttons are growing scarce; yet they are still the emblem of “loyalty, fraternity, and charity.” Those who wear them have not forgotten the noise and smoke of battle; neither have they forgotten the heartaches, the partings, and the tears. They have not forgotten the prayers and groans of the wounded and dying, though they thank God that the storm has passed by, and that the sun of peace is now smiling, to a large extent, over our land. Is it any wonder that soldiers of the blue and the gray are brothers?

This being true of those who have marched under the “red, white, and blue,” how much more true should it be of the soldiers of Christ who have marched and fought side by side, under the blood-stained banner of “King Immanuel,” which is still the emblem of peace and love, and the ensign of truth and victory. Ah, under this banner, too, the blood of the righteous has been shed, and the soldiers of Christ still remember the heartaches, the partings, and the tears; and they, too, have heard the prayers, and listened to the moans of the wounded and dying. Ah, more! they have seen the halo of glory encircling the righteous and looked upon the calm features of those who have died in the Lord; and have realized that, to such, death was indeed sweet. The battle is still on; but in the name of Christ, and by his power, the victory shall be won.

To the carnal mind these things may not seem true, and the evidences insufficient to establish them as facts, because they can be fully realized and known only by those who receive of God the testimony of his Holy Spirit. But no one is denied this favor who will comply with the conditions. The truth of the gospel and the fruits of the Spirit are like sparkling gems adorning the crowns of those who succeed in developing the Christ character. In union there is strength, and in peace there is power.

Since writing in May the writer has been laboring at Mallard, Coalville, Auburn, and Denison. As a rule the Saints are busy and happy, and rejoice in the truths of the "restored gospel."

Some things are a little discouraging, though there is time and opportunity for improvement and development, and many things to encourage and help; for the Spirit bears record, and the testimony is true.

On our way home the writer called at his daughter's, Sr. Isabel E. Leise, near Vail, Iowa, and enjoyed a visit with her and family. Here I baptized their eldest daughter, which shows the effectual work of a Christian mother. Their second daughter, Ruth, is nearly ready to follow her sister into the church of Christ; and it seems that Edwin is too good a man to stand out long after wife and two daughters are within the true fold.

The kindness of those whom we have labored among is remembered. May God continue to bless his people.

Yours in gospel bonds,

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

LANCASTER, Wisconsin, June 28, 1905.

Editors Herald: My time since General Conference has been pretty much occupied. I first held some preaching-services in my own neighborhood, where we have a few Saints. I would say also it was in this community that Reverend H. J. Keepers and the writer held a discussion one year ago. Since that time this reverend (?) has been silenced from preaching. I also have since heard that charges have been preferred against him in order that he might be disfellowshipped. It now seems that soon light and truth would find its way into the honest heart, and that God's people would be gathered out.

The few Saints at this place now have a Sunday-school organized, where they meet each Sunday afternoon. This is followed by a prayer-meeting, which is also commendable.

From this place I went to Soldiers Grove and held some meetings, where we also have a nice band of energetic Saints, and where the missionary finds a welcome. I also went on to Readstown, which is a new opening. I secured a hall and commenced holding meetings there with a nice hearing, and some became much interested in the gospel, and I have reason to believe that there will be a good ingathering there in the near future.

Shortly after this I received a letter from Elder J. O. Dutton requesting me to join him at Flora Fountain. He had then been preaching at this place for about one week. June 10, I joined him. The following Sunday Bro. Dutton had the pleasure of baptizing eight young ladies into the church of God. We continued our services the following week up to Friday evening, when there were three more who desired to be baptized that evening. We all went to the river, and the writer baptized them. The interest continued to grow, we enjoyed great liberty in preaching, so we continued right along up to June 18, when I baptized three more. By this time the news had gone for miles around, and seemingly every one in the whole country was in a stage of wonderment, and the news had gone out about the great revival at Flora Fountain, conducted by the boy preachers.

The following Monday, at half past two o'clock in the afternoon, Bro. Dutton was called upon to baptize four, after which we went to the residence of one that had been baptized, where we held confirmation services. In this service the Spirit of the Lord was with us in great power, wherein the gift of prophecy was heard in our midst declaring his word unto us, which was received with joyful heart. That meeting will long be remembered by those who were there.

Bro. J. C. Edgington was called to the office of priest, and Bro. John Edwards was called to the office of deacon. At the close of this service another young man desired to be baptized, and Bro. Dutton immersed him.

This day reminded us all of the day when Peter declared the gospel on the day of Pentecost, when the Holy Ghost came as a rushing mighty wind, and rested upon each of them, and they spoke as the Spirit gave them utterance, and the people said, What must we do to be saved?

On Tuesday evening the writer had the pleasure of baptizing two, and on Wednesday evening one more; so we continued our meetings over the next Sunday, July 2. The same day Bro. Jasper led three more candidates into the water. This concluded our services for a period of time. Surely the Lord was with us, and to him be all the honor and glory, who giveth us the victory through our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

I feel to say that the work is onward in our district. I also believe we are living in a time when God is hastening his work. I am brought to realize more and more the great responsibilities that are being placed upon me as his servant. Nevertheless, not my will be done, but his. Ever praying that the blessing of Israel's God may be with the people of Zion, that our lives may be perfected in Christ, so that when he shall be revealed in his glory we all may share in the same and sit down in our Father's kingdom with joy and never-ending happiness,

In gospel bonds,

GEO. J. BROOKOVER.

BELMONT, Nebraska, July 2, 1905.

Editors Herald: On the 11th of May, after a two months' stay at home in the land of Zion, we find ourselves again in the mission assigned us by the church, trying to do gospel-work, yet under very trying circumstances. Arriving in North Platte, we visited the Saints in the sand-hills, holding only two meetings during nearly three weeks, as it rained about all the time. We arrived here with the gospel tent over a week ago, the brethren (Prettyman, Self, and Mingle) setting the tent up last Thursday expecting to begin work that evening. But in a few hours rain, hail, and wind broke forth, drenching everything through. By lowering the large tent it was all right. Friday afternoon cleared up, so we held one meeting, but Saturday evening the storm broke on us again, and this is Sunday nearly noon, and still it pours.

Missionary work has been very slow this year, so far. While we feel somewhat discouraged, yet there is a comforting thought: We are here ready to do our duty whenever the Lord will favor us with clear weather.

Saints living near are doing all they can for our comfort and the good of the work.

Bro. Prettyman, with whom we are to travel, is with us, and feels very cheerful under such trying times. We had a very good audience out Friday night, notwithstanding the tent was very damp.

This is a very pretty country; plenty of nice pine-trees. Yet the country is very thinly settled. We try to feel hopeful, and trust good may be done during the year through our feeble efforts.

MRS. R. O. SELF.

THEODORE, Alabama, July 3, 1905.

Editors Herald: Our hearts are made glad every day of our lives in the gospel, inasmuch as we are worthy to enjoy that peace, joy, and happiness that cometh from none but God. Oh, that we may live more worthy of his blessings in the future. Our earnest desire is to be valiant soldiers in the army of the Lord. Pray for us, dear Saints, that we may continually watch and pray, and be able to withstand the powers of Satan, until the end of the victory; knowing, at the end of the race, we are promised eternal life.

I find great need of God's Holy Spirit each day, for there are burdens and cares to be borne all along life's rugged pathway.

My husband and myself are striving to obey the gospel in its fullness; and I know if we are trustful and humble as we should be we shall meet our Redeemer rejoicing.

Sometimes darkness seems all about us, but then we look to him and pray; and by his calm and unerring Spirit we are made strong.

Your sister in the gospel,

MRS. HULDA TILLMAN.

COVINGTON, Kentucky, June 29, 1905.

Editors Herald: Just a few lines to let you all know how the work is getting along down in this part of the country. We have in Covington, Kentucky and Cincinnati, Ohio, about ten Saints, and we feel that we are traveling up a steep road. The members are all alive and making a strenuous effort to secure a meeting-hall. At present we meet at the homes of Brn. Damon, Hanner, and Pittman; but feel the necessity of a new hall where meetings can be conducted regularly.

A fund has been started for this purpose, and we extend an invitation to all who may feel like assisting a worthy cause.

Bro. W. A. Damon, 118 East Eleventh Street, is appointed to receive all contributions.

We feel that God will bless our efforts, and we ask all the Saints to remember us in their prayers, as well as the advancement of God's work.

Your brother in the gospel,

HARRY PASSMAN.

BOWDEN, Texas, May 28, 1905.

Editors Herald: I love this latter-day work, and it is all to me. I know that the Lord is in it; but, in the language of Heman C. Smith, I do not believe that it is all the Lord's work. I understand that it is a coöperative work between God and man.

I was ordained a priest soon after I was baptized; did some preaching; and, being the first one in the community where I lived to obey the gospel, I had a hard fight. Later on, July 12, 1900, I was ordained an elder under the hands of H. O. Smith, Ellis Short, and J. D. Erwin. Since that time I have served as branch president of the Manchester Branch, as best I could by the Lord's help. For three years after I was placed in charge of the branch I rode and drove twenty miles through rain and mud; in all kinds of weather, to meet with the Saints, to encourage them, and build up the work. I sacrificed time, and money, as long as I had money to sacrifice, to help the work along in this part. I went far and near to carry the elders and to assist them to open up new places. I only wish I could have done more. But right here I want to relate something that I would like some one to interpret. On the first or second night after I was ordained an elder, I had a dream or vision of the night, in which I found myself on a platform of some kind about twenty-four by twelve feet, one side of which was elevated somewhat higher than the other. I was on the low side, and right on the edge, seemingly, in a condition that I could not get any further without help, and was very uneasy. Just in front of me, and toward the high side of the platform, I saw

Bro. E. A. Erwin looking back at me with a very pleasant look, as though he wished for me to come on, and seemed to want to help me, but could not render any assistance. On the farther end of the platform, toward the right and toward the high side, was a group of three or four men sitting with faces together, engaged in some kind of business, I did not understand what. I was pleading for help, but no one seemed to pay any attention to me except the brother in front of me, and he could not help me.

At this point the dream passed away, and it was a wonder to me. I could not solve it. So I continued to battle along, trying to do the best I could. I paid my tithing on about all that I possessed, roughly estimated. But somehow or other I got enthralled and got behind, and in a condition that I have not been able to do anything in tithing for about three years, being in debt for land bought, and having a large family to support.

With love to all,

P. B. BUSSELL.

ESCATAWPA, Mississippi, July 2, 1905.

Dear Herald: I am a church-member, but that is about all, though I have belonged to the church for twelve long years. I am sorry to say this, but there is no harm in telling the truth. I was appointed vice-president of the Religio here, not very long ago. Sr. Huldah Porter, who was the president, had to leave, and I failed to attend to duty put upon me, and the Religio has now broken up. But we are going to organize again, and we hope for success. I ask you to pray for me, and I shall endeavor to travel a different road than formerly.

Your brother,

E. E. MILLER.

The Northwest Reunion.

The first reunion held by the Reorganized Church in the Northwest, convened at Bro. Neill's, on Weyburn Plains, from Friday evening, June 30, to Monday, July 3. Approximately, forty Saints attended, most of them from within a radius of fifty miles in the territory, Assiniboia. Three of the missionaries were present: Elders J. L. Mortimer, from Alberta, S. W. Tomlinson from Manitoba, and Alvin Knisley, who had been laboring for some time in Assiniboia. The preaching was by the three named and by Elder E. E. Williams from Montana, who came to homestead.

All went off quite harmoniously. The Spirit prevailed throughout. The gifts were enjoyed; tongues and prophecy. The young man who was baptized in the spring, and who had been one of Dowie's seventies, was called to the office of priest and ordained in the same meeting. His name is Robert Bodway.

Sunday afternoon, Daniel Sandage, formerly of Lamoni, was baptized and confirmed at the water's edge.

The Saints were greatly encouraged and confirmed, some of them by witnessing what they never witnessed before. Those who drove brought their eatables and blankets along, and all went in for a good time. A desperate struggle was made by the prince of darkness to frustrate their designs, but he was defeated and the Saints prevailed. With this precedent it is expected that henceforth such meetings will be more frequent.

Last summer I believe the first Latter Day Saint picnic was held at Treherne, Manitoba.

The fields of labor to which the different missionaries repair are as follows: Prince Albert region, Alvin Knisley; Northern Manitoba, S. W. Tomlinson; Disley, Treherne, and New Ontario, J. L. Mortimer. Elder Dorsett, who was not present, is laboring in Manitoba. There have been several ordinations of late; new branches are springing up; the prospects are very bright.

Independence Items.

We have no interesting first-hand information to give in regard to the commercial and municipal interests of the royal suburb with its eighty-five hundred population, according to the last census, other than that our city's public works, manufactories, banks, stores, and places of business all seem to indicate conditions tending to thrift and onward progress, notwithstanding the newspapers tell us that "had it not been for the 'Missouri for Missourians' element, this State, to-day, would be teeming with giant industries, all of the wonderfully rich land would be tilled, and the State would have taken its rightful place in the front rank of the prosperity column."

It must be tacitly admitted that close proximity to a growing metropolis like Kansas City, with its onrushing tide of worldly and selfish competition, exerts its influence for both good and evil; and all, even the Saints, are directed more or less toward the vortex of the frenzied hurry and worry of this strenuous age.

The personnel, in general, of things pertaining to church and society here, to some extent, illustrates the decline from the simple life of our fathers and mothers in the gospel, and the advance made toward the charmed circle of a transitory and fashionable world.

It takes a goodly degree of steadfastness of purpose to overcome the inclination to patronize the socials and festivals, wedding and birthday anniversaries, surprise parties, musicales and picnics; then appear the excursions, pleasure drives, and walks to the ice-cream parlors for sodas and "sorghum sundæes"; and following these are the great stores with their window displays of bird-millinery,—"a few left," hats that flare, and suits that are embroidered, beruffled and betucked, starched, frilly things, hand-made and tailor-made, and no end to "hot weather bargains."

But we must not rest here, for there are the comfort and luxury of conveyance to the fishing and swimming lakes, and the out-door theaters, and last though not least, to the opera, which our music-loving young people consider far from being "objectionable places of amusement."

They say "there is something about the Congress of this great and glorious country of ours that spoils a man," and it occurs to us that there is something about the vanities and fashions of this vain and inconstant world that is actually unbecoming to the Latter Day Saints.

After seasons of this kind of "dry weather that is necessary for the wheat harvest," we have of late occasionally enjoyed a few hours of refreshing rain, and no doubt the torrid temperature has kept some away from the mid-week prayer-meetings.

There are many at present severely afflicted, and at the meetings constantly remembered in prayer.

A feeling of sadness at our last prayer-meeting seemed to pervade the atmosphere on account of these cases of suffering in our midst; but on the evening of the 27th joy was in the hearts of the Saints who had assembled to enjoy a musicale given by the young people, and the program was excellent and much appreciated by those present. The careful endeavor, skill, and perseverance displayed are virtues worth the cultivating, and doubtless would be commended by men of attainment like Judge Evans, whose address before Graceland students the Saints have the privilege of reading in the HERALD. He believed our entire life,—our social hours of recreation and repose, as well as the monotonous every-day duties of life should be seasoned with thoughts of "devotion and unselfish purposes, and only with a désiré to promote and advance the community in which we live."

What a noble idea! Our calling and "charge" before God and the church has been a most sacred one, and as the words, "Lay thine hand upon him" were uttered in blessing and command upon Israel's "son of Nun," so to the saints of latter days the Spirit's words have been spoken, full of import and responsibility.

Another injunction of ye olden time was, "Ye shall keep my Sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary." The park season is now at its height, and many do not think it necessary to heed this, while a few by a constant attendance at church services are lending a salutary influence.

The drowning of a beloved young brother, O. L. Highman, at Fairmount Park, on the 4th inst., was a sad occurrence to all of us, and his funeral took place at the church where a large number of the Saints were gathered. The obsequies were conducted by Bro. Garrett, and the sermon was preached by Bro. H. H. Robinson.

On children's day there was an attendance of seven hundred and twenty-three, with forty-two visitors, and the baptism of thirty children formed a part of the eleven o'clock service.

The speakers for last Sunday were Bro. A. H. Parsons, who in the morning's sermon referred at length to the work being done by the faithful Saints of Chelsea Park, and the effort to complete the building of a church there. Considering the heated atmosphere, quite a number gathered in the evening to hear Bishop Kelley. Mr. W. C. Clock, from Bethany Hospital, occupied the latter part of the hour, and a generous contribution was taken up for the benefit of that worthy institution.

The Bishopric.

NOTICE OF APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

The Saints and friends of the Pottawattamie District, Iowa, will please take notice that at the last conference of said district the former agent, Bro. J. P. Carlile, resigned his office and Bro. J. A. Hansen, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, Box 116, R. F. D. No. 2, was duly recommended and has been appointed agent of the Bishopric of said Reorganized Church in and for the said district. We take pleasure in recommending Bro. Hansen to the Saints and friends interested in the work of the Master, and trust he may have the kind and hearty aid of every lover of the truth in said district.

The Bishopric also especially commend the work of Bro. J. P. Carlile in his efforts in the past as agent and for which we extend to him on this occasion thanks for his assistance and carefulness in office, trusting the Lord may bless and reward him in his own way and time.

In behalf of the Bishopric,
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.
LAMONI, Iowa, July 3, 1905.

Fourth Quorum of Elders.

To the Fourth Quorum of Elders: My request to you (soon after General Conference) for your address has only been responded to by thirteen of over ninety members. I have written some to their old address and my letters have returned to me, so I am helpless to aid you until you send me your present address. No elder can afford not to be in touch with his quorum. We desire to send you a copy of the new resolutions. Please send your address at once.

Yours in bonds,
C. G. LEWIS, President.
BOYNE CITY, Michigan, July 1, 1905.

Conference Postponement.

The semiannual conference of the Seattle and British Columbia District is hereby postponed to the first Saturday and Sunday in September, which is in accordance with the request of the missionary in charge and with Bro. Joseph's itinerary of his travels among the Saints on the Pacific coast. Members of the district are reminded that conference is to be held in Tacoma, Washington, and that Bro. Joseph is booked for Tacoma on these dates. Branches are especially requested to hold their business-meetings not later than the latter part of July, thereby enabling clerks to mail their reports the first of August to F. W. Holman, 1202 1/2, Seventh Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

WILLIAM JOHNSON, President.
F. W. HOLMAN, Secretary.

Expelled.

By an action of the Northern Michigan District, in conference assembled, at Cadillac, Michigan, June 17, 1905, H. J. Devrees was severed from the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, upon the charge of apostasy, a court of elders having previously found him guilty of said charge.

J. A. GRANT, President.

Central Texas Conference Correction.

Central Texas conference meets July 15, instead of July 25, as published in HERALD.

E. W. NUNLEY, President.

Ten-Day Meeting.

There will be a ten-day meeting at Minium's Grove, one mile north and two miles east of Piedmont, Canadian County, Oklahoma, beginning July 14. Any one wishing to come and camp on the grounds will find it a pleasant place. H. K. ROWLAND.

Two-Day Meeting.

August 12 and 13, 1905, the Salem Branch, in Shelby County, Iowa, at their regular place of meeting, in schoolhouse near Persia, will hold a two-day meeting. It is expected that Patriarchs C. Derry and C. E. Butterworth will be the principal speakers. All invited. R. WIGHT.

DOW CITY, Iowa, July 6, 1905.

Reunion Notices.

The annual reunion of the Clinton, Missouri, District will convene at Taborville, Missouri, August 11 to 19, 1905, at the famous sulphur springs, the missionary force, with other prominent speakers, are expected. Wood, and straw for bedding will be free to all; corn will be on the grounds for sale; pasture at reasonable rates. Any wishing tents or information, address Charles H. Athey, Taborville, Missouri. C. H. Athey, L. A. Lyon, I. A. Roberts, committee.

The Southeastern Illinois reunion will begin Friday, August 4, and hold ten days. It will be held at the Brushcreek Church, eight miles south of Xenia, Illinois, ten or twelve miles west of Jeffersonville, on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad. Those coming from a distance, and wanting conveyance from Xenia and Jeffersonville, can correspond with Samuel Hoover, Xenia, Illinois, R. F. D. No. 5. Those coming overland with teams, inquire for Zenith, Illinois, the little town near the Brushcreek Church. Good speakers will be provided. I. N. White is expected to attend. As many as can bring tents, strawticks, and bedding. Will try to provide tents for those who do not bring them. A boarding-house will be located on the grounds, where meals can be procured at a reasonable price. F. M. Davis, David Smith, F. L. Sawley, committee.

Our last fall reunion and this spring conference adjourned to meet at San Bernardino, time to be set by district president. I herewith designate Friday, August 4, as the time for the convening of the reunion of the Southern California District, to continue over Sunday the 13th, Friday will be devoted to arranging camp, etc., with probably an evening service. Saturday, at 10 a. m., district conference will convene, at which time a permanent organization of the reunion will be effected. It was the expressed wish of the last reunion that the coming meeting be held the latter part of August, but realizing that some of the brethren may be desirous of attending the Northern California reunion, which convenes early in September, I have thought it expedient to depart thus far from instructions. I will be answerable to the body for the presumption for making this change. Offering, as satisfactory reason for their action, the plea that they could not attend to the work assigned to them, the committee on reunion location resigned; the same has been accepted, and I herewith appoint the following to act as a reunion committee with power to care for and make all preliminary arrangements for the reunion: A. E. Jones, Peter Kaufmann, A. M. Green, James Miller, F. B. Van Fleet. This committee will meet at their earliest convenience or confer in writing as they may think best. Due announcement will be given the Saints by them as to the exact location of the ground, character of transportation, general accommodations, and cost of camp outfit, etc. I am not authorized to announce any speakers for the reunion other than the local ministry. If other talent is attainable and arrangement can be made for their presence, due notice will be given. This is the first reunion to be held in San Bernardino to my knowledge. The Saints there have been forbearing, and have practiced so much self-denial, that it will seem base ingratitude on our part if we do not reciprocate and make this the largest attended reunion ever held in the district. The reunion is not an outing or seaside diversion. It is a spiritual reality which, if properly comprehended, means the spiritual uplift of the entire district. A good grove can be secured. All facilities will be provided. If possible we will have a cooperative dining-hall with meals at minimum price. I have felt for a long time that a reunion at San Bernardino would be of incalculable good to the branch there. Let the whole district unite and make this a success. Religio and Sunday-school conventions will be held some time during reunion. T. W. Williams, president.

The Eastern Oklahoma District reunion will convene at Terlton, Oklahoma, August 4, 1905. Terlton is about five miles east of Jennings, Oklahoma, ten miles south of Cleveland, Oklahoma, and thirty miles west of Tulsa, Indian Territory, on the A. V. & W. Railroad, Frisco System. Plenty of free pasture and good spring water for all. It is hoped that the Saints from Eastern Oklahoma and the Indian Territory will try to attend and help us to make this reunion a success. There will be a cooperative boarding-house on the grounds; meals not more than ten cents. T. L. McGeorge, F. M. Manzey, George VanSickle, committee.

Northwestern Kansas District reunion will be held August 12, 1905, and over the second Sunday, four and one half miles southeast of Gaylord. We think Brn. I. N. White and Henry Kemp will be with us. Will have hay for horses, but no pasture. S. J. Madden, F. S. Ward, John Teeters, committee.

The Saints of the Central Nebraska District will hold a reunion at Inman, Nebraska, commencing September 30, at 9 a. m. We anticipate having a good force of preachers and a pleasant gathering. Hay, fuel, and other accommodations will be free to those who wish to camp. Those not of the church are cordially invited to attend these meetings and become better acquainted with the Latter Day Saints and their faith. Those desiring further information write Levi Gamet, secretary of committee, Inman, Nebraska.

The reunion of Western Oklahoma, will begin September 1, 1905, at Red Moon, Rodger Mills County. The conference of the Oklahoma District convenes at same time and place. A fine grove has been selected for the meeting, and we hope the Saints will come from far and near, and make the meeting a success. Fred A. Smith and H. O. Smith expect to be present. S. J. Hinkle, president; H. O. Smith, associate minister in charge.

The Moorhead reunion will convene at Moorhead, Iowa, beginning September 8, and ending September 18. Everything has been done to get the grounds in as good condition as possible. It is hoped that all will take especial interest to make this reunion a grand success, not only because this is the oldest and largest reunion of the church, but also for the reason that a series of lectures (?) on "Mormonism unmasked" were delivered here a year ago. The grounds are not as good as at Dow City, but we have lots of room and an abundance of good shade-trees. Railroad rates, prices for rental of tents, pasture for horses, etc., will be published later. Thomas Strand, secretary.

The Southern Nebraska District will hold a reunion at Nebraska City, in Bro. Briggs' grove, one mile due west of the Saints' Church, August 25 to September 4. Tents, and any information in respect to the reunion, can be obtained by writing the secretary prior to August 10. We can furnish a 10 by 12 tent for $1.25, plus freight. All orders for tents accompanied by the cash should be in by August 15, as no more tents will be ordered than are spoken for. All single individuals wishing to attend the reunion the whole or a part of the time without renting a tent, will be provided for by the committee at reasonable rates. It has been decided by the committee that it will be an advantage, to the Saints attending the reunion, to have a boarding-tent, and to furnish meals as near cost as possible, thus relieving the visiting Saints of an undesirable task. John Clawson, secretary, 705 North Sixth Street, Nebraska City, Nebraska.

Conference Notices.

The ministry and Saints of Southern Indiana District are hereby notified to convene in conference with the Hope Branch, near Derby, Indiana, July 15, at 10 a. m. The branches will be prompt in sending their reports. We expect some of our chief missionaries will be in attendance. I. P. Baggerly, president, Sulphur, Indiana.

The conference of the Northeastern Texas and Choctaw District will convene at Avery, Texas, Saturday, August 5, and a reunion will follow, holding over Sunday the 13th. T. J. Sheppard, A. Z. Rudd, presidents.

Convention Notices.

The Sunday-school convention of the Northeastern Texas and Choctaw District will convene at Avery, Texas, Friday, August 4, at 11 a. m. A. L. Rudd, secretary.

The Kirland District Sunday-school convention will convene in Akron, Ohio, August 10, 1905, at 10 a. m. Let all, who can do so, be in attendance. D. A. Anderson, superintendent.

PUBLIC DISCUSSIONS.

Public discussions—debates they are more frequently called—are not new features in our work, nor is a presentation of the subject of such discussions new to the readers of the HERALD; from the beginning of the organization of the church our people have been obliged to meet in the public arena those holding to differing beliefs and to various shades of opinion. The aggressive character of truth itself forces its claims upon the attention of the people, and our opponents, or more properly speaking, those who differ from us in faith, are often moved to defend against our statements and claims, in defense or justification of the positions they hold; we are also obliged to defend against direct attacks upon our faith. Under these conditions well established rules have been accepted as essential to the proper and successful prosecution of such features of work, such rules being based upon experience old and new.

One of the brethren in charge of a leading field of labor and one having had extended experience in general ministerial work writes as follows on the subject, to which attention is called:

I have a number of debates under advisement and some of them may materialize. I find our opponents are not so ready to meet us upon "church propositions" as they have been in former times; they fear being unchurched, hence are seeking discussion of propositions that will more readily let their organizations out of the fight. Some of the brethren have failed to heed our instructions, wherein we have advised and admonished them to first confer with the general missionaries in charge before agreeing upon propositions. Their opponents have sought an advantage that was not due them and have crept out of a fair fight by compromising us to debate propositions that were unfair to us. When considering our opponents we also have something at stake. We now are living in that age of the church when we may assert our rights, more fully so than in the past. Let our brethren remember this. If we go down in debate with our church proposition, what better, if any, have our opponents to offer us? Must we accept their organizations as from God without an investigation such as we have been subjected to? I think not.

History, ancient and modern, teaches us that many men when they can not meet propositions or facts fairly, resort to unfair methods to accomplish their objects. This is true in religion as well as in politics and other fields of action. Leading opponents to Christianity in the days of Christ and his apostles resorted to unfairness, cunning, and even violence in their determination to overthrow the work of God; and the experiences of the church in this dispensation have not been dissimilar from those of their ancient brethren. However, as public sentiment becomes more and more opposed to resort to violence, other weapons than open persecution are resorted to, and what was accomplished or sought to be accomplished by open violence now is sought under misrepresentation and unfair advantage. Leading opponents of the faith of the Reorganized Church have openly declared "Mormonism," as they term it, to be fraudulent in character and destructive to the moral principles of the people and detrimental to society in general; they have therefore demanded that we deny propositions embodying their sentiments concerning us, or that we affirm others equally unfair, claiming such to be the only issues. Our men, posted on the real issues, have of course decried such unfair misrepresentations of the faith and have insisted that all systems of faith and all orders of belief were in the field open to inspection, and that the people were interested in extending the investigation beyond the faith of the Saints, including the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith and other questions incidental to the establishment of the church, up to and running through all the claims of the various religious bodies and their founders. These are plain, self-evident propositions and need to be insisted upon, and no one acting in the interests of the church is required to pay attention to any who would seek to evade the justness and correctness of such a position further than to make plain the fallacy thereof. With modern Christianity divided in opinion and with the growing subdivisions and separatists composing such divisions, the claim of any to immunity from investigation is manifestly a false claim and its unfair character susceptible of easy demonstration before the people.

The day has come when the masses of the people are not so closely bound by creeds and tenets as formerly. Liberalizing influences are bringing much of compensation. If many of the people "don't care" what a man believes, they are opposed to proscription and misrepresentation, and in favor of a fair show to everybody to think and act in liberty of conscience. Our people should insist upon these principles and demand that both sides be heard, fairly, impartially. Truth has nothing to fear so long as it is left free to combat error; our opponents should be held to the scriptural injunction, "Prove all things"; not a part, but all. They are bound by the requirements of the New Testament in their claims equally as are we.

All our people are no doubt interested in such measures as will bring the faith before the people, hence all are interested in public discussions having that object in view. However, all are not interested in the same manner, or rather all are not vested with the same responsibilities, hence such responsibilities should be recognized in full; and as a consequence consultation be had with those in charge before propositions or agreements are entered upon.

It is not always easy to discern the object of an opponent nor to foresee the methods he may employ. Past experience demands that those responsible for results and those experienced in concluding arrangements therefor should not be compromised by overzealous or untimely efforts made to provide for public discussion. If the minister responsible for arrangements for discussion can not be present, he should be left free to provide a representative to act as his diplomatic agent. The interests of the church demand that the rule established under the regulations of the church by those in charge of the general work shall be honored fully as essential to its prosperity.

This is an old subject, we are aware, possibly not new to the mass of the HERALD readers; but recent instances of violation of the rule referred to apparently justify specific reference to it. In a number of cases serious embarrassment has been caused and much unnecessary correspondence required to offset the maneuverings of "slippery" men whose object seems to be to profit by what they can do against us. It is a feature of error to clothe itself with plausibility, and so skillfully is it done that great temporary advantage is often secured thereby. While this feature is not by any means confined to any one error or to any one series of errors, it certainly, from necessity, has become a favorite method in the hands of men apparently unprincipled in securing what they want in the way of propositions for debate.

Another phase of the question necessary to be considered is, that debates with such men may do more harm than good unless such rules are agreed to as permit those meeting them and moderators to keep them within proper bounds. Any minister of the church has enough of mental and physical strain upon him to meet erroneous theology in discussion and to represent the work in such way as its high character and important interests demand. There is no need that he be unduly burdened, the real issues complicated and beclouded, and the prejudices of the people aroused as a result of bad or imperfect work at the start.

Much more might be said; however, if this reference to the subject proves helpful to any upon whom rests the burden of advocacy and defense, all well and good. We trust none of the readers will object to reference to an old subject.

If we stand idly by, if we seek merely swollen, slothful ease and ignoble peace, if we shrink from the hard contests where men must win at hazard of their lives and at risk of all they hold dear, then the bolder and stronger peoples will pass us by, and win for themselves the domination of the world.
—Theodore Roosevelt.

PRESIDENT FREDERICK M. SMITH PROTESTS.

We give below, in full, President F. M. Smith's open letter, making protest against the erection of a monument in memory of Joseph Smith the Seer by the Utah church. It was published in two Salt Lake City morning papers. It will be of interest to HERALD readers, and of help to the missionaries should they be called on to meet perverted statements of it:

OPEN LETTER TO ALL PEOPLE.

The Associated Press dispatches recently contained an account of the feelings of revulsion with which the towns of Sharon and Royalton, Vermont, learned that the Mormon authorities had purchased the farm upon which was born the man Joseph Smith who in 1830 organized a church, and that the said authorities contemplated the erection of a monument thereupon, to be made a Mecca to which hundreds of Mormons would flock to do reverence to the memory of a man whom they hold as a prophet of God and as the founder of their church.

As a grandson of that man I, too, share to some extent the same feelings as do the people of those towns, but not from the same reasons. I, of course, have no objections to the memory of the man being properly honored; but I do resent the efforts made by the present Mormon authorities to erect such a monument, for reasons which I desire to present to the people of the United States, accompanied by my protest against the Mormon authorities of Utah erecting such monument.

DO NOT REPRESENT PROPHET.

While these people calling themselves Mormons claim to represent the doctrines of religion presented to the world by Joseph Smith, nothing can be farther from what he preached than are some of the beliefs and practices of the church which have come so prominently before the public as a result of the work of the United States Senate Committee on Elections and Privileges in its recent investigation of the standing of Senator Reed Smoot of Utah.

That the Mormon authorities should undertake to erect such monument as they propose to erect in Vermont, would naturally be taken by those visiting the place as an indication that that man was responsible for the disgusting and revolting state of affairs which the testimony at Washington has revealed, while the truth of the matter is that he was not responsible for the doctrines which have made the Christianized world shudder.

As a public man he never taught nor practiced polygamy, despite the claim of the Mormon people to the contrary. This claim was fully examined on two separate occasions by the courts of the United States, and in both instances the opinion was handed down that the dominant church of Utah did not represent the faith and doctrines of the church as founded by Joseph Smith, and hence was not entitled to being recognized as the legal successor to his church.

In the last case in which this question was legally examined Judge John F. Philips, in the Circuit Court of the United States for the western division of the western district of Missouri, in rendering his decision, used the following language:

DECISION OF JUDGE PHILIPS.

"Beyond all cavil, if human testimony is to place any matter for ever at rest, this church was one in doctrine, government, and purpose from 1830 to June, 1844, when Joseph Smith, its founder, was killed. It had the same federal head, governing bodies, and faith. During this period there was no schism, no secession, no 'parting of the ways,' in any matter fundamental or affecting its oneness.

"The only authorized and recognized books of doctrine and laws for the government of the church from 1830 to 1846 were the Bible, the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. The Book of Doctrine and Covenants, which consisted principally of claimed divine revelations to Joseph Smith, was the edition published at Kirtland, Ohio, in 1835, and at Nauvoo in 1845. . . .

"Joseph Smith was killed at Carthage, Illinois, in June, 1844. He was the president and inspiring spirit of the church. His violent death struck with dismay the hearts of his followers, and out of the confusion incident thereto was born disorder, schism, and ambition for leadership. Disintegration set in, and the church split into factions, which under the lead of different heads, scattered to different parts of the country. Among the 'quorum of twelve'—representing the apostles—was one Brigham Young, a man of intellectual power, shrewd and aggressive, if not audacious. Naturally enough such a man gathered around him the greater numbers, and it was an easy matter for him to seize the fallen reins of the presidency. He led the greater portion of Mormons out to what was known as 'Winter Quarters,' near Omaha, and thence to Salt Lake Valley, in Utah, then a dependency of Old Mexico. From this settlement has sprung the powerful ecclesiastical body known as the Salt Lake or Utah church. While the respondents are wary of claiming alliance with this Salt Lake church, it is evidently 'the power behind the throne' in the defense of this suit, and claim is made by respondents' counsel that it in fact absorbed the Mormon church and is the real successor to the ancient church.

"There can be no question of the fact that Brigham Young's assumed presidency was a bold and bald usurpation. . . . The book (Book of Doctrine and Covenants) clearly taught that the succession should descend lineally and go to the first-born. Joseph Smith so taught, and, before his taking off, publicly proclaimed his son, Joseph, the present head of complainant church, his successor, and he was so anointed. . . . Brigham Young's assumption of this office (under the claim of something like transfiguration) was itself a departure from the law of the church."

QUESTION OF POLYGAMY.

Concerning the polygamy question Judge Philips speaks, in his opinion, as follows:

"It is charged by the respondents, as an echo of the Utah church, that Joseph Smith, 'the martyr,' secretly taught and practiced polygamy, and the Utah contingent furnishes the evidence and two of the women to prove this fact. It would, perhaps, be uncharitable to say of these women that they have borne false testimony as to their connection with Joseph Smith, but, in view of all the evidence and circumstances surrounding the alleged intercourse, it is difficult to escape the conclusion that at most they were but sports in 'nest-hiding.' . . . No such marriage ever occurred under the rules of the church, and no offspring came from the imputed illicit intercourse, although Joseph Smith was in the full vigor of young manhood and his wife, Emma, was giving birth to healthy children in regular order, and was enceinte at the time of Joseph's death. But if it were conceded that Joseph Smith and Hyrum, his brother, did secretly practice concubinage, is the church to be charged with those liaisons, and the doctrine of polygamy to be predicated thereon of the church? If so, I suspect the doctrine of polygamy might be imputed to many of the Gentile churches. Certainly it was never promulgated, taught, or recognized as a doctrine of the church prior to the assumption of Brigham Young."

REORGANIZED CHURCH.

In the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, at whose head stands the oldest son of Joseph Smith the Martyr, is to be found a perpetuity of the doctrines and practices of the church under the leadership of Joseph Smith, and in that church is found no such doctrine as polygamy, and that Iowa church has a record of nearly one half a century of existence as an incorporated body under the laws of the states of Illinois and Iowa, as a law-abiding, peaceful people, an abiding by law and a pursuit of peace fully taught in their doctrines and church books, and advocated from an open pulpit.

How far the ecclesiastical organization of Utah has departed from the genius and spirit of the teachings of Joseph Smith is strikingly emphasized in the feeling aroused between the two Vermont towns. In the law of the church as delivered to his followers by Joseph Smith is found the following language:

ORIGINAL LAW OF CHURCH.

"Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore, be subject to the powers that be, until he reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet.

"We believe that governments were instituted of God for the benefit of man and that he holds men accountable for their acts in relation to them, either in making laws or administering them for the good and safety of society."

Yet so far have the present Mormon leaders come from propagating such a spirit of peace as was taught by the prophet Joseph, and so flagrant has been the manner in which they, who ought to be examples to their people, have been living in violation of the laws of God and of the land, that they have antagonized the people of the United States to such an extent that the very mention of the fact that the Mormons propose to erect a monument in an eastern State throws the people of the towns contiguous to the place into such a state of excitement that violence is threatened to prevent the accomplishment of the purpose of the Mormons.

I protest against the erection of such monument, because in the light of truth its erection by the present Mormon authorities (many of whom are acknowledged law-breakers, and who intend to remain such) does great discredit to the memory of a man whose doctrines were of peace and who advocated abiding by the laws of the land. The present leaders of the Mormon people, who claim to honor Joseph Smith as a prophet of God, have gone so far astray from his teachings (as reflected to-day by another people who are following, according to the courts of the land, his teachings) that they are not only living in open violation of the laws of the land and some of their own acknowledged laws of God, but they have broken covenants which were made by them as a people to the Government and by reason of which promises Utah was made a sovereign State. The erection of a monument by such leaders to any man would discredit that man's memory in the eyes of the world.

WHY HE PROTESTS.

I protest against such erection because it is unfair in the light of what the Reorganized Church is presenting to the world that Joseph Smith was a man who taught and practiced good morals and was an advocate of peace and good will—it is unfair, I contend, that these Mormon leaders should forestall a just consideration of the work of Joseph Smith, and that thereby unjust aspersion should continue to attach to his name, because such men will attach the stigma of their law-breaking to his name by erecting monuments which shall announce that they call him their prophet. These men have great amounts of money placed in their hands by a sacrificing people, for which there is no account rendered to that people, and this money they freely spend in erecting monuments to fix the eyes of the world upon their infidelity to morals and law.

Because of the peculiar and unique position he occupies as a character in American history, the people of this country would prefer to relieve Joseph Smith's name from the odium of polygamy and other practices which have made the Mormon authorities odious in the eyes of the world; and by all that is right and just he should be so relieved, when his true followers have so clearly shown in the courts of the land that the responsibility of polygamy and other evils rests with usurpers of his position, doctrines promulgated and first made public years after he had been murdered by a lawless mob. As a slight recompense for having permitted his murder in cold blood, the people of the United States owe it to his memory, in the light of what has been presented by his true followers in the courts of the land, to relieve him of the aspersion which attaches to his memory by reason of the practices of men who have so recently acknowledged themselves to be willful law-breakers.

UTAH CHURCH NOT REPRESENTATIVE.

While the descendants of Joseph Smith, together with the people of Royalton and Sharon, protest against the present Mormon leaders raising a monument to his memory on the farm on which he was born, we do so from a different standpoint than do the people of those towns. We do so because we know full well that the Mormon authorities in Utah are not by precept or example truly representing the teachings of that man as a religionist, and that their teachings and practices do violence to and reflect discredit upon his memory.

We know that the teachings of religion as represented to the world by him are found in the church which has its headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa, known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Let the citizens of Royalton and Sharon learn of the record as law-abiding citizens made by the people of the Reorganized Church, let them learn that people is led by a man who is a son of the man born near their towns, and that that man has for over forty years gone his way as a citizen and public man, and has occupied positions of public trust and responsibility, and that he has given a clean record and a worthy example to his people, and that in his teachings from the rostrum and through the columns of the paper of which he has been editor for over forty years the highest morals have been presented to his people.

Let the people of Royalton and Sharon know, as they should, that the teachings and practices of Mormon authorities to-day, which have made them odious in the eyes of the Christian world, are a gross prostitution of the teachings of Joseph Smith; let them learn all this, and then, while they may oppose the erection of a monument by the present Mormon authorities, they will do so because of the practices of these Mormon leaders, and not because they are loath to have the birthplace of a prominent American citizen marked as being near their town.

HIS MISSION IN LIFE.

The mission work of my life will be, as has been the mission work of my father before me, to save the good in Mormonism, to eradicate what has crept in because of the lusts of the flesh and the weakness of mankind, and to make the name of Joseph Smith honorable. We point with pride to the record made by the followers of my father's leadership in the states of Illinois and Iowa, under whose statutes we have as a people been incorporated, and say, without fear of refutation, that in those States, we have, by our consistent record as a law-abiding people, made the name of Joseph Smith honorable.

As a grandson of Joseph Smith, and one upon whom his mantle to an extent has fallen, I protest against the further stigmatization of Joseph Smith's name by the present Mormon authorities through their malfeasance and the erection of mocking monuments to the name of a man whose teachings they have so foully prostituted. As the founder of a religion permeated with the same spirit of peace found in the teachings of the Master, whose gospel of good will towards men Joseph Smith attempted to present to the world anew, his name should be protected from the stigma attaching to the Mormon leaders in their self-acknowledged maleficent practices to-day.

WILL THE SONS OF PERDITION EVER BE RESURRECTED?

This question is contained in the HERALD for May 3, and also the answer by the Editor. The answer in part is as follows: "The Bible, Book of Mormon, and the revelations all teach that all men born into the world will be resurrected." This is followed with a comment from Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4.

It is not my purpose to ask justice to rob mercy, nor mercy to rob justice; nor is it my intention in writing to create any controversy through the HERALD, but only to find the truth of all things.

The Editor, in referring to section 76, says it "points to the idea that a certain class of men (or devils, sons of perdition) are the only ones on whom the second death shall have power. The 'second death' leaves the inference that they may have suffered the first death, the death of the flesh, and will suffer the second, the possible death of the spirit."

Now let us read carefully a part of the fourth paragraph cited above:

Thus saith the Lord, concerning all those who know my power, and have been made partakers thereof, and suffered themselves, through the power of the Devil, to be overcome, and to deny the truth, and defy my power; they are they who are the sons of perdition, of whom I say it had been better for them never to have been born; for they are vessels of wrath, doomed to suffer the wrath of God, with the Devil and his angels, in eternity, concerning whom I have said there is no forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come; having denied the Holy Spirit, after having received it, and having denied the only begotten Son of the Father; having crucified him unto themselves, and put him to an open shame; these are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the Devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power.

There are a few thoughts in the above that are not made clear to my mind in the answer to the above question.

1. All those who know God's power and are overcome, deny the truth, and defy God's power, are the ones of whom Christ says it had been better for them never to have been born.

2. There is no forgiveness for these sons of perdition in this world, or in the world to come, for they have denied the Holy Spirit after having received it, also have denied the only begotten Son of the Father, and thereby have crucified Christ unto themselves afresh.

"The only ones on whom the second death shall have any power; yea, verily, the only ones who shall not be redeemed." Now I ask, Who is called Perdition? that we may know the father of these mysterious sons? Let us read in Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3:

And this we saw also, and bear record, that an angel of God, who was in authority in the presence of God, who rebelled against the only begotten Son; whom the Father loved, and who was in the bosom of the Father; and was thrust down from the presence of God and the Son, and was called Perdition: for the heavens wept over him: he was Lucifer, a son of the morning.

Without doubt here is clearly outlined to us the father of all those rude sons. Now let us inquire what kind of a being is the father of these sons, and has he a flesh-and-bone body, and then we will inquire after the boys a little.

First, let us read Book of Mormon, page 71:

O the wisdom of God! his mercy and grace: For behold, if the flesh should rise no more; our spirits must become subject to that angel who fell from before the presence of the eternal God, and became the devil, to rise no more. And our spirits must have become like unto him, and we become devils [disembodied spirits], angels to a devil, to be shut out from the presence of our God, and to remain with the father of lies, in misery, like unto himself.

Here we learn that for us to become sons, angels to the father of lies, and to become like unto him, we must put off this flesh-and-bone body. Our spirits become devils, angels to a devil. Hence we conclude that the Devil is a spirit being, and that for us to become like him, is to lose our first estate. Jude, verse 6: "And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day." This great day, referred to here, has reference to the time when these fallen angels (spirits), sons of perdition, will go away into the lake of fire and brimstone prepared for the Devil and his angels. "For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment."—2 Peter 2: 4.

Now remember that there are the Devil and his angels, and then there are those who are referred to as men who become the sons of perdition, who will go away with the Devil and his angels into the lake of fire and brimstone. Another thought right here is that the Devil and his angels do not, nor can not come under the plan of redemption, hence are outside of the atoning blood of Christ, hence the statement, "cast down," "reserved under darkness unto the judgment."

No chance for a body for this class of individuals. In fact we see Christ, while he was upon earth, in his ministry, casting those evil spirits out of bodies which they had taken possession of "by force"; yes, casting out devils. He ordained twelve apostles and sent them out to preach the gospel, and to cast out devils; ordained seventies, and sent them out to preach the gospel, and to cast out devils.

Now to give you an idea as to where the Devil and his angels are, and their mission work, we turn to Revelation 12: 6-8, 12, Inspired Translation.

And there was war in heaven; Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon and his angels fought against Michael; and the dragon prevailed not against Michael, . . . Neither was there place found in heaven for the great red dragon, who was cast out; that old serpent called the devil, and also called Satan, which deceiveth the whole world; he was cast out into the earth; and his angels were cast out with him.

. . . And after these things I heard another voice saying, Woe to the inhabitants of the earth, yea, and they who dwell upon the islands of the sea, for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time.

Here we see that Satan and his angels were cast out of heaven, and came down to earth, and their mission seems to be one of wrath upon the inhabitants of the earth, i. e., the human race. And it seems as if Satan and his angels will remain here on earth (by what law I know not) until the angel comes down from heaven with the great chain in his hand, and lays hold on the dragon, and binds him a thousand years, and casts him into the bottomless pit, sets a seal upon him, that he shall deceive the nations no more till the thousand years are ended.

Altogether, the time thus allowed for Satan and his angels to work sin and ruin on the human family is but a short time compared with eternity. And at the end of this short time he will be robbed of all his power of sin and hell, and will be overcome, and he and his angels with him will be cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, prepared for the Devil and his angels. Remember that the Devil and his angels sinned against light and knowledge.

Now let us return to Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4. The "all" referred to here, who deny the truth, defy God's power, these sons of perdition, of whom the Master has said it had been better for them never to have been born. Let us ask the question, Why would it have been better for these individuals never to have been born?

For he hath made it impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to be renewed again unto repentance; seeing they crucify unto themselves the Son of God afresh [the second time], and put him [his first crucifixion] to an open shame.—Hebrews 6: 4-6, Inspired Translation.

Now let us see. Christ's death and resurrection was to bring to man a plan of redemption, a resurrection from the dead; hence a being who by transgression does not come under such a plan, can he be resurrected? Or in other words, If we crucify the crucified, do we not destroy the means of our resurrection, and thereby go on the outside of the plan of redemption? Hence the answer to the question why it would have been better for such as deny God's power, and the Holy Spirit, etc., never to have been born, is that in destroying the means of the resurrection to ourselves, not to any one else, we lose this body of flesh and bone, go on the outside of the atonement, sin against light and knowledge, become a son of perdition.

Book of Mormon, Alma 19: 11:

And now remember, my son, if it were not for the plan of redemption, (laying it aside,) as soon as they were dead, their souls were miserable, being cut off from the presence of the Lord.

Again, speaking of those who had sinned against light and knowledge, Mosiah says:

And now, I say unto you, my brethren, that after ye have known and been taught all these things, if ye shall transgress, and go contrary to that which has been spoken, that ye do withdraw yourselves from the Spirit of the Lord, that it may have no place in you to guide you into wisdom's paths, that ye may be blessed, prospered, and preserved; I say unto you that the man that doeth this, the same cometh out in open rebellion against God: therefore he listeth to obey the evil spirit, and becometh an enemy to all righteousness; therefore the Lord has no place in him, for he dwelleth not in unholy temples. . . . And now I say unto you, that mercy [the atonement] hath no claim on that man.

We now call attention to the first and second death. And we will differ somewhat from the editor on this point, also, as he gave the first death to be that of the flesh, and the second death that of the spirit. Go with me to Doctrine and Covenants 28: 11:

Wherefore, it came to pass, that the Devil tempted Adam, and he partook the forbidden fruit, and transgressed the commandment, wherein he became subject to the will of the Devil, because he yielded unto temptation; wherefore, I, the Lord God caused that he should be cast out of the garden of Eden, from my presence because of his transgression: wherein he became spiritually dead; which is the first death, even that same death, which is the last death, which is spiritual, which shall be pronounced upon the wicked when I shall say, Depart ye cursed.

Please bear in mind the thought that the sons of perdition are the only ones on whom the second death hath any power. "Yea, verily, the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the sufferings of his wrath." Notice here comes in a second all, not the all those who become sons of perdition, but "all the rest": "For all the rest shall be brought forth by the resurrection of the dead, through triumph, and the glory of the Lamb, who was slain, who was in the bosom of the Father before the worlds were made."—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4.

Alma 19: 11 gives us to understand the temporal death was entailed because of the spiritual death, i. e., the casting out of the garden, out of God's presence. Hence not the first, or second death, for they are spiritual. Again:

And this is the gospel, the glad tidings which the voice out of the heavens bore record unto us, that he came into the world, even Jesus to be crucified for the world, and to bear the sins of the world, and to sanctify the world, and to cleanse it from all unrighteousness; that through him all might be saved, whom the Father had put into his power, and made by him, who glorifies the Father, and saves all the works of his hands, except those sons of perdition, who deny the Son after the Father hath revealed him; wherefore he saves all except them.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4.

As touching the Devil and his angels, and the first spiritual death which they died: 1. As Satan was once an angel in authority in the presence of God, yea, a son of the morning, and by his rebellion was cast down, (out), and his angels were cast out with him, did they not all die a spiritual death to all that was good and true? So also did our first parents when they were cast out of the garden, God's presence. But man in the flesh was given a chance in a probation, by a sacrifice upon the part of his Creator. Hence, he had this much the advantage of the situation over the Devil and his angels, who received no such chance, but are reserved in chains of darkness unto judgment.

Think of these fallen angels, before they fell! All in the presence of God. Yea, no doubt but that when God laid the foundations of the world, and the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy (see Job 38), that all these who are now fallen were there, and took part in that grand angelic jubilee, before they left their first estate, their own habitation. And methinks that the cause for all this joy among all the spiritual creation of God was perhaps the soul-inspiring message from the life of the great Creator, that sounded in their ears like a trumpet, that they should go to earth, and take a tabernacle of clay as a house for their spirit beings. And perhaps at this joyful moment, when God was receiving praise and homage, it entered the heart of the angel in authority, who was a son of the morning, to seek to place himself upon the throne. Yes, to take away God's power and glory, and thus the little germ soon sprang up into a "Father, I'll go and redeem man, and not one soul shall be lost, and wherefore, I will do it, but give me thy glory." But here comes another, saying, "Father, I'll go and redeem man, and thine be all the glory." Hence, contention, war, is waged in heaven; the great dividing line is clearly drawn. A battle was fought, resulting in this aspiring spirit, angel, and all those under him (for he was in authority) being cast out, cast down, and thus they became the Devil and his angels.

Now it becomes necessary for a "Lamb's book of life," where is recorded the names of all those who fought, that God might retain his glory and power through the only begotten Son, who was full of grace and truth. Remember that Satan and his angels were cast out of heaven and came to earth, hence we read, "and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world."—Revelation 17: 8.

Remember that the names in this Lamb's book of life were written at, or from the foundation of the world. Yes, they wonder, when they see him whom they listed to obey, ascend out of the bottomless pit, i. e., after the thousand years' reign, and go into perdition (after the little season).

And again we read, "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire."—Revelation 20: 15.

Now after we have taken upon us this body of flesh and bone, as the spirits from God, then for us to become a son of perdition we must have our names blotted out of the book of life "written from the foundation of the world." And this blotting out takes place when we deny our God,—sin against the Holy Ghost. Yea, in fine, crucify the Son of God unto ourselves, the second time, and thus go outside the plan of God's mercy. Hence we read, "He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels."—Revelation 3: 5. Again: "And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part [name] out of the book of life," etc.—Revelation 22: 19.

While the Devil and his angels died to all that was godlike, on the other hand they became very much alive to spiritual wickedness in high places (see Ephesians 6: 12) and thereby have cursed the world with sin and ruin, hence one more spiritual death (second death) to be pronounced upon the wicked at the great and last day, when that august Judge shall say, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels."—Matthew 25: 41. Surely this is a second death. "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death."—Revelation 20: 14.

Yes, when all the power of sin and ruin, hell and destruction, is taken from these enemies of God, and they as prisoners of war are disarmed, then it is that he that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity; yea, be cast into that lake of fire and brimstone, and their weapons be cast in with them—death and hell.

While I have given only a tithe of the grand thoughts which come up for presentation, yet I will say, in concluding this article, that there is much evidence that may be taken upon the other side of this question. Hoping and praying for light and truth to spread their redeeming wings abroad, I remain,

In gospel bonds,

WEST PLAINS, Missouri.

A PUBLIC DUTY.

Scarcely more than a generation ago the buffalo ranged the western plains in countless herds, their numbers so great that no written estimate can be considered an exaggeration. Those who were fortunate enough to see one of these great hosts surging over the prairies little thought that in a few short years the buffalo would simply be a part of history. This noble beast was exterminated by man with a butchery so ignoble that it is sickening to dwell upon. The few dollars received for the hide was the incentive for this national disgrace. Almost at the same hour that the buffalo were vanishing another of the wonders of this continent was also being ruthlessly and recklessly destroyed. Early writers tell of flocks of wild pigeons so large that the account of their numbers verges on the fabulous. Where are these countless winged hosts to-day? All gone. Why? Simply that a limited number of men without thought for the future might gather a few dollars by sacrificing millions upon millions of harmless and beautiful forms.

These two great assets of the people, of use and beauty, were improvidently wasted because no public-spirited persons or association had the foresight or interest to protect them from the small band of selfish men who were the destroyers.

The passing of the buffalo and wild pigeon is a forceful commentary on the indifference of the people of those days. Are the people of this generation showing any greater degree of interest in the wild life of the present day, much of which is rapidly decreasing in numbers? Few people realize how near the gulls and terns of our coasts came to extinction during the last decade, when fashion decreed that the snow-white plumage of these beautiful denizens of the beaches was necessary for millinery ornaments.

A simple proposition, in fact a public duty, is now before the American people: Shall the sea-birds be preserved for future generations? Unfortunately this class of birds gather in colonies during the breeding season, and are thus in greater danger than the wild bird that breeds singly. Plume hunters can still kill them as in the past, when large colonies on our seaboard were destroyed in a single season. Another method of extermination is egging; this is quite as fatal as killing the birds. There are yet small colonies of sea-birds on the coasts and large inland lakes of the country which will serve as a nucleus and may by the greatest care and watchfulness repopulate our country with these birds. If this desirable result is to be achieved, action must be taken at once by the public; it will not do to neglect the matter another season or our children will say of us, what we now say of our fathers regarding the buffalo and wild pigeon: when you had the opportunity to save the sea-birds you did not do it and we are deprived of a part of our heritage. The sea-birds can only be saved by placing at each colony, during the breeding season, an energetic, faithful, and fearless warden who will stand guard during the three months when the birds are brooding their eggs. The part the public can take in this great economic and æsthetic movement is to supply the necessary funds. The National Association of Audubon Societies, an incorporated body, will do the administrative work.

During the present breeding season this association has forty such wardens employed, but this number should be increased to at least three hundred men in order to fully guard all of the remnants of colonies that once existed. The public are urged to join the national association, the membership fee being five dollars a year, all of which sum is used in bird-protection work, as the executive officers of the society contribute their services without compensation.

The seashore without the sea-birds would be like a garden without flowers or a landscape without trees. Unless active measures are taken now to prevent this disaster it will surely come; then, reader, it will be too late to do more than grieve. This is not a duty you can delegate to your neighbor, it belongs to you; will you help save the sea-birds, or will you see them vanish? To your descendants you are responsible.

ANSWER TO "A REPLY."

The HERALD for July 5 contains a reply to my article "Will the gifts and blessings cease as we attain towards perfection?" as published in the HERALD for June 14. I did not intend to be personal, as I gave neither name; date, nor place. However, as this brother has assumed the responsibility of delivering the sermon referred to, I suppose I may be forgiven if I should refer to him directly. Yet it is not the individual we are criticising, but rather the principle involved.

He says: "If left as the brother puts it in the HERALD I would be placed in a false position." But in the next paragraph he admits that in the sermon referred to, "the thought was suggested" "that the reason the gifts are not enjoyed in some localities to that extent as formerly, may be because we are getting nearer perfection and hence do not need the manifestation of the gifts to the extent that we did in our earlier experience in the church." Then he refers to the proof-text cited. (See 1 Corinthians 13:8-10.)

A careful comparison of my article (in HERALD of June 14) with the above admitted statement of our brother, will readily show to the reader that I did not "place him in a false position." He has placed himself there, I fear, by his desire to avoid being a pessimist, and by allowing himself to "suggest" that which we can not find suggested in the Scriptures and revelations. We simply deny the suggestion of the sermon, as being unscriptural, and in the former article we cited quotations in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, clearly showing that such a position is untenable. In his reply he fails to notice these citations.

The brother represents Paul as saying that "miracles" would cease. Notice his statements in reference thereto, in the seventh and eighth paragraphs of his article. We kindly ask him to reread 1 Corinthians 13. Nowhere in all of Paul's writings does he say, or even intimate, that "miracles" should cease.

Jesus said: "And these signs shall follow them that believe," etc.—Mark 16:16, 17. And the facts are, that if the people of God—so called—are not enjoying the blessings promised by Jesus, it is not because they are so nearly perfect that "they do not need them," but because they are not "believers" in the sense implied by our Lord.

This brother stated in this same discourse that "the reception of miracles and spiritual gifts are an indication of our ignorance." I know of no authority for such a statement. If that be true, Paul must have been an ignorant man. Just the reverse is true. No matter what may be our attainment in wisdom and knowledge, the reception of these spiritual gifts will increase our knowledge and understanding. Thousands can testify that this is true.

I one time knew of an elder who, when there was sickness in his family, immediately sent for a doctor instead of calling for the administration, as provided for in the law of the church. This would not indicate that the gifts and blessings were "not needed," neither would it necessarily indicate that he was advanced to any high degree toward perfection.

He refers to a statement being made to this same congregation, that there was "something wrong." That statement was not made by the writer. I was present, though, when it was made. But let us ask: Is an individual to be considered a "pessimist" because he finds that there is something wrong? Is our brother so optimistic that he thinks there is nothing wrong? If so, then it would seem that he thinks that "that which is perfect" has come.

But why continue thus, when my brother has failed to examine the scriptural proofs I adduced in refutation of his position?

This is not written in a spirit of controversy. The best of feelings exist between the brother and myself, and we have talked over these matters between ourselves, and understand each other's position, I believe. The only trouble is, we do not yet see eye to eye—which is still an indication of our imperfection. The object in writing the former article was with the thought of possible benefit to others.

With love for the truth and charity for all,

H. E. MOLER.

MEDITATIONS.

While thinking about the great plan of salvation I thought it might benefit some if they could read it: Matthew 20:1-7. This parable gives us to understand the gospel is given in five different dispensations,—the first one early in the morning to Adam (see Genesis 4, 5, and 6, Inspired Translation) 4004 B. C., which had its climax or crowning event in the translation of Enoch and his city, in the year 1052; and strange to say that none of Enoch's progenitors were translated with him, yet some of them lived hundreds of years after the translation.

The second dispensation was given to Noah, fifteen hundred and fifty-six years after the one given to Adam. (See Genesis 8, Inspired Translation.) The crowning event was the great deluge, and one hundred years later the earth was divided or became islands and continents; and two hundred and one years after the flood the languages were confounded.

The third dispensation was given to Abraham five hundred and fifty years later, or in the year 2106, with the crowning events, Moses and the Israelites crossing the Red Sea, some seven hundred years later, and Joshua and the Israelites crossing the Jordan forty years after, or in the year 2846.

The fourth dispensation was given to John the Baptist eighteen hundred and ninety-eight years after the dispensation given to Abraham, or in the year 4004; with its crowning events, the birth, death, and resurrection of the Son of God, and the curse put on Palestine.

The fifth dispensation was given to Joseph Smith 1830 A. D., or in the year of the world, 5834.

Early in the year 1820, Joseph Smith being disturbed in mind by the contentions between different religious denominations, concluded to apply the passage in James 1:5. While in earnest prayer, two personages appeared to him, standing in the air; one calling him by name said, pointing to the other, "This is my beloved Son, hear him." Then the Son, Jesus Christ, told Joseph to join none of the churches as all of them were wrong; that he would be the instrument of bringing about the organization of the true church, if he were faithful. Moroni, an angel, delivered to Joseph the plates (see Ezekiel 37:15-28) containing a history of God's dealings with his people on this continent in the past. Jesus instructed Joseph how the church must be organized. It must have apostles, prophets, evangelists, bishops, elders, pastors, and teachers. (See Ephesians 4:11, 12, 13, 14; 1 Corinthians 12:28.) And they should call on all people to repent (see Matthew 3:2; 4:17; Acts 2:38; Revelations 14:6, 7), and to have faith in God (see Hebrews 11:6; 1 Peter 1:21), and to be baptized for the remission of sins (see Mark 16:16-18; Acts 2:38-40), and that they should have the servants of God lay their hands on them for the reception of the Holy Ghost (see Acts 8:17; 9:17; 19:6), and that the gospel was composed of six first principles (see Hebrews 6:1, 2); that all men should be resurrected, and judged, and rewarded according to their deeds; and that this doctrine should be preached in all the world for a witness, and then the end should come. The crowning events of this the last and eleventh-hour dispensation are many. One has already been fulfilled in our day, that is, the restoration of Palestine to its former fertility. It had been a barren, desolate country for about seventeen hundred years. But by the direction of the Lord, Joseph sent one of the apostles in 1840 to bless the land and ask God to remove the curse, (see Church History, page 382, by E. W. Tullidge,) which God did do, when in 1852, the former and latter rains were restored, and now Lebanon is like a forest. The land is very productive! Another crowning event is the gathering of Israel to the land of Palestine. Jeremiah tells us, "The days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, The Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, The Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them: and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers."—Jeremiah 16:14, 15. (See Ezekiel 37.) The Doctrine and Covenants tells us that, "Their prophets [in the north country] . . . shall smite the rocks, and ice shall flow down at their presence. And an highway shall be cast up in the midst of the great deep."—Section 108:6. Then Israel shall go home dry-shod on this great highway, and inhabit a city (Jerusalem) without walls. (See Zachariah 2:4.) Then shall all nations be gathered again at Jerusalem to take a spoil. When they have taken the city captive, then will Jesus stand on the Mount of Olives, and the mount shall cleave in twain. (See Zachariah 12:13, 14.) The Lord will fight for Israel, causing the allied armies to die, so that it takes the Israelites seven months to bury the dead. (See Ezekiel 39:12.) The children of Israel need cut no trees for wood for seven years, because there is wood enough for fuel from the armament of the men slain. (See Ezekiel 39:9.) The time will come when all but a few men shall be burnt. (See Isaiah 24:6.) And that "day shall burn as an oven," all the proud, and all the wicked shall be burnt up (Malachi 4:1.) The mountains shall melt and pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall be filled with fervent heat. (See 2 Peter 3:10, Inspired Translation.) Then shall the sea be rolled back to the north country, and all the continents and islands be joined together as it was in the beginning. (See Genesis 1:9; Doctrine and Covenants 108:5.)

Two prophets are to prophesy in the streets of Jerusalem three and a half years. When they have finished their prophecy, the beast shall kill them, and after three and a half days the Spirit of life from God shall enter them, and they shall ascend up to heaven. (See Revelation 11:3-13.)

The Saints shall gather to Zion. (See Doctrine and Covenants 83:2; 98:4, 5.) The Lord will come to his temple. (See Malachi 3:1; Doctrine and Covenants 108:1.)

The Lord in vision showed one of the apostles that when the continents and islands are all joined together in one land, Zion and Jerusalem will not be far apart. (See HERALD, October 15, 1876, pages 619-621.) Jesus is to be revealed in flaming fire. (See 2 Thessalonians 11:7, 8.) There will be earthquakes, thunderings, lightnings, tempests, and all things in commotion. Angels shall fly, declaring the judgments of God, then a great sign shall appear in heaven, and then shall there be silence for the space of a half hour. Then shall the curtain of heaven be unfolded and rolled up as a scroll, showing the face of the Lord. (See Doctrine and Covenants 85:25-27.) His brightness is so great that the sun will cease to shine. (See Doctrine and Covenants 85:24; Hebrews 12:29; 2 Peter 3:12; 2 Thessalonians 1:7, 8.)

In view of all these marvelous events to take place in our day, what manner of men and women should we be, walking in all holiness before the Lord. That we might be accounted worthy to be caught up to meet our Savior in the clouds, when he shall come, and ever after be with him, is my prayer.

THE INTERMEDIATE STATE.

I deem it safe to say that all who possess real human sympathy, have a desire to know what becomes of their loved ones at death, or whether death ends all. It is a fact, "The living know that they shall die"; but is it a fact in the full sense of the word that, "The dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten"?—Ecclesiastes 9:5. Does this relate to man entire, spirit and body, or to the body? To the mind of the writer, and I believe to the most of professed followers of the lowly Nazarene, such statements as the above only relate to the body, the part of man that goes to the grave, and not to the spirit that at death "Shall return unto God who gave it."—Ecclesiastes 12:7. The spirit does not die, but goes to God, so when the psalmist said, "in death there is no remembrance of thee" (Psalm 6:5) and, "the dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence" (Psalm 115:17), he had no reference to the spirit or "inward man" that Paul speaks of.

How cheerless is the thought that this poor, miserable life is all there is for man to enjoy? But on the other hand, how soul-inspiring is the thought that the spirit is never-dying; and when freed from the prison-walls of this weak and sinful body, it may mount the height of glory and stand before God and hear that welcome plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."—Matthew 25:21.

But we are asked, When will this be? After thousands of years of forgetfulness or sleep, or immediately after death? This is the question about which I wish to cluster a few thoughts, for my own benefit and others who may wish to know what light God has cast upon the subject. I have no desire to delve into mysteries beyond God's revealed will, but believe we have a right to know all that God has revealed to us on all subjects.

To answer the question, then, I will cite a few passages of scripture. The "preacher" has said, when the "golden bowl be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the cistern, then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." (Ecclesiastes 12:6, 7.) The word then shows that at the same time the body goes to the ground, or at death, when the "golden bowl is broken," the "spirit shall return unto God." Paul says, "We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord."—2 Corinthians 5:8. He evidently believed that the spirit left the body at death and went to the Lord, and then he expected to be at rest and enjoy happiness; for he said, "I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better; nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you."—Philippians 1:23, 24. Paul believed that if he should die, he would at once experience that state of happiness wherein it would be "far better" for him than all the joy this world could bring. He, truly, had to suffer much for the gospel; but he also must have had great joy and comfort through the Spirit; yet there were "far better" things awaiting him in the presence of Christ; and at the same time his presence on earth would be "more needful" for those living in the flesh.

Stephen had the same view of the matter, for while in the agonies of death, he called on God, and said, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit."—Acts 7:59. Paul again testifies, "Whether we wake or sleep, we shall live together with him."—1 Thessalonians 5:10. Whether our bodies "wake" or live, or lie in the grave, or "sleep," "we shall [always] live together with" Christ.

Since the righteous enter at once into their rest with Christ, "Where will the ungodly and sinners appear"? Shall the spirits of the wicked "dead know not anything," while God receives the spirits of the righteous in his glorious presence? Let God's word answer. When the beggar died, he "was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom: the rich man also died, and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torment."—Luke 16:22, 23. The death of the two occurred about the same time; the beggar was conscious in paradise, and the rich man was severely conscious that he was in hell. He was also conscious of the fact that his brethren were still alive on earth, and if they followed the same course they were then following they, too, would eventually lift up their eyes in hell "being in torment." It was not their bodies that were in these respective places. They surely had not been resurrected before the rich man's brethren had died. But the objector says, "This is only an allegory; the beggar could not have been in Abraham's bosom, nor could the rich man have lifted up his eyes in hell without his body being there." The Hebrew language abounded in figures of speech. "Abraham's bosom" was used synonymously with "paradise"; Jerusalem was in like manner used for heaven, as "Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all." Does this argue there was no heaven but Jerusalem? and that Jerusalem is the only mother we have? Such expressions, though figurative, were just as expressive of meaning as though they had used the common names, and perhaps more so. To say that the rich man could not lift up his eyes in hell without his body being there, would be equivalent to saying that the spirit has no eyes. God is a spirit, and, "The eye of their God was upon the elders of the Jews."—Ezra 5:5. God made "his angels spirits" (Hebrews 1:7), and who would argue that angels have no eyes? To my mind, Christ's narrative of the beggar and the rich man is a plain statement of the facts as they occurred. "There was a certain rich man," and "a certain beggar named Lazarus." Yes, so "certain" and definite that one had a "certain" name,—that of "Lazarus." They both died, and immediately after death, while the "five brethren" were still living, these two went to their rewards; and of the one it was said, "Now he is comforted"; and of the other, "Thou art tormented."

If we turn to the revealed word of our own day, we will find it harmonizes completely with this thought. God said to Enoch:

Behold, these, which your eyes are upon, shall perish in the floods; and, behold, I will shut them up; a prison have I prepared for them. And that which I have chosen has plead before my face. Wherefore he suffers for their sins, inasmuch as they will repent in the day that my chosen shall return unto me; and until that day they shall be in torment.—Doctrine and Covenants 36:7.

Those that were "disobedient" in the days of Noah were shut up in prison, and were to remain there "in torment" till Christ's resurrection. Then if they received the gospel in the prison when Christ went to preach to them and repented in "that day," they were set free from their imprisonment and were permitted to "stand on the right hand of God"; for it was revealed to Enoch, that when the Son of Man should be lifted upon the cross, the saints arose and were crowned at the right hand of the Son of Man, with crowns of glory; and as many of the spirits as were in prison, came forth and stood on the right hand of God; and the remainder were reserved in chains of darkness until the judgment of the great day.—Verse 11.

And again:

They who remain [after those worthy had entered into their respective glories] shall also be quickened (resurrected): nevertheless, they shall return again to their own place, to enjoy that which they are willing to receive, because they were not willing to enjoy that which they might have received.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 6.

These passages show quite plainly that the wicked are conscious and “in torment” before the resurrection, and those who are not worthy of any glory, whose sins can not be forgiven, “neither in this world, neither in the world to come” (Matthew 12:32), must “return again to their own place” of torment, “return” to where they went before their resurrection. The place of punishment is the same after the resurrection as it was before, but the effects may be greater. I believe that greater joy and greater misery will be experienced in the body than out of it. The prison is evidently a place of “torment,” and the “prisoners [that] are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited” (Isaiah 24: 22), and the “spirits in prison” that Christ preached to (1 Peter 3: 19) must have suffered their penalty and “paid the uttermost farthing” (Matthew 5: 26), while in the prison and before their resurrection; for when they come out, they are to “stand on the right hand of God.”

We have observed that the righteous as well as the prisoners that “will repent in the day that my chosen shall return unto me,” the time of Christ’s ascension, will have passed their judgment, and be resurrected, and, so far as we know, enter fully into their immortal glory at that time; and God must also have passed judgment on the wicked at that time, for “the remainder were reserved in chains of darkness [in torment] until the judgment of the great day.” The same will be true at Christ’s second coming. At the sound of the first trumpet the Saints “who are alive shall be quickened, and be caught up to meet him,” and the righteous dead shall come forth.

And after this, another angel shall sound, which is the second trump; and then cometh the redemption of those who are Christ’s at his coming; who have received their part in that prison which is prepared for them, that they might receive the gospel, and be judged according to men in the flesh.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 28.

These surely enter into their reward then, but “the spirits of men who are to be judged, and are found under condemnation: and these are the rest of the dead,” “live not again until the thousand years are ended, neither again, until the end of the earth.”—Verse 29. The judgment must be passed on these at that time to determine whether they should remain “under condemnation” or not.

With this agrees the judgment spoken of by Christ in Matthew 25. He says:

When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats.

The righteous are to be resurrected then and receive their rewards, but the wicked “shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal.” (Verse 46.) The wicked are not then resurrected, for “the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished.” (Revelation 20: 5.) After the “little season,” then comes the resurrected of all who “receive not the gospel, neither the testimony of Jesus, neither the prophets; neither the everlasting covenant; . . . these are they who are liars, and sorcerers, and adulterers, and whoremongers, and whosoever loves and makes a lie; . . . these are they who are cast down to hell and suffer the wrath of almighty God until the fullness of times.” (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7.)

They have been suffering in hell “until” the time comes for their resurrection, and then they “shall be judged according to their works”; not that they are to be punished any more. They have paid the “uttermost farthing,” now they are to receive their rewards. These are to receive the glory of the stars. At the same time comes the resurrection of those who “must abide a kingdom which is not a kingdom of glory” (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 5), and these are to return again to their own place. These are the “sons of perdition”: these are they that are “filthy,” and they shall “be filthy still.”

When are men judged and consigned to happiness or misery? The passages already noted, to my mind, prove that, “then [at death] shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return to God who gave it,” and then be judged.

To further prove this, turn to Alma 19: 5-7. Here we find positive statements in regard to the matter:

Behold, it has been made known unto me, by an angel, [pretty good authority] that the spirits of all men, as soon as they are departed from this mortal body; yea, the spirits of all men, whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life. And then shall it come to pass the spirits of those who are righteous, are received into a state of happiness, which is called paradise; a state of rest; a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles, and from all care, and sorrow, etc. And then [at the same time] shall it come to pass, that the spirits of the wicked, yea, who are evil, . . . shall be cast out into outer darkness; there shall be weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth; and this because of their iniquity; being led captive by the will of the devil. Now this is the state of the souls of the wicked; yea, in darkness, and a state of awful, fearful, looking for of the fiery indignation of the wrath of God upon them; thus they remain in this state, as well as the righteous in paradise, until the time of their resurrection.

Comment is needless. See also 2 Nephi 6: 4-9.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

How can I teach your children gentleness,
 And mercy to the weak, and reverence
 For life, which, in its weakness or excess,
 Is still a gleam of God's omnipotence,
 When by your laws, your actions, and your speech
 You contradict the very things I teach?
 —Longfellow.

Little Kindnesses.

You gave on the way a pleasant smile,
 And thought no more about it;
 It cheered a life that was sad the while,
 That might have been wrecked without it.
 And so for the smile and fruitage fair
 You'll reap a crown sometime—somewhere.

You spoke one day a cheering word,
 And passed to other duties;
 It warmed a heart, new promise stirred,
 And painted a life with beauties.
 And so for the word and its silent prayer
 You'll reap a palm sometime—somewhere.

You lent a hand to a fallen one,
 A life in kindness given;
 It saved a soul when help was none,
 And won a heart for heaven.
 And so for the help you proffered there
 You'll reap a joy sometime—somewhere.
 —The Monitor Magazine.

Judge Not.

I believe more mistakes have been made, more hearts saddened, more lives spoiled, more tears shed, yes, and more sin has been committed by misjudging or misunderstanding others than any other one way. Why will we pass hasty judgment before knowing what we say? Why will we not look down deep "through the windows of the soul," and there read what we can not tell by appearance?

Why will we judge one as being light-minded and giddy, who tries to hide the weary heartache that has nearly paralyzed the brain and the life? For "there are lives that bear the pain and carry the hidden memories of such grief through long years, making them sad at heart, even when walking in the sunshine." Will we then make their burden so much harder to bear by our misjudging?

And again, if one does not hide the heartache from the world, how soon they are censured as cowardly, weak, and babyish. "Others, too, have their troubles, and must bear them. Why not they?" Are we "Doing unto others as we would have them do unto us"? Are we following in the footsteps of the meek and lowly Jesus? Are we "judging not that we be not judged"? If we knew the inner lives of many we meet we would be very gentle with them and would see much more good in them. Why keep all the cheery, encouraging words for the cold day? Why tell of all their virtues after death and in life misunderstand them?

Not long since I heard a minister at a funeral of a poor, delicate, childish woman, who had given all her life till the last few years, to the folly and pleasure of the world, say what a noble life had been hers, and vividly he told all her grandness and purity, and the same day, refer to another, whom he had not met more than a dozen times, as "weak and frivolous," whose life from childhood had been devoted to her Master, home, and country, and who had been made to drink as it were the very dregs of suffering.

God forgive such blunders, careless blunders, and help each one to be more careful of his remarks and judgments, for little we know what sorrow, heartache, and bitter pain our unjust criticisms may cause the heart that, already is overflowing with secret grief and pain, or it may blot the whole life of some weak one, who has not the strength of character to rise above the unjust suspicions of the world. God help us all to help "bear one another's burdens," instead of being a burden on others.

Look Pleasant.

An elderly woman, the widow of a soldier who had been killed many years before, went into a photographer's to have her picture taken. She was seated before the camera wearing the same stern, hard, forbidding look that had made her an object of fear to the children living in the neighborhood, when the photographer, thrusting his head out of the black cloth, said, suddenly, "Just brighten your eyes a little."

She tried, but the dull and heavy look still lingered.

"Look a little pleasanter," said the photographer, in an unimpassioned but confident and commanding voice.

"See here," the woman retorted sharply, "if you think that an old woman who is dull can look bright, that one who feels cross can become pleasant every time she is told to, you don't know anything about human nature. It takes something from the outside to brighten the eye and illuminate the face."

"Oh, no, it doesn't! It's something to be worked from the inside. Try it again," said the photographer, good-naturedly.

Something in his manner inspired faith, and she tried again, this time with better success.

"That's good! That's fine! You look twenty years younger," exclaimed the artist, as he caught the transient glow that illumined the faded face.

She went home with a queer feeling in her heart. It was the first compliment she had received since her husband had passed away, and it left a pleasant memory behind. When she reached her little cottage she looked long in the glass, and said: "There may be something in it, but I'll wait and see the picture."

When the picture came, it was like a resurrection. The face seemed alive with the fire of youth. She gazed long and earnestly, then said in a clear, firm voice: "If I could do it once, I can do it again." Approaching the little mirror above her bureau, she said: "Brighten up, Catherine," and the old light flashed up once more.

"Look a little pleasanter!" she commanded, and a calm and radiant smile diffused itself over her face.

Her neighbors, as the writer of this story has said, soon remarked the change that had come over her face.

"Why, Mrs. A, you are getting young. How do you manage it?"

"It is almost all done from the inside. You must brighten up inside and feel pleasant."—E. P. Hammond in Word and Way.

The Secret of a Happy Day.

Just to let the Father do what he will:
 Just to know that he is true and be still:
 Just to follow hour by hour as he leadeth,
 Just to draw the moment's power as it needeth:
 Just to trust him, this is all. Then the day will surely be Peaceful, whatso'er befall, bright and blessed, calm and free.

Just to ask him what to do all the day,
 And to make you quick and true to obey.
 Just to know the needed grace he bestoweth
 Every bar of time and space overfloweth.
 Just to take thy orders straight from the Master's own command.

Blessed day, when thus we wait, always at our Sovereign's hand.

Just to recollect his love, always true;
 Always shining from above, always new.
 Just to recognize its light, all-enfolding;
 Just to claim its present might, all-upholding;
 Just to know it as thine own, that no power can take away.
 Is not this enough alone for the gladness of the day?

TWO PICTURES.—NO. 1.

Sketched from Life.

Mr. and Mrs. Hale had settled themselves on the veranda, she in hammock and he in easy chair, for a comfortable Sunday afternoon. Their first interruption came in the person of little Elizabeth, who presented to her father a pencil with the request that he should sharpen it for her. Meeting with no response she repeated the request with the addition of a very pretty "please." It was evident from the expression of Mr. Hale's countenance that he heard the request, but did not heed it, though the pleading was repeated with every variety of coaxing intonation. Mrs. Hale grew irritated. "Why don't you do what she wants you to do," she said petulantly, "or else send her away?"

"Perhaps you don't like to hear her say 'please' as well as I do," said Mr. Hale, as he took the pencil and sharpened it. Then, as the little girl, taking the pencil, left the piazza, he remarked, "She certainly can say 'please' in the greatest number of sweet ways of any child I ever heard."

"Papa," shouted little Robbie from under the apple-tree, "may I have an apple?"

"No, you can not," asserted Mr. Hale positively. "Those apples are not fit to eat: they're too green."

"But papa, they're not green: they're red," asserted Robbie, holding one up to view. "And they're good, too," he said, taking a bite.

"Well, if you're going to eat the apples, bring them here and let me pick you out a good one," commanded Mr. Hale.

Robbie obeyed, and his father, forgetting his prohibition of a few minutes previous, selected two or three, peeled them, gave them to the child and ordered him to go and play and not bother him any more.

A few minutes later he observed the little fellow attempting to climb one of the apple-trees.

"Get down from that tree immediately. You'll tear your clothes."

"No, I won't, papa. I just want to get into that nice little seat for a while. I'll keep real still."

"Well, you keep down out of that tree, I tell you," said Mr. Hale resuming his book.

A few minutes later, looking up, he observed that Master Robbie was still endeavoring, with the aid of a box, to reach the coveted seat among the limbs.

"That child will spoil his clothes," he said, rising from his seat and laying down his book, and, again oblivious of the child's persistent disobedience, went to his assistance, and lifted him up into the tree, remarking, "If you're bound and determined to get up there, I shall have to see at least that you don't ruin your Sunday clothes. Now you sit still and don't bother me any more."

At this moment little eight-year-old Helen appeared upon the piazza. Approaching her mother, she said, "Mamma, can I have some candy?"

"No, you can't," cried Mrs. Hale, quickly. "You'll get it all over your dress. Now, you put that candy away. You shouldn't have taken it out of the box."

"But, mamma, I won't get my dress dirty. I'll just keep it in my mouth all the time," putting it into her mouth as she spoke. "Well, now, don't touch it with your fingers. Keep it in your mouth all the time," she called after the little girl, and again essayed to read her book; but an older daughter appeared upon the scene.

"Mamma, can I go over to Olive Bailey's?"

"Of course not," said the mother promptly. "You know we don't like you to go visiting Sunday. And besides, you'll get your dress all soiled."

"Oh, I wouldn't get my dress dirty, mamma; and Mrs. Bailey wants me to come."

"I guess Mrs. Bailey can get along without you," replied Mrs. Hale, somewhat sarcastically. "You take your book and sit down quietly in the parlor and read."

"But, mamma, Mrs. Bailey did ask me to come. You see, Olive has sore eyes and can't read, and her mother has been reading to her all the morning, and she is tired; and she wants me to come and read to Olive, so she can have a little rest. We'll sit in the hammock real still, and Olive is so lonesome. Do let me go, mamma."

"Oh, well, go along; but don't muss your dress."

After the disappearance of Helen, there was quiet for at least fifteen minutes, and then a boy of fourteen came running around the corner of the house.

"Oh, papa, Tom Aldrich wants me to go home with him, and see his new gun that his father has bought him."

"Well, you can't go," decided Mr. Hale, at once.

"Indeed you can't," echoed Mrs. Hale. "I don't want you fooling around any guns."

"But, papa," persisted the boy, ignoring his mother's asseveration, "Mr. Aldrich is with him, and he'll take care of us. Can't I go, papa? I won't stay more than ten minutes."

"Well, I don't want you to go away from home Sunday afternoons, and I don't think Tom is a very good boy for you to associate with."

"But I'm not going to associate with him, papa; I'm just going with him and his father to look at his gun. I'll be back in just a few minutes." And by this time he was already at the corner of the house.

As he disappeared from view, his father called out, "Well, don't stay more than fifteen minutes."

"I won't, papa," came back the eager rejoinder.

"I declare," said Mr. Hale, as he resumed his reading, "I never did see such persistent teasers as our children are."

Mrs. Hale responded, "You may be sure that if they make up their minds that they want a thing, they're going to get it. You might just as well give up first as last."

NO. 2.

Mr. and Mrs. Wright had settled themselves on the veranda, she in the hammock and he in the easy chair, for a comfortable Sunday afternoon. Their first interruption came in the person of little Alice, who presented to her father a pencil with the request that he sharpen it for her. It was evident from the expression of Mr. Wright's countenance that he did not hear the request until it was repeated with the addition of a pretty "please," which evidently penetrated the father's consciousness.

"Oh, I beg your pardon, little daughter. I did not hear you at first," he said, laying down his book. "What is it you want me to do?"

"Sharpen my pencil, papa."

"And shall I get a kiss for my pains, and a pretty picture?" he asked, as he complied with the child's request.

"I'll draw you a pretty kitty," replied the little girl, taking the sharpened pencil and giving the kiss.

"Dear little one," said Mr. Wright, smilingly, to his wife. "It is such a pleasure to do things for her: she asks so prettily."

"Papa, may I have an apple?" called little Paul from under the apple-tree.

"I'm not sure that those apples are eatable," replied Mr. Wright, "I'm afraid they're too green."

"But, papa, they're red," said Paul, showing one to his father.

"Sometimes that means that they are wormy," replied Mr. Wright. "Bring some to me; and if they are eatable, I will peel them for you."

The little fellow complied, and the father, deciding that they were eatable, peeled two or three and gave them to the child.

A few minutes later he looked up, and observed Paul attempting to climb one of the apple-trees.

"Come here, Paul," he commanded gently.

The child promptly obeyed.

"You'd like to get up into that apple-tree, I see," said the father; "but it seems to me not the best thing for you to do with your Sunday clothes on. You might tear them, you know; and that would make mamma extra work and the clothes would never seem as nice again. I'll tell you what we'll do. If you will remind me to-morrow, I will help you to climb up into the tree."

"All right, papa," replied Paul, as he went happily to his play.

A few moments of quiet followed, broken in upon by eight-year-old Clara, who came and whispered in her mother's ear, "Mamma, may I have some candy?"

Mrs. Wright looked up, and smiled. "What do we think about candy between meals?" she asked gently.

"Well, mamma, it's only a little while since dinner-time, and I didn't eat any dessert, you remember."

"Paul has just been eating apples, dear, you know," interpolated Mr. Wright.

Mrs. Wright glanced at her husband with a smile, and then said to the little girl, "Do you think you could keep from soiling your dress?"

"Why, yes, mamma, I'll just put it in my mouth, and I won't take it out again."

"All right, dear; you may have two pieces."

"Thank you, mamma," said Clara.

Just at this juncture appeared the older daughter, Fannie.

"Mother, may I go over to Margaret Hunt's?"

Mrs. Wright looked up in surprise at this request, saying: "Why, daughter, I didn't suppose you would ask to go anywhere Sunday afternoon. What reason have you for wanting to visit Margaret to-day? You see her every day in the week, you know."

"Why, mamma, Margaret has sore eyes and can not read for herself. Mrs. Hunt has been reading to her all the morning and is tired. She said she would like to have me come over and read to Margaret for an hour, so she could rest." Then, somewhat shyly, the girl added, "I thought you'd consider that a visit of mercy, mamma."

"And so you wanted to be a missionary," Mrs. Wright said, smiling.

"Well, you may go and stay till four o'clock. I think it will be very nice for you to relieve Mrs. Hunt. Of course, I can trust you to be quiet and ladylike."

Stillness once more reigned, shortly broken in upon by the rapid approach of fourteen-year-old Alfred, who began somewhat abruptly, "Oh, papa, can I go home with Bert Thompson to see his new gun?"

"Gently, gently, my son," said Mr. Wright. "Come here to me and tell me quietly what it is that you desire."

Obediently, the boy approached, and again proffered his request.

The father put out his hand, and drew his son gently to a seat upon his knee, saying: "Now let's be comfortable, and we'll talk this matter over. What are the reasons for your going?"

Hesitatingly, the boy replied, "Why, I want to go."

"That's a very good reason," replied the father. "An excellent reason, if there's nothing to offset it. What other reason have you in favor of your going?"

"Bert wants me to go."

"That may be a good reason, or it may be a very bad one. What kind of a boy is Bert?"

Alfred's eyes fell, as he replied, "I don't think he's a very good boy."

"Well, have you any other reason why you should go with him?"

"I'd learn lots about a gun by examining one."

"Yes. What other reason?"

"I don't think of any more."

"Well, now, what reasons are there against your going?"

Alfred grew a little restive and said, "I wish, papa, you'd decide for me, and tell me whether I can go or not."

"That is just what I don't want to do, my son, I want you to decide the question, though I can not promise to abide by your decision. Still, I want you to reason it out for yourself; for you will have many such questions to decide in the future, and I want you to be able to meet them understandingly. What are the reasons why you should not go?"

"Well, it's Sunday," replied Alfred, "and you don't like to have me go away on Sunday; and mamma doesn't like to have me handle guns, and—Bert isn't a very good boy."

"Well, now you have given three reasons for and three against going: which reasons do you think are the strongest?"

After a moment's hesitation, Alfred replied, "Why, I suppose the reasons against."

"Well," said the father, "if you decide this question, then, according to the merits of the case, you would decide"—he waited questioningly.

"Not to go," faltered Alfred, as he rose from his father's knee.

"One moment more, my son," said Mr. Wright, detaining him. "What reasons are you going to give Bert for your not going?"

"Why, I'll tell him that you won't let me."

"Is that quite true?"

Again the boy hesitated. It was evident there was a struggle in his mind. It would be so much easier to put the responsibility onto his father than to take it upon himself. He couldn't truthfully say that he didn't want to go, and he felt quite sure his father wouldn't let him go. Why might he not, say so, then?

Reading the struggle that was going on, the father asked gently: "Don't you think you are old enough to begin to take a man's responsibility for your own acts and decisions? Don't you think it would be better to tell Bert that you have decided it would be best for you not to go with him?"

The boy's unfolding manhood responded to this appeal; and lifting his head with decision, he said, "Yes, father, I will tell him so."

The eyes of the father and mother followed him with pride as with a new dignity in his bearing he accepted the responsibility placed upon him, and walked away to decline the proffered invitation.

Mr. Wright turned to his wife, saying, "It would be so much easier to say 'yes' to every request of the children; but I feel it so important that Alfred should begin to realize now his own individual responsibility that it seems to me better to help him to make his own decisions than to decide for him. So far I have had no reason to change this opinion. I think next Saturday I can take him to the gunsmith's and let him learn the mechanism of guns, and thus prove to him my interest in all that interests him."—Doctor Mary Wood Allen in American Motherhood.

Questions on Reading for August.

Define the sort of pleasure Mr. Hale took in hearing Elizabeth say "please." What effect would his compelling her to repeat her request so often have upon her? What mistake did Mr. Hale make in regard to Robbie's eating the apples and climbing the tree? What effect would this have upon the boy? What lessons did Mrs. Hale teach her daughter in first forbidding and then allowing her to have the candy? What feeling seemed to be uppermost in the mother's mind in forbidding the candy? Was it a justifiable anxiety? If this obstacle was removed, what removed it? and was its removal sufficient reason for Mrs. Hale's changing her mind and permitting the candy? What mistake did Mrs. Hale first make in replying to her older daughter's request to visit a neighbor? What was her next mistake? What effect will Mr. and Mrs. Hale's method have upon their children?

NO. 2.

Define the sort of pleasure Mr. Wright took in hearing Alice say "please." In what way was Mr. Wright's method of dealing with Paul better than Mr. Hale's with Robbie? What effect would such treatment have on the character of the child? In what way could you improve on Mrs. Wright's method of dealing with the request for candy? What relation is there between Paul's eating apples and Clara's eating candy, as implied by Mr. Wright's remark. Was Mrs. Wright justified in allowing her daughter to visit a neighbor on Sunday? Why? What traits of character did Mrs. Wright manifest in her dealing with this question? What traits would probably be developed in the daughter in consequence? Give your opinion of Mr. Wright's plan of dealing with the older boy, and reasons for the same.—American Motherhood.

ELDER T. A. HOGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills County, Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to EDITORS HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

BRO. E. B. HULL, secretary of the New York and Philadelphia District, sends us a copy of the program of their convention held in Brooklyn Saturday and Sunday, June 10 and 11. He also sends very copious minutes of the convention. We regret that we have not the space to give it in full, for as he suggests it would be a very good "means of informing them what transpired at the several meetings of the convention." The program was a good one, well thought out, and must have been both interesting and instructive. During the convention, Saturday evening session, and all day Sunday were the following parts: "Business, Sunday-school, prayer-service, two preaching-services, Religio session, convention-day exercises, and baptismal service," enough to make a busy day. Of the convention, Bro. Ogden T. Christy says, "A spirit of peace, unity, and love prevailed throughout the convention; and much good, we feel, will result therefrom."

What Constitutes a Sunday-School?—No. 1.

In a series of short, pointed articles we shall take up "what makes a Sunday-school," or the several items in the daily program, taking them in about the order they should come in the daily exercises. The first is

THE PREPARATION.

Without giving all the reasons why it is so we would say that the officers and teachers who do not make at least a reasonable preparation for their work in the school or class are coming far short of their duty, their "reasonable service." For it is within the power of every one to make a fair preparation if not a very complete or extensive one. The excuse, "I have not the time," is a weak one. Much in the way of a preparation for the class or school could be done in one hour. Is there any one who could not find one hour during the week, a half-hour twice, or a quarter-hour four times during the week? I think not. See if you have not passed several times that amount in some idle or unnecessary way. Did not you read several minutes just now from that book, or that paper? Did not you sit and chat in an idle or aimless way for a half hour just to pass the time away? And did these really need to be done? If you were as earnestly devoted to your Sunday-school work as to your papers, books, or friends, home work, fun, and frolic, or to your business, it is quite certain the time for preparation would come easily. We decline to make appointments when business interferes. We excuse ourselves from friends or visitors to do that which we choose to do. Then would it be impossible to find the hour or two, or even more, sometime during the week to prepare for our work on the Sabbath, if we really wanted to?

Yes, be prepared either at home, or at the teachers' meeting, or both. Come to the place of worship with heart full of willingness, love, cheerfulness, and determination. Show an interest in and an appreciation of the work of your fellow officer or teacher. Sympathize with them, if their task is hard. Help them if you can, and in turn they will help you. "Bear one another's burdens" if burdens there be. But where all work together as we have suggested the burdens are very light if, indeed, they actually exist at all.

BE PUNCTUAL.

One of the several elements that go to make up a successful school is punctuality. If officers and teachers are habitually tardy, it will not be long till the whole school is. It may be a little sluggish at best, but punctual officers and teachers will in time largely remove this difficulty. You are needed at the school-room a few minutes ahead of the time set to begin. An officer is needed to arrange the school as the scholars come in. Teachers should be there to arrange their own classes. New scholars will come, and many other irregularities will be noticed every session. These must be provided for promptly if good results are to be expected. The stranger must be welcomed and assigned a place and made to feel that you are really glad he came, and would be really glad to have him come again or remain at the church service. All this you can not do unless you are there on time. "The teacher should be with her class from before the start till after the finish" as a prominent Sunday-school organizer chose to put it. Any true interest or kindness shown your scholar, whether in or out of the class, will never be lost. Any pleasant greeting will bring its generous return of good. Be at your place before the session begins and welcome each scholar as he drops in. Make it a pleasant hour, and make him feel that he really wanted to return.

With officers and teachers reasonably well prepared for their work, and at their post of duty promptly and regularly, you have the foundation of a very successful school. You have a work started that needs only to be properly followed up to assure abundant success. We are now ready to begin the work of the day.

The time is short—

If thou would'st work for God, it must be now;

If thou would'st win the garlands for thy brow,

Redeem the time!

I sometimes feel the thread of life is slender,

And soon with me the labor will be wrought;

Then grows my heart to other hearts more tender—
The time is short.

The Greater Love.

The bee that sips her sweets from flowers fair,
Flying on careless wing now here, now there,
With azure skies above, green sward below,
And soft south wind to bear her to and fro,
Might seem the soul of self-devoted ease,
Her life a draught of nectar without lees.
Not so! Her prime is full of strenuous deed
That shames our own in generous meed
Of work for others' good. Long summer days
She builds her golden house, with guerdons stays
Her Queen, uprears her young, and stores her food—
Then sudden shuns her wealth, her home, her brood,
And seeks new haven on an unknown sea,
Leaving her life-work to posterity.

Business.

Business! There is an old axiom that "business is business." Of course it is, and can be naught else.

"Anything worth the doing, is worth doing well," is another trite saying. A thorough man, or woman, in his or her employment or occupation is a business man or business woman. In 1 Samuel 21:8, David says: "The King's business required haste." First, because of its responsibility; second, because of necessity for taking advantage of time, the present, now; as cited in Proverbs 22:29: "Seest thou a man diligent in his business? he shall stand before kings, he shall not stand before mean men;" evidently intending to illustrate that men to do business of large affairs, as in kingdoms, empires, republics, or national matters, must be diligent. The mean men, no doubt, means slothful and negligent ones. Whatever may be said of millionaires, and leading financiers of the world to-day, it is evident they are thorough in details, watchful of affairs, prompt and methodical. Russell Sage at eighty-nine years of age is an example of systematic work.

We read, not long ago, of one of our leading financiers being so prompt in his arrival at his desk at ten o'clock in the forenoon and leaving it at four o'clock in the afternoon that the office attaches knew the exact time of his movements without a watch. Carnegie, Rockefeller, Frick, Hill, Harriman, all hard workers, careful builders, from humble beginnings; diligence the keynote of business success.

"NECESSITY FOR BUSINESS-TRAINING."

The advanced methods of to-day, the demand for rapid, accurate, productive work in the competitive lines of commerce, professional lines, literary and all other departments, call for training, the rivalry of nations is calling for best and most improved methods. The victory of the Japanese thus far is largely due to training of their chief naval and military leaders. In our naval and military schools, they have trained the body as well, dietetic and hygienic laws, to meet the rigors of war. The only skilled nurse is the trained nurse. The successful railroad president is the man trained from the lowest rung of their department of transportation, thereby gaining a practical experience. So in editorial work; a man trained on the reportorial staff, coming in touch with life in every phase, alone can express public opinion. The surgeon must be trained in the anatomical, the physician in the physiological, the minister in the mental, sociological, and spiritual nature of humankind. The oculist who deals with the sensitive sight must be trained, though such training call up a pertinent truth. As a leading oculist was about to operate on a friend of ours, for cataract of the eye, when asked his charges, he said, "three hundred and fifty dollars." Our friend complained that it was "exorbitant." "Yes," replied the oculist, "but you forget that I spoiled a bushel of eyes in becoming proficient." So, while we are sorrowful for the failures, it paved the way to successes.

FINANCIAL.

We have in part covered this subject in the digest of business, yet, will add that the house of the Rothchilds now have one of their younger members in a bank in New York to learn details in the banking business. Our government offers a fine illustration of financial training, in which every stamp, every penny, even the pulp of currency, must be accounted for. Training in the small things, the details of finance, are recognized as the elements of which large corporations and financial institutions are safely builded. The housewife, the laborer, the man of small means, through keeping account of receipts and expenditures, by study, may lay the foundation for future success, and provide for the "rainy day."

RELIGIOUS.

Here let us quote the words of Jesus, Luke 2:49: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" No time to waste, energy demanded; even God's work among mankind, in the care of the creature, man, is business, occupation, employment. Jesus was trained with God in the beginning. He enters man's estate, "becomes in all things like unto his brethren," excepting sin. He communes with the Father, he declared that the commission, the authority, the message were given him of his Father in heaven. So he thought to train his disciples, so the written word is intended by the aid of the Holy Spirit to lead, and to develop us; so we need a business-training (in its true sense) to meet the financial, spiritual growth and demands of the religious department of Sunday-school and church of to-day.

As a church we have much to learn, not of theory, but of practice; not of what is the gospel message (for that is perfect), but of extending religious business; not in looking for easy places, and traveling old and beaten paths, but of being awakened to the necessities of the hour; not of praying alone, but working, occupying, until "he comes." The "children of this world" are in many ways wiser than we, and in some ways more devoted to diligent service, considering our "greater light." As an instance, we have in Magnolia a husband and wife, who returned last year from an eight years' missionary service in China. They passed through the perils of the "Boxer uprising"; they suffered in health; they each left aged parents; they have labored here during their vacation, and are soon expecting to leave for the "Far East" again and are anxious to do so, saying the enjoyment to them, of seeing the heathen Chinese destroy their idols and turn to Christianity is joy indeed; not only this, but they have sold sufficient bamboo paper-knives, at ten cents each, to build one church, and have quite enough money to build another. This is religious business, and yet they do not call it "sacrifice."

SOCIAL.

Sociability should be an agreeable and important factor in all our social and business relations. If you would win the child, be sociable. If you would have home and neighborhood pleasant, study the social side. If you would build up the Sunday-school, Religio, or church, come out of your shell of reserve, with a cheery: "Good morning, how are you?" The minister can win souls to Christ by the pure, yet cosmopolitan example of the Master, who "Sat at meat with the publican and sinner," that the Pharisee with his "I am holier than thou" might be rebuked. The world to-day is too much inclined to exhibit that homely saying, "Every man for himself and the devil for us all."

NEGLECT.

Business neglected! Who has not observed it? How oft we say "I forgot this," or "I should have done that," incriminating ourself of neglectfulness, which is akin to slothfulness. The tramp neglected. The criminal neglected. The bankrupt and the suicide neglected (generally speaking), sometime, somewhere. Rust, corrosion, decay, are reminders of neglect. Weeds overgrowing farm and garden bespeak neglect. "Zion might have been redeemed even now." Does that indicate neglect? We oft stumble because we neglect to use our optics. Perhaps we have not the scholars, the interest we should have, and golden opportunities past, because we neglect. When the Irishman was told "that fortune knocked once at every man's door," he replied, "Shure and I must have been out."

OVERDONE.

Did you ever see business overdone? Trusts, grafts, gambings, speculations rife, is business overdone? Frank G. Bigelow, the Milwaukee banker who defaulted in bank and estate funds nearly three millions of dollars, was an example of business overdone.

In society where the poodle takes the place of the child, the "monkey dinners" of Newport, are evidences of overdoing. The lavish expenditures in senseless gratification is business overdone. The dress of pride, the seeking for worldly pleasure, the creation and cravings of abnormal appetites, "the oppression of the hireling in his wages," the newspaper in seeking sensational news, the attorney in making lunacy the defense for murder, the surgeon in wanting to remove the vermiform appendix to obviate future dangers of appendicitis, the adulteration of our foods, the minister who preaches, but not from "holy writ," and who deals only with sensations, the general trend, the demand and supply for worldly gain and pleasure are all forms of overdoing.

I am myself convinced that physically I have overdone; and you will no doubt be assured that this paper is both underdone and overdone as well. But let us be earnestly engaged in a good cause, make a business of it, safeguarding by using the advice of 1 Thessalonians 4:11: "That ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands"; and, to say as did our savior, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

CHEROKEE, Iowa, July 10, 1905.

Editors Herald: "Six and one make seven," was the statement of A. R. Crippen, president of the Cherokee Branch, after I had baptized Earl, son of Bro. and Sr. Leonard. The above number have been added by baptism to this little band of Saints within the last eight months.

Elders C. E. Butterworth and Eli Hayer did acceptable work here last spring.

During the past three months I have visited several branches, and many Saints in rural districts, in the interest of church finances as well as missionary work. I have been kindly treated, and cheered by the unshaken faith expressed by the lovers of the great latter-day work.

Our newly elected district president, J. C. Crabb, and the writer, contemplate making a tour of the district together before the conference year closes. We hope to visit all the branches.

Did you ever present some of the glorious truths of the Book of Mormon to the devoted religious people but what you had similar words to these flung at you, "The world has no need of, or use for the Book of Mormon"? Latter Day Saints know there is a great need for that sacred record, and that it fills a long-felt want in this Christian and literary age; and in order to add one more proof to the fast-growing and never-ending line of evidences, I have called upon more than fifty prominent ministers of the Jewish, Catholic, and Protestant churches, by letter, with an urgent request for answer to the following question:

"Please favor me with the name of a book, if you can, that will give an authentic account of the peopling of America, the builders of the great cities, temples, etc., centuries before the coming of Columbus, or occupancy by the Indians, as proven by archaeologists."

If replies are considered to be of sufficient interest for publication I will compile them for publication in the HERALD.

What next? Just this. Let every member of the Gallands Grove District make the greatest effort of their lives to pay tithes and offerings this year.

Sincerely yours,

DELOTT, Iowa.

SAN JACINTO, California, July 6, 1905.

Editors Herald: On the 4th I visited Bro. T. S. Brown in Hemet, and in conversation Secretary Hay's name was mentioned, and I was informed of his death which occurred in the early morning hours of July 1. I felt very sad for I believe him to have been among the best rulers of the world, and possibly the best Secretary of State the Government ever had. He has made the office honorable among many nations by a succession of diplomatic actions, requests, statements or ultimatums as in the affair of the robbers in Morocco. "Pardicaris alive or Raisuli dead." He also received great honor from the government of France, and it was mainly through his good offices with that government that the persecutions of the island government ceased and our church was made free to meet in conferences or in worship in all the French possessions in the South Sea Islands. During all the correspondence with William Doty, Esq., the American consul in Papeete, he often assured me that I need not fear but what we would obtain our rights if our appeal could only reach the attention of Secretary Hay; and for that reason he urged me to request President Joseph Smith and other leading authorities of the church to present their appeal to him which was done, Brn. Fred M. Smith and F. M. Sheehy presenting the protest to Secretary Hay in person—who presented the matter to the ambassador of France, and the result is that the HERALD was able to inform its readers that the "Questions with the French Government were amicably arranged, and our folks were to be accorded similar rights as other religious bodies."

And thus the church in the South Sea Islands mission is free to meet in conferences and in worship in all the islands.

No doubt wisdom has not died with John Hay, but his successor must act prudently for some time before he gains the confidence of peoples and rulers of nations as Secretary Hay had. If he made mistakes, as doubtless he did—for he was a worker—we may notice them but to avoid them. A good man has passed away.

The contrast between the quiet, peaceable—not to say indolent—life in the tropics, and the rush, hurry and bustle of life in America is very great indeed. Every thirty-six days, almost as regular as the sun's rising, the steamer Mariposa arrives in Papeete from San Francisco. Then all about the wharf where she lies is bustle and hurry for four days, when she leaves, and all is quiet again until her return.

But the new governor has made a passing ripple on the quiet waters of Tahiti. He lately took a trip around the island with his musicians, and some of the Tumotuans, and had them perform the old heathen dances—marches and songs—some of these most obscene, and all of them would be gladly forgotten by the best portion of the natives.

Many of the people sent there by France act as silly as the natives ever acted, and I think more so, and in many cases are more beastly and autocratical than those of any other civilized country on earth; while some of the French people are very honorable, and delight in true republicanism or democracy.

We received several letters from the islands this mail in all of which the brethren wished to say Ia ora na oe (Peace be with you) to all the Saints of America; and Metuaore especially to Brn. Joseph and Alexander as well. Haua wished me to say Ia ora na oe to Wilmer and Laura, Hubert and Alice, John and Lillie, Luther and Ella, and to all their children, and to all the Saints; for when she goes to an island she meets all the Saints there, and she may have thought that we would meet them all in America when we arrived in San Francisco. Nevertheless we may meet or greet them all through the HERALD, therefore in this way we deliver their message.

Since our arrival we have met many of our former acquaintances among the Saints, and relatives, children, and grandchildren; while our minds were saddened as we again were made sensible that many of our former friends had passed on to their rest—peaceful, calm, and quiet rest.

Next week we hope to meet that noble, faithful band of Saints in Garden Grove, the old Newport Branch in which we have the honor of having had membership for a long time. We are now at my son Frank's place, and yesterday we passed the house which was Bro. Schade's, where "once upon a time" Brn. Joseph Smith, N. W. Best, and I were kindly entertained by Bro. Schade and his good wife in San Jacinto. It is nice and warm here now. It was one hundred and nine degrees in the shade yesterday and one hundred and twelve degrees to-day, but is cold about sundown or a little after, and I have no little difficulty in keeping my throat in proper order until I get acclimated again to this country. Otherwise we are well and are enjoying ourselves all we are able to contain. It is good to get home again and enjoy the meetings and social gatherings of the Saints, and the communion of kindred souls, Saints and friends; and yet I sometimes feel like a truant boy, neglecting school. May God bless the Island Mission, and all the rest of the Israel of God—now and evermore.

In faith and hope,
J. F. BURTON.

MARLIN, Texas, July 6, 1905.

Editors Herald: I will say that I feel the Spirit of God, this morning, that renews my strength. "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you."—Matthew 7:7. This scripture takes my mind back to childhood days, when mother and I lived alone. I, as other children, would be sitting around and get lonesome in an hour or so in the afternoon. I would say, "Mamma, I want something to eat." But she would say, "No, we ate dinner awhile ago." Well, that would do me for a while, but later on I would ask more earnestly, and she would say, "Dear child, you would waste it; you are not very hungry, yet." Well, I would get to studying about something else, and soon forget it; but after a while I would say, "Mother, you really don't know how hungry I am; just give me a piece of bread alone." Then I got it. So it is with our heavenly Father. I can say, Saints, that I have begged for spiritual food in like manner. I can say that I am a special witness to the Book of Mormon, and also the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. I have had them shown to me in a vision; and had the Spirit of God in abundance to testify to it. I tell you, we can not truthfully say that Jesus is the Christ, nor that these two books are true, but by the Holy Ghost.

Saints, remember Matthew 7:7, and press forward to the mark of the high calling.

May God bless the people, and prosper the work everywhere as he is doing.

Yours in the one faith,

ALBERT VAN CLEAVE.

IONE, California, July 5, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have been bedfast over ten months with paralysis, and suffer considerable pain. I was administered to at first and received some benefit. I and my son pray constantly for my relief and restoration to health; but I do not have faith that I will ever get well, because of my old age. I do not think old people can live always. My son Edwin has been nursing me and does well, doing all the housework and cooking, and doing what ranch work he can. I and my doctor want him to continue to nurse me, and he is willing to do so; and all my wants are cared for, and I have kind and careful attention; but help is needed in the house, and we would like to hear from a sister that could come. She will please write to him or to me.

Your sister in the faith,
MRS. DORINDA DAWSON.

RUMSEY, Minnesota, July 8, 1905.

Dear Herald: Brn. H. A. McCoy and J. R. Sutton came here on the 25th of June and begun a series of meetings in the schoolhouse. In response to privilege given by Bro. Sutton to ask questions, this one was handed to them: "On what evidence is it assumed that Joseph Smith, Jr., is a prophet of God, and the rightful leader of the church." This was ably discussed by Bro. Sutton, and we trust resulted in good. Many did not avail themselves of the opportunity to come and listen to what we believe. One man tried to persuade those who did come to stay away by telling them that no lady or any one thinking anything of himself would go to such meetings. Thus we ask the question with the psalmist David, "Why do the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing?" as it is all imagination with him for he never comes to investigate our claim, although he has ample opportunity for doing so. We do not know what the outcome will be, but hope and trust that the good seed sown will fall on good ground; for there are some honest-hearted souls whom we would like to see adorning the kingdom of God. One especial feature of the meetings, which interests me, is the spiritual revival of some of our members who have seemingly been in the background. I hope to see them awake to a sense of duty, and realize there is to be no sleeping soldiers in the army of the Lord. While here they baptized three of my children. The three eldest were baptized by Bro. I. N. Roberts four years ago. One, a child of four, is yet to be properly instructed that when she arrives at the age of accountability she may also demand baptism; and I pray God may give me wisdom that I may so instruct her, and enable me to so live that my work as a mother in Israel may be accepted of him, and that each of my children may ever be ready to receive the counsel of the all-wise Creator.

Our visit with the brethren while here was very pleasant, and we hope they will come again. We took them to Fergus Falls (our nearest railroad station) Thursday, July 6, where they left for Fargo, and will hold services there.

I am looking forward with much pleasure to our fall conference, which is to convene here October 7, with our Sunday-school convention on the day previous.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the brothers and sisters that God will give me strength to do all necessary labor required of me in the preparation for this gathering. Bro. D. F. Nicholson, one of the Lamoni Sunday-school teachers, visited us at our reunion on June 11, and was present at the Sunday-school session. Being called upon to address the Sunday-school workers, he responded with some interesting and pleasing remarks.

Among other visitors, whom we gladly welcomed, were Bro. William Oaks and wife of Dunseith, North Dakota, staunch workers of the Latter Day Saint faith, and former members of our branch.

I pray God that I may be numbered among those who will never bring reproach upon this blessed gospel of Jesus Christ, but may ever be found faithful to the cause I so dearly love.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

EVA B. ELLIOTT.

CHILLICOTHE, Missouri, July 8, 1905.

Editors Herald: Having moved from among the Saints we find it very lonesome, but with the HERALD we are cheered as it comes to us each week. We are blessed when we read the letters from our dear brothers and sisters, and are so glad to read the sermons that are preached in different places. We would be glad to have some of our brothers come this way, as we think it would be a good place to make an opening. We will be glad to have any of the elders stay with us, should they come. We live on Broadway Street, north of depot. We know of no other Saints here. Just came here in April, and hope that we can help in some way to plant the true gospel here.

Your brother and sister in Christ,

MR. AND MRS. J. F. MCINTIRE.

LEXINGTON, Nebraska, July 9, 1905.

Editors Herald: I could not get along without the HERALD. I have believed in God for fifty years, and this latter-day work twenty-eight years, and I believe that Joseph Smith was called of God to bring this work forth.

I feel that I have been very much blessed, as I have been so deaf for many years that I could not hear, and it seemed to me that most of the people would laugh at me, and it was the greatest trial that I could have had. But now things have changed. If they do not say anything to me, I can feel that I can not help it. I feel that an evil spirit tried to draw me from the work, and I am glad that I have had the grace to help me to stand for the work. I have put away enmity for any one by the help of the Master, and if I have wronged any one I am willing to make it right according to the law. Where any one has wronged me, I say, God judge between thee and me.

I want to be like good old Joshua, let others do as they may I will serve the Lord. May God help all.

F. T. DOBIE.

Elder W. P. Pickering Sick.

Editors Herald: I came to Judsonia, Arkansas, on the 6th to engage in a meeting in the tabernacle with Elder Pickering, who was taken sick on the 7th and is at this writing, July 13, lying very low with fever, at the home of Mr. Will Martin, one mile south of town. I am giving him my closest attention. We have also had two doctors with him. The case appears very doubtful.

In bonds,

D. R. BALDWIN.

Extracts from Letters.

I. W. Whittey, Corden, Washington: "Have been looking for an elder but none have come. If one should come I would do all I could to help start. I have been very sick and ask the fervent prayers of the brethren in my behalf."

In a letter to Bro. H. A. Stebbins, written June 28, 1905, from Goteborg, Sweden, Bro. J. H. Hansen says: "I am still trying to struggle along and do the best I can, but it seems hard for one man to endure alone a long foreign mission. I favor the Lord's plan of sending the ministry two and two. Yet I will not murmur but continue to do what I can, God being my helper; will also keep in line with my instructions, if I get any. Though I saw that I was continued in this field, yet I have not heard from Bro. Peter Anderson nor received a certificate of appointment for this year. This lonely one may be forgotten, but the Lord has not left me. It is impossible to get many people out to hear the gospel, because the labor unions and socialism are taking all the time of the working men it seems, and the higher classes have no interest in gospel news. Still we hope that the Lord will move upon the people so they will yet listen to the message from heaven. We see many signs of the coming end, as foretold by the Savior. We have very warm weather here now, and also a great deal of lightning by which life and property have been destroyed. One lady was killed here yesterday morning and the house burned, and around us barns, stock, and other things have been struck and destroyed."

These brethren were duly ordained, and Elder R. C. Russell was ordained to the office of a seventy. Ernest Ailex was also Convention Minutes.

Northern Wisconsin.—Association met at Twin Lake, June 12, 1905, Bro. W. P. Robinson presiding, Sr. Carrie McGinnis chosen secretary pro tem. Reports of school superintendents showed an increase in interest. Those who have taken up the parents' day programs have enjoyed them. The Searles Prairie School has taken up home class work and found good results. Twin Lakes School will take it up this quarter. Report of secretary and treasurer read. Convention adjourned to meet Monday after next district conference at Appleton, Wisconsin.

Northern Michigan.—Sunday-school met Friday afternoon, June 16, E. A. Goodwin presiding. After the regular work was over institute work was taken up. Bro. B. Lambkin resigned his office as association superintendent, and Bro. L. Stover was chosen to fill vacancy. Treasurer, Alice Joslyn, resigned. Sr. Katie Bennett was the choice of the convention to fill vacancy. Number schools reporting, 23; total membership, 888; amount in treasury, $22.08.

The Religio convention was held Friday, June 16, at nine o'clock, Bro. J. A. Grant presiding. The convention was quite largely attended. No business of importance was done. Amount in treasury, $5.23. Number locals reporting, 10; present membership, 294.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of Des Moines District: It is because of the fact that I have been confined to the bed and house for more than thirty days, and unable to visit the Saints in person that I make this public appeal. We are out of funds to supply the missionaries' families and carry on the work of the district. I am sure that the faithful Saints of this district will only need to be apprised of the fact of our needs, and a liberal response will be made.

We are compelled to raise about one hundred and twenty dollars per month to carry on the work. May I not hear from a considerable number of those who have not been accustomed to paying tithing? I hope every wage-earner in the district will feel the burden of responsibility that should rest upon every one of God's children to assist as much as is within his power, in a financial way, to help in the spread of the gospel message. It has been fully demonstrated that the months of July and August are the two in which it is most difficult to raise funds.

In sending money, please send bank drafts as much as possible, instead of post-office money-orders. The latter are very inconvenient when away from home, as they are only payable at the office on which they are drawn.

I want to encourage, and urge as much as will be consistent with righteousness, upon those who have been careless in regard to the keeping of a strict and honest account of your temporal affairs, that you may know that which justly belongs to the Lord. Sooner or later we must give an account of our stewardship, and I hope none will be compelled to hang their heads in shame when we are permitted to view the sacrifices we have made.

I hope to be sufficiently strong in ten days to be able to return to my field, and meet in person the kind Saints of the district. I note in Bro. Roth's letter of recent date, a very unfavorable report of the new (old) district tent, as he calls it. It is true the tent is second-hand, and it is so because we were unable to raise sufficient funds to purchase a new one, as one hundred and five dollars was the best price we could get on a tent of sufficient size; and we purchased this one which had been in use five weeks for $72.50. The company shipped out a piece of old wall, not according to contract, and because of my being down with typhoid fever I was unable to take up correspondence with them until the last few days. They immediately informed me that they would ship us new wall. I kept out twenty-two dollars and fifty cents, to see that all was as ordered, so the Saints need not be alarmed. I think you will find that the tent has been hastily condemned, and that the money you have contributed has not been foolishly spent. I am sure the tent will speak for itself when the new wall arrives.

Hoping to hear from many of the Saints of the district, during the months of July and August, with liberal contributions, I subscribe myself,

Your humble servant in the Master's vineyard.

W. CHRISTY, Bishop's Agent.

Died.

MACDONALD.—Sr. Dulcena MacDonald was born September 19, 1835; died at Denver, Colorado, May 27, 1905. She joined the Utah church, and with hundreds of others started for the Mormon Zion. She and her daughter got as far as Mannassas, Colorado. The treatment they received at the hands of the church was not such as to create reverence. They were reported as dead, and it was a long time before the husband and father found out that they were still alive. He started to Denver to meet them but died on the way. Sr. MacDonald was baptized by James Caffall, August 31, 1890.

BRANNAN.—At Denver, Colorado, June 8, 1905, Abbie M., daughter of Mr. John and Sr. Ella Brannan, aged 10 years, 4 months, and 8 days. She was baptized by Elder E. F. Shupe, June 23, 1903. About a year ago she inhaled a piece of a peanut-shell into the lung, which caused decay and death. Through all her sickness she was not heard to complain to any extent, and was a model of patience. She will be sadly missed in the home, and Sunday-school. "Of such is the kingdom."

BUTTERY.—Sr. Sarah J. Buttery, a member of the Broad River Branch, passed away July 2, 1905, aged 67 years, 4 months, and 16 days. Funeral-services conducted by Elder Joseph Squires, of Brooklyn, New York.

TAYLOR.—Eleanor Burkett Taylor, wife of Elder John Taylor, deceased, died at the family residence near Plain City, Utah, June 11, 1905. She was born at Ross, Butler County, Ohio, July 2, 1815. She was baptized into the church in 1832. In 1834 was married to John Taylor. They moved to Utah in a very early day, and in 1863 left the Brighamites to affiliate with the Reorganized Church. She was the mother of twelve children, eleven of whom survive her. Funeral-services were held at the Harrisville Church, Utah, near Ogden, on June 14, 1905, sermon by Frederick M. Smith.

EATON.—Angeline Eaton passed away at her home in Little Deer Isle, Maine, June 10, 1905, at the age of 83 years, 1 month, 26 days. She was the mother of ten children; three daughters and six sons now living. Sr. Eaton was indeed a "mother in Israel," and her religion was, as that spoken of by James, "pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father," for she "visited the fatherless and widows in their affliction." And so the local papers have testified of her life. Funeral from chapel, in charge of J. J. Billings, sermon by C. H. Lake.

DUTCHER.—Sr. Ellen Dutcher was born November 12, 1861, in Oakland County, Michigan; united in marriage to Pearl Dutcher in 1881, to whom were born ten children, of whom seven survive. Sr. Dutcher's maiden name was Terry. She was baptized March 7, 1887, and lived a consistent life. Died March 28, 1905. Sr. Dutcher was one of the best of women. She was a very great sufferer for six weeks, and then passed to her rest in the paradise of God. Funeral-sermon by William Dowker, assisted by C. E. Grant.

REW.—At Lamoni, Iowa, July 6, 1905, Bro. Sylvester Rew, aged 68 years, 9 months, and 14 days. He united with the Reorganized Church at Malad, Idaho, in 1869, was ordained a teacher in Binghamton, Wisconsin, in 1873, and moved to Decatur County, Iowa, in 1878. He loved the gospel and for years labored in his office. After nearly fifty years of companionship Sr. Rew is left to mourn. Of twelve sons and daughters born to them, ten survive, and seven attended the funeral. Sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins.

ROSS.—Near Beggs, Indian Territory, Bro. Isaac Ross. Was born October 31, 1850, at Mound City, Missouri, and died September 27, 1904, after a short illness of four days. Baptized May 28, 1877, by Thomas Nutt. He was a kind and loving husband and father, loved by all of God's people, and lived faithful to the end. He leaves a wife and six children, four boys and two girls, to mourn. Was laid to rest in the Beggs cemetery. Prayer at the grave by Bro. T. C. Deberry.

HARGER.—George Ambrose Harger was born November 23, 1852, in Branch County, Michigan; married Sr. Mary Bogue, August 17, 1874; moved to Decatur County, Iowa, in May, 1876, and to near Pawnee, Missouri, in March, 1900, where he died June 4, 1905. Bro. Harger was baptized at Lamoni, June 21, 1891, by R. M. Elvin. He leaves to mourn, a wife, three daughters, a son, three grandchildren, a brother, and sister. Funeral-sermon by C. H. Jones at Evergreen Church; interment in Rose Hill beside his two sons who preceded him.

Extension of Municipal Ownership.

The voting population in the United States is the most intelligent in the world. The time is past when men go to the polls like dumb, driven animals. They are reasoning and figuring, and, as might be expected, they take a very selfish and practical view. The sentimentality of party devotion has almost entirely disappeared. The presidential election of 1896 was a triumph of material interests. Thousands upon thousands then drifted away from ancient ties of party fealty and obeyed the instincts of self-preservation, fearful lest their accumulation, large or small, might be adversely affected. The same feeling was paramount in 1900 and 1904. The municipal election in Chicago was a logical result of those campaigns. Elections in the future will be determined by the same cause. The voters will consider, first of all, their own interests. They will give little heed to platforms and candidates, except as these appeal to personal and practical considerations.

There is truth in Judge Dunne's statement that the movement in favor of municipal ownership of all public utilities has taken deep root among the intelligent people of this country. "It is no passing sentiment," he says. "It is here to stay. Municipal ownership and operation of these utilities and governmental ownership of railroads, telegraphs, and express transportation are practical questions, upon which the people must pass within a very short time; and the politicians and parties who ignore these questions must be prepared for a short-lived career before the people." The movement is based upon the popular belief that municipal ownership of public utilities means that the people, and not a few fortunate stockholders, will share the profits. Curiously enough, the United States Government has done more than any other single agency in instilling this belief into the population. During the past two or three years, the United States consuls abroad have contributed an interesting and valuable series of reports upon the various phases of municipal ownership in Great Britain; and, almost without exception, these reports have been arguments in favor of the system. These documents have been widely circulated throughout this country, and they have stimulated the idea of municipal ownership to an extraordinary degree.—Henry Litchfield West in the July-September Forum.

Trained Foresters in Great Demand.

The demand for foresters is increasing rapidly both for State work and with private owners. Many States now have forest commissions, and several of them have State foresters. A trained forester at $2,400 a year and two assistant foresters at $1,200 each are wanted by California. Wisconsin wants an assistant forester at $1,500, Indiana a forester to take charge of its State reserve, and Washington offers $1,800 a year for a trained forester. In many other States the advisability of creating the office of State forester has been under discussion this year, and it is only a matter of a few years when such an official will be considered a regular part of an efficient State government.

The demand for foresters by private timber owners is growing at a still more rapid rate. During the last twelve months seven of the Bureau of Forestry force have left to take up work with such owners, and four have accepted public positions—two with Massachusetts, one with Connecticut, and the fourth with Ontario, Canada. A number of other requests from private owners can not be met because men are not available. The year before there were less than half as many applications for trained men. But the demand for trained specialists in this line has only begun.

Large lumber companies, great wood-manufacturing concerns, owners of extensive forests, railroad companies, and others are taking a hitherto unknown practical interest in conservative forestry. They must have expert men to control their holdings. The result is that forestry is very rapidly taking its place as a recognized profession. A number of forest schools are training young men for this work, but the demand has outrun the supply.

The July "Arena."

The July Arena opens the thirty-fourth volume of this standard review with a very notable table of contents. Among the features that will appeal with special interest to persons interested in civic life and duty are the following: "The economic struggle in Colorado," by Honorable J. Warner Mills; "Municipal black plague," a story of the period of utter darkness which immediately preceded the recent revolt of the people of Philadelphia, by Rudolph Blankenburg; "How the people should acquire public utilities," by Professor E. W. Bemis and F. F. Ingram; and a criticism of Andrew D. White's position on the railway question, by the editor of the Arena. There is also an admirable paper entitled "The charm of Emerson," by Professor J. R. Mosley, Ph. D., one of the most fascinating papers that has been written in years on the Concord philosopher; "Homer Davenport: A cartoonist dominated by moral ideals," illustrated with a number of Mr. Davenport's best drawings; "The struggle of autocracy with democracy in the mid-era," by E. P. Powell; "Our diplomatic policy in relation to the Republic of Panama," by Professor Edwin Maxey; and "The identity of Socialism and Christianity," by James T. Van Rensselaer. There are two original full-page cartoons in this issue: one drawn by Dan. Bear, the other by Ryan Walker, besides four full-page half-tones printed in sepia on India tint paper. These with the "Mirror of the present," the book studies, current cartoons, and book reviews make up one of the strongest and most readable numbers of the Arena that has appeared.

The Patience of Luther Burbank.

In the Country Calendar for July, W. S. Harwood writes as follows of Luther Burbank, the marvelous Californian plant worker: "Mr. Burbank's work has followed two main lines,—breeding and selection. By breeding is meant, primarily, the creation of a new plant life by placing the pollen of one flower upon the stigma of another. This is the prime, basic act;—ten thousand circumstances before and after the birth of the flower must be taken into account when the work is of the magnitude of that we are considering.

"Selection is the unflinching choosing of the best, out of a million plants, if needs be, taking the best one of all for future work and, from the progeny of this one plant, selecting the best on and on until the standard set is reached. Sometimes Mr. Burbank uses a thousand plants in the process of creating one new one, sometimes ten thousand, sometimes, indeed, a million plants before the end is reached. While making the white blackberry and the phenomenal berry, he used sixty-five thousand bushes in the tests. At last, after long study and selection, all of the many thousands were rejected and burned, excepting a few of each new berry; and, when it came to the final selection, one bush of each was chosen."

Can Street-Car Fares be Reduced?

It is only necessary to investigate the peculiar conditions of operation which exist in different cities to be convinced that the haphazardism of averages is an unsafe basis of fare reduction. Lowering of fares on urban systems can not be undertaken under present-day conditions without gross injustice to both the public and the street railways. To the street railways the pinch would come in unreasonably low returns upon the investment, while the public would be forced to endure inferior service because the companies could not afford to continue their business on the present liberal scale. The writer believes that any considerable reduction in fares from those at present in force would ultimately lead to the demand for the restoration of the old rates, on the ground that the American people,—at least those living in the great cities,—prefer good service at five cents to poor accommodations at any lower rate.—From "Street-railway fares in large cities," by Howard S. Knowlton, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for July.

The most interesting event in the magazine world for the coming month is the appearance of the Cosmopolitan under new auspices and in new garb. The famous old magazine, which was one of the pioneers of ten-cent periodicals, has taken on a new lease of life. The August number is interesting from cover to cover. Richard Le Gallienne has a charming essay on "The poetry of a woman's smile," illustrated with photographs of New York society women taken in their merriest mood. Alfred Henry Lewis begins a serial life of Paul Jones which promises to be the most important piece of biography of the present year. Probably the best and most thrilling mountain-climbing pictures ever taken accompany an article by George D. Abraham entitled "Most daring of all mountain-climbers." Garrett P. Serviss tells of the work of the Carnegie Institution's new solar observatory on Mount Wilson, California. Ada Patterson describes the adoption of children in New York City. Ambrose Bierce works his satiric vein to great advantage in a timely essay, "The jury system in ancient America"—a supposedly historical document of the year 3687. Herbert D. Ward contributes an article that is bound to create wide attention throughout the country. It describes in vivid manner the peonage system which is working such injustice in the South. The fiction in this midsummer issue is by Francis Lynde, Tom Masson, Max Nordau, Anna Wharton Morris, Herbert Quick, and Ambrose Bierce. Other contributors are Elbert Hubbard, Edwin Markham, Cyrus Townsend Brady, John B. Tabb and Alan Dale. The number is beautifully and abundantly illustrated. In fact, the new Cosmopolitan bids fair to step at once into the front ranks of the magazines.

RUSSIAN ZEMSTVO MEETS.

MOSCOW, July 19.—Defying General Trepoff and the autocracy, two hundred and twenty-five delegates to the zemstvos congress met to-day at the palace of Prince Dolgorouki to take the preliminary steps to secure a constitution and a parliament from the Czar. . . .

General Trepoff will stop the discussions of the zemstvos congress if it becomes too radical. The fact is so well known that the delegates already admit that the congress will be able to accomplish little. . . . Five police officers appeared. Their chief demanded that the assembly be closed in accordance with the prefect's order forbidding such meetings, on the ground they were calculated to produce disorder.

This statement was greeted with laughter. Count Heyden pointed out that the meeting was acting with the Czar's authority, as personally expressed by his majesty on June 19, and he therefore refused to obey the order. . . . Count Heyden protested against the proceedings, but the chief of police began taking the names of the delegates. Then cries were raised of "Write down the whole of Russia."

Many persons present who were not delegates to the congress requested that their names also be taken. The police then departed in order to draw up summonses and the business was resumed.

The scheme of a national assembly on the basis outlined by the committee presided over by M. Bouligin, minister of the interior, was minutely and critically discussed and denounced as totally inadequate to remove Russia's internal grievances, because, including a property qualification and an electoral system by classes, it prevented the assembly from truly interpreting the will of the nation, while the exclusion of numerous categories of citizens from the franchise was a contradiction of the principles of equity and reasonable state policy.

At the same time it was recognized that the proposed assembly would comprise a considerable portion of the social forces of the empire and serve as the center of a social movement, which would tend to secure political liberty and regular national representation. Therefore it was considered desirable that in the event of the carrying out of the Bouligin or a similar project the delegates of the zemstvos and municipalities should participate in the assembly to the greatest possible extent, with the object of forming a compact group and to obtain a guarantee of individual and public liberties.

Numerous resolutions embodying the foregoing criticisms were adopted unanimously, as were also resolutions complaining of excessive administrative and police control of elections and insisting that publicity be given to the proceedings of the proposed assembly which should be in direct relations with the emperor without interference from the council of the empire.

MOSCOW, July 20.—By a vote of two hundred and twenty to seven the zemstvo congress to-day accepted the first reading of the proposed constitution for Russia.

The congress rejected a proposal that the constitution be made the subject of a fresh petition to the Czar, and instead adopted a resolution referring it to the zemstvos and doumas for the approval of the people.

This decision was reached after a debate attended by sensational incidents.

M. Petrunkevitch, president of the Moscow Agricultural Society, declared that all hope regarding the government's scheme which hitherto had been nourished had proved vain. Everything was going on in the same old way and it was difficult to say whether the zemstvoists really intended to work in the national interest.

M. Petrunkevitch condemned the Czar and the government. He said promised reforms had not been executed and that everything remained unaltered.

"We counted," he declared, "on reforms from above. We appealed to the emperor vainly. We now appeal to the people."

Prince Rosthovski was so shocked by this declaration, which he said was a direct incitement to revolution, that he left the meeting.

Prince Dolgoroukoff and others, however, defended M. Petrunkevitch. A report was submitted detailing the shortcomings of the administration since January. The discussion was outspoken in condemnation of the government, it being declared that not one of the reforms promised by the Czar had been effected.

A resolution was offered protesting against the violation of private rights and the general arbitrariness of the authorities. A delegate from Tver, central Russia, maintained that the resolution was not strong enough, and it finally was referred to a committee to be redrafted.

Later an amended resolution was presented and passed. It likewise protests against the constant violation of the private and social rights of Russian citizens by administrative officialdom, and calls upon all local officials to protect the sufferers from the present state of affairs, and to assist in preserving the troops from illegal and arbitrary acts carried out by the authorities.

The foregoing press dispatches from the Chicago Tribune of July 20 and 21, doubtless will be of interest to our readers who, with all the people of the civilized world—and some said not to be civilized—are deeply interested in the struggle for liberty now going on in Russia. The meeting of the zemstvos, long refused by the Czar, but finally agreed to, from apparent necessity—the compelling power of recent events—indicates the beginning of the end of autocratic government in that vast realm and the establishment of a constitutional system in which the voice of the people is to rule.

Two years ago the empire of Russia with its iron rule of the Czar and his family, compacted by joint rule of the state church, was apparently secure for years to come. Dissenters against the government were imprisoned at will or sent to Siberia, and the majority of the people, including the "wooden-faced peasants" and the persecuted Jews, were held under the strict surveillance and bondage of its autocratic system, a relic of barbarism and the Middle Ages. Russia, apparently secure from successful upheavals at home, was greatly feared abroad, and her vast army and great resources, her bold and unscrupulous diplomacy, enforced by a harsh and cruel military system, enabled her to terrify and subjugate weaker nations and to compel strong ones to acquiesce in her demands or feebly but ineffectually to protest against her encroachments. The Czar's government, autocratic and crushing in spirit, true to that spirit, was unprincipled in action, and with it the end justified the means. Like a huge glacier it moved steadily and irresistibly and ground opposing forces to powder.

Literature teaches us that there is a power in history "that makes for righteousness"; that however great the wrongs and sufferings heaped upon humanity, out of them, or superior to them, right asserts itself and the power of truth is made manifest to the emancipation of the world and the race. Japan, an empire, but enjoying a large degree of liberty under the rule of an enlightened and progressive emperor, with a representative government, was endangered by the encroachments in the far East of the modern colossus. Perceiving her national existence to be at stake she carefully prepared herself for the impending conflict. Her patriotic people were welded together as one for the struggle, and when diplomatic efforts failed she declared war against Russia, with results already known.

Whenever a nation strikes a blow for its own liberty it strikes a blow for universal liberty. When Japan broke the military and naval power of Russia and rendered it powerless to subjugate her own people, she also struck a blow for the liberation of the Russian people and other peoples. She struck down the iron rule of military power by which the rule of the Czar, the grand dukes, and the bureaucracy were made possible and perpetuated—a power which holding the Russian people in subjection has also ruled millions of other nationalities held under its bondage. That power broken to a large degree, the Russian people are demanding: first, a representative system of government; second, freedom of speech and of the press; third, separation of church and state. In connection with the item last named, press dispatches of the same date as the foregoing, report the attempted assassination of M. Pobiedonostseff, chief procurator of the holy synod and leader of the reactionary party in Russia. "He probably is more cordially hated by the liberals than any other man in the empire. He has opposed persistently all reform movements, and is one of the most outspoken and consistent advocates of arbitrary rule in all Russia." Other attempts and assassinations recent and remote are fresh in the public mind.

Russia, as a government, is a combination of military force and religious superstition, amalgamated for the purpose of controlling the physical and mental forces of her subjects—a tyranny complete in rigorousness and absolute in power.

Two forces have been at work in the world from the beginning; namely, good and evil. The good—divinity—has asserted truth and right and has opposed and has been opposed by evil. Good reduced to all other forms or names—justice, liberty, equality, etc., is one and the same; and its opposites —injustice, inequality, oppression, tyranny, etc., are reducible to one concrete thing or term; namely, selfishness. These forces have been at work from the beginning, and the end is not yet. Evil, strong in its power to delude and mislead and enslave, conscienceless in its methods, shrinks from nothing, however cruel and merciless, to accomplish its purposes; hence the long periods of night and oppression and ignorance and suffering in human history. Good—truth, conscious of its power, conscious also of the temporary character of evil and of the permanency of righteousness, always strong and enduring as an eternal principle, with God behind it as a propelling force, continues the struggle unceasingly, and humanity moves upward to a higher level and a brighter day. Man, pressed to the lowest level of bondage, ignorance, and superstition, has rebounded from such degraded conditions. Periods of progress have been followed by periods of retrogression; but such backward steps have been but temporary. Divinity in the race has asserted itself and advanced progress has followed the periods of recession. So general have been such epochs in human history that they justify the claim for overruling providence in human affairs. The period of the Dark Ages in Europe was followed by a period of revival in arts, sciences, and learning, accompanied by a demand for religious and civil emancipation. These forces were at work in all the nations of modern Europe, evidencing the inspiration of a general spirit breathed upon humanity and carrying forward the race upward toward universal liberty. Millions of people in Europe, crowded as a population, hampered politically and economically, and to whom necessary freedom of action was impossible under repressive rule; were liberated therefrom by Providence by the discovery and settlement of the Western continent, where in America with her ample territory and freedom of opportunity, liberty was established as a prevailing and extending force in the world.

The American people, and all people who love liberty, have manifested an absorbing interest in the conflict between Russia and Japan, now largely transferred to internal Russia. Apparently pro-Japanese in sentiment, they have but manifested an interest in the liberation of the Russian people themselves. Every success won by Japan has been to them a success against oppression. Japan, herself, —modern Japan,—is a product of Western civilization. America, free by divine appointment and herself a missionary force with liberty enlightening the world, opened the empire of Japan to the trade and commerce and civilization of the world; and the empire of Japan has proceeded according to the processes and principles she has learned.

The progress already made by the Russian people since the war began is remarkable. Their spirit and temper, with the open criticism of the Czar and his government, and the direct appeal to "the people" manifest their growing independence. Now that the weakness of the autocracy has been revealed the people are demanding correction of the evils of the present system of government. A short time ago an assembly of working men attempting to petition the Czar was shot down and dispersed by the military force; now representatives of the people assemble in defiance of threats by the police and proceed to formulate demands and to agree upon a plan of action. What the result will be past history teaches us; no monarch nor group of monarchs, no ruling classes will be able to stem the tide of public opinion, and history will repeat itself and a constitutional government finally be established.

As workers together for good we can not but be deeply interested in the struggles of other peoples for truth and liberty. They with their efforts form the great drama in which largely is revealed the reconciling forces of truth at war with evil. On one side are arrayed the forces and agencies that align themselves with justice, on the other those of injustice.

Liberty is a comprehensive term, embodying forces that work for complete results. When the American patriots laid the foundations of political liberty in establishing a constitutional government they built better and more comprehensively than they knew; they laid a foundation which, built upon, was designed to make the nation free politically, morally, and religiously. The work they did was fundamental; future generations were to develop to the highest degree possible the system to establish which they pledged their all, and in the face of opposing, menacing principles. Through human selfishness wrongs became incorporated into the body politic and slavery and other evils flourished, hence our system of government, adopting a series of compromises, finally reached the period when principle and policy were to be tested, and a new generation contended for the preservation of the government in harmony with its foundation principles, and slavery was abolished. Time has healed the nation's earlier wounds, but inevitable to progress, other evils have arisen or more strongly developed, demanding again that the people assert themselves to rebuke the spirit of privilege, ambition, commercialism, and graft which is rampant, and which seriously endangers the liberties of our own people.

It is unfortunate that evils flourish in the world; it is fortunate, however, that men and women have opportunity to assert themselves for right. They become strong in proportion as they see and as they act in the interests of liberty and truth; but such course of action often implies sacrifice and demands devotion of a kind that requires an eye single to the glory of God and the good of the race, which means a great deal. God has not limited the agency of man to religious questions, but to all things pertaining to life. The struggle for power, for wealth, for social position, whether in Russia or in America, is the same, and is maintained on the same principles and by the same general methods. It reveals the same characteristics in men and women. Grand dukes and bureaucracies abroad have their counterparts in nominally free America where the general struggle for better conditions prevails. He who ordained religious liberty is also the author of civil and economic liberty, and we understand that he is interested in the development thereof to the fullest measure. He has declared himself plainly upon the public questions now agitating our own nation and other nations, hence in such declarations we have reason to hope that the outcome will be for good, by the final accomplishment of his purpose.

The Declaration of Independence and the establishment of constitutional government was, undoubtedly, for the benefit of the world entire, with a view to the preparation of the world for the coming of Christ and his universal reign of peace and freedom to all men. Whenever commotion appears among men politically, socially, economically, religiously, it is but a manifestation of disorder, requiring application of the prescribed remedy. Such are conditions at home and abroad; such are conditions which, with their remedies, we should study and comprehend. Modern revelation has specifically admonished us as a people to study and to comprehend the general and specific trend of human events, including all questions in which the welfare of the race is concerned. In proportion as we do comprehend conditions in the world, in the various phases of its activities, at home and abroad, we are prepared, if devoted to truth, to be "workers together with God" in the religious, political, economic, and social salvation of the race; in proportion as we neglect or fail to comprehend and to act, we are incompetent and disqualified. It is by an awakened conscience, coupled with an enlightened public spirit and sentiment, that good is fostered in the world—in church and in state; it is by ignorance, indifference, carelessness, perversity that misdirection or evil is permitted to hold sway.

Every generation has its lessons and its duties. "New occasions teach new duties." "Other men have labored, and we have entered into their labors." It is as essential that present conditions in the world be met by intelligent and courageous men and women as it was for past generations to measure up to the requirements of any public and private duties. Human life is a warfare in which no soldier honorably may retreat or seek discharge.

THE central portion of the state of Maine was shaken by an earthquake on the morning of July 15. No damage was done.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH EN ROUTE.

The HERALD readers will be pleased to hear from President Joseph Smith, who, accompanied by Sr. Smith and three children, left Lamoni, July 6, for an extended trip into the Northwest. Writing from Spokane, Washington, July 8, President Smith says:

We reached Bozeman on Saturday, the 8th. I spoke to the Saints in their hall on Sunday, the 9th, and at three and eight o'clock in a hall secured for the occasion. We stopped at Butte over night the 13th and came on to Deer Lodge on the 14th; spoke at night and the 15th the same; thence here by night train for Sunday, 16th. I also spoke at Bozeman Monday and Tuesday evenings, 10th and 11th. Have spoken here Sunday twice, morning and evening, and again last evening, and will speak again to-night.

The Spokane Review, of the 17th inst., contains a column and a quarter account of President Smith's Sunday sermons, including the epitome of faith, and an interview, in all of which a clear-cut distinction is made between the doctrines, practices, and public policies of the Reorganized Church and those of the Utah church. President Smith spoke plainly and clearly and we believe the cause will be considerably benefited both by his labors and this excellent report. His work will greatly help the cause in the Northwest and generally. The best wishes of Saints and friends accompany him and his family that the tour may be successful and pleasant.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

Bro. I. N. White, reporting for himself and Bro. Luff, writes encouragingly of conditions and prospects in the Missouri, Kansas, and Central and Southern Illinois Missions. He says: "I report eighty-nine baptisms for the quarter, by the missionaries, as we have not yet been able to get out our blanks for the districts for this quarter. I am encouraged over the prospect of having the greatest gathering into the church by baptism this year since I have been in charge of this field. We have made twenty-three new openings, and some of them are very promising; have organized one new branch at Shaw, Kansas, of nineteen members, mostly new baptisms. Bro. Lee Quick has been the principal worker in that region. They are asking for an organization in the Southern Missouri District, also in Ripley County, Missouri, in the extreme southeast part of the State, not in an organized district. I go to these points this month: both have a gathering of new members, late baptisms by Brn. J. T. Davis and A. M. Baker."

Bro. O. J. Hawn writes July 14: "I am holding tent-meetings at Richmondville, splendid interest, six have been baptized and there will be more Sunday. I never saw such a demand for the Book of Mormon; I am feeling good spiritually."

Bro. J. W. Wight reports eighty-five baptisms and ninety-eight confirmations for the past quarter in his field; this with not all reports in from the missionaries.

Bro. F. B. Farr wishes us to note that the newspaper clipping in his letter in HERALD for June 21, page 619, should be credited to the Milwaukee Free Press, September 5, 1903.

Recent advices concerning the proceedings of the late meeting of the Zionist movement state that the organization has concluded that Palestine is the proper locating point for the Jews and that the Zionists will work with the object of settling their brethren in the ancient home of their fathers. This is significant in connection with the offer of the British government to permit the Zionists to form organizations in Africa, and other movements looking toward the colonizing of Jews in other localities. There is a manifest destiny for the children of Israel; they are being led by Him who has promised to gather and to deliver Israel.

We have received copies of a pamphlet published at the Standard Publishing House, Richmond, Australia, called Revival or Restoration: Which? The subject, the Welsh revival, is indeed "treated from a unique standpoint" by Brn. Walter Haworth and Gomer Wells. Nothing is dogmatically asserted as to the divinity of the Welsh revival, but the aim has been to lead the reader in such a way that he will be able to answer for himself as to whether the revival is authorized of God or not. The latter-day work is introduced as one that is "time-tried," and evidence presented that God is in it. Six thousand copies were printed the first edition, and but for lack of means other thousands would be printed.

"ST. PETERSBURG, July 5.—During the last few weeks there has been a revival of Jew-baiting in various parts of Russia, and particularly in the western provinces bordering on Germany and Austria—that is, in those parts of the Russian empire which ought to be most accessible to Western culture and civilization.

"These anti-Semitic outbreaks have not received adequate attention in the newspaper press of Russia or of other countries. Laconic official reports issued in St. Petersburg and communicated by cable to other parts of the world have supplied merely the barest hint of ghastly horrors which would shock the conscience of the civilized world if they were fully known and understood.

"Since the Russian Easter—that is, the end of April, according to our calendar—there have been anti-Semitic riots in a score of Russian towns and in about fifty Russian villages. In the course of these riots more than five hundred Jews were killed and approximately ten thousand wounded. In addition to these casualties it has been ascertained that more than one thousand Jewish women were outraged.

"Several hundred houses belonging to Jews were demolished and razed. Five hundred shops belonging to Jews were sacked, and one thousand dwellings inhabited by Jews were looted. These figures, however, terrible as is the tale they tell, do not convey an adequate impression of the horrors which were enacted by the bloodthirsty mobs of fanatical Jew-baiters."

The Chicago Tribune for July 10 has nearly four columns filled with items concerning the prevalence of graft in the United States. According to reports so far only six States stand clear: Georgia, Iowa, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, and North Carolina.

Six members of the Arkansas legislature have been indicted by a grand jury for giving and taking bribes. Four California legislators have been expelled from the senate for accepting bribes, one having been tried and sentenced to five years imprisonment, and others soon to be tried. One tax collector was sent to the penitentiary for ten years for stealing two hundred and fifty thousand dollars of the people's money. Connecticut is having trouble with officers of loan and realty companies. Indiana charges graft against bank officials. Kansas is investigating the work of her State treasurer. New Orleans police are charged with receiving large sums for protection of certain houses. In Maryland, so far as discovered, graft is confined to county officials. Minnesota has had no graft scandal since the conviction of Mayor Ames and the chief of police in Minneapolis. Missouri is troubled with grafters of various kinds, and some of Nebraska's postmasters are under charges, as well as a member of the legislature. New Jersey bridge-builders are charged with fraud; Ohio has but one case under investigation at present; and in New York the Equitable Society holds the center of the stage. Land frauds are being unearthed in Oregon; Pennsylvania is investigating county and municipal officials; and South Carolina has a committee at work on a number of charges. Tennessee convicted an undertaker of defrauding the county; Texas is investigating private car-lines and refrigerating concerns; Utah has lost about one hundred thousand dollars in bounty frauds, and two prominent officials are under arrest. Vermont finds a laxity of method and mismanagement on the part of two officials of the State asylum, but no evidence of graft; Virginia is investigating election frauds; and West Virginia's chief officials are involved. Twenty-one alleged grafters are indicted by a Wisconsin grand jury, and one ex-city inspector was sentenced, July 8, to eighteen months imprisonment for accepting fifteen hundred dollars to permit the erection of a building by a brewing company contrary to city law. So the covert wickedness of man is being exposed. Let the good work go on.

KNOWLEDGE THE KEY TO EVERY DOOR.

Marvelous events are on the very verge of these present times, as is fully attested in the Holy Scriptures, both ancient and modern. Great events in the world's history have always been forecast by the spirit of prophecy; but alas! the worldly-wise have failed to discern these wonderful things, to believe or understand the forecasts of divine light sent to men for their own good, and without which spiritual or temporal safety is impossible. In ignorance and blindness have men been overtaken, surprised, and snared, when a knowledge of the true meaning of scriptural forecasts and passing events would have meant to them safety, liberty, salvation, and happiness. Whereas a lack of proper understanding and sufficient knowledge has been the direct means of bondage, misery, and woe.

How oft in the footprints of the past has the story been repeated! How much shall we gain by their sad experience?

Few people would willingly bring upon themselves suffering and woe, which justice inflicts upon transgressors, if they really knew the sure results of a careless life. A sane man will not thrust his hand into a furnace, for he knows the consequences. A realizing knowledge of the dire results of a careless and sinful life is withheld from the disobedient, though they be told of it plainly. Not that God designed to withhold any good thing from his creatures, but ignorance and spiritual blindness are the natural and inevitable results of sin. Just as impossible for God himself to change that fact as to alter the truth that one and one are two.

The capacity for spiritual knowledge, (for knowledge of any truth,) develops with righteous, or even moral living, (for all good tends toward good,) and diminishes with an evil and degraded life. It can not be otherwise. Hence the key to knowledge and power—power to be saved, power to do good, power to live right, to die right, and power to take up an immortal body at the glorious resurrection morn—is to purify the life from every evil and labor to keep it pure, which is the whole duty of man.

Knowledge of the meaning of the events of this our present time, and the marvelous things which the very near future will reveal, is not in the possession of the world's people to-day; though they are as plainly written in the Holy Scriptures as the plain prophecies which the Jews misunderstood to their destruction. They lacked knowledge, which is the safeguard against every harm. "But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, . . . which none of the princes of this world knew; for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory."—1 Corinthians 2:7, 8.

Paul spoke the hidden wisdom, hidden from evil-doers, and because they knew not they "crucified the Lord of glory." "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."—Saint John 17:3.

To know the Lord is to know his attributes, his purpose concerning us, the chief and important events which he has decreed upon the earth and what he wills we should do.

To know this will be to love him; to love him is to keep his commandments; which is life everlasting, the chief desire of every soul. By sober thought convinced of this truth, the hungry soul thirsting for righteousness will feel to say: Secure to me this knowledge though it be at the expense of every other possession.

But no one is able to impart this knowledge; even God himself will not do it independent of coöperation with the individual. Neither can a sufficient degree of understanding be obtained, even by the best of effort, in a day, nor in years. But as long as we find ourselves below the mark of perfection, some field of valuable knowledge lies unexplored before us; and "to him that continues to receive, more shall be given." And from whosoever continueth not to receive "shall be taken away even that which he hath."

None have any time to waste from a careful, consecrated life engaged in putting to practical use all the knowledge which we are in possession of, that more may be received. "Line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little," on toward perfection and happiness!

One of the most wonderful events recorded in sacred history was the sweeping of earth's multitudes from her face by the angry waters of the great flood. True, they were told, plainly, of the calamity to come, but because of corrupt lives could not believe or know the truth of Noah's warning. Had they known, they would have been prepared. The only possible way for that marvelous prophecy to enter their minds as truth would have been first to correct their evil lives. This they would not do, hence suffered temporally and spiritually. Repentance and purity of life would have led to a knowledge of the truth. No power could then hinder development of wisdom and understanding; which would lead to a complete salvation. The same is true of men in the glorious now. From the giving of Noah's warning, night followed day in the usual round, weeks crept to months, months rounded into years; yet all things appeared to men the same. How long must have been that one hundred and twenty years during which the simple faith of that ancient stalwart was subject to the scorn and jeers of mocking ignorance. But according to our faithful record, in the due time of the master mind, the mocking ceased, while vengeance spoke in mountain billows, pressing the wicked and the scorner to the heights and peaks of wretched despair. As earth emerged from her typical baptism, the weeping boughs of forest-trees beheld a land cleansed from wickedness; and rejoiced to see all nature begin again to "walk in newness of life." But the awful forgetfulness and unbelief natural to humanity, is sadly again demonstrated, when at the coming of the Son of the Highest in humility, the very people who made loudest profession to know the will of God; who with pious exactness worshiped in their synagogues wearing a cloak of righteousness, were the very people proven to be most destitute of knowledge. They recognized not their Savior, and when they had succeeded in putting him to an open shame, he cried out before expiring; "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." And this awful crime committed by reason of what? Lack of knowledge.

Reader, if you are among the number who because of a desire for a better life, have repented, been led to the kingdom of God on earth, and have entered therein without guile, you know that similar conditions are upon us, conditions similar to those above named in which knowledge holds the key to the royal highway of safety, to salvation, while ignorance is the seal to a doom of fearful punishment, before its slumbering victims are aroused to the fact that it takes labor and sacrifice to procure anything of value.

Reader, if you are still out of the kingdom, have not yet joined the number who can be happy through adversity, who see glorious victory through the mists of every defeat, who are counted small among men, but who will gather all the power of vindicated truth in eternity, even God's elect; if you have not entered, and that through the door, permit us to testify to you in words of soberness, that the last dispensation of the gospel is being sounded to-day; and however much we would desire to the contrary, earth's days of peace and tranquility are numbered. The woe which is pronounced upon the wicked in the Holy Scriptures is soon to find its fulfillment. (See Jeremiah 46:28.) The present message and warning to the world is: The great climax of the ages is about to be enacted. But the willfully ignorant reject the message for lack of knowledge. Thus they bring the just indignation of God upon them, in the severe storm of calamities which are decreed upon the wicked in this generation; saith the warning voice which sounded to the world some seventy years since, and which is just as sure of its fulfillment, as other forecasts given at the same time have been fulfilled.

Just as sure as the hundred and twenty years' warning of Noah's time, or the word of God in any age, "As the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."—Matthew 24:37.

It is to be a parallel case. Christ's coming and the "days of Noe." Let us see; Noah had a special message: one of warning. There would then be a special message of warning through some one prior to the coming of the Son of man in his glory. That warning has been given—it is yet being sounded, and its voice is to-day penetrating many of the most remote places of earth, calling out with no uncertain sound the honest in heart, from Babylon. The nations as a whole are rejecting this message, as in Noe's day. "They were eating and drinking, marrying, and giving in marriage. . . . And knew not until the flood came and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."—Matthew 24:38, 39.

Formerly the steady march of Father Time continued for the space of one hundred and twenty years before the pent-up indignation of God burst upon them in its fury. At the giving to earth of the latter warning we need not expect the long-suffering of God to fill that length of time to its fullest measure; for the facilities for spreading the warning is many times increased above the ancient time. And the Lord has said, "I will hasten my work in its time." And again, "I will cut short my work in righteousness." A careful comparison of these and other prophetic statements, with passing events, should, it seems, convince the most skeptical that the great climax in the world's events is about to be enacted; and those who are found without knowledge of these things will be overtaken as by a thief in the night. (See Matthew 24:43.) With the light of spiritual understanding added to our natural intellect, by the magic but potent power of the Holy Spirit, the inspired writings of ancient worthies give as accurate knowledge of the future important events as the written programs to a prepared entertainment tell the audience what feature of the performance comes next. But should any possess the program slip who could not read, the plainness of the printed slip could give no understanding, be the natural power of intellect ever so great. In Time's great drama, none can possess the valued knowledge of the next act who have not learned to read the sentences formed from a spiritual alphabet. The program for this vast performance is plainly written to the world; but the keenest minds are unable to read its wonderful page, independent of the holy, silent, unseen Teacher, who comes only to the sincerely obedient to the requirements of right and truth. In haste will this holy Teacher forsake the temple defiled with willful sin, nor return again short of lowly repentance and earnest prayer.

The apostle to the Gentiles gives expression to the truth, that worldly wisdom avails but little when considering the things of God, when in his letter to the saints at Corinth he writes: "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: . . . And God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty."—1 Corinthians 1:26, 27. Also 1 Corinthians 2:7, 8: "But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory; which none of the princes of this world knew: for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory." Again, in the fourteenth verse we have the following: "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." Jesus adds testimony to this truth, that it is to the obedient and humble that God reveals himself, in Matthew 11:25. Thus the key of knowledge is given, which will open the door to every real blessing. When gospel teaching by the servants of God prevails upon man to lay aside his self-sufficiency and accept the truth "that the world by wisdom knew not God," he is then, and not till then, in a position to add to his store of learning such knowledge as will be the means of final salvation in the kingdom of our Lord, with free access to the fount of perpetual life. May we all strive to keep in possession the spirit of meekness and humility, coupled with purity of thought and action, without which our faulty understanding will lead us in perilous paths; but with which we shall be thoroughly equipped with a knowledge of things as they are; to do battle with every contest with evil. And righteousness and truth, with all her faithful supporters, can not fail of ultimate victory: At this closing epoch of the world's history, all who are thus fortified with an accurate knowledge of the perilous times which are so surely to soon transpire will feel no dismay, while the marvelous events in the bud of the present shall nourish our faith till the bloom of to-morrow.

WHO WILL ABIDE THE DAY?

When we look around us, and see the conditions that exist among the people of the world, and hear their sentiments expressed, how that the skeptical side of life seems to be growing, and the way the majority of men treat that which is presented them of a divine nature, it brings to mind the prophetic declarations of long ago; and we repeat the question asked by the Savior while on earth nineteen hundred years ago: "Nevertheless when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"—Luke 18:8.

The inference that we draw from this is, that he will not find faith on the earth, at least among the greater number of its inhabitants. Worldly pleasure seems to be the spirit of the age; that which is of a light, giddy nature seems to be indulged in so freely that people lose sight of futurity altogether, and they seem to voice the thought uttered by the prophet Nephi: "Yea, and there shall be many which shall say, eat, drink, and be merry, for to-morrow we die: and it shall be well with us."—Book of Mormon, p. 103. The thought here so long ago foretold seems to have its fulfillment in our day, as so many people seem to think that to gratify the lusts of the flesh is all that is required. The writer has often heard the expression, "Let's have a good time while we can, for when we die we'll be a long time dead"; and the hereafter does not seem to concern them in the least; they are "laboring for that which perisheth," "and shall receive the reward of unrighteousness, as they that count it pleasure to riot in the daytime." (2 Peter 2:13.)

Conditions are lamentable, but it has been so predicted, and we should begin to profit by the fulfillment of those prophetic utterances. Paul declares "that in the last days perilous times shall come." (2 Timothy 3:1.) So we might understand from his declaration that the last days were at hand when we see those things existing that he predicts.

Peter also declares "that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." (2 Peter 3:3, 4.) And when we find just such scoffers raising the objections that were so long ago foretold by the inspired apostle, it causes us to conclude that should the Son of man come at this time to earth, he would find "a faithless and perverse generation," those who have grown cold through the cares of this world, and many, it seems, "who are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God."

The saloon or the ballroom seems to be the center of gravity, which draws from all directions; and even those who, under favorable conditions, would enjoy the communion of Saints are overpowered by their surroundings, fall in line with the larger crowds, and attend the ballroom, where all manner of evil is harbored; and in fine they imbibe of the same spirit until they lose sight of the gospel entirely. Well did the Master say in speaking of the signs of his second coming, "And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold."—Matthew 24:12.

Should we not begin to realize the fact that we are required to account to the great Judge? But it seems that blindness in part is happened unto the inhabitants of the earth, that they do not see or understand these things that are made so apparent that "every one of us shall give account of himself to God." (Romans 14:12.) But the objecter says, "You fellows have been preaching this doctrine now for some time, and we see no change. The sun rises every morning and sets at eventide, and the seasons of the year come and go in their order." "For this they willingly are ignorant of, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water."—2 Peter 3:5.

Just think of Noah, a man of God, preaching repentance unto the world for a hundred and twenty years, telling them of the destruction that was coming upon the earth, and was only able to save his own household, after such a continued effort. The people no doubt were inclined to scoff at him and to have no faith in his message, yet it did not change the matter; for when the time was fulfilled the floods came and the inhabitants of the earth were destroyed. And the Lord likens his second coming unto those days: "But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. . . . they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, . . . And knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."—Matthew 24: 37-39.

He will come in an hour that he is least expected: "Nevertheless when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"

Paul says, "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."—2 Thessalonians 1: 7, 8.

IMMORTALITY.—WHAT IS IT?—WHEN ATTAINED?

Christ . . . hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.—2 Timothy 1:10.

The teachings of Christ and his inspired apostles, as recorded in the sacred Scriptures, will doubtless give us the nature and character of the life and immortality in store for those who will obtain the same by obedience to the gospel.

The following quotation, as found in the HERALD for April 13, 1904, page 352, is the expression of a quite prevalent idea entertained by many in regard to the hope of the Christian:

I do not understand that the dead are immovable—that annihilation comes to the dead—but rather that it is the change that ushers in the more glorious perspective; that ushers in the more glorious possibilities; that begins the new life, the greater grandeur, the greater beauty, the greater usefulness; death is the hope and the consolation of him who believes in the doctrine of the lowly Nazarene.—William P. Hepburn.

The writer of this communication does not accept the sentiments expressed by Mr. Hepburn. And further, we believe that some, even among Latter Day Saints, have brought with them into the church traditional ideas and theories on that subject, not in harmony with the word of God as given unto us, both in ancient and modern times, for our instruction.

We believe with Bishop Hilliard, that "every one should be willing to receive light and truth (even if it is not in harmony with the traditions of the elders), until we receive a fullness of all truth, and are glorified in light and truth." (HERALD, June 18, 1902, page 601.)

We are expected to "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." Hence imperfection in that respect, while not desirable, does not necessarily bring condemnation. Until our understanding is enlightened, we may even sing with the mistaken poet:

"Beyond the bounds of time and space,
Look forward to the heavenly place,—
The saint's secure abode."

And yet we may not lose our salvation by so doing. Even so, we may have erroneous ideas as to the nature of the immortality revealed through the gospel, and as to when we will obtain it, and not lose our chances of obtaining it because of our erroneous views concerning it.

While the written word is accessible to all, and all should study it, yet it is probable that not any of us, with our present opportunities, will become perfect in knowledge and understanding on many subjects connected with the gospel and the work of God upon the earth, in this dispensation. But we should strive to apply our time and improve our opportunities to learn all the truth that we can, and unlearn as much as possible the errors we may have been taught through the traditions of our teachers, in the past, who may not have had the light and opportunities we now have, of learning of God and his word and work upon the earth.

God has means by which he intends to bring about a more perfect condition of knowledge and understanding than at present exists among his children in their scattered condition. In Doctrine and Covenants 92, God declared to the church:

Ye have sinned against me a very grievous sin, in that ye have not considered the great commandment in all things, that I have given you, concerning the building of mine house, for the preparation wherewith I design to prepare mine apostles to prune my vineyard for the last time, that I may bring to pass my strange act, that I may pour out my spirit upon all flesh. . . . Yea, verily I say unto you, I gave unto you a commandment, that ye should build an house, in the which house I design to endow those whom I have chosen with power from on high. (See also Doctrine and Covenants 87:3-5.)

In Doctrine and Covenants 85:36 God said:

Call your solemn assembly, as I have commanded you; . . . organize yourselves; prepare every needful thing, and establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God.

In paragraph 21, same section, God commanded:

You shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand.

Paragraph 39 to end of same section gives us in detail the proceedings that shall be followed in the school of the prophets, and how members shall be received into the same, and that all the officers of the church, from high priest down to deacon, will be entitled to the privileges and benefits of the school of the prophets.

Evidently, then, from the foregoing we need not expect perfection in understanding and knowledge until the means provided of God for bringing about that condition are placed within our reach and we avail ourselves of the opportunity to obtain the benefits thereby intended. We therefore see the necessity of a temple being built in order that we may make progress along the lines indicated. (Malachi 3:1-4 and Doctrine and Covenants 83:1-6 will be interesting reading in this connection.)

Likely, then, under existing conditions, we will more or less err in judgment in regard to the subject of immortality, what it is, and when attained.

The lips of loved and dying ones may utter beautiful words, expressing a hope concerning their expectations of immediately after death entering into the full fruition of the immortal condition, or we may sing:

"The flowers bloom in paradise
Beyond that golden strand,
Where angels sing and saints rejoice,
A sacred, holy band. . . .

"The tears are wiped from every eye
And all their troubles gone;
No one shall weep, or mourn, or cry,
For now their victory's won,"

yet upon investigating the sacred records (Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants) we may not find a word to sustain the idea that at death we will enter that condition of immortality which is taught in the gospel of Christ.

The writer does not believe that death is the time we shall enter the condition of immortality, brought about by Christ through the gospel plan of redemption; but that the resurrection—the very opposite of death—is the event that will usher the Saints into the fair fields of immortal glory, in the celestial kingdom of God.

It is true that Paul said, that to depart and be with Christ would be better than to remain in this present condition surrounded with sin, sorrow, and troubles on every hand. (See Philippians 1:23.) But Paul did not expect his crown of righteousness, eternal life, and immortality until the time of the appearing of our Savior, at which time the resurrection of the Saints will take place:

Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day, and not me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing. —2 Timothy 4:8.

•For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then they who are alive, shall be caught up together into the clouds with them who remain, to meet the Lord in the air; so shall we be ever with the Lord. —1 Thessalonians 4:16, 17, Inspired Translation.

That Paul's hope was not in death but in the resurrection, is clearly taught in 2 Corinthians 5:1-4, which we quote:

For we know that, if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is in heaven; if so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life.

Doctrine and Covenants 90:5 teaches that "man is spirit"; also that "the elements are eternal, and spirit and element, inseparably connected, receiveth a fullness of joy; and when separated, man can not receive a fullness of joy." Our understanding of this declaration is that the spirit of man must have a body, a tabernacle composed of the elements—a physical body—and that the two must be inseparably connected; therefore man's body must be made immortal so that it can not die and again be separated from the spirit by death, in order that man may receive a fullness of joy.

The promise of God is, that if we will obey the commands of God, we will through the resurrection again receive our bodies made immortal, and then and only then, will we be in possession of the immortality promised, and which has been brought to light through the gospel. And only then will man be capable of receiving a fullness of joy in the celestial kingdom of God. Accepting this idea to be correct, it will give us the key to a proper understanding as to the absolute necessity of man being resurrected from the dead—redeemed from the grave—in order to obtain and enjoy the immortality taught in the word of God, as being the result of the redemption brought to pass through Christ's atonement.

Let us now see if the sacred records will bear us out in our position. Job taught the resurrection of the body, and that in his flesh he would see God:

For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me.—Job 19:25-27.

I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction: repentance shall be hid from mine eyes.—Hosea 13:14.

Now, verily I say unto you, that through the redemption which is made for you, is brought to pass the resurrection from the dead. And the spirit and the body is the soul of man. And the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul; and the redemption of the soul is through him who quickeneth all things, in whose bosom it is decreed, that the poor and the meek of the earth shall inherit it.—Doctrine and Covenants 85:4.

For, notwithstanding they [the righteous] die, they also shall rise again a spiritual body; they who are of a celestial spirit shall receive the same body, which was a natural body: even ye shall receive your bodies, and your glory shall be that glory by which your bodies are quickened. Ye who are quickened by a portion of the celestial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness.—Doctrine and Covenants 84:6.

After Adam and Eve were driven out of Eden because of transgression, God made known to them the plan of redemption, which caused them to rejoice in the hope that even though condemned to die they would again "see God in the flesh." (Genesis 4:1-12, Inspired Translation.)

For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures. . . . Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen; and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ: whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not. For if the dead rise not, then is Christ not raised: and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the firstfruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming. Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power. For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. . . . Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. —1 Corinthians 15:3, 4, 12-26, 51-55.

Paul teaches that death is an enemy and shall be destroyed. Man will be redeemed from the power of death through the resurrection. Then this mortal shall have put on immortality, and death will have been swallowed up in victory. The victory will then have been won, and not when we die and go to paradise, as described by the poet above quoted:

It behoveth the great Creator that he suffereth himself to become subject unto man in the flesh that all men might become subject unto him. For as death has passed upon all men, to fulfill the merciful plan of the great creator, there must needs be a power of resurrection, and the resurrection must needs come unto man by reason of the fall; and the fall came by reason of transgression; and because man became fallen, they were cut off from the presence of the Lord; wherefore, it must needs be an infinite atonement; save it should be an infinite atonement, this corruption could not put on incorruption. Wherefore, the first judgement which came upon man, must needs have remained to an endless duration. And if so, this flesh must have laid down to rot and crumble to its Mother Earth, to rise no more. O the wisdom of God! his mercy and grace! For behold, if this flesh should rise no more, our spirits must become subject to that angel who fell from before the presence of the eternal God, and became the devil, to rise no more. And our spirits must have become like unto him, and we became devils, angels to a devil, to be shut out from the presence of our God, and to remain with the father of lies, in misery, like unto himself. . . . O how great the goodness of our God, who prepareth a way for our escape from the grasp of this awful monster; yea, that monster, death and hell, which I call the death of the body, and also the death of the spirit. And because of the way of deliverance of our God, the Holy One of Israel, this death, of which I have spoken, which is the temporal, shall deliver up its dead: which death is the grave. And this death of which I have spoken, which is the spiritual death, shall deliver up its dead; which spiritual death is hell; wherefore, death and hell must deliver up their dead, and hell must deliver up its captive spirits, and the grave must deliver up its captive bodies, and the bodies and the spirits of men will be restored, one to the other; and it is by the power of the resurrection of the Holy One of Israel.—2 Nephi 6:2-4.

Now we see that Adam did fall by the partaking of the forbidden fruit, according to the word of God; and thus we see, that by his fall, all mankind became a lost and a fallen people. And now behold, I say unto you, that if it had been possible for Adam to have partaken of the fruit of the tree of life at that time, there would have been no death, and the world would have been void, making God a liar: for he said, If thou eat, thou shalt surely die. And we see that death comes upon mankind, yea, the death which has been spoken of by Amulek, which is the temporal death; nevertheless there was a space granted unto man, in which he might repent; therefore this life became a probationary state; a time to prepare to meet God; a time to prepare for that endless state, which has been spoken of by us, which is after the resurrection of the dead. Now if it had not been for the plan of redemption, which was laid from the foundation of the world, there could have been no resurrection of the dead; but there was a plan of redemption laid, which shall bring to pass the resurrection of the dead, of which has been spoken.—Alma 9:4, 5.

For O how beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that is the founder of peace; yea, even the Lord, who has redeemed his people; for were it not for the redemption which he hath made for his people, which was prepared from the foundation of the world; I say unto you, were it not for this, all mankind must have perished. But behold, the bands of death shall be broken, and the Son reigneth, and hath power over the dead; therefore, he bringeth to pass the resurrection of the dead. . . . And now if Christ had not come into the world, speaking of things to come, as though they had already come, there could have been no redemption. And if Christ had not risen from the dead, or have broken the bands of death, that the grave should have no victory, and that death should have no sting, there could have been no resurrection. But there is a resurrection, therefore the grave hath no victory, and the sting of death is swallowed up in Christ.—Mosiah 3:6-9.

Thus we find the testimony of the books are united in their teachings that a resurrection of the body is absolutely necessary that man may obtain immortality—the inseparable condition of spirit and element (the physical body)—in order to receive a fullness of joy. In Doctrine and Covenants 45:2, the Lord in speaking to the elders says:

Wherefore hearken, and I will reason with you, and I will speak unto you and prophesy; as unto men in days of old; and I will show it plainly, as I showed it unto my disciples, as I stood before them in the flesh, and spake unto them, saying, as ye have asked me concerning the signs of my coming, in the day when I shall come in my glory in the clouds of heaven, to fulfill the promises that I have made unto your fathers; for as ye have looked upon the long absence of your spirits from your bodies to be a bondage, I will show unto you how the day of redemption shall come.

Here we learn that the apostles who were with Christ when he was on the earth looked upon the long absence of their spirits from their bodies—the condition caused by death—as a bondage; evidently then they considered it an undesirable condition to be in, and did not think that death was the entrance into the immortal condition that was brought to light through the gospel, and that at death the victory would be won.

In paragraphs 3, 4, 5, and 6, of section 45, Christ enumerates to his disciples the signs of the times down until the second coming of Christ, and then in paragraph 7 tells them:

Before the arm of the Lord shall fall, an angel shall sound his trumpet, and the saints that have slept, shall come forth to meet me in the cloud; wherefore if ye have slept in peace, blessed are you, for as you now behold me and know that I am, even so shall ye come unto me and your souls shall live, and your redemption shall be perfected.

This shows conclusively that by and through the resurrection their souls should live and their redemption be perfected.

The full import of the declaration, that their "souls shall live and their redemption be perfected," will be understood when we remember that the "spirit and the body is the soul of man," and that "the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul; and the redemption of the soul is through him who quickeneth all things." (Doctrine and Covenants '85:4.) Thus we see that the resurrection, the reunion of spirit and body—the very opposite of death—is the entrance into the regions of immortal glory.

As a closing thought to this article we will give some extracts from the poems of David H. Smith wherein he, in most beautiful and truthful language, describes the parting of body and spirit at death, and their meeting again at the resurrection and entering into their immortal reunion to inherit the fullness of the celestial glory in the kingdom of God:

THE PARTING.

The day hath passed,—the fleeting day of life,—

In the dim, tranquil twilight at its close,
I stand upon the shore of a wide sea;
Whose unknown depths profound I soon must cross.

O thou frail envelope enfolding me,
Warm, palpitating wave of life, that soon

Shall break and be at rest, I give to thee
A fond farewell. . . .

 Soon shall I come
Again, to hail the rising from the tomb
In thine immortal beauty, youth, and bloom;
From sin, pain, death, for evermore set free.
And blessed shall our joyful meeting be,
When we again receive our unity.

THE MEETING.

Beneath the alter, where
The just are waiting for the Lord,
Long I have waited; . . .

In expectation of our coming forth,

The Lord has come; and we have seen his form
More glorious than a lightning-winged storm,—
As peaceful as a silent, sleeping lake,—
More full of power than the strong earthquake;
Holding this power in a soft repose.
Like depths of fragrance folded in a rose.
With him we have descended to the earth,
To join our bodies from the grave brought forth.

Never to drink the cup of death again.

Filled with the Spirit of the living God,
Made glorious and incorruptible,
Thus meet we once again my beautiful.
Awake, companion! I have come once more,
Even as I gave promise long before.

United now again! embrace most sweet,
When with inflowing of life's bounding wave
The waking body and its spirit meet,
To praise the Lord triumphant o'er the grave.
Fullness of joy the spirit can not reap,—
Matter alone can not be glorified,—
Holy communion these must therefore keep E'er in celestial fullness they abide.

JOSEPH FLORY.

HANFORD, California.

THE JEWS.

It was Shylock who said: "Hath not a Jew eyes? hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions? fed with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, healed by the same means, warmed and cooled by the same winter and summer, as a Christian is?" The query is three hundred years old, and the answer, till recently, has been in the negative; but I intend to show that a brighter day has dawned for this unfortunate and despised race. That they were responsible for the tragedy of Calvary, none should deny; and, as the result of their rejection of Jesus Christ, they were scattered and, it seems, cursed. Surely, had they received their Messiah, some of the blackest, cruelest pages of history would not be written. They hated and persecuted the early Christians, and when the tables were turned, the Christians (be it said to their shame) hated and persecuted them. The black hand of bigotry strangled the voice, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." We must no longer lay the deed of his ancestors against the Jew and his descendants down to the sixtieth generation.

That the Jewish race has been "a hiss and by-word" among all nations, is the result of their own folly; it is simply cause and effect. The peculiar phases of this epoch in their history we can not examine here: it is the present and future that concern us most. Suffice to say—wherever they went, in Europe, Asia, or Africa, they were treated worse than dogs. History contains a bloody page. Every land of boasted freedom (except the United States) must blush when it thinks of the Jews. England would fain draw the curtain of forgetfulness over the reign of King Edward I, who was unmercifully severe upon this afflicted people; for after confiscating their property, he expelled them from his kingdom,—about sixteen thousand, five hundred and eleven—in the year 1290.

Nor can France boast, for under the reign of her bold, fair, and tall kings, and also Louis IX, the blood of the descendants of Abraham flowed like water. The sufferings of the Jews in Spain from the crusaders were probably greater than in any other part of Europe. Here they were accused of poisoning the rivers and wells, and fifteen thousand were in consequence put to death. Under a similar charge twelve thousand were killed at Mentz, Germany. Holland, the home of the persecuted, held out her hand only to withdraw it in their hour of need. In Poland they enjoyed greater privileges than was ever allotted them in any of the European states.

Pagan and Pope, Mohammedans and Christians, though disagreeing in everything else, have clasped hands in their vain attempt to crush out this fugitive and wretched race. They are a living and perpetual miracle; a standing rebuke to the infidel, and a powerful vindication of prophetic language, and in the great drama that has been before the minds of the world these six thousand years, the Jew is to play another part, mightier than the exodus from Egypt, sublimer than the scene at Sinai. "Israel shall be saved."

The following from Zechariah 2:1-4:

I lifted up mine eyes again, and looked, and behold a man with a measuring line in his hand. Then said I, Whither goest thou? And he said unto me, To measure Jerusalem, to see what is the breadth thereof, and what is the length thereof. And, behold, the angel that talked with me went forth, and another angel went out to meet him, and said unto him, Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein.

Joseph Smith wrote in his history (Times and Seasons, vol. 3, p. 729), that the angel Moroni appeared to him, September 21, 1823, and among other quotations he gave the eleventh chapter of Isaiah, saying it was about to be fulfilled. Verse 12 reads that the Lord "shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth."

In the Book of Mormon (first published in 1830, copies of first edition found in large public libraries), 2 Nephi, chapter 12, is found the following statement:

After the book [Book of Mormon] of which I have spoken shall come forth, . . . the Jews which are scattered, also shall begin to believe in Christ: and they shall begin to gather in upon the face of the land.

Paul refers to Israel in Romans 11:25:

For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits; that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in.

While Luke 21:24 most emphatically states that the Jews "shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

And to the foregoing I wish to add the following, from a revelation to Joseph Smith, March, 1831, Doctrine and Covenants, 45:4:

When the time of the Gentiles is come in, a light shall break forth among them that sit in darkness, and it shall be the fullness of my gospel; . . . in that generation shall the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

We must remember: 1. That it would be an outrage on simplicity, and a wresting of the Scriptures to our own destruction, to spiritualize these plain teachings. 2. That the Jews and Jerusalem are meant. 3. That they are to be scattered to "the four corners of the earth." 4. That when "the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled," they are to be gathered to their own land, Jerusalem. 5. That in 1823 Joseph Smith announced that the time was near at hand, reiterated it in 1830, and in 1831 stated that the times of the Gentiles had come in. 6. That the following extracts prove that Mr. Smith prophesied the truth concerning the Jews; that they are fulfilling the prophecies and vindicating the angel's message in the latter days:

At Andover, in 1843, M. A. Beck published a History of the Jews. Preface, page 7:

The following pages will show, in a succinct and popular epitome of their history, what God has done to them in his vindicating justice, and what he is beginning to do to them, in turning the hearts of foes and friends toward them, to do them good IN THE LATTER DAYS.

This book being published in 1843, twenty years after the angel quoted Isaiah, the following, page 285, is significant:

Of late years, there has been a very remarkable confluence of the Jews towards Palestine. . . . But ever since 1832, when Mehemet Ali took possession of Syria, there has been a remarkable flocking of the Jews to Palestine. The precise number of them at present [1842] in the Holy Land is estimated to amount to about forty thousand. . . . In Jerusalem, which contains six synagogues, there are said to be about ten thousand.

On page 288, the author says:

As many contradictory accounts have been published of the number of Jews resident in Jerusalem, I have used every means of procuring correct information on this subject . . . at the lowest calculation it amounted to the number I have stated. The period is not very distant when the Turkish law permitted no more than three hundred Jews to reside within the walls.

Comments on such emphatic statements would be superfluous.

In the late forties, Hollis Read, A. M., wrote a book, The Hand of God in History, which was published by Robins & Company, Hartford, 1855. Chapter 19 is devoted to the Jews, and from it I quote:

But a brighter day is dawning. The page of Providence is at this moment sublimely interesting in reference to the seed of Abraham. Every year brightens the signs that the time to favor Zion is near. The Spirit of God is moving on the face of her dark waters. An angel of mercy is seen walking on the troubled sea of Israel's afflictions, saying, "Peace, be still." . . . There is much at present in their civil condition, that indicates the returning favor of Heaven. Nothing decisive or permanent was done to remove the disabilities of the Jews till the beginning of the present century. . . . In England, a single ray of light darted above their horizon, but was soon extinguished. An act passed in Parliament, (1753,) in favor of Jewish emancipation, but was repealed the next year; and not till the year 1830, was the question renewed, and then only to be lost. Yet in the same year a bill in their favor was carried in France. . . . The late Prussian ambassador at the court of Rome, declared that, "throughout the vast dominions of Germany and Poland, there is a general movement of inquiry, and a longing expectation abroad, that something will take place to restore them to the land of their fathers." Reverend Mr. Grimshawe says, "A vast number of Jews are preparing to emigrate from Germany and Poland to settle in Palestine; while throughout the whole of Europe and Asia, a general expectation is rising among them that the time of their deliverance is drawing near." . . . The very valuable testimony of the Reverend Mr. Bellson . . . "I am more than ever," says he, "impressed, that the Jews are hastening to a great crisis. It must be evident to any common observer, there is a great movement among them. This wonderful people, who for eighteen hundred years remained unaltered, have undergone a marvelous revolution within the last forty years, especially within the last twenty. They are in a transition state. Thousands convicted of the hollowness and rottenness of Rabbinism, and, therefore, thrown it off, feel a vacuum in their souls, which Christian truth alone can fill." . . . We can not but regard the Jews as on the eve—yea, in the midst of some mighty movement. There is, on their part, a singular preparedness for some great change. They are in a transition state—now being schooled in every nation on the face of the earth, and in every branch of practical, profound, and useful learning, and in the various functions of office—prepared in lessons of rich and varied wisdom and experience, to construct a more perfect civil and church polity than the world has yet seen.

But we must not lose sight of the fact that the heart of modern Pharaoh is still hard, and to-day, nearly everywhere, the foot of tyranny is on the neck of the Jew; and notwithstanding the nations permit them to live, they are a despised race, and the only solution to this mighty problem is, Palestine for the Jews!

It is true that a wave of sentiment in favor of this people swept over the civilized earth in the latter half of the nineteenth century, and the Jews were elevated above the level of the horse; but even now they are brutally treated in certain countries, and life in Eastern Europe is becoming more unbearable for them. Of the eleven million Jews in the world, two thirds of this number live in Russia, Austria, and Roumania, and here they are treated like dogs. It was only fourteen years ago that imperial edicts were issued throughout Russia, forbidding them to hold lands, and excluding them from certain cities, and, in 1891, persecutions were received to the extent that valuable property was destroyed, many Jews imprisoned, and famine stared them in the face. It was Baron Hirsche who, at this time, offered fifteen million dollars toward a fund for establishing in Syria and other places colonies for the Jews expelled from Russia.

It is because of this brutal treatment that they flee to the land of the West, or as Isaiah puts it, "The land shadowing with wings." (Isaiah 18.) And, though they are honest, peaceable, and industrious, they are not wanted here. The cities of the United States are overcrowded with this people. They are seldom found in poorhouses, yet they constitute a large population of the slum districts. The United States has over a million of this race, but they are peculiar. Not affiliating with the Gentiles, they are and will remain—Jews. An unsuccessful attempt to establish colonies in Canada and South America was made. England is crying out, "England for the English!" and the poor Jew receives the weight of the blow.

The restoration of Palestine to the Jews is born of a living need. The leaven was working in the day of Napoleon, for he tried to form colonies in the Holy Land. And even one of England's clever writers, Marian Evans, advances this thought in her last work, Daniel Deronda. I am of the opinion, however, that the Book of Mormon furnished her the inspiration, as she refers to this book.

Surely the Lord is moving upon his elect people. In recent years, societies called "Lovers of Zion" have been formed, and their main object is, "To promote and encourage the colonization of Palestine and the acquisition of a legally secured home for Jewish people in Palestine."—The American Jewish Year Book, 1901, page 181. The Z. B. T. Fraternity was founded December 29, 1898, for like purpose. Its members are men of affluence, nearly all graduates of colleges.

Zionism is the essence of Judaism. As is to be expected, thousands of Jews (mostly of this country) oppose this scheme. Opposition has been felt in every great good, and this opposing factor is but an impetus to the other class, who are in the majority. The real Jew prays three times a day for the building of the temple, and his heart yearns to behold the land of his fathers. Within ten years, a powerful movement, called the Zionistic Congress, has been inaugurated by such well-known men as Herzl, Nordau, Zangwill, Montefiore, Gottheil, and a score of like repute. These men are earnest; they mean business.

It is true that the nations are jealously watching Palestine, fearing that the golden apple may fall into the hand of some one power; but this apprehension may be effectively swept away by allowing so inoffensive a people as the Jews to establish a neutral power of arbitration and preserve the open door in Palestine. The opening of Asia is gradually bringing Palestine to the attention of the world. Already the puff of the engine is heard in her land; and where steam enters, rapid advancement is assured.

The following from the New York Evening Post, May 22, 1901, is quite to the point:

In Jerusalem there are now electric lights, telephones, phonographs, sanitary plumbing, modern stores, houses built with "a. m. i." and in short, most of the comforts of civilized life.

This gathering of the Jews to their native home is not the dream of the idealist, but an absolute fact. Intelligent men can not afford to close their eyes to that which is transpiring right under their noses. If individuals will not read the signs of the time, no one is to blame but themselves.

The Christian Herald of September 8, 1897, has this:

The restoration of the Jews to their own land was one of the signs by which we were to recognize the days of the closing dispensation.

And the same paper, September 1, 1897, records the following statement of Reverend Selah Merrill, D. D., LL. D., long United States consul in Jerusalem:

Travelers estimated that there is at the present time a larger Jewish population in Jerusalem than at any period since the Moslem conquest, and their number is constantly increasing by immigration.

To the reader I submit this sketch. The subject is worthy the study of any man, treating as it does on the fulfillment of prophetic words. We know "Israel shall be saved" "for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

CITIZENS TO BLAME FOR BAD GOVERNMENT.

The people of any land can overthrow civil evils whenever they want to, and can have a government as good as they themselves make it or as bad as they suffer it to become. There is hardly a community in the United States where the law-abiding people are not in the majority. They are usually quiet, however, while the other side are so vociferous as to deceive some into the idea they are stronger than they are, but they do not count for much against the united efforts of the law-abiding. They are always active, though, and the average citizen becomes active only occasionally.

The power of corruptionists is obtained through the indifference of good citizens. Bad citizens are united; good citizens are divided—that is the trouble. If good citizens could be induced to join hands in patriotic endeavor the bad would be shorn of their strength and be powerless to accomplish anything. Lawbreakers are always organized, and work while good people sleep; but once the latter are aroused they are invincible.

The government of the nation, state, and city rests upon the active morality of the average individual. In proportion as that morality is strong the government is good; when the average morality is low the government must be inferior. When good citizens attend to their civic duties their civic energy is represented in good officials; when they are careless their slothfulness is represented by corrupt officials. The character of the government depends entirely upon the will of the majority, and no government is better than a majority of its voters. If each individual were to attend to public affairs every good official would have behind him the aggressive morality of his constituents, which would confront every bad official and say to him, "No farther shalt thou go." Lawbreakers do not care for laws so long as they control officials and politics. They do not know good from bad; all they know is politics. When they are taught everywhere that lawlessness is bad politics the question of good government will be near solution. The people can teach them that.

To arouse the people and make them exercise their civil duties is a matter of supreme importance. In a monarchical form of government all authority is in the crown and delegated to those beneath. Civic indifference there is not fraught with such grave consequences. In a republic like ours each individual is a constituent part of sovereignty; each man is one seventy-five millionth of a sovereign on the throne of American manhood. This may seem small, but it marks the distinction between the citizen and the subject. Some may think if the government were left entirely to you public evils could not exist. But you have a portion of the responsibility now. If you are unfaithful with part would you be more faithful with all? He that is unfaithful with a portion can not be trusted with the whole. If each citizen were to leave the remedying of public wrongs to some one else nothing would be accomplished.

The state protects the citizen and the citizen must protect the state politically as well as financially, and his civic duties are as morally binding as his taxes.

If each man were to think that he is only one among many and that it is unnecessary for him to pay taxes because there will be plenty without him, the state would be bankrupt if it could not enforce payment. If every man were to reason that among so many his influence for good is not needed, then the state would be bankrupt politically and we would have a government of the few rich enough to buy official favors.

There is sometimes too much of a disposition on the part of some to allow others to do the face-sweating in civic affairs while they do the bread-eating. Our government in theory gives more rights than any other, but some think so little of their obligations to the general welfare that they are often indifferent to being robbed as long as they do not feel the effects directly and are among the many.

There is a constant conflict between law and lawlessness, right and wrong, evil and good, in every sphere of life. The wrong must always be fought against; the ideal of good must be fought for. The bad thrives of its own accord and feeds on its own wickedness. The useful grain must be sown and cared for else the weeds will choke it out, while the thistle, scattered by chance and cared for by accident, will flourish anywhere. So the good in government does not exist by accident, but must be nurtured by good citizens, who must likewise contend actively against the vices that creep into government. It is one thing to be against wrong; it is quite another thing to fight wrong. One is a non-combatant that never won a cause, the other a soldier in the fight. Good citizens need to become more aggressive. The man that is afraid to show his colors and stand in the open against evils is of little benefit to good government.

The country needs soldiers of peace as well as soldiers of war. Monroe doctrine proclaimed the doctrine of America for Americans. The Missouri doctrine inverts that phrase and applies it both ways. Americans for America is the slogan that needs to be sounded now. Our ascendancy upon this hemisphere is assured. No nation would dare seriously to dispute it. America for Americans is an accomplished fact. Here between the two great oceans, on the soil consecrated to the principles of liberty and self-government, we are the dominant power. Among the nations none are so great that we need fear them and none so mighty that we need cower at their feet.

America is for Americans; now let Americans be for America. The greatness of a nation is not in mere acreage of territory nor in the strength of its battleships alone, but in the purity of its ideals, the strength of its ideas, and in the intensity of its devotion to those principles which make for justice and liberty throughout the world. In vain do we build ships of war, fortify our coasts, and man our guns if we bring not into every rampart and turret the ideas and ideals that make the men behind the guns.—Joseph W. Folk, in Chicago Tribune, Sunday, July 9, 1905.

The Gospel of Brotherhood.

I come to preach on the text of love
From the gospel of brotherhood,
To help if I may in finding a way
That leads to the higher good;
To picture the light that is shining bright
On the future's upturned face;
And to whisper a hope whose breadth and scope
Is as wide as the human race.

It is this: the hour is almost here
When the races shall rise as one,
And shall all join hands from the thousand lands
That are kissed by a common sun;
When the cannon's roar shall be heard no more
And the war-flags shall be furled;
When the lily-white banner of peace shall float
O'er a union of all the world.

There are glimpses of glory in paradise,
But they all are not so bright
As our own dear earth will be, if we Can open the reign of right;
If we, as brothers, will love each other,
And work as best we can
In the glorious labor of lifting our neighbor
And helping our fellow man.

—J. A. Edgerton, in Practical Ideals.

The Day is Done.

The day is done! the day is done!
The echo answers to the sunset gun!
Good night, dear Sun! Good night, dear Sun!
The fleeting glory fades from out the sky:
Old day, good-bye; sweet day, good-bye.
The stars come out and greet us one by one!

The day is done, the day is done!
Another weary tale of work is spun:
The day is done, the day is done,
Its cares and labors may be laid away:
Good-bye, old day; good-bye, fond day;
The stars come out, and rest at last is won!

Our Blessed Old People.

There is nothing so beautiful or charming in the world as an old lady who has passed through the cleansing fires of sorrow and suffering and the furnace of a wide experience safely into a serene and peaceful existence, whereon she sits a queen, crowned with the dawn of immortality and the sunset hues of a fading earth still wrapped around her feet!

"All life is but a step towards peace; sometimes when men and women live to be very old, peace begins for them before they have crossed the threshold. To others it comes later, but to all good women and men it comes at last."

Some one once wrote a treatise on "Growing old gracefully," and rightly remarked that the whole secret of such growth lay in the cultivation of the sweet, unselfish spirit which makes living for others the great principle of life. And "others" comprise not only the members of her own family and immediate relatives, but the outside world and her neighbors.

True love does not narrow but widens one's sympathies, and the woman who knows how to love one well, will know also how to love others.

The graceful old age will not be for ever occupied with its own weaknesses and ailments, but will rather strive to forget them in the feelings and happiness of those around her; she will have—

“A heart at leisure from itself,
To soothe and sympathize.”

That graceful old age will not be for ever lamenting the times which have passed away, but will find something good, something to be praised in both past, present, and future.

There is something unutterably sweet and ennobling in the very presence of an old lady that inspires hope and courage in the young, and veneration and respect in the middle-aged, and no house seems to be completely a home without the refining presence and cherished companionship of an old lady within its walls.

Is she not the nice old lady, whose furrowed face is full of sympathy and whose welcome is as cheery as a spring morning, the very embodiment of all that is sacred, pure and good in Nature? The young delight to minister to her simple wants and to open out their inmost hearts to her, to look up to her as the most precious thing Heaven has made. “Blessing she is; God made her so.” Is she not a true queen whose crown is in her heart? Who so helpful and comforting as an old lady in the house of sickness? Whose hand so ready and willing to aid, whose voice so full of love and tenderness, whose prayers so deep and earnest for those who mourn? Is it not the dear, loving old lady's, who knows no self, who has outlived all selfishness, who has bravely battled through seas of sorrow of her own and gained that beautiful peace of mind which passeth the world's understanding?

“Unspoken homilies of peace
Her daily life is preaching,
The still refreshment of the dew
Is her unconscious teaching.

“And never tenderer hand than hers
Unknits the brow of ailing,
Her garments in the sick man's ear
Have music in their trailing.”

Cicero says in his essay on “Old age” that those indeed who have no internal resource of happiness will find themselves uneasy in every stage of human life, but that a long life marked with an uninterrupted series of laudable and beneficent actions affords a perpetual source of the sweetest and most exquisite satisfaction.

The learned leisure of a good old age is a state of mind to be envied. He also remarks: “I am equally pleased when I observe the phlegm of age somewhat enlivened with the vivacity of youth, and whoever unites these two qualities in his character may bear, indeed, the marks of years in his body, but will never discover the same traces in his mind.” The “graceful” old lady will always have, more or less, this useful vivacity, blended with the gravity of age.

Her sick-bed will be all sunshine and watchful love. To the very end she will be the center of active benevolence and kind thought for those around her. She will sing, as she has sung all her life, “songs without words,” which God and the good angels have loved to teach her, and such as the deeper instincts of humanity can understand, and choral anthems of Christ's redeemed can harmonize with. Death will not come to her as a king of terrors but as a beautiful sleep. “For so He giveth his beloved sleep!”

The voice of her life, which ever seemed to say in joy or sorrow, “Thy will, not mine, be done,” will still speak to us “down the ringing grooves of change.” And we, “her children, shall rise up and call her blessed.”

She leans from out our clinging arms
To rest herself in thine, Alone to thee, dear Lord, can we
Our best beloved resign.

Oh, less for her than for ourselves
We bow our heads and pray
Her setting star like Bethlehem's
To Thee shall point the way.

—Great Thoughts.

June 8, 1905.

Dear Sister Frances: Once more I will try to write a few words to our long-loved little Column.

I have been thinking this morning about the way a great many people make what I feel sure is a mistake by contending that they are so tender-hearted, and love their children so much that they can not punish them even when they know it would be best for the child. I do not believe it is love they feel; it is weakness in my opinion, and I will try to give some reasons for so believing.

No one will say they love their children more than God loves his children yet God has fixed laws, within the comprehension of our minds, and the least overstepping of those laws brings its punishment sooner or later according to his just and all-wise plan.

For instance: If you deliberately and knowingly step into the fire, the law of Nature follows with a swift and sure punishment; you will be burned for violation of a law which you knew was an unailing one, for God has made no provision for your escape in such a case; yet no one thinks it is any sign that he does not love you. He made the law and gave you intelligence so you understood that law. His plan was just and wise. Now is it not plain that if, when he saw you defying the law he had made, and knew you understood, he had caused the fire to lose its power to burn, would it not have shown weakness and a going back on his law, rather than great love for you? But such things do not happen, for God with wisdom and foresight knows that he would be under the continual necessity of laying aside his law or else that we must eventually learn obedience by the things we suffer, and that the lesson is harder the longer put off.

Now mothers, and fathers too, why can not we pull the thick scales from our eyes and see that the same is true of ourselves and our children? Do not make a law for your children till you have considered it well, then make sure they understand exactly what you mean so there may be no excuse for disobedience; and then if you would be just and hold the respect of your children, keep your word.

And, parents, we must make laws for our little kingdoms. The future citizens of a great republic must commence in the home to learn to be subject to the powers that be, else we will have anarchists and the like instead of the happy people we love to look forward to.

By subjects, I do not mean abject slaves. Our children are reasonable little beings and will be much more cheerful in the performance of their tasks if they are given a reasonable “why.” They like to feel that they are a necessary part of the home and are partly responsible for its being a pleasant, happy place. And I do not mean by “keeping our word,” that we should be harsh, and tyrannical, and overbearing. These things make enemies of parents and children; for a harsh, overbearing parent loves himself instead of the welfare of his children and is not so anxious that his children learn their place and keep it as he is that his will be gratified; and a child is not slow to find this out and loses his respect for parental authority through the parent's selfishness and lack of self-control.

As I said before, we must make laws though and stand by them that we may help the child and save ourselves and him anguish in later years.

When a child understands what you say well enough to disobey, he can be taught to obey, and it is our business to do it. Do not imagine that he is "too little" and so let him go, thinking when he is older you can easily teach him. Now is the time to train his will, for the child who is allowed his own sweet will for a few years grows to consider himself first and last in everything and has little regard for the rights and feelings of others or of his own duties and responsibilities in the great world in which he is placed.

To illustrate I will tell you a short story and then close this already long letter. An only child was puny and sickly and his parents, fearful lest they lose him, allowed him his own way in everything. As the years passed he continued to be the only child. Gradually health and strength became his and his parents commenced to feel the strength of the will he had been allowed to humor in childhood days. What they could have trained in right avenues then was past their power now. He took the horses and went whither and when he listed regardless of the fact that both he and they were sorely needed in the field, and did whatever pleased his fancy regardless of any one; spent his father's money recklessly; married and trampled on his wife's rights till she rebelled and left him to tread the broad path to destruction down which he is going with the wine-bottle, cigars, and kindred evils as companions. He was intelligent, had good parents, and many other advantages which others lack, but the failure of his parents to restrain ruined him.

Let us work with a will and ask God for wisdom that none of these evil things come upon our little ones. MIGNON.

"Sometimes a light surprises

It is the Lord, who rises

When comforts are declining,

He grants the soul again

A season of clear shining,

To cheer it after rain."

—William Cowper.

"MORE and more, each day, each year, I see the necessity of labor in behalf of the young and feel that the most effectual means to that end is the labor with the parents."—M. Walker.

OUR first assistant superintendent, Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, will attend the reunions in Ohio in August, in interest of the Sunday-school and religio work. We bespeak for him and the work abundant opportunity and success. We hope the reunions may be well attended that the work may be far reaching in its results.

The Jubilee Fund.

There is an effort being made this year to bring our jubilee fund, as Sr. Walker has been pleased to call the Christmas offering for this year, the seventy-fifth anniversary of the organization of the church, up to the splendid sum of seven thousand dollars. This can be done quite easily if all the Sunday-school officers or teachers will aid in the work. It seems almost unnecessary to say that this sum is needed by the Bishop for the missionary-work of the church and can be well used by him therein.

Further than the necessity for the money, there is a greater and better object in view, viz: to teach the children to do and to love to do for the good of the church-work. Do not you know that if many of us older ones had had such opportunity or training in our childhood it would not be so hard for us to do our duties now in such matters? This habit of giving to a worthy cause is one we should early form. And we know of no better way to instill the principle into the mind and soul of the child than to teach and encourage him to save his little mite and give it to the jubilee offering for the use of God's church.

Seven thousand dollars may seem like a very high mark to aim at, but when we consider that nearly three thousand dollars was raised last year and no especial effort made, and I think much less than half the schools heard from at all, it would seem quite within our reach. This year we should be pleased to have every local superintendent in the church take the matter up and try to encourage each scholar to make a start and earn or save some money for his offering. And when we say, "every superintendent in the church," we mean that each one, whether in a large or a small school, take the work in hand and push it. There are many who can and would gladly respond if they were only told about it and given a way to get the money to the Bishop. Yes, and kept reminded of it at times from now till the close of the year. It is a fact that much money never finds its way to the Bishop that would be sent were it not for the item of sending it. Each little amount seems so very little to the one giving it that they think it not worth sending. To overcome this let each school or teacher adopt some system of collecting the money, keeping accurate record of givers and amounts, and send it in at the proper time. Teachers and officers can occasionally mention the matter and encourage the children to love to do well in that line. They can gather in many a dime or dollar that might otherwise be spent uselessly. And many of these littles soon count up into a large sum.

Various plans are given in the Hope from time to time by which children may earn their offerings. Parents or others can teach the children to save and properly use all that they earn, not to waste it. If we had one half of what is wasted by the children of the church and schools in the year, I am very certain it would far exceed the amount for which we are aiming this year. Will not you help us to turn this money into the proper channel? You can do it. We can not see the children, and they will not think of it unless you remind them or tell them. Your help, however small, will be appreciated. You will be helping in a very worthy cause and blessing the child at the same time. Let us work together to make this jubilee offering what we have set out to make it,—a complete success, a material help to the church, a certain blessing to the givers.

THE GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT.

What Constitutes a Sunday-School.—No. 2.

THE SONG-SERVICE.

There is nothing that will serve a better purpose in quieting a congregation and fitting their minds for the service to follow than a good song-service. Three or four or more hymns or songs just before the opening proper of the school will have a very desirable influence upon the school.

WHAT WILL IT DO?

It will assure order and attention instead of turmoil. It will draw the minds of the scholars away from things of life to the service of the hour. It will often make you forget your aches and pains if you have them. It removes the cares and troubles for the time being. It focuses all the minds of the school to the one thing,—the service. It puts us in a more spiritual frame of mind, and we are all better fitted for our work.

KIND OF MUSIC.

Much depends upon the class of music you select. Not all good church hymns are fit for the Sunday-school. They are too heavy, too solemn, or otherwise inappropriate to the occasion. There is such a thing as the fitness of music. A national air is all right at a Fourth of July celebration, a funeral-dirge at a funeral, or a comic song at some entertainment; but all would be manifestly out of place at the Sunday-school or the regular church service. Why? You can readily see that they would be entirely inappropriate to the occasion. And as one of the main objects of singing is to fit the mind for what is to follow, anything that would not properly fit the mind for the occasion would be out of order.

We are always singing in the presence of and for the benefit of children. The song should be within their comprehension. It must produce the feeling of love, happiness, and buoyancy so necessary to good class-work and school-work in general. The prevailing atmosphere of any schoolroom should be cheerful and bright. Much more and better work can be done under such circumstances. And to produce such condition the music must be light, bright, and cheerful. The ordinary church hymn will not suffice for the Sunday-school. It is too heavy, too deep, and often too solemn. Our collection, Zion's Praises, is admirably adapted to the needs of the Sabbath-school. Some hymns are adapted to use in both church and Sunday-school, but they are the exception and not the rule.

A GOOD LIVE LEADER.

To make your music a success you must have some one appointed to have the matter in charge, who is a practical choir-leader; and still better if he fortunately possesses the qualities that give the people confidence in him and his musical ability. By his tact, cheerfulness, and promptness, he can become a power for good in the Sunday-school.

HOW LONG?

How long shall we sing before opening the school? Be at your place long enough to sing a half-dozen pieces or about that number before the hour arrives for the school proper to open. Fifteen minutes is too much under most circumstances. Three to six songs will be much better. Have your songs selected previously so that when the time comes to sing, you may announce the number instantly. Sing some songs for the little children especially, once in a while. They will enjoy it much, and it will do them good. Encourage all to sing whether they are professional singers or not. The more general your singing, the more good it will do. I would not have a choir for Sunday-school except in very rare cases. Get everybody to sing every time, and let them make "music in their souls."

Three M's for the Sunday-School Teacher.

The first M stands for Material. This is furnished. The book itself is the first source. Helps, manifold and multiplied, are afforded to supplement this supreme material by added knowledge of the geography, history, customs of Bible lands, and such needed acquisitions and stores. A Sunday-school teacher who is not well furnished with material can not complain of poverty on account of scant supply.

We ought to recognize clearly, in the midst of the embarrassment of riches in the way of helps and additions, that the truth of God, the word of life, is the substance and fabric of our lessons. Let us not seek after material from outside sources, when the life-giving word is what we are meant to teach, if we are in the teacher's place at all. There is neither doubt nor question about what we are to teach. The material is provided. The urgent inquiry is, How?

This suggests the second M, which stands for Method. It is written of the birds, "That thou givest them, they gather." It is as true of the teacher who would prepare for his class.

There is a right way and there is a wrong way even to gather the material to present to scholars. Some snatch it in hasty handfuls, and offer it just as they snatch it. There is no system in securing, no preparation for presentation. There is no lack of suggestion as to methods of study and of teaching. We ought to avail ourselves of these invaluable helps. But let it be to the end that a method of our own be developed. Saul's armor is good for Saul, but not for David. He has not "proved" it. Let us select, try, and prove the best means for our own use. We need not only to consider the scholars we teach, but our own selves—our limitations, our possibilities, our mental characteristics, our aptitudes and natural inclinations. Sanctified common sense is in great demand here.

The third M stands for Manner. Whether it is absolutely true or not that "manners make the man," according to the old saying, it is certain that manner makes a deal of difference with others. The key of manner should always be, "B natural," but if there is a natural abruptness or carelessness, it ought to be overcome by grace. All affectation is to be for ever shunned. There is no teacher and guide to manner like love. The love-taught heart, with "the mind of the Master," will have a winsome manner—cordial, kindly, sympathetic, simple, self-forgetful and persuasive.—New Century Teachers' Monthly.

Something to Think Of.

Not long ago a canvass was made of one thousand of the convicts in the Michigan state prison at Jackson. The result brought to light the significant fact that but thirty of the entire one thousand convicts had ever attended Sunday-school, and only ten of the thousand had ever been regular attendants at the Sunday-school. The other twenty had attended occasionally. It is probable that a canvass of any state prison would show a corresponding result. No one can estimate the power for good exerted by the Sunday-school, and it is certain that there would be a far greater number of criminals in the world were it not for the influence of this part of the work of the church. The implanting of religious conceptions in the minds and hearts of children by Sunday-school teachers has saved thousands from destruction.—Selected.

CENTERVILLE, Iowa, July 10, 1905.

Editors Herald: I commenced my third year's missionary work in the Lamoni Stake, on the 27th of April, near the homes of Brn. Joseph Bogue and Hidey, seven miles north of Lamoni. The farmers were so busy, however, that I thought it would be to the best interest of the work to close for the present and go to the cities until fall.

Elder D. C. White and I then went to Centerville, where we were well received by all the active Saints.

We went from here to Buxton, where I opened the work two years ago, and were well received by the Saints, although they are scattered. Elder Nathan Miller was encouraging them and keeping the camp-fires burning.

My heart was made very sad when I learned of the death of a good old man who gave me his name one year ago, when I baptized five there, but, as his wife was not ready to go with him, he put it off to wait for her. Although he was a member of another church, he sent for Bro. Miller, before he died, and requested him to preach his funeral-sermon, for our people to do the singing and take the full charge of the services. He died strong in the faith of the restored gospel.

At the same time, I received word from Bro. Hammer, of Creston, that a man there, who gave me his name for baptism when I was there one year ago, had sickened and died. He put it off to wait for his wife, saying they would both obey on my return. Alas, procrastination is the thief of time. Oh, how dangerous it is to put off for to-morrow what God requires at our hands to-day.

We returned to Lamoni and I took charge of the stake tent, assisted by A. C. Anderson. We took it to Humeston, where we received valuable assistance from Elders D. C. White, Joseph Snively, and R. C. Willey. We remained there until the Friday before the Fourth.

We were much hindered in our work by the rain. The land is so level that we could not drain the water from the tent, but had to soak it up with cloths. Many times we stood in water while preaching and the people sat in the tent when it was in this condition.

But in spite of all this, our congregation ranged from thirteen to one hundred and forty, with a good many outside of the tent. Among these was the Methodist Episcopal preacher, who warned his congregation—especially the young—not to come near the tent, or they would be disgraced for ever, for there was something wrong, back of the gospel we were preaching.

Elder Willey and I returned to Humeston on Friday after the Fourth, expecting to continue the work for a time. But those with whom we stopped thought we had better close the meetings for the present, although we did not think so.

Bro. Willey said he never saw such an awakening among outsiders in so short a time in his life. Men and women came when we were packing the tent and expressed their regrets to have the tent taken away, and even went so far as to secure what they thought to be a better location.

When I went to pay Mr. Humeston, one of the leading citizens of the town, for the use of the ground where the tent sat, he said there was no charge. He was sorry to see the tent go, and that the ground would be at our disposal any time and as long as we wanted it.

I told him that I hoped the time would come when I might preach on the street. He said if I did so, he would insure me a congregation of two hundred. There are some who are near the water. I know that God has a people there who, I believe, will open the way for God's servants.

We are now at Centerville, where we received a warm reception. We will commence tent services in the southeast part of town, Tuesday evening, July 11.

ADELAIDE, South Australia, May 30, 1905.

Editors Herald: Knowing the interest your readers take in news from this far-away country we venture a few lines concerning our work here. Since coming here in 1903 the work has progressed surely and steadily if somewhat slowly. During 1903 only three were added by baptism, though many friends to the work were made. Five were added during 1904; and during the five months of 1905 four have been added and others are ready for the water. This shows a steady and solid growth which increases as the body gets larger. In spirituality they are in a fine condition, the spirit of unity, love, and self-sacrifice being manifested abundantly. There are signs also of the development of the gifts of the gospel, as well as the fruits thereof, and we are hopeful that a fine branch will be raised up in this city. One thing particularly noticeable about the Saints here is their willingness to assist the missionary with money and other needful things for the carrying on of his work. The Doctrine and Covenants 83:16, says, "By this ye may know my disciples." The South Australian Saints have given abundant evidence of discipleship when judged by the above standard.

Saints, and more especially you who have much of this world's goods, are you all in like manner proving yourselves to be his disciples? If not, see to it that you at once and in all future time do so, and you will find that it is more blessed to give than to receive, especially when such giving is to the Lord.

Bro. Mackie, of Melbourne, and I have for the past four months changed fields; he coming to Adelaide accompanied by wife and child and wife and little one and I going to Melbourne, Victoria. During our absence, which began in January and ended in May, the work here has gained numerically, especially the Sunday-school. While in Melbourne I did quite a bit of preaching upon the streets; and upon one occasion, I think in the month of April, after one of my discourses one brother who attended the meeting declared to me that he had the positive assurance of the Spirit that I was to be called to a higher office. Later on he reiterated his first statement in a most positive manner. Subsequently an aged sister who has the gift of prophecy declared that the Lord would call me higher. I took little notice of it thinking that perhaps it might be so but not troubling myself concerning the matter. About a month later and after my arrival back to Adelaide, I received SAINTS' HERALD with the information that Elder Mackie and myself had been chosen to the Seventy. I mention this matter merely to show that the Spirit, through the brethren in Australia and in America, testified the same thing, at about the same time, which shows that though we are separated by a long distance we belong to the "one body" and are guided by the "one Spirit." It inspires one's confidence in this work when we receive such marvelous evidences of the power of the Spirit.

This mention will also be of interest to the Seven Presidents of Seventy as confirmatory evidence of the divine guidance which directed their selection. My prayer is that we shall keep humble and permit that "one Spirit" to control us in all our affairs so that we as a people may be an example to the world of what is possible of attainment when unity and love prevail. May God abundantly bless Zion and speedily bring about her redemption. Faithfully,

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. H. N. JONES.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, July 13, 1905.

Editors Herald: I arrived here July 2, in time to hear President Fred M.'s discourse at the evening meeting on lineal priesthood. Rather an awkward subject for Fred M., being as he is "the son of his father." He did well, however, made his points good and strong. The audience was small but attentive. Sr. Fred M. and Alice were present also. All well.

Last Sunday the laboring oar fell to my lot. There were some strangers present, of the faith, from Missouri and Illinois. The faithful few here are entitled to much credit in keeping things going as well as they do, in the midst of great things doing all around them,—excursion trains, sight-seeing, big Mormon crowds, deaf ears, etc. This leaves the humble, silent worker almost obscured. They are sure to win by and by, however.

It rained every night while on the way here, and the fresh and luxurious growth of crops through Iowa and Nebraska were delightful to see. Away to the extreme west of Nebraska the crops look fine.

As we were passing over the western border, a heavy storm came sweeping down from the northwest, over Wyoming,—thunder, chain-lightning, and rain, away out on the desert. Here in Utah the crops look poor in comparison. There has been no rain for a long time, and things look parched and crisp. Fires were raging along the foot of the mountains. The outlook not so good as last year at this time. Crops may come out all right later. The weather is hot. Fred M.'s name is getting to be "Mud" among the Smith family out here because he sent in that protest against the hierarchy building a monument to his grandfather, but it was the right hit.

We are doing a little and looking forward hopefully.

Fraternally,

WM. H. KELLEY.

WEYBURN, Assiniboia, June 14, 1905.

Dear Herald: We have been enjoying God's Spirit greatly in the past. As Brn. J. L. Mortimer and S. W. Tomlinson have been laboring among us for a short time, it has greatly cheered us. At the reunion July 1, 2, and 3, one brother was ordained a priest in our branch at Weyburn Plains.

Our branch is increasing rapidly in the past eighteen months. It started with four members a year ago this last June, and now there are thirty-five. A few are investigating the gospel, but have not put their shoulders to the wheel yet. Bro. Knisley surely did a good work for the upbuilding of Zion. He labored with patience, and now when he comes he says he is glad to see us all doing what little we can.

Our prayer is that God will hasten the day when Zion will shine.

FALL RIVER, Massachusetts, July 14, 1905.

Editors Herald: I arrived in my new field of labor on the 11th of May, after a pleasant visit of a few days with our children in Independence, Missouri, and Chicago, Illinois, and was happy to leave them each engaged, or interested in the Master's cause. While in Chicago I had an interesting experience. The Saints on the West Side had moved into their new hall. I had the pleasure of speaking on the Sunday evening of their opening. As I entered the hall I noticed a lot of boys, who had evidently come out of curiosity, and by their appearance were intent on having a "good time." Some of the Saints were a little apprehensive as to just how their "good time" might affect the rest of us. They were a bright lot, and just of that age when fun seems to be the principal thought. After shaking hands with each, I concluded to give them a little sermon all to themselves. I assured them they were welcome, appealed as best I could to their better natures, and I soon had their attention, also their good will, so that when I turned to address the other part of the audience, I found the most of the boys were attentive listeners. My theme was mostly on the first principles of the gospel. After telling them what faith was, how many kinds there were, the difference between a dead faith and a living faith, what repentance was, etc., I asked them questions upon what I had told them, and it was remarkable how well they answered me. Well, we had "a good time" indeed, though evidently quite different from what they had anticipated; and it seemed by their answers, that when we were through they had a pretty fair idea of the first principles of the gospel. They were urged to come again, the Sunday-school superintendent promising to form them into a class and furnish them a teacher, if they would attend the school. Some of them promised to come. I often wonder if they did. I felt while speaking as though some seed were falling on good ground.

I stopped off one Sunday at Brooklyn. Took part with the Saints in Sunday-school and sacrament-meeting and preached in the evening. I enjoyed my brief visit, and felt a little loath at parting with these busy workers. Like the rest of us, they have had their trials; may the Lord bless them in their efforts to overcome.

Arriving at Fall River by boat, early in the morning, I was met by one of the Saints, who directed me to his home, where I met a warm welcome. A few minutes after breakfast a sister accompanied us house-hunting, and we were not long in finding one to suit us. The warm welcome we received, together with the advice we had received from the missionary in charge, caused us to decide to locate our home in Fall River.

My first Sunday here, I was invited to preach, and enjoyed good liberty, after which I was requested to meet with the branch officers. The president introduced me to each in a nice little address, in which he assured me that I was welcome, and that they were ready to receive any advice or counsel I might have to offer. To this I replied and assured them that I appreciated the kindly spirit manifested, and would be pleased to be known as a fellow worker among them. The good Spirit was with us, and I shall long remember this happy meeting. It was a new experience to me. I mention it because it seems such a nice way to make one feel at home and welcome. Try it, some of you who have a new missionary come in your midst, and see how much good can be done.

As may be supposed, therefore, my first impressions were favorable, the meetings being well attended and spiritual. Usually about forty out to prayer-meeting, largely composed of young people. The Fall River Sunday-school I think is about as good for its size as any I have met with. They are a live lot of workers. You should hear them sing. A little encouragement, and they almost raise the roof. What a pleasure it is to be called to work among workers.

Of course the Saints here, as elsewhere, have had their battles to fight. The evil power is always on hand to oppose every advancement. I am told that in the past the conflict here has been fierce. It is the same nearly everywhere; but each branch naturally suppose that they have had the most to endure, just as each regiment in a great battle imagine that most of the enemy's fire was centered on them. But when the dead and wounded are gathered up, then it is found that others too have suffered. Even so, as one goes from branch to branch, the dead and wounded indicate the fierceness of the conflict. Some have lost the power of sight, some have lost their strength and have to be carried by the strong, some have become entirely dependent on their fellows. They may attend meeting and absorb, but impart nothing in return; and some may even be wounded unto death. Here is where the pastor's work is needed. To bind up the wounds, to encourage the faint and care for the dying. There is little accomplished in scolding or finding fault or condemning. Tender nursing, kind treatment, and love is most needed to assist those poor souls who have fallen in the battle. It does seem strange, however, that some who have been so firm in the faith, and have borne such strong testimonies to the truth of the work, should, because the enemy had wounded them, give up so entirely, and refuse to longer assist in God's work. But there are many strange things revealed by this latter-day work. It even looks to some of us at times, as though even our own HERALD were helping the enemy. Over and over again we have asked ourselves the question, What good was served in publishing that old article from the pen of John Hay? Especially that part relating to William Smith, the prophet's brother. If what is said be true, it is humiliating to us all. If it is not true, surely our enemies can publish enough lies without us republishing them. It is best to forget some things.

And now comes an elder, in a late HERALD, and denies that there is a man on earth who can tell what we must do to be saved. This is followed by the startling announcement that "more sermons are preached by the elders without the Spirit than with it." Can it be possible that this is true? I certainly hope it is not. If I believed it I would have little faith that our work would ever accomplish what has been promised it. I think the brother errs in thinking, as he appears to, that because a brother happens to make a mistake in preaching, he is therefore without the Spirit of truth. Otherwise, the brother himself is without the Spirit, for he makes a wrong quotation when he says the Scriptures say that it is life eternal "to know thee the only true God." It is much easier to build up a false theory by thus quoting it, than by quoting the text correctly. If the brother felt bad "at the funny way of the elder" who drank up all the sacrament wine, be assured that some others felt bad at seeing the story published. Why not publish the good things, and in this way encourage one another. The enemy will find plenty of bad things to say about us without us helping him. Such statements as these are food for the enemy, and no doubt he will make good use of them. Yet, we are hopeful.

We are much encouraged at the favorable condition of the work in this district. At least, that part of the district in which I have been permitted to labor,—Boston, Providence, and Fall River. I also assisted Bro. John Rushton one night at New Bedford. I am required to center my efforts,—however, in Fall River and Providence. This gives me plenty to do.

We are looking forward now to what we have reason to believe will be the best reunion we have ever had. It is to be held in a lovely grove on the seashore, at least it is a part of the sea, though it is called a river, I believe. A large number have already spoken for tents; and as it is near both Providence and Fall River, we expect many visitors from both these cities. I am feeling well and hopeful.

In bonds,

OTTO, Texas, July 13, 1905.

Editors Herald: Since my adoption into the fold of God, my experience has been wonderful. I can say I have heard the gift of prophecy. My mother while sitting up with the sick told my aunt her little darling would never recover, and that she, her own self, would lose one of her own children. She also asked the Lord to provide means that she might be prepared to meet the burial in her own family, and the Lord heard and answered her prayer, and preparations were made. This prophecy was uttered on Friday night, and on Tuesday my aunt's little darling took her departure to the paradise of God, and two months had not elapsed till my little brother, six years of age, was dragged to death by a mule. How blessed it is that the Lord is so good as to show us things to come. Ten days had not passed until we had the wonderful gift of tongues by one of the sisters who was living very near to the Lord.

I enlisted in the army of the Lord at nine years, and am now seventeen, and have never seen the day when I regretted the step taken, but have seen things that made my soul rejoice in the Holy One of Israel.

Last winter a man told me that this doctrine would do to live by, but would not do to die by; but I told him I was living by it, and I expected to die by it. We have Bro. Harp with us, and he has been holding a series of meetings. We have a very nice little branch called the Philadelphia Branch.

Your sister,
LILLIE MCALISTER.

SIOUX CITY, Iowa, July 20, 1905.

Editors Herald: This leaves me at the above place assisting Bro. J. M. Baker in tent-meetings. Bro. Baker has been here for about two years laboring faithfully, and he has a nice little band of Saints helping him. He seems like a father to them, and they have a nice little church at 610 Center Street. Bro. B. and family live in the basement of the church.

We are having good attendance in our tent-meeting, and good attention. Last Sunday week I baptized ten, and last Sunday ten more. One, Bro. Streeter, that I baptized, stated last night that he felt ten years younger. More have given their names for baptism next Sunday and others are near the door.

According to the directions of Bro. Heman C. Smith, I expect to start to Ainsworth, Nebraska, Monday, to assist Bro. Levi Gamet in tent-meeting there; but I expect Bro. Oscar Case will come here to assist Bro. Baker.

We have some young brethren here who are taking hold nicely.

So the good work is moving along in this city. Sr. Baker has been present nearly every night as organist for over four weeks; and Bro. Baker, with that pleasant smile on his face, they all look upon as their shepherd. He surely is the right man in the right place.

It seems so good to see noble souls accepting the glorious gospel, and rejoicing with us in the love of the Lord.

I hope and pray that we may all be valiant soldiers in the work of the Lord, and that the loving Spirit will abide with us, and that we will be faithful to the end; for Christ has said, He that endures to the end shall be saved. My home address is 204 South Chrysler Street, Independence, Missouri.

Your brother,
W. A. SMITH.

NEOLA, Iowa, July 13, 1905.

Editors Herald: Glad to say that I am trying to keep in the line of duty. Bro. M. H. Cook and myself will start the tent-work first in Walnut, Iowa, July 15, 1905, at fifteen minutes past eight in the evening, in the Pottawattamie District. Bro. Cook will help for a week or more.

I like my field of labor, and find that the Saints know how to look after the servants pretty well. The promises of the Lord are all true, when we do our duty. It seems to me that the statement of Paul is being fulfilled, that men will be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; and Saints, some of them, are drifting that way, going with the tide: especially when we have a Sunday-school Fourth of July picnic, and get up a purse, and have a little gambling going on, on a small scale, and see the daughters of Zion running in the race to win the purse,—gambling. Pardon me for speaking so plain. May God speed the time when his faithful children shall be redeemed.

BOZEMAN, Montana, July 15, 1905.

Editors Herald: President Joseph Smith and family arrived in Bozeman, Saturday, July 8. I should judge by their very pleasant faces they had had a pleasant journey this far. They met with the Saints on Sunday, and all seemed to enjoy a sermon from the head of the church and especially those that never had the privilege of hearing him. He preached five sermons, and all were thoroughly enjoyed by the writer but one that I failed to hear. He made his home with Thomas Reese and his hospitable wife, and on Thursday, July 13, he and family took the noon train for Butte City, Montana.

Branch Disorganization.

By the removal of nearly all the members of the Elkhorn Branch, Nebraska, there has taken place the disorganization of that branch, only two members living there and two ten miles away. As some members desire letters of removal and there is no district organization in Northwestern Nebraska, therefore, after having advice from Bro. Heman C. Smith, I hereby declare said branch disorganized, and recommend all members enrolled therein to secure certificates from Bro. H. A. Stebbins, General Church Recorder, and that they unite with branches to which they are most convenient, according to the rule of the church.

Said branch was located at Hay Springs, Sheridan County, Nebraska.

Financial Report.

To Whom It May Concern: As the secretary of our last reunion held at Minatare, Nebraska, last fall, failed to give the tent financial report that was given at that time, and as it has come to my ears that some of the Saints wanted to know what was done with the money I received, I send this report for publication.

A Proper Business Enterprise.

The Independence Coal Mining Company, duly incorporated at Independence, Missouri, mine located at Napoleon, some twenty miles distant, is in position to greatly benefit the miners and the users of coal.

Of late, in company with others, we took occasion to examine this mine, as also to visit other mines in the Lexington District, and found that the quality of coal, and opportunities offered for a successful business were at least equal to that of the other mines in that district.

Bro. David Crow, a practical miner, and formerly superintendent of the mines of Castle Gate, Utah, is now personally in charge of this mine. He expects to personally manage its interests the present year. Bro. Crow's report to me upon the mine, July 11, 1905, is as follows:

"E. L. KELLEY,

"Dear Brother: After a close investigation for five days at the mine located at Napoleon, Missouri, owned by the Independence Coal Company, I have concluded that it can be made a paying proposition by careful management. There are certain obstacles to be overcome which are subject to be met with in most mines, such as bad roof, water, and faults. These are conditions incident to mining, and are expected to be met in mines. The Independence Coal Company mine has equal opportunities of making money with its competitors located in same district; and, judging from their surroundings, they are evidently making money."

Parties are writing, making inquiries about this mine, and expect me to answer. The only thing which I now know of lacking about this mine or company in order to make a success of the enterprise is sufficient capital to run it. The company needs fifteen thousand dollars more capital. This offers a good opportunity for investment and the mining interests ought to be sustained as well as others. Persons wishing to help this enterprise and benefit themselves will find a good opportunity to get stock in the company by addressing R. May, Independence, Missouri, or David Crow, Napoleon, Missouri, or by applying to the undersigned at Lamoni, Iowa. Any wishing stock in this company please make application within the next twenty days. Very truly,

LAMONI, Iowa, July 24, 1905.

CONSPIRING MEN.

"Behold, verily thus saith the Lord unto you, In consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days, I have warned you, and forewarn you, by giving unto you this word of wisdom by revelation."

This is the introduction to the Word of Wisdom. It was because of evils and designs in the hearts of conspiring men that the Lord gave instruction to his Saints concerning their food. Wine and strong drink were condemned, except wine for sacraments, and this was to be pure wine of the grape of our own make. Tobacco and hot drinks were also advised against.

All wholesome herbs are given for the use of man; but they should be kept wholesome. It is the design of evil and conspiring men to-day,—and the Lord recognized the conditions that would exist,—to adulterate nearly every article of food offered for the use of man, and instead of being wholesome, they become absolutely poisonous, resulting in an increase in deaths and insanity.

President Thimme of the National Anti-Adulteration League charges the board of health of New York City with permitting politics to prevent a vigorous prosecution of the pure-food laws. In the New York World for June 18 he says:

The people have not the faintest idea of the extent to which adulteration in foods, beverages, and medicines is being practiced. The more you delve into this investigation the worse it appears. The traffic of adulterated foods in the United States amounts to twenty-one billion, three hundred and fifty million dollars annually, and yet all efforts during the last nineteen years to pass an effective pure-food bill through Congress have proved futile. The public health of eighty million people is jeopardized by the Senate refusing to act, which is but another version of the tail wagging the dog. . . . Last year the health department of New York destroyed six million pounds of adulterated and harmful foods, which, however, ought to have been multiplied by ten, if the department had meant business.

The New York American and Journal, Sunday, July 2, 1905, enumerates some of the things that are poisoned by food-adulterators. Children drink milk poisoned with formaldehyde or other drugs nine times out of ten in all the big cities. Arsenic in beer causes more deaths than any big war; wine, cigars, cigarettes, tea, and coffee, are doctored with poisonous drugs. Latter Day Saints are to be congratulated that their religion teaches them to avoid

To love is to live;
 To love one's self is to live in hell;
 To love another is to live on earth;
 To love all others is to live in heaven.
 —Unknown.

"To DO your work and not be anxious about results is wisdom of the highest order."

these things. All spices—especially ground spices—are adulterated with absolutely indigestible matter. Bran is mixed with corncobs and sawdust. Bread is poisoned with wretched baking-powder; and “powdered sugar is adulterated so much that a wise man never thinks of using it.”

The beautiful bright green of some brands of pickles and canned peas is due to the use of sulphate of copper as a coloring-matter. Cheap brands of jam have been found to consist of gelatine, timothy-seed and aniline dye. The chemist who analyzes spices and peppers for the state of Connecticut found in peppers: sandalwood, wheat, corn, linseed meal, red sawdust, sand, rice, bean shells, buckwheat, dyes, olive-stones, mustard-hulls, cornmeal, sago, cocoonut-shells, pepper-shells, and plain dirt; in spices he found the same, and in addition, charcoal, gypsum, crackers, and bark. Doctor Leon S. Waters, a food expert, has declared that a certain kind of “coffee” that is cheap and purchased in large quantities, is composed mainly of bits of hog’s liver mixed with chicory.

The American and Journal says:

A child on the street holds out a penny for one of the big chocolate candies ranged in dusty rows—but he gets no chocolate. The stuff given him to eat is made of burnt umber, flavored with chocolate—a mineral substance, consisting of clay, etc., absolutely indigestible. The hungry child craving the carbon of pure sugar hands his penny to the pedler representing “business honor,” and he gets for his stomach a lump of clay flavored with some artificial chocolate flavor. Do you wonder that the street-children of big cities have white faces? Their milk is poisoned. They buy a sandwich made of poisonous sausage, smeared over with horribly adulterated mustard—no real mustard in it. For dessert they get a lump of clay called chocolate—then they play in filthy streets, and sleep in close rooms, breathing foul air. Many die—which is no wonder. The wonder is that they do not all die. No animal save man could survive the treatment to which modern business methods subject modern human beings.

To remedy these evils this writer recommends the following drastic measures:

Put honest men in office—honest men do exist. Establish national and municipal laboratories to test—free of charge—all food and drink brought by a citizen in the original package. Destroy at once the business of any man caught swindling through adulteration. Close his store, . . . Make of him a convict, for ever debarred from voting and from future opportunities of swindling the public. Treat the man who steals millions through poisoned food as you now treat the man that steals ten dollars.

It is certainly a duty of Latter Day Saints to seek to sustain good men in office, men who will work for the interests of the people by favoring pure-food laws as well as all other laws that are right and good. The word of the Lord is:

I, the Lord God, maketh you free; therefore, ye are free indeed: and the law also maketh you free; nevertheless when the wicked rule the people mourn; wherefore honest men and wise men should be sought for, diligently, and good men and wise men, ye should observe to uphold; otherwise whatsoever is less than these, cometh of evil.—Doctrine and Covenants 95:2.

We may be able to accomplish but little in bringing about a better condition of things, and frustrating the designs of evil men; but by heeding the Word of Wisdom, we may avoid much of the harm that will inevitably result from their conspiracies. We should avoid the use of hot drinks, often made from articles adulterated by the addition of poisonous and indigestible matter. We may, to a large extent, avoid the use of ground spices, canned goods, and prepared foods, unless we are assured of their purity.

Canned goods and cooked foods offered at greatly reduced prices are especially to be avoided, as they are almost invariably adulterated. The higher grades offered by firms of established reputation are less liable to be unwholesome. Much of the butter offered in the market is unfit for use, being artificially colored with poisonous matter a spoonful of which will kill a cat. Unfortunately much of the home-made butter is colored, the housewife entertaining the notion that she can not eat white butter. Before using the butter color, better try a spoonful on the cat. If you are too tender-hearted to do that, for pity’s sake do not put it in the butter to feed to your children.

The Lord has warned us against the designs of evil-minded men. Let us heed his warning, the truth of which we see verified daily, and avoid the use of all harmful foods.

INFLUENCE.

What is our influence upon others? How far does it go towards leading them to live a godly life? We would doubtless be astonished, and disappointed often, if we realized exactly how we influence those with whom we come in contact. Our smallest, most insignificant acts are often more far reaching than we think. And sometimes when we design to exert a powerful influence, our effort seems futile.

Whether intentional or not every act and word, if not every thought, will to some extent influence somebody, sometime, whether we will that it should or not. The influence may be for infinite good; it may be for untold evil. It is not necessary, however, that we perform every act, speak every word, or harbor every thought with the purpose in view to have a good effect on this one or that one; if we do it will quite frequently occur that the result will be the reverse of that which we wish. The surest way to make our example effectual is to just be good, do good, and think good thoughts, without being too much concerned as to the effect it is going to have upon others. While neglecting to do this, an attempt to exert a mere outward influence for good will not bring satisfactory results.

Influence is described as “the gradual or unseen operation of some cause; the property or the process of producing modifications, especially when slow or permanent." All shades of influence are not of that character, however, that is, slow and permanent in their operation. We may say that there are at least three phases of influence; namely, official influence, personal influence, and the influence of the gospel reflected through us. The operation of the latter is permanent in its character and the world needs more of it. The operation of either of the first two may be, and too often is, superficial and temporary, and of these the world could get along with less.

An elder in his missionary labors has a certain influence because of his official position, which if properly used will lead to permanent good. The Saints to whom he is sent, even though he be a stranger, place in him a certain degree of confidence as the servant of God because of the influence of his position; and thus the opportunity of doing great good is placed within his reach; and we see how vastly important it is that the influence of a life of righteousness reflected through him shall confirm the confidence of the Saints.

While a man's official influence may be used as a power for good to God's work and his people, there is also an element of danger in it,—danger to himself, and grave danger to the people of God. As an example we see how Brigham Young by reason of his official influence (and personal, too, no doubt) was able to lead thousands of honest-hearted ones from the right path, to do his will, to depart from the laws of God given to the church, and engage in that which was absolutely forbidden, and could but lead to degradation and ruin. And so it is, sometimes, that men, realizing the power of their official influence, are willing to exert it for the culmination of measures which they desire to see carried out to gratify their ambition or pride. They even enter upon the task knowing that the measure would fail except they should throw their personal and official influence in its favor, and they rely upon this (rather than the influence of right) to carry out their designs in the face of all opposition. And thus while official and personal influence may be, if rightly used, a power for good, yet when the influence of right and truth is lost sight of in a desire to exercise the other to gain our ends, the result is always failure, even though temporary success may seem to attend our efforts. How much better it would be to seek to lay aside the operation of personal magnetism and official influence, and simply let the influence of the gospel of peace, the truth of God, and the righteousness of the cause we plead have its work.

Again, we know of instances where an elder has, largely through his personal influence, though unintentional on his part, perhaps, brought members to the church who were unprepared by an examination of the truths of the gospel to be received into the fold. They yielded to the influence of his presence and joined the church because the elder was such a "jolly good fellow." Unfortunately, or it may be fortunately, the elder was subsequently transferred to another field, and with the power of his official and personal influence gone, their religious fervor has taken a relapse. The elder's influence is gone, the influence of the gospel truth apparently has no place in their hearts and lives, their actions are a hindrance to the work in that field, and consequently the branch officers who have not the same official and personal influence, in their estimation, have a problem to solve.

A winning disposition, an agreeable manner, and a pleasant countenance are to be commended; but would it not be better for the minister to seek to use these as a means to lead to an investigation of the principles of truth, rather than to use them, unintentionally or otherwise, as principal means to make converts?

Sometimes we may exhibit an undue anxiety in regard to our influence. We seem to fear that somebody is going to say or do something to injure it, forgetful of the fact that the actions or words of others can result in no lasting hurt to us, being at the most but temporary; while it is by our own actions and words that our influence is enhanced or destroyed, and the results are permanent.

Christ never seemed to exhibit any great concern as to whether a Caiaphas or a Judas would mar his influence. Although he knew that the time would come when even his disciples would be ashamed because of him, yet he also knew that the power of his example, of his life of love, the power of the truth represented in and by him would hold them through this hour of trial, and when the darkness was passed and the greater light dawned upon their minds, they would be drawn to him by an allegiance that the opposing forces could not shake.

Some from time to time have gone out from us, and have sought to wield an influence against the work which they once espoused. They were received by enemies of the work with open arms, and the more timid among us almost held our breath at the appalling prospect of harm that might come to the cause of truth. But as time passed it revealed the fact that personal influence separated from truth counted for little; and those who so gladly welcomed what they considered a strong weapon in their warfare against the latter-day "delusion" would now be glad to lay the weapon down if they knew how.

And so an attempt to exert personal or official influence, separated from or in opposition to the principles of truth and right revealed in the gospel, will in the end prove disastrous to ourselves. For as soon as the people discover that a man will condescend to use the former to gain ends that he could not hope to reach by the use of the latter, his power to influence them is lost, and justly so.

Sometimes personal influence is manifested in the ability to sway the will of another, or in the exercise of moral or secret control over the actions of others. Sometimes it is manifested in the exercise of a directing or controlling power, based not on authority, but on social, moral, or other tendency. Sometimes it is manifested by the exercise of power in "privately controlling the acts of those in authority." All of these, especially the latter, tend to evil. For any influence aside from the influence of truth and righteousness can be of benefit only as it leads to truth.

We need not be overanxious in regard to our influence. We need not entertain disquieting fears that somebody is going to say or do something to hurt or destroy it. All we need is to do our duty with a pure motive before God, making a daily effort to reach the Christ ideal. If we do this God will look after our influence and make it all that he, in his wisdom, sees that it should be.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. J. W. Wight reports that ten were baptized at Gaylord, Michigan, on Sunday, July 16. It will be remembered by many who were present at the late General Conference that it was predicted that the present year would be a prosperous one for the church. The ministry are blessed in preaching the word and there are not wanting indications that their hearers are responsive to the message.

Bro. G. J. Waller, of Honolulu, Hawaii, reports, July 12, that he has baptized one. Bro. A. B. Purfurst, late of California, "is now priest of the Honolulu Branch and is doing good work." The many friends of Bro. Purfurst will be pleased to hear of his continued labor for the cause.

Bro. Heman C. Smith reports from his field for the past four months: "The rainy season has hindered much, but we are enabled to report one hundred nine baptisms, and doubtless more have been performed by local authorities which have not been reported to me."

From the Honolulu Sunday Advertiser we learn that Miss Ruth Waller, daughter of Bro. Gilbert J. Waller, was a successful contestant for the Damon Rhetoric Prize in the recent declamation contest. She won first prize.

"Moscow, July 22.—At the final meeting of the zemstvo congress to-day resolutions were adopted in favor of calling to the next congress representatives from the outskirts of the empire, in places where zemstvos are not held, and imposing contributions from all the zemstvos toward the expenses of the congress. A resolution also was adopted advocating the organization throughout the country of numerous assemblies, which will be submitted in regard to Bouligin's scheme, in order to discover the attitude of the public toward the propositions of the late minister of the interior."—Chicago Tribune, July 23, 1905.

"SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, July 23.—Governor John C. Cutler, a Mormon, has refused to issue a requisition for John Q. Cannon, a member of the old Cannon family which has taken a prominent part in the history of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

"Cannon is under arrest at Lethbridge, North West Territory, charged with being a fugitive from justice. He was secretary of the Utah Louisiana Purchase exposition commission, and during his term of office forged the signature of his brother-in-law, then Governor Heber M. Wells, to vouchers, securing twenty-one hundred dollars, which was afterwards returned to the State by his family.

"The application of County Attorney Christensen was returned unhonored, with the indorsement, 'The interests of the State do not demand that the requisition be issued.'

"This action by Cutler caused little surprise among those familiar with his position and the circumstances of the case. Cannon is the son of a former Mormon leader, and at one time was editor of the Deseret News, the church paper.

"His 'church pull,' undoubtedly, did most to help him in the present case. Since the news of Cannon's arrest the sentiment against bringing him back for trial has been nurtured carefully by leading Mormons, particularly the more active Mormon politicians. Senator Smoot has been pronounced in declarations to the effect that 'it would be better all around' to let Cannon alone. Cannon's friends have threatened to expose alleged peculations by Gentile officials in Utah if the case against Cannon is pushed.

"Cutler, although he belongs to a faction that has been fought by Cannon and his friends, is a devout Mormon, and those familiar with his brief political career do not need to be told that he would attach great weight to anything Apostle Smoot might say.

"Cannon confessed his guilt to members of the Louisiana Purchase commission, and then fled during the investigation by the legislature."—Chicago Tribune, July 24, 1905.

"If there shall come a time when the retention of their surplus earnings shall be guaranteed to the people who produce them in the sweat of their faces, I shall be content. It will be monument enough for one man that he for ever stopped the unrighteous absorption by the few of the earnings of the many."—Thomas W. Lawson, in the Register and Leader, July 14, 1905.

TRACTS.

NECESSITY FOR MORE CARE IN THEIR COMPOSITION.

My attention has recently been called to a difference of statement made by two of our writers, and which difference was grave enough to be noted and adversely commented upon and to cause serious doubts by one who was investigating, with the possibility that the investigation will cease. This certainly ought to call attention to and emphasize the necessity of greater care in the publication of our tracts. In fact no tract ought to go out until fully examined and, if necessary, revised as to its historical, doctrinal, and other important statements.

The tracts in question are Visions of Joseph Smith the Seer, etc., and No. 301, The Apostasy and Restoration.

The first, page 21, states:

In the meantime a few of the original characters were accurately transcribed and translated by Mr. Smith, which, with the translation, were taken by a gentleman by the name of Martin Harris, to the city of New York, where they were presented to a learned gentleman by the name of Anthon, who professed to be extensively acquainted with many languages, both ancient and modern. He examined them but was unable to decipher them correctly.

On page 19 of No. 301 we have this statement:

He certified that the characters were genuine and the translation of them correct.

The emphasis is mine and used so as to call attention to the difference in statement.

Turning to volume 1, page 19, of the Church History, this account is found:

Sometime in this month of February the aforementioned Mr. Martin Harris came to our place, got the characters which I had drawn off the plates, and started with them to the city of New York. For what took place relative to him and the characters, I refer to his own account of the circumstances as he related them to me after his return, which was as follows: "I went to the city of New York and presented the characters which had been translated, with the translation thereof, to Professor Anthon, a gentleman celebrated for his literary attainments. Professor Anthon stated that the translation was correct, more so than any he had before seen translated from the Egyptian. I then showed him those which were not yet translated, and he said that they were Egyptian, Chaldaic, Assyriac, and Arabic, and he said that they were the true characters. He gave me a certificate certifying to the people of Palmyra that they were true characters, and that the translation of such of them as had been translated was also correct."

From this account we learn: 1. From the testimony of both Smith and Harris that the latter took some "characters" to Professor Anthon. 2. That some of these Egyptian characters had been correctly translated. 3. That some of the characters taken were translated; others not. 4. That those not translated were pronounced by Professor Anthon to be Egyptian, Chaldaic, Assyriac, and Arabic.

The author of The Apostasy and Restoration is substantially correct so far as he goes, but stops short enough to convey the idea that all the characters taken to Professor Anthon had been previously translated; while the history shows that but a portion of the Egyptian characters were translated, the rest of these, with the Chaldaic, Assyriac, and Arabic, not having been translated, or at least no translation of them having been taken to Professor Anthon.

The author of Visions, etc., is almost wholly at variance with the history.

We certainly need, then, to have this tract revised, all others carefully examined, and none hereafter published without first being thoroughly examined by a painstaking and competent committee with power to revise where necessary.

J. W. WIGHT.

CROSWELL, Michigan, July 22, 1905.

THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST RESTORED.

Dear reader, what church do you belong to, if any? How, when, by whom, and where was it organized? These are legitimate questions which all men should propound to all churches in their search for the kingdom of God.

Many have gathered the thought by tradition that it matters not which church we are identified with. But the historian Luke strikes a death-blow to this theory, when he says there was "added to the church daily such as should be saved." (Acts 2:47.)

The church of Christ does not spring up spontaneously, regardless of law and order, but by a "thus saith the Lord," by divine appointment. Did the reformers that broke off from Roman Catholicism organize such a church? Evidently not. They deny present-day revelation, hence close up the avenue by which they might have been duly authorized. All of these churches can not be right, because they teach conflicting theories and the Scriptures teach that a house divided against itself can not stand. (See Matthew 12:25.) Now we propose to show which church is right. As we proceed with our investigation remember this is a PROPHETIC AGE.

Many of the most gigantic prophecies of the Old and New Testaments are to be fulfilled in these latter days. Now if God's work is on the earth to-day, it is here in consequence of its coming forth in the fulfillment of Bible prophecy, and the true servant of God will be willing to take the Bible and locate himself from a Bible standpoint, showing that the church which he represents came forth in the right way, at the proper time, by the right person, and was established in the right place. In primitive times this was the way they proved Jesus to be the Christ, by taking the prophecies and showing that Jesus fulfilled these prophecies. Hence he must be the Christ. This is the method we shall pursue. "Beware, therefore, lest that come upon you, which is spoken of in the prophets."—Acts 13:40.

THE APOSTASY.

The first thing to be considered is the apostasy of the primitive church. There are some people who verily believe they are members of the same identical church that Jesus organized nearly nineteen hundred years ago, because Christ said to Peter, "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."—Matthew 16:18. The gates of hell did not prevail against the church, nevertheless the church finally apostatized. What are the gates of hell? The entrance into hell. Christ's mission was not only to the living and unborn generations, but to the dead of the misty past, therefore in harmony with Isaiah 61:12. He went down to the prison-house (hell) and proclaimed the gospel to the captives and opened the prison (the gates) to those that were bound. Jesus afterwards appeared to John on Patmos Isle and said, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death."—Revelation 1:18.

"And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force."—Matthew 11:12. The violent did take it by force. They killed Christ and the apostles, and put many of the saints to death. In Rome the race-tracks were illuminated with the burning bodies of saints.

I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel: which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed.—Galatians 1:6-9.

Plainer language indicating the apostasy can not be found. Some had been removed from the gospel; others were troubling by perverting. But Paul says if an angel, or any man preach any other gospel let him be accursed. Dear reader, does the reformed Protestant world preach the same message of salvation as did Christ and the apostles? There is as much difference as there is between light and darkness.

And there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars: and she being with child cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered. And there appeared another wonder in heaven; and behold a great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads. And his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth: and the dragon stood before the woman which was ready to be delivered, for to devour her child as soon as it was born. And she brought forth a man child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her child was caught up unto God and to his throne. And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand, two hundred and three score days.—Revelation 12:1-6.

The woman clothed with the sun evidently refers to the church of Christ, as it existed in its purity in the commencement. The stars upon her head symbolize the twelve apostolic seats, and the moon beneath her feet refers to the Mosaic law, that was fulfilled when Christ was crucified. The dragon, which stood before the woman to devour her child as soon as it was born, represents the Roman power. This is the same power that Daniel describes. (See Daniel 7:24.) The man child represents "the kingdom of our God and of his Christ"; or in other words the power and authority of the gospel. Jesus said, "But if I with the finger of God cast out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you."—Luke 11:20. This shows clearly that the kingdom of God must be associated with God's power. The man child could not represent Christ, as many would have us believe. Christ is the one who brought forth the church, but the woman brought forth the man child. After the child had been delivered, the woman (church) fled into the wilderness and the man child (power and authority) was caught up unto God and to his throne. So the main part of the church went to heaven, and the church went into the wilderness, shorn of her beauty and power. Wilderness, according to Webster, means a desert. Or in other words it means, so far as this "wilderness" is concerned, a place where certain principles are lacking to make it a desirable place. When the church went into this undesirable condition, the body existed but the Spirit had fled. But she did not retain an organized form-long. For the dragon power persecuted the church, until the saints were "worn out" and overcome. (See Daniel 7:25; Revelation 13:7.) This persecuting power is also represented by another symbol in Revelation 17:4, 5:

And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication. And upon her forehead was a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH.

This shows that the prevailing religion was Roman Catholicism. Church and state had become united. They had made merchandise of the gospel, were seeking pleasures and abominations. This woman finally became a mother. Therefore she surely must have some children somewhere. These children are found in the Protestant world among all the churches.

Paul speaks of this great apostasy in the following language:

Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come [the second coming of Christ], except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God.—2 Thessalonians 2:3, 4.

The Emphatic Diaglot renders "falling away" to mean apostasy. Does not Roman Catholicism fulfill this prediction? The Pope did sit in the temple as God; claiming to forgive sin, if the stipulated sum of money was always in sight. The sale of indulgences was inaugurated, the Bible chained to the desk and none but the clergy allowed to read it. "Darkness" covered "the earth, and gross darkness the people." (Isaiah 60: 2.)

This was the condition prevailing when Martin Luther commenced his tirade against the Pope for "selling indulgences." Luther was a monk in the Catholic Church. The Pope conferred all the authority he possessed. So it was with Calvin, Knox, and Henry VIII. John Wesley, Roger Williams, A. Campbell, and Barton W. Stone received their authority from Rome indirectly.

We do not want to rob these men of any of their glory. They accomplished a work that was necessary. They drew back the curtains of superstition and darkness and paved the way for the establishment of religious liberty, and made it possible for the gospel to be restored. The only way the gospel could be brought back to the earth again was by restoration. This is the main difference between Latter Day Saints and the Protestant world. We believe in the restoration of the church, while they only have the Roman Catholic Church improved or reformed. We believe that part of the church which went to heaven—the man child—must be restored to the earth again. In fact the reformers entertained the thought that there was yet a greater work ahead of them to be accomplished by their successors. John Wesley says:

How is it that men who can now discern the face of the sky . . . do not discern the signs of the glorious times, which if not begun are nigh, even at the door. . . . They see no signs at all of God's arising to maintain his own cause and set up his kingdom over all the earth. What could God have done which he hath not done to convince you that the day is coming, that the time is at hand, when he will fulfill this glorious promise, and will arise to maintain his own cause and set up his kingdom?—Seventy-first Sermon.

Reverend A. Campbell says:

At evening time there shall be light. The primitive gospel in its effulgence and power is yet to shine out in its original splendor to regenerate the world.—Christian System.

Sir Isaac Newton said:

About the time of the end, in all probability, a body of men will be raised up who will turn their attention to the prophecy; and insist upon their literal fulfillment in the midst of much clamor and opposition.

Thus the expectations of these men were confirmed when the gospel was RESTORED TO THE EARTH.

John the Revelator saw in vision how this would be brought about. The things which he saw on the Isle of Patmos were to be after his time. The angel which talked with him said, "I will show thee things which must be hereafter."—Revelation 4: 1.

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of water.—Revelation 14: 6, 7.

We must admit this angel must come. Inspiration says so. But when? In the hour of God's judgment and when people are worshiping some other God than the one authorized in the Scriptures. Some of the church creeds declare that God is a being without body, parts, or passions; that he fills the immensity of space and is everywhere. Can you conceive of such a being? Such a God is beyond my comprehension. He would be something like the Irishman's owl—"a great big nothing." This is the God that thousands of honest souls worship to-day in this enlightened land. No wonder John said that the angel who brought the gospel back to the earth after his time would say, "Worship him that made . . . earth and the sea." The God of the Bible is a personal being; for man was made in his image. And Christ was made in the express image of the Father. (See Hebrews 1:3.) So this angel was to come in these latter times, this side of the dark night of apostasy, when the people would be worshiping an imaginary God. The reformers did not claim to receive this angel. There was only one who made this claim, and that was the poor, weak, unlearned, untutored lad from the backwoods of New York—

JOSEPH SMITH.

He claimed an angel visited him while a mere boy about fourteen years old. A big revival meeting was being conducted in the neighborhood where he and his father's family then resided. It was a union meeting in which three or four churches were represented. Some of this boy's near relatives united with one church and some with another. Along towards the close of the meeting there arose a strife among the ministers as to who would get the greater percentage of the converts in the respective churches. This puzzled the young man, who at this time was earnestly seeking the way of life. So when he saw this confusion, he did not know which one to join. But one day while reading his Bible, he noticed this scripture: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."—James 1:5.

Would any one condemn this young man for asking? Certainly not. The boy took God at his word and did not come back with murmurs of disappointment upon his lips. His heart was full of rejoicing, because he had seen a heavenly vision and conversed with angels. He propounded the question to these angelic messengers: Which church shall I join? And the angel said, Join none of them, for they are

ALL WRONG.

No wonder when the boy told this experience to the minister that he replied, "It's all of the Devil." It was a thrust at all the religions of Christendom. While Joseph Smith was persecuted for testifying so frankly, yet all the churches in the land testify to the fact that Joseph Smith was a true prophet, because all the creeds have been changed since the above startling statement was made. If the creeds were right then, they surely should remain the same throughout succeeding ages. But at present the creeds are under revision, and further change is contemplated.

How must the church be established? We answer, By divine appointment; by angelic ministrations. Paul declares, "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron."—Hebrews 5:4. Aaron was called by revelation through the prophet Moses. So the claim made by this young man, Joseph Smith, is more in harmony with the written word of God, than the claim of any other church-builder. He also organized

ACCORDING TO THE PATTERN.

"To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isaiah 8:20. The Bible is the pattern, the constitution. It provides that the church of Christ must be established with living apostles, prophets, bishops, evangelists, elders, teachers, and deacons (see 1 Corinthians 12:28); and they are to remain in the church for the purpose of perfecting the saints, for the work of the ministry, and the edifying of the body—Christ. They were to remain until we all come unto the unity of the faith, and unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. (See Ephesians 4:11–13.) Did any of the reformers organize this way? No. But Joseph Smith did. "Ye shall know them by their fruits."—Matthew 7:16.

Why is it that these college-bred men failed to come up to the law as close as did this poor, unlearned boy? Simply because inspiration stood behind his work. He built upon the solid rock, the revelations of God. (See Matthew 16:15–18.) How must the church be organized? is an important question; and the honest seeker for God's kingdom can not afford to overlook it.

BY WHOM?

The church should be established by whom? is another phase of the question we must consider. We find nothing in the Bible, where any one in these modern times has been authorized, by any specific revelation, designating him by name. In fact we find nothing in the Old Testament where the term Jesus Christ was ever used. However, he fulfilled the prophecies relating to himself in a general way.

Some men in these times go back to the great commission (see Mark 16:15–18) to prove that they are authorized. Certainly men are in hard circumstances when they have to steal the commission of dead men before they have anything to make people believe they are divinely authorized.

The Bible teaches plainly that whoever engages in God's work must be a prophet of God. (See Amos 2:7.) Which of the reformers made such claims? Not one. Now turn to Zechariah 2:2–4:

Then said I, Whither goest thou? And he said unto me, To measure Jerusalem, to see what is the breadth thereof, and what is the length thereof. And, behold, the angel that talked with me went forth, and another angel went out to meet him, and said unto him, Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein.

Here two angels are talking to each other, and one says to the other, "Run, speak to this young man." By reading the context we understand that this language refers to Jerusalem in the last days. Joseph Smith was a young man at the time the angel visited him and told him that Jerusalem was to be built up again. The world did not believe this would ever be. But to-day that prophecy has been fulfilled to a great extent. The city is rapidly increasing in population, with the modern improvements of electricity. It looks reasonable that the proper time for this "warning" to be made would be in the time when the implements of warfare are so much improved that the "walled city" would be of little consequence. If Smith did not fulfill this scripture, who did? The angel must come, and he must come to "this young man."

JOHN THE BAPTIST.

According to prophecy, the noted John the Baptist must appear to some one in these last days—the eleventh hour. Read Malachi 3:1–4:

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in; behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire and like fullers' soap: and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years.

John the Baptist evidently is the personage referred to—the messenger. Many believe this scripture was fulfilled in New Testament times. John's work is to go before the Savior and prepare the way. This was his work nineteen hundred years ago. The historian Mark refers to him as the messenger preparing the way for the Savior. (See Mark 1:2, 3.) But one can see at a glance, that the language of Malachi refers to the work of John the Baptist just previous to the second advent of Christ.

The question is propounded: "Who may abide the day of his coming?" Every one abided his coming when he appeared in the manger at Bethlehem. But when he appears the second time, it will be in power and glory (see Matthew 24:30); none but those who are prepared will be permitted to stand. When this preparatory work has been accomplished then Christ will come and purify the sons of Levi. Was this work done when Christ was here before? Certainly not. The offering of Judah was not in righteousness then. They crucified the Lord and sold him for thirty pieces of silver. But when Christ comes the second time his messenger will have prepared the way before him, so that the offering of Judah and Jerusalem will be pleasant unto the Lord. This prophecy is a latter-day consideration. When John comes to perform this work, he will come as a restorer, in the spirit of Elias. Elijah is the true Elias (see James 5:17); but John the Baptist is called Elias also, in one sense of the term. We read in Matthew 17:10-13:

And his disciples asked him, saying, Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come? And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things. But I say unto you, That Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. Likewise shall also the Son of man suffer of them. Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist.

When Jesus declared that Elias must first come and restore all things he had reference to the same things referred to by Peter in Acts 3:19-22:

Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.

Restitution means restoration. But the dispensation of the restoration of all things must be introduced after the glorious ascension of Christ, just about the time that Jesus makes his second advent. In connection with this, the preparatory work must be introduced, and God will send his messenger before his face to prepare the way. John the Baptist performs the part of a "restorer." Even the Jews were looking for a restoration in the time of Christ and the apostles. (See Matthew 17:10.) They were looking for the Elias, but did not know him when he did appear.

When Christ appeared on the mount with Peter, James, and John, and was transfigured before them, when Moses and Elias appeared upon the scene, evidently there was a restoration of the Melchisedec priesthood upon this occasion. Undoubtedly here is where Christ received the higher priesthood. Jesus was not a natural heir to the Melchisedec priesthood, but to the Aaronic. (See Luke 1:36.) Mary was from the same progenitors as Elizabeth. Ephraim is considered the first-born of Israel. Therefore Christ had to be baptized into the family of Ephraim before he was entitled to the higher priesthood. Baptism puts us into the family of Ephraim. (See Galatians 3:27.) When Moses ordained Joshua, he placed some of his honor upon him. (See Numbers 27:18-20.) Now please note the following account given by Peter concerning the transfiguration:

For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye witnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount. —2 Peter 1:16-18.

Christ received in this experience honor and glory. If Joshua received authority when Moses placed some of his honor upon him, why did not the Savior, when he received honor and glory from the Father?

Moses was the last man that held the Melchisedec priesthood until New Testament times, when it was restored. No wonder then that John the Baptist, or Elias, appeared in that holy scene upon the mount. There was something to be restored.

Some claim that Jesus did not need any ordination. Christ never exalted himself above the law. He said to John, "Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness."—Matthew 3:15. So John baptized him. All righteousness is revealed in the gospel. (See Romans 1:16, 17.) "But," says one, "the Inspired Translation declares that in the beginning the holy priesthood was called after the order of the Son of God, and in order to avoid the too frequent use of that name, it was called after Melchisedec." Now if Christ did not need any ordination then we could with the same degree of consistency claim that Melchisedec required no ordination. It stands to reason inasmuch as John the Baptist, according to Malachi, is to appear in these latter times, that the Aaronic priesthood would be reestablished in the church of Christ again. It is the claim of Latter Day Saints, that Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were ordained to the Aaronic priesthood under the hands of John the Baptist. (See Doctrine and Covenants, page 62.) These men also received the authority of the higher priesthood under the hands of Peter, James, and John. (See Doctrine and Covenants, page 62.)

Jesus told Peter that he gave unto him the "keys of the kingdom of heaven." (Matthew 16:19.) Therefore inasmuch as the church had apostatized, it would be necessary for that priesthood to be restored through their command or ordination in these last days. The man child, or authority, which went into heaven, must be restored to the church when she comes out of the wilderness. Now the restoration of the church and the setting up of the kingdom must be in the day of

GOD'S PREPARATION.

This time of preparation will be in the age when we have fast locomotion:

The shield of his mighty men is made red, the valiant men are in scarlet: the chariots shall be with flaming torches in the day of his preparation, and the fir-trees shall be terribly shaken. The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another in the broad ways; they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings. He shall recount his worthies: they shall stumble in their walk; they shall make haste to the wall thereof, and the defense shall be prepared.—Nahum 2: 3-5.

This prophecy relates to the modern passenger-train. Some may wonder how we are going to connect the church of Christ with a train of cars. Just in this way. We have already shown that there is to be a preparatory work—the coming of the angel and Elias just before the second coming of the Lord. Now Nahum refers to the time of God's preparation and shows clearly that it is going to be when we have swift transportation. Does not the prophet describe very vividly the modern passenger-train?

The chariots refers to the palace-car. The prophet says they shall be with flaming torches. When we look up the railroad track at night and see the train coming at rapid speed, does it not look like a flaming torch? Does not the conductor recount his worthies as he passes to and fro through the cars? Do they not stumble in their walk? Now the prophecy declares that the valiant are in scarlet. The men who run the first passenger-train in England in 1830, (the very year in which this church of Christ was restored,) were arrayed in scarlet, being the Queen's body-guard. Yes, this preparatory work was to be in the time of wonderful invention. Whenever the Spirit of God is striving with the people, men make more rapid progress. Daniel says that in the last days knowledge shall increase. (See Daniel 12: 4.) Truly that time is here now. The reap-hook and scythe have given place to the reaper; hand-sewing to the improved Singer machine. Mr. Howe, the man who invented the sewing-machine, was puzzled to know where to put the eye in the needle. But he finally dreamed where to put the eye. God surely has a hand to some degree in this inventive work.

In the large wheat-fields of California, they have machines that cut the grain, thrash it, and sack it. This is a wonderful age—the day of God's preparation! This great work must have its commencement before the RESTORATION OF PALESTINE.

"Stay yourselves, and wonder; cry ye out, and cry: they are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink."—Isaiah 29: 9.

Something is wrong with these people. The next verse explains the cause: "For the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes: the prophets and your rulers, the seers hath he covered."—Isaiah 29: 10.

The prophet describes clearly the condition of the Gentile world to-day. They say there is no more revelation from God. The prophets and seers are all dead. No wonder they are in a sleepy condition! Read the thirteenth verse: "Wherefore the Lord said, Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth and with their lips do honor me, . . . and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men."

This shows what condition they are in—they have a form of godliness. And in many instances the minister teaches that God is a monster, unmerciful and cruel; so their fear toward God is taught by the precept of men. I think it is better to worship God because he is a loving Father and worthy of our worship and adoration.

Fourteenth verse: "Therefore [for the above reasons], behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder; for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid."

This is indeed counted a strange work, (see Isaiah 28: 21,) a marvelous and wonderful work. I have had aged men and women, whose locks are whitened with the frosts of many winters, declare in words of soberness: "If it were not for the marvelous we could believe it more readily." But God's work has always been wonderful. It is wonderful to-day. This work has been carried on for, lo, these many years by an unpolished ministry, so far as education is concerned. Boys from the plow and workshop have been called to minister the word. They have met upon the open fields the brainiest men and the wisest sages of the land; but their worldly wisdom was nothing when compared with the inspiration of God.

When is this marvelous work going to commence? The prophet does not leave us to wonder. Read the seventeenth verse. "Is it not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field." For ages Palestine had been fruitful and productive, supporting millions of people; but now because of the disobedience of Israel, the judgments of God rested not only on the people but on the land. Jesus said, "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate."—Luke 13: 35. For nearly fifteen hundred years Palestine lay in a desolate condition, inhabited only by a few of the roaming Arabs; but now, through the favor of Heaven, it is a delightful land, and the Jews have turned their faces homeward. Now this marvelous work was to commence just a little while before the restoration of Palestine, which was in 1853. Twenty-three years before this the church of Jesus Christ was organized, in 1830, in the state of New York, through the authority conferred by an angel of God. Here is a prophecy fulfilled literally in our time. It is too late now for the marvelous work to come forth.

One more prophecy we will consider relative to the time of the church of Christ coming forth in these the last days. Nebuchadnezzar had a dream (see Daniel 2:28-45) in which he saw a great image, whose head was of fine gold. Daniel interprets the head to represent the Babylonish kingdom. Now remember it took many years for this image to become fully developed from the head to the feet. The next part of the image, which appears, is the breast and arms, which are of silver. It was inferior to the preceding kingdom. This part of the image evidently refers to the Medes-Persian empire. Then after this part of the image comes the other, the belly and thighs, which are of brass. This certainly refers to the Grecian kingdom, which did bear rule over all the earth.

But now comes the other division of this image, the legs and feet, which refers to the Roman Empire, which had sway over all the world in the time of our Savior. It finally became divided into the eastern and western empire, as represented by the legs, 97 to 117 A. D. Finally it became subdivided into ten different political kingdoms, as represented by the toes, after 476 A. D.

Now the king, Nebuchadnezzar, saw, as Daniel declared: "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever."

Dear reader, pause one moment. Do you not know that this image had no feet in the time of the Savior? The image then was only developed down to the hips. Now did the Babylonish king see the stone cut out of the mountains without hands, smite the image upon his hip and knock his hip off? No, the image was smote upon his feet. The kingdom referred to here was not the setting up of the kingdom in the days of Christ, because this is a latter-day consideration. (See Daniel 2:28.) The kingdom in the days of Christ was prevailed against. It was given to another people, the Gentiles. (See Matthew 21:43.) It apostatized. But this kingdom is to be established, after the fall of the Roman empire, when the feet have ten toes typical of the ten political divisions of Europe even to-day. This kingdom was established in 1830, through divine authority. It has never been thrown down thus far. The seeds of decay are not in it, and the kingdom is on a firmer footing than ever before. But this kingdom is to be established at a certain PLACE.

Concerning the place where this kingdom is to be established, we will barely mention. The birthplace for this mighty kingdom is not on the land of the Eastern Hemisphere, but on the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia. (See Isaiah 18:1.)

Does not North and South America answer to this description? These two continents look like two large wings. What is the Lord going to do on this land? Read the third verse: "All ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the earth, see ye, when he lifteth up an ensign on the mountains; and when he bloweth a trumpet, hear ye." Yes, the gospel is going to be preached as a witness just before the Lord comes. (See Matthew 24:14.) Hence the trumpet will be blown when the angel comes from heaven with the everlasting gospel, and the ensign is lifted up.

God is going to do this wonderful work. The God of heaven is going to establish his kingdom in these latter days. Therefore, we may expect the angels and the Holy Spirit to perform an important part.

"And he [God] will lift up an ensign to the nations from far, and will hiss unto them from the end of the earth: and, behold, they shall come with speed swiftly."—Isaiah 5:26. When the prophet wrote this language he stood in Jerusalem. God is going to lift up an ensign from far. This means a long way. Yes, he will hiss unto them from the end of the earth. The end of the earth means to the extreme limit. Stand in Jerusalem and go to the extreme limit east or west, and you would land on the Americas. Remember this is to be done in the time of swift travel.

Many more evidences might be presented; but we close, hoping that all may find the glorious kingdom of Christ.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Is thy path lonely? Fear it not, for he
Who marks the sparrow's fall is guarding thee;
And not a star shines o'er thy head by night,
But he hath known that it will reach thy sight;
And not a joy can beautify thy lot,
But tells thee still that thou art unforget;
Nay, not a grief can darken or surprise,
Swell in thy heart, or dim with tears thine eyes,
But it is sent in mercy and in love,
To bid thy helplessness seek strength above."

JOPLIN, Missouri, July 12, 1905.

Dear Mothers of the Home Column: Much has been said about training children. I thought I would try to tell my experience in training mine. My ideas are like the sister's who wrote March 1. The sister says, some children can be managed without being whipped and some can not. I believe that is true, but there are very few but what need sometimes to be punished. In the HERALD, June 28, a sister said it grieved her heart "to think any true Latter Day Saint had such ideas about child-training." I beg to differ from her. The sister goes on to say, "If it takes a wise, cool-headed mother to punish children with the rod, then please erase my name from the list and call me the opposite if you choose."

I now tell my experience with my boy. I sent him to school and he played truant. His papa and I talked with him, and took him back to school. He still played truant, and got so he would not love us or look at us. He got so bad I knew that I had to conquer him or he would grow worse. I said to him: "If you won't do right by talking, I shall be very severe on you till you do mind me." So, dear sisters, I took good Solomon's advice. (See Proverbs 19:13, 19; 13:24; 23:13, 14; 22:15; 27:15.)

Some may think I was hard-hearted, and did not love my child; but I conquered the child with the rod and he now shows his love for us.

Sometimes I think I would like to see one family who are obedient to their parents; who do not believe in whipping. I have not found one yet. I believe all true Latter Day Saints will punish their children when they need it.

I know one mother who asked her boy which he would rather have, a whipping or go up to his room. He said he would rather go to his room; a whipping would not do him any good. And he had his own way. Is he growing up a bright and shining light? No, far from it. If he goes on in the way in which he now is he will be ruined.

Does the Lord ask us what kind of punishment we would like when he chastises us? I find in the word of God that the Lord chastises and afflicts people.

Much could be said on this subject. I close by saying I know this latter-day gospel is true, and thank my heavenly Father for the knowledge that he gives me. Love to all Saints and malice towards none.

SISTER E. WILSON.

Take Heart and Go On.

Sometimes we are almost discouraged

The way is so cumbered and steep;

Sometimes, though we're spent with the sowing,

There cometh no harvest to reap.

And we faint on the road and we falter,

As our faith and our courage are gone,

Till a voice, as we kneel at the altar,

Commands us: "Take heart and go on."

"Take heart!" 'Tis the word of our Leader,

And e'en when our vision is dim,

What else can we do but, arising,

Uplift weary eyes unto Him?

"Take heart!" Why, 'tis Christ who hath spoken;

And what can we do but obey?

Though He gives us no tangible token,

Himself is the Sun of our day.

And in His own time He will show us

Why trial and sorrow were sent—

Why we toiled and saw naught for our toiling,

And home empty-handed we went.

Though He gives us no tangible token,

Still we must arise and go on,

As sure, as His body was broken

For us, that our fight shall be won.

Then fain for a touch of His garment

When crowds hem us in and 'tis dark;

We'll cling to the thought of His goodness,

Press on, with the Cross for our mark.

Take heart! Yes, our own blessed Master;

Till the last of our heart-beats is gone,

Amid conflict and loss and disaster,

We'll just take heart and go on.

—Selected by Mrs. Mary Finkle, Greenwood, Wisconsin.

Walking With God.

O Master, let me walk with thee

In lowly paths of service free;

Tell me thy secret; help me bear

The strain of toil, the fret of care.

Help me the slow of heart to move

By some clear, winning word of love;

Teach me the wayward feet to stay

And guide them in the homeward way.

Teach me thy patience! still with thee

In closer, dearer company:

In work that keeps faith sweet and strong;

In trust that triumphs over wrong;

In hope that sends a shining ray

Far down the future's broadening way;

In peace that only thou canst give,

With thee, O Master, let me live.

—Washington Gladden.

Be Consistent.

You will not join a church because of inconsistent church-members! Consistency, then, is the word you wish to emphasize. Very well. Here is the world of trade and commerce. To-morrow, merchants will adulterate their goods, traders will tamper with their weights, milkmen will water their milk, drapers will sell cotton for silk, clerks will steal money from the bank, and the whole kingdom of trade stands for hypocrisies and lies. Since you do not care to associate with hypocrites, withdraw from business, and pledge yourself never again to enter the kingdom of commerce. If inconsistent members keep you out of the church, why do not inconsistent members keep you out of business? Here is the kingdom of law. To-morrow lawyers will be tricksters. They will suborn witnesses. They will conceal evidence. They will deal in subterfuges. But because some lawyers are unprofessional, will that compel you to stand aloof from the study of jurisprudence? Here is the kingdom of love and marriage. To-morrow some man will play false to his marriage vow, and some woman will profane the holiest sanctities, and those who have solemnly pledged themselves to the law of love will stand forth clothed with hypocrisy as with a garment. But does their inconsistency mean that you can never find your home, and that you can never stand at a marriage altar, and never swear fealty in the name of an eternal friendship? Why, there are spots on the sun, but we need the sun for harvest. To be consistent, you must give up the Venus de Milo, because there is a flaw in the marble. We must pull down the Parthenon, because there are black stains on the columns. Now, something is wrong in the man who refuses allegiance to the church because of inconsistency, but turns around and gives allegiance to a hundred other institutions, in the very face of greater inconsistencies.

The time has gone for ever for men to plead the bigotry and bad lives of the unworthy disciples of a Master who confessedly is worthy. Peter and Judas were not Christian and misrepresented their Master. But in that hour of misrepresentation they ceased to be disciples and became hypocrites. Let all those who dislike hypocrisy leave immediately the company of Judas and Peter with his denial and join the ranks of the other ten. We grant that there are men outside of the church who are better than some in the church. Now and then a youth appears in the realm of art who is blessed with such native genius that instinctively he understands the laws of drawing and perspective and the laws of harmonious color. And side by side with him is another youth who for years has been in the school under a great artist-master and after long drill can scarcely equal his brother who is self-taught. But shall this gifted youth who has received so much from his parents and his God declaim against his father, or despise the school of art?

There are many poor pupils in schools and colleges, but when you find some youth who is far from being the ideal scholar, do not rail against the college and the university. The poorer the scholar the more necessary the maintenance of the school in which he studies. Not otherwise, if men in the church are sinful and weak and full of error, it is the more necessary to strengthen the church, that manhood-later may be strengthened. Unconsciously, he who urges the inconsistency of Christians and rails against their errors, has forged a weapon that turns against himself.

How ungenerous are all these excuses, as well as how wicked! We live in God's world. He hath fitted up this world-house as no prince hath ever fitted up the halls of a palace. We breathe his air, are warmed by his summers, we feed upon his harvests, we are pilgrims who stoop and drink at his fountains. The angel of his providence goes before us to prepare life's way; the angel of his mercy follows after us to recover us from our transgressions. And how shall men meet such overflowing generosity save with instant obedience? What mark across the page of memory so black as the mark of ingratitude?—Newell Dwight Hillis.

DENVER, Colorado, July 20, 1905.

Editors Herald: We are busy at work telling the gospel story. Two weeks ago to-day I commenced street-preaching on the corner of Sixteenth and Champa and have been holding forth every evening with the exception of Sunday evening. My brother, J. D. Curtis, is now assisting me and we are having good crowds, and several seem interested. We have a Bill-horn organ to assist us in the singing, and then we have a chart on stakes so we can use it in preaching. Several of the Saints here have rendered valuable assistance in our work.

The Utah elders hold forth part of the time just a block away, but it seems very hard for them to get any one to listen, while we have good crowds every night. This is the most successful way to reach the people in these large cities. People will stand for an hour and listen to a sermon on the street. We also reach people that would never come to the church at all. We have been abundantly blessed in our work and hope and pray that many souls may be brought to see the light of truth.

FARGO, North Dakota, July 18, 1905.

Editors Herald: Elder H. A. McCoy and myself came to this place one week ago last Thursday, July 6, from Rumsey, Minnesota. We labored at Rumsey nearly a week and a half, and while there made our home at Bro. Joseph Elliott's, having the pleasure while there of baptizing three of his children. Sr. Elliott is a very energetic church-worker, and is superintendent of a Latter Day Saint Sunday-school, which they hold in a schoolhouse not far from the Elliott home. How good it makes a missionary feel when he can hear words of commendation, from the world's people, about our people, and such we were permitted to hear of Bro. and Sr. Elliott and family. What weight a good character has, and how forcibly it testifies of the religion of Jesus the Christ, to the honest-hearted of the children of men.

How important Paul's testimony to Titus, chapter 3, verse 8, wherein he says, "This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men."

At this place there are only about a half dozen Saints but they are truly trying to let their light shine, and I feel sure that ere long it will have the desired effect of leading some of the honest-hearted to a knowledge of the truth, by obedience.

Bro. McCoy, upon last Friday, went to a place called Wolverton, Minnesota, to do some preaching, and by word from there since we learn that there is quite an interest manifested by the people, and that they by vote requested Bro. McCoy to preach there this week. We are not having many to hear us here, but what do come seem interested, and we of course have hope of doing a little good, and have had excellent liberty in presenting the truth.

From here we go to Audubon, Minnesota. My health is the best it has been for over two years, and my throat does not give me much trouble.

Always praying for the welfare of Zion,
In the bonds of eternal truth,

J. R. SUTTON.

Editors Herald: Permit me to say that I am still rejoicing in the great latter-day work, doing what I can for its advancement. There is a brighter outlook for the work here and in other parts of the Birmingham District, over which I have been called to preside. We had pleasure in baptizing two precious souls in the town of Derby, where once a branch existed. I was also called upon to baptize one of my sisters while visiting home at Stafford.

WM. ECCLESTONE.

WHITEHALL, Montana, July 19, 1905.

Editors Herald: It has been quite a while since we have written you but we have not been idle. From September until May 16 we put in the time in Lamoni Stake, where we found many hungering and thirsting for the word. We felt that the Master blessed us in our efforts to advance the cause of truth, and we found many friends both in and out of the fold, who cared for us and helped us on our way. And while we did no baptizing, we feel that seed was sown that will some time bear fruit for the Master.

From May 18 until June 11 we visited friends and relatives and preached in Woods County, Oklahoma, having the pleasure of baptizing five into the kingdom. This pleasure was greatly enhanced by the fact that one of this number is an old school-mate of ours, who is almost like a brother in the flesh. To have the pleasure of helping him and his good wife to better comprehend the way of salvation, and to induct them into the kingdom of God's dear Son, was a pleasure indeed.

On our way to our field, Montana, we made a short stop in Utah, visiting and preaching as opportunity permitted, and finally we joined Bro. J. D. Stead at Deer Lodge, Montana, where we have established our field address. We reached that place in time for our district conference, which, with Sunday-school convention, occurred June 23 to 25. A very rainy time kept our attendance down to a very small number. After our conference Bro. Stead and the writer commenced a series of meetings near Race Track, among the "Morrisites," where there was a good interest manifested by the younger generation, and three baptisms have already resulted (not all from that work but from that and work done previously among them by Bro. J. D. Stead). We feel that there are more there near the kingdom.

The 10th of July we closed our services there, and returning to Deer Lodge carried on a week's meetings there, which were but indifferently attended. While here we had the pleasure of greeting Bro. Joseph Smith and wife, also their three children, who made a stop for a day and an evening with us, Bro. Joseph preaching for us the 13th and 14th, evenings, and then taking train for Spokane. Their visit was enjoyed by Saints and friends. We feel that strength was given and good done for the cause thereby. Our meetings closed in Deer Lodge the 16th, and we intended to take the evening train for Butte, but our train did not come until two o'clock the 17th. My, what a rainy night! And in Butte hail and sleet, until when we stepped off the train at fifteen minutes to four in the morning we found the sidewalks wearing a coat of frost, and the hackmen (some of them at least) coats of fur. Well, we almost wished we had our fur coat out of our trunk, too. However, it is warm enough again for the festive mosquito to be out once more with his song and bill.

We put our gospel tent up and commenced services here last night, and while our audience was numbered at about thirty, our singers must have numbered legion. And they insisted on presenting their bills to the audience—yes, and to the preachers also. Some collected while some lost their bills. There was comfort in the latter thought. Before commencing our services here we "billed the town" so that it is known that we are here as well as the mosquitoes. However, we expect cooler evenings with more breeze the most of the time here. If this does not obtain we fear our crowds will not be large. However, we are trying to do our part. Our health is good and we feel hopeful in the work.

As ever laboring and praying for the advancement of the cause we are,
Your coworker,

A. M. CHASE.

FARWELL, Michigan, July 14, 1905.

Editors Herald: Not long ago I wrote you, telling you that I was what the Saints call a "dry-lander"; but thanks be to the Father for the blessed privilege granted, I am not a "dry-lander" now. Realizing as I do, that we are now living in the last days, I felt that delay was dangerous; therefore I obeyed as soon as possible. For several years past I have been a thorough student of God's word. It was not a mere "reading of the word," but to me it is a deep study. I have a thirst for a full knowledge of the word, and a full understanding of the meaning of every word and sentence contained in that word. I fully believe that through my great desire to understand that word, and my sincere prayers for knowledge, and constantly asking God to come nearer, ever nearer to me, that he has come very near. I have known for years that to merely read and understand God's word, would not "save" any one. We must be "doers" of the word. We must live up to the commandments given us by our Savior. We must love our neighbor as ourselves; and love worketh no ill to its object. There is a work for each and every one of us to do, no matter what may be our station in life. We must strive in word and deed to be unto others just what we would wish them to be to us. We must strive to do God's will. And "blessed is that servant, whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing." (Luke 12:48.) I feel so glad to think that I belong to a church that I know is built on the rock. And whatever work God wishes me to do, I hope will be shown me in his own good time, and that I shall be ready to do his will.

Mrs. R. C. H.

WATERLOO, Iowa, July 19, 1905.

Editors Herald: We are still striving to get the angel message before the people here in the Eastern Iowa District.

At Oran Center, in Fayette County, during the past two weeks, seven precious souls have entered the kingdom, and a pretty good feeling is prevailing throughout the branch, though of course there are some who are not in such good condition. Elder Turner was there two or three weeks, preaching most of the time, and his efforts, together with faithful local and Sunday-school work, resulted in the baptism of seven precious souls and they have begun the race heavenward.

At Chattanooga schoolhouse, three miles northwest of Nashville, is located the district tent, in charge of Elders Wildermuth and Farr. I visited them a week ago, and found that they had the best of interest, and that, too, among the outsiders.

I had a letter from Bro. Farr yesterday, and he stated that they baptized three on Sunday last, the 16th. He also states that they organized a Sunday-school, and more baptisms are to follow. This is doing quite well for a sojourn of three weeks among strangers. The outlook for the district is very bright, and we expect to have an interesting time at our next conference and Sunday-school convention to be held the first of September.

As Saints of the Most High God, let us strive with all our might to live as becometh citizens of his kingdom, for the hastening time is not far distant.

Your brother in Christ,

ROBERT SMITH.

FIELDBROOK, California, July 14, 1905.

Editors Herald: We have all felt very much encouraged of late. Elder Charles E. Crumley has been with us the past few weeks and we have been strengthened a great deal by his coming. It is indeed a blessing to isolated Saints to be visited by God's servants. And then it is with sadness that we see them go again. But we are looking forward to the blessed and glorious time, when Christ shall come to claim his own, when there will be no more parting, but all will be peace and happiness.

While Elder Charles E. Crumley was with us he and Elder S. B. Robinson, through the divine Spirit, reorganized our branch, having headquarters at Fieldbrook. God has set officers in the branch such as were needed to more fully organize. We also have a nice little Sunday-school which we enjoy very much. We have thought of starting a Religio society but have not done so yet.

Bro. Crumley presented some splendid sermons while here. Bro. Robinson presented some precious truths also. We have had some good meetings, and the Spirit was among us, and we all felt cheerful and encouraged.

Last Sunday Elder Crumley led one sister into the waters of baptism, and at the sacrament-meeting Elders Crumley and Robinson confirmed the sister, and ordained the officers of the branch.

We expect Bro. Terry with us some time this fall; we are anxiously waiting for that time to come.

May the Lord help us in all our efforts, that we may so live as to be worthy to be called the children of God, and that we may be among the righteous and pure in heart; and may God's spirit dwell within his children everywhere, is my prayer.

Your sister in the faith,

MRS. CORAL J. SMITH.

THURSTON, Nebraska.

Editors Herald: Inclosed find a letter written to me from Doctor John Gilbert of Fall River, Massachusetts. He has taken exception to my statement in regard to the Indian that I stated was turning white, and has advised me to send it to you in order that you may make such a change as you may deem right. I wish it understood that I did not make a statement that I was presenting positive evidence in support of the Book of Mormon; but I presented just what he told me, and that was just as I stated. Bro. Gilbert states that the more intelligent will read it with regret that it was ever printed. I do not see how any person of the more intelligent class can regret reading such a letter, as there was the statement plainly made, that it was submitted to all to judge of its value.

Your brother,

S. F. BUTTS.

FALL RIVER, Massachusetts, July 15, 1905.

S. F. BUTTS, Thurston, Nebraska:

In the SAINTS' HERALD received to-day I find a letter from you in which you tell of a "full-blood Indian," who you think is turning white. You say, "He has white spots all over his body," etc. Now this statement would be innocent enough if made alone but is absurd when its connection is considered: "Looking for evidence in support of the Book of Mormon."

The condition of the Indian's skin, i. e., white patches, is a skin-disease, not a blessing. The name of the disease is leucoderma. One variety from which the Indian is suffering consists of "an irregular distribution of the pigment matter of the skin," "whereby smooth, rounded, white patches of varying size and extent are produced." This disease affects people of all ages, sex, or races. White people are affected by it, some people erroneously calling it white leprosy. I have seen it also in negroes where apparently they are covered by white patches, just the same as the Indian you speak of. Some varieties of this disease affect the hair and the skin complete; when both skin and hair become entirely white, a condition called "albino" exists. Sometimes such people are put on exhibition as curiosities.

I hope you will not be offended at what is written. Your letter will be read by people in many parts of the world. Many humble though honest ones may read it and quote it as evidence in proof of the Book of Mormon. Others of the more intelligent will regret such a statement was ever published.

I think it would be well, after you have read this, to forward it to the editors of the SAINTS' HERALD; and if they think proper they could make a little correction, and thus set matters right before the HERALD readers, as I do not think you believe the skin disease the Indian has is any proof whatever or evidence in support of Book of Mormon.

With kind regards, I remain,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

JOHN GILBERT, M. D.

BALDKNOB, Arkansas, July 24, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have just learned for the first time of the notice of my sickness in HERALD of July 19. For the sake of my friends, I am very sorry that it was given such prominence. True, I was quite sick for a few days, so I hasten to let my friends know that I am all right except a little weak, and have the harness on again. To God be the praise. While Bro. Baldwin was caring for me like a true brother, he was also preaching every night to small but interested audiences. We closed there last night, and begin near this place to-night. We have six names for baptism next Sunday, and expect two or three more.

Prejudice and indifference are rife here, but the work is slowly but surely gaining. There is a noble little band of Saints at this place, and while they have no shepherd, they keep up the Sunday-school and weekly prayer-meeting.

As ever in the faith,

W. P. PICKERING.

MONMOUTH, Iowa, July 17, 1905.

Editors Herald: Bro. J. B. Wildermuth and the writer started work in the Eastern Iowa District tent at Canton, June 5. Although we had good attendance and interest no one obeyed at that place. On June 22 we moved to Chattanooga where we are at present. We have had large crowds and fine interest here, in spite of haying, harvest, etc. Are getting the whole country stirred up; yesterday there were at least five hundred people in attendance, and at half past one in the afternoon the writer had the pleasure of leading three precious souls through the door of baptism into the kingdom of God. More are to follow; we have the names of several. We have made many friends, and it is counted a strange thing by some of the professing Christians here to see men whom they could not reach, and whom they counted infidels, passing the hat in the crowd to help the "boys" as they call us; and standing up for the latter-day work. We have many calls for the tent from outsiders who are representative men of their respective communities. We organized a Sunday-school yesterday and hope to get the work firmly planted here before we leave. The people say there is no one in this part of the country who would dare try to meet the "boys" on a biblical proposition. The Lord has truly been with us, and may his Spirit be with and aid all his people.

Your brother,

FRED B. FARR.

KING'S MILL, Arkansas, July 18, 1905.

Editors Herald: As I have just returned from a visit to Franklin, Arkansas, where I met a couple of Utah elders, I thought possibly a bit of my experience would be interesting to others. While stopping with my brother-in-law, on Saturday evening last, two Utah elders came and remained with us over night. They argued in favor of polygamy and of course I was on the other side. They said the principle of polygamy was a righteous one, but that its practice in Utah was dying out as it was contrary to the law of the land. The following day I preached in Franklin to some forty persons, including the two elders. In my remarks I spoke of the difference of the two churches, reading from their own Doctrine and Covenants. My remarks were not abusive but plain and to the point. I gave them an opportunity to reply. A very few remarks were made by one of them. All present except the elders appeared to be pleased with the discourse. They claim twelve missionaries, and a membership of some three hundred persons in this State. Some of our elders may think it an easy thing to meet the Utah elders. True, it may be to meet them, but to change their minds from their own faith to that of the Reorganization is not so easy. If you do not believe it try it once. There is but one way to do it and that is by sound argument presented in the Spirit of Christ. Hoping, waiting, and working for the redemption of Zion, I am,

Yours truly,

C. J. SPURLOCK.

LAMONT, Iowa, July 8, 1905.

Editors Herald: I went to Strawberry Point July 8; stayed over night with the Saints there; on Sunday at eleven o'clock we had sacrament-meeting, then I talked to the Saints on the gospel.

July 23 I go to meet with the Saints near Arlington, to speak to the Saints on the gospel, to encourage them to stand firm in this latter-day work. Two weeks from that I will go to Strawberry Point to hold meeting again. We hold our meetings in private houses at the two places named. Our attendance is small, but I feel repaid just the same by God's Holy Spirit.

The Saints of the Eastern Iowa District will meet September 2 and 3 at Green Valley. Hope they will have a good time.

In the one faith,

W. B. WESTON.

NEVADA, Iowa, July 20, 1905.

Editors Herald: Bro. Reiste and the writer set up the gospel-tent here on June 29; began meetings the same night. The attendance was fair from the start and several interested. On the 16th we were all made to rejoice when the writer led Mrs. H. H. Davis Matingly and Mrs. Edward Shalley into the waters of baptism, and my man "Friday" baptized Mrs. B. Wood (a twin sister of Mrs. Shalley). Others are very near the kingdom, and we hope by next Sunday we can trouble the waters again.

But while in the midst of rejoicing because of those noble members we took into the fold, on the 17th a terrible blow and shock came upon us, and on the whole town. Sr. Charles Wilson sent her nine-year-old boy up town to get some things. His little sister, nearly eight years old, went with him. Both were bright, intelligent, lively children, and always together.

They took their little express wagon with them to bring back the things. When they got to the depot-crossing, a long freight was pulling by. They waited till the way-car had passed, then the boy pulling at the tongue, and little Mae with her hands on the rear end of the wagon, started on, and just as the little girl and wagon got between the rails of the second track the fast mail, going west, struck the little wagon and girl with such force that her head was hurled fifty feet south of the track, and the body scattered in pieces on the north side. It is too horrible to describe. The boy had just got over the rail and was missed by a hand's length. This is the second one killed at that place in a short time. Three men were almost caught when the girl was. The whole town is in an uproar, for Sr. Wilson and all the relatives are highly esteemed by the people, and an offer was made to raise five hundred dollars if called for to prosecute the railroad company for damages, and compel them to place a watchman at that dangerous crossing. The funeral was held in the gospel-tent by the writer. A very large concourse of sympathizing friends were present; some came seven miles. There was hardly a dry eye to be seen in the vast congregation. May our Father bless and comfort the grief-stricken.

We will close the meetings here about the first of August.

Yours in the front,

J. S. ROTH.

DENVER, Colorado, July 24, 1905.

Dear Herald: It is not often that your pages are illumined with anything from this part of the Lord's vineyard: this is not because we have denied the faith, or gone to sleep. Sometimes we are considerably discouraged because of the lack of time and talent to carry on the work in this city as we think it ought to be done, but the work is not of man, and when we have done all that time and physical strength will permit, we find that we have to be content, though it is anything but satisfactory. As the years roll on we find that we can not spend from sixteen to twenty hours of the twenty-four in providing the bread that perisheth, and assisting in things pertaining to the church. Nature calls for more rest to the body as we grow older, and younger men must take up a part of the work at least, or it must be left undone. We are glad there are younger men coming to the front to assist in bearing the burden of the work. There is plenty of room for them, especially in a city of this size.

Seven have been added to the branch this year by baptism, and two deaths have occurred. Elders J. F. and J. D. Curtis are preaching on the streets every night except Sunday night, and we believe with a prospect of good being done. Many attend the services regularly and stand for the hour, seemingly very much interested. At the close of the services many questions are asked, and such expressions as, "That is good enough for me," and, "I have heard more gospel in these few nights than in fifteen years in attending the Denver churches," are heard.

We met a man at one of the street-meetings by the name of Shultz, who claims to be a brother-in-law to Frederick Smith, brother of the present president of the church. He seems to be fairly well posted in Smith history.

E. F. S.

SAVANNA, Illinois, July 26, 1905.

Editors Herald: On July 8 Bro. Berve and myself came to Carbon Cliff to hold a series of meetings. By previous arrangements Brn. Willis, Adams, and Johnston put up the district tent at the Cliff so all we had to do was to enter in and occupy, and those brethren did nobly in trying to make the meetings a success. At different times the Saints came out from Davenport and Moline and gave much valuable help by their presence and singing.

We held eighteen meetings in all with a fair interest. The last Sunday night our tent was full, and Bro. Berve gave us a rousing sermon on the final inheritance of the Saints. Two were baptized.

Bro. Berve and I came to this place yesterday, and we are visiting every Saint personally, trying to encourage and strengthen them. They have no organization here, but we think they will have soon.

I can say that my labors this year so far have been pleasant, the good Lord blessing and aiding with his Spirit, for which I praise his great name. My love for God and his great latter-day movement continues to grow.

I find a noble band of Saints in the Kewanee District ready to help in any way they can to push the work.

In gospel bonds,

GEORGE W. THORBURN.

CANTON, Ohio, July 16, 1905.

Editors Herald: Bro. V. M. Goodrich was up to Canton a few days and preached once in my house, and then started out to preach from house to house, and soon had two ready for baptism. At the confirmation at the house the Spirit was poured out upon us all to the comforting and edifying of each. Bro. Goodrich administered to four while at Canton, three were instantly healed, and the fourth I have not seen since. I was one that was healed from deafness. While Bro. Goodrich had his hands on my head I heard a click in my ear, as something moving in my ear. I then had my hearing immediately, to the comforting of myself, and I am preaching in my house every two weeks, and have two names for baptism.

My prayer is that we may all stand firm at our post and put our shoulders to the gospel wheel and keep it rolling Zionward till God calls us all home to Zion to dwell with Christ, to be never separated again. Are we all preparing ourselves to meet Christ when he comes? If not, why not? In a dream a few nights ago, I saw in a vision in large red letters: "Prepare, for the end of time is nigh at hand." Brothers and sisters, let us all get ready that we may meet Christ with joy and not with grief.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

ISAAC TRUE.

SCRANTON, Pennsylvania, July 14, 1905.

Editors Herald: "A young girl who had recently graduated in the Welsh university told a number of friends who had called upon her that she had now completed her education. 'No, you haven't, my dear,' her mother chimed in. 'I am going to teach you the principles of roastology, boiology, stichology, darnology, patchology, dustology, scrubology, and washology.' What a pity we have not more Welsh mothers who hold such sensible views as to a girl's education."

The above is from a Cardiff, South Wales, weekly newspaper, and the lesson taught by the words of the good mother should be impressed upon the minds of every father and mother. While it is our duty as parents to send our sons and daughters to the public schools and colleges if we can, to let them go into the world with no knowledge of domestic duties is a sad mistake. If I had the wealth of a Rockefeller or a Rothschild, I certainly would recommend that my daughters be educated in all that goes to make a good housekeeper. If they should be so fortunate after leaving my home that they could hire the housework done in their own, they would understand how it ought to be done and could not be imposed upon. And if in time circumstances became such that they could not afford to employ, the knowledge they had received would be a valuable blessing.

Well do I remember a young lady who had spent her young days in school, and became highly educated in music. Her parents were engaged in business and were well-to-do. She was their only daughter and they took special pride in giving her an education. Soon after she left school she married a young man and accompanied him to the home he had prepared several hundred miles from her parents' home. She was a bright young lady, and her musical ability was very entertaining to her new and numerous friends, and the young man was highly complimented in the choice of a wife, and was considered very fortunate. They went to housekeeping and it was then she discovered that one very important study had been overlooked; and she wondered why her father and mother, who were such practical business people, had done by her as they had. "Why," she said, "I can not understand how they overlooked such an essential part of my education." What a pity that so many mothers overlook the lessons their daughters should learn in order that they may become competent housekeepers. Let me impress upon the minds of all parents that it is just as much your duty to teach your sons and daughters those respective duties as it is to say their prayers, or go to school.

Mothers, teach your daughters to wash, iron, cook, bake good home bread (so much ahead of bakers' bread to the man who toils), to put up fruit and a hundred other things that your daughters do not learn in the institutions of learning.

Brother Editor, this may be a departure from what your pages usually present to the readers, but I am like the good mother referred to in the clipping. There are many who have completed their education in the schools who need some lessons in dustology, scrubology, washology, and cookology.

Yours for all that is good,

WM. LEWIS.

WILBURTON, Indian Territory, July 19, 1905.

Editors Herald: We are still trying to hold aloft the banner of King Immanuel, and cry repentance to this generation. I threw down my coal-miner's tools in the month of March, and opened up the work in South McAlester, amongst the colored people. I had good meetings west of town at a place called Thurston, also labored some in Fayetteville, Arkansas. I asked the officers of the district if they would allow me the district tent to travel with, my wife agreeing to accompany me and help in singing. We first put it up in Wilburton for ten days. Then we moved to Sulphur Springs, about twelve miles east of Wilburton. It was in the midst of a Baptist settlement. We commenced with small crowds, but every night we had larger crowds until the tent was full. We held forth twelve nights. Toward the close of our meetings I could see the Devil begin to rage. The Baptist preacher told the boys to rotten-egg me. At the last, on Sunday evening, (the tent was pretty full of people,) a mob of men came up and commenced to throw eggs. They threw five or six eggs at me, but by good luck they all missed me. After the eggs-came a volley of rocks, one just missing my boy's head. Then they began to fire off their pistols, five or six shots all told. When they got through I turned to them and said, "Thank you, gentlemen, that is just what they said to Jesus Christ nineteen hundred years ago." Then they fled to the woods. I told the people that was just what Jesus said they would do. I continued by preaching after the mob left for an hour and fifteen minutes. At the close of my meetings several came up to me and said, "Bro. Adamson, I can see we have in this Baptist Church been taught lies all our days. We are no more Baptists, but we are with you."

Now what helped to stir up the people was this: The editor of our town paper has given me a column of his paper every week to write up the history of the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and the Devil got mad and inspired that mob to kill me.

Well, thank God, we are all well. I must not forget to say that Bro. Andrew Shores and family stood by me faithfully during the egging. May the Lord reward him for his faithfulness.

I am glad to inform the Saints that I am at this time stronger in body than at any time since I got hurt in the coal-mines, six years ago, and my faith grows stronger day by day in this great latter-day work. I have more calls for preaching than I can fill.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion,

PETER ANDERSON, SR.

ESMOND, North Dakota, July 25, 1905.

Editors Herald: I commenced missionary work on the 14th of May, and labored around Westhope in a new locality, having fair success. On the 24th of June I attended the North Dakota reunion, which was held at the Richburg Branch. Quite a number were present considering the rainy weather and bad roads. The Lord was with his children, and we all truly enjoyed ourselves. The preaching was instructive as well as spiritual.

There were present of the missionary force, Heman C. Smith and Eli Hayer, besides the home missionaries. Alvin Knisley, our able brother from over the border, preached twice for us. The gifts of prophecy and tongues were manifested, to the joy of the Saints. Ten were baptized at the close of the reunion. This was on July 2.

I visited my family on the 4th and baptized my two daughters. July 10, in company with Bro. Hayer, we went to Leeds and held several meetings in a schoolhouse in the country, and twice in town in the opera-house. We have some fine Saints living there.

July 18 we commenced meetings in Bro. Perchie's neighborhood, eight miles northwest of Esmond. We have had good, interesting crowds evenings; and Sunday afternoon nearly one hundred were present to hear Bro. Hayer preach on the resurrection of the dead, and a good spirit prevailed among the people. All seemed pleased with the sermon. We intend to stay as long as the work demands it. We are working our way down into South Dakota.

I am rejoicing in this latter-day work, and love to tell the people of the good of God in these last days in restoring the ancient gospel; and I want to live pure in this life, and do the Master's will as long as I am permitted to remain in the flesh, so that I may see his smiling face and hear that glad plaudit, "Well done." Praying and hoping God may bless all his people, and that his kingdom may soon come,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

GEO. DAY.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, July 28, 1905.

Editors Herald: I drop you a line to let your readers know that I am still living and in the faith. I have been kept at home ever since General Conference on account of the serious affliction of my wife. Her condition is such that the doctors give us no encouragement. If she is restored the Lord must do it, and as yet he has not seen proper to heal her. We can not tell what the result will be. We are doing all we can for her, and trusting the Lord for the final result, believing him too wise to err, and too good to be unkind. All must work for the best.

While I realize that my work in the church does not amount to much, yet I would like to be out doing what I could; I do a little local work, and try to aid in every way I can, when I can leave my wife; but her condition is such that I can hardly leave her at all. I trust the good Lord will soon relieve us from this condition.

I agree with the idea expressed in Bro. Pitt's letter of this week with regard to the John Hay article, and the elder that says no man can tell what we must do to be saved. I think the space occupied by those articles would have been as profitable left blank. I am glad I can believe all are trying to do good. I think the majority of the elders have the Spirit when they preach; but until we are fully inspired, or reach a much higher plane in knowledge, we will differ in our ideas. Let us patiently work on together as instructed in Doctrine and Covenants 122:16.

I love the work of the Lord, and all his people. I am glad I can see some of my own defects, and hope to make some improvements in my own life and work. I thank God for blessing my brethren in their work, as well as myself. All we have we have received, and all the good we can do, God has enabled us to do it; so let us be patient, diligent, and faithful in our labor of love for the salvation of the world, as well as our own salvation. In the third chapter of Jacob, twenty-seventh paragraph (small edition of the Book of Mormon) I find the following: "And it came to pass that the servants did go, and labor with their might; and the Lord of the vineyard labored also with them; and they did obey the commandments of the Lord of the vineyard, in all things. And there began to be the natural fruit again in the vineyard; and the natural branches began to grow and thrive exceedingly; and the wild branches began to be plucked off, and to be cast away; . . . And thus they labored, with all diligence." This gives me courage and hope. While I can believe myself honest, I can believe others to be honest and faithful, and I am satisfied God will raise up a lot of faithful workers that will labor with the Lord, and finally the work will be accomplished. We hope to be released from this condition soon, and if so, we will be out again doing our part as best we can.

Please do not forget the wants of the work, and send in your tithes, offerings, and consecrations to the Bishop and his helpers, that the poor, and elders' families, may be provided for, and Zion built up.

Hoping to be able to work on several years yet, and abide in the faith, I am still trying to be able from my heart to say, Lord, thy will be done in all things.

G. H. HILLIARD.

MENA, Arkansas, July 27, 1905.

Saints' Herald: After holding meetings in Hartshorne, Wilburton, and Fanshaw, I started for Arkansas the fore part of June. I held a series of meetings about three miles from Mena, in the country, and baptized two. Leaving others investigating the gospel I went on to Grannis, Arkansas. I had been directed to hold a debate at Sawyer, Indian Territory, and while preparing for the same I tried to interest the Saints and friends of Grannis by preaching to them from my dispensation chart. Several seemed interested, and the following Sunday I led one more into the waters of baptism, leaving two or three more thinking seriously, but not able to make up their minds to obey the gospel just then.

July 4 I boarded the train for Sawyer, to attend the debate, which commenced July 6 between Reverend J. E. Potts, of the Missionary Baptist Church, and the writer. I entered the debate feeling the responsibility then resting upon me, but with a perfect confidence in the God of heaven to lead his weak, humble servant. I had seen the outcome of the debate before, in a dream which strengthened me much.

Before the debate commenced I realized my mind was being quickened; for the Spirit revealed to me points that before had not been plain to me, and points I had never seen before in the gospel.

The debate was on church propositions, and covered eight sessions of two hours each. The Lord was with me from first to last. All ran smoothly with two exceptions when my opponent was called to a point of order. During the debate I had a dream which showed to me my opponent's foundation was not solid, and I saw myself ripping it up and exposing it to my opponent. Saints and outsiders said that was fulfilled next to the last night of the debate.

I am truly thankful to my heavenly Father for the victory won. As a result several are investigating the work, and are wanting me to come back there to hold a series of meetings.

While I gained the victory over Satan in the gospel work, he has been trying to overthrow me with sickness, and prevent me from preaching the gospel. I have been quite sick with billious attack, la grippe, and a gathering in both of my ears, causing me to lose about twenty pounds of flesh; but still I am up and was called here to bury some more precious souls in the waters of baptism. I have been here for a week enjoying the mountain air and trying to gain a little strength. I expect to preach twice next Sunday and lead four into the water, and then go home Monday for a while until I get a little stronger. This field is white for the harvest, and I like the gospel work here better than in the North, but there are other things here very hard for me to become accustomed to. However, I try to apply myself to the existing conditions and do the best I can, that I may win precious souls for Christ.

This gospel work becomes more endeared to me day by day; and seeing the hand of God moving and directing in the work gives to me great strength.

CHAS. E. ERWIN.

WILBURTON, Indian Territory, July 29, 1905.

Editors Herald: The long-expected debate with J. A. Currie, once a representative of the restored gospel, but now of the Millennial Dawn movement, has passed into history. Arrangements were made by Bro. Heman C. Smith last October that the debate should begin July 10. All arrangements of rules, etc., were left in my hands. Accordingly, on my arrival in San Antonio this spring, I proceeded to make final arrangements, and we signed up for eight sessions on each proposition, there being two, each affirming that his respective church was in harmony with the Bible in all its teachings.

The debate began at ten o'clock in the forenoon, July 10, at Bandera, Texas, our proposition being first, and the proposed plan was carried out, except that Elder Currie cut his part of the debate short one session, making eight sessions on our affirmative and seven on his.

The discussion was lightly attended except by the members of the contending churches, and even they did not make much sacrifice to attend. I shall not give the argument in detail as it would be too voluminous. I never felt better in the defense of the work in my life, and have never held a discussion with the outcome of which I was better pleased; and I think I am safe in saying that much good was done, not only in checking the progress of error, but in making clear the truth. One brother in writing from there since says "all the leading men say that Currie did not make a point," and, so far as I can learn, that was the general verdict. One most excellent woman was baptized, at the close of our proposition, by Bro. Bullard, who acted as my moderator; and I baptized two later, one of whom, a well-educated young man, a school-teacher by profession, attended every session of the discussion.

We had numerous calls for preaching in the surrounding country at the close, and gave out hundreds of tracts. The discussion was the cleanest one I ever held, as I did not have to meet the attacks on the character of Joseph Smith. That is the usual stock in trade of the opposer of the faith. There were a few things, however, that I did not expect from one who had been once a member of the church, and one who ought to have known what our doctrines and teachings were. Elder Currie had written to Utah for evidence along some lines, and introduced an interpretation of Doctrine and Covenants 107:10-12, made by the Utah people, and wanted to defend it or admit that we did not have a fullness of the priesthood. His interpretation of the command to build temples in paragraph 12 was that it was a perpetual command, etc. He left the proposition entirely in much of his effort, and tried to show that we were out of harmony with the Doctrine and Covenants instead of the Bible. Also one of his strong efforts was to make it appear that the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants contradicted each other on the punishments of the wicked. In his first speech he admitted that, so far as teaching the first principles of the gospel were concerned, we were teaching them as Christ and the apostles taught them; that we were organized like the ancient pattern, and that the gifts and blessings of the ancient church accompanied our preaching; but it was the power of the Devil, and we would be met with the statement, "Depart from me, ye that work iniquity. I never knew you." I asked him to show one iniquitous doctrine or practice in the church, but he could not do it.

I shall not attempt to give my argument to show that his church was not in harmony with the Bible in its teaching, as I contemplate writing an examination of the Millennial Dawn theory and movement soon.

C. T. Russell, of Allegheny, Pennsylvania, is the originator and promoter of the movement; and I took his books called the Millennial Dawn Series, and showed that they were built on false premises, and taught absurd and false doctrine, until it was generally conceded that I had removed its foundation completely.

The debate was held in the courthouse; and most of the county officers heard it; and one of the officers came to me at the close of the last session and said that Russellism was completely overthrown. I am, as I said in the beginning, quite satisfied with the outcome; and the success and benefits I shall ascribe to God who graciously helped in my time of need, and who can make even the wrath of his enemies to praise him.

H. O. SMITH.

British Gospel Plan.

Editors Herald: We wish the Saints in America to help us in our effort to secure a "gospel van," the object of which will be to enable the missionaries to travel from place to place in preaching the gospel. We have to pay heavy railway fares here in England for traveling; we do not have the half-fare rates here, as you have them in the States. With the gospel van we could visit both city and village all along the line. The van we propose to build would furnish lodgings, etc., for the missionaries. We also propose to sell tracts and church works to Saints and friends wherever we may travel.

Bro. Simon Holmes of Clay Cross has opened the subscription with one pound. He has also undertaken the building of the van. Bro. Holmes is in a position to accomplish the work in the cheapest way possible, and we are assured that the van will be good, strong, and handsome when complete. We hope to secure the van for about twenty pounds, or one hundred dollars. We firmly believe that a gospel van itself would be well worth the money expended, for the advertisement alone. We should also be able to reach places that under present conditions it is not possible to reach. Armed with a bell we could announce our meeting as we went along from village to village. We believe that in a very short time we should want another gospel van, when we began to realize the good accomplished by the first. We therefore appeal to the Saints in America, who can help us, to come to our aid, and pay all donations through Bishop E. L. Kelley on behalf of said fund.

Now, Saints, kindly help us with your dollars, dimes, and cents; and pray God to bless the undertaking and give it great success.

Your brother for truth and the gospel van,

W. H. GREENWOOD.

Independence Items.

Less than the usual number attended last Wednesday night's prayer-meeting; but the weather had been extremely warm all day, the mercury reaching ninety-two degrees.

On last Sunday Brn. Hilliard and I. N. White discoursed to the Saints, the morning's effort being on the necessity of knowing the law and keeping it; to look after the interests of the church being the first thing to do.

Bro. Kemp, as he spoke to the Saints in prophecy at the prayer-service, reminded us of the scriptural passage, "Out of heaven he made them to hear his voice that he might instruct thee," because of the words of comfort and instruction he gave to the ministry and those having charge of the work here.

At an earlier date, on the morning of the 9th, Elder Joseph Luff's presence in the pulpit was greeted with pleasure after his long season of affliction and distress, and with his usual forcefulness he presented the claim of the gospel concerning the unchangeability of God, still being able as in the past to say that, to him, no honor was so great as that of presenting to the people Jesus the Christ.

In March seven were baptized, and during the last quarter ending July 1, forty-one were received by letter, forty-one were baptized, four had died, and two letters of removal had been granted. Since July 1 there have been sixteen more received into membership and one baptized.

The Daughters of Zion are pressing on in the good work. On last Wednesday as an item of business the financial committee recommended the soliciting by the sisters of "a regular monthly collection for the purpose of increasing the fund started by the general organization towards the building of a children's home, when the church shall decide upon starting such an institution." Also "that the society at any time lead out in other ways as may be deemed advisable and decided upon by the society, and that we also receive aid from other societies as may be offered." The Willing Helpers continue steadily on, as their cares permit, with their fine quilting and comfort-tacking, apron- and shirt-making, and are doing this in such a manner as to merit the patronage of the most careful and precise ones anywhere.

This evening the sad news came that Father George Hawley, who lived near Holden, passed away on Thursday, and the funeral Friday was in charge of Brn. Hulmes and May. He was faithful to the end and bore a true and humble testimony to the purity of character of Joseph and Emma Smith. He was in his eighty-first year.

Two of our number have lately passed away, Sr. Harriet Crum, wife of Bro. Frank Crum, who died of a distressing illness on the 30th ult., and Sr. Belle Blatt wife of Bro. W. H. Blatt who expired on the 6th inst., having lingered long with a serious affliction. These sisters have been for many years burdened with the care of large families, and they will be greatly missed by many loved ones who are left to mourn their sad demise.

Father Clemenson has been for years tenderly cared for by his daughter, Sr. Blatt, and in his enfeebled condition and advanced age, being about ninety, has lost, in her death, a friend indeed.

There are many Saints here who have passed long since the three score years of their probation.

May the words of counsel spoken recently concerning the aged ones by our stake president be heeded by us all, for we sometimes fail to show the love and respect that are their due. Speaking of the difference in people some one has said, "On account of our intense individualism the heroisms of the past fail to move us"; but of the little-brown men they say, "They deem it the greatest glory to venerate the heritage of the fathers."

Bro. Hulmes admonished us all to be thoughtful, tender, and considerate toward the aged ones of whom it is written

"A little more halting of the gait,
And a dullness of the ear,
A growing weariness of the frame,
With each swift-passing year:
A fading of hopes and ambitions too,
A faltering in life's quest,
And a little nearer every day
To a sweet and peaceful rest."

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Extracts from Letters.

T. W. Chatburn, Spokane, Washington: "Joseph and wife with the 'small portion' of his family have come and gone. To say the Saints enjoyed the visit with President Smith and wife is putting it mildly. On Sunday, the 16th, the Saints lunched together at the church so a general visit could be had with the visitors. Joseph gave us four sermons which were well received indeed. Many of the city folk were out to see and hear, evincing the fact that our church is not too large. The traveling parties are in good health and enjoying their trip nicely. May our Father protect and guard, and return them safely to Zion's land."

L. L. Gott, Central City, Illinois: "We have the promise of Bro. D. S. Gosstree and Bro. John Henson coming to this place to hold meetings a week, and we ask the prayers of all that much good may be done. I am sorry to find that the Saints are so cold. We all truly need our spiritual forces revived. I am afraid some of the Saints will be like the five foolish virgins; out of twelve families of Saints here only two are taking the church papers. I have distributed the most of my literature, and the people to whom I gave the papers liked them very much, and are willing to come out to hear our elders preach."

W. R. Standefer, Marlin, Texas: "Bro. John Harp preached some for us not long since. He has interested the people, and they say they are going to attend our meeting and hear some more about it. I think we will have a good attendance at our protracted meeting, beginning August 5. Bro. Renfro, come and help us."

Prayer Union.

Dear Sisters: Sr. J. F. Morris, now at The Dalles, Oregon, with her husband, who is undergoing a very severe operation for tuberculosis, requested me to write the Prayer Union in behalf of her husband, who at present is very low. She also asks for the prayers of the Saints in prayer-meeting.

Lincoln's Home at Portland.

Any one who is interested in the life of Abraham Lincoln may find much to engage his attention in the Illinois building at the Lewis and Clark Exposition. The building itself is an exact reproduction of the Lincoln homestead at Springfield, Illinois, the only home ever owned by the martyred President. Every room is reproduced in its exact size, and in the front parlor the visitor is told just where Lincoln stood on that day in the fall of 1860 when he was notified that he had been elected president of the United States.

In the rear parlor, which connects with the front one by a wide archway, is a collection of pictures and documents of vivid interest to those who like to study things of historic value. The life of Lincoln is represented by pictures and letters, the latter either in the original or in facsimile, from his birth to his assassination. The rude little log cabin in Kentucky, where he was born, is shown, with portraits of his parents; pictures of Lincoln at various times in his career, most of them showing him without beard, for it was not until after he became resident that Lincoln let his whiskers grow; letters written by Lincoln in his youth, his earlier public life, and during his presidency; and also pictures of his intimate friends and associates, and of other noted men whose public lives were interwoven with his own.

Entertaining Newspaper Features.

Probably no other newspaper in the United States can show so brilliant an array of special features as is found in the columns of the Chicago Record-Herald.

The daily and Sunday news and special features of the Chicago

Record-Herald include the letters of William E. Curtis and Walter Wellman. The Record-Herald's special New York dispatches, its unparalleled foreign news service, embracing its own special cables with those of the New York Herald, the New York World and the Associated Press; its pages devoted to the markets and financial and commercial intelligence—exhaustive to the most satisfactory degree—its popular sporting page, its extended editorial department, Kiser's numerous "Alternating currents," "Stories of the day," the departments of railroad and insurance news, music and drama, society and clubs, the column of book reviews, the continued story, the "Woman beautiful" department, the daily fashion article, "Meals for a day," news of the great lakes, etc.—all uniting to furnish to the people of Chicago and the Northwest a newspaper which commends itself to discriminating readers as only a newspaper can which combines the world-wide facilities of the greatest metropolitan newspapers of modern times.

The history of the studies upon which the mutation theory is chiefly based forms one of the most inspiring chapters in the history of natural science. Twenty years ago Professor DeVries began bringing under observation successive generations of several species of plants in order to determine whether all of the thousands of individuals included in the progeny of the parent-plant would inherit all of the parental characters. Over a hundred species were examined in this way. Finally one was found which showed seed-spots among its progeny—individuals which in some types lacked some of the parental qualities and hence constituted retrogressive forms, and others which bore characteristics not manifested by the parent. In this momentous discovery he had happened upon one species which was in its mutative period, which might occur in the history of a species once in a century, or once in a thousand centuries, and which might extend over one season or over a hundred. With this clue he set to work to ascertain the principles governing such forms of inheritance. Greenhouses and experimental grounds were prepared and cultures tended for two decades with the most painstaking and microscopic care. Every precaution was taken to exclude the interference of the wind, insects, birds, and other agencies in pollination and fertilization. Exact pedigree-cultures were carried through two decades with a degree of care not hitherto used in any culture of plants. It is impossible to set forth the enormous amount of detail to be kept in mind and organized in such experimental observations. It may only be cited as an illustration that in some seasons the packet of seeds, each representing a separate experiment, and requiring separate notes, reached into the thousands. Furthermore, the striking character of the results to be tested made it necessary that the experimenter himself should perform the commonest operations of gardening, in the way of weeding, watering, etc., in order that a line of descent might be traced through an unbroken series of years without a trace of doubt as to the purity of its lineage. The splendid results derived from a collation of these observations well justify the work spent in obtaining them, constituting as they do the most important contribution to organic evolution since the appearance of Darwin's Origin of Species.—"Hugo DeVries," by D. T. MacDougal in August Open Court.

The greatest cattle show ever seen in America will be a feature of the Iowa State Fair which will be held during the last week of August in Des Moines.

Barely had the announcement been made that a new class had been included in the cattle department than breeders interested in that class at once notified the Fair management that they would have the chief herds of that breed at the Fair in competition with the herds of the other breeds. It indicates the intense interest that is felt in the Fair cattle show this year, a continuance of the interest manifested at former expositions.

Last year more than seven hundred head of cattle were exhibited at the State Fair. All of the breeds for which premiums were offered were represented by their most conspicuous herds and there was the most intense rivalry among the exhibitors. This year, the addition of the Polled Durham class and the increase of premiums to more than fifty-three hundred dollars will result in a large increase in the number of cattle which will be shown and Superintendent Packard of the department expects the exhibit to exceed anything in the line of a cattle show ever seen in this country.

The cattle and horse entries for the Fair close August 1, but already Secretary Simpson of the Fair management has received information relative to the number of exhibitors who will show their herds of cattle and their fine horses.

Instructions to Branch and District Recorders.

As there continues to be quite a demand for special instructions about keeping branch and district records and making out reports properly, the following advice is given on various points that seem most essential to guide in the work, that it may be more properly:

1. The first necessity is that you carefully study the rules printed on the back of the present branch report-forms, and that you be governed thereby in your care and use of all records and reports. For in those rules is expressed the will of God and the church, therefore should they be heeded by all who are chosen to have charge of branch or district records, or to keep minutes, or to make out branch reports.

2. The presidents of branches and districts should both encourage and assist the clerks and recorders in conforming to the rules mentioned, not only as to the making of branch reports, but also in carefulness to report all baptisms, confirmations, ordinations, and marriages whether performed by themselves or by other ministers, in the branches and throughout the district, with full names and items for the record, and also in all other ways give aid where the clerks need information about those added to or lost from the local record. Blessings of children should also be put on the branch book, but there is no command to place them on district or general record.

3. If branch officers will always have with them paper and pencil they can easily attain the habit of making a memorandum of the facts whenever they witness the ordinances of baptism, confirmation, ordination, and blessing, or when they learn about them from those who were present. And close inquiry will usually bring out the complete facts as to names, dates, etc. But do not depend entirely on others, nor trust your own memory to retain exactly in your mind perfectly, but see members about their dates and places of birth and as to their complete given names, and the correct spelling of all names. Then write these items down immediately and with care.

4. In recording we advise that the surname be written first, then the first name and initial, excepting where members have always been called by their second name. In that case give the initial of first name and write the second in full. But be sure and always ask for the complete name, because some are always called by a nickname, and many among us have been so baptized, reported, and recorded, not even from the true name not known for years. - Such as Lon for Alonzo; Neil for Cornelius; Bert for Albert; Barton; and Elbert on Middle for Edward, Edwin, and Edmund. Likewise Nellie who has the first and legal name is Ellen, Heler, or Helena, and Nettie for Annettie, Jennettie, Lunettie, or Mariette. Ettie is also used in place of those names as well as being a name by itself. Milly or Millie is a pet name for Amelia, Pernelia, etc., and Bertie is used for Alberta, Roberta, and other names, whereas the real legal name should be recorded and reported instead of the pet names. Hence the need of care by those who baptize persons and by branch officers in obtaining complete name and items in every instance. (See paragraph 13).

5. In entering births, baptisms, and ordinations it is well to write the day of the month first, and the full date figures with those of the year. Next write the months. DO NOT GIVE MONTHS IN FIGURES, for many errors have been made that way, especially by July being designed as the 6th month, October as the 9th, and April as the 3d, etc. Also some write figures for months first and others write days first, and sometimes both ways have been on the same report, as afterwards discovered. If a figure beyond 12 is on we know it means the day, but if both are below 12 we can not tell which is the day and which means the month. It is important to know whether the 4th day of the 10th month is intended or the 10th day of the 4th month.

6. If a member was not born in a village, or near one, we advise writing the name of the township, or else say "near" such a place. Same way about baptisms. Be careful and get the correct county, if the village is not written. One sister was reported as born in Lamoni, Ringgold County, Iowa, whereas Lamoni is in Decatur County, and is six miles from the house she was born in, though it was very near the Decatur County line. Had Lamoni also been near the line we would have written "Near Lamoni but in Ringgold County."

7. In every instance all who lay on hands to confirm and ordain should be named on records and reports, also on letters of removal, and the speaker in each case should be designated by drawing a line under his name. Where a number are confirmed at the same time it is sufficient to put ditto marks after the first name and then underscore these to show each speaker. Failure to record the names of all the elders has resulted in members later asking that all be recorded. Thus to make money through we have to make new entries wherever a member has been enrolled. Also if a speaker is not designated at first it may be forgotten who he was, and then inquiry is made by the member, or by the official who was ordained, as a matter of interest.

8. In recording and reporting those received by letter kindly give dates when they were voted into the branch and names of branches from which they came. It is not necessary to say on books or reports that they were "received by letter," for that is understood by writing it "From (name branch and give date)." Or when letters are voted, record and report in last column, "To (name branch and give date)." Date should be of voting member in or out, not date when clerk issued letter.

Put on record WITHOUT DELAY all names added, and especially enter the losses that occur by death and otherwise, and the changes of name by marriage. For many times these are neglected and soon forgotten, sometimes being years before found out, not till a book is thoroughly examined in the effort to bring an agreement with the general record.

Also make a memorandum of all these changes immediately, so when you need to report to a district conference the facts will be at hand from which to make your report, without having to guess at things and then go wrong.

9. In reporting losses it is not needful to give on the report all the items of birth and baptism, but it is best to insert the dates of birth and baptism, as well as the date of loss and how lost. For there are so many of the same name, often two or more in the same branch. Many fathers and sons have the same names, also mothers and daughters, likewise cousins. And if the words senior and junior are left out, or the initial, or the nickname only is given, then it is at times impossible to tell who is meant.

10. Record and report all changes of names of sisters by marriage, stating date and by whom married, with full names of bride and groom. Often removals and deaths are reported and we have not the names because changes by marriage have not been reported.

If the bride's name is on record as Mary J., or Mabel A., do not report that Jennie or Annie So-and-So married, but give the record name, so we will know who is meant. In recording marriages draw a straight line through the bride's former surname and interline above it her new name. Then on her line, in the bottom half of the branch and district record, in the same columns that are given to the ordination of brethren, there write like this, "married (give groom's name, date when and by whom married)," giving place, too, if you think best. Thus the sister's line will give all her items. The ruling is so wide that there is space to record items of two marriages, if care is used in writing the first.

11. Certificates of baptism should be issued by the ministry to all whom they baptize. When the one baptized is thus a member of a branch then either the clerk or the minister who officiated should so state on the certificate before giving it to the member. This will prevent its being received in another branch and the member being enrolled in two places at the same time, the member and the second branch not knowing of the first enrollment.

12. By General Conference action it has been ordered that the cause of excommunication should be recorded and reported, but it is seldom done. Branch and district officers should attend to this in each case and report same.

13. In making out branch reports we advise that first on the report be placed the names of all baptized since last report, with dates of baptism in their order, the number agreeing with the number stated on the statistical fold no back of report. After these write names and items of those added by certificate of baptism and by letter. Be sure to obtain the correct spelling of members' names, and place of birth and baptism. And write them very plainly, because sometimes it is uncertain whether an m or n or a was intended by the writer, or whether a letter is i or l or a or o or u. When may be a well-known name locally may be a puzzle to district clerk or General Recorder. (See paragraph 4 of this paper.)

14. When you copy on the branch book from letters of removal and certificates of baptism use great care as to all names and dates, also whenever you copy from the record in filling out letters of removal and reports. Often are mistaken 1 and 7, 3 and 5, 8 and 3, 4 and 9. Sometimes in looking back and forth in the wrong line is seen and the wrong items are copied in part. Experience proves that it takes tenfold more labor (correspondence and all) to correct errors than it does to copy names and items already correct.

15. If possible make reports to every conference. At least do not fail to report to the last session prior to the holding of the General Conference. For from those reports the annual balance sheet and report is made to the whole Church, and it is good to know the latest facts of value. Therefore detailed reports should be made; branches not in districts should send their reports direct to this office in February of each year.

16. Each clerk should keep in the minute-book a copy of all that is written on the statistical fold of the next session, giving date when adopted, the net membership at previous report, how many now reported as new baptisms, how many received, died, expelled, taken letter, ordained, married, and the present membership. On the record put a small mark to designate the last name you copied as added to the branch. Failure to mark where report closed, or to keep a memorandum, has caused many reports to begin with the wrong number. Often, too, reliance has been placed on what the last report stated without counting up. If a record is properly kept it is quick work to count out all losses from the total at any time. The last name on record should be the total that have been members from the start, including re-entries of those before you by letter or restorer's vote. Count up and take out all losses found in last columns to find net membership. Sort in by giving a returned member a new entry but keep them as the old number, and when the fact of removal and return and fall to get the right result. Should enter again and give date when received and where from, same as if never in that branch before.

17. When the actual number in a branch has been changed between conferences by correspondence with district clerk or General Recorder, whether there be found more or less than at previous report, always begin your next report with number your last closed with, and on the statistical fold state that so many have been gained or lost by previous error, whichever it was, instead of beginning report with number the last did not close with. The former way before you at next session you can see whether the new reports begin with same number that last closed with, also can tell how your own record agrees.

18. When written to by the district or General Recorder be so kind AS TO ANSWER AS PROMPTLY AS POSSIBLE, not put it off or the work off until it is forgotten or lost sight of, as a disagreeable task. The Lord requires our stewardship over this matter to be as faithful as over any other trust committed to his people, even if others are more notable or have greater honor. Therefore kindly attend to these calls and it will aid our work very much.

19. District recorders, as receivers and transmitters of the original branch reports, are, by their situation, better able to obtain corrections than are the General Recorders, although some errors can not be found until the latter compare each item with the previous record of members. Hence when at conference errors or omissions are seen, do not let reports pass without calling attention to them, and when accepted it should be with proviso that the district clerk correspond with the branch clerks after conference. Do not return reports, lest they come not back, and thus the good on them be lost to you and to this office.

20. One good help in keeping the number straight is to have a tabular form in district minute-book, or on sheets, one for each conference session. In columns show what each branch reported last time as net, how many baptized since, how many received, taken letter, died, and expelled. With such form before you at next session you can see whether the new reports begin with same number that last closed with, also can tell how your own record agrees. By keeping these forms you can tell any time how each stood, also what branches failed to report at any conference, thus can correspond intelligently with branch clerks and General Recorder, and thus help to bring about the necessary agreement between branch, district, and general records.

21. Sometimes reports begin right, but in giving gain and loss the wrong balance is added and they close with wrong numbers. Again, reports do not contain all the names that are counted as baptized, received, removed, or died. Or the full items are not given of those added, or dates of death and of voting are not given, or sometimes do not on. All these things should be done, and the number of officials claimed on reports should be compared with district book.

22. If you can visit the branches occasionally and compare your book with the branch books it will be helpful. Check names, also look to record of marriages and ordinations. See that all past omissions are given on next branch report in order that these corrections may come to the general office.

23. Forward to General Recorder the whole reports without cutting, excepting where no changes have taken place. In that case cut off six of the eight folds, sending us only the statistical fold and next one to it. Then there will be two thicknesses to file away, easier to find than one. Though no changes are shown on such reports, yet it shows that they reported.

24. Do not try to mail reports and other written matter at one cent for four ounces. In the United States it is unlawful. Pay two cents for each ounce or fraction. District conferences should provide means for stationery and postage. By a little thought these expenses can be met, thus saving the general office a payment of much deficient postage each year.

25. Do not make reports into a hard roll. When you have no large envelopes wrap the folded reports in strong paper and put string about the package. Even envelopes are sometimes too good for the break open in transit. Address all reports to H. A. Stobbins, Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa. In note with them name reports enclosed, and say if you retained any for correction, and state what existing branches did not report. We can then check up with our lists. We prefer to have all come together, after you have noted the deficiencies and have written the branch clerks about the errors, if NOT TOO LONG DELAY.

26. We advise that a district record be kept, in which shall be enrolled every member of each branch, and all items from birth to death, thus being an exact copy of each branch record, and with these two corrected the general record should be brought to agree.

27. Whenever branches become disorganized by act of district conference please so report, with date of action. Districts should take such action where removals and other causes leave no room to doubt the fact.

Finally, it will save much labor and trouble if all engaged in this department will accept the above advice and labor in harmony with it.

Therefore will be pleased if all will kindly consider and act accordingly, doing the work as unto the Lord and in his service.

Also we are glad to acknowledge that many branch and district clerks have been both faithful and diligent. Their reports of correct reports produces confidence and hope, and we congratulate all the helpers who are trying to perform duty to God and his church.

H. A. STREBBINS, General Recorder.

Editorial

INTERESTING ADMISSIONS BY "DESERET NEWS."

The Deseret News for July 10, 1905, the official paper of the dominant church of Utah, contains an editorial under the caption "A common blunder," which contains some statements which are of interest to the readers of the HERALD. In the editorial referred to the editor of the News takes to task a woman writer to the Christian Herald because she inferred that Mormonism and polygamy are synonymous. Says the News:

That is a very common blunder, and it is one that enters into the entire anti-"Mormon" crusade outside of Utah. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, commonly called the "Mormon" church, is composed of many thousands of men and women who have never entered into the system of plural marriage, vulgarly called polygamy. The very large majority of them never practiced it and have no intention of doing so. Yet they are fervent believers in the system of religion revealed in the latter days through the prophet Joseph Smith, and dubbed "Mormonism" because it includes belief in the Book of Mormon, as well as in the Bible.

Then the News editor defines "Mormonism" as meaning the "doctrines of Mormon" who was an ancient prophet, and adds:

Now if the ladies of this country who continually commit the blunder made by the lady writer to the Christian Herald would take the trouble to investigate and read the Book of Mormon, instead of repeating the falsehoods circulated concerning it, they would find that neither polygamy nor plural marriage nor anything like it is taught in that book, and that therefore it is not the doctrine of Mormon, who compiled it.

We are glad to see the News editor so emphatically tell the ladies of the country that "neither polygamy nor plural marriage nor anything like it is taught" in the Book of Mormon, but we should have been glad to see him go a step farther in the matter and say, what he knows full well, that the Book of Mormon strongly condemns the practice of polygamy. In this connection we remember the labored efforts of Joseph F. Smith, president of the Mormon church, not long ago, through the Arena, to destroy the effectiveness of the denouncement of polygamy which appears in the Book of Mormon, and we are glad to see the official paper of the church so plainly state that the Book of Mormon does in no way teach polygamy or anything like it. So in teaching that doctrine, the Mormon church has always gone outside the teachings of at least one of their own books.

Visitors to the Iowa State Fair this fall, especially those who have attended before, will notice many pleasing improvements to the grounds and buildings. A new fence has been erected about a considerable portion of the grounds, and a handsome iron gateway is to be placed at the Grand Avenue entrance. Twenty-one registering turnstiles from the St. Louis exposition are to be installed at the admission gates for the accurate and rapid handling of the big crowds. Considerable landscape gardening is to be done this summer, and when the fair opens on August 25 it is hoped to have numerous beds of beautiful flowers located about the grounds for the visitors to enjoy. New walks are being put in many places and the streets are being much improved. The Art Building has been removed to give a better view from the portico of the Women's Building, and a liberal supply of new settees and porch chairs have been purchased for the latter.

The News further says:

The principle of celestial marriage, that is, marriage for eternity as well as time, was revealed to the prophet Joseph Smith and embraces the ordinance of plural marriage under certain conditions therein described. But it is no longer taught or practiced in the church, except that the comparatively few individuals who entered into that relation many years ago declined to sever it, because they regard it as a sacred and eternal relationship, and prefer to take such consequences as may follow their continuance rather than repudiate it in any way or form.

Owing to the fact that according to the statement referred to above it is admitted even by the News that the Book of Mormon does not teach polygamy or anything like it, and owing to the further fact that the gospel of Christ teaches monogamy and not polygamy, and owing to the additional fact that monogamy only is taught in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants of the church in every edition up to 1876, and owing to the further well-established fact that Joseph Smith the Seer taught and established only the one system of marriage—monogamy—taught in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and is on record in a most emphatic denunciation of polygamy or celestial marriage, we think the News should have continued in its strain of truthfulness and admitted a truth it can not but be well aware of, namely, that polygamy or the doctrine of celestial marriage as taught and practiced by the Mormon church is a creature of Brigham Young, and that if it was "revealed" to any one it was to him,—though that it was revealed to him from sources which are in any way divine can not but be doubted by any one who will make a careful analysis of the document which sets forth the doctrine.

The statement of the News that the doctrine is no longer taught or practiced by the church we take with a grain of allowance, owing to the fact that we have heard representatives of the church defend the doctrine, and because we have also heard a prominent official of the church of Utah quoted as saying that there has not been a year since the manifesto was issued in which there have not been plural marriages solemnized by Mormon church authorities. Of course in the face of the testimony which was given at Washington the News could not well deny that there have been many instances in which polygamy has been practiced by those who had entered the polygamous relation before the issuing of the Manifesto. This they do, according to the News, because they prefer to take such consequences as may follow their continuance rather than sever a relation which they regard as sacred and eternal, though continuing in such relation is contrary to the laws of the land and contrary to the laws of God as they have acknowledged in accepting the Manifesto as being from God. An unenviable position indeed are such men placed in by their fanatic allegiance to a lustful system.

Again the News says:

The claim that there have been new plural marriages since 1890 when the so-called "manifesto" by President Wilford Woodruff was promulgated, is not founded on such evidence as would convict the accused before a competent court. If there have been any such violations of the law, they have not been committed with the consent, authority, permission, or connivance of the church or of its president. If all the instances that have been named were actual cases, the total is very small, and would amount simply to a few infractions of the law during the past fifteen years. The Deseret News is frequently charged with denying that there have been any such marriages. That charge is not true. This paper maintains, as it has held all along, that there have been no such marriages by the authority of the church. That is all.

It is generally believed by those in Utah who have been closely watching the situation that such plural marriages have repeatedly been contracted among the membership of the Mormon church, though it is a fact that the evidences have been so closely guarded that in most instances conviction is difficult. In the latter part of the paragraph just quoted is found what is tantamount to an admission that the News knows that such plural marriages have been entered into since 1890; but the statement is made that such marriages have not been "committed with the consent, authority, permission, or connivance of the church or of its president." This places the News in an embarrassing position. In the document found in the Utah edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, section 132, is the so-called revelation on the "Eternity of the marriage covenant," and is the basis of the system of plural marriage which the News says is vulgarly called polygamy (an evidence of the hypersensitiveness of the News) and celestial marriage, the statement is unequivocally made that there shall be but one upon the earth at a time who shall hold the keys or power to perform this mystical sealing for eternity and time, and it is stated that this power is held by the president of the church in the first instance, and presumably thereafter it would be held by those supposed to be his successors in office. This known concerning the one to whom is to be given this magic power, the question naturally arises, That being true, how is it possible for any plural marriages or marriages for eternity to be performed for contracting members of the Mormon church without the one who holds this peculiar sealing power having a knowledge of it? It must certainly be done with the "knowledge, consent, permission, or connivance" of this person,—he would either have to perform the ceremony himself or delegate this power (if this be possible under the provisions of the celestial (?) document) to some one else. In either instance it would be done with his "knowledge, consent, permission, or connivance." How will the News explain?

PRESIDENT F. M. SMITH SOUNDS A NOTE OF WARNING.

In the Salt Lake Tribune for July 28, 1905, appears an open letter signed by Frederick M. Smith, of the First Presidency of the Reorganized Church, addressed "To the people of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints," commonly known as the Utah or Mormon church. The Tribune supplied the article with rather flaring headlines, we think, which we omit. We reprint the letter below, believing it to be of interest to all who are anxious to add to their knowledge concerning the efforts put forth by representatives of the Reorganized Church for the redemption of the people in the West:

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS:

As one of the seed of Joseph Smith, upon whose posterity was placed by the voice of prophecy a peculiar work, and as one of those who have been called to the mission of crying repentance to the world, I have been appointed to labor among you for a time; to call upon you to heed the prophecies and to warn you that the eventful day is at hand. The spirit of controversy is not upon me, and I feel moved to state in plainness and simplicity the word of warning which it has been given me to utter, leaving dispute to those who would bicker rather than believe, and leaving the responsibility with all men to choose for themselves whether they will be true to the covenants which God has made with his people in this dispensation, and which the people have made with God. In 1841 the Lord said concerning Joseph Smith:

"For this anointing have I put upon his head, that his blessings shall also be put upon the head of his posterity after him, and as I said unto Abraham concerning the kindreds of the earth, even so I say unto my servant, Joseph, in thee and in thy seed shall the kindred of the earth be blessed."—Doctrine and Covenants 124:57, 58; Utah edition.

And Joseph Smith himself uttered this prophetic language, as recorded in Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 395:

"While water runs and grass grows; while virtue is lovely and vice hateful; and while a stone points out a sacred spot where a fragment of American liberty once was, I or my posterity will plead the cause of injured innocence."

As one of the posterity of Joseph Smith, thus and by subsequent events consecrated to the furtherance of the work instituted by the prophet, Joseph Smith, I must cry out in warning to this people against the dangers into which they have been led by those who have professed to be the successors of Joseph Smith in the prophetic office.

The Lord has ordained a method of succession in his church. Upon Joseph Smith the prophet and his seed the Lord, by repeated revelation, fixed the responsibility and the succession, and the prophet himself before his death blessed to become his successor his eldest son, Joseph Smith, who to-day holds the keys, and through whom alone, by the voice of inspiration, will the keys be handed down.

The remnant of the church which remained in and around Nauvoo, after the exodus of that body which followed Brigham Young, held fast to the exact letter, believing that God would vivify it with the Spirit in his own due time. After years of waiting, the prophet's son, the present Joseph Smith, went to the church, being called thereto by a revelation commanding him, and as prophet, seer, and revelator of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, he has administered in his office, obeying the revelations, obeying the laws of his country, and seeking in his humble way to fulfill the destiny which was pronounced upon his head by his father, the prophet of the last dispensation, and to follow as nearly as possible in the footsteps of his divine Master, the Redeemer of mankind.

This succession has been unbroken. The power came direct from heaven, as you know, to the prophet Joseph Smith, Jr. No other man could have or has received the keys of this succession, except as the prophet delivered those keys to his own son, according to the word of God.

No amount of world success and no length of history can sanctify illegal succession, as you well know. Otherwise the ancient churches, which have existed for many centuries, would have been legitimately empowered to administer the ordinances of God, and there would have been no need for a new dispensation.

Ever since the death of Joseph Smith, where is the good Mormon who has been reading the word of God as delivered to the world through his modern prophet, who has not held firmly to the belief that some time, in the Lord's own due time, some of the seed of Joseph Smith would lead the people of God in triumph back to Zion, as designated by the prophet and the holy word, and there redeem the land consecrated for the final gathering of his people? Had Brigham Young and his fellows remained true to their apostolic calling, carefully guarding the interests of the church, and had been free from aspiration and ambition to stand in the place of the seed of Joseph, and had thus awaited in patience the time when the Lord should bring one of the seed of Joseph to the church, to-day Mormonism, so called, would have been one of the leading religious influences of the United States and the world, feared and yet respected because of its power and righteousness.

Never since the time of the tragic death of Joseph Smith has there been greater necessity for his posterity to plead the cause of injured innocence, and that because the injury has come from those who professed to be advocates of the work instituted by the nineteenth century seer. There never was greater necessity for the posterity of Joseph to plead with the people than now when this portion of God's people have been led into the commission of errors which are surely leading them away from God and into trouble and misery, when the spirit which is upon their leaders seems to be one more of commercialism and financial and political power than of spirituality—when spirituality, especially among the leaders, is at a dangerously low ebb.

The Lord has chosen his own time in making plain to you the errors which flow from illegal succession and from the exercise of false priesthood. He has chosen his time to make known to you that the succession appointed by his commandment is presented for your acceptance, and you will be judged, as will all other men, by your acceptance or rejection of the truth when it is offered to you.

When the faith was sanctified by the blood of the martyrs, when the prophet and his brother were slain as a testimony to the truth, the time had come for the proclamation of the gospel of peace and for its acceptance by the world. The men who usurped the authority of the prophet and constituted themselves a body of leaders, and by the voice of men selected a so-called prophet to guide them, led this people away from the first truth—that of lawful succession—and from time to time have added other errors, until to-day the practice of the church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, or the practice of its leading men, who constitute its government, is opposed in many essential respects to the faith and the revelations as delivered by the appointed prophet of God and as continued to be delivered to his appointed successor. What was to be expected from leaders who selected themselves in defiance of the method which God has appointed, except additional error in their promulgation and their practices?

To-day the chief men of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints stand in antagonism to the Government of this country.

Contrary to the revelations, they disobey its laws; they have broken their covenant to the country; they engage in temporal affairs in behalf of themselves and the church; they take tithes for purposes not appointed; the bishop is not the custodian of the tithes; they make no accounting to the church; the law of common consent has been nullified; and the coordinate jurisdiction of the leading quorums has been distorted until one officer stands alone in his supreme power.

If the leaders will not repent, shall the people remain with them in apostasy?

Obedying the mandates of the Spirit, I call upon the Mormon people, leaders and all, to repent. The posterity of Joseph Smith have consecrated their lives to the work, and have continued to plead the cause of injured innocence, and have always endeavored to show by their lives that they can live the religion as presented to the world by Joseph Smith, and maintain positions of honor and respect—men toward whom the finger of scorn can not be truthfully pointed by an accusing people.

The Mormon people stand in a dangerous place. Unless they shall heed the warning voice calling them to repentance, woe shall come upon them and they shall be scourged. The course of the leaders who have brought them to present conditions, if persisted in, will bring untold misery upon the people.

Ye people of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, as you revere and honor the name of Joseph F. Smith, and look toward the time when, according to the many revelations, Zion shall be made terrible in the eyes of the world,—terrible because of its righteousness in contrast with the wickedness of the world, terrible because by right-living the people have so won the favor of God that he shall fight their battles for them—heed the warning cry raised by the seed of the man who instituted the great latter-day work.

I present once more to you as the mission which I am appointed to perform, the plain and simple doctrine that the Lord did reveal himself to the prophet Joseph Smith, and did by that instrumentality establish his church in the last dispensation; that he did appoint Joseph Smith to hold the keys and powers; that he did reveal the law of lineal succession to this prophetic office; that this succession was named by the prophet before his death, and was pronounced upon the head of his eldest son, Joseph Smith, now the president of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, who of all men holds these keys and authorities.

The posterity of Joseph Smith have come among you from time to time, and raised the warning voice, pointing you to repentance and calling you to cease to follow false leaders; they have come even to the second generation; and according to the prophecy, their mission is to continue to plead the cause of injured innocence till all have had a chance to hear; and then, whether you heed the cry or not, their responsibility shall have ceased, and it then remains with you whether or not you will turn from a course leading you to more misery or follow one which shall lead you towards that Zion pointed out so many years ago by the prophet Joseph, and to which even now the people of God are returning with songs of joy and fond anticipations of soon beginning the work which shall usher in the great consummation.

Once more I call to you, Arise and repent, and prepare yourselves to enter more fully into the work of redeeming Zion, that glorious consummation made possible only by an intense spiritual development. The work of the end is ushered in. The voice of the Spirit to the seed of Joseph Smith has been and is to hasten the work, for Zion must be redeemed, and great spirituality is essential. The gathering-place is appointed; the Reorganized Church is established there. God Almighty maintained that remnant in that land till they could grow in power, with the prophetic succession to Joseph Smith the prophet, and until the successor could come to an age when he could administer in the ordinances and authorities of the gospel.

The call is unto you to forsake the errors which unauthorized men have introduced and which they still seek to maintain. Arise and repent, throw off the curses and abominations which, according to the word of the Lord, attach to you under false guidance. Arise anew in the strength of the Lord and prepare yourselves by renewed consecrations and spirituality to enter in upon the work of the end. Come out of this wrong, that ye partake not of the sin and that ye share not of the plague.

Will the cry be heeded? FREDERICK M. SMITH.
SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, July 27, 1905.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

Bro. O. H. Bailey reports six baptisms at Media, Illinois, where Brn. Bailey and Russell have been engaged in street-preaching.

Brn. Hubert Case and W. M. Aylor, as the result of a series of meetings at Hydro, Oklahoma, report four baptisms. Others are interested and almost persuaded.

Bro. F. A. Smith in his quarterly report of the Southern Mission states that eighty-three have been baptized and forty new openings made. He writes hopefully of future prospects.

Elder Peter Anderson, in charge of the Scandinavian and German mission on July 26, was at Svineballe, Denmark, where he would remain for two weeks looking after the work.

Bro. I. N. White, writing from Thayer, Missouri, July 31, says: "Organized a branch of thirty-two members in the Ozarks yesterday. Five have been baptized on this trip, two men, two women, and one boy. Have felt well both in body and in spirit while climbing the mountains of the Ozarks and laboring for the Master. Have been out for twelve days, and while I have found rocks, hills, and mountains to traverse, yet I have been cheered in finding good hearts and honest people to listen to me while I told them of the angel's message."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The following inquiry has been received by Bishop Kelley (who answers it below) from Dow City, Iowa: "Is it proper for an elder's family to draw an allowance for a son who is twenty-two years of age?" Answer: "No. No parent is permitted to draw for a child that is over age. This would be contrary to the law. (See Doctrine and Covenants 82:2.) When children become of age, if they are in necessitous circumstances, they look directly to the church for help, if their parents can not help them, and not through their parents to the church. The church deals directly with them, and makes direct provision. It is not proper for an elder's family to draw for any child who is over age."

The Bishop's report has been printed, except the Graceland College account, which is about ready for the printers. We anticipate being ready to send out the complete published report in a week or two.

Original Articles

"FOR NOW IS OUR SALVATION NEARER THAN WHEN WE BELIEVED."

SERMON BY ELDER T. J. SHELDON, AT ENFIELD, MIDDLESSEX, ENGLAND, MAY 15, 1904.

Reported by D. E. Judd.

Permit me to call your attention to the thirteenth chapter of Romans for your lesson this morning: "For now is our salvation nearer than when we believed." This statement is one that is full of meaning. It is one that opens up a vast field for thought. It is one that we will do well to consider this morning. It conveys upon its very surface the thought that all our duty is not done yet, but that as we faithfully perform the duty, the haven which we have in view is being brought nearer to us.

Sectarianism has spoken of salvation as though it were an assured thing,—the Bible teaches it as a possible thing. Salvation does not mean forgiveness of sins only; it means more than that. It means a triumph over everything that is contrary to God and contrary to God's law. Nothing less than this is salvation. When the angel came to Mary and told her that a son should be born unto her, it was glad tidings, for this son was the Savior of the world. The angel also appeared to Joseph the husband of Mary and told him that his wife should have a son and that his name should be called Jesus "for he shall save his people from their sins."

The apostle John in his first epistle, the third chapter and fourth verse, tells us what sin is: "Who-soever committeth sin transgresseth also the law, for sin is the transgression of the law." I would like especially to impress on your mind the thought that Jesus Christ came to save his people from their sins: that he came to save them from transgressing the law; this is salvation. Salvation, eternal life, and celestial glory do not indicate a person's surroundings, or where a person will be. You may take a beggar and put him in the king's palace, but he is still a beggar. But if you educate him, if you teach him the rules of etiquette and make them a part of his life, and raise the standard of his education, you fit him to associate with his new environment, you put him at ease and make him feel at home in the king's palace. But so long as he remains as he is he will be out of harmony with his surroundings; he will not be at home there. You may take an individual who is wicked, who is immoral, and put him into the company of pure, good, Christian people, and he is not at home there; but if you can teach that individual (I was going to say the principles of the gospel, but I will not advance that this morning), if you can teach that individual the gospel—and the principles of the gospel are only the underlying fundamentals of the gospel—and impress it fully upon his mind and place his life in harmony with law, you will fit that individual for his superior surroundings; you will make it possible for that individual—or rather he will make it possible for himself—to associate with those beings who are of a higher condition, of a higher order than he is himself. His thoughts are warped, his judgment is perverted, and he has nothing in common with God's people. He has no pleasure in their company; but if you can change the man, why, then he can correspond with his surroundings. But a leopard can not change his spots. An Ethiopian can not change his skin. A leopard is a leopard. You may dye it. You may subject it, perhaps, to some chemical process, but when the hair grows out again it is still a leopard. It has a leopard's nature. It loves a leopard's environments and corresponds with it. Now it is the same with men. Men love their own environments. They do not love foreign environment. Everything loves its own. Everything departs from that which is not its own sooner or later; and, therefore, to put a man who has not obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which has been delivered to him in the presence of those who from the heart have obeyed that form of doctrine which has been given them, he can not long abide there. Therefore the world is not at home in the presence of the children of God. There may be something about the children of God which attracts the people of the world; but they are not at home in their presence, and do not feel quite comfortable. There is only one thing you can do, and that is to just kill that worldly individual. I do not mean with the dagger, or the bowie-knife, or the bullet of the pistol, I am talking about killing them in the true sense of the term. Just make that individual die—to himself, die to the world and to its sinful pleasures; for unless you can do this you can not make it possible for that individual to correspond with celestial environment.

"If any man loves the world the love of the Father is not in him." That is a true statement made by the apostle John; and it is as true to-day as when John gave utterance to it. If a man is a lover of pleasure more than a lover of God he can not abide in the presence of God's people. He may pretend to be at home in their presence, and to delight in the doings of God's ministers; but it is only a game of bluff he is playing, and sooner or later it will be made manifest. Jesus has taught us that we shall know a man by his fruits, for he says, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

So we see that character is being insisted on wherever the voice of revelation is heard; and, if an individual desires to abide celestial glory, he must have celestial character; and he can not gain a celestial character without keeping celestial law. God has given us a law, and he wants us to keep that law. He realizes the impossibility of man complying with that law from the human standpoint; but from the divine standpoint there is a grand possibility of complying with it. And Paul, one of Christ's apostles, said he could do all things through Christ that strengthened him. He could comply with a perfect law perfectly, because he was in correspondence with a perfect being, and strength from that perfect being was imparted to Paul from time to time. And because of the strength that was ministered unto him, he was able to do that which was required of him. So it is with all God's children. And because this has been the case, because of the inherent good in man, and because of God's goodness to him there has been effected a union between God and his creature, man. And man has been placed directly in correspondence with God. Man has corresponded with God—with celestial environment—just in the proportion that he has kept celestial law.

Now if we want to obtain celestial environment, we must comply with celestial law. Complying with celestial law eventually will bring us into celestial environment, because it will make us celestial beings; and if we are celestial beings we will comply with those conditions that are profitable, those conditions that are pure; and we will take to ourselves those agencies and powers which will develop within us all that celestial glory offers to us.

Again, we will make celestial environment. I say we will make celestial environment. Do you know a home where there are quarrelings going on, and jarring and contention? I am going to ask, Who are responsible for those conditions in that home? Is it somebody outside of that home? No! no! Who is, then? The individuals that are inside that home. Why? Because they are making their own environment. Do you know a home where peace reigns? where love rules? where love and harmony exist in everything? Who is responsible for the environment there? Is it because somebody outside is so good to them that peace, harmony, and love prevail? No! But it is because the inhabitants of that home have learned that perfect law, and they make their own environment. Do you know an individual who through trials and tribulations passes triumphant; that no matter what forces of sin may array against him he performs that which he is appointed to do, and fulfills the mission intrusted to him by the Master? Do you wonder why that individual's faith does not fail in the stress of adverse conditions? Do you ask why it is he succeeds, while others who are less severely tempted, fail? Have you asked yourself those questions? Why does he succeed? Because he complies with the law; because he keeps the commandments of God: because the letter of the law has been written in his heart; and because the spirit of the law always keeps that letter of the law bright and clear, so that he can read it when any emergency arises. The first thought that occupies his mind is,

What does the law demand of me? And when he has found what the law demands of him he complies with its just demands. It may for a time cause him suffering and bring him humiliation, and may for a time cause him to suffer the reproach of sinners; but in the end it will result in his eternal good.

"That which is governed by law is also preserved by law, and is perfected and sanctified by the same." And that is true in the physical sense. It is true in the mental sense. It is true in the social sense. And it is true in the domestic sense. "That which is governed by law is also preserved by law." If our happiness comes to us because we keep the law, there is nothing that can destroy that influence; for the power of that law is almighty. God is behind his law. God's law can not be defeated until God resigns, and he has not sent in his resignation yet. The law of God is so great that all power in heaven and on earth must be marshaled to maintain that law. One of the poets puts it:

"His wrath and justice stand
To guard his holy law."

Then we have nothing to fear, we have not to be afraid; for greater is he that is for us than those that are against us. If we have been keeping his law, if we have been working in harmony with its just demands, we have been creating within us and about us celestial environment, as a result of our compliance with a celestial law.

We are a people believing in the gathering. We believe in gathering to Zion; and we believe this is to come about by law. So the Lord has demanded that individuals shall comply with the temporal part of the law, as well as the spiritual side of it; and he has demanded, as is written, a tenth of that which the earth produces. He says it is his. If we do not comply with this part of the law it is robbing God, for Malachi says: "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings." This is then a duty. We are not conferring any favor upon God by paying our tithing; and, if we have an idea of that kind in our heads, the sooner we get rid of it the better it will be for us. God says a tenth is his. Then it is a debt we owe God and we must discharge it honestly, as we would any other debt.

Then there is the law of consecration. Now the individual who complies with the law of consecration and gets a receipt from the Bishop, and gets a declaration from the Bishop that he has complied with the law of consecration, and that he has paid his tithing, his way will be clear, his title will be clear. But if he can not show all this, it is only right that he should be expected to comply with them when he gets there. So the individuals who are merely paying their tithing here, and not complying with the principle of consecration, have no right to complain when they are asked for it there. Those who come there have a right to look for an inheritance, and will get it,—when the inheritances are given out, not before. There must be money placed in the hands of the Bishop to provide inheritance, and the individuals who have complied with the law will receive their inheritance, but not until the inheritances are given out. Now you see there can not be a Zion without complying with the temporal things of Zion's law. Again, there can not be a Zion without complying with the spiritual features of Zion's law, for God says "Zion is the pure in heart."

Did it ever occur to you that we are making that environment and creating it, and does it not occur to you that as individuals are complying here with celestial law they are gradually becoming celestial beings, until when they are gathered there will be such accumulation of good influence, such an obedience to the law there that it will compose Zion? What do we understand Zion is, and what Zion will be? It will be more than a mere gathering together. We often hear Zion spoken of as a happy place, as a home of love; but if we can not live in love, peace, and harmony here by small numbers how can we expect to live such good lives when we are gathered together by thousands? If we can not live together in peace and harmony now, and have that love for our brother which we ought to have, how can we expect to have it when we are in Zion? "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law." Now we sing of that home—that Zion:

"Enoch's city seen of old,
Where the righteous, being perfect,
Walked with God in streets of gold;
Love and virtue, faith and wisdom,
Grace and gifts were all combined,
As himself each loved his neighbor,
All were of one heart and mind."

Well, now, do not you think that so far as the spiritual condition is concerned we could have a little Zion right here? Do not you think we could have a little Zion in the branch? Do not you think we could have a little Zion in our homes, if each loved his neighbor as himself? If we loved our brethren and sisters, we would never permit hard and hurtful statements to pass our lips, if we knew it would hurt the feelings of somebody else; but we would spare them all the pain and sorrow that we possibly could because we loved them.

Let me call your attention to Paul's first epistle to the Corinthians, chapter 13: "Though I speak with the tongues of men and angels, and have not charity. I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal." The revised version gives the word love where the King James Version gives charity. "And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge, and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not love, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not love, it profiteth me nothing."

There are some individuals who have such a zeal for the principles of the gospel that they would go to the stake rather than deny these principles; and yet such individuals may not have the love of God in their hearts. "But we know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." An individual may give his goods to feed the poor, but it does not indicate that he loves them. Why? There are individuals who know that the very best way of advertising a business is to give their goods to feed the poor. It will bring more than big columns in the newspapers setting out the bargains that they are offering. Now people can advertise themselves in the church this way, too. It does not matter how much money they give, for that does not show they are loving God or their brethren. The gift they make from time to time does not show personal righteousness.

"Charity [love] suffereth long, and is kind [it does not matter how long it has to suffer]; charity envieth not." We can not envy a brother, if we possess this love, no matter how well he may seem to be doing. What do you think of a father or mother who envied their son because he was called to the ministry? Loving parents would be glad of such an occurrence. They could not envy him because it would be contrary and adverse to God's law. "Love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up." Love may be on the right side; and love always is on the right side as a rule. But people may say that he is wrong, and say his decision is wrong; he is not right. Love is not always finding faults. If it does find out a fault it will help to put the individual that is wrong, right.

A person may have a reputation; but a reputation is not much. It is character that is going to count, not reputation. God is looking at the character.

Love "doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own." She does not seek her own good to the detriment of some one else. Love "is not easily provoked," People may say hard and unkind things about us; but if we love them our love will eventually win the hearts of those who say all manner of evil against us. We should not get easily provoked; for love covereth a multitude of sins. Love "rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth." Suspicion can not enter the mind of love. Love casts out suspicion, and all fear. It "rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth." Our sectarian friends try to make a point of this. They tell us if we possess charity we would not show other people's doctrine to be false, and so make them uncomfortable in their feelings because their doctrine does not agree with the one we advocate; for love rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth. If we love a man we are going to tell him his doctrine is false. I do not mean to say we will put it in these words. If we do, it should only be in exceptional cases; for the moment you tell a man that his creed is false you have closed his ears to your teaching. But from time to time, as occasions demand, assist him to come to the right conclusion with a right education. Just give him an opportunity; and if he is intelligent enough he will see that he is wrong. And if he is not intelligent enough to see this, never cast your pearls away,—they will not be appreciated. Charity “rejoiceth in the truth.” Oh, what a grand thing this is! It is a friend to truth, and truth assists it. Love “beareth all things, believeth all things.” If he hears a rumor he will with the assistance of love, put the best construction upon it under the circumstances. He will not magnify or enlarge that which he has heard; for love beareth all things, and it hopes for the best no matter what construction is placed upon it. Love endures all things. “Love never faileth.” Did you ever know it to fail? Love will overcome and conquer; for love is the fulfilling of the law, and that law is strength. God upholds that law. He that loveth is of God; and if a man is of God that man must conquer in the end, for God will eventually subdue all enemies and put them under his feet; and with God in us we will never fail, if we give him a chance and let him work within us as he will. So do not trouble about the outcome of these things; but put more love into it. Put more of God into our lives, and it will work out all right in the end. The very moment we think we are going to succeed, the adversary of our soul comes as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour; but in the end the lion is slain, being overcome by the lamb. It is the weaker of the two and in process of time the lion will be overcome by the lamb, who shall be none other than the Lion of Judah, who will put all enemies under his feet. The consequences that result by the lion breaking the law will produce to the lion defeat, while the lamb will triumph. Need we declare that the power of love is infinite?

We can not do better than conclude with the thought of a poet, who, although not popular with the world, wrote:

“Let me love thee—love is mighty,
Swaying realms of deed and thought,
By it I shall walk uprightly,
I shall serve thee as I ought.
Love will soften every sorrow,
Love will lighten every care,
Love unquestionably will follow,
Love will triumph, love will dare.”

May this power of love fill our hearts. May it be a mighty power in our lives; and may we love the Lord our God with all our hearts; with all our minds; and with all our strength; and our neighbors as ourselves. Now, have we been doing this in the past? If we have, we can truly say the day of salvation is nearer than when we believed. Why? Because we have been keeping the law. Because we have manifested our superiority to sin, because we have been governed by the law, because we have been preserved by law, and by it we shall be perfected and sanctified. Oh, may God help us to do this, to create within us, and about us, celestial environment! If we do this, if we are receiving of the celestial Spirit, it will gradually transform our spirit; that when Jesus looks upon us he may see his likeness, his image reflected there. And if this Spirit shall be the indwelling power, though our bodies shall be put in the ground, at the coming of Christ they shall rise from the dead; for if the Spirit of him that raised Christ from the dead dwells in us, so also shall the same Spirit quicken our mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwells in us. What a grand promise! So sublime and wonderful an offer to the tried and the tempted! Then let us be filled with this love, and hold on to the one hope of our calling through obedience to the law, and through faith in our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, is my prayer.

IN REVIEW.

In the HERALD of July 19 appears a second article from my friendly critic entitled, “Answer to ‘A reply.’” In this article the brother signally fails to refute a single argument made in my reply of July 5. Indeed he simply ignores the argument with the exception of a few minor matters, and wishes me to reexamine his former irrelevant quotations of June 14, as he has cited us others, excepting Mark 16:16. We shall examine them, but before doing so let us state plainly the issue: The brother argues that spiritual gifts will be enjoyed in their “fullness,” when “that which is perfect is come”; and that these gifts will continue in their perfected state, and on throughout eternity. See his argument in HERALD of June 14, page 580. My view, as stated in the sermon under criticism, is, that they will cease (see 1 Corinthians 13), but not until after perfection shall have been attained, sometime after the coming of the Savior.

The brother reasons thus:

Will the coming of perfection obliterate all prophecy, tongues, and knowledge? If so, then there will be no knowledge. But when, I ask. Will we know less then than now? I am answered, “No; we will know more then than we do now.” Very good, then. It is our partial or imperfect knowledge that is to vanish away at the coming of perfection, and shall be supplanted by knowledge complete. This being true, why will not the same apply to prophecy and tongues? That which is in part shall be done away, but it will be swallowed up of that which is whole—complete—perfect.

Think of it! The “swallowing” process must go on throughout all eternity. In his answer of July 19, page 704, we read this: “We kindly ask him to reread 1 Corinthians 13: Nowhere in all of Paul's writings does he say, or even intimate that miracles should cease." And in the original article he says:

Neither is there anything in any of God's revelations to man indicating that miracles should ever cease, either gradually, by reason of our development towards perfection, or abruptly by any means, save it be the unbelief of the people.

And in his answer he quotes a part of Mark 16: 17, 18:

And these signs shall follow them that believe; in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.

Now surely, the brother can not think that in celestial glory there will be devils cast out of the Saints; unknown tongues, prophecy, serpents, poison, healing, etc., and yet, this is the "false position" in which he has placed himself by his arguments above.

The brother has failed to discriminate between knowledge which is to remain after "perfection has come," and knowledge transmitted miraculously, or in spiritual gifts. Knowledge in the abstract is not a miracle; but the method by which it is given may be miraculous.

In the state of perfection, or fullness of glory, God's elect will have acquired all knowledge, and shall know all things, and shall have reached an equality with Christ and the Father. (See Doctrine and Covenants, pp. 236, 237, 238; also Philippians 2:6, and other references.) And yet the brother's logic has devils cast out of those who shall have reached an equality with God; unknown tongues and knowledge conferred upon those who "know all things," for "why will not the same apply to prophecy and tongues?" he asks. It will not apply because it is neither scriptural nor sound reason, but is what the ancient philosophers have called sophistry, that is, sound in appearance, but not in fact.

Now, let us notice some of his quotations.

And it shall come to pass, that there shall be a great work in the land, even among the Gentiles, for their folly and their abominations shall be made manifest in the eyes of all people; for I am God, and mine arm is not shortened, and I will show miracles, signs and wonders, unto all those who believe on my name. And whoso shall ask in my name, in faith, they shall cast out devils; they shall heal the sick; they shall cause the blind to receive their sight, and the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak, and the lame to walk; and the time speedily cometh that great things are to be shown forth unto the children of men; but without faith shall not anything be shown forth except desolations upon Babylon, the same which has made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.— Doctrine and Covenants 34: 3.

What does the above prove? Simply that these miracles may be found in the church while in an imperfect condition, when they will be needed. Otherwise the halt, the lame, the deaf and dumb, and the blind, will be found in the perfected state, and will at the same time be subject to all these ills and limitations. As well assert that a man can be growing shorter and taller at the same time. Prophecy and tongues are included in the gifts which Paul says shall be done away when "that which is perfect is come." (1 Corinthians 13: 8-10.)

Second Nephi 11: 18 is cited: "For behold, I am God; and I am a God of miracles; and I will show unto the world that I am the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever; and I work not among the children of men, save it be according to their faith." The brother comments: "This represents God's unchangeability in regard to miracles."

The brother thinks this teaches that miracles will continue throughout eternity. Let us see, Nephi here says that God is a God of miracles, and that he is unchangeable. What is a miracle? "A wonder; a prodigy. That which can not be accounted for by the known laws of nature." So long then as man remains ignorant, God will be a God of miracles, because man can not comprehend, and "mysterious are all his ways." But Nephi does not say that man is unchangeable. Man is changing and evolving toward perfection, wherein he shall receive of the fullness of God's glory, which glory is intelligence (see Doctrine and Covenants, page 238), and when he shall now reach that infinite degree of intelligence which shall place him upon a parity with Christ and the Father, then God will cease to be a prodigy, a mystery, and his works will cease to be miraculous; not because God will have changed. The change will take place in man and not in God. God will remain miraculous to the imperfect only. Is it possible that God will continue the gifts to those who have reached this exalted position of equality? This involves the possibility of God casting the devil out of Christ or of Christ bestowing the gift of unknown tongues, or prophecy upon his Father. Let us worship an unchangeable God and not an unchangeable idea.

Another quotation cited is 3 Nephi 4: 1: "And there was not any man who could do a miracle in the name of Jesus, save he were cleansed, every whit, from his iniquity." Here Nephi simply states a fact as it existed in relation to those of whom he writes. If the brother thinks this means that God never works miracles save through those who are holy, he is mistaken; and I do not see for what other purpose it is quoted. The Lord has performed miracles through wicked men and animals. The ass upon which Balaam rode talked in a human tongue, and Balaam, who was a wicked man, was in vision and conversed with the angel. (See Numbers 22: 27.) Paul's experience is in point while he was persecuting the Saints. Many other instances might be cited.

The brother comments: "The brother stated in this same discourse that the reception of miracles and spiritual gifts are an indication of our ignorance. . . . Just the reverse is true." Let us see. If the gift of knowledge is bestowed, is it not because of lack of knowledge? Clearly, the lack of knowledge—ignorance—renders the gift necessary. The brother says, "Just the reverse is true." If the blessing of healing is given, is it because perfect health is already enjoyed, or because of imperfect health? Evidently because of imperfect health. Then it is true that these gifts are evidences of "ignorance and imperfection," and "just the reverse" of this is a palpable absurdity.

The brother continues: "If that be true, Paul must have been an ignorant man." Well, suppose we let Paul answer: "For now we see through a glass darkly [now I know in part]." "If any man thinketh he knoweth anything, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know."

Now as to the "suggestion" which to my mind naturally follows this subject and logically grows out of it, viz.: As perfection shall be approached, will the necessity for spiritual gifts keep pace or be decreased? We thought at that time and still think that such necessity will be decreased in proportion to advancement made. It seems to me that this is a self-evident proposition. In emerging from the shadow into the blazing sunlight, would not the necessity for miraculous transmission of light be decreased in proportion to the increased brilliancy of the light approximated? As well argue that occasional flashes of candle-light would be necessary to enable one to see sufficiently in an apartment illuminated by electricity. Or the better a child can walk, the more assistance is necessary to enable it to walk. This thought was suggested by the study of Paul's epistle to the Corinthians. It was not dwelt upon or made prominent in the sermon.

Commenting upon this the brother says: "He has placed himself there [false position,—F. J. C.], I fear, by his desire to avoid being a pessimist, and by allowing himself to 'suggest' that which we can not find suggested in the Scriptures and revelations." It was suggested as food for thought and because I believed it true. That which may be suggested by reading a book or examining a flower, depends upon many things; among them the capacity to receive, disposition to receive the truth, no matter what it is, freedom from prejudice, etc. I would not for one moment reflect upon my friend's capacity or honesty, and therefore believe he can find the suggestion, because to my mind it is clearly taught therein. Neither my brother nor myself has found all that is contained in the Scriptures and revelations, therefore his objection is just a little fatherly warning or advice which I shall take—when shown to be in error. If the quotations from Morimon 4: 6 and Doctrine and Covenants 43: 4 are cited to show miracles are to be expected until perfection shall be attained, then they have no place in this discussion, because this has never been questioned. But perhaps they are given to prove that greater miracles are going to occur in the future than those which have been in the past. This is a mere inference and the citations made do not prove it.

Notice that of Jeremiah 23: 7, 8, which the brother seems to rely on as being proof or strong evidence in support of his influence. There is not a word in this revelation to show greater miracles will attend the gathering of the people from the north, than those incident to the deliverance of the Israelites. Indeed there is nothing in this reference to prove that any miracle of any kind whatever will be necessary to enable these people from the north country to come to Zion. If Perry's "latest dash" to the north pole should prove successful, they may come down very naturally, just as others are coming from other countries. The discovery and immigration to Jackson County, Missouri, would cause greater talk, and would be a greater sensation, than the bringing of the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; and this is all the prophet says about it—not a single word about any miracle, great or small. The Lord may be working through Perry at this moment, for this very purpose, for ought we know. The idea that greater miracles will be wrought in the future than those of the past, is simply a guess.

The parting of the Red Sea, stopping of the sun and moon, stopping of the Jordan, the great flood, the ark, Jonah, raising of the dead, translations from earth to heaven, the thunders of Sinai, and indeed we might go on and feebly contemplate the infinite miracles and mysteries of the creation of the world and of man who dwells thereon; also the millions of countless spheres and whirling orbs of the universe—and yet all this will be surpassed and forgotten by reason of miracles to come—and one of the proofs given us, does not as much as hint at a miracle.

All will agree that great miracles will evidently occur in the last days, that special endowments will be given to particular persons for special purposes; but that these will surpass everthing which has happened in all the ages of the past requires considerable imagination, and withal rather a practical temperament. The mind must be "in a fine frenzy rolling."

An officer of the Independence Stake, in conversing with the writer upon the question of the gifts continuing after perfection, remarked: "We will no more need these gifts, than I will need these spectacles on my nose." I think he was right.

TURN ON THE LIGHT.

Having noticed in a late HERALD an article under the caption, "Do the gifts cease as we attain towards perfection," and in a later issue "a reply" to the above-mentioned article, in which the writer seemed to convey the idea that the gifts would cease as we attained to perfection, to which we do not agree; and though we have found an answer to the reply in a still later issue, sufficient light has not been turned on the subject as yet, according to our view of the scriptures regarding those matters. And as we believe in making all matters clear by comparing them with the law and the testimony, we wish to consider the subject carefully, from a scriptural standpoint. And when we do this we will readily see that the gifts do not cease as we reach perfection,—but that they are made more apparent.

The injunction given by the Christ was, "Be ye perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect." And he again says, "these signs shall follow them that believe." (Mark 16:17.) And in Acts 2:39, we read, "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, . . . even as many as the Lord our God shall call," the promise being to all who have faith in God, it must undoubtedly abide with us though we attain to perfection.

God and Christ are perfect, and they have not ceased to work wonders nor to perform miracles; and if we are to seek to be perfect as he is, we will undoubtedly retain enough of his Spirit to perform miracles in his name. Therefore let us know that it is not as we attain to perfection that the gifts will cease; but, to the contrary, it is when we dwindle in unbelief that the gifts of the Spirit are done away; and in support of this we cite as a proof-text the language of Moroni:

And that all these gifts of which I have spoken, which are spiritual, never will be done away, even so long as the world shall stand, only according to the unbelief of the children of men. . . . And now I speak unto all the ends of the earth, that if the day cometh that the power and gifts of God shall be done away among you, it shall be because of unbelief.—Moroni 10:1, 2.

By an examination of the scriptures we must conclude that the gifts of God shall continue to exist in the church as long as time shall last, if we have faith in him and live according to his law. Again we read:

For it is by faith that miracles are wrought; . . . wherefore if these things have ceased, woe be unto the children of men, for it is because of unbelief, and all is vain.—Moroni 7:4.

In view of all this, let us conclude that the gifts are to be found wherever the people have faith in God, and that they increase rather than diminish as we attain to perfection through the gospel of Jesus Christ. Let us search the scriptures and do according to that which is written in the perfect law.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

SANDY, Utah, July 22, 1905.

WHO SHOULD BE BAPTIZED?

In this day it seems to me there is not enough attention given to the qualifications of subjects for baptism. It seems to me some of our elders are too anxious to baptize the people. It shows up on paper; but I would rather baptize one who is prepared for it than a thousand who are not prepared.

Who are proper subjects for baptism, according to the Holy Scriptures? Jesus said to his apostles, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."—Mark 16:15. In Matthew Jesus said, "Go ye therefore, teach all nations." We understand that to preach the gospel, and to teach as above referred to, mean the same thing. The question is, What are the essential prerequisites to baptism?

We take the position that people should be taught in the fundamental principles of the gospel, which are, faith in God the Father, his Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, which is one God; they should be taught repentance and baptism, the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, also resurrection of the dead and eternal judgment. Not only is it essential that the people be taught these principles, but they should comply with the law that precedes baptism, and it should be made manifest that they have complied with the prerequisites to baptism by showing that they have received of the Spirit "unto the remission of their sins." (Doctrine and Covenants 17:7.)

When a person has so complied with the prerequisites to baptism, being baptized by a legal administrator, they without any exception receive the remission of their sins when baptized, and are born of water. If they have not been taught all things concerning the church of Christ to the capacity of their understanding, they should be so taught before receiving the laying on of hands for confirmation. (See Doctrine and Covenants, 17:18.) All persons who are so taught in connection with their baptism surely receive the Holy Ghost through the laying on of hands, being confirmed by a legal administrator. Because such persons are sons and daughters of God, God sends his Spirit into their hearts, crying "Abba Father." Such persons are sealed unto the day of the redemption of their bodies. Such persons have oil in their vessels with their lamps. They are the wise virgins.

Now, let us look at the other side of the subject. An elder goes out and preaches the gospel to the people. They believe it to be true. The elder is anxious to baptize them. He insists upon their being baptized. A lot of them come to him for various causes or reasons, and he baptizes them. They have not repented. The elder did not require the legal evidence that he might know that they had repented; but he was anxious to baptize. It shows up well on paper, you know. Well, what are the consequences? The people who were unprepared for baptism did not receive the remission of their sins when they were baptized, because they were not prepared, not having complied with the prerequisites to baptism. Then without being taught, as the law requires in Doctrine and Covenants 17:18, the elder lays his hands upon them (they just having been baptized), and prays, and says they are confirmed. But, are they? No, because they have not received the remission of their sins, not having repented; and hence they could not receive the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, no matter who did the laying on of hands. As a result they are but nominal members in the church,—sinners in a worse condition than they were before they came into the church. They are a burden, and the church is a prison to them. How hard it is to govern such members! It is because they have not the Spirit of the Lord in their hearts. If they had it would make them love to do right. I am sorry to say, that according to their fruits we have many just such members in the church to-day. And I have decided that I will not do any more baptizing unless I am satisfied that the subjects presenting themselves are scriptural subjects; that is, that they have complied with the prerequisites to baptism.

To baptize those who are unprepared is one way in which we can build upon the foundation, wood, hay, and stubble, to be burned when the Master comes to judge and reward us according to our works.

The only way subjects may be prepared for baptism is to have the gospel preached in its fullness, with power and demonstration of the Spirit of God, and leave the result with God and the people, and wait until the people bring forth fruits meet for repentance.

Let us do what God has said; do it just as he has told us to do it; and he will give the increase. Let us not think we are doing no good unless we can report a long list of baptisms. I will close this article by saying that we need more practical preaching and less theory. We need more praying and preaching to the point. We need more living to the point; then God will bless and prosper us in our work; and then we will have a grand revival of vital godliness. Let us try it a while, fellow-laborers.

Yours in the conflict till the battle is over,
E. W. NUNLEY.

In SAINTS' HERALD, July 12, I find that the “Answers” I gave to the questions asked by Bro. F. R. Tubb, viz.: “That the Spirit of God and the Holy Ghost are one and the same,” are not satisfactory to his mind. I gave in evidence the word of the best witness to my mind that any person could demand who has any confidence in the word of God or of his son, Jesus Christ, and also confidence in the record of the beloved disciple, John.

The great trouble with the brother, to my mind, from the reading of the whole of his article, is that he is still encumbered with the old style of sectarian spectacles. I thank God that I never was encumbered with them. For comparatively but a few years had passed from the time when, with the balance of the children with whom I used to make mud pies, I became acquainted with this truth, the latter-day work, which indelibly impressed upon my mind the unchangeable nature of God, and that the words of command which passed from him to his servants the prophets, or from him through his beloved Son, Jesus, who declared he only spoke such things as he had received from the Father, are true and unchangeable. And I thank God that the same confidence in his word remains with me still, now that I am passing through in this life my eightieth year, backed up now as it is with so many demonstrations of its truth, made manifest to my mind as I have made the journey through to the present time. I am also fully persuaded that the promises made by Jesus to his disciples prior to his departure to the Father are also true and faithful. The brother states: “I have followed with the greatest care and attention the . . . controversy in the current issue of the HERALD with the result that I find myself wholly unable to subscribe to the thesis advanced . . . that the Spirit of God and the Holy Ghost given of God through the laying on of hands by the elders are one and the same thing.” And the reason the brother gives for his position is simply, “I can not understand how the gift and the Giver can be possibly, and as a matter of course, one and the same thing.” This discloses to my mind the great care and attention with which the brother was exercised when he read; for such a position as he describes is not in the quotation I gave.

We will endeavor as best we can to analyze the quotation. I wish, however, first to notify the brother that I do not profess to be an analytical scholar. It is true in my childhood days I learned to read and write. It is also true that in those days my mother would get me across her knees and endeavor to impress her teachings upon me as best she could, with the result that when I began to be about eleven years old I was promoted to the mortar-heap to carry upon my head a board loaded with mortar for the use of the bricklayers, which flattened my skull, and it has not yet got over it. At the age of fourteen I was permitted to begin to learn to sling the trowel, and I finally graduated as a bricklayer; so that the brother with his superior qualifications must not expect too much from me in the educational line. I do not intend to introduce passages of scripture to overburden the brother's mind, after discovering how he reads them, but merely to see if I can straighten him out a little upon the heretofore quoted word uttered by our Master, Jesus, who said, "I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting."—John 12:49, 50. By reading the chapter I find that Jesus was speaking to the people assembled there. I find then: 1. Jesus, the Son, was the person speaking. 2. The Father who had sent the Son was the person spoken of. 3. The people assembled were the ones spoken to. Jesus further told the people: "Whatsoever I speak, therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak." Here, then, was the rule of action upon which, or under which, Jesus worked while upon earth. We will pass on again now to John 14:15-17, 26: In this Jesus is also the first person speaking, there are two persons spoken of, and the twelve apostles were the persons spoken to. Jesus said:

If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. . . . But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.

Again, see John 16:7-15:

Nevertheless I tell you the truth; It is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you. . . . Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth; for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak; and he will show you things to come. He shall glorify me; for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you. All things that the Father hath are mine: therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shall show it unto you.

These quotations emphasized as I have done ought to be sufficient to convince any one professing to believe that Jesus is the Son of God, that he in giving his last instructions to his apostles prior to his crucifixion taught them nothing but truth, and that truth embraces, not two personages but three, the three personages of the Godhead: God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost. They are all one in the perpetuation of truth, as they for whom Jesus prayed, who might believe in the teachings of those the apostles whom Jesus sent, might be one with them. I have presented but little more scriptural evidence upon the proposition, believing that if the brother has any confidence in the word of the second person in the Godhead he had better get the ideas, given above, through his mind, then he will be better able to pursue the study of other things.

But the brother now asks another question: "What but the Spirit of God led us to seek the baptism of water in the very first instance?" I answer, Nothing. There is a passage in the King James Translation which arises in my mind which reads about like this as the words of Jesus, No man can come unto the Father, except the Father draw him. How will he draw him? By his Spirit of course. Sometimes through the individual reading the word of God; sometimes by conversations upon the things of the kingdom with individuals who have learned the truth; sometimes, yes, more often, through the preaching of the word by an authorized servant of God, when he shall preach under the influence of the Spirit of truth and not from a sheet of paper; sometimes by letters written to friends. But the brother has got it into his head that the Spirit of God can not operate upon a man's mind unless he gets inside of him, no matter how foul the person may be. The word says, No. The word also says that the Spirit of God can not dwell in unholy temples. No, my brother, the Spirit of God will not enter into a man and dwell there unless he has been purged from his sins, by the operation of God's law, by turning away from his evil ways and being cleansed by passing through the waters of regeneration. He is then in a proper condition to receive the Spirit of God, as an indwelling monitor, in God's appointed way.

We will, as an illustration, fix up a little parable: Bro. Tubb has a friend in England that he has a great feeling of sympathy for, and he writes that friend a letter in the fullness of his soul looking to that friend's benefit, telling him how glad he would be if that friend would come out to Canada and better his condition, telling him of the vast amount of land there is in the Dominion of Canada waiting for such as he to come out and possess. This letter reaches its destination, the friend becomes interested, that is, he imbibes the spirit of it, comes out and prepares to occupy. Now, I wish to ask the brother, Did your own individual spirit go out of your body and enter into the body of your friend across the ocean and draw him to Canada? I think I hear you say, Of course not; that is an absurdity. It was then your sympathetic mode of expression in your letter which drew him. Well, upon the same grounds, can not the Spirit of God operate upon the minds of men by the means I enumerated above, and draw mankind to an obedience to his will with as great effect,—yea, far greater than your letter did upon the mind of your friend? Your friend, being a citizen of England, I presume could take up Canadian land. But if he should conclude, after looking over the country, that in his own judgment, together with information gathered during his travels, he would rather take up land farther south, in Uncle Sam's dominion, as he had become convinced there were diversified chances there to get along in the world, and enjoy life better than he could so far north, could he go there and take up his land and obtain the benefits of the United States Government? Why, yes, provided that he go before a properly authorized officer of the United States and renounce his allegiance to the government of England, and enter into a solemn covenant to support and defend the government of the United States against all her enemies. He can then enter his land and receive all the benefits of citizenship, and finally receive his full papers of citizenship. Thus it is with the law of God. His law must be obeyed by the alien in its first principles, by renouncing obedience to Satan's government, and covenanting with God in the waters of baptism to keep his law; and this entitles him to citizenship in the kingdom of God; and finally he receives the seal of his adoption as the law of God has provided; and then he is entitled, if faithful, to the inward workings of the Spirit of God, the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, to assist him to overcome the evils of this life, to bring to his remembrance in time of need the things which have been implanted in his mind by the hearing, reading, and study of God's word and other good books, calculated to build him up in the most holy faith, and assist him to defend his cause against all the inroads of the enemy, and show him things to come, and enable him to hold fast in the faith to the end of his probation here, and eventually receive from our Master the welcome plaudit, "Well done."

I began to feel that I must close, but I find that my brother has raised another question which I must notice: "What then about the thousands—nay, the tens of thousands—who, in every land and clime, are being slowly but surely led out of Idumea, or the world, to the baptismal gate into the promised land of Zion, the city of solemnities? Are they, too, 'of the world,' and unholy temples in God's sight, when, at the very moment, his own Holy Spirit is leading them 'upward, onward, and heavenward'? I hardly think so."

I would have been much pleased if the brother had told us who was doing this extensive proselyting business in "every land and clime." It certainly is not the authorized servants of God, for they are not yet sent into every land and clime, neither are they in any part of the world, that I have heard or read of, bringing their thousands, to say nothing of their tens of thousands, into the "fold of God;" some other power is doing that proselyting. And I am well satisfied that under present conditions if a duly and properly authorized servant of God were sent into those countries and should undertake to preach the pure gospel of Christ, that servant of God would have to go with his life in his hands. I could give you a quotation from the words of Jesus that exactly fits such a case, but under present conditions I refrain, praying God that you may be brought to realize that not all is gold that glitters, and also that your mind may be finally brought to realize the fact that in order to obtain the privilege of dwelling with God in the eternities, the "fixed and rigid" lines of demarkation in the straight and narrow way, marked out by Jesus the Prince of Peace, must be followed in all of its details, or we must take some other mansion in the Father's house, outside of the one Jesus told his disciples he was going to prepare for them, and for all those who should believe on him through their teachings, that they all may be one even as he and his Father are one. No, my brother, I will not cease to sing:

"With joy we remember
The dawn of that day,
When, led by the Spirit
The truth to obey,
The light dawned upon us,
And filled us with love;
The Spirit's sure witness,
Sent down from above."

Your brother for the one faith,
WILLIAM HAWKINS.

THE NAME "MORMONISM" REPUDIATED.

There are things which are not necessary to our existence but necessary to our progress; things which are not necessary to our salvation but necessary to our happiness. There may be many in this church who enjoy the epithet "Mormonism," but to a portion of its members, at least, it is obnoxious and uncivil.

If we examine into the composition and constitution of man, we discover there is no period in life when his love for virtue and purity ceases to act. The mutual dependence and reciprocal interests which man has upon man regulates the progress of truth.

These advantages may be shattered by insults or preserved by politeness and reverence. Sometimes bravery and discretion go apart. Mere zeal with no ingenuity to direct it goes blindfolded. We are living in an age when skepticism is the crowning wreath of intellectual progress; when but few things are fully accepted till clearly demonstrated.

If a man claims to be a Mormon, then prove it by what you preach and do. If you are called such, and repudiate it, then prove that you have a right to the privilege.

Bancroft says that polygamy is a tenet of the Mormon church. This being true; then I am not a Mormon, because polygamy is a debasing sin.

None of the foremost nations practiced polygamy. Civilization can not fully exist only under the highest principles of morality. People who possess personal pride can not be approached by religious ideas which contradict the moral laws of Nature.

Being satisfied that Nature is God's own production, I prefer to accept it to any book or pretended revelation. The Koran is full of pretended revelations which teach polygamy and immorality, but to the decent it is a beastly abomination.

Brigham Young's polygamous revelation is an offense to society. Physiological science pronounces it a curse to the race. Retrogression follows its degrading practice. It is a relic of barbarism, and has been discarded and legislated against. When a profession carries a religious distinction that shakes the moral pride of the Christian world it deserves universal contempt.

Many Latter Day Saints resent being called "a Mormon," and every time they do so, it certainly lifts them higher in the scale of honor and respect. If there are any of our people who take delight in being denominated "a Mormon," they should desist long enough to make a few inquiries.

What does the term "a Mormon" imply? If you are particularly attached to the title, you should have some reason. Mormon was an individual, and so far as we can learn of him, was a devout follower of Christ; but who gave us the authority to assume his name?

The most important significance it holds at large is that it has been transformed into a vulgar phrase, and almost invariably when used it satisfies that purpose.

When Mormon lived, if the custom prevailed as now, his offspring were called by his name. A son of Mormon would rightfully be called a Mormon. I am an Atwell because my father's name was Atwell. People who have no legal claim to the title can only assume it.

When we call ourselves Mormons we make a breach of honor by adopting an assumed name. The name Mormon belongs to him, and his posterity, and to none else.

The meaning of words change, and while the ancient Mormon was a title of honor, to-day it has been transformed into a painful reproach against God and religion. The Bible, Book of Mormon, nor any other ancient book, informs us of the existence of a sect or religion called Mormons or Mormonism. Those who offend the church to-day by applying Mormonism to a chaste class of Christian believers emphasize the folly of a mistaken or perverse zeal.

Do you admire the name Mormon from the point of his individual excellence, or because of the purity of his teachings? If for the first reason, could not you improve the means of godly distinction by substituting Christ and insist upon the name Christian? If for the latter cause, please remember that Mormon preached nothing peculiar to himself. What he advocated was simply a rehearsal of what had been taught him by the Master and he promulgated it in common with the ministry of his time.

Mormon, Alma, and Jacob each wrote a book equally important; and if through a love for American antiquity you are persuaded to adopt the name of some sacred writer, why could not the name be Alma or Jacob? Alma could be pronounced with more grace than Mormon and the term Jacob would be free from the odium of the common one.

Mormonism when applied to this church is a nickname. When we see the necessity of using one, let Mosiah, Samuel, or some other distinction be used.

Some of our people are embarrassed by the delusion that the work suffers when the name "Mormon" is repudiated,—that an evil influence is brought to bear against the Book of Mormon. If the book contains a system of polygamy, lascivious ceremonies, and wicked debaucheries, it would necessarily have to be paraded with a zeal unconscious of its internal seductions, and with a sedulity indifferent to dishonor or death.

We have reached an age, however, where the success of no movement depends upon sincerity alone. Reason is stronger than zeal, and facts are more powerful than swords, and the popularity of the Book of Mormon does not depend upon the recommendation of its believers. The book argues its own case. It is capable of credibly representing itself; and, instead of being a client, it is the attorney for its believers.

Why is it necessary to brand this work with the stigma "Mormon" in the vain attempt to give the word popularity? It is folly to think that the church or the book needs support of this kind.

Why use such methods to defend a book which is destined to become the scientific vindication of all true sacred books—a book embellished and illuminated with the purest principles, which feed our moral sentiments, add to the strength of every virtue, and awaken within the human nature divine respect and tenderness?

If we assent to being called a Mormon, we express an implication and inflict death to impartial and just inquiry. Disgust is created prior to an examination of our message, and our point is lost through the force of passion and prejudice over the public.

Glad Tidings of October 15, 1901, together with a number of other authorities to which I could refer, states that "Lorenzo Snow was the fifth president of the Mormon church." His successorship was in line with Brigham Young, the founder of the Mormon church.

It is a well-known fact that Young founded an independent church controlled by a system peculiar to himself. If it was not the Mormon church, then please inform me what church it was. The original meaning of the word Mormon has been effected by these historical contingencies.

From his contemporaries, the reader learns that the ancient Mormon was a virtuous, honorable, spiritual man, and had unwavering faith and unflinching firmness been maintained by the Mormon class of his pretended followers of our day, no opprobrium would obstruct its luster.

Webster defines "Catholicism" as originally meaning "the faith of the whole orthodox Christian church, or adherence thereto," but now in popular usage, it is limited to the Roman Catholic Church, and recent historical writers have described her as being "the devil in robes."

Catholic orthodoxy, once the expression of the highest honor and purity, has lost its grandeur. The modern definition of the word Catholic is not what it was anciently. The history of the church claiming the title has disgraced the name, and to-day all Protestantism ignores and repudiates it, not because of the name, but because its historical record has revealed the shameful purposes for which it has been used.

There is not a Protestant minister who cares to perpetuate the distinction by applying it to himself.

Likewise, the name "Mormon" has fallen into general disrepute, and is repudiated by those who have gained an intelligent view of the case.—E. T. Atwell in Glad Tidings.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

The Heart of God.

There is no love like the love of Jesus,
Never to fade or fall,
Till into the fold of the peace of God
He has gathered us all.

There is no heart like the heart of Jesus,
Filled with a tender lore;
Not a throb or throe our hearts can know
But he suffered before.

There is no voice like the voice of Jesus;
Ah! how sweet its chime,
Like the musical ring of some rushing spring
In the summer-time!

Oh, might we listen that voice of Jesus!
Oh, might we never roam,
Till our souls should rest, in peace, on his breast,
In the heavenly home!—W. E. Littlewood.

Dear Sisters: I have thought almost every week of this new year that I must write some for the Home Column. I find thinking of doing a thing is of little use, if we do not go about it and accomplish or carry out our thoughts by works.

I arrived at Cody, Wyoming, the 17th of December, 1904. Started from Schoolcraft, Michigan, December 14.

I can truly say I never can remember a winter like this. The 11th and 12th of February it was the coldest that it has been since I came here, and some who have lived here six years say they never saw it as cold before. Twenty-seven degrees below zero was what the thermometer registered, but it did not seem as cold as that would indicate,—not any colder than at ten degrees in Michigan.

Cody is in a place that looks much like an immense basin. I am told that it is three and one half miles to the foot of the nearest mountain; but it does not look a fourth of a mile distant. Look whatever way you will, you can see mountains: on the west the Rattlesnake and Cedar, on the north the Harte Mountains. There are benches or table-lands on the south and east.

This is not a very good place for one to come that intends to take care of the sick; for good health is quite the order of the day. I am not anxious to have people sick so I can take care of them, and I have now lived in Cody over four months and have only attended one funeral; and have only seen three sick people. My health is much improved since coming here. I had just recovered from la grippe when I started; but am feeling as well now as I have in five years.

I enjoy the weekly visits of the HERALD more than I can tell you. It gets here Saturday night so I have it to read on Sunday. I would not advise any to come here unless they had at least a few hundred dollars to begin with. I can not see as much difference in places as some people do.

I firmly believe that God does not make any more "paradises." Some things may be better here than elsewhere: yet the manifold blessings of God are in every place, if we only have a realizing sense of his goodness and mercy to help us to appreciate and enjoy the blessings we have. May the love of God rest on all for whom we should pray, is the humble prayer of,

Your sister in Christ,

CODY, Wyoming, April 28, 1905.

MINERVA HISCOCK.

P. S.—Sisters, let us try to help more in the Home Column. I believe there are many that could write much better letters than I can, if they would only try. But I mean to do the best I can, trusting that God will help me to do some good while I remain in the world.

There will always be something to trouble and annoy us, if we do not rise above the trouble and annoyance by trusting all things in the hands of our Father in heaven.

Let us fear to displease God, and let us keep his commandments.

Come, Ye Disconsolate.

Come, ye disconsolate, where'er ye languish;
Come to the mercy seat, fervently kneel;
Here bring your wounded hearts, here tell your anguish;
Earth has no sorrow that heaven can not heal.

Joy of the desolate, light of the straying,
Hope of the penitent, fadeless and pure,
Here speaks the Comforter, tenderly saying,
"Earth has no sorrow that heaven can not cure."

Here see the bread of life; see waters flowing
Forth from the throne of God, pure from above;
Come to the feast of love; come, ever knowing Earth has no sorrow but heaven can remove.

—Thomas Moore.

Soul-Saving.

"Every soul we have led to the foot of the cross,
Every lamb we have brought to the fold,
Will be kept as bright jewels our crown to adorn,
In that beautiful city of gold."

If we would have our crown to glisten with bright jewels in that great day, we must not neglect the important part of our duty—for it is every Christian's duty to strive to save every soul over which he has influence. For no matter who or what is their condition in life their souls are just as precious to our God as is our own. And while it may seem that we will never be able to reach some, persistent, prayerful patience will seldom fail, and success will add another bright jewel to your crown.

In a little village, at the close of a beautiful day sorrow came to one mother's heart when her only son, a noble lad, was cruelly (it seemed to her) taken from her by the hand of death, and the shock to her frail, loving heart was too much, and it seemed for a time that reason would give way. Loving hearts and hands did all they could to comfort her; but no comfort could she find. The dear man of God tried to point her to Jesus, with the hope of meeting her dear one once more. "No," the rebellious heart cried, "never say God is good, for there is no God; if so I hate him as a cruel, unjust God to take my one treasure from me and leave others so many. My one wee lamb! Never speak to me of Jesus again!"

Then by spells the poor, tired, weary heart would try to pray as of old (for she had been a Christian before her trial came.) But, no, the very gates of heaven seemed closed against her.

Friends became, in part, tired and disgusted with her comfortless grief, and left her to her sorrow. But not so with the patient man of God (though he was nearly a stranger to her before her sorrow). Prayerfully, patiently, he tried to guide her feet back to the narrow path from which she had wandered, oh, so far, but with little success. And yet, little by little, day by day, month after month, and year after year he patiently struggled to save this poor soul.

Sometimes a little clipping with words of comfort; then again a helpful book. Sometimes only a firm hand-clasp that meant strength for the weary heart; then again a short visit with a tender prayer for strength for the one that was battling alone; and in many other ways compelling as it were, the burdened heart to lean on the "Everlasting Arm," that was so willing to help bear the great burden.

Still the poor heart struggled on alone, fighting a battle between doubt and skepticism to hope and trust in God. Still patiently did God's servant wait and watch for the change he felt must come. After three years of prayerful patience, he was rewarded by hearing the mother's voice in prayer-meeting sing the song her lips had refused to utter so long. Then when her testimony was given, "Yea, though he slay me, yet will I trust in him," a wave of thankfulness swept over the heart that had faithfully toiled for this end. Though he knew her trials were not at an end, and days of rebellion would come, still he was assured that the final triumph over all would be this poor soul's at last; that the gospel light had entered her darkened life and heart; and some day from that heart she too could say, "Thy will be done."

And did not God look down on this long, faithful, persistent effort (of saving this one weary soul) with approval, for was not this poor mother's soul as dear to him as the soul of a king or prince? Let us then strive more earnestly to patiently, faithfully, and prayerfully bring the "wandering one in."

PRISCILLA.

There are times when the truest-hearted disciple is depressed because of his sense of weakness; weakness of body or of mind or of spirit, or of all three together. Then it is that the Bible promise comes with peculiar cheer: "The Lord . . . fainteth not, neither is weary. . . . He giveth power to the faint; and to him that hath no might he increaseth strength." And then it is that the believer can know what it is to glory in his weakness, in order that the strength of Christ may rest upon him, and be shown in him. If it were not for our hours of depression, we should lose our hours of highest exaltation. Unless we were cast down, we could never joy in being lifted up by our Lord.

Prayer Union.

I write to ask you to be so kind as to pray for my daughter, Mrs. Bertie Wise. She is afflicted with nervousness. Her afflictions are great, but she is perfectly resigned to the Lord's will. She has been administered to and got relief, but is not well; and if it is not the dear Lord's will to help her soon I fear she will not be with us long. She has been troubled with this nervousness for five or six years, and it is a great affliction.

Love.

When you sum up the year
With its glory of leaves,
Its seed-time and harvest,
Its buds and its sheaves;—
When you get to December,
You sing the same tune
That 'twas sweet to remember
And carol, in June.

From the day of your youth
To the day of white age,
Through the book of your life
To the very last page,
When comes a great angel
The "Finis" to write,
The same true evangel
Is aye your delight.

There be those who will tell you
Of jewels and gold,
Of investments, a story
Of wonder unfold.
One dividend never Will fail to impart
The self-same wealth ever,
To dower the heart.

Let the spring zephyrs blow,
Or the winter winds howl.
Let fortune smile blandly
Or sullen fate scowl.
From June to December,
What sky arch above,
To life's very last ember,
Life's crowning is LOVE.—Selected.

SR. J. A. SAXE, superintendent of the Northern California District Sunday-school association, writes under date of July 17: "Our district work is progressing. Two new schools have been organized and one other drawn into greater activity. We hope soon to report the revival of another school."

Report from the South.

Bro. Frederick A. Smith in charge of the work in the South writes from Bald Knob, Arkansas, under date of July 27: "I beg to report to you as Superintendent of the General Sunday-school Association, that there have been two Sunday-schools organized in my field in the past quarter, one in Oklahoma and one in Texas. I do not have the names of either places or schools. . . . I am on my way west to attend the reunion at Terlton, Oklahoma. Have spent the last two months in Kentucky and Tennessee. There is only one school in that district now running but we hope to have more in a short time. . . .

"There is a real nice lively school here at this place, under the superintendency of Bro. E. P. Johnson; Bro. William J. Edwards, assistant superintendent. They have four classes with an enrollment of about thirty-five. Sr. Johnson is an active worker in the Sunday-school. The branch is known as the Shady Grove Branch, but as yet they have given no name to the Sunday-school. There are some of the scholars to be baptized Sunday. They have never joined the association but use the Quarterlies, etc.

"There is a sister at Murray, Kentucky, that has a little Sunday-school or home class that is working fine. She has her own children, and as a rule some of the neighbors come in and join with them and they study and recite the lesson in the Intermediate Quarterly. She opens the session with prayer and closes with prayer, with songs, and the reciting of verses. This sister's name is Cook, Sr. E. P. Cook. There is no branch there so she has her Sunday-school lesson and seeks by that method to keep her children in the work."

We are very glad to learn of the good work being done under less favorable conditions than many of us are placed. Sr. Cook is certainly taking the right course in doing her duty to her children. If all parents would do likewise, those especially who are isolated from the church and Sunday-school, there would be fewer of our children failing to come into and remaining in the work. She will have done our duty in this respect, at least, and it seems that there could be little doubt but that she would have reasons to rejoice in the results of her efforts. May the good Lord add his blessing to all who are earnestly striving to do their whole duty.

What Constitutes a Sunday-School.—No. 3.

THE PRAYER.

The opening prayer usually follows the opening song. It may seem that little could be said about the prayer, though upon further consideration you will readily see that much is to be noted concerning it.

WHO SHOULD OFFER THE PRAYER?

Usually the superintendent, but it may be any one whom he may call upon. It should be previously understood who is to pray, and the party should be at the stand, as to offer the prayer from some place in the audience seems awkward and in bad form. This will apply equally well to the benediction.

KIND OF PRAYER.

The prayer should be quite short, and in very simple language, such as the little children will understand. You can not expect children to be quiet and heed that which they can not understand. We want them to comprehend the prayer, and that they may do this it must be very simple.

Make it brief and to the point. Pray for what you need at the opening of the Sunday-school. It is not necessary to pray for all and everything at the opening of the Sunday-school. This all has its time and place, but it is not here. In this respect we so often make a serious mistake. Our prayers may be earnest enough and from the bottom of the heart, but may not be the prayer needed. The Sunday-school prayer should be very simple, very short, and very earnest.

A SUGGESTION.

When you call upon some one to offer the prayer, in your invitation make the suggestion that he offer "a few words of prayer," or a "short prayer," or in some other way preclude the idea of a long prayer. Less often will you get extra long prayers if these precautions are taken.

THE ATTITUDE.

Shall we stand or kneel? If all would or could kneel, it would be much the better, we think. But from the fact that not all can or will kneel, and all will stand when requested to do so, it seems much preferable to use this latter position. But let all stand with heads bowed and eyes closed. Request all to do so, and have the teachers see that their classes are careful to observe the order. A little care and time are all that is necessary to make this order a success.

REPEATING THE LORD'S PRAYER.

Many of the schools, in fact a large majority of them, follow the custom of repeating in concert the Lord's prayer at the close of the regular prayer. It is a nice concert exercise, and we think the practice a very good one. It gets some in the habit of praying in public, a thing that some of them could not hitherto do. It is well to use it a part of the time and omit it a part of the time. No invariable rule need be established about it.

PRAYER IN THE CLASSES.

Many teachers of primary classes teach the little ones to pray in the class-work. Where separate rooms are had, or curtains used to separate the classes, this is entirely practical and should be done. However, this is a matter that each teacher must determine about for her own class.

A Broken-up Class.

Dear Teachers: One Sunday last year I was visiting a Bible school in a town not far from my home, and the superintendent said to me at the beginning of the lesson hour, "Would you be willing to sit with those three boys over there by the rear door of the vestry? Their teacher is not here to-day, and I am afraid that they will go out if some one does not sit with them."

He took me over to the boys and introduced me to them, and when I sat down beside them I said, "Are there but three boys in this class?"

"That's about all there have been of late," replied one of the boys. "There are twelve names on the class-book, and we used to have that many here some Sundays; but we never have but three or four any more, and I guess we won't have that many long."

"Why, what is breaking up your class?" I asked.

"Well, I guess it is the teacher," replied one of the boys with a laugh.

"How can that be?"

"By not coming more than half the time. Us fellers don't care to come here Sunday after Sunday and not have a teacher. When Miss B was our teacher she never missed a Sunday, rain or shine, and we nearly always had all of the twelve boys here. Now we haven't had the whole class here for three or four months. If the teacher would come all of the time I guess the boys would be here all right."

I give this as an illustration of what very often happens when the teacher is irregular in attendance at Sunday-school. The superintendent told me later that he feared that the boy was right, and that the decline in the average attendance of the class was due to the absence of the teacher about half of the time.

I believe that most of you will agree with me when I say that about the best way to break up a class in the Sunday-school is for the teacher to absent himself or herself about every other Sunday. It is natural that the members of the class should say: "What is the use of us coming if our teacher is not here?"

I have, during the many years of my experience in the Sunday-school, seen more than one class decline in points of interest and attendance because of the irregular attendance of the teacher. Note, if you will, the difference between the classes of the teacher who is "always there" and the teacher who is "hardly ever there." You will find the difference to be very marked indeed.

Nothing gladdens the heart of a superintendent more than to look over his school at the beginning of the opening exercises and see every teacher in his or her place. When a superintendent sees this Sunday after Sunday it cheers and strengthens him, for he knows that the interest in the school will be sustained, and that good work will be done. Good work can not be done with one third of the teachers absent every Sunday. If you want your boys and girls to keep up their interest in the school and to be present every Sunday, you must be there yourself.—A Superintendent, in New Century Teachers' Monthly.

The Surprise Party.

The glorious "Fourth" opened fair and pleasant with anvils booming, firecrackers being in the ascendancy. But a few Latter Day Saints assembled at eight o'clock at Bro. Metz', where rigs were in waiting to take us out to Bro. Lloyd's—two miles in the country—to celebrate his sixty-third birthday, Bro. Metz' kindly laying aside his cornfield for the day to take out a wagon-load, and enjoy the day with us. Bro. Budd, living in the country, thought he could not afford to lose the time, as we had five teams plowing. He asked his sons what they thought. They were willing to stay at home and work. We need not comment on the dutifulness of children. Such are few and far between. But the nearer the time came, the more uneasy Bro. Budd became, and who should we see at ten o'clock but Bro. Budd with his wife and seven children; and, as he expressed himself in the aftermath, in the shape of a prayer- and testimony-meeting, he "felt well paid for coming," the tears trickling down his cheeks under the influence of the Spirit.

But to go back. The first hack-load of eight drove up in front of the gate, halted, and commenced singing "Zion's City," while another load from Lebeck met us there, and Bro. George Beebe, Jr., had his book from his pocket in a jiffy, they joining in the song. My eyes are wet even now while writing of it. Oh, the joy we find in this gospel!

As we drove into the yard, Bro. Lloyd emerged from the barn and came up with a look on his face hard to describe, it being both wonder and surprise.

"You weren't looking for so much company, were you, Bro. Lloyd?"

"Well, no! But I guess it's all right."

But when we wished him a joyous birthday, with many happy returns, his countenance lighted up with pleasure as he began to understand what it all meant.

As one carriage-load after another came, unloading its human freight with their suspicious-looking bundles, pails, and boxes, he disappeared, but soon returned in a "spick-and-span" white shirt and other necessary appendages.

Ice-cream and lemonade were soon in order, and after being dealt out to about fifty, dinner was soon on the tapis. Bro. Waterman was all the time flying here and there—not quite like a hen with her head off, for he knew just what he wanted to do, just how to do it, and he made a success of it. I believe we may give him and wife the honor of getting up the party, and giving us such an enjoyable day.

After dinner came the prayer-meeting. While Bro. Lloyd was out looking after things at the barn, Bro. W. gathered the crowd into two rooms, and as Bro. Lloyd came in from the barn, another surprise awaited him. He was halted in the door while Bro. W. read an address to him:

"AN ADDRESS TO BRO. ABNER LLOYD.

"We, the undersigned, citizens of Eldorado and vicinity, also the members of the church of which you are the esteemed pastor, do unite to tender you our congratulations on the return of your birthday, also the anniversary of the independence of our great country, 'The United States of America.'

"We are glad to recognize in you a 'worthy citizen,' whose character for honesty and truthfulness stands unquestioned. In business, your word is as good as your bond! As a minister, kind and pitiful, and a defender of truth and right. We are glad to indorse the choice of your denomination at their late conference, where you were chosen president of the Clinton District. We wish you God-speed, and a long and useful life. [Signed by our city mayor, bankers, and leading citizens, with all the Saints present.]"

Our pastor was speechless; so his son Walter, seeing how he was affected, made a nice little talk in the name of his parents. After his talk, his father, having "found his tongue," replied with many expressions of gratitude.

Then prayer-meeting closed with "America," and each departed, feeling much happier than if the day had been spent in the noise of the bustling crowd.

MRS. M. J. PHIPPS-JONES.

ELDORADO SPRINGS, MISSOURI, 1905.

HAGERMAN, Idaho, July 25, 1905.

Editors Herald: I arrived here on the 21st inst. after an all night's ride, young Bro. Guy Condit meeting me at Bliss Station; and by private conveyance we came to this place—distance ten miles—in time to attend a session of the Sunday-school association being held in the grove. The meeting was in charge of Mrs. Addie and Millie and Bro. Irvin Condit; and was successfully conducted, an active interest being taken by those present. The weather was excessively hot and dry, the shady grove being a pleasant retreat from the burning heat out on the sandy plains.

At evening Bro. A. J. Layland preached a good discourse along gospel lines to an attentive audience.

Saturday, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, the district conference convened, Brn. S. D. and J. H. Condit and A. J. Layland, of the general ministry, being present.

During the day the business of the conference was transacted in an orderly and satisfactory manner, unity of sentiment and feeling prevailing. No changes in organization were effected except Bro. Durfee was recommended for Bishop's agent, to take the place of Bro. James Jennings, who thinks to return east. The evening hour was occupied by the writer with an attentive audience present.

Sunday, 23d, the forenoon was devoted to a prayer- and sacrament-meeting. The Saints were active in the service, and enjoyed the session. In the afternoon, Bro. J. H. Condit preached a forceful discourse on the second coming of Christ, to attentive listeners. The evening was occupied again by the writer.

The conference was an interesting one all the way through, and was enjoyed by those present. Though the weather was extreme, the thermometer ranging from ninety-five to one hundred degrees, the people were made comparatively comfortable in the grove. Our closing meeting was held last evening. The work is improving here, and the Saints comforted in the gospel hope.

The writer found the Saints hospitable and very kind, too numerous to mention. Tuesday, a number of us met at the home of Brn. J. H. Condit and spent the time pleasantly, Sr. Condit providing an excellent meal of fresh sturgeon, just caught out of the rushing waters that flow past Bro. Condit's house, and other things to supplement and round out an excellent meal.

The day previous we met on a similar occasion at Bro. George Conyers, and spent the time pleasantly. The fruit crop is short here this year. The frost destroyed the peaches and most of the apples. We were too early for melons; but this is a great country for them. So there is a pleasant side to life even in the heat of summer; and amid disappointments flowers bloom here and there; and the shady grove and cold water are as enjoyable out here as when people slaked their thirst at Jacob's well in the olden time. Tidings of good reach our ears occasionally, and encouraging omens appear on the way.

MONTOUR, Iowa, July 27, 1905.

Dear Herald: I am still in the faith, although I live away from the Saints and have no chance to go to meeting. I try to live the best I can. Brn. Roth and N. V. Sheldon were with us last winter, and we had a fine meeting at the schoolhouse. We are looking for Roth and Christie with the tent in September. I want the prayers of all the Saints.

MARY KENNEL.

OTWAY, Ohio, July 24, 1905.

Editors Herald: I am trying to live in the service of my Master. Still it is through great tribulations and trials that we have to go. The harder we try to live near to Jesus, the harder Satan tries to tear us down. There are two great powers in the world, one against the other: God's kingdom and the Devil's kingdom. We can not serve God and mammon at the same time. Let us make the wise choice of whom we will serve. The writer feels his weakness, and desires the prayers of all the Saints of God.

In Romans we read: "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." It seems as though Satan tries the weakest points. He is going to and fro through the earth seeking whom he may devour, and will continue until the angel comes and binds him and puts him in the bottomless pit, and puts a seal on him that he can not deceive us. Then we will have no temptations. All will be peace and happiness for a thousand years. It will be then that we will reach the perfection that the Savior speaks of. All we can do in this life is to put our trust in the Lord, and stand by the written word. Resist the Devil and he will flee from us. Dear Saints, let us stand firm, and pray for one another. In union there is strength. Divided we fall. A house that is built on a solid rock will stand.

The question should be with each of us, Where will we spend eternity? We must spend it somewhere. If we want to spend eternity in the kingdom of God, we must do as Peter says in Acts 2:38, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ." What for, Peter? "For the remission of your sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." I do not see how some people can say, "We get the Holy Ghost before water baptism."

John says he baptized with water, but one would come after him who would baptize with the Holy Ghost and with fire. The people of Samaria believed the preaching of Philip concerning the kingdom of God and how to get into it, and were baptized, both men and women. When the apostles at Jerusalem heard of it, they sent unto them Peter and John. What for? "Who, when they were come down, prayed for them [who had been baptized] that they might receive the Holy Ghost. (For as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.)"—Acts 8:15, 16.

One more point. Turn to Acts 19:2. It seems as though there were certain disciples that had been baptized. Paul asked them if they had received the Holy Ghost since they believed, and they said, "We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost." It seems to me those people had been deceived, for they said that they had been baptized unto John's baptism. If that was true, they would have had the promise of the Holy Ghost. We find Paul rebaptized them, laid his hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost. We should beware of false teachers. By their fruits ye shall know them. If they bring not this gospel, it is because there is no light in them. I can testify to the truthfulness of this work.

T. J. Beatty has been with us for about ten days, and has baptized three. Two of them were your writer's children, which is encouraging to me. May God speed the time when every house may become a house of prayer, and every heart a fit temple for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. My heart is in this work.

J. T. MITCHELL.

WILBURTON, Indian Territory, August 1, 1905.

Editors Herald: This leaves me well and rejoicing in the truth. I just closed a five days' debate at Leflore, Indian Territory. Baptized eight, and Bro. Peter Adamson baptized two, making ten in all. To God be all the praise.

My opponent, Abe Carlin, did his best, but it was very apparent that he went down at Leflore. Many people heard the gospel that never heard it before. Several Lamanites (Indians) attended the debate. One leading man among them expressed himself that he believed the Latter Day Saints had the truth, but the Baptists had nothing. Another one said if I would come to his house he would feed me on chicken.

I left the people all stirred up, and the merchants of the town invited me to return.

Bro. Jesse Simons assisted me nicely, preaching night about with the Baptists during the debate, also acting as moderator for me.

The Saints from Fanshaw attended, and some from Wilburton, giving me noble assistance.

I will meet the same man at Red Fork, Indian Territory, September 4, 1905, for ten nights. Red Fork is four miles south of Tulsa, Indian Territory. Would be glad to have the Saints in the regions round about Tulsa attend. I will leave soon for Avery, Texas, a few weeks.

J. D. ERWIN.

SWEET WATER, Texas, July 23, 1905.

Editors Herald: In my meditations I am moved to ask the question: Is there anything right and honorable that a true friend will not do for his friend, when his friend makes the request; or if he sees the necessity, will he not volunteer his services without hesitation on his part? Will he not go to the very bottom of his pocket, will he not bestow all his goods to relieve that friend? If not I ask the privilege of questioning whether he is a true friend.

Christ was willing to lay down his life for his friend. Paul said he would not eat meat if it offend his brother. This remark strikes me very forcibly. Paul must have been a lover of meat, if indeed he meant flesh, and names this as being to him the greatest sacrifice that he could think of except to give his life. And in another place he defines charity to be greater than giving his body to be burned.

I remember an incident in my experience in the Civil War. We were on board a steamboat, in charge of about six hundred prisoners of war. We were very near the enemy's lines, in fact in hearing of their guns, and expected an attack that night. They were evidently approaching us. Every hour brought them closer. All means of retreat were cut off. I called to my mind that two of my true friends (as I thought) and I formerly made a covenant that we would be friends unto death, and never surrender. I approached them, and called them aside, and asked them what they proposed. They replied that they would take care of themselves, and that I was at liberty to do what I pleased. I had thought I could lay my life in their hands, but was sadly disappointed. I had weighed them in the balance and found them wanting. Fortune favored us. We made our escape without the loss of a life. I was associated with those two men through the balance of the struggle contesting many battles, yet my confidence was never restored. One of them committed suicide when the news of the surrender of Lee reached his ears. The other one lived a few years, only to look upon every man he met to be his enemy. What can be worse than a cowardly friend? There is still a worse character than this. It is the man who is unable to subdue himself. Do not flinch, my brother. God said, go forth, subdue the earth, and have dominion. You can never do this until you first subdue yourself. Until then you can never have dominion over the beasts of the field, etc. Sometimes a man can look upon the wife of his youth, the one who has laid her hand in his, and in confidence has said, I will trust you,—the one to whom he has said, I will be your protector against all evil, and has felt in his heart that he would never cause her to shed a needless tear; he looks into her careworn face and tearful eyes while she pleads with him never again to enter a saloon, and says he can not see the harm in a social drink. He may be able to say truthfully that he has never failed to supply the necessities of his family, and has complied with every demand for charity. Does this ease the pain and anxiety of her who stands in daily fear and dread concerning him?

As he enters the saloon he sees a man drunk. The proprietor drags him into a private room, that he may sleep away his condition. This moderate drinker is thoroughly disgusted at that man, and yet that man was once a moderate drinker; and had he never been a moderate drinker he would never have been a drunkard; and in all probability would have been a man that you would have been proud to have in your house.

Will a man lay down his life for his friends? Will a man sacrifice his filthy habits for his wife's sake? Will he do all this? Then I am bold to say, Truly, he is a brave man, a man of noble principle, a man of God. Yes, he truly has the love of God in his heart.

Beloved friend, will you halt in time, heed the warning voice of an earthly friend, and stop now?

Whisky is a robber. Beer is a thief, and will steal one by one your friends, drain your pockets, and leave you friendless and alone in this cold world. This is not all. The half has not been told.

Then for the sake of self, for the sake of father, mother, brother, sister, friends, children, and wife, say like Paul, If it offend my brother, I will eat no meat, I will make a sacrifice of my unholy appetite, and look for the straight and narrow way that leads to eternal life.

L. L. WIGHT.

SYKESTON, North Dakota, July 28, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have just finished scanning the pages of the last three or four issues of the HERALD. Being out in new fields of gospel work so much, it sometimes happens that I do not see the HERALD for several weeks. Then what a temptation to strain the mental faculties to try to digest all at one time.

We are getting along very nicely in gospel work in North Dakota. I have been very busy the past year, and at times there have been seasons of discouragement, as is common in mission work. However, on the whole, I feel the past year has been the most profitable one I have spent in Dakota, and the prospects at present are better for accomplishing good than at any time in the past. However, the harvest season is just now coming on, which is a very busy time in the Dakotas. One will not be able to accomplish a great deal till after it is over. Prospects are bright for a fine harvest. Another week, and the broad prairies will be covered with golden waves of ripening grain.

I have traveled nearly from east to west and north to south of North Dakota, and have found many kind friends and good Saints. Our members are scattered, which is, I presume, a good thing in one way. It gives a chance to sow the gospel seed.

Our reunion convened at Westhope, June 24. The writer was only able to attend two days; and judging from what was seen, and heard during that time, would say it was a pleasant and instructive reunion, blessed with the divine Spirit. Many of the Saints made sacrifice in attending. However, I think none were sorry for so doing. In fact, who among the Saints have not learned that those of God's children who sacrifice most are most blessed in spiritual things?

Brn. H. C. Smith, Eli Hayer, and Alvin Knisley, besides those of our own ministerial force, local and otherwise, were present at the reunion. It was voted to hold the next one at Leeds in 1906 (July 7 to 17, I think); also to purchase canvas seats for the tent. Come and try them.

Leaving the reunion, after a three days' journey, I arrived at Dale, in the southeastern part of the State. It was a new field in gospel work. While there I baptized a young man, Bro. E. E. Willard, of whom it might be said, as did Jesus of Nathanael of old, "an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile." The brother had become converted by reading the Book of Mormon and other literature, sent him by a good sister in the state of Maine, his native State.

While at Dale I met considerable opposition, but made many friends to the faith, and hope for good to be accomplished there in the future.

I notice with gladness the letters and success of the brethren in old Wisconsin. I have many dear friends there,—the place of my boyhood days. Neither have I forgotten many of the kind Saints in Illinois, some of whom did me much kindness in my early experience in mission work.

LEONARD HOUGHTON.

MANCHESTER, England, July 17, 1905.

Editors Herald: We are pleased to report that, after a safe and very pleasant voyage, we landed at Liverpool on the morning of the 13th inst. None of our party suffered from seasickness except Bro. Christensen. The passengers were a very agreeable, pleasant, and sociable lot of people. Bro. Rushton preached in the dining-room of the second cabin on Sunday evening. The Reverend James Turner, of Dover, Delaware, offered the prayer and I sang a solo. The meeting was well attended, and the people seemed to enjoy the service.

Many of the passengers knew that we were Latter Day Saint missionaries, and we had several interesting conversations with them. Upon landing at Liverpool, our party became separated immediately. Bro. Becker and wife, and Brn. Anderson and Christensen going to Hamburg, Germany. Brn. Ruston, Kelley, and myself came by rail to Manchester. Upon our arrival in this city, we found the streets crowded with people. The king and queen of England were the guests of the city, and we saw their majesties as they passed through the street in the parade. After conducting us to the hospitable home of Brn. Clark and Green, Bro. Rushton left for his home at Leeds. We feel quite at home here, and are made comfortable and very welcome. Brethren who have preceded us here will recall the kindness and hospitality of this "elders' refuge." Hospitality is plainly enjoined in the Scriptures; and is one of the features of our faith.

I preached my first sermon on foreign ground at the North-eastern Manchester Branch yesterday at eleven o'clock. Bro. W. H. Kelley (of Indiana) followed at the evening service, and we are to continue there for a fortnight. We expect to hold open-air services on the street, to be followed by a service at the chapel.

By arrangement of the minister in charge we remain in this vicinity until after the mission conference, which meets here August 5. Afterward, Bro. Kelley expects to go to Ireland and I go to Scotland.

The climate, customs, manners, and money are somewhat strange to us, but we are gradually getting used to things. I trust the Lord will bless our labors for good, and prosper his work in every land.

Faithfully yours,

W. E. LARUE.

LYNCH, Nebraska, July 30, 1905.

Editors Herald: Having just returned from a trip to Decatur, Omaha, and other points in Northern Nebraska District, I thought a word about our trip would be of interest. After calling on district president, Bro. H. S. Lytle, we went to Decatur, and, notwithstanding the intense heat, preached ten times with good liberty.

The Saints at Decatur are meeting the trials that come to all branches with true courage, and a strong desire to overcome with the least possible friction. Bro. Butts holds forth the words of life and salvation every Lord's day when they have no visitors. We heard him once while there, and can testify that he gives the gospel trump no uncertain sound.

Bro. Marteeny has purchased the flouring-mill at Decatur, and many are glad. Unless all signs fail, his days of single life are near a close. Our visit was a pleasant one, and will not be forgotten soon. From there we went to Omaha to visit with the branch, and preached one sermon, and also preached once at South Omaha, at the home where I resided a year.

But during my absence death came to that happy home, and took away Sr. Boicourt. Her example during years of suffering was something almost sublime,—not a murmur or complaint, but perfect trust in God. When I was absent the family altar was not neglected, for she or her devoted sister took up the cross. It is no wonder her husband is so sad over her death, for she was a Saint indeed. We reached home at Lynch, Nebraska, the 28th, to rest awhile, and then out again.

It has been rumored that we are addicted to the use of tobacco. We wish to enter an emphatic denial, and if any have doubts they may investigate.

If the Saints know of any members living in Boyd County, please let us know their address, and we will try to call on them. This is a good country, good soil, and a good place to get a home. My permanent address is Lynch, Nebraska.

Yours in bonds,

J. SMILEY STRAIN.

Sinclair, clerks; M. C. Fisher, treasurer; Sarah M. Fisher, Genesee Lewis and Mary Clough, auditors. Providence, Rhode Island, was made the unanimous choice for the next conference, October 7 and 8, 1905. A motion to instruct the delegates to the General Conference to vote for the closing of Graceland College until such time as the debt is paid, was lost after considerable discussion on both sides. Reduced Rates to Reunion, Moorhead.

For the benefit of those who expect to attend the Moorhead Reunion, which will be held in the Moorhead Grove about one mile west of Moorhead, Iowa, from September 8 to 18, we are pleased to announce that we have succeeded in obtaining the most liberal railroad rates from the Western Passenger Association ever granted. Ticket-agents of lines controlled by above-named association in Iowa, Illinois, Nebraska, and Missouri, will issue certificates with the sale of tickets to the Moorhead, Iowa, reunion, from September 5 to 18 inclusive. Return tickets at one third fare will be granted on all tickets of more than fifty cents. Anything less than fifty cents will not be counted. Return tickets to be purchased not later than September 21. In order to secure your reduced rates, one hundred certificates must be secured and signed by the secretary of the reunion and joint agent, K. P. Hundahl, here. Where there are parties traveling together, each individual must procure a certificate. Please be careful about this matter, and get your certificate, even if your ticket only cost a little over fifty cents, as it may help some whose fare is a larger amount. There is no doubt, if reasonable care is exercised, that all may enjoy the benefit of the reduced rates granted this year.

Rental of tents will be $1.35 for 10 by 12; $1.65 for 12 by 14. For putting up tents twenty-five cents extra. Those desiring tents write to me at once, and send money-order or bank draft for the amount, as I have to pay the tent company in advance. Board can be obtained at boarding-tent on grounds at reasonable rate. Pasture for horses close by at a moderate price. The stage fare from depot to camp grounds will be ten cents. Do not come on Sundays as we have no trains then. Many of the prominent ministers of the church are expected to be present.

THOMAS STRAND, Secretary.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of Spokane District: As I have been appointed Bishop's agent, and as I can not see you all, I take this method of asking you to remit to me in tithes and offerings as the Lord has blessed you. The elders' families must have something to live on, and they must be supplied with means from tithe receipts, so do not forget to send in yours, much or little, as it all helps. Is your faith in, and love for God and his work sufficient to move you to obedience? If not, your "faith without works is dead, being alone." Is your name written in the tithe-book for the amount due your Creator? I desire to have every Saint in this district enrolled as a tithe-payer. We preach an unchangeable God, and an everlasting gospel, hence in every age and dispensation the law of tithes is taught, so it is for the gospel extension we plead, that we may comply with God's law, and by obedience be rewarded in the day of judgment. Believing you will do your duty as saints of God, and allow me to place your names on the church books as a tithe-payer to the glory of God and the forwarding and nurturing of God's work in the Spokane District, I send out this notice hopefully. Should any of the Saints in the district want any instruction in reference to tithes or offerings, please write me and I will gladly visit you.

Yours in bonds,

W. W. FORDHAM, Bishop's Agent.

TO BRANCH AND DISTRICT CLERKS.

The "Instructions to branch and district recorders," published in HERALD for August 2, have been made into a circular, and hundreds of copies have already been mailed to district clerks, enough for them to send one to the clerk of each branch in his or her jurisdiction. If the district clerks will send such circulars at their earliest opportunity it will be a help to the labor all around. If any package of these circulars fails to arrive by the time this reaches your hands, then it has been lost or mislaid somewhere, and by notifying us another lot will be sent. Branches not in districts are being sent them, and if any are missed please notify, or if any others want them besides those sent to.

The circular was set in small type so that it will do to paste it on one page of district and branch records.

This place is located fifty-two miles west of Chicago on the main line of the Burlington Route. Meals will be served on the grounds for fifteen cents. Those desiring to board themselves on the grounds or elsewhere can do so. Tents will be furnished at the following rates: 10 by 12, two and one half foot wall, $2.25; 12 by 14, four foot wall, $2.75; 10 by 15, six foot wall, $3.25; 12 by 19, six foot wall, $3.75; 14 by 20, six foot wall, $4.25. President Joseph Smith and family, with the entire mission force, will be in attendance. Bro. Smith will only make one stop in Oregon, which will be at the time and place herein named. This will give all the Saints an opportunity to both see and hear him, also to visit the great exposition, and thus avail themselves of the low rates to the fair. We extend an invitation to all who contemplate visiting the fair, to try to be present at these services. Suitable grounds will be provided, with tents and such necessities to make the reunion a success. We sincerely hope that the Saints in Oregon and Washington will not be backward in sending financial support to the committee. All information concerning prices of board, lodging, and rent of tents may be obtained by communicating with H. Sparing, 824 Gantenbien Avenue, Portland, Oregon. G. T. Griffiths, missionary in charge.

Northern California reunion, will convene at Sixteenth and Magnolia Streets, Oakland, California, September 1 to 10, 1905. The committees are determined to make this the best reunion yet held here. An eating-house will be on the ground, serving meals at the lowest possible price. Tents will be furnished at the usual price. Those wishing tents please order at once. Furnished rooms near the grounds will be provided for such as order them at the price agreed to between renter and rentee. Hay and fuel will be provided at cost. All who intend to come please give notice. Those coming by rail be sure to take a certificate from your ticket-agent. We hope to get reduced rates on return. Do not neglect this. As to speakers, the First Presidency will be represented, and with our California missionaries, will see that the gospel is amply presented. The district and local Sunday-school workers will try to give this department more attention than ever before. The Religio will also be represented. The district conference will convene on the 7th, at ten o'clock. J. M. Terry, for committee, 1159 Tenth Street, Oakland, California.

This mine is located near Independence, Missouri. Its present inventory shows an investment of over $25,000.00. This amount is in the plant and in order to run the business successfully it has been decided to increase the capital stock to $50,000.00. Retail yards will be opened in different places. We have already established one at Independence, Missouri. Arrangements have been made at Nebraska City, Nebraska, and the yard is now under construction. Two or more will be put in at Kansas City.

The capacity of the mine is now 120 tons per day and can be increased to 500 tons per day; further increase would necessitate another shaft. The coal is of excellent quality and is very much sought after and commands a good price on the market. We can have exchange on all the leading coals for wholesale and retail trade.

This is a splendid opportunity for a good business investment, which will bring profitable returns and also help build up and establish our people in the center State. It is and will be a great labor-giving institution in its many departments. The profits of this company will be divided every six months, if so desired by the stockholders and directors.

This is the beginning of the season. Now is the time to secure stock. All we need is capital and success is assured.

"EL PASO (Texas), June 20.—Near Maguriahic Chihuahua, Mexico, the remarkable discovery of a race of Cliff-dwellers has been made. The report of their existence is brought out by Ben Goode, a miner, and Father Mariano Guerrero, a Catholic priest. They live in cliff-houses exactly as the supposedly extinct race of Cliff-dwellers lived, and subsist on corn, and game killed with crude weapons. They run at the approach of strangers. Their vocabulary is different from any known in Mexico and is said to consist of few words. They are very small."—San Francisco Examiner, June 21, 1905.

PARENTS could not make a more unfortunate mistake than to imbibe the idea that because their children attend a good Sunday-school, they are under no further responsibility to teach them in the precepts and principles of the doctrine of Christ. The Sunday-school can not entirely counteract the influence of careless or negligent parents.

LET us have faith that right makes right, and in that faith let us to the end dare to do our duty as we understand it.—Abraham Lincoln.

IS THE HOUSE DIVIDED?

Jesus said, "Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand."—Matthew 12:25.

Jesus instituted one church, which claimed, as it had the right to do, to be the kingdom of God. To-day we have a thousand, more or less, churches claiming to represent the kingdom of God. Each of the thousand is opposed to all the others in theory and practice; and yet the statement is often made that all the churches combined make up the church of Christ, and that each division or sect is but a branch of the church of Christ. The house, then, is divided; it can not stand, according to the words of the Savior. There is no getting around the thought that all Christendom is divided, one sect being opposed to the others in belief. Hence, if all Christendom combined represents the kingdom of God, or the church of Christ, its doom is sealed, destruction and desolation lie in wait. But, there is a possibility, and we think a probability, that all the churches included in this claim do not, individually or combined, represent the church of Christ. And if that be true and they are simply man-made churches, each sect stands for itself, and prospers or fails as the principles of unity or division exist within itself, regardless of claims or doctrines of the other churches surrounding it.

Some men who profess to be thinkers, in looking over the field of Christendom, have reached the conclusion that all the sects are necessary, in order that each individual may have the opportunity to select the one that is best adapted to his peculiar disposition, or turn of mind,—the one best suited to meet his requirements. It may be necessary to have a multitude of sects in order that all may satisfy their own tastes and make a pretense of religion according to the desires of their own willful hearts; but it is not necessary to have them in order that men may serve the true and the living God according to his mind and will. To do this we need only one church; but that one must be acknowledged and authorized by God. Any church not so acknowledged, any church not in accord with the pattern laid down in the New Testament, and not in harmony with the word of God, is an incumbrance to earth.

But the churches do good! Yes, if they did not their influence would be small indeed. And it is by doing some good that they become snares to hold people from receiving the truth as represented by the "one church" authorized of God; and thus the result to the individual is eternal loss. Then, a man-made church is a curse to all who would accept the "one church" were they not bound by the chains of human creeds; and no matter how much good a man-made church may accomplish, apparently, the seeming good, in many cases, may be an actual injury.

But if these churches are man-made, and do not represent Christ, then the language of the Savior as quoted in the text would not apply to Christendom, so called, or the aggregation of sectarian churches. And the division that is so apparent to the world is not a division in the house of God, but simply a division between different churches of men.

But how is it with the one church, the authorized kingdom of God on earth? If the kingdom is divided against itself it will be brought to desolation; if the house is divided against itself it shall not stand. If the language of the text can be applied to any church at all, it must be applied to the one church. Time and again we have asked ourselves the questions, Is the house divided? Is the kingdom to be brought to desolation again? The questions were prompted by the fact that in past General Conferences, as we have taken cognizance of events, there has seemed to be almost an equal division upon all the questions that were considered of sufficient importance to devote session after session to their discussion. When the vote was called the assembly would be almost equally divided. Is it possible that about half of the delegates and ex officios are so blinded that they can not see right, or were both sides in the wrong? It could hardly be possible that both were right, always. If one side was in the right, how can we determine which it was?

If the argument on two sides of a question is equally plausible, seemingly, how are we to decide which is right? That is a question that must be determined by each one. It will doubtless help us, sometimes, to decide which argument to support, if we should be able to see which side was acting with the greatest degree of unselfishness. Is this argument prompted by self-interest, individual ambition, pride, or anything of that kind? If so, it is safe to give it little weight, no matter how plausible. Is that argument stripped of selfish interests of any kind, personal ambition, and does it seek only the interests of the work of God committed to our care, and the vindication of the truth and justice? We can afford to support it.

The house will not fall if we do right. The kingdom will not come to desolation, if we are wise in the use of our privileges. But some fear that there will yet come another period of darkness, and that there is danger of rejection. There may be some ground for these fears. A failure to meet God's requirements would bring rejection as surely to the Reorganization as it did to the early church. While some feel perfectly secure, and believe that there is not the shadow of a chance or the remotest possibility of such an occurrence, we believe it is better to recognize the possibility. Indeed, the fact that we feel so secure is one evidence that there is some little danger of such an occurrence. If we could only realize clearly the necessity of a greater effort for righteousness than was put forth by the early church in order to secure our safety, with a keen sensibility of the possible danger in that regard, our defense would be prepared, we would be more strongly intrenched against the encroachments of the evil one; and success would be the ultimate result. But to scout the possibility of incurring the Lord's displeasure by a lack of a proper appreciation of our duties, is to open the door; let down the bars, and pave the way to the very thing from which we feel so secure.

The last General Conference was encouraging; the tide seemingly had turned. The voting on what were considered important questions was more unanimous. With the exercise of patience, brotherly kindness, and forbearance, there opens before us a field for greater usefulness, and the opportunity to reach a higher plane of excellence. Shall we not heed the inspired admonition uttered by Brn. Kelley and Lambert at the late Lamoni Stake reunion? "Stand by Christ, be strong and fair, and do right regardless of what men may say or do." L. A. G.

"SOMETHING ELSE."

The Deseret Evening News for August 1, 1905, contains in an editorial some remarkable statements. One is as follows: "The 'Mormons' do not believe in any absurd doctrines." We confess, when we read this, that our feelings bubbled over until we could sympathize with the editor of an exchange who expressed himself about as follows: "When Tom Lawson travels all the way out to Kansas to tell folks that he was raised up by God to free people from their bondage, he will excuse us while we go out behind the barn to laugh." Undignified, we may say, but no more so than the statement of the News deserves, especially when made in the face of all that has been admitted in the late investigation at Washington. Just think! They believe in a man as a prophet of God who is a self-confessed, wilful violator of both the laws of God and the laws of man, and according to his own statement intends to remain so. Can you think of anything more "absurd" than that?

Yet, "the 'Mormons' do not believe in any absurd doctrines!" How about the doctrine of sealing for time and eternity? They believe, or profess to believe that Joseph Smith had a number of women sealed to him for time and eternity. These women were afterwards sealed to Brigham Young, also; hence, they will belong to both men throughout eternity. Do you see anything "absurd" about that?

If the marriage covenant lasts through eternity, and a violation of that covenant is adultery, then Brigham Young was guilty of the crime, for he took these women, who, it is claimed, were Joseph Smith's wives for eternity, to himself.

However, Joseph Smith taught that a man should have one wife and a woman one husband, except in case of death, when either was at liberty to marry again. There is nothing in the revelations through him, acknowledged by him or the church previous to his death, or in any of his writings, to warrant the practice of sealing for time and eternity, or of polygamy. So in either case Brigham Young was an adulterer, yet he is believed by the "Mormons" to have been the chosen of the Lord to lead the people. Do you see anything "absurd" about that?

A little further along the News says: "In fact, 'Mormon theology' is as comprehensive as truth itself. For, whatever is true is 'Mormonism,' and whatever is false is something else." What a sweeping assertion!

If the term 'Mormonism' refers to the teachings of Brigham Young and his followers and successors, then the above statement is not true; for that "Mormonism" is made up, largely, of "something else" besides truth. The doctrine of polygamy is "something else." The doctrine of blood atonement is "something else." The doctrine of Adam-god is "something else." Brigham Young's peculiar teaching concerning the relationship of the Holy Ghost with Mary, the mother of Jesus, is "something else." The doctrine that if the Holy Ghost should fall upon women to-day the result would be the same as when it overshadowed Mary is "something else." The doctrine that Mary and Martha were Jesus' wives is "something else." And these doctrines, in addition to being "something else," are also "absurd," sacrilegious, and degrading.

The Journal of Discourses abounds in "something else." And if it be correct that "whatever is true is 'Mormonism,'" then the dominant church in the West has divorced itself from "Mormonism," and has formed an unholy alliance with "something else," and been polluted thereby.

Whatever is in harmony with the word of God is true; whatever is in opposition to the word of God, whether conceived within or without the ranks of any church, is "something else." L. A. G.

It is necessary to do right; it is not necessary to be happy. —Stevenson.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

Elder William H. Kelley, missionary to Ireland, reports labors in connection with Elder W. E. LaRue missionary to London, England, July 25. They labor in Manchester, England, until after the August conference which convened the 5th inst.

Bro. Alvin Knisley writes from Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, North West Territory, that he has just made new opening in that place, and in the past two weeks has baptized four, besides considerable other important work, showing proper reception on the part of the people.

Bro. S. W. L. Scott writes from Wirt, Indiana, that Bro. Columbus Scott was engaged in debate with Elder Traum, of the Christian Church. The debate began on July 25. Two propositions, involving the faith of the two churches, have been discussed, and the question of the divinity of the Book of Mormon was under consideration. When Bro. Leonard wrote he says: "Mr. Traum is a graduate of Hiram College. He is quite smart, but woefully mistaken. Columbus has been very strong, and the opposition can not boast of a single trophy. The attendance is large; the debate will close Saturday, August 5. I have acted as moderator for Columbus, and D. H. Bays has been acting as moderator for Mr. Traum, when not sick; but has been absent the greater part of the time. . . . I must tell you that so far Mr. Traum has not noticed affirmative arguments, but is now busying himself with grammatical, punctilious, linguistic criticisms on the Book of Mormon—thin, flat, stale! I think this effort to meet our claims was intended as a death-stroke to the work in Southern Indiana; but so far it has been an ignominious fizzle. Columbus is feeling fairly well."

ATTENTION!

BRANCH PRESIDENTS AND BISHOP'S AGENTS.

The following letter is being sent out to all branch presidents and Bishop's agents. Should any not receive in time to call special attention to members of the branch it is because the address was wrong or mail miscarried. Branch presidents please take notice and announce to the branch the College Day collection at least one week ahead. Let us have a fair and full effort for the college. Sunday, September 3, next.

"COLLEGE DAY.

"To the Bishops and Agents and Presidents of Branches, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; Greeting: On April 8, 1905, a council of the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric unanimously reported the following action to the General Conference in session, which was duly adopted by the body:

"We favor recommending to the conference that the expenses of running the college be met by voluntary contributions for the purpose, and that one day in each year be set apart, to be known as College Day, upon which offerings, in the manner of collections, shall be taken up in all districts and branches of the church, to aid the college work, the same to be forwarded to the Bishop of the church to be devoted to such purpose.

"The selection of the day upon which to carry out this order of the conference was referred to a committee consisting of the Bishopric and the college trustees, which reported to the conference on the eighteenth day of April, and the report was duly adopted by the body, as follows:

"To the Conference: The Bishopric and the college trustees to whom you referred the selection of a day for the taking of a collection for the benefit of the running expenses of Grace-land College, have selected the first Sunday in September of each year.

"It now becomes the duty of the Bishopric to arrange for carrying out the order and instruction of the body in this matter, and herewith blanks are forwarded for the purpose of facilitating the work.

REMEMBER THE TIME—SEPTEMBER 3, 1905.

"It is suggested:

"1. That the collections be reported as direct from the branches and so published from the branch giving the name. This will secure to us a full and official list of all the branches of the church and be much less work and expense than to try to take the name of each individual. Let us have promptly the collection taken by each branch for this purpose. A list of the branches and the amount of the collection of each will be published in alphabetical order in the church papers as soon as the lists are in.

"2. Persons not in the vicinity of their respective branches should send their offerings to the president of the same on or before the day set apart, so that each branch may receive its full credit, and where they can not do this, let them send direct to the Bishop and state with which branch collection their offerings shall be placed.

"3. Members and friends who can not thus be represented through a branch should send either to the bishop or agent in the district where they reside, or to the Presiding Bishop.

"4. The object of the collection is a most worthy one; all ought to be interested, and each one help; and whether this be much or little, let us give with cheerfulness, asking the Lord to bless the gift.

"Trusting that the Lord may bless and dedicate the day to the good of the people, the advancement of the truth, and the glory of his name, I am, a servant in his house,

"Very respectfully,

"E. L. KELLEY,

Presiding Bishop."

COURTESY.

How sweet and gracious, even in common speech,
Is that fine sense which men call courtesy!
Wholesome as air and genial as the light,
Welcome in every clime as breath of flowers,—
It transmutes aliens into trusting friends,
And gives its owner passport round the globe.

—James T. Field.

In our last we discussed very briefly the subject of obedience, claiming for it a position of vast importance in both home and state; in short, that it is the foundation without which no perfect superstructure of character can be built up. But while obedience is indeed one of the eternal verities and one which can not be dispensed with, yet it is not all. It is perfect in its place, but there are virtues and graces in which our children need to be trained in order that they may be fully equipped for the battle of life; and among them perhaps there is none which will help them more and tend more to increase their influence for good than the grace of courtesy. One writer in treating upon this subject has said:

"Unless a man is courteous towards others he is at a disadvantage in the world, even though he be the possessor of every other good trait and quality possible to humanity, of every material, mental, and spiritual acquisition which can belong to mere man.

"And if a man be marked by exceptional courtesy in all his intercourse with others, he has an advantage to start with in the struggle of life, beyond all that could be his in health and wealth and wisdom without courtesy. Yet courtesy is never wholly a natural quality. It is always the result of training; albeit the training will be far easier in one case than in another.

"Courtesy is the external manifestation of a right spirit towards others. Its basis is in an unselfish and a fitting regard for the rights and feelings of those with whom one is brought into intercourse. . . . Courtesy is not merely a surface finish of manners; although courtesy is sure to show itself in a finished surface of manners."

Perhaps it may seem to the readers that this writer claims too much for courtesy; but we are persuaded that if a close and analytical examination be made of these claims they will be found none too comprehensive—none too strong. And, more than this, we think it will be found that they have their foundation in the gospel of Christ, and that where the gospel has its perfect work in an individual these will not be found wanting.

There is a familiar couplet which reads like this:

"True politeness is just to do and to say,
The kindest thing in the kindest way."

"All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them," was the commandment of Jesus, and in this commandment will be found embraced every fundamental principle of true courtesy. And if we wish for the verification of the high claims made for this virtue, we have but to cast about in our own minds and remember the genuine respect and great influence which some individuals in every community always command; and, tracing these back to their source, we will surely discover that they have their foundation in the unselfish spirit which from first to last the gospel inculcates, and the quintessence of which is found in the golden rule.

There is no place found for selfishness in the gospel economy. A genuine unselfish interest in the happiness and welfare of others, will naturally banish from our minds all thoughts of self. We are ready to do for others, rather than to expect others to do for us, and hence do not readily imagine that any slight or disrespect was intended by that which may have been purely unintentional upon the part of another.

There was never a counterfeit without a genuine. And it may possibly be that we have met with all the outward indications of courtesy, where there yet existed an entire absence of the genuine spirit of true courtesy. This, however, should never lead us to undervalue the genuine, but rather induce us to place a higher estimate upon it, since no one ever thinks of counterfeiting that which is worthless.

But we come now to consider the importance of training—as well as the best means of training—a child in this very desirable virtue. The first point however we may dismiss by saying that everything said in favor of its importance, is an argument also in favor of the necessity of training a child in its practice, and still more (where it becomes necessary) of enforcing this training.

Orison Sweet Marnen in that wonderful book of his entitled, Rising in the World, or Architects of Fate,—a book which we most sincerely wish could be put into the hands of every boy and girl, not only in the church, but in the entire world,—has said: "What is put into the first of life is put into the whole of life." What a thought for parents and teachers—those who come nearest to the child in that formative period which has so much to do in shaping the individual destiny for both time and eternity!

"In training a child to courtesy," says Doctor Trumbull, "it is of little use to tell him to be forgetful of himself; but it is of value to tell him to be thoughtful of others. The more a person tries to forget himself, the surer he will be to think of himself. But when a child thinks of others, his thoughts go away from himself and self-forgetfulness is a result, rather than a cause of his action.

"To tell a young person to enter a full room without any show of embarrassment, or thought of himself, is to put a barrier in the way of his being self-possessed through self-forgetfulness. But to send a young person into a full room with a life and death message to some one already there, is to cause him to forget himself through filling him with thought of another. And this distinction in methods of training is one to be borne in mind in all endeavors to train a child in courtesy.

"In order to be courteous, a child must have a care to give due deference to others, in his ordinary salutations and greetings, and in his expression of thanks for every kindness or attention shown to him. So far most parents, who give any thought or attention to this, are ready to go. But true courtesy includes a great deal more than this; and a child needs training accordingly.

"Many a boy who is careful to give a respectful greeting to his superiors on the street, or in the house, and who never fails to proffer thanks for any special favor shown to him; lacks greatly in courtesy in his ordinary intercourse with others, because he has not been trained to feel and to show an unselfish interest in those with whom he is brought face to face. Such a boy is more ready to talk of himself, and of that which has a personal interest to him, than to find out what has an interest to others and to make himself interested in that, or to express his interest in it if he already feels such an interest. If, indeed, from any reason he finds himself unable to talk freely of that which immediately concerns him, he is often at a loss for a topic of conversation, and is liable to show awkwardness and embarrassment in consequence."

All this, as well as other points of unselfish kindness in the intercourse of the child, be that child boy or girl, with those of his own age or those who are older demands much thoughtful care and painstaking instruction upon the part of parents and teachers. It is a fact much to be deplored that the tendency of the age is to give entirely too little heed to enforcing the demands of courtesy upon children. Especially is this true in their treatment of the aged and in the various relations of home life. It is sad that this should ever be true of a Christian home, because of the moral element underlying it and the fact that such a state of things always brings reproach upon the parents and to a certain extent upon the church also.

Courtesy is simply the outward expression of the love and good feeling existing in the heart, but careful training is needed upon the part of parents and teachers, that it be given a wise and suitable expression.

Program for September Meetings of Daughters of Zion.

1. Opening hymn, No. 62, Hymnal. 2. Prayer. 3. Reading: "Half hours with parents and teachers, No. 17." 4. Questions and discussion of above. 5. Paper: "The relation which courtesy bears to the gospel of Christ." 6. Music. 7. Address: "How may we implant courtesy in the characters of our children?" 8. Model lesson teaching the difference between real and apparent courtesy. 9. Closing exercises.

Questions on September Reading.

Of what have we studied as the foundation of true character? Among other virtues and graces in which our children need to be trained, of what worth should we estimate the grace of courtesy? Do you agree with the quoted statement concerning the lack of courtesy in a man, or the advantage which exceptional courtesy will give him? Is courtesy ever a wholly natural quality? If it must be largely the result of training, may it not then be acquired by any one? How is courtesy defined by this writer? What is its basis? What is courtesy not merely? But how is courtesy sure to show itself? Does the gospel of Christ teach courtesy? In what teaching of Jesus may be found the fundamental principles of true courtesy? What is the natural result of a genuine, unselfish interest in the happiness of others? What has been the effect upon some of seeing the outward indications of courtesy with the absence of the genuine spirit of courtesy? Should we undervalue the genuine because of the counterfeit? Is it true of courtesy as of other qualities that early training in its practice is of great advantage? What does Doctor Trumbull say of training a child in self-forgetfulness? Do we pay enough attention to training our children in the ordinary salutations and greetings, and in the expression of thanks for favors? If so, do we stop here? Shall we not seek earnestly and persistently to give the help that will make our children willing and able to show, in a kindly, pleasing, suitable manner, an unselfish interest in all around them, whether young or old?

Letter Department

OTWAY, Ohio, July 31, 1905.

Editors Herald: I love to read the letters from the different parts of our State. I thank God that I am a Latter Day Saint, and that God counts me worthy to bear that name; for the Bible says, "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you."—Matthew 5:11, 12. And if we are not downtrodden I would like to see the church that is. I thank God that I am worthy to be persecuted for his sake. The Bible says there are many called, but few chosen. Dear Saints, let us try to so live that when Jesus comes we may be thought worthy to be with his chosen people. How my heart goes out in love to all the Saints. When I read the many good letters I feel as if I knew the writers; and I often think, How can so many hear and read without believing. But then, I suppose they have been brought up to their belief, and would rather suffer punishment hereafter than to humble themselves enough to believe Christ's own words. If this reaches the eyes of Sr. Alice Corson, will she please write again for the Ensign; for her letters do me so much good. You wrote one for Ensign two or three weeks ago, and, oh, how it made me sorrow for your trials; but I rejoiced to think there was One to whom you could go in time of need, who never turns a deaf ear to us, if we go to him in faith believing, and doubting not; for he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek. So, dear sister, still trust him.

Myself, companion, one son, and one daughter have been born into the kingdom of God's dear Son; but I have four more out in the cold world who are old enough to see where they are, and my prayers ascend on high to the good Father that he will watch over them and permit them to see where they are standing before it is too late. How many will say in that "great day," Too late, too late; why did I not accept when I had a chance?

I ask the prayers of all God's children that we may go on, and turn neither to the right nor to the left, but keep in the straight and narrow path that leads to life eternal.

MARY F. COLVIN.

STONEWALL, Indian Territory, July 25, 1905.

Editors Herald: bro. S. W. Simmons came to this place the 17th of this month and preached twelve of the best gospel sermons I ever heard. This is a new place. Had to hold meetings in an arbor, and it rained every day, and missed but one night meeting; nevertheless there were large crowds every meeting, very good behavior, and a little interest, so husband and I are rejoicing in the gospel. It was a feast to my soul to have the gospel brought here. There are nice people here, and Bro. Simmons said he never was treated better in his life.

Dear Saints, let me exhort you all to be faithful; the Lord is so good to all of us. And I ask you all to pray for me and mine, away down here, where we just hear preaching once a year. If any of the brethren come this way write to J. S. Reed, who lives four miles south of new Stonewall, Indian Territory.

FANNIE REED.

FILLMORE, Assiniboia, July 17, 1905.

Dear Herald: We enjoyed a nice reunion from June 30 to July 3, as already reported by Bro. Knisley. A feeling of sadness prevailed at the last prayer-meeting on account of the good-byes soon to be said; yet we realized that the present reunion was only a dim view of the final reunion when this world, farewell, we will never lisp again. We are all greatly encouraged to go on and strive to do our duty as children of the light.

I am glad to report the gospel seed is falling on good ground, in this part of the Lord's vineyard; four precious souls have been added to our list recently. Some here who are members of the Lamoni Branch, I am sorry to say, are very cold and indifferent to this great work, who will not come to our meetings, or take any interest in the work; but will resort to pleasures of this world. O Saints, why not heed the admonition to come out from among the world, and be not partakers of their evil deeds? and not to love the pleasures of the world, for the pleasure of sin is carnal, and at enmity with God.

Our social hours of recreation and repose, as well as the every-day duties of life, should be seasoned with thoughts of "devotion and unselfish purposes, and with a desire to promote and advance the community in which we live." Bro. Tomlinson organized a Sunday-school while here, which is followed by prayer-meeting. We met last Sunday for the first time this year. Although few in number, in union there is strength, and in peace there is power. All was harmonious, the gift of prophecy was enjoyed, and the Saints encouraged and confirmed. A desperate attempt was made by the prince of darkness to frustrate our designs to hold a prayer-meeting, according to promise made to Bro. Tomlinson, that we would endeavor to meet in prayer-meeting at three o'clock in the afternoon on Sundays. At four o'clock we meet in worship. Satan was defeated, and the Saints prevailed. With this precedent, it is hoped that henceforth we shall reverence the Sabbath, and be prompt in duty. Sometimes darkness seems to prevail; but when we seek God earnestly, by his calm and unerring Spirit we are made strong. With regards to all Saints, and with a desire to walk in the light, I am,

ENTERPRISE, Oregon, August 9, 1905.

Editors Herald: There is a good opening here for a boot-and-shoe repair-shop, and there are none at either of the two adjacent towns. This is a very healthful climate. It has been too dry for crops the last month. At this point there is little snow during the winter. Clean and beautiful little towns along the Wallowa River. Enterprise is about fifty miles from a railroad which is expected to be extended to this point at any time. Elgin is the present railroad point.

I am the only Reorganized Latter Day Saint here, and would like to get a brother here who could preach. Hoping I may speedily hear from some one with authority to preach who does not as yet feel called to Zion, I am,

Your brother in the one faith, o

Independence Items.

Taking the advice of an up-to-date writer, Colonel Watterson, who says articles for the weekly paper "like good butter must be genuine and fresh," we proceed to say the weather here of late has been delightfully cool at night, with now and then a spell of very oppressive humidity toward evening, so that the attendance of the midweek meetings has been somewhat lessened, also the auxiliary societies have shown a diminution of numbers present.

At our last business-meeting an improvement was in evidence in this respect, and, added to the usual routine of branch work, the matter of completing the church-building was proposed, and many good ideas were projected on the subject of repairing inside and out.

Quite a number are looking forward with pleasure to the time of conference at Pertle Springs to take place the 9th of September.

Everything around in the farming and gardening line looks prosperous, and in the city, improvements here and there continue.

The ice plant, near the Missouri Pacific station, is now in full operation, converting water after the process of boiling and distilling into pure, solid, crystal ice, and many are enjoying the benefits of the venture.

To Bro. Wesley Ballenger, one of our active young men, has been given of late the charge of "the building of a whole town." The erection of several large structures has already shown his ability in that line. The site is at Fairview, Southern Illinois, a mining locality of lead and spar. Mr. Mulhall, a millionaire of St. Louis, is at the head of the company. Our brother has eighty-five men employed and has hitherto proved to be a very efficient manager. The material used is mostly block cement and, covering a four-months' contract, he has, besides several large buildings, two miles of sheds to erect.

Among the late visitors to the loved Temple Lot was Mr. P. T. Tibbs, on his way home from Kentucky to Salt Lake City. He has been attending a convention of the National Association of Stationary Engineers, held at Louisville, and on hearing read, "Fulfilling prophecy," in yesterday's Ensign, he expressed himself quite mildly in reference to the present mission in Utah of President F. M. Smith: of Mr. F. J. Cannon, a little differently.

Sr. Lucy Hoover and husband, of Needles, California, also visited friends here recently. Mr. Hoover is a successful railroad man and newspaper reporter. His wife also has literary and executive ability, being secretary of a large relief society; and in the near future she will be engaged in writing up some of her interesting travels for the benefit of the church papers.

The sunshine band turned out in full numbers last Tuesday evening, and cleared ten dollars from a very pleasing entertainment.

As branch assistant recorder we have to report for July, twenty-six received by letter, five by certificate of baptism, and four by baptism. It still falls to our sad lot to witness several of the Saints' suffering in sickness and affliction, and six have recently been called away.

All the prayer-meetings continue to be comforting and spiritual. There has been much encouragement imparted to the Saints, (through the gift of the Spirit,) in testimony, and also in confirmation of those baptized. Many blessings were promised to the willing and obedient, and aid and increase of light to all who lived faithful to their covenant.

We have been blessed with excellent instruction from Brn. Hulmes, Garrett, Luff, J. D. White, Hilliard, Arber, Robinson, and Bishop E. L. Kelley; and the Saints have had their minds refreshed in the setting forth of the principles of obedience, and Christian responsibility; also our "duty, privilege, and prerogative," the cultivation of faith and added virtues, childlike willingness, and "the making our daily life a pattern of righteousness."

We hear much about coöperation and the benefits of Christian brotherhood and, among other good things, we read that even President Roosevelt in a late discourse before the "Christian Brotherhood," of Oyster Bay, expressed himself as firmly believing in the great benefits of Christian association, which he defines as "the essentials of experience."

Brotherhood to him is man's ideal condition. The association of the virtuous and honorable ones of the earth is grand and inspiring indeed; but in the light and blessedness of that higher brotherhood,—the glorious company and family of God who are working together in the great redemptive plan of Christ, how grandly supreme is the association of saints on earth and saints in heaven, of seers and patriarchs and prophets and apostles and angelic messengers, and even our Father himself, whom Holy Writ has revealed to man as "a great God, a mighty and a terrible, which regardeth not persons, nor taketh rewards."

To the minds of all of us, in this age of greed and graft, who are engaged in the activities of the church and the world, as well as to rulers and governors, and all in authority, the revelation of these attributes must bring wonderful suggestions of our Father's love of law and order and justice and truth.

Reunion Notices.

Bro. G. T. Griffiths, our missionary in charge, and the Saints at Portland, have resolved to hold a reunion at Portland, commencing September 8, and continuing over two Sundays. This is the date when President Joseph Smith will visit us; and we are all interested in trying to make this a success. In order to do this it will take means, and lots of hard work on the part of the committee. So we would kindly ask Saints living in this mission to send what money they can spare, and all those who contemplate attending, and desire tents, to notify the committee as soon as possible, so that we may know how many to hire. We do not at present know the cost of tents. Henry Sparling, N. V. Sheldon, F. A. Simpson, committee.

An Appeal to all Singers and Musicians Who Expect to Attend the Annual Reunion at Moorhead, September 8 to 17, 1905: Having been repeatedly asked to take charge of the musical department at coming reunion, we have consented to do the best we could, and publish a list of anthems found in Winnowed Anthems Nos. 1 and 2. In No. 1: No. 1, 3, 13, 15, 33, 34, 50, 57, 73, 74, 97, 100, 137, 150, 184. No. 2: 73, 130, 139, 194, 202, 206. Others can be added after we get together. We appeal to all who attend to go with full intent of being present at all services and rehearsals. S. B. Kibler, F. L. Hupp.

The 1st of September is drawing near when the Saints of Northwestern Missouri will gather the thirteenth time in an annual reunion, to be held in the beautiful grove of Bro. B. J. Dice, one half mile southeast of Stewartville, Missouri, twenty miles east of St. Joseph. Saints, will you make arrangement now for a ten-day outing, from the 1st of September to the 10th? The committee will spare no work on their part to make your stay profitable both spiritually and temporally. We have the promise of several of our first elders to be present to preach the word. Charles P. Faul.

Two-Day Meetings.

There will be a two-day meeting and dedication at Fork Branch, Mecosta County, Michigan, September 16 and 17. Everybody invited. All coming by rail from towards Grand Rapids and Big Rapids come to Barryton; all coming from towards Saginaw and Reed City on the Pere Marquette railroad, come to Chippewa. All coming by rail please come September 15, Friday afternoon, and drop me a card and teams will be there to meet you. Charles M. Walrath, Barrytown, Michigan, R. F. D. 1.

Considerable difficulty has been met in making up and arranging in alphabetical order the items of this annual report. Where there are so many entries, mistakes are liable to occur in recopying.

Those noticing any important mistake, or omission, either of name or amount, will confer a favor by notifying this office at once.

Proper names are occasionally misspelled, but in such cases they are as reported by the agents, as we have no way of ascertaining that the names are not as the persons themselves write them, hence have followed strictly the copy.

May all be interested, edified, and encouraged to the faithful performance of duty, in the minor things as well as those seemingly of greater importance, in considering the report.

Respectfully submitted,

E. L. KELLEY,
Presiding Bishop.

THE TEN VIRGINS.

Turning to the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, Inspired Translation, we read:

And then, at that day, before the Son of Man comes, the kingdom of heaven shall be likened unto ten virgins, who took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom. And five of them were wise, and five of them were foolish. They that were foolish took their lamps and took no oil with them; but the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps. While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept. And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him. Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps. And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out. But the wise answered, saying, Lest there be not enough for us and you, go you rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves. And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage; and the door was shut. Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us. But he answered and said, Verily, I say unto you, You know me not. Watch therefore; for you know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh.

Concerning the application of this parable there are at least three views held by representatives of the latter-day faith, as we understand them, as follows:

1. It is held by some that it applies to the church in Babylon, the sleeping-time during the Dark Ages, the midnight cry being the restoration and proclamation of the gospel message in this dispensation.

2. Others hold that the ten virgins represent the latter-day work as established in 1830, the sleeping-time finding its fulfillment in the dark days between 1844 and 1860, the midnight cry being the reorganization of the church and the proclamation of the gospel.

3. Still others, and perhaps a greater number, believe that the ten virgins represent the church as established in 1830 and continued in the Reorganization, the sleeping-time and the midnight cry yet to come, just immediately prior to the time of the appearance of the Savior.

There are arguments to be used in favor of all three; and it may be possible that, since parables are frequently susceptible of more than one interpretation, all three applications may be correct. If, however, the parable is subject to but one interpretation, we would like to know which to accept.

There are arguments that may be advanced in opposition to all three views. Those who hold to Helpfulness.

Why go through life with a frown on the brow
 While the world so much needs a smile?
 For everywhere are sorrows to share,
 And every heart has its load of care,
 Which you, with a smile, may help it to bear
 And bring sweet coming awhile.

Why journey along through life's thorny path
 And ever withhold a helping hand,
 When along the road, are those with a load,
 Who, may hops are reaping that they have sowed,
 But who yet may reach a higher abode,
 And, through you, the better land?

Then bestow a smile and a helping hand
 As you go through a sorrowing world;
 And angels above, perceive your love,
 Will carry the news like a message-dove,
 To the ears of the one who rules above,
 Ere the banner of life is furled.

view No. 1 are confronted with these objections: The kingdom of heaven could hardly be said to refer to the church in the wilderness, or to those whose lineage was hid with God before they were obedient to the gospel. It is argued that the oil in their lamps and in their vessels is the Holy Spirit which they take for their guide, so if the argument be that the sleeping-time was during the Dark Ages, it must be conceded that these virgins all had oil in their lamps, and one class also had oil in their vessels with their lamps before hearing the midnight cry or receiving the gospel message. That is, during the Dark Ages they had the Holy Spirit for their guide, and after the midnight cry, or the restoration of the gospel, they simply arose, trimmed their lamps and the wise ones took the oil they already had in their vessels, and started to meet the bridegroom. Accepting the message added nothing to their store of oil, their portion of the Holy Spirit. The lamps of the foolish ones had burned out during the Dark Ages, their supply of the Holy Spirit being exhausted.

It may be said that the time in which the virgins first took their lamps and started forth was during the proclamation of the gospel in apostolic times, before the church went into the wilderness; they received their supply of the Spirit then. In that case, during the Dark Ages, some of them or their descendants ran short of oil; but we would hardly wish to admit that when the restored gospel reached them or their descendants it brought no oil to the foolish ones, and the wise ones did not need an additional supply for they had retained sufficient all through the Dark Ages. The parable does not say, that in the days of Christ the kingdom of heaven shall be likened unto ten virgins, five of whom took oil in their vessels with their lamps, and after their long sleep in the wilderness they should still have sufficient oil in their vessels, a sufficient supply of the Holy Spirit to meet all requirements before and after the introduction of the gospel message. It says, "At that day, before the Son of Man comes, the kingdom of heaven [not the church in the wilderness] shall be likened unto ten virgins, who took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom." While the "kingdom of heaven," and the "church of Christ" are synonymous terms, there is a difference between the "kingdom of heaven" and the "church in the wilderness." If there is no difference the church just as well remain in the wilderness. The "kingdom of heaven," the "church of Jesus Christ," is in condition to receive of the Holy Spirit and thus have oil in their vessels. The "church in the wilderness" is deprived of that essential feature, consequently it must be after the restoration of the gospel that the kingdom of heaven, the foolish and the wise together, "shall take their lamps" and start out to meet the bridegroom.

Theory No. 2 is, in some respects, more tenable than No. 1. The gospel was introduced, the virgins heeded the call, took their lamps, and started forth. The dark days of apostasy came, and it might be said, that the whole church "slumbered and slept" for a season. Some who had not sufficient oil drifted into the factions, but those who had oil in their vessels were awakened by the call to reorganize, heeded the call, and thus evidenced their possession of the Holy Spirit. But now the objection arises: The bridegroom has not come; and it has been sixty-five years since the midnight cry (the cry to reorganize.) And then who can point to the foolish virgins who have said, "Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out?" None of the factions have asked oil of the Reorganization; and if they had there has been sufficient time for all who really desired to be amply supplied, since it can be obtained "without money and without price," except the price of obedience and the forsaking of the world. And so the application to theory No. 2 is faulty. The church has never declined to give help when asked, nor has it directed any foolish virgins to go elsewhere to buy oil for their lamps.

We now consider theory No. 3. The gospel is restored in the eleventh-hour dispensation; the kingdom of God is established on earth; the virgins take their lamps, and in obedience to instruction concerning the coming of the bridegroom, (a doctrine that was disbelieved by the world, largely, prior to that time,) begin to prepare for the coming of the bridegroom. By obedience to the gospel message they receive the gift of the Holy Spirit, the oil for their lamps. Some by continued faithfulness obtain a store for their vessels; others by reason of slackness, and a dabbling in worldly things, have a limited supply, barely enough to keep their lamps glimmering. During the dark days of apostasy some became married to error and sin; they are not virgins any longer. The virgins continued to have oil in their lamps right down through the apostasy and the reorganization of the church, as evidenced by the manifestations of the Holy Spirit both before and after 1860.

"While the bridegroom tarried they all slumbered and slept." Not the foolish ones alone; but all. The only argument we have ever heard against theory No. 3 is that it is unreasonable to think that after the church had made the preparation, and half at least, or one class, is ready to meet the bridegroom, that they should get drowsy and drift off into slumber, and not be on the watch for the appearing of the bridegroom. But the bridegroom tarried. That is, he was delayed, detained; his coming was put off; he lingered. He did not come as soon as they were looking for him; if he had the foolish virgins would have had enough oil in their lamps for a faint glimmer at least.

If the expectations of those who engaged in the work in the early days had been fulfilled, the bridegroom would have come years ago; but he tarries; he delays his coming. And well he may, for the virgins, even the wise ones, are not ready for him yet. And may it not be true that after the preparation is all made, the time seemingly at hand when he should appear, still his coming will be delayed? The church will watch expectantly, and yet he lingers. The foolish virgins will leave their lamps burning while they engage in some of the worldly things, unaware that their lamps go out, until they hear the cry, "Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." They have failed to keep the commandments; they have failed to pay their tithing; they have failed to make their consecrations for the good of God's work; they have failed to love their neighbors as themselves; they have failed to do unto others as they would be done by; they have engaged in the follies and the pleasures of the world; they have failed to abnegate self, and to seek the benefit of others; in a word, they have failed to add oil to their vessels with their lamps. And when the last great call comes, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him," it will be everlastingly too late. They may seek the prayers of the wise virgins, but it will be in vain. They may hurry out to hunt up a bishop to settle their tithes and offering accounts, and their consecrations; they may hunt up their neighbors and seek to undo the result of their selfish living, and restore that which they have unjustly taken; they may seek to wash some of the spots off that have accumulated by a failure to heed the command to keep themselves unspotted from the world; but the bishop and their neighbors will be too busily engaged in greeting the bridegroom, and before they can get back from the "wash," they that are ready will have gone in to the marriage and the doors will be closed, and it will be too late, too late.

The wise virgins have paid their tithes and offerings, have made their consecrations; they have sought not their neighbor's wealth, as the King James Translation has it, but their neighbors' good, as commanded by the Inspired Translation; they have loved their neighbors as themselves, and have done unto others as they would that others should do to them; they have overcome pride and selfishness; they have not sought to put themselves above others; their aim has been to keep all the commandments of God; and by this means they have not only oil in their lamps, but in their vessels with their lamps, an increased supply of the Holy Spirit for their guide. They have done all; they have completed the preparation. But we do not like the idea that the wise virgins should slumber and sleep after this preparation is made. Whether we like it or not, we are confronted with the statement that the preparation was made, and they had the oil in their vessels before the sleeping-time came. The sleeping-time and the midnight cry came at the close of the dispensation, after the preparation had been made, not at the beginning of the dispensation, before the preparation was begun. And is it not possible that even the wise virgins, after they have completed the preparation, and are looking expectantly, while the bridegroom tarries,—lingers, is detained, his coming delayed, or so it appears to them,—is it not possible that they may grow less watchful for a season, that they may take a rest, and slumber a little? The oil in their lamps may burn low, but it is not said that they will go out; and they do not enter into the follies of the world by which they lose the supply of oil in their vessels, or the Holy Spirit for their guide. That there is an inclination for all to get drowsy is apparent even now; and we hear from time to time confession from those who have been most zealous and wide-awake that they are unable to accomplish anything, the avenues seem closed, and they are at a standstill. They are barely able to hold their ground, and retain the oil in their vessels. All they can do is to heed the admonition of the apostle, "Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand."—Ephesians 5:13. The wise virgins are those who have done all; having completed the preparation they will be able to stand even though they should become weary of waiting and slumber a little.

The Scriptures tell us that no man knoweth the day nor the hour when the bridegroom will come, neither do the angels of heaven know, nor the Son, but the Father only; and we are commanded to "Watch therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come. . . . Therefore be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."—Matthew 24:42, 44. If the wise, the children of the light knew the very hour of his coming, there would be no necessity for them to "watch" until the hour arrived. There is nothing to show that the church will know the day or the hour, until the hour arrives; but the children of the light will know that the time is approaching, and they will be watching for the hour; and when they hear the midnight cry they will know that the hour has come. Both the wise and the foolish will know, then. He will come in the hour when the cry is made, and it will be too late for the foolish to make the preparation then.

The cry at the introduction of the latter-day work was a call to preparation for his coming: "Let the cry go forth among all people: Awake and arise and go forth to meet the Bridegroom. Behold, and lo, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him. Prepare yourselves for the great day of the Lord."—Doctrine and Covenants 108:3. This is a call to make the preparation, at the time the virgins first take their lamps and start out. "Prepare ye for the coming of the Bridegroom; go ye, go ye out to meet him."—Doctrine and Covenants 108:5. And the virgins take their lamps and go, that is, they begin to make the preparation. The second call comes when the preparation has been made, and the wise are ready.

The question may be asked, Why should the bridegroom tarry, if the wise are ready? Well, it will certainly make the separation easier, after the slumber, when the lamps of the foolish ones have gone out, than it would to come before, while yet their lamps were feebly burning. After their lamps have gone out it will be plain to all that they are not ready, and every one can see that they have no just right to enter in. The foolish ones themselves will realize that it will be useless to ask admission until they have tried to make amends for their neglect.

And so it appears that theory No. 3 is the best, the clearest, the strongest, because it can be made to harmonize with the main points of the parable. An interpretation that leaves the vital culminating point unfulfilled, mars the beauty of the parable for ever. The vital culminating point is at the close when the foolish ones plead, "Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out." That is where the tragedy is enacted. Who has said to the church since 1830, or since 1860, "Give us of your oil for our lamps are gone out," and been turned away? Is it not rather the policy of the church to extend the invitation to all: Come, and get oil for your lamps and for your vessels?

To say that the two classes, the wise and the foolish, will not be in the church just prior to the coming of the bridegroom, is to say that we are blind to existing conditions and to the unstable qualities of the human heart, as well as to the application of the predictions of old.

In HERALD for August 9, on page 772, in the call made to the people of the "Mormon" church of Utah by Frederick M. Smith, as copied from the Tribune, of Salt Lake City, there appears an annoying though palpable error. As it appeared in the Tribune it read: "Ye people of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, as you revere and honor the name of Joseph F. Smith," etc. It should read "Joseph Smith" instead of "Joseph F. Smith," as the Joseph referred to is Joseph Smith the Martyr.

After all that has been said, we yet frequently receive questions, letters, and articles, with no signature except "A Brother," or "A Sister," and nothing to indicate where they came from except the postmark on the envelope; they invariably go to

According to a press report Nebraska ministers are becoming tainted with commercialism and are breaking away from the calling of a minister and are engaging in other work. Fifteen per cent of the Protestant churches of Nebraska are without pastors, and it is impossible to secure ministers to fill the vacant pulpits. Scarcely a week passes but some minister breaks away to engage in another line of work. The greater number have taken up farming, but many have gone into other lines of business. Low salaries are the cause of the trouble. The great bulk of the preachers receive six hundred or seven hundred dollars a year; but a large number do not receive more than five hundred. It is asserted that the reports of attendance at theological seminaries show a lower average than ever. The larger financial opportunities offered by the law, medicine, and other professions is believed to be preventing many from entering the ministry, with its low salaries and its exacting requirements. Ambitious young men investigate now before they adopt a profession or enter business, and the ministry no longer calls with its old force. The scarcity of preachers has given impetus to the movement to reduce the number of churches. In many instances Lutheran missionaries, who are in reality business agents of the church, advise their people to join other churches, and the same is true of practically all of the Protestant denominations in the West. None of the churches can compel the acceptance of this advice, but in many instances circumstances and the withdrawal of the pastor force its adoption. Certainly any man is foolish to preach a man-made doctrine to a man-made church, when he receives only five hundred dollars for preaching none of the doctrine of Christ. And of course the churches are consistent in asking that he preach not the doctrine of Christ, knowing as they do that he has no authority to represent Christ. Christ never affixed a salary to any office in his kingdom on earth, but his admonition was to "lay up treasures in heaven."

REVEREND GEORGE G. COOKMAN.

A CORRECTION.

In the LATTER DAY SAINTS' HERALD for April 15, 1875, a letter from R. D. Foster to President Joseph Smith was published, giving an account among other things of his visit to Washington in company with Joseph Smith and others. He very graphically describes some of the incidents of the journey, and some of their experiences while in Washington. He gives an account of Reverend George G. Cookman, then chaplain in Congress, who made a public attack upon Joseph Smith and the church represented by him. Subsequently he speaks of an address made by Joseph Smith and says:

He adverted to the statements made by this George G. Cookman, declaring them to be willfully and wickedly false, and that if he, Cookman, did not take it back and acknowledge that he had dealt falsely of him, his people, and his own congregation, that he must turn and preach the truth and quit deceiving the people with fables; he should be cut off from the face of the earth, both he and his posterity. And he said that this should be so plainly manifest, that all should know it. At this, many gentlemen took out of their pockets their tablets, and began to take notes of the prophecy; and Mr. Smith noticing them, "Yes," said he, "write it on your tablets; write it in a book; write it in your memory; for as sure as God ever spoke by my mouth, all these things shall come to pass."

Henry Clay, Felix Grundy, Tom Benton, John Q. Adams, and many other celebrated characters were present at this time. Now, instead of Cookman doing according to justice and truth, he became more virulent than ever, and laid all the obstacles in our way that he could during our stay in the city. The matter appeared to be forgotten by many, and I thought often upon the subject, having taken notes also. Soon after this, there was an extraordinary excitement in the religious world, and they appointed a conference of all orthodox religions to assemble in England at a certain time, to adopt measures of harmony between all the sects; the United States were invited and accepted a part in these proceedings, to break down the partition wall that separated the various churches. George G. Cookman was elected or appointed as a delegate for the District of Columbia, to represent his views on the subject; standing, as he did, at the very head of the church, and chaplain of the United States Senate. Now, he being an Englishman by birth, and his family in suitable circumstances for a pleasure trip, at the appointed time he, Cookman, thought it would be very pleasant to take his whole family with him, and this he did; both he, his wife, and all his children went on board the steamship President and neither the ship nor a soul is left to tell what was their sad end. But the prophecy is fulfilled to the letter, and the words uttered on that occasion have never been forgotten by me; nor I presume by hundreds of others. Had Cookman went alone it might be charged to chance; but why was it that his whole family were so suddenly cut off, both root and branch?

Now whether Mr. Foster's memory of this prophecy was at fault, it having been many years after the event before he wrote the letter, or whatever may be the solution of this circumstance, the events as related by Mr. Foster are only partially true. Mr. George G. Cookman did figure in Congress as chaplain about that time; he was a very popular preacher; he did sail for England on the 11th of March, 1841; on the steamship President; that vessel was lost, has never been heard from since, and undoubtedly the Reverend Cookman did perish.

But so far as the statement concerning his posterity is concerned it is not correct. Whether or not any part of his family accompanied him we are not informed; but he had a son by the name of Alfred who died in Newark, New Jersey, November 13, 1871. This son Alfred was also a popular minister, and held pastorates in Harrisburg, Wilmington, New York, and other cities. The Reverend Mr. George G. Cookman also had a son named John Emery, who was a minister. He spent his ministerial life mostly in the vicinity of New York, with the exception of three years, when he was pastor of Tremont Street Church, Boston. In 1886 he was pastor of the Bedford Street Methodist Episcopal Church, New York City, since which time we have had no account of him.

We note that some of the brethren, taking it for granted that Mr. R. D. Foster stated the prediction and its fulfillment correctly, have been quoting this as an evidence of the prophetic character of Joseph Smith.

Some years ago when writing the history of the church, it occurred to us that it was always safer to verify these things, hence we looked up the history of Mr. Cookman and his family and discovered what we have stated above. Perhaps we should have published it before but have neglected to do so. Wherein we are at fault we ask pardon of our readers.

We do not pretend to account for the mistakes or state where the fault lies, whether in the memory of Mr. Foster, or otherwise; but as historian of the church we think we should be unfaithful to our trust if we did not correct statements of this kind; and this is our only apology for calling attention to it.

Respectfully submitted,

Church Historian.

THE TRUE CHURCH.—THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

Paul, writing to the Saints at Ephesus, says:

And you hath he [God] quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins; wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience: among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others . . . at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world.—Ephesians 2: 1-12.

We are here shown the condition of the natural man—the unconverted man—as we see him in everyday life. He is "without God in the world," and without hope in Christ. Through the transgression of Adam, this world became the kingdom of Satan, and so far did he get control that he became "the prince of this world" and "the prince of the power of the air." As far from this earth as the birds fly his influence and power extends—it is all his kingdom, and in this kingdom of Satan man is born, and by birth he is a member of it. He is a foreigner—an alien "from the commonwealth of Israel," a stranger "from the covenants of promise," and has no claims upon the kingdom of God.

After Paul shows that this had been the condition of the Ephesians, he adds, "Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone."—Verses 19, 20.

What had wrought this wonderful change? These who were foreigners are foreigners no more. They are no longer strangers, but are "fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God." How did they become citizens? By what means were they adopted? They were foreigners; how did they become naturalized? Whatever law applied to them, must apply to every man. Some means had been presented to them through which they had been removed from the kingdom of Satan into the kingdom of God. What was it? It was the gospel of Jesus Christ, through obedience to which they came into the kingdom of God—the church. And every son and daughter of Adam who has not come into the church of Jesus Christ, which is the kingdom of God, is still in Satan's kingdom, and he never can be removed from it until he complies with the terms of the gospel, as Jesus says, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3:5. Being born of the water and Spirit, is being baptized in the water and Spirit. There is no other means or way offered by our heavenly Father for man to be removed from Satan's kingdom. Faith (so called) can not remove him; hoping can not remove him; neither can praying nor being honest or sincere in his righteous desires; nor good intentions, nor good wishes. He may have all of these and still remain in the kingdom of evil. He "must be born of water and of the Spirit [or] he can not enter into the kingdom of God," and if he does not enter there he must stay where he is. There is no other place to go; no matter what his standing in society or religion, he is still in the kingdom of Satan. He can not by preaching remove himself, nor by organizing a church, nor by forming a creed, nor by trying to help remove others. There is nothing man can do to get out of that kingdom except complying with the terms of the gospel and being born—baptized—into the kingdom of God.

All men, like those Ephesians, are aliens and foreigners "from the commonwealth of Israel, and . . . the covenants of promise." Being foreigners, they must become naturalized, or they can have no claim upon these things; they are not for them. They are only for the house of Israel—they are not for strangers. If a foreigner comes to the United States and wishes to enjoy the rights and privileges guaranteed by this nation to her citizens, he must comply with the terms by which he also can become a citizen. Faith will not make him one, neither will hope, nor praying, nor good intentions, nor good wishes, nor sincerity, nor honesty. He must become naturalized, by the means the Government has adopted—not by any terms of his own.

The same with the natural man. He is a foreigner from the kingdom of God. If he desires to enjoy the rights and privileges of that kingdom, he must become naturalized in God's own way; that is, comply with the terms of the gospel: faith, repentance, and baptisms, by which, and only by which, all men can enter the kingdom of God—the church.

After the Ephesians had become "fellow citizens with the saints," Paul says they were "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets." We can find what that was by reading Hebrews 6:1, 2: "The foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment." And these, he tells us, are the principles of the doctrine of Christ. This is the foundation the apostles and prophets, and the Ephesians, were built upon. It is the foundation on which the true church is built, and the only one which our heavenly Father accepts. Paul says, "other foundation can no man lay." It is the only one on which the house of God can be built, and David says, "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it."—Psalm 127:1. In a religious sense it is useless, and a waste of time, to build on any other. No other principles can bring a man into the kingdom of God, or make him a fellow citizen with the saints, or of the household of God; or make him a member of the true church, or place him in a saved condition. But obedience to these principles of the doctrine—the gospel—can do all this.

God has offered salvation to all men, and that he might save them, Paul says he "hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation," "the word of reconciliation" (2 Corinthians 5:18, 19), and Peter adds, "this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you" (1 Peter 1:25). This makes the gospel the terms of reconciliation, and God demands of every man who would be reconciled to him that he must comply with the terms—the gospel. Faith alone will not reconcile him, neither will hoping, nor praying, nor good intentions, nor anything else he can do; nothing but complying with the terms will ever reconcile him to God. Complying with those terms will bring him into the true church.

In Ephesians 2:13-18 we read that Christ came and preached peace to the Jews and Gentiles, and that he broke down "the middle wall of partition" between them, that he might make of the two (Jew and Gentile) one new man; "that he might reconcile both unto God in one body"—one church—and that it is "through him both have access by one Spirit unto the Father." We are here told that God proposed to bring the Jews and Gentiles together in one body—one church—and by so doing, make of them one new man, that they should be no more Jew or Gentile. This new man was to be a son of God, and that he might become a son of God he "must be born again." "How can a man be born when he is old?" Jesus says he must be "born of water and of the Spirit." The natural man as we find him is not a son of God. He is a child of this world; he is a son of man. If he desires to change his condition and become a son of God, what shall he do? Hoping will not make him a son—neither will faith, nor sorrow for sin, nor weeping, nor reformation, nor good intentions, nor joining a society, nor a church organized by the wisdom of men—nothing that he can do will make him a son, only by obeying God's command and being "born again," thus entering the true church. We are told that "if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." (2 Corinthians 5:17), that is, a son of God. Then how can a man come into Christ? Paul says to the Galatian saints, "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, . . . bond nor free, . . . male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus."—Galatians 3:26-28. The only way to come into Christ is to be baptized into Christ, and that is the only means by which man can become a new creature—a child of God. Faith will not make him a new creature in Christ, neither will hope, praying, reforming, nor good works, honest intentions, or righteous desires; he never can come unto Christ until he is baptized into Christ, and then, and not until then, will he be a new creature in Christ.

John writing to the saints says: "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed on us, that we should be called the sons of God. . . . Now are we the sons of God: . . . when he shall appear we shall be like him."—1 John 3:1, 2. They were not always sons, but by some means they had become sons. What were those means? John, speaking of Jesus says, "He came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believed on his name."—John 1:11, 12. Believing on his name did not make them sons; it only brought them into a condition where power was given them to become sons. Receiving him did not make them sons. There was more for man to do than receive him, and believe. Paul says Christ came "to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons, and because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your heart, crying, Abba, Father. Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ." (Galatians 4:5-7.) We are here shown how the Galatian saints had become sons. They had been adopted into the family of God, and after their adoption he says "ye are sons," and an "heir of God." Again, he writes to the saints at Rome saying, "as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ;" (Romans 8:14-17.) These Romans had not always been sons, but had received the Spirit of adoption, and had complied with the teachings of that Spirit, and had been adopted, and then the Spirit bore witness to them that they were the children of God, and heirs of God. Faith did not make them heirs, neither did hoping, nor praying, nor honesty, nor sincerity, nor good intentions; nothing could do that, but receiving "the adoption of sons." The laws of adoption had to be complied with. They must be born again, of water and of the Spirit, and thus become new creatures in Christ—sons of God, and heirs.

We know that in every-day life a person can become adopted into a family by obeying certain laws pertaining to adoption, and he can then become a joint heir with the other children of the family, sharing equally with them in their possessions. But he must comply with the laws of adoption. Hoping, believing, wishing, praying, or reforming, will not adopt him into the rights of that family: he must obey the law. It is just the same as pertaining to the family of God: we must comply with the terms of adoption or we never can become sons of God, and heirs with Christ.

When Jesus organized his church, it was not of this world; its doctrine was of God and came from heaven. After his disciples had united with it, he told them that they were not of the world; that he had chosen them out of the world, and on account of that the world would hate them. Again he said of them, "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." They were in the world but not of it. They had entered into the church or kingdom of God, and had thus gone out of the world and into Christ. A man is either in the world or in Christ. The natural man as we see him is in the world. The gospel calls for all men to come out of the world. Now how can they get out? Faith will not take them out, hoping will not take them out, neither will reforming, nor honesty, nor good intentions, nor honorable desires, nor prayer, nor organizing churches, nor forming creeds, nor preaching doctrines of men. Nothing will ever take them out, except entering into the kingdom of God, the church of Jesus Christ, and "except a man be born of water, and of the Spirit, he can not enter the kingdom of God." No matter what he may say or do, he will still remain in the world until he complies with this law; so says Jesus. And God told him what to say.

Our Savior, speaking to the church, said: "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth whom the world can not receive."—John 14:16, 17. We are here told that the world can not receive this Comforter. Who is the world? Every one who has not become a member of the church of Jesus Christ. This Comforter was something to be specially given to the church, and to no one else. In verse 26 we are told what the Comforter is: "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you"; also, "When he, the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth: . . . and he will show you things to come."—John 16:13. Here we see that the Comforter is the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of truth, and that the world can not receive it. There is no way by which a man who has not become a member of the true church can receive it; he never can receive it until he comes out of the world.

Regardless of the claims made by some, that they have received the Holy Ghost, we assert that praying will not bring it to you, neither will hope, nor good behavior, nor noble thoughts, nor leading upright lives, nor attending revivals, nor uniting with any church organized by the wisdom of men. A man may do all this, and still be in the world; and so long as he is in the world he can not receive it. He must first be "born again" into the kingdom of God.

One of the promises of the Holy Ghost was, "He will show you things to come." That is revelation. The world says, "We do not have revelation now." Correct. Jesus said they could not receive it. He was also to take of the things of the Father "and show it unto you" (John 16:15); that is, reveal the things of God. The world does not receive this. The world has no promise of the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, in any manner, shape, or form. Then how can they ever receive it? Only in the way Peter speaks of: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."—Acts 2:38, 39. If a person receives this gift, and it shows him the things of God, and he proclaims them, that is prophecy. The world does not receive nor believe in prophecy. But those who have come out of the world, and into Christ, do. Reader, are you still in the world?

Under these considerations, is it any wonder that Jesus said to his apostles: "Go . . . preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not [and is not baptized] shall be damned"?

WAS THE GOSPEL PREACHED TO THE JEWS AFTER THE CRUCIFIXION OF CHRIST?

Paul speaking of the Jews at Berea says, "These were more noble than those in Thessalonica in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so."—Acts 17:11.

While reading the above the thought came to me: Are we noble enough, when anything is presented that is contrary to our preconceived ideas, to search the Scriptures daily to find out if it be true; or are we so sure we could not be mistaken in anything that we are ready to reject without investigation?

At the risk of being thought meddlesome, I wish to refer to an article in HERALD for November 9, 1904, page 1051, where the writer, speaking of Alpheus Cutler, says: "He was the man who had brought forward living witness to prove an ordination and rights of authority." Now one of the living witnesses to his ordination was his wife, Lois Cutler; and she testified, in my hearing, that her husband was never, at any time or place, ordained to the office of president of the high priesthood, although his church-members voted to uphold him in that office. I have never heard any one deny his having been ordained to a mission among the Lamanites. My mother-in-law, Sallie Anderson, told me that she knew it was this mission to the Indians to which Joseph ordained him, but this gave him no authority as president of the high priesthood, any more than any of the elders or high priests, as intimated in section 104, paragraph 7: "And they have a right to officiate in all these offices of the church, when there are no higher authorities present."

I will now refer to an article in HERALD for February 22, 1905, page 173: "And that the gospel should be preached no more to the Gentile world—that it is a mistake for any one to do so." And in proof of the position taken, reference is made to Doctrine and Covenants 85:23. I do not wish to make light of this matter, but only to search the scriptures with a desire to find the truth. In section 85 a commandment is given to the "first laborers" in the vineyard to prepare themselves, by solemn assembly, fasting, prayer, and study, for the time when he should send them out for the last time.

Did this refer to all the ministry? It would seem not, for he says, "Let those who are not the first elders continue in the vineyard, until the mouth of the Lord shall call them." Also section 92 infers that the Lord wished to "prepare the apostles" to prune the vineyard for the last time. Now what does all this mean? If a wise man owns a vineyard and wishes to put it in the best condition to bear fruit, does he send men out to prune it for the last time, and then give it over to the weeds and elements, and have no more work done in it? I thought the Lord's vineyard was the world. I thought he so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth need not perish but have everlasting life. I thought the gospel was to all. Revelation 14:6: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." Our Lord, foretelling the work immediately before his second coming, says: "And again, this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come, or the destruction of the wicked."—Matthew 24:32, Inspired Translation. Same chapter, verse 52, says: "Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his Lord hath made ruler over his household to give them meat in due season." And Saint John 4:36: "Jesus saith unto them, My meat is to do the will of him who sent me, and to finish his work."

In my younger days I thought that when the Savior was crucified, the Jews had rejected the gospel, and there was no more preaching done among them, except as they might happen to hear it when it was being preached to the Gentiles. So, also, I thought that when the prophet and the patriarch, Joseph and Hyrum Smith, were assassinated, the Gentiles had rejected the gospel, and no more preaching was to be done among them. I do not know how such an idea became fixed in people's minds; but I heard one of our own elders say, a few years ago, that he thought there was very little preaching done among the Jews after the crucifixion of our Savior. But I believe he was mistaken, and will refer to some scriptures as my reason for so believing. If I am mistaken I hope some one will correct me. Our heavenly Father, knowing beforehand that the Jews would condemn Jesus to death, sent the gospel first to them, that it should be preached to them expressly so that they might be left without excuse. After the resurrection of Christ, his commission then to his apostles was, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."—Mark 16:15. And verse 20 says, "And they went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following." Now the Jews were a part of "all the world," and of "every creature"; and the Lord was a party to the work done, for he confirmed the word with signs following the believers.

Now let us see if they preached to the Jews any more. Inspired Translation, Acts 1:8: "Ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, [the Jews' own country,] and unto the uttermost part of the earth." In Acts 2, among those who heard the gospel and saw the wonderful outpouring of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost, were Jews and proselytes. Three thousand were baptized that day. After this the Lord added daily such as should be saved. About five thousand are mentioned in Acts 4:4. In Acts 3, Peter's sermon was to Jews who had crucified Jesus. He tells them "Ye are the children of the prophets." Fourth chapter says many of them believed. Acts 6 says the number of believers multiplied greatly, and a great company of the priests (Jews) believed. According to Acts 7, Stephen preached to the Jews; for they had received the law through the disposition of angels, but had not kept it. Philip preached to Jews in Samaria and the people with one accord gave heed to his preaching. (See Acts 8:5, 6.) "They were baptized, both men and women."—Acts 8:12. Paul was a Jew, and the Lord miraculously convinced him, and converted him. If the gospel was no more to be preached to the Jews especially, why did not the Lord convert a Gentile instead of Paul? The work was not all done among the Jews yet. I heard one man, who professed to be one of the very few who now hold any priesthood on earth, say that if they preached to the Jews after Christ's crucifixion, they ran without being sent, and did wrong. But here was Philip sent to many Jewish cities; Stephen and Peter and John, all filled with the Spirit and preaching to Jews; and even the Lord himself appearing to Paul, converts him. When Paul is healed and baptized, he immediately preaches Christ in the Jewish synagogues, and confounded the Jews. (See Acts 9:20-22.)

In verse 35 we are told that all that dwelt at Lydda and Saron turned to the Lord. Also many believed. (See verse 42.) But perhaps some will say, Were not all these people Gentiles? Certainly not; for the apostles had not yet found out that it would be right for them to associate with a Gentile, even to preach the gospel to them. But the tenth chapter relates how a vision was shown Peter to convince him of his duty toward the Gentiles, which he had not hitherto understood. Though they were apostles, and in spite of the command to go into all the world, they never even dreamed that they ought not to preach to the Jews; but it required a vision to send them to a Gentile. And I think some will not believe now that preaching should be done among the Gentiles, till God shall see fit to give them a vision.

Peter converted Cornelius and his house, and when the apostles and brethren at Jerusalem heard it, they were so astonished that they contended with Peter because he would go into a Gentile's house. (See Acts 11: 2.)

Acts 11:19: "Now they which were scattered abroad ["all . . . except the apostles."—Acts 8:1.] upon the persecution that arose about Stephen, traveled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to none but Jews only." After this Paul and Barnabas stayed a whole year at Antioch and preached to much people.

But did they preach any more to Jews? Let us see. Acts 13: 5: "Preached the word of God in the synagogues of the Jews; and they had also John to their minister." Verse 43: "Many of the Jews and religious proselytes followed Paul and Barnabas." Also the fourteenth chapter of Acts records that Paul and Barnabas went to Iconium and preached, and great multitudes of Jews and Greeks believed. Again, Paul preached to Jews at Berea and Thessalonica (see Acts 17:12) and many of them believed. Paul "mightily convinced the Jews" at Ephesus. (Acts 18:28.) Again after a long time, he says he had preached Christ to both Jews and Greeks ever since he had been in Asia, at least for three years. (See Acts 19:31.) In Acts 21:20, the apostles at Jerusalem report to Paul: "Thou seest, brother, how many thousands of the Jews there are which believe." Acts 28 records that Paul preached to Jews at Rome, for he finally tells them he will turn to the Gentiles who will hear him. And shall we, at this day, say they did wrong to preach to Jews and convert them, then, just because the gospel was sent especially to the Jews at first; but afterward to all the world, when God himself confirmed the word and work done with signs following,—signs promised the believer? Yet, no doubt, as a nation, the Jews rejected Christ; but as many as received him were no more called Jews. And is it any more consistent, in our day, to say that because the gospel was to go to the Gentiles first, that no more preaching shall be done among the Gentiles, only as they happen to hear it, while it is being preached to the Indians or Jews? I think not, and especially when God confirms the word by signs following the believers in our day, as many can and do truly testify.

Among others, I can bear my testimony to this truth, also: that the gifts of healing, of dreams given by the Spirit, of speaking in unknown tongues, the interpretation, and the discerning of spirits, etc., do follow.

There is nothing in scripture to show that there shall be no more preaching done among the Gentiles, when the gospel shall turn to the Jews; but one portion of the word would indicate that the time had not yet come; for we read in Doctrine and Covenants 87: 3, speaking to the first elders: "that through your administration, they [the Gentiles] may receive the word, and through their administration, the word may go forth unto the ends of the earth." Any stopping-place here for the Gentiles who believe and are no more accounted as Gentiles? No, but they are to carry the gospel "unto the Gentiles first, and then, behold, and lo, they shall turn unto the Jews; and then cometh the day when the arm of the Lord shall be revealed in power in convincing the nations, the heathen nations, the house of Joseph [Lamanites] of the gospel of their salvation."

Has that day come? Has God revealed his arm in power to convince the heathen, or the Indians; of the gospel? If not, why should we believe the time had yet come to turn to the Jews? Ephraim was mixed with the Gentile nations, according to the Bible; and the patriarchal blessings given in the days of Joseph the Martyr, show that some at least who had joined the church were descendants of Ephraim, hence of the tribe of Joseph, and children of Abraham, as much as Jews were. The Lord promised that they and their children, some of them, should return to Zion; and the crowning power seemed to rest with Ephraim, while the Book of Mormon classes the Lamanites as descendants of Manassah.

In the Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 12: 12, small edition, we read that many of the Gentiles shall believe, who shall carry his words forth to the Lamanites; also in verse 11, that as many of the Gentiles as will repent are the covenant people of the Lord. And in 1 Nephi 3: 43 we find that the Book of Mormon, and the "record of the twelve apostles of the Lamb [which would be the New Testament] shall be established in one." Also in 2 Nephi 2: 2, last part, we read that the descendants of Nephi were to write, and the descendants of Judah were to write, "and the two writings shall grow together." And in Ezekiel 37: 19 the Lord says he will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hands of Ephraim (Book of Mormon), and will put them with the stick of Judah (Bible) and make them one stick. Three notable prophecies! And is it not a fact that the Lord has caused this to be done? And now the Book of Mormon and the Inspired Translation of the New Testament are combined in one book, and printed by the Reorganized Church. May the Lord enlighten all the honest in heart, and help us all to keep the faith.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

YEAR OF JUBILEE.

Dear Mothers and Sunday-school Teachers: Are you really helping to make this year—the seventy-fifth year since the church was organized, the one hundredth year since Joseph Smith was born—a year of jubilee? Are you encouraging and helping your children to gather up the fragments lying all around them that the empty baskets may be filled and the hearts of many be made glad thereby?

Her Very Best.

She was tall and angular; her gray hair was brushed smoothly back from her thin, pale face and coiled in a tight knot at the back of her head. She wore a close-fitting bonnet of black velvet, with a white bow on it, partly hidden by the black feather. There was a slight stoop in the shoulders; and while her clothes were made with some pretense to style and seemed befitting a woman of her age, they seemed strangely out of place on her; and it was plainly seen that she felt ill at ease as she stood in the center of the waiting-room and watched the tall, dignified looking man who was at the window of the ticket-office.

"You don't mean it. Certainly you are mistaken," one lady said to another, "that can't be Doctor Carter's wife."

"It certainly is. I saw her last summer when I was visiting in L—," her friend replied. "She sat in front of me in church the first Sunday I was there, and I was as much surprised as you are. I of course expected to see a—well, quite a different looking woman. She seemed to take no interest in the sermon, and you know what a fine one Doctor Carter would give. She takes no part in anything and seldom appears with him in public. I met him several times. His daughter was with him, a beautiful, accomplished girl; very much like her father. They say that he is—just a little ashamed of his wife; and no wonder; she is not at all intelligent and can not converse on the simplest subjects. I tried to talk with her one evening when there was a receptior given by the church; she seemed so ill at ease that I really pitied her; and I noticed that she soon slipped out of the parlors. I believe that she did say something about her little girl being sick and having been up all the night before; perhaps that made her duller than usual. She certainly is a stumbling-block to the doctor. I do not see what ever attracted a man like him to her; she could never have been pretty. It is another case of marrying beneath one intellectually. He certainly is to be pitied."

The two ladies hurried from the room, never dreaming that their conversation had been overheard.

The woman standing in the center of the floor turned and looked after them as they disappeared. There was a tremulous quiver of the thin lips, and she hastily brushed aside the gathering tears as her husband joined her.

"Come, hurry, Alice," he said, hurriedly. "I see Jim Barker out on the platform. I hope that he is going our way. I have not seen him for quite a while; not since before he was made judge."

"Jim Barker! Which is he?" she asked, sudden interest in her tone.

But in the bustle Doctor Carter did not hear her question; and as soon as he had her settled, he left her and she saw him laughing and shaking hands with a gray-bearded man at the other end of the car.

"I wonder if that is Jim Barker? Why he doesn't look at all like himself. I wonder how Jane is? Perhaps he will come back when he sees me. We used to have good times together," and there was an eager look on her face. "He never looks this way," and there was a sharp pain at her heart. "Perhaps he is ashamed of me, too."

Doctor Carter did not return until after Judge Barker had left the train. Jim had certainly changed. "He said that I should remember him to you," he said, dropping into the seat beside her.

"I thought that he would come back here to speak to me," she ventured to say.

"Why—we were so busy talking, and he had to get off so soon," Doctor Carter said, hesitatingly. He did not say that he had never thought to tell Judge Barker that she was on the train. It was not done intentionally, but he had become so accustomed to not speaking of her and she knew so few people that he had taken it as a mere courtesy that Judge Barker had wished to be remembered. He felt sorry for his thoughtlessness, for he knew that she and Judge Barker had known each other all their lives; while he himself had never met him before their marriage; but he did not say so, and after a few general remarks he pulled out his paper and began reading.

She leaned back and gazed out of the car-window, but she saw without seeing. The words "he is ashamed of her" and "a stumbling-block" kept ringing in her ears, and it seemed that the very wheels echoed the words as they spun along on the steel rails. "Ashamed of me! Well, I guess he and the children all are; and I have tried to do the very best I could."

The very best she could. Hers was a case of which there are plenty all around us.

Years before when she had married Bob Carter and settled down on the little farm left her by her father, her life had looked very bright to her. She had received as good an education as any of her acquaintances, and was very fond of books and reading of every kind. She took an active part in all the church and social life of the neighborhood. She was at that time her husband's equal intellectually, some thought his superior. It had been a happy night when he had gone forward and with some others had manifested his conversion in the little brick church. She felt that her cup of happiness was running over; and then as the days and weeks went by she noticed that he seemed to have something on his mind. She had been surprised when he at last confided to her that he felt that he was called to preach; but it would take several years of preparation and how would they live and where would the money come from for his college course, for he felt that no other would do.

Then she began to plan and work. It was very hard, but when September came she saw him drive off one day to the station on his way to college, while she hurried back into the house and took the crying baby from the cradle.

How she had managed she scarcely knew. She never had a moment to spare for reading and she was not even to church for six months. She had dismissed the girl and had no one to take care of the children. How he had improved when he came home at the end of the year! Then one year, when the crops had failed, she would not hear to his giving up, but had mortgaged her farm and taken in sewing. He never knew how poorly they had lived, but she felt repaid when he stood up in the little church and preached a sermon, which every one said was the best ever preached there. How proud she was when he had his first charge, although it was very hard for her to leave the people whom she had known all her life and go among entire strangers. The pay was small and she had hard work to make it reach.

How hard it was he never knew, taken up as he was with his duties as a minister, and she felt that if he was worried over the household affairs it would interfere with his success. So she had told him that she would manage the house and he was to preach so that she would never feel ashamed of him. She had not time to attend the various societies and take part in the social life of the church. There was always so much to do and so many children to take care of, and for years she had no more time for reading than when he was at college; there was always a little dress to mend or a stocking to darn. At first her husband had brought his books into the kitchen and tried to read aloud while she was working, but the children annoyed him and it was given up. She had promised herself much leisure and reading after a while, when the children became larger and the salary was more.

Doctor Carter had risen fast, but the children had to be educated and there were so many demands for money that she felt that she dare not spare herself in any way that would demand extra expense.

"I do wish, Alice," Doctor Carter said as they were entering the house, "you would try to act more like others when you are out and not make people think that you can not talk. It makes me almost ashamed of you." Doctor Carter did not know that he could never have made the remark at a worse time; but the ladies they had met on the train were the wives of a couple of ministers in an adjoining town and were very accomplished women in every way; and he could not help but notice the difference between them and his own wife, who seemed more embarrassed than usual, and the comparison had irritated him.

Mrs. Carter did not answer, but caught up little May and buried her face in her curls; and then went out to see if everything would be all right for dinner. She scarcely ate anything, but no one noticed it until little May said:

"Why, mamma, you are not hungry one little bit."

"Are you not feeling well, Alice?" her husband asked.

"I am only tired," she answered with a sad smile.

"You had better retire as early as possible. I have to go down town to meet a committee of ministers to-night," he replied.

"Oh, papa, the Carltons are coming this evening and I wanted you to help entertain them," Lillian exclaimed. "They will be so disappointed if you are not here at all. Of course, you won't care to come in, mamma. Papa, come home real early, won't you? Anna Carlton said her brother told her that he hoped that you would be home."

Doctor Carter laughed. "I am sorry that I can not accommodate Mr. Robert to-night; but I think, Pussy, you will be able to console him for my absence."

When Mrs. Carter entered her room that evening, she went and stood before the mirror and looked at the pale, thin face with its frame of thin gray hair reflected there. She studied it intently for a few minutes; then she opened a drawer and took out a photograph; it was of a young girl with soft curling hair and smiling face, not unlike Lillian's, whose laugh floated up from the parlor.

"To think how I am now and the way I used to look," she said half aloud. "I have tried to do my best, but perhaps I did not do the right way. I see now that it is not right for a woman to give up everything and never think of herself, but I don't see how I could have done much differently; but it is too late now for me," and she leaned her head on the table.

Presently an arm stole around her.

"Why, mamma! what is wrong?" and Tom's face pressed against hers. "Does your head ache? What would we ever do if you were to get sick?"

She looked up into the handsome, boyish face bent over her. "Don't, Tommie," she said, pushing back his hair, "you see I have got all ugly and faded and can't feel at home among strangers and I don't blame you for being ashamed of me," and there was a sob in her voice.

"Ashamed! Why, what ever put that into your head?" and his arms were around her again. "You are the best mother a boy ever had, and what would papa be if you hadn't have helped make him what he is? I guess I know. Harry told me once how you worked while papa was at college; he says he can remember it, if he was only just a little chap, and you have just worked for us all ever since. What if you can't feel right in society, you never had no chance. You are just mamma, and I tell you some of the boys would give a good bit to have one like you. Will Teal said—you know his mother is the one papa seems to admire so much; he says she is so good at church work—well, Will says his mother never has time to be bothered with him, she has so many societies on her hands; and he asked me how many you were president of, and I told him you had your hands full with us heathens at home, without going clear to Africa for any others. He said that he wished that his mother had some time for one heathen that he knew of," and Tom caught up the hands that she had thought so unshapely and kissed them in regular boy fashion.

She felt strangely comforted after he left. An hour later Doctor Carter entered the room. He picked up the photograph that she had left on the table. A sigh escaped him as he gazed at it.

"I never thought that Alice would change so when we were married," he said to himself. "We seemed to be so well suited in every way; but, somehow, we have grown apart. She has changed. She gets so embarrassed when in the presence of strangers that it is really painful to see her; and it mortifies me when I meet acquaintances like I did to-day. She is growing old-looking when she ought to be in her prime. No wonder Barton did not recognize her. His wife is so brilliant in society and such a fine conversationalist, and she used not to appear near so bright as Alice. She used to be so fond of reading, but I do not believe that she has read a book for years. She feels hurt that I do not take her out more, but"—he hesitated for a moment—"I suppose she can't help being as she is," and he sighed again as he gazed at the picture, and his mind went back to the time when it was taken, and he pressed it passionately to his lips, and then, turning it over in his hand, he caught sight of those words of Whittier that he had written on the back, but which now had become faded:

"For all sad words of tongue or pen,
The saddest are these: it might have been."

Suddenly he gave a sob and letting his arms drop on the table buried his head on them. Sob after sob shook that stalwart frame which had enthralled hundreds from the pulpit.

"Why have I been so blind?" he asked himself, "and so selfish, to allow it. It is my fault and I never thought of it before." He did not hear his wife's step when she stopped in surprise at the door.

"Why, doctor, what is wrong? Are you sick?" she asked anxiously, laying a hand on his shoulder.

"No," he said with a sob.

"Why, Rob, Rob, what is it? Won't you tell me?" She was down on her knees beside him, with an arm about him, fright and alarm depicted on every feature. She had never seen him sob like this, this brilliant, dignified man for whom she had done so much.

He put his arm around her and drew her convulsively to his breast, pressing his handsome bearded face to her thin one.

"Oh, Alice! I am the most selfish man on earth. Can you ever forgive me? I never can myself, no, never," he said brokenly.

"Why, what have I to forgive?"

"Everything. Allowing you to sacrifice yourself for me the way that you have done, and I so blind that I never saw it. My poor, poor wife, I will try to undo what I can. You have borne all the burden, and I, what have I been to allow it!"

"You didn't mean it and do you think that I am sorry? Why, I would do the same thing all over again. Oh, Rob, I have not been so happy for years," she said with a sob.—May Everett Glover, in New York Observer.

Editors Herald: We have a nice little Sunday-school, and all seem to be interested in the work. The Sunday-school means so much to the children, and it does not harm the parents to become scholars either. I would like to say to the isolated ones, get the Quarterly and form a home class. You have no idea of the benefit to be derived therefrom. You can also instill in the minds of the little ones who can not read, lessons that will not soon be forgotten. Do not get weary in well-doing, for success comes with the doing.

I will give you my experience in the home class work. We started a home class about the latter part of November. There were five of us all told. We got the Quarterlies and studied the lessons for every Sunday. We had two senior, one intermediate, and two primary classes, and we were blessed in our studies. As a result two of my little ones demanded baptism; and now our little class of five has grown to be a local known as the Minden City Sunday-school, and is in a good, flourishing condition. To God be all the praise. One thing that is keeping many of the Saints from becoming more zealous to the cause of the Master is by becoming members of the different lodges of the day. I have noticed that Saints who attend those lodges are generally good lodge members, but poor Latter Day Saints. When you are in their company how soon they talk Maccabee or Gleaner or receptions, and not a word on the gospel or its privileges; and when they come to meeting very seldom bear testimony or pray, take very little interest. But you talk lodge, how quick the interest changes! For my part I would, like David of old, rather be a doorkeeper in the house of the Lord, than to belong to any of them.

Editors Herald: This part of the state of Kansas and the surrounding country has been well warned by the servants of God in the last few months. First, by Elder F. C. Keck and Bro. Richards, Bro. Frank Christy and Bro. Frank Chatburn. Pittsburg, Kansas, is five miles from here and Bro. Riley and Bro. Keck are bombarding that place with a big tent, and when we have been there they had good turnouts, and we heard some fine sermons. At Camp Fifteen, about five miles west of Pittsburg, Bro. Frank J. Chatburn held a debate with the Reverend Carr of the Missionary Baptist Church. It was a complete victory for the truth. The hall was crowded to its capacity, and the best of order and good attention prevailed. Bro. Frank's cool and collected manner as he produced the insurmountable proofs of the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints being in harmony with the Scriptures, was in great contrast to the labored efforts of Reverend Carr as he tried to prove that baptism was a nonessential, and that a man need not be baptized to get into Christ's kingdom; but that he must be baptized to get into the Baptist Church. Any one would have felt sorry for the poor fellow, as Bro. Frank gradually hedged him up, and showed his weak position, and made one point after another, proving Reverend Carr's position to be wrong, and his church not in harmony with Christ's church in doctrine or in organization. He did not make an attempt to answer a great many of the questions that Bro. Frank brought up; and in his last speech all he did was to give a thirty-minute talk on hell, holding the poor wretches over the lake of fire and brimstone; and at the close he told us that men who were wicked went to a literal burning hell when they died, and then at the last day hell was cast into the lake of fire; and as he took his seat he told Bro. Frank to take them out if he could. But when Bro. Frank read Revelation 20:13: "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire," it put a different construction on the passage. The more this gospel is assailed, the brighter it shines and causes the hearts of the Saints to swell with joy. The Saints of the surrounding country were out in force, and all seemed to rejoice. If all debates were conducted with the same spirit of fairness as this one was, I would like to hear one each week. The word Mormon was not used throughout the debate; and every time Reverend Carr referred to our people he would say, "You Latter Day Saints." I was pleased to see the kindly spirit manifested by both men, and Bro. Frank did not forget to thank Reverend Carr for his gentlemanly manner during the debate.

Ever praying that we as a people may be worthy to be called God's people,

Your brother,

W. R. STIEBLE.

MOUNTAINVILLE, Maine, August 7, 1905.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I have written to the church papers, as I have been very busy; but I am glad to be able to say that wherever I have been, and however much occupied with the cares and pursuits of life, that dear Friend has ever been my support, comfort, and stay, because I have always found time and place to draw near to him, and accordingly he has drawn near to me. And did you ever stop to think for a moment what it means to have the Savior near to you—what a difference it makes in one's life whether one is with or without such a friend? With him, wherever we be, whatever we do, we know he leads us, supports us, and, amid the dangers and conflicts of life, saves us, too. I know I have been in danger, in storms on the ocean, when others have been afraid, and yet I have not been the least afraid, but perfectly calm—yes, even happy for the assurance that he who once stilled the raging sea was with me and would bring me to safety—and he did. And not only this, though, but the more we walk with Jesus—the longer and closer our companionship—the more of his Spirit we receive, and accordingly the more light and knowledge, and the more we are prepared to meet successfully the wiles and snares of the evil one.

I want to say that I am still trying to keep close to Jesus all the way; and though often cast down and surrounded on every hand by discouraging features, I intend through Christ Jesus to come off more than conqueror finally. Pray for me, Saints, that I may grow stronger in the work and be of more use and benefit to the dear Master and his earthly kingdom.

Yours in the work of the Master,

WALLACE A. SMALL.

McTAGGART, Assiniboia, Canada, August 8, 1905.

Dear Herald: We are all at work in the vineyard of the Lord, doing what our hands find to do, and praying God to give the increase? We praise his holy name for what he has done and is doing for us. He is striving with many more of the honest in heart, and we look forward with an eye of faith to a goodly ingathering into his kingdom in the near future. I am now at McTaggart giving out tracts and talking the gospel. We expect some of our elders to be with us soon in this place, as we think the harvest is ripe.

Bro. E. E. Williams and family, and two of Sr. Sandidge's boys have moved to this vicinity from Montana, and the Sandidge boys expect their mother and the remainder of their family soon. This is a great stimulant to us as Bro. Williams is an elder of much ability, and all are helpers. We of Weyburn Plains expect to go to Bro. Williams' place soon, and he will make an opening in that neighborhood, thirty miles from this place. Our oldest son, Roy, has a fine claim near there, and I have been staying with him the most of the summer. Have met some there who are reading our tracts, and Book of Mormon.

The great opposition we met with at first at Weyburn Plains has abated somewhat, and many friends have been made to the cause of Christ by the godly lives of the Saints. May God help us that we may all live so that each Saint will be a light to the world indeed. I do love this work. The more I try to help others see the great and glorious work of the latter days, the more blessings I receive at God's hands. Pray for us that we may live to be worthy the name we bear, and help to build up the cause of Zion.

Your coworker,

FLORENCE TOOVEY.

AKRON, Iowa, July 25, 1905.

Editors Herald: Having just returned from Sioux City, where Bro. W. A. Smith and Bro. J. M. Baker are holding tent-meetings so successfully, (having baptized twenty-eight, with more near the kingdom,) my soul rejoices because of such a grand work being done—just what I have prayed for, lo, these many years. And now that God is blessing that people in leading them out of darkness into the marvelous light of the restored gospel of his dear Son, I feel to say with the psalmist, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me; praise the Lord." And, dear Saints in Sioux City—yes, new converts everywhere—you are now ready to be workers together with God for the upbuilding of the work in every department. To God's children there are exceeding great and precious promises given, but all his promises are conditional. Inasmuch as ye are obedient and faithful ye shall be blessed. I have asked myself many, many times, What is it to be faithful? We are to do the will of the Father. He says, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." His commandments are life everlasting. How shall we go at it to do this? I think by a close study of God's word, so we will be familiar with all our heavenly Father would have us do. Jesus says, Be ye perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect. Again he says, Be ye holy, even as your heavenly Father is holy. I have heard some say we can not be perfect or holy in this life of sins and trouble. Jesus told his disciples, Ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth. Is not that being purified or sanctified a state of perfection? Again, we are told to live in peace and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord. Now I understand when we obey the pure principles of the gospel we are in a state of perfect holiness before the Lord; and you who have just been baptized for the remission of sins, have had your sins remitted, and have become just such creatures as God loves to own and to bless. You are just where, if you love him and keep his commandments, you may stay perfect,—stay holy. There will be trials, troubles, disappointments, sorrows, and temptations to be met and to be overcome. Satan will try to destroy you; but, "if ye love me, keep my commandments." Be pure. The pure in heart shall see God. But we must attain to all these Christian graces in order that we may see the Lord.

I have attended Holiness meetings and observed how earnest they seem to be, and want every one to join with them. I tell them I agree with them that Christ's followers must become holy; but I can not accept their terms. Jesus says, Obey the truth. This is the key to holy living. Keep every command. Pay our tithing. Help every one in our power, that is in need. Do unto others in all things as ye would they should do unto you. Possess your souls in patience. Love your brothers and sisters with a pure heart, fervently. And, above all things, watch and pray.

"Watch!" does the Master say? Yes, "Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation." So we must not only pray, but watch. Must we watch our brother or sister? No, watch ourselves lest we enter into temptation. Our blessed Lord suffered and was tempted, was tried, so he could advise his children; that we might be able to overcome the tempter as he overcame; and now that you have put on Christ and covenanted with him in the waters of baptism to serve him, it behooves you to observe all these commands. And if we can comply with all the commands, all the laws he gives to us, with all the pure principles he in his kind wisdom and love admonishes us to,—he says if we do these, and abide in him, he will pray the Father that we shall not be plucked out of his hand.

Now, dear Saints, if you can all do all these things which you have covenanted to do, will the honor be yours? Oh, no. It will all belong to their author, even our blessed Savior; for we shall only have done our duty. I hope none of you will be as long as I have in attaining to good works, as you can associate with each other and listen to the wise counsel from your beloved pastor, a true man of God, of whom you need not be ashamed.

Another command is, Do not forsake the assembling of yourselves together; and to search the Scriptures, Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. Keep posted in the church-work, in church literature, and let your daily prayers go out for the missionaries, the sick, the poor, and for every work. Hand your reading-matter to your friends, your neighbors. In a word try to save a soul. Send to those you know; sow the seeds of truth; and God will abundantly bless you. You do not know what a help you may be to the missionaries, and thereby help to hasten God's work; and this will help you to come up higher, and become faithful servants to the Master. Oh, that God in his wisdom may instill into your hearts and minds no other desire but to serve him, old and young, with an eye single to his glory. I pray you will not have to ask God to forgive your short-comings and mistakes as often as I have. I have made so many failures, and come so far short, as Paul said, of the glory of God, and had to ask so many times to be forgiven! But I had no place to go but to my heavenly Father, for he has the words of eternal life; and I could not give this work up and lose the crown which we are promised is at the end of the race. Yes, it is worth the sacrifice, it is worth the price, even if we do pass through deep water, yes, the furnace of affliction, persecution, or whatever comes. If we are only faithful in God's service, we shall stand with the redeemed on God's glorified earth. Let us all do our duty in the Master's service, and meet without the loss of one, is the prayer of,

Your sister in Christ,

M. A. CHRISTY.

LEXINGTON, Kentucky.

Editors Herald: Our reunion is over, and considered by the Saints the most successful of any ever held in this country. I believe conditions are improving very much in Kentucky and Tennessee among the Saints, spiritually. We were strongly admonished by our brethren of the priesthood to live pure lives and let our light shine to those around, and I am sure that if we will follow the instructions given, it will result in our everlasting good, and the glory of the Lord.

It appeared that the enemy thought it a vain effort to raise his hand in the way of creating any discord during the time, and we are glad that unity and brotherly love prevailed. One brother from Nebraska seemed to think that the Saints of Kentucky and Tennessee had an uncommon degree of fervent love for each other. This should encourage us to labor diligently, to discharge all thoughts and everything of every nature that is calculated to cause a coolness among ourselves. We should strive to be a family of peaceable, loving, kind children, living in obedience to all the instructions our Father gives to us. For surely they are all for our good.

Let us not forget what manner of men we are. We need instruction along every line of our journey. We are commanded that we be not deceived, and that false teachers and false prophets will come to us in sheep's clothing, in days of old men "of your own selves" arise, speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them. Paul seemed to be free to openly denounce the ways of some of the preachers, in his epistle to Titus. Turn and read it, then do not be afraid you will give a club to the enemy to fight us with by denouncing all manner of unrighteousness. Remember we need to be enlightened on all these lines. That was one of the reasons why God set in the church all these officers, to keep us from being deceived; so let us have all the education we can get on these, as well as all other lines; but let us get it in the right spirit. The preacher that is so thirsty for strong drink as to gobble up such a quantity of it, in the presence of the world, has given Satan a club to use, all right, and the only way we can forestall him is to openly denounce such publicly, and let the world know we are not cooperating with the Devil by keeping still about the matter.

May the Lord's blessings fall upon all his Saints, is my prayer.

Editors Herald: I herewith send you a clipping from the National Daily Review, August 9, 1905. I thought it might interest you.

"FAITH HEALING IS SANCTIONED.

"In the local court at White Plains, New York, a judge has decided that faith healing by Christian Scientists is not in conflict with the laws of New York. The case came to the court about three years ago because of the death from diphtheria of a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Quimby, who were indicted for manslaughter, together with John C. Lathrop, who treated the child during its fatal illness. The defendants insisted that they had the right to determine the manner of treatment of the child and that they should have the same rights under the law as others who decide upon the method of treatment in illness. The indictment, which had brought about great interest at the time of its first return, was declared by the jurist to be defective in that it charged no crime. There is no offense, it was held, in giving a child tender care, though it conflicts with recognized schools of medicine. The court's finding practically placed upon the scientists the stamp of legal approval of the methods of faith and prayer employed in times of sickness. Whether other courts will follow the precedent is yet to be determined."

It seems that the Lord is working in more ways than one. I ask to be remembered in your prayers. I am still in the faith.

SEATTLE, Washington, August 7, 1905.

Editors Herald: Bro. Joseph and family arrived here last Wednesday morning and left this morning at half past eight for Vancouver, British Columbia. His visit among us was hailed with delight by the Saints. His coming to this mission has encouraged and stimulated the Saints to greater and renewed diligence to press onward in the service of their Master.

On Sunday the P. I. hall, which is located in the center of the city, was well filled with Saints from different parts of the district, and a good representation of outsiders, of prominent men and women, who gave the best of attention to the speaker. Bro. Smith enjoyed a large measure of the Spirit in his effort to acquaint his audiences with the position occupied by the Reorganization as a body in the religious world. His audience consisted of judges, lawyers, bankers, doctors, and other people of prestige, who highly complimented him on his sermon. A number of the Utah elders were in attendance at one of the meetings; but we think they did not go away elated over what they heard, as Bro. Smith drew the line of distinction between us and that body in language that could not be misunderstood by them. One of them persisted in saying that he had heard

Bro. Joseph speak in the tabernacle in Salt Lake City; and when he was corrected in a kindly way by Bro. Joseph, he still insisted that he was right. The claim made by Brigham Young saying that they had the smoothest and greatest liars in their church was evidently correct, and they have not all died off yet. The city press has shown him every kindness and respect, and proffered him their columns in which to express his views to the reading public. As a result he had the opportunity of giving the public a few pointers. During his stay with us the Ladies' Aid Society gave a reception in honor of Bro. Joseph and his family. Ice-cream, cake, and other good things were gratuitously served to Saints and friends.

President Smith's sermons were of the highest order, and enjoyed by all, so far as we know, (except by the Salt Lake Mormons), and especially by the Saints, who were greatly pleased to both see and hear our worthy brother. We pray that the Lord will continue to bless him in his endeavor to build up the kingdom of God and established peace and righteousness among the people. We expect to have him and family in the mission about six weeks longer. The health of the family is good and they seem to be enjoying their trip in the great Northwest immensely.

Yours hastily,

G. T. GRIFFITHS.

LEXINGTON, Nebraska, July 26, 1905.

Editors Herald: As I think over my life and see what I have had to pass through, my heart goes out in thanksgiving to my Father in heaven for his care and protection, for I have had all the sorrow that I could bear; but now I see that these things were for my good. I regret that I was not more patient.

Let us, as God's children, study his word, and the revelations which he has given in these last days, not only to say, but to do them. I find that I have not studied the word as I should have done; and that has given the enemy power over me.

I thought when I came here that a year was as long as I would stay; but I feel that I may do more good here than where there is a branch. It has always been the desire of my heart to do as much good as possible. I am well treated here by every one; and I can preach by example, and that will help the elders if they ever come here. May God bless all his children.

BRODHEAD, Kentucky, August 8, 1905.

Editors Herald: On July 8 I began a tour of country places holding meetings at Lebanon Junction; we held meetings in the Christian church. Bro. Metcalf joined us on the 10th, but was soon called home. We continued alone over the following Sunday, with very poor attendance. Then, on the 17th, Bro. Metcalf rejoined us and we came to Lyons and held meetings in the union church for one week, which were fairly well attended. From there we went to Athertonville, Bro. Metcalf's old home, where we again occupied in a union meeting-house for another week. Here we had good attendance, and seemingly good interest.

Here, on July 31, occurred the most unpleasant part of our experience. Bro. Metcalf, feeling that home conditions demanded his presence and assistance, very reluctantly concluded to leave me alone, quit the general ministry for the present, and, securing local employment, remain at home for a time. So at New Haven we separated, he going to his home in Louisville, and I coming to Brodhead. I began meetings the night of the same day of my arrival, by occupying on a store platform under a gasoline light. By the use of our seemingly almost indispensable little telescope organ (thanks to the Saints of Bald Knob, Arkansas, who made us a present of the same), and with what we could do in the way of singing, we soon had a good-sized congregation of quiet listeners about us. Mr. Frith, the merchant who evidently believes in "fair play," took quite an interest in the meetings, by furnishing the light and preparing seats for the listeners. We continued these open-air meetings for four nights when we were invited to come and occupy in the Christian church. We have preached five times in the church and have another appointment for to-night. We expect to commence a grove-meeting about four miles west of this point in a few days.

This is where Bro. W. H. Forbes, formerly of Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania, resides. Also near here is Bro. Hiram Oliver and his family of six sons—though one of them is now in Toledo, Ohio,—most all of them, I understand, belonging to the church.

Bro. Forbes is some eighteen miles distant, engaged in business. Word just came to us yesterday that this brother last week walked a distance of seventy miles to answer a call to administer to a sick brother, hiring a man to take his place to carry on his work in his absence. Then, after administering to the sick, baptizing two, and blessing some children, made the return trip on foot—a total of one hundred and forty miles! How is that, Mr. Editor, for the faith and courage of a local elder?

[If all the local ministry were like that we could dispense with half the general missionary force and still have more work done; and if all the missionaries were of that kind of material we would not hear so many complaints from the Saints that the elder refuses to leave the house to announce appointments for evening meetings at the schoolhouse, unless the husbandman stops his work in the field in order to take the elder around the neighborhood.—EDITOR.]

We have some good listeners, and some concede that we are "preaching the Bible"; but further than that, and that we are trying to do our duty, we can not say.

Yours in the gospel,

H. E. MOLER.

SPOKANE, Washington, August 7, 1905.

Dear Herald: My discussion with Reverend George W. Williams did us no harm, as evinced in the baptism of ten precious souls; and yesterday we again troubled the waters, baptizing seven more, making seventeen in all. Reverend Williams' prophecy falls flat in the face of the above facts. He intended, he said, "to sweep 'Mormonism' out of Spokane"; but it is the same old story—whenever the mustard stalk is kicked by those "right reverend fellows," the seed drops and another crop is harvested. The most pleasing feature, however, is that we baptized a whole family of Brighamites by the name of Happy, and yesterday at our three meetings it was in evidence that at least the Spokane Branch had one Happy family in it. It may seem harsh to break up the roosting-place of the "still hunters" (Brighamite elders), but if it is any consolation to the "boys," will say, We shall try to occupy occasionally.

Bro. Joseph and family paid us an appreciated visit. The Saints are very favorably impressed with the President and his wife, also the three little boys. Many latch-strings are out in Spokane for the distinguished family. Joseph gave us five of his characteristic sermons, which were well received, giving strength and encouragement to Saints, and being convincing to others of honest thought honestly expressed.

Bro. Samuel Wood, of Independence, has located here with the prospect of plenty of work at his profession—painting and paper-hanging. Bro. W. W. Fordham, our new Bishop's agent, is regularly installed in his office. Bro. J. M. Puckett, the former agent, spent Sunday with us, and formally turned over the keys to Bro. W. W., as he is moving out of the district to his new farm over next to the mountains.

Our branch is growing in more ways than one. Not a jar of any kind mars our peace. The branch numbers something over eighty members. Our beautiful church is also growing towards completion. Bro. Coleman and family have donated the electric wire and light fixtures, which is no little sum, and only shows that works and faith go together nicely. A modern church thirty-six by eighty-two feet, with a complete finishing in sight, without a mortgage, is one of the wonders of this Western energy and enterprise. We cordially invite all Saints in the Northwest to come over to Spokane and find rest for both soul and body.

T. W. CHATBURN.

KANSAS CITY, Missouri, August 11, 1905.

Dear Herald: Since 1868 you have been a welcome visitor at our home, laden with precious truths to cheer, comfort, and instruct us in the way of the Lord. Many times our hearts have been made glad; but when you came in to-day with the message right from the altar of God's love through Bro. Frederick M. Smith, our cup of joy was full to overflowing. Oh, may God help the erring ones to heed the voice of the Good Shepherd, and return to the fold while he is calling. I have hopes that many will.

I remember about thirty-one years ago while laboring in Utah, while in conversation with Elder Anson Call (a leading man in the church in Utah) in regard to the future of the church, he said to me: "I feel confident that it will not be very long until we will return back to Missouri; and, no matter what the Smith boys teach now, according to the revelations they will stand at the head of the church in Zion."

I almost feel like the day to favor Zion is at hand. God has informed us that the hastening time is at hand.

Well, we are making good progress here in this city. I am devoting my time in the ministry; am preaching—nearly every night; many receive the word gladly, and some are coming into the fold. We have now six branches here in Kansas City, and and I have one opening at Thirty-eighth Street and Park Avenue, where I have baptized fifteen within the last year. We have now thirty-one members, and no doubt I will baptize several more who are standing at the door of the kingdom.

God is with us in our labors, and is confirming our words with signs following. During all the long years of my labors in the ministry, I never felt better than now, and the prospects were never better.

Yours in gospel bonds,

F. C. WARNKY.

ALICE, Ohio, August 10, 1905.

Editors Herald: There are just four Latter Day Saints here, and we have no preaching, except the good sermons in the HERALD and Ensign. Still the sermons and letters from the elders and Saints keep us in good spirits.

Dear Saints, we ask you all to pray for us that if it be God's will we may yet live near a Latter Day Saint church, where we can be with other Saints, and hear the true gospel. Some of my neighbors asked us last week for the little book, What We Believe. We gave it to them. After they read it, I asked them what they thought of it. They said if that was what we believed, it was all right.

Dear Saints, pray for us that we may be faithful to the end.

Your brother and sister,

EDWIN AND ADA LAMBERT.

RIVERTON, Oregon, July 29, 1905.

Editors Herald: Bro. Keeler and the writer pitched tent here Wednesday, July 10, and began services in it same evening; about seventy-five persons attended. The next evening proved that a mixture of curiosity and interest possessed the people, and fully one hundred were present. We distributed tracts treating on the subjects discussed occasionally, praying the Spirit to breathe on "the word" spoken and read; and otherwise casting "the bread" upon the tempestuous "sea," hoping it will draw some hungry soul to the surface, and that some day my brother, myself, or others of the Lord's servants may "trouble the waters," and land "the good fish" on terra firma.

The adversary has no church members here that he can employ, hence he hoots and yells, through his third-class emissaries; this to let you know that he is ever mindful of royal honors, when strangers land in the city.

One evening (while my big brother was absent) six of his most honored bodyguard notified me (standing at a respectful distance from the tent) that "the old fool had better watch his tent or they would dynamite it and blow it all to hell!" Of course, I expected to descend immediately, supposing they had a new kind of dynamite, as the combustible your writer is familiar with generally sends things skyward. However, an hour later a trio of "brave fellows" were in the act of letting loose the ropes on north side of tent, when a little man appeared on the scene, upon which these "heroes" boarded the lightning express to "outer darkness"; a few evenings later we found our sleeping-tent in ruins; stakes and other articles scattered in adjoining lot. After counseling, Bro. Keeler quietly by letter notified the sheriff of the situation. Since then hostilities have gradually subsided. We have made many friends in the place who have shown their appreciation and sympathy, inviting us to visit, and looking after the needs of the outer man. May the lord bless them and hear our prayers in their behalf.

I feel well in the work. Was pleased to read that article in the HERALD on revelation. I wonder if there is any difference in writing an article in the HERALD on revelation, and speaking in private or preaching in public on the subject.

Hoping, as Bro. Joseph Smith said at close of General Conference, that we may all receive the spirit of wisdom and revelation, I will close.

Your brother,

N. C. ENGE.

CAMDEN, Arkansas, August 13, 1905.

Editors Herald: I am wondering if the young Saints as a rule appreciate the glorious privileges they have of attending our own churches. I have heard two sermons since coming here, and I long to be near some branch of our own faith. We had the opportunity of hearing sermons while we lived in Jonesboro, some from our beloved parent and some from Bro. H. O. Smith; also had the pleasure of meeting Brn. W. P. Pickering and Moler. Thanks to Bro. Moler for his consoling words and faithfulness in time of sorrow for our dear little one whom God chose to call from us. May God bless him and my father for their noble work. I ask the Saints to pray for us who are far away from any branch, that we may always do our duty and live up to our belief. Ministers are always welcomed at our home. We would be only too glad to have you come.

I have listened to two Methodist Episcopal sermons, but they come far short of what we hear from our own pulpit.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. N. BALDWIN.

PORCUPINE, Wisconsin, August 13, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have been a subscriber to the HERALD and Ensign for about sixteen years, and feel lonely when either fails to appear, which seldom occurs. On page 780 of HERALD I find the caption: "Answers," which refers to F. R. Tubbs, of Canada. It is hoped he will in the near future see some of his erroneous positions and receive better light, especially in trying to advocate a difference between the Spirit of God and the Holy Ghost. There are many good letters in the church papers that are interesting and instructive, especially so when they come from elders with whom I have been acquainted. Bro. S. Houghton, in speaking of Bro. Eli Hayer being at the reunion at Westhope, North Dakota, brings to mind when the writer was in Minnesota some four years ago, Bro. Hayer came to Correl and gave several good sermons. On Sunday morning discoursed on the resurrection of the dead, hitting upon the theory that death and hell shall give up their dead. A Lutheran member took him to task for the theory that those in prison should come forth, Mr. Lutheran holding that once in hell would remain for ever. After a short discussion, the Lutheran being a little puzzled, Bro. Eli said, "Well, I've got 'em out; you get 'em back if you can."

I take the HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves, of which I have many and wish to send them out if any one can tell me where they can be made use of. Hoping and praying for the upbuilding of God's kingdom, I am,

Yours in the true faith,

JAMES M. BLOOD.

PIPECREEK, Texas, August 10, 1905.

Editors Herald: The long looked for debate between J. A. Currie and H. O. Smith is now a thing of the past. It resulted in a glorious victory for the truth. This is not only the verdict of the Latter Day Saints; but a majority of those of the outside renders the same verdict. Currie struggled hard to set up his men of straw, only to have them thrown down by the unanswerable arguments of Bro. H. O. Smith.

Currie tried hard to make many scriptures apply to the Jews only; such as Mark 1:4: "John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins"; and Mark 16:15: "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," etc.; and Acts 2:38: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ," etc. Bro. Smith made the above passages so plain, that only the willfully blind failed to see the point. Currie denied the resurrection of Christ; in fact he denied the resurrection of the dead in toto. Bro. Smith showed from the scriptures in unmistakable language that Currie was out of harmony with the Bible in this also. The truth is, that Currie failed from start to finish to move one single argument offered by H. O. Smith.

We think much good will result from the debate. The faith of the Saints is made stronger, and the debate left the latter-day work in a better light before the people.

Think the Currie influence is on the wane, and we have no fears of his hurting the latter-day work in the future as he has in the past. Am glad to be numbered with a people that have Christ and his gospel for a foundation, and am thankful for such God-sent men as H. O. Smith.

F. HODGES.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., August 3, 1905.

Dear Herald: The work in the City of Brotherly Love is moving slowly along, and we are making some progress. Some times it seems like it is very slow, measuring the progress as others do. It will be thirty-eight years the twenty-second day of this month since Bro. William W. Balir and E. Robinson organized the Philadelphia Branch, in a private house, with only ten members.

The branch has grown slowly to be sure, but the growth has been very solid and durable. We now have a pretty little brick chapel in which our branch meets; and we are reaching some outsiders with the good news, and frequently we are called on to induct some new family into the work.

I baptized nine in 1905. Two of them were heads of families not connected in any way with the work. One of the others was a descendant of the great founder, William Penn. All are good Saints now, no matter whose descendants they are, nor what their former church connections were.

We found it very difficult to reach the people here by preaching only at the church, so we are holding meetings on the street, and find it a success. We thus reach a great many good, earnest people that we otherwise would not. We have good order and good liberty in preaching the word, so feel like good is being done.

The Lord is remembering his people, and giving them help in the time of trouble, healing some and giving others grace to stand what they are not healed of. He is guiding his work, and developing the fruit of the Spirit in the lives of the Saints, which is more to be prized than all else.

Some of the Saints are preparing to attend the Massachusetts District reunion at Touissett, Massachusetts. I trust it will be a success, as well as all else undertaken in the name of the Lord.

Your brother in the one faith,

WALTER W. SMITH.

ROZELLE, New South Wales, July 19, 1905.

Editors Herald: Have just returned from a trip north. Saturday night, was taken very much by surprise when I had been artfully decoyed to Fernleigh Hall, Balmain, and suddenly found myself in the midst of a large gathering of Saints and friends, who began to congratulate me through song and otherwise upon my arrival at the thirty-eighth mile-post of my life's journey, and in good health. I have never been the victim of such a cleverly planned affair before. It was pleasing to see the unity and fellowship that characterized the evening's program of games and musical harmony that followed—and that was not all: Elder Seaberg on behalf of the branch in a neat speech, presented the missionary with a purse of some nineteen dollars with which to procure a good overcoat, a comfort the writer needs very much. There are many links in the chain that binds us to the Saints in Australia, but on this occasion they forged another one by the brotherly spirit they manifested, and proved beyond doubt that they are children of God who wish to assist his work by deeds of love and words of encouragement, all of which give the worker in the field more heart to press on in his arduous work. This birthday party did not close until the large company in two relays sat down to a well-filled table, provided by the sisters. I shall never forget it.

Am sorry to tell you that Bro. Barmore's health is far from what it ought to be, owing to the after-effects of dengue fever. He has had to take complete rest. We hope a change from Queensland to New South Wales, with good nursing and the help of God, will restore him. The Saints in Brisbane and Sydney will do what they can to that end.

The winter has been sharp, with heavy frosts, stiff westerly winds, ice in some places, and snow in others, but not heavy snow like your Rockies usually receive. There is much poverty in the cities here.

My family circle also had a new link added—a boy—the fourth link. Sr. Wells is not in proper health, but we hope for improvement.

Hastily yours,

G. R. WELLS.

HYDRO, Oklahoma, August 3, 1905.

Editors Herald: I find by experience that at times Oklahoma is fine for missionary work, but a part of the time we can not get the people out at all.

Bro. Aylor and I held a good meeting near Piedmont in Bro. John Minium's grove, closing Sunday night last. We held over three Sundays, our crowd ranging from about fifteen or twenty to as many as four hundred. We had some very unfavorable weather, yet our interest was good. Four were baptized, and no less than about ten were just at the door of the kingdom. Srs. Etta Smith of Kingfisher and Estella Casto of Shawnee were our organists, and we baptized both of them. The Saints there are fine people, and assisted nobly in our meetings.

Bro. Aylor went east to the Terlton reunion, and I came on west to join Bro. J. F. Grimes in a series of meetings here at Hydro. We are staying with Bro. and Sr. W. A. Coffey, who are trying to let their light shine. Bro. Coffey is a priest, and has appointments for preaching at two schoolhouses. We are now preaching at a schoolhouse seven and a half miles from Bro. Coffey's house. We have fine crowds, but can not get back to Bro. C.'s until half past one in the morning.

In a late HERALD I notice an article on debates, which I very heartily disagree with. I have learned by experience that any iron-clad rule applied in a general way, will and has worked disaster to our work in some instances. I am heartily in sympathy with the thought of conferring with the missionary in charge, and letting him arrange for the debates, when the circumstances and interest of the work demand; but when a man attacks the work and one of our missionaries is on the ground in defense of the message we bear, then is the time, while the people are all interested and a debate is in demand, for us to win a victory. If we wait six months or two years for a continued correspondence, our interest is largely gone, and usually another man sent to do the debating who has not the confidence of the people as had the one who opened the work, and on whom the attack was made. I speak from experience, having been assistant missionary in charge in Oklahoma for three years, since coming South. I believe we have some men who are too eager for debates; but it seems to me that it would be better for the missionary in charge to write that man a personal letter, to hold him in check, than to send out a rule that practically ties the hands of every missionary in the field. Quite a number of the brethren have expressed themselves to me in substance about as I have written, and that is why I write this. Whatever is best for our work I say "amen" to it. But I have kept quiet for some time, though I have seen our work suffer in a number of instances; and the brethren hurt, because of the ruling which seems to mean to them that the church has confidence in them to preach, but not to make a defense when attacked. Our young men are often held in check, and never given a chance to defend the work, while their minds are quick, active, and full of the spirit of the work, and they are able to make a defense that will tell for our work. I do not court debates, but do believe in defense.

Yours in the conflict,

HUBERT CASE.

Retrospect.

By the request of Bro. and Sr. McHalfey I opened up the work of the Lord on Cane Island in the latter part of September, 1903. Some were interested from the start. So the Christian (?) people went after their champion, Elder George Kirkpatric, who committed spiritual suicide on the second round of his boistrous attack.

In November of the same year, and again in May, 1904, I preached them a few more sermons.

In June Elder Moler joined me, and did valiant work that made other warm friends to the cause. Following this, Reverend Meredith, of the Baptist Church, made an exceedingly bitter attack. Being apprised of his challenges, I at once submitted propositions, offering to affirm the identity of the Saints' church with the one our Savior built at Jerusalem, and to deny that the Baptist Church was a legal continuation of, or successor to, or identical with the church that Jesus built at Jerusalem, either in origin, name, organization, faith, doctrine, or practice. The reverend treated me with silent contempt.

In November I preached two discourses to them, and, learning that Meredith was still misrepresenting us, I left the propositions spread on the blackboard; this proved to be "a thorn in their sides."

Bro. McHalfey had moved away, so there were no Saints on the island; others, however, took occasion to wiggle this thorn until it culminated in a debate.

I tried my best to get it in shape so I could submit the mat-to our missionary in charge, but I could not do it. I secured valuable assistance at the hands of Elder W. P. Pickering, who preached a number of splendid discourses before the debate commenced, moderated for me during the eight sessions, and at the close baptized five,—all heads of families, and the cream of that community,—others ardently desired to obey, but were prevented by senseless domestic opposition. So it is that the unprovoked attack of the enemy has led up to the permanent establishment of the Lord's work on Cane Island; for the obedient ones now have something tangible; and they are not of the chaffy nature that will be blown about by the doctrines of men.

The Baptists were exceedingly angry at the close of the debate, and closed the schoolhouse against us; all of which shall "work together for good to them that love God."

I celebrated Christmas with my children in Jonesboro. How unlike Christmas it did seem; for despite the liberal display of frosted cotton, old Santa was clean-shaven, and the mufflers he wore were not to keep him warm. Indeed he would have preferred a fan; and would have been more comfortable in his shirt-sleeves. Two ways of celebrating this great event were apparent. Human hearts were made to swell with gratitude toward God, and near friends rejoiced together, as the little ones reveled in their feast. The one grand object of each was to make others happy. But how short the distance to where firearms, drunkenness, and gluttony, three gigantic emblems of selfishness, prevailed!

By chance I listened to Reverend Thomas at the First Baptist Church at night. The next day he grasped my hand, asked my name, and quickly introduced the subject of his sermon.

I did not want to offend him, but I could not indorse the way he slandered the character of Deity. I finally had to say, "My friend, the Bible does not teach never-ending continuity of punishment for the heathen." He was called aside, but slipped his card into my hand, suggesting, "We have plenty of representative men who would be pleased to meet you in debate on that issue."

The next morning I called at his residence, and was told, "I am a very busy man"; and stepping to the phone he gave me a formal introduction to Reverend Hiett, "who" said he, "is a Christian gentleman of high character. He will negotiate with you."

I walked to Reverend Hiett's office and found him apparently "loaded for bear." Opening his Bible he read, "The smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever." And demanded, "What does that mean?"

Answer.—"It evidently refers to an indefinite period, until they are tired of worshipping the past, and are punished for all their crimes, and turn to God with all their energies. The slave of Exodus 21:6, should serve his Master "for ever," or during his natural life: If he lived but five years, that would be "for ever." Two "for evers" would be two times five years which equals ten years. Jonah was in the whale's belly "for ever." Three days and three nights. Two "for evers" would therefore be two times three days and three nights which equals six days and six nights. Again, Isaiah 34:10-17, qualifies the term, "for ever and for ever," as meaning from generation to generation."

Reverend Hiett.—"What does eternal damnation mean in Matthew 3:29?"

Answer.—"It evidently has no reference to duration. Eternity will begin when time ends: punishment inflicted in eternity will be eternal punishment. Jude in the seventh verse gives us an example of the suffering of eternal fire in the burning of Sodom. Again, God's name is eternal, his name is endless, and punishment inflicted by him whose name is"—

Here Reverend Hiett abruptly broke in, evidently much excited, the pupils of his eyes at once augmented to the full size of the iris, and took on a wild, devilish glare. He talked incoherently: "What are you here for, anyway? to instruct me? I don't know anything. I don't know enough to be taught by you. I am crazy, and foolish," etc.

"No, no, Mr. Hiett, I came not to instruct you, but to negotiate for a representative of the Baptist Church to debate this issue of eternal judgment. I want to instruct the people who shall hear, not you."

At this juncture I discerned that Satan had entered the man, for with savage gestures he said among other things: "You are excused then from my office. We have no time to throw away with such a worthless dog as you, sir. You are incomparably small. Why, sir, you are away yonder smaller than an atom, and then small. You poor fools, you all ought to be hung. The whole posse of you are of the same stripe. Whoever says that you are not representing Utah Mormonism is a liar. I have nothing but the bloody shirt of the Mountain Meadow Massacre to flaunt in your faces. I don't care a cent for the decision of Judge Philips, nor for your claims that you are opposing polygamy. I tell you, you are all one. You all originated from the same nasty old root."

During this disgusting exhibition of the reverend's foaming, roaring wrath, I was slowly retreating backward through the office door, which was viciously slammed in my face. I walked leisurely away with mingled feelings of joy and sadness, breathing a silent prayer for the raving maniac who was so completely under the control of his master. I had perceived what Reverend Thomas called a representative Christian gentleman of high type.

I have so many times in the last ten years seen these demonstrations of Satanic wrath cropping out from the ranks of reverend doctors of divinity, of Southern birth, that I wonder why the blood of the saints has not flowed in greater quantities than it has since the restoration. Nothing short of the power of God, either direct or indirect, has prevented it.

I ate New Year's dinner at home. Flies and mosquitoes were buzzing around. Mercury stood at sixty above, and feathered songsters still warbled their cheerful notes. Then followed eight weeks of winter weather, during which I was disgusted at the grumbling propensities of many who had made no preparation for winter. How much better it were for us to do our duty promptly, and then cheerfully adapt ourselves to our surroundings!

I am pleased to see people waking up and warming up to the fruit industry, to which this country is so nicely adapted.

Bro. L. E. Holton set out about twenty acres to fruit this spring. A Kansas City firm has bought fifteen hundred acres near Williford, for a fruit orchard. I measured twenty Arkansas black apple-trees, nine years' growth, in the orchard of M. A. Hart on the Lanquilla river-bottom, one mile west of Greenfield. The circumference at smallest point of body was from twenty-eight to thirty-seven and one half inches. Six peach-trees, nine years' growth, twenty-five to thirty-three inches. Six apple-trees, seven years' growth, seventeen to twenty-two inches. Two Siberian crabs, nine years old, twenty-five and twenty-five and one half inches. Two seedlings from Ben Davis apple, planted four years ago, both fruited the fourth year, and measured fourteen and fifteen and three fourths inches. He claims to have gathered twenty bushels of apples from one tree last fall. So apples do well on the bottoms, as also on the mountains.

The Ozarks are covered with a heterogeneous growth of timber, mostly consisting of oak, white oak, black oak, red oak, black-jack, spotted or water oak, jack- or turkey-oak, willow-oak, chesnut-oak, bur-oak, and chinquapin-oak, and I think several shades that I can not name; nor am I sure that I have given the scientific names of the ten distinct varieties mentioned.

D. R. BALDWIN.

SCRANTON, Pennsylvania, August 4, 1905.

Dear Herald: I do not wish to burden your pages with my experiences in life, neither do I wish to keep silent when, in my judgment, matters that I see and hear should appear in your columns. If we all shunned our duty in writing for publication it might cause too much work for ye editors. I believe that we can go to extremes. First, take a back seat and never have anything to say in the church papers. We enjoy reading the correspondence of others, or hearing them tell experiences that are encouraging, but to narrate what has been of much value and strength to us through the pages of our publications,—in my judgment, too many of us are guilty of withholding valuable information. Second, we write too often, and that which we sometimes send is not the kind of food the readers should have.

For one, I do not care to read of the unwise, or bad, personal conduct of any person or persons. Let that be referred where it belongs, unless we should have a case that the church at large should be aware of.

Now, Bro. Editor, we shall not find fault with you, if, in your judgment, what we send should go into the waste-basket. And upon the other hand, we reserve the right, in a kind way, to tell you that we can not see what good there was in publishing certain articles, for instance, what the late Secretary John Hay said. I did try to understand the motive or object, but could not. Still that is no proof that there were no reasons for so publishing. Well, I must stop or I shall not be in harmony with what I have just said I dislike.

The ninth day of last May I left St. Joseph, Missouri, for this city, where, in the judgment of the powers that be, I was to labor by the advice of Bro. F. M. Sheehy, missionary in charge. My wife and little Ruth accompanied me; and, by the way, I must not say "little Ruth," for she is quite a woman, one hundred twenty pounds on her birthday, June 23, 1905; she was eleven years old. That speaks well for Missouri, one of the best States in the Union. No mistake made in choosing that land as the central place for the gathering, notwithstanding it was so declared seventy-five years ago by a young man twenty-five years of age, unlearned, when that land was unknown so far as her resources and coming value were concerned. This is another evidence of the divine guidance of the lad that received the angel's message, Joseph the Seer.

July, 1856, when I was but nine years old, my parents came to this place from South Wales. At that time there were here a large number of Saints, some of whom had withdrawn from the church, or, more properly speaking, from that portion of the church that followed Brigham Young. My father and mother had rejected the evil dogmas of Brighamism before leaving Wales; and I am glad they did. At the time the Civil War broke out, 1860, many assembled at our home in this city, and at the homes of others, for several Sundays in succession, and sometimes during the week, reading the revelations in the Pearl of Great Price, on the rebellion that had then just broken out. The literal fulfillment of the revelation as to the place the first battle would be fought (South Carolina) rekindled the love they had for the angel's message, and they would call the attention of their friends and neighbors to the same. At the time President Lincoln called for seventy-five thousand volunteers to serve for three months, a Mr. J. W. Jones, editor of the Welsh paper (Y Drych), published in Utica, New York, made a special appeal to the Welsh people to fall into line and help put down the rebellion, and destroy the prediction of Joe Smith wherein Smith had said that the war would terminate "in the death and misery of many souls"; and that the Southern States would call on Great Britain, and that the slaves would rise up against their masters, who shall be marshaled and disciplined for war. "Come," he said, "let us crush this rebellion. We can do it in sixty days, and that will destroy the prophecy of Joe Smith."

The war had just begun at the end of three months. The next call was for volunteers for three years, and still the end had not come; and the words were fulfilled concerning the slaves, and the death and misery of many souls, and calling for Great Britain's help, among the nations they would call upon. Truly did it terminate in the death and misery of many souls after five years of hard fighting.

I consider the prophecy on the rebellion one of the most wonderful predictions of the Seer, if not of any of the prophets. There are only about three hundred words in the revelation, and there are not less than ten predictions, and all fulfilled. It was given December 25, 1832. I have a copy as published in Welsh in the Pearl of Great Price, 1851.

Well, coming back to the land of my boyhood days brings to my mind the above. There have been some thousands of the old Saints in this valley,—only a few now. Many coming from foreign lands with limited means would locate in this part, (for it is only about five hours' run from New York,) and after working a few months would move West.

So far as I can learn our church has never been very strong in this city, and for the last six years only a few have done their duty. Quite a number have got so far in the dark, because of drink, that I do not know what can be done. Brn. Jones and William Hawkins have made a good effort to sustain the work for years. They are men that are a credit to the church. Brn. David and George Morris and Lot Bishop came here from Wales with their families, and are a support to the branch. Bro. Evan Lewis, from Wales, lately from Lucas, Iowa, and his son, William John, and their families have located at Wilkesberg, eighteen miles from here. They will be some help to the branch here. If Bro. Evan could locate in this city, he would be of great benefit to the work, and it would be good for his children, for they would have church and Sunday-school privileges. We shall have, August 20, a reunion of all the Saints that are in this valley. We hope to have a large attendance. We have but little interest from outside yet. The Saints that are active enjoy good meetings. There is one good family that we hope to see in the church soon; and there is a family at Carbondale, eighteen miles from here, that we met in Wales at Porth, Mr. John Evans. He was a deacon in the Baptist Church. I was in hopes that he would be baptized when he was in Wales. He is a very able man, and if he comes into this work and is humble, like Paul when he said he knew nothing but Christ and him crucified, he would be a pillar in the church. I was glad to see him, and he was glad to see us. He has said that he and wife would come as soon as they can get work and a house here. We have not had the success in our mission that we hoped for and at one time thought a mistake was made in sending me to this place; but after a very pleasant experience have concluded it is all right.

I was standing at the gate about ten o'clock in the night, the 8th of July, after returning from preaching-service, when I had the following open vision: I saw a long, straight, narrow road, and I was walking on it with a young man by my right side, and I was so glad that he was with me, I knew it was my labor and example that had kept him there; and as we were nearing the end of the road I said, "Lord, I have been the means of bringing this one to thee." I saw that the Lord was much pleased, and I valued my prize very much; and I could see that the young man was rejoicing greatly.

The vision passed away, and the words found in Luke came to me: "Likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth." Also James 5:19, 20: "Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." Then with much more force came section 16, part of paragraphs 3 and 4. The words I could remember, but could not locate them. I got my concordance, but still I did not find them. So I said to Bro. George Morris, "Strange I can not locate the words." He said, "They are in the Doctrine and Covenants." They are as follows: "Wherefore you are called to cry repentance unto this people. And if it so be that you should labor all your days, in crying repentance unto this people, and bring save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father! And now, if your joy will be great with one soul that you have brought unto me into the kingdom of my Father, how great will be your joy, if you should bring many souls unto me!"

The vision gave me much courage. The joy I had in the company of the one was truly great, as the Lord said. I have been in the church forty years, but never had but one open vision before. That was thirty-five years ago, or more, when I was permitted to see the condition of the branch in Brookfield, Ohio, and the end of it. The Lord truly gives strength in the hour of need. The vision was timely, and the peace and comfort that accompanied it brought to me the needed strength in my work. Respectfully, 1118 Luzern Street.

WM. LEWIS.

SHELTON, Nebraska, August 3, 1905.

Editors Herald: There are thirty-seven counties in Southern Nebraska District, we have plenty room, the Saints are scattered all over the land in nearly every town and city, and opportunities are many for preaching on the streets, in the towns, in the schoolhouses. There is enough room in this district for twenty-five active ministers. But alas, we have only three to look after all this field that is thickly populated with a good class of people, that do their own thinking, and are educated and intelligent.

We have seven branches in this district that are widely scattered. Some of them are in fair condition and are doing good work, while others are in a poor working condition. Some have one officer, some have two, and they are doing nothing; and then they wonder why the Saints are so slack in the discharge of duties. Some have not received a visit from the priests for three or four years, and the Saints are like sheep without a shepherd. We need presiding men who are able to look after and feed the flocks of God.

Some say, "Make new converts," when we have not enough active ministers to half take care of those we already have. We need elders, priests, teachers, and deacons who have the ability to preside and visit the families of the Saints, to exhort and pray with them in their homes, to encourage and teach them their duties; that family prayers are very much needed in the homes of the Saints. We have been trying to set in order some of those weak branches, ordaining some to the lesser priesthood, so we hope to have a better report of our district soon; and, with the love of the Master, we hope to succeed.

W. M. SELF.

RICHMOND, Virginia, August 16, 1905.

Editors Herald: I feel impressed to write to you and tell you of the condition of our brother in Christ, Doctor P. P. Starke. He is very ill, and I fear his days are numbered unless our dear heavenly Father sees fit to heal him. We know all power is in his hands, and we know, too, that he hears and answers prayer. His health has been very poor for two years. I called to see him, as I heard he had been brought back to the city, but was told that he was too ill to come down-stairs, and could not even take his morning ride. I wish you all to pray that if it can be consistent with the will of God, he may be restored to health, and may yet do much to advance the kingdom of Christ in this place.

Possibly the Saints who read of my son's accident in May, when he fell from the capitol building, will be interested in hearing that he is at last able to go to work. He was not injured as seriously as was at first feared, as it was told us at first that several ribs were broken; but through the kind providence of God there were no bones broken. Yet, he was so badly shaken up and bruised that he was unable to do anything for a long time. One shoulder was dislocated, and one hand badly sprained.

At present writing all is well with us, at least physically. I wish I could say spiritually; but alas! all are so indifferent, and I myself, seem to be merely holding on. I am accomplishing nothing. I am not indifferent; but the fire of my zeal is burning low. I would it were different. I do greatly desire to see the truth presented before these people in this neighborhood. The Apostolic people are holding a meeting here every week on a street-corner where there is a vacant lot. They get a good many to hear them. There are so many fine locations here for street-preaching. Other denominations get in their views, but no one comes to represent the true church of Christ. I talked with a few and have met with no rebuffs, nor with any show of interest either; only one woman loves to talk with me and ask questions. I see the need of workers, and the greatness of the work, and ask, "Who is sufficient for these things?" Can not some one be sent here? I will do all I can to help in giving the elders lodging and something to eat.

Extracts from Letters.

James D. Farner, R. F. D. No. 1, Ft. Collins, Colorado: "I have been reading your columns to-day with a great deal of interest as the HERALD is the only Latter Day Saint friend I have in Colorado, so far as I know. If there are any Saints in this part I would be pleased to hear from them. This place has seven sectarian churches, and not another Latter Day Saint member that I know of."

Charles E. Butterworth, Lanesboro, Iowa, July 29: "I was with Bro. Benan Salisbury on the 25th and 26th inst. and was requested by him to read his last testimony, which he had caused to be written, when I preached his funeral. I send a copy of said testimony to you for publication. It reads as follows: "This great latter-day work is the gospel of Christ; and, therefore, the power of God unto salvation unto all who believe and obey. It will do to live by in adversity or prosperity, in health or in sickness, and in death. The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the church of Christ, and will stand the severest test. This is my last testimony and has been written at my request."

George W. Ames, Brockton, Massachusetts: "A few earnest Saints here are trying to hold aloft the banner of King Immanuel. We are having good meetings, the Lord verifying his promise that where two or three are met together in his name, and are agreed, there he will be, and that to bless. Two of the brethren come thirty miles, and the Lord blesses them in their efforts."

Warren Hall, Farwell, Michigan: "I have been in the Latter Day Saint Church for about four years. The work in this part is moving slowly. I am a cripple and desire the Saints to pray for me that I might get help; and I would be glad to have some of the Saints write to me."

Mrs. Anna Woodward, Moorhead, Iowa: "I was baptized four years ago last October. I feel very thankful to the Lord for the many blessings I have received. My husband does not belong to the church and it is hard to get him to take me to meeting. My father, mother, and one sister belong to the church. They live near Pisgah where they attend the Sunday-school and the meetings every Sunday. I have been there once this summer. Pray that the time may soon come when my husband will see and understand this glorious work. I love to read the Hope and HERALD, but do not get either of them only as my folks send them to me."

W. H. Smart, Pittsburg, Kansas: "I have been in the church twenty-three years, and during that time I have attended a great many discussions, but the one lately conducted at No. 15 Mines, between Mr. Car, of the Baptist faith, and Bro. Frank Chatburn, was one of the best. It was conducted in a Christian spirit by both speakers, and the argument was confined to the New Testament alone. Am sure good was accomplished. Bro. Chatburn is indeed a keen-cutter, cool, but firm, and will do to trust anywhere. Bro. E. A. Davis was Bro. Chatburn's moderator."

Mrs. James S. Schofield, 211 Bird Avenue, Buffalo, New York: "I would be glad to know if there are any Saints, or an elder, in or near Grand Junction, Colorado. We have a son there since May. We were obliged to send him there for tubercular glands of the throat. He understands a good deal about the gospel, and I feel that if an elder were to see him and talk with him, he would obey. We are very anxious about him; and more especially as he has not obeyed the gospel that saves. Oh, that I could hear that an elder was near him. I know he would call on him. I ask an interest in all your prayers that our only son may be healed, and come home to us."

Mrs. J. A. Jack, Tuckahoe, New York: "We are strangers here, and I would like to know if there are any Saints in Tuckahoe, or New York City; and would be pleased to have them write, or call on us, as we would like to be at home among the Saints again. We will be pleased to have any of the elders stay with us should they come. We live two blocks north of depot, west of New York Central Railroad tracks."

St. B. E. Miller, (of Deloit, Iowa,) Seattle, Washington: "Have been here nearly two months, visiting and sight-seeing, and we assure you it has been something grand. Some of the natural scenery is the most beautiful we ever saw. We have ridden five hundred miles in all kinds of boats on Puget Sound. I met with Saints in Tacoma and Seattle, which was enjoyed."

O. O. Fillman, Theodore, Alabama: "I have recently experienced some things that confirm me in this work. My wife was taken with a severe fever. I called a doctor, and he gave no relief, but told me that it was doubtful if she got well again. I then sent thirty-five miles for the elders, and in a few days' time after the administration she was able to ride between thirty-five and forty miles in a wagon. I can never thank my heavenly Father enough. I would ask the Saints to pray for me that I may live near to God, and hold out faithful to the end."

Porter, is not legally a member of the church, since Bro. Porter was under silence by church authority at the time he baptized her; and she is requested to be baptized by some one holding authority, or wait until Bro. Porter is reinstated, and have him baptize her if she so desires, then she may be properly received as a member of the branch and her name be enrolled on the branch record.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

Notice to the Friends and Saints in the Kewanee District: Having been elected Bishop's agent, at the Dahinda conference, in June, 1905, and the nomination approved by the Bishop, I wish to ask the Saints and friends who have tithing on hand, or who wish to start to pay the same, to please send it to me. The reason I make this appeal to you is this: We as a district are short on funds to pay the missionaries' families their allowances. And as it is a part of the law of God to pay tithes, let us as a district try to keep this law. Let us trust the Lord to make his promises good, for he has said that he will bless those who keep his commandments. And I, as Bishop's agent for this district, hope and pray that this may appeal to all the Saints and friends in this part of the Lord's vineyard; and that we, as members of this district, will strive to keep this part of God's law, as well as the rest of his commandments. Thanking all Saints and friends for the help they have given in the past, and trusting for a continuance of the same, I remain, JAMES NORRIS, Bishop's Agent.

Akerly, of Kingston, Missouri, will have charge of the boarding-tent; seven-meal ticket, $1. Plenty of pasture for your horses at five cents a head per day. Died.

SIMMONS.—At her home in Cameron, Missouri, July 26, 1905, of tuberculosis, Sr. Guiletta F. Simmons, aged 58 years, 3 months, and 24 days. Her maiden name was Hillman. She was born in Marion County, Iowa, April 2, 1847, and moved with her parents to Utah in 1855; was married to Bro. Samuel Simmons January 1, 1866. They moved to Dekalb County, Missouri, in 1878, and united with the Reorganization in the same year. Nine children blessed their union, only two of whom, with nine grandchildren, survive her, six of them preceding Bro. Simmons who died January 8, 1901; and one more, Sr. Lettie Constance, passing away the following April of the same year. Sr. Simmons will long be remembered as a consistent faithful Christian, always ready to give a helping hand to those in need. For many years her home was at the disposal of the traveling ministry, many of whom will remember her unselfish ministrations. After Bro. Simmons' death she removed her home to Cameron, where she spent her last days, helping once more to build up another branch, and even in her last sickness fearing that her work was not yet done, that she might depart in peace and be at rest with her loved ones gone before. The funeral sermon was preached by Bro. John Davis at the church at Delano, her old home, the many tearful faces testifying to the love and respect in which she was held by all who knew her.

Editorial

THE EDITOR ABROAD.

It is very encouraging to the average elder in the field to find those within the area of his occupation clinging with unselfish tenacity to the "faith once delivered to the Saints." There is such a band at Bozeman, Montana, members of the one time Reese Creek Branch. Some of those whom the Editor met in company with Bro. Joseph Luff, in September, 1885, have gone over to the great majority, Bro. and Sr. J. E. Reese among them; other some have moved hither and thither, to make portions of other branches, or to serve in isolated parts as nuclei for other gatherings, or to carry the tidings as cross-bearers; among them Gomer Wells and Gomer Reese. At the old assembling-place few are left, of whom we saw Brn. Michael Eukes and John Reese.

At Bozeman we were met at the station by Brn. Thomas Reese and John Pritchard, the last named presiding, the first the teacher of the band in the city and environments. We came in on Saturday, the 8th of July, and met the Saints in their hall on Sunday morning, the 9th, and by request of Bro. Pritchard, in charge, spoke to them for a little while on the privilege and strength of hope of the Saints in the gospel and angel's message. We were followed by Brn. M. Lundwall, J. Reese, J. H. Wells, Sr. Sandage and one or two others, full of confidence and hope.

We spoke in a more central hall at half past two in the afternoon and at eight o'clock in the evening to good and attentive audiences, lacking in numbers only; and on the following Monday and Tuesday evenings spoke in the Saints' hall at eight o'clock. The weather was very warm, audiences not large.

On Wednesday Bro. Reese took us up into the mountains on a visit to one of Uncle Sam's stations for preventing the final extinction of the native fishes,—a hatchery. This one is located on a little mountain-spring stream fed from the inner mountain reservoirs gathered from the snow-capped mountains. There was snow to be seen on mountain rises sixteen miles to the north and forty to the south, so very near to the unaccustomed eye that one would think it was but a pleasant walk, so pure and clear the air.

We left Bozeman at noon, Thursday the 13th, for Butte, where we were greeted in cordial welcome by Srs. A. M. Dempster, and Carrie Sund, and Sr. Dempster's son, Charles W., the youngest member of the Montana House of Representatives, one of the coming men of the mining West.

It was very dry and dusty at Butte, and the wind made fancy work with the flying dust-clouds. The ride over the mountains was very enjoyable.

From Butte to Deer Lodge is a short ride. We made it on Friday; were met by Brn. A. M. Chase and J. D. Stead, and after supper at Bro. and Sr. Whitworth's home, we met the Saints in their chapel and occupied the hour as best we could, Bro. Stead in charge. This was repeated on Saturday night; the train being late left us ample time in which to tell a part of the gospel story.

Brn. Chase and Stead have been doing a good work at Deer Lodge. Bro. Chase has helped the young people by his musical talent, which he is using to good effect. The song-service was good. He and Bro. Stead were to remove to Whitehall, not far from Bozeman, after Sunday, the 16th, account of which has reached the HERALD from Bro. Chase.

The 16th we were at Spokane, one of the growing cities of the Northwest; and it is certainly a wonder. Lying on both sides of the beautiful falls of the Spokane River spread out over the valley to the hills on either side it is a thriving, "beautiful for location," enterprising city situated in a good, healthy climate. To the average man there is nothing to prevent Spokane from being one of the great business centers of the greater West.

Bro. Chatburn, the "jots" man, met us on his raging bicycle steed, put us on the right car, and overtaking us "at the corner," took us to Bro. O. L. Ferguson's, who with his wife said to us, in both words and manner, "You are welcome; make yourselves at home"; which we did. The Saints at Spokane have built a very neat and commodious house of worship sufficiently advanced to be occupied, though not finished. In doing this Bro. T. W. has been helpful, working with his hands and encouraging all to diligence. All have done well. The membership numbered sixty-five at last report; late baptisms have added others to the roll.

We attended their services, and by request spoke morning and evening of Sunday to quite good audiences, very attentive. The following Monday and Tuesday nights we also occupied, to what effect time must determine.

Our association with the Saints and the local and field ministry so far has been pleasant and enjoyable. We have found a cheerful welcome each place we have been, and an awakening interest in the great work of man's redemption. The scenes have been new; the greater part of our experiences pleasant ones. The disposition to seek for the disagreeable has been dormant, or lacking, and but few have obtruded upon us. We were out to bless if we could, not to criticise or disparage, to encourage, not depress. That the Lord may bless our effort is our desire, and for this we pray.

JOHN W. RIGDON'S AFFIDAVIT.

It may be of interest to the readers of the HERALD to know that the open letter to the leaders and members of the Utah church, written by President F. M. Smith, and copied from the Tribune in HERALD for August 9, caused some stir in the valley of the mountains, as was evidenced by a lengthy editorial which appeared in the Deseret News the day following the appearance of the open letter. The editorial was on the subject of succession, and took radical grounds,—grounds which can not be supported by the books of the church. But what is even more indicative of their unrest over the call was the appearance in the same issue of the News of an affidavit signed and sworn to by John W. Rigdon, the whole affair evidently being "jumped up" for the occasion, to divert the minds of the people, as the affidavit is dated July 28, the day of the appearance of the open letter. If that affidavit is a sample of what the poor old man is willing to sign his name to, we might expect most anything from him. It is a pitifully weak affair. We publish the affidavit here for the benefit of the elders and others interested:

State of Utah, County of Salt Lake, ss.

John W. Rigdon, being duly sworn, says: I am the son of Sidney Rigdon, deceased. Was born at Mentor, in the state of Ohio, in the year 1830, and am now over 75 years of age. My father, Sidney Rigdon, joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints that year, and was in 1833 ordained to be Joseph Smith's first counselor, which position he held up to the time Joseph the Prophet was killed, at Carthage jail, in 1844. That Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon moved from Kirtland, with their families, to the state of Missouri, during the winter of 1837, but Rigdon did not reach Far West, in the state of Missouri, until the 1st of April, 1838. That during the troubles in Missouri, in the year 1838, Joseph Smith, Hyrum Smith, his brother, Sidney Rigdon, Lyman Wight and others, whose names I do not now remember, were arrested and imprisoned in Liberty jail, about 40 miles from the village of Far West, in Caldwell county, Missouri, where they all remained incarcerated for several months. That while said Joseph Smith, Hyrum Smith, Sidney Rigdon, Lyman Wight, and others were prisoners in said Liberty jail, as aforesaid, I, with my mother, wife of Sidney Rigdon, Emma Smith, wife of said Joseph Smith, and Joseph Smith, son of Joseph and Emma Smith, went to see the said prisoners during the latter part of the winter of 1838. We all went together in the same carriage and came home together. We stayed at Liberty jail with the prisoners three days and then left for home. The story that is being told by some of the members of the Reorganized Church at Lamoni, that young Joseph Smith, now president of the said Reorganized Church, was ordained by his father, Joseph Smith, to be the leader of the said Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, after his father's death, is not true, for I know that no such ordination took place while we were at Liberty jail; that if any such ordination had taken place I most certainly should have known it and remembered it, as I was with young Joseph, the Prophet's son, all the time we were there. If Joseph Smith had ordained his son Joseph to be leader of the Church at his death, he would have done so in a manner that there could have been no doubt about it. Both of his counselors were then in prison with him, namely, Sidney Rigdon and Hyrum Smith, and it would have been in order for the Prophet to have called upon them to assist him in such an ordination had it taken place, and a record of the same made in the Church books, so that all members of the church might have known that such an ordination had taken place. But nothing of the kind appears in the Church books. My father and mother lived a good many years after the incarceration at Liberty jail, and I, who lived near my father, never heard my father or my mother mention that such an ordination ever took place in Liberty jail; and as I know myself that no such ordination took place at Liberty jail, and inasmuch as it is not claimed that an ordination of this character was bestowed at any other place, therefore I deny it as an untruth and a story gotten up by the Reorganized church for effect.

WHY ANOTHER?

Besides all this, if Joseph Smith, the president of the Reorganized Church, was ordained while in Liberty jail, why did he, 14 years after his father's death, receive an ordination under the hands of William Marks, William W. Blair, and Zenos H. Gurley? Would it not seem that one ordination, and that, too, said to have been by his own father, the President of the Church, should have been sufficient? But, further, William Marks, William W. Blair and Zenos H. Gurley had all been excommunicated from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints before they "ordained" young Joseph Smith to be president of the Reorganized Church, and therefore they did not have the authority to ordain him. The whole story of his being ordained by any one having authority to do so is too preposterous to be entertained for a single moment, and should be rejected by all who hear such a story mentioned.

JOHN W. RIGDON.

Sworn to before me this 28th day of July, 1905.

JAMES JACK, Notary Public, Salt Lake County, Utah.

My Commission expires Aug. 6, 1905.

On December 8, 1838, according to Lyman Wight's diary made at the time, Emma Smith and Sydney Rigdon's wife came to visit their husbands in the jail; they stayed over night, and left the next day. Doubtless if the blessing had been pronounced at this time there would have been a chance of its being remembered by John W. Rigdon. But on December 20 Joseph's wife came again, with C. Baldwin's wife this time, not with Mrs. Rigdon. What would John W. Rigdon know about any blessing that might have been conferred at this time, pray tell? They remained in the jail until the 22d. So there was ample opportunity for the blessing to have been given, and John W. Rigdon remain entirely ignorant of the fact, as he is. Again, on January 31, 1839, Emma Smith, with other women, Mrs. Rigdon not being one of the number, visited those in the jail. How does Mr. Rigdon know that no blessing was conferred then? It may have been bestowed in 1838;

it may have been in 1839. Sidney Rigdon was released on bail the day before this last visit, and if the blessing had occurred then or afterward, he, too, would have been ignorant of the fact. John W. Rigdon's affidavit is lacking materially. It falls flat, too, when he says, "And inasmuch as it is not claimed that an ordination of this character was bestowed at any other place, therefore I deny it as an untruth." First the Reorganized Church does not claim an ordination in the jail, but a blessing and a promise of useful life. And furthermore, the blessing was confirmed subsequently at Nauvoo, as stated by Joseph Smith the son, as follows:

In Liberty jail the promise and blessing of a life of usefulness to the cause of truth was pronounced upon our head by lips tainted by dungeon damps, and by the Spirit confirmed through attesting witnesses. This blessing has by some been called an ordination, from the usual predilection to confound names and terms. . . . Subsequent to our baptism in 1843, upon two occasions was the same blessing confirmed by Joseph Smith, once in the council room in the brick store on the banks of the Mississippi, of which we have not a doubt there are witnesses who would confirm the present testimony; once, in the last interview Joseph Smith held with his family before he left Nauvoo to his death. A public attestation of the same blessing was made from the stand in the grove in Nauvoo, some time prior to the murder in Carthage.

This statement was published in the SAINTS' HERALD for July 1, 1868, page 105, and is not "jumped up" for the occasion.

John W. Rigdon's argument in his "affidavit" on ordination, under the subhead, "Why another?" will easily be recognized as a fallacy by the weakest Saint.

There is a growing unrest among the Mormon people, despite the fact that the leaders of the Mormon church are crying "All is well in Zion." Perhaps they have forgotten the words of the Book of Mormon, which they are, in a way, fulfilling:

At that day shall he [Satan] rage in the hearts of the children of men, and stir them up to anger against that which is good; and others will he pacify, and lull them away into carnal security, that they will say, All is well in Zion; yea, Zion prospereth, all is well; and thus the devil cheateth their souls, and leadeth them away carefully down to hell. . . . Wherefore, Woe be unto him that is at ease in Zion. Woe be unto him that crieth, All is well.

HEAD OF REORGANIZED CHURCH GIVES HISTORY OF FAITH AS FOUNDED BY FATHER.

The following letter was written by President Joseph Smith, for and published in the Post-Intelligencer, Seattle, Washington, August 6, 1905. Newspapers everywhere who are desirous of publishing a plain statement of facts concerning the church and its founder, could not do better than to copy this letter. And we invite the few who are beside themselves to publish something concerning the "Mormon" church, or the Latter Day Saints, instead of crowding their columns with sensational misrepresentations, to make use of the following, which can be relied upon, coming as it does from the president of the church and the successor to his father, the latter-day prophet:

Whatever the cause for it, there is much ignorance on the part of the general public in regard to the fact that there are two divisions of the so-called Mormon church, radically differing in faith, doctrine, and practice, though holding something alike in organization and origin.

On April 6, 1830, at Manchester, New York, Joseph Smith, Jr., with five others, believers like himself, organized a church subsequently known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, the addition of the words "of Latter Day Saints" being descriptive to distinguish this band of believers from the "Former Day Saints" of New Testament times and history.

The association was duly incorporated, and became one of the contending religious bodies of the revival period of religious fervor in the United States.

The differences of belief between this new church and its contemporary religious bodies were radical and irritating to the holders of the older forms of belief. The new held that the fact that both the Old and the New Testaments abounded with evidences showing the dealings of God with his subject people to have been by revelation was sufficient warrant for the belief that he not only could, but would and did reveal himself now as anciently. This expression of belief might have been harmless but for the claim made by Joseph Smith that an angel had visited him, bringing communication from the courts on high of worth to man; reinstating the gospel of the New Testament in principle and form with authority directly conferred to preach it and administer in its ordinances effectively.

This claim to the reception of divine communication and the entering upon the exercise of the powers conferred thereby roused the antagonism of the sects by which the new church was surrounded, and has been the fruitful cause of dispute and opposition ever since.

From this source of communication Joseph Smith was enabled to present the Book of Mormon to the world as the history of the prehistoric peoples of America, and the visit of Jesus Christ to this continent, with an account of the doctrines taught by him here as the same were taught at Jerusalem by himself and disciples. The morals of the book are good. The ethics of the Savior are affirmed, the evils among men denounced. No objection will be made against the book on the charge of immorality. All who examine the book agree to this.

The six who composed the church at its organization grew into hundreds and the hundreds into thousands under the administration of Joseph Smith, his brother Hyrum, and their associates. They were fully committed to an acceptance of divine commands from God through revelation, and as a consequence were pledged to an observance of commands so given. They had divine warrant that in no communication which they might receive from God would they be required to discard or break what had already been given by him in Scripture or in revelation direct. He was unchangeable, and had so declared himself. He had commanded them to take the Scripture already given to be his law to govern them as a church. They so stated to the congregations who attended their ministrations. It should have been a guarantee to the Bible-believing community of their good faith.

Certain lines of conduct were given them, including the reiteration of the parts of the decalogue rehearsed by Jesus: "Thou shalt not steal," etc., all of which became a part of their belief and teaching. Among them a regard for the Sabbath, as a rest-day, was enjoined; however, not as the Jewish Sabbath. Honor, virtue, and truthfulness and subjection to and observance of the laws of the land were made binding upon them. "Thou shalt have no other gods before me" was supplemented by the injunction to strictly observe and maintain the purity of the marriage bond. The command in the Book of Mormon was:

ONLY ONE WIFE.

"Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord; for there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none. For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women."—Book of Jacob, chap. 2.

This was the first command on the subject to this new church. It was followed by specific direction in the following terms:

"Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else."

"Whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained by God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made."—Doctrine and Covenants, 42, 49.

These commandments were crystallized into a declaration of belief, soon after the organization had grown into respectable numbers, in the following formula:

"We declare that we believe that one man should have one wife; and one woman but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again."

Disregard of these commands and declaration of belief was the cause which resulted in the division in the church organized in 1830.

During the lifetime of Joseph Smith in church work, from April, 1830 to June 27, 1844, the teaching and practice of the church in regard to the domestic relation were in accord with what is stated above, and agreed with Christ's teaching in Matthew 19 and Mark 10 of the Bible.

No other teaching or practice as church doctrine or practice was had or known to the church at the death of Joseph Smith.

No matter with whom it originated, spiritual wifery, plural marriage, or polygamy, it was contrary to and subversive of American institutions; was contrary to the laws of the State where the church was organized and flourished, and opposed to the direct statement given to the church:

"He who keepeth the law of God hath no need to break the laws of the land."

Joseph Smith was killed June 27, 1844. The church membership was divided and scattered. Some thousands followed Brigham Young to Utah, where, on August 29, 1852, the dogma of plural marriage was declared by him, without an official acceptance by the people, as provided in organic law.

But other thousands, who were members of the church in Joseph Smith's time, refused to accept the dogma, no matter whether practiced in secret or avowed openly. It was not a part of the faith into which they had been baptized. The assumption of President Young, nor any other, could set aside for them their allegiance to the original tenets and practices of the faith they had espoused. These, existent in organized congregations, and scattered in isolated parts of Illinois and adjacent States, rallied to an inspired call issued by a few leading officers ordained and in office at the breaking up at Nauvoo, Illinois, and openly declared their adherence to the original faith, and denounced the dogma and practice of polygamy in definite terms. This was done June 12, 1852.

It should have been sufficient warning to those introducing the departure from the faith, that the apostasy would be vigorously opposed. It has been.

Included in this organized opposition have been the widow and sons of Joseph Smith, his mother, three of his sisters, and one, the only surviving brother.

The son of Joseph Smith became identified with this movement April, 1860, was chosen presiding elder, and the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints became the active opponent to the church in Utah, over which Brigham Young and his successors, John Taylor, Wilford Woodruff, Lorenzo Snow, and Joseph Fielding Smith, have presided.

The Mormon church is polygamous in belief and teaching; and by its president, Joseph F. Smith, and other leading men, is polygamous in practice; as developed in the examination before the senatorial committee in the Smoot case, lately heard and now pending final decision.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is monogamous in faith, teaching and practice, in direct accord with the Bible and the teaching of the voice of revelation to the church organized April, 1830, which the co-disciples of Joseph Smith are under consistent obligation to pay heed to and observe.

The teaching and practice of polygamy as a church tenet, or otherwise, is opposed to the genius of American jurisprudence and is contrary to organic and statute laws. It involves a disregard for and breaking of statute law and makes the one who practices it a lawbreaker. The teaching and practice of the monogamous marriage system agrees with the teaching of the sacred books, is conservative of the finer elements of the race, assures the sanctity of the home, and does not bring the citizenship of the church into antagonism with the rules of good society or the laws of the state.

The differences set forth in this paper as existing between the two separate churches known as the Utah, or Brighamite, church, and the Josephite, or anti-polygamous, church, are quite sufficient to account for the existence of the latter without entering upon further and possibly minor questions of belief or polity.

The grave menace of Mormonism, as is alleged by the sectarian associations and some political agitators, is obviously exaggerated upon the one hand by sectarian misconception and hate, upon the other by partisan orators seeking for bases of argument for political ends. It may be a menace, but if so, it is the result of but partial understanding of the real issues involved. A fair and impartial enforcement of just existent laws would long since have disarmed the evil and established the good.

That the right may prevail, I am,

JOSEPH SMITH.

President Harper announces that the Chicago University is going to be divided up into a number of small colleges. He says: "Along with the recognized advantages belonging to a large institution, it is well understood that some of the undoubted advantages of a small college are in danger of being lost. In order, if possible, to combine some of these benefits which are found in a small college with the resources and cosmopolitanism of a great institution it is intended that beginning with the next autumn quarter the junior colleges shall be divided into small colleges."

This confession coming from so high a source ought to convince parents of the wisdom of allowing their children to secure the earlier part (at least) of their college training at the smaller and nearer institutions. The small college furnishes education at a lower cost than the larger institution; it keeps the boy nearer home, thus enabling him to visit home and his parents to visit him; it brings the teacher and student closer together and gives the student the benefit of the teacher's ideals. The small college, if under Christian influences, also gives more attention to ethical culture.

Mr. Bryan, as president of the board of trustees of Illinois College, (Jacksonville, Illinois,) is especially interested in that institution and loses no opportunity to bring it to the attention of the parents who have children to educate, but there are a great many excellent small colleges scattered over the country and other things being equal, the nearest one is the best. — Commoner.

BASEL, Switzerland, July 28.—At to-day's session of the Zionist congress delegate Leopold C. Greenberg, of London, presented the report of the expedition sent to East Africa to explore the country which the British government offered for the establishment of an autonomous Jewish colony. This expedition consisted of an English military officer, Major A. St. H. Gibbons; a German scientist, Professor Alfred Kainer; and a German engineer, Herr Wilbusch.

The territory known as Guasso-Ngischu, is close to the equator, a short distance northwest of Lake Victoria Nyanza. It is a plateau 3,000 feet above the sea level, which causes it to have a temperate climate, and has an area of 8,300 square miles.

This includes 400 square miles of impenetrable primeval forest and 2,000 square miles of barren land. It would, the report says, support approximately 150,000 colonists.

The land, however, is absolutely uncultivated and entirely unpopulated, because former inhabitants were massacred by hostile tribes. It has no roads and no paths except elephant tracks. It is approached by extremely difficult routes through dense forests infested by wild beasts and dangerous native tribes. The expedition was repeatedly attacked by hostile natives. A savage, warlike negro tribe, called the Maraguetti, inhabits 250 square miles of land close to Guasso-Ngischu, and it is certain that they would regard Jewish colonists as enemies to be harassed.

In these circumstances the Zionists Executive Committee presented the following recommendation:

"After an exhaustive study of the report of the expedition sent to East Africa, the Executive Committee regards it as inadvisable to recommend the realization of the East African project. At the same time it recommends that the thanks of the congress be conveyed to the British government for the generous offer and for its friendly feelings toward the Jewish nation."—New York Evening Journal, July 28, 1905.

A Spray From Silver Lake.

[This was written on the occasion of the Massachusetts Saints discontinuing the holding of their annual reunion at Silver Lake, the place being devoted to other purposes.]

Snowy tents dotted the hillside
And nestled in the vale,
Which seemed in the gray of morning
Like scenes in a fairy tale.

Resting on the soft, brown mosses
Like doves with dew-wet wings,
And over all was watching
The blessed King of kings.

The pine-trees whispered love-songs
To the birds amongst the boughs,
And scattered spicy fragrance,
Where Saints renewed their vows.

The mists from the dawn were lifted,
The sun in splendor rose,
Like jewels the dew-drops sparkled
O'er that scene of sweet repose.

And fair as the sky, reflected
In sweet, peaceful Silver Lake,
Where the gentle youths and maidens,
Whose songs made echoes wake.

Reverently I trod the pathway,
Beneath the spreading trees,
And caught the sound of anthems
Borne on the balmy breeze.

How beautiful and choice the place,
That holy summer-time,
When hearts, in Christian fellowship,
Reached up to heights sublime.

All hail that woodland temple,
Where heads with silver crowned,
The middle-aged and children fair
With Christ-love did abound.

Oh, may we all remember
Th' sweet lessons of that day,
Though far from lovely Silver Lake,
God leads us on our way!

Helpfulness.

Why go through life with a frown on the brow
While the world so much needs a smile?
For everywhere are sorrows to share,
And every heart has its load of care,
Which you, with a smile, may help it to bear
And bring sweet comfort awhile.

Why journey along through life's thorny path
And ever withhold a helping hand,
When along the road are those with a load,
Who, mayhaps are reaping that they have sowed,
But who yet may reach a higher abode,
And, through you, the better land?

Then bestow a smile and a helping hand
As you go through a sorrowing world;
And angels above, perceiving your love,
Will carry the news like a message-dove,
To the ears of the one who rules above,
Ere the banner of life is furled.

THE OPINIONS OF SIXTY PROMINENT MINISTERS, JOURNALISTS, AND HISTORIANS ON PREHISTORIC CIVILIZATION IN AMERICA.—THE BOOK OF MORMON NEEDED.

We believe the time has come when a representative number of the leading divines should be put upon record regarding their knowledge of a book giving an authentic account of the ancient inhabitants of America.

When we present the Book of Mormon which contains the account we are often told that there is no use for the book. The following statement together with questions and answers will, we trust, be both interesting and instructive:

There is no book of so great value to the world, that is so little understood, and so much misrepresented as the Book of Mormon. It gives as true an account of God's dealings with his ancient people on these continents as the Bible does of his people in Eastern lands.

It was named Book of Mormon after its compiler, Mormon, who is also author of one of the books.

Without the Book of Mormon the scientific and literary world is at a loss to know the true history of the civilized people who anciently flourished on the American Continents, as evidenced by the many ruined cities, and other archæological remains discovered by antiquarians.

The Book of Mormon account covers a period of over two thousand five hundred years, whose people came from the Eastern Continents by direction of God, and whose record was written on metallic plates, which were deposited by Moroni, one of the ancient prophets, in the hill Cumorah, in Western New York.

An angel of God directed Joseph Smith to take, translate, and publish the sacred volume, which work was completed in 1830. In respect to morals, faith, and doctrine, the Book of Mormon and New Testament agree. It does not supplant the Bible, but it is a companion volume thereto.

The above is a very short explanation of the Book of Mormon, which book is the only record that gives an authentic account of the civilized people who anciently flourished on the American Continents.

This fact, to many, may be called new, but the Popular Science Monthly, March, 1904, is reported as quoting O. F. Cook on "New truth" as follows: "It is a misfortune, frequently lamented, that new truth, the most precious attainment of each generation, is also the most unwelcome."

Another writer said: "The fool doubts what a wise man [or book] tells him, because the information is new."

Aristotle wrote: "With the truth all things that exist are in harmony, but with the false the truth at once disagrees."

We have found, after thirteen years of active ministerial work, that the most unreasonable and uncharitable class of opposers of the golden truths of the Book of Mormon are the so-called orthodox preachers.

In order to correctly represent them as to their ability to name a book containing an authentic account of the prehistoric people of America, we submitted the following question to over fifty, forty of whom responded to our appeal:

Please favor me with the name of a book, if you can, that will give an authentic account of the peopling of America, the builders of the great cities, temples, etc., centuries before the coming of Columbus, or occupancy by the Indians, as proven by archæologists.

All answers were written, unless otherwise stated, between the dates of May 1 and July 1, 1905. Listen to the stalwart clergymen wrestle with the question. Reverend G. Campbell Morgan, D. D., London:

I am afraid I can not help you.

Reverend Newell Dwight Hillis, D. D., Brooklyn:

The best book that I know on the subject regarding which you write, is McMaster's History of the People of the United States, four volumes.

The editor of the Christian Instructor, Philadelphia, wrote:

The best book we know of for your reading is Andrew Bryce's American Commonwealth.

Walter Lemley, editor Zion's Watchman, Albany, New York:

I am sorry to say that I do not know of any such book.

Bishop T. N. Morrison, Episcopalian, Davenport, Iowa:

I can not name a book to you covering the ground.

Bishop C. C. Grafton, Protestant Episcopal, wrote from Baltimore:

I should be glad to answer your question if I were able to do so. I do not remember the name of a book giving the information you desire.

Reverend J. G. Monfort, editor Herald and Presbyterian, Cincinnati, Ohio:

The Antiquarian and Oriental Journal is the highest authority in this country on this subject.

J. J. Summerbell, editor Herald of Gospel Liberty, Dayton, Ohio:

I would recommend you to consult a large cyclopedia, or several, such as are found in public libraries, . . . I am not qualified to pronounce on the reliability of the various authors, and might mislead. Your position is correct, of the civilization, and civilizations long ago.

Reverend J. G. Butler, Lutheran, Washington:

I regret that I am not able to give you the information you desire. I have made some inquiry, but have not found any one who knows more than I about this long-ago history.

The International Reform Bureau, Washington:

We spent considerable time trying to hunt up the matter, . . . but failed.

Reverend J. C. McQuiddy, office editor, Gospel Advocate, Nashville, Tennessee:

De Roo's Prehistoric America, in two volumes, . . . will give you the information you desire.

Reverend A. P. Doyle, Catholic, Washington, says De Roo's works "are the most reliable."

I regret to say that I am not able to give you the asked-for information.

Reverend D. G. Porter, Christian, Waterbury, Connecticut:

I doubt very much whether there is any book relating to the subject which can properly be called authentic.

Reverend T. J. Golightly, Christian, Lebanon, Kentucky:

The book you call for I have never been able to find myself.

G. F. Bowerman, librarian, Public Library of the District of Columbia, Washington:

I think that you will find what you need in volume 1 of Winsor's Narrative and Critical History of America.

W. E. Huntington, president of Boston University:

I do not feel competent to answer this request very fully, but judge from what I know of the literature on such questions that Prescott's work on Mexico and Bancroft's large book on the Races of America would be as satisfactory as any you might consult.

Philip Cowen, publisher American Hebrew and Jewish Messenger, New York:

Replying to your letter . . . asking for a book that will give an authentic account of the peopling of America, etc., before the coming of Columbus, I would say that there is no one work which contains this matter.

B. A. M. Schapiro, Jew, editor The People, The Land, and The Book, New York:

I think Prescott's works will give you the information you need.

Professor I. Friedlander, of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, New York:

I am extremely sorry of not being able to give you the desired information. I never made a study of the subject mentioned in your letter.

Henry G. Talmadge, associate editor, Sunday School Times, Philadelphia:

Almost any good history of America would give the theories of the peopling of America before Columbus' time.

Reverend I. L. Kephart, United Brethren, editor Religious Telescope, Dayton, Ohio:

Baldwin's Ancient Americans . . . is the book you want.

Reverend D. R. Miller, D. D., United Brethren, St. Marys, Ohio:

A satisfactory description of the people about whom you inquire is not well established, nor can we find a book which will authentically and satisfactorily account for them. Yet it is reasonably certain that there were approximately such.

F. L. Piper, editor of the World's Crisis and Advent Christian Messenger, Boston:

There probably is no such book as you ask for.

Reverend George Batchelor, editor of the Christian Register, Boston:

All the best work that is now done in history is done by specialists, so that it is impossible for me to name any one book that covers all the ground you indicate.

W. W. Prescott, Adventist, editor of the Advent Review and Sabbath Herald, Washington:

I am unable to give you the name of any book containing the account of the original peopling of America.

M. C. Wilcox, Adventist, editor of the Signs of the Times, Mountain View, California:

I know of no such book which gives any authentic account. The only records which we have at all are what have been left in the ruined temples and hieroglyphics of that people. Probably the Mexicans and Peruvians were their descendants, but they have left us no authentic account. But no one has yet been able to decipher the inscriptions on the monuments so as to get from them the history of the people. Of course, from the Bible, one thinks that they must have been descendants of Noah. Remains have been found which would indicate that they had some knowledge of God's "Ten Words," and the tradition of the flood has been held by many of the later tribes or aboriginal Americans. The present tribes of Indians may some of them be descendants of the earlier inhabitants, greatly degenerated.

J. H. Moore, office editor of the Gospel Messenger, Elgin, Illinois, a German Baptist Brethren paper, said:

I am not able to give you the desired information regarding the books treating of the history of this country prior to the discovery of America by Columbus.

Henry Temple, professor of ancient history in the Washington and Jefferson College, Presbyterian, Washington, Pennsylvania, gave short accounts of Briton's Chronicles of the Mayas, E. J. Payne's History of the New World Called America, and John Fiske's Discovery of America, then said:

These books represent the sanest scholarship on this matter and are free from the wild dreams [which] destroy the value of so many of the popular books about the civilization of ancient America.

The following gentlemen sent names of books on American archæology but did not commit themselves, as a rule, to their authenticity: Reverend John Alexander Dowie, Zion City; Reverend J. A. McFaul, Catholic, bishop of Trenton, New Jersey; Reverend G. B. Winton, editor of the Christian Advocate, Nashville, Tennessee; Reverend A. H. Bradford, Congregationalist, Montclair, New Jersey; E. B. Ebey, editor of the Free Methodist, Chicago; Reverend J. Sheatsley, Lutheran, Delaware, Ohio; Reverend G. T. Cooperider, editor Lutheran Standard, Columbus, Ohio; J. B. Warren, Ph. D., Presbyterian, Milan, Ohio; Reverend Louis Klopsch, editor of the Christian Herald, New York; Reverend Archibald McLellen, editor of the Christian Science Journal, Boston; Reverend C. H. Fourney, editor of the Church Advocate, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania.

It will be observed that many of the reverend gentlemen said that authentic accounts of the peopling of America centuries before Columbus' coming could be had from certain encyclopedias, archæologists' writings, etc., while some questioned their reliability, and still others preferred to pronounce all their theories as unreliable.

How grand it is for Latter Day Saints to know that God directed some of his faithful servants who lived on the American continents a thousand years or more before Columbus came to compile a history and preserve it on metallic plates, that an authentic record of those ancient people might be had, which account is found in the Book of Mormon in perfect plainness.

A copy of the book ought to be in every public library and reading-room, and a tract on the book put in the hands of historians and archæologists everywhere.

We now present a number of extracts from some of the historical works referred to by the above-named clergymen and noted writers, also statements from journals, etc., which show their own unsettled minds and diversified theories regarding prehistoric civilization in America.

Stories of Pioneer Days, etc., introduction, page 13, W. E. and L. V. Chapin, said of the aboriginal Americans:

Whose antiquity is unknown.

Josiah Priest, in American Antiquities, edition of 1838, page 361, says:

But what has finally become of these nations, and where are their descendants, are questions which could they be answered would be highly gratifying.—From Palmyra to Independence, page 3.

W. Pidgeon, in his Tradition of De-coo-dah and Antiquarian Researches, edition of 1853, page 11, says:

But it yet remains for America to awake her story from sleep, to string lyre, and nerve the pen, to tell the tale of her antiquities, as seen in the relics of nations, coeval perhaps with the oldest works of man.—Palmyra to Independence, p. 3.

The Christian Herald, New York, July 8, 1903, quoted Doctor Leon, the eminent archæologist of the National Museum, after he had visited wonderful ruined cities, etc., of Mexico. He said:

It is strange we should know nothing of the existence of a people so highly civilized as to erect such edifices.

Marquis de Nadaillac, in Prehistoric America, page 395, says:

Everything proves the power and wealth of a people the very name of whom has remained uncertain.

Again, page 370:

At every turn South America presents vestiges of a vanished race, of culture now lost; and we are always compelled to one conclusion as to our absolute powerlessness to decide the origin or cause of the decadence of these races, now represented by a few miserable savages without a past, as without a future.—Presidency and Priesthood, p. 370.

Professor John L. Stephens, in Travels in Central America, etc., volume 2, page 356, said:

What we had before our eyes was grand, curious, and remarkable enough. Here were the remains of a cultivated, polished, and peculiar people, who had passed through all the stages incident to the rise and fall of nations, reached their golden age, and perished entirely unknown. The links that connected them with the human family were severed and lost, and these were the only memorials of their footsteps upon earth. We lived in the ruined palace of their kings; we went up to their desolate temples and fallen altars; and wherever we moved we saw the evidence of their taste, their skill in arts, their wealth and power.—Presidency and Priesthood, p. 271.

H. H. Bancroft, Native Races of the Pacific States, volume 5, page 146, says:

Stephens' account has been the chief source from which all subsequent writers, including myself, have drawn their information.—Sermon by H. A. Stebbins, p. 24.

John Ranking, in Historical Researches on the Conquest of Peru, Mexico, etc., speaking of the origin of the native races, page 290, said:

Clavigero acknowledges, that the more he endeavours to elucidate these questions, the more he is puzzled and reduced to despair.—Zion's Ensign, vol. 16, p. 5.

S. B. Evans, in Chicago Times, 1881, says:

There have been at least two civilizations that have lived and dwindled away on the continent prior to the Aztecs or Toltecs, of Mexico; the last of which must have ceased to exist at least from a thousand to fifteen hundred years ago, and occupied the time of at least one thousand years of civilization here.—Parson's Text Book, p. 13.

Peru, by Markham, page 68, says:

These marvelous ruins point to the former existence of a large population, and to the guiding hand of some powerful sovereign; but their history is entirely lost in remote antiquity.—Committee's Report, p. 20.

Professor Le Plongeon, in Sacred Mysteries, page 70, says:

Anciently, this country [Yucatan] now well nigh depopulated, was thickly peopled by a highly civilized nation, if we are to judge by the great number of large cities whose ruins exist, scattered in the midst of the forests throughout the country, and by the stupendous edifices, once upon a time temples of the gods; or palaces of the kings and priests, whose walls are covered with inscriptions, bas-reliefs, and other interesting sculptures that in beauty of design and masterly execution, equal those of Egypt and Babylon.—Parson's Text Book, p. 4.

Prescott, volume 1, pages 12 and 13, speaking of the various races of ancient America, and more particularly of the west central part of South America:

Who this race were, and whence they came, may afford a tempting theme for inquiry to the speculative antiquarian. But it is a land of darkness that lies far beyond the domain of history.—Committee's Report, p. 20.

Professor Baldwin in his work issued in 1871, says in its preface:

The purpose of this volume is to give a summary of what is known of American Antiquities. . . . Many of the more important of these works are either in French or Spanish, or in great English quartos and folios . . . and not one of them attempts to give a comprehensive view of the whole subject.—Palmyra to Independence, p. 113.

Doctor George L. Cole, archæologist, writing to the Epworth Herald, December 3, 1904, a Methodist Episcopal paper, said of the "home of primitive man" in Colorado and New Mexico, after giving account of several great stone buildings:

By uncovering forty or fifty rooms in different portions of the great building, we were able to gather much as to the life, habits, and customs of the strange people who once dwelt here, but whose history is otherwise unwritten and unknown.

Reverend Doctor Baum, president of the Records of the Past Exploration Society, Washington, is reported in the Denver Post, 1904, on the great prehistoric people of the southwestern part of the United States. Of their buildings he said:

They vary from two-room dwellings to structures containing over two thousand rooms.

Of the people he said:

I believe this region maintained a population of over ten millions of people. The time and the cause of their disappearance is the problem we are trying to solve.

The Gospel Messenger, representing the German Baptist Brethren Church, (Dunkard,) Elgin, Illinois, January 10, 1903, said editorially:

Most of our readers have wondered where the American Indians came from. Then they have puzzled themselves about the Mound-builders, and still more about the intelligent races that built great cities in Mexico and Central America long before the time of Columbus. Many books have been written on these subjects, and still the learned world is searching for more light.

Again, quoting Professor E. Seler, of Berlin, the Messenger said:

Where the various prehistoric peoples originally came from, no one knows. I do not think that they came from Asia in comparatively recent times. Man is very old in America, I think; perhaps he antedates the glacial period.

Dellenbaugh, in North America of Yesterday, 1901, page 428, said:

The manner in which America was originally peopled has been the cause of considerable speculation. . . . It is my belief that all the tribes of the northwest migrated there from the south and southeast, and not within recent geologic time from the Asiatic direction.—Ensign, March 9, 1905.

Encyclopedia Britannica, volume 1, 1878, article "America":

If we consider every little wandering horde a distinct community, we have a greater number of nations here than in all the rest of the world. . . . We think we perceive them all to be descended from the same stock, notwithstanding the prodigious diversity of their languages.—Ensign, vol. 16, no. 11.

Professor Boudinot, in the "Star of the West" records a comprehensive and timely statement as follows:

There is a tradition related by an aged Indian of the Stockbridge Tribe, that their fathers were once in possession of a SACRED BOOK, which was handed down from generation to generation, and at last hid in the earth, since which time they have been under the feet of their enemies.—Palmyra to Independence, p. 45.

It has been hard, at times, to refrain from commenting on many of the answers, also the extracts from historians and journals. But believing the reader will note the numerous contradictions, points of interest, etc., we content ourself by saying that we feel more and more assured that there is truly an important place in the literary world which can be filled only by the Book of Mormon.

A careful, prayerful study of the book will give knowledge and wisdom on historical, doctrinal, and inspirational matters that can not be obtained elsewhere. Procure a copy and read it.

ON THE GIFTS.

I have been following with considerable interest the discussion in the HERALD between two brethren upon the subject of spiritual gifts, when they are needed, and how long they will continue; and it appears to me that both brethren are right, and both are wrong.

1. One brother seems to advocate that the gifts will never be done away, but that they will be enjoyed in their fullness when "that which is perfect is come."

2. The other brother seems to think that a falling off, or absence of the gifts, points to advanced spiritual condition.

I can not agree with No. 1, because Paul plainly tells us that "when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away." (1 Corinthians 13:10.)

I can not agree with No. 2, because the reason he offers for his conclusion may exist because of spiritual barrenness.

One brother lays down the regular order when he says that the gifts of God proceed through righteous channels, and the examples offered by the other of the Lord speaking through the ass, and conversing with Balaam through an angel, in vision, are not to the point, because they are exceptions to the rule. The power of God was manifested unto Cornelius before he was baptized, but does this justify us in suggesting that the Holy Ghost may be had before complying with the first principles of the gospel? We knew of a young woman who took the Cornelius case to herself, and demanded a manifestation from God before she would come into the church. The Lord did not see fit to grant her wish, and she never united with the faith. A sympathizing member once asked a number what they thought about the young lady's case; had she not as much right to receive an evidence beforehand as Cornelius had. As one of the number to whom the question was addressed I could only answer that the promise is, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine"; "and these signs shall follow them that believe," notwithstanding there have been exceptions to the rule when, in the Lord's wisdom, there have been special reasons for the same.

One brother believes that the presence of the gifts is evidence of enlightenment; the other brother thinks it is an indication of ignorance, and asks, Does not the gift of knowledge argue lack of knowledge, and the blessing of healing, imperfect health? Yes, certainly, but the thought is not apropos. The real question is, What are the conditions upon which the bestowal of the gifts depends? Why is knowledge given to the believer who lacks, when it is not given to the unbeliever who is just as lacking? Why is the gift of healing enjoyed by the church established with the delivery of the angel's message, when it is not had in the popular denominations of the day, although they, too, have sick among them? Surely it is the spiritually enlightened who receive the gift of knowledge, and the spiritually enlightened who enjoy the gift of healing. Certainly the gifts were designed because there was need for them, but the need for them is not sufficient to obtain them. They may be needed bad enough, but not had.

That the gifts will not be continued after "that which is perfect is come," is the scriptural teaching, as I understand it; but we would do well to inquire carefully into what is meant by "that which is perfect," not theorize on the surface and arrive at the unsyllogistic conclusion in snap-shot fashion that because we are told that the gifts will cease when that which is perfect is come, and in some branches they have about ceased, therefore those branches are stepping on the heels of perfection.

If Paul spoke of the final coming of Christ, the Perfect One, the gifts are not to be done away until he comes, and he has not come yet.

Does the statement have reference to the attainment of character like Christ's—"till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ"? (Ephesians 4:13.) Surely we shall all agree that there is not any collection of members that has reached that high mark yet. We know of only one example that ever did, and that was Enoch and his city. We are given to understand that the work is a life-time struggle, and that we shall not be finished yet, when we depart from this stage of action, but that it will take the centuries of the millennium to fit us to dwell in the full glory of the Father. This does not support the idea that the gifts will continue through the thousand years. We shall not need "the part" then, because we shall have the whole, Christ, under whom to complete our education.

We have heard the thought expressed by a few that we may be superior to the gifts, but it seems an unscientific idea to us, to say the least. The full bloom of perfection is in being in perfect correspondence with God, and how is our spiritual evolution to be completed if partial correspondence is cut off? Does correspondence with God consist in communication with him? Not wholly, of course, and yet all the rest is dependent on that principle. We must bring our character into harmony with the divine requirements. But this is not all; we must know God, and Latter Day Saints do not need to be told, yet at the same time we are glad that so eminent a thinker as Henry Drummond says, "It is an indubitable historic fact that, outside of the sphere of special revelation, man has never obtained such a knowledge of God as a responsible and religious being plainly requires," and he goes on to show, in that wonderful work, Natural Law in the Spiritual World; that after communication with God is established, it must be continued. Is there not a philosophy in Paul's statement that some of us have not discovered; couched in that peculiar language he uses, "the part" being done away in the "perfect"?

That we can advance beyond need of communication with God through the gifts of his Spirit so long as we are separated from him seems a very wrong idea to me, and one that does not voice the feeling of the heart. Notwithstanding that his logic has often cheated his soul, there is something in man that yearns for communion with God as the plant strains towards the sunlight, and his spiritual nature will never cease its demands until man joins his Creator. Until that time comes when we can sit down to the feast, we want the crumbs. The gifts of the Spirit are an attracting force, a vivifying power that distinguishes the work of God from the creeds of men; and when they are not present men's souls grow weary after a while, and their feet turn into worldly paths.

There is yet another aspect to this question of perfection; it is that of environment, or the conditions of this stage of existence, by which we are limited. The curtain of mortality forms a partition between us and the full measure of light and intelligence beyond. Until that curtain is withdrawn, and we stand at the very fountain of wisdom and knowledge, we shall need draughts from its waters, by gift. So long as we are in a state that is subject to accident, disease, and decay, so long shall we need miracles and the gift of healing. While we are separated from the Father, how can he speak to us but by the employment of means, as prophecy, tongues, interpretation, etc.?

One writer expresses the belief that the gifts will not cease until "sometime after the coming of the Savior," but at the same time thinks they will decrease as perfection is approached. Is not this rather an anomalous position? On one hand the gifts are bounded by a certain time; on the other hand they are regulated by degrees of righteousness. Why may not the principle that can check them, stop them? If the gifts decrease as advancement is made, when the mark of higher attainment is reached, whether that be by the time the Savior comes, or before, will they not cease altogether? Following the line of argument offered to the end, the conclusion is obvious, and because the sectarian world has taken this view of the matter, its exponents declare that the gifts are not present to-day because they are no longer needed. It may be asserted that the gifts will continue until the Savior comes, but when it is claimed that they decrease as advancement is made, a rival thought is introduced that assumes the importance of a controlling law, and determines the end.

The scriptural statement as to the length of time the gifts will continue is a positive proposition. We are to have the gifts—nothing said about more, or less—until a certain time. If they were going to fall off as that time approached, strange the Lord did not tell us, so that we could be expecting it as one of the signs of the hastening end. If it was left to our sense to reason out, strange again, for the Lord usually speaks in Alpha and Omega terms, and why would he leave such an important question at the mercy of men's opinion, when he knew so well men's brilliant ability to reason out of the catechism anything that does not appeal to the advanced minds?

The question is asked if it does not appear logical that as advancement is made the gifts will decrease, but the affirmative answer given in so much assurance does not strike me so forcibly. In my observation we desire more and more of that which we cultivate. As we try to be good and pure, our desire for the society of the good and pure increases. The greater our love becomes, the more do we long for communion with the object of our adoration. If presence is denied us, we want the letters to come oftener. We have heard and read that the nearer God's children have lived to him, the more abundantly has he poured out his Spirit upon them. We remember, too, that the Lord has said somewhere that the reason he does not speak to us more often is not because we are making such strides towards perfection, but because we have not done the things he has commanded us.

We need discernment in looking for the cause of the absence or decrease of the gifts. It will not do to place the reason at the threshold of perfection. If we do, we shall be drifting dangerously near the sectarian idea that holds that the gifts are not bestowed to-day because we have outgrown them. If it is true, as we believe, that the gifts will cease when "that which is perfect is come," it is just as true that they have been withdrawn because of transgression and wandering into spiritual darkness. In illustration of this we have only to point to professedly orthodox Christendom since the decline of the apostolic church, and to the organization in the Salt Lake Valley of the West.

For the purpose of examination in this article, perfection has been viewed in two positions: first, as the rank of the object that is to come; second, as the quality to be developed in us, the standard to be attained to by us. Really, however, all our discussion on the second proposition has been irrelevant to the consideration of Paul's statement setting the time when the gifts are to cease, because a literal application of the text admits of but one construction, and that is, that the thought is detached from us. We are not the actors. Paul is speaking about something, some one else. It is not when we, but when that. It is not when we reach, but when that comes. Perfection is not represented as the object; it only describes the object. It is not when we reach perfection, or when perfection is reached in us. It is when the object which is perfect comes—"When that which is perfect is come." Because perfection is not represented as a formative object developing in us, upon the progress of which the need of the gifts depend, no modifying deduction can be drawn as that, as we advance, the gifts decrease.

We see that we are outside the sphere of influence in the direct consideration of the question, and the only excuse for admitting the thought of our advancement on the platform of discussion, as a determining factor in the case, is to show the indefiniteness and unsatisfactoriness of taking our progress as a guide in looking for an answer to the question as to how long the gifts are to continue. One other end that justifies the diversion is that we are reminded what a many-sided question perfection is as relating to us; how much there is to it.

Having, we believe, come to a clear view of when the time limit for the gifts is up; and having found that there is no authority, either in scriptural statement, or logical analysis, to warrant the teaching of diminution of the gifts before the momentous hour arrives, the conclusion of the whole matter is: So long as we remain in this present mortal state, separated from the presence of God, or until He who is perfect shall come to reign with us, so long will the gifts be evidence that his Spirit is with us, just as we are telling the sectarian churches that if they had the Holy Ghost, they would be enjoying its gifts.

DO THE GIFTS AND BLESSINGS CEASE AS WE ATTAIN TOWARDS PERFECTION?

"IN REVIEW" REVIEWED.

In the HERALD for August 9, page 776, appears a further attempt at a defense of the idea of the gifts and blessings ceasing as we advance towards perfection, under the heading of "In review," by the brother who says he preached the sermon in which the afore-mentioned thought was presented, which sermon was criticised in a former issue, under heading similar to the one above. I had thought to let the matter rest, so far as I am concerned, but since the brother has made an attempt to examine some evidences submitted in my first article, (which he failed to do in his "Reply,") I feel that there is something to be said by way of reviewing his "review."

Referring to my "Answer to a 'Reply'" in HERALD of July 19, he says: "In this article the brother signally fails to refute a single argument made in my reply of July 5. Indeed, he simply ignores the argument with the exception of a few minor matters, and wishes me to reexamine his former irrelevant quotations of June 14."

How could we wish him to reexamine those quotations of June 14, when he had not examined them at all? We certainly examined all of his reply that we could see had any semblance of an argument, and did not care to take up valuable space in the HERALD in an examination of that which could not properly be considered as argument. This time, however, he has made more of an attempt at argument, and consequently we have something more to say. Dubbing the quotations I cited as "irrelevant" may be one way of disposing of them, but does not overthrow the argument contained in them, which positively refutes his theory. He says: "My view, as stated in the sermon under criticism is, that they will cease (see 1 Corinthians 13), but not until after perfection shall have been attained, sometime after the coming of the Savior."

We hope our brother will "stand by his gun," and not seek to evade the issue. The question before us is "Do," or "Shall the gifts and blessings cease as we attain toward perfection." His "view" "as stated in the sermon under criticism," was, that "the world is getting better; we are becoming more perfect; and as we advance toward perfection, there would not be the need of the gifts that existed before." That "the fact that we are becoming more perfect, may account for the decrease, or lack, of a manifestation of the gifts, instead of there being 'something wrong,'" as suggested by another brother in a sermon, to which sermon my brother took exceptions. I do not pretend to give his words verbatim, but the gist of what he said. This was his "view," as then expressed, as will be remembered by those of the HERALD readers who were his auditors at the time. This was conceded in his "Reply," and is tacitly admitted in his last article. (See page 778, paragraph 3.) If, in his sermon, the brother had simply made the statement that miraculous gifts should cease "when perfection has been attained, sometime after the coming of our Savior," and no reference made to their ceasing now, we in our first article would not have referred to the sermon. For while we do not believe this is correct, such teaching would not necessarily do any harm. The difference between us on that point seems to be by what name things shall be called—on this side, and on the other. But that which we took exception to was his teaching that we were getting so far advanced that we did not need the gifts promised to the believer to the extent that we formerly did, and we believe it to be not only an erroneous doctrine, but a dangerous belief to any one who accepts it. Hence, we feel interested in our brother, or any one else who may fall into such an error.

He answers my reasoning on 1 Corinthians 13 by exclaiming: "Think of it! The 'swallowing' process must go on throughout all eternity." Yes, sir; that is just what we are trying to get you to do—think of it! Paul says:

For we know in part, and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away.—1 Corinthians 13:9, 10.

When that which is perfect is come we will have perfection, will we not? Certainly. Are prophecy, tongues, and knowledge good, or any part of perfection? Will there be any good thing lacking in the perfect state? In other words, can there be perfection unless all that is good, combined, still exists? The answer to these questions must be apparent to every Saint. Then what is it that is to be done away? Paul says, "that which is in part." What was it that was in part? Why, prophesying, tongues, and knowledge. Now, if the "part" is done away, and the whole or the complete is never to be, where will be the perfection? As we now only "prophesy in part, and know in part," if the whole thing is to be done away, when shall we prophesy in full, and know in full? But according to our brother's theory, when that which is only in part shall be done away, it will not be supplanted, or succeeded by that which is whole and complete in the way of prophecy and tongues, (strange enough he admits that knowledge shall continue—though Paul says "it shall vanish away"). And these things in their fullness can never be realized, for Paul says, "That which is in part shall be done away"; and our brother says they cease altogether. He admits there will be knowledge, but says that I "failed to discriminate between knowledge which is to remain after 'perfection has come' and knowledge transmitted miraculously, or in spiritual gifts." Paul made no discrimination, and why should he ask us to go farther than Paul? Knowledge is what we know. All that we know—correctly—is knowledge, no matter how obtained. There is no need of a discrimination when speaking of knowledge in a general way—knowing in part, and knowing perfectly. So then when perfection comes, this partial knowledge, and all that is in part, shall be no more (in part) but shall be absorbed, yes, "swallowed up," of that which is complete.

Now let us again call his attention to the fact that Paul nowhere says that "miracles shall cease." This is all an assumption on his part, based on his idea of that which is in part being done away.

After referring to my quotation from Mark 16:17, 18, he remarks:

"Now, surely, the brother can not think that in celestial glory there will be devils cast out of the saints; unknown tongues, prophecy, serpents, poison, healing, etc., and yet, this is the 'false position, in which he has placed himself by his arguments above."

The "arguments above" were contained in Mark 16:17, 18. He may call it a "false position," but I can find a better name for it. I do not think any one could justly draw the conclusion that I quoted the foregoing citation as applying to the perfect state. I quoted it as applying to this life, to show that the signs would follow the believer, whenever and wherever a true believer may be found, no matter what may be his attainments towards perfection. The brother certainly knew I did not apply it to the perfect state in my former article. But as he seems to be weakening in his position, and wants to make the argument about miracles on the other side, we will pause to give the matter some consideration. No, I hardly think that devils will be cast out of the saints in the celestial kingdom of God, but I can conceive of the possibility of angels becoming devils by failing to keep the law of heaven, and by the exercise of their agency, (as it happened once before,) and if so they would be cast out. I believe God will always have the power to cast out devils. As to there being "unknown tongues," our brother has supplied the word unknown, in this instance. Jesus says "they shall speak with new tongues," while Paul in 1 Corinthians 13, says "tongues." Does not my brother believe there will be tongues, or at least a tongue, in celestial glory? The Greek word from which tongue is translated is glosse, or plural, glossia, and is sometimes translated language, or languages. Surely there will be language in the perfect state, and the Lord will give that language. (See Zephaniah 3:9.)

Regarding serpents, poison, etc., as before stated, we only apply the language of Jesus in the commission to this life. However, if our brother wishes some evidence of healing in the celestial city, we refer him to Revelation 22:2: "And the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations."

Again he says: "In the state of perfection, or fullness of glory, God's elect will have acquired all knowledge, and shall know all things, and shall have reached an equality with Christ and the Father." This sounds all right with the exception of the last clause. He cites Doctrine and Covenants, pages 236, 237, and 238, also Philippians 2:6, as proof. We find nothing in any of these citations to prove that "God's elect" will reach an "equality with Christ and the Father." If we reach a condition of "equality with Christ and the Father," what will we be then? Gods? This would sound a little like Brighamism. Continuing, he says:

And yet the brother's logic has devils cast out of those who shall have reached an equality with God; unknown tongues and knowledge conferred upon those who know all things.

Needless to say that the careful reader of this investigation is aware that my "logic" presented nothing of the kind. Paul says nothing about casting out devils in part, but he persists in combining the language of Jesus in Mark 16:17, 18, with Paul's words in 1 Corinthians 13:8-10; assumes that the saints become equal to God, and then ridicules the idea of devils being cast out of them, as though I had presented it, and says my logic has it so. Whenever an individual sets up a man of straw and begins battering it, is it not an admission of inability to meet the issue before us? I wonder if this method of evading the main question before us is not "what the ancient philosophers called sophistry"?

He reproduces my quotation from Doctrine and Covenants 34:3, then adds, "What does the above prove? Simply that these miracles will be found in the church while in an imperfect condition, when they will be needed." Well, that is a pretty fair concession, but why did he not tell us when the church would be perfect? Will it be before Christ comes? If not, then what becomes of his theory and teaching that miracles and gifts are to cease now, as we advance towards perfection? That revelation condemns his theory. Next, he reproduces my quotation from 2 Nephi 11:18:

For behold, I am God; and I am a God of miracles; and I will show unto the world that I am the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.

After giving us a definition of the word miracle, he says: "So long then, as man remains ignorant, God will be a God of miracles, because man can not comprehend, and 'mysterious are all his ways.'"

I suppose he means by this that when man becomes more enlightened God will cease to be a God of miracles. Is that it? If we become equal to God, and know as much as he does, in what sense will God be superior to us? The creature becoming equal with the Creator. "Think of" that!

In order that there be miracles in the future it is not necessary that there be deaf, and dumb, and the blind. (See Doctrine and Covenants, pages 107, 130, 133, 250.) If God continues the work of the creation of the innumerable worlds, would not that be miraculous?*

Question.—Will there, or will there not be in the perfect state that which we now call the miraculous?

If the answer is no, then God will not have as much power as he now has. But if the answer is yes, then we agree that there will be, during the state of perfection, that manifestation of power which we now call miraculous; no matter about what we shall call it when we reach that state. Let the brother take either the one "horn" or the other. If he admits that this power that is to us, now, supernatural will still be on the other side, all well and good. That power, as we now contemplate it, is a miraculous power, because we have not reached that perfect state yet, and can not understand how these things are done. When we speak of the power of God in the world to come, it is certainly proper for us to refer to it as miraculous. This must be conceded even if we should admit (which we do not, however) the correctness of his idea of man becoming equal with God.

He says: "Man is changing and evolving towards perfection wherein he shall receive of the fulness of God's glory," etc. This statement is akin to one that he made in the sermon referred to, viz.: that "the world is getting better." But in this instance he must have made the statement unguardedly. He uses the term "man" indefinitely, as applying to all men—or mankind. Is it possible that he believes that all mankind are "evolving" towards "perfection and fullness of God's glory"? Surely the trend of human inclination to-day is not in that direction. The increase of crime and wickedness seems to lead man in just the opposite direction from God. Turn to 2 Timothy 3:1-5 and notice the conditions that Paul says will make "perilous times" in the last days. Then in the thirteenth verse he says: "But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived." (See also Malachi 4:1; 2 Thessalonians 2:11; 1 Timothy 4:1; 2 Timothy 4:16; Revelation 6:15-17.)

Note the following:

And in that day shall be heard of wars and rumors of wars, and the whole earth shall be in commotion, and men's hearts shall fail them, and they shall say Christ delayeth his coming until the end of the earth. And the love of men shall wax cold, and iniquity shall abound; and when the time of the Gentiles is come in, a light shall break forth among them that sit in darkness, and it shall be the fullness of my gospel; but they receive it not, for they perceive not the light, and they turn their hearts from me because of the precepts of men; and in that generation shall the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled; and there shall be men standing in that generation that shall not pass, until they shall see an overflowing scourge, for a desolating sickness shall come over the land; but my disciples shall stand in holy places, and shall not moved; but among the wicked, men shall lift up their voices and curse God, and die. . . . Men will harden their hearts against me, and they will take up the sword against one another; and they will kill one another.—Doctrine and Covenants 45:4. (See also pages 189, 149, 156; and Isaiah 24:6.)

All this plainly shows that at the time of, and prior to the end, men will be going farther and farther away from God, instead of evolving towards a fullness of God's glory.

Reproducing 3 Nephi 4:1, "And there was not any man who could do a miracle in the name of Jesus, save he were cleansed, every whit, from his iniquity." Commenting, he says: "Here Nephi simply states a fact as it existed in relation to those of whom he writes." Certainly. And why not the same fact exist in relation to any other people among whom miracles are wrought? Why not? Continuing, he adds: "If the brother thinks this means that God never works miracles save through those who are holy, he is mistaken; and I do not see for what other purpose it is quoted."

Why did not the brother say that Nephi was mistaken? It seems as though that would have better expressed his idea. It was "quoted" to show that instead of only the ignorant receiving the power of God, that there must be quite a degree of advancement toward perfection in order to work a miracle. It is plainly a refutation of our brother's theory. He further says: "The Lord has performed miracles through wicked men and animals. The ass upon which Balaam rode talked in a human tongue, and Balaam, who was a wicked man, was in vision and conversed with the angel. (See Numbers 22:27.) Paul's experience is in point while he was persecuting the saints." Well, suppose the Lord did work miracles through wicked men and animals. That does not sustain his contention. The reader will notice that neither Balaam nor the ass did the miracle, but God performed the miracle by and through the angel, Balaam and the ass being subjects upon whom the miracle was wrought. Paul, when persecuting the saints, did not do the miracle, but was the subject upon whom the miracle was performed by Jesus.

In contending that the reception of spiritual gifts is indication of our ignorance, he reasons thus: "If the gift of knowledge is bestowed, is it not because of a lack of knowledge? Clearly, the lack of knowledge—ignorance—renders the gift necessary."

Well, that is all right, but it does not support his claim in the least. In fact his own reasoning condemns his position. If he had said that the reception of spiritual gifts was an indication of having been ignorant, then his reasoning would apply. It must be apparent to our brother, and all others, that after having received these gifts, we are not as ignorant as we were before. Then the logical conclusion would be, that "the reception of miracles and spiritual gifts is an indication" of our enlightenment, and that we are made more nearly perfect thereby; and "just the reverse" of his theory is still "true." As to the "palpable absurdity"—well, the HERALD readers can readily see where that exists.

Now as to Paul being ignorant: The first quotation he makes to prove Paul ignorant, "For now we see through a glass darkly," only represented our imperfect vision, and by no means proves that because he had received spiritual gifts, he was ignorant. The second quotation Paul did not apply to himself at all. Here is a question the brother might ask himself, and answer in his own mind, that may help him on this point. Did Paul, after receiving spiritual gifts and blessings, know more or less than he did before? If he knew more, and became more enlightened than he was before, then the "reception" of these gifts was an "indication" of his enlightenment, rather than his "ignorance." (See 1 Corinthians 1:4-7; 1 Corinthians 12:1-11.)

We believe that all Saints should constantly be advancing—"going on unto perfection," and that any advancement we may have made will not place us above the necessity of the gifts of the Spirit, but it will place us in a position to receive and appreciate some of the greater gifts that we had not hitherto attained unto.

It is not proper to compare our advancement to the "blazing sunlight," or the electric light, and the gifts of God to the "shadow," or the "occasional flashes of candle-light." This would be a display of egotism upon our part, and a disparagement and depreciation of that which comes from God, who is the source of all light and knowledge.

"The better a child can walk," the more capable it becomes of walking. The more advanced we are (spiritually), the more capable are we of receiving and appreciating the greater gifts, and thereby continue our advancement toward perfection.

He next says: "If the quotation from Mormon 4:6 and Doctrine and Covenants 43:4 [34:3.—H. E. M.] are cited to show miracles are to be expected until perfection shall be attained, then they have no place in this discussion, because this has never been questioned."

This was certainly the object for which they were cited, and they have properly a place in this discussion, because the position taken by the brother tacitly questions the continuation of miracles and the gifts, as he has claimed that as we advance we will not need them to the extent we did formerly. In his discourse he said that "the absence of the gifts" did "not indicate anything wrong," but rather that we were "becoming more perfect." His idea seems to be, the nearer perfection, the less miracles and gifts we need. If there is a gradual decrease in the manifestation of God's power, then there is a cessation of that power, or of the gifts, to an extent; and hence they are being "done away." The citations referred to utterly refute that idea.

Our brother thinks that Jeremiah 23:7, 8 does not show that greater miracles shall take place in the future than occurred in the exodus of Israel out of Egypt, and that "there is nothing in this reference to prove that any miracle of any kind whatever will be necessary to enable these people from the north country to come to Zion."

The expression "The Lord God liveth that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt," was certainly used to express the greatness of their God. What was there about the bringing of Israel out of Egypt that was so remarkable, if it was not the miraculous display of God's power in their behalf? What about the ten plagues, crossing the Red Sea, manna from heaven, water from the rock, and in fact the almost continuous display of God's power? Now according to Jeremiah 23:7, 8 (and also Jeremiah 16:14, 15) when Israel is brought from the north, the old proverb will be used no more, but they will say, "The Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north," etc. There will be something attending God's leading Israel from the north, that will be so much greater than their being led out of Egypt, that they will ever afterward use the new proverb. To our mind it is clearly inferred that there will be a greater display of God's power, as other citations which we shall presently adduce will positively prove.

But listen to our brother: "If Perry's 'latest dash' to the north pole should prove successful, they may come down very naturally, just as others are coming from other countries."

Oh, yes, "If!" "If" the Devil had not sinned, he might have remained in heaven. "If" my brother's theories are not wrong, they may be right. But regarding the manner of the return of Israel from the north, we have something more certain than an "if" or a "may." Here it is:

And they who are in the north countries shall come in remembrance before the Lord, and their prophets shall hear his voice, and shall no longer stay themselves, and they shall smite the rocks, and the ice shall flow down at their presence. And an highway shall be cast up in the midst of the great deep. Their enemies shall become a prey unto them, and in their barren desert there shall come forth living water; and the parched ground shall no longer be a thirsty land. And they shall bring their rich treasures unto the children of Ephraim my servants. And the boundaries of the everlasting hills shall tremble at their presence.—Doctrine and Covenants 108:6.

The foregoing agrees with Jeremiah 16:14, 15 and Jeremiah 23:7, 8, even showing that greater power shall be displayed, and more wonderful the events, than were manifested in the exodus from Egypt. So we see just how they are to "come down." We suggest that before speculating as to some "natural" means of the return of Israel from the north, and of Perry's success in bringing them back, it would be well for our brother to examine the revelations of God to this church. Who is it that is doing the "guessing"?

No attempt was made, in our former article, to show that future miracles would exceed the "mysteries and miracles of creation," and of the "millions of countless spheres and whirling orbs of the universe"; but the object was to prove great miracles to transpire in the future, and incidentally we referred to the return of Israel from the north as being attended with greater manifestation of God's power than was displayed in the Exodus. That we attempted more than this is purely an assumption on the part of my brother. For proof of great miracles yet to take place, the reader is cited to the following references: Isaiah 11:15, 16; Isaiah 24:6; Zechariah 14:4, 6, 7, 10; Malachi 4:1; Doctrine and Covenants 108:5.

The brother concludes his article by quoting the saying of an "officer of the Independence Stake." If he submits that as evidence, we should be informed who the officer is, and if he spoke by the Spirit of God, or if it was merely an expression of the officer's opinion. If he spoke by inspiration (or claimed to) we are prepared to examine his statement. If it was merely the expression of an opinion then we can find other officers in the church, higher in authority than any stake officer, who hold a different opinion. But what does opinion prove?

In an article under the caption of "Turn on the light" in HERALD for August 9, page 779, another brother adduces a quotation that is well worth reproducing:

And that all these gifts of which I have spoken, which are spiritual, never will be done away, even so long as the world shall stand, only according to the unbelief of the children of men. . . . And now I speak unto all the ends of the earth, that if the day cometh that the power and gifts of God shall be done away among you, it shall be because of unbelief.—Moroni 10:1, 2.

Will not the world be standing at, and after the coming of Christ? If so, then according to Moroni, the gifts and miracles will be on the other side. He says that if the day comes when the power and gifts of God shall be done away, it shall be because of unbelief. Was Moroni right or wrong? "I think he was right."

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Mother, Watch the Little Feet.

Mother, watch the little feet,
Climbing o'er the garden wall,
Bounding through the busy street,
Ranging cellar, shed, and hall;
Never count the moments lost,
Never mind the time they cost.
Little feet will go astray,
Guide them, mother, while you may.

Mother, watch the little hand
Picking berries by the way,
Making houses in the sand,
Tossing on the fragrant hay.
Never dare the question ask,
"Why to me this weary task?"
These same little hands may prove Messengers of light and love.

Mother, watch the little tongue
Prattling eloquent and wild,
What is said and what is sung
By the happy, joyous child.
Catch the word while yet unspoken,
Stop the vow before 'tis broken!

This same tongue may yet proclaim
Blessings in a Savior's name.

Mother, watch the little heart
Beating soft and warm for you.
Wholesome lessons now impart,
Keep, oh, keep that young heart true,
Extricating every weed,
Sowing good and precious seed,
Harvest rich you then may see,
Ripening for eternity.—Selected.

Resignation.

There is no flock, however watched and tended,
But one dead lamb is there!
There is no fireside, howsoever defended,
But has one vacant chair!

The air is full of farewells to the dying,
And mournings for the dead;
The heart of Rachel, for her children crying,
Will not be comforted!

Let us be patient! These severe afflictions
Not from the ground arise,
But oftentimes celestial benedictions
Assume this dark disguise.

We see but dimly through the mists and vapors;
Amid these earthly damps
What seem to us but sad, funereal tapers
May be heaven's distant lamps.

There is no Death! What seems so is transition:
This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the life elysian,
Whose portal we call Death.

She is not dead—the child of our affection—
But gone unto that school
Where she no longer needs our poor protection,
And Christ himself doth rule.

In that great cloister's stillness and seclusion,
By guardian angels led,
Safe from temptation, safe from sin's pollution,
She lives whom we call dead.

Day after day we think what she is doing
In those bright realms of air;
Year after year, her tender steps pursuing,
Behold her grown more fair.

Thus do we walk with her, and keep unbroken
The bond which Nature gives,
Thinking that our remembrance, though unspoken,
May reach her where she lives.

Not as a child shall we again behold her;
For when with raptures wild
In our embraces we again unfold her,
She will not be a child:

But a fair maiden, in her Father's mansion,
Clothed with celestial grace;
And beautiful with all the soul's expansion
Shall we behold her face.

And though, at times, impetuous with emotion
And anguish long suppressed,
The swelling heart heaves moaning like the ocean,
That can not be at rest—

We will be patient, and assuage the feeling
We may not wholly stay;
By silence sanctifying, not concealing,
The grief that must have way.

—Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

Do Not "Nag" the Children.

Dear Home Column: Since I have been among so many children up here at a summer resort in the mountains and seen the difference in the way parents care for their children, it makes me think of the many homes where there are "nagging" fathers or mothers, while up here the children have every enjoyment that wealth can buy, and, most of all, only kind, gentle words from their parents.

When referring to a nagging mother, it is in pitying terms for the man she has married, or when a nagging father is spoken of it is in pitying terms for the woman he has taken for his companion for life.

Grown people sometimes find a remedy in retaliation, when being nagged. But the darling children shrink from the continual fault-finding and suffer in silence.

There is nothing that will cause a child to be sulky, irritable, and untruthful more quickly than to be continually nagged; and yet there are thousands of children every day who are subject to that awful "nagging" treatment, such as, "Don't do this," and "Don't do that," "Why can't you let things alone?" "You are without exception the worst child I ever saw; nothing but a torment. You are getting more like your father every day." And on they go through all the nerve-racking catalogue of "nag."

Some parents never take into consideration that children are the most sensitive beings in the world. All their child life is made up of small joys and sorrows that mean happiness or misery to them. The best way to make a child good is to make it happy. But "nagging" will never be the cause of a child growing to be a good man or woman. Instead of the child learning to love and trust its parents, it becomes afraid of them, always nervous, fearing to do things openly, knowing the irritable disposition of its parents.

Of course, children do many things through the week for which they have to be corrected and punished. But it is foolishness to try to teach a child right from wrong by continually reminding it of its faults and calling it a perfect torment, and thus making the precious child feel that it is always in the way. And do not you know that you are only hardening that tender, forgiving heart that each child has?

Instead of doing this, great care should be taken to show the difference between right and wrong, in as gentle a manner as possible; and once the lesson is impressed upon the mind in this manner, there will be no necessity of referring to that particular fault again.

Two of the worst forms of "nagging" are shown when the fault of a child is commented on in public, or when the small sins of childhood are dwelt upon after suitable punishment has been meted out. When punishment has been inflicted the matter should drop unless the child should do the same thing again. But too often the punishment in the greater crime. The child is nagged and kept in remembrance of the wrong done until the wrong is impressed more upon its mind than the right. Do not "nag" the children! Make them as happy as you possibly can. You may not have wealth, but you can have kind words and good children and a happy home, if both father and mother will only begin with the little ones in the right way, and correct them in a loving though firm spirit; but never, no never, develop that "nagging" habit. "Wisdom is justified of all her children," and "a wounded spirit who can bear?" God pity and help the many little ones who have to bear it.

ESTELLA CLARK.

The Dangers of Discourtesy.

I think that it was Reverend Stopford A. Brooke who once uttered these wise and true words: "The power of being able to keep a household from fretting and complaining and from violent tempers, the power of being able to encourage, nourish, and stimulate the freedom and growth of others, is gained from there having been built up in the minds of all in the house, as the first motive of life, the great Christian law—Christian because entirely human—"Think of others more than of yourself, and of others' happiness more than of your own unhappiness."

"Of this law the best definition to remember is a word of Saint Paul's: 'In honor preferring one another.' This is true courtesy. It is its very flower; it is the essence of Christ's teaching set to music in daily life. It will bring out all the good in others; it will bring out what is best in yourself; it will make your home like very heaven."

Of all the mischief-making elements that creep into many homes, discourtesy is one of the most common and most fatal in its results. When a wife begins to speak sharply and rudely to her husband, and when she finally descends to the low estate of "nagging" him, she is in a fair way to lose both his love and his respect; and when a husband begins to be less courteous to his wife he is in danger of losing both her respect and love.

The rock of discourtesy is the rock on which many a matrimonial bark has stranded. If the father and mother are discourteous to each other, it is not to be expected that the children of the home will be gentle and polite. There is no greater imitator than a child, and there is no one more alert. The child takes note of everything, and it is susceptible to the general atmosphere of the home.

If the father is fault-finding and generally irritable, the child is likely to be of the same disposition. If the children are not taught courtesy in the home, it is not to be expected that they will be courteous outside of the home.

There is a story told of an old German who was engaged in the back part of his place of business when one of his clerks came and told him that there was a lady waiting to see him in his office. He had thrown off his coat and the work he was doing had soiled his hands.

Hurrying to a basin he washed his hands, threw on his coat, straightened his tie and made himself as presentable as possible before going forward to meet the lady. Returning a few minutes later, he said, with an aggrieved air, as he threw off his coat.

"I put on my coat and make myself clean for nothing. Dot vas youst my wife."

Now there are a good many intelligent, entirely respectable and well-meaning men, who do not feel it to be incumbent upon them to observe the ordinary rules of courtesy towards women, when the woman in question is "youst my wife." And so there are wives who fall into the habit of negligence regarding their personal appearance and who are indifferent to many of the ordinary little courtesies of life, when there is no one around but "just my husband."

It is an evil day in any home when the husband feels that he can be less courteous to his wife than to other women, and it is an equally evil day when the wife feels that she can put aside many of the little courtesies.

No household can be kept from fretting and complaining, no household can be kept free from an atmosphere of unrest and general depression, if the great law of kindness does not obtain in that household. And kindness is the foundation of all real courtesy. It is true that "life is made up, not of great sacrifices or duties, but of little things, in which smiles and kindness and small obligations, given habitually, are what win and preserve the heart and secure comfort."

Nothing will secure greater comfort in the home than habitual smiles and kindness, combined with the courtesy that is not based on mere "good form," but that is the outgrowth of moral force, self-respect, and kindly consideration for others. Could there be any better motive for self-control, patience, forbearance, and kindness than a desire to make home happy?—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Akron, Ohio, Reunion.

The first reunion of the Kirtland, Ohio, District, organized August 5, at Akron, Ohio, by choosing R. C. Evans, of the First Presidency, to preside, with U. W. Greene, missionary in charge, R. M. Elvin and V. M. Goodrich as assistants. The sessions continued over Sunday, the 13th, with the following daily program with some modifications. Prayer-meeting at nine o'clock in the morning; Sunday-school and Religio work at fifteen minutes to eleven in the forenoon and four o'clock in the afternoon; preaching at two o'clock in the afternoon and half past seven in the evening.

The Kirtland District Sunday-school convention and the district conference both held their sessions on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday.

The preaching- and prayer-services, as well as the auxiliary sessions, were of a high order, and good interest was manifested upon the part of all present. The committee, though laboring under disadvantage, did exceedingly well in taking care of the people, and deserve credit for their patience and persistency of effort.

The general health of the campers was good, and the administrations of the ordinance of laying on of hands was followed by blessing and comfort.

By unanimous voice, provision was made to hold a reunion next year upon same grounds, if available. The time of holding the next reunion was left to the next district conference; and a committee on arrangements was appointed by the body as follows: C. H. Dahlberg and John McCoy, of Akron, and Eben Miller, of Cleveland, the next district conference being authorized to add two more members to the committee.

While the attendance was rather smaller than expected, yet altogether the effort was pronounced a success, and the unanimous sentiment in favor of another effort next year gave evidence that the Saints were pleased. The attendance of non-members was not large, but quite a number were interested and some favorable. We believe much good was accomplished.

Respectfully,

J. A. GUNSOLLEY, Secretary.

A Vision.

The vision was this: I saw a rough stone among the rocks, and the Lord commanded his angel to pick it up and to carefully guard it, and to mould and form it into a beautiful image, like unto the image of Christ. As the angel worked upon it, breaking off the rough corners and smoothing the rough places, I saw that sometimes the stone would scringe and tremble as with fear and pain. Then another angel came and softly touched it with his beautiful hand, polishing it to a bright surface. Then the stone was quiet, and the first again went on with his work; and when he would cut deep on some rough and unseemly part, the second angel, who was always near by, would with soft and gentle hand smooth and polish it. And so the work went on and on.

I looked to see something of the image; it was the face of his servant, my companion, being formed into the beautiful image of Christ. Then the voice of the Spirit said: Thus have I taken thee, my servant, from among the rocks and the evils of the world. I have given mine angels charge over thee, that all thy harshness and evil tendency shall be cast off, that thou shalt be clean and pure before me. Sometimes when the work of mine angel cuts deep, and pierces thy heart, thou art inclined to say, I can bear no more; I can not endure to the end; I will again seek unto the world for peace and comfort. But the second angel draws nigh and brings peace to thy heart, and shows thee the necessity of the work, that thou be made pure and perfect, a fit instrument in my hand for the work I have assigned thee to do. And when the work is finished, thou shalt dwell with me in my kingdom. The work is going on also with thy companion, and together shalt ye dwell with me in the glorious kingdom of God; therefore be not discouraged but patient in well doing; when thy work is done, thou shalt come unto me and rest. Amen.

I find that I can not in word convey all the beauty of the vision, for the work of forming and polishing the image was beautiful, so pure and white, without a mar of any kind; but I trust the Spirit will help us all to understand, that all of the children of God must go through the same process, that we may be perfect as Christ is perfect, being like unto his most glorious image. During this life, the work must go on, here a little and there a little; and when all is finished, we are ready to depart and be with God.

The question often arises with all of us; can we endure unto the end? We often find that the heat of the furnace is very hot in order to purify the gold; but if the form of the "Fourth" is with us not a hair of our heads shall fall, nor the smell of fire be upon our garments. And again, when we pass through the deep waters of affliction, and our heart is chilled with the cold wave of sorrow, we hear the sweet, comforting voice saying, "Fear not, I am with thee. I will never leave nor forsake thee. The waters shall not overflow thee." Oh, what a promise! Can we appreciate that great, boundless love? Yes, in a measure; for a spark of the same love is aflame in our own hearts, placed there by the Holy Ghost. It witnesses unto us that we are born of God.

Love! That great fountain of life has been opened unto us, through our obedience unto the gospel of Jesus Christ. Thank God, it is not man's gospel, for then it would surely fail, all would be lost, the arm of flesh will perish, but the arm of God is strong and immutable. It can not fail. It holdeth up the heavens, and causeth the earth to tremble, and the waters to give forth their fury. Who is like unto our God? The time is near when the wicked shall flee at his presence, and the righteous shall seek shelter under his wing. May we all find safe shelter there at the last day, when Christ comes to gather together his saints in Zion, beautiful Zion!

Zion's Religio-Literary Society.

Dear Herald: We, the Religions of Manchester, having read the report in the HERALD, are of the opinion that some mistake has occurred, and therefore beg to present the following which we would like to appear in your columns if you have space for it:

We have now been organized four years and have a membership of forty-six with an average attendance of thirteen weekly. Many of our members have to work in the evenings in the summer months and are not able to attend regularly on that account. We have a full staff of officers, three committees, program, lookout, and social. We have the sum of nineteen shillings and six and one half pence in the hands of our treasurer. We have also organized a ramble society, and thus are able to spend our Saturday evenings in each other's society.

The spiritual condition of our society is very good and promising. We have been able to settle many difficult questions, and are on the whole in a very prosperous condition.

Alabama Reunion.

Editors Herald: The Alabama reunion closed the 20th inst. It was a spiritual feast to the Saints. The gifts of the Spirit were present in both prayer- and preaching meetings. There were thirty-four additions by baptism. It was very encouraging to us to see so many willing to take upon them the name of Christ, and especially so as it came just after our nine-day debate with J. F. Love, at McKenzie, Alabama, who boasted that he was going to annihilate our faith, and that we would have a church-house for sale, etc.

Many of the Saints expressed themselves, after the debate, as being greatly confirmed in the faith, and more determined than ever to continue the warfare until the prize of eternal life was gained. My health is good, and hope grows brighter every day.

Many thanks to all the Saints where I have labored for kindness shown me. T. C. Kelley, D. E. Tucker, W. J. Booker, and the writer, of the missionary force, were present at the reunion. The vote was unanimous to hold another reunion in 1906.

Clinton Reunion.

The seventh annual reunion of the Clinton District convened at Taberville, Missouri, August 11, 1905. Brn. F. M. Slover and A. Lloyd were chosen to preside. The attendance was not as large as we desired, but the meetings were very spiritual throughout.

Wind and rain threatened to do us harm, but through the prayers of the Saints we were protected. The rain and wind stopped almost instantly when the Saints united themselves in earnest prayer to God for protection.

The Sunday-school and Religio work was in charge of Sr. Sadie Dempsey.

The matter of holding a reunion in 1906 was left to the district conference, to be decided at the spring conference. Those branches desiring the reunion will make their wants known to said conference.

The Club-Footed Man.

Editors Herald: Please publish the following: The club-footed man is visiting Saints of the Spring River District and victimizing them with his smooth and plausible lies. I hope that the next Saint whose house he visits will procure an officer and put him under arrest immediately and notify by wire or otherwise the chief of police of this city, who has a warrant for him issued by the county attorney. Also I wish every Saint in the church whom he has deceived in the past to write me a card, stating in a brief way what he did, giving time and place, so I can introduce it as evidence when he is arrested, as he is sure to be. J. M. RICHARDS.

BAY VIEW, Washington, August 15, 1905.

Editors Herald: Some may wonder what has become of me, and would like to know how the work is progressing in Washington. I find opposition to the truth wherever I go, but I think some of the barriers are being removed. I began my work out here by speaking in Seattle, going from there to Tacoma, where I preached some few times. From there I went to Rainier Schoolhouse, located about five miles north of Eatonville, Washington. Here I preached a number of times; found Bro. and Sr. Duncan still interested in the cause of truth.

Here I met a minister of the Methodist faith. He did not know who I was or what my business was, and he began by telling me what wonderful success he had, how he had met and put to flight some "Mormons," as he called them; and of course he wanted to know why I was in the country. And when I informed him that I was one of those people he called "Mormons" it almost astonished him. It was my turn now to talk, and he was not half so anxious to fight "Mormons." It was easier to whip them when they were not there; and every statement I made he agreed with me. Do not know whether this was the way he whipped the others, but suspect it was.

From there I went to Ashford, a new opening where none of our elders had been. Here I found Bro. and Sr. Ritchey, formerly of Lamoni, together with two daughters, and son-in-law.

I left the work in a more favorable condition and removed some prejudice from the minds of the people. I was invited to take a trip up to Mt. Rainier, and, taking leave of absence, I went up the mountain side some seven or eight thousand feet, which I greatly enjoyed. When I returned, which I did in about three days, I went to Tacoma, and from there to Des Moines, a small town about fifteen miles north of Tacoma. There were no Saints living at this place: but here I can drop a thought how some of the sisters can help in missionary work. Sr. Van Eaton, who lives at Tacoma, had a sister living at Des Moines, who is a member of the Baptist Church; and being anxious for the gospel to be heard she secured for me a place to stay while I preached. Here I encountered an Advent preacher, as he had the use of the only building that could be had, and he did not occupy but part of the time. I was permitted to fill in the remainder. Had a good hearing most of the time. I also preached at Elliot, which was another new opening, also Issaquak, where there were several Saints some fourteen years ago, but now only Sr. Anna Vowle resides, but who is alive in the work.

Returning to Seattle, I met Bro. Joseph; glad to see some one from home. I think Bro. Joseph has done a work here that nobody else could have done, as he was able to show to the people the distinction between us and the Brighamites. And I hope to see some fruits of his coming out here in the future.

From Seattle I went to Laconner where I found a little band of Saints striving to do what they can to advance the work. I spoke for them during the week at different homes of the Saints, and on Sunday night I occupied in the Good Templar Hall to a fine crowd. I am at present at Bay View preaching at the homes of Bro. Moore and Bro. McMillen to small crowds. In all my work I have been blessed with the Spirit. This is a hard country to get people interested in the gospel, as they are more interested in pleasure than in their own salvation. But in nearly every place I have had fair crowds, and some seemed very much interested.

That God will hasten the time when the gospel in its power will be preached in all the world for a witness, that the honest might be gathered out, is my prayer.

L. G. HOLLAWAY.

LYNCH, Nebraska.

Editors Herald: It seems to me that as a rule the ministry of the church in preaching occupy too much time on the first principles regardless of the character of our auditors. If the audience be Saints they are well posted on these matters, hence the wisdom of exhorting them to attend to the duties of a practical life rather than dreaming away their time around the baptismal font.

We all love the old story but we can not always be children, but must put away childish things and go on unto perfection, not forgetting that the reward is to him that worketh together with God. I sometimes fear that continually dwelling on first principles has a tendency to create the impression that all is well if only one firmly believes them; and beget a false sense of security, fatal to rapid growth in grace.

I once heard of a young preacher who was sent to fill an appointment, and his first audience was outsiders, but he greeted them with the following: Fear not little flock, it is your father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. To an audience of Saints he said: O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come. Much time is wasted if we do not select a subject suited to the needs of our auditors.

Neither are first principles all that are necessary to be presented to sinful men; but, in order that their repentance be genuine, they should be shown the true nature of sin, the power of habit, and how much depends on their own personal effort, putting off the old man and donning the new garb of righteousness.

Many have been taken into the church who seemed to know only that they had been baptized for the remission of sins, and had progressed no farther.

It is also very unfortunate that some have taught probation or repentance after death, and many have been lulled into a sense of carnal security the scriptures do not warrant.

This matter should be very clearly defined, lest dying men be deluded and put off their salvation until it is too late. I wish some of our able writers would publish a booklet clearly defining the scripture view of the foregoing subject. There certainly is no hope after death for one who has heard and rejected the gospel in this life. This has been the way I have been teaching men in reference to that question.

Now I do not wish to be understood as underrating the importance of the first principles of the gospel. God forbid; but I verily believe that having served their purpose their consideration may be made to give place to the consideration of practical duties of life, which, in our zeal for first principles, we neglect to keep before the minds of our hearers.

It is deplorable to find so many in the church who have made no progress in the divine life, but are like the Hebrews Paul spoke of, who, when they ought to have been teachers, were ignorant of the primary facts of the gospel. What was wrong with those Saints? Certainly they had not been properly instructed in the higher law of spiritual growth and development.

The best evidence of true repentance is a desire to put away the former evil things of life and enter upon the new life with zeal and courage; but if the convert is to do this he must be first instructed so he may know the duties that will devolve upon him in this new relation he has assumed; and neglect on our part as ministers to so instruct, leaves the convert to grope his way blindly, knowing only that he has been baptized for the remission of sins.

If one has been properly taught the true nature of sin, and the importance of fully forsaking the same, and fully instructed in relation to the duties of the life, he or she is a proper candidate for admission to the church of Christ, with the assurance of making a healthy, spiritual growth.

What is true of adults is true of children, and what a responsibility rests upon parents and priesthoods when we take these little ones into the fold of Christ. They require the constant watchcare of both parents and teachers. They should be brought to the prayer-service and communion, and should be instructed in all the duties incumbent on them. This has been sorely neglected many times, and many have drifted away from the church.

May God bless the priesthood of his church that they may be wise in presenting this glorious restored gospel to men, that we shun not to declare the whole counsel of God, that men may be wise unto salvation.

J. SMILEY STRAIN.

GRAVELFORD, Oregon, August 15, 1905.

Editors Herald: I left my home in Dow City May 18, bidding loved ones good-bye, and leaving them in the hands of God for his protecting care. I came by way of Denver, and expected to meet Bro. Henry Sparling there, but because of a wreck on the railroad he did not come that way, but overtook me and got on the same train after I had ridden a couple of hours. We arrived in Salt Lake City Saturday night about eleven o'clock and found the Reorganized church, and the writer preached at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, and Bro. Sparling at night. We also had the pleasure of attending the Utah Mormon church at the Tabernacle, and heard their church historian preach. The preaching did not amount to much, but we heard some excellent singing.

I had the pleasure of baptizing Sr. Bushard's little girl while at Tacoma. Bro. Sparling and the writer have been holding tent-meetings in Portland and vicinity for about six weeks; but seemingly not much interest manifest. I think two or three were interested.

August 4, by consent of Bro. G. T. Griffiths, our missionary in charge, I took boat in company with Sr. Ethel Boyd and her uncle for Bandon to attend the reunion at that place, arriving there Saturday night, the 6th. It was the first time the writer had ever been on the ocean, and we had not much more than struck the rolling waters than the writer and Sr. Ethel took sick, the writer being the first to hunt for his berth; and Sr. Boyd's excuse was, This riding backwards is what made her sick. But few were able to sit up so long as we were on the ocean, which was about twenty-four hours.

The reunion at Bandon passed off nicely without a jar; splendid interest manifest throughout, and a large attendance considering the membership of the district.

Sunday, the 13th, the writer had the pleasure of leading two young ladies into the watery grave, and others are very near the kingdom. Bro. Keeler will continue the meetings this week, and I feel sure others will come before he leaves. The Saints at Bandon are alive in this latter-day work, and all seem to be united, and to work together. May God bless them, and may they continue faithful.

Bro. Keeler's home is at Myrtle Point, and his hustling wife is doing all she can there to keep the camp-fire blazing; and, as she seems to be a willing worker and also talented in Sunday-school work, is accomplishing lots of good at that place. I shall ever remember the kindness extended to me while at Bandon. Am now on my way back to Portland. Must also say what few Saints we have there are very kind to the missionaries; some are working with their might in this work; others are not working as hard as I would be glad to see them. I find Portland a very hard place to get the gospel before the people, as there is so much going on all the time, and people are so prejudiced they will not come out to hear; so we ask the Saints to remember us in their prayers.

In bonds,

N. V. SHELDON.

CAIRO, Nebraska, August 17, 1905.

Editors Herald: After General Conference, as I received no mission, I began to look for a location to earn a living, and the way was opened for me and my family to come to this place to take charge of a telephone exchange, and although I regretted to leave the associations of the Omaha Saints, where I had church privileges, yet I thought some good might be done by my coming here; and on last Sunday Bro. and Sr. Boodry hunted us up, and I went out about six miles and preached one sermon to a lively little band of Saints that live near together and have a Sunday-school; and now they think that as they have an elder here they may have regular meetings, and I told them I was willing to preach for them if they would furnish the transportation to and from the schoolhouse, which they agree to do. We will have services once every Sunday at half past two in the afternoon, and Sunday-school to follow. I thought perhaps when I got here nothing would be here to entertain me in a religious way; but for want of a better place to go I went to hear the Baptist and Methodist preachers dispense their gospel in their way, but could learn nothing from them to make the way of salvation plain.

I think there is a chance here to do some good in presenting the gospel, and will try to do what I can to preach the "glad tidings of great joy" to those who will come to hear.

Yours in bonds,

JAMES HUFF.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, August 16, 1905.

Editors Herald: We are back again in Zion(?) A letter received from Bro. W. H. Kelley the 13th, while we were engaged with Bro. J. D. Stead in gospel tent-work in East Helena, informed us that we were needed here for a special work; that we were to "yoke up" with Bro. F. M. Smith for a while, and closing with instructions to "get around as soon as possible," brought us to this point yesterday. We regret to leave the Montana field just now, and especially the work just begun in East Helena, but trust that Saints and friends will rally to the support of Bro. J. D. Stead there; and if they do, the work will be done there without us. Bro. Stead is capable and willing.

For a few evenings here we will take up the street-work once more, and then the program is not fully made out as yet; but with our "yoke-mate" we expect to visit and carry the message to other portions of Utah.

We found Brn. W. H. Kelley and F. M. Smith and family here and busy. Bro. Kelley expects to visit Colorado ere long, to attend to some features of the work there that demand his attention.

Praying and working for the success of the Master's cause, we expect to be found in this field for some time to come, and our address will be Box 181, Salt Lake City, Utah.

A. M. CHASE.

SAGLE, Idaho, August 15, 1905.

Dear Herald: I truly love this gospel and enjoy reading the good sermons and letters in the HERALD: I have received so much strength and encouragement from the letters! We have a branch here at Sagle. There are some faithful ones that try to keep the camp-fire blazing. Our branch officers are young in the work, but they seem to be true, honest workers.

Pray for us, dear Saints, that we may live worthy to meet our Savior. I was baptized February 3, 1904, by A. M. Chase. We are wishing for Bro. Chase again. We are expecting Bro. T. W. Chatburn before long to give us a few good sermons. Dear Saints, I feel that I am one among the weakest. Pray for me, that I may live faithful.

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. HATTIE TURNBULL.

SKIATOOK, Indian Territory, August 21, 1905.

Editors Herald: After the conference which convened with the Central Texas Branch, July 14, I, in company with Bro. S. R. Hay, went over on the Navasola River, about three miles east, where we held a ten-day meeting, (good attendance, and a fine interest, especially noticeable in the young,) after which we started to Fall County to fill an appointment. While on our way we were both stricken with the fever, and were compelled to stop at Bro. Hay's home.

I, while yet ill, went to Ragin to fill an appointment. Had a fair turnout. Have baptized four, and confirmed four since conference. From Ragin I went to Marlin where I held two meetings. My sickness still continued until I was forced to return home.

My prayer is that I may soon be able to return to my field of labor. Asking an interest in the prayers of all the praying Saints.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. H. HARP.

Extracts from Letters.

Addie Hoxie, Brockton, Massachusetts: "The Brockton Branch at present, we believe, is in a very good condition. We have but one service on the Sabbath; but that is very well attended, and all seem to enjoy the presence of the Spirit of God. We would indeed like to see more outsiders come in; but, individually, I believe the work is progressing. In speaking to different ones we find they are glad to hear and willing to converse on the subject. We can only pray that the seed may fall on good ground, spring up, and bear fruit to the glory of God."

Cardinal Gibbons on Divorce.

The head of the Catholic Church in this country does not mince matters in his essay on "Pure womanhood" in the September Cosmopolitan. It is astonishingly emphatic, and his discussion of woman's responsibility in the home, and the divorce question, is recommended to every woman in the country no matter what her religious creed. It is certainly one of the most stimulating utterances relating to the home sphere that have appeared in a long time.

Present Polygamy in Utah.

INCIDENTS WHICH SHOW THAT THE MORMONS STILL PRACTICE PLURAL MARRIAGE.

Of thrilling interest is the third article in the series on "The tragedy of the Mormon woman," which Marian Bonsall contributes to the September Housekeeper. The subject of present-day polygamy in Utah is thoroughly discussed and numerous proofs of the extent of the evil are published. Eight of the twelve apostles of the Mormon church, it appears, are to-day practicing polygamy, and this openly and with the full approval of their church. One apostle (Merrill) boasts seven wives and forty-five children. During her investigations in Utah Miss Bonsall found that young girls of twelve and fifteen years are instructed by their teachers that polygamy is not only right, but the sole means of exaltation for women.

An interesting description is given of the mysterious Temple ceremonies undergone by those who would rise to preferment in the church. It is in the Temple that the plural marriages are performed, and it is this secrecy which has made prosecution of the offenders so difficult. The element of mystery, which is so vital a part of Mormonism, does more, in Miss Bonsall's opinion, to entrap victims for its church than the combined oratory of all its high priests and bishops, elders and missionaries.

The Baby.

The amount that a baby learns during the first twelve months of its life is simply amazing. The development of little children during the first five years, when systematically watched and accurately tabulated, shows results that would be incredible if they were not vouched for by conscientious observers. The nursery period is absorbing. To the young mother it is filled with anxiety, everything being new to her, and her constant fear being lest she shall make some fatal mistake. First babies therefore come in for a good deal more discipline than falls to the lot of the fourth, fifth and sixth child, if there happen to be so many in an American home. People with large families appreciate the value of a little wholesome neglect. The mother of seven is conveniently blind to passing gusts of temper or trivial misdemeanors which occasion great solicitude to the mother of one, who is like the poor, distraught hen with a single chick.—Mrs. Sangster in Woman's Home Companion for September.

Baron Komura as Japan's Peace Negotiator.

Baron Jutaro Komura is one of the most remarkable of the younger statesmen of Japan. He comes from the ministry of foreign affairs, a post which he has filled with dignity and success since 1900. He conducted the Manchurian negotiations which led up to the war in a manner highly satisfactory to the Emperor and the entire people. Baron Komura is a Harvard man, and speaks English with a strong Boston accent. He won his spurs in Korea, in 1895, when Japanese diplomacy was so discredited. Five years later, he went to Peking, and participated in the peace conference there, as a result of the Boxer rebellion and the expedition of the allied powers. During his stay at the Chinese capital he won the confidence of China so largely that there has existed an unpublished but effective alliance between Japan and China, which has been very helpful to the former during her war with Russia. Baron Komura was Japanese minister to Washington preceding Mr. Takahira. His greatest triumph may be said to be the long and delicate negotiations which he, as foreign minister, conducted with Baron Rosen, then Russian minister, which culminated in the great struggle between the two powers.—From "The peace negotiators at Washington," in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for August.

Moral Maxims From a Religious Book of China.

The right way leads forward; the wrong way backward.
Do not proceed on an evil path.
Do not sin in secret.
Accumulate virtue, increase merit.
With a compassionate heart turn toward all creatures.
Be faithful, filial, friendly, and brotherly.
First rectify thyself and then convert others.
Take pity on orphans, assist widows; respect the old, be kind to children.
Even the multifarious insects, herbs, and trees should not be injured.
Be grieved at the misfortune of others and rejoice at their good luck.
Assist those in need, and rescue those in danger.
Regard your neighbor's gain as your own gain, and regard your neighbor's loss as your own loss.
Do not call attention to the faults of others, nor boast of your own excellence.
Stay evil and promote goodness.
Renounce much, accept little.
Show endurance in humiliation and bear no grudge.
Receive favors as if surprised.
Extend your help without seeking reward.
Give to others and do not regret or begrudge your liberality.
—Translated for August Open Court by T. Suzuki and Doctor Paul Carus.

The series of articles on "How Can We reach the People," which at present is running in Autumn Leaves, is meeting with general interest. The July number was devoted to "Advertising," the August number contained a splendid article on "Street work," by an experienced worker, while the September number will tell "How we reached the people of Toronto." This is the record of an actual and successful campaign in a large city. The attention of the people was attracted to our work and their interest was held, Elder McLean tells how it was done. The article is full of suggestions and interest.

The biggest gold brick ever cast, nearly as large as two building-bricks placed end to end, which contains twenty-five thousand dollars' worth of gold that is purer than the gold in a twenty-dollar coin, has just arrived at the Lewis and Clark Exposition and is being exhibited by the Nome district of Alaska as evidence that Nome is still a great gold-producing region. The gold brick is a foot long, four inches deep and five inches wide, and weighs approximately ninety pounds.

Stewart Edward White in Government Service.

Stewart Edward White, after finishing some new Arizona stories for McClure's Magazine, has left Santa Barbara and gone for awhile to the mountains in Madera County. One of his plans is "to take another try at the bear." He is making his trip in the service of the government. His recently republished first book, The Claim Jumpers, in which he struck his characteristic note of virile Americanism, is now winning a tardy but substantial success. McClure-Phillips announce a fourth large printing of their edition.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Capital Stock $50,000.00.

Shares . . $100.00 each.

This mine is located near Independence, Missouri. Its present inventory shows an investment of over $28,000.00. This amount is in the plant and in order to run the business successfully it has been decided to increase the capital stock to $50,000.00. Retail yards will be opened in different places. We have already established one at Independence, Missouri. Arrangements have been made at Nebraska City, Nebraska, and the yard is now under construction. Two or more will be put in at Kansas City.

The capacity of the mine is now 120 tons per day and can be increased to 500 tons per day; further increase would necessitate another shaft. The coal is of excellent quality and is very much sought after and commands a good price on the market. We can have exchange on all the leading coals for wholesale and retail trade.

This is a splendid opportunity for a good business investment, which will bring profitable returns and also help build up and establish our people in the center State. It is and will be a great labor-giving institution in its many departments. The profits of this company will be divided every six months, if so desired by the stockholders and directors.

This is the beginning of the season. Now is the time to secure stock. All we need is capital and success is assured.

Any person wishing to further investigate, the writer will send, upon application, prospectus and by-laws together with any information desired. Send subscriptions for stock to E. L. Kelley, Lamoni, Iowa, or to DECEIVE NOT YOURSELVES.

In his first letter to the Corinthians the apostle Paul warned the saints in this language:

Let no man deceive himself. If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise. For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God; for it is written, He taketh the wise in their own craftiness. And again, The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise, that they are vain.—1 Corinthians 3: 18-20.

We have been repeatedly warned against being deceived by others, whether by false spirits or by evil-minded men. The Lord found it necessary to pronounce a woe upon deceivers at one time, as follows:

But woe unto them that are deceivers, and hypocrites, for thus saith the Lord, I will bring them to judgment. Behold, verily I say unto you, There are hypocrites among you, and have deceived some, which has given the adversary power, but, behold, such shall be reclaimed; but the hypocrites shall be detected and shall be cut off, either in life or in death, even as I will, and woe unto them who are cut off from my church, for the same are overcome of the world; wherefore, let every man beware lest he do that which is not in truth and righteousness before me.—Doctrine and Covenants 50: 2, 3.

We can be assured that the Lord will deal with the deceiver according to his word; and for those who are deceived by them, the promise is made that they shall be reclaimed. This is speaking to those "in the church"—both deceivers and deceived. And while there is a possibility of our being deceived by others, we are also in danger of deceiving ourselves.

We can, nearly all of us no doubt, look back and see where in the past we have pursued a course which we thought to be right, or at least justifiable, and finally have been awakened to the fact that we were deceiving ourselves.

Judas deceived himself by thinking he could by a trick obtain a few pieces of silver from the chief priests, and that Jesus would exert his power to escape. He realized the terribleness of his sin too late. So we may sacrifice the interests of the cause for the sake of material gain; we may resort to trickery in taking advantage of our brethren, and think that we will never be called upon to give an account; but in this we deceive ourselves. Paul thought he was doing God service by persecuting the children of God, yet he was deceiving himself. We may think that we are industriously serving the Lord, when, really, we are only courting the

THE AMANA COLONY.

Those who have read sketches of the history and practices of the Amana Society will read with interest the following. The fact that these people advocate celibacy will be a surprise, and is, even to those who have known them for years.

In the beginning God instituted, commanded, and sanctioned marriage; but in the latter day it remains for man to bring into existence a religious scheme which ignores the plan of the Creator, or to go to the other extreme and advocate a plurality of wives:

IOWA CITY, Iowa, July 21.—The case of Mrs. Wilson versus the Amana Society, to test its right to corporate existence, was concluded to-day before Judge Byington, holding court at Marengo, and was taken under advisement by him.

The case resembled a Mormon investigation by a senate committee, except that the Amana people were not charged with any crime, social or otherwise, unless, perhaps, it is a crime to own 26,000 acres of the finest land in Iowa, besides untold wealth in manufacturing and milling industries, as it was shown the Amana colony owned.

The suit, however, brought out many interesting facts not generally understood, particularly as to the religious belief of these Mennonites. As the defense is that they hold the lands and minister to the affairs of the colony as a religious duty, the testimony as to their belief was particularly explicit.

One fact brought out was that the Mennonites advocate celibacy, a feature of their religion which is a good deal of a surprise, even to those who have known them for years. They hold that a bachelor is on a higher plane spiritually than his married brother, and that he has a better chance of getting through the pearly gates.

There are at present 1,850 people in the colonies. Each member receives his board, lodging, clothing and medical treatment absolutely free, eating at common table. The expenditure of money is regulated by a board of trustees, which meets once a year and apportions spending money among the members, according to their needs. There are seven villages in the colony, and each of these has a general store, at which the members get whatever they need. An account is kept and gone over by the trustees at the end of the year. A large part of the receipts is from the mills, as what is made on the farm is not sufficient to pay the expenses of the society. On various occasions the society has borrowed $50,000.—Monroe County News, July 27.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

If Bro. C. writes to Branch A for a letter, and Branch A has changed name of branch to Branch B, is it necessary to give explanation in the letter of the change of the name of branch?

The answer seems self-evident. The letter should be issued by the branch under its present name, regardless of the number of times its name may have been changed previously, if said changes have been legal and proper, the members of the old branch holding membership in the new. If the applicant for letter be not informed of the change of name, a personal letter to him would set him right, but we see no necessity for incorporating explanation in letter of removal.

Is the commission given to Joseph the Martyr in September, 1832, section 83:13-20, to go two by two without purse or scrip, neither two coats, in force now? If not why not?

We have no reason for believing that the revelation is not now in force. We read in the Lord's preface: "Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled."—Doctrine and Covenants 1:6. We can be certain of this: Unless the commandments are kept, we can not consistently hope for a fulfillment of the prophecies and promises which would result from their keeping. That the command to go two by two to the world is in force is evident from the fact that it was repeated to the Reorganization in these words: "And moreover it is expedient in me that my elders in going to declare my gospel to the nations, shall observe the pattern which I have given. Two by two let them be sent, that they may be a help and a support to each other in their ministry."—Doctrine and Covenants 115. However, while we believe the revelation to be in force, we do not believe that all the interpretations of it are in force.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

Writing to one of the brethren of Lamoni, Bro. F. M. Cooper, of Plano, Illinois, states as follows concerning recent experiences with representatives of the Utah church:

"On last Wednesday I attacked the Utah elders at the close of their efforts on Madison Street, Chicago. They all, with one exception, went away as soon as we began; that was a Mr. J. C. Beard, who had united with them recently, and who had been a minister of some other church. Beard, being full of zeal and ignorance, offered to debate with us the question, 'Does the Bible sanction polygamy?' The Utah elders protested, but Beard would not follow their counsel. The debate was held in our hall on the West Side on Thursday evening, the 17th. Not a Utah Mormon came; they left Beard to his fate. A number of outsiders were present and they all were delighted with the discussion and said there was but one side to the argument.

"The Mormons preached their initial sermon on the streets of Plano last evening. I reached home yesterday and was ready to follow them. All of the leading town people seemed to be on the ground to hear the debate. The battle lasted nearly three hours; the Mormons were discomfited on every proposition discussed. Old citizens even said they were surprised at the wide differences between the two churches. Numbers shook hands with me at the close, and said their opinions regarding our faith and people were simply reversed. The conflict was an eye-opener even to old Plano. I have been waiting for such an opportunity for years. It came at last, and I was thankful to strike that wicked, apostate system in the old home town of President Joseph Smith. Numbers who were laboring under that almost universal false impression that we are connected in some way with the evils of Utah Mormonism, and who have never attended our meetings here, said they were anxious to hear us again. This little debate, because of its kind, seems a God-send on the eve of our Plano reunion. Am anxious to do all I can for the name and honor of true Latter Day Saintism."

Bro. C. A. Butterworth reports three baptisms in Australia during the past quarter, and says all the ministry are doing their best. He writes: "The hand of oppression is closing in on us daily and we long for the freedom, unity, and equality which God intends should prevail among his children on earth. I am doing what little I can to keep things on the move and prepare the Saints for the joy that awaits the faithful. A few scattered Saints are gathered in West Australia and are urging the opening of our work there. We sadly need more laborers, but must wait the Lord's own time."

Bro. Alvin Knisley reports from Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Canada. "I have baptized seven here thus far, preached over thirty sermons, and blessed seven children. There are over forty Saints here in a radius of about forty miles; some from Iowa, some from Minnesota. I found them unexpectedly, having the address of only one when I came here July 8."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

"WASHINGTON, District of Columbia, September 2.—The adjutant general, division of the Philippines, reported to-day by cablegram from Manila two deaths among the troops from cholera. The troop and battery members have been placed in rigid quarantine.

"Dread of the cholera entering the United States by means of immigrants from the plague-infected countries of Europe has aroused the authorities to instant action. No immigrant for America will be allowed to leave Bremen and Hamburg, the two most dangerous ports, liable to ship infected persons, until he shall have been six days in quarantine, the period necessary for the disease to develop. Because of the heavy immigration from Russia, Poland, Austria, and Germany, it is realized here that the danger of the pest spreading to the United States, even if it grows no worse in Europe than it is now, is great. If it continues to spread in Europe then only the most heroic measures will avail to keep the plague out of America. This means that all immigrant ships sailing to the United States will be rigidly inspected abroad by agents of this government, and suspects will be prevented from embarking.

"ZANZIBAR, September 3.—This town is infected with bubonic plague. Ten cases appeared among the natives, from which five deaths resulted.

"COLON, September 3.—The report of the medical authorities of the canal zone that the death on August 26 of laborers on the wharf was due to bubonic plague has given rise to much discussion. The result is that Central American and Mexican ports refuse to receive freight sent by way of the isthmus."

Earthquake shocks along the New England coast, also in one of the Middle States are reported among recent happenings.

According to the Pittsburg Press, August 31, 1905, London, England, is shocked by a body of religious enthusiasts which the Press says is worse than the "Mormons." The sect calls itself the Agapemonites, and the elders live in a luxurious mansion named "The Abode of Love." There are about six hundred Agapemonites, mostly women, all of whom are well-to-do, and who look upon J. H. Smyth-Piggott, their leader, as the Messiah, returned to earth, and worship him as such. One of the tenets of the sect is that there shall be no marriages among its members. Jesus once warned his disciples, saying, "There shall arise false Christs." Paul said, "Of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts."

The Pittsburg Telegraph for August 28th states that four of the wives of Doctor George A. Witzhoff declare to the district attorney that they have indisputable evidence that he married at least fifty women in ten years, and obtained large amounts of money from almost all of them before deserting them. Commenting, the Telegraph says, "If recent developments in regard to numerous cases of bigamy are to be taken as a criterion, a wave of polygamous sentiment is sweeping over the East." "In this city it is alleged that marriage brokers, or schatchens, make a business of marrying young women to designing men so that the latter may rob them of their savings."

The Boston Evening Transcript some time ago published a paragraph commenting upon the work of Frederick W. [M.] Smith in Salt Lake City, in which they give Brigham Young the credit for introducing polygamy, and add this erroneous sentence: "Imagine, therefore, their [Josephites] delight over the news from Salt Lake City that Frederick W. Smith, grandson of the prophet and son of the Brighamite president, had called upon the Utah Mormons to abandon polygamy!" In their issue for July 31 they correct this error as follows: "By the way, he is not the son of the Brighamite president, as has been inadvertently stated. The latter is the son of Hiram Smith."

"Massachusetts's present spirit of toleration in religion is very different from what it was when Roger Williams was exiled to Rhode Island. A few weeks ago a Congregational church edifice and congregation passed formally into the Protestant Episcopal Church without friction or feeling between the denomination which lost and the one which gained by the transfer. No later than a generation ago this incident would have caused feeling. It is now announced that one hundred Roman Catholics in Michaug, Massachusetts, emigrants from Canada or their descendants, have, with their French priest, gone over to the Baptist denomination, stopping for a time on the way-station of the old Catholic church. Only in a republic like ours; or such as France bids fair to be within a few months, where church and state are separate and all sects are the same before the law and without any external or civic prestige, could such transference of allegiance by bodies of believers go on without exciting considerably more surprise and contentious talk than will follow here. It would be foolish to assume that in these cases there had been no severing of ties of kinship or friendship or that the adjustment had been entirely easy; but it is at a minimum compared with what it would have been in Russia, Spain, or Germany."

"CITY OF MEXICO, August 28.—Students of the University of Campeche, capital of the Mexican state of the same name, have discovered that the language of the Indians of Campeche and the Turkish language are almost identical. Turks coming directly from their country to Mexico find no difficulty in making their wants known to the Indians of Campeche, and within a few weeks they are able to talk the language of the Indians fluently.

"Ethnologists of this capital have now decided to attempt to establish the relationship between the Indians of Campeche and the Turks, but it is considered to be as difficult a problem as that of explaining the discovery a short time ago at the same place in the state of Aazaca of Egyptian and Chinese idols."

The Deseret Evening News, August 26, 1905, contains an account of the eighty-seventh anniversary of the birth of Benjamin E. Johnson, and publishes a statement of his testimony upon that occasion, in which he testifies that he knows Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, also Brigham Young, and that Young's successors were chosen of Heaven. Poor old man!

The same issue contains an editorial "Regarding tithing," which makes a sickening attempt to justify the Utah church authorities in the use of church funds, no accounting of which is made to the church.

The Utah State Journal of same date has an able editorial on "The iron rod," establishing the fact that the "iron rod" of Lehi's vision means the word of God, and discrediting the teaching that the "iron rod" means the Utah church leaders, Joseph F. Smith in particular.

The Chicago Tribune, August 20, 1905, contains an account of the Zionist conference at Basel, which declared that none but the original scheme of colonizing Palestine could be entertained.

There is an unfortunate error in the Senior Quarterly lesson for September 10, in comment on verse 5, first column of the study of the text, which should read, "This is like the announcement of the angel to Joseph before the birth of Christ." The printers inserted the name "Smith" after Joseph, and it was not noticed in proof-reading. Mark your Quarterlies accordingly.

"Some men who would raise the neighborhood if the dog were missing at night are not at all concerned as to where their children may be. Curious situation is it not?"

The Burlington Hawkeye for August 29 makes mention of baptism and confirmation services at the Latter Day Saint church, and briefly quotes parts of the morning sermon by the pastor, Bro. Elbert A. Smith, on the subject of reform, making prominent the thought that "reform should begin at home."

The live stock show at the Lewis and Clark Exposition from September 19 to 29, is eagerly anticipated not only by the lovers of fine stock in the Northwest, but by many from far-distant points who have entered blooded horses and other animals in the competitions.

Governor Folk of Missouri, the famous boodle fighter, will make his first trip to the great Northwest next week, when he will visit the Lewis and Clark Exposition as a guest of honor. September 14 will be Missouri day. Governor Folk will deliver an address and there will be a banquet in his honor. It is believed that this will be one of the biggest days of the fair.

Wide-spread interest has been taken in the series now running in Autumn Leaves, entitled, "Inspired Dreams and Visions of Modern Times" and the editor of Autumn Leaves has received many contributions and communications along that line. The series will be a long and interesting one and should be read carefully.

Original Articles

"WHAT DOES IT MEAN?"

Since reading the article under the above caption some time ago, I have been patiently waiting for some of our leading brethren to give us the reasons why there are no more baptisms now than there were a decade ago. Perhaps it is a hard question to answer, and one which is thoroughly understood by the infinite mind alone. As pointed out by our brother who wrote the article, we have now many more missionaries than formerly, and these are assisted by our press and in other ways as never before; yet there is not a corresponding gain for the extra energy brought into play. Something must be wrong. Perhaps economic conditions have something to do with it. Life has become, for the masses, a very strenuous affair, and they seem to have little time to spare from the pursuit of the callings which win for them their "daily bread," for anything approaching an effort to obtain "the bread of life." They feel that the "bread" by which the mortal man is nourished is an absolute necessity, but their spiritual requirements come in for little consideration. They are sadly in need of education leading up to the fact that they were not created to live for and by bread alone or to see pretty flowers, faces, and scenery, to love and hate, to inhale aromatic perfumes, in short, to have a good time pleasing their senses; but to live in perennial consciousness of the fact that in this life they are on probation, and just as they acquit themselves will their rewards or punishment be in the life to come. It is "up to us" to do our share in this educative work as "coworkers together with God."

Here another thought intrudes itself. Though we have now increased facilities for the spread of the gospel we are only coworkers with God. Some may preach, some baptize, but Almighty God alone giveth the satisfactory increase. Here, then, we might pause and reconstruct our question so that it may read: "Why does not God give us a proportionately greater increase now than he did ten or twelve years ago?"

If we are all satisfied that we are doing our utmost for the spread of our Master's cause, we may well leave the matter with him. If, however, we have not that consciousness, we had better inquire of our consciences and of our Father, how we might serve him better. While our work is divine, it has its human side. Most movements with which mortals have to do suffer more or less from decadence. "A new broom sweeps clean," is a maxim demonstrated in many of our converts. "Oh that I could feel as I did when I first entered the church!" we often hear sighed out. Such complaints seem to be so general, and the work is dying out in so many old-established places that one is forced to the conclusion that decadence has been and is at work.

Doubtless it was largely to counteract this that the Lord some time ago gave instruction for the setting apart of evangelical ministers, part of whose duty is to be "revival" ministers to the church. The writer is convinced that if the body of the church can be so brought into line that its labor may be wholly acceptable to God, he will attend to the "increase."

WALTER J. HAWORTH.

112 Green Street, RICHMOND, Victoria, Aus., July 24, 1905.

SPIRIT BEFORE BAPTISM

I wish to express my surprise at the cramped and congested views of some who hold that we as God's creatures can enjoy none of his Spirit until after baptism and confirmation. I fully believe all that I remember of reading to the end that baptism and laying on of hands are some of the God-ordained means leading up to the reception of the Holy Ghost; yet all of my observations, experiences, and studies of the past just as fully attest that the Spirit is always received and enjoyed before baptism. Nor is there herein any contradiction of terms, neither is there more than one Spirit of truth, which is the gift of God.

By what means is Jesus that light "which lighteth every man that cometh into the world"? Is it not by his Spirit? Our Savior said, "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him." Is not his Spirit that drawing influence?

He says again, "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights." Do we receive nothing good until after we are baptized? The truth of the matter seems to be this: God, by the gift of his Spirit, mightily draws all men toward the light of life, the truth: and this drawing influence seems to be as varied as are the differing temperaments upon whom it operates. If they love the truth, they will heed the drawing influence; but if they receive not the love of the truth that they may be saved, but have pleasure in unrighteousness, God says, "My Spirit, shall not always strive with man"; and he gives them over to "strong delusions," that they may believe a lie and be damned.

On the other hand, if they heed the voice of his Spirit it will draw them from bewildering darkness into the light of God through obedience to the gospel. He then gives them another degree of his Spirit; and he designates this degree by the terms, "Comforter," "Spirit of truth," or "Holy Ghost," which Paul compared to a smoked glass through which we see obscurely. And if we duly appreciate this second degree of light, we will by frequent use gradually rub off the smoke, and the light will grow brighter and brighter as our wondering eyes become accustomed to its intensity; so that "when that which is perfect is come" we will see him "face to face."

Then shall we know even as also we are known; or in the words of another, "Ye who are quickened by a portion of the celestial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness."

The writer believes that every tender emotion of the heart is directly or indirectly the result of the influence of God's Spirit, as much so before as after baptism. But opinions are cheap commodities, so we will let the word of God settle the matter:

And I looked and beheld a man among the Gentiles, who was separated from the seed of my brethren by the many waters; and I beheld the Spirit of God, that it came down and wrought upon the man; and he went forth upon the many waters, even unto the seed of my brethren, who were in the promised land.
—1 Nephi 3:35.

This "man" could refer to no one but Columbus, who lived during the Dark Ages when no one on earth had authority to baptize.

The next verse says:

And it came to pass that I beheld the Spirit of God, that it wrought upon other Gentiles; and they went forth out of captivity upon the many waters.

Verse 37:

And I beheld the Spirit of the Lord, that it was upon the Gentiles; and they did prosper, and obtain the land for their inheritance.

Verse 38:

And it came to pass that I, Nephi, beheld that the Gentiles who had gone forth out of captivity, did humble themselves before the Lord; and the power of the Lord was with them; and I beheld that their mother Gentiles were gathered together upon the waters, and upon the land also, to battle against them; and I beheld that the power of God was with them; and also that the wrath of God was upon all those that were gathered together against them to battle. And I, Nephi, beheld that the Gentiles that had gone out of captivity, were delivered by the power of God, out of the hands of all other nations.

Comment can not make the foregoing any plainer. Again, the Lord says, in Doctrine and Covenants 98:10, of the Constitution of the United States:

And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood.

Again, James 1:5:

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.

"All men" can not well be confined to those holding membership in the Latter Day Saint Church. By the mouth of these three witnesses let every word be established.

A smith, to draw the frost from a piece of iron, and make it agreeable to handle, kindles a moderate fire on his forge. If he wants to make a short bend in his iron he must raise the temperature of his fire many degrees. If he wishes to weld his iron, he must still intensify the heat. And if he has certain minerals to smelt he must arrange for still more extreme degrees of heat. Just so does God give different degrees of his Spirit to different classes of people in all the vicissitudes of life from the cradle to the grave to bring about his "marvelous work."

The dews of heaven, and the refreshing gentle showers are distilled gratis. If we would store some for future use we must build a reservoir or a cistern. If we want a greater supply of cold water we may have it by sinking a well the proper depth. But if we resolve to irrigate a plat of land we must penetrate Mother Earth until we tap "the deep that coucheth beneath," and lo, we have a gushing fountain. Just so it is with the "living water" or Spirit that God gives to his creatures. (See John 7:38.) "Every man that cometh into the world" has access to its inking degrees, and if we desire a multiplication of the finer feelings wrought by its influences, we may get the same by digging, or doing the will of God. Yes, if we will pay the price he will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely.

HERALD ARTICLES AND LETTERS.

What appears to be an inconsistent criticism is found upon page 820 of the SAINTS' HERALD in its issue for August 23, 1905, where a brother contributor mildly criticises the Editor of the HERALD for publishing the article upon "Mormonism" from the pen of the late Secretary of State, John Hay, stating that he could not see what good there was in publishing it. Notwithstanding the implied impropriety of publishing the article of Mr. Hay, the writer immediately expresses himself in a manner that is much more regrettable, and therein lies the inconsistency of his criticism.

Referring to a young lady in the state of Missouri of eleven years of age who weighs one hundred and twenty pounds he said, "That speaks well for Missouri, one of the best States in the Union. No mistake made in choosing that land as the central place for the gathering, notwithstanding it was so declared [to be a "mistake"? E. A. G.] seventy-five years ago by a young man twenty-five years of age, unlearned, when that land was unknown so far as her resources and coming value were concerned. This is another evidence of the divine guidance of the lad that received the angel's message, Joseph the Seer."

Here we have a young lady in Missouri weighing one hundred and twenty pounds at the age of eleven years, showing the productiveness of Missouri soil, and then follows the statement: "This is another evidence of the divine guidance" of Joseph Smith! I do not wish to detract from the general excellence of the article, but really I "can not see what good" can come from the publication of that particular clause. The presence of the young lady in the state of Missouri, and her excellent health is not an evidence of the divine guidance of the Seer in making choice of Missouri as a safe place for the gathering, for by that rule we could prove as much for any other State, and reversing the rule we could, by finding a person undersized and in ill health in Missouri, prove Joseph Smith was not divinely guided.

It does not become us to assert that to be evidence which is not evidence.

Men in the field have to meet these assertions upon the platform of debate, they being flaunted in their faces by a cunning foe in the presence of the people, and our explanation that "the writer was merely burlesquing" does not correct the matter. There are men who scan eagerly the columns of the HERALD for just such statements to use them against us. Can we not exercise greater care in writing contributions for the HERALD?

Hastily yours,

E. A. GOODWIN.

WHERE WAS CHRIST THE FIRST FOUR DAYS AFTER HIS BAPTISM?

Matthew, Mark, and Luke tell us Jesus went into the wilderness immediately after his baptism and was there forty days, fasting. John the evangelist gives account of much more of Jesus' wonderful works than they, but does not mention the fasting or going into the wilderness. All four agree as to the place, Galilee, where he began his work; and no testimony refutes the idea of the time being after his fast and his returning there. The Jews sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem to Bethabara beyond Jordan where John was baptizing (same place he had baptized Jesus) to ask him, "Who art thou?" and other questions.

The next day John seeth Jesus coming unto him, and saith, Behold the lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world! This is he of whom I said, After me cometh a man which is preferred before me; for he was before me. And I knew him not: but that he should be made manifest to Israel, therefore am I come baptizing with water.

Then he tells them of the baptizing of Jesus and how it was made known to him that he was the Son of God. And again the next day John was standing with two of his disciples, and saw Jesus walking, and said, "Behold the lamb of God!" The two disciples followed Jesus, and by invitation abode with him that day, and then began the bringing of friends to him, and his choosing of disciples. "The day following Jesus would go forth into Galilee, and findeth Philip, and saith unto him, follow me."

The Inspired Translation says on the third day of the week, there was a marriage in Cana of Galilee. This seems more reasonable. All the other days mentioned were the days following certain happenings; so we may reasonably conclude Christ fasted the first four days after his baptism, including thirty-six days after.

PLATES OR RECORDS.

[Read before the First Quorum of Seventy and by vote ordered to be sent to the HERALD for publication.]

Had we all the plates or records spoken of by the Book of Mormon, we would see that the ancient inhabitants of this continent were well prepared to obtain an understanding of the will of God and a history of their people.

1. The oldest or first record referred to, was brought by the Jaredites from the Tower of Babel. This record is referred to by the "daughter of Jared" in the following words: "Hath he not read the record which our fathers brought across the great deep? Behold, is there not an account concerning them of old, that they by their secret plans did obtain kingdoms and great glory?"—Page 514, paragraph 11.

This record contained the "oaths" that were administered by them of old, "which had been handed down even from Cain," (514:12), and also gave an account of the kingdoms; how they were obtained and the glory of them. (See 514:11.)

2. While it is reasonable to presume that the Jaredites kept a history, yet we have no direct statement to that effect.

3. Ether, the last Jaredite prophet, wrote a short account of his people, from the time "they were destroyed back to the building of the great tower." (200:4.)

This history, with an account of the "creation of the world, and also of Adam and an account from that time to the great tower," (500:1; 200:4,) were written on twenty-four plates of "pure gold," (158:9) hid by Ether (see 533:9), and found by men sent by King Limhi to find the land of Zarahemla. (See 158:8, 9.)

4. These plates were given to King Mosiah and translated by him. (See 200:3.) These plates contained the secret oaths spoken of in the "record brought across the great deep" (514:11; see 515:13), but this part of the translation was "retained from the people." (305:10; 378:5; 395:30.)

These twenty-four plates with their translation were buried by Mormon in the Hill Cumorah (see 492:2), 384 A. D. (See 492:1.)

5. After the death of Mormon (see 494:1; 533:1), and some time after the battle of Cumorah (see 494:5), Moroni wrote an abridgement (see 533:9) of the account of the Jaredites, as translated from the twenty-four plates, from memory (see 501:1), for he says, "I do not write those things which transpired from the days of Adam until that time; but they are had upon the plates; and whoso findeth them, the same will have power that he may get the full account."—501:1. And again, "I, Moroni, have written the words which were commanded me, according to my memory."—509:2. (See also 492:2.)

6. Jared's brother was shown a wonderful vision and informed on many subjects. An account of this vision was written on plates and "sealed up." (507:10, 11.)

7. These plates of Jared's brother were obtained by King Benjamin (see 507:11), but how or when we are not informed.

From the statement that King Benjamin kept them, "that they should not come unto the world till after Christ," I conclude that he translated them, and it was the translation that he guarded so carefully from the world, instead of the plates, as all plates in his possession were to be preserved with equal care.

8. The vision that was recorded on these plates by Jared's brother was written by Moroni and constituted the sealed part of the plates found by Joseph Smith, and they were written by Moroni by the command of God from memory. (See 507:11; 509:2.)

9. The "brass plates" brought by Lehi from Jerusalem (6:27; 8:36), were written in the Egyptain language (see 141:1), and contained all we have in the Bible to Jeremiah's time and considerably more. Just how much more we are not informed, yet we have quotations from the writing of five prophets, that we do not have in the Bible. (See 22:39; 44:2; 44:47, 48; 120:7; 59:2, 3; 61:1.)

10. These brass plates which contained the Holy Scriptures (see 303:5), were copied and freely circulated among the people. They were had by the people of Ammonihah and burned by them. (See 248:6.) Ammon had a copy of the scriptures while on a mission to the Lamanites (see 251:1; 256:14), and so did Aaron. (See 265:8; also 387:5.)

11. Lehi's plates contained "many things which he saw in visions and in dreams; and he also hath written many things which he prophesied and spake unto his children." (3:7; 11:1.)

12. Nephi's first or large plates contained the history of his people. (See 43:46; 62:5; 65:5, 6.) It appears that by the command of God, Nephi made a bundle of plates, sufficiently large to enable the kings and rulers of the Nephites to write the entire official history of their people, from the time they left Jerusalem till they were buried in the Hill Cumorah, just before the destruction of the Nephite army. (See 135:6; 139:4; 485:5; 431:11.)

13. Nephi's second or small plates were to contain special information to the ministry, or history of the ministry. (See 16:28; 17:1.) These plates were made thirty years after they left Jerusalem. They were sufficiently large to contain the writings on this subject till the reign of King Benjamin, when they were completed and delivered to him for safe-keeping. (See 138:12-15.)

14. They were not abridged by Mormon (see 139:2, 3); and they, with abridgment made by Moroni, are all the records that were delivered to Moroni. (See 492:2.) All the rest of the plates or records were buried in Cumorah by Mormon before the battle. (See 492:2.) These plates came to Joseph Smith just as they were given to King Benjamin, written in the original language of the Nephites, instead of the reformed Egyptian used by Mormon and Moroni. This may account for the peculiar story of Professor Anthon about the characters submitted to him.

15. The account of Coriantumr was taken from a large stone, as it was interpreted by Mosiah by the power of God. (See 137:9, 10.)

16. The plates of Zeniff (see 158:9) gave an account of a colony, led from Zarahemla to the land of Nephi, till they returned many years afterwards. (See 160:1; 187:3; 192:9.)

17. Plates or record of Alma gave an account of his colony and his brethren from the time they left Zarahemla till they returned. (See 192:9.)

18. Records among the Lamanites (see 190:4); yet they were mostly kept by the Nephites (see 384:4).

19. All the sacred records possessed by Helaman were copied and sent forth except those parts commanded to be kept from the people, 52 A. D. (See 387:5.)

20. Many large records were written giving an account of the people about 45 A. D. (See 384:45.) These records were kept by the Nephites and Lamanites. (See 384:4; 431:11.)

21. Mormon refers to many voluminous records in his day giving minute accounts of the events of the past, but takes his account from the record of Nephi. (See 431:11; 385:4.)

22. Plates made by Mormon upon which he wrote his abridgment (see 431:11), which he gave to his son Moroni (see 492:2), with the "plates for the ministry" or "small plates of Nephi," (130:2-4; 492:2), which gave the record when completed by Moroni, the name "Book of Mormon." This abridgment, with the "small plates of Nephi," and the writing of Moroni, were hid or buried by Moroni some thirty-six years after Mormon hid the records in the Hill Cumorah. (See 492:1, 2; 494:1; 543:1.)

Where was Cumorah?

PLATES OR RECORDS TO COME FORTH.

1. The Book of Mormon. (See 100:17-19; 105:6; 508:12; 543:1.)

2. "All things" have been shown to some "and they have written them; and they are sealed up to come forth in their purity," "in the own due time of the Lord." (29:52.)

How many are referred to here or how many books they wrote, we can not tell, but the number who saw and the number of books written by them, are in the plural number.

3. The sealed part of the plates found by Joseph Smith contains "a revelation from God from the beginning of the world to the ending thereof," (100:17; 507:11), and is yet to come forth.

4. The records or books of the lost tribes will be obtained in due time. (See 106:8, 9.)

5. The plates of Nephi, which contained "the more part of the things which Jesus taught the people" will be obtained when we are prepared to receive them. (470:1.)

6. The "twenty-four plates" which contain the book of Ether will yet be obtained and the full account, as written by that prophet, had. (500:1.)

7. That which will enable us to understand the revelations of Saint John or the book of Revelation. It may or may not be a book. We will yet have quite a library.

Yours in haste,

W. E. PEAK.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 10, 1905.

ARE WE KEEPING THE COMMANDMENTS?

There have been a few thoughts along that line impressed upon my mind of late and if I can get them in shape will present them, hoping that they may be a help to some, that we may better understand our duty and thereby be better prepared to receive the crown in store for the faithful.

We read in Matthew 5:48 where the Savior was delivering that memorable sermon on the mount, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." It may be thought by some that it was never intended that we should become perfect in this life and that it is impossible; but let us stop for a moment and think. If that should be the case, then the Savior asked them to do something that he did not expect them to comply with, and could not if they wanted to; and when we find him making the statement that man will be held in account for every idle word, (see Matthew 12:36,) we could hardly charge him with telling idle tales. The Psalmist David, Psalm 19:7, says, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." Now if the law is perfect and we yield obedience to the perfect law, we should expect to become perfect. We as a people believe and preach that that perfect law is on earth to-day; and if we fail to reach perfection it will be because we fail to keep that law.

Some may say, "The Savior said, 'There is none good, no not one.'" I do not contend that there are any perfect at the present time. But I believe that we ought to be nearer than we are, for if we believe the Bible, and especially the Inspired Translation, we are forced to the conclusion that Enoch and his city became perfect and were taken to heaven; and what was possible for one man and his city would be possible for others. If I understand the gospel, it teaches that sooner or later we must come to that condition if we ever expect to enjoy the blessings that it offers.

The apostle Paul in speaking about this, Hebrews

6, says: "Let us go on to perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works"; and that if they fall away, after knowing the good works of God, it is impossible to renew them again to repentance. As I have heard many say, it is impossible to stand still in this great work, as we either go forward or backward; hence the necessity of going on to perfection. James 1:25 also states, "But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed." So it seems necessary that we should strive to that end.

The question might then arise in our minds, Are we nearing that condition, and what must we do to become perfect? Jesus says, "If ye love me, keep my commandments."—John 14:15. And he also says, John 13:20: "He that receiveth whomsoever I send receiveth me; and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me." And by other statements of like character we would understand that it is just as necessary to pay heed to the statements of any of the sacred writers as if they were the words of the Master.

Are we keeping the commandments? If not, do we love the Lord? Peter writes in his second letter, 1:5-7: "And besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith, virtue."

Now we claim to have the faith spoken of here by the apostle Peter, but it seemed necessary for those in that day to have or do something else besides having that faith, for he says to add virtue. I would understand that to mean all that is pure and good. Can we obtain that by mingling with the world and partaking of the pleasures of the same, when it is so full of wickedness and vice; and oftentimes neglecting church duties and staying away from services to partake of those things?

Add to your virtue, knowledge. This is in harmony with Doctrine and Covenants 85:36, and the apostle Paul, 2 Timothy 2:15, where we are commanded to study good books that we might not be ashamed, but able rightly to divide the word of truth and to shun profane and vain things. Are we in a condition to-day to meet the requirements along that line? If not, are we putting forth every effort that we can,—or are we devoting some of our time to the vain and foolish things of the world, and the literature of the day, in which there is so little benefit?

"And to knowledge, temperance." Seems to me I hear some one say, "O yes, I am doing that—never drank any strong drink in my life." But is that the only way you can do wrong along that line? Did you ever go to the extreme in anything? Let us stop right here and look back over our past life, and see if some time we have not gone to excess in some line, and perhaps may be doing it yet,—if it be no more than talking about our neighbors.

"And to temperance, patience." Patience! This is a very hard lesson to learn in these trying times, to meet all things without a murmur or complaint when things go wrong in the home as well as in the world, and sometimes in the church when things do not move as smoothly as they might, and the way we would like to have them,—to meekly wait and pray until all things are made right by Him who rules all things. Ofttimes, when we want a quiet moment, the little ones do something to disturb our peace, and we find that we have not learned that lesson that we need so much.

"And to patience, godliness." Are we nearer like God and Christ than we were a year ago? If not, how long will it take at that rate to become like them, that we may dwell with them in peace and happiness?

"And to godliness, brotherly kindness." I fear we are sometimes a little short on that, which implies that we should love our neighbor as ourselves; that is, to help him bear the burdens of life. And if in his weakness (as we are all weak) he happens to do something that is not just right, which may injure us in some way, can we reach out the hand of love and do all that lies in our power, and all that the law of love requires, to restore the one and make the burden of life lighter, remembering it is more blessed to give than to receive? But if we have not tried it, we do not know.

And last of all, "charity"; that which Paul in his first letter to the Corinthians, thirteenth chapter, tells us suffereth long and is kind, is not puffed up, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but in the truth; and without it he would be as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. And in Galatians 6: 7, 8, the apostle tells us, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."

In Galatians 5: 19-23 he tells us what the works of the flesh and of the Spirit are, and we can examine our lives and see which is made manifest the most. If the fruit of the Spirit does not prevail, we should seek to find the cause and remove the same; so that at the last great day there will be no law against us. Remember, also, the two great commandments, Luke 10: 27: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, soul, mind, and strength; and thy neighbor as thyself.

Now we can not believe that to mean only those who are near and dear to us; for the Master said in Matthew 5: 46, 47: If you salute your brethren only and love them that love you, what reward have you? for the publicans do the same. But in Luke's account we would understand that it was those who stood in need. The teachings of the Savior were, Do not your alms before men that you might be seen of them; and when you make a feast invite not the rich that you might be recompensed again, but invite the poor that you might get the reward in heaven.

It may seem that it would be hard to do these things, and so it is. But the Master again said, Matthew 16: 24: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." (Also read the rest of the chapter.) We want a home in the celestial glory, and ought to desire to see all mankind receive the same if they would; and when the blessed Master has done so much and now bids us follow, are we not willing to do something to help him bring about the salvation of the human race, and thereby gain our crown in glory? Christ said, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." And we want to enter in.

We find in the second chapter of James some very good instruction, and oftentimes it is not followed. He says faith without works is dead; and oft I have heard prayers offered up for the Lord to bless the laborers in the vineyard and to supply their wants. Do we do that when the opportunity is offered?

James says if we say to the hungry and naked, Be ye fed and clothed, and we do not give that that is necessary, it is of no profit. I know of a case when a local elder was asked if he could come to a certain branch and preach on Sunday. It was about eight miles by rail, the fare being twenty-five cents. He had just that much so he went; and when the time came to go home no one looked after his needs, and the result was he had to walk, being of a nature that he would rather do that than to ask for twenty-five cents so he could ride. Have known others who have driven their teams and put them in livery stables and paid the expenses themselves. I suppose it was because they were local men and the Saints did not think they needed anything; or it might have been thoughtlessness on their part, and also in the president in not calling their attention to it. I believe if a man is called of God to the ministry, and is in good standing, and makes an effort to present the truth, especially when he is called or asked to go any place, the expense should be met by those where he does the labor, the same as if he were a missionary.

I have seen in some branches, some missionaries would be received with open arms, taken to the homes of the Saints, and given money and clothes, sometimes when it was hardly needed; and the wants of others never be looked after; and if it had not been for a few of the poor Saints who were hardly considered worthy of membership, they would have gone hungry. What was the reason? None could be seen unless it was because the hair of one man might stay combed a little better than the other, or he could put in a big word once in a while, or tell a few stories when preaching, and when through could be a little more sociable,—and he had reason to be as nearly every one wanted to speak to him. Yet the other was called by the same God, appointed by the same conference, and was trying just as hard to live his religion. Why is the difference shown, when James says, "Have not the faith of God with respect to persons." And Christ said, "Inasmuch as you did it not unto one of the least of my disciples ye did it not unto me." In connection with this, read Doctrine and Covenants 83:3. And when the elder is trying to go in harmony with paragraph 15, same section, and Matthew 10:9, 10, and 7:25, and receives such treatment as I have stated, had we ought to blame him if, when he is discouraged and downhearted and in the moment of weakness, he should make the remark that he doubted if some were the disciples of Christ?

I do not wonder that some of the local laborers and missionaries get discouraged and do but little. James says, 1:27, that pure and undefiled religion before God is to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and keep himself unspotted from the world; and yet I heard of a case where there was an old sister and widow living in quite a large branch, who had spent her life in the work, and cared for the elders in her young days, but could not attend church; and when an elder called was told that he was the first one who had been there for over six years; and other cases of like character. And then we pray, "Lord, Lord." Are our prayers and works in harmony, and are we showing our faith by our works? If not, our faith may be dead and vain, and we may have deceived ourselves; and we might find that the statement, Matthew 7:21: "Not every one that saith, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven," is, alas, too true. Do we want to enter? If we do let us contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the Saints. (See Jude 3.)

I would like to call your attention to a few statements made to us in these the latter days. You may be better acquainted with them than I am, but in 2 Peter 1:10-15 he tells them that while they know these things he feels it necessary to stir up their minds by way of remembrance that they might make their calling and election sure, knowing that the Lord will soon come and only those that have kept the commandments will be able to abide the day of his coming. We find the statement in Doctrine and Covenants 38:6: "Be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine." Can we expect to enter the celestial kingdom, and be not Christ's? And how must we become his? Simply by being baptized, and perhaps going to church? or by keeping all the commandments, and by living by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God? Time and space will not permit me to present all that could be found and quoted, so will give you a few citations, and you can look them up and read them to refresh your minds:

Doctrine and Covenants 41:2; 42:5, 8, 12, 21; 44:3; 52:9, middle portion; 59:2, 5; 85:38. There are many more, but these will be sufficient for us to learn if we are keeping all the commandments, by comparing them with our lives. In Doctrine and Covenants 108 we read of a work that God is going to do, and had already started, and many passages of scripture tell us what condition the world will be in in the last days. We find that they are true, and that we are living in those days; and, as the people of God, are we occupying the position that we should? We have been admonished several times in the past few years by the Lord to "come up higher, O ye my people"; and while we have made some advancement, we have not gone as far as we might. Has it been because we have not kept the commandments? As we look back over past history we find that when the people of God kept all the commandments they were blessed, and when they did not they suffered loss; and it has been true all the way down, and is at the present time. In Doctrine and Covenants 83:8 we learned that condemnation rested upon the church, and would until we, as a people, did certain things. Not only to believe but to do them. Hence the necessity of becoming better acquainted with the requirements, and living closer to them.

There are great and precious promises held out to us and the question is, Shall we be worthy of the same?

There is another thing that I want to call attention to, and that is pride. When the church was in its infancy, and looked down upon by the world, and we were more equal, then the Lord poured out his Spirit in abundance; and sometimes I think since we have gained more favor with the world, and have got more of this world's goods, we have less of the Spirit of the Master. That was the cause of the downfall of the church more than once according to Book of Mormon history. When they began to prosper and get this world's goods they lost favor with God; and I have heard the president of the church make the statement that if he had fears for the church it was along that line.

"FAKING" AS A FINE ART.

Some years ago I suggested the propriety of holding an exhibition of artistic and archæological forgeries. A kind collector, with whom I was residing, showed me his own little store of "fakes" which he had innocently purchased. He was anxious to contribute to the exhibition, but other owners of pseudo treasures were not "in a coming on humor." This indicated a want of humor in general—of the power of seeing a joke at one's own expense—and a want of public spirit.

Everything that interests collectors and archæolo-gists may be "faked," and has been "faked" by man, from old postage-stamps and autographs of Jeanne d'Arc and of Judas Iscariot, to lumping flint tools and Greek jewels, and gold coins and crosses of mediæval Serbia, and leaden articles supposed to have been worn by pious pilgrims, and Greek gems, though few are clever enough to execute them in our days. The coffin plate of Robert Bruce was forged, and deposited in Dunfermline abbey; it is now in the National Museum of Scotland with the epitaph of the legendary Graham (Robert), who overthrew the Roman wall! He had a remarkably modern Christian name and modern surname, to be sure. The forger was not clever, nor was he who painted a stone carving and a rusty chisel in a refuse heap, which Doctor Munroe was excavating once in Fife.

Such forgers love a hoax as dearly as did the Ettrick Shepherd. I know their temptations! I was working at the manuscripts of Abbotsford while Professor Child was having Scott's manuscript collections of ballads copied. The temptation to "fake" a ballad and have it copied out in brown ink and old paper and inserted in the general mass was almost overpowering. What was the motive? Why, to discover whether I could "fake" a ballad good enough to deceive Professor Child. Of course, I should have warned him before he could have committed himself publicly, but few hoaxers are so relatively honest. Again, I was once "in" a pleasing scheme for "faking" an Ogham inscription (which, to the vulgar eye, resembles a feeble attempt to draw a fragmentary small tooth comb), "and the same with intent to deceive" an eminent Celtic scholar. My accomplice could have done it, Ogham, Gaelic, and all, but the chopping of the thing out in stone presented difficulties, and the project remained a mere pleasing dream. The contents of the inscription, being translated, were to have undeceived our friend the Celtic authority.

There would have been no great moral harm in these hoaxes, promptly confessed, but the curse of the old antiquary Ritson be on him who forges and does not tell! Once a forgery did good. "Marmion" is based on a forged record in old Latin, which took in Sir Walter Scott and proved serviceable to his poem. But the evil which forgers of antiquities do lives after them for ever in the way of making specialists distrust every discovery professing to be old, and yet of an entirely unfamiliar nature. When poor M. Boucher de Perthes found the relics of a man of the Reindeer Age in France, and earlier, he was flown upon by the learned, who suspected fraud. Meanwhile his workman, we learn from Doctor Monro's book, did "salt" the diggings with stone implements of their own manufacture. So things became terribly ramified, and M. de Perthes was nearly heartbroken. Even if the things disputed are found in three or four remote sites the antiquary who has said that one set is forged has been known to say that other forgers in distant lands have coincided with his inventions. Doctor Monro gives examples, Italian, Polish, and Russian, and the question remains undecided. I well remember Doctor Schlie-mann's first discoveries, and how the good doctor was said to have had the treasure of King Priam (which the Greeks did not carry away) "faked" in Birmingham. The wonderful treasures of Mycenæ were attributed, I think, to Gothic invaders, not to Mycenæan kings, and every stone was good enough to throw at a disinterested enthusiast who had the ill luck to find such things as nobody had previously seen.

"A distinguished chemist" at Poitiers, M. Meillet, was a most mischievous forger. There was a genuine cave, containing genuine drawings on bone by palæolithic men, in Poitou, and there did Meillet dump down a drawing on bone of a thing like a four legged bird with a trunk like a bill, and some of the letterlike characters which palæolithic men used to draw, nobody knows why. He seems to have had the premature idea of inventing the alphabet. Meillet went too far, and dumped down an inscription in characters of a Hebrew alphabet, not older than the ninth century of the Christian Era. Will it be believed that "Meillet got rid of his collection advantageously," says Doctor Monro, "and disappeared"? He was not even a disinterested jester.

A. M. Laganne betted with experts no less eminent than M. Lartet and Mr. Christy that he would hoax them, and he won his bet. Of his two drawings of elephants on bone—one looks like the hind quarters of a harnessed horse; in the other the elephant has a wink in his eye and an action of the trunk which are extremely candid. M. Laganne won his bet in champagne and kept the "fake." It seems incredible, but, in 1874, the "fake" having come into other hands, the great scientific journal Materiaux published M. Laganne's elephant as a genuine elephant!

"To practiced people the antiquities are as readable as print," writes C. H. Read in Doctor Monro's book, "and a good deal more accurate." They may be easily "more accurate" than some print, but all antiquities are not "as readable as print" to all practiced people. They take true for false and false for true, many of them, yea, even Lartet and Christy and M. de Mortillet, and thus the discoverer of unfamiliar things runs, and often incurs, the risk of being regarded either as a dupe or a knave. He may be one or the other, or he may be merely an honest digger who has hit on something unfamiliar. It is certain that eminent antiquaries are and have been gullible in both ways in accepting the "fake" and in denouncing the genuine article as a forgery. This ought to make us careful; the fence of the proverb ought often to be the safe and really not uncomfortable perch of the judicious archæologist. There he sits as happy as a cat on a wall while the dogs on both sides jump up vainly and bark out their opposite verdicts.

In the controversy which occupies much of Doctor Monro's book concerning many odd things, most of them alleged to have been found in two "unique" submarine wooden structures in the Clyde estuary, I prefer to sit on the fence. On the one hand, to explain the things as really ancient we, I think, have to adopt one or other of two theories of "my own invention." Both are of a poetical and romantic character, and I can only say that neither seems to me unthinkable or impossible or out of harmony with the nature and ways of early man. But my theories, as Huckleberry Finn says, "are tough." On the other hand we have to accept the hypothesis of a deliberate hoax, or, rather, a set of hoaxes, whereby the humbug produces various objects which, I maintain, have their corroborative analogues in places of which only studious archæologists have knowledge. So where is the studious archæologist who, nobody can guess why, has chosen to scatter about objects on Scottish soil whereof Scotland is said never hitherto to have yielded a sample? Who can that man be? "It was" not "I who did the thing you wot of." Beyond that all is mystery.—Andrew Lang, in Chicago Sunday Tribune, August 27, 1905.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

The Mother's Prayer.

Starting forth on life's rough way,

Father, guide them;

O, we know not what of harm

May betide them!

'Neath the shadow of thy wing,

Father, hide them;

Walking, sleeping, Lord, we pray,

Go beside them.

When in prayer they cry to thee,

Do thou hear them;

From the stains of sin and shame

Do thou clear them;

'Mid the quicksands and the rocks

Do thou steer them;

In temptation, trial, grief,

Be thou near them.

Unto thee we give them up:

Lord, receive them.

In the world we know must be Much to grieve them—

Many striving oft and strong

To deceive them;

Trustful, in thy hands of love

We must leave them.

—William Cullen Bryant.

A Query Answered.

"Dear Sister Frances: Please allow a "mere man" to ask a question of the Home Column: What shall I do with my boys on Sunday? They can not sit still, they like to have stories read to them; but there is a limit to the endurance of one's throat.

"Shall I compel them to be still by pleading God's commands, and risk their feeling like the little girl who wished "God was as kind a man as papa is?"

"A little stream runs by our door, and this morning after our home Sunday-school, they started off to "look" at the "swimmin' hole," but stopped when I asked them to. At the present moment they are catching minnows and turning them loose again, for fun, without injury to either themselves or the minnows. I can not see harm in innocent, quiet play, yet Doctrine and Covenants prohibits "all" except the preparing of food on Sundays. Is my quandary an old one, and the question one that has often been answered? Please answer; all lessons are old.

"Your brother,

"H. B. Root."

The above letter strongly appeals to us and we gladly give it place, hoping that it may appeal to many others as well, and that the direct question of Bro. Root: "What shall I do with my boys on Sunday?" may elicit from more than one a satisfactory answer,—such an answer as will prove of benefit not only to Bro. Root, but to many other fathers (and mothers also) who feel that they, too, would like to have help in solving this problem of training their children to a proper observance of the Sabbath day. Experience is a wise teacher, and we hope to hear from those who have themselves had this problem to deal with, and have met with at least a reasonable amount of success in mastering it.

If Bro. Root will turn to section 119, paragraph 7, of Doctrine and Covenants, Lamoni edition, 1896, he will read: "The Saints are to observe the first day of the week commonly called the Lord's day, as a day of rest: as a day of worship, as given in the covenants and commandments. And on this day they should refrain from unnecessary work; nevertheless, nothing should be permitted to go to waste on that day, nor should necessary work be neglected. Be not harsh in judgment but merciful in this, as in all other things. Be not hypocrites nor of those who make a man an offender for a word."

The words of Jesus in Mark 2:27, 28 read, "And he said unto them, The sabbath was made for man, not man for the sabbath. Therefore the Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath."

The Sabbath day was given to man as a day of rest and worship—given because needed for the highest physical, mental, and spiritual development of man. As we honor God and arrive at perfection only through obedience to every law of our being this law of rest and worship upon the Lord's day can not be omitted and must not be overlooked. But who shall prescribe to the individual just how this rest is best obtained? in what way this worship can be most acceptably rendered?

Where the fatted calf is killed and the house-wife is made a slave at serving, we are honestly convinced that Sunday visiting becomes a sin; but there are times and associations which can transform such a visit into almost a sacrament of worship and praise—times when rest and spiritual refreshment are the result, and not weariness of body and barrenness of soul. Let none think God is deceived. Let none make the Lord's day a day of idle visiting and gossip. In short, "Be not hypocrites," neither condemn as such those who have found spiritual food and strength in a visit upon this day, when they have not suffered the visit to interfere with their attendance upon worship at the house of God.

Does this seem like wandering from the main thought—the children? We answer, the child will partake of his environment. If the parent neglects his duty, the child sooner or later is bound to show in his own life the influence of such neglect. To "train up a child in the way he should go," absolutely demands of the parents to go before them in that way.

In your own case, for instance, Bro. Root, is not the law of the Sabbath just as obligatory upon you as upon your boys? If so does God require that you give yourself to the restraining of your children, to compelling them to be still, by pleading God's commands (though we seriously doubt if you can show them, or yourself find any such command) until you are both mentally and physically weary? Is this rest? Is it making of the Lord's day a day of rest—a day of worship?

Just here we find a paragraph in an article by the late H. K. Trumbull, which so perfectly illustrates our meaning that we quote it entire.

"If indeed it were simply a question of compelling a child to conform to certain fixed and rigid rules of Sabbath observance, any able-bodied and determined parent, with a stern face and the help of a birch rod and a dark closet, could compass all the difficulties of the case. But while it is a question of bringing the child to enjoy the loving service of God on God's peculiar day, it requires other qualities than sternness. . . . And so it is that a right apprehension of the nature of a wise and proper observance of the Sabbath is an essential prerequisite of the wise and proper training of children to such an observance.

"Love must be at the basis of all acceptable worship of God. Any observance of the commands of God which is slavish and reluctant, is sure to lack God's approval. . . . One day in seven is to be given up to loving thoughts of God, to a loving rest from one's own work and pleasure, and to a loving part in the worship of God. On that day, above other days, the thought of God's children should be:

"This is the day which the Lord hath made;
We will rejoice and be glad in it."

"How to train children to a joyous observance of the Lord's day, to a joyous looking forward to its coming, and to a joyous looking back upon its memories, is a weightier question, with thoughtful, Christian parents, than how to conform the conduct of children to the traditional ideas of legitimate Sabbath observance. An utter disregard of the Sabbath in the training of children is a great wrong; but even a greater wrong than this is the training of children to count the Lord's day a day of irksome constraint instead of delight."

And here we find ourself "up against" the question of Bro. Root: "What shall I do with my boys on Sunday?"

Are there no wise parents in the church—such as have had large experience—who will answer this question through the Home Column? We trust there are those who will at least discuss it—those who will realize its gravity, its importance, especially in this day of almost total neglect of Sabbath observance.

Doctor Trumbull, in the article from which we have already quoted, has given some excellent hints upon this subject, and in the future we may refer to some of them. But for the present we wait to hear from some one of our own people, and sincerely trust our waiting will not be in vain.

Bro. Joseph once said, "If thought lives for ever, is he a wise man who suffers his thoughts to be buried with him?" If in any way our thoughts can benefit another, let us not keep silence.

Roosevelt was not afraid to speak, even though the Czar was to listen, and to-day not only the entire civilized world rises up to bless him, but he is heir to the blessing of One greater than the whole world.

SAN FRANCISCO, California, August 13, 1905.

Dear Sister Walker: I must write and tell you of my appreciation of the Hope and the efforts that have brought it to its present size and excellence.

I have read our beloved little paper continuously since I was a child about nine years old, and occasionally would send a little to its columns. I used to try to fathom the mystery of its puzzles, in the days when they were one of its features, and to me that was an interesting part; and how well I remember the fascinating stories contributed by our beloved Perla Wild! When I read some years ago in the HERALD of her death, I felt as if I had lost a true friend, though I never had the pleasure of making her personal acquaintance; and I welcomed gladly articles from the pen of her daughter, Sr. Florence Wildermuth. I believe her mother's mantle has fallen on her, if she will but cultivate her gift. I hope to see her become a frequent contributor to the Hope.

How surprisingly the Sunshine Band and column have grown! How far out they reach! They surely must exert a wide influence for good. Sr. Morrison is doing a noble work. The children, while pleased with their enlarged paper, still not being accustomed to reading one folded were puzzled to find the place when turning a page. So one Sunday, soon after, when one little boy opened his and saw the leaves were stapled and cut, he looked up joyfully and said, "It's fixed, mamma, it's fixed!" and settled down contentedly to read its contents.

I trust this will be a Jubilee Year indeed. The children of our Sunday-school are working to do what they can towards it. While I have heard of no special plan to earn it, they are saving more carefully than ever. My own boys are planning to send a larger offering than last year.

SR. EMILY DAVIS.

[The above welcome letter assures us that there is one mother awake to the opportunity now knocking at her door. We have heard from others also and are fully persuaded there are hundreds at work to help the children from whom we have not yet heard, but who are helping to make this a year of Jubilee.—EDITOR.]

Garner the Beautiful.

Garner the beautiful as you go;
Wait not for a time of leisure,
The hours of toil may be long and slow,
And the moments few of pleasure.
But beauty strays by the common ways,
And calls to the dullest being;
Then let not thine ear be deaf to hear,
Or thine eye be slow in seeing.—Selected.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, August 15, 1905.

Dear Herald: I have preached on the streets here several times this summer, and could preach more than I do, but the mayor of this city only lets me preach at various market-places of the city, no permits being granted for Race Street. It is very dark at the market-places, so I could not read if I wanted to. But I see that they let the Salvation Army preach on Race Street, also the Bible School people, and the Gospel Band Wagon at any place they want to. I would like to know why it is that one body of people has a right to preach in any part of the city, and another has not the right in the same city. This is a free country, and I am American born. I have never yet violated the law of my country, and am trying to hold to the faith which I know is right. I wish Brn. U. W. Greene, or F. J. Ebeling, would, when they see this, help me.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colorado, August 29, 1905.

Editors Herald: Here we are in camp at Dorchester Park, Colorado Springs, Colorado. There are a sufficient number of Saints present to constitute a good working-force; and these, together with the local attendance of all kinds, present an audience sufficiently large to interest the speaker at the preaching-services.

The prayer-services are well attended, and a lively interest taken in them. The location is pleasantly situated in the midst of attractive mountain scenery, the famous Pike's Peak with its snow-capped summit appearing in the distance. An ideal place; ideal weather! And smiling faces greet one on every hand. Every one is well, and all appear to enjoy themselves. The Spirit of the Lord is present to encourage the efforts of the workers; so things are going well in the Colorado reunion.

WM. H. KELLEY.

BAKERSFIELD, California, August 21, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have read in HERALD number 32, volume 52, President F. M. Smith's address, "To the people of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and am strongly impressed with it as an evidence of the near restoration of those who have been estranged from the true work of God in later years, but who now may return to the Lord and his work under the pleadings of this most wonderful declaration and inspirational call to those who were overcome in the dark and cloudy day, and to their posterity; and surely by it the Spirit says to them "Come," as the seed of Joseph the Martyr in kindness of heart and in a lowly spirit, and in the wisdom of the Lord and the strength of the Holy Spirit pleads with them in unanswerable terms and in loving words to arise, and, forsaking their errors, prepare themselves to enter more fully into the work of redeeming Zion.

How kindly, how lovingly the Holy Spirit pleads with those who honor Joseph, the martyred prophet of God, pleading with them to honor him by following his counsel as delivered to them by his posterity under the inspirational power of his office and calling. How complete that call, how kind the pleadings are, how exact the statements, how charitably the errors are mentioned, how clear the warning voice in that most remarkable document which will survive the exigencies of time and abide the great day of accounting, and will bear witness against those who refuse to receive its loving counsel. Now is the day of their salvation. May our Father in heaven help them to come out on the Lord's side; and, freeing themselves from the shackles which have bound them for, lo, these many years, arise in the strength of their manhood and declare for the right and the true, and enlist under the banner of Immanuel with the seed of Joseph the Martyr, for the redemption of Zion, which must needs come by power, which shall be upon the posterity of Joseph the Martyr. For as the Lord said to Abraham, so he also said to Joseph the Martyr: "In thee and in thy seed shall the kindred of the earth be blessed"; and if we are Christ's we are Abraham's kindred and heirs of this promise and blessing.

The reunion of the Southern California District which met in San Bernardino on August 4 was a very enjoyable season from first to last. In the morning prayer-services the kindly and holy influence of the Spirit of the good Master were manifested in that brotherly fellowship and love for each other which is so encouraging and so pure; and the prominent feeling among the Saints throughout the reunion was to honor their brethren and to seek for the pure influence of the Holy Spirit to lead in all the services. The Lord was pleased to recognize their desires, and the meetings were unusually spiritual, and the Saints blessed thereby; and, by inspiration of the Holy Spirit, the ministry were counseled to be wholly devoted to the Master's service, and, leaving the devices of men to others, press on in the great work which the ministry now have to perform; for it is the day of God's preparation. The sermons, and the counsel of the leaders of the prayer-services, and of the Saints, were highly inspirational. And as the words of instruction, counsel, pleadings, and doctrines issued from the lips of the children of God, all were edified and blessed, and thus the Saints were comforted and encouraged. And when Bishop Albert Carmichael unfolded the grand order of the financial side of necessary work of Zion's redemption, he was fairly enraptured with the beauty and grandeur of his theme. And as he portrayed the superior excellence of God's order, and the social life of the Saints under that most beautiful order, they were of course instructed and blessed.

The preparation and watchcare of the grounds, under Bro. A. M. Green's direction, was all that could be desired; and the cooking and supplies were excellently attended to by him, aided by P. Kaufmann, Sr. Nellie Holt, and Sr. French, assisted by the young maidens and lads of the reunion. And thus has passed a short season of pleasant communion of the Saints, blessed by the communion of the Holy Spirit.

Bro. T. W. Williams is an excellent speaker; and if he will follow the counsel of the Holy Spirit to him, he will soon buckle on the whole armor of his calling, and God will use him as a mighty instrument in warning the world and assisting in the work of redeeming man.

And as one listens to the inspirational teachings of Bro. C. E. Crumley, as he discoursed at the reunion so clearly and plainly of the deep things of God in doctrine and service, and to Bro. A. Carmichael of the bishopric, on the beauty of his line of work, all making a full and complete order for the redemption of man in all his many complex wants and needs, both spiritually and bodily, we could not help lifting our hearts to God in thankfulness and praise for raising up such grand young warriors to carry on the warfare against error, while the older warriors, as Brn. Gibson, J. C. Clapp, and Dana, with others who were such valiant soldiers and who battled so manfully for the truth, now find that "In the garments once so strong;

Now are rents distressing;
And the sandals worn so long,
Heavily are pressing,"

but delighting in the angel's message, and rejoicing in the great latter-day work, still aid it by wise counsel, instruction, and blessing; while the younger ministry upon whom the burden and heat of the day now rest do carry on the work so nobly, so humbly, so grandly. "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

And now surely the time is near when all the true Israel of God shall be prepared by willing obedience to receive an inheritance in redeemed Zion. God grant it.

J. F. BURTON.

SIoux CITY, Iowa, August 7, 1905.

Editors Herald: We have been struggling here for the past two years, and, until last November, when it was made possible for us to purchase a church building, it seemed as though we could not gain one inch. But since that time it has looked so much brighter. I was sure that if we could have some help this summer there would be great good done in bringing souls into the kingdom of God, and through the kindness of our minister in charge, the missionary in charge together with the district, we have been having and are still having the proper help. We have one of the district tents, and was privileged to have the help of Elder W. A. Smith for about seven weeks. But soon he was taken to other fields. But in a few days his place was ably filled by Elder Oscar Case, who is still with us, and we hope he will be permitted to stay until his work here is finished, for the present at least.

When will we all learn to let well enough alone, and quit traveling so much, and causing others to do so—both at the expense of the church, and causing loss of time? May the God of the harvest give us all more wisdom is my earnest prayer.

Well, since we started tent-meetings on the eighteenth day of June, we have baptized in all thirty-one, twenty-eight of these before Bro. Smith left us; and there are still more to follow. May God help us to find them, for I know that there are many honest people in this great and wicked city.

I believe we have baptized some of the best people here. But there are many more just as good. We now have had the tent in one place for seven weeks, and some have hardly missed a meeting, and we have not failed to have every meeting at the hour appointed. Every eve but two during this time we have had appointments, with from five to six services on Sunday. We have five or six places in the city that promise to be just as good. But we can not reach them all this season.

We moved the tent to-day, only a few miles, and commence services on the new ground to-morrow eve. We expect to stay here with the tent until the reunion at Moorhead; then will perhaps locate the tent in another part of the city, I hope for the remainder of the tent-season. Sr. Baker has been our mainstay with the music, having missed but few nights although she has had to go about six miles each time and walk about two miles. Others have faithfully helped. We have enjoyed the Spirit of our heavenly Father in every service. Yesterday was a day of special blessing: Sunday-school, Religio, two preaching services, prayer- and sacrament-service, baptism, confirmation, and the blessing of eight children. God by his Spirit was present in all, for which we are thankful.

Pray for us. We want to be able to magnify our calling. May the Father's blessings be with all his children is our earnest prayer. As ever in the conflict, 610 Center Street.

J. M. BAKER.

LEBANON, Oregon, August 3, 1905.

Editors Herald: This is where the old pioneer, Elder Alvin Morris, lives, who came across the plains in 1848, and settled in this valley, and heard the gospel from an old Saint by the name of Lowell Ames. Bro. Joseph Clapp was the first missionary to sound the gospel and do the first baptizing. Bro. Morris' house has been the home of many of the elders, such as Brn. Holt, Chase, Allen, Crumley, and Luff.

I came up here to administer to Sr. Morris, who has been sick some time, but a change for the better seems to have taken place.

I shall start an open-air meeting to-night on the street. It seems the former elders have tried renting halls and private houses without success; so I shall try the old-time method to-night.

The people in the West are very indifferent about religion of any kind, and especially anything that bears the name of Saint.

We used to think that in Missouri prejudice was strong on account of Utahism. But out here it is a stink in the nostrils of most all. And when you put up a tent here if it is ever so small it seems to be large enough to hold all that want to come.

There is at Portland a band of noble Saints, who are willing to make a sacrifice in both money, time, and labor; and as a whole they have attended well, and we have lacked for nothing that was needful while we labored amongst them, although there have been two missionaries with them and they are all working people. And there are those who must come to the front in God's due time.

The Saints feel hopeful of good results. If we can only get any encouragement from the Saints out of town to help in a financial way towards having a reunion at the time of the visit of Bro. Joseph and family in September, I think it will be the means of helping the struggling few in Portland to gain a better footing.

While I can say I am much better in health here than I have been in Missouri for many years, yet old Missouri, and, at least, some of those in the southern part, have a charm for me.

We have many calls for preaching, and one discussion pending. We are doing what we can to push things along.

HENRY SPARLING.

TORY HILL, Ontario, August 15, 1905.

Dear Herald: Away back to the north, in this provisional county of Haliburton, a land of rocks, terrible hills, and horrible roads, and the most variable kind of weather, Elder James Pycock and the writer are ensconced; and, today, the rain it raineth without any intermission, and the cold northeast wind is rushing around the house-corners carrying its burden of much dampness, splashing the window-panes, and giving us premonitions of November weather, causing us to shiver with anticipations of that chilly season.

We have been having quite a time with the branches we have been sent out to labor among, finding our work well cut out for us in trying to rouse the careless and indolent ones to sense of duty and diligence.

I often wonder, dear HERALD, whether there is not something wrong in our system. How many of our branches are holding their own? Very few indeed, with the exception of those in the cities and a very few towns, and country places.

A few years ago, Elder F. G. Pitt sounded a note of warning to the church relative to a practice there was of inducing some good branch president to leave his branch work and take the field. In many cases the young man was in his proper element as branch president. Per consequence, the branch is left to starve, because the officers left may be good followers, but not so in directing.

In one of the places we visited, the Saints were first on the ground, and might have had a nice little church built, as there is no lack of wood and stone, and facilities for lime-burning; but being left to themselves, they, with the exception of a very few, began to disobey the commandment to "meet often together," till the majority were delinquents in this respect, and it culminated in the awful exhibition of depraved manhood in one allowing himself to be led into preying upon the weakness of another to whom he should have been a father and protector. Other unlawful acts were perpetrated by the same person, who has considerably left the place, and gone into a far country, but whether to receive for himself a kingdom, or not, remaineth to be seen. However, as an important part of repentance is to make a proper restitution to secure forgiveness, and the said person has failed to connect, I have grave doubts as to the kingdom part of the transaction. One thing left behind is a terribly bad name and plenty of it, sufficient to go over a large extent of country, as well as wholesale reproach on the church.

Besides this, there are delinquencies in other places by those of the church, which are known to all people in the outlying country, which has precluded all hopes of any increase of membership, at least till the Saints shall all learn to keep the covenant as revealed in this latter-day angel's message. Our work, in the meantime, as it has been, is to build up the work by getting the Saints to see that they can redeem themselves, and the sooner they get about it the better.

The question again arises in my mind: is there not something wrong in our system? Is it well to see large and well-appointed branches attended to and fed with the very best, while the isolated and poor, poor spiritually and financially, are crying for bread, and, what can be given them? What is given them? A stone?

Who is to blame in this? The authorities? No! Who then? No one. It is the system that obtains.

Is it not as much of a command to "feed my lambs," "feed my sheep," as it is to "go preach the gospel to every creature"? The church is, or has been called the mother of her children, adopted by the law; but, dear HERALD, is she not exercising her function in the light of a step-mother?

We can see the necessity, more and more, of increased work among the branches by a part of the traveling ministry,—of feeding the church of God.

To the successful carrying out of this work, I see the necessity for the ordination of more high priests.

A few branches, not more than from three to five should be given into the charge of each one, and he to have full control of all preaching, prayer- and sacrament-meetings.

We have organized a Religio in the Cameron Branch, and expect to see the same a potent factor in building up the Saints in the principles of the "new covenant." Before leaving Tory Hill, we hope to organize one among the young people here.

Bro. William B. Dack, a young man of this branch, in whom the Saints have almost unbounded confidence, has been called to the office of an elder and ordained, as well as chosen by the Saints as their president. If they will heed the admonition of the Spirit, the future of this branch is assured.

Now, dear brothers and sisters of the church, what is to prevent us from holding the first centenary of the birth of Joseph Smith, "the Seer of Palmyra," and Prophet of latter-day Israel? Surely the name of one that is as much revered by thousands as his is, should be worthy of the highest honors we can bestow upon it. As his birth was December 23, 1805, we could observe the one hundredth anniversary of the same, by incorporating it with our Christmas festivities. Who will take it up?

I would like to see the Canadian Saints, at the two district conferences of London and Chatham, in October next, take the matter under advisement. Let us not be like the man who, seeing obstacles in his way to attend the centennial of American Independence in 1876, consoled himself with expressing his determination to attend the next one.

"Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait."

Do not wait too long, but learn to labor, and let us labor with one accord, and with wisdom.

In bonds,

PARIS, Texas, August 13, 1905.

Editors Herald: My wife and I and oldest son are the only Saints here, and we have had quite a struggle; but the Lord has been with us. Had he not we would have gone down long ago. We, in our isolated condition, have done what little we could in trying to tell our neighbors the angel's message, and I think we have done good to some, while others continue to fight. But to say the least of it, these poor people here have fought the truth, they have rejected the counsel of God against themselves, and now what will the consequences be?

In this connection I have two dreams. I wish to relate, and hope some one will give the interpretation. I first dreamed that I stood in my house, and I heard a great noise, and it seemed to fill the elements with a sound of sorrow and mourning. While I continued to listen my house went down off the foundation; and when that was done I raised my eyes and said, Lord God, have mercy. And when I had thus said the noise ceased; and, going out to see what had happened, to my surprise the country was swept away; even my neighbors and their dwellings were swept away and gone, and no house was left except mine. And while I gazed on this scene the buzzards began to come in swarms and to gather over those once fine dwellings; and at that I awoke.

In the next dream I stood, and, hearing a voice, I looked upward. I saw many beautiful fowls flying high in the air, and they were coming down slowly; and the Spirit said, when they got in a certain position the sound of war would be heard, or rather a signal, and when the signal should sound, war was to be waged against those fowls. I stood and listened, and after a while I heard the signal-guns fire; but I saw no man go to war against them, and they came near the ground and then scattered, and several came near me,—so near their wings fanned me. And when that was past I heard the sound of bees, and looking up I saw many bees flying over me in the air; and I was trying to see where they would settle, when I discovered, to my surprise, that they had settled upon my head, forming a beautiful crown, for I had on no hat, and my wife came forth with a hive in which she took them from my head.

Your brother,
G. M. Cox.

AKRON, Ohio, August 9, 1905.

Editors Herald: Reunion convened last Friday. Not so many in attendance as we expected. Look for more next Saturday and Sunday. Several of the leading men of the missionary force are here. Bro. R. C. Evans preached three rousing sermons and left to attend another reunion. A good sprinkling of outsiders in attendance, and increasing nightly. We hope by the time the conference is over that many will have a better understanding of our position and the difference between Latter Day Saintism and Utahism. The Saints are greatly enjoying themselves in the shade of the beautiful grove next to Lakeside Park, where the tents are pitched. All are well except some light afflictions.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, and the redemption of Israel, I remain,

Your colaborer in Christ,
JAS. C. MCCONNAUGHY.

BALDKNOB, Arkansas, August 15, 1905.

Dear Herald: As I have not as yet seen anything from the elders, I will write a sketch of our work and progress at this place. Preparation had been made for a grove-meeting to begin on the twenty-sixth day of July. And to our pleasant surprise, on the morning of the 26th, Bro. Frederick A. Smith walked in. He had heard of Bro. Pickering's illness, and had thought only to stop and see him; but found that his assistance was needed in the branch, and decided to remain over Sunday. Bro. Smith preached two fine sermons the 26th and 27th, and the next morning was taken with a spell of indigestion, and hoarseness followed so that he was not able to speak for us any more until Sunday night when he preached his farewell sermon at our home to a crowded house. His sermon was so plain and simple that a small child could understand it, and will be long remembered by all who were under the sound of his voice. During Bro. Smith's and Pickering's affliction the meeting was conducted by Bro. Baldwin, with good liberty. The meeting closed before we had intended, as Bro. Baldwin had other appointments, and Bro. Pickering was not able to continue the meeting.

On Sunday, the 30th, we witnessed the baptism of six of our Sunday-school scholars, and a lady who lives at Judsonia, about five miles from our branch. Sr. Sarah Abington will well remember the time when we were so determined to carry on our little Sunday-school at this place for the benefit of the children in this vicinity, and now we can begin to see the fruits of our effort. Some of them are taking right a-hold and bearing their testimony in prayer-meeting. May God bless every Sunday-school of the Reorganized Church in the land, for they are a power for good in bringing up the little lambs, and teaching them to love God and keep his commandments. After baptism, confirmation and business-meeting was held at the harbor. My husband, Bro. E. P. Johnson, was ordained to the office of priest.

Dear Saints, let me ask an interest in your prayers that I may always be ready to assist him in every way possible, and that above all other things I may never be a hindrance, or a stumbling-block in his path to prevent him from doing his duty. Bro. Edward was ordained to the office of a deacon. We bid him God-speed, and pray that he may be blessed with wisdom, and always be able to manifest the spirit of love and meekness in his important work; for God is no respecter of persons; and if he is faithful in performing his duty in this position he will be blessed equally with those who are in the higher positions; for every officer God has placed in his church is needed. And the eye can not say to the hand, I have no need of thee, nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of thee. Nay, much more those members of the body which seem to be more feeble are necessary, and on those members of the body which we think to be less honorable we bestow more abundant honor. May God bless us, and all other branches of his church that we may strengthen them and assist each other in our various duties and callings. In this way we may all help to scatter the good seed, and hasten the time when God's will shall be done on earth as it is done in heaven.

Our branch at present is in good working order; no envy, jealousy, or anything that I know of to hinder our progress.

We held a business-meeting last Sunday, and changed the name of our branch to Baldknob Branch.

Your sister in Christ,
BEULAH JOHNSON.

MYRTLE POINT, Oregon, August 19, 1905.

Dear Herald: Thinking that the missionaries and others who have labored in this part of Oregon would like to hear something of how the gospel wins its way, and of our reunion at Bandon by the sea, I hope to interest at least a few of your readers.

A branch was organized at Myrtle Point last fall, now consisting of thirty-six members, with several more to unite in the near future. They have purchased a corner lot near the business part of town, with a small house upon it, which, by removing the partitions and papering and painting will do very well until able to build a church. Sunday-school is held there each Sunday, and preaching-services quite often—whenever a missionary comes, and, Wednesday evening, prayer-meeting.

Bro. C. E. Crumley on his way from Humboldt County, California, to his home, at Sacramento, came this way, the scene of his former labors, and where he is held in loving remembrance. He preached two sermons while here, which will be long remembered and are even now talked about by the outsiders, who were present, as given by the power and inspiration of the Holy Spirit. Bro. N. C. Engé was here over one Sunday and preached twice for us. He and Bro. E. Keeler have been out with the district tent at Coquille, Riverton, and Bandon. At Riverton they were given a good hearing, making many friends for the cause, and a new opening for the preaching of the gospel, a hall free of charge being offered them for use.

The tent was taken from there to Bandon for the reunion, which was held on the bluff overlooking the broad Pacific, our nearest neighbor westward being Japan.

It was breezy, but the air being so fresh and pure was exhilarating and the missionaries preached grander sermons, and the Saints all enjoying the beautiful scenery felt to praise God for the beautiful and grand in Nature.

Elder N. V. Sheldon of the Eastern Oregon District, was with us rendering valuable assistance, winning all hearts by his genial nature, and baptizing two of Bandon's fair daughters. We were all sorry to have him leave. He and Bro. N. C. Engé returned to Portland. Bro. E. Keeler remained at Bandon with the tent still holding meetings, as many seemed interested and some desired to unite with us.

A special meeting for the advancement of the Sunday-school work was held during the reunion, and the Sunday-schools of the district association desiring recognition and membership in the General Association.

We now have two families of Saints at Camas Valley, a new opening, where a Sunday-school will be organized, I hope, before long; two at Remote, two at Bridge, and several scattered about in the canyons and holes of the mountains.

This is a hard field for a missionary to labor in, as much of his traveling has to be done on horseback, especially in the winter, or rainy season, as we have no snow.

This is a California summer, as we have had no rain, and vegetation is suffering. It is very warm here now, considering we are but fifteen miles, air line, from the ocean. A railroad is now an assured thing from Marshfield to Drain, thus connecting this fine, only partially developed country with the outside world.

We are intending to visit Portland, see the fair, and attend the mission reunion held there September 8 to 18. We are still laboring to gain eternal life in the kingdom of God.

MRS. E. KEELER.

BERRYDALE, Florida, August 23, 1905.

Editors Herald: The reunion of the Tennessee and Kentucky District, held at Oakland church, six miles south of Farmington, Kentucky, July 15 to 23, passed off quite pleasantly and was, according to the commonly expressed opinion of those present, the best reunion ever held in the district. It was considerably in advance of any the writer ever attended there.

Bro. F. A. Smith presided and was the principal speaker, and in both capacities did excellent work. M. M. Turpen of Pleasanton, Iowa, was present and rendered efficient assistance in presiding and speaking. Seven were baptized and others were seemingly "not far from the kingdom."

Bro. F. A. Smith, our new missionary in charge, is well liked, and his short visit to the Tennessee and Kentucky field was highly appreciated by all Saints so far as we heard from them. We regretted that he must leave so soon, but his field is large; so on Tuesday, July 25, he took train for Arkansas and Oklahoma, Bro. Turpen for Alabama, and the writer for Georgia.

At Bremen, Georgia, I baptized Bro. Thomas Freeland, a typical son of Erin, and his wife, Sarah Ann, also a native of the Emerald Isle. They had learned the truth from their nephew, David Freeland, who, with his wife, came from Philadelphia a few years ago; and they have been making their home with "Uncle Tommy." They were members of the Methodist Church, and previous to their union with that church they had been for a time with the Dowieites. But when Bro. David and his wife acted the role of Aquila and Priscilla, and "taught them the way of God more perfectly," they could not rest satisfied until they had obeyed the gospel, authoritatively administered; so at their request I went over and baptized them. May their joys ever increase and their every want be satisfied in my prayer.

While there I spoke twice in the Methodist Episcopal church to small crowds; a few seemed interested. Much prejudice in the town. The Methodist Episcopalans regretted very much to lose Bro. and Sr. Freeland, and I do not blame them for it; but they should not expect honest people to remain where their best judgment tells them there is not a fullness of truth and no chance to attain it.

On August 29 I received a telegram from Bro. M. M. Turpen and Doctor J. F. Love, asking if I would meet the latter in public debate at McKenzie, Alabama, that week. The telegram was sent on Saturday, but was delayed so I did not get it until Monday. I had previously had some correspondence with the doctor in regard to the debate, but no propositions had been signed as yet. The doctor found out I was in Georgia and thinking, or pretending to think, that I was afraid to meet him, began to blow and brag, saying he was there and ready, that I had backed out, etc. All this after notification by me that his failure to sign up the propositions would necessitate a postponement of the debate. He would not sign propositions as at first agreed to by one of his brethren, but insisted on a different wording, seeking an advantage and a chance to quibble, as I thought, and as afterward proved true.

Bro. M. M. Turpen being on the ground finally succeeded in arrangements with him, and the debate commenced between them July 31; and when I arrived August 1, the battle was already under way. It lasted for nine days, and at the close every unprejudiced person could easily see that Bro. Turpen was the victor.

Doctor Love affirmed that the church he stood identified with, known as the Church of Christ, is identical with the church established by Christ in origin, organization, name, faith, and practice. (This is the substance,—may not be the exact wording.)

Bro. Turpen made a similar affirmation for the Reorganized Church, and also affirmed that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. The prejudices of the people were against him, but his solid arguments and Christ-like demeanor made friends to our cause, and greatly strengthened the Saints.

The doctor would not admit that he belonged to the "Christian Church" or the "Disciple Church." Oh, no. That would force him to defend the works of A. Campbell, B. W. Stone, et al, and in a previous debate with Bro. Turpen he found that would not work at all. Now he repudiates all that and just claims to belong to the "Church of Christ," thinking Bro. Turpen could not find any origin for the "Church of Christ" only Christ himself. But by their own books Bro. Turpen easily showed that those who called themselves "Disciples" and the "Church of Christ" all had their origin in the efforts of the Campbells, Stone, and company, and that Campbell and his company were excluded or came out from the Baptists and the other wing came from the Presbyterians; and after a while some of these seceding Baptists and Presbyterians called themselves the "Church of Christ." Thus all could see that instead of originating with Christ, the doctor's church originated with the Baptists and Presbyterians.

In Doctor Love's church there are no officers of any kind. Some years ago when he debated with Bro. Turpen he was an "evangelist," so he claimed; but now he is not. He stated in the debate that he had been studying since then and he saw that to be consistent one must claim all the other officers, including apostles, if one claims the evangelist. So the doctor threw up his office of evangelist, but is still a preacher. He claims all men are equally entitled to preach, and all are priests, women and all; but the women must not preach. Paul said they must keep silent. See?

The doctor boasted, so I am told, that the Saints' church about three miles from McKenzie would be for sale after the debate, so badly was he going to shatter and tear down their religion; but this proved to be a mistake. On Saturday, after the debate closed on Wednesday, there was begun the maiden effort of the Alabama District to hold a reunion. The Saints had attended the debate for nine days and were more or less worried in body; but they fell in line and went to work with renewed zeal in the reunion meeting, and the attendance was good all the way through. Day and night for nine days they attended, and it was truly pleasant to see and hear them express their joy and confidence in the work of the Master.

Thirty-four were baptized, mostly children of the Saints; some of them young men and young women of the first class; and one of them a young married man, a son of one of the most influential of Doctor Love's members. He is a young man of promise, and we are hopeful that he will be of good help to the church in future.

Bro. D. E. Tucker acted as moderator for Bro. Turpen, and he is a good one too. His possession of a number of books of the leading men of the Baptist-Presbyterian-Church of Christ-school, and his knowledge of the same, were a timely help in overthrowing the claims of the doctor, who is a priest, a preacher, but not an officer in the church, because according to his claim there are no officers in the Church of Christ.

I came to this place yesterday and will commence meetings to-night. Will remain here a few weeks if quarantine regulations do not hinder. Nothing of the kind in these parts now, but as long as "Yellow Jack" is abroad one can not tell just where he will strike.

Hope to be remembered by the faithful everywhere. Hoping, working, and praying for Zion's redemption,

T. C. KELLEY.

BOWDEN, Texas, August 14, 1905.

Editors Herald: I am still in the conflict, battling as best I can for the right, trying to sow the seed of truth in the high-ways and hedges, and by the wayside. Like many others I have had my trials, my ups and downs, and seemingly more downs than ups. But amid the trials and conflicts incident to this life I am thankful that I can truly say that God has not forsaken me, but that he has been mindful of me and merciful; and while I have been for some time very closely confined at home on account of my temporal affairs, and have not been permitted to travel much in the interest of the gospel, yet I am thankful for the knowledge that God has given of the beautiful plan of salvation, and for the liberty with which he has blessed me in my efforts to tell the story. I have just returned from district conference of the Northeastern Texas and Choctaw District, which convened at Avery, it being the first conference I have been permitted to attend in four years. It was indeed a treat to meet with the brethren of the ministry, and the Saints in conference assembly; and while the attendance was not very large, yet the spirit of peace and harmony seemed to prevail among those who did attend. Some of the Saints in and around that place are alive to the work while some may be in a luke-warm state. But I feel that there is going to be an awakening in these parts in the near future. This country is ripe, now, for the gospel. There are more calls for preaching than ten elders could fill, and only one at the present time to do the work. I expect to start in a few days, if the Lord will, on a tour to assist our worthy Bro. E. A. Erwin for a month or so in trying to tell the beautiful story.

Bro. J. D. Erwin is holding forth for a few nights at Old Manchester, where the gospel was first established in Northeastern Texas, and where the message came to him, and where he received the doctrine. So the great work rolls on slowly. May the Lord speed the day when the knowledge of him shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

P. B. BUSSELL.

WILBURTON, Indian Territory, August 23, 1905.

Editors Herald: I have just returned from Northern Texas, Manchester, my old home place. Northern Texas is in the worst condition I ever saw it, for crops; it has rained about one hundred and fifty days in the last six months. The people begin to see the signs of the times, hence I never saw such demand for preaching, and but one missionary to preach for them, E. A. Erwin. Bro. P. B. Bussell is doing what he can in a local way. I preached ten times at Manchester, baptized one; and if I could have remained one month or more I believe I could have baptized a few. There is a great demand for preaching in Northern Texas, and a great work to be done. Even the preachers seem to be interested. One Baptist minister said he would come into the church soon; another Christian preacher said we had truth they did not have. I saw seventy-five men, armed with guns, collect in daylight to drive Bro. Heman C. Smith and George Montague out of Red River County, but times change. One of the sons of the captain of the mob said, during my meeting, he wanted to be baptized, and would some day. If any missionary wants plenty to do, let him come into Northern Texas, or Indian Territory. Indeed the field is white for harvest, and the laborers are few. Oh, colaborers, with the field so white for harvest, the time so short, the churches of men tottering to their fall, and so many honest souls begging for the gospel, let us leave the branches and push out into new fields, until the world is warned.

I will leave here August 25, for Tulsa, Indian Territory, to meet Abe Corlin, September 4, in debate at Red Fork. I hope this will be my last debate this year. I prefer to do no debating unless it is unavoidable. Indeed it is not pleasant work for any one, and no great amount of praise attached to it. Let us all work and pray until the Master comes.

In bonds,

J. D. ERWIN.

WELLSTON, Ohio, September 2, 1905.

Editors Herald: Our reunion closed here last Sunday; a grand success in every particular. Much prejudice removed; many lasting friends made; Saints encouraged. Seven were baptized the last day, two since, and some more will be to-morrow. Debts all paid, including elders' return fare. What more could we ask? However, we express two regrets. First, for the Saints who stayed at home; and, second, for the ones who came the last day. According to the expressions of the last ones, we expect to find them among the first on the camp-grounds next year. Have decided to hold reunion next year. Let the Saints begin right now to prepare for it. You know not what you are missing.

Things are moving encouragingly in this district. Ere this appears we expect seventy-five will have been baptized in this one district since the General Conference. We are grieved to hear the many calls, "Come and help us," and have not the help to send. Evidently, some are perishing for the bread of life. Who is responsible? We have many able young men who are willing to drop all and go to the rescue, were the church able to send them. This district has a membership of about nine hundred. In looking over the Bishop's report yesterday, I counted seventy-two tithe-payers. Oh, when will the Saints awaken to this important duty? What are we in the church for? to receive or to give? That it is more blessed to give than to receive we prove each day of our lives.

I inclose clipping from Portsmouth Blade denouncing the mob who attacked us in our camp-meeting in Sciota County. This turned to our good. After the crowd reassembled, and quiet prevailed, a fine young man arose and demanded baptism. This drove him nearer to the church, he said. For the first time in my life I stood surrounded by armed body-guards while preaching the gospel. All the young men of the immediate neighborhood turned soldiers during the remainder of the meetings.

Bro. Beatty faced rebel bullets for four years, and did not feel to run from a few eggs, apples, and stones.

I delivered the memorial address at the Universalist church to a large crowd Decoration day. It was well received. Have been asked to speak at another place for next year. Also delivered two addresses July 4, at a celebration. In this vicinity we have one elder who is justice of the peace; one a candidate for State representative, who ousted Mr. Bridwell at the primary; another candidate for probate judge. This is not a bad showing for our people, is it? But, let us not get too popular.

I hope to continue in the fight; and the more actively I am engaged the happier I feel. Leave Monday to take up tent-work at Ironton. Cheerfully engaged,

F. J. EBELING.

"THAT MOB AT DUCK RUN.

Editor Portsmouth Blade:—In a recent issue of the Blade, mention was made of the disturbances by some unscrupulous degenerates at the camp-meeting at Henry Springs.

"For the sake of justice, permit me to correct a prevalent, mistaken idea about those people. Your informant, like many others, refers to them as being Mormons. Since coming into our community they have persistently disclaimed any connection with the Mormons. We think they are as well qualified to tell who they are as some who have never heard them.

"Ignorance and prejudice are the chief factors behind the opposition those people have to meet. If the people would line up to the teachings of those elders any community would be much improved. We speak of this from actual knowledge.

"The attack made upon Elder Beatty on Tuesday night is a disgrace to any community and should be unqualifiedly condemned by all law-abiding citizens. Just think of a mob of able-bodied men, (or brutes in men's clothes,) attacking with eggs, hard apples, and stones, one lone, old, rickety man, sixty-five years old, who gave four years of his life in defense of our nation's honor, for no other reason than preaching the gospel according to his honest convictions!

"We have read of the dangers of the early settlers of our country, when men, women, and children had to be protected from the savages. We have heard of the stirring times of Lewis Wetzel and Daniel Boone, the explorers and Indian fighters, how they had to go armed to the teeth to save their scalps. We have but recently read where armies were marshaled to protect our missionaries in heathen lands among the Boxers; but it remained for Duck Run to honor Elder T. J. Beatty and F. J. Ebeling by planting picket lines about them while preaching the gospel, for protection from mob violence, and that too, in a Christian land, and within sight of a church where the love of the suffering Christ is supposed to be taught each Lord's day. This dastardly work only gained the elders many friends, and the honorable part of the community sympathize with them.

"We believe those men to be gentlemen, even if we do not agree with all their views. They are making many converts in this county and adjoining counties, among whom are the most respected citizens. You can not lose anything, or be any the worse off by kindly receiving them.

"I write this in behalf of the better citizens of our erstwhile peaceful community. A READER."

Veteran Printer Says the Millennium is to Come in 1933."

By means of a key system, discovered through long and painstaking study of the Bible, Edmund Scribner Stevens, a veteran printer of Lebanon, Pennsylvania, has unlocked, he asserts, the door of the mysterious future.

Many of the facts, figures, and characters of the Old Testament are regarded by Mr. Stevens as types and prophecies. Through his system, he is convinced, their hidden meaning is revealed.

"The system originated by Mr. Stevens is based upon two great measuring periods of time—the 'short' measure being 2,520 years, and the 'long' measure 3,842 years.

"He begins his calculations with the death of Saul, 2946 A. M. (year of the world), and finds that kings of Israel reigned 360 years or until the ten tribes went into captivity in 3306 A. M. When Saul became king, that event, he argues, marked the end of theocracy upon earth; that is, the rule of God through the judges.

"It is held by Mr. Stevens that 360 is the equivalent in figures for the expression 'time' in the Bible. When God told the Jews that if they disobeyed him he would punish them seven 'times,' he did not mean seven different kinds of punishment, but seven periods.

"Now 360 years multiplied by 7 gives 2,520 years. The captivity began in 3,306, and if it was to last 2,520 years, that would bring it to 1826 A. D. To this latter date Mr. Stevens adds 70 years—according to the scriptures, he says, a generation was foretold which 'would see the signs of the times'—also 30 years, the length of time Christ lived on earth until he was baptized, and 7 years as typified by Noah and the ark, making 107 years added in all.

"Such a calculation brings the date up to 1933 A. D., which Mr. Stevens asserts, will be the date of the first resurrection. He arrives at the same conclusion by another route.

"In 587 B. C., Ezekiel saw the vision of dry bones and the Messiah reigning. If the Jews were to be punished 'seven times,' and Ezekiel saw a vision in which the Messiah was reigning, it indicated that the punishment had come to an end and that the Messiah was in possession of his own again.

"Coming down 2,520 years from 587 B. C., the investigator finds himself again at 1933 A. D., as the date when the Messiah will begin his reign of 1,000 years, or the period known as the millennium.

"Here is another calculation made by Mr. Stevens: In the year 605 B. C., Judah went into captivity under Babylonian rule, and the 'seven times' period, or 2,520 years from that date, would end in 1915. But as the Lord promised to save Judah first, Mr. Stevens adds eighteen years, the length of time it took to save Jerusalem, and once more he arrives at 1933 A. D.

"Several other calculations along these lines are worked out by Mr. Stevens to prove his theory as to the date of the millennium.

"The 'long measure' is taken from the Great Pyramid of Gizeh in Egypt, which he interprets from Isaiah to be a 'sign in the border of Egypt to all generations.'

"In this pyramid the gallery leading to the chamber of the king measures 3,842 inches. As all men are striving towards the goal of the 'king's chamber,' Mr. Stevens accepts this measurement as typical and prophetic.

"Elijah was translated in 896 B. C. As this typifies the beginning of the immortal state, according to Mr. Stevens, he ascertains the continuation of the period for all men by reckoning 3,842 years from Elijah's translation, which brings him to 2946 A. D. To corroborate these figures, he goes back to the vision of Daniel, 574 B. C., when he saw the temple restored at Jerusalem. Adding 2,520 years, he reaches 1946 A. D. To this he adds the millennium of 1,000 years and again arrives at 2946 A. D.

"One more example. In 1913 B. C., Abraham gave tithes to Melchisedec, who was known as the King of Peace. Adding 3,842 years to that date, and 1929 A. D. is indicated as the year 'when Christ is to be a priest for ever.' Lamech, who was a type of the Holy Spirit, died five years before the flood; therefore, says Mr. Stevens, the Spirit will be taken away five years before the universal destruction. Consequently, he adds five years to 1929 and once more finds 1934 (approximately 1933) at the dawn of the millennium.

"The prophecy by Mr. Stevens extends to temporal as well as spiritual affairs. He has ascertained that the Russo-Japanese war is the outcome of a biblical prediction; and, in fact, typifies the combat between David and Goliath.

"In 1915, according to him, the United States is to be plunged into a terrible war, in which, allied with England, Japan, Denmark, and Venezuela, it will fight with four great powers of Europe. This is to be the great battle of five kings against the four kings of the valley of the Jordan. The European countries are later to engage in a killkenny-cat combat among themselves. This is when the nations 'drink of the wine cup of the fury of God.'"

The above clipping was handed to me a few days ago by a friend; but nothing to indicate the name of the paper. It is herewith presented to HERALD readers for what it is worth. As for myself, I have little confidence in "dates" of this kind. I remember some six or seven years ago an article appeared in the HERALD treating on certain prophetic statements and the writer closed by saying: "Look out for 1905." Well, it's here and more than half gone and nothing of an extraordinary character has happened so far, though there is time enough yet; but—we well we are "skeptical."

The puzzle with me is how these men can see those things so plainly when the "angels" know nothing about it. (Matthew 24:36.)

We are little concerned about "prophetic" dates, but content to "watch, that it comes not upon you unawares."

E. E. LONG.

Southern California.

Editors, Herald: Another landmark in the line of progress: another guide-post on the road to service! The Southern California reunion and district conference for 1905 will prove all of this; aye, more. It is very easy to speak in glowing terms of one's labor and work; but this can not be construed to be self-praise. The overshadowing presence of the Almighty was so clearly apparent that the most pessimistic was constrained to render "honor to whom honor is due." The Latter Day Saint who could attend meetings such as these and not be helped, strengthened, and stimulated to service is surely worthy of divine pity.

I can not speak for others, but I must say personally, I needed just such a meeting. The weather as a whole was very agreeable, two quite warm days, but scarce a murmur from any quarter. The speakers acquitted themselves nobly. The social services were exceptionally good. The gifts of prophecy and tongues were manifested to the edification and encouragement of some of the ministry, and for the benefit of all the Saints assembled. The cares and trials incidental to this human experience have borne heavily on heart and brain with me, during the past two years; but somehow the load seemed lighter after a period of communion with God and loving supporting Saints, and I left the grounds fully resolved to rededicate my all to his service; and wherein the way has seemed dark and the burden heavy, I would not, as heretofore, try to carry it alone, but trusting in the promises of the Leader of our host, await his protection and deliverance. I feel that I speak in conservative terms when I state that whatever differences may have existed between the brethren of the Pacific Slope Mission in so far as this south land is concerned, were entirely dissipated; and, in ways known only to God, the brethren were brought so closely together that each and all were constrained to exclaim, "Truly God hath done this." I believe in more ways than one the reunion and conference will prove landmarks in the work in Southern California. Charles E. Crumley and Joseph F. Burton were chosen to preside; Estella Swall chorister, Nettie Paulson organist. The press committee succeeded in having the leading papers publish daily reports.

The next reunion will be held at Mineral Park, Los Angeles, California, August, 1906. The business of the conference was conducted in a becoming manner. The old officers were sustained. Brn. Burton, Crumley, and Carmichael are to attend the Oakland reunion. THE SECRETARY.

Extracts from Letters.

Jacob L. Rust, Gladstone, Illinois: "I am still in the faith, but have very few church privileges. Will be glad at any time to have any of the elders call on us, and preach to this people here, if it be the will of the Lord that they should hear the gospel. Please remember me in your prayers, that I may have strength to overcome, and to meet in peace the great events predicted of by all the holy apostles and prophets."

A. M. Chase, Ogden, Utah: "We have the promise of the bishop of Malad that commencing Monday, the 4th of September, Bro. F. M. Smith and myself may occupy their tabernacle for one week. At present we are busy upon the streets here. All goes well with us so far."

Died.

JONES.—Sr. Jeanette Jones, the widow of William Jones, near Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania, August 9, 1905. She was in her ninety-second year at the time of her departure. Was born in South Wales. United with the church in an early day, and rejected the errors of Brighamism. In company with her husband she left her native land in 1854, and came to these parts. Up to within a few days of her death she was enjoying good health and was very spry and active, still looking after her personal affairs. She made her home with her daughter, Sr. David Isaac.

CRANDALL.—Mr. George Crandall was born in Hancock County, Illinois, September 9, 1843, and died at his home in Dow City, Iowa, August 21, 1905. He was married to Miss Jenette Martin, December 12, 1874, and to this union were born four children: Maud, Lulu, Ada, and Eugene. Lulu, Eugene, wife, and brother John, with many other relatives and friends, remain to mourn. A short service was conducted at the home August 23, 1905, by Elder Charles E. Butterworth assisted by Elder Barley of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His wife is a worthy member of the Latter Day Saint Church.

SMITH.—Albert A., was born September 18, 1871, in Steuben County, Indiana, and died at his home in Kingsley, Iowa, August 18, 1905. Was united in marriage to Minda M. Reynolds, November 9, 1892. To this union were born eight children; four of whom survive him. There are left to mourn their loss, wife and children, father, six sisters, and a host of friends. Said brother was baptized May 20, 1893, by J. F. Mintun. Funeral-sermon by A. R. Crippen. He died in the hope of a glorious resurrection.

BILLINGSLEY.—At her home, Manchester, Red River County, Texas, Rebecca C. Billingsley, aged 70 years, 6 months, and 11 days. Born in South Carolina, February 8, 1835. Was married to B. L. Billingsley, January 13, 1859, in Mississippi, and moved that year to Red River County, Texas, where she lived up to her death. She was baptized into the church March 15, 1879, by W. T. Bozarth, and since that time she has lived a faithful Christian. Funeral-sermon preached by E. A. Erwin. She leaves one son and a host of friends to mourn.

THOMAS.—At Malad City, Idaho, August 22, 1905, Richard Thomas; born August 26, 1836, in Merthyr Tidville, Glamorgan-shire, Wales. In obedience to the angel's message, as brought to him, he was baptized in 1851; came to Utah in 1852; was married in 1853 to Eliza Morgan, who with seven children (out of a family of twelve) survive him. They were among the first settlers of Malad City, and there in the sixties, or early seventies, they obeyed the message of the Reorganization; and although his name had been erased from the branch records, he did not lose his interest in the cause, and died firm in that belief. Funeral-sermon, August 26, by Elder A. M. Chase.

"And while my words are read,
Let this at least be said:
Whate'er his life's defeatures,
He loved his fellow creatures."

SHIPPY.—Sophronia, wife of Elder John Shippy, died at Lamoni, Iowa, August 31, 1905, aged 83 years, 5 months, and 22 days. Born at Symphonius, New York, March 9, 1822. Married to Elder John Shippy, near Springville, Indiana, December 23, 1841; was baptized by her husband in 1844. One daughter preceded her in death. Husband, two daughters, and three sons remain to sadly memorialize her. Funeral from the house, September 1, at 10.30 a. m., Elder Columbus Scott delivering the sermon, Elder I. P. Baggerly assisting in the services. She goes a well-ripened sheaf to God's garner.

The September Arena contains a number of papers of special importance and interest because of their timeliness and the ability displayed in the handling of the subject discussed. Among the principal contents we mention the following: "The theater of Edmond Rostand," by professor Archibald Henderson, Ph. D.; "Direct legislation: the chief objections examined," by Judge C. S. Lobbinger, LL. M., Ph. D., Judge of the Court of First Instance in the Philippines; "Frank F. Stone: California's most-gifted sculptor," by the editor (this paper is illustrated by a number of fine half-tone reproductions of photographs of Mr. Stone's work); "Birds and bird interpreters" by Doctor Charles C. Abbott; "Dominant trusts corporations," by the Honorable J. Warner Mills; "Tainted money and the church," by the Reverend George F. Pentecost, D. D.; "The struggle of autocracy with democracy at the opening of the Twentieth Century," by E. P. Powell; "Dependent children and the state," by Solomon Schindler, superintendent of the Leopold Morse Home for Orphan Hebrew children; and "Popular education in the rural districts the supreme need of the south," by Doctor Agnes V. Kelley. There are also four notable editorials by Mr. Flower on "Mr. Lawson's crusade: its strength and its weakness," "The school city as a factor in civic development," "Centers of light and leading," and "A Macedonian cry from the Southland." The extended book-study, which has become a popular feature of the Arena, is this month devoted to J. H. Hyslop's Science and the Future Life. The fiction is a mystery story by Clerin Zumwalt, entitled "The ebony hand." Strength in treatment, variety, and timeliness of subject matter make this issue of the Arena especially attractive to persons who desire to keep abreast of the time.

What's in "McClure's."

McClure's has always something that compels attention, something immediate and significant that is important to all Americans. The September number adds to an unbroken series of "McClure articles" an illuminating study of commercial piracy, the first half of Miss Tarbell's study of the Kansas Oil War, and an excursion into the marvels of modern biology, "Prolonging the prime of life," which is an authoritative account of the discoveries of a group of scientists who have determined that old age is a disease.

Color-printing has never achieved more perfect results than in the eight full-page reproductions of Lungren's paintings of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, which accompany William Allen White's description of the wonders "On Bright Angel Trail," a bit of descriptive writing which may well take place with the classics of our language.

Eugene Wood, George Randolph Chester, Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, Jean Webster, Arthur Train, and Norvell Harrison supply a round of short stories stirring, humorous, light, or serious to fit every mood.

Normal rates have been restored by all lines between Chicago, Buffalo, New York, Boston and other Eastern points, and the Nickel Plate Road is still prepared to furnish strictly first class service between Chicago and the East, in their three daily through trains to New York and Boston, at rates as low as obtain by any other line. Meals served as you like, in the dining-car, either a la carte, club, or table d' hote, but in no case will a meal cost more than one dollar. Our rates will be of interest to you, and information cheerfully given by calling at 111 Adams Street or addressing John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 113 Adams Street, Room 298, Chicago. No33-36-4t Witte's the Master Mind of Modern Russia.

It is impossible in a sketch which must be short and eclectic to unfold the complex scheme to which Witte attached his name for all time. Its ramifications ran through every department of political, social, and commercial life in Russia. Its effects, like those of a revolution, will not at all disengage themselves for generations to come. That scheme comprised the reform of the Imperial Bank, the introduction of a gold standard, and the fixation of the value of the ruble; the extensive employment of foreign capital, the establishment of an alcohol monopoly, the development of savings-banks, the spread of technical education, the emancipation of peasants, dissenters, and heretics, as well as Jews, from the galling network of special restrictive legislation. In a word, it embodied all the practical corollaries of the incipient reform inaugurated by Alexander II., when he struck the rusty chains off the limbs of millions of serfs. It is hardly too much to say that a good deal, perhaps most, of what is good or hope-giving in the Russia of to-day owes its origin, its preservation, or its development to the insight and energy of Sergius Witte, as manifested in this "revolution from above."—From "Sergius Witte," by E. J. Dillon, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for September.

TRUTH AS A BASIS OF ACTION.

Truth is defined by Webster as follows: "Conformity to fact or reality; exact accordance with that which is, or has been, or shall be." "That which is true or certain concerning any matter or subject, or generally on all subjects; real state of things; fact; verity; reality." "A true thing; a verified fact; a true statement or proposition; an established proposition; an established principle, fixed law, or the like." "Righteousness; true religion."

Truth is a word which the people of God are accustomed to hear. From the beginning of their experience in the gospel they are invited to "obey the truth"; they are taught that "the word of God is truth"; that "the truth shall make you free"; that truth will save, while error will destroy, etc.

"Truth" is a far-reaching, all-inclusive term, as it comprehends "all things that pertain to life and godliness." "Truth is knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come; and whatsoever is more or less than this, is the spirit of that wicked one, who was a liar from the beginning."—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4.

It is evident from these definitions that mere hearing of the term; mere reading, mere assent to the definitions of the word truth are not sufficient to bring a person or a people to "the knowledge of the truth." Truth is one thing, knowledge of the truth is another. Truth exists always and abides in its grandeur, in its majesty, and in its power; but knowledge of the truth is necessary to save from error and to make complete.

The experiences of the people of God past and present; the experiences of humanity in general, in all time, in all lands, including our individual experiences, affirm to us that truth and truth only benefits, and that error harms. We repeat, it is not by mere oral teaching or reading, but also by the actual living examples of communities, nations, and ourselves that we learn the value of truth and the falsity of error. We learn it in family life, in community life, in political life, in economic, in social, and in religious life—in every and all conditions of life. But we have not learned the lesson thoroughly, else we would have profited by it to such degree that we would have learned to be governed by truth and by truth alone; we would have made it the basis of all action, and would reject all error, in all the phases of life itself to which we have referred, whether exhibited in ourselves or in any others. It is therefore necessary, evidently, that we should have further and sufficient experience to teach us and to impress upon us the great lesson which it seems humanity is placed on earth to learn; namely, the creative and sustaining power of truth, in contrast to the destructive and undermining power of error. God has been pleased to place the race under conditions where this great and comprehensive education may be obtained. We are given to understand that man can learn the great lesson, if he will; that it is absolutely necessary that he shall learn it, if he shall "attain" unto life. His possibilities as a creature made in the image of God and possessing faculties similar to the divine being, and the all-comprehending love and wisdom of that being, require of him that he shall devote himself to the attainment to be reached by strict correspondence to truth. Such devotion, with its resultant honest, daily effort furnishes to the people of God, to us individually, and to the race collectively the only solution of life and its problems—the only rational ground for hope of life and happiness here and hereafter.

Man, in the beginning, we are told, was in an "infant state"; it is evident, from a study of the word, that the Creator designed his full development, not only through the successive periods of physical childhood, youth, and manhood, but also, and in harmony with his physical being, that he should attain to fullness of mental, moral, and spiritual life. He was not content that he remain an "infant," acting only because commanded or told so to do, and not comprehending the ground or cause for such action; the whole tenor of God's dealing with man is in evidence that he designed his growth, through intelligent comprehension of the character, purposes, and methods of God, which, revealed in all the divine economy, is an unfolding demonstration or revelation of the truth. Any other philosophy than that which is in harmony with an intelligent participation of the race with God in the development and salvation of man in the establishment of the kingdom of God on earth, is manifestly foreign to the spirit and tenor of the word as revealed in all scripture given by inspiration of God. The experiences of the Jewish people and the history of every other nation, ancient and modern, in its rise and development teach the lesson of development and attainment, so far as any people have developed along right lines, by intelligent participation with God in the use of the great moral, spiritual, and material forces placed at their disposal by the Father of the world; or, on the contrary, failure as a result of failure to apprehend and apply truth. God is a being of intelligence and has organized a system of government based upon truth.

Truth then, we learn, is an affirmative and constructive force. Its opposite, error, is blighting and destructive in character. We also learn that wherever truth has been manifest in the world, error also has been permitted to assert itself, evidently that the two might contend side by side for the mastery, that under the manifest revelation of the nature and effects of these two great and contending powers the race might have opportunity of choice of good or evil, right or wrong, light or darkness. It is in harmony with this conception that the Savior declared, "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice." We read also of those "who received not the love of the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness."

This grand declaration of the Christ presents him, the revelation of God manifest in flesh, as the revelation of truth. It states in plain, unmistakable terms that the revelation of the Father, the knowledge of the Father upon which eternal life is based, is the revelation or unfoldment of the truth. This we understand to be the object to be attained by the establishment of the kingdom of God—the church—and the gathering of the people thereinto by the preaching and administration of the gospel—that men and women might be saved by being placed in harmony with the conditions of salvation, the revelation, to them and in them of the truth; that all their works might be "done in truth."

It is evident that man can not fully appreciate truth, that he can not fully understand the necessity for truth being applied to all conditions of life, without some conception of the dangers that accompany the existence and effects of error. Like the chemist who studies the primary and complex theories of matter, he is convinced by actual demonstration of agreeing and opposing forces. As the chemist has experimented with various elements, learning thereby what has affinity for and what profitably and judiciously can be combined with other elements, or otherwise—what is useful in combination, what harmful—so man by actual experiment has learned, to a degree at least, and must fully comprehend, that right and wrong, truth and error, light and darkness, and all their respective accompaniments are opposite in character, and that an effort to combine them brings repulsion and resultant loss to those seeking erroneously so to do. All the experiences of the race, in brief, teach us that all true progress and development have been based upon true principles, while, on the contrary, all retrogression, all suffering and unhappiness, all bondage, ignorance, and darkness have resulted from failure to apprehend or departure from principles of truth. The race has had some universal and far-reaching lessons in this line, the Latter Day Saints, past and present, included; but it takes a long time for a people to learn the lesson as it is necessary that it should be learned. Men generally, like God's people in modern times, "are slow to hearken," hence like the children of ancient Israel, the church and the world still struggle in the wilderness until the present generation or another one shall be sufficiently developed and prepared to enter the promised land of moral, spiritual, and general attainment. This we are warranted in stating from the revelation of God to his people in which he declared, "My people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer."—Doctrine and Covenants 102:2. The intimation is that they might learn without suffering, but that they must learn obedience to truth, by suffering if necessary.

It is not so much a question where people are, as what they are. If people are prepared by consecration of themselves to truth, they will seek to be in harmony with God, hence all that grows out of such condition will follow as a natural consequence; they will see and think and move in harmony with the divine plan; they will interpret life in its full and broad sense upon such basis. Israel, both ancient and modern, were placed in the promised land, apart from the world; but they took the spirit of the world with them, and retained it there, and by that spirit, which is a carnal and dividing force, they failed and were driven out and scattered. The lesson is patent, and should be especially to us "upon whom the ends of the world are come"; namely, that it is by a strict observance of the truth—the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom—that the people, first, and the land of Zion following, because of the purity of the people, are to be sanctified unto God. We are instructed in the revelations to the church that the land of Zion is to be "thus" sanctified unto the Lord. Our fathers who under God established the principles of constitutional government contended against persistent and opposing forces determined to resist and defeat them and their purpose; so with our fathers in establishing, under God, the church. Walker in his American Law says: "So strong was the feeling against an efficient federal government that the success of the undertaking is almost miraculous." To the early elders and the church the Lord said: "The enemy in secret chambers seeketh your destruction." Truth is ever combated by the alert forces of error, and they who enlist under its banner must be awake to the character of the opposing elements which, in the warfare, they are obliged to contend against. Error is the enemy of truth; it includes all the various and mansided perversions of truth which masquerade and simulate and beguile to deceive and to lead captive. Clothing itself with great plausibility it insidiously ingratiates itself into the minds and characters of any who carelessly, willingly, willfully, or blindly come under its influences. That it has power strongly to intrench itself is manifest from but a partial glance at the low conditions of the world past and present. Loss, suffering, disorder, turmoil, and destruction bear witness to its presence and work in all ages. All that to-day holds men in religious, in moral, in political, social, or economic slavery, all that to any degree retards the progress of the race, is the result of some enthroned error or errors under which society struggles and greatly suffers in effort to attain a better estate. Whether it be the rule of priests or kings, the power of trusts, the corrupting influence of misgained and misused wealth, the effects of class legislation or other special privilege held by the few at the expense of the many, or of any condition by which the masses suffer unjustly and are denied equal opportunity, each has its garb of apparent theoretical plausibility under which error disguises itself and makes claim to be just and a benefactor, while practicing deception in its various forms to gain its cruel and selfish ends. "The people never surrender their liberties but under some delusion."—Burke.

It is under conditions like those described that the value and power of truth is made manifest, not in mere word, but in demonstration.

A striking and practical illustration of the value of truth is furnished in the experience of every one who intelligently obeys the gospel. In the face of long-accepted and established errors of belief, clothed with respectability growing out of conservatism and usage, reinforced by learning, so called, and notwithstanding prejudice and opposition, people hear the gospel and after comparison of the word with the religion of relatives and friends, step forward and yield obedience to what, after due testing, they find to be in harmony with the word of God; and, as a result of such comparison and obedience, intelligently rendered, they receive as a witness of the correctness of so doing the seal of their adoption, "the Spirit of truth." Here, in the very beginning, in taking first steps in truth, in obedience to "first principles," they are confirmed in the correctness of right action by the seal of God himself, in light, in added knowledge and power. Here is a significant and highly important fact revealed to them by Heaven itself, and by which they are taught, if they will heed the lesson, a basic, fundamental principle which will guide them unerringly ever after if made the basis of all action; that lesson is, having received the Spirit of truth as a result of first steps in careful, discriminating selection of guiding principles, that they shall ever after remember, in all the various conditions of life, to exercise the same careful, painstaking, impartial discrimination in constant endeavors to learn the truth and to make a practical application of its principles in all things with which they have to do; that they shall consider and weigh and verify every measure affecting themselves and fellow man before they give any measure their support or bring themselves under its influence. Such a course guarantees added light, "here a little and there a little," and makes the path that of the just, which as "the shining light," "groweth brighter and brighter unto the perfect day." Disciples of Christ are called not to walk in darkness, but are promised "the light of life."

A determined, sincere desire to be right is necessary to see the truth. All humanity have grown up in the world under conditions to a large degree faulty or imperfect. Religious, social, and other systems, frequently business systems involving close and personal temporal concerns of the people themselves interested in the cause of truth and right, are often based upon much of error and injustice. Under such conditions, for one benefiting at the disadvantage and expense of fellow creatures to recognize his real status and position, and to act in the interests of justice with a view to the rights of all concerned, requires manhood or womanhood of a high order, including independence and courage. No true person desires to occupy a false position. No one can be "just and true" who permits himself to be placed in such or to continue therein when such becomes apparent to his consciousness; nor is he justified in neglecting to look into principles which may enlighten him. One may put away the voice of truth and refuse to heed. In so doing he but lulls himself to sleep under the deadening influences of a spirit that will carry him on and on until as a perversion of God's moral and spiritual image he appears before the bar where, sometimes in this life, sometimes not until the time to come, "the iniquities of men are to be spoken upon the housetops and their secret acts shall be revealed." There is a probation of character in every instance when men and women are brought face to face with principle, and the choice made in action determines the status of the chooser. "All beings who abide not in those conditions, are not justified; for intelligence cleaveth unto intelligence; wisdom receiveth wisdom; truth embraceth truth; virtue loveth virtue; light cleaveth unto light," etc. "Behold, here is the agency of man, and here is the condemnation of man, because that which was from the beginning is plainly manifest unto them, and they receive not the light. And every man whose spirit receiveth not the light is under condemnation, for man is spirit." "Truth abideth, and hath no end, and if it be in you it shall abound."

The following instruction concerning the forwarding of College Day collections and offerings is furnished from the Bishop's office: "Letters have been received from some branch presidents stating it was inconvenient for them to take up the offering for Graceland College on College Day, and asking if it could be taken up later. It is quite proper to do so. Every branch should be represented, and each branch president should see that all have an opportunity to help.

"Come, Saints, let every one respond to the voice of General Conference, and we feel assured that by the time college opens, September 25, sufficient will be in hands of the treasurer to pay all expenses for the year.

"We expect to publish complete report within two weeks.

"Isolated Saints, and those absent from branches, may send their offering direct to Bishop E. L. Kelley, Lamoni, Iowa."

The associated press reports an earthquake in the province of Calabria, Italy, September 8, at fifty-five minutes after two o'clock in the morning, which destroyed eighteen villages, and killed, according to meager reports, three hundred and seventy. Scores of other villages are filled with collapsed and partly wrecked houses, and hundreds were injured. Locally the shocks lasted eighteen seconds. Calabria is noted for its earthquakes.

The Salt Lake Tribune for September 8 has an editorial in which it declares that to "defend the priesthood and pay your tithes" comprises the entire system of ethics in the Mormon church, and sarcastically adds, "Defend the Mormon priesthood, right or wrong! If they are right, hold them up as exemplars, as the holiest men in the world, as men whose lives prove the truth of the doctrine which they teach. . . . If they are wrong, defend them on the ground that being human they must err, and that their wrong-doing is only another proof of the divinity of their mission, since their evil course is permitted in order to try the faith of their followers. Obey the priesthood in all things. If they are right, necessarily it is right to obey them. If they are wrong, it is all the more to your credit to obey them—since you follow against all the dictates of law and common sense." The Tribune evidently believes, and rightly too, that in their religious life men are under obligations to obey the Lord alone, and that priesthood is simply the authority from God to assist men in this obedience. Priesthood does not make men lords over their fellows; but places them under the obligation of serving, and gives them the right to minister in the ordinances of God's house and do for their fellows that which their fellows could not do for themselves.

SEND THE RELIGIANS OUT.

The analysis of the command from God, recorded in Doctrine and Covenants 85:22, "It becometh every man who hath been warned, to warn his neighbor," shows that this command applies to every member of the church who has been converted to the truthfulness of the latter-day evangel. It means the sisters who have been convinced by the Holy Spirit—it means the boys and girls who know the work is divine. It means every brother whose intellect and heart have been touched with the knowledge of the power that is moving the cause along.

The time to start in missionary work for Christ is "when you are converted, strengthen thy brethren." (Luke 22:32.) Christ said that to a man who was a baptized member of the church; but he had not yet been converted.

Now, who is my neighbor, and who are my brethren? How old must I be before I may "teach, exhort, expound, and invite all to come to Christ"? In John 12:26, Jesus says to all of us, "Follow me." Well, what did Jesus do?

In Luke 2:41-51 the holy record tells us that when Jesus was twelve years old his parents found him one day "in the temple, sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them, and asking them questions." He had not been ordained yet. And it is reasonable to suppose that if there had been printing-presses in those days he would have been distributing tracts. Anyway, he has told us to do so to-day.
